House of Commons Debates

SECOND SESSION—NINTH PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 10, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

BANKING AND COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That the names of Messrs. Kaulbach and Loy be added to the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 106) to amend the Post Office Act.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the object of this Bill ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Bill mainly refers to certain classes of appointees in the service of the Post Office Department, known as messengers, packers, sorters, letter carriers and porters. It deals with the mode of their appointment and proposes to dispense with civil service examinations for this class of officers, substituting departmental examinations, such as the department may from time to time establish. It also changes the mode of payment, and in lieu of the present system, adopts a per diem allowance. It also shortens the time necessary for this class of officials to attain the maximum. For example, letter carriers attain the maximum in a period of the ninth year. Under this Bill, if it becomes law, they will be able to attain the maximum in about half that time.

Mr. SPROULE. How would it affect their status under the Civil Service Act as regards superannuation ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Any person now appointed to the service does not come under the Superannuation Act. That is it does not apply to any persons hereafter appointed. It was repealed as to future appointments by the Civil Service Retirement Act of 1898. The measure also contains a provision entitling those at present in the service, at their option, to come in under the provision of this measure, instead of the Civil Service Act which applies to these appointees, but it does not exempt any from the Civil Service Retirement Act of 1898 ; that is, under the present amendment, those who elect to come under the provisions of this Act will carry the right and obligation of remaining under the Civil Service Retirement Act of 1898. The measure also provides for the creation of a new office called the superintendent of city post offices. That officer will have the duty of visiting the various city post offices and such other post offices as he may be required to visit from time to time, and to assist the postmasters and their staffs to keep the post offices abreast of the times, and in every way to aid in promoting the efficiency of the various post offices. There is also provision in the measure altering the condition of the indemnity clauses contained in a former amendment of the Act, simply making them more comprehensive and overcoming a defect which has been discovered.

Mr. CLARKE. Who performs the duty of inspecting city post offices now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It can hardly be said that the duty is performed. I believe that the inspectors have the right of performing that duty, but they are not experts in city post office work. Under this measure it is proposed to appoint as superintendent a person who has had many years practical experience, and who may retain the office that he is now filling. I may tell the House that, if the measure goes through and my present intentions are carried out by Council, the person who will be first appointed will be the present assistant postmaster of Toronto, Mr. George Ross. Every one acquainted with that gentleman's merits will admit that he has not his superior in the post office service. Of course, he will not carry two salaries. While he draws the salary of superintendent, he cannot draw the salary of assistant postmaster. There is, it appears, much advantage, but that is a point which can be better argued, perhaps in the second reading of the Bill—in the superintendent being actually connected with a post office, so that he may have a better opportunity of informing himself of the details, from time to time, in connection with the working of the office, rather than to have to gain information from hearsay, as is the case at the present time where the inspection may be done by inspectors who have, more or less—generally less rather than more—practical acquaintance with the technical working of a city post office.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Why does not the Postmaster General apply the principle to all the departments ? It is an anomaly that a porter and a messenger in the post office department should be removed from the section of the Civil Service Act which at present applies to all the departments, and that they should come under a different rule. If this is an improvement, the hon. gentleman should offer an amendment to the Civil Service Act to make it applicable to all the departments.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We will see after it has worked a while whether it is an improvement. I do not know that uniformity is absolutely essential. I do not know anything that does more to depress energy at times than an aim at uniformity. A dead level uniformity, I think, very often discourages the ambitious. However, there is much in what my hon. friend says, that if this measure is good for one department it may be good for another. Perhaps different views may obtain on that point. We will see after it has worked a while whether it is wise to extend it to all the departments.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTION.

CONTRACT TO A. I. AUGER.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Taylor—asked :

1. Has the government given a contract to A. I. Auger, of Quebec, for spruce planks of 2 x 6 and 7 and 8 feet in length at a cost of $11.50 per thousand feet ?

2. Did the government call for public tenders before granting the said contract ?

3. What quantity of such planks should the said A. I. Auger furnish according to his contract ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would ask the hon. gentleman to let that stand, in the absence of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), because we cannot find any such contract.

Hon. Mr. MULOCK.

PENSIONS TO NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Bill (No. 40) respecting pensions to officers of the North-west Mounted Police, read the second time ; and the House went into committee thereon.

On section 3,

The PRIME MINISTER. I may inform the committee that this Act is founded upon a similar Act which was passed last year granting pensions to officers of the militia, and this section No. 3 is a reproduction of the provisions which have been applied to all the militia men, with the exception that in the Militia Act the term is 25 years to entitle an officer to superannuation, and here the term is 30 years, for the reason that at present officers of the mounted police force are subject to the disposition of the Act regarding superannuation.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in understanding that under this Act a member of the force will be able to have the superannuation part of the Civil Service Act applied to him as well as the pension, and that he will have the superannuation allowance in the event of being retired after 30 years, as well as the pension ?

The PRIME MINISTER. No. There is a disposition at the end of the Act which makes it incumbent upon him to elect whether he will remain under the Superannuation Act or come under this Act. He cannot have the two.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am sorry I was not in the House when the resolutions were adopted on which this Bill was founded. Would the right hon. gentleman state what difference this makes in the law at present in force ?

The PRIME MINISTER. At present, officers of the force are subject to the provisions of the Superannuation Act. They can be superannuated in the same way as an officer of the civil service. They contribute a certain abatement, 3 per cent or 2 per cent, I forget which. Under this Act the abatement they will pay into the treasury, instead of being 2 or 3 per cent, is 5 per cent. The rate of pension is not very much different, but there is one great advantage, and it is this, that under this Act widows and children are entitled to pensions, whereas under the Act heretofore in force widows and children were not entitled to anything. That is the chief advantage we desired to give to the officers of the police force over the present Act.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is no objection to the extension of the Act, I think perhaps it is perfectly right. But here is another principle that has gone to the winds. We have not only the principle of pension and superannuation applied to parties who have served their country faithfully for a number of years, but we have that principle now extended, notwithstanding the opposition of many supporters of the right hon. gentleman. I do not know whether he himself ever voiced their opinions, but a great many of his supporters have opposed the principle of pensions and superannuation altogether.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think I ever said a word on that subject; in fact, I am quite sure I never did. Moreover it is a growing time and if there is a class of officers in the service of the government who are entitled to be dealt with by the government as fairly and justly as possible, I think my hon. friend will agree with me that it is the officers of the mounted police.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would be interesting to know how this Act will fare when it goes to the upper House and meets with our old friend McMullen.

The PRIME MINISTER. I hope the curiosity of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will be gratified.

Mr. OLIVER. May I ask as to the interpretation of the word 'may' in the third line of subsection 6 of section 3?

The PRIME MINISTER. The interpretation of the word 'may' is explained in the way I stated a moment ago. At the present time an officer of the force is subject to the Superannuation Act. He will have to elect whether he shall remain under the provisions of the present Superannuation Act or whether he shall be subject to the provisions of this Act, and of course, if he elects to come under the provisions of this Act, then, he comes under the disposition of this Act and the provisions we make in subsection 2 of section 4 will apply from the time he has served, and the pension he is paid shall be an abatement or deduction of his pension. I hope I have made myself understood by my hon. friend.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not follow the details exactly, but the point I wanted cleared was whether the use of the word 'may' was to express the privilege on the part of the authorities to extend a pension to a man who had served as a non-commissioned officer or a constable, or whether it will be compulsory.

The PRIME MINISTER. If the man elects to come under this Act it is compulsory.

On section 4,

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman if he has made any calculation to ascertain whether this will be adequate to meet the requirements of the fund, or if not to what extent?

The PRIME MINISTER. I suppose my hon. friend means to ask whether or not a calculation has been made?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. To ascertain whether or not this fund will be self-sustaining?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot say that we have made a calculation, but I understand that last year when a similar Bill was introduced in regard to the militia, such calculations were made, and it was supposed that the fund would be about self-sustaining, but I am not sure but that we may have to contribute a sum, but if we have to contribute anything it will not be a very large sum.

On section 5,

Mr. OSLER. That clause, I think, should be very well considered, because a case might arise where an officer in the discharge of his duty, who had served three months, or three days of the time when he would be entitled to a pension, might be seriously wounded and incapacitated for further duty, and under this clause he would be compulsorily retired without pension and be obliged to take a very small gratuity. I think that clause certainly ought to be modified to some extent. It might work a very great injustice to men from time to time who are injured in the discharge of their duty.

The PRIME MINISTER. I see the point of the objection of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) and it is not without being entitled to some consideration, but the hon. gentleman will realize at once that it cannot apply as an objection to this Bill. This Bill provides that no man shall be entitled to a pension unless he has been a contributor to the fund which is created for the purpose, for a certain number of years. It is expected that he will contribute to that fund for twenty years, that a fund will be created out of which his pension and those of his comrades will be paid, and that the fund will be self-sustaining. If we adopt the principle that a man without paying anything at all, is entitled to compensation, that is a fair proposition to consider, but it cannot be considered in connection with this Bill. It would be beyond the principle that we have in view, bearing in mind that the principle of this Bill is the creation of a fund out of which this pension shall be paid. There is, however, a great deal to be said in favour of the suggestion which has been made by the hon. member for West Toronto. Here is a man who has been for one or two years in the service, and he has contributed very little to the fund ; but, he has the misfortune to be disabled. Then, the hon. member for West Toronto says, he ought to have a pension. I am not prepared to say that he should not have, and I think the country ought to be rich enough to provide for him. I am sorry to say I have a case for my consideration of a constable who lost his right arm in the discharge of his duty, and a very good man he was. He was disabled, and all we can give is a very small pension of a little more than $100 a year under the provisions of the Act we have. I would like very much if the law permitted me to give him a larger pension, but I am afraid the only way to deal with the case is to come to parliament and ask for an appropriation.

Mr. OSLER. I am not referring so much to an officer who has served one or two years, because his case is a hard one, and I agree that it should be dealt with separately, but I am referring to an officer who has almost or nearly served his full time, when he has been disabled, and when perhaps one or two years of further service would have entitled him to the full pension. Would it not be possible to provide under such circumstances that he might continue to pay his percentage to the pension fund so that he would be entitled to his pension ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the right hon. gentleman (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will look at the preceding clause he will see that his answer to the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) is not an adequate one at all. The previous clause provides that in case an officer becomes entitled to a pension by reason of having been employed in the Civil Service for a certain period, or by reason of having been a non-commissioned officer or constable, from his pension shall be deducted 5 per cent for the necessary number of years. What is the objection to making exactly the same provisions with regard to this ? Suppose an officer is injured in the discharge of his duties, after having served fifteen years, he would be entitled to no pension under the Act as it stands. Why not say, that such a man shall be entitled to a pension but that for the first five years you will make a deduction from his pension, equivalent to the amount he would have paid had he served for the balance of the twenty years ? It seems to me that it is not only perfectly feasible but perfectly fair.

The PRIME MINISTER. The point is not new to me, for I have discussed it with the officers of the department. The difficulty is to draw the line. My hon. friend speaks of a period of fifteen years, but if the man has served for ten years or twelve years he ought to be entitled to a pension on the same reasoning. In the previous Superannuation Act there was a provision under which an officer became entitled to a pension after twenty-five years. That was reduced to twenty years, and now my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) suggests it should be fifteen years. The difficulty is to draw the line. I feel great sympathy with the idea presented by my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) and I wish it could be worked out in some way. We have fixed the limit at twenty years and there would be great difficulty in departing from it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In reference to what the leader of the opposition has said, I may say that when we introduced the Militia Pension Bill last year, of which this Bill is a copy, we carefully considered the matter and I felt as he does that twenty years seemed to be a long term. However, we decided that twenty years was a safe period to fix, and that in any case short of that, it should be a subject of special consideration in parliament. The clause under discussion is framed in the interest of the officer, by which if he desires it he may leave the service and get back the money which he has paid in. I may say to my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke) that it does not follow that an officer who is seriously wounded shall for that reason leave the service, because it is quite possible that he may continue to serve out his whole twenty years and get his pension.

Mr. CLARKE. The clause has reference to an officer who is constrained to leave because of bodily injury.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It does not say he must leave. If the government wishes him to leave in the interest of the service, then a special arrangement could be made. This clause is in the interest of the officer to enable him if he so chooses, to take the initiative and get his money back.

Mr. CLARKE. If that is the intention the clause should be made clearer.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Perhaps so.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the practice in the Imperial service ? If an officer has been incapacitated after two or three years service does he get a pension ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think the practice is that in such cases a special pension is arranged. However, the Imperial Pension Act differs materially from this.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not exactly see why you should select a period of twenty years any more than a period of ten years. Suppose one of these men in the suppression of an insurrection loses an arm or a leg and cannot thereafter perform his duty as an officer ; then if he has served only five years or ten years or fifteen years he gets no pension at all. The committee is handicapped by having no precise statement as to what this is going to cost the country under the present conditions. Unless it would impose a very excessive burden on the country I would be inclined to go the length of saying that any man who is constrained to leave the service by reason of injuries received in the discharge of his duties ought to have a pension—subject, it may be, to the payment of five per cent of his average pay for the remainder of the time which is necessary to make up the twenty years. Some scheme of that kind would be fair. I regret that my right hon. friend has not seen fit to have some actuarial calculation made as to what that would cost. I hesitate to move an amendment in that direction in the absence of precise information as to what it would cost the country. Had I that information I might move to amend the Bill. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman would give us more time for consideration.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is no objection to allow that section to stand.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the right hon. gentleman recognizes with me that there is ground for consideration.

The PRIME MINISTER. I see the point.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The right hon. gentleman says that if you fix any period whatever, you will have a man coming within a few months of it, and that a difficulty would arise in that case. I would be inclined to take the bull by the horns, and to say, that if a man is injured in the discharge of his duties he would be entitled to a pension ; the government deducting from his pension 5 per cent for each year until the period of twenty years is made up. I would be inclined to do that, assuming that it would not impose too serious a burden on the country, and as to that I am not in a position to judge at present.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. When the Militia Pension Bill was introduced last year, a very careful statement was made by the Finance Department which went to show that taking our previous provision, which was that an officer retiring should receive one-tenth of his pay as a gratuity for every year he had served ; taking that as a basis, and 5 per cent for twenty years, it was calculated that there would be no charge really on the country, in other words that the Militia Pension Bill was costing the country no more than the previous system of gratuity. If there has been no system of gratuity in the mounted police, it is clear from the statement which I refer to, that the expense of this Bill to the country would be equal to one-tenth of the pay of each officer for each year he has served——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I cannot quite follow what the minister has said.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I said that prior to the passing of the Militia Pension Act of last session, a provision was made for the retirement of officers, which was as follows : One-tenth of the officer's pay at the time of his retirement for every year that he has served, is to be allowed ; that is to say, if an officer receiving $1,000 a year has served twenty years, he would get $2,000 on retirement. On the basis of twenty years at 5 per cent contribution per year, under the Bill we passed last year, it would not cost the country anything. If there is no 10 per cent provision in the North-west Mounted Police Act, and I think there is not, then the cost to the country will be exactly that 10 per cent of a man's pay for every year he has served.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much did this gratuity amount to annually in the militia ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I forget at this moment, but I should think that since this government has been in power it has amounted to something like $5,000.

Mr. OLIVER. It does not seem to be a question of what the cost is. It is a question of what is fair and right. If I read the section correctly, it seems to me that it misses the important purpose of a pension. Under the provisions of the Bill we give a pension to an officer who has served his full term in the force for the reason that he has become incapacitated for further service in the force or for earning his living outside the force. The man who is incapacitated by reason of bodily injury received in the discharge of his duty, at whatever period of his term of service, is in exactly the same position as the man who has served twenty-five or thirty years; and I humbly submit that it is not only for his advantage, but in the interest of the country, that he should be dealt with in the same way. If a case arises in which an officer is compelled to risk life and limb, it is only fair that having risked his life and limb in the service of the country, he should not be at a financial loss. The country should stand the financial loss so far as that can be done. I would suggest that this is the purpose of a pension, and, with all due deference, that purpose is not met by this section.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 8,

Mr. OLIVER. This clause is in exactly the same position as clause 5. If the officer loses his life in the discharge of his duty, his family become dependent on the country in one way or another, and it seems to me that the least the government can do is to replace that loss to his family as far as it can reasonably be done.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend will find that section 10 provides for a rate of pension for the widow.

Mr. CLARKE. The argument of my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is, and I entirely agree with it, that it should not be necessary for a man to serve for twenty years and then to lose his life before his widow or children can receive anything. If he serves only five years or ten years and loses his life in the service of the country, his family should be entitled to some consideration at the hands of the government.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have only to repeat what I said a moment ago, that if the intention of the Bill were to provide pensions for the officers of the mounted police out of the treasury of the country, the remarks made by my hon. friend would apply ; but the object of this Bill is not to create a charge upon the country. It is expected that the fund to be created will be self-supporting, or that it will be supplemented by the treasury in only a limited degree.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I presume that the case my hon. friend from Toronto has in mind is the case of a man who loses his life or is wounded in action. There is a scale of pensions in force which has been in existence since 1885, which is applicable to such a case.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I was going to ask the right hon. gentleman if there were any rules or regulations of the department applicable to such cases. This Bill is not to be considered as providing for pensions, but for a savings fund to which each man contributes, and it provides for the distribution of this fund in a certain way. I suppose the right hon. gentleman has had an actuarial calculation made for this purpose. But, besides that, there ought to be some regulation covering such cases as the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) refers to. I think perhaps the Minister of Justice is thinking of the Militia Pensions Act.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We are making that applicable to the North-west mounted police.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That covers the whole thing.

Mr. CLARKE. The clause we are discussing does not deal with pensions, but with gratuities, and there must be a service of twenty years before the widows or children are entitled to consideration. By what rule or actuarial calculation do you ascertain what amounts should be retained which will be the equivalent of the annuities to the widow or orphans of those who lose their lives in the service of the country ?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. There seems to be a misconception of the Act. It is not an Act granting pensions to North-west mounted police at all, but a different proposition altogether.

Mr. CLARKE. The title of the Bill is an Act respecting the pensions to officers of the North-west mounted police.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Yes, but this Act is not intended to cover all cases. It applies to contributors who belong to the force, but by the changes suggested, we are making it apply to people who do not contribute their share. I am not expressing any opinion as to whether that is wise or not.

Mr. CLARKE. Section 8 leaves it at the option of the government to determine whether a pension shall be granted at all or not.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Act is intended only to apply to those who contribute to the fund and in the cases referred to, where a man, disabled or killed, has not served his full time, they are dealt with separately by the government. Take, for instance, item 107 of the estimates, 'pensions payable to militiamen and mounted police and others on account of the rebellion of 1885.' This deals with men who were disabled in the service of the country, and in this we have followed the rule which was laid down in the Act of 1885 concerning the militia. I do not know that we can at present deal with such cases in any other way.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I can hardly agree in the view expressed by my right hon. friend with regard to the scope of the Act. It does not make the amount of pensions depend on what was paid in, but on the length of the service. Even if there was not a dollar paid in, still those who served their full time would be entitled to a pension on that account. We are not discussing the details of the Act, and it will be quite proper for us to make any modifications which will extend the principle of the Act to the cases mentioned by my hon. friends from Toronto and Alberta. I am not in possession of all the information in the hands of the Minister of Justice, and I would like to know whether, in his remarks, he referred to the provisions of any statute ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I referred to the militia regulations which are made applicable by Order in Council to the North-west Mounted Police.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any statute enabling that to be done ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I presume there must be a statute authorizing the Order in Council to be passed.

The PRIME MINISTER. We take an appropriation every year for those pensions, and by Order in Council we provide the scale on which this fund shall be expended.

Mr. CLARKE. While the right hon. gentleman says that cases such as those I have mentioned are specially dealt with by parliament, or the recommendation of an Order in Council, the clause allowed to stand proposes to deal with them in an arbitrary way. If an officer is obliged to quit the force before a pension can be granted him the Governor in Council may grant him a gratuity of three months pay for every two years he has served. If he has not served the full number of years, he should be entitled to a reasonable pension for the services he has rendered.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. If you allow those to participate who have served shorter terms the scheme will not be self-supporting. There is no doubt we have the power, if we wish, to provide that every mounted policeman who is hurt, shall receive a pension, whether he has been only a short time or a long time in the service. But we have never gone so far, I believe, as to make a general pension applying to the militia or to the mounted police. There have been difficulties in the way. This applies to officers.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is a Pension Act for the men which has been on the statute-book for a long time.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. At all events this applies only to the officers. If we desire to subscribe what is necessary to an enlargement of the scope of any existing scheme, let us do it with our eyes open, let us have some sort of calculation to show what we are to be asked for. The right hon. leader of the government should be ready to say that he is prepared to ask the Minister of Finance for what is necessary.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If I regarded the Bill as my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) does, I could not vote for it, for we have no information to indicate that the scheme will be self-supporting. The right hon. leader of the government has not brought down a line or a figure to show that the contributions provided for will make the scheme self-sustaining. I am not regarding it in that light at all, but rather in this way—though it may impose some burden upon the country, and very likely will, it is right and proper to make some provisions for these men and at the same time to make them contribute in as fair and reasonable a way as possible towards the support of the fund. I agree with the hon. member for South Norfolk that if the scheme is to be dealt with as a self-supporting scheme we should have the further information he has referred to.

Mr. OLIVER. I understood the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) to say that those receiving injuries in action were provided for under the Militia Act. There have been many injuries received by members of the mounted police force in the discharge of their duties which could hardly be characterized as injuries received in action. So I think it is necessary, if the idea I have is to be met, that there should be provision in this Act to meet the case of those so injured. It seems to me rather strange that an officer who, we will suppose, has successfully dodged danger for twenty or twenty-five years should get a pension, while the dependent relatives of an officer who, in the first years of his term, serves his country by sacrificing life or limb receives nothing. That is surely an unfair proposition, and, what is more, is not in the interests of efficient service, which is the chief purpose to be attained by all such measures as this.

Mr. CLARKE. I understand that the right hon. gentleman (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) allows clause 5 to stand for further consideration. I would ask that clause 8 be treated in the same way.

The PRIME MINISTER. Stand.

Section allowed to stand.

On section 10,

Mr. OLIVER. Is this amount payable yearly ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). For life ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

On section 11,

Mr. OLIVER. Is this also a yearly payment ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

On section 15,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In the fortieth line appears the date 'the thirteenth day of June.' I do not see the significance of the 'thirteenth.' Is this not a misprint for the 'thirtieth' day of June ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I suppose that this is a misprint for 'thirtieth.'

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This applies to officers, and officers may make option. Now, suppose an officer is 29 years in the service, and would have paid his 5 per cent only one year, would he still be entitled to all the privileges of this Act ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think there is one officer in that category. There are only two officers who have been in the service over 25 years.

Progress reported.

PILOTAGE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 76) further to amend the Pilotage Act, (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) read the second time ; and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the Minister of Justice would tell us the effect of the change he makes in the present Act.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The change is very simple. It has for its object to extend the operations of the Pilotage Act as it now stands with respect to vessels navigating between the maritime provinces and the Atlantic seaboard north of New York, to vessels that may navigate between Ontario and the great lakes and the ports on the St. Lawrence within the limits of the province of Quebec. As we have it now under chapter 80, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, section 59, it is provided that a certain class of ships shall be exempt from the compulsory payment of pilotage. Amongst these are :

> Ships propelled wholly or in part by steam employed in trading from port to port in the same province, or between any one or more of the provinces of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island, and any other or others of them, or employed on voyages between any port or ports in the said provinces or any of them and the port of New York or any port of the United States of America on the Atlantic north of New York; except only in the ports of Halifax, Sydney pilotage district, Miramichi and Pictou—as respects each of which ports the pilotage authorities of the district may, from time to time, determine with the approval of the Governor in Council whether any, and which, if any, of the steamships so employed shall or shall not be wholly or partially, to what extent and under what circumstances, exempt from the compulsory payment of pilotage dues.

That is to say, under the law as we had it previous to 1900, a vessel trading between any one of the Atlantic ports of the United States north of New York or the ports of the maritime provinces, and any port in the province of Quebec was exempt from compulsory pilotage. Then in 1900 the provisions of this section declaring vessels to be exempt were extended to vessels trading from any place in Newfoundland to any one of the provinces I have mentioned. But the committee will notice that there is no provision here for vessels trading between the province of Ontario and provinces mentioned. A vessel trading from Ontario or from any of the ports on the great lakes, down to the maritime provinces, would not be exempt, because there is no reference to the province of Ontario in the Act at present. The amendment therefore is intended to extend the exemption of vessels trading between Ontario and the province of Quebec, or between any port on the great lakes and the province of Quebec. It extends the exemption to vessels trading downwards as well as to vessels trading upwards.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is it intended to exempt from compulsory pilotage ? It looks as if it did so.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then a vessel coming from the United States or one of the eastern provinces up to the port of Montreal, or going further up to the great lakes, if it is propelled by steam or partly by steam, it is not compelled to employ a pilot.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If it goes from a port in the maritime provinces to a port in Quebec, but if it goes into Ontario, the statute does not provide for exemption. Exemption will apply all over now.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In other words, it I understand the minister aright, it allows vessel owners to employ any pilot they choose.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, it is in the direction of free pilotage.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax) I understand from the minister that the intention of this Act is to enable a vessel propelled wholly or in part by steam, coming from the maritime provinces to Ontario, to be exempted from pilotage dues.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. As the law stands now, a vessel coming from the maritime provinces and going up into any port on the St. Lawrence within the province of Quebec is exempt. The object of this Bill is to exempt in the same way vessels that may trade from the great lakes or from any port in Ontario with the St. Lawrence or the other ports below. Vessels trading between Ontario and ports on the great lakes with the other provinces, are to be exempted from compulsory pilotage, as those are now that trade between the maritime provinces and Quebec.

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is the law as it now stands.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I notice the Bill does not apply to trans-Atlantic steamers. The principal object ought to be to apply it to them because the general complaint that is made by the owners of steamships coming from the other side of the Atlantic is, that, as they are compelled to use pilots, and as they have to pay for them, they ought to be allowed to make a free choice of pilots. The provisions of the Bill ought to be extended to steamships coming from the other side.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask some explanation in regard to the last paragraph of that section It seems to me that an exception is made in favour of the port of Halifax, the Sydney pilotage district, Miramichi and Pictou. In these pilotage districts, pilotage dues may be charged or vessels may be exempt wholly or partially from the payment of dues. What is the reason for that distinction ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think it would perhaps be wiser for me to ask the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan) to enlighten me as to the intention because this is the law as I found it on the statute-book for many years, and I have simply re-enacted it.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not think I could give the explanation, because, in my ignorance, not being a lawyer, I read what I saw before me, and I read that a certain section had been repealed and that the following had been substituted therefor. I may be too dense to comprehend this if there is no change and the same law is substituted.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not think the hon. Minister of Justice gave a very good reason for the Bill he has introduced. If he does not understand the Bill he introduces or the statute that he proposes to amend, then, he ought to submit a Bill that he does understand so that we can understand the information he gives us.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have introduced a Bill to amend the Pilotage Act. There are certain provisions amending the law in existence and there are certain other provisions which are merely re-enacting the existing law. In reference to the questions of my hon. friend I merely referred him to the explanation of those who introduced and passed the law. At any rate, I took the old law as it was and made changes to the extent I thought necessary.

Mr. CLARKE. Does this Bill apply to British ships ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. To all ships.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I asked for information as to why this last paragraph gave exceptional powers to these districts named. The hon. minister explains that he is making certain changes in the law and re-enacting certain portions of the old law. Consistent with the first question I asked, if it be necessary to change certain portions, what are the different conditions that induced him to change those portions and leave the others unchanged ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have left that portion unchanged which has been in operation for many years, and I assume, that, it having been in operation for many years and no complaint having been made, it is giving satisfaction.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I have not yet got from the hon. Minister of Justice the reason why this Act should apply to vessels coming from the maritime provinces and from the American coast and not to trans-Atlantic liners.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not apply it to trans-Atlantic liners at all.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I know. Why do you not ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Because this clause is practically to provide for the coasting trade as the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) suggests. But those who understand the meaning of the pilotage laws know that the trans-Atlantic liners are included in the pilotage system and that it is extremely desirable that the whole system should be changed, and I am not quite sure that it is very far from the mind of the minister to do that. I think he is considering the question, because, as I understand it now, compulsory pilotage does not exist. What does exist is the compulsory payment of pilotage dues and compulsory payment of pilotage dues is applicable to trans-Atlantic steamers. As a matter of practice an owner will take a pilot on board his ship but if he did not do so he would be obliged to pay pilotage dues notwithstanding that fact. This is a condition of things that deserves consideration but it is a different question from that which is dealt with by this Bill.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I know the Bill does not apply to that question, but the complaint is made by the owners of trans-Atlantic steamers that they have not the option of employing the pilot they choose when they come in. Under the Bill you need not employ a pilot or you may employ the pilot you choose. Why not give the same privilege to trans-Atlantic steamers ?

Militia—Pay and allowances, $392,100.

Hon. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). Mr. Chairman, when the militia estimates were up a few days ago their passage was objected to because the report of the Major-General and the other reports were not in the hands of hon. members. They came down very shortly afterwards, and before we take up these estimates, I propose, with the consent of the committee, to make a few remarks upon the general question of the militia. My desire is to get other hon. members of this House to take an interest in this question other than what they call the colonels. They generally speak of militia day in the House as colonels' day. There are very few militia men in the House and a number of them are now out of the service. I have not now the honour of belonging to the service, because I am long past the age limit and probably my usefulness comes in being able to give some attention to the question and perhaps to offer some suggestions. I think now a very opportune time for us to seriously consider the condition of the militia of Canada, and I want to ask hon. gentlemen who represent this Dominion whether they are going to be content to have three or four, or perhaps half a dozen gentlemen in the House, because they happen to be in the force, assume the responsibility to the country for the estimates and for understanding the wants, the actions and the fitness of the militia and all the different branches of the service ?

If the committee will allow me, I will bring their attention back to forty years ago; a time which marked an epoch in the history of our Canadian militia. At that time a thrill of indignation went through the British empire, because a foreign power saw fit to board a British ship and lay hands upon southern refugees who had sought sanctuary there. In what state were the defences of Canada at that time ? There was scarcely a serviceable rifle or musket, and there was not what we would call today any real organization of our militia. To the great honour of Canada, over 240,000 men answered on the day fixed to the call of their country. That was a larger number than had ever responded to the call of the United States at any fixed day during the war in that country. Up to the time of the Trent affair I do not think there were half a dozen companies in our whole active militia, that were properly supplied with arms or knew anything about the use of them.

It was then that Canada decided to lay the foundation of a military force which would be a credit to the country. That force has since then grown to splendid proportions. We have made progress. Another epoch has now arrived in our military history. The empire for the first time has availed of the colonies to assist her in her struggle against a foreign power. Let us consider if our contribution to the empire is such as is creditable to a great federated country like Canada. We have plenty of spirit and any quantity of men, but I do not think that we seriously consider the position of our military forces. This subject is all the more pertinent in view of the fact that our Prime Minister will meet the Prime Ministers of all the colonies in London to discuss among other things the military defences of the empire. I am getting along past the time of life when I can serve my country in the field, and it is only left for me to give my advice in this parliament in the light of my experience as to what our military force should be. I am afraid I must accuse myself that in the past, like others, I have not taken our militia seriously enough. The time has come when we ought to consider this matter seriously, and when we should give encouragement and support to the boys who are enrolling in our active militia, and to the boys who have gone thousands of miles away to leave their bones on the veldt of South Africa in defence of the empire. I asked the Minister of Militia some time ago to defer his estimates until we had the report of the Major General commanding. We have that report now, and I am not depreciating the able men who formerly have been in command of our militia when I say that the report of the present Major General is perhaps the most thorough and most complete that we have ever had. This report is presented in such a common sense way that it can be understood by every man in this House, whether he has had previous military training or not. With the permission of the House I propose to consider that report briefly and to explain how our defensive force is organized. I shall make my remarks on this subject entirely free from politics, and entirely free from any fault finding, even if there be room for finding fault. It is my opinion, as I have often said before, that the militia should be kept entirely out of politics. It is above and beyond all politics. Of course, it must to some extent have a political bearing because the minister who controls our militia for the time being must belong to one or other of the political parties, but so far as I am concerned I will exclude politics as much as possible from the consideration of this question. If I have any fault to find with the Minister of Militia, or with the manner in which the contingents were despatched to South Africa, I propose to do as the Liberals do in the old country : viz., keep my criticism until the war is over and then bring the minister to account. I intend to show to the people of the world that whatever our political disagreements may be in Canada, we are ready and willing to show a united front in defence of our country and of the empire, and to leave complaint and criticism until we have conquered the enemy.

Now, Sir, the defensive force of Canada is divided into three branches, namely : The permanent force ; the active militia or volunteers ; and the sedentary militia. The means of instruction are under four heads : First, the permanent force or Royal schools of military instruction connected therewith ; second, provisional schools for the examination of officers ; third, the Royal Military College ; and fourth, camps of instructions or annual drill.

The provisional school and the Royal Military College are only for officers, and the Royal school of military instruction and the annual camps are for non-commissioned officers and men. In regard to the permanent force, I think it is well understood without my explaining it, more than to say that it is a force that is enrolled and kept under military regulations just as if it were composed of so many regular soldiers ; but the instructive feature of the force is very important.

Now, with your permission, I will read what the Major General says about that force, and his recommendations and suggestions in connection with it :

In my report for the year 1900, I adverted to the difficulties against which the units of the permanent forces had to contend by reason of the number of officers, non-commissioned officers and men on service with the contingents in South Africa. This year I have had the opportunity of seeing them under normal condition, and it gives me great pleasure to be able to report that the general result of my inspections was very satisfactory as regards their discipline, training, conduct and administration, but I regret to say that all branches are considerably below their established strength, so much so indeed that I cannot consider them thoroughly efficient, even for instructional purposes. The reason why difficulty is experienced in obtaining recruits will probably be found in the great commercial and agricultural prosperity of the Dominion and the consequent demand for civil labour at a high rate of wages. It is also a matter of common notoriety in the military service that the smaller the establishment the harder it is to maintain it at full strength.

In my opinion the most effectual measure for maintaining the establishment of the permanent units will be a readjustment of the rates of pay so as to bring the emoluments of the soldier, inclusive of his rations, clothing, medical attendance and quarters, more on a level with the wages he could earn in civil employment. The present rate of daily pay is 40 cents, or 10 cents less than is paid to militiamen for annual training and to men serving in the 3rd (S.S.) battalion of the Royal Canadian Regiment at Halifax, N.S., and to this I think may be attributed the desertions that usually occur in the early summer, when the demand for labour is on the increase. In so small a force there is no use for men of inferior stamp. We need the very best, and there appears no reason why the militia should not succeed equally with the North-west mounted police if we compete in the labour market on fairly even terms.

The object for which the permanent force is maintained is primarily to furnish schools of instruction in which officers, non-commissioned officers and men of the active militia can not only be trained in drill, tactics and discipline more fully and practically than with their own units, but also learn the interior administration and the routine of duties pertaining to their respective arms of the service. They should also be able to acquire the habits and demeanour of officers and soldiers, in order that they may serve as models for the corps to which they belong. To this end all ranks of the permanent corps exert themselves and do their utmost to carry out their important duties as far as circumstances will permit, the classes receiving very careful instruction.

Then follow recommendations for the filling up and increase of the permanent troops, concluding as follows :

The foregoing recommendations would entail an increase to the permanent force of about 18 officers and 462 'other ranks,' and consequently clause 28 of the Militia Act would require to be amended so as to provide for the maintenance of permanent troops not exceeding 1,500 men ; but I submit that the enormous increase in the wealth and responsibilities of the Dominion since the Act was passed more than warrant such an increase. In support of these recommendations I would urge that if they are adopted, the country would possess a force of highly trained troops, not only efficient for the purpose for which it is primarily maintained, but also effective in the event of war or internal disturbance, which at the existing establishments it cannot possibly be. If, therefore, it be impracticable to accept this increase in its entirety, I yet hope that the additional 'rank and file' may be granted as a first step towards placing our permanent troops on a more satisfactory basis.

Then he speaks of the provisional schools. I will not trouble the House by reading it, because I can explain it more shortly, and if I went on to read all these extracts, much as I would like to put them on 'Hansard,' it would consume too much time. He recommends the abolition of the provisional schools, for many reasons, the concluding one of which I will read :

I believe the introduction of the provisional schools has had a prejudicial effect on the standard of efficiency attained by many young militia officers, and that in the best interest of the service it is inexpedient to continue to hold them. With this opinion I feel sure the majority of experienced militia officers will concur.

He gives many other reasons, which can be read by those who wish to follow the matter up in detail. As to the Royal Military College, he says :

The commandant comments adversely upon the result of the riding instruction, but the conditions are very unfavourable.

He recommends that the riding part of the instruction be abolished, and that the cadets obtain that experience by being attached to the Royal Dragoons at Toronto. Then he goes on—and I wish to call the particular attention of the Minister of Militia to this :

It is a matter for great regret that this admirable institution, established for the express purpose of securing for the Canadian militia a supply of well trained and capable officers, entirely fails to attain this object. What brought about this state of things it is impossible to say, but one thing seems clear, that in the period spent at the college, the students do not imbibe any soldierly ambition or acquire a taste for military employment, and it is sad to see, year after year, young gentlemen who have received such an excellent military education at great cost to the state, holding aloof from the service of their country. With a view to secure in some measure a return for the cost to Canada of keeping up a military college, I suggest that before a young gentleman is admitted as a student, he and his parents or guardians should give a joint bond that on graduation he will serve for a specific number of years as a commissioned officer in a corps of the active militia, and I consider that some regulation of this nature should be adopted, if in the future the college is to justify its existence as a military institution.

Now, do not misunderstand this. He does not find any fault with the standard of the college, its possibilities and the admirable way in which it is conducted; but he objects—and I feel strongly with him—to the large expense of that college, if the result is not that for a time at least Canada shall have the advantage of the service of these cadets whom we educate at such great expense.

Now, the active militia or volunteers include, as we all know, infantry, artillery, and cavalry; and I will read what the Major General says of these forces, his appreciation of them, and his suggestions in regard to them :

My inspections of the camps of instruction in military districts No. 1, 2, 3 and 4, 5, 6 and 7 afforded me an opportunity of seeing a great number of the rural corps at their training, and enabled me to gauge their practical efficiency. As in my report last year, I can speak most favourably of the zeal, intelligence and excellent spirit of all ranks, and the administration, cleanliness, good order and discipline maintained in the camps was highly creditable to all concerned. I must also specially commend the manner in which the officers in command and staff officers carried out their duties. I believe that, taken altogether, as much was accomplished in the way of training as existing conditions will permit of. In some districts the results were rather better than in others, which was in a measure due to very adverse climatic conditions, which seriously interfered with tactical instruction, but I can only repeat that in nine working days it is absolutely impossible to impart more than the mere rudiments of a soldier's training. The time does not admit of any practice instruction in the more important branches of 'field training' or 'musketry,' and consequently the net result is very far indeed from being satisfactory as regards the practical efficiency of the Canadian militia. Officers and men, I feel sure, do their very best, but I can only reiterate what I said in my last report, viz.: 'that the troops can never be made even fairly fit to take the field with the limited period of annual drill that they receive under existing arrangements.' The difficulty is greatly accentuated by the fact that, as a rule, quite 60 per cent of the men in the ranks are raw recruits, who retard the progress of the remainder, for, as the strength of a chain is that of its weakest link, so is the instruction of large bodies of troops in advanced modern tactics hindered by the presence of a mass of practically untrained men in the ranks.

The wastage that takes place year after year in our rural corps is perhaps the most serious drawback against which the militia of Canada has to contend, and it is impossible to acquit captains of companies of a considerable share of blame for this unfortunate state of affairs, for many of them seem to consider that so long as they can bring into camp some approximation to their full establishment, the proportion of 'recruits' is of no consequence, neither do they make any efforts to enforce the provisions of the Militia Act against deserters. Apathy on the part of the officers has a most direct influence upon the military spirit of the people who compose the rural companies, and I am quite confident that zealous exertion on the part of the officers would go far to mitigate if it did not altogether remove this evil.

I am still of opinion, however, that the value of the militiaman's services increases in direct ratio to the extent of his training, and that consequently it would be true economy to adopt a scale of pay graduated according to the number of trainings performed.

But even with the recruits reduced to the proper proportion (33 per cent), it is obvious that they should undergo some preliminary training before the bulk of their regiment assembles, so that they might be fit to take their places in the ranks with the older soldiers. Progressive instruction could then be given to all on the same lines, which at present is impracticable owing to the backwardness of the first year men.

Then he proceeds to recommend his remedy. He says :

I therefore recommend that the statutory drill period should be altered to give a maximum of 28 days.

In another part of his report he divides that period up and shows that the recruits should have seven days drill before the others. Then he goes on to say :

It is obvious that such an extension of the training would entail a corresponding increase of expenditure, but not more I conceive than the important interests involved in the defence of Canada would justify, and even demand. I venture to think that this is a question that has never yet been taken seriously, and the time seems ripe that the defence of the country should be dealt with as a practical matter and in a common sense way. It goes without saying that the expenditure on military defence, against troubles from without or from within, must be governed by fiscal considerations, or in other words by what the country can afford, but I would urge most earnestly that it is to the quality rather than to the quantity of our defenders that our efforts should be directed. 20,000 troops thoroughly well officered, trained and equipped would give the country a better return for the money expended on its military forces than 40,000 men on paper, who, under existing conditions, cannot be expected to be efficient for actual and real service in the field. If, therefore, the country is unable or unwilling to extend the annual training of the whole of the active militia, I would urge that the numbers trained annually be reduced so far as may be necessary to secure for those that are trained the time requisite to make them fairly efficient soldiers in discipline, field training and the use of their arms.

This is very startling perhaps with regard to the length of time, and I am inclined to think that it would be difficult to make the period so long, but I think that three weeks altogether, from the time the men leave, would give a period that would very much improve the capabilities of the soldiers.

The general speaks equally high of the city corps but recommend that they should be compelled every year to assemble in camp so as to enable them to get a knowledge of camp life—to learn how to shoot, to learn field practice and other things. Now comes a recommendation, which I consider most important, and which shows how thoroughly the general has, in a most common sense way reviewed the whole situation. We all know that the number of active militia we have would amount to very little, even if mustered in full force, should we get into war, and he therefore takes up the question of reserves and divides that into two branches. I am going to trouble the House with reading his whole proposition, which shows that the cost of having reserves to fill the ranks or enlarge the force would not amount to anything very considerable. He writes as follows :—

(21.) In the existing organization of the military forces of the Dominion two defects are very conspicuous ; they are:

(1.) That with the exception of the more recently raised units, viz., Field Companies of Engineers, Companies of the Army Service Corps and the Field Hospitals and Bearer Companies, there are no war establishments prescribed for the fighting troops.

(2.) That even were such establishments prescribed, no practical machinery exists for raising regiments, batteries and battalions from a peace to a war footing.

The first of these is a comparatively simple matter to be dealt with by regulations which I purpose to submit, but the second is a very much more important question, demanding most serious consideration and possibly special legislation. The units of the active militia as they now stand in the establishment lists cannot be taken seriously in any scheme for the defence of Canadian territory. Our regiments of eight companies number 306 rank and file, equivalent on a war footing to a little over two companies, and when we come down to the so-called 'regiments' of four companies they practically only amount to one company for fighting purposes ; thus our existing system only provides us with the nuclei of armed forces that must be capable of expansion to render them efficient units in war. The problem to be faced is how to devise a practical scheme for rapidly raising our units to whatever may be prescribed as their war strength, with the least possible disturbance of existing conditions, but one thing is very clear that sooner or later it has to be done, if our militia is to be regarded as a truly efficient defence for Canadian soil.

It would not be possible here to enter into all the details that would require to be provided for in the organization of reserves for the active militia, but the following is a brief statement of the lines upon which I believe it would be practicable to proceed under the powers conferred by the Militia Act.

(a.) That for every squadron, battery or company of the active militia there be raised from the first and second classes of the male population (sec. II) by ballot (sec. 12, (c.) an affiliated unit of 50 men.

(b.) That in time of peace such unit need not be called out for training, but each man must be a duly registered member of a Civilian Rifle Club and must produce, when called upon, a certificate that he has fired his annual allowance of ammunition, under some penalty to be legally prescribed.

(c.) That the captain of the active unit shall be 'ipso facto' the commanding officer of the reserve unit.

(d.) That every man enrolled in a reserve unit shall present himself at company head-quarters to be mustered once a year on a date to be specified by the D.O.C.

(e.) That reasonable travelling allowances for attending muster should be granted to any reservist residing beyond six miles from company head-quarters.

(f.) That non-commissioned officers and men who have served three years or upwards in the active militia be encouraged to voluntarily join the reserve of their own unit, receiving a small gratuity according to their rank on presenting themselves for annual muster.

The foregoing remarks apply more especially to rural corps which are organized on the squadron or company basis, but a similar system would, with perhaps some modification, apply to urban units which are organized regimentally. The question of reserves, so far as personnel is concerned, presents no real difficulty, for the men are there and can be converted into fairly efficient troops in a few weeks. But it is quite a different matter when we come to deal with material. Guns, rifles, saddlery, harness, equipment, clothing, tents and ammunition for the war establishments, &c., cannot be improvised at short notice, and I venture to urge that this is a matter of natural importance deserving of the most serious and careful consideration. No people are free from the sacred obligation to defend their own land from foreign aggression, and I contend that this can only be effectually and economically done by a business-like and gradual preparation in time of peace.

The expenditure on defence should be looked upon as the annual premium on a policy of national insurance, and as money well laid out in securing the independence and prosperity that can only be assured by 'the strong man armed.'

I think that that is a magnificent suggestion, simply and well put. The only objection I see to it is the ballot, but under the circumstances and for the purpose of having a unit of that sort, I am quite prepared to adopt the general's proposition. But I wish to draw this distinction. I do not want the ballot applied to the formation of companies and regiments, and to increase those for the purposes of drill, because that would add largely to our expenditure. But the suggestion is simple and effective. There shall be raised an affiliated unit of 50 men for every squadron, battery or company of the active militia. That would give a large increase at a very limited expense. The time taken is only what would be required for these men to go to headquarters once a year on a day to be mentioned and there present their certificates of the shooting accomplished, and if the men live more than six miles away their expenses are to be paid coming and going. Probably when the Minister of Militia comes to deal with the matter he will be able to tell us how much that would increase our 35,000 men.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. About 75,000.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. That would add 400 to the eight company regiments and give a very respectable unit. I hope that all hon. members will seriously consider this suggestion and explain in their different localities that this is not a ballot in the ordinary sense. It is not unfair to those who will never go out, but who will benefit by the education given those men who deserve and by the expenses they have to go to. The greatest difficulty will be on the part of those who, owing to the nature of their business, cannot get leave of absence from their employers to go to camp. A much greater number of men will thus obtain a knowledge of how to handle the rifle and to shoot at long range, which is a difficult thing to learn, and on which we must depend for our success in case of war. Most of the fights in South Africa have been decided at long range. This suggestion shows considerable courage on the part of the general because it is rather repugnant to the spirit of our people to be drafted unless when the necessity of war comes upon us. This is rather a casting of lots to see who shall learn how to use the rifle and for how long a time, rather than a ballot, and the services of these men thus balloted will only be called upon in case of war. The fact of their going out for the purpose of getting a knowledge of shooting and obtaining this free ammunition does not make a man liable to turn out except in case the country is put on a war basis to meet some emergency.

Then we require the necessary material in the proper shape to enable us to wage war or to defend our country, and I will therefore read the general's recommendation with regard to magazines and stores. He says :—

(11) I have again to urge the necessity of providing magazine and store accommodation in western Canada.

Decentralization is admittedly one of the principles of up-to-date military administrations, but as yet in Canada we have made little advance in this direction, and as regards ammunition we have but one arsenal and reserve magazine, and that so located at an extremity of the country, as to combine the maximum of inconvenience in peace and of difficulty and danger in time of war. I hold it to be absolutely essential to the efficient defence of Canada that reserve magazines be without delay provided for the supply of the troops in military districts Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 and 10 ; and there is no military doubt that a second arsenal for the manufacture of ammunition is most necessary, the capacity of the existing arsenal working at full power scarcely exceeding that required to meet the annual requirements of the troops.

As regards stores for equipment, the chief superintendent of stores urged in his report last year the provision of new and more extensive buildings at Kingston and Toronto, and in supporting his views I would strongly recommend that the Tete-de-Pont barracks at Kingston, which are very ill-suited for the accommodation of troops, be converted into a depot for clothing, equipment and warlike stores, other than ammunition, for which the existing buildings with slight alterations would be very suitable. If this were done new barracks could be provided for the field artillery school, which I consider to be most necessary, as those now in occupation by the troops are deficient of most of the requirements of a modern barracks, and to bring them up to a reasonable degree of comfort and convenience would, even if practicable, cost so much as to render the construction of a modern and thoroughly sanitary barrack an economy in the end, and moreover, it would, I feel confident, make service in the field artillery much more popular.

While on this subject it is my duty to point out the need of 'mobilization stores' at the headquarters of military districts, in which should be held a complete equipment for each unit in the district, sufficient to enable it to take the field. These stores should be held in charge by the district officer commanding, and without such a distribution of warlike stores and a thorough decentralization of the store branch, rapid and successful mobilization for war is an absolute impossibility.

No matter how well trained may be the personnel of an army its practical efficiency for war must be measured by the rapidity with which it can be brought to a war footing and placed in the field as a perfect fighting machine. This is simply a matter of administration on up-to-date lines in time of peace, and the first step necessary to this end is to locate the necessary material where it is required for issue to the troops, and thus avoid a hurried distribution with, as a rule, confusion and miscarriage, should the emergency arise.

I venture to hope that the great importance of this feature in military administration may commend it to earnest consideration, and that the provision of a western reserve magazine, and, if possible, a secondary arsenal may be provided at the earliest practicable date.

While on this subject, I wish to call the attention of the minister to the report of the superintendent of the Dominion arsenal or cartridge factory. He says :

On different occasions, it has been proposed, by well-meaning but misinformed persons, that another cartridge factory should be erected in the western part of the Dominion. It may be well to explain that our present establishment is equal to meeting all actual requirements, and that orders received are so small it is just possible to keep together an effective working staff. A division of the work, by erecting another factory, would mean starvation and disaster to both. The strategical reasons urged against the situation of this arsenal are not well grounded.

I am glad to say the minister is already committed in his opinion, and it agrees with that of the general, that it is almost indispensable that we should have a western arsenal at the very first possible moment. The superintendent of the factory seems to disagree with both the minister and the general. But I will not take up the time of the House with giving the reasons for a change in addition to the fact of our one arsenal being so far east. We have had that subject discussed, and any hon. gentleman who wishes to follow it up should consult 'Hansard' of 1900, pages 8320 and 8325, and 'Hansard' of 1901, page 3786. In those discussions there was a concurrence of opinion in favour of the proposal which the general so strongly advocated. And the minister promised to look into the matter carefully at the earliest possible moment. Not only do we want an additional arsenal in western Ontario, but the time will come—and the sooner the better, finances allowing—when we should have one in Manitoba and one in the far west. Let me say, while this is in my mind, that if we have to call out the militia on a war footing it will be a very sudden call, and we shall have to face a mighty force, for our frontier is so long that its defence will always be a serious matter. Therefore, nothing should be left undone, in my opinion, that will improve our position.

Now, one more quotation from the general and I am done. This I give to show how careful and exhaustive has been his consideration of these matters, yet how simple and complete his recommendation. This relates to armouries, and the general recommends a new departure, with which, I must say, so far as my judgment goes, I am in hearty accord :

I have given much thought to the question of whether rural corps should be provided with central armouries, and having consulted all the district officers commanding I have come to the conclusion that the 'company armoury' is more suited to the conditions under which our rural militia is organized.

It is of course obvious that arms and equipment are better cared for, as a rule, in a central armoury, but this is, I conceive, the only important argument in its favour. On the other hand, to deprive the captains of their arms tends to lessen their interest in their companies, and deprives the non-commissioned officers and men of any opportunity of drilling or rifle shooting in the country hamlets and districts, for it can scarcely be expected that people will take much pride or interest in their local company which they never see. I have also observed that where rural regiments have been provided with central armouries, there is a decided leaning on the part of commanding officers to gradually convert their commands into city corps, to the very great detriment of the service, for, however good the city regiments may be, the bulk of our defence force must be the hardy men of our rural units, and anything which has a possibility of weakening that portion of the active militia is, in my opinion, greatly to be deprecated.

I, therefore, recommend that 'central armouries' should cease to be provided for rural regiments, and that, in their stead, plain substantial buildings should be hired, as at present, for company armouries at the company headquarters.

Now, with the permission of the committee, having dealt with the report and and having read some important extracts from it, I will pass from it with one suggestion. I think it will well pay every member of this House to get this excellent report and read it, especially that part of it wherein he deals with the questions of which I have given you a brief view. I propose now to give you briefly my views on the position of militia affairs in this coutry. Now what do we require for defensive purposes ? We require men, training, instruction, arms, supplies and ammunition. What have we now ? We have any number of men of the very best sort. I have explained to you what we have in the way of instruction and training. I think the instructions for the officers is ample. I wish to ask the Minister of Militia and Defence to take into, his serious consideration one point with regard to the Royal Military College, and seeing to it that the General's recommendation is carried out, that the young men we educate so well there shall be compelled to serve a certain time, to make arrangements ahead, and if they are not willing to do that, then let them get that sort of military training at their own expense. While it is all right to send as many as we can, and that is only a limited number, to Great Britain, to enter the regular army, yet we need them more here. If the young gentlemen who go there understood that it was a part of the curriculum, if I may use that word, that they should serve afterwards for a certain time in some of the companies, they would become efficient officers. In that way I think the General's suggestion is well worthy of consideration. If we cannot get our young men, coming from the class they do, to take that interest in their own country, I for my part would back up the abolition of that institution, which is a point of his recommendation. Surely if they have the spirit to go there and spend time there, they ought to be willing to devote some of their time, subsequently to serving in the companies, and I am sure that one of the great difficulties the Minister of Militia and Defence finds is in getting qualified officers who are willing to serve. Then as to the camp of instruction, we all know its usefulness. We have now the best arms, clothing and supplies, and a considerable amount of ammunition, and when we come to the estimates, I shall inquire from the minister, and in case I should not be here, I would like some other gentleman to ask the Minister of Militia and Defence to present a statement to this House, showing what ammunition he has got, and where it is located.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question ? What arms have we at present in the country ?

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I cannot tell you how many ; but I know that the improved rifle is sufficient for the soldiers that drill. The minister can tell.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. 40,000 stand.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Just enough for the force. Well, I do not urge hasty action in regard to that point, for this reason, that I understand evolutions are going on all the time in regard to the British arms. When we get the proper kind of arms we ought to have a reserve supply at the different headquarters. And so with regard to what the General says about clothing and supplies, and more especially ammunition. Rifles and men are of no use without ammunition; and we want it distributed so that we can always get it, in case any internal disturbance should arise, but more especially if we are ever attacked from outside. Now what does the General suggest? As I read his suggestion, he proposes, with our present force, calling for no more officers, calling for no more money, to put it on a complete war footing. I think this suggestion is worthy of a gentleman who is worthy to command as Major General any colony of the empire, and especially Canada; and I hope the minister will give it his serious attention. I hope he will do more, that he will have the courage to act upon some of these suggestions, because it requires a certain amount of courage to ask the Minister of Finance for extra money for the militia. But these are growing times, we are told, and if they are, let us take what we want with no niggard hand as long as we are satisfied that it will be well used, as I think it will, in the defence of this country. The men liable under the Militia Act can be mobilized in no other way, and if the time comes it would give us a very respectable force ready to our hand. The General also recommends more days of drill. Well, that is a difficulty too, but I never knew a time in the history of Canada, or of the empire, when this suggestion would be more likely to be accepted in a proper spirit, and that arrangements should be made for an additional amount of training. The decentralization that he speaks of—I am sure the Minister of Militia and Defence will go with him in regard to that. It scarcely requires argument, it simply means that the supply of arms and the organization of the men shall be in such shape that you have not got to go to headquarters for everything, that you can get everything to your hand, and can utilize it in the field at once, and at proper points, with the proper quota of men armed and supplied with ammunition; for we already have the men, the world has no men superior to our Canadian boys in my opinion. I do not know that I have anything more to say. I shall be glad if what I have said will induce the hon. gentlemen who are members of this great legislative body to pay more attention to this subject. We have a country second to none in the world, with the same amount of population, with undeveloped resources sufficient for a hundred millions of people. And the time will come fast now, we see it coming, when the possibilities of Canada and the capabilities of Canada will attract world wide attention. Our great cousins to the south at last have wakened up to the knowledge of it, and good men, and true men, and many men, are coming here, and are taking advantage of it. Let me say that I have visited many parts of the west in my younger days, and sometimes in my older days, and there was no place where I liked to go better than in the wilds of those far off countries. There are hundreds of thousands of men in those far western states (that used to be territories) who will make the best sort of pioneers, and we have this great class to draw upon. You have no conception of the hardships of their lives, because, west of the Missouri river, there is only about 10 per cent of arable land to supply the wants of this vast number of people. These eastern states that we are drawing from now were the richest states of the union, but the people inhabiting them have discovered the wonderful richness of the vast plains and valleys bordering the great rivers of our western country, and they are seeking homesteads there. I will tell hon. gentlemen the reason why these people will become good citizens. They are the kind of men who do not like to live in a country where they do not vote and so that they may exercise the rights of citizenship they will take the oath of allegiance. When they come in under our institutions they will be surprised and delighted to find that our institutions are truly democratic and that our administration of the law is as strict against the rich man as against the poor one. They will quickly lose any affinity with the country from which they come and like the rest of us they will become good, sound, loyal, British subjects.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). Mr. Chairman, I think the members of this committee will feel greatly indebted to my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tisdale), who was my predecessor in office, for having given as much attention as he has to this very important subject and for having placed his views before the committee in the very clear and forcible manner in which he has done. I, personally, feel very much indebted to him for the very able address which he has made this afternoon. I quite agree with him that there has been too great a disposition in the past to treat the expenditure on account of the defences of this country in too light a way and not to give the serious consideration to such an important matter that it is deserving of. My hon. friend closed with a few very eloquent references to the present prosperous condition and vast resources of this country. I would simply add to what he said this one observation, with which I am sure every hon. member will agree, that the gifts which we possess, the great natural resources, carry with them their responsibility. Every country which is deserving of the blessings which we enjoy has the responsibility of being prepared to defend the great gifts which it holds. No government, I hold, is properly discharging its duties which does not give due consideration to the question of defence, and I believe that in our time of prosperity we should not forget to take a portion of the increasing revenues of the country and devote them to the improvement of our defences. Now, I will endeavour, very briefly to refer to some of the matters which the hon. member for South Norfolk has brought before us. In the first place, he has referred to the annual report of the Militia Department, and more particularly to the report of the Major General. I am sure those who will take the trouble to read that report will agree with him, as I do, that he has not spoken in too high terms of praise of it. While, perhaps, in some of its details, or, possibly, in some of the conclusions of the Major General, I cannot literally concur, I say that in the main I approve of all that he has said. I think it is a convenient thing that the Major General, the head of the militia for the time being, should always have a free hand in placing before the people of the country his own views as a professional soldier upon the question of defence, and therefore, during my term of office, and I think it has been the custom in the past, the Major General of the day has had a free hand to express his real and genuine views in reference to the condition of the militia of the country and in reference to what he thinks ought to be done to improve the condition of the militia. The hon. member for South Norfolk has quoted very extensively from the Major General's report. I am glad he has done so; I am glad that there will be placed upon 'Hansard' the very valuable suggestions which the Major General has made. I will not, therefore, trouble the committee further by reading extracts from that report. I consider it unnecessary, but I will proceed to refer to some of the more important matters to which my hon. friend has given prominence. My hon. friend has referred to the permanent force and to the Major General's observations in connection with that force. It will be observed in the Major General's report that in a general way he speaks very encouragingly of the condition of that force and the principal recommendation he has to make is that the force should be increased. At present, under the existing law, the permanent force is limited to 1,000 men. Under the recommendations of the General it is proposed to increase the number to 1,500. I think that is a wise proposal; I think that when the Militia Act is re-enacted, or amended, it will be desirable to take further power to increase the number of the permanent force to 1,500. It is not my intention this year to ask for any amendment of the Militia Act, because I hope at the next session of parliament to introduce a Bill which will really be a re-enactment of the militia law and I may say here that I hope before the next session of parliament to have a Bill ready to be submitted to any members of this House, or any other gentlemen who are interested in such matters, so that we may have the advantage at the next session of parliament of getting the result of a very careful consideration of so important a subject. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Tisdale) has next referred to the question of the annual drill, and the desirability of extending the time has been discussed. The Major General advises the extension of the time to twenty-one days, and even to twenty-eight days. I am afraid that under the existing conditions in this country it will be very difficult to get the large number of men that we have now in the militia, some 35,000, to abandon their civil pursuits for so long a time as twenty-one days, not to speak of twenty-eight days. However, I do think that once in three years at least, we might have a longer time in camp than we have now. That will be one of the matters to be considered when the new Bill is being introduced.

The hon. gentleman has referred to what I think is more important, namely, the question of a militia reserve, and in that I am in entire accord with the proposal of the Major General. I may tell the House that at this very moment the suggestion which the general has made is being carried into effect. It is one which will involve very little additional expense, because the extra men who will be required for the purpose of increasing the number up to somewhere near a total strength of 100,000; these men can all be interested in the militia by being brought into the rifle associations, for which provision was made at the last session of parliament. I hope in this way, without any great increase in the annual expenditure, that we shall be able to have what will practically amount to a trebling of the present force of men who will be almost as effective as the 35,000 which we have now. At any rate, it will be composed of men who will have had experience in the art of rifle shooting.

The next item in the estimates is that which provides for the annual drill, and this year that item will be found to include musketry, clothing and stores. In former years the item was simply for 'annual drill,' and under the ruling of the Auditor General the expenditure would be limited to that. In view of the desirability of extending the opportunities of rifle shooting to as large a number of citizens as possible and of utilizing them as a part of the militia reserve of this country, I shall this year ask the House to give me that vote under the heading 'annual drill and musketry'; and to include in that vote, for reasons which I will explain later on, the sum which is ordinarily taken under the heading of 'Clothing and Stores.' It is very desirable that the executive shall have this power. It is impossible for me to say at this moment what amount of money should be used for annual drill and what amount might be more profitably used for the extensive proposals which we are making with reference to the teaching of rifle shooting. In view of the explanations of the object I have in view, I am sure the House will be prepared to give this additional elasticity to the vote for the purposes of annual drill. I may say that I believe that this can be done with little or no increase in the amount of money which we have been expending upon annual drill.

I propose in the future to take advantage of the discovery which has recently been made in connection with the cartridge factory of a cheap form of cartridge which can be manufactured at a very low price and which is safe to be used almost anywhere—it does not require the expensive rifle ranges which it is necessary to have when using ammunition of full strength. I would propose in the future that no man shall be taken on the force as a recruit until he had been tried with the rifle to see whether he showed any reasonable possibility of becoming a useful soldier. In this way we will give new interest to the force; we will bring into it a class of men who mean business, and we will exclude from it a most undesirable class of which a considerable number now attend the annual camps.

My hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale) discussed the question of the construction of another arsenal in Canada, and he has referred to some statements which were made during former sessions. I am quite prepared to stand by what I said in the past: That no doubt the day is near at hand, if it has not already come, when we should at least have one other arsenal situated in a more central position in this country. I may say to the House, however, that we are now engaged in increasing enormously the capacity of the arsenal at Quebec, so that the output after a year hence will be four times what it is now. Instead of an annual output of perhaps 2,000,000 a year, we shall then have an annual output of 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 rounds a year, and that, mark you, working at only an eight hour basis. It would practically mean that we will have an arsenal at Quebec at which 18,000,000 or 20,000,000 cartridges can be manufactured working full time. What we really need more just now than an additional arsenal is two or three additional magazines in which to store our cartridges. As they are manufactured at Quebec they can be moved westward to convenient points for storage in these magazines. My hon. friend has asked me to state what amount of ammunition we have on hand——

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. And where it is?

Hon. Mr. BORDEN (King's).

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That question was asked last year by the late member for York (Mr. Wallace), and I then stated that I thought there were reasons why it was undesirable to make a public statement as to that, but I will give the information privately——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I still think so, but I shall tell any hon. gentleman in the House who comes to me and wants the information. Of course we have a considerable quantity at Toronto; we have a sufficient quantity at Kingston, and we have a considerable quantity at London. My hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale) said that he thought that some time very soon there should be even a third arsenal in our great North-west. I would hardly go that far. I think something of the kind might be considered as to British Columbia, but in case of a war the question of holding the intermediate country between the west and the east might be so doubtful as to render it undesirable to place a cartridge factory there which might be captured by the enemy and turned against us. However, that is a matter more particularly for the consideration of military men.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Give them a magazine there in the meantime.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, I think so. In this connection I might refer to the question of arms, a most pertinent one. My hon. friend has said that we have the men, but unfortunately we have not the arms, which is quite true. We have a very small number relatively to the number of men who could be enlisted; but the House I am sure will be glad to learn that we are taking means to supply that want, and that we hope within a short time to have in operation within Canada a factory which will turn out from 12,000 to 15,000 stand of rifles each year if required, and which, working full time day and night, could turn out more than double that number.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. Where is it to be situated?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is not settled yet, but it will be probably near the present arsenal.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the Ross Company which is being incorporated that you refer to?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, the Sir Charles Ross rifle. I may say that that rifle was some months ago placed in the hands of a committee composed of Colonel Otter, Colonel Hughes, Colonel Anderson, Colonel Gibson, and one or two others, who spent a great deal of time, with the assistance of the staff at headquarters, and of an expert, Major Gaudet, who is in charge of the cartridge factory at Quebec, in testing the rifle. They sent in a report to the government which was favourable to the rifle, and on the strength of that report it has been adopted.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does it use the ordinary ammunition ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The same exactly, and in the contract which will be entered into with Sir Charles Ross provision will be made that in case we desire to change the rifle, or in case any discovery is made, he will, on receiving notice, manufacture such a rifle as the department may require.

Another matter which has been referred to by my hon. friend and by the General, and in which I agree with both, is the question of distributing the rifles we now have to the rural militia. When I came into office, I found, as I have explained here before, that the General who was here at the time my hon. friend was in office, had recommended very strongly that these rifles should not be distributed until central armouries were constructed, on the ground that the rifle was a very sensitive weapon, and must have the care of an armourer. It has been sufficiently proved, I think, by what has taken place in South Africa, that it is not such a delicate weapon, for it has stood the test very well. I doubt if any rifle could have stood the test better than the Lee-Enfield or the Lee-Metford has done. Therefore the Major General has recommended that the rifles be at once distributed, and that the old system of company armouries under proper inspection, more frequent than in the past, be continued ; and on the strength of that recommendation, instructions have been given that these rifles be at once issued and the old rifles called in. I think this will be very satisfactory news to the militia all over the country. I think it is a step in the right direction, and I am very sorry we did not take it before.

I do not know that there are many other points of importance to which my hon. friend referred, and I will bring my remarks to a close by saying that from my experience during the five years I have been in office, I think it is possible for us to have in this country a very effective defensive force at an expenditure very little in excess of that which we are making at the present time. Without repeating what I have said as to the methods we propose to take in the future in recruiting men for the active militia, I may say that, along the lines of interesting the citizens of the country in rifle shooting, and bringing them into sympathy with the militia by giving them something practical to do, I believe that, without any increase of expenditure at all we can enormously increase the interest and bring in thousands of young men who will be ready and properly equipped, if the unfortunate time ever occurs, to defend our country. What we want to have, always ready, always at hand, is an effective staff. We want an effective headquarters staff. We want the machinery ready to be set in motion. We want, as my hon. friend has said, decentralization to the extent at any rate of having not only an effective headquarters staff, but effective district staffs, ready to act immediately when called upon. We want officers—educated, well-trained officers ; and I approve entirely of the suggestions which the General makes, that we should insist in the future upon a higher grade of education ; that we should apply higher tests to the officers, making them pass more severe examinations. In that way we are now adding every year to our reserve of officers, our list of unattached officers, men who have gone out by the system we adopted a few years ago of limiting the term of service for officers. The colonel of a regiment goes out after five years ; the next below him steps up and takes his place, and so on. There is a step up for every man in the regiment. That very fact has given additional zest and interest to the militia of the country. A man joining to-day, even at the bottom of the list, knows that some day in the not very distant future he will have a chance of getting to the top if he is a young man. Then, the old men who go out are not lost to the militia. They go on the reserve or unattached list and there remain ; and I think we should take some means, as we are doing, to keep these men in touch with the militia by giving them something to do. In this way we are increasing every year the number of trained and educated officers whom we have at our disposal. We have a fairly equipped staff with all the branches that are required for an army in the field, at headquarters. We have organized here a medical army corps, to which the general refers in the highest terms, and to which my hon. friend did not refer, although it is worthy of passing notice. I believe that we have here a medical army service corps second to none in the world. That was shown the other day in South Africa. Our field hospital corps had scarcely landed when it was put to the most severe test which could be applied to any such organization, and I had the satisfaction of receiving a cablegram from Col. Evans stating that it had acquitted itself with the greatest possible credit. We are organizing now an army service corps. We have an officer in England to-day, Col. Biggar, who is taking a course of study there, who has had experience in South Africa, and who will return in a few months fully able to organize, from one end of the country to the other, that most important branch of the service. I repeat that with all these important branches fairly organized at headquarters and in the districts, with a very large number of officers ready to be called upon at any moment, and with the precautions we are now taking to educate our men in the use of the rifle, I believe that we shall have in the very near future, a force which will be amply sufficient to protect this country against any ordinary trouble from within and, with the aid of the mother country, do its part in defending Canada from any attack from without.

I do not know that I have anything to add, but as the items go through I shall be most happy to give any information regarding any details.

At six o'clock committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACLAREN (Huntingdon). In the remarks I have to make, Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss the militia, more particularly as it concerns my own particular district. We have a frontier in the county of Huntingdon, adjoining the state of New York of some seventy miles. In 1862-3, as stated by my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Hon. Mr. Tisdale), quite an impetus was given the volunteer movement throughout the Dominion. The fever then ran high in Huntingdon as well as in many other parts of the Dominion, and we had a very good force of volunteer militia raised on the frontier at that time. In the county of Huntingdon we had thirteen companies of fifty-five men each which, in a population of 14,000 or 15,000, would give about a company to each 1,000 of the population. That, it will be admitted, was a very fair representation of the military spirit of that day. I was much pleased with the remarks of the hon. member for Haldimand and Monck (Mr. Thompson) in connection with the militia estimates last year. He proved to the House that he has given this question considerable study, and from his experience and study was in a position to speak with a good deal of authority on it. I have also had some experience in the matter. I joined the volunteers as a private in 1863, and served in the militia from that date until 1899—a period of twenty-six years. During the first four years I served as private and sergeant and was sergeant-major of a provisional regiment during the Fenian troubles of 1866. In the fall of 1866 the fiftieth battalion was formed, of which I was adjutant and drill instructor, and in 1889 I retired with the brevet rank of major. I have always taken a great deal of interest in the militia, and am therefore in a position to speak with some knowledge of the subject. As I look around the House this afternoon, I could not help thinking that if the number of members present was any indication of the military ardour of this Dominion, that spirit must be at a pretty low ebb. I counted some forty members present out of 200, and it seemed to me that if a similar spirit prevails in the country, there is not much hope of a very strong militia force being kept up. There is always a good deal of enthusiasm about these matters when they are new. I remember that in my own county, no matter what work had to be done on the farm, we use to turn out in the evenings to attend drill, and that spirit was kept up pretty well in that part of the country until 1866, in which year we were out on active service for some months in connection with the Fenian troubles. In 1870 there were again rumours of a renewed attack from across the line, when we were again called out and had the good fortune as I suppose I may call it—to have a little brush with the Fenians at Trout river, so that we are privileged to have 'Trout river' on our colours. After that there were still talk of our friends opposite coming across the border, and our military spirit was kept up pretty well until 1877-8, when our military ardour seemed to cool off very much, and during the last few years I was connected with the battalion we had considerable difficulty in keeping the force up to such a position as we would have liked. I think we had the proper kind of men in that county and have them still. Out of fifty-five men in the company to which I belonged thirty-two were six foot and over, and while tall men may not be any better soldiers than short men, still they look better in the ranks. We have the same kind of men there now but they do not join our volunteer force.

Now, there are several reasons for that. I do not intend to deal with this question in the abstract, but simply to speak of matters as I find them in our own part of the country. We had in our county, as I say, the 50th and 51st—eight companies in each battalion. They do not all come from our county, but some from the adjoining county of Chateauguay. We had thirteen companies and one troop of cavalry in the county of Huntingdon. Since the time I spoke of, 1877 or 1878, it has seemed almost impossible to get the proper kind of men to join the volunteers or to remain in the ranks. The consequence is that the companies have fallen away until, at the last camp, I think out of sixteen original companies it was found impossible to get four full companies to go to camp at Laprairie. As I said, one of the reasons which has militated against securing proper recruits and which you may think is not a very commendable one—is that many of our people do not see the great necessity for keeping up the militia force. I think they are as loyal as the people in any other part of the Dominion. I think they would be as ready to turn out in the defence of their country as the people in any other part of the Dominion. But we are a practical people in the county of Huntingdon, and a people who like to attend to our work; and a good many do not see the necessity of keeping up the force and spending time and money in going to camp year after year. I may say that we never had as good a force in the county of Huntingdon as when we had drill at our company headquarters. That may not be practicable now, but if it were practicable, I believe that we could get the same class of men into the force as we had from 1863 to 1875. And here again I might say that the class of men we have had turning out to camp during the last ten or fifteen years is not the class of men upon whom we would have to rely in case they were needed for the defence of the country. As I have just said, we are an agricultural county, and our people somewhat object to letting their sons go—and the sons also object to going—to camp probably during the latter part of June or the beginning of July, just at the busy season of the year. Another feeling that a good many people have is that they do not think it is possible to make soldiers out of boys in twelve days. You know how business is done at the camp. It takes a day to go and a day to come home. Then there is Sunday, and, generally, one or two rainy days. My experience is that, out of the twelve days in camp, you never get more than seven or eight days of actual work. I think the present Minister of Militia is improving the matter very much in this direction. At the same time, I never could see the sense of trying in ten or twelve days in a year to make Tommies out of our boys.

The one great objection to the way the militia was conducted in the past was the irrational dress the boys were expected to wear. I believe that that has been improved; but, not having kept up an intimate knowledge of the force, I cannot speak definitely on this subject. I suppose all will agree with me when I say that there is no more independent class of people than our farmers' sons. The artisans in cities, operatives in factories, or clerks in stores, are under some sort of discipline and restraint, but that is unknown to the boys on the farm. You know how a young man rigs himself up when he is going to work on a hot day in the latter part of June. He puts on as little clothes as he can decently wear. A pair of trousers, a shirt, a broad straw hat, and a pair of shoes, that is about all. If he is warm, he will roll up his shirt sleeves and open the collar. Suppose one of these lads goes into camp. He is taken to headquarters—I am speaking of the olden times—and given a pair of woollen trousers and a red tunic with cloth as thick as a board. For fear it would not be warm enough, the tunic is lined with nice soft flannel. This tunic is buttoned up to the neck. The lad wears a two-inch belt around his waist and a three-inch strap over his shoulders with a great pouch hanging over his hip. When it comes to inspection day and he is in full dress, he has a hideous knapsack on his back, on top of which is placed a tin canteen with an oil cloth cover. Then he has a small round woollen cap stuck on the top of his head, and now he is complete. In that guise he is taken to camp. Now, fortunately for me, when in camp I always had the privilege of riding on horseback. But I have pitied these young men when on inspection on a very hot day, when they must be in full dress or heavy marching order with knapsack and all the other accessories. These boys were taken out at ten o'clock in the morning. They marched, perhaps for a mile or two, to some large field, where the inspection was to be held. They would be lined up, and about twelve the general would come, a feu de joie would be fired, and then these boys were marched back into camp at half past one or two o'clock, having been with this hideous rig on for three or four hours. And I have heard these boys in their tents cursing the rules that made these things necessary and swearing that they would never come to camp again. And very often they did not go—and I for one do not blame them for it. I believe there has been an improvement in these respects, but that was one great objection to our militia system. And here let me say that I do not know whether it is the best thing to have an officer of the British army at the head of our militia force. I may be radical in that, but I think that any officer in the British army who takes our boys for twelve days and thinks he is going to put them on the footing of British soldiers, is making a mistake. They are learning a lesson in South Africa. A man may not be able to put his heels together, face, salute and do all that sort of thing, but if he can ride, and shoot straight. I would not care whether he had a red coat on or what he wore. Too much time has been spent in connection with our militia, in trying to mould the boys on the model of soldiers of the British army. I am glad to see that the department is getting rid of this paraphernalia and dressing the men in khaki suits with bandoliers. I never could see the necessity of subjecting the volunteers of our Dominion to the hardship of wearing such an outfit when performing their annual drill. I have seen the foreheads and ears of the men blistered so badly that you could see traces of it for some time after they returned to their homes, on account of the change from the straw hat they generally wore to the woollen cap. If more common sense were used in connection with our militia we should have a better service. What I say is, generally speaking, true of the whole frontier of the province of Quebec. There is not an effective battalion on the frontier, except the one with its headquarters at Sherbrooke. I am not speaking to find fault but simply to set forth matters as they are in my own locality. But after what I have said it will be thought that I ought to suggest some remedy for this difficulty. Well, of course, one of the changes that would suit us—whether the department would regard it as practicable or not, would be to have more drill at home and less in camp. Any one who is acquainted with military matters knows that if a man is competent in squad and company drill he will soon be able to pick up battalion and brigade drill, because battalion and brigade drill is only an enlarging of what he has already learned. I think that the most effective thing in our locality would be a few mounted corps. We have as good men as we had in 1866 and 1870, and we have the horses. If a volunteer force is necessary at all—and I am not going to discuss that phase of the question—it should be necessary on the frontier. As I have already stated, we have sixty miles of a frontier in the county of Huntingdon with only an imaginary line between our county and the United States; and, if it is this country we fear, surely it is important that we should have a force near the frontier. If we had four squadrons of mounted troops, they could probably be made an effective force. Whether they would object to going into camp or not, I do not know, but I know that that was one of the great difficulties in connection with our volunteer system—the difficulty of getting men to go to camp. Latterly, captains forming companies were obliged to take in men who were not suitable for the service, and those of the most desirable class who might have gone were not willing to go into camp with the majority of those whom the captains had to accept. The consequence is that the volunteer militia force of the frontier not only in the county of Huntingdon, but throughout the eastern townships, is practically only upon paper.

So much so that our 16 companies, as I said before, have now been reduced to 4 companies, and they are only the bones of companies. I understand if we want to keep up a militia system we must at least have arms and the nucleus of a force in the country. But I do not see any way of adapting ourselves to the circumstances, so far as we are concerned, except by getting up mounted troops, squadrons of mounted infantry, or something of that kind. I think myself, there might be some system adopted by which we could go into camp not more than once in three years, with part of the drill done at home and part in camp. But one great objection is the going to camp, and there is the feeling that they do not get the instruction in camp which they think they ought to get for the time that the camp continues. Whether our people would be willing to remain longer in camp, I am not prepared to say; but my experience has been that in 12 days in camp you do not get more, at the outside, than 7 days of actual work; and to try to make British soldiers, or soldiers at all, out of boys in about 7 days drill out of 365, is a difficult thing to do, and of course you can understand that they cannot be very effective.

Another thing that I am pleased to see is that they are taking up the practice of rifle shooting more generally. Rifle shooting at our camps has been a very perfunctory performance, there was not much attention paid to it, and I do not think that there was the good result from it that there should be. One of the difficulties of course in new places is that of getting proper butts, so that we could use with safety the new rifles now in use.

Our county is the most western in the province of Quebec, and there are not many corps in our vicinity, and we do not feel able to erect suitable butts to use the modern rifles now in use, as they carry to such a great distance. With the old Snider-Enfield rifles not nearly such expensive butts were necessary.

I was pleased to hear the minister state this afternoon that they were making a new kind of ammunition which would not be so dangerous as the other and which was costing less. But as I stated before, if an effective force is to be kept up on the frontier, on our frontier at least, something else is necessary to be done. I do not know what it should be. Of course one of the objections is the pay, although that is not the main objection. Of course we would like to receive larger pay than we have been receiving, although that is a paltry matter. But, if it is felt there is a necessity, and that seems to be the feeling of the House, that a large volunteer force should be kept up in this Dominion, so far as our frontier is concerned, there will have to be some new means devised, because we are, practically speaking, without any militia force on our frontier at the present time.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to say a few words with reference to some remarks of the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren). He says that if the number of members in the House during this discussion is to be taken as a measure of the military enthusiasm of the country, it must be very low. Well, in my judgment it cannot in any sense be taken as an evidence of the military ardour of our people.

I think there is another explanation for the lack of interest among the members. I have been in this House for some years, and I have noticed that whenever members of this House, who are not connected with any of the military organizations, venture to express an opinion or take part in the discussion on votes in the estimates for military purposes, the few colonels that are in the House, or other military men, rather sneer at them as if they were doing something they had no right to do. I have seen that very frequently in this House, until many members who would like to say something refrain from doing so because they might be regarded as impertinent. Now, I never believed, nor do I believe to-day, that it is the part of wisdom for non-military men to take no part in these discussions. Whether a member of this House might be regarded as an expert in the line which he attempts to discuss or not, it is equally his duty to take part in that discussion, and to bring to bear upon it such knowledge and information as he has of the subject. For after all, it is only in the consensus of opinions that are given in this House that the opinion of the country can be ascertained by those who, for the time being, are charged with the responsibilities of government. For that reason I have not always refrained from taking part in the discussion of military or any other questions because of a timid feeling that others might think it was improper for me to do so.

People do not see the necessity of keeping up the force, the hon. gentleman said. Well, I believe there is a good deal in that. But I have always thought that if there is one thing more than another that stimulates ambition and attracts people's attention to military matters, it is a taste of actual war. If the hon. gentleman thinks back for a time he will remember the circumstances of 1866. I remember them very distinctly, for we had a little excitement in the part of the country where I lived, and a great many men joined the force at that time. He will remember that the military spirit was very low at that time ; but so soon as the announcement was made through the press, or by telegram, that the country was actually invaded, there was suddenly aroused a military spirit that was unknown before, and the result was that, although there was no preparation for war, every person seemed to be desirous to take up arms and take part in the defence of the country. Although the military operations were very short, still that invasion gave a stimulus to the military activity of the country that continued for a good many years ; and because after a while there was nothing to keep up the attention, public interest in military affairs began to die out again, but how soon did it reappear when we began to enlist men for the South African contingent. Why is it that to-day we see the military spirit and the military enthusiasm so awakened in the Dominion of Canada. It is on account of the taste of war that our people have had, and the evidence that has been brought to our senses of the necessity of the defence of the British Empire even in the Dominion of Canada. That has aroused the military spirit in every part of the country. Active military operations and a taste of war are the greatest incentives to generate and keep up the military life in the country. Now, I believe it has done us a great deal of good, because at this stage in our national life we are not only taking on the responsibilities of nationhood, but we are developing a national spirit very rapidly. But heretofore we have been somewhat behind the age in the matter of national defence. In the matter of providing, as we ought to do, for our military defence, we ought to be moving, pari passu, with our development in every other line of national life. When I speak of national life, I do not mean to confine it to the limited sphere of the Dominion, but as part and parcel of the British empire of which we are a very important part.

I believe I express the sentiment of the people of Canada when I say that they regretted to read in some of the morning papers that the present premier had practically refused to discuss with the Imperial government the question of Imperial defence. It was thought that it was something entirely out of keeping with the spirit of the age or the sentiments of the Canadian people, but I am quite sure that he gave offence to very many of his warm friends by that intimation. No doubt it was done with good intentions, but still it seemed to leave the impression upon the Canadian people that there was less of a desire than should have been displayed by the head of the government in Canada to seriously consider the important problem of national defence. Now, there are two lines in which national defence may be undertaken; first of all by the military force of the country, and, secondly, by a naval force. I think we have reached a time in the life of our country when we should begin to create something of a naval nucleus, but there is no possibility of accomplishing much, in my judgment, except after an earnest conference with the Imperial authorities, so that we might act in concert with them along that line, and to my mind, there could be no more opportune time than when the Coronation ceremonies are being carried on, and when all the representatives of the various colonial empires, as they may be called, are there, and are consulting with each other. The people regard this as an opportune time, above all others, in which a discussion may reasonably take place in regard to what lines may be profitably pursued for the purposes of military defence either in the military or naval lines. But, it left the impression on the minds of the Canadian people that the right hon. gentleman was not as much interested as he ought to be, holding the high position that he does in the Dominion of Canada, in defence of the empire when he refused even to discuss that question at the time when he goes to attend the Coronation ceremonies. A great many people believe that we are spending too much money for military purposes. A few years ago I thought so and I felt that there was no need of it, that we were creating a military spirit, that we were attracting attention to that line, that we were taking the people away from the peaceful and industrial pursuits of life and rather inducing them to engage in the lazy pursuits of life, and that as ours was an industrial country, the more men you take away from the industrial pursuits the more you take away from the wealth of the country, but, we have all had such a lesson as has opened our eyes since then, and every one will admit that there is a great necessity of keeping pace with the onward march of progress in the military life of Canada. At the time we entered confederation, we agreed with the Imperial government that we would spend a certain amount of money annually for military purposes, in providing proper defences for the Dominion, and in providing a military force that would be available in time of need for the defence of the empire. We were expected to spend annually something like $2,000,000. It is only within the last two or three years that we have made any attempt to do it, but we are now doing something in the way of carrying out the spirit of that agreement. We are doing it on much more intelligent lines than heretofore, but I think there is a great deal of room for improvement yet in many lines in which this expenditure is going on, and that we might even go much farther with credit to ourselves and profit to the empire if we undertook to organize the nucleus of a naval defence as well as a military defence.

I am not going to say much about the expenditure of this money in these various lines, because I do not know enough about the subject to intelligently criticise it, or to say whether it is wise or unwise, but I have always thought that one of the urgent needs of the situation is to have a sufficient supply of arms of a modern type available at any time need might arise. You might mobilize your forces very rapidly, but you could not supply them with arms as rapidly as you could mobilize them. But if you had an available stock of arms and ammunition, it would be an easy matter to put men in the field and in a short time they would become trained and drilled soldiers. I was glad to hear the Minister of Militia and Defence (Hon. Mr. Borden) say this afternoon that we have a fairly good supply of arms. He did not give us an approximation as to the kind or number of the rifles we have, but I take it for granted that the rifle is of the best pattern available. He gave one reason why the government were rather chary about purchasing arms, which was the improvements going on from time to time and the urgent necessity of buying the very best. It seems to me that at some time in our lives we must reach something like perfection in the rifle that we use. I believe it is generally conceded that the rifle we have to-day is a very good weapon, and I think it should be supplied to the forces of the country in sufficient numbers to be available at any time for the needs of the country. I would also suggest to the hon. minister that the old and useless rifles might be supplied to cadet corps or cadet schools, and they might be used in other ways to stimulate military enthusiasm among the young and rising generation, because it is with these young men that we must supplement the forces we have in the field, and if you create a military spirit early in life, it will be easy to get men when you require them to go to the front. I think there is something in what the hon. gentleman said in regard to the restraint which these young men are under when they are sent to the front. Our young men might be dressed in some way that would be much more comfortable for them and that they might be equipped so as to enable them the more easily to carry the accoutrements with which they are supplied during the warmest t e of the summer, because that is a tir when they usually attend drill. Ther ight be a style of clothing adopted beter suited to the climatic conditions and the work they have to do when they are taken out for their annual drill, than the clothing that is usually supplied to them. In my opinion, that would be a great improvement, because one of the complaints they usually make when they come back from drill is that their clothing is uncomfortable. I do not think there will be any great difficulty found in getting our young men to go out and attend drill. They regard it as very much in the nature of a pleasant holiday, but I have always thought the time of drill was much too short in order to give them any adequate instruction in the movements and duties that we desire to give them knowledge of. I think the suggestion made by the hon. minister is perhaps a good one, that if we cannot afford to give them two or three weeks in camp every year we ought to give them that amount of drill every two or three years. I think military knowledge might also be promoted by company drill. I do not think we have enough company drill in the country. We have these companies all over the country, but they rarely meet at any time in the year except just before they are going to camp. A few days before they are going to camp they muster up their forces, and from that time until they are required to go out next year, there is little or nothing heard about them. They might perhaps meet a few days in the fall to do a little rifle shooting. We built some years ago expensive drill sheds and armouries and they have been allowed to rot away and little if any use has been made of them. I think we ought to have company drill from time to time. It is very important that these young men should be allowed to meet together within a radius of a few miles and have some rifle shooting. I have always thought that rifle shooting was one of the strongest attractions that a boy or a young man could have, and if you have more of that you will have more young men ambitious to go into the militia force, and as these young men are doing the duties of military men and experiencing the stern realities of war, their usefulness will be in proportion to their ability to shoot straight. It therefore becomes necessary to give them as much practice as possible in that line, so that in time of war they may be useful soldiers when you put them in the field.

But, the practice now of giving them a few rounds of ammunition and only one or two days of practice reduces their value. It neither creates an incentive for the work nor does it make them experts. They should meet from month to month, and have their regular rifle practices, and ammunition should be served out to them in sufficient quantities to enable them to indulge in constant rifle practice. That is what they like, and that is what makes them the best militia experts.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the present strength of the permanent force?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The number is limited to 1,000. The establishment is over 800 now.

Mr. FOWLER. I understood it was about 600.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The last figures I have are 805 men; 152 non-commissioned officers and 64 officers, making 1,021, including the officers. The strength may vary about 50 during the year.

Mr. FOWLER. The militia list gives the number of officers as more than the minister stated. It seems to me that this permanent force is slightly top heavy. I notice by the militia list that there are four colonels; fifteen lieut.-colonels, twenty majors, thirty-two captains and seven lieutenants. I understand of course that the permanent force is a sort of skeleton force intended to make a number of regiments out of in case of necessity, but the department appears to have been more kind to this branch of our military service than to the general militia. Take for example the district officer commanding. He has under his command any where from 3,000 to 5,000 men, but he is a lieut.-colonel almost in every case, whereas the permanent force of 800 men has no less than four full colonels and fifteen lieut.-colonels. It seems to be rather unfair to the district officers commanding, who are in many cases quite as competent and quite as deserving of high rank as are the men who happen to belong to the permanent force. I know of district officers who have been in the North-west rebellion, and who have been outranked by officers far their junior in point of service, and not their superior in point of military ability. This is a matter which is deserving the attention of the minister. It seems to me that it is rather unfair to our general militia officers. I have understood that there was some objection to promoting the district officers on the part of the General Officer commanding, because it was felt that in case difficulty should occur the officers who would come from the Imperial service to command in Canada would not care to have our militia officers holding high rank. I hope that rumour is entirely unfounded, because the experience in South Africa has shown that we have officers in Canada who are quite as well fitted for the positions which they occupy as are the Imperial officers. If that objection has been urged it should be removed at once.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not aware that the General Officer commanding has made any statement of the kind; he certainly has not to me. I have no objection however to state that there was an inquiry from the War Office to know to what extent it was proposed to utilize the power which parliament gave the executive two years ago, to appoint colonels. The answer that the government made upon my recommendation was that we proposed to follow the rule of the Imperial army with reference to the rank of colonel. However, the main point of the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler), was: that we had in the permanent force, officers out of all proportion to the number of men. On the face of it that might appear to be a fair criticism, but I will remind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) of what he must know, being a military man himself. We have in the permanent force the nucleus of what would be the Canadian army if we were called upon to mobilize. We have in the permanent force every branch of the militia except the engineers. We have the two branches of artillery, field and garrison; the two branches of mounted troops, dragoons and mounted rifles, and we have the infantry. When the hon. gentleman takes into consideration that we have these five branches in the permanent force, he will not object to the number of officers. In fact I think we require more officers rather than less. As to the appointment of full colonels in the permanent force, I explained recently to the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Hughes) that most of these appointments were made as a result of the distinguished service these officers rendered in South Africa. Had it not been for the war in South Africa I fancy these promotions would not have been made. What the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) said with reference to certain of the district officers not having been promoted has some force in it. It is quite true that at least one or two of the district officers served with distinction in the North-west rebellion. I have been at some pains to look at the records of that time, and I must say that the officers who served for the maintenance of the government of this country against rebellion, were not treated as they should have been. On considering the matter, I felt that it was very difficult to deal with it, it being so long ago, and that perhaps I had better leave it alone. I may say that I hope at an early date we shall be able to recommend that promotion to the position of colonel shall be given in the case of several district officers, and I hope also to some officers of the active militia.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that they place no limit on the number of officers they ask you to appoint ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, they simply asked the question, what we proposed to do.

Mr. FOWLER. The argument with reference to the permanent officer applies to the district officer commanding, because he has under his command infantry, cavalry and artillery. When the troops are in camp he is in charge of the field manoeuvres of a large mixed force, and therefore he should be a man who can command a brigade, and with sufficient military knowledge to entitle him to the highest position the department can confer. I think it would be a very good rule that no man should be placed in the position of district officer commanding who is not fitted to be a colonel, and that upon his promotion to that position he should be given that rank. To the lay mind these nice little distinctions do not amount to much; but to the military man, there is a wide gulf between lieutenant-colonel and full colonel; and it is rather annoying to an officer in command of a district to find men occupying very much inferior positions to his and yet his superiors in rank. I throw out the suggestion therefore, that these district officers, many of whom are superior men, should have this rank.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may say that all the promotions which have taken place have been made on the recommendation of the General Officer commanding. I have been very particular about that. In fact, that matter must be left in his hands, he being a professional soldier and having large experience in such matters. I have discussed with the General the very point my hon. friend has raised, and I believe that within a short time the line he has indicated will be largely followed. I think there is a great deal of force in what he says, though I do not think the General will feel disposed to recommend, and I do not know that I would feel disposed to agree to it if he did, that all the district officers indiscriminately should receive the rank of full colonel, although several undoubtedly are entitled to it.

Mr. FOWLER. My point was not that all the men in that position at present should receive the rank, but that no man should get the position unless he was fitted to receive that rank. It is difficult for an officer coming from England to ascertain in two or three years the fitness of the different officers ; and that raises the question whether it would not be well for us to have a Canadian officer in command rather than one from England. I do not propose to discuss that now, but that is my view of the question.

Hon. Mr. BORDEN (King's).

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the minister whether anything has been done with respect to a matter that was discussed two years ago very considerably, and also to some extent last year, that is, the organization of corps of mounted troops as a substitute for or in addition to the forces we have in Canada at the present time.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The organization of mounted corps to take the place of infantry has not been done to any great extent as yet, although in the district near or about Brandon and elsewhere in the North-west, I think there are four independent corps of mounted troops; in the city of Toronto a corps of mounted rifles has been organized; and in the province of Quebec the number of mounted troops is being increased. Outside of these districts, so far as I can remember, nothing has been done; but I am still of opinion that it ought to be done as rapidly as possible, and the General himself recommends in his report that in the case of rural corps we should substitute mounted rifles for infantry.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this pay and allowances for the whole force, or only for the permanent force ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The pay of the permanent force is really only $225,000. The other items are : Pay of the headquarters and district staff, $43,100; pay of the active militia attending schools of instruction, $45,000; allowances for drill instruction, care of arms, postage, stationery to the active militia, $75,000; guards of honour, etc., $4,000. These items are not chargeable to the permanent force, but to the militia.

Mr. FOWLER. I notice an increase of $1,490. How is that figured out ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The increase is in the headquarters and district staff, and is made up as follows : Lodging allowance for the district officer commanding in districts 1 (London), 2 (Toronto), and 11—$400 to the first and $500 to each of the last two. Then, there is an increase of pay to the district officer commanding number two district of $455, and a decrease of $365 in district number eight.

Mr. FOWLER. This lodging is where there is no barrack accommodation for the officers ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Annual drill and musketry, including clothing and stores, $520,000.

Mr. FOWLER. I notice an increase in this item of $80,000, is it the intention to carry out the recommendation of the general commanding regarding extending the period of drill ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Although there appears to be an increase of $80,000, there will really be a decrease, because in the $440,000 for the vote for 1901-2 the supplementary estimates for this year are not included, and I shall ask for a further vote for the annual drill of $150,000, so that really there is a reduction instead of an increase ; I have lumped these votes together for the reason I mentioned this afternoon.

Mr. SPROULE. One objection appears to me to be that the pay is too small. Throughout our country the officers are obliged to apply to the municipal councils to supplement the vote by twenty-five cents a day or as much as they can get. Some of the councils are imbued with the spirit of liberality and give it while others do not. If we are to keep up the military force at all, all the pay should come from the consolidated revenue, and it should be large enough to compensate the men for their lost time. It ought not to be necessary for the officers commanding battalions to go around the townships asking the township or county councils to supplement the small allowance of pay by a donation. If we gave a fair compensation there would be very much less trouble getting young men to join the ranks.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I quite agree that it is very undesirable at the last moment to have to solicit men to go to camp, but I think that that is due, to some extent, to the carelessness of the officers themselves in waiting until within two or three days, and sometimes until the very day before the camp and then rushing about to get men. I have no objection to an increase in the pay, but I think it might be given in this way as an inducement to give three years service. I would prefer having the pay increased during the second year and still further increased in the third year. Further than that, I believe that we shall succeed in awaking renewed interest in the militia by encouraging rifle shooting, and I hope that, with a large quantity of free ammunition each year, we shall be able to do that much more effectively than by an increase of pay from fifty cents to seventy-five cents.

Mr. FOWLER. I am strongly in favour of the hon. minister's suggestion to increase the pay to those who continue in the service. We have no difficulty in the section I come from in getting men to go into camp, and, as the minister says, the difficulty is generally due to laxity on the part of officers in not attending to recruiting in time. You will get a much better class of men, if they do not join through the inducement of pay. The less of the mercenary class we get the better, and the greater will be the enthusiasm, and the more efficiently will the work be done. There is one improvement which I would like to insist on, and that is to change the drill along the lines suggested by my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Maclaren). We have now a little too much parade, pipe clay and high collar business. We want more of the kind of drill that the Boers get in South Africa, and which has proved very effective, as some of our starched and pipe played British soldiers have found out to their cost. If we have more of that kind of drill—and I notice that this year in the camps at Sussex there was more of it—we would have greater efficiency in active service. We must get out of the old ruts, and in order to get good officers we require to make the service less expensive. We should have cheaper uniforms for the officers and get rid of the high collar and 'ha, ha' business altogether, and come down to business. We will then have an effective force. If we were attacked from the outside we would have to resort to the same sort of tactics which have proved so effective in the case of the Boers. Let us have more drill along that line and make the men good rifle shots. Let us do away with the parade movement and all that sort of thing and make the drill more effective.

Mr. INGRAM. I cannot speak from experience as a military man, but I have followed carefully the discussions on military matters during many years, and have come to the conclusion that it is very important. In looking over the reports of the superintendent of military stores I find that he draws the attention of the militia throughout the country to the fact that the Lee-Enfield rifles are liable to get out of repairs. Has the government taken any steps to correct that defect ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I believe that the parts of the Lee-Enfield rifle are not interchangeable, but it is equally true that each rifle being numbered, any part that is lost can be replaced. We have in our service very good armourers, educated specially for the work, and we propose, when the rifles are issued to all the rural battalions, to instruct those who are in charge of them that special and frequent inspections will be made to see that the rifles are properly cared for. Of course bonds have to be given by the officers for the safe keeping of these rifles, for the care of which they are paid out of the public fund.

Mr. INGRAM. Take the contingent we sent from Canada to South Africa, did those armourers, engaged by the department, pay strict attention to the arms supplied to the different troops that went to that country ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think so.

Mr. INGRAM. I have a document here, which has not been furnished to me by any officer of the department or any man in-connection with it, and in justice to the minister I shall read it so that he may say whether it is correct or not. It is a report from South Africa in connection with those soldiers that went on the 'Pomeranian,' and was written on March 22nd, 1900.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Who wrote the report ?

Mr. INGRAM. I do not know whether the report is true or false, but it is supposed to be signed by L. W. Herchmer, lieut.-colonel.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Lieut.-Colonel Herchmer ?

Mr. INGRAM. It is supposed to be signed by him. This is what he says :

I must, however, report that it is fortunate that there is no fighting, as our rifles are improperly sighted. I suspected this on board ship, as we had to fire almost off the target with Morris tubes. I got an armourer at Cape Town to inspect, and he reported that our back sights did not belong to the rifles and that at 800 yards they shot eight feet to the right. I reported this officially to the officer commanding the battalion and we had to march without new sights. To-day I am in receipt of a letter informing me that new sights are being furnished; but when we shall get them, or, on receipt, find an armourer to alter them, I cannot say.

I presume that this report has been sent to the department here, that is if it is a correct report. If that is the case, and if these rifles shoot eight feet to the right of the mark, the armourers could not have done their duty in inspecting them. It is a very important statement and should not go abroad uncontradicted if it is incorrect, as it would do a great injustice to the department that furnished these rifles.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Had the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) taken the precaution to notify me that he was going to read this statement, I would have been ready to answer him. It is the first time I ever heard of it, however, and, of course, I cannot give a complete answer at the moment. But I would say that the rifles were purchased, I think, in 1895, under the late administration, and were inspected by the war office inspector. I believe they were properly inspected, and that they are just what they ought to be. I am not advised of any rifles in store here of the character mentioned in the report read by the hon. gentleman. No complaint of that kind has ever been made. But now that the hon. gentleman has mentioned the matter, I will make inquiry, and when an opportunity arises, I will give my hon. friend and the House an answer. It is, as he says, of course, a very important matter. It is rather singular, however, that this should be the only occasion when a complaint of this kind has ever been made. I cannot possibly understand it. The difficulty about the sights of the rifles might possibly have resulted from the sights being interchanged among rifles, but that is hardly likely. Colonel Otter and the different commanders have made elaborate reports as to what took place in South Africa, but, so far as I know there has been no mention of this matter.

Mr. INGRAM. I would have been glad to consult the hon. minister, but this report came into my hands only a short time ago. There is another point. As I understand it, this government supplied the horses with the forage, etc., while in transport to South Africa. I do not know whether this government or the home government is responsible for supplying the forage in South Africa. But if the horses are treated as this report states, it is high time there should be a reform, not only in the treatment of the men but in the treatment of the horses as well. In his statement, which is evidently furnished by Lieut.-Colonel Herchemer, this is what is stated with regard to horses at Cape Town :

The forage was insufficient, particularly for horses just off ship and we had great difficulty in feeding our horses ; they did not gain at Cape Town

Other extracts from this report are as follows :

During the three days en route, the horses got oats and water, but no hay.

We make from 10 to 18 miles per day, according to water which is very scarce, the whole country being at this season of the year a sandy waste without a blade of grass, relieved here and there with a few small bushes which the native animals consume. The country is entirely destitute of trees, except a few willows, &c., near the dams and wells. All along this march our horses were under-fed.

The forage for the horses being again very short indeed, it appears impossible to get them filled up on the government rations ; if this could be done for several days running and the horses could get into condition, they would do, but under the present conditions, I have little hope of their doing much hard work.

We had to leave 23 horses here, some with sore backs caused by poverty and lame, and about eight too poor to face the difficulties ahead. It is hardly likely these horses will ever be in fit condition again, as they do not get sufficient forage to build them up.

If the Imperial authorities are responsible for insufficient forage for the horses in South Africa, particularly on landing, it is high time that something should be done. The English authorities have recognized that the Canadian method of fighting the Boers—that is as mounted rifles—is the most successful method. And the success of that class of troops must depend entirely upon the good condition of the horses they ride. If it is true that forage was short even at the port of landing, it is nothing less than a disgrace to those who are responsible for it. I can understand that, at times, forage would be insufficient at a distance from a base of supplies, but not at the very port of landing. I do not say that this report is true, but if it is true it must have caused a great deal of suffering to our soldiers. I am glad to see that a Canadian has been given the credit of showing General Kitchener the importance of having pack horses for carrying on operations in South Africa. That is a step in the right direction, one that will do credit to Canada and will assist in the success of British arms there. There are one or two other points in this report but they are of less importance, and I shall not deal with them. But those that I have mentioned, it seems to me, are very important.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. My hon. friend will remember, and the House will remember, that under the arrangement made with the Imperial authorities, the Canadian government has nothing whatever to do with the forage or rations after the arrival of the troops and horses in South Africa. That is the fact, and consequently we are not responsible. Of course, the case to which the hon. gentleman refers is a serious one, and I agree with him that if true, it is quite inexplicable at a point so near the base of supplies. On the other hand, I would point out to the House that Lieut.-Col. Herchmer may possibly be looking at what happened out there through glasses perhaps scarcely fair. I think that any wrong that occurred he would be inclined to see through a glass magnifying a good deal, and any good he would see from an infinitesimal point of view. I should not have referred to this, but it is only fair, I think, when a statement of this kind is sent into the House, no doubt at the request of Lieut.-Col. Herchmer——

Mr. INGRAM. No, Mr. Chairman, excuse me. Col. Herchmer is in no way responsible for that document, nor any other living man, so far as I know. I came across that document accidentally, I do not know who placed it in the position where I found it; and having perused it, I could not help referring the matter to the hon. gentleman. If it was laid in such a position that I could put my hands on it, there may be other documents lying around in such a position that other gentlemen can put their hands on them.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have no objection to the hon. gentleman reading it, but I think it was the duty of Lieut.-Col. Herchmer, who was appointed by this government as one of the officers of the Canadian contingent in South Africa, to make a report of that kind to his own government. As a matter of fact, Lieut.-Col. Herchmer was displaced from his command in South Africa on the report of General Hutton, supported by a medical officer, I forget which one it was; and Col. Herchmer has been applying to me and to the government ever since for redress with reference to his treatment. I was not able to see that he had been badly treated, nor do I think he was badly treated. But I have no doubt that he feels uncomfortable, and feels disposed to make things as unpleasant as he can, both for this government and the Imperial government.

Mr. INGRAM. I may say this is dated at Canarvon, 22nd March, 1900, and is addressed to the C. S. O., Ottawa, that is the chief staff officer, Ottawa. It goes on from day to day, giving reports to the department here, as I take it, and is signed T. D. B. Evans, Lt.-Col. Comndg. 2nd Bn., C.M.R.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then, I think it would be in order to ask my hon. friend how he came into possession of it. If it is an official document, I think we have a right to know.

Mr. INGRAM. I can say I found it in a drawer. I do not know who put it there, I will admit that much, and that is all I can admit. That drawer I am in the habit of using myself.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is no doubt about its being an official document.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the minister tell us about the number of rifles we have, and also give us some information regarding the quality of the ammunition?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The only ammunition which we have had here which was not up to the proper standard, was ammunition which we purchased from the War Office. That was admitted to be bad, or not quite what it ought to be; and after having a report by the superintendent of the cartridge factory we asked parliament to vote, I think, a sum of $15,000 to make these cartridges all right. That money was voted, and the cartridges have been made good. The Imperial government, recognizing that we were not to blame in the matter, that they were responsible, have repaid the amount. As to the quantity of arms, we have 40,000 stand of Lee-Enfield and Lee-Metford rifles. As to the quantity of ammunition, I am not able to state the exact amount. Perhaps it is not desirable that I should. But I may say that it is not up to the reserve quantity that we ought to have, that we are increasing the capacity of the cartridge factory now to about four times what it was, in the hope that in a very few years we shall have a very large reserve indeed, a satisfactory reserve of ammunition, in fact the reserve which the intelligence branch of the War Office required or advised.

Mr. INGRAM. There is another matter I desire to mention, and one to which I drew the attention of the hon. gentleman last year, and that is the cadet corps. Would the hon. gentleman explain what he has done to supply the cadet corps with ammunition, &c.?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may tell my hon. friend we have not supplied any ammunition to the cadet corps.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman, I think, suggested this afternoon that he proposed to bring down a Bill at the next session to provide that before any soldier is allowed to join the active service he has to be thoroughly tested in the matter of shooting.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. And I notice, according to the report, he is supplying associations or clubs with free ammunition and rifles, I presume, they have got to give a bond for a proper care of the rifle ?

THE MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Now we have, speaking of my own city alone, a cadet corps, I think about 60 strong. They have taken a great interest in drill, and I think the department has supplied them with ammunition to some extent, and some tubes, I believe.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, the Morris tube.

Mr. INGRAM. I think great encouragement ought to be given to the cadet corps, the citizens take a great deal of interest in them, and have subscribed for uniforms for these boys in order to encourage them. So far as our own cadet corps is concerned, Col. Peters inspected them, and no officer could make a better report than he has made of the cadet corps in St. Thomas. They have competed with the cadet corps of London and of Chatham, and with others. It strikes me as a singular thing that clubs or associations throughout the country can be supplied with free ammunition and free rifles, subject of course to a bond for proper care when so little attention is paid to the cadet corps of our country. I think cadet corps ought to be encouraged in every possible way, and if there is any free ammunition to be given, and plenty of it, they should be supplied. They are generally young men leaving collegiate institutes, 18 or 19 or 20 years of age, and very often they join the different battalions wherever they are located. These young boys will be eventually the defenders of our country, and the drilling and training they are receiving as cadets is of very great importance to them and to the country as well. So I say again, on behalf of the cadet corps, that more attention ought to given to them, and that the department ought not to be too particular in regard to supplying them, but that it should supply them as liberally as can be done.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think there is a great deal of force in what the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) said, but we cannot do everything at once. I have my doubts as to whether, under the present law, we have the power without asking a special vote of parliament to do what he requests. If the law is revised, or if a new law is passed, there will be an opportunity then to make some provision for this. The age of the militiaman is now from eighteen years up, whereas, many of the cadets are under that age, and they are not, strictly speaking, members of the militia. They are, however, most important features of the militia, and I quite agree that to the utmost of our ability we should encourage them and give them the means of learning how to shoot. That can be done at a much younger age than eighteen, the lowest age for joining the militia. I have not forgotten the matter and the hon. gentleman can rest assured that I will do whatever I can to encourage these cadet corps.

Mr. INGRAM. Not being a military man I cannot discuss the question in military terms, because I have not been taught them. There is another thing that I omitted to mention and that was the question of tents. I notice in the report that there is something like 500 damaged tents at the departmental stores. I know that the cadet corps have applied frequently to the department for the use of these tents in order that they might camp out for a certain time in the summer. They have been refused on the ground that if the department were to give them to one cadet corps they would be obliged to give a great many of them to the different cadet corps throughout the Dominion. If there are 500 of these tents that are of no use for the regular militia, surely it would not be out of place to supply the cadet corps with these, because I understand they have a thorough system upon going into camp. They try as far as possible to conduct themselves on the same lines as those laid down for militiamen when they go into regular camp. This is a movement that should be encouraged and instead of obliging them to buy tents for themselves, or to borrow them, I think the department should supply them. So far as the vote of this House is concerned, I have been here long enough to know that when a number of years ago the militia estimates were before this House, the members of the House certainly did not act in a very friendly manner towards the Department of Militia. They were, if I may use the word, too stingy with the public moneys in their grants to the Militia Department, but I think, perhaps, since the difficulty in South Africa has occurred, a more generous spirit has prevailed amongst the members of the House in regard to granting more money to the Militia Department. So far as I am personally concerned, while the Militia Department to-day is asking for a considerable sum of money, I am willing to vote a greater sum than we are providing the department with now. I have always believed, and I believe now, as a civilian having no military knowledge, that when we have good men in this country, men of ability willing to devote a large part of their time and to incur personal expense to assist in drilling our young men in order to make them soldiers, available in time of need for the defence of this country, the country has received too much at the hands of these men and that the members of this House have not come to this House with a view of assisting them as much as they should have done. I think the officers in our militia should receive greater encouragement and that they should not be called upon to pay out large sums of money for the purpose of helping their particular corps. I know men in the province of Ontario who, being too proud to allow their battalions to go down, have put their hands into their own pockets for the purpose of making their battalions a success, and I have known these very same men to leave their battalions a great deal poorer than when they joined them. Why this should be is beyond all comprehension. I think we should give them all the encouragement we can reasonably, consistent with the other expenditures which we make throughout the country.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I would like to say one word in respect to the question of tents for the cadets. It is quite true that the Militia Department was in the habit of loaning a certain number of tents to the cadets, and as far as I know, they were well taken care of. But since we have taken to drilling the whole militia every year in camp, we have had to use all available tents and at the same time we found the demands on the part of the cadets increasing so that there was no alternative for us but to stop issuing them. We also had to consider, when the question became a large one, as to whether we had the right or not to issue these tents. The very same point that I suggested a moment ago in regard to rifles and ammunition, arises in reference to the supply of tents. I do not know that parliament authorizes us to supply tents. As to the damaged tents, I did hope that we might perhaps give these to the cadets, but my officers advised me that there was only one way in which that could be done, and that was by offering them at auction and have some one bid them in. I suggested that, but I do not think that suggestion was accepted. We must offer everything at public auction. There is no alternative, but I should be very glad indeed to facilitate in every way in my power the securing of these tents by the cadets or by some one in their behalf.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in understanding that all of these cadet corps will be supplied with rifles? Is it only cadet corps in connection with collegiate institutes and high schools that will receive them, or cadet corps raised in any portion of the country?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Cadet corps in any portion of the country.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any limit as to age in the cadet corps?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, there is an age limit of fourteen.

Mr. SPROULE. The cadets must be between fourteen and eighteen years of age?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Then the issue of rifles will apply to any cadet corps in any portion of the country?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I see that a large share of this vote is for clothing and stores. How do you buy clothing and stores? Is it by tender or do you just give an order to a large house?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The clothing during the last two or three years has been purchased from the same contractors with whom we made a contract three years ago. The Sanford Co., who were the contractors when I came in and who have been most satisfactory, and a firm in Montreal by the name of Workman, which has done a great deal for us and which has also been very satisfactory, are the contractors. The contract was made for three years under the late government, and although when I came into office I did not think it was a good arrangement I was glad to be able to state in the House last year that the system was a wise one. As a matter of fact we terminated several three years contracts because the then Minister of Justice reported that they were illegal. We advertized for tenders in all the papers in all the cities of the Dominion, and I am bound to say that I never had so much trouble about anything in my life. A firm took a contract for about $70,000 which knew nothing about the work and absolutely failed to deliver any goods whatever. We had to go back to the Sanfords and ask them to do the work for us. After that experience, and on the advice of my officers I have felt that it was wiser for us and better in the public interest to stick to the bridge that has carried us safely over. I am satisfied that the prices we are paying are not extravagant. That matter is carefully looked into and a report made on it. Although the price of cloth increased last year we were able to get our clothing made at practically the same rates as before and very satisfactorily.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Will the minister say if it is proposed to make any change in the kind of clothing ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Well I think it is, although the matter is under consideration. I think myself that we might have more comfortable clothing at less expenditure than at present, and I asked the General to look into that matter. I hope that some result will come of the inquiries which he is making.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you keep any quantity of clothing in stock ? How will you equip the new contingent for instance ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We will have to give an order for the clothing. Unfortunately we have no reserve of clothing. I found very little when I came in and we have been using a great deal in the camps and in the reviews during the visit of Their Royal Highnesses when we had 20,000 men out. We have not been able to accumulate a reserve. I hope under the terms of this vote that possibly we may be able this year to do with less in camp, and add something to our reserve. It is very important we should do so, but I did not feel at liberty to ask a special vote for it.

Mr. CLARE. I was very much surprised to hear from the member for East Elgin that the cadet company in St. Thomas had been supplied with Morris tubes for rifle practice. I know that a great many cadet companies from the different high schools have petitioned the Minister of Militia for Morris tubes but without success. The Minister of Education was presented with a petition from all the high schools in the province of Ontario, and was asked to make representations to the Minister of Militia about it. I cannot understand why one school should get this tube and all the others not. I think they should all be treated on the same principle. It is very important that these young men should have a chance of getting rifle practice which is perhaps the most important of the manoeuvres of war. I hope the minister will see that all schools are treated alike, and that all the cadet companies shall be supplied with these Morris tubes. I understand that there is a grant made to those companies of $50 each or altogether about $1,750 for drilling. It will cost very little more to provide these tubes so as to enable the cadets to study this important part of military service.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Clare) that there is no intention on my part to discriminate. I was not aware that any Morris tubes had been supplied to cadets. I know that an application has been made, but the fact is that we had not a sufficient number to comply with that application. I will inquire and we shall certainly treat all alike.

Mr. CLARE. Then, is it the intention of the minister to supply the different cadet companies with Morris tubes ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am informed by the Deputy Minister that we have not supplied any. It is quite possible that in the case referred to the tubes may have been secured from the local militia, and possibly that arrangement might be made in other instances.

Mr. FOWLER. It would appear then that the department has done nothing to encourage the cadet corps. They have not allowed them to have tents.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have supplied rifles.

Mr. CLARE. You gave them no ammunition.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. FOWLER. They would be like wooden guns then.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is plenty of ammunition to be purchased.

Mr. FOWLER. No better use could be made of the money that is devoted to militia purposes, then in supplying these cadet corps with tents so that they may camp out. They go into the business not for the 75 cents a day but for mere love and enthusiasm, and when they are young and enthusiastic is the time to make soldiers of them. The militia department should supply the cadets with tents and Morris tubes. I think the minister should take that suggestion into his serious consideration and try to do something during the coming summer.

Mr. INGRAM. The militia department has sent officers to inspect these different cadet corps.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. And we have supplied drill instructors from the permanent force.

Mr. INGRAM. I see that there is but one slight reference to the cadets in the whole of the militia report. Would it not be well to publish the report of these inspecting officers so that we may know what progress they are making.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That suggestion is a very good one. The cadets of course are not part of the militia, and there is no vote taken for them.

Mr. CLARKE. Do I understand that no Morris tubes were issued to the cadet corps.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The Deputy Minister informs me that there were not any issued.

Mr. CLARKE. What did the minister say as to supplying tents for the cadets ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We really have not the tents available. If I could I would gladly facilitate the cadets in securing tents that are reported as unfit for military use, but we must go through the form of selling them by public auction.

Mr. CLARKE. I desire to take the opportunity of saying that on two or three occasions when I asked the minister to facilitate the camping out of the companies of the boys brigade, he very kindly placed at their disposal tents that were not quite up to the mark for military purposes. Possibly he might be able to do something of that kind for the cadets.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will look into that suggestion.

Mr. CLARKE. I should think too, that the senior members of the cadet corps might possibly be supplied with a certain quantity of ammunition.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that the supplies, after they become used up, can only be sold legally by public auction.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, or by public tender.

Mr. SPROULE. That was not done with rifles that were sold at twenty-five cents each.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, by public tender advertised in every paper in all the large cities in Canada. That matter was threshed out here. I laid the papers on the Table. The hon. gentleman has forgotten it.

Mr. INGRAM. When you submit the Bill next session you might provide that the damaged tents should be given to the cadet corps.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think provision might be made to include the cadets in the militia of the country, and I may say that is under consideration. Then there would be no difficulty.

Mr. INGRAM. I notice also that the report calls attention to the fact that many of the aiming tubes were out of order. It says :—

> In one instance 33 out of a total of 48 were returned serviceable, as many as seven bullets having to be removed from one tube.

Is that owing to the carelessness of the men using them or to the tubes not being perfect ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot tell my hon. friend. I think that it must be due to carelessness.

Mr. CLARE. In the petition to the minister to which I have referred they asked that some of the discarded staff sergeants' swords should be given to the officers of the cadet corps. I understand that each company would like to have three swords, and if they are discarded and of no use to the department, I do not see why they should not be given to the cadet corps.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No reason at all. I think that ought to be done. I will look into it.

Mr. FOWLER. I think some of these young cadets could hardly lift a cavalry sword. It would be rather heavy for them.

Mr. INGRAM. I observe that the Major General in his report expresses disapproval of the abolition of canteens on the ground that soldiers are liable to go to hotels and indulge in spirits whereas they would be content with a glass of beer if they could get it in the canteen in camp. Has the hon. minister any particular view himself on this question ? I know he was attacked very severely a few years ago for allowing the canteens to exist, and he assured those who were attacking him that it was his intention to abolish them. If the commanding officer in his report recommends them, and if only ales are allowed to be sold in them, on the ground that they would prevent the soldiers going outside and indulging too freely, I think it would be a step in the right direction to re-establish them, notwithstanding all that has been said against them. There is no doubt that while there may be a good many temperance men in camp, there are others who believe in taking a glass of ale—perhaps more than that.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Two of them.

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, two of them. I think we ought not to be guided too much by sentiment in this matter. I think common sense ought to prevail, and that the Major General's recommendation should be carried out. I am not advocating the drinking of liquor by soldiers, but they may think at times that they should have a glass of ale, and I see no good reason why they should be deprived of it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If my hon. friend were clothed with responsibility of office possibly he would not be quite so free to express his opinion. The fact is that when I came into office I found the regulation to which the Major General takes exception in existence, although some people have supposed that it was adopted quite recently. That regulation has been in existence for ten years or more. While the Major General is quite within his right in expressing his own opinion, I am not myself inclined to recommend the wiping out of that regulation. If a man requires a glass of beer, if it is essential to his health, there is a way of getting it, the surgeon can prescribe it. If he really needs anything of that kind it can be got in that way. If he is perfectly well he can get along very well with tea or coffee or ginger ale. I am inclined to think that our lady friends, who take a great interest in the militia, would view the abolition of this regulation as a retrograde step, and I do not propose at this moment to take the risk of making them the enemies of the militia organization. I think, therefore, the regulation will have to continue.

Mr. INGRAM. Lest I should be thought to have misrepresented the position of the Major General, I think it would be well to place on 'Hansard' his recommendation on this subject, and if hon. gentlemen have no objection, I will read it for that purpose. He says this :

> I would not on any account permit the sale of spirits in the canteens during annual drill, but I must here most strongly protest against a system that forces a soldier, if he needs a glass of beer, to resort to the saloons and drinking shops of the nearest town where there is no control over either the quality, nature, or quantity of the liquor supplied to him. The effect of this regulation is to largely increase the amount of drunkenness in camp, and it is easy to show why this is so. In a military canteen all liquor has to be consumed on the premises and, if proper supervision is exercised, no man shall be served with more than is good for him. But what happens under the existing system of prohibition ? The man who would have been contented with his glass of ale or lager beer had he been able to procure it in camp, has to walk some distance to get his drink, probably takes whiskey instead of malt liquor, and very often returns to camp with a bottle of bad whiskey under his coat which he takes to his tent and proceeds to make his comrades intoxicated.
> I contend that it is a serious evil to drive our men into the temptation of the city liquor bars, rather than let them buy a glass of wholesome beer in their own camp, and I trust that this incentive to intemperance may be removed from the militia regulations.

There is no doubt that the Major General has had a great deal of experience of soldiers, both in the old country and in Canada, and if his observation of their habits and customs has led him to make this recommendation, and it will be the means of preventing the too free use of spirits, and is really a step in the direction of temperance, I think his recommendation should be carried out. If it be in the interest of temperance, as he says it is—and I am sure he ought to be the better judge than some of those who object—in my judgment we should adopt the recommendation of the Major General.

Mr. SPROULE. Have the various corps the right to store their arms at their own headquarters ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The General commanding recommends that we should go back to the old system of issuing the rifles to the captains of companies at company headquarters, and that is being done now.

Mr. CLARKE. Have we disposed of canteen business ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I intend to leave the regulation as it is.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not quite understand the explanation of the minister with regard to the increase of $440,000 to $520,000. Are $150,000 more to be voted in the supplementaries ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The fact is that the annual drill of the whole militia costs $425,000, and the custom has been to vote $275,000 for the first part of the year and $150,000 for the balance. But there is not much to be said in defence of that system. I ask the one sum, and it is not my intention to ask any supplementary estimates for the years 1902-3. But there will be a supplementary asked for this year 1901-2, as a portion of the militia go into camp in June, and it will require $135,000 to $150,000 to drill them. This vote will be sufficient for the year from 1st July, 1902 to the 30th June, 1903.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is really no increase ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, it is a reduction.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Comparing it with the estimate of 1900, which was $275,000, and adding the $150,000, would make $425,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And this includes something further ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Clothing and stores.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think this is a very much better way than to have two votes. I objected to that system of supplementary votes last year. I could see no reason why all the departments should not do as the hon. gentleman has done in this case, namely, bring down the whole estimate in the first place, so that the House may judge what amount the minister thinks will be requisite for the expenditure of the year. I made a formal protest against the other system last year, and suggested to the Minister of Finance that this change should be adopted and I am glad it has been in this case. It is a more business like way of dealing with the matter.

Salaries and wages, $90,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The increase here of $10,000 is due to the fact that we have had to employ more men and give them higher wages.

Higher wages are being paid in every other department of the government, and we found it absolutely necessary to increase them here. We increased last year the pay something like 25 cents per day for each man, and I hope we will be able to get along this year without further increase.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the hon. minister considered the propriety of giving the first contingent the same pay as was received by the second ? That was brought to the attention of parliament last session, and he said he would consider the matter.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Before the supplementaries come down I may be able to give an answer. The matter was discussed last session and I thought it seemed to be the sense of the House that the law, as it stood, should not be disturbed. However, I will bring the matter up again in council, and have it discussed and give an answer later.

Mr. CLARKE. I think the feeling is very general, in view of the splendid services rendered by the men of the first contingent, that it was an invidious distinction to pay them a much smaller per diem allowance than the men who succeeded them. I am satisfied that if the minister should ask parliament to vote the amount necessary to increase the pay of the men, it would be cheerfully done. The pay did not influence the men of the first contingent, or those of the second contingent either, and I think that the men of the first contingent are entitled to as much per diem as the men who followed them.

Militia—chargeable to income—military properties, $190,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Some time ago, discussing the Sussex armoury, I made a statement which I wish to correct. I found some fault with the architect who designed the armoury and who had apportioned the different parts of it to the several corps. I think that I stated at that time that the compartments that were to be given to each company of the infantry were made the same size as those set apart for each squadron of cavalry. I was speaking from recollection of what had been said to me. I find that, technically, I was wrong. But, practically I was right. The armoury is divided into two equal portions, one half being devoted to the 8th regiment of cavalry, and the other to the 74th battalion. Now, the 74th battalion consists of six companies, with the total strength of 278. The cavalry has a total strength of 359, or nearly a hundred more than the infantry. In the case of the cavalry, there is the horse equipment, and the equipment of a horse will occupy fully as much space as the equipment of a man. The compartments were not as I stated they were, of equal size, for there are six compartments in one half, one for the use of the quartermaster and the others for the use of the companies; in the other case there are five compartments, one for the use of the quartermaster, and four for the accoutrements of men and horses. Generally speaking, the point I made was that the same amount of room was devoted to the 74th battalion as was devoted to the 8th cavalry, though the cavalry consisted of something like eighty more men than the infantry and also had the equipment of the horses to consider. Therefore, my contention was a proper one, and there is actually not room enough for this regiment of cavalry and its equipment. I think that at that time the minister said that the Oliver equipment when issued to the men, would take up a good deal more room. But, even so, I must persist in my claim that the division is not properly made, if it is made along the lines suggested.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. When my hon. friend (Mr. Fowler) made the statement, I felt that it was an important one, because it seemed to reflect upon the work of the architect. The question is not so much as to how the space is divided, for it is possible the 74th regiment might be increased in strength, or, if there was extra room another infantry corps might be accommodated, for this room is not necessarily limited to the 74th. But the real question is the one to which the hon. gentleman referred at the end of his remarks—is there sufficient accommodation for the cavalry ? The hon gentleman says there is not. But my officers say that there is.

Mr. FOWLER. I may say that my authority is the quartermaster of the 8th Hussars, who ought to know.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) speak to the colonel about it ?

Mr. FOWLER. I did not happen to see the colonel, but the quartermaster would know more about it than the colonel.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I understand that the plan was submitted to the colonel before the work was gone on with, and he approved of it. The chief engineer of the department says that the plan was prepared by him, giving the accommodation asked for by the General Officer commanding.

Mr. INGRAM. I notice that the chief engineer of the Militia Department has made a recommendation, as follows :

The present system by which the Public Works Department construct all military buildings is very unsatisfactory, and considerable trouble and delay is occasioned thereby. I would strongly urge the necessity of having the construction, as well as the maintenance and repairs of these buildings under the charge of the engineer branch of the Department of Militia and Defence.

Has any step been taken on that direction, or is that recommendation to be acted upon ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No steps have been taken in that direction, and I do not feel at liberty to discuss the matter until the policy of the government with reference to it has been settled. It is no harm, however, for me to say that there is a good deal of inconvenience resulting from the fact that the work for the Militia Department is being done by the Department of Public Works. The same condition of things existed for many years in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and, I think while Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper was minister, or perhaps earlier, a change was made by which the Department of Marine and Fisheries did their own work of constructing lighthouses and so on. There would certainly be many advantages in having the work done by the Militia Department itself.

Mr. INGRAM. As I understand, these armouries are for the purpose of keeping the arms and accoutrements in a proper state. I notice that at page 41, the Major General commanding reports :

> So soon as district staff adjutants are appointed to all the military districts, more frequent inspections of the arms and equipment of rural companies should be made, and this would minimize the risk of deterioration ; but I strongly recommend that, to make inspections more effective, a thoroughly qualified armourer should form part of the staff of each military district, who should accompany the staff officer at all inspections.

Have these district staff adjutants been appointed ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. INGRAM. Have the armourers been appointed ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I believe there are qualified armourers in nearly all, if not all, the military districts.

Mr. INGRAM. May I ask if the district staff adjutant for military district No. 1 has been appointed ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is the London district ? No.

Mr. OLIVER. What arrangement has been made for the taking care of the arms and accoutrements of the mounted rifles in the west ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. So far as I know, they are under the control of the commanding officer.

Mr. OLIVER. Have any arrangements been made for the renting of a building to keep them in ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, there is a money allowance that is supposed to be sufficient to cover everything. As a matter of fact the captains have usually buildings of their own, and they are given lump sums of money for taking care of the buildings.

Mr. BARKER. I wish to call attention to the state of things that exists at Hamilton. We have there a battery of artillery and a regiment of infantry ; and without boasting, I may say we are very proud of that battery and of that regiment. We think they are not exceeded in soldierly qualities by any other regiment or battery in the Dominion. A medical corps has lately been formed there, and during the short time it has been in existence we have had reason to feel equally proud of the commander and men of that corps. Not long since I was asked by the officer commanding to visit the quarters of the medical corps, and I am glad to be able to say, to the credit of the Militia Department, that the medical and surgical equipment provided there by the government was a credit to this country. I do not profess to be able to judge myself of such matters, but I express the opinion of gentlemen who are competent to judge. Nothing could be better, nothing could be more complete than the equipment provided by the minister. But, Sir, I was surprised, when asked to visit the quarters of that corps, to find that, instead of going to the drill shed and armoury, I had to go into the middle of the city, half a mile away from the armoury, and into the second story of a business block. Now I have a reason for bringing this matter before the minister. There are volunteers drilling night after night at this season, and practicing with heavy guns, and at any moment there may be a serious accident, and if an accident should occur it would be easier to get a dozen ordinary medical practitioners than to reach the medical corps at its quarters. I do not think that is right. I may say that I was even more astonished to learn that the quarters in which these valuable stores were kept were not provided by the Dominion of Canada, but by the officer commanding the corps and at his own expense. I think that is not credible to this Dominion. I make these remarks with reference to what the minister has said as to the providing of accommodation not being entirely within his control. The Minister of Public Works, I believe, as things go at present, has to be consulted in all such matters. I do not know whether the Minister of Militia and Defence has any control over the 40,000 rifles that he has spoken of, but if he has not, I think he ought to apply to the Major General for a permit to take one of those rifles with a bayonet, and poke up the Minister of Public Works to compel him to provide us with proper accommodation at Hamilton for the medical corps. Accidents might very possibly happen to the men in gun drill. Some years ago the officer commanding the battery at Hamilton was injured in camp, and that gentleman will go to his grave limping because there were not then at hand the necessary surgical appliances. Such accidents may happen at any time to the men of the corps in the spring of the year, and I think it is not to the credit of the government—I do not like to say it is to the discredit of the Militia Department, because it does not entirely rest with the Minister of Militia; but it is not to the credit of the government that after forming and equipping a medical corps, that corps should not be, in case of accident, immediately available.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is a great deal of force and truth in what my hon. friend has said. He must not forget, however, that when the Hamilton drill hall was constructed, in fact all the drill halls, there were no bearer companies then, and there was no army medical corps or staff in existence, you may say, in this country. It was not then contemplated to give accommodation to a corps of any kind to which the hon. gentleman refers, though we can all see now that such a corps is absolutely necessary, and one of the most important parts of the system. Therefore a place had to be found outside. I was not aware that the commanding officer of the bearer company was paying rent for the building, I was under the impression we were paying it. I know we are paying rent in other places, and we should pay rent in Hamilton. My hon. friend, however, will be glad to know that I hope to be able, out of this vote, to make some provision adjacent to that drill hall for the corps of which he speaks. That is one of the things which we contemplate doing with the money now being voted.

Mr. BARKER. I do not assert positively that the commanding officer is paying the rent, but I understand he is. I shall be glad to know that the government is paying the rent.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We are paying it everywhere else.

Mr. BARKER. The most serious objection is that the medical corps are quartered nearly half a mile away from the drill shed. I think that state of things should not exist one minute longer than it can be remedied.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I agree in that view.

Mr. CLARE. I notice in the report of the Major General that during the year 1901, he mentions drill halls as having been built at Windsor, Dundas, Kingston and Vancouver, and central armouries at Aurora, Barrie, Charlottetown, Chatham, Fredericton, Galt, &c. I would like to know whether this means that an armoury has been erected in the town of Galt. It says so on page 41 ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not prepared to give an answer with regard to this particular place. The report means, I think, that armouries have been established within the buildings. The Militia Department does not construct new buildings; but under the Act we may add to buildings already in existence, or repair or alter them. So I assume that must mean that in Galt some change has been made in the building for providing a central armoury for the battalion of infantry.

Mr. CLARE. The report here says that it had been completed. Now in the town of Galt the agricultural society of the south riding of Waterloo, erected a new building, and in this building they rented a room, I understand, for an armoury, for which the government pays them $40 per annum. This report is misleading if it means that the government has erected a building there for armoury purposes. I would like to say that in the county of Waterloo, where we have a regiment, there is just one armoury for one of the companies in the town of Hespeler, and that itself is a make shift.

I think it would be proper for the government to enlarge the regiment which we have in Waterloo, and which is composed of six companies. I understand that there should be eight companies in a regiment. We can easily have two companies more. The town of Waterloo is very anxious to organize a company, Berlin would form another company, and Preston could form a company. The county of Waterloo is so situated that one-half of the regiment, located in Hespeler, Preston and Galt, would have the advantage of electric railway communication. They would have four companies at these places, and then four other companies would be located, two at Berlin, one at Waterloo and one at Hamburg. We could then have a full regiment, and we should have armoury and drill shed accommodation for half of the battalion in Galt, and for the other half in Berlin. Is it the intention of the government to erect these buildings ? I understand, a few years ago—I do not know whether it was just before an election—there was some land purchased in the town of Berlin for the purpose of erecting a drill shed and armoury. Unfortunately in North Waterloo the election went by acclamation and we have heard nothing since in regard to it. I think when we have in that county men who are willing to fight the battles of the country, we should provide them with armouries so as to give them a chance.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I can assure my hon. friend (Mr. Clare), in all sincerity, that the election had nothing to do, nor will it have anything to do with the policy of the Militia Department as to where armouries are located. They are located at the headquarters of the battalion, and that will be done regardless of the results of elections. In regard to this particular battalion to which my hon. friend has referred, I have no doubt that what is meant is that the room in Galt has been fitted up at the expense of the Militia Department. Some expenditure has been made, and no doubt the name is included there, because there has been an expenditure. Perhaps the engineer should have been more particular as to the nature of it. That is the reason it is in the list. There has been some expenditure in connection with arm racks, or the means of taking care of the equipment and furniture.

Mr. CLARKE. Was there a site purchased for the erection of a drill hall at Berlin a couple of years ago?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think not.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood the statement was made that there had been.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. CLARKE. In the list of drill halls and central armouries that have been completed during 1901, I notice that the Toronto central armoury is conspicuous by its absence. That hall has not been completed yet, but I am very glad to hear from the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence that it is within the province of the Department of Militia to add to or alter the buildings that have been erected for militia purposes by the Public Works Department.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. We have brought the question of the completion of the Toronto drill hall before the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence and the hon. Minister of Public Works again and again, but there seemed always to be a divided authority. When we appealed to the hon. Minister of Public Works we were referred to the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, and when we appealed to that hon. gentleman, we were referred by him to his colleague. Now, however, he has made the statement, and I am very glad to hear it from him, that it is quite within the province of the Militia Department to complete a building, to add to a building, or to alter it.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Not to complete.

Mr. CLARKE. We only want him to add the accommodation that is so urgently required, and we shall certainly after this hold the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence himself, and not the hon. Minister of Public Works, responsible if the work is not done with reasonable expedition.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think my hon. friend (Mr Clarke) is a little bit astray yet. I understand him to say that the building in Toronto is not completed.

Mr. CLARKE. No.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Therefore, the Public Works Department have not yet got through with their job, and I must refer the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) to the department which undertook the construction of this building to see that they complete it.

Mr. BLAIN. I would like to ask the hon. minister if any provision is made in this grant for the better accommodation of arms in the town of Brampton. This is the matter that was up for consideration last year.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) that under the regulations by which the arms are distributed to the headquarters of companies, a good many armouries that were under consideration will be unnecessary, and I cannot say whether this is one of them or not. What is the number of the hon. gentleman's battalion?

Mr. BLAIN. The 36th Peel Battalion.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have the list here and I will look at it in the meantime and see whether it is included.

Mr. INGRAM. Perhaps it may be well to see what the Major General says on this question of armouries. He says :

> I have also observed that where rural regiments have been provided with central armouries, there is a decided leaning on the part of commanding officers to gradually convert their commands into city corps, to the very great detriment of the service, for, however good the city regiments may be, the bulk of our defence force must be the hardy men of our rural units, and anything which has a possibility of weakening that portion of the active militia is, in my opinion, greatly to be deprecated
> I, therefore, recommend that 'central armouries' should cease to be provided for rural regiments, and that, in their stead, plain substantial buildings should be hired, as at present, for company armouries at the company headquarters.

Perhaps that would do away with a lot of the promises that are made by the Public Works Department for political purposes to put up buildings throughout the country. I will be very glad indeed if some of the patronage of that department is wiped out by taking away telegraph lines and armouries from it. If the Public Works Department were shorn of a lot of that patronage, we would have less politics in that department.

Mr. McGOWAN. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence what the policy of the department is in connection with this matter that the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) has spoken about. Some military people in my constituency belonging to the 30th regiment, feel very strongly about this matter. They think it will be most unwise to establish central armouries at the headquarters of the regiment, and I understand that they have communicated that view to the minister. They think it would be a mistake to build a large armoury in the city of Guelph, and this notwithstanding the fact that some of the people holding that view live in the city of Guelph themselves. They spoke to me about it. They expressed the belief that it would be better to provide accommodation at the company headquarters and not at the headquarters of the regiment. When I was home during the recess I was spoken to about it, and I know there is quite a strong feeling in the regiment that instead of erecting a large building at the headquarters of the regiment the minister should provide accommodation at the company headquarters. Will the minister tell us what his policy is in regard to that matter?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I agree with the recommendation of the Major General that we should provide armouries, or suitable rooms, at the company headquarters, and on the strength of that recommendation, rifles will be immediately issued to the rural battalions and disposed of in that way. I do not think it will be necessary to construct a building in all cases, perhaps not in many cases, because suitable rooms can be found. That is the policy which has been adopted.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I understand that about a month ago a delegation from Montreal composed of the officers of the Montreal regiments came up to Ottawa and urged the establishement of a military school. Has any progress been made in that connection?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I will have to refer my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux), I think, to the hon. Minister of Public Works, as well as my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Clarke). As a matter of fact, what my hon. friend says is quite correct, and I may say to him that I consider it a matter of importance that there should be a depot established at the most important centre of trade and population in Canada, Montreal. The matter has not been fully discussed yet, and I think it would be premature to say what would be done this year.

Mr. CLARKE. I wish to direct the attention of the Minister of Militia and Defence to the report of the chief engineer of his department respecting military buildings. This report is very pregnant now, and if the recommendation which the chief engineer made were carried out we would know whom to hold responsible for the unreasonable delays which have occurred. The report says:

> The present system by which the Public Works Department construct all military buildings is very unsatisfactory, and considerable trouble and delay is occasioned thereby. I would strongly urge the necessity of having the construction, as well as the maintenance and repairs of these buildings under the charge of the engineer branch of the Department of Militia and Defence.

Might I ask the minister: What is the policy of the department respecting this recommendation? Has the government decided to carry it out or not?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have already stated that I have no hesitation in saying that I believe that it would be in the public interest to have the construction of military buildings under the control of the Militia Department. So far no action has been taken with reference to that.

Mr. CLARKE. This would be a very good time to carry out the recommendation made by the officer of the department.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It would require an Act of parliament.

Mr. CLARKE. We could rush that through in very short order if absolutely necessary. There is a good opportunity for doing so just now. I find that the chief superintendent of stores also makes a report in reference to the condition of military store buildings which emphasizes the necessity for a change in the present method of constructing and maintaining militia buildings. This officer says on page three of his report:

> Store Buildings.
> Reference is requested to recommendations on this subject, in previous reports. New store buildings are urgently required in Toronto and Kingston. Those now in use are constructed of wood, very old, and in constant need of repair. No proper care can be taken of the valuable material stored in them.

I would remind the Minister of Militia and Defence that so deficient is the military store accommodation in the city of Toronto, that some of the municipal buildings have been given to the department in which to store valuable military supplies. In view of the reports made by the superintendent of military stores, and by the chief engineer of the department, this matter should be immediately given attention to. We should be able to hold some minister responsible for the unreasonable delay in completing the drill shed in Toronto. Now that the attention of the Minister of Militia and Defence has been called to the matter, and now that he has assumed a reasonable measure of responsibility, I trust that we shall have no more cause for complaint.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the Minister of Militia and Defence now answer my question with regard to a drill shed in Brampton.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not find any mention of that particular matter but as this is a general vote it is possible to use it for urgent purposes as they arise. I shall be very glad to look into the matter to see if what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blain) refers to has been recommended, or whether it will still be required under the changed conditions to which I have referred as to the distribution of arms to the country companies.

Militia—Provisions, supplies and remounts, $130,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say a word on a subject somewhat cognate to this vote. The system which has been carried out by Major Dent heretofore in purchasing remounts has not given satisfaction, although I believe that he is now making a change which will be more likely to meet with approval than the original system. At first remounts were purchased generally through one party, and if rumour can be relied upon that party made a great deal of money and did very little work. Those who purchased horses and brought them to Toronto complain that they were obliged to sell them through Grand's old firm, which had a substantial rake off on every animal purchased. The result was that the buyer was obliged to purchase them at a very low figure, and he could not get as good a class of horses on account of the low prices. He was obliged to sell them to this firm and the firm for doing nothing at all, except perhaps supplying a suitable place for the inspection of the horses, made a substantial rake off. While the Militia Department here may have no control over the matter, yet we have always believed that if they made representations to the War Office that it would be more in their interest and in the interest of the people of Canada if a different system were adopted, that representation would be attended to. It would be a much better plan to have the horses sent to the exhibition grounds in Toronto where they could be inspected at certain dates and purchased if found suitable. In this way a better class of animals would be supplied at a lower cost to the War Department, and our farmers would get better prices. I notice of late that there is greater latitude allowed to the buyers of horses, and so far that this is an improvement. I hold that there should be the greatest freedom in this matter, and even the individual farmer should be able to send his animals to Toronto and have them examined and purchased direct from him. That system would be better for the Imperial authorities, and the farmers of Ontario would get a better price for their animals.

Mr. McGOWAN. All the horses were not bought in Toronto.

Mr. SPROULE. No, but a large number were.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) says : This is not our concern nor do I think it would be advisable for us to offer advice unless it were asked. When my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture was in England last year he had an opportunity of discussing this very question with the War Office, and he and I have been trying to induce the Imperial authorities to establish regular and permanent remount stations in this country for the purchase of horses. Up to this date nothing has been done, but I hope that something may be done, in which case officers of either the Department of Agriculture or of my own department would deal directly with the people. It has been suggested that fairs might be held, not necessarily at Toronto, but at country centres once a month, to which horses might be brought, and that men should be sent out to select the horses on the spot. I hope something of that kind will grow out of the negotiations now going on.

Mr. SPROULE. That would be preferable, for this reason, that a large percentage of the horses sent to Toronto are culled out, and they have either to be put up at auction and sold at whatever they will bring, or else are left on the buyer's hands. If he sells them, he is obliged to take a lower price than the animal is worth if bought at home, besides paying the cost of sending them there.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is quite true, and I think the amount of money which these dealers have been credited with having made is altogether incorrect. As my hon. friend says, they have had left on their hands a large number of horses which they could not dispose of or had to sell at auction at very low figures, which has eaten up a very large part of the profit.

Mr. SPROULE. My understanding is that if a buyer consigned a number of horses to Silver and Grand of Toronto, he would only be responsible for the number selected out of that consignment and he would get something like $5 or $10 for each horse taken by the purchaser, but the culls would be left on his hands.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I happen to know of one case in which fully 12½ per cent of the horses consigned to the Grand firm were thrown on their hands, and they actually lost that number of horses, or had to dispose of them at very low figures.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that the officer who is here purchasing on behalf of the War Office has considerably modified the original system, and for more than a year back has been purchasing in a large number of centres. When he first began purchasing he only went to two or three centres—perhaps Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal ; but lately he has been going to a large number of centres, and has been having the horses brought there. What my hon. friend the Minister of Militia says is quite true in many instances. I do not think the officer himself knows altogether what the arrangements are between the man who brings in the horses and the original owners of them ; but I know of my own personal knowledge that in many cases the contractors found on their hands a large number of rejected horses which they had to dispose of as best they could. In addition to that, they were under considerable expense. They had to keep the horses from one to two weeks before the officers came round, trim them, and in some cases bridle and bit them and manage them. So that the business is not quite as profitable as at first sight it appears. I have no doubt these contractors have been making some money ; it is not likely they would engage in the business if they did not ; but I think I may say that the prices of horses in Canada has been materially raised in consequence of the purchases of the War Office within the last two years, and it has helped to relieve our own market of a large number of horses which otherwise would not have been easily sold.

Mr. SPROULE. I know that prices have been materially raised, because many of these horses were bought from the farmers at as low as $65 or $70 and sold to the War Office at $140.

An hon. MEMBER. No, no.

Mr. SPROULE. I know what I am talking about, because I saw some of the animals purchased. I moved for a return on the subject in this House, and I found that these horses had been sold to the War Office at an average price of $140. But that has been changed, and the farmers are at present getting comparatively good prices for their horses. If, as the minister suggests, fairs are held at different localities, where the farmers can bring in their horses or the contractors could have them selected direct by the party sent around to make the selection, that would be in my judgment the very best plan that could be adopted.

Grants to associations, $38,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is the usual vote. Ontario gets $1,800, Quebec $1,700, Nova Scotia $1,500, New Brunswick $1,300, Manitoba $750, British Columbia $620, and Prince Edward Island $630, making $8,300. The grant to battalion rifle associations and to bands range from $25 to $200 each, according to strength and efficiency, about 90 of each. The artillery grant is all paid to the Artillery Association. There is the grant to the Dominion Rifle Association and the grant to local rifle associations $6,500. The bands of the active militia receive $7,500, and military institutes $300.

Contingencies, $22,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This includes printing and stationery, $12,000; military survey, $4,000. This is a topographical survey, done by cadets at the Royal Military College, under the direction of their professors.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was done with it afterwards ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is in the Intelligence branch of the Quartermaster General's office. It is a most careful survey of the country along the frontier, giving every road, the height of hills and the buildings. It is a magnificent piece of work, well worth examining.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much of the country has been done ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We have been doing the work for the last five years. I could not say the number of miles. Then there is advertising $1,500; injuries at annual drill, $3,000; telegraph and legal expenses, &c., $3,500. When we came to office we had a smaller vote, but two years ago we adopted the plan of making the vote large enough to cover expenses, so that we will not have to ask any supplementary vote.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are those injuries ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Injuries to men, but more particularly to horses. Every year there is a certain number of horses killed or rendered useless, and we pay for them at a rate not exceeding $100 per horse.

Royal Military College, $75,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I would call the attention of the minister to some comments by the commandant on this institution :

It is a matter for great regret that this admirable institution, established for the express purpose of securing for the Canadian militia a supply of well trained and capable officers, entirely fails to attain this object. What brought about this state of things it is impossible to say, but one thing seems clear, that in the period spent at the college, the students do not imbibe any soldierly ambition or acquire a taste for military employment, and it is sad to see, year after year, young gentlemen who have received such an excellent military education at great cost to the state, holding aloof from the service of their country.

Has the minister given any consideration to those comments ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have read very carefully the General's report, and while I agree with him to some extent, I do not think that he should have made so strong a case. He is quite mistaken when he says that no military spirit is imparted to the cadets. As a matter of fact, there are now in the British army nearly a hundred cadets of the Royal Military College Had he said that the young men were not entering our militia or permanent corps, he would have spoken more correctly. But I do not see how we can remedy this. We might require each young man, on entering the school, to undertake to join a corps of Canadian militia after he came out, but I think that would be rather difficult. What I hope is that in the future more graduates of the college will come into our permanent corps. We have scarcely any there now, because they do not consider it good enough for them. They prefer going to the British army, where they have a career, which our permanent force does not offer. Besides we have no pensions, so that there is very little but hard work to offer them, and nothing at the end. But now we have a pension and hope to greatly raise the character of the permanent corps. So far as the active militia is concerned, every cadet who graduates is a member of the Canadian active militia and available for service when required. Many of these young men are now in the active militia throughout the country, and when the South African trouble came, we found dozens of them who were working throughout Canada as engineers, offering their services. There was a large number on the second contingent and in the Strathcona Horse, and a considerable number are now in the squadrons in the last contingent, so that I do not think the condition is as hopeless as the Major General thinks.

Mr. SPROULE. What percentage of the graduates is in the Canadian militia and also in Canada ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I had these figures a year or two ago and gave them to the House. I asked for the statement this morning, but have not yet received it, but will give the information on the supplementaries.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was it in the 'Hansard' last year ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Either that or the year before.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This school seems to be regarded more as a school for educating an engineer than to fit young men for the military career. I do not know exactly how the difficulty is to be got over, but it seems rather discouraging. Are there any graduates of that school in the permanent force ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, two or three.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How many does the school turn out annually ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Now over thirty. For a good many years there were only from seven to ten.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). A certain number go into the Imperial service ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, a very large number went last year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose that is something that might be placed to our credit—that we do afford a military education to officers which go into the service every year. Is the education provided by this institution regarded as at all equivalent to the training given by similar institutions in England ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Quite as good.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is placed on the same plane ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the hon. gentleman any idea how many men there are in the Imperial service who are graduates of this college ? I suppose the statement he refers to would give that ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think it is over a hundred.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see by the Auditor General's report, page Q-91 that William Allan and Son of Kingston received $2,430.15 for boots, &c., and at page Q-93 C. Livingston and Bros., received $7,649.99 for clothing. Were these goods purchased by tender ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think not.

Mr. TAYLOR. I should think not by the prices that I see charged here, and by the fact that these gentlemen are very strong partisans of hon. gentlemen opposite. Messrs. Allan supplied 49 pairs of long boots at $10, and 10 pairs of riding boots at $10 a pair, also 194 pairs of short boots at $6 a pair. Then, Messrs. Livingston supplied, for instance blouses at $2.50 each, 4 great coats and 2 capes, $73 ; 36 coats at $10.50 ; 8 pairs of gloves at 25 cents and 170 pairs at $1 a pair. I suppose these are kid gloves for the young gentlemen we have there. It seems to me the furnishing of supplies for that Military College ought to be by tender and not by going to a friend of the party at Kingston and paying these large prices, when the amount is over $7,600.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That has never been done, and it would be very difficult to do. These young gentlemen have to be measured for the boots or clothing they get. It is not like asking for a large quantity of clothing for general use to be distributed among men according as it happens to fit. In this case they are the prices of the tailor and shoemaker—retail prices.

Mr. TAYLOR. Retail prices ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Certainly.

Militia—chargeable to income—Dominion Arsenal, $150,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is an increase here of $32,000. What is the explanation of that ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is for the manufacture of cartridges. This increase of $32,000 is taken from what would have been the vote for annual drill and stores. As I pointed out, we are increasing the output of cartridges enormously, and this is to pay for wages, as we must employ more labour.

Mr. INGRAM. Is there anything in this vote for additional machinery, or anything of that kind ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, all labour.

Militia—chargeable to income—defences at Esquimalt, $114,703.

Mr. SPROULE. What is being done there ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There is an increase over last year of $2,433.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). According to the estimates before us there is a decrease of over $10,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I may explain that this is the result of an agreement between the Imperial and the Canadian governments. There has been, ever since confederation, an understanding between the two governments as to the proportion of expense that each should bear as to the defences at Esquimalt. Two years ago a new arrangement was agreed to which was fully explained to the House at the time, and which will be found in 'Hansard.' This is fixed and will not increase. It involves a considerable expenditure on our own militia which really forms the principle part of the garrison at Esquimalt. The cost of the Imperial garrison, 320 officers and men is £21,000 equal to $102,270—that is, we agree to pay that proportion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it all expended by this government, or is any part expended by the Imperial government ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. It is expended by the Imperial government, except the portion that is for the maintenance for the local militia which is supposed to be maintained at the establishment fixed by the agreement, and cost $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What percentage of the whole cost are we to bear ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. We are to bear one-half the total expenses.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Outside of the militia what is the expense ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The total expense is £42,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand, but for what purpose, is it labour, is it buildings, or what ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The maintenance of the Imperial garrison of 320 officers and men including engineers and artillery.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And besides that, we have our own ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Militia—chargeable to capital—rifle range, $75,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I would like to change the words there, so as to make them read 'for the purchase of land and the equipment of rifle ranges.' The work we have done for this vote since it was begun two years ago included the construction of the rifle range here, the expenditure on which I gave last session ; the rifle range at Montreal, the expenditure on which I gave a day or two ago in answer to a question by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) ; rifle ranges at Hamilton, Halifax—or near Halifax—St. John, Fredericton, London, Victoria, Sherbrooke and other places, besides one undertaken at Winnipeg. These are first-class rifle ranges, 1,000 yard ranges, up to date in every respect. I am told that the rifle range at Ottawa is one of the best in the world. The one in Montreal, though not quite so large, is equally good.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the minister said yesterday that the rifle range in Montreal would cost $35,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That was the cost of the buildings and the work alone. I think the land cost $30,000 or $40,000, and the total cost will be about $75,000. The range here cost more than that, because we had heavy expenses in the Exchequer Court by reason of the fact that we could not settle with some of the holders of the land. The rifle range at Winnipeg will be something of the same character, but I hope not as expensive. These rifle ranges cost anywhere from $15,000 to $60,000, or $70,000. That at Sherbrooke is much smaller, and will cost $5,000 or $6,000. I may add that we have another vote of $20,000 for cheap ranges in small districts. It will be divided up in sums of from $200 to $500, to assist rural companies.

Many ranges are being constructed in an inexpensive way where one or two targets are sufficient. In these large ranges we have 40 or 50 targets; in the Ottawa range I think there are 55 targets.

Mr. INGRAM. I noticed a short time ago there was a landslide at Quebec. Can that landslide in any way affect the walls of the fortifications ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, it is on the front, next to the river. Those slides occur every year.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business is it intended to take up to-morrow ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If there are any government Bills they will be proceeded with, and after that branch of the business is disposed of, we will proceed with the estimates, taking up Agriculture and that part referring to quarantine, and Professor Robertson's branches.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

OTTAWA, Friday, April 11, 1902.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

CRIMINAL CODE, 1902.

Mr. B. RUSSELL (Hants) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 108) to amend the Criminal Code, 1892. He said: The Bill makes some amendments in the law in regard to cases stated by magistrates, by way of appeal from summary convictions and orders. It seems that at present the statute is not effective. Amongst other things it provides that rules of court be made by judges to regulate procedure, but it says nothing as to what is to be done in the event of there being no rules of court, which has occurred in our province, and may occur in other provinces. This Bill adopts the English procedure in that matter. There are other matters of procedure which it is proposed to simplify in relation to cases stated by way of appeal from summary convictions.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Hon. Mr. BORDEN (King's).

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

The PRIME MINISTER (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved:

That the name of Mr. George Loy be added to the following standing committees: Private Bills, Printing, Public Accounts and Agriculture.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Commissioner's branch for agriculture and dairying, including cold storage on steamships, on railways, at warehouses and creameries, and for expenses in connection with trial shipments of products, and for securing improvement and recognition of the quality of Canadian farm products, employees paid from this sum not to be subject to the Civil Service Act, $210,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). I suppose it will be proper for me to give an explanation in brief form of the considerable items of increase which are here. The item as you will see is considerably increased over the corresponding item last year, which was $188,600. I may say that while there is some increase in a number of the branches of this department, the chief increase here is due to an undertaking which we have decided upon on behalf of the cheese industry in Canada. Last season's cheese trade was not quite so satisfactory as the cheese trade of Canada has been for many years past and the causes of this have become quite apparent not only to the Department of Agriculture but to those who are engaged in the trade. It appears evident that the demand in England has been for a slightly different character of cheese from that which Canada has been supplying in the past and that to meet that demand our people have been endeavouring to make a softer and moister cheese, sending it forward under the old conditions. These old conditions were quite satisfactory for the harder and dryer cheese which Canada has been supplying in such large quantities for many years, but are not suitable for the character of the cheese now demanded by the English market and which our people have been trying to send forward. That quality of cheese requires that it should be cured and handled in a cooler temperature. A great deal of the injury that has been done during the last season or two has been done in the curing rooms of the factories. It is well known that these curing rooms are not very thoroughly constructed as a general rule and that the heat is not under control, especially in the hot weather of summer. A series of experiments has been carried on for some years back by my department. Another series has been carried on by the Guelph Agricultural College and still another series with most important results in the state of New York. The results of these experiments have all tended in one direction, wonderfully coinciding one with the other, and proving conclusively that this moister and softer cheese which is to-day in demand in the English market must be kept at a temperature below 65 degrees if it is to be successfully made and handled. The question came up : How will you bring about a change of methods to accomplish this object ? My department has been for two years inculcating the necessity for this change, pointing out the results of the experiments that have been made and urging people in every way possible, by addresses at public meetings and by bulletins and reports, to improve their curing rooms so that they might be able to cure their cheese under the new conditions properly. I think, largely due to the fact that the year before last the general price of the article was pretty good notwithstanding the difficulties, the people have disregarded these warnings. During the last season, however, they got a rather severe castigation, if I may call it that, in the English market. We had report after report showing that Canadian cheese was not doing as well as it had been doing in the past, that it was arriving very deficient in the proper quality and that the price of our cheese was not as good in proportion to the price of other cheese in the English market as it had been in the past. The result was the farmers and cheese makers of Canada lost in the last season somewhere about $2,000,000 on the quality of their cheese alone. I venture to think that if the advice of the Department of Agriculture, which was given to them two years ago, had been followed that money would have been saved. No doubt a portion of it would have had to have been spent in the improvements which were required, but still, a very large amount would have been left in the pockets of the people more than they received. In investigating this question the proposition has been made that as it was pretty difficult for the people to improve their curing rooms all over the country in every individual factory, central curing rooms should be established to which the cheese of a group of factories would be brought, thus carrying out the principle of co-operative dairying a little step farther than it has been carried in the past. Just as in days gone by the milk which used to be made into cheese in the home dairy has been carried to the central factory for the purpose of making it into cheese, so, the cheese, after being made, will be carried to a central curing room to be cured. It is felt that some other improvements in connection with the business might be also tried and shown and that the result would be, not only on the point I have just elaborated, beneficial, but on several other points, also, improvements in the trade would be brought about. These propositions were laid before the great dairy conventions of the country during last fall and winter and were approved by these dairy conventions. The question was : How could this change be brought about ? It means generally through the country a very considerable investment in what up to the present time is an experiment—an experiment which has borne the test of careful analysis and investigation on the part of experts, and having been laid before those engaged in the business, has met with their approval, but still, is a thing which has never been tried anywhere else or in Canada either. We have been in the habit, in my department, of doing work of an experimental character for the benefit of the people concerned, but which no individual would be willing to undertake, and which no individual, or group of individuals, could fairly be called upon to undertake. The risk, in other words, of the results of an experiment of this kind should be undertaken by the government and paid for out of public funds rather than by individuals. I, therefore, propose to establish four such curing rooms, one in the western part of Ontario, one in the eastern part of Ontario, one in the French-speaking part of the province of Quebec and one in the English-speaking part of the province of Quebec. Some exception has been taken to the fact that only four of these curing rooms are going to be carried on. Being of an experimental character I think it is desirable that enough should be done to show that if this experiment is successful it can be fairly held to be true under different conditions and under different circumstances, while at the same time, I think it is wise in an experiment of this kind not to build any more than is absolutely necessary to prove the results. The conditions in the particular localities that are indicated are sufficiently diverse to be fairly representative of the conditions in Canada, and the scale on which it is proposed to carry on these experiments will be sufficiently great, I think, that if it is successful in these places it will be held to be successful almost anywhere in Canada. At the same time I feel that the investment of public money in this way is warranted by the magnitude of the interests involved. I need not dwell on the importance of our cheese industry. We know that in some years as much as $20,000,000 worth of cheese has been exported from Canada, and that has been of great value not only to the farmers but to the industrial development of the industries of Canada generally. It is the one industry in which Canada has maintained a pre-eminence, and anything that tends to make this industry a continued success is worthy of attention. In doing this work we will require a capital investment of about $8,000 or $10,000 for each of these curing rooms, and we will require money for maintenance during the current year, which for the four curing rooms will amount in all to $35,000 or $36,000. I trust that the maintenance will not be a serious drain upon the department. Our experiments show that the cheese cured in the cool temperature which we propose to provide will not only be of better quality and consequently bring a higher price, but there will also be very materially less shrinkage in the curing process. While we have not absolutely decided upon all the details, our proposition is that the owners of the cheese will reap all the advantage of the increased price per pound, but that the gain made by the less shrinkage shall go to the maintenance of the curing room. I think that will pay for all the expenses of the curing room in a commercial sense. But we expect to make some other experiments and to do some other work for the benefit of the cheese trade, and I do not think that the expense of this will be covered by the sum I have mentioned. In this estimate we are providing for not only the capital expenditure in building the curing rooms, but also for a sum to help in the management of them for the current year. This involves altogether nearly $40,000, or a very considerable amount more than the increase which is to be noticed in this item.

In other ways the expenditure will be largely on the same lines as in the past. There will be some increases and some slight decreases. The general lines of the work are briefly these. We have the headquarters staff and expenses at Ottawa; we have the extension of markets division; the cold storage division; the live stock commissioners' division; the dairy division and the fruit division; all under the general direction of Professor Robertson, the commissioner of dairying and agriculture.

Mr. CLANCY. The committee will be anxious to know from the minister, as he has no doubt thought it out well, how the cheese is to be brought to the curing stations?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I wish first to give a general sketch of the work included under this vote, and then I will be pleased to answer any questions afterwards. As I have said, we have the extension of markets division, which covers generally the work for the improvement of our products and of the handling of our products between here and the foreign markets. It includes the watching of the loading and of the unloading of vessels on this side of the Atlantic, and on arrival in the old country. It includes the work we have been doing to improve the poultry trade in Canada, and also our efforts to improve the quality of the grain and seed which is used by our farmers. In a general way, that is what is embraced in that particular division. We have for this purpose several men in Montreal watching the loading of ships with our Canadian products, and giving us information which we are constantly laying before the different transportation companies, urging upon them improvement in their methods. We have men also engaged in St. John and Halifax during the winter season. We have also men in the old country watching the landing of our products there, and when time permits, watching the markets and giving information as to the condition of our products when they arrive in these markets. The advice which is given by the handlers in Great Britain is of great importance in the improvement of the packing and management of our products, and it is reported by these gentlemen.

We have also been introducing into this country within the last few years, entirely new methods of dealing with poultry meat. Until comparatively recently in Canada, hardly any one thought of fattening the chickens which they sent to the market. The result was, that Canadian poultry while good in quality, was generally not up to the mark in condition when put on the home market, or the British market. Some years ago, Professor Robertson and myself when in Great Britain came in contact with what was being done there. We found that a most extensive business was being done in the fattening of poultry and we found that these fattened poultry brought a very much higher price than the ordinary birds. We knew that our Canadian poultry was being sent to England in the ordinary condition, and we did not see why the advantages of this improved fattening process should not be obtained for the Canadian manufacturers. We set to work to experiment with regard to this system in Canada. We established some stations where birds were fattened and sent to England. The results were extremely satisfactory; so satisfactory that we were able to induce people to go into the business. The progress has not been very rapid, but it has been very considerable. As will be seen by the trade returns, the poultry meat exported to Great Britain has increased from something under $20,000 four years ago, to something over $200,000 last year. In addition to that increase in the trade, I may say that there has been an immense stimulus given to the feeding of poultry for the home market, and to-day the men who handle poultry in centres like Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa are prepared to take all the fattened poultry they can get at remunerative prices, and the only complaint they have made to us is that they cannot get enough to fill their orders. This stimulus has been given by the department during the last three or four years; and while it was originally intended for the export trade which was rendered possible by the introduction of mechanical cold storage in the steamers crossing the Atlantic, it has extended to the home market in a way which we hardly anticipated when we began it. We have been trying experiments in this line, the details of which I have in my hand and could give. They have all been published in the evidence given before the Committee on Agriculture and in the annual report of my department.

The next branch is what I call the cold storage division, which now involves two distinct branches. When we first discussed cold storage in this country and introduced it in its improved form of mechanical cold storage, we wanted to provide comparatively small cold chambers on the vessels for the purpose of carrying across the Atlantic certain perishable products which otherwise could not be carried at all and be kept in proper condition. This was chiefly necessary for butter, which up to that time had never been landed in the British market in the condition in which it had left the creamery or the producer in Canada. For some time past, practically all the butter that has gone from Canada—and the export of butter has increased from about $1,000,000 in 1896 to $5,000,000 in 1901—has gone in these cold storage chambers in a frozen condition, and is laid down in the English market in practically the same condition that it leaves the creamery in Canada. That is possible by reason, first of all, of the introduction of cold storage refrigerators at the creameries, which we have stimulated by giving a bonus.

Mr. CLANCY. The bonus, I understand, applies also to the cooling rooms for cheese making.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it is only given to factories which make butter in the summer. We have not given any bonus for cooling chambers in cheese factories. There are a large number of factories in Canada which sometimes make butter in summer, as well as cheese, and if they do that we have allowed the bonus to them, the condition being that they must retain the refrigerator room at a certain temperature to become entitled to the bonus. At the present time I think over three-fourths of the factories in Canada fulfil these conditions. Then, cold storage is provided in iced refrigerator cars, numbers of which leave all parts of the country and converge at the ports. At the ports private enterprise has almost entirely fulfilled the necessity of providing cold storage accommodation, for the holding of those perishable products which the owners wish to be held. If they are to be transferred direct to the steamer from the cars, our officers watch that transference to see that no damage is done and that the goods are properly handled. If they are not properly handled, reports are immediately made, and complaints are sent to the transportation companies, and the owners are notified. On the steamers there has been for some years back full accommodation for all the product going forward which requires mechanical cold storage on the steamers. Occasionally instances may have arisen where a particular shipment was destined for some port to which there was no regular line of steamers. I believe that in one or two instances a particular steamer at a particular time was full, and the goods had to wait for a few days or a week for another steamer; but in a general way in the last year or two there has been sufficient of this mechanical refrigeration on the vessels going from Canada to meet the demands of trade.

Now, I want to allude to another kind of what I may call cold storage, although it is different in its essence from this; that is, the principle of cooling the ordinary holds of vessels where certain goods are stored for transport. As a general rule during the shipping season of apples and the big shipping season of cheese, the owners and shippers do not care to pay the extra charges for the cold storage chambers proper, and moreover there are such large quantities of apples going forward for a few months in the fall of the year that it would be practically impossible for the steamers to provide mechanical cold storage for all that freight. Many of the shippers also believe—and I am not prepared to deny it—that it is not at all necessary for cheese or apples to be carried in these cold storage insulated chambers which are cooled by mechanical refrigeration. Under these circumstances they send their cheese and apples forward in the ordinary holds of the vessels; and when the holds are battened down and shut up tight, without any complete system of ventilation, there is no doubt that there has been serious injury to our apples and our cheese going forward in days gone by. We have urged the steamship companies to obviate that difficulty. We have represented to them that it was necessary to put in not only the ordinary ventilating shafts, but fans, so that a mechanical generation of a current of air through the holds would be obtained; and furthermore we have in the last year believed and inculcated that for this purpose there ought to be a mechanical refrigerating plant on the vessels, with a chamber where the air could be artificially cooled down to a low temperature, and that air forced through the holds of the vessels where the cheese and apples are stored. The plan of putting in fans and simply ventilating with the air at the ordinary temperature has been pretty successfully initiated and carried out. The other plan of a refrigerating chamber where the air would be cooled to a very low temperature and forced through has only been begun in the past season. We were able to induce companies to put four ships under that arrangement last season, and we have received the most convincing evidence from the shippers, the receivers in the old land and the owners of those ships, that, for the carriage of our cheese and apples, that system is most eminently satisfactory. I may say that, with the single exception of the newly subsidized line from Bristol to the West Indies, the ships we have been dealing with are the only ones I know of in the world fitted up in that way. This system, I am glad to say, will be very largely extended this season now opening. We have been negotiating with other vessel owners, and I am in a position to state that this coming season there will be at least ten more vessels fitted up in this way for trading in the St. Lawrence.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the difference between freight rates on goods shipped on those vessels and those shipped on other vessels.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall tell the hon. gentleman in a few minutes. From the experience we had last year, I am satisfied that this system will be the ultimate one adopted by all the ships coming to Canada which expect to carry large quantites of cheese or fruit. We have had to do the same kind of thing that we did in the case of the original cold storage scheme, namely, bear a share of the cost of fitting the vessels up, and make a similar contract. The experiment I am happy to say, has justified our expectations. By the contracts we then made with the shipowners to fit up their ships with this apparatus, we agreed to pay half the cost of fitting up, on the understanding that the cost should extend over, in the first case, three years, and in the second, two years; and the results have justified our expectations that the ships would continue with that apparatus after the contract had expired. To-day a large number of the vessels now leaving Canadian ports and not subsidized at all by the government, are fitted up in that way, and when any new ship is being built for the St. Lawrence trade, it is well understood that it is necessary it should be fitted up with this cold storage system. Gratifying as has been the success of the work we have undertaken I am satisfied that when we have got the other system I have been describing, thoroughly into working order, similar results will follow, and that in the near future every steamer which expects to carry our apples and cheese across the Atlantic will be fitted up with this arrangement.

I shall not go into details just now on the particular expenditure in that line, although it is somewhat larger than last year.

With regard to the railways, the system has been constantly extended. We have to-day a larger number of lines fitted up with this system than we had any year before, and are occasionally receiving requests to have more put on, which we immediately act upon.

I hope this year to have an additional officer, whose duty it will be to watch more closely the carriage by these railways of our cold storage products. That work is now being done by an officer stationed in Montreal, to which these lines nearly all converge. He there watches carefully the arrivals, makes note of the shipments received, the condition in which they arrive, and the temperature maintained. His observations show that the work, on the whole, has been satisfactorily done, but we have complaints occasionally, especially at points where the cars stop on their way to Montreal, and where there are converging lines coming together, and I think it would conduce to greater efficiency and the removal of any such complaints, if we had an inspector, whose business it would be to take special charge of this particular work. I hope to be able to provide for such an officer during the coming year.

I have a statement here with regard to the creameries. I find that there are, roughly speaking, in the neighbourhood of 700 creameries in Canada, and that up to the present about 500 have been fitted, leaving in the neighbourhood of 200 which have not yet complied with the conditions and got the bonus.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the exact number in each province?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the number in each province, but in the whole Dominion. The great bulk of those which have taken advantage of the arrangement are in Ontario and Quebec, and but few elsewhere. There are some in the maritime provinces and possibly one or two in British Columbia. I do not think that there are any in Manitoba. From the 31st March, 1902 to the 31st March, 1903, we anticipate that 100 creameries will get the first year's bonus and the second year's bonus and about 80 will get the third year's. During this current year from 31st March, 1901 to 31st March, 1902—this statement was made out in February a few weeks ago—there were 80 creameries that got the first year's bonus of $50 each and 80 that got the second year's bonus, and about 100 that got the third year's bonus. The bonus is $50 the first year and $25 each second and third year.

Mr. CLANCY. Can the hon. gentleman tell the committee how much butter, made in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, was exported in this way.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the figures here, and I do not know even that we have the figures available in the department, showing how much of the export comes from these two provinces. In the Trade and Navigation Returns, we have the export from the several ports, but then it must be remembered that the great bulk of the products from Montreal and westward and even from Quebec and westward, are exported from the port of Montreal, and the Trade and Navigation Returns do not indicate the province or origin of the goods. But I may say, in general terms, that, of the butter exported from Montreal nearly all goes from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Last year there was a little of North-west and Manitoba butter exported from Montreal. For a year or two there was scarcely any export of this kind, the great bulk of the western butter going to British Columbia and the Yukon and some little to Japan. But, during the season just passed, the trade there did not absorb the whole of the territorial and Manitoba production, and some was sent to Montreal and exported to Great Britain. Of the maritime provinces butter and cheese a certain proportion sometimes comes to Montreal. That depends on so many things that it is difficult to exactly gauge it. The Montreal merchants engaged in this business handle the great bulk of this trade for the country, and they buy in the maritime provinces as well as in Quebec and Ontario. Sometimes they ship direct from Halifax and other ports, but sometimes they bring the butter and cheese to Montreal and keep them in cold storage until they are ready to ship. We do not know to what extent each province contributes, so, I fear it will be impossible to give the hon. gentleman the information in greater detail.

Mr. CLANCY. I did not expect the hon. gentleman to be able to give it in minute details, but if he could state approximately the quantities made by the two provinces, it would be an interesting point.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Perhaps I can get from Professor Robertson his estimates of it.

Mr. CLANCY. Just one more question. Can the hon. gentleman say in what proportion each province is making application for the assistance covered by this vote ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not state that off-hand. Of course, we have in the department the details of every application that comes in, but I have not obtained the figures by provinces. I think there again the great bulk of the applications would come from the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Speaking from memory and subject to correction which, perhaps Professor Robertson can give me, the greater number of applications lately have come from Quebec. There are more creameries in the province of Quebec, in proportion to the population, than in the province of Ontario. Ontario has taken a great lead in cheese production, but in butter production, I think Quebec has rather taken the lead, at least in the number of factories and the proportional amount of butter produced. I have just received a memorandum from Professor Robertson, saying that, so far as the exports are concerned, about three-quarters come from Quebec and about one-quarter comes from Ontario. And the bonuses to creameries are in about the same proportion.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can the hon. minister state the amount given to Quebec and Ontario respectively ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not give that in more than round figures. I think about three-quarters of the amount paid in bonuses goes to Quebec. The statement I gave a moment ago indicated how much had been given in bonuses last year.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. minister will turn to pages D—65 and 66 of the Auditor General's Report, he will find that almost $6,000 was paid to Quebec and only $500 to Ontario. That is not in the proportion stated by the hon. minister.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are two circumstances that may help to explain that. It may be that Ontario has not applied for so many bonuses, or it may be that Ontario applied earlier in the carrying out of this arrangement. The first year's bonus is $50 for each creamery, and the second and third years' bonuses $25 each. If a hundred factories applied from Quebec this year, they would get $50 each, a total of $5,000; if, last year, a hundred had applied from Ontario, this year they would receive only the second year's bonus, $25 each, a total of $2,000. I have not analysed the applications or payments, and so am stating simply a suppositious case. The arrangement is that every creamery that applies and fulfils the conditions gets the bonus.

Mr. CLANCY. I think it will be found that certain individuals have been multiplying their application so that practically all this money has gone to a few persons.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There has been no second bonus given to any building in the country.

Mr. CLANCY. The minister does not understand me. The persons controlling a number of buildings here and there have been getting first and second bonuses and will receive third bonuses this year. A few persons receive the bonuses rather than the country generally, as I understand it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) does not understand the object of the bonus system. The object is to secure that at every creamery there shall be a refrigerator. I do not think that it matters in the least degree to Canada whether ten creameries that receive bonuses belong to one man or to ten men. We know that in some sections of the country, some men with business capacity and enterprise have established a large number of cheese factories or a large number of creameries. These men would get bonuses on a number of creameries, yet every individual who asks for a bonus and complies with the conditions receives it; and it is as easy for the owner of one creamery to comply with the conditions for one building as for the owner of ten to comply with the conditions for ten buildings. The bonus is given to the factory, not to the individual.

Mr. HENDERSON. What is the reason the export of butter fell off so much in 1901 from what it was in 1900 ? There seems to be a discrepancy there at which I am rather surprised, because the hon. minister seems to be doing a good deal to promote the butter industry.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The figures the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) refers to are for the fiscal year ending June 30th, 1901. The butter production for that fiscal year was smaller in consequence of the price of cheese. We have a certain amount of milk in Canada to be made up into butter or cheese. Some seasons a larger proportion is made into butter and some seasons a larger proportion is made into cheese. It happened that the season for the calendar year 1900 opened very well for cheese, and, during that calendar year there was a very much larger quantity of milk made into cheese than there was made into butter. The year before, the butter export had been very large. The result was that, in the fiscal year commencing 1st July, 1900, and ending 30th June, 1901, there was less butter produced for export than there had been for the year before. The conditions, however, apparently, have changed a little, and last calendar year, the year just closed, we had a much larger export of butter. In this last calendar year—we sometimes reckon butter and cheese production and exports by the season, and then in the Trade and Navigation Returns they are entered by the fiscal year—in the season of 1901 again there was a much greater production of butter, as a matter of fact, about $5,000,000 worth in round figures, was exported. During the season of 1900 there was much less exported; during the season of 1899 there was about $5,000,000 worth of butter exported. I think the explanation is that the factorymen and the patrons thought that season that cheese was going to sell rather better than butter. As my hon. friend will notice, this last calendar year in which, as I have pointed out, there was a great increase in the butter exports, there was a very decided decrease of cheese exports.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have not got the figures for the calendar year.

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understand that, and it was a complicated work to prepare the figures, because the season's make is in the calender year, and the export of it comes very nearly in the fiscal year. There is not a great deal of butter, as a rule, exported during the early months of the navigation of the St. Lawrence. The export of butter made in a given calender year does not begin to any great extent until after the first of July, it therefore goes into the fiscal year following.

Mr. HENDERSON. I notice, however, that in the last fiscal year the article of butter, so much aided by the government, shows a very much reduced amount of export, and the article of cheese, that was not assisted by the government, showed an increased export, showing that the government's assistance made no difference.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have pointed out that in that season the price of cheese in England was up, and the price of butter was not up particularly, and therefore our people turned their milk into cheese.

Mr. HENDERSON. So as a matter of fact the government cannot take credit for the increased export.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The government cannot make people do one thing or the other, but the government can provide facilities, and the people take advantage of them or not, as they think it is to their interest. As a matter of fact, butter has come up again during the last calendar year of 1901, and $5,000,000 worth was exported. The hon. gentleman has not got those figures in the Trade and Navigation Returns, but they have been published in the press, and given to different dairy conventions over the country, and are well understood. During the last calendar year the cheese export has not only been reduced in price in consequence of what I explained a few minutes ago, but it has also been decreased in volume. As a matter of fact, in the calendar year of 1901 the value of cheese exported from Canada was about $4,000,000 less than it was in 1900, speaking in round figures ; and of that $4,000,000 decrease, those who are acquainted with the trade have placed at $2,000,000 the shrinkage of quantity, and at about $2,000,000 the shrinkage in value. Now, I will speak a little about the live stock division. Here I have taken a new departure in appointing a live stock commissioner.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister may remember that he said the other day that he had appointed a live stock commissioner on the advice of eminent agriculturists whom he had consulted by letter, and he was pleased to see that their reports were almost universally favourable to the appointment of the gentleman whom he had selected. Would he have any objections to putting those letters on the Table ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not remember the exact words my hon. friend has reference to. I looked in my office, and my secretary has not been able to find the letters in regard to it. I think what I said was that I had consulted people engaged in the live stock business. If I said letters, I have not yet been able to lay my hands on any particular letters of that nature. But I have under my hand, and will read to the House, or give them to the hon. gentleman, letters in large numbers endorsing the appointment. I did consult the live stock men, and I know of my own knowledge what Mr. Hodson had been doing before in Ontario, and I felt I was right in choosing him for that position. I think the event has justified the choice most amply, and I will read later on, if the hon. gentleman wishes it, some statements that have appeared over the signatures of leading live stock men, and I have resolutions of live stock associations endorsing the appointment of that gentleman, and pointing out how eminently qualified he is for that position. But aside from the appointment of a live stock commissioner, I have endeavoured to stimulate the trade and to organize what I may call the live stock interests of the country. With that object in view, along with the live stock commissioners who has been working now a little over 2 years, this work has been largely that of organization up to the present time. Mr. Hodson had shown his ability as an organizer in the province of Ontario. He had been for some time, I am speaking under correction of the official name, secretary of the Live Stock Association of the great province of Ontario, which is the centre of all the live stock interests of Canada, and I may even go further and say of all the live stock interests of this North American continent. Mr. Hodson had had that experience, and knowing him as I did, I believed his services would be of great value all over the Dominion. He has been travelling about a good deal, meeting with live stock men in other provinces as well as in Ontario, and trying to introduce into other provinces the same kind of work that had been so successful in Ontario. I am glad to see that the people have responded very willingly, and to-day we have live stock associations, not altogether inaugurated since he came in, but certainly stimulated and vivified, and rendered more effective in consequence of his work. The live stock associations of British Columbia, the Territories, Manitoba, and Ontario, and the breeders associations in the maritime provinces, not only have been individually and locally stimulated, but they have been brought into relations with one another, and a large inter-provincial trade has sprung up, which live stock men say is of great value to them. Ontario is the breeding place of the live stock interests of Canada. Ontario men a few years ago, were comparatively glutted with their own production, and they had not such a good market as they desired. That market to-day has been found for them to a large extent in the west and in the east by reason of the institution of the live stock associations, as well as through the arrangements that have been made to facilitate the carriage of live stock eastwards and westwards. The people of Ontario have been able to make enormous sales of their live stock to Manitoba, the Territories, and British Columbia on the one hand, and to Quebec, the maritime provinces, and Newfoundland on the other hand. This is largely work which Mr. Hodson has been doing, that is the line he has been taking, and which has resulted in the advantages I have just mentioned.

In connection with that I may say that we have very much increased what I may call our participation as a Dominion department in the institute work of the various provinces. Besides doing this work and making experiments in various lines it is absolutely necessary that this work and these experiments should be given to the people and brought right home to them so that they may reap the benefit of them and understand them. We have done this in the past by issuing reports and bulletins which have been spread broadcast throughout the country, but, as is well known by those who are familiar with agricultural problems and work, by personal contact, the holding of meetings, and the impressing upon the people through personal addresses the results of our investigations and experiments, the work is more interesting to the people, more likely to attract their attention and more likely to induce them to carry on the work themselves until these same results have been obtained. Consequently, we have to a considerable extent aided in the local institute work. In Ontario that work is so admirably organized and so complete that we have not had to do a great deal there although we have done some. It was just beginning in New Brunswick, but in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island it was hardly organized at all. I am glad to say that to-day, and I venture to claim some credit for having, by advice, incitement and work, helped to bring about that result, they have pretty well completed the organization of that institute work in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and the same is true of Prince Edward Island. In the west a great deal has been done of this kind of work. They had a stock-breeders' association and a horse-breeders' association in the territories. They were, however, working at a great disadvantage without any touch between them and other organizations of the kind, and they were rather disheartened, but to-day, they are encouraged, stimulated and confident and this has been very largely due to work which Mr. Hodson has been able to do in helping them, advising them, and encouraging them in their work. Until we went out to British Columbia between one and two years ago, the farmers of British Columbia were hardly in touch with the farmers of the eastern part of Canada at all, but since that visit there has sprung up an enormous trade between Ontario and the far west. I will get, before I finish this item, a short statement of the amount of stock that has been sold there. Since the 1st of January last, I think I am correct when I make the statement that the sale of $60,000 worth of stock has been arranged by the efforts of Mr. Hodson alone independently altogether of any other purchases or sales with which he had nothing to do of stock from Ontario to British Columbia and the North-west Territories.

Mr. CLANCY. Where was that want supplied from before ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They did not get this stock at all. Their live stock interests seemed to be almost dead and they were not pushing ahead at all, but lately they have been trying to get live stock as they have seen an opening in the markets for it. Anything that they did get in the past they got from the south of the line. There were a few odd shipments of stockers from Ontario to the North-west Territories and British Columbia until the last year and a half, but during the last year and a half there has been a constant stream, not only of pure-bred animals for breeding purposes, but of stockers which have been bought in Ontario and shipped to the west for the purpose of feeding them and then re-selling them as finished animals. That trade has sprung up, and has been the direct result of bringing into contact the people in the east with the people of the west, and which but for this would probably have gone on in the old limited way in which the trade was going on. Then Mr. Hodson has started one or two good movements which are of value to the country. He has worked in conjunction with the farmers of Ontario in the improvement and the large increase of what is known as the Fat Stock Show at Guelph. This takes place every December, and I will venture to call it the great gathering of the agricultural interests of Canada every year, especially those connected with the live stock interests. Men go there from all over the country. They have there large audiences gathered together. They have not only the exhibition and the competition of live stock in cattle, sheep, swine and poultry, but they have also addresses delivered on practical subjects, taking the animals which have been competing in the ring and pointing out their excellencies and the reasons why such an animal is good and such another animal is bad. This work has had a tremendous educative influence and it has been giving very great results from the fact that the institute workers from the province of Ontario and from the other provinces as well have been brought there and heard these addresses, have seen these animals, have mixed with one another and exchanged experiences and ideas. These men to-day are going all over the Dominion of Canada and carrying the results of what they heard at that great gathering to the people. This part of the show was organized by Mr. Hodson. For the last two years he has, with my approval and concurrence, managed practically the addresses and the gathering together of the people at this fair. In addition this winter we have organized and stimulated and worked up a similar fair at Amherst, N.S., for the benefit of the maritime provinces. We had a most successful gathering there exactly similar to the great show at Guelph, and it is an augury for the future of the live stock interests of the maritime provinces that the town of Amherst passed a by-law devoting $12,000 to the erection of buildings for the continuance of this fair, so that it is an assured thing that such a fair will be in existence in the maritime provinces in the future as that which is in existence at Guelph. Mr. Hodson has inaugurated another work which will be of the greatest benefit to the country. That is in connection with the ordinary agricultural society exhibitions throughout the country. There has been great difficulty in regard to these exhibitions in getting competent judges, judges who were known and whose judgments would be accepted. Mr. Hodson has undertaken to help the agricultural societies to get these gentlemen. We have spent some little money in my department for this purpose. We have been able to send men who are recognized as authorities on different lines of stock. Mr. Hodson has been able to inaugurate another thing which I believe is going to be of the greatest benefit and importance, and it is the system of the judges giving to the people who are assembled to see their judgment the reasons for their judgment and explaining why it is that one animal deserves the prize and the other does not. That has been done to a certain extent last fall, and it was a remarkable success; so successful indeed that the officers of these societies have been urging on us that it should be continued. In this way, and in other ways that are contemplated, Mr. Hodson's work will render these agricultural exhibitions much more beneficial to the people.

The next division is what I might call the dairy division. It comprises the work at headquarters ; the work of running the creameries in the North-west Territories ; the work of the assistant dairy commissioner in the province of Quebec ; the grant to the dairy school at St. Hyacinthe and to the Dairymen's Association ; the running of three creameries in Nova Scotia ; help to the dairy school at Sussex, New Brunswick ; and the employment of an officer to help dairying interests in the maritime provinces. It includes also the cheese curing rooms which I have already described. That takes $62,000 out of our whole grant.

The last division is the fruit division. It includes the general work at Ottawa in connection with fruit ; and the work in connection with the Fruit Marks Act which necessitated the appointment of some inspectors. It includes the experimental work, and the advice and assistance which is given in the packing of fruit, as well as to methods to secure that the fruit shall be free from spots and as fine as possible. Last season, the first season of the operation of the Fruit Marks Act, after careful consideration and consultation with those interested in the trade, we thought it best not to proceed too rigidly with the enforcement of the Act. It was an entirely new departure, and a good many people thought that the provisions of the law were extremely strict. For my own part I believe that any one who does not live up to the provisions of that Act deserves very little sympathy. At the same time the trade of the country being already well established on certain lines, a rigid enforcement might have involved consequences which it would be as well to avoid. I gave instructions to my officers to bring to the attention of those interested, the provisions of the Act and the methods in which we proposed to enforce it, so as to give them fair warning. There were doubts expressed as to the meaning of certain clauses and I consulted lawyers and got their opinions, and then tried to impress on the packers and shippers what these opinions were. I may say that the passage of that Act has contributed materially to an improvement in the packing of our fruit. I regret that I cannot say that last year there was not a great deal of fruit packed which was contrary to the provisions of the Act. But, at the same time there was an effort on the part of packers and shippers to try and live up to its provisions. At first we did not undertake to impose penalties, but we found that some people were continuing in their old ways and we afterwards did impose a few penalties chiefly as a warning, and to show that the Act could be effectively enforced. We have been all the time giving information as to the nature of the Act and endeavouring to get people to comply with its provisions. Last year our inspectors have been extremely busy throughout the season doing this work. The services of these inspectors have been required for a longer period than I had expected, but I think we are in a position now to lay off one or two. An important feature of this work is our endeavour to explain to fruit growers how they can avoid the growing of spotted and wormeaten fruit, so that next year it is hoped that our fruit will be better in quality than in the past. That will make the enforcement of the Act easier in the coming year. What is more important still, it will bring our apples up to the high reputation which Canadian apples should enjoy in the foreign market, and it will contribute much to the benefit of the trade generally. Our inspectors did not attempt to inspect all the shipments of fruit, but they examined 33,000 barrels in Montreal up to the 1st of December last. It would be a physical impossibility for any reasonable number of inspectors to inspect all the fruit sent to Montreal, and it was not intended under the Act that this should be done. We have also had inspectors travelling around the country inspecting fruit which was not sent to the port of Montreal. We have had demands for more extensive inspection, and especially for inspection in different localities. To what extent it is possible to meet these demands I am not now prepared to say. We hope to do a good deal more of that work this season than last season, and I believe it will contribute to the improvement of the fruit sent to the home market, just as much as what we have done this year has contributed to the improvement of our fruit for the export trade.

Mr. WADE. Is it the intention of the minister to introduce any amendments to the Act ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think any amendment is imperatively demanded at the present time. There have been one or two little hitches in the working of the Act, but we have worked these out, so that on the whole the Act is working fairly well. I thought a little of introducing a very short Bill to amend the Act in some slight particulars, but it is questionable in my mind whether up to the present time sufficient defects have been shown in it to justify amending it this session.

Mr. COCHRANE. How many inspectors has the hon. gentleman got under this Act ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have had 12 inspectors for the whole Dominion during the past season.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why is it necessary for 5 or 6 of your inspectors to appear on the scene at one place at once ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Unless it was to discuss a question with the trade or to take hold of some particularly complicated case, I do not think it would be necessary. I am not aware of any case where that has occurred except where there was a necessity of consultation.

Mr. COCHRANE. What complicated case could arise ? If the inspector understood his business properly, he would surely know whether a barrel of apples was up to the mark or not.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. On some occasions we have thought it well to have more than one inspector discuss a particular case with the trade. We have one chief inspector whose business it has been rather to guide and control the work of the others, and he might at any time be called upon by one of the ordinary inspectors to decide a point which had arisen unexpectedly or which was not covered by the instructions which had been given. If 4 or 5 met at any one particular place, I can only believe that it was in order to discuss a number of points which had been raised by the trade.

Mr. SPROULE. How much do you pay these inspectors ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The chief inspector gets $100 a month.

Mr. COCHRANE. Where does he reside ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He has been making his headquarters at Ottawa.

Mr. HENDERSON. What are his duties ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. His duties have been, first of all, to direct generally the whole of this work under Professor Robertson as the head of this branch. He is a lawyer by profession, and has been largely occupied in working out what I might call the legal side of the enforcement of the Act. He has also been a fruit-grower, having been raised on a fruit farm, and consequently knows a good deal about the fruit business. His name is W. A. McKinnon, and he comes from the county of Wentworth. He is a graduate in law of Toronto University. The other inspectors work under him. One or two are more experienced than the others. Some have been appointed permanently, while others have been appointed temporarily for the months during which the fruit trade is largest.

Mr. COCHRANE. How much do the gentlemen get who are under him ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One of them, Mr. Alexander McNeil, gets $1,000 a year. Mr. Lick gets at the rate of $1,000 a year, but is not engaged for the whole year. Mr. Vroom and Mr. Burke are also engaged at the rate of $1,000 a year.

Mr. COCHRANE. Where do they reside ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. McNeil comes from the western part of Ontario. He has had great experience in institute work, in fruit growing on his own farm, and in lecturing on that subject. Mr. Lick is also from the province of Ontario. Mr. Vroom is from Nova Scotia and Mr. Burke from Prince Edward Island. Then, I have 7 other inspectors who are temporarily engaged at $100 a month.

Mr. GILMOUR. Where are they stationed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is rather difficult to say that they are stationed anywhere. Two or three are stationed at Montreal most of the time, but are liable to be called elsewhere. Others travel from place to place. Mr. Burke and Mr. Vroom have been in the maritime provinces all the time. Mr. McNeil and Mr. Lick have been mostly in Ontario, but one was sent to the Fruit Growers' convention of Nova Scotia to give them an address on the Act and on fruit growing generally. The chief inspection has been in the port of Montreal for the export trade, but we have not confined ourselves entirely to that. There has been inspection anywhere else. The Act says that apples may be inspected anywhere that they are found, and consequently we have been obliged to have inspectors travelling a good deal of the time ; we think it is wise that they should, so that the shippers may not know just where an inspector is going to light on their shipment.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you any account of the number of inspections made and the number of prosecutions ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have the number at Montreal, but I do not think anywhere else. We have only had, I think, 9 prosecutions.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Has the chief inspector made a report to the minister of what has been done during the last season ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have had constant reports from the chief inspector and from all the inspectors from time to time. Those reports will all be made into a general report which will appear in the departmental report of next year. The season was hardly advanced enough to get it into the report that was laid on the Table at the beginning of this session, although there is in that report something about the enforcement of the Act. But that report only comes up to the 1st of November, by which date there was hardly time to have had a real experience of the working of the Act. But we have all the reports of this work in the department, and Professor Robertson will collate them into a comprehensive report on the working of the Act, which will appear in the annual report of the department next year.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Will the names of the delinquents be published ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know that it would be well to publish those at present. Of course, when a prosecution takes place, it is usually reported in the newspapers, and the names of the parties appear there. I have not yet thought out whether it would be best to put the names into the annual report of the department or not.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I think it would.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It might be best to do so. I may say that this Act is chiefly deterrent in its character. Its object is not so much to punish as to prevent this kind of thing going on—to try to secure honest and proper packing, and the supply to our people of just what they buy. If it should be necessary to hold the whip of publicity over the people who are thus packing, we may have to do it, but I am in hopes that the means adopted already will be sufficient, and rapidly improve the trade.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Has the hon. minister made arrangements with the shippers to see that the perishable products are protected or properly shipped ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am working that with the ship-owners as much as possible.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Is the minister aware that there is an incongruity between the Ontario and the Dominion statutes with regard to the punishment of delinquents in the dairy business ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not any knowledge of it at the moment. Will the hon. gentleman state to what particular discrepancy he refers ?

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Under the Ontario Act respecting butter and cheese no one can be found guilty of an offence unless it can be shown that he committed it knowingly or wilfully, but under the Dominion Act such knowledge is not made an element of the crime, but on the contrary the lack of such knowledge is no defence. That appears to me very unjust. Perhaps I had better read the statutes for the information of the hon. gentleman. Here is the Ontario statute—chapter 251 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario page 3,091 :—

6. No person shall sell, supply, bring or send to a cheese or butter manufactory, or the owner or manager thereof, to be manufactured, milk diluted with water, or in any way adulterated, or milk from which any cream has been taken, or milk commonly known as 'skimmed milk,' without distinctly notifying, in writing, the owner or manager of such cheese or butter manufactory, that the milk so sold, supplied or brought to be manufactured has been so diluted with water, or adulterated, or had the cream so taken from it, or become milk commonly known as 'skimmed milk,' as the case may be. 51 v.c. 32 s.1; 55 v.c. 53 s. 1 (1).

7. No person who in the course of his business agrees to sell, supply, bring or send to any cheese or butter manufactory, or the owner or manager thereof, to be manufactured, the milk of any cow or cows, shall, in the course of such dealing and business, keep back any part of the milk of such cow or cows, without distinctly notifying, in writing, the owner or manager of such cheese or butter manufactory what portion of the milk he has so kept back.

8. No person shall sell, supply, bring or send to a cheese or butter manufactory, or the owner or manager thereof, to be manufactured, any milk that is tainted or partly sour without distinctly notifying, in writing, the owner or manager of such cheese or butter manufactory of or such milk being tainted or partly sour.

The said sections 6, 7 and 8, shall not apply where the person charged with the offence proves to the satisfaction of justice or justices of the peace that the commission of the alleged offence was without his knowledge or privity, and contrary to his wish and intention, and that he was not aware thereof.

Chapter 43 of the Dominion statutes 52 Victoria provides as follows :—

1. No person shall sell, supply or send to any cheese or butter or condensed milk manufactory, or to the owner or manager thereof, or to any maker of butter, cheese or condensed milk, to be manufactured, milk diluted with water, or in any way adulterated or milk from which any cream has been taken, or milk commonly known as skimmed milk.

2. No person who supplies, sends, sells or brings to any cheese or butter or condensed milk manufactory, or to the owner or manager thereof, or to the maker of cheese or butter or condensed milk, any milk to be manufactured into butter or cheese or condensed milk, shall keep back any portion of that part of the milk known as strippings.

7. For the purpose of establishing the guilt of any person charged with the violation of any of the provisions of sections one or two of this Act, it shall be sufficient prima facie evidence on which to found a conviction to show that such milk so sent, sold, supplied or brought to a manufactory as aforesaid, to be manufactured into butter or cheese or condensed milk, is substantially inferior in quality to pure milk, provided the test is made by means of a lactometer or cream gauge or some other proper and adequate test and is made by a competent person; provided always, that a conviction may be made or had on any other sufficient legal evidence.

In the one case a man who does not know that the milk was adulterated cannot be convicted, but in the other case it matters not whether he has any knowledge or not, he may be convicted. I think it is the duty of the minister to see that this mattter is made straight so that we will have but one law.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The only thing we can do is to change our law. The Ontario law requires knowledge on the part of the person who is charged with the offence. Does he wish to make our law the same ?

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I am not introducing a law but asking the minister if he is aware of the fact.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not looked into the details of the two laws. I prefer the Dominion law, under which the delinquent may be punished without the prosecution being obliged to prove positive knowledge on his part. If the hon. gentleman disapproves of that he ought to introduce a motion to change the law, and I will be very glad to discuss it with him. I think that our law is the better, it being more direct and easier to enforce. Of course this parliament has no control over the Ontario law.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I do not rise for the purpose of changing the law but to call the attention of the minister to the fact.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I suppose that a prosecution might be taken out under either law. If a prosecution be taken out under the Dominion Act, that Act will guide the judge, but if under the Ontario Act, I suppose that he will be governed by it. I would not like to give a legal opinion, but perhaps the leader of the opposition may enlighten us.

Mr. HEYD. Have they not found beneficial effects from the fact that we have these inspectors appointed, independent of the convictions secured ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, I think I can say most positively that the shippers generally and the packers generally have appreciated this law and have, in many cases, exerted themselves loyally to carry out its provisions. But, of course, they have found difficulties in the way. Long continued practices in the trade are not done away with in a day; and, even with a perfectly loyal intention to live up to the provisions of the law, no doubt many cases have occurred where the law may have been violated. That is one reason why we have not undertaken to strictly or severely enforce the law. Where we have thought that people deliberately disregarded the law, or where—as in a very few cases—they deliberately told us that we could not enforce it, we have undertaken to show that the law was enforcible and effective.

Mr. COCHRANE. Does the hon. minister know that any of his inspectors have taken power into their own hands, and, where they found apples that were not up to the mark, have said : If you will pay so much, we will let the thing go ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I know of no such case, and if such a case were brought to my notice, the inspector would have a short shrift before dismissal. But I know the character of the inspectors, and I feel confident that not one of them is capable of such an action. I would say in general terms, before closing this general exposé——

Mr. COCHRANE. How do I understand the minister in connection with that matter ? Do I understand him to say that if he knew of an inspector who acted like that he would dismiss him ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If I knew of an inspector who had made a bargain with an individual whose fruit he found to be unsatisfactory, to let him off in consideration of a payment, I would dismiss him at once.

Mr. CLANCY. I wish to be quite clear as to what the minister has said concerning Mr. McKinnon, the chief inspector. I am sure that the House and the country will regard the position of Mr. McKinnon as one of great importance. Do I understand that the minister told the committee that Mr. McKinnon was a gentleman of large and ripe experience ? Did he say whether Mr. McKinnon had served a time as a fruit-grower sufficient to entitle him to the confidence of the people of the country, and that, after giving up fruit culture he practiced his profession as a lawyer—in other words, that Mr. McKinnon had an equipment that would entitle him to the implicit confidence that men should have in one whose duties are so important and involve so much affecting the great trade that we hope to make so much greater than it is now ? The hon. minister shakes his head. If I misunderstood him, perhaps he will explain.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) has said a great deal more than I said. Mr. McKinnon is a comparatively young man. He was brought up on a fruit farm in the Niagara district, and engaged in that work until I do not know what age. He was employed by me in my department to do certain work in preparing the fruit exhibit for the Paris Exposition. He went to Paris in connection with the fruit exhibit, and showed himself eminently qualified to attend to fruit matters. He is an educated man, with a university training, and he has also a legal education. I do not think he has ever practiced the law. He obtained his degree not very long ago—if I remember well after he returned from Paris. As I say, he is a young man. I have frequently found that young men are the most efficient officers I can get, if they have had the necessary training and education to fit them for their work. The experience I have had with Mr. McKinnon in connection with his former work and in connection with this Act, convince me that he is a most efficient officer, thoroughly well equipped for his work. It is because I believed he had the necessary qualifications that I placed him in this responsible position.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will permit me to tell the rest of the story. I am far from desiring to make it appear that it is a crime to be a young man, and the hon. minister will not urge that against me. I am told that Mr. McKinnon is a young man whose father occupied a very responsible position as school inspector, but had nothing to do with fruit farming until six or seven years ago. The last six years or so, I am told, is the only time during which even Mr. McKinnon's father had any experience in fruit-growing, and I understand that it is not possible that Mr. McKinnon, jr., could have had the slightest experience, because during this whole period he was at college. Since then he has passed his examination, and, before he had time to enter upon the practice of his profession the hon. minister discovered qualities in him that caused him to send him on a trip to Paris. Now, if Mr. McKinnon has given such service as the hon. minister says, he is a very extraordinary young man, because he has succeeded in spite of not having experience or any of the qualifications required for duties of this kind. It is as well for us to look at this matter in a plain light. No glozing over the matter by the minister will make it appear that a man, no matter how bright he may be, can have, without experience, the qualifications for the performance of such duties as devolve upon this officer. The minister says he employed Mr. McKinnon because he was a lawyer, and that the carrying out of the law required judgment and discrimination. To use the minister's own expression, from which I do not greatly dissent, in having the Act faithfully carried out, it was thought to be as well not to be too harsh. That is what I understood the hon. minister to say.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. I am sure the hon. minister will admit that, if experience in the practice of his profession as a lawyer is necessary, Mr. McKinnon is destitute of a single qualification to enter upon duties of this kind. The hon. minister must see that it is not enough to say that Mr. McKinnon served him in Paris. It is not very hard to understand that Mr. McKinnon was picked up because he was a political friend. I would like to ask the hon. minister if Mr. McKinnon is not the son of the Liberal candidate for the local legislature for the county of Lincoln. Perhaps the hon. minister is innocent of that—he is usually innocent of these things. I suppose he did not even know Mr. McKinnon's politics.

Now Mr. McKinnon has also drawn considerable sums in connection with the Paris Exposition. I see he has drawn $893.56 in some three months ; that of course includes his living allowances as well as his salary. When I turn to what is called the general expenses in connection with cold storage, I find Mr. McKinnon has drawn $510.10. I am not disposed to quarrel with the sums paid him if he has given efficient service ; but I do dissent from the position that the hon. gentleman can pick up any young man or any old man in this country who is without experience, as the hon. gentleman well knows Mr. McKinnon was—for he was not even born on a fruit farm, and has not been long out of college, because I am told he is under thirty years of age now—and the very moment almost that he has passed his law examination the hon. gentleman takes him into his service. Every one knows that it is a perfect farce to allege for a moment that Mr. McKinnon ought to be given charge of duties so important. I am persuaded that the thoughtful men of this country will have little confidence in such an appointment, not because Mr. McKinnon may not be a very bright young man, but because he is without the experience necessary to discharge those duties.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In reply to the hon. gentleman I may say that I am aware that Mr. McKinnon was a Liberal, and I do not feel that I have committed a crime in appointing a Liberal to office. I do not know of any particular reason why that fact should be a disability in my mind or in the mind of any other Liberal minister. It would be a new theory entirely in this country. But I want to tell the hon. gentleman that Mr. McKinnon was not appointed to this office because he was a Liberal ; he was appointed because I believed him to be fit for the position, and I had some little experience and knowledge of what he could do in regard to the work of preparing fruits for the Paris Exposition. I found him with some administrative capacity, and some knowledge of general affairs. I knew he had had a university training, and also a legal training ; but even if he had been without experience in practising before the courts, the legal training would be no disadvantage to him. I regret to say that in our agricultural work of this country it is not always easy to get the right man for any particular kind of work ; and I daresay my colleagues in the other departments find the same difficulty when they have some special work to be done. I have found Mr. McKinnon exceptionally bright and satisfactory, and in discussing this work with him, and knowing his antecedents, and knowing his training, I believed he would be suitable for the work. The event has well justified my choice, because I have found him very judicious and very effective in the performance of his duties, so much so in fact, that I propose to continue him in that work, or in other work that may arise in my department. I would be glad if I could attach him to the department as a permanent officer, and secure his services for the country in future. So far as his father is concerned, I am aware to-day that he is a candidate in the local elections in Ontario. I am not going to allow that to stand in the way of his son being an officer in my department. I do not think that is a valid objection, nor do I think that, if the tables were turned, the hon. gentleman would consider that an objection.

Mr. COCHRANE. I understood the minister to tell us in his brief remarks in introducing this subject, that Mr. McKinnon's father was the owner of a fruit farm, and that this young man had been brought up on a fruit farm. But if the hon. gentleman is correct in his statement now, he was not on the farm at all and did not know anything about fruit.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Does the hon. gentleman say his father does not own a fruit farm ?

Mr. COCHRANE. He was a school inspector up to the last five or six years, and never had a fruit farm at all ; and when his father bought the fruit farm this young man was in college. I would like to ask the minister how a man, however intellectually bright he may be, but knows nothing about fruit, can all at once develop into such an expert.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman when his father bought the farm.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then you should not have told us that he was brought up on a fruit farm, if you did not know it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He was on a fruit farm when I first heard of him, and I knew his father owned a fruit farm, and I was informed by the late Speaker of this House, the Hon. Thos. Bain, that he had a fruit farm, and that the son had lived on a fruit farm, and was as thoroughly equipped with a knowledge of fruit-growing as his father was. His father is to-day a member of the Fruit Grower's Association, and has been frequently in communication with my department in regard to the fruit interests of the Niagara district.

Mr. INGRAM. I suppose the hon. gentleman has had several conversations with this young man as to his qualifications. Doubtless he has discussed the peach question with him. I had been at a loss for some time back to understand where the hon. gentleman got his information with respect to peaches ; I never knew before that peaches had stems on them until I heard the hon. gentleman make that remark. Now if Mr. McKinnon gave him that information, I have grave doubts as to his qualifications. Did the hon. gentleman say that Mr. McKinnon is permanently appointed as an inspector ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He has been permanently appointed for this purpose up to the present time.

Mr. INGRAM. Does that mean for the year round ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

Mr. INGRAM. When a Bill was passing through this House last session the hon. gentleman said it was not his intention to appoint permanent inspectors. The hon. gentleman was asked : Would these inspectors be only temporarily employed during the fruit season, and he answered, Yes. How does it come that the hon. gentleman has changed his policy since then ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not looked up what explanation I gave last year when this Bill was up, but I know I had in contemplation the appointment of several inspectors by the year, as well as a temporary one.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have some slight knowledge of Mr. McKinnon's father, whom I have known for the past 25 or 30 years. I also know something of a cousin of his who tried to supplant me in the House of Commons a year or two ago, and this gentleman's father was very active in assisting him to get left at home. But it is rather a serious question, whether this appointment is proper or not. Mr. McKinnon, senior, I believe, is a member of a fruit association, and is an important fruit grower. I have no desire to minimize his position in that respect ; he has taken an active interest in that industry, and I presume as a shipper and all that. Still I think it is a question whether it is proper that Mr. McKinnon's son should be over the entire department that controls the inspection of the fruit. It would be a very difficult matter indeed, no matter how honourable the son was, to avoid giving a preference. I think there will be a feeling amongst other shippers that they will be handicapped to some extent by the fact that Mr. McKinnon's son is in a position to benefit him at the expense of others. Of course it is unfortunate that this gentleman's father is a candidate at the present time in the Niagara district, and I would not for a moment suggest that his influence would be used there ; but I do say there will be a strong supposition that his influence will be used to the detriment of a large number of people who are engaged in that industry. I think the minister might seriously consider whether the fact of the father's connection with the Fruit Grower's Association, and the other fact of the son's connection with the inspection, will be regarded as quite satisfactory by the fruit growers of the province. I fear that it will destroy confidence very much in a proper inspection.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think practically that almost everybody whose name was suggested as an inspector in connection with this Bill had some personal or business relations with fruit shippers and would be, therefore, open to any such accusation, but I have not the slightest idea that there is any such feeling of alarm of Mr. McKinnon, jr, doing anything in connection with his official position which would justify any such fear on the part of the people.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). If the hon minister had accepted the clause which I wished to place in the Bill last year this difficulty would not have arisen.

Mr. HEYD. What difficulty ?

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin.) This difficulty in regard to the inspection. The inspection would not have been needed at all. I asked the hon. minister to insert a clause providing that if apples, not according to the regulations, or apples that were rotten, were discovered, either in Europe, or any other country, in a barrel with a brand, or the packer's name or the grower's name and if three persons who purchased these apples could give prima facie evidence before a justice of the peace and this evidence were sent to Canada and to the county from which the apples were shipped, the packer or shipper might be brought before a judge and punished. Every barrel of apples cannot be inspected as every barrel cannot be opened, and if the hon. minister had accepted my proposition last year all the difficulty that has arisen would have been avoided. But, he refused to do so, and of course, he has to take the consequences.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) This is a strange proceeding. One hon. gentleman complains that the inspector does not know anything of fruit growing, and that he had no training in that respect. Another tells us that his father is a fruit-grower and probably an exporter of apples and on that account he thinks his son is disqualified for the position which he now occupies. That might apply to other inspectors as well as to Mr. McKinnon, because I think if they are supposed to be qualified for their positions it would be well that their fathers and themselves should have been brought up on farms and have been engaged in growing apples, because that is the very thing that would qualify them for such positions. I do not think that it would at all disqualify any one for occupying this position that he had training for it by reason of his being on an apple farm.

Mr. BLAIN. I just wish to say that Mr. McKinnon was not brought up on a farm. His father was the public school inspector in the county which I have the honour to represent and the young gentleman was born in that county. He went to the common school there and then he went to college and his father was not engaged in any kind of farming whatever until he removed from our county to the county where he now resides about eight or ten years ago and went into the fruit-growing business. I think the general complaint is that the hon. minister led the House to believe last year that when this Act was put into force the gentlemen who would be appointed as inspectors would be men of experience, men who knew something about the exporting business and who understood the fruit-growing in this country. The complaint is that the most important office, that of chief inspector for the purpose of enforcing this law, has been given to a young man of no experience whatever, not having been brought up on the farm, not having been engaged in the fruit-growing business and not having a particle of knowledge in respect to the export of apples from this country. This is the chief charge and I think it would be looked upon as being rather serious. If the hon. gentleman had appointed his father who has had six or eight years experience in growing fruit there might have been some reason why that gentleman should have been appointed because of his experience.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I spoke from memory a few minutes ago but I find in 'Hansard' the clause that I wished to insert in the Bill. With your permission Mr. Chairman I will read it :

> Whenever any barrel or package of apples shall be found to be in violation of this Act or any of its clauses, on information being laid before a justice of the peace or a judge in the district in which the apples are found to be bad in any country, an affidavit shall be made by not less than three persons of the fact, when such affidavit shall be forwarded under seal to the judge of the county or district in which the apple packers reside ; and said judge or magistrate shall have power to proceed under this Act, and a conviction may follow.

If that clause had been inserted in this Bill we would not have had all this trouble.

Mr. CLANCY. It is evident that if the hon. Minister of Agriculture had paid some attention to the advice tendered him we would have escaped all of this difficulty. However, as the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson) has made his case so strong, I will have nothing to say about it. I think the objection taken by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) is not without foundation. The hon. Minister of Agriculture knows very well that it is his duty, as it is the duty of the hon. members of this House, so far as possible for them to act, to avoid even the appearance of anything that will lead to wrong doing. I would be sorry to charge Mr. McKinnon, without personal knowledge, of having done wrong in the capacity in which he is now acting, but I want to say to the hon. Minister of Agriculture that he is open to the severest criticism. Let us take the position of Mr. McKinnon. He is to be the judge of fruit. He may come in contact with hundreds of people that may be influenced somewhat by Mr. McKinnon's conduct. Then, Mr. McKinnon is in the position of a prosecutor also. In accordance with what Mr. McKinnon says the case will be conducted. For a gentleman to be in that position he ought to be as free as possible, not only as regards himself, but so far as his associations are concerned, from any entanglements. If he is not, then he is not in a position in which he can even hope to have the confidence of the people. I am going to venture a statement in advance of any personal knowledge and it is that Mr. McKinnon was never recommended by the Fruit-growers Association of Canada, or of the province of Ontario, which would have the best possible means of knowing the person best fitted to discharge duties of that kind. My hon. friend is not open to censure for having made an appointment from his own party. That is the custom and no hon. member of this House will waste a moment in discussing it, but when the hon. member makes a party appointment and for that and no other reason, as he seems to have done in this case, he is open to censure. The Minister of Agriculture cannot tell this committee that he had a personal knowledge of Mr. McKinnon's qualifications. In any service at all, whether in law or in the knowledge of fruit, a man cannot possibly have knowledge unless he has experience and training. You might as well say that a bright young man would make a good lawyer without passing a single examination, as to say that a young man was fitted to be an inspector of fruit because his father bought a fruit farm while he was at college. The hon. gentleman says that he found this young man to be very useful, but he should have taken precaution to discover that before appointing him. Mr. McKinnon may know more about fruit than before he went to Paris, but it is perfectly clear that the Minister of Agriculture placed an inexperienced lawyer in charge of an agricultural branch, and that his doing so might have very disastrous results to the trade. I am not attacking lawyers.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. I rather envy those gentlemen who have a training as lawyers, but I pity them if they try to be farmers or fruit-growers. Hon. members of this House who know the history of this young man know that he had absolutely no experience in the fruit business, but nevertheless the minister elevated him to a position of great importance in connection with the fruit-growing industry of this country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot now remember whether I asked anybody as to Mr. McKinnon's qualifications for this office, but he had undoubtedly been recommended to me as knowing a good deal about fruit-growing.

Mr. CLANCY. By whom ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. By the Hon. Thomas Bain, late Speaker of this House, whose judgment I will take upon such matters as readily as that of any man in Canada. Mr. McKinnon had shown in his work in the department, industry and intelligence and exceptional ability as a business man, as well as practical worth. He was a well educated man; he had a legal training, and the work he has to do as the head of that particular branch is particularly connected with the organization and administration of the Act.

Mr. COCHRANE. It must require a great deal of capacity to superintend eight or nine men.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It does require very considerable capacity to organize entirely new work for eight or nine men in the country. I believed from what I had seen of Mr. McKinnon's work that he was equal to the position, and after eight months experience I can say that he has proven himself to be extremely capable. I can rest upon the justification which the course of events has given for my choice of that gentleman. Hon. gentlemen opposite, I am afraid, are a little led away by the fact that they have discovered that Mr. McKinnon is a Liberal and that his father is engaged in active Liberal politics. I do not wonder at that, but I do not think that should influence me in my judgment of an effective officer who is doing effective work. I believe I was perfectly right in putting Mr. McKinnon into that office, and I propose to continue him in it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are the duties of this young gentleman ? Is he required to know about fruit or fruit-growing?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would consider it necessary that a man in charge of this work should know something about fruit-growing, and I know that Mr. McKinnon does know a good deal about fruit-growing and about fruit. In addition, he had to do a great deal of organizing and of direction in connection with the administration of this Act which was entirely a new thing. Prof. Robertson and myself gave a great deal of thought and attention to that, and we had to have some men under Prof. Robertson especially in charge of that work, whose duty it would be to carry out the details of the plan which we decided upon. I do not know that Mr. McKinnon has ever examined personally a barrel of apples, but if he had to, I believe he would be quite capable of doing so. His work has been that of administration and supervision, while the other inspectors have done the actual inspecting.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is perfectly plain from the statement of the minister that this young man had not the slightest qualification for the discharge of his duties in connection with fruit.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not acknowledge that at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The minister has appointed this young man inspector of fruit, because he had studied law.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. WADE. Because he did not practice law.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend (Mr. Wade) corrects me; because this young man had studied law and not practiced it, and because his father had purchased a fruit farm while this young man was at college. I do not know whether the Minister of Justice would think it worth while to appoint some gentleman to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada because that gentleman had been an apple grower, but it would be just as sensible for him to do so as for the Minister of Agriculture to appoint a man as a fruit inspector because he was a lawyer. If the Minister of Justice was able to go a little further, he would be still more in line with the Minister of Agriculture who says that this young man is qualified because his father owned a fruit farm ; carrying out the same idea, the Minister of Justice might appoint some person to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada because that person's father had owned a law library. Whatever Mr. McKinnon may develop into in the future, it is plain from the statement of the Minister of Agriculture that he had no qualification for this position when the minister appointed him. No one objects to this young man being appointed because he is a Liberal, but the objection is that he should not be appointed for that reason alone.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not done so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The fact is that this young gentleman's father was inspector of schools until after this young man began to go to college and study law, when the father purchased a fruit farm. There is no suggestion that the young man ever had anything to do with the management of that farm, although perhaps he might come home during the summer vacation and see apples and peaches growing on the trees.

An hon. MEMBER. Peaches on stems.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He had the additional merit of observing stems on peach trees which I believe do not exist, but even that did not qualify him to be a fruit inspector.

As to his having any special qualification outside of that, he has none unless, the fact that he has studied law constitutes a qualification. I could understand, if a man had practiced law, that the knowledge of business which had come to him in that way might be of some service in a matter of this kind ; but I should think that the mere academic knowledge of law which a young man had derived at college would confer the least possible qualification for the position assigned to this gentleman. I certainly have never found in my experience that the mere academic study of law or anything else particularly fits a man to organize or transact business such as the hon. gentleman says enters into the duties of this position. I think the hon. Minister of Agriculture has been led away by his doctrine of free trade in this matter—He desires to make the occupation of fruit-growing and a knowledge of the law reciprocate with each other. If that principle be carried out in the cabinet, it will be necessary for my hon. friend the Minister of Justice to consider the agricultural qualifications of any candidate for a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court or any of the superior courts in the provinces ; because the experience of a lawyer is about as necessary or useful to the position which the Minister of Agriculture has assigned to this gentleman as the business of fruit-growing is to the appointment of any person to a place on the bench of a court.

Mr. HEYD. I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the arguments which our friends on the other side have brought against the appointment of Mr. McKinnon, but they are not such as to influence me at all in endorsing the action of the Minister of Agriculture. It appears to me that one of the best evidences that this young man is qualified is the very fact that his father is a candidate for the Local Legislature in a fruit-growing district. If the people there feared that his appointment would result in injury to the fruit-growers, that would be one of the main reasons why his father would not be a candidate for the Local House. One-half the people at any rate in that section have confidence not only in the father, but also in the son. One of the peculiar arguments brought forward to-day, I presume with the idea of having a little sport, is the injurious effect that will follow from the fact of this inspector's father being a candidate. Now, I would like to know where our friends are going to draw the line. Are they going to exclude a man from running for the Local Legislature because his son happens to be an official of the Federal government ? Or are they going to prevent a man being appointed to any office because his father or his cousin happens to be a candidate ? How far are the ties of consanguinity going to extend ? What do these hon. gentlemen want ? Do they want the father to stop running, or the son to resign ? It seems to me that the greatest crime the young man has committed is that of being the son of a father who is a candidate for the Local Legislature.

Mr. WADE. I think it is only fair that, representing the county where this gentleman has been performing a part of his duties, I should state to the House what opinion the people there have of him. I dare say some hon. gentlemen opposite will not wish to hear it. I may say that very many of the fruit-growers of that county who have had business with him have expressed themselves to me as having the highest respect for this young man, and as thinking that he is well qualified, and is going to make a very superior officer. If they are satisfied with him I presume that the members of this House might very well be. The hon. leader of the opposition seems to think it is an obstacle to a man being appointed to anything if he possesses a library. I do not think so myself. It seems to me that the argument used on the other side as to the father's avocation and politics, is illustrated by the story of the gentleman who was asked what his religion was, and answered that he was a Presbyterian by his first wife. Here is a clever young man who is giving every satisfaction to the people who know him and his work; but gentlemen in this House who do not know him or the work he is doing, are entirely dissatisfied with him.

Mr. LANCASTER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us what Mr. McKinnon did down there which has given so much satisfaction; because I happen to come from the county where this gentleman has been living for the last six years, since his father has had a fruit farm; and every one there wondered who this young man was—whether he was any relation to the man who bought the fruit farm a few years ago. It never dawned on them that it could be the young man in question, because he was at college at the time he was sent to Paris. I think the hon. member for Annapolis must have got his information from the very fact that the young man is not able to inspect fruit; because, if the fruit-growers of Annapolis are so thoroughly satisfied with the work he was doing, the only way that I can reconcile the statement made on this side of the House with the hon. member's statement is that he has not been inspecting apples in the county of Annapolis as they ought to be inspected, and that he is satisfactory to the fruit-growers because he lets everything go as they put it up.

Mr. WADE. Will the hon. gentleman explain how it would be pleasing to the fruit-growers of Annapolis not to have the fruit inspected properly? Does he mean that they are dishonest and do not want to have the fruit properly inspected?

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose the fruit-growers were satisfied with the conditions that existed before, and if some person was sent there to inspect who did not know anything about fruit, they would be content to go on as they had been doing before. It seems to me that the question for the House is this: What are the qualifications necessary for an inspector? What does the Act provide? It provides that he shall know the names and varieties of apples. There are hundreds of varieties, and how could a young man without any acquaintance with the fruit business, or without being trained to it, be expected to designate the names and varieties of the different apples or the grade of the fruit? One apple might be small and another large, but both good of their kind.

Mr. HEYD. How much intelligence is required to tell a big apple from a little one?

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman has given such evidence of his knowledge and of his desire to shield his friends that I think the House will be quite satisfied to hear but little more from him. This inspector has to see that such fruit shall consist of full-grown specimens of the one variety, but how would he know there was only one variety in the barrel. It would take the best of experts to distinguish the varieties in some cases, they look so much alike. Even fruit-growers have to send their apples down to experts at Toronto to determine the varieties and the disputes that arise at agricultural fairs are often so animated that the judges themselves cannot decide to what particular variety an apple may belong, although they are men who have been all their lives raising apples in the district. But this young man who was never engaged or in the fruit business, is expected to teach fruit-growers the difference between one variety and another. He is also to determine whether the fruit packed is falsely marked, and if he finds it is, he has to efface the mark and inscribe the words 'falsely marked.' But how can he do so if he has no experience or practical training? He could not tell whether there was a mixture of two or three varieties or whether the apples were full grown. That could only be done by some one who was in the apple-growing business or accustomed to handle and export apples. The information we have is that this young man cannot possibly have expert knowledge and therefore must be unfit for the position. The hon. member for Annapolis says he has satisfied the people in Annapolis and must therefore have satisfied the whole country. But that will not satisfy the fruit-growers and handlers who believe that the inspector ought to be expert in the line—one who can distinguish the different varieties, who knows what is a well matured apple and what is not, who knows what is an average sized apple, and who can tell when the Act has been complied with in the selection, packing and marking of the fruit.

Mr. FRASER. How is expertness acquired? How are we to know that a man is an expert? We cannot always tell by reputation. The hon. gentleman would be surprised to know that one of England's greatest historians, who has recently been appointed to the Oxford Chair of History,

Mr. Stubb, was so generally unknown that everybody was enquiring who he was.

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, and Billy Stubbs, too.

Mr. FRASER. Billy Stubbs gave a good account of himself. The mere statement that a man is not qualified or has not been a certain length of time raising apples is not proof. There are farmers who raise apples in Nova Scotia and who could not go beyond twelve or fifteen varieties, because they have been raising only these varieties all their lives and have not expert knowledge of any others. What is required in an inspector is a knowledge of the different varieties, and he can get that without being an apple-grower. It is in this gentleman's favour that his father was a grower of apples, and then we have the admission that he has been a success. In this practical age we look at results and not at opinions. If he has proved his usefulness he is well qualified, and that is sufficient for us. I have not heard a single statement to the contrary. No hon. gentleman has said that there has been any complaint against him from the apple growers or shippers.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked the Minister of Agriculture if there were any complaints and he said there were quite a few.

The MINISTER OF AGRICUL... I did not say that there were any complaints about Mr. McKinnon.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked if there were any complaints regarding the enforcement of the Act, and the minister said there were.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is quite a different thing. I never said there was any complaint about Mr. McKinnon.

Mr. FRASER. We have no evidence of any complaint either from the apple-raisers or the packers or the shippers.

Mr. WADE. Or the apple-eaters.

Mr. FRASER. If there were any complaints made against this gentleman, that would be quite different. Surely we are wasting time discussing his qualifications when we have no complaint made against him. We have the evidence that he has been a good officer and has given satisfaction.

Mr. CLANCY. Where is that evidence ?

Mr. FRASER. We have it from the department, and I am bound to take that rather than the only complaint brought against him, which is that he is a Liberal and that his father was running an election. The minister says that in his own department there is no complaint.

Mr. CLANCY. Will he say that he is a good inspector ?

Mr. FRASER. He says that he has given satisfaction, and what more does the hon. gentleman want ?

Mr. CLANCY. The minister says he does not inspect at all.

Mr. FRASER. This seems to be simply an attack on this young man because he happens to be born of respectable parents and because his qualifications have been enhanced by an excellent education. Surely in this practical age we look at results.

Mr. HENDERSON. From one end of the Dominion to the other we have been told that this government has placed in the portfolio of Agriculture a practical farmer. If there is one thing which the Prime Minister takes credit for more than another throughout Ontario, it is that he has put a practical farmer over the Agriculture Department. But what is this practical farmer doing ? In the fruit trade, the export of which ranges from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000 per year, we have an inspector of inspectors, who, the minister tells us, never inspects the apples, but is paid a salary of $1,200 a year to see that the fruit is properly packed. The whole thing is a farce. This man cannot possibly have the requisite knowledge because he has never had any experience in the trade, and the sooner some change is made that will give confidence to the people, the better. What confidence will the people have in the inspection law, when its administration is in the hands of one who cannot possibly have the knowledge or experience required ? I say they will have no confidence whatever, and the people, in that way, will not respect the law.

Mr. WADE. I would like to ask the last hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) if it is true that this young man's father spoke against the hon. gentleman in a recent election ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think that makes any difference. However, the fact is I heard him try to do so, but he was an absolute failure.

Mr. WADE. It does not seem that the hon. gentleman opposite wishes to answer my question. It appears now that there is a good case against this young man and, of course, the item should be now withdrawn. We have now reached the origin of the trouble. It is not because this man's father was a school inspector, or because he owned an orchard, or because he had a library, but because he spoke against the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson). Surely the Minister of Agriculture would never ask this House to sanction the appointment of the son of a man who had done anything of that sort. As it is very near six o'clock, I trust the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) will enable me to go to my dinner in peace by answering the question I put to him.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) will tell me what his question is I shall be happy to answer him.

Mr. WADE. The hon. gentleman said that probably the reason why the Annapolis valley fruit-growers were so well pleased with this young man was that he did not insist on inspection. Does he mean to insinuate that the fruit-growers of the Annapolis valley are so anxious to pack dishonest fruit that they seek to evade the operation of the Act ?

Mr. LANCASTER. I cannot allow the hon. gentleman to put on his head a cap that does not fit him. I did not say what he imputes, at all events. I asked whether the fact that the people who were shipping this fruit that should be inspected were so willing to class this man as a good inspector —and I had in my mind that the minister himself had said that he was not inspecting, but was supervising inspectors, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Halton —had anything to do with the fact that he was satisfactory to my hon. friend (Mr. Wade). That is what I said. I would like to know if the hon. gentleman is satisfied ?

Mr. WADE. I am perfectly satisfied.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

KNAPP TUBULAR STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 75) to incorporate the Knapp Tubular Steamship Company.—Mr. Belcourt.

On section 10,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). How does this clause as amended by the committee read ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I may say that, in the committee it was thought that, in case of private property, there was no reason why the company should be obliged to make reference to the Governor in Council ; and, if they attempt to make wharfs on a navigable river, the Public Works Act would apply.

Bill reported ; read the third time, and passed.

CROWN BANK OF CANADA.

House in committee on Bill (No. 79) to incorporate the Crown Bank of Canada.—Mr. Guthrie.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the Bank Act provide for all the requirements of this corporation and for the organization of this bank ?

Mr. WADE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Yes, the Bank Act has attached to it a model Bill of which this is substantially a copy, so that all we have to do is to pass these clauses and then all the provisions of the Bank Act apply to all banks alike.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 53) respecting the Canadian Northern Railway.—Mr. Davis.

On section 1,

Mr. McCREARY. Before this Bill passes I want to put myself on record as objecting to this kind of a charter. It was stated a few days ago that this charter only covered about 2,500 miles of road. As a matter of fact, if the charter is looked into closely, it will be found that it covers fully double that amount of railway. This road runs all across the continent and twice across the continent from Winnipeg west with branch lines which will make the mileage upwards of 5,000 miles, a much greater mileage than was granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1881. Now, there are no conditions attached to this Bill, as to the amount of road which shall be built each year, or as to the kind of rolling stock that shall be supplied. It is absolutely a blanket charter, or a roving charter, as was said by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) without any conditions whatever. If it is going to be the policy of this government to grant such charters and in future to continue granting them, then, let it be understood that such is their policy, but I submit, that at the present time there is no precedent for the granting of any such charter. There are some of those lines that might appear all right to eastern men who do not understand the situation, but to western men who do understand the situation, the local conditions and the geography of that country, they are simply lines running from any one point to any other point without any definition whatever. You might as well say that this company shall have power to construct a line from any one point in Canada to any other point in Canada. That is practically what the charter means. As the Bill originally appeared it authorized the company to construct a line from a point east of Edmonton to the Red Deer river. It now describes that line as running to a point between Beaver lake and Sullivan lake. When I tell hon. gentlemen that there are probably fifty Beaver lakes and fifty Sullivan lakes in the North-west Territories they will readily understand that the thing is quite indefinite. There are certain names attached to lakes such as Devil's lake which are very common in the Territories. There is nothing to show where that branch line runs and I want this committee to understand that I object to any such charter. Then, again, in regard to the clause providing for the capitalization of this company, I trust this committee will bear in mind that last year there was ratified here an agreement by which the province of Manitoba has guaranteed the interest on $20,000 a mile on all of the line from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, and on all of the lines in Manitoba. They stated the other day they had 1,300 miles in all. I understand that this Bill—I have not been able to go into it, and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) is not here—increases that liability and that the province of Manitoba will be in rather a peculiar position, that that province will not only have to guarantee interest on $20,000 a mile but that the railway will have to earn much more than that before the province of Manitoba will be safe as guarantor. I would be glad if the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding), or the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, would take this matter into consideration and explain the position that the province of Manitoba will be in if this charter passes in the condition in which it is brought before the committee. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) is here and as he is probably more conversant with the railway deal in Manitoba than I am, I would like to hear his views upon that point. I think, also, in all fairness, that subsection (e), which authorizes the company to build a branch line from some place east of Edmonton in Alberta or Saskatchewan to the Red Deer river, should be struck out. 'To some place east in Alberta or Saskatchewan.' Now, in my humble opinion that covers 300 or 400 miles. Some place east of Edmonton in Saskatchewan or Alberta would give a starting point 400 miles—to where? In the first place it was to the Red Deer river, and as I showed the other day in committee, that was within 600 miles of the terminus. They can do that, and it is so indefinite that they can start pretty nearly at any place and end pretty nearly at any place. There is nothing to that branch line, it should be cut out. Then, again, when do you suppose that branch line could be operated? In the first place they would have to build their line from a point near the Swan river, away north to Edmonton, and an immigrant would have to go about 300 miles out of his way to get to the point that he could get on this branch line; the same as if I was going to Winnipeg and went to Montreal first and then took some other route to get to Winnipeg. I submit that branch line is perfectly ridiculous. The gentleman who explained this the other day, Mr. Nash, said they were going down to the Red Deer river for coal. Well, anybody who knows anything about the Red Deer river knows there is little or no coal on that river. Coal is up on the Battle river, or on the Saskatchewan; on the Red Deer river there is no coal. Any one can see that it is a branch line put there purely for the purpose of obstructing some other line that may run up. Now if there is one line in the North-west Territories that is required, it is a line paralleling the Calgary and Edmonton line. From Calgary to Edmonton there is about 192 miles. There have been 40,000 to 50,000 settlers located within the last four years in that district, and the consequence is that the territory on each side is taken up, both the homestead and railway land, until parties now have to drive about 60 to 70 miles to get homesteads. They are getting discouraged, they wont go. Now the experience in the United States has been that whenever there has been a wave of immigration going into a certain territory, that territory has become popular, it has become well known. Then if you stop the immigration at a certain point, it practically stops immigration to the entire North-west. The reason why people go to Alberta instead of Assiniboia and Manitoba is this: The idea is prevalent in the United States among a great many people that the climate of Northern Alberta, being near the foot hills of the mountains, is much more mild than it is in Manitoba. If a man arrives at Winnipeg and you ask him where he is going to settle, he will tell you, I want to go out into Alberta, because the foot hills of the Rocky mountains will protect us and the Chinook winds moderate the climate. That is the popular opinion that prevails both among Britishers and the people of the United States; and if you stop immigrants going to that point you may stop immigration altogether.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCREARY. The hon. gentleman is enjoying himself, but I am trying to talk a little common sense here to-night, and trying to give members a little information. I submit that in a charter like that especially, that branch line should be cut out, and the capitalization of the company should be seriously looked into before it is allowed to pass this House.

Mr. SPROULE. I think there is a good deal in some of the contentions of the hon. member. He made one statement that they had any time they liked to commence and finish this road, if I understood him correctly. In reality they have not, because it says:

> The respective lines hereby authorized shall be commenced and completed within the respective delays below mentioned, otherwise the powers should remain null and void.

Mr. McCREARY. What I said was that there was no time in which they should build any certain portion of the road, no certain number of miles they should build each year.

Mr. SPROULE. These lines mentioned in subsection A, that will be between Port Arthur and Fort Francis and Quebec, shall be commenced within five years and built within ten years, the lines mentioned in subsections B, C and D shall be commenced within two years and completed within five years; the lines mentioned in subsections E and F shall be commenced within three years and completed within six years. That seems to me definite enough.

Mr. McCREARY. It does not limit them to build any portion in any one year.

Mr. SPROULE. The lines on each of these sections shall be commenced and finished within a limited time, which is moderately short. Now with reference to the objection which the hon. member has taken to that branch leading down to the Red Deer district, it seems to me, after looking at the map, as we did when we were discussing it, that it came so near to the Canadian Pacific Railway that in all probability that short length will be finished, and there will be the most direct route for immigrants into that country.

Mr. McCREARY. Why don't they go down to the line ?

Mr. SPROULE. I have no doubt, when they are building that line, if they find, as they will find, that it will be a matter of importance and convenience to the people to have it, they will get powers to go on and connect the two. If the one line is built so close to the other, as it seems to be, provided the map gives a correct idea, there will be a connection made in a short time, a much shorter time than it would take to incorporate a company to build another line.

Mr. McCREARY. It is only a very short branch line; why don't they apply for the whole thing ?

Mr. SPROULE. I rose at the time in committee to say that it would be the part of wisdom to extend that down to the other, but the hurry and bustle were so great that I could not be heard. Now with regard to the power which enables them to bond the road, including the incumbrances that are on it, of $20,000 a mile; at first sight it seems to be unreasonable. But we give power to nearly all these roads through that country, especially where they have to go through a country like that between Port Arthur and Quebec, to bond $20,000 and even $30,000 a mile.

Mr. McCREARY. The hon. gentleman is an old parliamentarian, and I am not. Will he tell me if this $20,000 a mile will be an addition to the powers granted them last session under the Manitoba railway deal ?

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that the powers which they will have under this Bill will only give them the right to bond, including the incumbrance already on it, to the extent of $20,000 a mile. I may be wrong, but that is my interpretation of it. As to the powers which they have between Port Arthur and Quebec to build roads to Ottawa and Montreal, there is no starting point given, but there is a finishing point, namely, Montreal in the one case and Ottawa in the other. I objected to that, because I thought it was scarcely definite enough, but as it related to the indefinite future when they might require to build those lines, it would not be a serious objection. Beyond that the Bill seems to be much the same, containing much the same powers, as many other Bills we have passed. I admit it is a very long line, and the charter was somewhat of a blanket character. But after all, it contains very much the same rights and powers as we have given to many other companies.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) made a reference to me. I think I ought to say that I have not had this Bill under consideration at all. It is true I am a member of the Railway Committee, but I was otherwise engaged, so I am not in a position to say anything. I regret that the Minister of Railways and Canals is not here, but on the point raised by my hon. friend I would not care to offer an opinion.

Mr. CLARKE. In view of the strong statements made by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) respecting the character of this charter, and in view of the fact that the Minister of Railways and Canals is absent, would it not be well to postpone the further consideration of this Bill until the next opportunity of taking up private Bills ? I am a member of the Railway Committee, but unfortunately I was not there when the Bill was being considered, and I have no idea as to the location or the distances which are covered by this charter. A strong point has been made by the hon. member for Selkirk as to the possible liability that may be imposed upon the province of Manitoba. In view of these statements, unless the government have made up their minds that the Bill is proper, I think it should not be proceeded with at this sitting. We should have an opportunity of ascertaining from the Minister of Railways and Canals whether he has examined all these allegations that have been made by the member for Selkirk.

Mr. McCREARY. The question of bonding the road was never touched upon in the Railway Committee.

Mr. CLARKE. That is an important point. Perhaps some other members of the cabinet who are present will give us further light. I was rather surprised at the statements made by the member for Selkirk.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the government had any objection to the Bill, of course it would have been stated by the Minister of Railways. There was a large attendance at the committee and every clause was thoroughly discussed and the Bill was almost unanimously adopted without a vote. I do not think it is worth while wasting time discussing the matter that has been raised here. I agree with the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the clauses are usual. The people there want railway facilities and the limit in the Bill is two years to commence and five years to complete. If the road is completed within five years I am sure the country will be delighted. As to the clauses affecting the bonding powers and stock, they were well considered and the committee agreed with the views expressed by the Minister of Railways and left it to him to have the Bill amended along the line he indicated. The minister has gone further than any member of the committee thought of at the time, because he has—and I believe the committee has agreed to it—amended the clause so as not to increase the capital stock of the company beyond the powers they now possess. That has been restricted to a greater extent than any member of the committee present thought it would be.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it usual to give a charter covering such a large area—a charter that will enable them to start almost any place and go almost any place ?

Mr. COCHRANE. That question was raised, and as the Minister of Railways stated the line goes through a wild and unknown part of the country and he did not think the power was unreasonable.

Mr. GILMOUR. As I understand the situation of that country, I agree with what the member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) has said. I can not see why the Canada Northern Railway should seek for a line from a point near Victoria down south, and land at the Red Deer and stop there. It is going in the wrong direction. They will have to haul back and go away up to Victoria and east again. I could understand it quite well, if they would come down to Medicine Hat and have running powers along the Canadian Pacific Railway, but it would seem to me very peculiar if we granted them this part of the charter because it would stop a line being built there at some future time. I could understand the Canadian Pacific Railway if they were to run a line, and I think they ought, from Medicine Hat north between Alberta and Saskatchewan, but I do not understand what the Northern Company want with this line coming there and stopping there. I do not agree with the member for Selkirk with regard to having no coal at Red Deer. There is coal at the Red Deer but there is no necessity for the Northern Railway coming there for coal, because they can get lots of it along the Saskatchewan.

Mr. SPROULE. This charter says that they shall have power to bond :

> Provided the number of bonds, debentures or other securities issued by the company and at any time outstanding, including those heretofore issued, shall not at any time exceed $20,000 per mile.

I think that includes all the bonds that they could possibly issue over any portion of the road.

Mr. GILMOUR. I should have added to what I said, that no part of that country up there needs a road more than this. As the hon. member for Selkirk has said, the settlers have gone in ahead of the railway and they are too far away now. It is high time a railway went there, but it should run from Medicine Hat and along between Alberta and Saaskatchewan.

Mr. McCREARY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Gilmour) is well acquainted with the situation up there, and one would need to be well acquainted with it before he understood this particular branch line. As a matter of fact there is a charter before this House running from Medicine Hat north and west to the Red Deer, along ridge 16 west of the fourth meridian to the Saskatchewan river. That charter goes through a territory that is now being settled by immigrants. It will connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway and also with the branch line running from Lethbridge to Medicine Hat. People who come from the United States via Coutts will be able to come up and go into the northern limit by this new line parallel to the Calgary and Edmonton. It is a strange thing that the Mackenzie and Mann Company never thought of applying for this charter until the other charter had been advertised for some time.

Then it dawned upon them that they would like to have a kind of branch line starting from no place and going to no place, to take the place of the line for which there is a charter before the House. A more ridiculous piece of legislation is not on the statute-book, to any man conversant with the situation, and before I sit down, I am going to move that that branch line be struck out. With regard to the bonding privilege, I am not sufficient of a lawyer or a parliamentarian to know exactly what that means—whether the $20,000 a mile is in such a shape that this company cannot recede from the bargain made with the province of Manitoba. While the bargain made by the province of Manitoba is not exactly endorsed by me, I admit that it is turning out to be a much better bargain than I anticipated. But we do not want to jeopardize that province by placing on it a burden which it never expected to bear. If this provision is going to increase the liability of the province of Manitoba one cent, hon. members should not allow it to pass; because while it is giving us relief from a monopoly, it is an expensive bargain, which will require a great deal of careful handling in the next ten years to help us out. If we continue to have such crops as we had last year, I believe the bargain will come out all right; but this Dominion government must not place any further burdens on the province of Manitoba, or it will bring that province to a state of very serious indebtedness in the near future. I would ask the Minister of Finance to allow the Bill to stand until the Minister of Railways is here, because he was thoroughly in touch with the Bill that came before the House last session. The Minister of Finance was only at the Railway Committee a very little time, but the Minister of Railways knows exactly what this clause means, and I would ask him to be on hand to explain it. In the meantime I would ask that clause 'E' be struck out of the Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would rather hear from members of the committee who are more familiar with the Bill than I am. I understood that this Bill was reported with the concurrence of the Minister of Railways, and I would not like to take the responsibility of making any motion against the judgment of the committee.

Mr. CLARKE. Why not let it stand until the Minister of Railways is here ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would like to hear what the promoters say, and also the members who were present at the committee and supported the Bill.

Mr. OLIVER. I admire the solicitude of some hon. members in regard to the branch line provided for in subsection 'E.' As it is a branch line that entirely concerns the constituency I represent, I might possibly venture to state my views in regard to it. In the committee I objected to the section as it appeared in the Bill, and it was amended with the consent of the company, and with the approval of the committee, so that for my part I was willing to withdraw my objections to it. That being the case, and the matter having been discussed there and settled, as I understood, whether I am particularly friendly to the Bill or not, I feel bound to uphold that settlement now that the Bill comes before the House. I think that is only fair to myself and all the parties concerned. As to the merits of this proposed branch line, my hon. friend from Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) objects to it because it does not touch the Canadian Pacific Railway. That used to be a radical objection to any railroad in the North-west.

Mr. GILMOUR. My objection is not that it does not touch the Canadian Pacific Railway, but that there is no way out to the east, without going back north 120 miles.

Mr. OLIVER. Once the Canadian Northern is constructed, back north will not mean anything more than back south. It all depends on where you are coming from and where you are going to. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) insists on coming up to the Saskatchewan river from Montana; but he is not bound to come that way. Everybody coming to the Saskatchewan is not coming from Montana; in fact, a very small proportion are coming from Montana. As a matter of fact, the people are coming from that portion of the United States which lies south and south-easterly from the city of Winnipeg, and it is shorter for them to come to the Saskatchewan district by way of the Canadian Northern than by the Canadian Pacific Railway. So that while I do not wish to argue for the Canadian Northern Railway Company nor for this branch line in particular, I do wish to point out that the objections which are urged against the branch line are not valid objections, and did not prevail with the Railway Committee, and that an arrangement having been agreed to in the committee, it is hardly fair to raise a contention in the House against the arrangement. The country which is to be served by this branch line is already very largely settled. There is a necessity for the construction of such a road as this; and when the Canadian Northern Railway Company propose to take the responsibility of serving a certain piece of country with a certain branch line, I do not feel warranted in taking the responsibility of opposing them. As to what some other company has offered to do, I am prepared for my part to support the proposition of the other company too. I would not feel justified in rejecting their proposition, but neither do I consider that they are justified in asking the House to reject the Canadian Northern proposition.

Mr. McCREARY. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) apparently takes the same stand as did the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) a few days ago—that because this particular branch line happens to be in Alberta, no other member has a right to discuss it. Now, I find that great portions of this and other lines are in the province of Manitoba, and therefore I claim the right to discuss all questions relating to them. The hon. gentleman seems to rest a large part of his argument on the point that a large number of the people who are going in to the country do not come from Montana or the neighbouring states; but I find by the immigration returns that nearly 97 per cent of the 3,700 people who came from the United States in the month of March struck the Canadian Pacific Railway main line at Moosejaw, or Medicine Hat. They came in either via Coutts or via North Portal. If they came via Coutts, they struck the main line at Medicine Hat and would go by the Canadian Pacific Railway to where this new line is projected. If they came in on the Soo line via North Portal, how would they reach this line ? They would strike the main line at Moosejaw, and would have to go back 350 miles to Portage la Prairie and then north-west 350 miles. In other words, they would have to travel 700 miles out of their way to reach this northern point on the Saskatchewan river, and then go south. The Canadian Northern line starts at Portage la Prairie and goes north and west, and there is no other way for a man coming in by North Portal to reach that line. I ask the hon. gentleman if that is not so ?

Mr. OLIVER. I will admit that a large proportion of the settlers come in by North Portal and they do reach the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway at Moosejaw, but I do not admit that, if the Canadian Northern Railway were constructed they would come by way of North Portal. It would be as short to come by the way of Winnipeg and take the Canadian Northern to the Saskatchewan valley. These men take the present route because there is no other, not because it is the shortest that there will be. And it is absolutely unfair to say that because they take a roundabout route now they would therefore take that route after a shorter one is provided. The bulk of these people, as the hon. member (Mr. McCreary) knows, come in from Minnesota, Dakota and Iowa, with a few from Nebraska and Kansas. They are not going out of their way by coming in by Winnipeg and they could go west to the Saskatchewan by the direct line.

Mr. McCREARY. Where would that be to ?

Mr. OLIVER. Northern Alberta, that is where most of them are going.

Mr. McCREARY. And how will they get to it, except by coming in by Winnipeg and going by the Canadian Northern ?

Mr. OLIVER. That's what I say. They will not need to come in by way of North Portal, but by way of Winnipeg.

Mr. McCREARY. Well, take the hon. gentleman on his own ground—they would come in by way of Winnipeg. They can come in by that way now if they wish. But do they ? No, they take the Soo Line which is chiefly owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Canadian Pacific Railway encourage settlers to go in that way by giving a $9.60 rate from the boundary line to Edmonton, against a rate of $15 when they came in by way of Winnipeg. Moreover, they make no change of cars at the boundary line but the same cars run through from St. Paul and Minneapolis, so that settlers are not obliged to change cars or unload. The cars are owned by the same company. But if the settlers came in in a Great Northern car, when they got to the boundary line they would have to unload their settler's effects or pay something like one cent a hundred miles, which is the running rate to go to Edmonton. So, no matter how many Canadian Northern roads we have the settlers from St. Paul or Minneapolis—that means also all western and southern points like Kansas city, Oklahoma, and so on, will take the Soo Line. As I say, the Canadian Pacific Railway favour that route. I have tried hard, and the Manitoba government has tried hard to get immigrants to come in by way of Winnipeg, so that they could get them into Manitoba and up on the Manitoba and Northwestern route, but they have not succeeded in doing so, because they have more favourable rates on a better train service by the other way. There is no change of cars or waiting over as at Winnipeg. A man and his family coming into Winnipeg at two o'clock cannot get a train going west until the next day. What does that mean ? A man may have a family of seven or eight children and he will have to take them up town, and it will cost him $10 or $15 for a hotel bill for his family. But, on the Soo Line he will start from St. Paul and get to his destination without change of cars.

Mr. COCHRANE. What has that to do with this question ?

Mr. McCREARY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) tried to show that if this branch line were constructed immigrants going into Alberta would take that line, would go up the Canadian Northern to Edmonton and then strike south. As the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) says it would be like going around two sides of a triangle.

Mr. COCHRANE. Would it hurt that section of the country if the branch line were built ?

Mr. McCREARY. This branch line will never be built—no fear of that. But what I say is that the branch line, a charter for which is being applied for from Medicine Hat on the Canadian Pacific Railway, will be the only proper line for immigrants to go in on.

Mr. OLIVER. If it is a question between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Northern as to who shall occupy this country, I am perfectly satisfied for my part that the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be given a charter and a chance to occupy it. That country has been there a good while and the Canadian Pacific Railway has been there a good while too, and the Canadian Pacific Railway has done nothing to occupy the country yet. Now comes another company and wants to occupy it. They are a going concern. I do not know whether they mean business or not, but I ask the House if it is prepared to take the responsibility of refusing to allow a company to give the accommodation that is required and that everybody admits is required.

As to the people wanting to go to Moosejaw by way of North Portal, of course, if they wish to that is the way they will go. They are going to Northern Alberta.

Mr. McCREARY. And how are you going to get there ?

Mr. OLIVER. They go to Moosejaw now because they cannot get in the other way. Every hon. gentleman understands that, I am sure, except the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) himself.

Mr. McCREARY. I wish to tell the hon. gentleman that I do understand that people can go in by two ways, either via Winnipeg or via North Portal and the hon. gentleman is foolish to try to impose upon the House. Either he is deliberately trying to impose on hon. members or it is a case of absolute ignorance on his part—one or other. If I want to go to a point on the main line, I can go better via Moosejaw than via Winnipeg. As to any question between the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific Railway, it makes no difference to me. But I say the only way to get in east of the Calgary and Edmonton road will be by the Canadian Pacific Railway main line and thence by the branch line, and not by a main line that is not likely to be built for three years and thence by a branch line going south. I may tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) that, even though I do not live in Edmonton I know the situation there so far as immigration is concerned, probably as well as he does. I had a great deal more to do with the settling of that country than he had. I have visited the immigrants there over and over again, and have had the question of immigration before me every day for three years and a half. That is why I asked the government two or three years ago—and my letters are on file in the Department of the Interior—to urge the Canadian Pacific Railway to construct this line for immigrants. I did it as a civil servant then in what I believed to be the best interest of the public, and I do the same as a member of parliament to-day. I say this is the only practical way to build the line.

Mr. OLIVER. I would leave it to the judgment of the committee whether the hon. gentleman or I know more about the subject in hand.

Mr. GILMOUR. As to any question between the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific Railway, I have no preference. But any one looking at the map will see that it is a desirable thing not to give the charter. If it should hang fire, it might prevent the other road building from Medicine Hat. Not only should there be the road coming up from Medicine Hat, but there should be a cross road. That should have been built long ago and, had the Canadian Pacific Railway owned the Calgary and Edmonton road, I believe it would have been built before this.

Mr. SPROULE. The argument of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) falls to the ground in view of the fact that there is a charter to build to Medicine Hat now.

Mr. McCREARY. No.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that that was stated clearly in the committee.

Mr. McCREARY. It is advertised and applied for and will come up in two or three days.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, can we not put it through this House ? Certainly we can. And then let whichever company will build the road. We have pursued that policy in different parts of the country before now. It seems to me there is no reason why we should refuse the one that is before us for the purpose of giving it to another. Let us give it to both.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I would not object to the passage of this Bill simply because the company is asking for these branch lines. I am willing to give it this charter and to support the other charter as well. It will simply be a case of the survival of the fittest. But if there be anything in the contention of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) that this will increase the liability of the province of Manitoba—although I do not place that interpretation upon this Bill—I would join with my hon. friend from Selkirk in asking a postponement for further consideration, especially as no member of the government seems to be present to give us a legal opinion. I believe that the liability entailed upon the province of Manitoba was for the special lines mentioned in the Act we passed last session, and has nothing to do with any of the lines asked for in this Bill; but to avoid all doubt, we should have a legal opinion from the Minister of Justice on that point. With regard to the discrimination referred to by the hon. member for Selkirk, I had some correspondence with the immigration agent in the province of Manitoba in the United States, and he drew my attention to the fact that discriminatory rates are charged in favour of the 'Soo' line. However, that has nothing particular to do with this discussion, and I would favour the postponement of this Bill for further consideration unless some member of the government is prepared to give us an opinion that the province of Manitoba will not have any more liability entailed upon it by the passage of this Bill.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not wish to speak, as a member of the government or as a lawyer, but as having some experience in the Railway Committee, and, speaking for myself, I cannot see that there is anything in this Bill which can increase the liability of the province of Manitoba. It does not require a lawyer to know that there is not a word in this Bill which can have that effect. All the lawyers in the committee and in the House are satisfied on that point, and unless some one can point out in a reasonable way that there is any such danger, I can see no cause for delay.

Mr. PUTTEE. I would suggest that the Bill lay over and be reprinted. There are a number of amendments which were made in the committee, and the committee agreed to let the Minister of Railways and its chairman re-draft the clause respecting the capitalization and the bonding power. The whole Bill should be reprinted, and the House make sure that the liability of the province of Manitoba is not to be increased.

On section 2,

Mr. McCREARY. I seriously object to the last part of this section. That provides that the lines mentioned in subsections E and F shall be commenced within three years and completed within six years of the passing of this Act. If branch line E is going to be a line by which immigrants are to be brought into northern Alberta, it will be absolutely useless, for long before the six years have expired immigration to that district will have stopped for the reason that there is too long a haul. If that is to be an operative clause, it should be two years and three years instead of three and six.

Section agreed to.

Section 3 expunged and the following substituted :

The directors may make regulations respecting the form of stock certificates and the transfer of stock in the capital of the company.

Section agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. McCREARY. Here is a clause that apparently affects the province of Manitoba. It provides that the total amount of bonds, debentures or other securities by the company and at any time outstanding, including those heretofore issued, shall not at any time exceed $25,000 per mile of the company's lines of railway, constructed or under contract to be constructed. There are 1,300 miles of their road in Manitoba and between Manitoba and Port Arthur, which, by the railway contract made between Manitoba and this company, should not be mortgaged more than $20,000 per mile, as I remember the contract. Notwithstanding the opinion of my hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland), I would ask the Minister of Railways, on his responsibility as a minister, to state that this does not affect the province of Manitoba. If necessary he should correspond with the Manitoba government, which has guaranteed the bonds to the extent of $18,000,000 in order to find out from the Attorney General of that province whether this in any way conflicts with that bargain or imposes any further increase of liability upon that province.

As a matter of fact it is now past 9 o'clock and the hour for private Bills has expired, and surely the Minister of Finance will grant us this small privilege of having the Minister of Railways pronounce himself on this subject and if necessary correspond with the premier of Manitoba and the Attorney General of that province in order to remove any doubt.

Mr. COCHRANE. The Minister of Justice is in the House.

Mr. McCREARY. He is not conversant with the Bill, and was not in the Railway Committee, but the Minister of Railways was in daily session in the committee last year when the Canadian Northern Bill went through, and is thoroughly conversant with the facts. At the meeting the other day of the committee, when this Bill was passed, this particular feature of it never dawned on me, but it came to my mind afterwards. If the Minister of Railways were here and gave his opinion, on his responsibility as a minister, that this Bill in no way affected the liability of the Manitoba government, I would have nothing more to say. But I think we ought to have that opinion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was not before the committee, and am bound to believe that these matters were all considered in that committee. If anything new has arisen there will be opportunity to look into it before this Bill reaches its final stage, but I do not feel at liberty to interfere at all.

Mr. McCREARY. Then I call the attention of Mr. Speaker to the fact that the hour for private Bills has expired.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems only reasonable that we should have the opinion of the law officer of the Crown.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall mention the matter to the Minister of Railways.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hour for private Bills has expired.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Commissioner's branch, for agriculture and dairying, &c., $210,000.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the minister give us the names of all the inspectors, where they are located, and where they come from, who are now engaged under the Act ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. W. A. McKinnon; Alexander McNeill, who I think comes from the county of Essex; E. Lick, who comes from the neighbourhood of Cobourg or Oshawa; G. Vroom, from the county of Annapolis; R. Burke, from Prince Edward Island; H. L. Dery, from Rouville, I think; J. F. Scriver, county of Huntingdon; T. I. Carey, also from Cobourg, I think; E. N. Wartman, from Kingston, I think; J. J. Philp, of Winnipeg; Barton Gandy, New Brunswick; Freeman Fitch, from Middleton, N.S. The last seven are temporary appointments; the first five I mentioned are for a year.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman explain why he has changed his policy laid down last year, when he said he intended to appoint only temporary inspectors ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not aware that I have changed my policy. I said the inspectors would not be engaged necessarily for the whole year. But accepting what the hon. gentleman says, I found that the season for inspection lasted rather longer than I expected; and in the second place, I found that this work in connection with the fruit trade was very beneficial, and I desired to carry it on with some of those inspectors all the year round.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister spent considerable time this afternoon in giving us in detail the purposes for which this vote was to be expended, and he referred to the fruit inspection. Now, it appears he has formed a new department with Mr. McKinnon at the head of it, who has under him four or five permanent officials and seven temporaries. The seven that are temporary are not employed by the year, the other three or four are employed permanently. Any person who is conversant with the fruit business knows that their time will not be fully taken up; but he proposes to send them around as active agents ostensibly to talk fruit business generally over the country, and perhaps they will talk something else in the interest of the ministers. Now we have an Agriculture Committee which meets twice or three times a week; that committee has had before it Professor Robertson and the head of the Immigration Department, and two or three other heads of departments. Now. I suggest to the minister that at the next meeting of the Agriculture Committee he should have Mr. McKinnon, the chief officer of this inspection department, there, and then the committee will catechise him and ascertain his qualifications, and the qualifications of these gentlemen who are under him, and the amount of work that has been done during the last year while this department has been in full swing. I think it is due to the country, and to the fruitgrowers, that the head of this department, Mr. McKinnon, should come before the committee.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I shall be glad to afford every facility for Mr. McKinnon coming before the Agriculture Committee. Of course that will have to be done by the committee, but I can assure the hon. gentleman that Mr. McKinnon will be at the disposal of the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister tell us if there have been any complaints against the enforcement of this Act by the fruitgrowers or shippers ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not aware that there have been any complaints against the enforcement of the Act. There have been occasional differences of opinion in regard to the manner of its enforcement, and the legal aspect of it. But there have been no complaints, so far as I am aware, that it has been too strictly or too laxly enforced. There have been one or two little points raised as to the meaning of the Act. I think one request was made for a better definition of the word 'packer' under the Act, and a question arose as to whether more than one person could be called a packer. There seemed to be a doubt as to whether an individual workman who put the fruit into the barrel could be called a packer as well as the person on whose behalf he had done it.

Mr. SPROULE. What has been the cost of the inspection, including salaries, travelling expenses and all other expenses ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Altogether the sum we have devoted to the enforcement of this Act has been somewhat over $14,000.

Mr. McGOWAN. Would the minister tell us if there have been any shipments of fresh meat in cold storage, and what was the result ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, there was a series of shipments of beef made from Toronto to England in cold storage. The carriage of meat, as a general rule, was quite satisfactory. I believe there was one shipment in regard to which there was some rather adverse criticism as to the way in which the meat had arrived, but I understand from those engaged in the trade that the profits had been unsatisfactory and that after the trial they ceased shipping.

Mr. McGOWAN. Was the transportation quite satisfactory ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think I may say the transportation was quite satisfactory. There was one shipment in which the beef was heated before it was put into the steamer and consequently it did not keep perfectly in going across. It was clearly shown that it was in consequence of the condition it was in when it was put on board the steamer and that it was not brought into that condition while on the steamer.

Mr. McGOWAN. I suppose it got into that condition on the way to Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. McGOWAN. Then, your cars were at fault.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The cars were not the cars that we have dealt with on the railways. That beef was shipped in special cars by the people who shipped it.

Mr. CLANCY. It seems to be rather extraordinary that proper care should not have been taken at the outset to see that that meat was received in prime condition, because the hon. gentleman knows that these experiments are perfectly useless if we are to be told that the goods went all right so far as cold storage was concerned, but that the excuse in the end is, when they are found to be damaged, that they were not received in prime condition. It is rather discouraging and casts doubt and suspicion upon the value of cold storage as it is yet worked out. I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me that cold storage is in its experimental stage to a very considerable extent. It has not been put beyond all question so far, although, I may say there is a disposition, and a very strong one to, if possible, make cold storage a great success. The hon. gentleman has been forced, perhaps, to have it somewhat experimental all through. It seems to me that the greatest care should be taken that when perishable goods are sent as an experiment the first condition should be that they are properly received. I know nothing that will cast more discredit on the whole thing than saying that it was all right in cold storage, but that is came there in bad condition. It is the business of the department to guard against offering any such excuse as that to the public.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the first place I want to say to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) that these shipments were not experiments of the department, that they were entirely managed by private parties who sent them without any control or supervision on the part of the department. In the second place, I understand that this shipment of meat was made in a way in which I would not, myself, allow any shipment to be made. The meat was not hung in the compartments, but packed on its side like cordwood. I believe that under certain circumstances and conditions, if the meat is perfectly cool when it is put in and kept cool, that can be done, but in this particular instance in which this one shipment failed, the meat was known not to be perfectly cool when it was put in the cold storage chamber of the ship. That is the report of our officers and it is the acknowledged report of the shippers. The failure in carrying it across was due to that. The other shipments which were hung in the cold storage chambers, arrived in perfect condition.

Mr. McGOWAN. There seems to be something wrong with this system of storing meat in cold storage when it goes bad in the way it does. I know that there are thousands of cargoes shipped from Chicago almost every day, and it does seem to me that it is a very important matter, if we are going to establish a trade in Canadian meat shipped in cold storage, that we should be careful to see that we adopt a proper system. These shipments are going every day from Chicago to Liverpool and London, and they have been for years. The Armour and Swift companies are sending meat over constantly.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That meat is always hung as far as I know, and the meat that was hung and not laid on its side went through in a perfectly satisfactory condition.

Mr. McGOWAN. Does your officer not exercise any supervision over the placing of goods in the cold storage chambers ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not over these shipments.

Mr. McGOWAN. It is unfortunate that nothing has been done to perfect the system.

Mr. SPROULE. It must be a strong argument against the value of our cold storage system, that, whereas they are shipping meat from Australia, a distance of 7,000 miles, which arrives in perfect condition, we cannot ship it 2,000 miles and deliver it in good condition. The fact is that the department have exercised no control over it. If they had any control such as they ought to have, they should exercise it so as to prove that the system is not only feasible but useful, because, if, as has happened, a shipment is laid down in England in an imperfect condition others will not repeat the experiment. In this case they abandoned it after they had made a trial because it was a failure. It seems to me that there is something radically wrong with the cold storage system that is provided. The hon. minister spoke about three kinds of cold storage, mechanical cold storage and cold storage by refrigeration—I persume, by ice, would it not be ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, there is no cold storage with ice on steamers that I know of. There is none now.

Mr. SPROULE. You had that system at first.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I never had it.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought there was cold storage with ice ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, before I made the change.

Mr. SPROULE. Then we have mechanical cold storage for the passage of cool air in the chambers. How many vessels were fitted out last year with mechanical cold storage, and would the hon. minister give us the freight rate that is charged on such vessels as compared with the freight rate on ordinary vessels ? Because I am told that many shippers choose to take the ordinary vessel rather than the vessel provided with cold storage, finding that it does not pay them to pay the additional expense incurred by shipment in cold storage.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For what kind of goods ?

Mr. SPROULE. Cheese and butter. Cheese was one of the articles in regard to which I heard the statement and that therefore they chose to send it in an ordinary vessel without cold storage.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Cheese has hardly ever been sent in what we call the cold storage chamber of these vessels. The cheese men, as a general rule, have not considered it necessary to send cheese in cold storage.

Mr. CLANCY. That was tried for a time, was it not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICLUTURE. A few shipments were tried but very little was sent. I do not think any butter is now being sent from Canada except in cold storage chambers. I am not aware of any single shipment being made and if there has been at rare intervals a single shipment it must be very slight. There were about 420,000 packages of butter carried in cold storage last season and one solitary shipment not in cold storage.

Mr. SPROULE. No cheese at all ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No cheese has been carried in the cold storage insulated chambers. The ventilated chambers with cold storage draught for the forcing of cool air through the holds are intended for the purpose of carrying cheese and apples and these are the cold storage arrangements which I am trying to make. During last fall I got four steamers fitted up with this kind of cold storage and I expect to have ten other steamers fitted up for the present season. That is the new arrangement which we have been pressing upon the ship owners and the public for the last year. However, as to the ships that are fitted with the older cold storage, that is to say insulated chambers which you can cool down to the freezing point and below if you choose, we have none of these under contract, but we have a number which were under contract which are still in the trade. Prof. Robertson informs me that there were last year 77 sailings from Montreal of some 17 different steamers fitted up with cold storage accommodation.

Mr. SPROULE. What are relative freight rates on these vessels as compared with ordinary steamers ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Ten shillings a ton extra for cold storage accommodation, I believe, is generally charged. I also hear that sometimes fifteen shillings is charged. I suppose that when there is a great demand for accommodation fifteen shillings is charged, and that when there is less demand, ten shillings. But these vessels being no longer under contract, we have no control over the rates that they charge.

Mr. SPROULE. In what kind of cold storage was the trial shipment of tomatoes and grapes made some years ago ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were sent in the regular cold storage.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you sent any fruit by the new system ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have not sent any of the delicate fruits. It is intended for apples.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to get some information which might be useful to the people of the country. I have on more than once been met on the platform by friends of the Minister of Agriculture who have stated that the cold storage system was so perfect that our butter and cheese and eggs and fruit were now laid down in perfect condition on the English market. I contradicted that, but the statement was repeated most positively. I am glad that the minister has been frank enough to admit that in most cases it has been a failure and that they are now experimenting.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Oh, no.

Mr. SPROULE. He tells us that none of the steamers are fitted with the first system of cold storage he introduced.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not at all. As a matter of fact last year seventy-seven steamers sailing from Montreal were fitted with the very system of cold storage that was first introduced by my department. The contracts with these steamers have terminated, but the owners are continuing the cold storage system which under our contracts we required them to put in.

Mr. SPROULE. Has it been a success ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A perfect success.

Mr. SPROULE. And why are you trying something else ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is for a different purpose altogether. This is for cheese and apples which have not been carried in cold storage chambers. The cold storage chambers could not accommodate one-tenth of the barrels of apples that have been sent to England; and the shippers of apples would not pay the extra expenditure necessary for that kind of cold storage.

Mr. SPROULE. That is exactly what I said. The fruit men could not avail themselves of that cold storage because of the expense and therefore it cannot have been a perfect success. Have we had any trial shipment of fruits this season ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think so.

Mr. SPROULE. Then in view of the high price of fruit in England, it would appear that we cannot send our fruit over there because there has not yet been devised any means of landing it in good condition. That is an evidence that the present cold storage is a failure.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The fruit shipments that were made by the government some years ago were experiments, and the government having proved certain things the shippers of Canada have been taking advantage of our experience and they are now shipping fruit themselves. Last year pears were successfully shipped in considerable quantities and this year in small quantities, because there was a small crop here and the price was good at home. When we succeed in showing what can be done, we leave to the people in the trade to continue the shipments. I would point out to the hon. gentleman that butter requires a temperature under freezing, and chicken meat requires the same, whereas if apples and cheese were put in the freezing chambers they would be injured.

Mr. SPROULE. Why don't you provide something suitable ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is exactly what we are doing.

Mr. CLANCY. What proportion of our butter is sent in cold storage ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Almost the whole of the butter that went from Canada during the last five years.

Mr. BLAIN. What proportion of the apples shipped from Montreal last year were inspected ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I stated this afternoon that about 33,000 barrels were inspected out of probably 300,000. It would be a physical impossibility to inspect all the apples shipped during the three months of the shipping season.

Mr. BLAIN. How many of these inspectors are in the employ of the government at this present time ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Practically all of them. They are coming here next week to have a conference and will spend a week at the Experimental Farm with the Horticulturalist, studying the spraying of fruit trees and their growth and their management, so as to be able to do that educational work which is part of our scheme.

Mr. BLAIN. They are all on your pay list at the present moment ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think so.

Mr. TAYLOR. When was this shipment of beef made that went wrong, and by whom was it made ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know exactly when it was made, but it was made by the William Davies Packing Company, of Toronto.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is exactly what I have been informed. Their shipment arrived in bad condition and they have gone out of the business simply because the cold storage system which the Minister of Agriculture said was perfect was found to be of no use whatever. The minister professed to take the meat in refrigerator cars in Toronto, ship it in cold storage in Montreal and land it safely in cold storage in England, and Davies and Sons sent their beef in his charge and it went wrong. His cold storage was a complete failure. One of my constituents has forwarded me a little book lately published by the Minister of Agriculture, and I presume distributed all over the Dominion. My constituent took the cover off but——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When was it issued ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Lately. It is addressed to the farmers of Canada, and pretends to give some facts to the farmers.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think that was published in 1900.

Mr. TAYLOR. It has lately been distributed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It has not been distributed since then.

Mr. TAYLOR. I got one of them through the mail the other day.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. You are behind the times.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will read a sentence or two and the minister will see that there are some references in it to things that happened later than 1900.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What is the date ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Like many other documents sent out by this government, there is neither date nor signature to it. It was sent out by the Minister of Agriculture and on the first page we have the following :

In regard to the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Sydney Fisher), I may say that I believe he is competent and able to conduct properly the duties that are imposed upon him in his department. He is a practical farmer, and has devoted a great deal of time and energy in promoting the agricultural interests of the country ; and I am grateful to the Prime Minister for having selected a gentleman from the eastern townships, from which I come, to fill the important Department of Agriculture. (Mr. A. H. Moore, member for Stanstead, in 'Hansard' of September 15, 1896.)

The introduction says :

Of late there has been evident a concerted attack on the part of the Conservative leaders and press upon the Minister of Agriculture and his work for the farmer. This is undoubtedly due to the discovery by these gentlemen of the feeling existing amongst the farmers of Canada that much has been done in their interests by the Liberal government and minister, and they are so frightened by this feeling amongst the electorate that they find it necessary to try to counteract it.

Then he devotes eleven pages to what has been done in the way of perfecting cold storage, and he winds up by saying that the system is perfect now.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the minister repudiate that ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would like to see it. I do not repudiate what Mr. Moore said.

Mr. CLANCY. It seems that Mr. Moore was the only respectable witness the Minister of Agriculture could get.

Mr. TAYLOR. He had to call a Conservative as a witness. He goes on to say in this pamphlet :

To-day our products are going to England in enormously increasing quantities, and our farmers are there receiving prices which they never received before.

To-day Canadian butter, Canadian cheese, Canadian fruits and Canadian flour are being asked for and searched for by the English consumer.

Under the Conservative administration the same articles were being sold in the English markets under other names and false brands.

My correspondent notes on that margin 'this is a lie.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Do you endorse that ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not think that Canadian goods have ever gone to the English market under false names and brands. I would not belie Canada by saying, as the minister has done, that we send our goods across under false brands and names. I am discussing this system of cold storage, which the hon. gentleman says he has so perfected that we could send fresh meats, fowls, fruits of all kinds over to England and they would land in perfect condition. The firm of Davies & Company, of Toronto, took the minister at his word and delivered a few car loads of fresh meat into his cold storage cars in transit to England. But they received practically nothing for their beef, and have gone out of the business. Is that statement correct or not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is entirely incorrect. As a matter of fact the firm of William Davies & Company last year undertook to send dead meat to England as an experiment. They sent six shipments. One turned out bad when it got there. They themselves reported to us the whole facts of the case. They said that that shipment was put upon the ship in a heated condition and that they were not surprised at its arrival in bad condition. They went out of the business because they found that the price in England and the cost of transportation and the cost of the beef here did not justify them continuing the business. Their decision was not at all due to the failure of the cold storage system, but to the market conditions and lack of profit.

Mr. WADE. I would ask the hon. minister to see, when making a contract with a line of steamers from St. John and Halifax for the London market, that the contract provides for forced ventilation so that there may be an even, cool temperature all the way across.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Only this morning, I met a gentleman desirous to tender for the contract for the ensuing year, and explained the necessities of the case to him in the presence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. HACKETT. I would ask the hon. minister if he is going to provide steam communication between Charlottetown and Great Britain during the coming season, and if the vessels are to be fitted up with the cold storage system ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In conjunction with the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I saw this morning the representatives of a steamship line which has made the offer of a ship, thoroughly equipped with cold storage and forced ventilation, to ply between Charlottetown and Great Britain this coming season. The contract will be made out and sent to these people for signature in a day or two.

Mr. HACKETT. I suppose there will be regular dates of sailing from Charlottetown?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. HACKETT. A gentleman who shipped a quantity of apples last fall from Halifax by the Furness line lost heavily, owing to the want of proper ventilation, and the consequent arrival of the fruit in bad condition. His English agent had sold the fruit to be delivered on arrival at good prices, but it was found in bad order and they had to cancel the sale and dispose of it on the best terms possible. It is very unfortunate that the people of Prince Edward Island should not have the same facilities for shipping their produce as the people of the other provinces.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to send me the name of the shipper, the name of the vessel and the date of shipment, because the Furness-Withy line denied point blank any such condition of affairs, and I would be glad to have the details of any particular shipment.

Mr. HACKETT. I shall be most happy to furnish them to the hon. gentleman. There is another matter which I wish to bring to his attention. It has to do with the inspection of fruit. I find that while we have it stated here that Mr. McKinnon is a very competent gentleman, a fraudulent shipment has been made to Prince Edward Island. Although we shipped fruit from the island, yet our merchants to a certain extent, import fruit from the other provinces in their general line of business. I find in the Charlottetown 'Patriot' of April 9th, which is the latest date we have on file in the reading room, the following comment:

> The usefulness of having a fruit inspector in this province has been practically demonstrated. During the absence of Mr. Burke, in the other provinces, a shipment of apples was received in Charlottetown from a Montreal firm. The apples were originally packed in Ontario. The packer's name was erased by the Montreal firm and their own firm name substituted. On his return to the island, Mr. Burke, in the course of his inspection, discovered that this lot of apples was fraudulently packed by the barrels being faced with No. 1 fruit while below the surface the veriest trash appeared. Mr. Burke at once made complaint against the Montreal shippers and had a fine imposed under the Trade Marks Act.

Well, Mr. Chairman, if this gentleman of all the talents—half lawyer and half fruit-grower—in Ontario had been attending to his duties there, that shipment would not have been made to Prince Edward Island. We are charged with criticising this gentleman because his father is a candidate for a certain riding in Ontario at the local elections. We are doing nothing of the kind, but I believe that if you would sift the matter out, you would find that this lot of apples came from that very Niagara district where his father is running, and where he is intrusted with the inspection of fruit, and no doubt in order to gain favour for his father in the elections, he allowed this fraudulent shipment of apples to be sent to the island. I know nothing about Mr. McKinnon, and if he be a young man and has the ability hon. gentlemen opposite say he has, I am satisfied. I would rather give a young man a push forward than try to keep him down. But if we find such a fraudulent shipment coming from Ontario, under the immediate supervision and inspection of this gentleman, I would ask the minister does he think that this inspector is after all so efficient. It may be impossible for him to inspect every barrel of apples, but the names of those parties in Ontario who shipped that fruit and the name of the Montreal firm which erased the shipper's name and substituted their own, should be made public, so that the public may judge whether the Trade Marks Act is being carried out as effectively as the hon. gentleman represents.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I suppose the names did not appear in the newspapers, although they must have been in the court record. Let me tell the hon. gentleman, who is casting this serious reflection on Mr. McKinnon, that this case was referred by Mr. Burke to Mr. McKinnon, and that Mr. McKinnon instructed him how to proceed, and that the apples did not come from anywhere near where Mr. McKinnon, senior, lives, but from Cobourg, in the province of Ontario.

Mr. CLANCY. The minister promised some information with regard to the working of these cheese curing stations. I understood him to say that there would be four of them costing about $10,000 each. It would be interesting to have him explain how the general public is to benefit by this scheme.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The general benefit will be due to the results which are found in this experimental work this year. As I explained before dinner, this is an experiment which, so far as I know, has never been tried in any cheese-making country in the world. It has been projected because of what are considered to be the necessities of the case, and will involve the adoption of what are judged to be the best means of meeting those difficulties and overcoming them. We trust and believe, and the representative cheese-makers in the dairying associations have endorsed the belief, that it is likely to be a successful experiment. It is not being done for the purpose of helping the particular localities that have been chosen for the work. These localities have been chosen because they seem to be distinctly cheese-making centres, where these curing establishments and the experiments carried on in them will be under the observation of those engaged in the industry. The places chosen are Woodstock, in western Ontario, Brockville in eastern Ontario; St. Hyacinthe for the French parts of the province of Quebec, and Cowansville for the English speaking parts. The general results will be published as they are learned; and if, at the end of the season those results meet the expectations of those who are interested, I trust and believe that the cheese-making centres of the country will adopt the system for themselves and carry it out in a commercial way. There is no intention on the part of the government to do this work all over the country. We shall follow the precedent set in the case of what is called winter dairying. Under my predecessor, Professor Robertson inaugurated in Ontario and Prince Edward Island, and also, I think, in Nova Scotia, winter dairying stations, where butter was made on a considerable scale throughout the winter for the purpose of showing the butter-makers that butter could so be made as well as in summer. Certain localities were chosen because they seemed to be suitable for the experiments. So in this case. The hon. gentleman asked me how it would be worked. Without going into details, I may say generally that we are putting up a building which will be arranged so that we can control the temperature in the curing room, where the cheese will be kept. We also hope to have, in one or two of the buildings at all events, several small chambers where we can try experiments in curing cheese at different temperatures within the range that experiments in New York State and Guelph have shown to be the best. We also expect to box the cheese, and I trust and expect that our work in that respect will lead to improvement throughout the country. The boxing of our cheese, up to the present time, has not been all that we could desire. For many years the defects in this respect have caused a serious loss annually. Arrangements will be made to bring in cheese from the factories which are to supply them to the central curing room. The cheese will be brought in immediately after it is made up in the presses—probably the next day after it is taken out of the press.

Mr. CLANCY. Is there no danger of deterioration ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We propose to arrange a special kind of hoop to carry the cheese in. The cheese will be placed on the shelves in the central curing room and will then be under the control and management of the expert in charge of the building. We do not know yet exactly how long the curing process will take, but we have a pretty fair idea. When the cheese is cured and declared ready for market, it will be at the disposal of its owners, the people who supplied it. We have no control of the sale of it or of the commerce in it. The cheese may be left in the central curing room for a short time, we do not know exactly how long. But I do not think that these central curing rooms ought to be used as a sort of keeping warehouse for the cheese. If they were kept there for a long time the accumulation of cheese would make it necessary to increase the size of the building and spend money in the care of the cheese. That is a business for an ordinary warehouse properly epuipped. We are satisfied—in fact we know from our experiments—that cheese will shrink very much less in these curing rooms than in the ordinary curing rooms in the factories. And we know also, as well as we can know anything in the future, that cheese cured in these central establishments will be worth considerably more than if cured in the old rooms under varying temperatures running sometimes as high as 85 or even 90 degrees Farenheit. We know also that cheese cured in this way can be made softer and moister, that is, the maker will be able to make more pounds of cheese to every hundred pounds of milk than under the present system of curing. Therefore, the profit in the business will be threefold; first, a given quantity of milk will make more cheese; second, the cheese will shrink less in the curing room and so will weigh out more when it comes to be sold; and, third, the price of cheese will be better than if cured under the ordinary conditions. The buildings we propose to make in a substantial manner, in a way which may, I trust, be a model in the future for the buildings put up by companies or individuals for similar purposes. In the course of the summer's work we shall probably find many details which will have to be changed from our present plan. But we believe we have outlined the plan as well as can be done without practical experience. For this is a pure experiment from the word 'go.' I trust that at the end of the season we shall be able to make a report to the cheese-makers of Canada which will enable them to go on to do this work for themselves as successfully as they do other work in connection with this great cheese-making industry.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the intention of the minister to establish a central curing house in the province of New Brunswick ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because, at the present time there is no cheese-making centre in New Brunswick which would justify the expectation that an establishment of this kind could be satisfactorily worked, besides, the results gained in Ontario and Quebec, where there are great cheese-making centres, will be equally available for New Brunswick.

Mr. FOWLER. I think the minister is misinformed as to the facts. The county from which I have the honour to come is the pioneer of the cheese industry in New Brunswick, and is a great cheese-making centre. Within a radius of ten miles there must be twenty-five or thirty factories, some of them with an output of 100 tons a year.

There are none of them with a smaller output than from 35 to 40 tons. I doubt if in any of the other provinces there is a single county with a larger cheese output than the county of King's. As the minister has taken a large vote for this purpose, I think the province of New Brunswick, although small, should not be beneath his notice, and I respectfully submit that he should establish one of these curing establishments in that county. I would like to ask him further what is the intention of the government with respect to these curing establishments after they have passed the experimental stage.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We hope to pass them over to somebody who will take them up as a commercial business, that is we intend to sell them.

Mr. FOWLER. I would invite the minister to examine into the output of cheese in the province of New Brunswick, and to give his serious attention to the question of putting one of these curing establishments in King's county. He might place it in St. John, there would be no difficulty there, because the cheese could come 40 or 50 miles by railway.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This last suggestion is entirely out of the question, we could not send cheese in a green condition by railway for 40 or 50 miles. It will have to be brought in by wagons constructed for that purpose. The probability is that 10 miles would be the outside limit of distance. Our present expectation is that the cheese will only be brought a distance of 5 or 6 miles into the curing establishment.

Mr. FOWLER. About what will be the amount of cheese gathered from the section where you are going to place this curing establishment, that is to say, the section that will be served by the establishment ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The number of cheese that would be brought into these curing rooms will be comparatively small. A large section will not be able to send all its cheese in. It would depend upon the size of the factory. In the province of Quebec, as a general rule, the factories are not as large as they are in Ontario, and in the former province it will take more factories to provide the cheese which we propose to accommodate in these curing rooms. But I could not give the exact number of factories that would be accommodated. Our intention is to build rooms which will accommodate in the neighbourhood of 2,000 cheese a month. In Woodstock and Brockville there would be more factories within a narrow radius which could supply that number of cheese. The suggestion has been made that perhaps we should take half the number of cheese from each factory so as to take from a larger number of factories, instead of taking the whole of the cheese from some factories and leaving out others.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the average cost of each one of these curing establishments ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The buildings, plant and equipment will cost between $8,000 and $10,000 each.

Mr. GILMOUR. Will the minister not make a larger establishment at some places than at others ? For instance, at Woodstock there are 2,000 cheese made a month in the three factories in the immediate neighbourhood. I would suggest that Woodstock might have a larger room than some other places where there is a smaller output. I would also ask whether the department will hold these cheese until they are cured, or will allow the owner to take them out whenever he finds a market for them. The owner might find a market and not be able to withdraw them when he wished. There might be a variety of opinions about the time required to cure the cheese, and the right time to market them. Buyers of cheese have methods of curing and holding their own cheese for a time.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Our expectation and intention is to hold the cheese there until they are properly cured and fit for market. In these cool chambers it will take a cheese longer to become fit for market than it does where the temperature is higher. That has been the universal experience. I confess that I would much regret to see the owners of cheese take them away before they were properly cured and fit for market ; but I can hardly say that I would refuse to allow an owner of cheese to take them out when ever he likes. It would be rather difficult for me to say to a man : These cheese of yours are not fit for market, and you shall not have them yet, whether you want them or not. Although I would do everything I could to persuade him to leave them there long enough to have them fit for market.

Mr. GILMOUR. It would not be well to make a hard and fast rule, but the owner should have the option to take advantage of a favourable market.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think the difficulty has arisen so much in Ontario, but I do know that in the province of Quebec, in the eastern townships, a great deal of cheese has been sold too green, allowed to leave the factories before it was really fit to be moved, and that has hurt the cheese trade. I hope we will be able to induce the factory owners and the owners of the cheese to leave their cheese long enough to ripen properly.

Mr. GILMOUR. What would the minister think with regard to building a larger curing room at Woodstock than at other places? As I said, two or three factories could occupy all the capacity.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They may be built of different sizes. They are all planned in such a way that they can be easily enlarged.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like an explanation about this pamphlet sent out by the Department of Agriculture.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Is that a departmental publication, or is it a campaign document?

Mr. TAYLOR. I will send it over to the hon. gentleman. There is a photograph of the minister in the front part of it. I understood from him that this was published in 1900.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE I thought so, from what the hon. gentleman read.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then he does not know whether he has sent out only one document or not, because he has sent out none since, as I understood him.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think I have sent out anything since.

Mr. TAYLOR. It says:

The following is a comparison during the last four years under Conservative rule and the last four years under the Liberal administration.

It gives the quantity of butter exported for the years 1893, 1894, 1895 and 1896; and then for the four years under Liberal administration of 1897, 1898, 1899 and 1900. I do not know how he could publish and distribute this book in 1900, when he professes to include the exports of these four articles in 1900. It could not be until after 1900 that the hon. gentleman could gather the statistics and publish them. In another table he gives a comparative statement of the expenditure under four years of Conservative administration and four years of Liberal administration, including 1901. He is trying to prove to the farmers that he is doing more for them in the expenditure of money under these heads than the Conservative government did. So this document must certainly have been sent out to the farmers since 1901, or else he is trying to impose upon them. He can take whichever horn of the dilemma he chooses. I send this pamphlet over to the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think this is a pamphlet which was largely prepared by myself, though not altogether. It seems to have been issued in the election campaign of 1900.

Mr. TAYLOR. How does the hon. gentleman account for giving these tables for the full year of 1900.

Mr. GILMOUR.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When that campaign was made the shipping season from Montreal had been closed, and our butter shipments were known. They were published within a few days of the close of that season by the Montreal papers, a synopsis is always made and given to them. We have besides that a record in our department of the amount of butter and cheese that is shipped from Montreal during the shipping season and the comparison is made with that. As far as the expenditure of the department for this season is concerned the hon. gentleman says himself that he quoted the estimated expenditure and that was included in the statement of the pamphlet and showed what my department was doing during the current year. As far as these statements are concerned I can simply say to the hon. gentleman that they went before the farmers of the country and that the farmers read them, studied them and digested them. These statements were criticised by the hon. gentlemen opposite and their candidates.

Mr. TAYLOR. And they succeeded in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. While they succeeded probably in Ontario they were left in a small minority in the elections of 1900. In the province of Ontario there was a small majority I grant you in their favour, but Ontario is not the whole Dominion of Canada, and when the representation in this House, which has to deal with these matters, which has to judge these matters, has a majority, as we showed the other night of fifty-six in favour of the administration which was exposed and shown in that pamphlet, as far as my department was concerned, the result to me, at all events, is very gratifying, and I can well understand that hon. gentlemen are not so well pleased.

Mr. BLAIN. Do I understand the hon. Minister of Agriculture to say that the figures contained in that pamphlet were furnished by his department?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think probably most of them were.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, I will take up another branch. I understand from the hon. minister that he made several trial shipments of poultry, that they were very successful, that they brought in good prices and that it was a good business for a farmer to engage in?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. Does the hon. gentleman want the details of them?

Mr. TAYLOR. No. I want to ask the farmers of the country if they could do business as the hon. gentleman has done. I see at page D-59 of the Auditor General's report that the hon. gentleman has expended $6,580.17 in the preparation of poultry for market. I find that a gentleman by the name of A. S. McBean of Lancaster purchased a number of chickens and furnished food to them at the expense of $321.94. They were sent over to England under this system of cold storage and they brought $78.28, the experiment entailing a loss of nearly $200. I want to know how the hon. gentleman can tell the farmers of this country that this is a profitable business for them to engage in, and how he can explain this way of doing business. Altogether the department expended $6,580.17 for the preparation of poultry for market and the receipts from the sales of this poultry amounted to $1,833.45, showing a deficiency of $4,746.72 in the experimenting feeding and shipping of poultry to the old country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At the Lancaster station ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Lancaster was one of them. Then I see that T. L. Brant of Whitby expended $445.64 and Whitby returned $177.73. I presume that my hon. friend, wherever he made his experiments, picked out political friends to give the money to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It would be better done probably.

Mr. TAYLOR. And it was probably done. Mr. Brant got $445.00 and returned $177.73. The receipts being shown in the Auditor General's report at page D-68. The Auditor General deducts the refunds for the sale of poultry, cheese, &c. This being the fact, I wonder how the hon. minister can recommend the farmers of the country to go into the feeding of poultry and shipping it to England if better results cannot be achieved.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If these results were such as the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has stated them there is no doubt that it would not be very profitable. As a matter of fact, the expenditure which the hon. gentleman stated as the expense on these particular lots of chickens included the establishment of the stations, and the experimental and educational work which these men were carrying on. Prof. Robertson gave the details in connection with these shipments every year before the Agriculture Committee of the House and they are published in the annual report of the department and these details show that the price of these chickens in England is about double the cost that is incurred here. As a matter of fact a number of men whom we started in this work and who at first did experimental work, such as Mr. Brant and Mr. McBean are doing to-day, are doing this work themselves now. They have left the work of the department and are no longer doing it but have entered into business on a commercial basis and are making it pay. The results are also evident from the fact that in 1896, before this work commenced, our whole export of chicken meat to Great Britain was about $18,000 and that during this last session it amounted to $220,000. To-day our chicken exporters say that they will take all the fatted chickens they can get and pay ten cents a pound for them in the centres where they are working. They are sending them forward and making a profit on them and they are doing this business on a large scale.

Mr. COCHRANE. They want these chickens fattened. They do not fatten the chickens themselves.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, they want them fattened and the price seems remunerative to those who fatten them and they make a profit in sending them forward. The result is, that from England we have had over and over again reports showing that the Canadian fattened chickens which arrived there have made a good reputation for themselves in the markets and that the people there will take just as many of them as we can send.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman informs the House and the country that the amount of money I stated had been expended was for building the stations at these different points.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For establishing them.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will take the account of Mr. McBean at Lancaster and see how much went for the establishment of the station :—

McBean, A. S., Lancaster, Ont : chickens, 520 pounds at 8½c., 320½ pounds at 8c., 31 pounds at 7c.; corn meal, 904 pounds at $1.10 per cwt.; ground oats, 1,123 pounds at 1c.; oatmeal siftings, 2,964 pounds at $1.20 per cwt.; bran, 428 pounds at 85c. per cwt.; sundry feed, $5.21 ; skim milk, 3,020 pounds at 35c. per cwt., 160 pounds at 25c.; basswood, 1,114 pounds at 2c.; 54 pounds of nails, $2.82 ; coops, 20 at 75c.; altering coops, $3 ; shaping board, $2 ; plucking chickens, 215 at 5c. per pair; freight charges, $16.25 ; man's time, 94 days at $1 ; sundry labour, $6.87 ; advertising, $1.75 ; telegram, 38c.; sundry, $1.71 ; bags, 40 at 5c.—$321.94.

And they brought in $78, showing a deficiency of $243 in the operation. Yet the hon. minister says that was for establishing the station. There is not a dollar in that except that which is expended for chickens, feed and boxes, and to ship them in, and they brought back $78 while the hon. gentleman paid out $321.94. What became of the balance ? What farmer could buy chickens, feed them and ship them on the basis of these figures given by the hon. minister and expect that he will get good results from his investments ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have just received a memorandum from Professor Robertson which says that as far as the Lancaster station is concerned the chickens were taken with a disease and that was the only station which that occurred. At the Whitby station the expenditures were as I have stated. At Lancaster there was an epidemic of which most of the chickens died.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is it not a fact that they spoiled in cold storage ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. They did not go to England at all.

Mr. CLANCY. I think I heard it stated that Canadian birds had been fattened too much, and that they were to some extent unsaleable, because when they were sent to England they were found to be too large.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is a fancy market in England which takes a large bird and pays an extra price for it, and there is another market which prefers a smaller bird. Some of those dealers who wanted smaller birds complained that the birds we sent them were too large, and consequently we sent the large birds to the market which required such and which pays a larger price per pound.

Mr. TAYLOR. I find here that Mr. Horace Hazard of the Charlottetown poultry station spent $499, received $94, and had a deficit of $405. What became of that $405 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the details, but I can tell the hon. gentleman that the chickens sold at a good profit on the cost of the actual chickens purchased to fatten. At each of these stations we have got to do installation and educational and experimental work, which cannot be charged in a commercial sense against the chickens. We have kept a strict account of the cost of the production of every shipment made this year, and it shows a large margin on the profit side. Last fall, on all the shipments that were made, we netted 13 cents a pound at Montreal, and to any one who has raised chickens it will be evident that there is a large profit at such a price.

Mr. FOWLER. It strikes me that the Minister of Agriculture in his chicken experiment has had a somewhat similar experience to that Horace Greeley had with his pig. That may be occasioned by the class of men to whom he entrusted the working out of this experiment. There was a chicken fattening station in my county at Sussex, and without knowing whether the results were successful or otherwise, I can say that the gentleman who managed it had no experience whatever in that line.

Mr. BENNETT. Was he a lawyer ?

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. FOWLER. No; he did not have the training that a lawyer would have. He was a sort of an agent who sold carriages and agricultural implements. I would like to know if he was successful in his operations ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that he was.

Mr. FOWLER. I am glad to know that.

Mr. TAYLOR. I can tell my hon. friend how successful he was.

Mr. FOWLER. Perhaps it is as well, because the minister has a peculiar idea about success.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, Mr. McArthur charged $297 to fatten the chickens, and he sold them at $198, leaving $99 of a deficit.

Mr. FOWLER. That was very successful.

Mr. TAYLOR. There was another station at Alberton, in Prince Edward Island, where the expenses were $249, and the receipts $154, leaving a deficit of about $100. Mr. Matthews was in charge of that station, and my hon. friend (Mr. Hackett) can tell whether he is a professional or not.

Mr. FOWLER. So far as the chicken business is concerned, the Minister of Agriculture had better fly the coop.

Mr. HACKETT. I hope the minister will give me the information now, which I asked from him the other day as regards the sale of chickens from the Alberton station. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) referred to Mr. Horace Hazard, of Charlottetown. I can say that Mr. Horace Hazard knows nothing whatever about fattening chickens. He is a commission merchant in Charlottetown, and I do not know how his name got mixed up with fattening chickens, because I think he could repudiate the idea that he is a chicken fattener. He does a large business in Prince Edward Island; he is one of the largest exporters in the province and he is not in the chicken fattening line at all. If the hon. gentleman from West Queen's (Mr. Farquharson) were in his seat, he would remember that Mr. Hazard was going to be his opponent at the last election, and now we find that Mr. Hazard is in some way brought in connection with fattening chickens.

Mr. COCHRANE. He is a kind of political rooster.

Mr. HACKETT. Mr. Hazard having made this amount of money out of fattening chickens with the least possible difficulty, he was able to retire to make way for the member for West Queen's. If Mr. Hazard had not that fattening chicken job, he would certainly have contested the election against the hon. member (Mr. Farquharson). But the gentlemen who now occupy the Treasury benches always seem to be able to provide a solace for any of their friends who get out of humour. Joking apart, it may be possible that the fattening industry would become of some importance as a by product of the farm in the province of Prince Edward Island. Mr. Gilbert, from the Experimental Farm, was in the Island last year, and he really did some very practical work, and by his addresses to the farmers he showed them, I think, that they might increase their revenue by poultry raising. I want to have it understood, however, that as a government proposition it has been a complete failure in the province of Prince Edward Island. Mr. Gilbert or a gentleman like him who so thoroughly understands the chicken business can do a great deal of good by explaining to the farmers how to raise these chickens, the best breeds to raise, and how to place them on the market in the best shape.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The government stations are for experimenting and we give the results of the experiments to the farmers.

Mr. CLANCY. Very encouraging.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is so encouraging that in Summerside the man who did our work gave it up, and has ever since been doing business for himself, and making money hand over fist at that business. The same is true in several other instances throughout the country. Had the government not undertaken this work, that business would not in all probability have been done in Canada for many years later than it has been. The result of our work has been that a very large number of people are engaged in this business with profit to themselves and to the country. As far as Mr. Hazard is concerned, it was two years ago when he did this work for us and consequently that could not have influenced him very much in the election that took place a few months ago.

Mr. SCHELL. With reference to the station at Glengarry, I may say a few words, as I am somewhat conversant with the circumstances. For some time the government had been issuing bulletins advising the farmers to take up the fattening of chickens as a profitable by-product, and adjunct of their general farming business. But those who had tried it up to the time the government started these experimental stations, did not seem to have made a success of it. When the station was started at Lancaster, an official came down from the Experimental Farm, and he showed us how to do the work. He showed the young men how to go through the mixing and feeding and the methods of taking care of the chickens, and the result has been that dozens of people have taken this up as a part of their business in the county of Glengarry, and have found it very profitable. I could give a number of names of prominent men who have taken the business up in connection with their farming. For instance, there is Mr. Macdonald, in the village of Glengarry, who has fitted up for this purpose a part of his stables, which he had been using for fattening cattle. And he told me a short time ago that he intended using another stable for chicken fattening, and drop the feeding of cattle as a business to that extent. My own brother shipped last year thirty tons of chickens partly fed and partly bought.

Mr. TAYLOR. That has been going on for the past fifty years.

Mr. SCHELL. No, it has not. These parties never shipped any before these stations were instituted. I do not think it is fair to expect that the government must make profit out of every experiment they undertake. They are expected to carry on these experiments to find out whether a certain thing may be profitable or not. When they discovered it is not profitable, they are conferring a benefit by pointing that out to the people. The result of these chicken stations has been a large export of chickens to the old country. People had been talking about that business and the papers had been writing it up and the government had been urging the people to go into it during a number of years, but the people did not go into it in Glengarry until this experimental station was inaugurated.

Mr. CLANCY. I have listened to this discussion all evening and naturally expected to find that the government had made some mistakes. But it seems they never make any. Their goods shipped in cold storage arrive in bad condition, but the government is not to blame. They undertook the chicken business and the chickens got sick and died. But still the minister asserts that it has been a very profitable business. The hon. minister proves to the country by his own failures that his administration is a marked success in every respect. I cannot see the logic of it, and it seems to me that if the hon. gentleman would frankly admit his failures, the country would take that admission in the proper spirit. We all know that the work is largely experimental and must expect failure in some instances, but the hon. gentleman has an excuse in every case and makes out that he is infallible. I hardly think he will persuade the country to take this view of his administration. I did not quite understand the hon. gentleman's statement with regard to the cheese-curing stations, but I drew from it that a different kind of cheese is now required, somewhat softer in texture, and which cannot be cured by the old process. But there can be no doubt that Canadian cheese attained great success many years ago before this process was thought of, and I would like the hon. gentleman to explain why he suggests the manufacture of a different class of cheese requiring a different treatment from the cheese we made in the past and which met with such success.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For a number of years the English market has been asking for a moister and softer cheese than the Canadian cheddar usually has been. It is impossible to send such cheese successfully forward in heated ships or to cure it successfully in a heated room. For that reason we have been trying to get ventilated holds for the ships to carry it in and to get curing rooms where it can be successfully cured. We have not been able to make that cheese in Canada because we had not properly constructed cheese factories. We have explained that to the people for three or four years back and have experimented to see whether that kind of cheese could be made in a cooler chamber. Our experiments show that it can be, and that there was nothing inherent in the Canadian climate or soil to prevent our making it. By a series of experiments extending over a couple of years, we have been trying to find the cause of the difficulty and a remedy for it. And we think that, to a certain extent we are likely to attain the object desired. There is no doubt that the cheese that went forward in the four ships I have referred to arrived in much better condition than others. We have the reports of the receivers, and also resolutions passed by the shippers, and resolutions passed by the produce dealers in London, declaring that they wished all cheese carried in this way. But I do not think the remedy will be complete until the place in which the cheese is to be cured can be kept at a low enough temperature. The ordinary curing room in the country is not of that construction. We have tried for a couple of years to get the people to change their curing rooms, but they have simply ignored the advice. In a few instances they may have adopted it, but so few that it has made no impression upon the market. By inaugurating these central curing rooms, we think we may make an impression on the market and induce the people to adopt the reform.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is there any idea that the process of making cheese may be changed as well as the process of curing ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not a cheese maker, but I understand that it is expected that, with the new facilities for curing, they will be able to leave a little more moisture in the cheese in the process of manufacture.

Mr. GILMOUR. I am inclined to think that factory men will not greatly favour putting their cheese into these buildings. It would be more likely that the buyers would do so. I would urge upon the minister to consider the propriety of building a larger building at the places where the most cheese is made. Then, if it were near a railway line, so that cartage could be saved, it is possible that the building could be sold without much loss when the experiments are finished.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may explain that these buildings are to be placed right in the railway yard, where there will be every facility for shipment. The cheese will be brought there from the factories and held for the owners. We do not require it to be sold to anybody. The cheese is as much under the control of the owner as it would be in the factory curing room. The only limitation, if you call it such, is that we cannot allow the cheese to remain indefinitely in the central curing room, for we should choke up these curing rooms and disable ourselves from curing the new cheese coming in. These buildings are not intended for warehouse purposes, but for curing purposes. After the cheese is cured, it must be sold or removed to an ordinary warehouse or cold storage building.

Mr. COCHRANE. Is the hon. minister sure that green cheese right from the press can be put on a wagon and drawn five miles in safety ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We believe so—of course, with special arrangements for transportation. And in reply to the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) I may say that I have been overwhelmed with letters from the factory men asking for the privilege of curing their cheese in these buildings.

Mr. FOWLER. If this cheese is to be hauled five miles over a country road, I do not see why it cannot be taken thirty or forty miles by rail.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is a different thing altogether. A spring wagon does not jolt the cheese anything like the rattling of a railway train.

Mr. BLAIN. Is the hon minister making any arrangements for the carrying of the cheese by train from the curing houses ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, the owner ships in any way he pleases.

Mr. BLAIN. Are there any cars on the different railways suitable for carrying that cheese to the seaboard ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The cheese would go from these curing rooms just as it goes from the curing rooms in use to-day.

Mr. BLAIN. Returning to the subject of poultry. I desire to ask one question. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Schell) has stated that the poultry trade in his county has developed very largely since the introduction of this system of poultry feeding. But, from the presentation of the case by the hon. member from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) it appears that nearly all the experiments were failures financially. Will the hon. minister explain, if the poultry feeding station under the government was a failure, how an ordinary man commencing the feeding of chickens under the guidance of the government can be expected to make a success of it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The stations were not failures financially.

Mr. BLAIN. If I understand correctly, in every case they lost money.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I explained that the government carried on at these stations a great deal of educational and experimental work which the farmer would not carry on, and we have to charge up the expense of it to the several stations.

Mr. BLAIN. How many of these were in the province of Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Four last year I am told.

Mr. BLAIN. Where are they located ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The four last year were at Whitby, Chatham, Holmesville and Renfrew.

Mr. VROOMAN. I understood that one of these stations at Lancaster was not successful because of an epidemic disease. Is that a thing that happens frequently, and what is the reason for it, and what is done on the discovery of it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We had about ten stations and this is the only one at which it occurred.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister says that the reason the fattening station cost the government more than it would have cost a private individual was the educational work they had to do. I would ask the minister what amount of educational work was done at the Sussex station which was in charge of this agricultural implement agent, and what qualifications he had for imparting this information ? I would like to know also what education he gave the people ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. His work was not a failure so far as the fattening of chickens was concerned. But besides this work the people who came to learn from these experiments had to be shown what was being done, that took time, and the time had to be paid for.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that the ground the minister takes is that because the chickens were sold for more than was paid for them, therefore there was a profit. They cost, I believe, $85 and were sold for $117. But there were other expenses of over $200. Because the chickens were sold for more than they cost, the minister claims the experiment was a financial success.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Without going into details, I am informed that the original cost of the chickens bought and the feed given to them was about two-thirds of what they brought.

Mr. FOWLER. The report that was read by the hon. member for Leeds does not bear out the contention of the minister. All these items, with the exception of a few of the crates, were the same sort of items that would have to be paid for by any private individual engaged in the same enterprise. I cannot understand how it can be, as the hon. member for Glengarry said, that on account of the success of this experiment in Glengarry where it was a dead failure and the chickens died, it encouraged the people of that community to go into this enterprise as a private speculation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is a kind of encouragement that brings them money.

Mr. VROOMAN. I have heard it said the chickens died owing to the way they were fed. Has the department discovered by this time if that is the case ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not able to answer that question.

Mr. VROOMAN. I have been told they were fed on buttermilk, and it caused the liver to grow.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think they were fed on buttermilk. We did not make any such experiments.

Mr. FOWLER. Were the chickens who died of this chickenpox examined by veterinarians ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think they were.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I think, to remove all doubts, we should issue a commission to go down to Glengarry and ascertain the cause of these chickens dying. But speaking seriously, this business of feeding and shipping chickens is now in its initial stage. Some parties have been successful, and others have not. But people are getting better acquainted with it, and if you allow this process to go on you will find that next year and the year following the export of chickens will keep on increasing in value. One man may try the business and fail, and another may try and succeed. That is the way in every business, because if every man succeeded we would all be so rich that the country could not contain us.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister will persist in making a statement to this House that the business has been profitable, and he answers my hon. friend here that the cost of the chickens and the feed, saying nothing about anything else, leaves a small balance on the right side. I have read an account of the expenses at Glengarry, and there is not a dollar included for this instruction work. The officer went down there two or three times a week to supervise the work, but there is no charge of that kind in the account that I read; still it showed a big deficiency. The minister makes a statement to this House which the Auditor General's Report contradicts. Take up the account of Mr. Thomas Sainsburg, of Chatham:

Thomas Sainsburg, Chatham, Ont.: Services, $85; 398 chickens, $107.90; milk, 4,105 pounds at 25c. per cwt.; tallow, 60 pounds at 6c.; sawdust, $1; freight charges, $11.62; rent of scales, $4; horse hire, $1; cartage, 50c.; sundries, 59c.; dressing and selling chickens, 50c.; paid to pickers, $27.36.

Now, Mr. Sainsburg may have been a farmer, and there is not an item there that any farmer would not have to pay for in the chicken business. There is nothing there for experimental work or instruction to the farmer. The chickens were shipped and sold, and there is $16 return, leaving a deficiency of $237. Now, did these chickens die? There is the published statement of the hon. gentleman. I simply read the items that he furnishes the department of the Auditor General, including the expenditure for chickens and their feed, boxes to ship them in, and freight, that any other farmer would have to pay. Besides, he allowed his political friends where he established the station, some pay for looking after them. But the experimental work was done by the department the same as in Glengarry. At Bondville, Que., there was a loss of $239; at Charlottetown, a loss of $405; at Sussex, N.B., a loss of $198, and at Chatham, of $237; and so it goes.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the intention of the minister to establish more of these fattening stations the coming year, and at what points?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We will have more stations going on this year, I cannot say yet the exact points, and some will be continued where they are.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the minister made up his mind which ones will be continued, whether it will be the most successful or the least successful?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think they have all been so successful as to justify me in continuing them.

Mr. KAULBACH. As the discussion has been carried on with respect to chickens and cheese, I would ask the minister if he has given any attention to the supervision of the milk carried to the factories, so as to secure its being of a proper quality? It needs a good quality of milk to make a good cheese for export. Has he taken pains to see that none of the ingredients of the milk have been extracted? And could not the distance from the centres where cheese are manufactured be widened considerably by the use of proper carriages?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Of course the milk requires to be in good condition. I am glad to say that in Canada there is practically no skim milk cheese made, nor is there any skimming of the milk at the factories. That matter has been thoroughly gone into by our dairy officers. We have our inspectors, and the cheesemakers themselves look after the quality of the milk.

Mr. KAULBACH. Would not the milk suffer from being drawn a long distance to the factory?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The milk will be drawn to the factory in the future as it has been in the past. It does sometimes suffer from being carried too long a distance.

Mr. KAULBACH. Are the manufacturers confined to certain weights of cheese for shipment, or can they make a cheese of any weight they please?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They can make it of any weight.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister did not give me information in reference to the great discrepancy in the case at Chatham, where there was a deficiency of $237.63.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot explain those figures. No doubt a full explanation can be made in the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman get it?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have given a full statement of the expenses.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister says that with the exception of the station at Lancaster all the others paid a profit. Now, the chickens that were sold from this station brought $16.09, and he paid out $253.72 to Mr. Sainsburg. A cyclone must have struck those chickens up there. That is worse than a disease.

Mr. KAULBACH. As to the milk, I understood the hon. minister to state that a certain test is required. What is that test?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think that I said anything particularly about that. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is alluding to the ordinary working of cheese factories or not. There is no change in the method of handling milk in the cheese factory. That system has been pursued for many years. It is thoroughly understood and we do not propose to make any change in that at all.

Mr. HACKETT. After having had a fair share of chickens and cheese I wish to go back to apples again. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he has arranged for the appointment of a man to do grafting and pruning in Prince Edward Island, and to assist the orchardist there? I understand that a gentleman down there, Mr. D. A. Sharp, has applied for this position. The hon. minister will remember that a few years ago he sent a man of the name of Kinsman from Nova Scotia to Prince Edward Island who was totally unfit to carry on this work and made a failure of it. I understand that there is a largely signed petition in the department of the hon. minister asking that Mr. Sharp be appointed to do the work of pruning and grafting. Mr. Sharp is a Liberal, a personal friend of mine, though a strong political opponent, but he has been in the nursery business for a long number of years, and he is thoroughly conversant with the cultivation of fruit trees. In view of the fact that the hon. minister has a memorial in his hands signed by a large proportion of the people engaged in that industry in Prince Edward Island, I hope he will pay some attention to it. We do not want to have a repetition of Kinsman coming over there from Nova Scotia. Mr. Sharp is a nurseryman who has been selling his trees to the farmers of Prince Edward Island for a long number of years. I think he represents a nursery situated somewhere in the vicinity of Sussex, and he deals in trees that are suitable for Prince Edward Island. He has taken a deep interest in the cultivation of these trees. He goes around as far as he possibly can, being a man who is dependent for his living on the work he is doing, assisting the parties to whom he has sold trees in the cultivation of them. But he cannot give his whole time and attention to that without some compensation from the government and I would, therefore, as far as I can in this parliament, make known the capabilities of Mr. Sharpe and his thorough knowledge of and acquaintance with orchard work in Prince Edward Island. I would like to ask the hon. minister, having this memorial signed by a large number of the people of Prince Edward Island, that he would be good enough to pay some attention to it.

Mr. FOWLER. I would like to ask the hon. minister what his practice is in respect to giving bonuses to storehouses where butter is kept in cold storage by creamery companies, on what principle he gives these bonuses and what the initial value of the buildings is to which these bonuses are given?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The buildings in connection with the creameries which earn these bonuses have to be constructed according to specifications and plans which are supplied by the department, which have been published for years, which have been explained before the committee and drawings of which were put before the country in bulletins three or four years ago. The bonus as given is $50 for the first year and $25 for two succeeding years on the condition that the buildings themselves are properly constructed, and that the temperature is kept at the right point during the hot weather. We require first of all that an inspector shall visit the creamery and see whether the building is all right, and if it is we get a report from the butter maker there who fills up the form which is sent by the department. When that is done we pay the bonus.

Mr. FOWLER. Then application is made for this bonus?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. Made by the creameries and then we supply all the information necessary as to construction and forms for making reports upon.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who inspects these buildings?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The officers of the department.

Mr. TAYLOR. In every case?

Mr. FOWLER. What is the average cost of these buildings?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That would depend on whether they are built inside of an existing creamery or outside. It costs about $150, Professor Robertson says, to fit up the inside of a building, but when an additional building has to be built it will probably cost $250 or $300. The government gives $100 in the course of three years, $50 the first year and $25 for two succeeding years.

Mr. BLAIN. How many creameries have earned that bonus?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. About 500—not the full bonus; some of them are still earning their bonuses, but about 500 have put in the cold storage chambers. Some of them will come on next year or the year after.

Mr. BLAIN. How many of them have earned the full $100?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. About 330, Professor Robertson says, have earned the full bonus.

Mr. BLAIN. I notice in this pamphlet, containing figures which have come from the department, the number is placed at 317 that have earned the full $100 up to 1900.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That will be about it.

Mr. BLAIN. How many does the hon. minister say now have earned the full $100?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am only speaking from memory, but I understand about 330. If it was 317 then it must be more now.

Mr. FOWLER. How many applications have been made from New Brunswick for this bonus ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Professor Robertson thinks about six. There are not very many creameries in New Brunswick.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see, at page D-65 of the Auditor General's report, that there were 6 in Prince Edward Island, 5 in Nova Scotia, 6 in New Brunswick, 170 in Quebec, 15 in Ontario and 3 in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories. The hon. minister informed the committee a moment ago that in order to get this bonus, a room had to be built according to the plans and specifications supplied by the department, and that in every case these compartments were inspected by an officer of the department. I would ask him to account for $485.18 paid out to different parties in the province of Quebec and for $22 paid out to parties in Ontario for inspecting cold storage rooms. I see here T. Corbeil Laurentides, 21 days at $2 a day, inspections for bonuses, and so it runs on.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He was employed for that purpose.

Mr. TAYLOR. An officer of the department ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. For twenty-one days ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then I asked him if these inspections were made by an officer of the department from here, and he said yes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman did not ask if he was from here. He is an officer of the department. He is one of the syndicate inspectors for Quebec, and we asked him to do that work.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then there is J. O. Danis?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not recognize the name.

Mr. TAYLOR. You will find it in the Auditor General's report, page D-64.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I dare say, but I cannot recognize the name.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, there is A. P. Purvis, Maxville, Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is one of the Ontario inspectors that we employed for that work.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then there is A. B. Rabb, of Brockville, who got $2 a day ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know any one of that name.

Mr. TAYLOR. These are not officers of the department but there is $485 paid to about thirty inspectors in the province of Quebec and $22 paid to six in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were employed for that purpose.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister led us to believe that before this money was paid out an officer of the department certified that these places were completed according to law. Here we find that they are not inspected by an officer of the department at all.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Wherever it was possible the work was done by an officer of the department and in every other case it was done by a person engaged in similar work for some provincial or local organization.

Mr. HACKETT. Have you one of those cold storage places at Charlottetown.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We engaged a room in a cold storage building there.

Mr. HACKETT. And the buyer of the cheese pays a rent for the use of this building during the time the cheese is there.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He pays a storage charge.

Mr. HACKETT. You are building one of those cheese curing establishments in Eastern Ontario, another in Western Ontario ; one in French Quebec and one in English Quebec. Why in the name of all that is good and gracious cannot you build one in Prince Edward Island, where the people have gone largely into the cheese industry owing to the energy of Prof. Robertson and prior to this government coming into power. Prof. Robertson came down to Prince Edward Island under the Conservative government and established these cheese factories, and they have been a great success. The cheese industry has been a success there without any assistance from this government, only that they rented this cold storage room from the Rattenburys, friends of their own in Charlottetown. The least the government ought to do is to build one of those cheese curing establishments in Prince Edward Island. The minister tells us that when the cheese is treated in one of those places it will come out perfect and be worth from three to four cents a pound more than ordinary cheese. Why should not the people of every province have the benefit of them. Why build two in Ontario and two in Quebec and not build any in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Manitoba. We should have in the province of Prince Edward Island this means of turning the dairy products of the people to the best advantage. I trust the minister will see his way clear to establish one of these places in Prince Edward Island.

To promote dairying interests by advances for milk and cream, to be recouped out of the proceeds of sales of such butter and cheese, to be placed to the credit of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, $40,000.

Mr. CLANCY. What has been the outcome of the partnership business with the government in respect to the North-west creameries. As was predicted by some gentlemen here when the minister first submitted the plan, it has resulted in a loss, and I think the minister told us that he was disposed to discontinue the assistance. How far has he been successful in recouping that loss.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is correct in saying that some of these factories have not been as successful as we had anticipated. The late boom in grain-growing—

Mr. CLANCY. Another excuse.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, another excuse ; possibly a mistake in placing some of these factories in the grain-growing region. We have discontinued one or two, and I fear that we will have to discontinue some others. We have lent altogether $43,540.63. Of that $24,528.87 has been repaid at present, leaving a balance of $19,011. Eight of these factories out of twenty-one have repaid the whole of the advances, four others have paid very nearly all, and I am certain will entirely repay next season if there is anything like the work that has been done lately. There are a few which I fear will lose money. These are, Edmonton and its tributaries, Maple Creek, Prince Albert and Duck Lake, and Wolseley and Moffat. The others owe much smaller amounts and it is likely they will be able to pay off. After all that is not a bad showing although I confess that the anticipations have not been realized as far as the actual financial view is concerned. I think, however, that the progress of the country there has been benefited to an enormous extent, and that the encouragement to settlers on the whole is quite good compensation for the investment which was made, even if in some instances we lost.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the minister discontinued the assistance.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I hope to be able in another year to let those who have repaid the whole amount, run their own business without any control from us. Some of the others will have to be run for a year or two perhaps to ensure the successful paying off of what is due. With regard to some others it is rather a blue lookout. This is very similar to the work done in Prince Edward Island some years ago, but on a smaller scale.

Mr. GILMOUR. What creameries have paid up ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Churchbridge, Kootenay, Grenville, Moose Jaw, Red Deer, Regina, Saltcoats, Saskatoon, Whitewood, Yorktown. These owe nothing. Four of the others have nearly paid off everything, and seven have not paid much.

Mr. GILMOUR. Has the one at Calgary paid off its debt ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At Calgary the money was not lent to the corporation, but to the patrons, and they have paid it off.

Mr. GILMOUR. What is the output of the whole of the creameries ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1897, 473,000 pounds of butter were made, value $85,000. In 1898, 484,000 pounds value $73,000; in 1899, 501,000 pounds, value $103,000; in 1900, 637,000 pounds, value $128,000; in 1901, 677,000 pounds, value $129,000. There has been a steady increase both in quantity and value.

Mr. GILMOUR. Does the hon. minister control the sale ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We manage the sale. Most of it was marketed in British Columbia and the Yukon, but this last season we shipped some to Europe. Some has been sent every year to Japan—not a very large quantity, but gradually increasing.

Mr. GILMOUR. I am surprised that any should be required. I thought that the Yukon would have taken the whole of it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is due to the fact that a great deal of Manitoba butter was sent to British Columbia this year and some Ontario and Quebec butter. In the early spring there was some sent from the east.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CANADIAN NORTHERN RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 53) respecting the Canadian Northern Railway Company.—Mr. Davis.

On section 4,

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, before this clause passes, as we have now the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) in his seat, and as that gentleman was not present during the consideration of private Bills on Friday night, I would like to state one or two objections I have to this Bill. In the first place, I object to the Bill on general principles. The Bill authorizes the construction of 5,000 or 6,000 miles of railway, and this power, to be given in any one charter, is altogether too great. I object also to the Bill because it authorizes the construction of certain branch lines, but the descriptions of these lines are so indefinite that we do not know where the roads are going to run. But, my most serious objection to the Bill is the fact that by its terms it entirely controls the only two available passes through the Rocky Mountains. These are the Pine River and the Yellow Head passes. There was an engineer who went through the Pine River Pass about twenty-five years ago, and a gentleman named Mr. Hunter also went through about twenty years ago. Neither one of these gentlemen reported on the feasibility of this pass for a railway. There is no information on that point as far as I can learn. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals should take steps to see, if any other transcontinental road should endeavour to get through the mountains as there are no other passes available, that they should have running powers over the line in one of these two passes. I notice that the Board of Trade held a meeting in Winnipeg a few days ago to discuss a resolution sent to it by the Halifax Board of Trade dealing with the Intercolonial Railway. I may say that the Winnipeg Board of Trade represents practically all the large and influential corporations loaning moneys on the prairies. That board took the ground that a commission should be appointed to look into the question as to whether the Intercolonial Railway could be made a factor in the transportation of that country, and if it could that it might be feasible on the part of the government to extend that system to the Pacific coast to serve as a feeder for the road. That proposition was very fully discussed by several gentlemen who are deeply interested in that country, and the partner of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler), Mr. Nanton, seconded the resolution. I am not going to say whether this is feasible or not, but, if it is feasible and if it should transpire that it should be necessary in the future for the government to extend the road to the Pacific coast, they should adopt the policy of reserving these passes with that end in view. But, there is another factor in connection with this charter to which I wish to draw attention. As you are aware, Mr. Chairman, a bargain was entered into between the Manitoba government and the Northern Pacific Railway, which bargain was passed also by this government. That arrangement was something like this: The Manitoba government leased from the Northern Pacific Railway Company for a period of years the company's lines in the province of Manitoba, having a mileage of 350 miles for which they were to pay an annual rental of $210,000. The Manitoba government released those lines to the Canadian Northern Railway Company, and a bargain was made that on certain bonds issued by the Canadian Northern line the government were to guarantee interest to the extent of $20,000 a mile on 300 miles, and on certain other bonds covering 1,000 miles of road, the Manitoba government were to guarantee interest at the rate of $10,000 per mile. That is 1,300 miles in all on which interest is guaranteed. Out of the receipts of the railway company they were to pay, first, the running expenses of the road, secondly, the $210,000 rental to the Northern Pacific, and thirdly, they were to pay interest on these bonds, amounting to about $14,000,000, but in default the Manitoba government had to pay any arrears of interest accrued. Should there be a surplus at the end of two years that might be applied to a reduction of freight rates. This was the consideration for which the Manitoba government became the endorser of the bonds of the company so that the farmers of the western part of Manitoba should get a material reduction in freight rates. The reduction was to be 2 cents a bushel on wheat on the first year's operation. If the road proved a paying concern, there was to be a further reduction in the rates. This Bill goes on to say that they should have power to bond the road for $25,000 per mile, not only on any lines to be constructed, but also on the lines now constructed, and the question arises: Is that $15,000 extra per mile to be in addition to the 1,300 miles for which the Manitoba government are responsible as endorser? If it is, it seems that in addition to guaranteeing the interest on what is provided for in the agreement now that government will have to become responsible for the interest on $15,000 per mile extra and there will be no opportunity of gaining any further reduction in freight rates.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the bonding power on the 1,300 miles that have been already constructed ?

Mr. McCREARY. I am sorry that I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information he asks me for.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If they bond it for $25,000 per mile and it is completed it would not affect the matter.

Mr. McCREARY. I suppose not. But the Manitoba government assumed responsibility for $10,000 a mile on a portion and $20,000 on another portion. I may not be correct in my contention, but I want to have it shown that I am not correct. I want to see that the Manitoba government will not have to guarantee interest on $25,000 per mile instead of $10,000. I want to see that the farmers of Manitoba who are supposed to get the benefit of that road will not have to pay interest on that extra bonding per mile. It is the duty of the Minister of Railways to clear up the point. He was thoroughly cognisant of the matter when it came before the Railway Committee and I have no doubt he will be able to explain.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The hon. member from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) has invited my attention to some provisions of this Bill, and he particularly mentions the fact that it is proposed to construct an enormous mileage which he thinks we are not justified in empowering the company to construct. The hon. gentleman said that if this Bill passes the company will have authority to occupy not only the Yellow Head Pass but also the Pine River Pass under existing legislation. It will be remembered by members of the Railway Committee that two or three times I called the attention of the committee to the extended character of this proposed undertaking, and I mentioned that the company were asking to occupy a very great deal of territory. As far as my observations then impressed themselves on the committee the result was that considerable lengths of mileage which were embraced in the original Bill were stricken off, and it appeared to be the sense of the committee that the balance of the Bill should stand. I did not carry the controversy further ; I do not propose to continue the controversy now. I called explicit attention to the very point which the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary) has dwelt upon, and the committee after listening to the arguments on both sides concluded that it was not improper legislation. Considerable respect is due to the decision of the committee with respect to all of these Bills, and unless the circumstances are of an extraordinary character, or unless something has been done under a misapprehension of the facts I think it is better to consider the decision of the committee as approaching finality. What my hon. friend (Mr. McCreary) has said with regard to the necessity of providing that running powers shall be secured to any railway that may desire to use any of these passes, is covered by existing legislation completely. We would have added it to this Bill if it were necessary, but it is not necessary. The hon. gentleman seems to be under the impression that we have no information in the department as to the character of this Pine River Pass from a railway point of view. The hon. gentleman is not fully informed with respect to that, because my deputy tells me that the records of the department show that a very careful survey was made of the Pine River Pass, with the result that the opinion of the engineer, Sir Sanford Fleming was, that there was only room for one track through it. While that is the case, some one must build the track. It is quite immaterial it appears to me by what company the track is built, because there is ample power in the government under existing legislation to secure to any companies who desire to use the same pass, all the rights which they will need for such a purpose.

With reference to the effect of this legislation upon the contract entered into by the Manitoba government with the Canada Northen Railway ; that point occurred to my mind before this question was disposed of in the committee, and I made such inquiries that I felt were necessary. I did not see how it would be possible for this legislation to enlarge or to restrict in any degree the contract as it affects the existing bonds which were already issued ; and upon inquiry I was very well satisfied that my opinion in that regard was well founded. I think I can safely assure the hon. gentleman that he need have no anxiety on that account.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I would like to say that while I would be only too glad to accept the assurances of the Minister of Railways on the subject of the responsibility likely to be laid upon the province of Manitoba by this legislation it is not altogether clear to my mind that the province is not placed at a disadvantage by it. I must admit my lack of legal training, and therefore that I am at a disadvantage in discussing this question. But it is an important question. We are going to do something that we cannot undo, and it is well that we should proceed with the fullest information, even to those of us who are not thoroughly versed in legal questions. The Manitoba government lies under its present responsibility in respect of the Canadian Northern Railway because of legislation by this parliament. That responsibility is limited to a certain amount. This parliament by legislation now in hand permits the adding of a certain load of responsibility, not on the province but on the company. This brings up the question as to whether the company, by reason of this legislation would not be at liberty to provide for the discharge of the interest upon the additional bonds before giving that advantage to the people of Manitoba which they expect because of the responsibility they have assumed. That is to say, that the company being only allowed to provide for a bonded liability of $10,000 a mile ; this legislation will permit them to provide for a bonded liability of $25,000 per mile. It is an arguable question it seems to me, whether they will not be able to hold that legislation up as a defence for paying interest on that additional $15,000 per mile before discharging their obligations to the people of Manitoba in regard to the reduction of rates. The fact of giving them the privilege to place these additional bonds upon the road may be used by them as a protection against the terms of their present agreement with the province of Manitoba. I may be wrong in that and I may be right ; but I would make this suggestion : That the lines in the province of Manitoba, or the lines covered by the agreement with the province of Manitoba, be exempted from the provisions of this section. Then there will be no question about it. Then the province will be perfectly safe. We would know certainly that we had done no harm anyway, and I can see no objection to that provision being made.

Further I would like to say, that the idea that a railway company pays the interest on its own bonds is now exploded. The company does not pay anything. It is the people who use the road that pay the interest. They pay it through the rates which it costs them to have their traffic carried. If the company is permitted by parliament to bond its line through the prairies of the Saskatchewan valley at the rate of $25,000 per mile, the future population of that valley must pay that interest, if the interest is to be paid. The government in exercising its authority as to control of rates must take into consideration the fact that it authorized the issue of these bonds to the amount of $25,000 per mile, and thereby became a party to the charging of rates sufficient to earn interest on that amount of bonds. I claim that it is the duty of parliament to restrict the issue of bonds on a railroad to the necessities of the case. It is necessary to do that if parliament is to exercise effective control of the rates to be afterwards charged on that road by means of a railway commission or by any other means. If the bonding power of $10,000 per mile is sufficient to construct the line of the Canadian Northern through the prairie sections of the province of Manitoba, $10,000 a mile should be sufficient to enable them to construct through the prairie regions of the Saskatchewan—if not absolutely then aproximately. The fact that they were willing to make a bargain with the province of Manitoba to build a line through the prairie sections of that province on a bonding privilege of $10,000 per mile is absolute proof that the bonding power of $25,000 per mile applied to prairie construction through the Saskatchewan valley is needlessly large, and as a matter of fact lays a burden of future taxation upon the future population of that country, for which, they, nor we, nor any one else outside the men composing the company, receive any value whatever. I would ask the Minister of Railways and the House to protect beyond question the province of Manitoba against any additional obligation, and further to protect the future interests of the western country by restricting the bonding powers of this railway to the necessities of the case. The experience of this country in the past proves that such safeguard is necessary, in order that the country may get the proper benefit from the expenditure made in aid of railway construction.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I was in the Railway Committee when this clause was passed, but I have just had the explanation of the Minister of Railways that it does not interfere with the bonds already issued. If that be so, there can be no objection to it. But taking the wording of the clause, 'The company may from time to time issue and secure by mortgage, bonds, debentures, or other securities for the purpose of the acquisition by purchase, &c., there is nothing to show that the bonds so authorized to be issued will not rank pari passu with those already issued.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Those already issued are secured by a first mortgage under the agreement with the province of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not remember at present how these bonds stand, but I was simply pointing out what appeared to be the effect of this clause. Even if the bonds already issued be secured by a first mortgage, the House should still be careful to see that by this Act we are not in any way taking from their precedence. That could be guarded against by providing an additional clause, which would give these bonds already issued priority beyond doubt over those authorized to be issued.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see how there can be any doubt as to the position of the bonds now issued. They are the subject matter of a special contract between the Manitoba government and the Canadian Northern Railway. The papers were before us last session, and most of us will remember that a mortgage was executed by the company, whereby the bonds then issued, up to the amount of $10,000 per mile, were made the first lien on the road. No authority which may subsequently be granted by parliament to issue additional bonds could possibly change the position of those previously issued. The bonds now authorized will have to follow and be a second security. We have not, are not giving them any priority, nor are we putting them on an equal footing. Therefore, whoever holds the existing mortgage, holds the property in security for the bonds issued prior to this arrangement. The Manitoba government no doubt have been made thoroughly acquainted with the character of this proposed legislation, and if there were anything in it which might infringe on their rights, they would have quickly called our attention to it.

In reply to the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) I may say that it was the understanding of the Railway Committee, when that committee agreed to report the Bill, that I should take the third and fourth clauses into my consideration. I had called the attention of the committee to the very large capitalization powers, and said that these two clauses might well receive further consideration, and that if the committee were content, I would look into the matter and suggest any change, and in the meantime they could report the Bill. My hon. friend is therefore right in asking me for some explanation why I have advised that the bonding power should be retained at the amount first stated. It is all very well for my hon. friend to talk about the cost of the construction, but taking the least costly of the railways mentioned in the present Bill, I had inquiries made by the best of my engineering staff, and they told me that to build this road and to bridge it—and there will have to be two very expensive bridges across the Saskatchewan river—and pay the cost of the rails and their transport and properly and adequately equip the road, would take in the neighbourhood of $15,000 to $20,000 per mile. When my hon. friend speaks of $8,000 or $10,000 per mile, he is entirely astray in his calculations. Take the matter of equipment alone. If the country through which this road is to run is as fertile as represented, it will soon be filled up with producing settlers, and to carry their crops which will have to be carried by that railway will require large quantities of freight cars and locomotives. It is not a trifling matter to equip a railway with sufficient freight facilities to carry a traffic such as has been produced along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and as will no doubt be produced along this line. And when you count the cost of the locomotives, freight cars and other equipment, I do not think that $5,000 or $6,000 per mile would be an unreasonable sum to expend in that way. Then when you come to realize on your bonds, what do you find? I do not care how strong a company may be, or what may be its prospects, these bonds cannot be sold except at a considerable discount. Even bonds that bear the guarantee of the Manitoba government, when brought to the English market, have to be sold at a very substantial discount. I am not at liberty to say, but have been credibly informed what the extent of that discount is. If you undertakae to sell the bonds of a company with the brightest prospects in the world, in the English or any other market, not guaranteed by any government, and you have to submit to a still larger discount. I do not believe that $25,000 of bonds will more that suffice to furnish the money necessary to construct and equip a road of this character, as it ought to be. Having that opinion, I did not think I should ask the committee to make any reduction of the bonding powers.

I would suggest that the following words be added to the last line of the fourth clause: 'Should not at any time exceed $25,000 per mile on the government line of railway authorized to be constructed under this Act.' That will exclude the application to lines chartered under previous legislation and not chartered under this.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would call attention to the fact that there is a section of the road from Winnipeg to the Northwest not authorized to be constructed under this Act, but under a former Act, which, possibly, is re-enacted by this Bill. I refer to the forty miles running north-west from Winnipeg.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If my hon. friend Mr. Hughes, (Victoria) will look at the sub-clause of section 1, he will find there mentioned and described all the lines authorized by this Act. The previous Act which he has in mind authorizing the construction of a line from Winnipeg West would also authorize the issue of bonds, and under that they could issue bonds without further legislation from us.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Possibly that Act is being revived by this Bill?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, there is no reference to it or to this piece of road.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 4.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The language of this clause seems peculiar. It does not authorize the company to mortgage its railway, but authorizes it to mortgage vessels, hotels, terminals and other property required for use in connection with the undertaking of the company. If the intention is to empower them to mortgage this railway, the language seems peculiar. It may be that power is given to them to mortgage the railway under some other section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understand the section to mean that, covering any subsidiary undertakings they may take up, such as the building of hotels, &c., their total power of bonding for all purposes in connection with their undertaking under this Act shall not exceed $25,000 a mile.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They have power to mortgage the railway under some other statute?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. But this is their own language.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If they are satisfied with it, I suppose we must be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am satisfied with it because it limits—I am not framing this legislation.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

MANITOBA AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 16) respecting the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company of Canada.—Mr. Douglas.

On section 1.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to present here the resolution in amendment of which I gave notice the other evening, and which is to this effect—I wish to have inserted in this section the following, 'the company shall construct in the year 1902 thirty-five miles, and thirty-five miles in each and every year thereafter, including the year 1906.' I do not wish to take up time in discussing this matter for it was discussed fully in the Railway Committee. I brought this resolution up in the Railway Committee and they saw fit to disagree with me. Still I think it nothing but right to move it in the House. This company is in a different position from any other company that has come before the House asking for legislation. The Manitoba and North-western Railway Company was chartered in 1882, just 20 years ago. I have here copies of the statutes that were passed at that time and subsequently relating to this company. I find that in 1884, the company came back and received an extension of time. It was provided, however, that fifty miles of road should be built each and every year so long as the extension of time lasted. On the understanding that this would be done, a great many settlers went in on the proposed line. There was, in effect, a contract, with three parties to it—parliament, the promoters and the settlers. The settlers going in there figured that, under the arrangement made by parliament, the railway would reach them in a certain time. But the company did not build fifty miles a year—they did not built anything a year. At the end of the time to which their powers had been extended, they came and asked for another extension. Parliament in its wisdom, saw fit to give them a further extension, but inserted a clause in the Bill providing that the company should build twenty miles of road in each and every year. They came back again a few years after that, after they had built, I think, about 20 miles, and they got another extension of time for nine years, if I remember right, with the provision that they were to construct something like 20 miles a year. In an Act respecting the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company of Canada I find the following:

Section 2 of the Act passed in the 51st year of Her Majesty's reign, chapter 86, is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor:

The company shall complete during the calendar year 1890, the 17 miles of railway to the west of Saltcoats, in the territory of Assiniboia, partially constructed by it during the year 1889; and, in addition, the company shall complete not less than 20 miles of its railway, as described by the Acts relating to the company, on or before the 31st day of December, in the year 1892, and also during each calendar year thereafter, to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council; otherwise the power granted to the company to extend its line of railway then completed shall be forfeited.

Now, they came back again in 1893 and got a further amendment to their charter which provided that they should build as much of the road as the Governor in Council should prescribe. That was something like nine years ago, and there has not been one foot of road built there from the time they got that charter to the present time. It is true, we are told this is not the same company. The Canadian Pacific Railway only got control of this road three or four years ago. That is true, but at the same time when the Candian Pacific Railway bought this charter, as I believe they did, and when they took over this road, they took it over subject to these conditions. They knew the conditions and knew they ought to be fulfilled, and therefore when they took it over they had no right to assume they could get an extension of time, and I think they should have shown their bona fides by building twenty miles a year for each year, and as this was four years ago, there would have been eighty miles built now. Two years ago they came back to parliament and asked for an extension of time. The Bill came before the Railway Committee and was rejected, because they had not built any road at all. They came back this year without having constructed any road at all, and the committee has given them an extension of time for another five years. They told the committee, and I believe they informed the gentleman who is handling the Bill, that they had let a contract for thirty-three miles. Well, my eyesight may be very bad, but I don't see anything about thirty-three miles in this Bill. I suppose the hon. gentleman that is handling the Bill knows more about it than I do, but there is not a word about it here. It may be on the back of it, but it is not in the Bill. I would like to be sure that we are going to get something done this year. Surely after this charter has been in existence for twenty years it is not a fair proposition to give them five years more, saying they must commence in two years and complete in five. As I understand this Bill, they might build one mile this year, and then they would have five years more to complete that road; and if they did not do it they could come back and ask for another extension of time. The argument has been used that there were no settlers along that line. I say that there are a great many settlers going in there; but if there was not one settler there, the fact that immigration is pouring into that country at the present time necessitates the opening up and developing of all the vast portions of the country. This railroad charter runs through one of the most fertile portions of the North-west Territories; it covers 230 miles of the finest lands in the Saskatchewan valley. We know that immigration has turned in the direction of the Saskatchewan valley, and I want to ask the House if it is fair to tie up that district for five years by giving a charter of this kind without something being in the charter to provide that a certain amount of work should be done within a given time. If you provide that thirty-five miles should be built each year the settlers will go in there on the strength of that provision, for they will know that the company is compelled to build a certain amount of road every year. If you do not do that, you are going to injure that district. They say that they have already promised to build thirty-three miles, and if they want to hold this charter for such a length of time, they should be prepared to construct thirty-five miles this year, and thirty-five miles each subsequent year, including 1906.

Amendment negatived.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 57) respecting the Ontario Power Company of Niagara Falls.—Mr. German.

Bill (No. 59) respecting the James Bay Railway Company.—Mr. McCormick.

Bill (No. 62) respecting the Klondike Mines Railway Company.—Mr. Morrison.

Bill (No. 66) respecting La Compagnie du chemin de fer de Colonisation du Nord.—Mr. Lemieux.

PACIFIC NORTHERN AND OMENICA RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 72) to incorporate the Pacific Northern and Omenica Railway Company.—Mr. Morrison.

On section 12,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask why it is that the amount of the bonding powers are so large—$30,000 a mile. It is rather unusual.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The matter was considered in the Railway Committee and we felt that we had very little data to go upon to enable us to form a judgment as to what would be the approximate cost of railway construction in that country. I take it that this will be an electric tramway, and the plant for such a purpose, getting in the rails, wages, and all the expenses incidental to the constructing, operating and equipping of railway there, are out of all comparison with what they would be in eastern Canada. We know that. We had occasion to examine into the question of the rates from the White Pass Railway not very long since and our officers had detailed information in reference to the cost of things there, showing that it was enormous as compared with the cost of the same articles in this part of the country or throughout our own North-west. The sum of $30,000 a mile I think would not be an exorbitant sum. I think they would require it—or at least they would require the proceeds of that amount in order to equip and complete their road.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

COSMOS COTTON COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 64) to incorporate the Cosmos Cotton Company.—Mr. Flint.

On section 7,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why was the special provision stricken out of this Bill, that the majority of the corporation should be subjects of His Majesty.

Mr. FLINT. This is frequently done in private Bills at the request of promoters, and the committee felt that it was very proper in this case.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I have not heard of it before.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has been done, but I do not know why.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Can the promoter of this Bill give one instance out of the numerous cases in which it has been done. My memory is that the practice of late years has been the very reverse.

Mr. FLINT. I imagine that three out of every five private Bills have this clause. Based on broad ground, there is really no reason for the prohibition. At present such an enormous amount of foreign capital is invested in our enterprises that it is only proper that occasionally it should be provided that the directors need not be British subjects.

On section 8,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This clause gives the directors the power. I think that power should be in the stockholders.

Mr. FLINT. The next clause provides for that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The next clause requires the consent of the shareholders of the other company to sell, but that has not the slightest application to section 8. Under section 8 one company can do this with the consent of the board of directors but they must have the consent of the shareholders of the other company.

Mr. FLINT. The main object of this is to purchase the assets of the other company. This is quite an ordinary clause and is on the line of similar clauses in other private Bills. I really do not understand how any one can be injured in any way by this clause. The Bill was considered very carefully in the committee and no objection was taken to it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When they come to purchase it requires the consent of every shareholder of the company purchased, but the purchasing company can do so without the consent of any shareholder.

Mr. WADE. Care is taken to safeguard the rights of the old company by requiring the consent of its shareholders to the sale, but if you were to put in any provision requiring the consent of the stockholders in the present company there might be difficulty.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not an unusual provision to enable the company to pay for property purchased by stock instead of money. Probably the objection of my hon. friend from Lanark is because we are enabling the purchase of a large property to be made without the consent of the shareholders.

Mr. FLINT. I do not think that any difficulty need be anticipated on that account. The rights of the old company are safeguarded by requiring the consent of the shareholders, and the directors of the present company are simply authorized to issue paid up stock to the extent of the value of the property which they may purchase from the old company.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not wish to offer any objections for the purpose of delaying the Bill. If the hon. gentleman wants to consult any one with reference to it, we will consent to pass the Bill through the committee, but not allow the third reading until another day. In the meantime my hon. friend may look into the matter, and we can see whether any amendment be required on the third reading.

Bill reported.

THE ROSS RIFLE COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 70) to incorporate the Ross Rifle Company.—Mr. Thompson.

On clause 8, subsection 2,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This section provides :

> The aggregate amounts borrowed shall not at any time be greater than seventy-five per cent of the actual paid up stock of the company, but this limitation shall not apply to commercial paper discounted by the company.

This is the first time I have seen such a clause in any private Bill. What does it mean ? There seems to be no limitations at all to the borrowing powers. Who is the member of the government in charge of private Bills ? This simply means that they can borrow as much as they like.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So can any company.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know that we ought to treat this question of the borrowing powers of companies in quite so frivolous a manner. Instances both here and in the old country will readily occur to the mind of every hon. gentleman showing the necessity of some restraint in the matter of borrowing powers of private companies. Some member of the government should be ready to answer questions put from this side of the House with regard to these matters. This question of incorporated companies should not be treated as if it had only a humourous side.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I understood the hon. ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) to call attention to the borrowing powers given to the company under this clause. The committee unanimously agreed to the grant of these powers and we have not heard any reason advanced why the decision of the committee should be changed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If there is no limitation of the borrowing powers, what is the use of this clause ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think there are some limitations.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what respect ?

Mr. RUSSELL. The clause, it seems to me, is not an unreasonable one. I understand the limitation to be a limitation upon their making a permanent loan on the strength of stock. This is a commercial company; it will be buying and selling, and it will have notes given it which, in the aggregate, may be more than the whole amount of the stock. It is provided that notes of that sort which are discounted with the bank, and which are held against goods supplied by them, shall not be included in the proportion of their borrowing, based upon their capital stock. It seems a reasonable clause, and the limitation seems a proper one.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not see the object of restricting it in one way only. I want to understand what the clause means, and I do not intend to enact it until I do understand.

Mr. RUSSELL. I suppose the promoters would be satisfied to have it struck out.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is the rule adopted by this parliament and in use for many years, in relation to joint stock companies. It has been applied in almost all Bills that have gone through. Personally, I never did agree with it, and do not agree with it now. But, until our general method of legislation in these matters is changed, I suppose this will be carried through in these special charters. There is this limitation of borrowing on debentures in the cases of borrowing in all commercial companies. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) knows better than I do that it is a limitation in the Joint Stock Companies Act. As to this point with regard to commercial paper, I suppose the solicitor put it in to avoid doubt. But all companies can borrow all the money they can get the banks or other people to lend them.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But this phrase 'commercial paper' is a new phrase in legislation so far as I know. I do not know what the phrase means.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there is no ambiguity in the expression, for it is an expression in general use, and the meaning is well understood. There is a clear distinction in everybody's mind between a debenture or bond issued by an incorporated company and business paper of that company, and it is that distinction which this section, I apprehend, is meant to deal with. My hon. friend the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) asks the principle upon which this limitation of 75 per cent was introduced. Almost every one of these companies' Acts, both English and Canadian, contains such a limitation as this. I think the precise limitation in England is just this 75 per cent; I know it is in many of the provinces. I think parliament desired that there should be a limitation placed upon the formal and more solemn—if you may so describe it—obligations issued by the company, which go into the hands of investors and are held for a term of years, and obligations that are made to-day and that mature in a few weeks or months, and which are closely watched and turned over and over. I think there is reason why the enduring obligations in the form of bonds issued by the company should not be unlimited, and if there is to be a limitation, it is not unreasonable, I think, that it should be in the neighbourhood of this 75 per cent. People that would be asked to invest in these bonds would have a guarantee by reason of this legislation that three-quarters only of the capital could be encumbered by the issue of these bonds.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as the statute is concerned, the expression 'commercial paper' is mere slang, and nothing else. In the ordinary way of public business the expression 'commercial paper' may be used among business people, but these words are not used in statutes. The expression that should be used is 'negotiable paper' or something of that kind, or 'bills of exchange, or promissory notes,' but commercial paper' does not seem to be a very apt phrase to use in a statute. However, it is a matter of good taste, I suppose.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend will admit that there is a legal slang in use as there is what we call a journalistic slang. But these words 'commercial paper' I find in the authorities. In a work entitled :

White, 'Treatise on Canadian Company Law :'

Section 40. The language of this section requires that before commercial paper is issued by the company the board of directors should pass a by-law designating which officers of the company shall sign such paper on behalf of the company. . . . . The practice is to pass a general by-law in regard to all commercial paper, designating the officers who are authorized to sign and execute these documents.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What I said was that I thought it was slang so far as the statute is concerned. I do not suppose my hon. friend would care to employ in a statute he was drafting every expression that could be found in a text book. I think if he will consult modern works on the drafting of statutes he will find that any principle of that kind would be rather dangerous. I admit that the expression 'commercial paper' is used among business people, and may be used in text books ; but when you wish to be exact as you should be in a statute, it is not a very proper expression to use.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is a mere question of drafting. The first part of this section provides merely that the company shall borrow on its own security, that is to say, by way of mortgage, and the limitation is put of 75 per cent of the paid up capital stock of the company. With respect to their issue of commercial paper, to an unlimited amount, I think that is quite proper, because it is a well settled principle with us that commercial companies can issue negotiable paper to an unlimited extent. That is a mere matter to be settled as between themselves and their creditors. These words are used in this Bill to eliminate any doubt that might exist on the subject, and that is the only justification I can find for their occurrence here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The limitation here is not to the extent or 75 per cent of the value of the property mortgaged, but it is a limitation to 75 per cent of the paid up capital of the stock, or something of that kind. The two things do not seem to have very much relation to each other. I can see the force of the suggestion of the Minister of Justice, but the statute does not seem to be in that form.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think if my hon. friend will read it over again he will not find it open to his criticism. It would be restricted as a matter of course, because subsection 2 provides that they shall not go beyond 75 per cent of the paid up capital stock of the company. It comes to the same thing.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I hardly think so, because 75 per cent or the paid up capital of the stock of the company might be much more or less than 75 per cent of the value of the property mortgaged.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INDIAN RIVER RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure) moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 14) to incorporate the Indian River Railway Company, be agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill will explain what the amendments are.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Béland) is not here. But I understand that the amendment added to section 11 provides that this railway, which is only 20 miles long, may transfer its franchises, and that without this amendment it would be practically impossible to operate that railway successfully. The intention is to enable these corporators to hand over the franchises and privileges of the company to either one of the three or four railway companies mentioned in the amendment.

Motion agreed to, and amendments agreed to.

THE WINDSOR AND DETROIT UNION BRIDGE COMPANY.

Mr. CALVERT (for Mr. Cowan) moved that the amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 24) respecting the Windsor and Detroit Union Bridge Company be agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman who has charge of this Bill explain what is the purport of the amendment?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The clause inserted by the Senate is similar to the clause which was adopted in another Bill, during the present session, of an almost similar character. We provided in that clause that the work should be commenced within two years after an Act of congress is passed. But there is a limitation providing that if such consent is obtained within five years after the passing of this Act, this legislation should be null and void. The same reasons which warranted us in passing this section in the other case would sufficiently justify us in adopting the amendment of the Senate in this case. I do not know any reason why there should be any difference between the two. It only happens that the one came before us in this form and the other came before us in the other form.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It provides apparently that the work shall be commenced within two years after the Act of congress, or after the executive of the United States, or other competent authority, has consented, or approved of the work, but the period shall not exceed five years in all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We added that in committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And that the work must be completed within five years after its commencement ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I think that in the other Bill, there is a provision, not for the commencement of the work, but that the work shall be completed within a certain time after obtaining the consent of the American authorities to the building of the bridge.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They had the other Bill when this amendment was made and it is taken from that.

Motion agreed to, and amendment concurred in.

QUESTIONS.

POSTMASTER AT McDONALD'S CORNER, QUEEN'S, N.B.

Mr. WILMOT—by Mr. Hughes (Victoria)—asked :

1. Why was Hiram Humphrey, postmaster at McDonald's Corner, Queen's County, N.B., removed from that position ?

2. Upon whose recommendation was his successor appointed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) :

1. Because of political partisanship.

2. The Hon. A. S. White.

CONTRACT WITH A. I. AUGER, QUEBEC.

Mr. MONK—by Mr. Borden (Halifax)—asked :

1. Has the government given a contract to A. I. Auger, of Quebec, for spruce planks of 2 x 6 and 7 and 8 feet in length at a cost of $11.50 per thousand feet ?

2. Did the government call for public tenders before granting the said contract ?

3. What quantity of such planks should the said A. I. Auger furnish according to his contract ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). We cannot find any such contract in the department.

I.C.R.—DITCHING.

Mr. GAUVREAU asked :

Is the Department of Railways and Canals aware that damages have been caused to the lands of the farmers, particularly in Temiscouata, by the fact that the ditches along the line of the Intercolonial Railway have not, for several years back, been dug out ? If so, is it the intention of the honourable minister to give strict orders that the digging out of those ditches be, during this most favourable season, proceeded with as soon as possible ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The Department of Railways is not aware that damage has been caused particularly in Temiscouata county by the fact that ditches have not been cleaned out for several years back. The officials of the railway looked into this last season and it could not be seen that any ditching was necessary.

It is the intention to make the usual and customary examination of the ditches and to have any necessary work done after the working season begins.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—REPRESENTATION.

Mr. CLARKE—by Mr. Hughes (Victoria)—asked :

1. To what number of representatives in the House of Commons of Canada was each of the provinces of the Dominion found to be entitled, and given, as a result of the census taken in 1891 ?

2. To what number of representatives in the House of Commons of Canada is each of the provinces of the Dominion entitled as a result of the census taken in 1901 ?

3. What number of representatives will each such province be given in the House of Commons of Canada, as a result of the census taken in 1901 ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This question is premature and cannot be answered now.

NORTH-WEST RAILWAY LANDS.

Mr. SCOTT asked :

1. What number of acres of land have been, to date, patented to railway companies, other than the C.P.R., and C. & E. companies ?

2. What areas of lands which have been earned by such companies and by the C.P.R. and C. & E. companies, remain unpatented ?

3. Do certain of said companies and especially the C. P. R. company have lands held in reserve to fulfil their earned grants, which lands such companies have not signified that they will accept, and which state of affairs prevents said lands being acquired by other persons or otherwise disposed of by the government ? If so, what steps does the government propose to take to end this state of affairs, and when ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland). In the absence of the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton), I beg to say :

1. That the total number of acres patented is 2,027,128 acres.

Large areas have been selected and the different companies are now engaged making further selections. The government is urging on this work as rapidly as possible.

4. If so, has he assumed the duties of postmaster at Crathie post office ?

5. Has a petition been presented to the Postmaster General asking that one Augustus Burchick be appointed postmaster at said office ?

6. If so, is it the intention of the Postmaster General to appoint him ?

BRITISH ARMY PENSIONS.

Mr. OLIVER—by Mr. Scott—asked :

What are the rates of pension, under British army regulations, for disabling wounds, or to dependent relatives, in case of loss of life ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). I beg to refer the hon. gentleman to the Army Pension Act of Great Britain, which will be found no doubt in the library, and in which he can get all the information on the subject of pensions.

SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—HORSES FOR FOURTH CONTINGENT.

Mr. OLIVER—by Mr. Scott—asked :

1. Are horses for the fourth contingent to be purchased in the North-west Territories ?
2. If so, how many, and at what minimum standard, and maximum price ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). I am informed that a number of the horses will be purchased by the Imperial government in the North-west Territories. I am also informed that the minimum standard of size will be 14·2 hands. I cannot answer the hon. gentleman as to the maximum price.

IMPORTATION OF MAGAZINES AND NEWSPAPERS FROM GREAT BRITAIN AND THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax), asked :

1. What are the quantity and value of magazines and papers published in Great Britain and imported into Canada for the years 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900 and 1901 ?
2. What are the quantity and value of magazines and papers published in the United States and imported into Canada for the years above mentioned ?
3. What is the cost of postage or express for transmission of magazines and newspapers from Great Britain to Canada, and from the United States to Canada, respectively ?
4. What concessions or arrangements exist between Canada and each of the said countries with respect to the importation of or postage and charges upon magazines and newspapers and are the conditions more or less favourable for the importation thereof from Great Britain than from the United States ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). The department is not in possession of any figures which enable it to give an answer to the first three questions.

4. The terms and conditions regulating the exchange of newspapers and magazines with the United Kingdom were fixed by the Postal Union Convention, and those with reference to the exchange of newspapers and magazines with the United States were arranged by a special Postal Convention between the United States and Canada, both arrangements being prior to the present government taking office. According to the terms of these conventions, the rate of postage on newspapers from the United Kingdom is the postal union rate of 1 cent per 2 ounces, whilst the rate on newspapers and magazines entering Canada from the United States is the domestic rate thereof which at present is 1 cent per pound, if from the office of publication, otherwise it is the transient rate which is 1 cent per 4 ounces, and the rate on Canadian magazines and newspapers entering the United States is also the domestic rate thereof, which at present is one-half cent per pound when published in Canada and sent from the place of publication, otherwise the rate is 1 cent per 4 ounces.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). Perhaps I may be permitted to supplement the answer of the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock), by saying that magazines and newspapers published in Great Britain or in the United States have been admitted into Canada free of customs duties under the present tariff and under preceding tariffs. As the magazines and newspapers are delivered free, without the formality of a customs entry, there is no customs record of the quantity and value of such magazines and newspapers imported into Canada from Great Britain or the United States for the years 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900 and 1901, except when imported in bulk. The value of such importations (in bulk) including fashion plates appears, according to the Trade and Navigation Returns to be as follows :

	From G. B.	From U. S.
1896..	$22,303	$ 82,122
1897..	21,618	100,011
1898..	25,695	111,020
1899..	28,151	102,000
1900..	27,589	107,340
1901..	36,775	113,444

1. The number of seine licenses issued for the province of British Columbia for the year 1901.
2. To whom the said licenses were issued.
3. The number operated by those to whom they were issued, and by whom.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL MONTGOMERY.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto) moved for :

Copies of all memorials, petitions or protests received respecting the erection of a monument to General Montgomery at Quebec, with dates ; also, copies of replies sent thereto.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is no objection at all to bringing these papers down. I might intimate to my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) that the gentlemen in the city of Boston who asked from the city of Quebec the privilege of erecting a tablet commemorative of the death of General Montgomery, have withdrawn their application.

Motion agreed to.

I.C.R.—PURCHASE OF LOCOMOTIVES AND RAILWAY CARS.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto) moved for :

Return showing :—

1. Number of locomotive engines purchased for the Canadian government railways each year since 1st of July, 1896, and up to date, giving—

(a.) Date of purchase of each such locomotive engine.

(b.) Name and address of person or company from whom purchased.

(c.) Price paid for each such locomotive.

(d.) Whether tenders were called for in each case.

(e). How many of such engines were manufactured in Canada, and how many purchased in the United States.

2. Also, number of railway cars purchased since 1st July, 1896, specifying the kind of cars purchased, the number of each kind purchased and the capacity; the price per car paid for each kind, the place where manufactured, and the total number of each kind manufactured in Canada and the United States respectively.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). There will be no objection to this motion provided my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) will consent to change the date to a more remote period. The hon. gentleman asked that this information should be furnished from the 1st of July, 1896, to the present time. If the hon. gentleman would consent to insert in the dates '1890' in place of '1896', I would consent to the motion.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the hon. minister say 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose the hon. gentleman would have no object in excluding '1890.'

Mr. CLARKE. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then we will say from the 1st of July, 1890.

Mr. CLARKE. Very well.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

THE ACTIVE MILITIA—TRAINING OF OFFICERS.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (Victoria) moved :

That, in the opinion of this House, the system of training citizens of Canada for the positions of officers in the active militia should be such as would furnish the greatest number of properly qualified persons in each regimental district necessarily required, upon a war basis, at the least possible cost consistent with efficiency ; and that all needless hindrances, customs and expense in the way of any and every citizen obtaining such military education should be removed.

He said : In presenting this motion to the House I am merely carrying out the policy that I have for the last ten or twelve years advocated in this House, namely : That the cost of training the officers in Canada should be reduced to a minimum, consistent with due efficiency being maintained. It is well known to every one connected with our militia force that the trained officers are not at all numerous enough in that force at present. There is in fact a dearth of officers, and it is no secret that in fitting out the few regiments we sent to South Africa, there has been considerable trouble in getting properly qualified and trained officers to accept these commands. It was my intention to bring this matter up in its present form last year, but I deferred it in the hope that the unfortunate and prolonged war in South Africa might be brought to a close. In view of the undoubted approach of peace now, I feel justified in laying before the House and the country my views on this question. The subject is not at all new to me. In England as well as in Canada I have noticed a deficiency in qualified officers to command the men who have voluteered to serve. I have visited on various occasions military centres in Canada and in Great Britain, and I found that a spirit had grown up and had been perpetuated among the regular officers of the Imperial service and of the permament corps—a spirit of, what they themselves call superciliousness ; a spirit which must bode ill to any nation perpetuating it. The officer who is merely an officer for the sake of the position it may confer on him ; the officer who does not give his whole heart and his whole soul to the cause he is engaged in cannot by any possibility be a proper officer to lead men on active service. The Montreal 'Gazette' of to-day, commenting on a very carefully prepared article by the American Col. Charles W. Larned in the 'International Monthly,' says :

It is not, however, from the recognition of the long acknowledged merits of our soldiers, but from the admitted shortcomings of those who command them that the profitable lessons of recent warfare are to be drawn. Col. Larned finds the British officer of to-day pretty much what his predecessor was in the days of Frederic the Great—'without knowledge of war, without fear of death.'

This, as we all know, is an extract from Thomas Carlyle. I do not for a moment pretend to say that the officers of the Canadian permanent corps and the British regular army are not in every sense of the word brave men, but I say that they are not thoroughly trained to command in the face of the modern conditions of war. That there is need of reform is admitted on every hand, and my only reason for taking the stand I do is to insist, so far as it lies in my power, that the required reform should be carried out, not only in our colonial system but in the Imperial system as well, because it cannot be too well understood that Canada is a part of the empire and purposes remaining so. We all know, however, that once war is over, things have a strong tendency to fall back into the old groove, and I have no doubt that unless the sturdy, intelligent commercial classes of England and the empire take this matter up, in a year or two you will find the Piccadilly ring in full sway again, and the zeal for reform completely set at naught, and it is in order to do what little I can to bring about reform and prevent a relapse into our old staid condition of apathy that I take this opportunity of placing myself on record.

In the olden time—and not so very many years ago after all—the weapon used by the British was a muzzle loader, with a range of from 250 to 300 yards. Frontal attacks were then possible, and in such attacks the stern, unflinching bravery of the British soldier was unexcelled. As soon as the enemy had discharged one volley and before they could reload, the British troops were into them with the bayonet, and the British bayonet invariably carried the day. Times, however, have since then changed. In the Crimean war many of the British regiments were armed with the Minnie rifle, which had a range possibly 150 to 200 yards longer. This struck terror into the hearts of the Russians and largely assisted in the demoralization of that force by greatly inferior numbers of British troops. In the American war, the Springfield rifle was chiefly used, but the Americans also purchased a large number of the Enfield muzzle loaders. In fact, very few, if any, breech loaders were then in use. Now, take any record you choose of that war, take the record of the proprietor of the Ottawa 'Free Press,' Mr. Chas. Mitchell, who fought gallantly through it, take the record of any historian and you will find that they all bear out this statement, that with the muzzle loading rifles, having a range of from 305 to 400 yards, a frontal attack is out of the question, and it is absolutely impossible to capture any position by such tactics. In the Egyptian campaign, we find the same conclusion borne out. And I do not know that I can do better than quote from an unbounded authority, Henderson's History of the American Civil War, to show the effect of the old muzzle loading rifles on troops advancing in frontal attack.

And we must not forget that although in those days, a man could not load and fire more than two shots while the enemy was advancing against him, yet even then it was absolutely impossible for a frontal attack to succeed. Here is Mr. Henderson's description of how persistently the Northern troops endeavoured to drive the Southerners from their entrenchments, and how, though the Northerners were in overwhelming numbers, their attacks were repulsed :

> Morell's attack was directed against Jackson's right. In the centre of the Federal line a mounted officer, whose gallant bearing lived long in the memories in the Stonewall division, rode out in front of the column, and, drawing his sabre, led the advance over the rolling grass-land. The Confederate batteries, with a terrible cross-fire, swept the Northern ranks from end to end. The volleys of the infantry, lying behind their parapet, struck them full in face. But the horse and its rider lived through it all. The men followed close, charging swiftly up the slope, and then the leader, putting his horse straight at the embankment, stood for a moment on the top. The daring feat was seen by the whole Confederate line, and a yell went up from the men along the railroad, 'Don't kill him ! don't kill him !' But while the cry went up horse and rider fell in one limp mass across the earthwork, and the gallant Northerner was dragged under shelter by his generous foes.
> With such men as this to show the way what soldiers would be backward ? As the Russians followed Skobeleff's grey up the bloody slopes of Plevna, so the Federals followed the bright chestnut of this unknown hero, and not till the colours waved within thirty paces of the parapet did the charge falter. But, despite the supports that came thronging up, Jackson's soldiers, covered by the earthwork, opposed a resistance which no mere frontal attack could break. Three times, as the lines in rear merged with the first, the Federal officers brought their men forward to the assault, and three times they were hurled back, leaving hundreds of their number dead and wounded on the blood-soaked turf. One regiment of the Stonewall division, posted in a copse beyond the railroad, was driven in, but others, when cartridges failed them, had recourse, like the Guards at Inkerman, to the stones which lay along the railway bed; and with these strange weapons, backed up by the bayonets, more than one desperate effort was repulsed. In arresting Garnet after Kernstown, because when his ammunition was exhausted he had abandoned his position, Jackson had lost a good general, but he had taught his soldiers a useful lesson. So long as the cold steel was left to them, and their flanks were safe, they knew that their indomitable leader expected them to hold their ground, and right gallantly they responded. For over thirty minutes the battle raged along the front of the closest range. Opposite a deep cutting the colours of a Federal regiment, for nearly half an hour, rose and fell, as bearer after bearer was shot down within ten yards of the muzzles of the Confederate rifles, and after the fight a hundred dead Northerners were found where the flag had been so gallantly upheld.

I might refer to another battle, the battle of Sharpesburg, where out of 19,400 Southern troops, 5,754 were placed out of action in the short space of three hours, while making a frontal attack in the face of muzzle loading rifles.

In the present day our rifles have a range five times as great as those with which Jackson's troops faced the Northerners at the battle of Bull's Run. But no account seems to have been taken of the changed conditions by our British officers. In the face of this improvement in weapons, despite the great advantage of smokeless powder and the consequent impossibility almost of ascertaining exactly the enemy's position, we have seen in Africa frontal attack after frontal attack made by British troops. We have seen brave men storming the heights of Belmont—an acclivity steeper than the banks of the Ottawa river here—when they could have walked around the position, thrown up their entrenchments, and rested on the plains smoking their pipes, waiting for Cronje to be starved into surrender for want of food and water. We saw our troops advance on the Modder river in like manner. We saw them following the same tactics at Magersfontein, Colenso, Stormberg, and Graspan. To this blundering system we can attribute a series of disasters. British troops, whose courage no man dare question, advanced fearlessly in the face of rifles, with a range at least five times as great as those used in the American war, and that was called generalship. It is time we should realize that the strategy and tactics of the old days are worse than ineffective at present. Greater attention must be paid to scouting. Formerly it would have been safe to march across country, with a patrol 400 yards distant on each side, because that was the range of the enemy's rifle. But to do so to-day would simply make one food for powder for an enemy occupying positions a mile distant on either side. But our British officer seems unable to recognize the changed conditions. As Carlyle says of them : He knows how to die, but not how to lead. With a rifle having a range of 3,000 yards, the old formation is absolutely impracticable. To face a line to-day, with each man distant fifty yards, is a much more dangerous performance than it would have been, with the old style of rifle to have placed the men only a yard distant. But this evidently has not dawned on many of the officers in South Africa at present, and you have distinguished generals placing their men almost in close formation, waiting for the Boers to round them up, and then you have another of these unfortunate surrenders that have saddened the hearts of so many in the empire. I have an extract here from a western Ontario paper, and it sums the matter up in very terse form :

> In hand-to-hand fights the British have no equal. In brain-to-brain contests they appear to be seriously handicapped. Strategy counts in modern warfare. Our British officers do not appear to be strategists. We must honestly confess that from what we have seen of the Englishman 'just out' from England we have not been very favourably impressed with his tact or his abilities. We are of the opinion that the British army needs a thorough re-organization, based on promotion by merit and not birth. When that system is introduced in the army we may then expect to see capable and efficient service on the part of the British military forces.

I have pointed out, incidentally, that no fault can possibly be found with the British soldier. In the war in South Africa he has been the marvel of the world for the bravery, endurance and heroism he has shown. The British soldier has never complained, he has done his duty on any and every occasion, and wherever he has been led he has followed. Nor can any fault be found with the bravery of the British officer. I am free to say the British officer is a well-meaning fellow, as a rule, a very genial fellow. Still, the great weakness of the British army is the training of the British officers. No army hereafter can expect to have an officer for every half company and have his men within reach of his voice, or to have a sergeant for every section. Training in the future must be in the direction of fitting every individual to control himself, subject to an elastic discipline covering the whole force. And, in this very excellent article by Col. Larned to which I have already referred, it is pointed out that the logic of events has necessitated a further reduction, and, in the future, the fighting unit will be the individual soldier. With that conclusion any one who has studied the modern conditions will agree—that the object of the training must be to make each individual command and control himself, subject, as I have said, to an elastic discipline covering the whole body.

In discussing a question of this kind one is very liable to be misunderstood. My good and intelligent friend the Minister of Militia and Defence (Hon. Mr. Borden), entirely misunderstood the tenor of my remarks in a recent discussion. And when an intelligent man and one accustomed to the discussion of these things, such as my good friend the minister is, will take one up wrongly—yet I thought I spoke very clear English—how much more easily may one be misunderstood by the uninitiated in the country, particularly when his remarks go before them in partial form. However, I trust that on this occasion there will be no misunderstanding. No one, I trust, will run away with the notion, for instance, that I am, in any sense, a pro-Boer. At the same time I want to say that the Boer individually is a splendid fellow. As I reminded the House a year ago, the Boer is descended from two grand races, the Dutch and Huguenots of France, and finer men individually, considering the opportunities they have had, it would be hard to find. And when they have received the benefit of British civilization and British institutions, when they have learned to be free men in the true sense of the term, I am satisfied that Britain will find very few of her colonists more progressive and more loyal than these Boers in South Africa. I trust that the day is not far distant when this result will be attained. While a man may respect an opponent he fights with, yet it is his duty to take every honourable advantage of him, that is, it is his duty to defeat him as speedily as possible and bring the war to a close. The greatest friend of the Boer I maintain has not been the Hollander, it has not been even the Irish American. And on that point I may say that those on the British side in South Africa have the highest admiration and respect for the gallant soldiers of the Irish race who fought so nobly and so well on the side of Britain in that war. And they had a complete respect for any soldier fighting against them who stood up and gave them a severe fight. But they have nothing but supreme contempt for the so-called Irish brigade led by Col. Burke, who ran whenever a shot was fired against them. The Germans were supposed to be friendly to the Boers. But that is a mistake, because the people of German birth in Africa, whether living among the Boers or among the British were almost unanimously pro-British. One would naturally expect the sympathy of these people to go with the Boers because of their smaller numbers in this war. But, Sir, the greatest friend of the Boers to my mind is the badly trained British officer. We all know that Britain has never been loved by foreign nations. Rivalry in trade, in progress, in civilization and liberty have made Britain more or less detested by other powers, yet she was always feared by other nations because of her supposed prowess in war. But I very much fear that to-day, owing to the number of failures in the field in South Africa, there is less of that tendency to respect Britain through fear than there formerly was. However, with proper reform in the army, with better training for her officers, she will be able to keep the proud position she has held in the respect of other nations. Here let me quote further from our American friend Col. Larned some words that will show the solidity of Britain's power :

> No other power on earth could have placed an equipped army of 200,000 on another continent 10,000 miles away.

And he goes on :

> And for that matter what warrior on the globe can show a like record of endurance and glory in foreign climes as the British Grenadier who, from equator to pole, has marched and bled and conquered, founded empires, overthrown despotisms and made ready the ground for an imposing structure of equity, order, sound finance and peace.

These are the opinions of an American critic, and I heartily endorse them. And when the British army is properly trained, that is when the officers of the British army are properly trained, I am satisfied that the one weakness in that great body will have been remedied. There is a delusion harboured by many that an officer must be one of the aristocracy, that an aristocratic army is necessary to the up-building of a limited monarchy. People in this country will hardly have any such opinion. We have seen the sons of tailors, shoemakers and farmers rise to the proud position of Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain. We have seen these sons of the same class of men rise to the highest places in the commerce of the nation, and also in the church. I fail, then, to see why the sons of these same men, given the proper opportunity should not rise to similar positions in the army. As Mr. Hales, the very able correspondent of the Australian paper pointed out in an article which I see in the 'Montreal Star' of January 18th, 1902.

> I contend that there is nothing, or there should be nothing in a properly constituted army, to cause a man to lose caste by joining as a ranker. Put a gentleman and a farm labourer side by side in the ranks to-morrow, and the gentleman, if he is made of the proper material, ought to distance his opponent in every kind of legitimate competition. He starts the contest with all the advantages that an excellent education carry, he has knowledge of many things which must help him if he is an earnest soldier, knowledge which the farm labourer has had no chance of obtaining. If, with such a handicap as that, he cannot win his way above the heads of his fellows, win it fairly like a man, it must be because he is lacking in qualities which he should possess, and if he lacks those qualities the army is no place for him, because the Imperial army of the future must not be a hothouse for exotics. I would make no distinction. If the King's son desired to wear a soldier's uniform, he should first of all wear the humble dress of one of his royal father's privates. Why should he not ? Is it a badge of disgrace, a mark of dishonour ? Have not thousands of well-bred men all over the empire donned the private's uniform, and fought in it during the present war, and are they any worse for having done so ? Have they contracted any moral leprosy. Have they forfeited the right to call themselves gentlemen ? Personally I think not ; a gentleman can be a gentleman in a lance-corporal's uniform quite as surely as in a Field Marshal's if he is made of the correct material ; if not, then why all this talk of native superiority ? Is it the Bond Street tailor who makes the gentleman and the East end sweater who makes the 'Tommy ?' I don't believe it, I won't believe it.

These are the words of Mr. Hales, the very able correspondent from Australia, who has made himself a name throughout the British Empire in his criticisms of the Imperial army. Then we hear the statement made that the men prefer fighting under officers of the aristocratic class. I fail to see that that is the case either, and I maintain that the history of the British Empire shows that the men who fight under officers of their own class fight as bravely and as willingly as the men of any other corps in the service, and the same is true of Canadians. However, I do not object to the officers of the British Empire being taken from the aristocratic class. By all means give them every opportunity; but first of all let it be required of them, as Mr. Hales says, that they should be equal in every respect, and superior in many respects, to any other type of men that they may seek to discipline. Let them be trained for the position of leading men, so that when they are placed in control of the lives of their fellow citizens they will not make the fatal blunders that have too often been made in the present unfortunate war in South Africa. A very eminent Dutch Reformed minister in South Africa, in writing to Mr. D. J. Malan, a pro-Boer of Wellington, Cape Colony, says :

> I believe those who keep this miserable struggle going are the pro-Boers of England, and the merciless Kruger clique on the continent of which Paul Kruger is the head. They have not sent their people (women and children) one cent as far as I know ; while the British nation is spending thousands upon us.

This is an extract from an open letter of this very prominent Dutch Reformed minister to a pro-Boer living in Cape Colony. Now, the British pro-Boer is a man who should have some respect for his own mother, he should love his empire, he should back his own people against the enemy, come from what source they may. He knows, if he knows anything, that the British never fought in a more righteous war in the whole history of the empire; yet the British pro-Boer, for the object of gaining some political point, or to uphold some fad, and yet realizing the tolerance of Great Britain, never misses an opportunity of helping the Boers. This man, Sir, I maintain is the most despicable of creatures, and as this clergyman rightly says, is no doubt the cause of the war being prolonged.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Speaker, the British pro-Boer has assisted the Boers in demanding a peace, which, in the opinion of the best men of the empire is not honourable. He has helped the Boers by condemning the humane action of the British in caring for the women and children of the Boer forces in South Africa. This is, I think, the first instance in the history of warfare where a nation which has conquered another has taken care of the women and children and thus relieved the enemy of one of the greatest burdens that any people could possibly have placed upon their shoulders. In this respect I have to point out that we find no commiseration from these British pro-Boers for the thousands and tens of thousands of loyalist women and children who have, since the month of October, 1899, been refugees, who have been encamped at various parts in the loyal districts in South Africa, refugees from the districts included in the war area of Johannisburg, Pretoria, Bloemfontein, Kimberley, north of Kimberley and the various centres where these people had, in thousands, to seek refuge in the concentration camps. You find no sympathy for these women and children on the part of these British pro-Boers. Yet, when you bring Boer women and children into one of your concentration camps you do something that shocks all these pro-Boers. In that way they have encouraged the Boers in the field and have assisted them in continuing the war. But, the British pro-Boer has also helped the Boers in arms by censuring the men to whom the British Empire owes so much in this matter—Mr. Chamberlain, Lord Milner, Lord Salisbury and Mr. Balfour. These men have been unstintingly condemned by the British pro-Boers. Money in thousands, I believe, has been expended by the Boer agencies throughout the world to create an adverse opinion to these men. But, on the other hand, it has assisted in creating a kindly sympathy for them in South Africa and other British colonies. By these actions I claim the British pro-Boer has been disloyal to his country because he has encouraged the Boers to continue in the war. He has also been disloyal by giving assistance to the enemy, by encouraging the demand on the part of the Boers that in consideration of laying down their arms they should have certain concessions granted to them in the way of independence or semi-independence. This, I am satisfied, would be regarded with the greatest antagonism by all loyalists throughout the empire. The Boers from the outset have known the terms upon which they could obtain conditions should they surrender. I am not going to speak of any negotiations that may have taken place at one time or another during the war for a settlement honourable to both parties that might have been reached, but any settlement granting the Boers independence, or semi-independence, free from British supremacy, free from the British flag, could not be tolerated by the British Empire or by Great Britain as a unit. This district, as I have previously pointed out to this House, is absolutely necessary to be held for Great Britain as underlying the integrity and peace of South Africa. Great Britain must have her naval stations and coaling stations at the Cape. Therefore, I claim that those who have been instrumental in encouraging the Boers in the field have been disloyal and are so still. The British pro-Boer also helps the Boer by holding out a helping hand of encouragement to those pro-Boer emissaries who have been roaming Europe and the United States. Then, he has helped the Boers in the field by slandering one of the grandest of men. I refer to Mr. Thomas Atkins. The British soldier has been unstintingly slandered in this war. Foreign nations have not hesitated to charge him with all kinds of atrocities. I venture to say that not one case of outrage or atrocity from the beginning to the end of the war has been proven against the British soldier. On every occasion, so far as any definite record can show, the British soldier has conducted himself towards women and children with the same kindness that always characterizes the British soldier. He treats the enemy just as he would treat a fallen friend; so that, there is nothing in that charge. I can give instances—in fact I have given instances—where attempts were made to assert that unkindness and harsher methods than were necessary had been resorted to by the British soldiers towards these people, but I am satisfied that these assertions find no echo in the hearts of any loyal persons or of any persons who understand the conditions of South Africa. The Boers have also been helped in the field by those who have been ever apologising for Boer outrages. I do not say that the Boers have been outrageous towards the loyalist women. I am proud to say they also have shown that magnanimity of spirit that characterizes the races from which they sprung and from which the British soldier has sprung, but that they have been tricky, cowardly and brutal in the manner in which they have entrapped the British soldier no one can deny. They have again and again shown the white flag on one part of the field in order to decoy the British soldiers while they have had, on another part of the field, a force of men concealed ready to shoot down the British soldiers like so many rabbits. This occurred more frequently early in the war than during recent times. They have again and again held up their hands in token of surrender and as soon as the British would advance they would pick up their rifles and shoot them down. They have been allowed through the kindness of heart of the British generals to retire to their farms when they saw the British advance and, taking up their rifles, which had been buried, they have waylaid and captured British convoys. When they would be waited upon by a British officer they would place their hands to their hearts, look the British officer in the face and say: We did hear some firing last night and they went away over there. I could give instance after instance of this sort of thing. These British pro-Boers always have very great sympathy for that type of fellow. It is not my intention, in my criticism to build up that sort of man. My desire is to strengthen the bonds of the British Empire and the British army which has been weakened by the inferior training of the British officer. It is also my desire to make it clear that no one class in the empire is absolutely necessary to the building up of the empire, that no one class has a monopoly of loyalty to this country. To pass through Britain and to listen to many of these gentlemen who constitute a large number of the army officers, one would imagine that the English army officer was himself the great bulwark of the British Empire and that he had a monopoly of loyalty. I wish it to be understood that the inhabitants of the farms in the back parts of Canada, of the remote stations in Australia, in New Zealand and in South Africa, the rank and file, have as high an appreciation of their duty to the British Empire and as great an affection for the old land as the most highly titled aristocrat in the empire, and his good will and assistance are just as necessary for maintaining the supremacy of the empire as are those of any one on the other side of the water. In speaking of the campaign in South Africa, I may be permitted to point out that the departments—I trust the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence will make a note of this even if I do not go into that point in detail, and specify clearly as I can the particulars—that were brought in contact with the British business heart have been successful. The mobilizing of the troops, the merchant stations, the transport of troops, the merchant ships engaged in handling the freight, the supplies, the munitions of war, the transport of these commodities to the seat of war, by that magnificent Cape government system of railways—all those services have been a success. I hesitate to mention the name of any one officer above that of another who deserves credit, but I will mention the name of Mr. Price the assistant superintendent of the Cape system of railways. All these departments connected with transportation, organization, rations, equipment, supplies, the management of trains and of ships, all of these departments which came into immediate contact with the civil, commercial and business communities, have been an entire success and only one department, the combatant department, has been found a failure. Do not misunderstand me, Sir, there have been found in the combatant department, in spite of the inferior system of training, men who have succeeded beyond all measure, men whose names will go down in history as having shed lustre on the British arms and men who invariably brought honour to her cause. In spite of the lack of training their innate adaptability has found vent and they have succeeded in retaining the prestige of Britain—names such as White, the hero of Ladysmith, French, whom I consider to be after all the most modern soldier, General Alderson, Lord Kitchener, Knox, Kelly-Kenny, Lord Roberts, Settle, Hunter, the Hamiltons, Brabant, Scobell, Smith-Dorrien, Dundonald, Pole-Carew, Rimington and some others. These men proved that, despite the dwarfing system of Great Britain, the greatness of the names which they bear have survived and that they have made themselves an absolute necessity to the success of the British arms.

I did purpose speaking in detail in reference to the treatment of the colonial officers by the Imperial officer in Africa, and when I refer to Africa I would extend my remarks to include the treatment of the militia officer in Canada and the militia officer in the old country, by the Imperial officer generally. No one doubts that there is a very bitter feeling between the colonial officers in Africa to-day, and the Imperial officer. That goes without saying. It is dwelt on in every newspaper. The Toronto 'Telegram' has a long article on the subject from which I read the following extract:

> The complaints which come from South Africa over the English officers' treatment of the colonial officers may be explained partially by misunderstanding and partially by the narrow intelligence of the worst sort of English officer. The cause of the trouble is deeper than the contempt of the Englishmen for the colonials. The real trouble is the arrogant intolerance which marks the attitude of the professional soldier toward the amateur soldier.
> This arrogance is a folly not peculiar to English officers. Hundreds of English officers are free from such a feeling, and Canada's permanent force has bred in many of its officers as fine a line of contempt for the volunteer officer as any Aldershot Englishman can display.
> It is not a question of old countryman and colonial. It is simply a question of brains or no brains.

The Toronto 'Globe' has also commented on this matter, and the 'Mail' published an article of considerable length in reference to it. These officers of the permanent corps have a kind of close corporation among themselves, and they fear that if any extension is encouraged in the militia it will threaten the permanency and the exclusiveness of their system. I have, I think, successfully explained to a number of those gentlemen that the result of the establishment of a large militia force along proper lines in the old country as well as in Canada, would be to immensely strengthen the hands of these officers, if these officers are what they should be, and if they are not, then they should be relegated to other walks of life where they will not be as so many pensioners on the pay sheet of the nation. I may point out that in the early part of the war, no colonial officer, no matter how high his rank or how great his experience, was given any post of command. At Belmont; at Gras Pan; at Modder river; at Maggersfontein; at Stormberg, there were no colonials, and there were but a few at Colenso, under Lord Dundonald. None of these colonial officers held commands and in many cases British officers of lower rank were placed over them. I trust that the Minister of Militia will take note of this. We have in Africa to-day, colonials who should be perfectly qualified to command these corps, and to command in action if necessary; but yet, there is not one Canadian in Africa who has ever commanded a corps independently in an engagement. Col. Otter of the first contingent was never entrusted with a command. He planned the Sunnyside expedition, furnished all the data in connection with it, but when it came to carrying out the plan, an officer junior to him—a very good officer indeed, and I have nothing to say against him—but an officer the junior of Col. Otter was sent to command the expedition, and Col. Otter remained at the base to play second fiddle. In the advance on Stormberg, that memorable night when General Gatacre met with disaster; a colonial officer who had been born and brought up in the region and knew its dangers, ventured to caution General Gatacre upon the blunder he was about to make, but he got his dismissal there and then. That colonial officer showed me the note from General Gatacre dismissing him from his command, because, knowing the region, he dared to point out to the General that he was taking a wrong route and that danger lurked ahead. Where ever you go in South Africa you will find that no colonial officer got any prominence or any command in the field. If the British officer is at all competent, the colonial officer is, by hook or crook, put under him. The premier of New Zealand has taken a very pronounced stand upon this matter, and I trust that our Minister of Militia will look into it. Mark you, I have not changed one whit in my belief that it is Canada's duty under proper conditions to continue to assist Britain for the protection of the empire at large, but in all such matters as this Canada should see to it that her officers are properly commissioned and entrusted with proper commands in the field.

I now come to the discussion of the Canadian as well as the Imperial permanent forces. We are told that any departure from the present system would be the breaking up of discipline. I dare say many hon. gentlemen in this House have visited the barracks of a permanent corps, and have seen some illustration of what they call discipline. Let us take for example how our young fellows attend these institutions, and I have a case in mind now which will illustrate what their idea of discipline is. Three sons of a family go to the city of Toronto; one enters as a private in one of the schools; one happens to be an officer, and the youngest attends the Toronto university. The private enters the school through a doorway guarded by a man with fixed bayonet; he is taken to the barrack room where he is made to sleep with a lot of fellows possibly congenial spirits and possibly not. His food and his clothing and his bedding are of the commonest kind. I find no fault with that, for if a fellow is going to be a soldier he should take soldiers fare. The other brother passes into the officers quarters; he has no fixed time to regulate him; he has not to turn his light out and go to bed at a certain hour. If the young private wants to study he has to do so in a room where there are a great many others, but when the officer wishes to study he can retire to his room, although there is always more or less entertainment provided for him. The private must have his light out at a certain hour of the night the same as a penitentiary bird. Now take the lot of the young man attending the university. He lives where he wishes; he is a free man. The one is a young fellow with a desire to serve his country; the other is training to be a business man, but the latter is free and the other is not. I venture to say that the so-called discipline to which the private is subjected, unmans him and unfits him to as great an extent as the independent surroundings of the other tends to make him a good, and self-reliant citizen. There are 6,000 young men studying at the universities in Toronto, and I venture to say that they are better men in the end than if they were subjected to this so-called discipline of the military school. In the military school they call the rule and restrictions of prison life, discipline. Why, under the present ticket of leave system, the prisoners in Kingston penitentiary are not far removed from the discipline which the soldiers are subjected to in one of our permanent corps. The serfdom of the dark ages, they call discipline; the slavery of the old time and the subjection of the blacks, they call it discipline. The repressing of the human mind and of the human soul; they term discipline. The plebeian spirit which a great many endeavour to infuse into the people, (which we find unfortunately in the ignorant and the broken spirited poor) and the fawning of flunkies, that is what these gentlemen term discipline. They do not understand that anything which tends to unman a man, to humble and to humiliate him and to degrade him, is the reverse of discipline. Discipline to them is repression and not freedom. Discipline to them is fear and debasement, and not the ennobling or the uplifting of our fellow man. Their so-called system is control from without, without any self-control or control from within. One English paper speaking of the war says :

> Battles cannot be won without systematic training in the science of war. But what is the science of war ? The Boers have made successful war without caring a fig for the so-called science that Europe has been slavishly and systematically following for generations.

I maintain that history proves that where an equal number of free men have met an equal number of these so-called soldiers of rigid discipline similarly armed, victory has invariably rested with the free men. Read history from the earliest days to the present, and you will find that wherever regular armies have met irregular armies equally equipped, the regular armies have always suffered defeat. Long before this Boer war began, I pointed out to the general officer commanding in Canada, that unless the British tactics in the coming war were changed, disaster sure and dire would befall the British arms as it did in the African war of 1881.

The British system has the result of converting freemen into serfs or slaves, or men whose liberty is oppressed by so-called discipline. The discipline of these gentlemen belongs to the days when tyrants and divine right rulers held sway, which fortunately have gone by. It belongs to the period when manhood was considered a crime, when freedom and liberty were unknown, and human hearts ground down beneath oppression and repression. That form of discipline should long since have vanished from liberty-loving, self-governing communities. It survives only in prisons and similar institutions in the Dominion of Canada to-day, in the permanent corps, and in the British regular army. Let me give an illustration. Here are two young fellows in the city of Toronto. One is a university student, and the other is a private attending the school in order to gain his certificate. They both go to the theatre, and the one comes home just as sober as the other. The student sits up a good part of the night and studies and gets up and goes to lecture in the morning and nothing is said to him. But the other, because he arrived in barracks a few minutes late, is locked up in the guard room all night, brought before some officer in the morning, and treated with greater indignity than if he had robbed a bank. He is probably confined in barracks for a certain number of days. I remember in the old days, when our annual camps were surrounded by fixed bayonets, the young fellows used to break out at night on purpose just to start the guards and give them a run. I have often done it myself when a private, and when any of the boys got caught, they simply put it down to their bad luck. But there was always more disorder in the camp in those days, when surrounded by fixed bayonets, than in the camps we have had this last couple of years, where there are no guards except where the stores are kept. That goes to show simply that trained men can control themselves and that self-control is the highest form of existence.

A destructive critic, I may say, I regard as a nuisance, and I do not intend to put myself in that category. If I point out the failures in the system, I am always prepared to suggest a substitute. I have shown that I would give the greatest freedom to the young men in the permanent corps as well as to the young men attending the schools. To-day, when we want an officer to attend the military schools, what do we do ? We send in an application for such an officer to attend a course at the permanent schools at a certain time. Let me give an instance that came within my own experience last year, to show how this system works. A young officer was anxious to attend the school, but his business engagements prevented his doing so at any other time than the beginning of the year. He sent in his application to be allowed to attend at that period, but a few weeks later he got an order to attend the 1st of November—a thing which it was absolutely impossible for him to do. He therefore gave up all idea of attending at all. Two days, however, before the 1st of January, an order came for him to go to the school, but of course not having anticipated this, he had made other arrangements, so that it was absolutely impossible for him to comply with the order. Thus he lost his opportunity. I would pursue a different plan. Instead of educating a limited number of men herded up together in a barracks, subjected to the indignity of so-called discipline—the discipline of prison repression—I would allow these young men to board in and around the city. They would then report for drill at certain hours, and go through all the routine in barracks necessary for a soldier to learn. And let me tell you, Sir, that two-thirds of the so-called training, practiced in the schools, is absolute nonsense. As described by a writer in the 'Free Press' of Saturday last—a gentleman whose name I happen to know, and who is an officer occupying a very distinguished position—it is 'absolute rot.' I would have these young men board outside and report themselves each day. I would not have them there as soldiers, but as cadets, wearing a separate uniform from the regulars. They would have to report at certain hours, which in itself is great discipline, as they have to get up in the early morning and sometimes walk miles for the purpose of attending drill. I would have them go through their drill and routine, item by item, and let them fill position after position. I would even have them in the lecture room instructing their juniors and doing the same work in the field. In other words, I would have our permanent corps officers occupy a much more dignified position. Instead of storming around the barrack yard and bullying a few poor cadets, I would have them occupy rather the positions of lecturers or professors in a college, and all this routine of scrubbing floors and making up beds, which it is of no earthly use for men to learn, I would do away with altogether, and let these recruits attend the schools as students, learn everything they could, and then go home. How is it now ? We have a course amounting to usually three months for the privates and non-coms ; then we have a course for subalterns of another three months ; then there is another course for captains and field officers' certificates, and commanding officers' certificates, and musketry instruction certificates. A man has to loaf around Ottawa five or six weeks in order to get a musketry instruction certificate, which any one of ordinary intelligence, and who has ever handled a rifle, could pick up in a day or two. Then there is the signalling course. But not one of these things is done systematically. A bit is done here and another bit there. The equitation course, the musketry course, the signalling course, the maxim gun course—all these various courses are scattered about, and instead of a young man being able to take the whole thing and go through it all in about fifteen straight months, he has to take them at intervals and breaks up three or four years in the work. All this instruction should be centralized. Let us have a school at Toronto, another at Ottawa, and so on, but have everything centralized in the one school. And I would have the young cadet enter at sixteen years of age or even younger. General Wolfe was an adjutant of his regiment, and a very good soldier, when sixteen years old. Nearly one-third of the men who stormed the heights at Alma were under twenty years of age. Nearly one-third of the men who stood in Wellington's veteran squares at Waterloo, were under twenty years of age, and had been enlisted less than six weeks. What we require is officers, and I would turn them out in unlimited numbers. And when they return to their homes you can always call on them again as part of the reserve. By having these young officers trained, you would have a large number of men on whom you could call at a moment's notice, fit to command your troops and trained in the best way possible. I would have discipline from within—the unit controlling himself, rather than hampered and hedged in by these so-called disciplinary rules of the school. I cannot do better than quote from this very able article in Saturday's Daily 'Free Press.' I happen to know the pen of the writer as well as the young officer who edits the column in that paper. The writer, speaking of an article in the 'Canadian Military Gazette,' says :

> These facts hold good under prevailing conditions. If the schools were as efficient as they should be, a provisional school would not be the most suitable and would not give better results, but as things exist to-day there is no doubt but the advantages are in favour of local training.

Some time ago, I took the liberty of making a slight criticism on the schools, which excited some attention, and I was charged by the minister with wishing to abolish the schools entirely. Far from it. Ever since I have been in the House—some twelve sessions—I have brought this matter up and endeavoured to bring about reforms. And I am proud to say that the reforms I advocated many years ago, have, many of them, been carried out by this and previous administrations. What I ask is reform of the schools and not their abolition. The writer in the 'Free Press' goes on to say :

This is an exact statement of the facts and the only difference is that in both cases it is drill, drill, useless drill—one on twenty yards square of gravel, and the other on a boarded drill hall floor and the lectures and everything else are practically the same. In spite of the fact that at Toronto and London there are large commons available for field exercises and ranges for practice, these are never used, but the time devoted to squad drills, company and battalion, including all those senseless movements which must be forgotten the moment fighting begins.

I trust the minister will note that these words are not from the man of the active militia, but from a gentleman who has in the past held one of the most distinguished positions in the permanent corps. He is replying to the 'Canadian Militia Gazette' which is edited by a very able militiaman, also an ex-permanent corps man. But one of these gentlemen takes one view and the other takes the other view :

An officer joining any of the infantry schools——

Listen to this Mr. Speaker,— —is simply handed over to the drill sergeants, who, forced to fill in the time, wire off reams of detail or how to 'stand at ease' and 'turn to the right or left.' If they took him out and gave him some outside field work or musketry there might be some advantage in attending at the schools, but they don't.

He goes on :

The editor of the 'Canadian Militia Gazette' speaks of the 'discipline they learn at the schools.' What rot ! I suppose he thinks that visiting the men's dinners, dressing for mess, and seeing a few other obsolete customs gravely carried out in barracks imparts discipline. Bosh ! Of what use is it to the ordinary militiaman ?

This appears in the 'Free Press,' a journal supporting the government and it is to be found in last Saturday's issue. In support of my contention as to the manner of discipline from within I might point to our lumber camps. Throughout the length and breadth of northern Ontario there are thousands of men in these lumber camps to-night. There are no fixed bayonets over these men. Yet, you enter one of these camps and you find the order is as perfect as in room 16 or room 6 of this House. And the conduct of these men is just as proper as that of any member of parliament here to-night. Go into any of our railway camps where the roughest men in the community are to be found at work. Yet, in these camps where the discipline is from within, you find perfect work and perfect discipline. Only in the prisons and in the regular corps do we find this repressive discipline maintained.

On a previous occasion I entered into the cost to the country of the certificates given to these officers under the present system, so I shall not take up the time of the House with that to-night. But. I may say that if you figure out the cost for an officer to the people of Canada—regarding the permanent corps as an educational institution simply—you will find that it amounts to far more than $1,000. One year I found, it amounted to over $3,000 for each certificate. Counting the permanent corps as an educational institution simply, we find that the cost is a little less this year. But I wish to be fair. I do not want to abolish the permanent corps. They have performed good work in connection with the schools and in connection with what you may call police service. And besides they are the nucleus of an army in case we are called upon to defend our frontier. But we must not depend upon this as an army ? We must have throughout the length and breadth of this country men trained for the officer's command and non-com. officers' position, and they must be ready at any moment's notice. And I maintain that this can be done at infinitely less cost and for infinitely greater numbers than under the present system. I again point out that in these schools I would have these men assembled more as they are in colleges and would have the young men treated as free men. I would have them uniformed in a special cadet outfit different from the soldiers, and I would have them perform certain evolutions of drill, but I would not have them perform drill that this writer in the 'Free Press' is pleased to call 'absolute rot.' I would not have them waste time with such absolute nonsense as that, but would train them along the lines of a regular college. In that way we could turn out these people at a minimum cost and we should have a proper reserve of Canadian officers.

I shall not enter upon the details of the arguments advanced by those who believe in the intra-mural residence as against the extra-mural, nor upon the points of decorum or etiquette that these young men should learn. There are not many young men from our farms, and I fancy there are still fewer from our towns who could learn much in etiquette from these schools. Take the young men from our farms throughout Canada, to-day and, as a rule, for everything that makes up real etiquette, they can be placed side by side with our permanent corps officers. That is, even before they are trained. There are not many of them who eat with their knives, and fewer still who peel their potatoes with their fingers in these days. Even if they did these things, it would not take many lessons to teach them how to act in the company of such distinguished people, and also to impress them with the fact that they should be careful whether they pick their teeth with their forks or with their fingers.

Our good friend the editor of the 'Militia Gazette,' in discussing a former debate in this House, took me seriously to task for something which I never said. But I would call attention to the fact that every contention I made on the former occasion as well as on the one I am making to-night is admitted in the editor's own article. He admits that the schools have very serious defects and are in very great need of reform. He admits that he has himself advocated reforms in these schools. And the only thing for which he criticises me is that I am in favour of the young fellows boarding out and attending as cadets rather than being inside and subject to this so-called discipline. On everything else that I said he agrees with me. Unfortunately, he accepts the minister's statement that my object seems to be to abolish the schools rather than to reform them. He takes that as his text, and upon it he writes the homily. In the same issue of the 'Militia Gazette,' I find an article by a young officer. It is signed 'Full Marks.' The writer concludes his criticism of the school in this way :

I have just procured a fresh certificate, but if Sir John——

Speaking of Sir John H. Macdonald, K.C.B., who recently delivered an address in Scotland.

—is right I fear it is of little good to me. I know how to open the breech of the Lee-Enfield rifle but have never fired even a blank cartridge out of it. I never saw the magazine of the rifle loaded. In fact, I could teach my men 'twenty-nine modes of forming battalion square' and 'changing the front of a battalion in line,' but am absolutely ignorant of imparting any instruction in the actual working of the rifle, because I was never taught.

And he concludes with the statement :

'But I am qualified.'

That is from one of the officers trained in one of the minister's own schools, and trained under a system which some are endeavouring to perpetuate in this country to-day. There are other interesting points in the young fellow's letter. But I point out that, whether you take the minister's own officers or the permanent corps officers, the testimony is the same, and I am proud to say that many of the permanent corps officers understood perfectly well that in what I said I was not criticising them. There are men in that corps who would be a credit to any nation. I was criticising the fact that some had received full colonelcies who were no more entitled to them than scores of others, both in the permanent corps and in the militia. That is what I was speaking of at that time and not of the officers of the permanent corps of that time.

In Britain to-day no one will gainsay the statement that the British government, in so far as the conduct of this war has been concerned has been more or less powerless in the face of the rings, cabals, sets, and cliques in connection with the army there. I shall illustrate that by reading an extract from the Montreal 'Star,' from the famous article by this Australian writer, Hales, an article which has attained exceedingly large circulation in the old land, and which has aroused much favourable comment. He says :

We have first of all to purge the British army of abuses, to do away with her old, worn-out rules and regulations. The British home-bred stock constitute the heart of the empire, the heart pumps the blood and vitality through the whole circle of our dominions, and the heart must be pure from taint of all kinds, if the far spreading members are to be free from corruption. To this end, the purification of the life-giving centres, our energies must be concentrated.

Now, will follow language which, if used in this House by myself, would have been termed extreme and extravagant. But it is written by this officer for the British public and the world public. This is what he says :—

To-day the army of Great Britain is rotten to the core, cliques abound, 'rings' are rampant, there exist 'circles,' and inside each circle lesser circles revolve in varying degrees of magnetism ; men are made or crushed according to the power of dominant parties, not in accord with personal merit. Read the life history of Colville, Gatacre and Buller, read the deeds they did for the nation in the field of battle, then turn the page and read their reward—not the reward of the nation, not the reward of the crown they served, but the reward of a clique, the vengeance of a coterie, the venom of a 'ring.'

Let in the Light.

Before we can hope to handle colonial armies satisfactorily, we must purge the 'home' army of all uncleanliness, we must make it plainly understood that a spirit of unbending justice presides over the destinies of every man who wears the King's uniform, no matter whether he be a simple private or a full-fledged general. The first thing that should be abolished is the system of secret trials. No good thing ever came from behind closed doors.

Let me urge upon the minister the importance of this matter—never to allow any one to influence him to condemn an officer under him upon a confidential report. I maintain, and I have always acted upon the principle that in the case of every officer in my regiment concerning whom I have sent a confidential report to the minister through the official channel, if it is not absolutely favourable to him he knows exactly what I have written. Never directly or indirectly did I ever send an adverse confidential report.

We Britons oppose that sort of thing in every other walk of life, why do we allow it in our army. If a man is accused of wrong-doing while wearing the King's uniform, let the charge against him be made publicly, let the witnesses be heard publicly, let him speak in his own defence publicly; then, if he be guiltless, let the shame of a false accusation fall upon the heads of those who are guilty of making it. If the soldier is guilty then let his disgrace be branded upon him under the gaze of the public, but once and for all time let us stamp out everything that savours of hole-and-corner work, for until this system of secret trial is abolished, no man can be sure of getting even-handed justice. It is useless to argue that an open court for soldiers would damage the service, that argument can be advanced with just as much force by any other branch of the public service. If secret trials are right and just for the soldier they are just and right for the civilian. We must do away with the 'star chamber' business, no matter by whom it is upheld : it is a relic of days that are past and gone, and the secret trial must go with the days that spawned it.

These are words that cannot be much better expressed. I shall read now from a famous writer on British constitutional law, Dicey, pointing out the danger that exists in the old land, has always existed, and will always exist in any free governed nation, from a standing army. Dicey says :

A permanent army of paid soldiers, whose main duty is one of absolute obedience to commands, appears at first sight to be an institution inconsistent with that rule of law or submission to the civil authorities, and especially to the judges, which is essential to popular or parliamentary government; and in truth the existence of permanent paid forces has often in most countries, and at times in England—notably under the Commonwealth—been found inconsistent with the existence of what, by a lax though intelligible mode of speech, is called a free government. The belief indeed of our statesmen down to a time considerably later than the revolution of 1689, was that a standing army must be fatal to English freedom, yet very soon after the revolution it became apparent that the existence of a body of paid soldiers was necessary to the safety of the nation. Englishmen therefore, at the end of the seventeenth and the beginning of the eighteenth century, found themselves placed in this dilemma. With a standing army the country could not (they thought) escape from despotism ; without a standing army the country could not (they perceived) escape from invasion ; the maintenance of national liberty appeared to involve the sacrifice of national independence. Yet English statesmanship found almost by accident a practical escape from this theoretical dilemma, and the Mutiny Act, though an enactment passed in a hurry to meet an immediate peril, contains the solution of an apparently insolvable problem.

I want to point out that step by step the British war office and its satellites have gradually sought to remove from the Mutiny Act one of the safeguards that it was intended to convey to the free men of England, and we find to-day that the old civil officers of the war office are being dismissed and men under the absolute control of the commander-in-chief are placed in their stead. We find to-day, through the length and breadth of the regular system in England, that this branch of the service has obtained almost supreme control, that it can almost make and unmake governments, and that the Prime Minister himself is almost powerless to resist the influences I have just quoted.

Now, Sir, I have always been a great believer in the militia of a country. It was the militia that won the battles of Cressy, Agincourt and Poitiers in the old days ; it was the militiamen who won the battles of Waterloo and the heights of Alma—because, as I pointed out, a man who is only six weeks in the army is nothing more than a militiaman. It is men such as these that have won Britain's battles through the long period of her history. Therefore, from various view points, I am greatly in favour of a strong militia force. It is the only way to keep down militarism in a country, it is the only way, under our modern conditions, to defend an empire. Speaking of the militia, Dicey says :

The militia is from its nature a body hardly capable of being used for the purpose of overthrowing parliamentary government. But even with regard to the militia, care has been taken by the legislature to ensure that it shall be subject to the rule of law. The members of the local army are (speaking in general terms) subject to military law only when in training or when the force is embodied. Embodiment indeed converts the militia for the time being into a regular army, though an army which cannot be required to serve abroad. But the embodiment can lawfully take place only in 'case of imminent national danger or of great emergency.'

I would respectfully draw the attention of the minister to the fact that in Canada certain militia officers—I do not refer to the present general officer commanding—have claimed and still claim that an officer of the Canadian militia is at all times subject to the Army Act under the King's regulations. I need not again point out to this House the utter absurdity of any such contention, and I trust the minister will have backbone enough, in framing his new Militia Act, to remove all possible ambiguity upon that point, and that he will lay it down clearly that it is only when militia men are actually called out by Order in Council, or by himself, that they are amenable to the King's regulations and the Army Act. I trust that he will allow nothing in the shape of British red tapeism to influence him in framing his new Militia Act, so that by no possible construction of it will an officer have any control of a junior officer when he is not actually summoned out under the law.

Now, there are a great many weaknesses in any system of a permanent corps, but those, as a rule, are well known to those interested. I may mention, though, that in this country it has been pointed out to us again and again as a thing to be greatly desired that we should do away with civilian control of our militia and place the absolute authority in the hands of the general commanding. I have always opposed that, and I incurred the enemy of that great and pious man, General Hutton, on that very ground. That gentleman offered great inducements to many officers to bolster him up in his demands on the minister that he should be made absolutely independent of the minister as regards the discipline and training of the militia of the country. I pointed out to him that this was a responsibly governed country, and that the minister was the only man who should be the master in the premises, that the minister undoubtedly should be his master, and that the general should be subject to his control. I may point out that the system which he wanted so much prevails in England; I want to tell you that there to-day, in the British regular army an officer who has a grievance dare not bring it to his superior officer. Under the law he has authority to do so. It has been shown to them again and again that they have the authority, but they will tell you: 'O! certainly, we know that, but we dare not appeal under the law to our superior officers. The very officers who would pronounce us right in this instance would never forgive us, and they would regard our conduct as insubordinate.' One of these gentlemen who was labouring under considerable disability from a superior officer was asked: 'Then how do you obtain redress?' O! he said, 'my wife's aunt is a very intimate friend of General Wolseley, she is working the screws and it will come out all right.' There is the way justice is obtained, through rings, cabals and coteries, in the great heart of the British empire to-day. They have men that have given the world liberty, the brave bold men of Runnymede, those who have upheld the honour of the empire all through its history, are reduced to-day to getting their grievances redressed by pettycoat influence and back door intrigue. I trust sincerely that the minister will not allow any such influences as these to be potent in the Militia Department of Canada, but that he will stand out above all that and treat every one upon his merits and according to the principles of parliamentary government.

I have previously referred to the feeling of Imperial officers towards the Canadian militia. I have before me an extract from the Toronto 'Daily Mail' in which it says:

> The story is an old one, and in the history of soldiering in this country many instances can be cited showing how the air of superiority often displayed by officers in the regular service has been the cause of much bad feeling, and has led to an estrangement that has impaired the efficiency of the individuals concerned. Colonel Denison, in his recently published book of reminiscences, has referred to a number of cases in which this peculiar trait in the regular was the cause of annoyance and offence to officers of the Canadian militia, and it is no secret that among the Canadians who have returned from the front there are many who, although they speak with the greatest satisfaction of the relations generally existing between themselves and the regulars declare that their patience was frequently severely taxed in their efforts to preserve amity and concord. It is not necessary to go away from home to find a similar strained relationship, and there is no reason for its existence.

Following upon this we notice that Lord Roberts, himself, after the shooting of those Australian officers, of which I hope to have something to say on another occasion, was forced to come out and in order to placate the colonials after the gallant stand made by the Canadians at Kleinhart the other day he issued an order—I have not seen the order but it will not amount to much, I can guarantee that—to which the following has reference:

> Unstinted Praise.
> London, April 5—The gallantry of the Canadian troops at the engagement with the Boers near Hart's river, South-western Transvaal, March 31, attracts unstinted praise from the British press. Their comments form a striking contrast to the recently printed notification that the attention of Lord Roberts, the commander-in-chief, had been drawn to various cases where colonials who had been awarded commissions were treated as inferiors by the regular officers and otherwise made to feel that they were only members of the mess by sufferance.
> Lord Roberts, it was semi-officially announced, was making an investigation and intended to inflict the most serious penalties on any British officers found guilty of such conduct. Privately, and in letters to the press, many colonial officers have frequently complained that 'they are good enough at the front, but are not wanted at a Cape Town hotel or in a London drawing room.'

Personally I have no reason to complain of anything of this sort specially. I chanced to be a senior to most of these gentlemen and with that spirit of sycophancy and fawning, which I regret to say is a characteristic of the British officer, these men are always ready to fawn and cringe before any one who happens to wear an extra star or crown on his shoulder. The tendency of the British officer is towards sycophancy to a great extent but to those who chance to be of junior rank nothing could exceed the superciliousness of the British officer. This must all be changed. The British empire is going to hang together and the British officer must be taught that the empire is too great to tolerate conduct of that kind. Great Britain is going to hang together and the supercilious British officer must disappear. The late Cecil Rhodes, after the relief of Kimberley, had the same complaint to make. There were from six to eight thousand brother colonials who did not happen to belong to the British ranks but who were fighting for the empire just as loyally as those in the British ranks were. I am not saying one word against one class or the other. The colonials fell day after day and no notice was taken of them in the lists that were sent out, but when a regular happened to be bowled out his death was sure to be properly chronicled in the list. One day mule No. 6217 was chronicled as having departed this life because it belonged to the British regulars in South Africa, but those colonial soldiers who gave up their lives in scores never received a word of notice in the records from the commander in Kimberley at the time. The colonials form an important part of the empire to-day, they are as much interested in the welfare of the empire as the people of the old land, they are prepared to do their part for the maintenance of the empire and it is just as well to give these gentlemen to understand that the army system of Great Britain to-day is not the British empire and it is not fit to stand in connection with the British empire. It is time that it disappeared. In the British organs items are appearing in the papers now-a-days apologizing for certain victories which were won by the Boers over the British. You cannot point to a victory that the Boers have won in South Africa where, according to the British officer's statement, the British officer was at fault. It was always Tommy, or the yeomanry, or the militia or the colonials. At Belmont, at Modder River, at Magersfontein, at Stormberg, at Spion Kop and at Nicholson's Nek there were no colonials. These disasters occurred and they cannot attribute the blame to the colonials. In this connection I include the British regulars and that type of soldier. We find these British officers coming out and saying: Oh, you know, Tommy is from the slums; we can't trust him. He cannot be depended upon. You cannot show an instance in South Africa where Tommy has failed them. They say: We will have to pay him a little more. We will give him a penny a day more, cabbage and some potatoes extra per week. These are the apologies you find from the British officer to-day and the suggestions he makes for building up the great British army. I hope the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence will listen when I say that we must make the system of training British officers inexpensive and one that will develop all that is good and noble in him. I would ask hon. gentlemen not to run away with the notion that what I say applies to all of the British officers. I have given the names of a number of very capable generals who have distinguished themselves. I would ask hon. gentlemen not to run away with the notion that all these British officers are of the lawdy-daw type—not by any means. There are hundreds of these fellows who would, if they were allowed by the system, devote their attention to the upbuilding of their forces, so as to make themselves fit and proper men to lead their fellowmen in battle. Men intrusted with the lives of their fellowmen should be properly trained and there are hundreds of these young British officers who would only be too anxious to improve their opportunities and their usefulness were it not that the system of repression, regimental messing and club work in connection with this institution drives the young man out of his regiment or forces him into a groove and he becomes a fit subject to be described by what is a general term in the old country a Piccadilly dude. At the beginning of this war General French, a man who has distinguished himself in South Africa, and who has never met with a reverse, was placed on the retired list because he did not happen to be of the school that happened to be dominant at the time. Many another good officer was placed where he would be of no use to his country until the stern needs of time brought him back again. Now, I have gone into this matter at more or less length but there are a few items which I have now here and which I propose discussing but which I will reserve until we come to the consideration of the supplementary estimates when we will have the opportunity of entering into the subject at greater detail than we will here to-night. I could refer to extract after extract from the leading newspapers of the country in support of the views that I have upheld here to-night—not only Canadian but English. I shall quote a brief extract from an article written by the Rev. Dr. G. M. Milligan, referring to a visit he paid to England last year. He said:

> I found quite prevalent in Britain the feeling that social favouritism is responsible for much hurt done in military matters. Unfortunately the evil is not dead against which Carlyle declaimed when he wrote. Where now are your Hengists and Horsas shooting partridges!'
> 'The flannelled fools' are those who make pleasure a finality of their lives. Such are a danger to any community, when they affect to discharge important functions.

I could quote scores of articles from the leading editorials published in the best English newspapers, among them the 'London Times' itself, a paper which is most favourable, as every one knows, to Mr. Chamberlain and Sir Alfred Milner in regard to the conduct of that war, but I have done enough to show that there is need of a revolution and that the old system of red tape must disappear and that British officers must be properly trained. We have the rifle shooting and the manouvering. These must of necessity be retained, but we must adopt some cheap system of training our officers and the only cheap system possible is the one I have pointed out. Star chamber methods must vanish. All these cabals and rings and sets; political influence and stock gambling favours and their attendant weaknesses must be banished from the training of the British officer. The manhood of the old land must reassert itself, and in case that one department of the British army, the combatant officers training, is reformed, then the old empire will be in a position to deal with the world.

> Go tell the world our watchword now,
> Let deep proclaim to deep.
> The crown that shines on Edward's brow,
> His sons right hands will keep.
> The empire that our fathers won
> Will still be greater yet.
> And on it as e'er shines the sun
> No sun shall ever set.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). I am sure the House has listened, as I have, with a great deal of pleasure, to the very interesting address of my hon. and gallant friend

(Mr. Hughes). I had no idea, I am bound to confess, that the hon. gentleman's remarks would take such a very wide range. It would really seem as if his speech was one to be replied to by Mr. Broderick, the British Secretary for War, and not by the Canadian Minister of Militia, because his strictures were very much more severe upon the British army system than upon ours. I presume that my hon. friend was endeavouring to illustrate what he considers to be the evils of the conditions which he disapproved of in Canada, by the effect of them on Great Britain; more particularly in the conduct of the war in South Africa. However, the House will hardly expect me to undertake the task of defending the conduct of that war from the British point of view. I was glad that my hon. friend was able to admit that in so far, at any rate, as the work done by the non-combatant or civil branch of the army in South Africa was concerned, he thought it was admirable, and indeed that it could not have been better. I entirely agree with the hon. gentleman in that. I would be inclined to go further. Although I confess I am not a judge of such matters, and have not had the advantage that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) has had of being on the ground, I would be inclined to hazard the statement that no nation in the world could have coped with the serious difficulties which the British nation has had to meet in South Africa, as ably as Great Britain has done. That is my opinion after having given the matter as careful attention as I have been able to. That mistakes, and grave mistakes, have been made there cannot be a question. But in the main, and in view of circumstances of the most extraordinary difficulty, I think the campaign has been well conducted.

My hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) finds fault with my having stated on a former occasion, that the observations he made on a kindred subject meant that he would wipe out the permanent force altogether. I did not intend to say that. What I intended to say was this : That the arguments which the hon. gentleman used were arguments which any one might use against the continuance of a permanent force, and I think any impartial listener to the statements made by the hon. gentleman to-day could draw no other conclusion from his arguments than that they were addressed against the system of standing armies and the system of permanent corps ; although he did say that he was favourable to the continuation of the permanent force in this country.

To come at once to the consideration of the question which more particularly directly concerns us, let me say a few words with refernce to our permanent force. Without making this in any way an excuse for existing conditions, if excuse be necessary, let me first say that the permanent force has been in existence in this country for a good many years; long before I became Minister of Militia, that the very officers who are outside of the permanent force to-day and from whose writings my hon. friend has quoted, were members of the permanent force not so very long ago; spent many years in it; passed through it and came out of it without apparently having discovered, while in the force, the necessity for any great reform. It is only after they left the force that they were prepared to make criticism of it. It seems to me that it would have been very much better for them to have addressed these observations during the time they were in the force, to their superior officers, and if they could not get their ear to have endeavoured to get the ear of the minister of the day.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the minister permit me ? The officer who is outside of the permanent force to-day and who was formerly in it, defends the system. I hope I was not misunderstood in that. All the time that officer was in the force he took the very same ground that he takes to-day and did not hesitate to let it be known. The other officer to whom I refer, I think, is in the permanent force to-day, and is one of the best men in it. I may be wrong in that, but at all events I do not want to get that officer into any trouble.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think I know the officer to whom the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That officer is one of the best men in the force.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He is an able man, but I think he is a bit of a faddist and somewhat extreme. As to the condition of the permanent force I must take issue with my hon. friend on the picture which he drew of life in the barracks. He compared the existing conditions in the barracks of the permanent force in Canada to the conditions in a prison. I dissent absolutely and entirely from that statement. I have had the pleasure of visiting all the depots in Canada except that at Winnipeg. I have been in the men's rooms ; have seen them getting their food, have been through the hospitals, have seen the men at their games, in their reading rooms, and I must say that I never met anywhere a more contented set of men than are to be found in our permanent force so far as appearances go, and so far as my observation could lead me to form an opinion. I have heard no complaints. The men of the permanent force in this country are average Canadians. They enjoyed perfect freedom before they went into the force; they know perfectly well what the laws and customs of this country are, and they have scores of friends outside of the force who, if they were being ill-used, would very soon make the fact known to the minister, or to some superior officer. Nothing of this kind so far as I know has taken place, and it is therefore fair to assume that there is no serious grievance of the kind to which my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes) referred. I think that the vivid imagination which my hon. friend possesses led him a step too far. If he had been content to stop at the point, which I think he was endeavouring to make: That the military system now in vogue in Great Britain and in the permanent force in this country, has a tendency to narrow a man's mind and ideas, I would be very much inclined to think that there was some force in what he said.

When my hon. friend says that there was a deliberate attempt to enslave the members of the permanent corps he is going entirely too far. We must not forget that in the British army and in the permanent force of Canada there is no conscription. The citizens of both countries are absolutely free to enlist or not, so that the system is entirely different from that on the continent of Europe, where conscription is the order of the day. It is not at all likely that men would voluntarily enter a system where they become enslaved. My hon. friend has found fault with the permanent corps because, he says, it takes too long for an officer to become qualified under our regulations. He seems to think that a man who wishes to become an officer has to attend different depots and different schools. If I remember right, this is not the case. An infantry officer can go to Toronto and become fully qualified, including the course of equitation, in from four to eight weeks, according to his ability and previous knowledge. I do not see any great hardship in that. A cavalry officer can do the same and so can an artillery officer in Kingston or Quebec. This objection of my hon. friend therefore is not well founded.

He also says that the cost to the country of every certificate to every officer in Canada each year is about $1,000. I have not made the calculation and am not prepared to dispute his statement. If he takes the total amount of money spent upon the permanent corps and divides it by the number of commissions issued, I do not know what that will give for I have not made the calculation.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It was over $3,000 two years and it is now $2,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. But my hon. friend must not forget the work these depots are doing in the way of garrison duty.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Did I not point that out?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The statement I took down was that each certificate cost so much money. But we should give the permanent force credit for the work done in garrisoning the different cities or places where these depots are located, and we must not forget also that these different depots are really the nuclei of an army in the case of sudden attack from within or without.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I have pointed that out.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then we agree on that point. My hon. friend referred to the permanent force officers' treatment of the men who come in from the country districts and take a course at the depots. I assure him that any such conduct as he describes, I should condemn quite as strongly as he. Possibly some weak-minded members of the permanent force may be inclined to act in that way.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). They do it not only to those who come in from the country, but to those who are their superiors in knowledge and position and everything else in this country except military rank.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If they do, it is a very strong indication that there heads are not very well balanced. I should hope that only a small percentage of the officers are guilty of any such contemptible conduct. Whenever I have had opportunity to visit the depots, I have always tried to point out to the permanent force officers that they are militia the same as all the rest, the only difference being that they are paid for their whole time and are expected to give the best of their time and ability to the improvement and assistance of their brother officers in the country districts. That is the true spirit which should animate the force, and I hope it is that which animates the majority. Because, we can never get the most out of the permanent corps, we can never really have an effective militia unless there is the strongest bond of sympathy between the permanent force and the active militia. The very reason d'etre of a permanent force is to help along and support the active militia. Otherwise there would have been no permanent force thought of.

As my hon. friend has explained his object in bringing up this resolution and as I have assured him that I shall give the greatest attention to his many valuable suggestions, and in view of the statement I have had the honour to make, and of which he has no doubt seen an outline in the press, with reference to proposed changes, I trust he will consent to withdraw his motion and wait another year, when, if we have not profited by the discussion which has taken place this afternoon, he can renew it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I warned the House when I began that I was likely to be misunderstood, and apparently have been so incoherent that my good friend the Minister of Militia has completely misunderstood the views which I submitted to the House. He says that Mr. Broderick the English Minister of War would have been the one to reply to the strictures I made. But I pointed out that all the evils of the British service were being grafted on our Canadian system; and in criticising the Imperial army, I was simply aiming at the fountain head of all the iniquity. I cordially agree with my hon. friend, and so stated that Britain has no equal in the conduct of a war such as that in South Africa. I believe there is no nation in the world which possibly could have placed the men there she did in the field, feed them and maintain them there, but the mere fact that the men are well clothed and fed is no excuse for the incapacity of generals or officers, and is no reason why our soldiers should be buried in South Africa and the nation left to mourn their loss. Let the men be well fed, by all means, and well clad, but also see that they get the best of the enemy instead of the reverse, which has too often been the case in South Africa. My hon. friend took exception to my comparing the permanent force to a prison. I did not say that the discipline was exactly the same. I admit that it has a little advantage but not much over the modern system of discipline in an ordinary prison. But I say that in no other institutions, except prisons and the British and Canadian permanent forces, are men treated as they are, owing to the military discipline enforced in these services.

The minister spoke of the men in the permanent force being contented and happy. Well, the reply which he gave to a question I put to him not very long ago does not bear out his statement. I asked how many courts-martial there have been in the corps, and the hon. gentleman told me that there were nearly two in the year for every man in the permanent corps and that the number of minor punishments numbered away up in the thousands. And this is in a force of a few hundred men. I fail to see how that force can be well governed or happy when courts-martial and punishments are so numerous. In a school where the teacher has to wallop, on a average, each youngster three times a year there is something radically wrong with his discipline or with himself. The youngsters are always all right. Then, this takes no account of the number of desertions and the number of men who are up for petty punishments, for they are not recorded. Now, the minister puts words into my mouth that I believe I did not utter —certainly did not intend to utter. He would have hon. members believe I said there was an aim on the part of the permanent corps officers to enslave the men. The permanent corps officers are merely carrying out the dark-age traditions respecting the management of men, that have been handed down from generation to generation. And it has applied to all types of humanity. It is the only kind of discipline they know, poor fellows. Many of them, I have no doubt, would prefer carrying out a proper system of discipline, if they had been instructed in it rather than his repressive system. Then the minister refers to the point that it takes an officer too long to become qualified. But he must remember that, before an officer can go up for his certificate, he must have his non-coms' or private's instructions. He must come here for his musketry, he must go elsewhere for his signalling, somewhere else for his equitation and somewhere else for his maxim gun drill. My object would be to so arrange it that when a cadet comes up—and he would come merely as a young citizen of Canada—he could get the training at whatever place he was. And, moreover, he would be free to enter the school at any time he pleased, and not be obliged to await the whim of any officer in command. I shall not refer to the other matters touched upon by the hon. minister, as they are of no consequence. He agrees as to the cost of certificates, but I was particular to point out that in addition to doing educational duty, these corps performed police duty and also form the nuclei of a standing army for the defence of the country in case they should be called on.

Motion withdrawn.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What government business is likely to come up tomorrow ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are very few government Bills. If they are ready they will be proceeded with ; after that, Supply, the Minister of Agriculture proceeding with his estimates.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 9.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 15, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

GEORGIAN BAY CANAL.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). In the absence of Mr. Belcourt, I would move seconded by Mr. LaRiviére :

That Bill (No. 107) respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal be now read a first time.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE ORTHODOX GREEK CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I beg to move seconded by Mr. Davis :

That the petition of the Right Rev. Tekon for an Act of incorporation under the name of the Bishop of the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church be referred back to the Select Committee on Standing Orders for further consideration.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). I wish the hon. gentleman to explain the object of this motion.

Mr. OLIVER. The purpose of the motion is to secure further consideration by the Committee on Standing Orders of an application for incorporation made by the bishop of the Orthodox Greek Church, so as to enable church property to be held in the name of the bishop as incorporator. The Standing Orders Committee found on examining the advertisements which were required to be published in both English and French, that the word 'Bishop' which was used in the English advertisement in the 'Canada Gazette' was translated 'Diocese' in the French. For this reason I understand the committee took the ground that the advertisements were irregular, and that they were justified in rejecting the Bill. I am not complaining of the action of the committee, for no doubt it was within the letter of the law, but the Bill having been placed in my charge I think it is only fair to point out that the parties interested have spent a very considerable sum of money on the extensive advertising required, and that although the committee possibly was right in throwing out the Bill on this technicality, yet the applicants were entirely within the spirit of the law. They had complied fully with every requirement as to advertising so that all parties interested had full notice of the application. There was no mistake as to the application itself, and it seems to me that it would be fair for the House to consider the matter in its broader light and not throw out the application, thus rendering useless the large expenditure which has been made by the applicants, because of what was merely a mistake of translation, and which has no bearing whatever on the real purpose of the application.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. There can be no objection at all to the incorporation of the Greek Church in Canada, and, I for one, look at this question in its broadest aspect. At the same time I contend that these things must be done regularly, and according to the rules of parliament. The committee has thrown out the petition in this case because the rules of the House had not been complied with in regard to advertising. But there are other reasons than that, which the committee did not go into. I shall cite one reason which in my estimation is fatal to this application. Here is a person living in San Francisco and claiming to be the bishop of the Greek Church of British North America, applying as the sole incorporator. In the first place he is a foreigner, and in the second place he does not live in this country, and according to May and all the authorities, no foreigner has the right to petition this House if he is not living in this country. That was not considered by the committee because the House had, through error in the first instance, received a petition which should not have been received. If I take an interest in this question it is because there are quite a large number of these Greek Church people in my own riding and I am satisfied, in fact I know that none of them have been apprised of what has been going on; none of them know what the so-called bishop in San Francisco is asking from this parliament. But, Sir, I look on this question from a broader standpoint, and I find that in the State of New York——

Mr. OLIVER. Would the hon. member (Mr. LaRiviére) pardon me if I ask him a question? Is he aware, whether the Galicians or Russians in his constituency do or do not belong to the Greek Orthodox Church, because if they do not belong to the Orthodox Church, the bishop does not claim any jurisdiction over them ?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. There are a large number of Galicians in my riding belonging to the so-called Orthodox Greek Church. Others belong to the Ruthenian, and others to the Latin Rite Church, both of which are branches of the Roman Catholic Church. But I speak with regard to the Greek Church Galicians of whom some reside in my riding and some in my hon. friend's riding ; and I say that the Greek Church, which is now seeking to be incorporated, is a government church, that is to say, the official church of Russia. In the state of New York, where that Church is incorporated, it is incorporated only upon the application of the Plenipotentiary Minister of Russia. He is the person incorporated, because the bishop and other officials of the Greek Church are appointed by the government of Russia. Therefore there is more than the incorporation of this bishop involved in this question. There is the fact that we are asked to incorporate the whole Church, which is a State Church in Russia.

Mr. FRASER. Will the hon. gentleman answer a question ? That may be all very good when the Bill comes before us, but does he think that is a reason against granting the application now being made, which is that it may come before us ?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I say that incidentally these other questions may be discussed ; but more than that, the committee has found that the rules of this House have not been complied with, and upon that finding the petition has been set aside ; and I think it would be just as well for us to wait a little longer and study this question before passing prematurely an Act of parliament to incorporate a church which is under the control of the government of Russia. Another year is not long to wait, and then the proper notices can be given ; because we do not know this bishop from San Francisco.

The MINISTER OF INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). My hon. friend, by forcing the course which he appears to have forced in the Committee on Standing Orders, is preventing this House getting any opportunity whatever of studying the question. I do not suppose that my hon. friend thinks we should take the statement of a member of the Standing Orders Committee as to the merits of a Bill. If the Standing Orders Committee constituted themselves a committee for the purpose of deciding on the merits of legislation, and sought some technical ground to prevent legislation coming before the House, it would be very difficult for this House to get any legislation of that kind before it. According to the statement of my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver), the Standing Orders Committee, no doubt in the strict exercise of their powers—I am not questioning that—have seen fit to throw out an application for incorporation on the ground that while the English notice was quite correct in form, the French notice had the word 'diocese' instead of 'bishop.' I submit that the reason and common sense of this House will not sustain that position. If the Standing Orders Committee took a position of that kind in regard to all the legislation that came before it, it would be impossible for this House to do business. I know nothing about the Bill ; I never heard of it until the hon. member for Alberta stood up a moment ago ; but I think the hon. member for Alberta should have an opportunity of going before the committee——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I ask the hon. gentleman if the report shows the ground for the committee's action ?

Mr. FLINT. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to read the report, as chairman of the committee, I will make that clear. The report is :

> That while the notices have been published for the full time required, they are irregular in other respects.

While on my feet, I may be allowed to remark that the irregularity was the one mentioned by the Minister of the Interior ; and another point that came up was that although it was not denied that the advertisement had been published, there was not before the committee a copy of the paper in which it was published. The promoter of the Bill stated to the committee that he could produce the evidence later, and the petition was thrown out with the hint that if he could produce the evidence later, the House would send the Bill back to the committee.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is what my hon. friend from Alberta asks to be done, and surely this House is not going to prevent any person who applies for legislation and has spent the necessary amount of money for the purpose, from getting his right because the promoter of the Bill did not have a copy of the newspaper when the committee met. I think I am within the common sense and reason of both sides of the House when I say that the committee should at least reconsider the matter, and later on, if there is anything in the objections of the hon. member for Provencher, the House will have an opportunity to consider them.

Mr. MACLEAN. Does not the whole question rest on the mistranslation of a word ? Two or three letters are dropped out, so as to make 'diocesan,' which is often used for bishop, read 'diocese' ; and I think the contention is well made that because of a mere formality of that kind, the Bill ought not to be prevented from reaching the House. These are growing times, and if there is anything we want in this country, it is more bishops. If we have not one from Russia, let us get one. Let us have free trade in bishops—I think that is the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite—and the more of them the merrier.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that is not the question before the House at all. I think it is the regularity or irregularity of a petition. If this House is petitioned by a foreigner, who is neither a British subject nor a resident of the country, I do not see how this House can receive the petition, or send it to the Standing Orders Committee.

Mr. DAVIS. That question, according to the hon. member for Provencher, never came up at all.

Mr. SPROULE. The House is the only place to deal with it.

The PRIME MINISTER. The rule which we have invariably followed, as far as practicable, in every case has been to sustain the report of the committee, unless a very strong case be shown to the contrary. If I understand the report, the petition was rejected because of a certain irregularity in the notice. The report is as follows :

> Your committee have also considered the petition of the Right Reverend Tikhon, for an Act of incorporation under the name of the Bishop of the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church, and find that while the notices have been published for the full time required, they are irregular in other respects.

I regret that the report did not say what was the precise irregularity; but I apprehend that it is not the fault of the promoter of the Bill if the report is not as full as it might have been. I understand—and there is no controversy on this point—that the only irregularity on which the Bill was rejected was that the word 'bishop' was translated by the word 'diocese' instead of the French word 'eveque.' This is the statement made by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver). But that was not the only objection. Though the notices were published the full time in the territories, they were only published a week in Manitoba. That is shown by the declaration of the promoter of the Bill. At all events the committee considered the notice as sufficient, because they say so in their report. But it appears the committee found there was an irregularity in the translation. The word 'bishop' being translated 'diocese.' If that be so, the promoters should not be punished for a mistake for which they were not responsible; and if that be the only point of objection, the committee, it seems to me took an extreme view. Without going into a consideration of the point adduced by my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) that this bishop is a foreigner, I may say that that is a question, not for the committee, but for the House, and therefore I am disposed to support the motion of the hon. member for Alberta.

Mr. SPROULE. You do nothing about the petition although it was presented to the House and read.

The PRIME MINISTER. When the House has received a petition which it should not have received, that is a waver of any objection.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). The irregularity does not seem very serious, but at the same time I would like to remind my right hon. friend that if the rules laid down by him on several occasions were carried out, this report should not be sent back because it does not show on its face the exact grounds on which the Bill was not reported.

The PRIME MINISTER. In the Public Accounts Committee, to which my hon. friend refers, the minority framed a report on which they wanted the opinion of the House. But the promoter of a private Bill has no standing in a committee and no voice in framing its report.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax): But there is usually some one present representing the promoter, who could have had a minority report made, just as one might have been made in the Public Accounts Committee, and if the rule which the right hon. gentleman laid down were carried out in this case, the report should not be sent back. I also agree with my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) that this is a case in which the greatest possible care should be taken to see that the notices were properly published. It relates to a subject on which people are more or less sensitive. At the same time, if the defect is only what has been mentioned by my hon. friend from Alberta, it does not seem very serious, and I would be rather inclined to agree that the report be sent back to the committee, and if there be any difficulty about the petition, that can be dealt with when the Bill comes before the House later.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved,

That from this date to the end of the session Government Orders have precedence on Wednesdays, immediately after Questions to be put by Members.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that there is some arrangement for taking up the Bill of my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) to-morrow and this motion will prevent that being done.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am not aware of any such arrangement, but it may have been made between the whips. However, I think we might very well give this Bill precedence next Monday.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara). Several members on both sides have asked me not to bring it up on Monday as some of them, who take great interest in the measure, cannot then be here. That is why we arranged with the government whip that it should be taken up to-morrow, not expecting this motion. Why not let the taking of Wednesdays by the government begin a week from to-morrow.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). Why should the government ask to take Wednesdays at all. They have not brought down any measure of public importance this session, whereas there are some very important public Bills introduced by private members, and some consideration should be given us. Outside the supplies I do not see any government proposal of any kind whatever on the Order paper. On the other hand, there is a number of important Bills on Public Bills and Orders, and we should have a couple of days to discuss them. I have one of some importance that I intend to have discussed.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend had a good opportunity yesterday if he had been in the House. I do not think he should treat with such levity the measure of the government. We are asking the House to vote some $40,000,000, which is somewhat important.

Mr. MACLEAN. That is the question.

The PRIME MINISTER. I should have thought that my hon. friend in his anxiety to vote that money and go home, would have been prepared to support the motion to take to-morrow and make it a government day. If Monday is convenient, it will be easy to arrange to have the Bill of my hon. friend from Lincoln taken up on that day.

Mr. LANCASTER. As far as I am personally concerned, it would suit me, but I am expressing the views of gentlemen on both sides. The Bill which I am promoting is in no sense a party question, and gentlemen on both sides, who take great interest in it, have urged me not to bring it up on Monday. It will also not come up in the same order on Monday as on Wednesday. On Wednesday it will be sure to be reached after private Bills after eight o'clock, but on Monday the House might adjourn at 11 o'clock or 12 o'clock without discussing this Bill at all. Motions have to give way on Wednesday after six o'clock and, in the ordinary course my Bill would come up on Wednesday evening. It was on taking that into account that we made an arrangement which we thought would be suitable and satisfactory to everybody and which we would never have made had we supposed the government would take this Wednesday, and repudiate the whip's agreement.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. JAMES J. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.) Before that motion is carried, I desire to call the attention of the government, the House and the country to the intolerable condition of things that exists in relation to the telegraphic communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. I had intended to bring this subject up on the third reading of the Bill of the Minister of Justice dealing with telegraphs and telephones, but as it has been decided to leave that Bill over until next year, I am obliged to bring it up in this way and now. I have said, Mr. Speaker, that the position is intolerable ; and I think I have only to mention the bald facts of the case to have every hon. member in this House agree with me that that language is not one whit too strong.

The Anglo-American Company, which has its head office in London, is the only telegraph company doing business in Prince Edward Island, and is the only company that has a cable connecting the island with the mainland. That company closes its offices on Prince Edward Island at eight o'clock in the afternoon, and does not open them again until eight or nine o'clock on the following day. That is a very great hardship not only to the people of Prince Edward Island but to all others who may have to do business with them. It was found to be a very great hardship during the early stages of the South African war when, no matter how important the message might be coming to Sackville, N.B., only a short distance away, if it came after eight o'clock in the afternoon it did not reach the island until after eight o'clock the following morning. Even with so many relatives and friends of young men engaged in that war anxious for news concerning them and with all the people desirous of learning the progress of events, yet, no matter how important these messages might be, they could not reach the island until the following day; they would not be printed in the morning papers and so would not reach the country until twenty-four hours after the news had reached Sackville. This is the age of progress, this is the twentieth century. Yet to-day we have one whole province of this Dominion entirely shut off from telegraphic communications with the outside world for twelve hours out of the twenty-four.

But that is not the whole trouble. We on the island are obliged to pay twice as high for messages as those on the mainland. This is a serious drawback to business men in Prince Edward Island and also to those who wish to do business with Prince Edward Island. I have here a letter from a business firm in Charlottetown, which refers to this point :

> We find that our telegraph bill for November was $106.44, and if our rates were the same as on the mainland, we could get the work done for about one-half the amount, which would be a very material saving. But this does not, by any means measure our loss. You can quite understand that our customers, say at Sydney, would not think of wiring us for supplies as it would cost them twice as much to get information as to prices, &c., from Charlottetown as from Halifax or St. John. This is where the real loss comes in. Business that we should get passes us every day owing to the extra expense in wiring. In buying and selling goods, at least two or three messages must pass between the buyer and seller. First, an inquiry as to price, second an offer, third a counter-offer, and finally a telegram to close the transaction. So it will be easily seen that the excessive telegraph rates become a serious tax on our business, and drive business away from us as well.

But even that is not the whole matter. This cable was laid many years ago, at a time when the making and laying of cables was not as well understood as it is now. I understand that that cable never was very strong, and it is liable to break at any time and leave us without telegraphic communication altogether. As a matter of fact, it did part last fall and was not repaired for about three weeks. If it should break during the late autumn it could not be repaired until the following summer. But, even while the cable was broken, if any person went to the Anglo-American Company to send a message across the Straits to have it repeated to some point on the mainland, though the sending of it cost the company only two cents, and the answer might not come for several days, yet they charged the old rates that they were charging when they sent the messages across on the cable. Many tourists come to Prince Edward Island, especially from the United States, and they are simply astonished to find that they cannot communicate with their friends for twelve hours out of the twenty-four. And we as a people are humiliated that such a state of things should exist throughout a whole province of this Dominion. As I say, this is a matter that affects all the maritime provinces and all Canada, and I am glad to find that the people of Canada generally do not take a narrow view of the question. Let me read a resolution passed by the Maritime Board of Trade on this matter. I believe that this resolution was sent to the government :

A subject brought to the attention of this Board is 'improved telegraphic communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland.' The facts of the case are, we believe, well understood by the government, and especially, by one member, Sir L. H. Davies. As briefly put before the board at its last meeting, they are substantially these, that :

'Telegrams could only be sent to and from the island between nine a.m. and one p.m. and between two and eight p.m. The Anglo-American Company, though it has only one hundred miles of wire, controls the situation. A telegram to Boston costs $1—50 cents to Sackville, and 50 cents to Boston. Pressure should be brought to bear upon the company, whose head office is in London, to secure a better service. They get a subsidy of $2,000 a year. The island papers cannot get the press dispatches at night. There would not be so much objection to slightly higher rates than those on the mainland if it were possible to get messages and press dispatches through at any time, or at least up to midnight. There are two steamers now every week from Boston to Charlottetown with crowds of tourists who stand amazed that they cannot send a message home between eight p.m. and nine a.m.

We earnestly hope that this will receive that careful attention which its merits most certainly demand.

(Signed) M. G. DeWOLFE,
President.
G. E. CALKIN,
Secretary.

The Maritime Board of Trade brought this matter up last summer again, and here is a memorandum I have received from them :

Copies of resolution passed at the annual meeting of the Maritime Board of Trade, held at Chatham, N.B., on the 21st and 22nd days of August, 1901 :

Resolved, that this board again urge on the federal government the prompt improving of the telegraph connection between the mainland and Prince Edward Island, the necessities of which have already been fully set forth to the government.

I find that the people even as far west as Toronto take an interest in this discussion. The following is from the 'Railway and Shipping World' :

Prince Edward Island Telegraph Service.

In referring a short time since to the complaints about this service, we pointed out that there are two sides to the question, that the Anglo-American Telegraph Company is not entirely to blame for the high rates for messages outside of the island, owing to the fact that these have to be handed over to other companies necessitating the charging of an extra toll, and that the telegraph business of the island is small, owing to its population being almost entirely an agricultural one. But there is no doubt that the service is inadequate and that an improvement is necessary. During a recent discussion in the House of Commons several of the island members complained very forcibly about the service, being supported by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, whose home is in Charlettetown. The Anglo-American Company has its head office for the island in that city, yet it is closed daily at 8 p.m., and not opened until between 8 and 9 a.m., so that no messages can be transmitted during the night. As Sir Louis Davies pointed out, during the South African war, the morning paper published in Charlottetown has not been able to secure any dispatches arriving later than 8 p.m., and in consequence, most of the trains leaving Charlottetown in the morning, the people outside that city always get their news 24 hours late. There is no doubt such a position of affairs is intolerable, and if the Anglo-American management values its Prince Edward Island business at all we would strongly advise it to provide a more up-to-date service by keeping its offices in Charlottetown, and possibly Summerside and Georgetown, open at least until midnight and to endeavour to make arrangements with the lines with which it connects in New Brunswick that through rates may be somewhat reduced. Unless the management does this another service will undoubtedly have to be provided.

Now, that is the way that parties outside of Prince Edward Island view this matter, and you can from it form some opinion of how we look upon it in the province. We have been trying for some years to get a remedy, but the company, whose head office is in London, will do nothing. About two years ago or a little less, Sir Louis Davies wrote to the company in regard to the matter, and in their reply to him they were almost offensive. When he asked for an improved service they answered that if the government or the community would undertake to bear the whole cost of the extra hours of service, and would guarantee the comapny against any diminution of their net receipts, they would consider the matter. Now, in bringing this matter to the attention of the government and of the House, I hope that something will be done quickly to remedy this state of affairs. It is my opinion, however, that no effective remedy will be found until the government takes over the telegraph business itself.

Mr. MACLEAN. Hear, hear. Another county heard from.

Mr. HUGHES (P.E.I.) I firmly believe in that proposition. I believe that the government should have control of the telegraph and telephone systems, as they have of the post office system, these latter in fact would only be an extension of the post office system, for the telegraph and telephone services are the twentieth century post office. But as it is not likely that the government will take them over very soon there is another way that the government could bring pressure to bear upon this company, unless it gives a reasonably satisfactory service, and that is by withholding the subsidy. This service might have been suitable or satisfactory twenty or thirty years ago, but it is not satisfactory to-day. This company, in order to obtain a charter, undertook to keep up a regular telegraphic communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and I believe that no court in the world would decide that a service that was only available for eleven or twelve hours out of the twenty-four, was a regular service. I think it is a sound principle in law that any company having to deal with the public, or any persons having to deal with the public, and receiving a contract of that kind, must keep pace with the progress of the age. This company, if it is not a monopoly, really exercises a monopoly, and it makes large profits out of Prince Edward Island business; therefore, if the government at any time should decide to take the business over they would not have to take over an unprofitable business. I have under my hand a statement issued by the company showing its profits for the last twenty years, from 1880 to 1899, and I find that the net yearly profits were £993, almost $5,000 a year. Yet this company will not even consider a proposition to give a reasonable service to the people out of whom it makes these large profits.

Mr. TAYLOR. What capital had they invested?

Mr. HUGHES (P.E.I.) I do not know. I presume that interest was charged on the capital before they declared a net profit. I think that is the way nearly all the companies in the old country make up their profits, as they are very conservative in giving profits. As I said before, I do not think any adequate remedy will be found until the government take over the telegraph service of Canada. Now, there are six telegraph systems in Canada. If there were only one or two, the service might be very good. Now, in what condition would the post office service be if it was operated by six companies? Here is what Mr. Pope, manager of the Great North Western, says in regard to that matter:

The telegraphs in Eastern Canada are owned by six separate organizations.

1. The government lines operating in Quebec and New Brunswick;
2. The Western Union Telegraph Company in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia;
3. The Anglo American Telegraph Company in Prince Edward Island;
4. The Great North-western Telegraph Company in Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick;
5. The Montreal Telegraph Company, and
6. The Dominion Telegraph Company, operated by the Great North-western Telegraph Company.

The tariff for ten words from Ottawa to stations on government lines varies from 40 cents to 75 cents, to Western Union stations, 30 cents, to Prince Edward Island, 50 cents, to Great North Western stations, 25 cents, and the rates between the various systems run as high as $1.25.

It is proposed that the Great North-western Company operating the largest system, should acquire the lines of the Western Union Company and the Anglo-American Company, and should also operate the government system, and establish a uniform 25 cent rate over the whole territory.

This could be effected not only without actual cost to the country, but in a way that would ensure a large annual saving to the government, and would satisfy all interests concerned. The Great North-western Company now pay a rental in the shape of dividend to the Montreal and Dominion companies aggregating $238,000 per annum.

If the government would exercise the right to purchase the telegraph lines of these two companies which is given to them by chapter 132 of the consolidated statutes, paying the present market price of the companies stock, the purchase could be made for $5,000,000. The Great North-western Company would continue to operate the lines, and would pay the government the interest on the above amount at two and a half per cent, and this charge being the first lien on the whole system, the payment would be assured.

The saving effected on the fixed charges would compensate the company for reducing the rates, and assuming the cost of operating the government lines.

The company would be restricted to a seven per cent dividend on its own capital, any earnings in excess would be used to extend the system, or to lower the rates.

The government, having the necessary facilities, would continue to maintain the cables in the gulf, but would be relieved from all other expenses in connection with their lines, thus saving between $20,000 and $25,000 annually on their present and prospective outlay.

The advantage of such a sweeping reduction would be felt and appreciated everywhere, but more especially in the poorer districts on which, under the present system, the high rates bear cruelly.

The actual ownership by the government of such a large portion of the telegraph system would make the acquisition of all the telegraphs an easier task, if it was ever decided to adopt such a policy.

That would be another way out of the difficulty, if the government, in their wisdom could see fit to pursue it. But, I do not know whether that matter could be taken up immediately or not. As I have spoken of the government ownership of the telegraph system of the country, as this matter has been before the House on previous occasions and the various aspects of it have been spoken of by various members, and as figures have been submitted bearing on the question, I do not propose to trouble the House with the figures which I have here in regard to the working of the government telegraphs in other countries particularly in Great Britain. However, I will read a very short extract from an article in the 'Arena Magazine' which shows how advantageously the government telegraph system has worked in Great Britain and the wonderful results that have been achieved there :

In 1869 the telegraph service in Great Britain was in the hands of a number of companies who combined to keep up the rates which ranged from 24 cents to 48 cents per message according to whether the distance was under one hundred miles, or under or over two hundred miles. The principal centres enjoyed telegraph facilities, while many villages and some towns were left without. At this time Belgium, Switzerland, the colony of Victoria and some other countries had government telegraphs. In Belgium the proportion of telegrams to letters was 1 to 37, in Switzerland 1 to 69, in Britain 1 to 121. In January, 1870, by a law previously enacted all the telegraphs in the Kingdom were taken over by the government and made a part of the post office. The government acquired 77,000 miles of wire with the equipment at a cost of $32,108,214. The lines had really cost the telegraph companies only $11,000,000, and from depreciation were worth 25 per cent less. So dearly did the government pay in order to give the people increased facilities for telegraphing at reasonable rates.

The first action of the government was to rapidly extend the wires into districts hitherto unprovided with the telegraph and they reduced the rates at once to 24 cents for 20-word messages, irrespective of distance. The result was a vast and immediate increase in the popular use of the telegraph. The government continued to extend the wires and in 1885 reduced the rates to 12 cents for 12 words with 1 cent for each additional word, the address being counted as part of the message. There was a proportionate reduction in press messages, which speedily caused an increase from 6,000 to 20,000 words sent daily to the newspapers over the wires. From 1869 to 1894-95 the number of telegraph offices in the Kingdom increased from 2,488 to 10,000 ; the miles of line from 5,601 to 35,000 ; the miles of wire from 77,000 to 215,000 and the messages from 6,500,000 to 71,589,000. No less than 91 per cent of the messages are received or delivered at the new offices opened, because they are easier of access or more conveniently located.

The ratio of telegrams to letters had in the meantime increased from 1 to 121 to 1 to 30, and this notwithstanding the steady increase in postal facilities, the largely increased number of letters sent and the further important fact that the telephone service had come in, directly competing with the telegraph service. And best of all, the postal service has been a paying one. From 1870 to 1895, aside from interest on the cost, the English telegraph has paid all expenses of extensions, operation, repairs, &c., and given the country a profit of more than $8,500,000. The profit above operating expenses alone has been over $25,000,000.

I think I have said enough to bring to the attention of the government the condition of affairs as it exists in Prince Edward Island in regard to this matter, and I ask the government in all earnestness to take up the question and do something and do it speedily to bring about a better state of affairs. I know I am not capable of pointing out the best method to pursue; they are the best judges of what can be done to bring the Anglo-American Company to some kind of reasonable terms. We have the lever in our hands. The government have a lever which they can apply and it is by withholding the subsidies. That company are making a very respectable profit out of their business. I believe that the government will have the support of the House and of the country in this matter whatever they may do. I would ask the press of the country to support us. A few months ago a monopoly which existed in this country tried to raise the price of paper which the newspapers use. They unitedly asked the government to remedy this grievance, and the government, availing themselves of the power given to them by parliament very properly applied the remedy and the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) said that if the Order in Council which was passed does not meet the exigencies of the case an order will be made to meet the case. I believe it is the duty of the government to take notice of all matters of this kind, to right these wrongs and remedy these grievances. I hope and trust that the government will not allow this session to pass before something is done in this matter. I would appeal to the press of the country to assist in ventilating this grievance. It is not a question that refers to Prince Edward Island alone. It is a matter that concerns the whole Dominion, and it is a principle now well recognized in this House and in the country that no part of the empire can suffer a grievance and the rest of the empire remain indifferent in the matter. No province of this Dominion particularly can be under a grievance of this kind without it affecting the whole Dominion as well as every other province. Every public man, every person in the Dominion must take an interest in it. I, therefore, rest my case as I have stated, hoping and believing that something will be done and done at once to remedy this grievance.

Mr. A. A. LEFURGEY (East Prince, P.E.I.) Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for King's (Mr. Hughes) has presented this case probably as clearly as it can be presented, and I shall therefore have very little to say upon it. The question has been before the House on several previous occasions, and we have had the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries and other members from Prince Edward Island stating the case to the House. I think hon. members on both sides recognize that there are serious grievances in connection with the present telegraph system of Prince Edward Island.

The hon. member for King's pointed out that the hours of closing are absurd. Out of twenty-four hours in the day we have a twelve hour service, the office in Charlottetown closing at eight o'clock, local time, and we are unable to have any communication through the telegraph service with outside places until nine o'clock in the following morning. On Sundays the offices are open for only one hour in the day, between one and two. This is a very serious matter in the carrying on of our commercial interests, and in getting telegraphic news. In the matter of rates, as the hon. gentleman has pointed out, we are obliged to pay double the rates that are paid on the mainland. The rates between Charlottetown, St. John, Halifax and Montreal are double what the same rates are between different places for like distances on the mainland. Besides that we have no night rates such as are given to the rest of the provinces where twenty words can be sent for the same charge as an ordinary ten word message during the day service. Moreover, in the matter of news communication, we are at a very serious disadvantage. I have a statement here from a newspaper proprietor in Prince Edward Island which is to this effect :

For our press despatches we have only 'specials' prepared by our own paid correspondents in St. John or Halifax. For these we pay (besides the cost of preparation) 70 cents per hundred words and St. John or Halifax pays for 'special' despatches, but 25 cents per hundred, or about one-third of what we pay. For their cable and general telegraphic news of the world they have the despatches of the 'Associated Press,' which a few years ago were delivered in St. John at the rate of $10 per week for 2,000 words a day. That was a very low rate—10,000 words for $10, and no cost for preparation. I have been informed that the rate the St. John papers pay now for the Associated Press despatches has been raised to about $15 per week. For that they would get at least and usually much more than 12,000 words. In other words we pay at the rate of $7 per thousand words and they at the rate of $1.25 per thousand.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you can readily see that the commercial community and the press of Prince Edward Island are labourng under very serious disadvantages in this regard. It is high time that the government and the members of this parliament looked thoroughly into this matter, as it affects not only the personal convenience of the people of Prince Edward Island, but their commercial relations with the whole world. I am sure that the statement made by the member for King's is correct when he says, that if pressure were brought to bear on this company to give us an ordinary rate as charged on the mainland or even a small advance on the ordinary rate, their business would be doubled, and there would be no financial loss to the company on that score. If pressure cannot be brought to bear on this company to give us reasonable telegraphic rates and reasonable hours for telegraphing, then it is up to the government to take hold of the matter themselves and to establish a cable system, or the Marconi system across the straits. As the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) pointed out, this company was chartered in 1853 and up to the last year or two they have been generally understood as claiming a monopoly of the cable system across the straits. On that point we have the opinion of the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) in these words : 'Hansard' 1900, page 1720.

This company was established in 1853, and it had a certain monopoly granted to it, but that monopoly does not extend to the laying of a line between Prince Edward Island and the continent of America. It does extend to the laying of a line between Prince Edward Island, England and Europe, but not to the laying of a line between Prince Edward Island and the mainland of America, although the company sedulously seeks to create the impression everywhere that such a monopoly does not exist.

Last year I intended to bring this matter to the attention of parliament but I was requested by Sir Louis Davies to allow it to stand over as he was in correspondence with this company on the subject and wished to develop it further before anything was done. Sir Louis Davies has left the House for a secure position, and he has done nothing for the people of Prince Edward Island in the matter of their telegraph service. However, since this company has no monopoly, and in as much as I feel assured that the members of this House recognize the serious difficulty under which the people of Prince Edward Island and of the maritime provinces labour, I express the hope that the matter will be taken in hand at once by the government, and if pressure cannot be brought upon the Anglo-American company to remedy the evil ; then I trust that the government will at once establish a modern telegraphic system across the straits.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Hon. J. I. Tarte). I have to assure my hon. friends that the government will give their best consideration to the important point which has been raised. It is not the first time that I have heard complaints about the Anglo-American company. The hon. gentlemen who have spoken are right in saying that we have some means of reaching them. Several members of the government will be in England in a short time and if circumstances permit, I expect to go there myself. I will try to have a short and interesting interview with these gentlemen of the Anglo-American Company. The government already possesses a pretty large system of telegraphs. I may say that it has not been built under what might be called business-like circumstances, because we have been building telegraph lines where ordinary telegraph companies would not build them because they would not pay. The telegraph system of the government has so far been built to accommodate trade and navigation. I am just now engaged in giving attention to some considerable extensions of our lines in order to make them pay if possible, and in order at any rate to give more accommodation to the public. If the Anglo-American Company does not want to listen to reason I feel confident that we are able to bring them to book. The government system might very well be extended—it wont cost $1,000,000. Moreover, we have some wireless telegraphy, especially Mr. Marconi's system, and with Mr. Marconi we have already made some arrangements. With all these weapons in hand, I repeat that I feel confident that we can bring the Anglo-American Company to sense and reason. It is not necessary to say more. Under some circumstances action is better than any amount of speeches.

PUBLICATION OF BLUE-BOOKS.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). I wish to say a few words about a matter of very great importance to the House and the country. It is in reference to the subject of our blue-books. The value of official documents issued by the government has been very seriously attacked, and some hon. gentlemen have gone so far as to express their sympathy and their sorrow at discovering that gentlemen on this side of the House should place any reliance or should base any argument upon statements to be found in a certain blue-book issued by the present government. Attention was called to the fact that the examples quoted from the Year-book did not exactly bear out all the strictures that were made upon that publication. Later on, a gentleman on the other side of the House called attention to the fact that while confirmation of certain figures cited by him could not be found in the Year-book for 1900—that being in my opinion the Year-book that was in the first place in question and under attack, because I have no doubt it was the Year-book of that year to which the gentleman on this side referred—that hon. gentleman in some subsequent remarks made by him, repelling the criticism made from this side of the House, rested his case upon the fact that he was using the Year-book, not of 1900, but the Year-book of 1899.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid the hon. member is referring to a previous debate.

Mr. BELL. If possible, I will endeavour to avoid doing so; but it is a little difficult, and in a sense it is a personal explanation that I am making.

Mr. SPEAKER. At the same time, in making a personal explanation, the hon. gentleman should be very cautious not to bring in a question which has been the subject of a past debate.

Mr. BELL. I am not referring to a past debate. I am speaking in a very general way of statements which have been made. The Year-book of 1889 having been brought into question, I find that there is a discrepancy between the figures used in this House and those given in the copy of the Year-book of 1889, which I have been able to put my hands upon—not very important, perhaps, but sufficiently divergent to justify a certain amount of inquiry, and to afford, I think, legitimate ground for questioning the claim for extreme accuracy, which is based on the use of these figures. Now, I do not propose to go into this matter at any length, further than to say that I cannot find confirmation for the position taken by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, even in the Year-book of 1889.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is certainly referring to a previous debate. He is answering a matter brought up by an hon. member of this House some time ago, and that is certainly out of order.

Mr. BELL. I am very sorry, indeed, Mr. Speaker, if it is impossible for me to refer to this matter without violating the rules of the House, because I can assure you that I have no desire to be out of order. I am endeavouring to furnish satisfaction to a very hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, and I hope the House will pardon me in this matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not desire to violate the rules of the House; but he must recognize that he is referring to a question which was the subject of a previous debate, and I am calling his attention to the fact that this is irregular.

Mr. BELL. In that case, Mr. Speaker, I shall have to abandon my purpose to throw further light on this subject. I will simply say, if permitted, that I think there was no foundation for any of the strictures addressed to myself, that a charge of stupidity which was made against me with extreme good taste by an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, I think I could answer with satisfaction to the House, and that I think it would be impossible for the hon. gentleman to find in my speech any word which could justify his expressions. I did not charge any hon. member of this House with intentionally falsifying figures. I simply called attention in a most courteous manner to the fact that there were discrepancies, and expressed my desire that they should be explained; and I regret very much that I should have been treated in the harsh and unpleasant manner I was, and should have been made the subject of a charge, which, if the rules of the House permitted, I could effectively repel. Under your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I will make no further remarks.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE WITH THE EMPIRE.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). Mr. Speaker, I am taking this oportunity to bring before the House and the country a very important incident which happened in Great Britain yesterday. The Chancellor of the Exchequer delivered his budget speech in parliament, and in that speech made certain statements of special interest to Canada which ought to be immediately brought to the attention of this House. He introduced for the first time a tax on bread and flour; and, laid down the doctrine that a tax of that kind was not a tax on the consumer; and, after fifty years of free trade in England, the Chancellor of the Exchequer made a confession that the duties on breadstuffs never should have been taken off. These are statements of a most far-reaching character, and for that reason I take this opportunity of calling the attention of the House to them. Let me read just what he said :

> The effect of a duty of three pence per one hundred weight on wheat would mean but a very small fraction of a farthing increase in the price of the loaf, and the competition of the bakers was so keen that any one trying to raise the price of bread on such a ground would probably find such action not to his advantage. The chancellor denied that the registration duties on grain and flour violated the principles of free trade or would increase the cost of food. He thought the duty had been recklessly abandoned and declared the remission did not reduce the price of food. He therefore proposed an import duty of three pence per hundred weight on all grain, with a co-relative duty of five pence per hundred weight on flour and meal. The total yield of this duty was estimated at £2,650,000 bringing the total estimate of the revenue from the new taxation to £5,150,000.

Now, what does that mean ? It means that for the first time in over fifty years, a measure has been introduced into the British parliament proposing a tax on food products; and the disappointing thing to us in Canada is that when the opportunity came to the parliament of Great Britain to reciprocate towards Canada, that opportunity was not taken advantage of. We have given Great Britain a preference in our markets, and the government claim the greatest credit for that act; but when the opportunity came to Great Britain to reciprocate, there was no reciprocity.

An hon. MEMBER. They said they did not want it.

Mr. MACLEAN. But we want something for what we have given; and why was the opportunity not taken advantage of yesterday ? I believe the cause of no action on England's part was the attitude of this government. The opportunity has been presented to this government time after time to open up negotiations leading to reciprocity of trade between the mother country and this country, and every time it has been thrown down. Let me read what has taken place within a very few days. I am now quoting from a prominent English magazine. In the Nineteenth Century for March, there is an article dealing with Mr. Chamberlain as an empire builder. Speaking in Birmingham in January last, Mr. Chamberlain made this statement :

> A new factor has entered into the politics of this country. In future you will have to take account of the opinion of your colonists. You will have to consult them.

Mr. Chamberlain made that statement in connection with the war in South Africa; and the essayist who is discussing the question says :

> These are pregnant words, and call to mind others already uttered by Sir Wilfrid Laurier : 'If you want our help, you must call us to your councils.'

Sir Wilfrid Laurier is quoted as having said to the people of Great Britain in connection with the jubliee celebration : 'If you want our help, you must call us to your councils.' In that very year a proposal was made to call Canada and the other colonies to the councils of the empire, and the right hon. gentleman did not accept it. The invitation was again given by Mr. Chamberlain in that speech in January last, and no response was made to it ; and on top of that the following despatch was sent to this country by Mr. Chamberlain—it was given out in this country on the 11th of March :

> On the 23rd January, the Colonial Secretary cabled to Lord Minto as follows : 'It is proposed by His Majesty's government to take advantage of the presence of the premiers at the coronation to discuss with them the question of political relations between the mother country and the colonies, Imperial defence, commercial relations of the empire and other matters of general interest.'

There was a broad invitation issued to the Prime Minister of this country and to the prime ministers of all the other colonies to discuss Imperial affairs ; and I believe that that invitation was given in view of the statement which was made yesterday, that England had at last come to the point when she must resort to protection; and if the proper answer had been given to that invitation, I believe that the budget speech of yesterday would have shown an inclination on the part of England to give us some kind of reciprocity in return for what we have given to England; but what put them off ? It was this reply of the Canadian government which His Excellency the Governor General on the 3rd of February cabled to the Colonial Secretary :

> Referring to your despatch of the 27th December, my government accepts the invitation extended to the Prime Minister to attend the Coronation.

The he goes on to say :

> Referring to the several questions mentioned in your despatch of the 23rd February, the only one which, in the opinion of my ministers, gives promise of useful discussion, is that of the commercial relations between the various sections of the empire. The political relations now existing between the mother country and the great self-governing colonies, and particularly Canada, is regarded by my ministers as entirely satisfactory, with the exception of a few minor details and they do not anticipate that in the varying conditions of the colonies there can be any scheme of defence applicable to all.

But, Mr. Speaker, is it not evident that it is just in connection with an Imperial scheme of defence, that a tariff can be arranged to the advantage of Canada ? If a tax were put on all foreign food products coming into the empire for the defence of the empire, that would give Canada reciprocal treatment, and it is because the right hon. the Prime Minister said he was not prepared to discuss the question of defence, that this proposal was made in the budget speech yesterday to tax grain coming from outside countries without extending any preference to Canada. This is only another instance of the carelessness of this government, and its lack of foresight in dealing with these great questions that concern the people's interests. They take credit to themselves for our good crops and prosperity. They are not entitled to credit for either, but they deserve discredit for having lost opportunity after opportunity of doing something to extend and promote the trade of this country, and especially to obtain reciprocity from the motherland in return for the preference we have given it. At the jubilee the Prime Minister threw a great opportunity away. When Mr. Chamberlain made the statement in Birmingham that England must call her colonies to her councils, no reply of an encouraging character was made from this side. And when an official invitation was given the Prime Minister to go over and discuss all the questions concerning the colonies and the mother country, he replied that he did not intend to discuss the question of defence.

But, Sir, the defence of a nation should be its first consideration, and if we had a patriotic, far sighted and statesmanlike cabinet, that invitation to which I have referred would have been accepted in its broadest sense. Had it been so accepted the Chancellor of the Exchequer would never have come down and proposed to levy a tax on food products without giving a preference to Canada. This is the first time in fifty years that such a tax has been proposed in England. It has been stated time and again that England never would give us a preference, but if we had at the helm of state, men of foresight, that question of defence would have been coupled with England's commercial policy, and Canada would have had no difficulty in obtaining the preference we all desire. But the right hon. gentleman apparently saw no connection between the defence of the empire and its commercial policy, and lost the golden opportunity. Yesterday we had the confession made in the British House of Commons by the Chancellor of the Exchequer that the principle of protection is a sound one, and that protection does not mean an increase in cost to the consumer. True the statesman who said this is a Tory, but in view of the trend of events I question whether that will take from the value of the declaration in the eyes of the people. And this statesman said further that these duties never should have been abandoned, as they were a great many years ago. Here is an opportunity which has been, with criminal carelessness, absolutely thrown away. This is not the first time the interests of our country have suffered through the lack of statesmanship of the right hon. gentleman. As I pointed out in this House on a previous occasion, when there was first a question of the abolition of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty, Lord Lansdowne declared in an official document that there should be no settlement of that difficulty until an agreement satisfactory to Canada was arrived at concerning the Alaskan Boundary dispute. That was stated in an official dispatch as the declared policy of the British government, but as far as we know the government of Canada never insisted on that position which was taken by the British Foreign Secretary and indorsed by the Prime Minister of England, Lord Salisbury, being strictly adhered to. A great opportunity was then lost which cannot be recovered. But I believe that if the invitation of Mr. Chamberlain, received in January last had been fully accepted, we would have had no proposition in the budget speech of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to impose a tax on food products without giving a preference to Canada in return for the preference which we have given the manufacturers of England. Thus three great opportunities have been lost of improving our commercial relations with the mother country, and I have no doubt that we will have a similar course followed by our Prime Minister at the coronation conference in June next. Whatever offer may be made to the colonies by the mother country, no doubt we will find him using some cold blooded double meaning phrase that will effectually kill it. I make this charge to-day, that in these great questions, which call for foresight and statesmanship, the government have shown itself absolutely incapable. To show the House that the view to which I have given expression is held by leading organs of public opinion in England, let me read a few lines from a recent number of the 'Saturday Review.' In the 'Saturday Review' of the 9th of March last, I find the following editorial remarks :

Canada, Australia and New Zealand are busy organizing new contingents for service in South Africa. The persistence of these colonies in identifying themselves with the Imperial cause is a proof of devotion more remarkable even than their first efforts, and encourages the highest hopes that some scheme of Imperial relations more businesslike than those which now obtain may result from the Colonial Conferences to be held in London this summer. As New Zealand has been the most enthusiastic contributor to the colonial forces in the field, so her Prime Minister, Mr. Seddon, is easily first in his eagerness to promote the cause of Imperial solidarity. His programme is comprehensive, and includes preferential tariffs, Imperial reserves, the strengthening of the Australasian squadron, and triennial meetings between leading Imperial and colonial statesmen. Mr. Seddon's attitude is what we should expect that of other colonial premiers to be, in view of the attitude of the people they represent. Sir Wilfrid Laurier's unwillingness to consider any project of Imperial defence is intelligible only on the ground that he has misapprehended the ideas which have been advanced on the subject. We should not have been surprised if his free trade proclivities—which he has not been able to gratify in Canada as premier—were a difficulty in the way of tariff modifications, but that he should deprecate the discussion of defence is astonishing and may prove unfortunate for himself.

It has already proved unfortunate for the Canadian people. Were the right hon. gentleman equal to the situation, he would have accepted that invitation in its entirety and coupled the question of Imperial defence with that of the Imperial trade policy. The 'Saturday Review' points that he has lost his opportunity. I only hope that he may recover it in June next, but, judging by the experience we have had in the past, there is very little prospect of his so doing. I am not going to delay the House further on this question. I have taken the earliest opportunity of bringing it up after the Chancellor of the Exchequer's speech of yesterday. Let me emphasize the great fact that there can be no discussion either of Imperial defence or of Imperial trade relations without the two going together. They cannot be uncoupled, as the Prime Minister has sought to do in his reply to the invitation sent to the government. When the government in England know that the colonies are prepared to do their share in the way of Imperial defence and are ready to discuss what that share is and how it is to be given, you will find England ready to give a preference to colonial products in her markets recognizing fully the principle of protection, as against the outside world for that great principle the British government has this day accepted, and the recognition of it as an Imperial bond cannot but be an advantage to the farmers of Canada, especially those of our growing North-west. The future of our North-west lies in two things—the home market, which we propose to keep for them, especially as against American competition; and the English market by way of preference over foreign food products. If there is any reason that will bring the American people to a sense of their duty and obligation, if there is anything that will cause them to respect Great Britain and Canada and compel them to settle such questions as those of our fisheries and the Alaskan boundary, it will be a preference in the British market for Canadian products over the products of the western states of the union. The very form of the invitation sent to the premier, the commercial relations of the empire and the defence of the empire being coupled together, meant preference of some kind. And the Australian and New Zealand premiers saw it, and they are going to London to discuss both these questions of Imperial defence and Imperial trade policy. But our premier goes over, according to his own word, not to discuss the question of defence, but to discuss the question of trade relations. He cannot go with any authority or force to discuss the one without taking the other also. But, with these questions presented together, the parliament of Great Britain will at once see that the time has come when a preference must be given to the colonies. When that time comes, Canada will prosper as she has never prospered before, the empire will be bound together as it never has been before, and we shall be in a position, for the first time in our history, to compel our neighbours to the south to treat us as they ought to treat us. These are great questions; these are far-reaching questions; these are up-to-date questions—and they are squarely before the people of this country and the people of the motherland. They are questions that demand consideration; they are questions calling for the highest kind of statesmanship on the part of the government. I am sorry to say I have seen no evidence of statesmanship in the handling of them by this government up to the present time. All I have seen is that every opportunity presented to the government to lead in these matters has been neglected. But the empire must be led by the colonies. We are called colonists, and, used in its proper sense, I do not resent the name. I claim this for the colonies—at least, so far as Canada, Australia and South Africa are concerned—that the clearest vision in regard to Imperial questions has been in the eyes of men who are called colonists. The day will come when all the people of the empire will see that the men who are leading in questions of Imperial policy, the men who are doing the work that is binding the empire together, are the men from the colonies. We have long had these views on this side of the House; unfortunately, we lost our opportunity to press them forward. Hon. gentlemen opposite are in power, but whenever opportunity has come to them, they have allowed it to pass by. As I have said, the only explanation I can give for that is their pro-United States leanings. 'The Senator from Quebec' and 'the Senator from Ontario,' as they have been called in the United States, would not like to do anything to injure their friends there. But, if the government had accepted this invitation in its true significance and had said they were ready to discuss both Imperial defence and Imperial trade preference, I believe that this proposal of three pence per hundred pounds on wheat going into the motherland, would have been modified into a proposal of a duty on foreign food products with a preference to the colonies.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to express my regret to my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) that, since he thought it advisable to bring to the attention of the House so important a question as this, he did not follow the usual practice and give some notice to the government of his intention, so that we might be prepared for a discussion. But, if my hon. friend did not give us notice, perhaps it is that, after all, he was not quite sure of his own facts or of his own mind. For, having listened somewhat carefully to what he has said, I can hardly think that he meant exactly all he said or that he knows exactly in what position he stands. One thing is quite apparent—he wants to attack the government. And he attacks it right and left, for everything it has done and everything it has not done. The hon. gentleman has attacked us for the British preference and has called upon his friends to censure us because, forsooth, we have given a British preference without exacting any compensation. And, before he had gone much further, he blamed us for our pro-American leanings. That we gave the British preference is because of our pro-American leanings I imagine. That is the kind of logic that we have from the hon. gentleman; therefore, I am not surprised that he has entered somewhat unguardedly upon the discussion of a topic upon which, if he will allow me to advise, he should reflect further before he speaks again. The hon. gentleman blames us because we gave a certain answer to the British invitation sent to us, in common with the other colonies, to take part in the conference that is to take place in London next summer. What reason did he blame us for ? What fault has he to find with the attitude we have taken ? And, since the hon. gentleman finds fault with the position we have taken and that was made known to the House six weeks ago and more, how is it he dares not put his view in the form of a motion which can be debated before the House ? It is not enough to have rambling speeches; but, if the opposition have a policy on this question, I would expect them to frame it in a motion that can go to the world and let us know what are their views on this question. We were invited to the conference to discuss three matters. We were invited to discuss the commercial situation, the political situation, and the military situation. Our answer has gone forth to the Imperial authorities that we are ready to discuss the commercial situation. Our answer has gone forth, at the same time, that we see little advantage in discussing the political situation or the military situation.

Now has my hon. friend anything to say to that position ? We stated to the Imperial authorities that, according to our way of thinking, the relations which at present bind Canada to the mother land are satisfactory. Is my hon. friend prepared to take another course upon this question ? Does he want to have the position in any way improved that now exists between Canada and Great Britain, or between Great Britain and the self-governing colonies ? If so, let him suggest in what way our present relations can be improved ; let him say what he has to offer to the people of Great Britain or to the people of Canada in the way of improving the relations that now subsist between the two countries. In our own estimation, and I believe in the estimation of the hon. gentlemen who sit on this side of the House and in the estimation of the Canadian people at large, the relations which today bind Canada to the mother land cannot be improved—at least I do not see how. Possibly there may be some way of improving the presesnt condition, if there is, I am prepared here to discuss it. But my hon. friend must remember that this is not the first time that we have had to deal with this question. In 1897 we were invited in almost identical terms to discuss certain questions between the colonies and the motherland. A conference sat in London and the question of the political relations, the Imperial relations, was discussed ; they were discussed by the representatives of the Imperial government and of the self-governing colonies, that is to say, of Canada, New Zealand, Natal, the Cape Colony, New South Wales, Victoria, Queensland, West Australia, South Australia, Tasmania and Newfoundland, and with two exceptions, all were unanimous in the opinion that the relations then subsisting between the colonies and Great Britain were perfectly satisfactory. Nothing has taken place since 1897 which would induce me, at all events, to change my mind, or would suggest any way by which those relations might be improved. The basis upon which the British empire rests, the basis upon which it has grown, has been the local autonomy of all its constituent parts, and I do not see that anything can be done at the present time which would warrant a change in that basis in any way whatever.

Now my hon. friend takes up another question. He says we have made a great mistake in refusing also to consider the military situation, in refusing to discuss a scheme for the general defence of the empire. My hon. friend says the government have made a great mistake, that the commercial question and the military question must go together. If that is the view taken by the hon. gentleman, that commerce and war must be considered together, it is a view from which I altogether dissent; and I challenge him or any other gentleman in this House, or outside of it, to present a scheme whereby two things so dissimilar as commerce and war can be considered together. No, Sir, I do not admit that view at all; it would be a most suicidal policy for the Canadian people to go into any scheme of that nature. It would be the most suicidal policy that could be devised for Canada to enter into the vortex in which the nations of Europe, England included, are engaged at the present time, and which compels them to maintain great military armaments. Sir, what is the relative position of Great Britain and Canada? Great Britain is one of the foremost nations of the world, in many ways, perhaps, the foremost nation, certainly the head of the greatest empire which exists to-day, the greatest which has existed since the Roman empire. Great Britain, by reason of her situation, has to maintain a large and permanent army. Hon. gentlemen are aware how repugnant to the British people ever was the necessity of maintaining a standing army; hon. gentlemen are aware how the British people have constantly fought against that idea, but they have been forced by events, forced by the position which the empire occupies in the world, to maintain a standing army, and to-day the principle item in the British budget is the expenses for naval and land armaments. Now my hon. friend says that Canada should follow in the same course, that we should take part in a scheme of Imperial military defence. Sir, Canada is in a different position. Canada is a nation with an immense territory, but with a sparse population of five and a third million of souls, scattered over an area 3,000 miles in extent from east to west. The principal items in the budget of Canada are what? Public works, the development of the country, the construction of railways and harbours, the opening up of ways of transportation. This is the work to which we have to devote our energies, and I would look upon it as a crime to divert any part of that necessary expenditure to the supply of guns, cannons and military armaments generally.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Did the right hon. gentleman say any part of the expenditure?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no hesitation in saying that I share altogether the views which have been expressed by Sir Charles Tupper more than once, that Canada has done more for the defence of the British empire by the construction of the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, than she could have done by spending that money in military armaments. Certainly we must improve our own militia, and we have a scheme before us to-day for that purpose; we must look after our own defences. But there is all the difference in the world between undertaking this domestic military expenditure and embarking in such a scheme as is embraced by my hon. friend's vast conceptions. I do not share his views, and so long as my hon. friend wants to link together war and commerce, he will find me unalterably opposed to him. I cannot agree to anything of the kind.

We are going to London simply to discuss the commercial question. That question we are prepared to consider, and it seems to me that our course has been a wise one. Great Britain, as it appears from the budget which was delivered yesterday, has entered upon a new line of taxation, I do not care whether you call it protection or not, but for the purposes of this discussion it is sufficent to say that England has opened up new avenues of taxation, she has gone back to the old duties on corn. It is very true that this new tax which has been imposed upon the English people is not large, I do not complain of that, I rather rejoice at it. But at all events, there is an opening, and since the British government has adopted this new line of taxation, the field is clear now for negotiations in a new direction at London next summer. What have we said in our answer to the invitation that has been given to us? The answer we gave is, that we are ready to discuss with you the trade relations that exist between Canada and Great Britain, and between Canada and all the self-governing colonies. I do not despair that we may be able to lay down next summer in London the basis of a system which will improve the trade relations between Great Britain and her colonies and will establish freer trade between all sections of the British empire.

That is the view which I hold, that is the view which the government hold, and that is the view on which we are prepared to act and so far as he is concerned, I do not know whether it meets the views of my hon. friend or not. If it be that it does not meet his views, I am satisfied that it does meet the views of the great majority of the Canadian people. What the Canadian people are looking for at the present time, is the improvement of the trade relations which exist between the mother country and the colonies. Perhaps I am mistaken in the hope I now express, perhaps it is premature to say it, but there is every reason to believe that we are facing the dawn of a new day, that peace is going to be at last restored to the British Empire, that this cruel war will soon be over, and if that be so, the conditions are more favourable than they ever were before for securing the improvement in our trade relations which we have in view. When we come back from Great Britain next summer it will be time enough for my hon. friend to find fault with the government if the government have not done, as he thinks, their duty. Whatever we may do, I am satisfied we would not please the heart of my hon. friend. I know that the better the arrangements we can make the more displeased he will be. But, whilst I have great admiration and sympathy and friendship for my hon. friend, he will pardon me when I say to him that it is not so much his approbation I am looking for as the approbation of the Canadian people.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) seems to object very strongly to the wisdom of my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) bringing this question up at the present time. As he could not bring it up at an earlier moment, on account of the information contained in the papers and upon which he based his argument not being available, he is quite excusable in not having brought it up at an earlier date, but, that he does it at an opportune moment will be admitted by every right thinking man, because, it is during this time above all others that the attention not only of Canada but of the world is attracted to the very important divergence that has taken place from the old established custom of the mother country by the introduction of what may be fairly regarded as the protective system. In view of that he could not choose a better time than the present in which to let the mother country understand the strong desire of the Canadian colony, when a departure has been made from an old established principle, that her interests may be taken into account and that such provision may be made as will enure to the benefit of the colonies, if it is possible to make an arrangement of that kind. I think we are justified in believing that had proper representations been made by the right hon. Prime Minister at the time of the last conference, that Canada desired above all other things some form of inter-Imperial preferential trade between her and the mother country and the other colonies of the empire, England would have kept that representation in view, and in this departure, in all probability, she would have made provision for the introduction of a system of inter-Imperial preferential trade. But, the right hon. Prime Minister says: I am not going to connect war and commerce. They have no connection, and I distinctly refuse to act upon that principle. Why, the history of the British empire shows clearly that Great Britain has acted upon that prinicple. War and commerce are so indissolubly associated that they have never been separated. War is always the precursor of commerce, and after the resort to force, to the arbitrament of arms we have established our commercial relations with the country with which the empire was in conflict. There never will be a time in the history of England or of Canada more opportune than the present for the establishment of some new and mutually advantageous commercial relations. The time is not likely to come in the history of our country in our own life time, or perhaps in the life time of those who come after us, and I say that there is no time in the history of the country when it is more important to depart from the old lines and to adopt new lines to meet new conditions than when the force of war when the arbitrament of war has given the Imperial government control of the country with which she was in conflict. That is the time above all others when commercial relations ought to be improved and established upon a basis that would be mutually advantageous to the colonies and the motherland as well. I do not think the right hon. gentleman's contention that there is no connection between war and commerce is one that will be held by the people of this country. Well, there is one thing that the right hon. gentleman has told the English people, and it is that he will not inform them how it might be possible to make an improvement in the line of commerce and defence. We have something in common with the mother country in connection with the question of defence, as we have something in common in connection with the question of commerce. We have mutual interests all seeking a common defence. The defence of one part of the British Empire is the defence of all. If England lost her power on the high seas Canada would have no status amongst the nations of the world, and it therefore becomes a matter of importance and interest to us as it is to England to have some common system of defence. But, how can this question fit in with our inter-imperial preferential trade in this way: A motion was made a few years ago laying down the lines as to how it could be accomplished. It was a motion proposing that the mother country and the colonies should collect a customs duty upon imports from all foreign countries, setting a small percentage apart for the purpose of common defence. I have no doubt it would be answered, if the right hon. gentleman were to answer it by saying that we will never concede the right to give away money without the right of saying how that money shall be expended. We need not do that. Having raised the money, having obtained a customs revenue for this purpose, would it not be proper to retain the expenditure in our own hands for the purpose of establishing the nucleus of a navy, and in this way assisting the British empire? I do not see that it would necessarily follow that because we raise money we must give it away to the Imperial government to be expended as they like. If the colonies collected such a revenue, and if the mother country imposed a tax on foreign importations what would be the result? It would accomplish what we desire to obtain, a measure of inter-Imperial preferential trade that would give us the advantage of putting our goods down on the English market over any outside competitor in the world. Take the proposition which was announced yesterday in the British House of Commons. A duty of 5 cents a hundred weight is placed on wheat. That is 3 cents a bushel. Suppose that had been put on the foreign product and not upon wheat coming from the colonies; that would have given us 3 cents a bushel more for our wheat in England than the American would receive, and they are our greatest competitors. See what an incentive it would be to immigration and to the settlement of our great North-west, where we can raise millions of bushels of wheat to supply the British army and the British people. See what an advantage a preference of 2 cents a bushel on wheat would be to our North-west farmers. We believe that if the Prime Minister had been alive to the situation, and had pressed that phase of it as strongly as he might when he was in England before, it would now be before the Imperial parliament, and they would in all probability have given us that advantage over the Americans. It has been written:

> There is a time in the affairs of men (and nations)
> Which taken at the tide, leads on to fortune.

We believe that one of these golden opportunities passed when the Prime Minister was in England. We believe that he missed a golden opportunity to strengthen the trade relations between the mother country and the colonies. We believe that he lost the opportunity of accomplishing great good for Canada. But another opportunity will come a few months hence. The Prime Minister of Canada is invited to England to consider the commercial relations between the mother country and the colonies, as well as the defences of the empire. He has refused to discuss the question of Imperial defence, but in my judgment the two questions are so indissolubly united that you cannot separate them without doing injustice to one or the other. The Prime Minister is doing less than the Canadian people expects of him when he refused to discuss both questions, because the discussion of our commercial relation without the discussion of Imperial defence can only be half hearted. We shall have another opportunity to discuss this matter at greater length and I shall not dwell further upon it now. I could not avoid saying something on the subject, seeing that it was introduced at the earliest possible moment to the notice of this parliament, and seeing also that the Prime Minister has proceeded in the past on the line that we have given to England a preference for which we ask nothing in return. The Minister of Agriculture made the same statement in England last year. This government is always ready to give away what belongs to Canada and to ask nothing in return for it. What a contrast with the policy of the Australian colonies who are alive to this question, and who want a mutual preference. But, Sir, cold water is thrown on this intercolonial conference by the Canadian Prime Minister in advance. If the premier colony is not prepared to go to the length of discussing Imperial defence, that conference must lose a good deal of its importance seeing that the other colonies will not be sustained or supported by Canada. It is because we think our Prime Minister is not alive to the interests of Canada at this opportune moment, that we desire to draw his attention to the importance of the question, and to impress its importance on him when he comes to discuss these matters in England.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire to say a very few words in reference to what has been said by the right hon. Prime Minister. I was not aware that this subject was to be discussed to-day, and therefore I can say very little on the main question which has been brought to the attention of the House by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean). I would however like to remind the Prime Minister, that when he expressed his complete and perfect satisfaction with the relations which exist between Canada and the motherland, he seems to have somewhat altered his mind from the opinions which he entertained in days gone by. Reference has been made during the present session to the aspirations of the right hon. gentleman in 1892, for the complete independence of this country, and within a more recent date, if the right hon. gentleman has been correctly reported in England, he has said to the Imperial government: If you want our assistance call us to your councils. I have never heard the right hon. gentleman contradict the correctness of that statement attributed to him. It has been published in the public press of this country and in the public press of the mother country many times, and it has never been contradicted. But, when a courteous invitation to come to the council of the empire is extended to the right hon. gentleman by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the response which is given to that invitation is not itself of a very courteous nature, so far as we can understand it. I do not, however, propose to discuss that at any length just now. The right hon. gentleman quotes with approval a certain statement by Sir Charles Tupper in the past, and the right hon. gentleman refers to the great burdens which are imposed upon the people of the motherland.

I for one shall always maintain that so far as Canada is concerned, Canada must herself deal with the subject of contribution to Imperial defence. The parliament of Canada is the proper tribunal to deal with that, but I do not think it necessarily follows that the government of Canada should refuse as they have done, to even discuss that subject. I say that this country must deal with that subject and must control that subject, but I do not agree with the right hon. gentleman that it is altogether out of the question to discuss it when we are invited in a courteous way to do so. We must also recollect in connection with the guns and ammunition and warlike stores and the enormous liabilities which are paid for by the British people, that these are to some extent at least for the benefit of Canada as well as the other portions of the empire. We should not altogether put that particular phase of the question out of sight. I suppose there is not one amongst us, holding even the most extreme views on this question, who would not understand that if any Canadian subject was ill-treated in any part of the world under such circumstances as would call for the intervention of Great Britain, that Canadian subject would be supported by every British gun and every British ship to the full extent of the resources of the British empire.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, Sir, if that be the case, it perhaps affords us food for reflection in discussing a subject of this kind. It does not, it seems to me, sound very well from the mouth of the Prime Minister of this country, that while he speaks of that question of liability which is laid upon the people of the British Isles, he should so absolutely shrink as he seems to from even a discussion of the subject of the defences of this country as part of the British empire. The growth of constitutional government in Canada has been gradual. It has progressed in every decade for the last sixty years, and the only step backward that has been taken in connection with our responsible government has been taken under the government of the right hon. gentleman, in connection with the subject of copyright. As I understand it, this government has receded from the attitude taken by Sir John Thompson, and which, if he had lived, he would have maintained to the full. I shall always maintain that Canada should advance, so far as the right to govern herself is concerned, and I regret that after sixty years of progress in that direction, the only retrograde step has been taken by the present government.

But, what I particularly call the attention of the House to is this : We on this side have been asking the government for the past two or three years to endeavour to secure for Canada a preference in the British markets. All parties in this House and in this country have adhered to the opinion that that preference would be of great advantage to Canada. But, Sir, the only answer that we have ever got from hon. gentlemen on the other side is, that it was so supremely ridiculous that the mother country should think of imposing a tax on food stuffs, that the very absurdity of the proposition justified the Canadian government is taking no steps whatever for the purpose of securing such a preference for our food products.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If my right hon. friend can point to any other reason which was ever given by himself or by his colleagues to excuse the apathy of the government on this subject, I would like to hear that reason now. I have paid pretty careful attention to the debates of this House, and I have heard nothing else. I have heard it from my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I have heard it over and over again from the Minister of Finance ; I have heard it ad nauseam from the right hon. gentleman himself and from numerous of his followers ; and now, Sir, what the country would like to know is, when it has appeared imminent that some measure of this kind was to be brought down by the Imperial government, has this government awakened from its sleep and made any representation on the subject ? I am very much surprised that my right hon. friend the leader of the government should have taken his seat to-day without informing the House and the country whether the government has or has not taken action with regard to this most important subject. He has occupied the time of the House in making certain criticisms on the speech of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), but he has not afforded one single word of information to the House and the country as to whether this government has made the slightest representation to the mother country with a view of having the colonies exempted from this tax which is being placed on bread stuffs going into the United Kingdom. I regard that as a remarkable omission on the part of my right hon. friend. It is true, he is in a very peculiar position in respect to this subject, because he told the people of the mother country that he did not want any preference and he has got the medal of the Cobden Club on that score. If my right hon. friend should ask the mother country for exemption from this tax for Canada, it is perfectly clear that he would have to send that medal back to the Cobden Club, because from first to last the ground on which that medal was given to him was that he had told the people of the mother country that he did not want any preference—that he was a free trader. Well, some members of his cabinet have made it abundantly clear to the country that they are not free traders. Is my right hon. friend so much of a free trader that he desires to retain this Cobden medal and desires that Canada shall not have any preference in the markets of the mother country ? There is a well-defined line between what this country would like to have in this connection and what the right hon. gentleman has said in the past that this country did desire. As plain as words could make it he has told the mother country that he gave the preference without any desire for a corresponding preference from the mother country. He has also told us, and his followers from time to time have repeated it, that although a preference to this country might be desirable, the right hon. gentleman was perfectly justified in taking that position at the time he did, because it was utterly and absolutely hopless to suppose that any tax of this kind would be imposed on food stuffs going into the United Kingdom. Now, when it became apparent that this tax was likely to be imposed, has my hon. friend had the courage to go back on the declaration which he made at that time, and to say to the mother country, we in Canada do desire a preference in the United Kingdom; and, as we have given you a preference, which, whether it has done you good or not, is well intended, will you give us a preference by exempting Canada at least from the operation of this duty on bread stuffs? I venture to say that this country would be very much more interested in some declaration of that kind from the right hon. gentleman, who is the Prime Minister of this country, than a great deal of the declarations and statements he made in the House to-day. Although the right hon. gentleman has not seen fit to enlighten the House at the present time with regard to the attitude of the government on that question, I trust that he will take an early opportunity to do so. Are the government still of opinion that they do not want this preference in the markets of the mother country? Does the right hon. gentleman adhere to that solemn declaration which he made to the mother country at that time, or does he adhere now to the view which we on this side of the House expressed last year by a resolution which was voted down by the right hon. gentleman and his followers, that it is a good time, and the proper time, and the proper thing to do, to ask the mother country that the products of Canada at least shall be exempted from the tax which is being placed on food stuffs, and that the farmers and agriculturists of this country shall receive from the mother country a preference by being exempted from that tax. I trust that the right hon. gentleman will at a very early date enlighten the House as to what the government has done or proposed to do on this subject, and what the present attitude of the government is on a subject of such great importance to this country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman made an allusion to myself, which justifies me in offering a word or two in reply. It is unfortunate for hon. gentlemen opposite that they have never been able to found an argument on this question of preferential trade without entirely misstating the facts of the case.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friends say oh, oh. A reference to what has occurred in the past will be sufficient to justify my observation. A few years ago the hon. gentlemen created the delusion in their own minds, and tried to place it in the minds of others, that Her Majesty's ministers, on the occasion of the Jubilee, when the right hon. the Prime Minister of Canada visited London, indicated their willingness to give Canada a tariff preference in the British market. That statement was made over and over again, and ran through all the discussions of this question from the opposition side for a series of years, and yet every hon. gentleman knows that it was a statement absolutely unfounded in fact, that it never had any foundation. If it ever had any colour at all, it was utterly destroyed and taken out of the discussion by the letter which was addressed by the Duke of Devonshire to the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock). The Duke of Devonshire was the gentleman who was said to have made that statement to the Prime Minister, and in his letter, which is now a matter of record, His Grace said that it was preposterous, that he had never made such a proposal, that he could not have made it, that he never dreamed of making it. We have been told again and again that the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who delivered his budget speech yesterday, was quite prepared to give a preference for Canadian flour and wheat, and that the only reason he did not do so was that we had not asked him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Who said that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend from East York said it all through his speech.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Practically that is what he said all through—that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach was prepared to do that. The hon. gentleman does not deny it. He knows that I am making a correct statement.

Mr. MACLEAN. I did not put it that way.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He did not put it that way, but he knows that that was the substance of what he said.

Mr. MACLEAN. No, I made no such statement as that. The statement I made was that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach had yesterday introduced a measure putting a duty on corn, that it was the first time that had been done in fifty years, that it was a protectionist proposition, and that that being the case, it was the opportunity of the government to protest against that tax being put upon Canada after we had given a preference to the mother country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman said most distinctly that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would have been prepared to give Canada a preference on wheat and flour but for the fact that the Canadian government had not demanded it. That was the whole argument of my hon. friend's speech, and if it did not mean that there was no reason in his argument at all.

Mr. MACLEAN. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, what I did say was that when the right hon. gentleman received the invitation which he did some two months ago, if he had replied that he was prepared to discuss a scheme of defence and our commercial relations together, I had no doubt that the budget speech introduced in the British House of Commons yesterday would have given a preference to Canadian bread stuffs.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The difference is not material. But the substance of the hon. gentleman's remarks was that because of the action of this government, the budget speech of the Chancellor of the Exchequer did not put a preferential duty on wheat for the benefit of Canada. There is no man in the English government or English public life who would receive such a statement seriously. Every one who has any conception of the position taken by the ministers of state in England knows that up to this year, not one has ever declared his willingness to put a preferential duty on wheat or anything else.

Mr. SPROULE. Did you ever ask him ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It would have been useless to have done so. I am speaking of what I know, because I have had the opportunity of discussing the question with a number of public men in the mother country. And when the hon. gentleman represents that English statesmen were prepared to grant us this preference, he makes a statement which is absolutely not justified by anything that has occurred in the mother country. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition made reference to some speeches of mine. He said that over and over again he had heard me say it was absolutely ridiculous to suppose that a preferential duty or any duty on wheat would ever be imposed by England. I want to tell my hon. friend that he is mistaken. He may search through every speech I ever made in this House, and he will not find in it any such statement. On the first occasion when I was privileged to discuss the matter in the House of Commons, I said that, as matters then stood in England, it was unreasonable to expect that any duty would be put on wheat.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought that when I was quoting the resolution of the Maritime Boards of Trade in this House last year, the hon. gentleman interrupted me by saying that any such idea was perfect nonsense. I think that 'Hansard' will show that I am right.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not happen to remember the Maritime Board of Trade resolutions. I said that to have expected the British government in 1897, when we brought down our preferential tariff, to put a duty on wheat was at that time unreasonable and preposterous. Here we are five years later, and during all the intervening years nothing of the kind was done, but to-day you have a small duty on wheat and flour, only brought down because of the tremendous cost of one of the greatest wars in history.

Mr. MACLEAN. Which shows that the tariff goes with war.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The money to pay for war has to be raised by tariffs. That happens to be the only bond of connection between the two. On that very occasion, when I had to discuss this question in parliament, not only did I not say that the thing was ridiculous and impossible, but I carefully guarded myself by saying again and again that the conditions were so changing in England that I could not, nor would abler men, undertake to say that at no future date should a condition arise, under which it would be possible. But I said we had not reached the stage yet when England was prepared to give us preference. And she is to-day only putting a duty on bread stuffs because of the war tax. Were it not for the war tax, we would have no duty on corn or flour in the British budget to-day. Therefore it is unreasonable to compare events in the time of peace with those which occur in the stress of one of the greatest wars of modern times. Not only did I not make the statement charged against me, but I took great pains to indicate that the time might come when Great Britain would be prepared to adopt a preferential policy. Hon. gentlemen will remember that I did make that point, differing in that respect from one or two on this side, who took the view that it would never be done at all. Hon. gentlemen opposite, however, always argued on what might happen in times of peace, not on what may be brought about by stress of war. It is perfectly evident that up to the present there has been no reason to believe that the Imperial government would grant the preference talked of. We agree that such a preference would be desirable from a Canadian point of view. I have said that twenty times in the House of Commons.

An hon. MEMBER. We never heard it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman has never heard me, he has lost some valuable information. It would be desirable from a Canadian point of view, but whether or not it would be from the point of view of the English consumer is what he has a better right to decide than this parliament. If there is one view which I have presented again and again, and which I now present, it is this : The point on which we differ from hon. gentlemen opposite on the question of preferential trade is this. They have from the beginning insisted on our demanding of John Bull a preference and giving him nothing until he would grant it; whereas, the position we took was that we would give John Bull the preference, believing that it was good for ourselves and that ultimately it would lead him to take a more favourable view.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend will find that, again and again I have given expression to that opinion, and if this movement for preferential trade has made any progress in Imperial affairs, if there is a party in any part of the empire which is advocating preferential trade, it is largely because Canada has led the way. And if at any time we should be able to bring about that preference for the benefit of Canada and the other colonies, it will come, not as a result of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, who demanded that we should make huckstering terms with John Bull, but as the result of the policy adopted by this government in 1897, which undoubtedly has been a very great factor in the development of Imperial ideas in commercial affairs. Hon. gentlemen opposite have seen fit to sneer again and again at that preference. We say that it was a good thing for Canada, and for the mother country. These hon. gentlemen say that it has ruined our factories by admitting a lot of English goods, and then in the next breath say that it never did any good to anybody and has not increased our trade with Great Britain. But if we follow the history of the movement during the last five years, we have every reason to believe that the step taken by Canada has been the chief factor in the creation of an Imperial interest in our commercial and other affairs. I have no difficulty in proving that. Go to the mother country, go to the magazine writers, the daily press, the leading public men, go to the man on the street—aye, and to the utterances of the sovereign from the throne—and you will find all recognize the fact that this preferential trade movement in Canada has been a matter of great concern to the empire at large. And when we can point to that fact, we can afford to listen unmoved to hon. gentlemen opposite who would like to have us believe that it is a matter of no concern at all. On the question of defence, the reply of the government did not state that we would not discuss any such question. It stated that we would, as in duty bound discuss any matter brought before the conference, either by the Imperial government or any of the colonies, and that was the proper view to take. But if my hon. friends opposite think that we are not going far enough in our willingness to enter upon Imperial military expenditure, if they are of opinion that in addition to the moneys we are now spending on the military forces of Canada—and in expending money on the militia of Canada, I claim that we are spending for the defence of the empire—if hon. gentlemen think that in addition, we should enter into a broader scheme of Imperial defence and pay out larger sums that we are now doing for the defence of the empire, they would do well to frame a motion of that character, and assign specially the preparation of that motion to my hon. friend, the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), because I am given to understand that when my hon. friend speaks in the province of Quebec, he is not as cordial in his desire for Imperial military expenditure as some of his friends seem to be in this House. Probably that very fact would suggest that before undertaking to commit ourselves on any of the great questions, we should take into consideration not what may commend itself to one section of the people or the other, but what is likely to commend itself to the good judgment of the people of Canada as a whole. That, Sir, is the view which the government have taken. We believe that on this question as on others we have given expression to the sober, sensible, thoughtful judgment of the Canadian people. And time will show that we are right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I would like to be permitted to say a word. One thing which I referred to—only one of many—was where the hon. gentleman was dealing with the statement of Sir Charles Tupper that Great Britain would impose duties on foreign food stuff while admitting those of Canada free. He said:

> That is an old cry of Sir Charles Tupper, but no one knows better than he does that it is arrant humbug.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And so it was.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I also read, in the same speech which I made, the resolution of the Board of Trade advocating preferential trade within the empire, and when the hon. gentleman was interrupting me, I said:

> Why could not the hon. gentleman in the same way characterize this resolution which I have read as arrant humbug.
> The MINISTER OF FINANCE. So it is.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I wish to say that Sir Charles Tupper, whom the hon. gentleman quotes had been telling the people of Canada that, as a practical question of the present day, not as a thing of the future—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Sir Charles Tupper had been telling the people of Canada that he, the Conservative leader, if placed in power would be able to secure a preferential duty in favour of Canada. That was the statement which I said was arrant humbug. And, whether it be said by Sir Charles Tupper or anybody else, it was arrant humbug then and it is arrant humbug to-day. In every speech that I have made on the subject—I have not made many, so the hon. gentleman can easily look them up—I have invariably said that, while a preferential duty could not reasonably be expected at the time, I distinctly declared that by the step we were taking, we were creating an Imperial sentiment which would probably bring about that result. And that is what is happening to-day.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). When the right hon. First Minister was speaking, I felt that it would be my duty to rise and defend the premier of the province of Ontario, the province from which I come. That gentleman has devoted a great deal of time and study to the very question now before the House, but seems to differ, unfortunately, from the right hon. gentleman who leads this House. But before I venture to say a word in defence of the premier of Ontario, let me take the opportunity of saying a word in defence of the right hon. gentleman who now leads the House against the attack made upon him by his follower and colleague the Minister of Finance. (Hon. Mr. Fielding). The Minister of Finance in stentorian tones anathematized anybody who would be so foolish as to demand a preferential duty from the old land. I am not aware that anybody ever did 'demand' a preferential duty from Great Britain. But the gentlemen on this side have contended again and again that, if the hon. gentlemen opposite would conduct the business according to business methods ;—if, instead of doing as they did with the United States when they wished to make a bargian with them, give everything they had to give and then depend upon the gratitude for a return ;—if they have devoted themselves to the matter in the ordinary methods of business, very possibly the result which the hon. gentlemen opposite affect to desire, and which the hon. gentlemen on this side do most sincerely desire, would have been attained long ere this. The Minister of Finance went on to say that it was a most unreasonable thing for anybody to expect preferential trade away back in 1897. Surely the hon. gentleman is not a student of the modern classics or he would have known that, one of the most beautiful orations ever delivered in this or in any other land was that delivered by the premier in London, on the subject of preferential trade, in 1896. We on this side may differ from the right hon. gentleman as to methods which we think best, or wisest, or most patriotic to promote the development of this country. But we bow to no gentleman on the other side in our admiration for the eloquence and ability with which the right hon. gentleman can present his views, such as they may be at any time. In 1896, as I have said, the right hon. premier with even more than his wonted eloquence pointed out the glorious opportunity before Canada, the illimitable possibilities that opened up before us, if the people of Canada would be wise enough to reject the protectionist government which could not attain the boon of preferential trade and put in power a government led by himself and made up of gentlemen whose views of these matters were in accordance with the doctrines of free trade. For he promised to go to the old land and bring back preferential trade which would make this country blossom as the rose. Surely the Minister of Finance has failed to read that speech, or he has forgotten ; otherwise he would not have spoken of the folly and presumption of those who, so long ago as 1897, ventured to propose such a preposterous thing as preferential trade. But, when the right hon. gentleman and his followers came into power they gave us this tariff which gives a preference in our markets to the old country. For what reason they gave it, nobody on this earth can possibly tell to this day, for these hon. gentlemen themselves within the last fifteen minutes have differed as to the reason why it was given. The right hon. premier has told us and told the people of the old country—and thereby won the encomiums of the people there and, possibly won his Cobden medal as much on account of that statement as of any other—that we gave that preference as a matter of gratitude to the mother country. She had done so much for us, and we had done so little for her, that, without seeking or desiring anything, we gave this preference as evidence of our gratitude. And not only we did not expect anything but, we did not desire anything in return. Further, he pointed out most earnestly that any move in the direction of protection would be an injury to the motherland, and so would injure us, the greatest colony. So, the right hon. gentleman did not seek or ask or wish —and perforce, would not accept—a preference from the mother country. Within the last five or ten minutes, the Minister of Finance, who would be supposed to have some faint glimmering ideas as to the reason why this most extraordinary tariff was brought into existence, has told us that there were two reasons for it. One was that it would pay us and the other was that Great Britain would be more likely to give us a preference if we gave her one. Think for a moment ;—the right hon. premier tells the benighted Englishmen who were out of sound of the debates in this House and ignorant as to why this tariff was given. We have given you this as a matter of gratitude and nothing else. I can understand how the welkin rang with that shout of loud acclaim that rose to the heavens from the grateful Englishmen who listened to the right hon. gentleman. But what if they had learned, these poor benighted Englishmen, that, in deed and in truth this was one more of our usual selfish colonial modes, that we gave the preference as the Minister of Finance has told us, first because it would pay us, and second that we hoped to get a preference in return ? Now, for my part, I am inclined to stand by the premier. I am inclined to think he understood what he was talking about. For the Minister of Finance, who, after four or five years operation of this tariff would venture to say, on the floor of this House, that any intelligent government passed such a tariff on the ground that it would pay us, does not understand the meaning or operation of that tariff.

And when he went on to say that he gave to Great Britain because, in the second place, he thought we would get something in return, he forgets that we have been told during this very session, and other sessions, and have been told throughout the land, that we gave this tariff to Great Britain not expecting anything under the sun in return, but that we gave this tariff to Great Britain because we owed her a debt which we were going to pay in that way ; for the premier has told us, and we have been told by many speakers on that side of the House, that we gave her that tariff because we owed her a debt of gratitude which we intended to pay in that way. And just see how we have paid it. We have said to Great Britain : We owe you a debt, we the people of Canada owe you a debt, but unfortunately we are hard up, money is scarce, we have spent all we had on the first two contingents and we have run short ; we cannot afford to give you anything ourselves, and you could not expect a poor country like this, whose brave boys at the front have to live on emergency rations, to pay anything more. And so, as you cannot expect us to give you much in the way of cash, we will pay you by making the woollen manufacturers, the cotton manufacturers, the shirt manufacturers and some other industries in this country square the account with the Yorkshire manufacturers and workmen, so that while we, the people of Canada, cannot afford to pay our debts in cash, we have a few people in Canada from whom we will allow the English manufacturers to collect the money by coming into this market with their goods at the expense of our own manufacturers ; and then we can hold up our hands to heaven and say : Thank Heaven, that debt is paid. I am not prepared to say that the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues have not considerable ground for the line he takes that we cannot afford to pay the old country in cash for the benefits we receive from her. There were other and happier days when we could afford to pay our debts in cash. There was a time when this country was sufficiently opulent that when crimes were committed the government could afford to take all reasonable steps to follow and punish the misdoers. Under the late government that was done again and again, and so determined was the late government to see that justice was done, and so overflowing was the treasury, that even when a Conservative member was accused of wrong doing the most eminent lawyer of the country and he a Reformer, was employed to see that justice was done, and finding him guilty, he was expelled from this House. But even since the hon. gentleman and his friends have come into power, when election frauds were charged in distant Manitoba, money was supplied in abundance and even advanced to private individuals in order that justice might be done and the wrong-doers punished. But since that day we have had much graver offences than those, we have had election scandal after election scandal, until to-day Canada, which once was the most honoured country in the world, I am afraid has some black spots on its escutcheon now ; yet we are so impoverished in this country that ever since the marvellous efforts that were made in 1896, whether rascalities were perpetrated in Brockville, West Huron, Montreal or elsewhere, we have not been able to see that justice was done and the fair fame of Canada vindicated. Now when we find in this way that our money has run short, perhaps we are not to blame if the hon. gentleman should suggest that we take the only means we have in our power of paying our natonal debt.

But before six o'clock is reached, let me say a word in defence of the Hon. Mr. Ross, the premier of Ontario. The right hon. premier of this Dominion laid down the proposition that war and commerce should not go together, and that this letter having been sent over from the old country to the Governor General of Canada, inviting the premier and his colleagues to a conference, they were quite justified in refusing to discuss the question of defence, or in refusing to discuss any question except the commercial one, on the ground that the commercial question and the defence question should not go together. Now, I do not intend to occupy the time of the House in commenting on the terms of this letter in reply, as it is not before us. But it has been laid on the Table of the House, and therefore it is in the possession of the House, and within the knowledge probably of most hon. members. I venture to say there is no member of this House who has read the invitation and the reply, who will not unhesitatingly acquit the right hon. the premier of either writing that reply or of any knowledge of the particular terms of that reply. The language, the spirit, the courtesy of that reply are such as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) alone could dictate. Neither the right hon. premier or any other of his ministers could have dictated such a response as was sent. It is not necessary for me to recapitulate all the terms of the letter ; but hon. gentlemen will remember well that whereas the Prime Minister and his colleagues were invited to discuss other questions, and were asked to make any suggestions in connection with them that they could, they very promptly slapped their prospective hosts in the face, and they very courteously refused to discuss anything but the problem of dollars and cents in which there might be some pecuniary profit. It would have been quite within the province of the right hon. gentleman to have said at the conference, Canada is not prepared to do anything more in the way of defence than she has done; he could very properly have taken that course; but I do submit that nobody will believe that the premier ever dictated or was aware of a reply so discourteous to his hosts, who had invited the ministers to a banquet, and suggested to them certain topics to discuss. But the premier and his colleagues refuse to discuss any but one question. Perhaps some hon. gentleman may say: But look at the last sentence, look, as it were, at the sting in the tail; for after pointing out that no fruitful result could flow from discussing any question but that of dollars and cents, they practically say to their hosts: If, however, you are bound to discuss the question of defence, we suppose we will have to listen to what you will have to say. That is the gracious reply His Excellency, on behalf of the government, has sent to the Colonial Secretary in response to the invitation to the right hon. premier and his colleagues.

But the premier of Ontario has discussed this very question. He went through England discussing it at various boards of trade and before other public bodies in the old land. Again and again this question of Imperial defence came up, and the Hon. Mr. Ross, formerly a member of this House, for many years a minister of the province of Ontario, and now for some time back premier of Ontario, pointed out that war and commerce were so closely allied that in his judgment the proper discussion of the defence problem was along commercial lines; that inasmuch as an enormous expenditure is necessary for the purpose of the defence of the empire, and inasmuch as we in the colonies were deriving all the benefits without contributing a dollar, he suggested that a duty of say 5 cents a bushel be placed on all grain brought into the colonies or into Great Britain, or that perhaps the duty might be 5 per cent all round on all products brought into the empire from whatever source, and that the revenue thus derived should be applied as a defence fund, thus making outsiders maintain the army and navy of the empire. Surely, Sir, that is a business proposition. I will go as far as any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House—I say this in answer to the taunt that was thrown out at the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) as being opposed to taking part in a scheme for military defence—I say I will go as far as any hon. gentleman in this House in objecting to any military arrangement that would in any way, no matter how slight, deprive the Canadian people of the control of their own treasury and of their own men. But it is one thing to say we object to handing over to the Imperial authorities the control of Canadian money and Canadian lives, and it is another thing to say that we are not willing to discuss a question whereby, by simply imposing a tax—which would be the very Imperial preferential tariff that the right hon. gentleman claims he desires to attain, that he hopes to get in London, which was the very thing that Mr. Ross hoped to obtain in this simple way—by putting a tax of 5 per cent on all products coming into the empire, we might thus contribute to a common fund for the defence of the empire. Now I venture to say that when a gentleman occupying the position of the premier of Ontario points out this simple, unobjectionable way, and if it were possible even less objectionable since the budget speech of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, and when the right hon. gentleman says in this House that it is impossible to consider war and commerce together, he takes a position in direct antagonism to the position the premier of Ontario has assumed on that question.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was not in the House when this debate commenced in order that I might have had the full advantage of all that has been said. I desire, however, to express briefly an opinion or two in regard to what has already been said in reference to two or three questions to which attention has been directed. It appears that about two months ago the attention of the country, of the government and of the commercial bodies, such as boards of trades, was directed to the fact that it was the intention of the British government to impose a duty upon corn, or to reimpose, in a degree, the corn laws. The matter was discussed at that time by the various commercial organizations of this country and I know in one, and in perhaps more, cases that the government of this country were approached and that they were pressed to make known the views of the country on this matter and to ask the British government that if these corn laws were reimposed the colonies of Great Britain should be exempt from the operation of them. Whether the government took the advice which was given to them, or whether they have communicated to the British government on their own behalf, or on behalf of the country, or on behalf of the commercial organizations to which I have referred, I cannot say. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if they have not done this, they have fallen very far short in their duty. I regret that the right hon. leader of the government (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is not in his place at the present time because if they have not asked the British government to exempt the colonies from the operation of the duties which have been reimposed, I would like to inquire from the government, and to know to-night before this discussion closes, whether it is their intention, now, to press upon the British government to exempt us from the operation of these corn laws. I would urge them, if they have not done so, to take steps to have the British government exempt us in the way in which I have mentioned. It would appear from the debate, so far as it has gone, and it would appear from the attitude of the government for many years past that they have been very sceptical in regard to the question of whether the British government would at any time within measurable distance reimpose the corn laws or adopt a protective tariff. The hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) has said that five years ago no one could have expected that these corn laws would have been reimposed, that this duty would have been put in force and that it is because of the war. Certainly we have to look forward to all kinds of contingencies such as war which is one contingency which brings about great results. In view of all kinds of contingencies it does not seem that the government have been very wise in not placing themselves on record and trying to have this country relieved from the operation of this tariff in case, under any circumstances, it should come in force.

The premier gave utterance to a sentiment this afternoon at which I was very much surprised. He took the ground, as I understood it, that defence and commerce are two separate and entirely different things. I wish to disagree with him in respect to this matter. I cannot put myself in the standpoint of the Prime Minister when he makes such a statement, because, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that great navies are chiefly for the purpose of defending the commerce of the nations which own these great navies, that were it not for the commerce of the countries there would not be so much money spent in naval defence. I think that the ground is not well taken when the premier puts forth such a statement as that. The navy of Great Britain is increasing constantly. For what purpose is it increasing ? The navy of Germany is increasing and for what purpose ? The navy of the United States is increasing. Is it not to defend the continually increasing foreign trade of the United States, of Germany and of Great Britain ? These are civilized nations ; they are not seeking for territorial extension at the present time so much as to develop their trade and commerce and the navies upon which they spend so much money are for the purpose of enabling them, in case of complications, to defend that commerce. Therefore, I say that trade and defence go hand in hand, and while it is a very nice sentiment for the Prime Minister to talk about developing this country along other lines, and not to direct our attention to the question of military and naval expenditure so much, yet, we must be guided by what other nations have to do and we must come to the conclusion that we cannot be exempt from these obligations and responsibilities which other nations have to assume. The Prime Minister also referred to the fact that we had done an Imperial work in building the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have heard that argument advanced on former occasions and by other gentlemen. The Canadian Pacific Railway has paid this country fourfold over all it cost us, but we have other great enterprises in this country besides the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have other railways, we have other public works, we have canals, we have bridges, we have wharfs, and I think, Sir, that these would only be secondary to the Canadian Pacific Railway in these discussions in using such things as arguments, if, in fact, any of these things, and including the Canadian Pacific Railway, can be considered in any sense to have been built from an Imperial standpoint. I say that it is no argument and no excuse why we should not assume our fair share of responsibility in relation to the defence of the country that we should point to such matters as these. The right hon. gentleman also said that we did not want to turn the finances and revenues of the country in the direction of defence, that it would be better to spend the money on public works. I will admit, that, perhaps, it might be better, but we have to accept the inevitable. We cannot get away from these facts.

Now, I have said in this House on many occasions that I did not believe there was any other destiny for this country except that of British connection. I wish to reiterate that statement, and I wish to say that I hope the time is coming when we will all agree on that matter. I believe there is no medium course for us, that there is no course for us such as independence. I believe that if there was a sentiment, which I question very much, there is no such sentiment on the part of our people looking towards independence as would make it a practicable question, because, assuming that we were granted independence, in a very few years we would be absorbed by the United States, I admit after a struggle, but the struggle would be inevitable because the conclusion would be foregone.

Mr. FRASER. No, no.

Mr. KEMP. Well, 5,000,000 against 80,000,000—of course, there might not be many of the 5,000,000 left when it was all over, but that would be the result and there is no use trying to get away from that fact. I do not want anything to do with independence and I do not want anything to do with the United States more than to continue to live beside them on terms of peace and harmony for ever, developing our country with its great resources in the best way we can. But, supposing that we had the aspiration to become an independent country and that we did become an independent country what would be our position in regard to this question of defence which has been raised in this debate this afternoon? Would we not have to have some show of a navy? Would we not have to have one or more vessels? Would we not have to have some means of defence? Is it not a fair thing for us to look around and see what our duty is in regard to this question, and having discussed the question and having considered it, be willing to face the matter, not by throwing our responsibility over in the discussion of the question, but by being prepared to take whatever steps are necessary in the direction in which our duty lies?

To talk about our being exempt from the responsibilities which belongs to every nation, and to talk as the Prime Minister has about ignoring the question of defence, is all very fine for a five o'clock tea party, but it is not the kind of talk that the parliaments of civilized nations indulge in with reference to that question. A large percentage of the total revenue of all the nations of the world is devoted to their defence; 50 per cent in England, and only between 3 and 4 per cent of the total expenditure of Canada is expended on means of defence. I cannot give the exact figures for the United States, Germany and France, but of course a very large percentage of their total expenditure is on their army and navy. When we consider that only about from 3 to 4 per cent of our expenditure goes for defence, compared with 50 per cent of the revenue of Great Britain, that in itself ought be sufficient to warrant us in at least discussing the question. I believe we are educating our people the wrong way. We cannot reap where we have not sown, we cannot get something for nothing, but when we shirk our responsibility in this matter, that is what we are actually trying to do. When we endeavour to keep the discussion of such a matter out of this House, we are simply stifling our national life and shirking the responsibility which nationhood casts upon us. This question must come into our politics; it will be forced upon us, and to endeavour to procrastinate with regard to it, is simply to drift. Mr. Isaac N. Ford, whose writings are always held in respect, and whom we look upon as an authority, has a cable despatch dated 'London, April 15, 1 a.m.,' which shows the trend of public opinion in Great Britain; which shows the changing of public opinion there, and which says:

> Mr. Kruger, besides staggering humanity, has driven the last nail in the coffin of free trade. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach has required considerable pressure and he has yielded reluctantly. Sir Robert Giffen, who was once the hope of the stern, unbending Cobdenites, has been coaching him in the columns of the 'Times,' and at last the cue is taken. The taxation of corn is resumed. Although the abolition of the corn laws was the supreme end of Mr. Cobden's agitation, which converted England into the pioneer free trade nation, the hands on the dial plate, as devout Cobdenites will say, are now turned back. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach sought to minimize the importance of the new taxation by describing it as a revival of the registration duty on wheat and flour, which Mr. Lowe ought never to have repealed, and which had nothing to do with a protective system, but Sir William Harcourt did not allow the House to be deceived by sophistries, and characterized the taxation of food as incompatible with a free trade system.
> The budget speech was a clear evidence that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach had yielded to pressure from Mr. Chamberlain. The Secretary for the Colonies evidently was determined to have the duties on food stuffs before the assembling of the Imperial conference, when the colonial premiers come to the coronation, so that there could be some basis for the preferential treatment of Canada and the other colonies.

This language must represent British public opinion to some extent. It shows that it is in the mind of the British people that there is to be a trade preference within the British empire. It is evident that the time has come when not only from a sentimental standpoint, but from a commercial standpoint as well, it is in our interest to encourage preferential reciprocity. In the critical stage of the South African war, I did not believe as others did, that the downfall of the British empire had commenced. I believe that these are days of consolidation and federation. I believe that British opinion is more favourable to the consideration of preferential tariffs to-day than at any time in the past. I believe that this great colony should in this crisis move in the direction of preferential trade with the mother country and the other colonies. As Mr. Ford says, this view has been electrified and intensified by the outcome of the war in South Africa.

Let me turn for a moment to the question of Imperial defence. I want to be guarded in what I say on that matter. I do not want any one to understand me as contending that because Great Britain expends such tremendous sums for defence, that we in Canada should spend as large a sum per capita, or even that we should spend as large a sum relatively in respect to the tonnage of our sea commerce as Great Britain does in respect to hers. I do, however, say that the time has come when we must consider this question, and I contend now as I have contended before in this House, that we should at least be willing to discuss the question with the motherland. Let me refer to the attitude of the Canadian government as evidenced in their reply to the invitation which was received from the British government. I repeat that the Canadian government were not warranted in making such a reply. I assume that before the Colonial Secretary cabled the invitation to the Canadian Prime Minister through the Governor General, that matter was well thought out by the British cabinet. I also assume that the British government were reluctant in suggesting any matter of the kind to the colonies, knowing as they must know the sensitiveness of the self-governing colonies with regard to anything affecting their perfect autonomy and independence. It is not British to ask for help, and I believe that it was not the intention of Great Britain to ask for help or to suggest anything that could by any possibility be construed as being offensive to the colonies. The invitation of the British government raised three questions, namely : The question of our political relations; the question of defence, and the question of trade. As was pointed out by my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Northrup), the Canadian government replied that there was only one of these questions which they would condescend to discuss. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Northrup) referred to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) as being the gentleman who had framed that reply to the British government, I saw from the smile that came over the face of the Prime Minister, that he wished to take credit to himself for that reply. But the Minister of Finance afterwards came along and added the rider to which he referred, and which he could use when necessary. I wish to refer again to this letter and to read the few lines to which reference has been made. It says :

> Referring to the several questions mentioned in your despatch of January 23, the only one which in the opinion of my ministers gives promise of useful discussion is that of the commercial relations between the various sections of the empire.

Then, after reference to some other matters, the letter ends with the clause to which the Finance Minister refers :

> Nevertheless my ministers realize the desirability of taking advantage of every opportunity for the discussion by the public men of the mother country and the colonies of questions of Imperial interest.

and so forth. Now, I think the government have made a mistake in this reply, just as they have made a mistake in reference to the preferential tariff, and in reference to asking the British government what was their intention in imposing these duties on our produce. Even if the government felt that this was a sensitive matter, and that they were not sure what the feeling of the people of this country was, would it not have been a courageous thing and a fair thing for them to have expressed their willingness to discuss any question of Imperial interest ? It seems to me that if their reply gives room for the British people to take offence, because, after all, it is only a talk between the mother and the daughter—a confidential talk to a certain extent. If this government were carrying on negotiations of a delicate nature with a foreign government, I could understand why they should word their letter in the way they did in this case. There are three questions brought out in this discussion ; one in reference to the preferential tariff, one in reference to imperial defence, and one in reference to our young men going to South Africa to serve the empire. These are all questions of imperial importance ; and in using the word imperial as I have done, I want to say that imperialism is a word which, it seems to me, is not well defined. It may mean one thing to me and another thing to some one else ; therefore, I wish to use it in a guarded sense. I think it would be a good thing if in these discussions we came to an understanding of what we meant by imperialism. When I speak of taking some step to defend ourselves, of course I have in my mind the question of coast defences, the question of a navy. I do not wish to be understood by that, however, as laying down a principle under which we would contribute a large amount of money to be administered otherwise than by this parliament of Canada. I believe that every dollar of naval or military expense that this country incurs should be controlled solely by this parliament, and I believe that at no time in the future should we participate in military operations in any part of the empire or in any part of the world except by the consent of this parliament.

Now, I come to the question of the contingents, which has already been discussed ; and in reference to these, as in reference to the other two questions, I think the government have been wrong. I believe that on these Imperial questions they are not taking a broad enough view of the situation, and later on we will be obliged to discuss them on broader lines, because they will be thrust into our politics, and we shall not be able to get rid of them, however much some may desire to do so. As I understand, the government of Canada paid for clothing and equipping and transporting the two or three first contingents who went to South Africa.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And supplemented their pay.

Mr. KEMP. And supplemented their pay. However, for some reason or other the government have gone back on the principle they acted upon at the outset of the hostilities. Why they have done this is a mystery to me. It must be apparent that if they were right in the first instance, they were wrong in the second ; if they were right in equipping, clothing and transporting the men of the first two or three contingents, they were wrong afterwards in not doing the same with regard to the subsequent contingents. We cannot say that in the paltry expenditure they incurred for this service, they did their whole duty to the empire. The contingent which is in course of organization at the present time, as I understand, are offering themselves for service in South Africa, and the ordinary citizen cannot possibly take any credit to himself, because the men who are offering themselves are doing all the sacrificing. The government as I understand, is not willing even to clothe them or give them a water bottle or a rifle. The young men are enthusiastic. We were told the other day by the Minister of Militia that three were offering where only one was needed. This is an evidence of the condition of public opinion in this country. It is quite evident that if five thousand were needed, they would be forthcoming. This being an evidence of the condition of public opinion in this country, I say that the government have taken a wrong stand in this matter also. I think it is an injustice to our young men that they should be put in that position. If the British government wanted men, they could get them from the semi-civilized tribes of India or Africa on the same conditions. Have we or have we not any interest in this matter ? Do we not feel that it is a good thing for this empire to be held together ? And is there not merely a sentimental reason for this, but a commercial one also? If it had not been for the great efforts and sacrifices which Great Britain has made, and the lesser sacrifices which the colonies have made, all this could not have been accomplished, but the whole structure would have fallen to pieces. Not only would Great Britain have been deprived of her possessions in South Africa, but that would have been the beginning of the end. Therefore I say that the government made a mistake in this matter, and I deplore the way in which men who have volunteered to go forward have been treated. I contend that if Great Britain had desired to obtain troops upon the conditions which these Canadian soldiers have gone forward, she could have got them in other parts of the globe, and we in Canada should only have sent forward as many men as it was possible for us to clothe, equip and transport at the expense of Canada. When we have an over-flowing treasury, and such surpluses as the Minister of Finance boasts of, and when we are spending so little on defence, we cannot say that we have done our whole duty when we have spent a couple of million or so on the first contingents. From a monetary point of view we cannot be excused. The sentiments and principles of these young men have been established, because they have continued to volunteer after others returned from the war, and after they knew of the privations, the sufferings and the dangers which were before them.

The government have, in respect to the despatch of these contingents, simply occupied the position of outfitters. They have on behalf of the British government, the British taxpayer, purchased the clothing, arms, and equipment, which any commercial organization could have done. We have one citizen of this country, with sufficient national sentiment and money, who organized, equipped and sent out to South Africa a contingent at his own expense. It is a pity that we have not had others with sufficient wealth to do likewise and thus to have relieved this government from a responsibility which they have evidently been loath to assume. I do not wish to take up the time of the House any further. It is a good thing for this country that we have young men such as those of whom we have read within the last few days—men such as Private Evans and Captain Carruthers. If we did not have such material in this country, we could never expect to build it up as we hope to do. These men are the kind who have helped materially to build up other great nations, and I am sorry I have to say of this government that I believe it has pursued with regard to them a picayune policy. To my mind the government have made three mistakes. Their first was the reply which they gave concerning the question of Imperial defence. The second, is their attitude in reference to the contingents, and the third is the position in which they find themselves, owing to the re-imposition of the corn laws in Great Britain. Now that the right hon. Prime Minister is in his place, this House would be very much interested if he would tell us whether he has up to the present, at the instance of the commercial organizations which petitioned him in respect to this question, approached the British government and asked it to exempt Canada from the affect of the tax imposed on bread stuffs. These commercial bodies foresaw two months ago what was likely to happen, and petitioned the right hon. gentleman to do something. But if no steps were taken during the past two months, I would like to have the right hon. gentleman say that steps will immediately be taken to ask the British government to give us a preference. I believe, from the reports in the papers this evening, that if such representations were made, Canada would be exempt from the application of the tax which has been imposed upon her wheat and other cereals.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I do not know that I should have thought of saying anything in reply to my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Kemp), had it not been for the repetition, in the latter course of his remarks, of the attacks upon the position of the government with respect to the sending of the contingents to fight for the empire in South Africa. My hon. friend enjoys the distinction of being more loyal to the King and more Catholic than the Pope, and in that respect he seems to have a considerable amount of support in the good city in which he resides. He finds fault with us for not hraving done what he thinks we should have done. He finds fault because we have not paid what we were not asked to pay.

Mr. KEMP. Oh.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. And what it was not even suggested we should pay. The House knows well that when the question of sending a contingent first came before us, the government promptly responded to the call and did everything to the letter which it was suggested the government should do. But our hon. friends even then were so anxious to find fault with the government that they contended that, in addition to supplementing the pay of our forces in South Africa, we ought to pay the rest of the money, although the British government were willing to pay it and never made any suggestion to us that we should do so. And they find fault with us because, in the case of this last contingent, we have not assumed a position different from that which it was suggested we should assume.

The British government, desirous of securing a number of colonial troops, made a suggestion to a number of colonial governments, and that suggestion was loyally responded to by every government to which it was made, and by none more promptly and loyally than the government of Canada. In respect of the contingent being formed to-day, we are doing everything it has been suggested we should do, and if anything further be necessary, we are ready and willing to do whatever else may be suggested. Surely that is an attitude in which the country will be disposed to support the government. And it is an attitude, in respect of which we can claim the support of the House and the country. But I venture to say that my hon. friend, in the remarks which he has addressed to this House, cannot claim the support of the House and the country. I venture to say that he cannot get the members on his own side to endorse the position he takes. I venture to say that he cannot get his leader in this House to endorse the statements he has made and put them in the shape of a resolution. We are here, Sir, for the purpose of doing business, and not for the purpose of airing theories which we know are not going to be adopted. We are not here for the purpose of making suggestions which cannot be carried into practical effect. That is not what the government is here for, whether that be what my hon. friend is here for or not. We are here for the purpose of dealing with practical business, and we have dealt with these contingents in a practical business way, and we submit our conduct to this House and the country, confident that it will meet with their approval. Let my hon. friend get his leader to submit his policy to his friends in the House and the country, if he desires to have even respectable attention given to the suggestions he makes. This government and the Liberal party generally have no cause to feel ashamed of their position with regard to sending troops to assist in fighting the battles of the empire. Hon. gentlemen opposite when in opposition are very loyal, so far as their lips are concerned, but it is a matter of history that when they had an opportunity of doing what we have done, they did not do it. They did not supplement the pay, they did not pay the expense, they did not send the men, although the suggestion was made that they should do so, when Britain was in war in the Soudan, and other British colonies were busy sending assistance to the mother country. Where was Canada then? Canada was then governed by the party of which the hon. gentleman is so enthusiastic a member. But Canada was not then in the van of the fighting line. It lagged behind until the Liberal government took office. Since then it has not lagged behind but has gone forward and assumed a position in the councils of the empire which it never enjoyed before, and which it never would have assumed if we were left to follow the theortical and unpractical counsels which the hon. gentleman suggests. The hon. gentleman has had some experience himself in endeavouring to formulate an imperial policy, but his experience has not been satisfactory, to the extent at least of making any impression on the minds of the statesmen who govern the empire. What is the occasion of this debate? Why has it been brought on? So far as my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) is concerned, I think we can all answer the question. The hon. member for East York could not resist the temptation—he never can—of being first to bulletin an important piece of news from his place in this House. His instinct as a newspaper man leads him to highly prize that privilege, and I think we all regard it as one of the things that may be expected of him and all rather enjoy it. But, so far as this debate has developed into an attack upon the policy of the government, I desire to point out that it is of a piece with the policy that has been followed by the hon. gentlemen on the other side with respect to the action of the government in connection with the affairs of the empire from the day we took office. It is a deliberate and persistent attempt to misrepresent the position of the government to the House and to the people. When we were in opposition the hon. gentlemen did the same thing. They were exceedingly loyal, and they declared that if we came into office the affairs of the British empire would not be safe, so far as our influence upon them was concerned.

But the moment we proceeded to give a practical evidence of our affection for the empire and our loyalty to it, what did they do ? No sooner was that resolution laid on the Table than they proceeded to show that they were opposed to that policy and to any policy that gave practical expression of Canada's loyalty to the empire. A little later on when the right hon. Prime Minister went to England what happened ? They were afraid of the effect of the success of the visit of the right hon. gentleman to the mother country, of the reception he met with there and the favourable impression he created upon the minds of the people. Fearing that these things would reflect upon their political fortunes, they proceeded to misrepresent what he had said, and to say repeatedly, yet without a shadow of foundation, that he had refused an offer that had been made of preferential treatment of Canadian products in the British market, or that he had declined in advance an offer that was about to be made. It took a considerable length of time to explode that misstatement. And now, we have the same thing going on. We find these hon. gentlemen trying to create the impression in the House and in the country that there is something in the position of this government that is not favourable to preferential trade, in fact, that we have declared ourselves hostile to it. I know of no case of any person who has any authority to speak on behalf of the Liberal party having declared himself hostile to preferential trade or having attempted to minimize its beneficial effects if it were possible to secure it. What was said repeatedly was that it was not likely that such a thing would come about in the very near future. As my hon. friend the Minister of Finance said it is simply a question of when the opportune time was. Was the time opportune in 1897 when my hon. friend the Finance Minister laid his budget on the Table and brought down this British preference proposal ? If the time was opportune in 1897, was it not opportune in 1896, when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power ? There was no striking change in the affairs of the empire between 1896 and 1897. If the members of this government could have got preferential treatment in 1897 why did not the Conservative government get it in 1896 ? Simply to call attention to the fact is all that is necessary to show that the thing is not arguable, that it is a statement that does not commend itself to the most easily deluded person. Now, these hon. gentlemen find that circumstances have arisen which make it possible that in the future, perhaps in the near future, the question of preferential treatment may be a subject of serious discussion. Nobody knows better than these hon. gentlemen do that the action of this government for the last five years has commended itself to the government of Great Britain and to the people of Great Britain. Nobody knows better than they do that Canada at the present time is strong in the mother country ; and if, under the circumstances in which the empire is placed, it be possible to do anything to meet the wishes of Canada, it will be done. That is what we all feel and we feel it and know it to be the result of the course of action followed by this government for the last five years—a course of action that was diametrically opposed not only to what hon. gentlemen opposite propose now, but to what they carried out when they were in power, their policy of keeping Great Britain at arms length, of giving nothing unless they got an equivalent. Now that they see the time approaching when a discussion is likely to take place upon this question, they desire to make it appear to the people that this government approach the discussion of that subject in the coming conference in a hostile spirit. There is no foundation for such statement. On the contrary, every member of this government looks forward to the conference with the strongest hope and desire that something may be done to improve our trade relations, not only with Great Britain but with the other colonies of the British empire. And if Great Britain finds itself on account of its revenue necessities in a position to consider an idea which Lord Salisbury would not entertain two years ago, we say that we have been favoured by fortune and shall be most happy to take advantage of the opportunity thus presented. There is nothing whatever in the document to which the hon. gentleman referred which justified the misrepresentations made this afternoon. It is a document which, I venture to say, is calculated to do that which it ought to do. It is calculated to convey to the British government what is in the minds of the advisers of the Crown in this country—that we regard the commercial question as the practical question, the question from which results may be expected, but that as to the other questions, while we are prepared to discuss them, we do not at the present time feel that there is likely to be any tangible or practicable result. If the gentleman's own views were written down, I venture to say they would be expressed by that memorandum. The hon. gentleman himself knows, I am sure, just as well as we do, that the commercial question is the one from which practical results may follow, but that the other questions while they may be discussed are not likely to yield any practical results at the present time. And if we have expressed, as I venture to say we have, the mind of nine-tenths of the members of this House on both sides, and of nine-tenths of the members of the Canadian community, I do not see why the hon. gentleman should take the trouble to waste the time of the House in finding fault. I did not wish to take up time this evening, but I desired to call attention to the position that the government has taken with regard to the contingent, upon which the hon. gentleman made an attack, and I take it that it is quite clear that the position that the government has taken is one that will commend itself both to the House and to the country.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). The House has now listened to three members of the Cabinet address themselves to the task they have in hand, and that it is a task is quite evident from the fact that the question of real importance that has been raised, and that will be regarded as real importance throughout this country, has not been answered by any of them. The whole question at issue is whether or not this government proposes to address itself to the task, if it is a task, of obtaining from the British government favourable treatment for Canada in this question of grain importation into the motherland. I can easily understand why these hon. gentlemen are ashamed to deal with this question. I can easily understand why they feel diffident in approaching it. The fact is they find themselves in a pit and they are unable to extricate themselves. What is the history of the question of British preference? In the autumn of 1896 when the elections were being proceeded with, the present premier went into the province of Ontario. Sir Charles Tupper had introduced the question of British preference, and the premier who was then the leader of the opposition found that he had to do, as he has always done, and I suppose always will do—he had to trim his sails to catch the wind.

Finding that that was a popular cry in the province of Ontario, in his celebrated London speech which has been referred to this afternoon, the hon. gentleman went strong, and endeavoured to go Sir Charles Tupper one better on the question of a preference for our food stuffs within the British market. Then he found himself face to face with his pre-election utterances. Later on he found himself in Great Britain, and true to his free trade principles, he at once placed himself in communication with gentlemen who had the same political aptitudes as himself. My recollection is that there was a meeting held in the city of Liverpool, that a banquet was tendered to the right hon. gentleman, and that on that occasion his first utterance was along the line that Canada did not want any preference in the British market at all. Now the right hon. gentleman was in one of two positions: Either he was not politically honest when he preached that doctrine of preferential free trade, or he was in a position where he might accomplish it but did not wish to accomplish it. Be that as it may, the right hon. gentleman's statements were acclaimed, and I think on more than one occasion, in addressing meetings in different parts of Great Britain, banquets which were tendered him, he went on this self same cry again, that no preference was desired and no preference sought by the Canadian people. So strong were his statements in this regard that he was at once heralded by the celebrated Cobden Club as an apostle of free trade from protectionist Canada. If reports be true, although I have never seen that precious article, the right hon. gentleman had the honour of having pinned on his breast the Cobden medal which, on more than one occasion, he has been advised that he holds to-day under false pretenses, heading as he does a protectionist government in Canada, and that a quick return should be made of that medal, which must be now a much despised article because it has never been paraded in this country.

Now, what is the position of these hon. gentlemen to-day? The Conservative party have held the right hon. gentleman and his government to task from the very moment they stood on the threshold of office, in that they have not tried to impress upon the home authorities the desirability of carrying this policy into effect. As the Minister of Finance stated this afternoon, five years ago it was an absurdity to ask for that, and he said to-night that we would not have been greeted with the news that we have heard to-day of this imposition on flour and grain, were it not that this impost was rendered necessary by the exigencies of the war. Well, that is rather a prophetic declaration for that hon. gentleman. But he must remember that he and his colleagues have always fairly laughed the matter out of court in this respect, and have contended that so long have these duties been abandoned in Great Britain that it was impossible that she should ever have recourse to them again. The hon. gentlemen have proceeded on these lines, and their press has gone on these lines; but when they are confronted with the information that has come to-day from Great Britain, they are startled, it is almost too quick a turn for them to take; and they are in this dilemma, that they cannot to-night inform the House whether they intend to ask the home government to make that concession. Now how is this news being greeted in Great Britain? I find in the Montreal 'Star' of to-day a despatch from New York containing the correspondence of the New York 'Evening Post' to this effect:

> Almost before the Chancellor of the Exchequer had resumed his seat in the House of Commons, yesterday afternoon, the streets were ringing with the news-boys' cries of 'tax on bread!' Thus beginning an agitation with a possible serious sequel.
> Taxes on wheat and flour, practically, is a return to the duties which were enacted after the repeal of the old protective corn law. Influential supporters of the ministry intend to press for the complete exemption of Canadian and Australasian grain, as a response to the colonial preferential tariffs and some recognition of colonial help in the war.

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, almost alone among the ministers, stands between them and success.

Now this afternoon I listened to the Minister of Finance's exposition of their policy. While with one breath he said that the whole preference to Great Britain was sentiment, in the next place he said it was really a sordid proposition on the part of the government, that they went to Great Britain with this proposition, not out of sentiment, but with the hope and expectation that some day later on a preference might be given to Canada. To-day these gentlemen are brought face to face with the fact that they have been slow in the past, and they find themselves in a dilemma. Let us go a little further and read another quotation which I have here, showing how this matter is being viewed by persons from other colonies. In the Montreal 'Star' of to-day a number of gentlemen are interviewed on the situation, and one gentleman gives this opinion :

Mr. Caldwell, of the firm of Steen, Macky, Logan and Caldwell, of Auckland, New Zealand, who is at present in Montreal, expressed the opinion that the business men of his country would be disappointed at the new budget. In discussing the matter to-day, he said that, while New Zealand had not given Great Britain a preference in her tariff, the people were perfectly willing to do so, provided it was placed on a reciprocal basis. He did not understand how Canadian manufacturers could prosper under the present tariff.

Now there is the opinion of a gentleman from New Zealand who, I presume, is a gentleman of prominence, as his opinion has been sought by a journal of the importance of the Montreal 'Star.' This fact is evident, that the members of the government have been caught suddenly by this proposition of the British government, and they are now endeavouring to back up and wait for public opinion. They are endeavouring to force the opposition, if possible, to take the ground that we are in favour of a defence fund for army and navy purposes, in order to precipitate a discussion along those lines so that they might strengthen themselves in the House and in the country. Well, it is no new game for these hon. gentlemen to stand and wait for public opinion and popular approval. We have seen that in connection with the question of sending the contingents. Why, if there ever was a question agitated before the people of Canada on which the government stood, and halted, and waited for popular opinion before they moved, it was on the question of the first contingent. Why, Sir, it was the scandal of the country, and day in and day out the ministry were at daggers drawn on that very question. The 'Patrie' newspaper, controlled by the Minister of Public Works, who, as the country knows, is the master of this administration, declared day after day that there would be no contingent ; and afterwards when these contingents were sent there were apologies all along the line from these hon. gentlemen. If I recollect rightly it was the Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Bernier) who apologized on different platforms in the province of Quebec at the last elections, for the presence of those men in South Africa who had gone from Canada. The whole plea of the government was that these men had not been sent by the Canadian government, but that this government had in their wisdom simply allowed these men to go from Canada to South Africa. These hon. gentlemen are in this position to-day, that they have failed to keep abreast of the times, people are holding them to account on this question of preferential trade, and for missing an opportunity that would probably have been theirs had they grasped for it. To-day they are endeavourig to draw a herring across the path, they are endeavouring to force this side of the House into taking some stand that can be used in the province of Quebec. The Prime Minister made a speech to-day that he cannot deny will be used both in Ontario and in Quebec. The right hon. gentleman struck the keynote when he said that he was opposed and opposed fairly and squarely to this question of giving assistance to the empire in strengthening her armaments, whether they be naval or whether they be forces in the field. I think that was plainly understood. When the right hon. gentleman came up to the fence he saw the dilemma with which he was confronted and I assume that he thought it would be better to take a position of anti-imperialism, as it is termed in the province of Quebec, and then to approach the people in the other provinces by simply presenting the question in the shape of a commercial matter. But, I can tell the right hon. gentleman that there has grown up in Great Britain a strong feeling in favour of a preference being given to our food supplies in that country and I believe it has been hastened, not by the question of this so-called preference which has been given under our tariff, but that the feeling has been strengthened in Great Britain by reason of that fact that our valiant sons volunteered their lives in defence of the empire in South Africa.

Mr. W. M. GERMAN (Welland). Mr. Speaker, I would not have taken any part in this discussion excepting for the allusion that was made by the last speaker (Mr. Bennett) to an article which appears to-day in the Montreal 'Star.' It appears to me that if there was anything wanting to make the Liberal party substantial in this country and in the motherland it is the article that appears to-day in the Montreal 'Star.' What is the effect of that statement ? We have, to-day in England, by reason of the enormous war expenditure which has accumulated there, the necessity of what is called in England a protective tariff. It is not a protective tariff ; it is a tariff for revenue. The English people are not a people who believe in protection. The whole history of the past shows that they are not a people who believe in protection. They are a people who believe in a tariff for revenue so far as the necessities of the country are concerned and free trade is their factum. What does the Montreal 'Star' say? Properly read this is the language which is used:

Almost before the Chancellor of the Exchequer had resumed his seat in the House of Commons, yesterday afternoon, the streets were ringing with the newsboys' cries of 'tax on bread!' Thus beginning an agitation with a possible serious sequel.

Taxes on wheat and flour, practically is a return to the duties which were enacted after the repeal of the old protective corn law. Influential supporters of the ministry intend to press for the complete exemption of Canadian and Australasian grain as a response to——

What?

—as a response to the colonial preferential tariffs.

What does that mean, Sir? Does it mean that the English government repudiate the preferntial tariff which the Canadian government enacted some years ago? What does it prove? That the English people and the influential supporters of the Conservative administration in Great Britain appreciate that tariff. They appreciate it so highly as to insist that the government shall give a preferential tariff on Canadian wheat. For what? In response to the preferential tariff that was enacted in Canada by the Liberal government of Canada.

Mr. BROCK. You said you would not take it.

Mr. GERMAN. There never was a public man in Canada who said that he would not take it. There never was a public man in Canada who said that he did not want it. There never was a public man in Canada who said that Canada did not want a preferential tariff in favour of this country. It has been stated time after time that the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), while in Great Britain, said that we did not want a preferential tariff. That is absolutely untrue as you will see if you read the record. There is not a gentleman in this House, or in the country, who can show a single line in any speech that the premier of Canada made which will bear out the suggestion that he stated that Canada did not want a preferential tariff. That is what the Liberals want; that is what the Conservatives never did want and never tried to get. As was well stated by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) the conditions were not changed between 1896 and 1897. The Conservatives could have got a preferential tariff in Great Britain as well in 1896 as the Liberals could have got it in 1897. The Conservatives were in power for eighteen years, they never got a preferential tariff and they never tried to get a preferential tariff. The Liberals made an effort to get the preferential tariff and the best evidence of that effort is this very article which the hon. gentleman, who has just taken his seat, has read as published in the Montreal 'Star.' It appears to me that the Liberal party have done more in that direction than the Conservative party have ever done. We have heard considerable during this session of parliament and during previous sessions from the Conservatives that the Liberals have done something enormously wrong by giving a preference on British goods. I would like to see one Conservative stand up in this House and move a resolution that the preferential tariff be done away with. Let the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), who has sprung this discussion on this House against the will of his friends, against the desire of the Conservatives, the same as he sprung himself on the city of Toronto——

Mr. MACLEAN. He will win yet.

Mr. GERMAN. He has sprung this discussion on the House that his own friends did not want. Let him stand up in this House and take the position, that he appears to desire, of moving a resolution condemning the preferential tariff and then we will believe that he is honest in his suggestions. Let the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), who did move an amendment to the motion to go into committee of supply which is a sort of a veiled ignoring of the government's action in this direction, but which, however, did not come out flatfooted against the proposition, move a resolution condemning this policy. Let any hon. gentleman who sits on the opposite benches move a resolution condemning this policy and then we will believe that they have confidence in the assertions they make in this House, but, until they do that, neither we on this side of the House, nor the people of the country will believe that they have any confidence in their own assertions, but we will believe, as we do believe, that they are simply talking to the galleries. It is mere buncombe and they desire to make political capital without being responsible for what they say. The government are responsible for what they say. The government are responsible for what they do, as stated by the hon. Minister of the Interior. They are going into this matter as a business proposition. They have shown themselves to be a business government. They have conducted the affairs of the country on business lines.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GERMAN. Hon. gentlemen opposite say 'hear, hear,' in that peculiar tone of voice in which they generally express themselves when they have no other argument to make. But, Sir, they know as well as we know on this side of the House that the people of Canada to-day have confidence in the Liberal government as expressed in the last election, and they will have confidence in this government when they go before them at the next general election. We have confidence in the premier of Canada and the other representatives who will go to England to attend the Coronation and to take part in the conference which will be held there of colonial ministers when there will be matters discussed involving large interests in this country and we have no fear but that the interests of Canada will be looked after carefully, fairly and properly and that if ever any preferential treaty or tariff is made as between Great Britain and her colonies it will be brought about by the careful, business-like proposition of the Liberal government of Canada.

Mr. W. R. BROCK (Toronto Centre). Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen on your right must be in a very difficult position this evening, because they find themselves facing an issue which a cabinet of business men would never have to face, if they really were the cabinet of business men that was promised to this country. The least business-like amongst them, the right hon. premier went to England some years ago and notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Welland (Mr. German), who endeavours to befog the question with noise, the leader of the government did make the statement positively, that he asked nothing in return except good will for the preference which he was then giving to Great Britain. I give that right hon. gentleman the credit of knowing business men, and I will assume that he has surrounded himself with business men. The leader of these business men, the Finance Minister, was heard to-night in reply to a gentleman on this side of the House, and I am perfectly prepared to leave the arguments used from the opposition benches and the arguments used by the government and their supporters to the business men of Canada, to say which side has had the best of the debate. The hon. gentleman from Welland (Mr. German) very loudly and very noisely sneered across the House at the member for East York (Mr. Maclean). Well, the member for East York may feel perfectly satisfied in being sneered at by the member for Welland. The member for East York has never been in purgatory for eight years for his sins. The member for East York was never prevented from entering this House for eight long years as was the member for Welland, who, I suppose, is one of the business men behind the Prime Minister. If business men are good business men one of their characteristics is foresight. They can read the signs of the times. They can, before a crisis comes to hand, feel it in the air. The right hon. gentleman has considerable practice in trimming his sails to adverse winds, and in voting for a thing while endeavouring to argue against it. That right hon. gentleman was in England, and how was it he did not see that protection was in the air. It has been there for years past, gradually developing, gradually strengthening until to-day England has imposed a tax on the food of the people; a tax which the premier of Canada and the premier of Ontario declared was too ridiculous a thing to be thought of. In my humble capacity as a new member of this House, I made the positive statement of my belief that protection was coming in England. I could feel from the English press and from the expression of English people, that they were carefully preparing for it, and that if it did come it would be accepted by the masses of the people. Let it be remembered that the duty on corn is not adverse to every interest in England. We knew well that a duty on corn, a duty on cattle, a duty on various products of the American continent, will serve the interests of a very large party in England; will benefit the whole agricultural community, the labourers as well as the farmers. I therefore say that this cabinet of business men in Canada have been strangely wanting in foresight, or, have been strangely wanting in courage. It is a characteristic of a successful business man that he should have courage. I contend that this government have proved themselves from first to last to be incapable of conceiving a new idea. Every idea they have had in connection with the government of this country, has been either borrowed or stolen. They tell us they are not protectionists. Is that true? Occupying the position that you do, Mr. Speaker, and occupying it so very acceptably to both sides of the House, and occupying it so impartially; I can well understand that when you are using that impartial judgment it must create great difficulty in your mind to know whether you can depend on any statement coming from that side of the House. You know, Sir, that while these gentlemen to your right are stating they are not protectionists, they are at the same time protecting, but in an insufficient way, the industries of this country. You know, Sir, that if they did not lack the characteristic of courage they would be full-fledged protectionists. The Minister of the Interior, after a good deal of coaching, made a speech to-night. I was very anxious to reply to him, but really when he got through with his speech it was apparent that he had not his heart in his subject, as he usually has. He left very little to reply to, except that he stated that we on this side of the House should come down to practical business, and that we should move a resolution to do away with the present preference. Our quarrel is not so much with the present preference as it is with the injury which that preference is doing to this country. Our quarrel with that preference which we have given to England in this market, is not that it is an imperial preference doing good to the empire, but is, that it is merely a one-sided preference giving the manufacturer in Yorkshire a preference over the manufacturer in Canada, and placing the Yorkshire manufacturer in a position to injure some and many of the great industries of this country. Therefore we are finding no fault with the preference as far as it goes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BROCK. But we contend that it injures some industries of this country, and to that extent it should be removed. And if this cabinet of business men were doing their duty, they would at once acknowledge that they are wrong and remedy the injury which this preference has done. I believe that every one of these gentlemen opposite has admitted that the preference is an injury to some of the industries of Canada. Why cannot they apply the remedy ? They have among them a gentleman who has courage; they have the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), whom this country respects for his courage. I believe that the Minister of Public Works has done the very best he could to bring the other members of the cabinet to his own mind. Some say he is the master of the administration. I am sorry he is not ; I regret it very much because if he were we would have a better state of things in this country.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). He will be soon.

Mr. BROCK. The Minister of the Interior told us that the Liberal government had come to the help of Great Britain, but that the Conservative government did not help Britain during the war in the Soudan. Does he mean to make any comparison between the situation at the time of the Soudan war and the crisis in South Africa, which meant almost the destruction of the British empire ? There is no comparison between the two cases. But, during the Soudan war the right hon. leader of the government was in opposition. Now, that we are in opposition he asks us why we do not do something. Let me ask him why he did not do something when he was in opposition ? There is not a line in any of his speeches to condemn the then government for not giving assistance to the motherland during the Soudan war. When he was in opposition why did he not move a resolution such as he and the Minister of the Interior talk about ? In all the records of this parliament, there is nothing to show that Sir Wilfrid Laurier when leader of the opposition ever ventured to condemn the Conservative government for not sending troops to the Soudan. That was the statement made by the Minister of the Interior. So that the Liberal opposition, according to their own statement, were derelict in their duty, if the statement they make now is correct. The hon. member for East York has been taunted with being a newspaper man—a terrible disgrace, you know—and as having made a scoop—I think that is the newspaper term. He certainly has, and I tell you, Mr. Speaker, there is an agitation in the dovecotes on the other side of the House. They are face to face with a difficult question, and with their actions of the past five years. But they have themselves to blame for it, and we on this side of the House are endeavouring to show them their way out.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BROCK. The Prime Minister is backed up by these gentlemen who can always be got to howl for him, whether he is right or wrong. But let the Prime Minister take a manly and straightforward course ; let him put himself into communication to-night with the Prime Minister of England ; let him ask the British government to exempt Canada from these duties which are to be imposed against the rest of the world ; and let him withdraw the statement he made, that this country wants nothing in return for the preference it has given to the mother country. Let him say that he was mistaken in making that statement, and that this country wants and demands something in return. By taking this course he will place himself more in sympathy with the people of this country than he did on the last occasion that he visited England. The right hon. gentleman wound up his speech by saying that the people of this country were at his back, and that what he wanted was their approbation. If he wanted to retain that approbation, the course I have indicated, the manly, direct, straightforward course, is the course he should pursue. We on this side of the House have announced a definite policy, and we have asked that hon. gentlemen on the other side should have a definite policy. Have the gentlemen sitting behind the Treasury Benches heard anything of a definite policy ? They have not. More ministers have spoken on this question than spoke on the budget ; but has any minister announced a definite policy on this question ? I leave it to hon. gentlemen on the other side to say whether they have or not. We are not ashamed of this discussion. It will go abroad to the country, and it will create a remarkable sensation. It will remind the people that the right hon. Prime Minister went through the province of Ontario stating that he was going to surround himself with business men who would conduct the affairs of the country on business principles ; but they will not be convinced that it is a business principle to give something for nothing. As the right hon. Prime Minister is on the eve of going to England a second time, we will endeavour to see that he does not make the same mistake that he did before, but rather that he will remedy that mistake ; for I feel that the opposition in this House on this question are representing an absolute majority of the people of Canada.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, after the manner in which this question has been discussed by his colleagues on the other side of the House, should presume to say that he desired that there should be some definite question placed before the House to-night to be decided by a vote. Hon. gentlemen understand that the question before the House is whether the Speaker should leave the Chair or not, for us to take up the work of the Committee of Supply; and our hon. friends on the other side of the House, on that very simple resolution, have discussed almost every question that has come up in the party politics of Canada in the last four or five years. They have discussed the question of the contingents and the attitude of the Liberal party and that of their party on that question; they have discussed the question of the preferential tariff which was framed by the present government; they have discussed almost every other question which has come within the lines of party politics. My hon. friend from Hastings reduced the whole discussion down to a question of politeness, as to whether the answer of the government to the invitation of the Imperial government was couched in sufficiently polite terms—in other words whether this government should not have said that they would cheerfully discuss all the questions laid before them by Mr. Chamberlain in his invitation. Unfortunately for us, if there should be a vote on this question, we shall be called upon to vote at random. If our hon. friends would consent to confine the discussion to any one of these questions, it would be far more satisfactory; and the repeated invitation they have had to formulate their views in a resolution, so that we might bind them to some declaration of policy, has a great deal of force in it. I do not think it rests in the mouth of hon. gentlemen opposite to charge this government with a lack of policy on these questions, when they are so notoriously divergent upon them. Perhaps before this debate is through we shall hear from the hon. member from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) as to his views on the contingents—whether the contingents which are now being sent to South Africa under the auspices of the Dominion government, and the contingents which went before, should be paid for by this government, and as to whether the government of Canada should enter into negotiations with the government of Great Britain for the purpose of establishing a large scheme of imperial defence. Many hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House take a stand that this government should be bound to join with the mother country in a large and broad scheme of imperial defence. I would like to see hon. gentlemen opposite united on these questions before they charge the government of the day with being disunited upon them. The party opposite has always claimed to be pre-eminently the party of imperialism and of extreme loyalty to the mother country; and yet I have listened in vain to-day for one word of sympathy with the people of the mother country for the enormous burdens which they have laid upon themselves in maintaining the dignity and prestige of the empire in South Africa; and in view of the fact that the Chancellor of the Exchequer has to meet a deficit of fifty or sixty million pounds sterling in the current year, I think that hon. gentlemen opposite might have looked at that phase of the question. It is all very well to speak of the small duty which is proposed to be levied on wheat and corn as a protective policy; but any one who knows anything of a protective, as compared with a revenue policy, must admit that this is a portion of a revenue policy pure and simple. The position of the mother country is that notwithstanding this small duty and the increase of the income tax and of the stamp tax, there will still be a deficit of about thirty million pounds which must be raised by a revenue bill. Any one who looks fairly at the facts of the case cannot believe that this is the entering wedge of a protective policy in regard to foodstuffs. So far as the Dominion of Canada is concerned, while I believe every man in Canada, whether Liberal or Conservative, would be willing and glad to see some preference given to our products in the mother country, and would welcome it as a response to the fraternal feeling displayed by Canada in her preferential tariff, yet I feel that we should not go to the mother country, either in times of peace or in times of stress, to huckster and bargain with her on questions of this kind.

I was somewhat surprised that any gentleman, particularly the hon. member who has just spoken, should have ventured to assert that the Prime Minister said in another country that Canadians did not want any preference in the British market. It is true that when brought to task by my hon. friend from Welland (Mr. German,), he varied the assertion somewhat by declaring that what the Prime Minister said was that he would not then ask any preference for the Dominion, as a consequence of the preference we were giving. Before resuming his seat, however, he again repeated his original story, which he utterly failed to prove. One would suppose that the hon. gentleman would have been prepared with a quotation and the day and the date, to substantiate the statement he made, but nothing of the kind. Now there is considerable distinction in stating that Canadians did not want a preference and declaring that we were not basing the preference we offered on a reciprocal preference by the mother country; and to have demanded such reciprocal preference would have been perfectly useless at the time, because a duty on breadstuffs was a thing no one then contemplated. It would have been considered as something outrageous for any public man to have insisted on the British government placing a duty on the foodstuffs of the British people. But since, in the stress of war, it has become necessary for the British government to raise more revenue by means of a tariff on breadstuffs, which previously was undreamed of, there might be some reason for expecting that the preference given the British in our market, which aroused so much enthusiasm in the mother country, which did so much to draw us together, might possibly be reciprocated. Upon the general subject of our relations to the mother country much no doubt will be said before the close of the present session, and I may be pardoned if I express my own views on that question, in which, I think, my colleagues about me largely share. The commercial relations between the colonies and the mother country and the Imperial defence are two entirely separate questions. The question of Imperial defence is one upon which the people of this country are by no means a unit, one upon which the Conservative party is not a unit, and it is possibly one upon which no inconsiderable number of people in the Dominion have formed no positive conclusion. We all know the strong opinion held by Sir Charles Tupper on this point. We all know the intensity of the language he used when denouncing the very idea of the Dominion being bound in any way to meet any of the charges in the British Exchequer with regard to imperial defence. And he has many followers in the Conservative party. The principles as laid down by him I think were very sound. In defending our own territory, in providing an adequate force for the defence of Canada, and in carrying on our internal legislation in such a way as to make Canada strong and prosperous and cultivate a strong feeling of solidarity of the empire in Canada—all these things are sufficient guarantee that we will be ready when the circumstances require us to bear our share in the defence of the empire. The government has been charged with slackness of duty, and odiums attempted to be thrown on it for not having voted larger sums in support of the South African contingents. I do not think that the financial aid of Canada is by any means so important to the mother country as is taken for granted by some hon. gentlemen opposite. What the statesmen and the British people do appreciate and admire is the spirit of loyalty and enthusiasm with which we responded to the call of the empire in South Africa. The noble enthusiasm which our sons manifested in laying upon the altars of their country their lives, prospects and honour stirred the pulse of the English people. That which they admired was not any contribution in money or financial resources, but the contribution of sentiment, zeal and loyalty which we sent in the person of our sons who went to fight the battles of the empire in South Africa. Not only we, but the people of the mother country, are proud of the young men who thus proved their courage, ability and devotion to their country, and who have not only gained a high place in the esteem of their own countrymen, but have done a great deal to excite admiration for Canada in the minds of British statesmen and people. And when the colonial and British statesmen meet at London to plan closer commercial relations between the colonies and the mother country, if they come to a wise solution of this question, that will solve all the others. I agree with the right hon. the First Minister that there is a vast difference between being united for the purposes of war and united for the purposes of commerce, and that we ought to keep these two questions separate and distinct. It seems to me that in the time of stress and trial through which the mother country is passing, and when she has to impose a duty on breadstuffs, it is only a narrow spirit which would prompt us to clamour immediately to be relieved from all the weight and burden of that duty. We can safely leave this matter to the Imperial instincts of the British government and people, confident that the part which Canada has played will inspire them with a desire to settle this question in our interests as well as theirs. I hope, in the meantime, that our hon. friends opposite will come to a conclusion as to the stand they propose to take, and that when they succeed in finding themselves in a position to formulate a policy, they will do so that we may know exactly where they are, which it is impossible to say at present.

Mr. S. E. GOURLEY (Colchester). I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that mere party politics should be imported into a discussion of this character. If that spirit, were only eliminated from discussions of questions such as the one under consideration, immense good would no doubt result from our joint counsels. One would think, that a question such as this, if no other, could be approached, without importing into it, any form of party politics ; but while I have listened with pleasure to many speeches on both sides, I must say that I have listened with regret to the speech of the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) and that of the hon. gentleman from Welland, who has just sat down. They were speeches of the parish politics order, and of a more than usually narrow character. I regret indeed that this motion did not take another form, and that due notice was not given, so that we might have come to the discussion of the great questions involved thoroughly prepared to deal with them in a broad and equitable spirit. I regret, however, more than anything else, that the right hon. the First Minister, when he first received the invitation from the King of England to discuss the many questions of imperial importance referred to in the invitation, did not come to parliament and ask us to discuss the matter as the great council of the nation, as patriots, in order to ascertain how the interests of Canada might best be served. I regret that the right hon. gentleman did not get above the level of party politics. I would have expected him to say : Gentlemen, this is not a party question; I will forbid any of my people discussing it as a party question, and I will ask you, on your side, to discuss it, in its national and imperial aspect, with a view to working out the highest destiny of Canada. No more important question could be discussed in this parliament than the question we have before us at this moment. I believe we are at the parting of the ways. We have had misguided discussions in the parliament of Canada. There has never been any question, however great, that was not hedged about by miserable party considerations. When the Canadian Pacific Railway was undertaken, one would have thought that both parties, would have approached it with the common desire to build up Canada. The building of the Intercolonial Railway was a great national issue ; but it was approached as a party question. Anybody should have known that if we could not build the Intercolonial Railway and operate it successfully ; if we could not build the Canadian Pacific Railway and run it successfully ; 'the shreds and patches of Canada' should have been thrown to the winds or put up at auction ; for if we could not build a national railway, we could never hope to make a nation of these provinces. But, notwithstanding all errors and mistakes, to-day we are on the threshold of national and imperial greatness. I declare it as my own opinion, that, if the people of Canada had been filled with the national ambitions and aggressive spirit that have characterized the people of the United States, if we had proceeded to spread the fame and glorify the resources of Canada as they did those of the United States, we should to-day possess a population and political power equal to theirs. They thrust themselves into the eye of the world, they boosted and glorified themselves on every platform, until they dominated the public opinion of the world, and even frightened Canada into subserviency. A few years ago there were people in this country weak enough and mean enough to talk about annexation. To-day, I am glad to say, quite the opposite feeling prevails. In my part of the country at any rate, any man who would dare to utter such a sentiment would be tied up to the nearest post and horsewhipped. But, fortunately in every crisis in our history some men have been found broad and liberal enough to forget party, and to look with a single eye to the interest of Canada as a whole. At this moment I want the government of Canada, I want the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier), above all I want the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), to take a broad imperial view of the questions before us, and to labour during the next year for the welfare of Canada. As I have already mentioned, we are at the parting of the ways. To-day, if this parliament, should unanimously approach the English parliament and government, with a resolution, telling them that every man in this country is loyal, that every man in this country is prepared to sacrifice every dollar of the property of Canada in defence of the empire, that every man, woman and child is prepared to back the empire in its trials in any part of the world—if we approached the empire in that spirit and said : As we are loyal, as we are devoted to the empire, as we are prepared to back this empire with all the resources of the country, help us to build up a great Canadian nationality and we will stand by you for good or for evil, in war or in peace. That proclamation would inflame the affections of the people of England for us and arouse their national pride. That is the doctrine we should propound ; and, if the Prime Minister had come forward and proposed a resolution of that character and had said : We want a tariff upon our wheat, and upon all our agricultural products, how strong would our position have been ? Every man will see, that if, to-morrow, we could face the world, with the intelligence, that, the English government, had given us a preference on wheat and other agricultural products, from that moment we would fill the eye of the world, from that moment Canada would be the goal of energetic and ambitious people. We would fill the eye of the world in this twentieth century as the United States filled it for fifty years to the close of the last century. Our supreme need is population. What do we want in Canada ? We want ten or fifteen millions of people to come into this country quickly. We do not desire to wait for forty or fifty or a hundred years, but we want them to come at once. Let the world know that we have a preference in the British market of even 3½ cents a bushel on wheat, then, with the profits on wheat as narrow as they are, Canada would have a dominant and masterful position in the great agricultural markets of the world. And, Mr. Speaker, that ought to be the effect of the step that the British government have just taken. I have no doubt they have taken this position advisedly, because they have found it necessary to thrust this boon upon us. They found we could not take a hint, so they have had to come at us with a sledge to attract our attention. Three or four years ago, they invited the statesmen of Canada to go into council with them. They said : We are a wealthy nation, we have many enemies in every part of the world, we have splendid young nations growing up in every quarter of the globe, but they are not growing rapidly enough—come and give us the benefit of your counsel and see if we cannot mutually assist each other. That, I have no doubt, is what Mr. Chamberlain meant by the invitation sent to the government of Canada on the occasion of the late Queen's Diamond Jubilee. How was he met ? The premier virtually flouted his advances. In effect, he said : We are unknown and poor in Canada, and we desire to remain unknown and poor, and we will accept no favours from your country. On the present occasion, the British government have gone further than before. Not only have they invited Canada to take part in their councils, but they have said : You are apparently dense and unappreciative in Canada ; so we will give you a protective tariff before we invite you into council ; we have so arranged it that very little diplomacy will give you a preferential tariff that will make your country prosperous 'beyond the dreams of avarice.' And still they are met in this unseemly manner. I must say I have been impressed with the politeness and courtly manner of the Prime Minister. I have felt pleased when he has gone abroad, for I felt that though he did not represent correctly the true political policy of Canada, he did represent its culture and refinement, and would do us good abroad. I may say that I have never been able to be bitter in politics or to say unkind things. Perhaps that is a weakness in a man addressing this House. But I am compelled to say that I almost feel bitter against the Prime Minister for not seizing this unparalleled opportunity for not accepting the benefits that were offered irrespective of party advantage, and asking the House to adopt such a resolution as I have referred to. I have often observed the pleasant smiles heretofore upon the face of the Prime Minister in this House. He could afford to be pleasant, for he has a majority at his back, and they are docile to a degree. He has only to look back at them, and they respond with loud plaudits and ready votes. But something has pained deeply the heart of the Prime Minister today. I never saw any one exhibit in his face such sorrow as that which has marked his fine countenance to-day. And I know that his heart was sore far beyond the power of his face to conceal. He knows the awful position he is in. When this proposal was sprung upon him, his keen political sense told him, that he was like the fox, that had been cunning often in his time, but the hounds at last had him by the haunch.

But, Sir, I need not further extend my sympathy to the First Minister. I leave him for further solace to his Quebec followers. But I have an unbounded sympathy for the Minister of Finance, because he comes from my province, and I can sincerely say that I have never been able to think an unkind thought of any man in this House who comes from that province. I am sorry for the Minister of Finance. In the old days he was at the head of the local government in Nova Scotia, and I believe conscientiously embraced the awful heresy of free trade. I believe that he honestly advocated it. He used to go around the shores of Nova Scotia, those wild and beautiful shores ; they are always noisy, but his voice was still louder than the winds or the waves, in advocacy of this delusion. Now, Sir, he spoke of free trade, he gloried in the promulgation of the doctrine, and I believe he was honest in his fantasy, but it was a most delusive fantasy for an intelligent man to indulge in. Now, in what an unkind position has fate put him ? It appears as if nature is making war upon him. In Nova Scotia he was free to embrace any trade vagary, for his government had nothing to do with trade policies. He could talk any nonsense he liked about trade policies ; but here unfortunately he is chained, he is bound hand and foot by a masterful colleague. Have you noticed, Mr. Speaker, the bland, captivating smile on the face of the Minister of Public Works this afternoon ? The gods have come his way ; they have put upon him a crown. People call him the master of the administration. Why, he never was the master of the administration until to-day, and the crown has been placed upon his brows by England. That tax of threepence a hundredweight, gives protection in this country a safe guarantee for the next half century. We know that the Minister of Public Works has had a great deal of trouble in holding the rest of his colleagues down to protection. But now the British government have come to his aid, and all the other weaklings in the government must submit. Now the poor Minister of Finance is in a pitiable position, having to hold up his hands to the Minister of Public Works and have them bound ; and having to promise that never hereafter will he preach the heretical doctrine of free trade.

For free trade was always a heresy, it was the most absurd doctrine that ever was promulgated, and no people but the English people could ever have been deceived and misled by that doctrine. Cobden's doctrine was based upon this absurd fallacy, that every man, woman and child in every other nation but England was a fool, an absolute fool, and would remain a fool until the end of time. The doctrine of Cobden was upon this absurdity : We are going to take all the raw products of the world and manufacture them, and make all the money ; and we are going to keep all the rest of the world in the position of slaves and servants, doing our menial work for a mere subsistence, and no outsider will ever see through the game we are playing upon them. If that doctrine had been propounded in Canada some one would have got up and said: You are mistaken, Mr. Cobden, there are other people in this world as bright as you; we will establish manufactures, and sell our goods all over the earth, and your doctrine will go. It was an utterly unarguable fallacy, this doctrine of free trade, and it could have overcome no other nation on earth excepting the English. I am of the same breed, I am an imperialist, and I want this distinctly understood, that I admire the traditions of England up to sixty years ago. They were a band of demi-gods, they conquered the earth for the highest purposes of civilization, and religion, of benefiting mankind; but for the last sixty years, after that infamous doctrine, that weak and silly doctrine of Cobdenism came to the front, the whole country became weak and pusillanimous, and the English people who have believed in it are degenerates to the last man. But, Sir, the new doctrine, of imperialism, has spread over Canada and will yet make statesmen of hon. gentlemen opposite, no matter how narrow they may be to-day. That new doctrine will lift them up and exalt them, that doctrine will revivify the English people, and in a generation or two they will rule and dominate this earth again; and every square mile of its territory will, eventually, I hope, be brought under the British flag. Hon. gentlemen may be uncredulous, but that is the destiny of the British flag. and if you read your bibles diligently, you will there find ample confirmation of the doctrine. All nations will come under it. I have no doubt that if you could get the Germans under the British flag for even one year they would never desire to go back under the German flag. All that is needed is for the different portions of the British empire to unite under the glorious British constitution in closest union for defence and offence if necessary, and for trade and commerce, then they will convert the whole world, and then we will have peace. Then the Prime Minister will not have to preach that heresy that commerce and war do not go together, because there will then be no necessity for war, for the whole earth will be under one flag, and all men will speak one language.

I was interested, in watching the demeanour, of hon. gentlemen opposite, on hearing the news, that was flashed across the water to-day, that the British government had put a tax on bread stuffs. I naturally thought the First Minister would come in here with a veil over his face. I thought the Minister of Finance would come in clothed in sackcloth and ashes. I thought that, being men of generous feeling, they would send a message over to the opposition and say: Gentlemen, we want to make you a full apology for all the heresies that we have been talking for the last few years; we want to show to the people that we have some politeness, if we have not the good sense of the opposition. But what was my surprise, when these gentlemen got up and stated that this is not protection, this is no change at all, it is only a result of the war, it is only a war measure and will soon pass away. I think the hon. member for Welland also uttered that sentiment. The British government will return to a policy of free trade, he says, this will only last for a time. Nothing apparently could convince him. Sir, I am bound to tell you that so far as I understand this matter, the war has nothing to do with it, except as offering a convenient opportunity for the British government to retrace its steps, to abandon an erroneous course. For ten or twenty years the British government have been endeavouring to retrace their steps. Now we know what a prophet of public opinion Sir Charles Tupper is and has been. He went across this country telling us that public opinion in England was changing, that it was coming rapidly to the point at which it would retrace this false course, and impose protective duties. These gentlemen in the government went over to the other side and pretended to gauge public opinion there, they thought they had done so, and came back and told us that Britain would never do anything of the kind. It shows how incapable, gentlemen opposite, were to judge public opinion, and how far they were lacking, the keen insight that Sir Charles Tupper possessed of the trend of public opinion. I hope you will all do justice to that eminent Canadian, that father of Canada. He and Sir John A. Macdonald together made Canada. I hope you will get up to-day, and say to that father of confederation, that you have wronged him, wronged him seriously, by pretending to dispute, the accuracy of the prophecy which he made, that the English people were rapidly returning to the cause of protection.

I want the hon. gentlemen now to take occasion by the hand. The English government have extended in a most polite and courteous way an invitation to these hon. gentlemen to go over and talk, not about the defence of the empire alone, but to sit down and consider how they can strengthen this empire. That is what we desire. I want Canada, from this moment, to take the position of being a portion of this empire, I desire this House of Commons to be a part of the imperial government. I want the British government to acknowledge that the House of Commons of Canada, in relation to all matters not affecting the mere domestic policy of the British Isles, is an integral part of the imperial government, and to call us in consultation whenever occasion requires. This idea of sending a half a dozen men over to England to represent us in the House of Commons or the House of Lords is a very immature suggestion. I want the powers of this House increased, not diminished. We sit here as a House of Commons in Canada, as a co-ordinate branch of the government of this empire, and the government in London have no right to arrogate to themselves the sole control of imperial affairs.

I fancy that the invitation which has been extended to us is in recognition of the principle that we, to-day, must be consulted in reference to all imperial questions, and what I understand by that invitation would be, that the Prime Minister should sit down with the imperial government and discuss that matter. What I believe the imperial government would want the right hon. gentleman to say would be this : We, in Canada, are engaged with our great commercial interests, we have enormous territories to develop, but if you want us at any time, if you want the men of Canada to stand by you at any time, we can call out 100,000 or 200,000 troops and have them ready to take the field in two weeks. I can say that Canadians do not want more than a fortnight's drill to make them as good soldiers as you want on the field of battle. We need no standing army in this country, all we want, is to have money enough expended, to give the young men of this country an opportunty of drilling upon a field, for 20 or 30 days, every year, and I venture to say that on the field of battle they will distinguish themselves more than any soldiers of the line. The right hon. leader of the government, mixed up this question with another, and it was an unfair argument in the discussion of so vital a matter. Was it not an unfair argument, to attempt to mislead the people of Canada, into believing, that the government of England, wanted us to have a standing army, and that in exchange they would give us this preference in their tariff ? That is not the intention of the English government, I am persuaded. All the English government want to know is that we are truly and sincerely interested in the welfare of the empire, and that we are prepared to fight for it in time of need. Now, in regard to my French friends——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GOURLEY. I have come here without a particle of feeling or prejudice. I am endeavouring to learn their beautiful language, and I propose some day to go down and hear the extraordinary speeches that are said to be made in the province from which these gentlemen come. I am a man with feeling but without race prejudices, and I propose to go down and discuss these questions before them. But, I want to say this to my French compatriots : A few leaders, who profess to speak for the French people, have misled us, by saying that the French population of Canada, would not be willing to fight for the empire. If there is any advice that I might be permitted to give my French compatriots it is, that they should take the opposite view. That is the only thing that affects the English opinion of Canada today. You must reflect that Canada occupies this curious position : For years there have been people in England who have openly advocated the idea that the colonies were not loyal, that they were anxious to break away from England. Thousands and millions of people have believed that doctrine and believe it to-day. Then, there was another, old belief, that when Canada was ripe, and when we had got all we could out of England, we wanted to become independent. These things militate against our position in England, and so much so, that the English people have treated us rather cavalierly. Then, the doctrine was propounded, that the French people, were not loyal to the British flag. The sending of the contingents, has helped in a great measure to refute the idea that we were not loyal to England and that we wanted independence. Because of the unfortunate circumstances surrounding the sending of these contingents—and I sympathise with every word that has been said—they were sent under circumstances that might possibly destroy their influence. They were sent under protest. Suppose a bill of exchange is returned under protest, it is very injurious to the credit of the persons concerned. It gave the feeling in England that there was something wrong with the loyalty of Canada. It was something that should have been spontaneous and generous and open. I want to say in reference to my French compatriots that they have an opportunity of doing a most unparalleled act. I believe that the French, in their own interest, should believe in imperialism, because they have more to gain from imperialism on this continent than even the English speaking people have. If it is not imperialism, it must be independence, or annexation, because we never can remain a little insignificant country. We must go in with England and embrace all the conditions attendant upon the existence of the empire with her traditions and her policy, or we must become independent, or be swept into the neighbouring states. Would the French people desire to be swept into the United States ? They would be absorbed and their traditions and institutions would be brushed aside in twenty-four hours. What would happen in the event of independence taking place ? The two races would be comparatively equal, and there would be a battle of the races. That would efface the prosperity of Canada, and this would go on until the United States would be bound to interfere to preserve the peace of the continent. But there is a magnificent prospect and a magnificent hope for the French people in imperialism. I believe that should they approach the imperial government and say : You have given us better laws and institutions than old France itself would have done, we will go with you to the ends of the earth and fight in defence of the empire. The French would then be the dominant race on this continent in spite of the energies of the Anglo-Saxon people. That is the position the French people should assume, and they should be the first to declare in this House that: We are imperialists and the strongest of imperialists. I want the French people to declare to this country that the statement which has often been repeated that they will fight for Canada but that they will not fight for the empire is a heresy. Suppose England is attacked in India and beaten, it will mean that not only Canada but the whole empire is shattered, and you will have no opportunity of fighting for Canada. The man who talks about fighting for Canada only talks about allowing our empire to be attacked and to be smashed. My doctrine is that I shall fight for the empire in the most distant parts of the world as readily as in my own town, were she attacked, and it should be for the French people to say that they will fight for the empire as readily in the most remote portions of the empire, as they would fight for their own province if it were attacked. If the right hon. the Prime Minister had moved in this House, a resolution declaring that the French and the English people, would stand side by side with the empire in its extremity in time of war and in time of peace, I am persuaded that the parliament and people of England would give us a preferential tariff in twenty-four hours. I charge, therefore, that the Prime Minister has not fulfilled that high duty, which should have been fulfilled by the first commoner of this country in attempting to subordinate national advantages to mere party advantages. I want to say one word in reference to what the right hon. gentleman said about bringing Canada into the vortex of war. I think that was a most unfortunate speech for the right hon. gentleman to make. If the empire is attacked in any part of the world, Canada is necessarily brought into the vortex of war, and when the right hon. gentleman used that language he attempted to separate Canada from the rest of the empire. I think it is unfortunate, I hope he did not mean it, but when he did make it, it struck me as an extraordinary statement for the leader of the government to make. Then he spoke of war and commerce. War must always go with commerce. Spain once ruled the commerce of the world. Why? Because she swept the seas of every enemy. Later Holland swept the seas of the Spanish marine and she ruled the commerce of the world until England attacked Holland, swept her ships from the sea, and herself became mistress of the seas.

But a few years ago, and Africa was a savage continent, England wanted commerce to pervade that country in order that it should be civilized. Did she send her merchants there to be shot down? No. She sent her soldiers, and she beat the Kaffirs and the Hottentots, and she controlled the savage tribes, and she made little settlements of peace, and built forts and then invited her merchants to trade under the protection of her guns. She did that until she civilized the country, and to-day in consequence of the numerous wars that have been waged for sixty years, Africa is now pretty well open for the commerce of the world. I stand here to-day to say that I do not want war—but I do not want mean, cowardly, treacherous settlements, called peace. I do not want war, but I would prefer war, and high national sentiment, to prevail in this country, than peace with meanness and cowardice. No nation that has not been martial has ever survived. No nation has ever lived a century after she has lost her martial spirit. Rome sat upon her seven hills and ruled the world. While the mothers and fathers of Rome taught their sons to fight the enemy, Rome ruled the world. But when the mothers ceased to teach their sons to battle in the distant parts of the empire, then the barbarian said: This is not Rome; this is not the glorious martial Rome that we knew, and they raided her and she disappeared. Let the martial spirit of a people relax and the nation is gone. The reason that the British empire came nearly going to pieces within the last few years, and sinking to be a third or fourth rate power, was because of the belief that the martial spirit of England had disappeared. Little fellows got up in Exeter Hall—every one of them should be beaten with stripes and if the English people had not lost their martial spirit they would have done it; they got up and said that they cared not if a portion of the British territory was lost in South Africa. Cobden, or Gladstone, or some person like that would figure out that it would cost $25,000,000 to defend our territory, but there was no commerce and no money making in it; and he would say: Let them take our territory; we will save the money. England had got down to that low level by this miserable Cobdenism. No nation can be great that figures up on one side what it will cost to preserve the national honour, and on the other what it will save to allow itself to be kicked around the world. A nation to be respected, the world over must be such a nation as was ancient Rome. If a Roman citizen in the farthest desert of Africa were attacked, his Roman citizenship protected him; and the legions of Rome moved as fast as horses and legs could carry them to the extreme parts of the earth to punish the insult to Roman citizenship. Then, to be a citizen of Rome was a glorious thing. But later on you could kick a citizen of Rome as you could kick a negro in the southern states and nothing happened. Then Rome fell. English citizenship came to be nearly in the same position a few years ago. But, Sir, fortunately there were these giant young nations of Australia and New Zealand and Canada growing up who would not stand an insult to the honour of England. The youth that are growing up in these young nations have no notion of being kicked, and not resenting the insult. I want my neighbours to the south to know that I live on this continent not by the sufferance of any Monroe doctrine, or by the sufferance of any Congress. I live here because I am prepared to fight for my existence if necessary. I went to Buffalo the other day, and a gentleman from one of the newspapers came to interview me. I said to him: I am on your soil and I refuse to speak aught of your country, but I have had my say in the parliament of my own country, where it was my duty to speak, and I said what I did say because I believe I would be negligent in my duty if I did not say it. He replied: If the Canadians had been like that for the last sixty years we would have more respect for you in Canada, but you permitted us to think that you were subservient, that you were only ready to jump into our lap, and we treated you with something of contempt. I want this House of Commons to declare that we have rights on this continent, because we are British subjects, and that no nation can curtail these rights. This parliament should deal with that Monroe doctrine. It is a menace to every respectable man in this country. I was delighted to read the article of Mr. Justice Mills a few days ago. It proves that we have some men in Canada who have spirit. He declared that the Monroe doctrine is absurd and he repudiates it as an insult and a menace to us in Canada. I hope that some one in this parliament will start the Canadian doctrine. The Canadian doctrine would have more in it than the Monroe doctrine has. That Canadian doctrine is that the supervision of every foot of this continent belongs by right to Canada. And if any kind of Monroe doctrine prevails that doctrine is the one most tenable: That all other nations who live on this continent are subservient to Canada. I believe, of course, that both doctrines are wrong, but if Monroeism is to be held as a pistol to our heads let us turn this doctrine on the other people. I am persuaded that preferential trade within the empire will come; I am persuaded that it would come now if this Canadian government were not hostile to it. I am persuaded that we will have a preferential duty on our wheat, and if we have a preference of 6 cents per bushel, then the population in the western states would shift in a night. We would find ourselves possessed of 10,000,000 or 15,000,000 of population that is now against us, and we would then be a great nation indeed. Recollect that the world to-day makes as much progress in six months as it did in 600 years a few centuries ago. The people of the west are not tied down as we are in the east. They can take down their shacks and shift 100 miles without any trouble. If we get a preference on our agricultural products in the British market, the star of yesterday would set in the south, and political power would rest in the north. From that moment it would be seen that the political power of this continent would be in Canada; that we were to be the Russia of America, and that national glory would be centered in Ottawa and not in Washington.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GOURLEY. The achievement of this great purpose is opened to the government of Canada at the present moment. I adjure these gentlemen opposite to throw away petty politics such as the member for Welland and the Minister of the Interior dealt with. I adjure them that they cease to introduce such petty things into the politics of this nation. I say to the right hon. the Prime Minister: Go to the Imperial government and say to them: We will stick by you; give us this preference and we will build up a Canadian nation in a few years, that will defy all your enemies on this continent or on any other.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). If I could bring myself from the heights of the rhetoric to which we have just listened, down to the ordinary level of the earth, I would like to discuss this question from a somewhat business and practical standpoint. There would of course be no discussion in this House to-day were it not that a duty has been imposed on certain foodstuffs by the government of Great Britain. Let me ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley) if he really believes what he has said. He has proven to his own satisfaction that Britain has been a nation of fools for sixty years back, but at the same time he insists that the British flag is going to wave over the whole world, and that in consequence the world is to be governed by this nation of fools. That is most extraordinary reasoning. If the people of Great Britain have been fools for sixty years, they have accumulated more money and impressed themselves more on the world than all the wise people who have lived since history came to be written. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley) thinks they are fools because they adopted a certain trade policy, and he tells us that the British people have lost their martial spirit. Well, Sir, the British people have fought in Russia; they have fought in India; they have fought in Africa; and during the last sixty years they have shown the same martial spirit as did their ancestors of old. But the member for Colchester calls them a nation of idiots because they adopted free trade. What a strange idea he has of what a nation should be? They are down to the low, ordinary, everyday life of commerce; and if they kept the sword in one hand to pierce any man who did not trade with them, whether savage or Christian, with goods in the other, they would be all right. A distinguished member of parliament once said that that was Britain's business—to engage in war continually to force the uncivilized and unclothed savages of Africa to buy her products. The truth is, Great Britain is taxing an article which it cannot raise itself. Let hon. gentlemen consider that what wheat is raised in Great Britain will only feed the people of Great Britain for seven weeks in the year; so that for Great Britain to raise a war tax on flour is just the same as it would be for us to raise a tax on tea. It is the quickest way to get a revenue, and every dollar of the tax will go into the revenue. Then how can any hon. gentleman opposite shout that there is a prospect of Great Britain becoming protectionist, which she never will? Where would Canada stand if she taxed everything we sent there? Some gentlemen shout that Great Britain ought to be protectionist when, if they thought for a moment, they would know that it would mean the destruction of Canada if Great Britain acted as Canada does. Even if we had a preference within the empire, which hon. gentlemen opposite talk about, I for one do not see that it would be an unmixed blessing, because if we go to make a contract with Great Britain she will insist that we take from her the articles which she produces. In that case, what would become of the people of Canada who want protection? But I can understand that larger relations may exist which would require such conditions to be borne by us for the furtherance of the empire. But there is one thing more which I want to call the attention of the House to. Is this discussion for the purpose of giving information to the Prime Minister before his departure for the old country? If so, I submit that the wise heads of the other side of the House, if they love the empire as they profess to do, should dictate to the Prime Minister by writing down their thoughts. Is this discussion to be for his instruction? Then he ought to be instructed before hand. I was pleased with what the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) said. He said two unkind things in a very kindly way. He said this discussion should not have taken place, and that notice should have been given of it. I agree with him. But he said one of the most unkind things when he lectured the French, and told them what imperialism they should follow. He did not consult with the second leader or he would not have said what he did. The hon. gentleman forgot that the very gentleman who got up this discussion had said in his paper that what the second leader of the opposition had said would have to be withdrawn, or he would be read out of the party. How well these hon. gentlemen agree. The truth of the matter is that we cannot be up in the clouds in discussing this matter. We have to deal with conditions as they exist. We must consider Great Britain, not as of carrying a flaming torchlight procession, abandoning the trammels of free trade, and becoming a mighty nation, killing the naked savages and extending her sway all over the world. This I submit is vain vaporing. What we want to consider here is what is best for Canada's progress? I thoroughly agree with what the Prime Minister has said. The taunt of the world against Great Britain has been that she has been aggressive in war for the purpose of gaining territory. I do not admit it; but I say that she has always succeeded in planting all that is best in civilization when she has ceased war and engaged in commerce. The hon. member for Colchester was very unfortunate in his references. He said, look at Spain, where is Spain now? She never knew how to colonize. She always went to a country and throttled its inhabitants.

Mr. GOURLEY. She allowed herself to get beaten.

Mr. FRASER. She was beaten before she was beaten, if I might use an Irishism. If the hon. gentleman had read history he would know that when Sir John Moore was in Spain he found that the men who were sent to assist him gave him no assistance, and could not give him any. This was the great nation the hon. gentleman wanted to hold up as an example for Great Britain—a nation that could not hold her colonies.

Mr. GOURLEY. I referred to the fact that she was beaten at the time of the Armada.

Mr. FRASER. The hon. gentleman must not forget that she colonized a great deal after that. She lost a number of ships at that time certainly; but that did not break her. If the hon. gentleman's argument was any good, she ought to be all-powerful today. Why, she had twice as many ships as the British fleet and was a better army in every way. Yet, still our little boats—many of them pirate vessels—that came out of every inlet in England, defeated this nation, great as it was, and wealthy and powerful in colonies. I am as ready as any one here to stand up for the empire, but while I think that we should consider the glory of Britain as our own and never see her with her back to the wall without coming to her help, I am not going to say that each individual should not be at liberty to make up his mind as he chooses on this great question of the relations between Canada and the mother country. We will never make Canada what it ought to be if we begin in this nineteenth century to fetter men's minds and prevent them working out their destiny in the way they consider best. What is imperialism ? I claim that it is a misnomer. We are a colony of Great Britain, with all the rights of the British nation and a free people. Imperialism might have suited ancient Rome, but it is out of place in this nineteenth century. What we want is that every man in the empire shall do his work as a law-abiding citizen, and be ready to combine with his fellow-citizens in helping the mother country whenever she requires the assistance of the strong arms of her children in the colonies. But I do not believe in a man shouting continually about his mother and his loyalty and his flag and his readiness to die. I do not believe in a man who is continually flaunting his loyalty any more than in a woman who is continually vaunting her virtue. The bravest and best men are ready to die for their country, if required, but are not given to saying much about it. Take this young man, who the other day brought glory not only on Canada but on humanity—the quiet school master. Day after day, he went among his boys, he was not a fighting man, but an unpretentious youth, who never made a wild speech, who never wakened up the echoes with that wretched spread eagleism which we have imported from the nation to the south of us, but who went about his duties quietly. Yet when the test came, he met the supreme issue like a man. If we shout less and go about quietly and sensibly doing our duty, we will make better citizens and show better results.

As to this country joining Great Britain in anything relating to war, although I am fairly loyal, I for one do not want anything of the kind. And let me tell the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, that a greater missionary field lies before him on the other side, and that he will find there more difficulty in converting to his views men who hold high positions than he thinks. He tells us that he is learning the language of his recalcitrant brethren who refuse to join him, and I am sure that when his lofty and convincing eloquence is expressed in the musical language of his confreres from the province of Quebec, they will be unable to resist his persuasive influence, and, beginning with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), we will find them giving way in succession before his convincing tones, and we may hope to have a united, though not necessarily an Imperial Canada.

I do not propose giving any advice to the right hon. the First Minister. In the first place, I do not think I could give him very much advice ; and in the second place he has had so much freely given to him that I would not like to increase the dose. I was glad to see my right hon. friend apparently oblivious of much of the advice so freely showered on him by hon. gentlemen opposite. There is one thing which the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley) said which I can endorse, and that is that there is too great a tendency to treat this matter as a purely party question. But I would suggest to him that the spirit and the manner in which it has been brought up today furnish ample subject for his criticism. If we were really moved by patriotic interests, we would get together and give our best views about all this. But the whole intention evidently is to try and hold the Prime Minister and the government responsible in certain quarters and endeavour to snatch a small victory by saying that it was the course taken by this government which induced the British government to put a duty on wheat. But I venture to make the prediction that this duty is only transitory. The nations of the world are moving, though not perhaps as quickly as we would like, in the direction of a freer interchange of trade. Even the people to the south of us have shown that they sometimes can rise above the wretched, effete system of protection, and deal with their fiscal policy in a more rational spirit. I am not, however, going to brush away protection as jauntily as my hon. friend from Colchester brushes away free trade, by calling those who differ from me fools. That would bar me out from associating with some hon. gentlemen on the other side, whose good feeling and good qualities I appreciate very much. But I believe that as our means of transportation are quickened by land and sea, the true principles governing trade will make themselves more and more felt. It is as absolutely impossible for one nation to shut out another as it is to stem the course of the St. Lawrence with a broom. We cannot go on living on past ideas. I remember thirty years ago when in Nova Scotia we knew very little about Canada. It was very hard to get up there. But when our means of communication were improved and we came to know more about it, we not only knew the people of the upper provinces better but did all we could to increase our business with them. I hope my hon. friend will continue his studies in the French language, and perhaps he will succeed in converting those who are in darkness on his own side, and get them to join with him in his noble missionary work of bringing the whole world into the fold of Britain's power.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). I wish, Mr. Speaker, to allude more particularly to a statement of the hon. the leader of the opposition, who, I am sorry is not in his seat just now. I refer to his statement regarding what my hon. colleague the Finance Minister has said with reference to the question of preferential trade. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition charged my hon. colleague with having expressed the opinion that at no time would the British government place any duties upon grain. My hon. colleague told the leader of the opposition that he was mistaken, and in reply, the leader of the opposition referred to an interruption by the Finance Minister to some remarks of his, in which my hon. friend gave the House to understand that the Finance Minister said it was arrant nonsense to talk of any such thing. My hon. colleague explained that he used the expression in connection with the statement of the former leader of the opposition, Sir Charles Tupper, that if he were restored to power, he would obtain from the English government a preference. It was with reference to that statement that my hon. colleague, the Finance Minister, used the words cited. I have extracts here from the budget speeches of my hon. colleague in 1897, 1899, 1900 and 1901, in all of which he said that he did not see that there were any indications then that Great Britain would place duties upon bread stuffs, but that he was not prepared at all to say that at some future time that might not be done, and perhaps earlier than expected. Let me quote what my hon. colleague really said in the budget speech of 1901. Speaking upon this subject of preferential trade and the probability of Britain giving a preference in her markets to our products, he said :

Now I have said all this concerning the past. We do not deny that if we get that preference in the English market, it would probably be of some advantage to the Dominion of Canada ; but we say that is a question for the imperial authorities rather than for us. If we could get that preference, we are as willing to assist in availing ourselves of any advantage which might come to Canada through it as any of the hon. gentlemen opposite. The only difference between us is as to the possibility of getting it and as to the means of getting it. I do not believe, Sir, that it can be obtained to-day. I do not believe, notwithstanding all that one reads in the telegrams from the other side, that we are likely to have a change of front immediately on the part of the Imperial government on the trade question. Yet I would not speak of the future. We live in times of great movements and great changes. I will not say that at no future time in the history of the empire, and the early future possibly, shall this preference be given. Again and again I have stated in this House that that is a question which we must be content to leave to the future. We have believed that the true policy of preferential trade was, not to make demands on the imperial government which we well knew they could not afford to yield to us. The true policy was to give to Great Britain this preference freely and openly, leaving the imperial government and parliament to adopt that trade policy which in their judgment was best adapted to the interests of the English people. But, if this preference, which my hon. friends opposite desire to obtain, is ever to come, I beg them to accept my opinion, my assurance, which I give them in all sincerity, that they will never obtain it by the methods they have employed—that they will never obtain it by demands on the home government which are obnoxious to the great mass of the English people. We have much to hope from cultivating the good-will of the English people. I venture to say, as I have said before, that if the time ever comes when we are to receive that preference, we shall not receive it as the result of any huckstering or bargaining between England and the colonies, but as a result of the development of that Imperial sentiment which may over-ride questions of political economy, and in the creation and development of that imperial sentiment a large and important factor has been the British preferential tariff of the Canadian government.

That shows the hon. gentleman's position. And as I have said, I have extracts from his speeches in 1897, 1899 and 1900, and all are in precisely the same line. Therefore, when the leader of the opposition states that my hon. colleague's view was that never could we expect the British government to take the step that they have now taken, he misstated the position of the hon. gentleman. But the position the Finance Minister took was that we had given the preference to Great Britain and so created a friendly feeling, and that that feeling, if anything could, would bring about this preference. But to-day hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be elated because we were not able to foresee the exact date when all this was to take place; and, because we could not foresee it, they claim for themselves the possession of all wisdom and say that we on this side did not know what we were talking about. But the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Kemp), I am sure, was by no means certain that this duty would be put on this year. If he did know it, the knowledge came to him very recently, for only last year he told us that, while this might come in the future, yet he gave it to be understood that it would be in the remote future. Last year in making his speech, he described the feeling in Great Britain with regard to giving a preference to Canada. He was a delegate from the Toronto Board of Trade that went to Great Britain with a preferential resolution. That resolution was discussed but it was not adopted. But a resolution was adopted that they should wait upon the Prime Minister of Great Britain and ask for the appointment of a royal commission to inquire into this question. We know what royal commissions mean. They mean investigations extending over a length of time and even then are merely a preliminary step, leading to a report which must be taken into consideration. So, whatever the member for East York (Mr. Maclean) may have thought or may have evolved from his inner consciousness, the hon. member for East Toronto did not know that the Chancellor of the Exchequer was going to make the announcement he made yesterday. But, when they tried to arrange this interview with the Prime Minister of Great Britain, the answer they received from him was that the time was not opportune and he would not receive them. And what was the explanation given by the hon. member for East Toronto, why the Prime Minister of Great Britain would not receive them? This is what the hon. gentleman said:

> The reply which the Chamber of Commerce received from the Prime Minister was, as stated in this House, that the time for receiving this deputation was not opportune. It was not opportune because at that time the South African campaign was at its height: the war in China was also at its height; there was a very important session of the Imperial parliament in progress, which took up the time and attention of the Prime Minister and his colleagues; and the country was on the eve of an election. I can quite easily understand, therefore, and I think hon. members will agree with me, that under these conditions it was inopportune for the Prime Minister to receive such a deputation, especially in view of the fact that the discussion on this question being one which enters largely into the politics of Great Britain, his reception of the deputation might be interpreted to mean that the Imperial government were about to adopt a protective policy, and this might cause their defeat in the elections which were about to take place.

If ever there was a statement made in this House that would show that the feeling in England was not ripe for such a change, this is that statement. Lord Salisbury would not even receive a deputation requesting the appointment of a royal commission. Why? The hon. gentleman says there was the war in South Africa. But everything does not stand still in England because of a war in South Africa. The hon. gentleman says that the Prime Minister had many important things to do. But there is never a time when the Prime Minister of England and his colleagues have not important things to do. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kemp) gives us the secret. This was on the eve of a general election. And, what was the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Kemp's) own personal idea of the thought in Lord Salisbury's mind. It was that if he received the deputation, even though they asked for nothing more than a royal commission, it might be interpreted by the country as indicating that they were about to adopt a protective policy, and that would secure their defeat. What must have been the sentiment in England, according to the estimation of the hon. gentleman, when he tells us that the Prime Minister would not even receive this deputation? The Prime Minister virtually said to them: Do not come near me; if I were seen in the company of men who had such requests to make, I should not be able to remain in power. Yet the hon. gentleman comes to this House to-day with the most complete assurance, as if it was the simplest thing in the world and that any one might have known that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, would take this action. Now, let me point out to hon. gentlemen opposite one thing. And I enter upon this in no partisan spirit. I am one who believes that it would be a good thing to have preferential trade, if we can get it; and I have never taken the ground that it could not be got, but have spoken in the same strain as the Finance Minister did.

I have always taken the ground that if it ever was to come about, one of the great inducing reasons for it would be the voluntary act of this parliament when they gave a preference to the British people. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), if I understood the extract he read from the Montreal 'Star,' read it as showing that members of the British House were calling upon Sir Michael Hicks-Beach to give us that preference now, because we had given them a preference in our tariff, proving conclusively the fact that our action was having its influence. Now, we did not huckster with the people of England, and we are strong in the affections of that people at the present time, and our action has influenced them in their individual commercial dealings with this country to a vast extent. I believe it is influencing them politically, and all the more so because it was given unasked, without any attempt, as the Minister of Finance said, at bargaining or huckstering. They talk about the Prime Minister saying that he did not go over there to ask them to impose a protective duty upon bread stuffs. Things are in a different position now, and under the influence of our preferential tariff English feeling has been moulded in a measure. While they have not been asked by this government to put on a grain duty, they have done it in their own interests and for their own reasons. Those duties being on, it may be that later they will desire to lower them in order to ease the burden which must fall upon their people. I will not attempt to say how the burden will be eased. I have heard this question of protection and free trade discussed enough in this House to know that you cannot lay down any straight line as to who pays the duty in every case and under all circumstances. But I say there will be some burden upon the English people from the fact that they do not produce as much breadstuffs as they require. But if the government wished to ease their burden, if they thought it was in the interest of the people, it would be an easier matter for them to do it now that they have imposed a slight protection for their own purposes, and without being asked to do it by the colonies; they could ease the burden on their own people by enacting a law that so far as the colonies were concerned the tax should not be operative. There are other questions no doubt that will weigh with them. They will have to consider the effect upon the rest of the world. They will have to consider how giving a preference to their colonies will affect the feelings and actions of other nations. But the duty having now been imposed, it changes the position of the question which the Prime Minister will have to discuss, and he will find himself in a somewhat different position to what he was when he went there before, when England had imposed no duties whatever upon breadstuffs.

But the idea of hon. gentlemen opposite undertaking to lecture this government for neglecting the interest of the country! The idea of these gentlemen rising, as they have done this afternoon, and professing that they are the guardians of the interests of this country, that if they were in power now they would immediately cable this very night to the old country and secure a preference! Sir, I do not wish to refer to a past debate, but the newspapers inform me that in the Canadian parliament there was a resolution proposed by the leader of the opposition not long ago, and endorsed by his followers. That resolution declared emphatically that if they were in power they would so arrange their tariff that not one dollar's worth of British goods should come into this country in any shape or form, while at the same time they declared for a preferential tariff. Do hon. gentlemen deny it? I say that their resolution, as interpreted by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) and other gentlemen, meant to shut out all goods that could be produced in this country. Every one knows that was the position they took, and I ask the leader of the opposition to give to the Prime Minister when he goes over a list of articles that he can offer to the British public in return for their admission of our products free.

Mr. BELL. Would the hon. gentleman allow me? Was not that coupled with a proposal for preferential trade?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes. If I may be pardoned for referring to a past debate——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think it is perfectly in order for an hon. member to make reference to a past debate in the form of an illustration, but he is not allowed to discuss the matter.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The resolution was printed in the newspapers, and hon. gentlemen will see it there:

> This House regarding the operation of the present tariff as unsatisfactory is of opinion that this country requires a declared policy of such adequate protection to its labour, agricultural products, manufactures, and industries, as will at all times secure the Canadian market for Canadians. And, while thus firmly maintaining the necessity of such protection to Canadian interests, this House affirms its belief in a policy of reciprocal trade preference within the empire.

That is, while imposing this policy of adequate protection which, as interpreted by hon. gentlemen opposite, was to keep Canada for the Canadians and to shut out everything from other countries that could be produced in Canada, they were willing to accept preferential trade. They are on record. Suppose the Prime Minister goes over to England, and he is asked to state the position occupied by hon. gentlemen opposite. He would be told by English statesmen, Now we have imposed a duty of three pence per hundred weight on grain and five pence per hundred weight on flour, and you ask us to allow the colonial article in free. Then the Prime Minister would say: The opposition instructed me that they were anxious that you should let our grain in free. They will say to him: Did they give you any instructions as to what you would allow us in return for that? Well, nothing further than that they adopted a resolution that they believed in raising the Canadian tariff so high as to secure the Canadian market to Canadians in every line, and that they would maintain that tariff as against Britain, though they want to have preferential trade relations with you. The Englishmen will say to the Prime Minister: Will you please tell us what articles we produce that you cannot produce in Canada? The Prime Minister will say: If I must tell you honestly, I do not know that there is a single article you produce that cannot be produced in Canada under the adequate protection which the opposition have declared is essential, that is, a protection that will exclude every dollar's worth of your goods from the Canadian market. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite to state where there is an article produced in the United Kingdom that cannot be produced in Canada under an adequate protection. Their resolution is on record, and that is their position.

For these hon. gentlemen to rise and instruct the Prime Minister that he is to go over there and support something that he does not consider in the public interest is certainly going very far. We are in the position that the Prime Minister is going over there without his hands tied by the resolution of hon. gentlemen opposite for there was not a member on this side of the House who supported that resolution which these hon. gentlemen have made, claiming that it is a preference they want, by which they would tie his hands so that he could not ask the British government to give a cent of preference to Canada in any shape or form. It would be worse than an insult to Great Britain to say: We want a preference in your market, and then to take the position, as their resolution is interpreted by their speeches and by the frequent 'hear, hears' of hon. gentlemen opposite, of saying: While we want a preference we have pledged ourselves that we will have such adequate protection as would exclude all goods from the Canadian market that you produce. It is an insult to the British government to make any such proposition and I think if hon. members opposite were to go over there charged with the duty of negotiating, this is the position they would find themselves in. I rejoice for the well being of Canada that the Prime Minister does not go over there shackled by any such resolution. He voted against it, as did other hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and he goes over there to confer with the imperial authorities and the other colonial authorities, to talk over matters and to see if by some means there can be arrangements made by which, through concessions on the part of one and concessions on the part of the other, trade with the empire can be promoted. To the credit of the Liberal party, the position which they took a few years ago has been a large factor, I have no doubt, in bringing about a state of feeling in Great Britain that is favourable to Canada at the present time, and I hope that there will be an arrangement effected that will redound to the benefit of all parts of the empire and to this Canada of ours. Certain I am of one thing and it is that there is a possibility, if not a probability, that under the position occupied by the party opposite there would not be a shadow of a possibility of obtaining any preference, because, according to the terms of that resolution of the hon. leader of the opposition, these hon. gentlemen have pledged themselves that they will have such adequate protection that Canada shall be kept for the Canadians and that no foreign products shall be allowed to come in. I say then that it is rather strange to hear hon. gentlemen opposite rising and lecturing this side of the House and the government as if we had neglected our duty, as if these hon. gentlemen were not in a position of having no hope of obtaining one iota of a preference from the British government though professing an expectation of being able to secure it.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I observe that the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) says that the decision which this House placed on record quite recently——

The PRIME MINISTER. Order, order. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) has spoken.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has spoken.

An hon. MEMBER. Not on this question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the only question before the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The only question before the House is that I do leave the Chair, and the hon. gentleman has spoken on that.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark), Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to take part in this debate as I was not in the House when the motion was brought up, or, not the motion, because I believe it is only a statement of a grievance on going into committee of supply made by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), but from the tone of the debate I have been able to follow the question which has been brought forward. From what I can learn the hon. member for East York made the statement in the House that the government have neglected their opportunities in not having made an effort to secure preferential trade with the mother country. It struck hon. gentlemen opposite as if a thunderbolt had fallen from a clear sky when they read in the papers this morning that their cherished doctrine of free trade which they believed would not be altered in Great Britain for fifty or sixty years to come had been changed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the introduction of his budget by the imposition of duties on corn and flour going into Great Britain. We warned hon. gentlemen opposite again and again that public opinion in England was changing. The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when he went to Great Britain made the statement that we wanted no preference in the markets of the mother country, that we made the gift of the preferential entry of their goods into our country without expecting any return for it. Any man who has followed public opinion in Great Britain, not perhaps as it is indicated by the public utterances of men, but who has been familiar with public sentiment, knows that the Colonial Secretary was in favour of a preferential arrangement between the different colonies and the mother country. No more fatal blow was struck at the prospect of obtaining that advantage for this country than was directed by the Prime Minister when he was in England. These hon. gentlemen state now that they were always in favour of getting a preference. Yes, the right hon. gentleman has said that in the House before and we know that in one of his platform speeches in the west at a public meeting he said that he would obtain a preference, or at least try to obtain one within a week or two if he got in and that he would go over to Great Britain to try and obtain it. Did he carry out his promise? No. His first utterances when he landed in England were not such as to promote the obtaining of that preference but were the very opposite in their effect. He struck such a blow that Mr. Chamberlain and others who were prepared to help the cause of protection to the colonies dare not do it. The premier of the largest colony in the British empire was evidently determined to appear as a believer in the free trade principles which were advocated by Gladstone and Cobden. He was determined to show that he was a free trader up to the hilt, as my hon. friend says, and he received a medal from the Cobden Club in England. Whether they deceived him or he deceived them I cannot tell. Were not his first utterances and actions on landing in England bound to lead the people of England to believe that he was a free trader at heart and that only the present necessities of his country led him to oppose a tariff ? That is what he told his hearers from one end of the country to the other. But, hon. gentlemen opposite have changed their policy in this respect, as they have changed their speeches on this very important question that we are discussing today. They have abandoned the principles which they thought could not be eradicated for a hundred years to come, and the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) gets up and makes a statement that the hon. Minister of Finance from 1896 in his utterances to the House down to the present day led us to believe that we might expect it. No man in this House, not even a supporter of the hon. gentleman, ever would draw that inference from any statement made by the hon. Minister of Finance, or any other person sitting on the treasury benches, or any one else on the other side of the House. The inference drawn from all of their speeches was the impossibility of obtaining anything of the kind. This government knew the feeling of the British government on this subject. That feeling was communicated to them in the cabled invitation to meet the colonial ministers at London to discuss, first the policy of the empire, next the defences of the empire, next the commercial relations between the different colonies and the motherland. What does that mean ? Every one knew that it meant that they were willing to discuss preferential trade as between the colonies and the motherland. Why did not this government take advantage of that ? Why did they not take advantage of the paragraph in the telegraphic despatch which says, that not only would these subjects be discussed, but any others which would be made known, so that they might be communicated to the premiers of the different colonies? There was not a word then, and there is not a word now, from the Prime Minister as to what his policy is to be. Surely on a matter of that vast importance to our country, the people of Canada ought to be informed what the policy of the government is. We on this side have stated again and again that we can get preferential trade. It is in the air. The complaint against the budget of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach is not that it levies a tax upon food stuffs but that it makes no exception in favour of the colonies. The Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) is always in doubt as to the principles of protection and free trade, and he told us that arguments could be made on both sides. A few years ago there was no argument on our side in the opinion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson). But protection is in the air now. Every civilized country has adopted it. The true principle is to build up towns and manufactures and get in population, so that the material produced in the country may have market for consumption in the country. Last year I quoted the words of the Russian Finance Minister De Witte, the greatest Finance Minister in the world, that protection is the policy of every country, and will be for years to come, until we arrive at the millenium when the inhabitant of China is placed upon the same level with the Anglo-Saxon and other races, and when the product of one man's work shall be equal to the product of another man's work. That is a Christian doctrine, which I fear will not obtain a foothold for a very long time to come indeed. But until that political, religious and moral millenium arrives, which may be in 1,000 years hence, protection must be the policy of this country, as it will be the policy of the American continent. Our people will insist that Canadian manufactures shall be protected to the extent to which it is possible to protect them—not to the extent that the Minister of Customs thinks. There are thousands of articles which may be manufactured in England and which may be manufactured as cheaply here, but on account of the smaller demand will not be manufactured here. But I am getting out of the line of my argument.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. While you are on that line, I wish you would mention a few of the articles that will be produced in England and that cannot be produced here.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I can furnish you with a list of two or three thousand. Take drugs, for instance. Nearly the whole pharmacopoeia can be manufactured in the country, but would it pay to manufacture them ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not the question.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is the question. The question is whether articles which enter into the general consumption of the country can be manufactured as well in this country as in a foreign country. It is the duty of the government to protect these as manufacturing industries. But, let me ask : What industries are the government willing to sacrifice in the arrangement which the Minister of Customs proposes to make with the imperial authorities ? Is it the woollen industry ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We do not propose to sacrifice any.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But the hon. gentleman says that he was willing to make such an arrangement with the imperial authorities as would increase our imports from that country in return for a preference in their market.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That was the statement of the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In carrying out that arrangement, what Canadian manufactures is he going to sacrifice ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is not necessary to sacrifice any.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then you cannot come to any such arrangement as that at all. We on this side have charged the government that they neglected to embrace the opportunity which was at their disposal to get preferential trade. The Prime Minister and every one of his supporters said that it could not be obtained. Well, it is possible to obtain it now. The right hon. gentleman is going to discuss our commercial relations when he gets to the old country. But he has stopped discussion on all political questions, and on all questions of imperial defence which are so intimately connected with our commercial relations that he will not be able to accomplish anything. He has given a death blow to everything in the shape of the furtherance of imperial ends, by that answer of his to the imperial authorities. We want the despatches. We want the despatch which the Colonial Secretary sent to Lord Minto, and we want the answer of this government to that despatch. These are not down. I draw your attention to these words :

With a view to the proposed conference, hope your premier will be able to remain for a short time, say three weeks, after the ceremony, as the guest of His Majesty's government. Please telegraph reply. Despatch follows.

We would like to get that despatch.

The PRIME MINISTER. I may say to my hon. friend that there is no despatch. Though it was stated that a despatch was coming, it has never come.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I was judging by the telegram, which seems to me to be a very short one. The despatch must have been countermanded, because when the Colonial Secretary received the reply of the right hon. gentleman, that ended all communications with the government on that subject. I do not wonder that he sent no more despatches.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The reply was so satisfactory to the British government that they did not need to say anything more.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It was so satisfactory that they had no further communication on the subject. There is no chance for a despatch now. All chance for negotiation is very likely at an end. When the British government received the reply of the right hon. gentleman to the despatch, that ended all hope of any intercolonial arrangements, either as defence or the political relations of the colonies to the empire, or even as to their commercial relations.

The PRIME MINISTER. What are the dates ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The telegram of the Colonial Secretary is the 23rd of January, and the reply of the government here is the 3rd of February. We have no despatch, there is an end to the communications altogether, and the right hon. gentleman will simply be a pageant at the Coronation show, and no political results will follow from what ought to be the best and brightest opportunity that was ever offered to a people to accomplish their wishes and wants.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Statistical Year-book, $4,000.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. minister was to give us some details as to how the distribution of this book was made.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Year-book is distributed to mechanics' institutes, to the press, and to the public libraries in the country. A number are also sent to libraries and different offices in England : also to boards of trade and similar public institutions, and of late years a certain number have been distributed to members of the House. The distribution of the book has been materially increased of late.

Mr. CLANCY. I think that is precisely the information which the hon. gentleman gave us on a former occasion. What he was asked to do, and what he promised to do, was to give the committee the number distributed in each case.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I asked for that information from the statistician, but I am afraid I have not got the paper here.

Mr. INGRAM. One class of institution which I think ought to be supplied with these books are the collegiate institutes, which have a special commercial course, in which the students deal largely with the trade and navigation returns of Canada and other countries. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman's department supply the book to the different collegiate institutes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know how many collegiate institutes there are. I believe they are pretty widely distributed throughout the province of Ontario, and if we distributed the book to these we would have to send it to the corresponding educational establishments in the other provinces. Will the hon. gentleman give me an idea of the number of them, and if we have a sufficient number of the books on hand, I shall be glad to distribute them to these institutions.

Mr. INGRAM. I cannot speak for the other provinces, but in the province of Ontario I do not think there would be more than one to each riding.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the number were not more than one to every riding of the Dominion we would have a supply sufficient for them, and I would be very glad to see that this was done.

Mr. SPROULE. How many did you issue last year ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. 5,000 were ordered last year.

Mr. SPROULE. How many were distributed to members ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no fixed number. The members who asked for them received, in some cases, as many as ten, but generally four or five.

Mr. CLANCY. Was there no rule as to the number ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There was no special rule, but four or five were usually given each member who wanted them. Many did not ask for them.

Mr. CLANCY. Then those who were a little modest came out rather short. It is well to know that we can have a dozen if we want them.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Why was not a certain number distributed to each member ? I did not ask for any, how many did I get ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I presume you got none.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Every member should get a certain number, as in the case of other blue-books.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is not sent out in the way the blue-books are. It is not published by an order of this House, but by the Department of Agriculture. The other blue-books are published and distributed by the order of the House, but this is published on an entirely different system as it always has been.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). This vote is an order to publish this book, and every member should have one or two sent him, and the hon. minister who refuses to send these out is derelict in his duty.

Mr. SPROULE. I got three or four copies, which were all that was available. I would like to have had some more because a number of the school teachers like to get them.

Mr. BROCK. I am protesting continually when I receive by mail the enormous amount of literature published by order of this House. This costs the country a great many hundreds of thousands of dollars. It is very difficulty to ask a minister to cut down his expenses, when public documents are sent so lavishly about. I get from the Department of Agriculture every year an enormous number of reports, which I am supposed to distribute amongst my agricultural constituents, but except a few dealers in bananas, I do not know of any agriculturalists in my constituency. Each member has stacks of this kind of stuff sent him which he is not able to utilize. My office is filled up with these publications. I have no time to read them nor do I know of any idle people who have. Hundreds of thousands of dollars must be thus unnecessarily expended in almost every department, and a great deal of the matter is published in French. I would like gentlemen on the other side to assist the members of the government in saving half a million dollars in this item. Of course under the same heading comes the enormous expenditure on 'Hansard.' If you would discontinue the publication of 'Hansard,' you would have shorter speeches and fewer of them, and you could get through an amount of business in two months which now takes four months. A committee should be appointed to take the whole matter into consideration with a view of cutting down the expenditure.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. For the information of my hon. friend I may say that the Joint Committee on Printing of both Houses has appointed a sub-committee to look into those matters. We are getting statistics, and the sub-committee is to report to the Joint Committee, which in its turn will report to the House. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman thought proper to take objection to the publications printed in French.

Mr. BROCK. That is not what I intended.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I received three or four copies of the Year-book and was very glad indeed to get them. It is a very useful publication for school teachers and much sought after by them. With regard to the printing of the House, I am glad to endorse the remarks of my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock). I could not cart away all the publications I received and which I do not read. We are furnished with two reports of each department. These are big books, and I find my library growing so that I scarcely have a place to put the stuff. When I cannot use it or give it away, it becomes waste material. Therefore, I think the suggestion of the hon. member is in the right direction, and that by reducing the cost of turning out and distributing these publications we shall be able to affect a considerable saving.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The Statistical Year-book has been regarded for many years as one of the most useful publications turned out by the government. I maintain that it should be in every school of any importance in Canada. I took that position in this House ten years ago and have maintained it every year since. If twice as many copies of this book were sent out and fewer of the trash of question and answer and long-winded stuff of the Agricultural Committee, matter that is being sent out by the ton, but not half of it distributed—and nobody would read it if he got it—the country would be better served, and there would be less drain upon the treasury.

Mr. HENDERSON. I can hardly allow that statement to go without answer. I believe that the distribution of the evidence taken in the Agricultural Committee is of very great value indeed, particularly when distributed in the form of bulletins as has been done for a few years past. These small pamphlets are read when the larger volume printed at the end of the year would not be so carefully perused. I believe that many members representing agricultural constituencies find a means of distributing these small volumes without taking up a great deal of time. I know I have found no difficulty in getting rid of any that have been sent to me, and I am sure that I could dispose of double the quantity.

Mr. BROCK. You may have mine.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Brock) to say that I may have his. I should thank him very kindly if he will forward them to my address at Acton. I can make good use of them, and I presume he will not require any further reminder. My plan for distributing them is this: For example, I get, let us say sixty copies of the evidence of Professor Robertson before the Agricultural Committee. I do these up in parcels containing eight or ten copies each and address them to postmasters at rural points where I am satisfied they will take considerable interest in handing them out to persons who call for their mail. It is not necessary to address each one separately. I have followed that up by asking the farmers if they have received these bulletins, and have found that they did, proving that the documents went into the hands of people who would make good use of them. I am satisfied that a great deal of information given in the way of question and answer is more readily grasped by the agriculturists than if it were contained in a more closely written volume. I would not like to see a closer limit put upon these publications, for I regard them as very useful and helpful to those to whom they are sent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the attacks made upon him in the House and in the press of the country with regard to the accuracy of publications issued by his department. The minister is responsible for those publications and cannot shelter himself behind officers of his department. I notice that he takes considerable credit to himself in the latter portion of his report for the large distribution of this work—I refer to the Statistical Year-book—throughout the country. If this book is not more accurate than some of the newspapers supporting the government—even personal organs of ministers, if all tales be true—have said, the fewer copies of it that are distributed the better. If my hon. friend from South Ontario (Mr. Ross) wants the teachers to know how our country is progressing, he had better not send them the Statistical Year-book, if statements made by members of the Treasury Benches are to be believed. A Minister of the Crown has gone so far as to say that a gentleman who refers to the Statistical Year-book for facts relating to this country is led into a trap. Does the Minister of Agriculture ask us to vote his salary, when he has not a word to say in support of a publication from his department that is thus characterized by one of his own colleagues, and by the press supporting the government of which he is a member? I expected the minister, when this item came up, to say something about these charges and to defend this publication of his even against the attacks of his colleagues. But we hear no word from him, and are left to guess as best we may whether the attacks are well founded or not. Members of this House have a right to look to a publication sent out by the Minister of Agriculture as a document worthy to be believed; but, if we are to believe the allegations to which I have referred, this is an absolutely unreliable publication and any hon. gentleman who refers to it and bases an argument upon it is regarded by members of the government as being led into a trap. In other words, the hon. gentleman's colleagues tell him that this book issued by this department is a trap of misinformation to the people of this country. Yet, though he has heard these charges for the last two or three weeks, the minister has not a word to say in the defence of his department or of this publication. Knowing the hon. minister as I do, I would have expected him to be as loyal to his officials as he would expect his officials to be loyal to him. This book does not purport, so far as a considerable part of the information concerned in it is concerned, to be anything more than an estimate. Yet, we do not expect Ministers of the Crown will be in a position to rise in this House and say that gentlemen who refer to this book published by the Minister of Agriculture are being led into a trap. I do not suppose that those who have made this charge understand how they reflect upon the Minister of Agriculture, and, apparently, the Minister of Agriculture himself does not understand the seriousness of the charge made against him and against his department. Otherwise when he was asking for $4,000 to publish this work during the ensuing year he would have something to say about the matter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I must confess frankly that I have never undertaken, as minister, to examine every detail of the information contained in this book, and to verify it. I believe that is the duty of the officers who are entrusted with the work of compiling this book, and the hon. gentleman must know that no Minister of the Crown can be expected to go through the drudgery that such work would entail. I regret to say that discoveries have been made of inaccuracies in this book, and of figures which do not agree with each other. I have only to say to the leader of the opposition and to the committee, that I trust such inaccuracies will not take place any more. The Year-book is a compilation from the blue-books which are issued from the various departments, it is compiled by officers of the department, and it is their duty to see that it is accurate, that the transcription of figures is correctly done, and that nothing appears in it at variance with the facts. That such things should appear in it is certainly a reflection upon the department and upon the officers who have charge of the work. I realize that as political head of the department, I must shoulder the responsibility for the mistakes.

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand from the hon. gentleman that his officers are not competent to prepare this book ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have always supposed them to be competent, and I still suppose them to be competent. If they do not carry out their duty it will be my duty to see that they do so in future.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I would not have it understood that I am opposed to the publication of the agricultural report. I happen to be a member of that committee, and I find its work extremely interesting and instructive. I am sure the reports which go out from that committee must be interesting and instructive to the farmers. I find great pleasure in distributing those reports, and I find the farmers receive them gladly. It is some of the other reports which do not seem to be of interest to anybody. I am sorry to learn from the discussion which has occurred to-night that there should be anything wrong with the Year-book. I think we should have such a Year-book, and that it should go into the hands of every teacher in this country for use in the schools. I think it would be a good move to put it into the hands of every teacher, showing the growth of the country and the growth of its business.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not want my hon. friend to understand that I am reflecting upon the Year-book in any way. I quoted from it, and I believe that what I quoted was correct. I have no fault to find with it at all. I was calling the attention of the Minister of Agriculture to the reflections which have been cast upon this book not from this side but from the other side of the House, and from the Liberal press of this country. The only thing that surprised me was that the Minister of Agriculture did not see fit, after the matter was brought to his attention, to make some defence of his own publication while the item was passing.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) My objection to the Year-book is its shabby appearance. I do not call it a Year-book at all, it is not bound, and I consider that a book giving information of the Dominion of Canada should have a respectable appearance. There is a Year-book published by the colony of New Zealand for the year 1901, which contains twenty times the information that our Year-book contains. There is nothing in our Year-book but dry details and figures which very few men in this House or out of it will ever read. The New Zealand Year-book is beautiful and interesting, and contains information of great interest and value concerning that colony, and I would like to see our Year-book made something like it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I am sorry the Minister of Agriculture neglected our esteemed friend in the distribution of these beautiful volumes such as I hold in my hand. I am surprised that the member for Victoria N.S. (Hon. Mr. Ross) has not seen this beautiful volume; I hope he has no objection to it because it is red. I do not put such confidence in our Year-book as the leader of the opposition does. I confess that I rarely quote from it, or rarely take any information from it without first verifying it. I regret to be obliged to say that there are two or three tables in that Year-book that should not be in it. I believe there are tables put in there for a political purpose. When hon. gentlemen sat on this side of the House years ago, they accused the Conservative party of compiling this Year-book with a political object. Well, if they were guilty at that time, I do not think the hon. gentlemen are less guilty to-day. I will draw the attention of the minister to one table in this book which I hope will be amended next year, because there is not a word of truth in it from top to bottom. It would be unfortunate to place such a book in the hands of our school children. I call attention to the table on page 481 of the Year-book for 1899, which I got from the library a few moments ago. It is a table giving the standing of the different provinces and of their debts. On page 478 it first gives the provincial debts of the provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, British Columbia, and Prince Edward Island, but leaves out Ontario.

Mr. FRASER. That has no debt.

Mr. HENDERSON. Evidently these gentlemen have been reading this book, and consequently they are utterly ignorant of the state of the finances in the province of Ontario. Now, we have, at page 481, a statement of the surpluses from 1882 to 1899 also giving a statement of the railway liability payable in the future extending over forty years. It gives the Railway liability in each particular year of the province of Ontario. I shall take the year 1899, where it is stated that our railway liability is $1,962,903. Now, I take the budget speech of the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario (Mr. Ross) given a few months ago in which he states that the railway liability in January, was $3,510,790.

Mr. TALBOT. What year ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Up to the end of 1901. There is just the difference between the two years. The figures have increased somewhat. I am not quite sure that there was an increase in 1900 or 1901, but I beg to say that there is very little difference indeed.

Mr. FRASER. Do I understand that that is the budget speech for this year ?

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. Well, then that would be up to the end of 1901, and the statistical tables published in 1899 would be for the year 1898, so that you would have three years.

Mr. HENDERSON. No, the table I read from this year is for the year 1899. Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) need not try to mix it. There would be a difference of possibly two years, but that would be the fullest extent of the difference. But, of course, there could not be a difference by any means of $2,000,000. I do not think it exceeded $500,000, if it exceeded $200,000. While we have Mr. Ross stating that the railway debt at the end of 1901 was $3,510,790, the Year-book places it at the end of 1899 at $1,962,000. The commission sat since then, as an hon. gentleman suggests, but I do not know that it would make any material difference in the figures. I think they discovered that the debt was just about as large as it had been understood to be. It does not affect the matter that I object to. I will take another column because the object appears to me to be to show that Ontario has no debt at all. It is really the intention to convey that impression to the mind of the young reader in the public school when we all know that Ontario has a debt of nearly $6,000,000. There is $1,815,000 due the Dominion government, and we are paying interest from the province of Ontario to the Dominion on that sum of 4 and 5 per cent, a pretty high rate of interest to exact.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is something on the other side of the account.

Mr. HENDERSON. Yes, but it is the wrong way. I will discuss the question that the hon. Minister of Finance referred to, in a moment ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not want to debate it with my hon. friend.

Mr. HENDERSON. Leaving the matter, then, of the debt, which, I understand is nearly $6,000,000, I think it is very wrong in publishing a table of this kind to convey the impression that it is under $2,000,000. Another heading is : 'Surplus of assets over liabilities,' and it is put down that in 1899 we have $2,250,932 of assets over all liabilities. Now, every man who is familiar with the financial history of the province of Ontario knows perfectly well that there is not a dollar of surplus and that for many years there has not been. That is a well known fact. A commission was appointed to try and find out this surplus a year or two ago, and when the commission reported, they said nothing about the surplus. However, that did not satisfy the Prime Minister of Ontario. He wanted a surplus and he asked an accountant in the city of Toronto by letter, to see if he could not find one. No doubt, the accountant was well paid for it and he furnished a report in which he actually did find a surplus. I have the report under my hand. I have the report of the royal commission, and it is put in a very peculiar way. The appendix to the report is put under the same cover as the report of the royal commission and went forth to the country actually as a government print and as a part of the report of the royal commission, when it was a well known fact that not a word of it was certified to by the commissioners. The commissioners made their report on the 13th of February, 1900, and the other work was undertaken on the 27th of March, when the Prime Minister wrote a letter to the accountant asking him to investigate this matter. No doubt he found a surplus but he did it by including an asset which was manufactured out of a subsidy that this government granted in 1884 to the province of Ontario, of $142,414, and by capitalizing it at 5 per cent, he made an item of $2,848,000, which he placed among the assets. That sum, however, being in excess of the surplus that the government claimed by some $300,000, shows that instead of having a surplus of assets, they actually had no surplus at all, save that obtained by capitalizing a subsidy that nobody acknowledges as money, and which the hon. Minister of Finance himself, says the province of Ontario has not an unconditional right to, or, to use his own words :

> I do not think your government have any unconditional right to demand this money from the Dominion.

They capitalized the sum representing the subsidy paid year after year by this government to the province of Ontario, and to which capitalized sum the hon. Minister of Finance here says the Ontario government have no unconditional right to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend might read that letter a little farther in all fairness.

Mr. HENDERSON. I will read the whole letter if the hon. gentleman desires it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not desire it; it has been printed fifty times.

Mr. HENDERSON. (reading.)

I do not think your government have any unconditional right to demand this money from the Dominion. There are certain limitations provided by the statutes; but no doubt if you desired to obtain the money you could easily comply with these conditions.

We all know that. Ontario can comply with the conditions, surrender the subsidy and take the larger sum, but Ontario does not want to do that. The province of Ontario might in the same way sell out any other asset that it had. I fail to see that there is anything gained by my reading the hon. gentleman's letter. This, I assume, is only the hon. minister's opinion, which he gave in order to help the Prime Minister at Toronto on the eve of an election at a very critical time. I am not going to say that the hon. Minister of Finance overstated what he believed to be correct, but I confess there are other men in the country who have given this matter careful consideration and they are directly of an opposite opinion to that of the hon. Minister of Finance in respect to that sum of money. It is simply capitalizing a sum of money that was granted by this government to the province of Ontario, and which this government is compelled to pay year after year to the province of Ontario.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. So long as Ontario wants it.

Mr. HENDERSON. So long as Ontario wants it, and until this parliament authorizes this government to pay it over and until the provincial legislature of Ontario authorizes that government to receive it and in doing that they wipe out the subsidy. In that same way they might wipe out any other asset they have. There is not a dollar available to-day for the purpose of meeting the liabilities of the province. I therefore say, that this table is misleading and that it should be eliminated from the Year-book. It is too bad that our young minds should be led away with the idea that we have a large surplus in Ontario when we know that we are paying interest on a debt of $6,000,000, and that we have not a dollar of surplus over and above our actual liabilities. I will not analyse the contents of the Year-book further, but I confess that if I ever happen to quote statistics from this book, I am always careful to verify them by other departmental records.

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. FLINT. It is unfair that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) should take up the time of this parliament in discussing the finances of the province of Ontario, with the intention of affecting the result in a local election which is about to take place.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I rise to a point of order. The hon. member (Mr. Flint) has impuned the motives of another hon. member in this House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He did not attribute an improper motive. It is not a crime to try to influence an election.

Mr. FLINT. In order to save time, I will withdraw the expression, whether it is parliamentary or not. This whole question of the Ontario surplus was discussed last election and the argument of the supporters of the local government was well sustained by the facts. A careful examination of Ontario finances from an economical standpoint will show that the statement in the Year-book is substantially correct. If my hon. friend wishes to show that the Year-book is incorrect I do not wish to deprive him of the pleasure, but he should not take up the time of this House in providing provincial campaign literature. He was entirely out of order in dealing with the Ontario finances. The Year-book in the main is correct, but all people are liable to make mistakes, and mistakes do sometimes occur in the Year-book without any particular fault except perhaps a lack of care in due preparation of the figures. I have often had occasion to find fault with the manner of the compilation of the Year-book. I think the book might be made more interesting and useful, but I have no particular objection as to the correctness of the figures. The suggestion of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Brock) as to the enormous expense of publishing and circulating the blue-books is worthy of our attention. I am glad to know, as stated by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) that a sub-committee of the Printing Committee is considering that whole subject with the view of adopting a plan by which a great deal of money could be saved to the country. I would suggest to that sub-committee that a careful list be made of those who receive these publications. The list has been altogether too large in the past. Ex-members of parliament who may have been here only a short time and who care nothing about these things have these publications sent to them for years and years after they have ceased to be members of this House.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Only in case they apply for them.

Mr. FLINT. The list should be carefully revised and made as small as it can be. I would suggest that a circular should be issued containing the names of all the publications and asking that those entitled to receive them should mark off those which they desire to receive, so that those which do not interest them would not be sent. In that way thousands of dollars would be saved. I am pleased to get as many publications as the average member of parliament, but a great part of those which I do receive are useless to me and to others. They have the disadvantage that they cannot be burned in the furnace because they block it up, and it is often difficult to know what to do with them. There are, of course, the bound volumes which can be put into private libraries or donated to public libraries and they are useful. I think, Sir, that the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture covered the whole ground in regard to the Year-book. If errors have crept in through carelessness or inadvertence they will be corrected. Personally, I would like to see the Year-book published under a different system in the future, but the minister and his colleagues will no doubt come to a decision upon that. Be that as it may, I do not think that the committee should have its time taken up discussing the finances of Ontario.

Mr. CLANCY. I dissent from the sentiments expressed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Flint). There is no thoughtful member of this House who will say that he can dispense with any of the departmental reports. They are the public records of the country. The hon. gentleman will see that he gets two unbound copies, one of which is supposed to be used during the session of parliament and the other he can very easily dispose of because there are many intelligent persons in the country who are always very glad to get them. The hon. gentleman says he has difficulty in burning them, but I ask him now if on reflection he will say that he can dispense with a single public document that is printed by order of this parliament.

Mr. FLINT. I hope my hon. friend does not imagine that I intimated that they should be dispensed with. I merely suggested that the list of those who receive them should be carefully revised, and that those to whom books are sent should be asked to state what they want and what they do not want.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. member knows that that is an impossibility. The Printing Committee provide for the publication of a certain number of these documents. If there are some members who do not care for the sessional papers, the committee are not able to determine in advance whether they will take them or not. If the hon. gentleman had the control of this matter he would find himself at the close of the year in a complete difficulty in regard to the distribution, though I have no doubt that some saving might be made in the printing. Coming back to this much-abused Year-book, it does not pretend to be more than a sort of compilation of the public records, and if they have been in any sense false, it would not do for the compiler of the Year-book to undertake to correct them. For this reason the statistician is not to blame for having stated that there was no debt in the province of Ontario, because he simply took the public records as he found them. You would not expect a public official to undertake to correct from his own bat any public documents. I do not think it is a fair charge to bring against the Minister of Agriculture to say that this Year-book is inaccurate, beyond this, that he has sat in his place and has permitted attacks to be made upon it in this House for party purposes. On the whole, it is a reliable and very satisfactory work, and it is not fair to have it go out that there are immense inaccuracies in it. Its compiler would be more than human if no errors occurred in it, but there are none to seriously impair the value of the work.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I was very much surprised to hear the hon. member for Yarmouth speak of curtailing the distribution of one or two of these publications to members of parliament or ex-members of parliament. Who are better fitted or take greater interest in watching the proceedings of parliament than ex-members of parliament? I said a moment ago that a good deal of money was wasted in the distribution of these agricultural reports. I am satisfied that it cannot be carried on as it was a year or two ago, when the evidence, which could all be compressed into four or five pages of common sense, was sent out in books of 200 or 300 pages and distributed in tons throughout the country. A farmer would never sit down to read these books. This system, I presume, has been discontinued.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, they are printed by the order of the House. The Department of Agriculture has nothing whatever do with that.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It would pay this country to have some intelligent sessional clerk, if such can be found, condense the whole thing into a nice little concise volume of twenty pages, and distribute that. I think there is a great deal of money wasted, not only in connection with this item, but in connection with the printing of parliament. Very many reports are ordered to be distributed when only two or three copies are wanted; and some of these sessional clerks who are standing around and getting in everybody's way instead of attending to their own business, might be engaged to strike off two or three copies on the typewriter for those who want them.

Mr. SPROULE. With reference to the number of reports of the Committee on Agriculture, the hon. gentleman has exaggerated. I have been on that committee for a number of years, and I understand how these reports are given out to be distributed. No report of 300 or 400 pages is distributed in large numbers ; but the House recommended the printing of a certain number of copies of the summary reports to be given to members of parliament for distribution, and my experience is that members representing rural constituencies have applied to members representing city constituencies to give them a portion of their number for distribution in their constituencies. We have had many controversies in the committee on this subject, the difficulty having been to get the House to order enough to satisfy the needs of the committee. With regard to the Year-book, I think it is regrettable to see one minister of the Crown getting up and discrediting a publication got out by another department. If we cannot rely on the official reports, what can we rely on ? If they are not reliable, the minister at the head of the department ought to be held responsible.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). As one member who I am sure would like to say something on the subject of the Year-book is absent through illness this evening, I would suggest that the minister allow this item to stand and take up some other items.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This item has been already once before the House. If my hon. friend did not wish to discuss it, he should have said so when it was first called. But after we have discussed it so long, I do not think we ought to postpone it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I presume the hon. minister will have no objection to discuss the subject on another item.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not at all.

General statistics, $3,200.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is the item out of which the compilation of the Year-book is paid. There are some extra clerks paid out of this vote, and the balance is available for any statistical work.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the minister if he is going to employ this ubiquitous gentleman who sells books, writes for the magazines and obtains land values. I refer to Mr. Washington. I am not disposed to quarrel with useful expenditure, but we have a return made by Mr. Washington which is absolutely worthless. Mr. Washington is a gentleman who has been taken care of by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. TAYLOR. For what reason ?

Mr. CLANCY. He said he was not a Liberal but voted with the Liberal party. He solemnly swore he was not a Liberal but a free trader. This is an absolute waste of money.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Washington was doing, in the course of the last two or three years, certain investigations and statistical work for which he was paid out of this vote. The report is on the Table of the House. He made some investigations into the selling value of rural lands, and the trend of rise and fall in the value of such lands. The work has extended over the past three years and when at work he is paid out of this fund. He has not worked in this fiscal year at all, and consequently has not been paid out of this fund.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Who are paid out of this fund ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. None except the clerks engaged under Mr. Johnston in compilation.

Mr. SPROULE. We ought to put the whole sum fairly chargeable to the Statistical Year-book in one item so that we might know from year to year what it costs.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The vote for the Statistical Year-book is simply for printing it. The book is printed in the Bureau and the $4,000 is all paid to the Bureau for printing it.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman says that Mr. Washington received no pay for the current year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think so.

Mr. INGRAM. Then he was paid last year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. His report must have been made to the department last year. How does it come that no report but Mr. Washington's appears in the Year-book ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The portion of this vote is to pay ordinary clerks in the department, a part of the staff engaged on the Year-book and any other statistical work that may be given out, and a portion is employed to pay anybody else who may be doing statistical work.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, we understand that Mr. Washington gets paid for making land values ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Well, that may be one way of putting it, but I would not put it that way. What I said was that he was paid for investigating land values.

Mr. INGRAM. We asked, on the 25th of February what his duties were, and the hon. minister told us that he was engaged in making land values. That is here on record, and he received $750 for his services. I think we are entitled to know who these temporary clerks are. Every year the minister has come down and asked for $3,200, and when asked what it was for his reply was, to pay temporary clerks. But I fail to find it stated who these temporary clerks are. If they are engaged year after year why should they not be made permanent officers and paid in the ordinary way ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Many are employed in my department who are called temporary clerks. They were there before I took charge, and are practically permanent officers. Some have been in the department for 15 years, some perhaps, for even 20 years.

Mr. INGRAM. Why not make them permanent ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not disturbed the order of affairs that I found in existence. It would require a considerable change in the organization of the department, and I have not seen fit to undertake that any more than did my predecessors. I have not the names of the clerks at the moment, but I can get them for the hon. gentleman. For his satisfaction, I may tell him that there is not a single one paid out of this vote that was not there when I took charge of the department.

Mr. INGRAM. I think that only Mr. Johnson and two clerks were working there when the hon. gentleman took office.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) is mistaken. I can get the list of clerks.

Mr. INGRAM. Some other time will do.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not think the committee is disposed to accept as final the hon. minister's statement that he will consider whether he will retain Mr. Washington as a fixture upon the service of this country. It is not pleasant to be forced to state in the House the opinion one holds of one in Mr. Washington's position. But when a man is paid hundreds of dollars—running into thousands by this time—and yet does not hesitate to state his conclusion and put it in writing that during the exact year when the Liberals were in power, the hard times had the effect of enhancing the land values, and that they had the very opposite effect when the Conservatives were in power, what are we to think of the value of the employment by government of such a man ? I have no hesitation in saying that no one but a lunatic would base such a statement upon the evidence produced by Mr. Washington. I, for one, am not disposed to let this item pass until we have some declaration from the minister that he has at least made up his mind to discontinue a work that is utterly useless and, indeed, disgraceful. If the hon. minister is ready to stand sponsor and godfather for work of that kind, and cannot make up his mind whether to discontinue it or not, I, for one, propose that the item shall not pass until he can tell the House what he intends to do. I do not wish to stand in the way of the item passing, but I think the committee is entitled to some declaration on the subject. This side of the House can make up their minds, if the hon. minister cannot.

Mr. FLINT. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) is unduly violent over a matter which does not necessarily call for such strong language. As to the report made by Mr. Washington, until we have had copies of it printed and in our hands to study, it is impossible for us to come to a conclusion concerning it. That such an inquiry is absurd and valueless, I think has not been proved, and cannot be proved. That there is such a thing as rise and fall of land values in various portions of the country, and that this may be caused by different occurrences, will hardly be denied. But the opinion of the minister, in which I concur, is that to carry on that inquiry throughout the Dominion upon the scale upon which Mr. Washington started out, would take a long time and a great deal of money. I, for one, as a member of the committee do not see that we could reasonably ask the House to vote the sum necessary for such a work. But I do not think it fair to discuss Mr. Washington's report until it is in our hands, and it seems to me that the language used by the hon. gentleman is not justified under the circumstances.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Where do we find recorded the salaries paid to this man Washington ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Washington has no salary, and he has not been paid anything by the department in the current year. This item is for general statistics for next year and, so far, I have formed no plan for paying Mr. Washington out of this item. When he was paid, he was paid out of this item in last year's vote and the vote of the year before.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Was he paid out of any other department or any other fund ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me clear that if Mr. Washington was paid out of this vote, an improper use was made of the money. Judging by his report, Mr. Washington is only a political jobber, a land valuator getting up the case for the Reform party. The sum and substance of his work is an effort to show that the land went down in value when the Conservative party were in power and went up when the Reform party came into power. And I think the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) was quite right in saying that the data Mr. Washington gave could not be used as a basis for his conclusions by any one other than a lunatic. He had nothing reliable to go upon, and yet, for the purpose of his party he was willing to make this report. And we pay him under the head of general statistics. I say he is improperly paid if paid out of this item, and he is improperly employed if employed at all.

Mr. CLANCY. I wish to say a word to my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint). That hon. gentleman seems to have an abhorrence of public records and to have forsworn the use of them. This report of which we are speaking has been on the Table for a month, and if the hon. gentleman was inclined to be informed he has had the opportunity. Yet, though he has not read this report, he does not hesitate to rise and defend it. Now if the hon. gentleman appeals to the Minister of Agriculture he will put him in possession of that within two minutes.

Mr. FLINT. I think the hon. gentleman has the manuscript of that report in his pocket.

Mr. CLANCY. Not at all, the manuscript is in the possession of Mr. Polkinghorne, I have not had it in my pocket at all. The hon. gentleman should have been informed before he made the statement. I repeat that Mr. Washington is a pensioner on the department. The Minister of Agriculture says he has not been paid anything during the current year. The hon. gentleman knows that besides being paid for this job, he has been engaged in the census department for a considerable time, he is in fact a man that must be taken care of. When he is not there he is going through the department selling books. The hon. gentleman's own department has bought books from him, every department has bought books from him; he is a perfect nuisance, if I am forced to use such language. That he should be paid out of the public funds of Canada to make up a record of what he calls land values for the use of the intelligent people of this country, is a perfect outrage. It is curious to see how he arrives at the difference in land values. He tells us that he does not take into consideration any improvements made on the land. The truth is that Mr. Washington has disclosed that his report is utterly worthless. Yet hon. gentlemen will no doubt later on use that report and say that during the period the Tories were in power land values went down, and during the period the Liberals were in power they went up. I say a man who will commit himself to a statement of that kind unrebuked is past redemption.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Why didn't you rebuke him the other day when you had him under cross-examination ?

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps I had a good deal better manners than my hon. friend, because, having the opportunity, I would not use it. I was not disposed to take advantage of my position to say unkind things to this man, because I hoped at least that the Minister of Agriculture and hon. gentlemen opposite would put an end to the farce.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would say it to his face rather than behind his back.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend and his friends have brought this upon Mr. Washington. The Minister of Agriculture evidently thinks that Mr. Washington is a very valuable man, and that he cannot possibly part with him. Why cannot the hon. gentleman admit that the whole thing is a farce ? Surely his own friends do not sympathize with the attitude he has taken this evening ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman evidently is not very well satisfied with the outcome of the investigation that has been carried on by Mr. Washington. Mr. Washington undertook to investigate facts, not a theory, not a policy, or anything of the kind, but facts in regard to the sales of land in certain counties, which were picked out for the purpose of investigation, through a certain number of years. The facts show that during certain periods land seemed to go down in value, because it sold for less than it brought earlier during those periods. In other periods the land seemed to be rising in value because it sold for a higher price at each successive sale.

Mr. INGRAM. Where did he get that information ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. From the registry books of the counties which he examined.

Mr. INGRAM. How did you get that information ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. From his report, and from the details on which he based his report. He based his conclusions on figures in a multitude of cases, where he found that on one occasion a certain property was sold for a certain sum and on a subsequent occasion it was sold for a higher, or a lower price. Mr. Washington's investigation shows that during certain years there was a steady decrease in prices, and in certain other years there was an increase in prices obtained for the same properties. It happened unfortunately for the hon. gentlemen opposite that there was a very marked difference since the present government came into power, and that a little while afterwards lands in the rural districts began to increase in value. During the period before the present government came into power lands steadily decreased in value. That is what nettles the hon. gentleman. If Mr. Washington's investigation had told in the other direction, I have no doubt the hon. gentleman would have thought Mr. Washington a heaven-born genius, but as it is, he finds Mr. Washington is something very bad indeed.

Mr. BROCK. It is evident from what we hear this evening that this gentleman has taken a great deal of unnecessary trouble to go through the registry books and find out at what prices lands in particular localities have been sold. The value of land, as every one knows, is to be found in the value of its products, the value of the wheat for instance. To find the value of wheat you have only to consult the Liverpool market from time to time. The value of land, like everything else, is measured by what it produces. The employment of this gentleman to go through the country and examine registry books in various counties is a most ridiculous waste of money, and must have been done, not for statistial purposes, but for the purpose of bolstering up the pretensions of hon. gentlemen opposite to be the saviours of the country. As to the value of wheat, or the price of any other product of the land, no one pretends that this government or any other government has anything to do with it. The value of timber land is measured by the value of the lumber that it produces. You can always get those statistics without the employment of a man like Mr. Washington to go through the country and examine the registry books. When gentlemen like Mr. Washington start out on a job of that kind they always know what you want them to do, and they are prepared to keep at it as long as the salary is forthcoming. I really think the Minister of Agriculture should be ashamed of this whole business.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman was asked on the 25th of February, this question :

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. minister says that the inspiration to appoint such an officer came from himself. As it was he who inspired the idea, he must have known who this gentleman was and where he came from. Did he come from the hon. gentleman's own riding.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, he did not. I never knew the gentleman until I met him here at Ottawa and do not know where he came from.

Then the minister says further :

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Washington is a gentleman who has been engaged for years in statistical investigation. When I first met him we had a discussion on statistical work. I believe he was at one time in the press gallery, but I did not inquire particularly into his antecedents.

How does the hon. gentleman know that if he never knew the gentleman until he met him here at Ottawa ? Then my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) asks :

Was he on the Montreal 'Herald'?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think he ever was connected with the Montreal 'Herald,' and I cannot remember who introduced him to me, but I have known him a good many years and have frequently discussed statistical work with him.

These three answers do not corroborate each other very well. Now, look at the wonderful work this gentleman did. When the hon. minister was asked where he employed this man his answer was :

I think he went to three counties in Ontario, to one in Quebec, and to one or two in the maritime provinces.

I doubt whether he did come into Ontario with that small expense account of $54.67. The minister proceeds :

I know he was in Prince Edward Island, and I think he examined a county in Nova Scotia.

Mr. CLANCY. Does he state that ?

Mr. INGRAM. That is what the hon. minister states, and yet we have been told that the valuable work of this man shows a wonderful decrease in land values under the Conservative regime and a wonderful increase during the time that hon. gentlemen have been in power. Then we were told by the hon. minister to-night that this man is paid out of the $3,200. He was paid $722.31 for his salary and $54.67 for his travelling expenses. I see that he has been engaged in the statistical department, for which we are paying $4,000 in one instance and $3,200 in another instance. We have the right to have that gentleman's report included in the Statistical Year-book.

Mr. CLANCY. No, no ; for heaven's sake no.

Mr. INGRAM. If it has any value at all it should be placed in there, and the hon. gentleman should assume responsibility for it and not come down to this House and lay it on the Table. Not many hon. gentlemen in this House have any opportunity of reading it. If he does statistical work his work should be put into the report, so that we could see it, and if his employment is not justifiable, then, the sooner this man is discharged the better.

Mr. SPROULE. He has evidently been getting up a campaign document.

Mr. INGRAM. I think so. The other evening the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) introduced a book, and probably if its pages were carefully perused we would find the report of Mr. Washington in it. As to the value of land this gentleman seems to make out an increased value since hon. gentlemen opposite came into power. In my district land has gone up very materially, but it is only in one or two spots where government buildings are erected and where friends of the government get an increased profit. I have no doubt that my hon. friend from London (Mr. Hyman) finds that values have gone up a little. In the county of Elgin land values in the matter of government purchases, have gone up from something like $80 to $300, so that since the government came into power there has been an increase of about 200 per cent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to say that if this gentleman, Mr. Washington, about whom I know nothing, pursued the method of investigation that has been mentioned by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, the results must certainly be very valuable. He has gone, the minister says, through the registry offices and investigated the land values there. I believe there has been an investigation of that kind in the province of Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In Prince Edward Island and in Ontario.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought it was stated that he had investigated Nova Scotia as well.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why has my province been deprived of the services of this gentleman ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have not had him long enough to go there.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, I will require a full explanation of why my province has been deprived of the services of this gentleman before this item is passed. It is one of the most scandalous attempts to impose on Nova Scotia that I ever heard of. However, for my present purpose, it does not make very much difference about Nova Scotia. I do not suppose deeds are prepared differently in Prince Edward Island from the way in which they are prepared in Nova Scotia. I do not know whether they are prepared differently in Ontario or not. I know that in Nova Scotia in not 50 per cent of the cases is the consideration price correctly stated in the deed of conveyance.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is in Quebec.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, the hon. gentleman should have ascertained something about the other provinces before he made any statement as to this gentleman's method of investigation. In thousands of cases, to my own knowledge, in the province of Nova Scotia, in which large transactions have taken place, the sum of one dollar has been mentioned as the consideration.

Mr. McCARTHY. Would that be in the case of farm lands ? That would be simply in the sale of land to some corporation or the passing of property between relatives.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And also in the sale of farm lands in the province of Nova Scotia. Personally, when I purchased a property which I own there, the consideration which was stated was one dollar.

Mr. McCARTHY. Probably that was the real value ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy) is welcome to that idea if he desires to entertain it.

Mr. McCARTHY. It shows the increase in the value of land.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Since the government came into power.

Mr. HYMAN. That does not prove it has not increased in value.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In many cases the consideration which is stated in Nova Scotia is one dollar. Now does this gentleman obtain any valuable information by looking at deeds of that character ? Yet, according to the hon. Minister of Agriculture the only way in which he has pursued his inquiries is by resorting to the registry offices. Would the hon. gentleman state whether in different counties he has made these investigations exhaustive as to farm lands?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, in every instance where there were two sales of the same property.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is not an answer to the question. Does he take all the farm land in any particular county and go through it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. He takes every case where there are two sales of the same property within the period which he is investigating, so as to see whether there has been a rise or a fall in the value of that property.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does my hon. friend mean that he takes a period of say twenty or twenty-five years and investigates every sale of farm property in a particular county during that period ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. A great many of the sales that take place in the province of Ontario at the present time are the sales of land held under mortgage. A portion of the mortgage is paid off and the purchaser agrees to pay a certain consideration and assume the mortgage.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is recited in the deed.

Mr. SPROULE. How does any person know how much of the mortgage is unpaid ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is registered.

Mr. SPROULE. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mortgages are all registered.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, the mortgage is registered but until the discharge of the whole mortgage there is nothing in the registry office to show how much remains to be paid. There is usually a portion of the mortgage paid before the property is sold and when the property is sold, because the companies are pushing for payment, the party who purchases the property agrees to assume the mortgage. You go to the registry office and you can find no trace there of the actual value of that land, or what it has changed hands for except for that.

Mr. ERB. As there seems to be some doubt in the minds of gentlemen opposite as to the increase in farm values in recent years, I wish to say that I know of two farms in my own neighbourhood that were sold eight or ten years ago, and again sold within the last six months. About ten years ago one of these farms was sold for $10,000, and the purchaser built on it a new barn, costing about $15,000. That farm was sold within the last six months for $13,500. Another farm was sold eight or ten years ago for $6,500, and it was resold about four months ago for $7,500, or $1,000 more, with out any improvements having been made. These are two cases in my own experience.

Mr. TALBOT. (Translation.) I was surprised when I heard some hon. gentlemen say that for the hon. minister to have employed a man who was throughly competent and having technical knowledge, to make up a record of land values throughout the several provinces of the Dominion, was an outrage and a farce. Now, in the province of Quebec, from which I come, and in my own riding, for instance, farmers do not raise wheat, and they depend altogether for their revenue on dairying ; and such being the case, I should like the hon. member for Toronto Centre (Mr. Brock) to tell me how he would manage to measure the value of farm lands in my riding, if it be true, as he stated, that to find out the value of lands in this country, you have to consult the London market alone.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am sorry to see hon. gentlemen opposite obstructing these estimates and in both languages. Is it the intention of the minister to employ Washington during the next fiscal pear ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have made no plans for it.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). If such were the intention, I would move that this item be reduced by the amount of his salary. Who paid his travelling expenses of $52, travelling all the way from Prince Edward Island to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All the expenses he charged were paid by the department.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). How much were they ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell you off-hand.

Mr. CLANCY. The question before us is that the service rendered by this man was utterly useless to the country. In order to show the character of the man I may mention that he stated without a blush on his solemn oath that he worked on Sundays, and of course he was paid for it. How much has Mr. Washington been paid since he commenced, and how long has he been working in the department ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I find from the Auditor General's Report that last year he was paid $285. As far as I can see he has been paid altogether about $1,000. He commenced I think in 1897 or 1898.

Mr. CLANCY. Better let the item stand until we get definite information.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. SPROULE. If this man were employed to get valuable statistics I could understand the expenditure, but when he came to the province of Ontario he had in the report of the Bureau of Industries, the value of land from year to year as published by the friends of this government. If he desired the only reliable information at his hand he could have obtained it there, but he paid no attention to it and his statistics are worthless. What is the matter with the hon. member for North Simcoe ? He appears to be amused, as he always is, about something that is of no importance to any one but himself.

Mr. McCARTHY. Don't worry about me.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman should know that he is in the House of Commons. We have a right to discharge our duties without these senseless interruptions. The sooner his constituents know the way he conducts himself the better. I say that these statistics are about on a par with the supposed statistics alleged to have been collected by Mr. Cote and his friends in regard to the census of 1891. They are got for political purposes and for nothing else and public money spent in that way is misapplied.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). The hon. member (Mr. Clancy) has said that this gentleman worked on Sunday. The question was put to Mr. Washington if he was authorized to work on Sunday, and his answer was 'No.' May I ask the minister if that gentleman is employed in the department now.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. McCARTHY. I may tell the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the reason of my amusement was that he stated that the information published by the Bureau of Statistics in Ontario was authentic. That statement coming from him amused us. He tried to withdraw from that position and he said it was authentic at least so far as government information could be correct. Does he now say that the information published by the Bureau of Industries in Ontario is in his opinion correct.

Mr. SPROULE. I want the hon. gentleman to understand that he is not in court nor am I here to be cross-questioned. He may assume a good deal as a certain class of lawyers do, but fortunately I am not under his control now.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). This man Washington has been here since 1897. What other reports has he made ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He has only made one report.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I object to the minister sitting on his seat when answering a question.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Would the hon. gentleman like to see me sit anywhere else ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would now ask the minister how it is that this officer has only handed in one report in so many years ? What has he been doing in the past years ? Has he been engaging in elections ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is asking a question and then answering it himself. Mr. Washington did not hand in his report until his work was finished. When it was brought to a conclusion he handed in his report.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has not given us the information which I asked for a moment ago, namely, when Mr. Washington began his duties, and how much he was paid each year up to the time he concluded that report.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Washington commenced his work, I think, in the year 1897, and he has been working off and on occasionally since that time. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information as to how much he has been paid each year. I could send to the library and get the Auditor General's Report for each year, in which, as the hon. gentleman knows, that information has been published, and he can get it very easily.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to say that he is not employed by him. Is he employed in any other department ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. SPROULE. Was he not employed in the Census Department lately ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He was. He resigned from the census about two months ago.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if these people are still employed in the department : Mr. Watts, Mr. Monroe, Miss Ross and Mr. Lepage.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, they are still employed. They have been employed there ever since I have been in the office.

Mr. INGRAM. Are there any others besides these ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know of any others.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman said last year that there were two others.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the Auditor General's report, he will find on page D—4 the salaries, and on page D—13 General Statistics and other expenditures, in which he will find the payments to Mr. Washington.

Mr. INGRAM. Mr. Washington could not have been paid out of this $3,200 last year, because the minister otherwise accounted for the whole amount.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman give the committee the date when Mr. Washington commenced his services, and where he was making his investigations in 1899, in 1900, and in a portion of 1901, which is not included in this report ? The reason I ask for this is that the hon. gentleman stated that Mr. Washington's report as laid on the Table did not contain all the information.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I should be glad to give the hon. gentleman every figure and table. I did not lay these on the Table, but they are in the department, and if the hon. gentleman wants them, I will bring them, though I do not think that either he or I would be willing to go through them.

Mr. CLANCY. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is making it necessary for us to insist on the information, no matter how unpleasant it may be for the committee. If the minister has now found himself in the unpleasant position of being required to furnish the information on which we may judge of this gigantic work which he says is going on, I think it is well that we should have some information to guide us more definitely on that point. The hon. gentleman will recognize, I am sure, that it is a very reasonable request that he should put the committee in possession of that information, and I do not think he should expect the item to pass until he does.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the hon. gentleman is entirely unreasonable in asking that all the figures from which certain conclusions are drawn should be laid before the House. He might as well ask for every customs paper on which the trade and navigation returns are based to be laid before the House. The hon. gentleman knows that every report is based on millions of figures and statements obtained from officers all over the country.

Mr. CLANCY. The two cases are not at all similar. In the one case the figures are those of a gentleman who had wormed himself into the affections of the Minister of Agriculture ; in the other case the figures are obtained from regular official documents. I ask the hon. gentleman if he intends to continue Mr. Washington in office ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said I have not made up my mind.

Mr. CLANCY. It is about time the hon. gentleman did.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will do that when ready.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will find it convenient some time to make up his mind. He had better let the item stand until he gets the information. Does he refuse to give us the information in detail which Mr. Washington has given him ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the House desires to have every figure that Mr. Washington has on his sheets, &c., I will bring them down, but I do not think that it is advisable to do so. The report Mr. Washington made is based on a mass of detail which he discovered in his investigations. That report is in the hands of the House. I think it utterly unreasonable to ask for all the figures and all the details which are worked into the report.

Mr. SPROULE. The same thing was done by the Minister of Trade and Commerce when the analysis of the census, without request, were laid on the Table. How much was Washington paid ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He was paid $5 a day all the time he was engaged in the former year. He was also paid $5 a day, and part of the time $3 a day.

Mr. SPROULE. He has been paid a good round sum for his labour and for information that is practically worthless. To enable us to determine whether it is of any value at all, it would be well to furnish the House with all the data.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Reports of commissions may be based on voluminous evidence and the evidence is always reported to the committee. The report is the conclusion drawn from a very large mass of evidence, which the House is no better able to go over than the details referred to here. Not many would want to go over them, but if only one does so wish, there is no reason why they should not be furnished.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the originals are to be brought down, that would not cost much, but to make copies would cost considerable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is no reason why the originals should not be brought down and left in charge of the House.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) can go to the department and consult them there, and I think that would be the simpler way. I would be glad to give the hon. gentleman every facility.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend is entirely too generous. It is his business to give the House the information. No more reasonable request was ever made than I am making now. I presume the hon. gentleman will have no objection to stating to the committee the object of continuing this man in the work of the department.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The object is to find out whether there is any distinct rule of progress, the selling value of the land from one date to another. That has been, to a certain extent, shown by the report of Mr. Washington. But that report is what I might call a specimen to show what has been occurring in parts of the country. As the hon. gentleman knows, the investigation took place only in Prince Edward Island and in the counties of Carleton, Durham and Elgin in Ontario. The facts point to certain conclusions, but if the question is deemed sufficiently important to go on with the investigation, I should be obliged to ask for a vote for the purpose. When that comes up the hon. gentleman will be welcome to discuss the desirability of the investigation. Under this vote it is impossible that that work should be conducted to any sort of conclusion. And so I can say that, so far as this vote is concerned, I am not going to carry it out. But as to what is going to be done in the future I am not prepared to bind myself.

Mr. CLANCY. And yet the hon. minister has not told us the object of this investigation. He said it was to gain information as to the rise and fall of land values. But what is the object of that ? I shall not attribute motives to the hon. gentleman; and he may be able to give reasons. But, I confess that I am so dull that I cannot see it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think it is of great importance to the farming community whether lands are rising or falling in value, because it shows, to a great extent whether the agriculture industry is profitable or otherwise. The way to ascertain that would be by a statistical investigation, just as in the case of other economic facts.

Mr. CLANCY. Then, I take it that if the hon. gentleman found that land values were falling, he is so confident of the power of his government, that he would take means to prevent that decline.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If there seemed any way of doing it, we certainly would try. But the lands are rising in value.

Mr. CLANCY. Yes, and in spite of the hon. gentleman. It is surprising that the hon. gentleman can have seen so much and cannot see what a consummate fraud it is. Let the hon. gentleman come to his senses–

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will come to the census by and by.

Mr. CLANCY. The Minister of Finance is usually a very prudent gentleman. And it is a noticeable fact that he has not risked his reputation by saying a word in defence of this scheme. I am sure he does not approve of it—his views are too broad for that. The Minister of Agriculture states that there is nothing in this vote for the purpose of carrying on work of this kind. If he is prepared to say that he will not ask the House during the present session for anything to continue the work, I am perfectly satisfied that the item should pass. But, if he cannot make that statement I think we should insist on our rights to have such information to guide us, for, in the absence of such a declaration we may all conclude that the hon. gentleman intends later on to ask us for money to continue the work.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am afraid I cannot pledge myself.

Mr. SPROULE. The fact that the item is here is evidence that the hon. minister intends to continue the work for he told us that this was one of the expenses covered by the vote.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman was asked what the money was for, and he stated——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I gave what was spent on this service last year.

Mr. SPROULE. But what was the use of that if it does not indicate how this money is to be spent? Mr. Washington was quoted as one of the gentlemen who were to share this money.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Or some one else to do this kind of work.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Any work that might turn up.

Mr. SPROULE. But money is not voted for one purpose and used for another.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I meant statistical work.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, in connection with that I was going to say that if the hon. minister thinks to convince the people that by sending a man around to estimate values—it is only an estimate, for he gets no reliable information from the registry offices—that he will get facts upon which conclusion can be based, he is very much mistaken. Very few will believe that. As I said before, the only source from which these values can be got even approximately is the bureau of industries. I was going to add, when I was interrupted, by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) that, while the information given to the bureau covers estimates that are not exactly correct, the general results are approximately correct. But it is little less than absurd for the hon. gentleman to pretend that he can get anything of land values by compiling such figures as these in the three counties in Ontario.

Mr. CLANCY. At page D-13 of the Auditor General's Report, there is an item of $2,284.20 for salaries. Would the hon. minister tell us how many persons were employed and what each received?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is under the head of general statistics. If the hon. gentleman will turn back to page D-4, he will find them all recorded—four clerks whose names had been read by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram).

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Cannot the hon. gentleman make up his mind about putting these on the Table? It cannot be a difficult thing, either to bring down the original or to bring down a copy.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the leader of the opposition asks that all this mass of details should be brought down, I will yield to his request; but I think he is asking for something which will be of no earthly use to the House or the country.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will accept my hon. friend's promise to bring it down if required, and I will consult with my hon. friend from Bothwell, and let the hon. gentleman know if we require it. Of course it is understood we are to discuss that matter on some other item if we desire to do so.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. On concurrence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, I do not mean on concurrence, that is not the arrangement we made.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot allow the hon. gentleman to discuss this item on every other item of my estimates that will come up.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think when we passed the item of the Statistical Year-book I had a distinct understanding with the hon. gentleman that this matter might be discussed on some subsequent item?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that is the case. I think the hon. gentleman could work it in with the other item.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Carried.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, let us not have any misunderstanding about our agreement. I distinctly understood from the Minister of Agriculture to-night that anything that might be discussed on the item of the Statistical Year-book, might in the same manner and to the same full extent, be discussed on some subsequent item. Am I wrong about that ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, you are not wrong.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then I say further that if that is to be done, inasmuch as this item is distinctly connected with the previous item, after these documents are brought down, if we require them, I would like to have the same liberty to deal with this particular subject, after making such examination as we might desire of these documents.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are we sure we understand each other ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, I understand the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is another thing that I would like to mention. I would like the Minister of Agriculture to be prepared with certain information as to what inquiries have been made of census enumerators respecting alleged frauds, before the census item is finally disposed of. I do not want to refer to what has taken place in the past. My hon. friend knows he said that he thought he would be able at some future day to furnish me with certain information as to that. I would like to know who the enumerators are who have been communicated with, what the nature of the communication to them was, and what reply was received from them in each instance. I think we should have this information before the census item passes, and that we should have it for a sufficient length of time previously to enable us to examine it in connection with the documents already laid on the Table, for the purpose of discussing the action of the government respecting the investigations made into the census of 1891.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understand that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would also like to say to the Minister of Agriculture that, when it will be convenient to him, either on his estimates or at some other time, I shall bring to his attention certain facts in connection with the dismissal of Captain D. C. Stewart, Halifax, who was employed, I think, in connection with the quarantine service. I would like the hon. gentleman to be prepared to discuss that, either on his estimates or at some other time which we can arrange between us.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will be very glad to. Perhaps it would be convenient for the hon. gentleman to discuss that on the quarantine item.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 2.05 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 16, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

ALEXANDER GIBSON RAILWAY AND MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough) moved :

That the petition of the Alexander Gibson Railway and Manufacturing Company presented this day, for leave to present a petition for an Act, be read and received, and referred to the Committee on Standing Orders.

He said : I might explain to the House the reason for this motion. This company, which does business in the province of New Brunswick, are operating a railway, which they got power from this parliament in 1898 to take over. Being a provincial corporation, they believed that the legislature of New Brunswick had power to authorize the separation of the railway from the manufacturing business, and that they could obtain an Act from that legislature for such a purpose; but they have recently been advised that it will be necessary or advisable to obtain an Act of the parliament of Canada for that purpose. They find now that they cannot work the two very well together, and by the time they learned that it would be necessary to come to this House, the time for presenting petitions had expired. All they want now, with the full consent of the shareholders, is to have provision made simply for running the railway under a separate company from the other business. Under these exceptional circumstances, I trust that the House will grant them the privilege of introducing this petition and having it go to the committee.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the name of the railway ?

Mr. FRASER. The Canada Eastern.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. All the parties interested have given their consent ?

Mr. FRASER. All have signed this petition, and they are all agreed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is merely dividing the enterprise, I understand ?

Mr. FRASER. Yes, a purely domestic matter.

Motion agreed to.

INCORPORATION OF RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Mr. H. GUTHRIE (South Wellington) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 110) respecting the incorporation of railway companies.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman kindly give a brief explanation?

Mr. GUTHRIE. The object of the Bill which I have just asked leave to introduce is to place certain restrictions upon the present system of granting railway charters; a system which I believe has prevailed in this House for a great many years. It is not intended in any way to limit the number of charters nor to impose any unreasonable or unnecessary conditions upon railway promoters. The Bill is aimed chiefly at what are known as speculative charters, or charters which are obtained by parties for the purpose of embarrassing companies which are in possession of constructed works. The Bill, in brief, provides that parties who apply for railroad charters shall accompany their applications with a sum equivalent to $200 per mile of the proposed road, which sum shall be deposited with the government, and on the completion of the proposed work shall be returned to the company with all accumulated interest; but if the work be not proceeded with, then the $200 per mile shall be forfeited to the government of Canada. The Bill is not perhaps as complete in form as it might be, and I am well aware that at this late hour of the session such a Bill introduced by a private member can hardly be pressed to a successful conclusion. However, my idea in presenting it at this time is to bring the matter to the attention of the Minister of Railways, the members of the House and the public in general, in order that the difficulties which now exist may be dealt with by some kind of legislative enactment, if not by such a Bill as this, then by some other Bill or by a general provision to be inserted in the general Act which the Minister of Railways is now pressing. When one considers that the total railway mileage constructed in Canada to-day is approximately about 18,500 miles and that session after session charters are granted for anywhere from 10,000 to 15,000 miles of new railway—I believe this session for about 12,000 miles; and when one also considers that about a third of the time of this House as well as a great deal of hard committee work is taken up in considering these measures, and that from 75 to 80 per cent of them never materialize, one must come to the conclusion that a great many of the charters now granted are taken out by the promoters for speculative purposes, to be hawked around and sold when occasion offers, or else for the purpose of embarrassing others. It may be that the true way out of the difficulty would be what is known as free trade in railroad charters, a system which I believe prevails in some of the United States, where one is merely required to have the plans and profiles prepared and filed and the work proceeded with. I think, myself, there is a good deal to be said in favour of that system, provided proper financial guarantees are taken that the railway shall be proceeded with and constructed.

In discussing the matter with an hon. member yesterday, he argued that such a Bill would be in the interests of large corporations and strike a blow at men of moderate financial standing. I think, however, that my hon. friend will find upon reflection that there is nothing in that argument. Men of moderate financial standing should not ask for charters for 500 or 1,000 or 1,500 miles of railway, as in all probability they will not be able to carry out their undertaking. But if they ask for moderate charters, there is no reason why they should not be able to put up the $200 a mile, knowing well that if their application be in good faith, the money will come back to them. I think that this is an opportune time to bring the matter before the House, in order that it may be dealt with if possible in a general Act. No doubt the Bill is not perfect in all its details, but any such imperfections can be remedied. I believe that where any substantial performance of the undertaking has taken place no forfeiture should be insisted on, or where the failure is due to some difficulty of an unforeseen character, such as a crisis in the money market or a temporary shortage of railway material, or where there has been a part performance, there should be a pro rata adjustment. But where there has been absolutely no performance or an attempt at performance, there should be an absolute forfeiture of the deposit.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I am afraid that my hon. friend will find that his Bill will not accomplish what he desires, if the history of the past may be taken as an index of what will happen in the future. We know how easily deposits made to guarantee contracts are returned to the parties who have failed in their obligations. Take for instance the elevator matter at Montreal, in which a deposit was made with the government, but after keeping it a length of time the government returned the money. We have other instances of the same nature. Some two or three years ago, when a Bill was before the Railway Committee asking incorporation for a company to build a railway in the Yukon district, the company offered to put up a deposit, but the members of the Railway Committee who were supporters of the government,—I do not know if the hon. gentleman took part or not in that committee—absolutely refused to require a deposit on the ground that it was establishing a bad principle and voted down the motion made to require a deposit as a guarantee of the building of the road. Remembering these things and knowing how easy it is for companies to put up excuses for not accomplishing what they have bound themselves to do, and how easy it will be for them to take advantage of that provision in the hon. gentleman's Bill which provides for a non-exaction of the forfeit condition in certain cases, or for a pro rata return of the deposit made, in my opinion the Bill will practically be of no effect whatever.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. LEIGHTON G. McCARTHY (North Simcoe) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 111) to amend the General Inspection Act. He said: This Bill is intended to amend the General Inspection Act regarding hides, skins and leather. It is intended to apply only to the cities mentioned, namely: Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, Kingston, Toronto, Hamilton and London. I have no objection to extending it further, but I have limited it to these places because they are the centres of the hide business of this country. The object is to have hides inspected wherever practicable, green and uncured, because I am informed that a perfect inspection cannot be had after the hides are salted or cured. It is intended also to have the green or uncured hides inspected in order to compel a proper flaying of the animals by the butchers. I am instructed that at present, owing to the careless way in which the animals are killed and their hides taken off, a great deal of waste material remains in the hide, and if the inspector were obliged to lower the standard of the hides because of improper or unskilful flaying, that would improve the hides in their value. The Bill also aims at preventing any frauds in the inspection such as have hitherto existed, such as resalting or watering the hides and thus increasing the weight, the hides being purchased or sold by the weight. The effect of the Bill will also be to create a uniform inspection in the districts in which it is put into operation. The experience in other places will I think warrant this House in passing a measure of this kind. I am advised that by reason of a more careful inspection in Liverpool, the quality and price of hides has greatly increased, and no doubt a similar result will follow a perfect system of inspection in this country. This Bill, like that of my hon. friend's from Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), is introduced somewhat late in the session, and if hon. members desire to have time to circulate it among their constituents in order to ascertain the views of those engaged in the business, it would not become me to press it to a final reading this session. I have not consulted the Minister of Inland Revenue and therefore the same remark applies to him, but I have endeavoured in this Bill to carry out the ideas I have expressed, and which I think will have the effect of improving the quality and price of the hides bought and sold in this country.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

THE IMMIGRATION ACT.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 112) to amend the Immigration Act. He said: My object is to enable the government to deport immigrants from foreign countries, who may be suffering from any dangerous or infectious disease. While there is no ground for the somewhat alarming statements made with respect to the number of diseased persons entering this country, still it has been found that the officers of the immigration branch of the department are not sufficiently armed with authority to deal with such cases. I cannot explain the provisions of the Bill better than simply reading the operative section.

The Governor General may, by a proclamation or order whichever he considers most expedient, and whenever he deems it necessary, prohibit the landing in Canada of any immigrant or any other passenger who is suffering from any dangerous or infectious disease or malady, whether such immigrant intends to settle in Canada, or only intends to pass through Canada to settle in some other country.

In addition to the necessities of the case as observed by the officers of the department, transportation companies and others engaged in the business of transporting immigrants, particularly at Montreal, Quebec and Halifax, have urgently requested that this legislation should be introduced.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

YUKON TERRITORY—ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce a Bill to amend Chapter 41 of the Statutes of 1901, respecting the Administration of Justice in the Yukon Territory. He said: This is a very unimportant measure. It is merely to amend section 3 of the Act in question so as to enable us to increase the salaries of the stipendiary magistrates from $2,400, at which it is fixed, to $4,000. There are now two stipendiary magistrates, one at White Horse and the other at Dawson. In addition to their living allowance they have a salary of $3,000. The intention is to increase the salary to $4,000 and reduce the living allowance to $1,800.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is it not necessary to have a resolution to found that Bill upon?

Motion withdrawn.

YUKON TERRITORY—TERRITORIAL ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 113) further to amend the Yukon Territory Act and the Acts in amendment thereof. He said : Hon. gentlemen are aware that, at the present time the appeal from the court in the Yukon Territory is to the court of British Columbia. The intention is to constitute a local Court of Appeal within the Yukon Territory and also to provide that the appeal from the court constituted shall be from a single judge to the Court of Appeal, and from that Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, where the amount in controversy exceeds $2,000. It also provides that, in mining cases, there shall be a right of appeal from the judgment of the Gold Commissioner.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 114) to amend the Exchequer Court Act. He said : This is a mere matter of procedure. The Bill first authorizes an appeal from a judgment on demurrer. As hon. gentlemen who are members of the legal profession are aware there is no appeal from a judgment of the Exchequer Court, unless it is a final judgment. But there may be a case in which there is a demurrer which is decided by a judge of the Exchequer Court which may not decide the case itself. If an appeal could be taken, the case might be decided upon that, and so save the expense of further proceedings and of calling witnesses. Another section authorizes the service of process in the Exchequer Court upon residents abroad, whether they be British subjects or foreigners. Another section provides for leave to appeal from the Exchequer Court to the Supreme Court in cases where the amount in controversy does not exceed $500. At present it is necessary that the amount shall exceed $500. This is to provide for special cases that have arisen under the Expropriation Act. The appeal is made conditional upon receiving permission to appeal from the court to which the appeal is to be taken.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there not an appeal in a judgment on demurrer in the Exchequer Court in which it finally disposes of the case ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, then you get a final judgment. But this provides for cases where judgment does not finally dispose of the whole action. For instance, suppose a case is brought against the Crown. We put in a demurrer. The demurrer is dismissed. There is no appeal and we are forced to go to trial and expend a large amount of money in bringing witnesses. Then, when the appeal to the Supreme Court is taken, the whole matter may be disposed of on the original question raised in the lower court.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 115) further to amend the Canada Evidence Act, 1893. He said : This Bill is introduced at the suggestion of some judges in Ontario. It is intended to limit the number of expert witnesses that may be examined on either side to five, unless the court think that the number should be increased. I understand that great abuses have arisen in the province of Ontario through excessive calling of expert witnesses—dozens of them called, and the expenses of the trial increased accordingly.

Mr. McCARTHY. Does this apply only to the province of Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It applies throughout the Dominion, but, I understand that the abuse has been noticed particularly in Ontario.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

I.C.R.—PURCHASES OF CAR TRUCKS, &c.

I.C.R.—SECTION FOREMAN, JOHN BARBOUR.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax) asked :

1. Was section foreman John Barbour, on the Intercolonial Railway, dismissed ? If so, when, and for what reason ?

2. Were any charges brought against him ? If so, what were they, and was he given an investigation ? If not, for what reason was an investigation denied ?

3. For how many years had he paid into the Insurance Fund, and what amount each year ?

4. Is it the intention of the government to refund, with interest, the amount so paid ? If not, for what reason is it withheld ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. He was dismissed on the 30th November, 1901, for political partisanship, on the representation of Mr. O. Turgeon, M.P.

2. No charges were brought against him except that of political partisanship. He was not given an investigation. It is not usual to grant investigations in such cases unless ordered by the department.

3. He paid into the Insurance Fund for eleven years and seven months, from 1st May, 1890, to 30th November, 1901. He paid the following amounts each year :

1890, May and June	$ 1 40
1891	9 40
1892	10 46
1893	9 00
1894	8 25
1895	8 50
1896	18 00
1897	22 50
1898	23 80
1899	25 50
1900	23.10
1901	23 60
1901, July to Nov.	10 00
	$193 51

4. The amount paid into the Insurance Fund cannot be refunded, but any member of the Insurance Fund Association who has contributed while in the service may, under the regulations, continue a member of the fund, after he ceases to be in the employ.

MAPLE CREEK POST OFFICE.

Mr. BOYD asked :

1. Has the Postmaster General received any petition from the residents of Maple Creek, N.W.T., asking for the removal of the post office to some building separate from any other business ?

2. What answer was sent to the said petitioners, and what action, if any, has been decided upon by the department ?

3. Is it the policy of the department, when an office has sufficient earning capacity, to have such office located in a separate building ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) :

1. Yes.

2 and 3. No final conclusion has been reached, but if the revenue of the office continues to increase it may in the public interest be necessary to make a change. Whilst there is no hard and fast rule upon the subject, still when the revenue of a post office attains such proportions as to afford a fair and reasonable living to the postmaster it is considered not unreasonable in the public interest that he should give his undivided attention to the affairs of the office. Ordinarily a change of postmaster under such circumstances would involve the carrying on of the office in a separate building.

UNIT OF REPRESENTATION, CENSUS, 1901.

Mr. FOWLER—by Mr. Hughes—asked :

1. What is the unit of representation as shown by the census of 1901 ?

2. Will the representation in the House of Commons from the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island be diminished as a result of their small relative increase of population since 1891, as compared with that of the province of Quebec, as shown by the said census ?

3. If so, by how many members will the representation be diminished in each of the said provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This question is altogether premature, it cannot be answered now.

DOCTOR ALFRED BOUILLON, MATANE.

Mr. CASGRAIN—by Mr. Borden (Halifax)—asked :

1. Was Dr. Alfred Bouillon, of Matane, dismissed as port physician at Matane in 1896 ?

2. If so, for what reasons ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). Dr. Alfred Bouillon was never employed as port physician by the Department of Agriculture, and was consequently never dismissed.

I.C.R.—FIRE INSURANCE.

Mr. CASGRAIN—by Mr. Borden (Halifax)—asked :

1. Is there any fire insurance on the locomotives, rolling stock or buildings (stations, car houses, machine shops and elevators) of the Intercolonial Railway ?

2. If so, for what amount, in what companies, and by whom were they placed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). There is no fire insurance on the locomotives, rolling stock or buildings, &c., of the Intercolonial Railway.

DISMISSAL OF POSTMASTER AT JOLIETTE.

Mr. CASGRAIN—by Mr. Borden (Halifax)—asked :

1. Before deciding to dismiss John James Sheppard from the office of postmaster at Joliette, did the government have an inquiry made into the conduct of that officer ?

2. Did the government, before deciding on such dismissal, inform the said Sheppard, that his dismissal was demanded, and has Sheppard had an opportunity to be heard or to set forth his reasons in opposition to the complaint formulated against him ?

3. Has Sheppard himself written to the government, or to one of its members, that he desired an inquiry before being dismissed ?

4. Why has the government not granted an inquiry to Sheppard ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). The postmaster at Joliette was dismissed upon the information contained in a letter, of which the following is a translation :

House of Commons,.

Ottawa, March 7, 1902.

Sir,—I have already asked you several times for the dismissal of the postmaster of Joliette, Dr. J. J. Sheppard.

Our friends are complaining, with reason, of the conduct of Dr. Sheppard. He is an ardent Conservative who has continued to fight our friends. In spite of his position he exercises his influence in the city of Joliette, where he lives, and outside of it with his patients and friends.

During the elections of 1896 he compelled two persons to vote for the Conservative candidate, Mr. Belisle, whose wife was employed in the post office and Mr. Mireault, mail courier of Joliette.

During the elections of 1890 he exercised the same influence over Mr. Mireault and two of his sons who live with the latter. During the same elections again, with the intention of hurting the Liberals and helping the Conservatives, Dr. Sheppard detained illegally at his office letters which the committee of organization of the Liberal party addressed to the political Liberal leaders of each parish ; amongst others, two letters addressed to political friends in two parishes requesting them to announce on Sunday after the service political meetings which the Liberal party was going to hold in these two parishes one day of the following week.

The consequence of this, was that I went to these two parishes with speakers to have the discussion and I found no one there, because the meetings had not been called for, the friends to whom I had addressed letters requesting them to call meetings could not hold them, not having received their letters.

I could bring to your attention a quantity of faults in the administration of the post office. Dr. Sheppard looks more after his medical practice than after his post office, where he gets young girls quite incompetent to replace him.

Therefore, in the interest of the public the removal of Dr. Sheppard from the postmaster-ship of Joliette should take place, and I beg for it with great confidence.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) CHAS. BASINET.
F. O. DUGAS, M.P.

The Hon. Mr. Mulock, Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

This evidence was considered conclusive, and therefore any inquiry would apparently have served no useful purpose. Therefore no formal inquiry was held. The postmaster, since his removal from office, has written denying the charges against him and asking for an inquiry.

POSTMASTERS, COUNTY OF JOLIETTE.

Mr. CASGRAIN—by Mr. Borden (Halifax)—asked :

1. Who are the postmasters of the county of Joliette whose commissions have been revoked since the month of June, 1896, up to to-day ?
2. Who has been the substitute in each case ?
3. What has been the cause of each change ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). I would ask the hon. gentleman to make a motion.

GROUNDING OF THE SS. 'TIVERTON.'

Mr. BENNETT asked :

1. Was the ss. 'Tiverton' grounded in the month of April, 1901, between Montreal and Quebec ?
2. If a pilot was in charge of said vessel, was he duly licensed by the Montreal Harbour Commissioners ?
3. Was an inquiry had into the circumstances connected with such grounding of said vessel ?
4. Did the board of inquiry censure the pilot of being at fault, or did they exonerate him ?
5. If the finding of the board was that the pilot was in fault, does the Department of Marine consider that the said pilot's services should be dispensed with and his license cancelled ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland) :

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. Yes.
4. The court declined to censure him.
5. The court did not find that the pilot was in fault, but the department has learned that since the accident to the steamer in May last, this pilot has been superannuated by the Montreal Pilotage Commissioners.

I would like to add that this answer was furnished to me by the department; but on reading the judgment of the court, I would be inclined to think that a different construction might be put upon it, for they could not censure the pilot. The implication was that he was not to blame, although perhaps he was to blame to some extent, but it was the Pilotage Board that was to blame for keeping him in that position after he had sent in his formal notice that he was disabled from holding the position.

MANITOBA GRAIN INSPECTION.

Mr. DOUGLAS asked :

1. What changes have been made in the standard grain grades of the Manitoba grain inspection district since the year 1899 ?

2. If made, by whom made, through what medium were they made, and what is the nature of such changes ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) :

1. No. 2 hard and No. 1 northern wheat have been consolidated as No. 1 Manitoba northern, and a new grade called No. 3 Manitoba northern has been established. Commercial grades of oats known as Nos. 1 and 2 Alberta have also been established.

2. As regards the wheat, the change was made by Act of parliament, vide 1 Edward, chapter 24, amending 62-63 Victoria, chapter 25. The reasons therefor are set forth in the discussion on the Bill, vide 'Hansard' of April 16th, 1891, commencing at the bottom of page 3094 and continuing on 3095.

As regards the oats, the change was made by the Western Grain Standards Board, which board is established by Act 55-56 Victoria, chapter 23, section 15, and authority given to the board to make changes of grade under certain conditions as per section 4 of the schedule to the Act 62-63 Victoria, chapter 25.

USE OF FRENCH IN ONTARIO COURTS.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure) (Translation) asked :

1. Has the government received the following resolution adopted by the St. Jean Baptiste Society of Ottawa ?

If so, what answer did it give ?

The St. Jean Baptiste Society, of Ottawa.

Copy of a resolution passed on Sunday, April 13, 1902, at a special meeting called by Mr. J. U. Vincent, the president :—

Whereas Mrs. Joseph Roi, Duke street, Ottawa, having brought a judicial complaint against one Larochel, appeared before Magistrate O'Keefe, of Ottawa, to give her evidence ;

And whereas that lady demanded the privilege of giving her evidence in her mother tongue, because speaking English only imperfectly, she feared to express herself wrongly and to be misunderstood ;

And whereas Magistrate O'Keefe, disregarding that legitimate demand, directed her to express herself in English, and then dismissed her complaint, condemning her at the same time to pay a fine of $2 for contempt of court, because she dared to persist in her demand ;

Be it resolved, that the St. Jean Baptiste Society, of Ottawa, in the name of the French Canadians of the Capital, energetically protest against the unjust and arbitrary decision of Magistrate O'Keefe in this instance ;

Be it resolved that this incident be brought to the knowledge of the Minister of Justice, and that the French Canadians of the Capital do beg of the hon. minister to kindly take the necessary means in order that in future a like injustice may not be repeated, in a country where equity should be dispensed irrespective of nationality.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). The Department of Justice has received the resolution referred to in the question. In answer to that question, I am obliged to say that the government have no control over the magistrate nor over the proceedings which took place in this court.

YUKON TERRITORY.—CONSTRUCTION OF TELEGRAPH LINE.

Mr. SAM HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with the Orders of the Day I should like to say that some time ago, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), there was a question on the order paper about the cost of the Yukon telegraph. The hon. gentleman incidentally remarked to me in the corridor, a day or two before, that he had all the information and would give it to me. When the question came up before the House in the absence of the hon. minister the statement was made that the information was not obtainable.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). I do not remember the question that was asked. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) will be good enough to tell me what it was I will be happy to give all the information that is available.

SUPPLY.—LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE AT HALIFAX.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House go again into Committee of Supply.

Mr. B. RUSSELL (Hants). Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put I wish to be permitted to make a reference to a matter affecting the constituency represented by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax). It seems that a strike has taken place in the city of Halifax amongst a number of men employed in the shipping trade and the strike is one of very serious proportions. I have seen several references to the matter in the newspapers coming from that city and it seems that a sympathetic strike has been organized in connection with the strike of the longshoremen involving some 1,000 or 1,400 men. I suppose the government have had their attention called to the matter. I wish to know to what extent they have interposed, as I think it was their duty to interpose in connection with it. The matter is one of extreme importance to the port of Halifax which is very well known in this House and which is recognized by the whole Dominion as one of the most important ports of this Dominion—I would say the most important port that we have, taking it all the year round. This port is open all the year round, it has great advantages not possessed by other ports although some of them, in other respects, are of greater importance. So that, the matter is not one of purely local interest, but it is of general interest, affecting the Dominion as a whole. I should like to know if the government can give us any information regarding this matter and if they can tell us whether any steps, and if so, what steps have been taken in connection with it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Russell) I would say that the attention of the Department of Labour was called to the strike in question by a telegram received on behalf of the striking longshoremen last week. The same day the Deputy Minister of Labour was sent from Ottawa to Halifax to lend his friendly offices in order to bring about a settlement and after an intervention extending over a little more than a day I am glad to say that he was able to bring both parties to an understanding and on the Saturday following the men returned to work. The strike had been in force a week or ten days, it involved some 600 or 700 longshoremen who were directly parties to it and who were directly concerned and several hundred other workmen who were described as sympathetic strikers went out on strike at the same time. I may also add that there was danger of the strike extending and including many others who, would most probably have taken part but have not done so. The arrangement come to was mutually satisfactory to the men, the companies and the merchants interested, was reduced to writing, agreed to by the men in meeting and signed by the companies and employers. I received a report from the Deputy Minister of Labour on the subject and I might trouble the House by reading the conclusion of it which will perhaps more clearly dispose of the matter. After having arranged a mutual agreement between the parties it was necessary for him to bring it to the attention of the strikers in meeting, and to the attention of the companies. He proceeds to refer to the agreement in the following words :

> After the terms of both agreements were read to the meeting a motion in favour of acceptance was carried without a dissenting voice, and the president and secretary of the Longshoremen's Association were authorized to sign the agreements on its behalf. There were over 1,000 strikers present at this meeting. Motions were then carried, declaring the longshoremen's strike and the three sympathetic strikes at an end, and all agreed to return to work on the following morning. A noticeable feature of this meeting was the perfect order which prevailed throughout, and the unanimity which characterized the acceptance of all resolutions which were put to it. As evidence of the good feeling which appears to have resulted from the disposition on the part of the employers to negotiate in a friendly spirit with the men in arriving at the terms of agreement, I should possibly mention that a proposal of cheers for the steamship agents and other employers, received as hearty a response as any other like proposals which followed the conclusion of this meeting.

The agreement itself is a somewhat lengthy document, and certain provisions in regard to the rates of wages and hours of labour, Sunday and holiday labour, work performed on stranded or wrecked vessels, and under other exceptional circumstances, as well as other conditions governing employment. The agreement also contains a clause intended to prevent the possible re-occurrence of a strike or lock-out, by requiring that 30 days notice in writing shall be given before any change in the terms of the agreement can be made by either party, and that no strike or lock-out shall be declared without 30 days' notice in writing.

On Saturday, the morning following the ratification of agreement at the mass meeting of strikers, the fish-handers, coal workers and coopers, concerned in the sympathetic strikes, resumed work, and work was recommenced along the wharfs by the longshoremen, at the docks where there was loading or unloading to be done.

I have every reason to believe that the settlement as arranged by this agreement has given mutual satisfaction to the parties interested, and that an immediate settlement of the strike has been of the very greatest importance to the commercial and other business interests of the port of Halifax. Moreover, judging from the nature of a number of interviews which I had with different persons, both employers and employees, subsequent to the settlement of the strike, concerning the prevention of possible future differences, I am led to believe that the principle of conciliation and arbitration has become more generally appreciated and is likely to play an increasingly important part in the future. As evidence of the appreciation of the services rendered through the good offices of the department under the Act, in regard to the present strike, I need only add that at the mass meeting of the strikers, called for the purpose of ratifying the agreement, the motion extending a vote of thanks to the department was carried unanimously, and with the very greatest enthusiasm, while the appended letter from the chairman of the committee of the steamship agents and merchants concerned, is sufficiently clear in its expression of their feelings in the matter.

Board of Trade, Halifax, April 12, 1902.

W. L. McKenzie King, Esq.,
Deputy Minister of Labour.

Dear Sir,—The steamship agents and the merchants of Halifax, concerned in the recent strike of the longshoremen, desire to place on record their appreciation of your services in arranging a settlement which has been accepted by both parties to the dispute. They feel that a prolongation of the trouble has been mainly averted by the tact, good judgment and impartiality shown by you, and in making this acknowledgment, believe that they are expressing the sentiments of the longshoremen as well as their own.

Yours truly,
(Sgd.) G. S. CAMPBELL,
Chairman.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) W. L. McKENZIE KING,
Deputy Minister of Labour.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). We have had an exhibition on the other side of the House of a very pleasant little mutual admiration society, and the only thing lacking to make it perfect is the absence of the sweet little girl to present the Minister of Labour with a beautiful bouquet of roses, paid for by himself, as a mark of appreciation for what he has done. The people of Canada, no doubt as well as the members of this House, will feel deeply grateful to the hon. member for Hants (Mr. Russell) for bringing up this important subject, and allowing the Minister of Labour such a favourable opportunity of telling us what we have been reading in the press for several days past. The whole little play reminds me of what we sometimes see in country newspapers where the townspeople are about to present a gentleman with an oil painting of himself, and the recipient of which expresses himself as being completely taken by surprise, yet makes a most appropriate and fitting reply. The Minister of Labour comes down here with a beautifully written document that has been prepared some time ago. Of course he is quite taken by surprise. But for the purpose of unloading that document upon this House and upon the country, he gets his handy man of all work on that side of the House, to ask him a question.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I am going to give something fresh to the House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. FRASER. Curiously enough the Halifax 'Herald' which has just arrived contains something worth reading, and which refers to this matter. It will be noticed now that I am going to quote from the organ of the hon. leader of the opposition.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The hon. gentleman is making a statement which is not correct.

Mr. FRASER. I do not mean that the gentleman (Mr. Borden) controls the 'Herald,' or that it is his special organ, but I do say that it is the organ of the party of which he is the honoured head. This is what the Halifax 'Herald' says, and it will be seen that it is a little more complimentary than the felicitous remarks of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) :

The longshoremen's strike is over to the great relief of all concerned. In bringing this about too high tribute cannot be paid to Mr. W. L. Mackenzie King, Deputy Minister of Labour. He arrived from Ottawa on Thursday evening, and in twenty-five hours had everything arranged. A 'Herald' reporter interviewed Mr. King at the Halifax hotel last evening after the longshoremen's meeting. Mr. King was up to his eyes in business, and was besieged by those who were anxious to offer him congratulations. These included many who were prominent both among the employers of labour and in labour circles.

That is the opinion of that great organ of the Conservative party on Mr. King and on what he did. The Halifax 'Herald' continues :

A Personal Impression of the Deputy Minister of Labour.

Mr. King is a very young man to fill with such success the important position which is his. He may be thirty, but he does not look it. In countenance he is almost boyish, with his smooth-shaven face and quick, alert movements. He is brimful of energy and enthusiasm. But the impression of youthfulness is dissipated after a few moments' conversation, for even the casual observer is impressed with the fact that this is a man of affairs, level-headed and decisive.

That is the impression Mr. King leaves on the leading minds of the party opposite :

Mr. King believes the labour problem is the problem of the age, and is engrossed heart and soul in his work.

I wish hon. gentlemen opposite to listen to this with bated breath :

The impression he leaves is that he is a fine combination of brains, energy and optimism—just the kind of man into whose hands the Lord gives the thing that needs to be done, and done swiftly. To such natures the world's work naturally comes.

I read that as showing two things. First, the appreciation which this organ of the great Conservative party has of the work done by Mr. King, and second, to congratulate the minister upon the settlement of that strike, notwithstanding the little play that the member for Grey sees in this matter. I congratulate the minister that a great strike of that kind was so speedily settled. Twenty-five hours was a very short time in which to arrive at a settlement. We have been amply paid in the province of Nova Scotia for all the expenditure we have incurred in connection with that department. We should all be very thankful. It is my opinion that very often the strikers as well as the employers are at fault in these matters, and so we have to congratulate ourselves that there are methods that can be used to bring capital and labour together, and to enable them to get along in peace and harmony.

Hon. WM. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) While we are all glad that this strike has been settled, we have no guarantee that other strikes may not crop up in different parts of the Dominion. Would it not be well for us to consider the compulsory Arbitration Act passed in New Zealand and which constitutes a conciliation court presided over by a judge of the Supreme Court. The New Zealand Act has been adopted by the commonwealth of Australia, so that both these countries have a law for the compulsory settlement of strikes when they occur.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). I am glad the Minister of Labour was not taken by surprise when this matter was brought up. I am of opinion that this settlement is of such importance that it deserves to have the wide publicity that can be given to it by a short discussion in this House. A very serious disturbance has not only been settled, but a more serious disturbance has been averted. I wish to take this opportunity to bring to the notice of the Minister of Labour, certain amendments to the Conciliation Act which I have on the Order paper, and I trust he will take them into consideration, because they are framed with the hope that they will extend the application of our Conciliation Act. In this case under discussion the prime credit for this settlement is due to the Longshoremen's Union, who telegraphed to Ottawa asking for conciliation. It is oftentimes considered a sign of weakness that either party to the strike should apply for conciliation, and for that reason both parties are often deterred from asking interference. The amendments I have foreshadowed are calculated to get over that defect in the Act. When a serious dispute of this kind can be settled, it points to us the reasonableness of trying to settle other disputes. Some of the most serious disputes we have had last year have not been shortened by one day because of the Conciliation Act. It is to try and increase the scope of that Act, that I would ask the Minister of Labour to help me to have my amendments adopted, especially now that he has evidence that a great deal of good can be done to settle trade disputes by legislation in this parliament.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). It is, I assume, the business of this Labour Department not only to settle disputes, but to try and prevent them. I have heard of late that there is a probability of an extensive strike among the saw-mill employees on the shores of the Georgian bay. These men are obliged to work from half-past six in the morning to six at night with one hour for dinner, making ten and a half hours work instead of ten hours. Before any strike occurs it would be well that the minister should at once commission his deputy to interview the employers with the object of making the working day ten hours at most. As the Deputy Minister of Labour is rather busy at present, perhaps he might commence his operations in the neighbourhood of Ottawa, and prevail on some of the saw-mill owners in this neighbourhood to reduce the hours of work of the men in the mills to those of men employed in other avocations, and then the same rule might be extended to other parts of the province.

Mr. EDWARDS. May I ask the hon. gentleman what hours the saw-mill men work in Ottawa ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Perhaps the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) can tell.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand that they work from half-past six until six. If they work from seven until six, I am glad to know it.

Mr. EDWARDS. Those are the hours—from seven to six.

Mr. BENNETT. In view of that fact, then, it will be very easy for the Deputy Minister of Labour to go to the Georgian Bay and prevail upon the mill owners in that neighbourhood to accept the same hours, and prevent a threatened strike. Again, let me remind the Minister of Labour of this fact, in which I shall be borne out by the Minister of Public Works—that the Department of Customs or the Department of Trade and Commerce, I do not know which, saw fit last season to allow American tugs to come in and, in defiance of the coasting laws, to be employed on the Georgian Bay.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have nothing to do with that.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand that while the Minister of Public Works did us the honour last season to pay a visit to the Georgian Bay, American tugs were pointed out to him being employed, while Canadian tugs at times were tied up at the docks. Perhaps there might be a strike among the marine men because of the employment of these American vessels, and I hope the Minister of Labour will prevail on his colleagues not to permit any American tugs during the coming season to be employed on the Georgian Bay, in contravention of the coasting laws, especially in view of the fact that the United States will not allow Canadian tugs to be employed in their waters. I trust that these matters will engage the attention of the hon. Minister of Labour, and that we may hope to hear at an early day that the deputy minister has appeared on the Georgian Bay and has endeavoured to bring these mill owners to that sense of duty and fair play which will lead them to limit the time at which the men shall work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to say that while I do not in the least desire to take from Mr. King, the Deputy Minister of Labour, any credit to which he is entitled, I would like to point out that the present is not the first occasion on which strikes have been settled, and settled in a very short time, in the city of Halifax. In past years there have been strikes, and they have been settled quite as satisfactorily, I think, as the recent one, and that without the intervention of the Department of Labour—in fact, before the Department of Labour was created. I would further like to say that I consider that that result was very largely due, as no doubt the result in this case has been due to the good sense, good judgment and forbearance or the labour men of Halifax and their employers. I am glad that the Department of Labour has accomplished something in this case. I recognize that Mr. King is a gentleman of industry and also a gentleman of some considerable frankness, because although hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have told us that the exodus in this country to the United States had ceased long ago, the editor of the 'Labour Gazette' has told us from time to time in its columns that it still continues in many sections of the country. I think we ought to recognize Mr. King's frankness in this respect, and acknowledge that he is more accurate in details of that character than some of the hon. gentlemen who speak from the Treasury Benches in this House. I would like to correct a statement of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), who was at first of the absolute opinion that the Halifax 'Herald' was my personal organ.

Mr. FRASER. No, never.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman so stated.

Mr. FRASER. When I said that it was the hon. gentleman's personal organ, I meant his organ politically. I knew that the hon. gentleman had nothing to do with the paper at all, as owning it as personal property.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman is just as far off in his second statement as he was in the first. So far as I am aware, and I think I have some knowledge of the facts, the Liberal-Conservative party has not the slightest control over the editorial or other utterances of the Halifax 'Herald.' It is a paper published by an incorporated company; it has never pretended to be under the control of the Liberal-Conservative party, nor has the Liberal-Conservative party ever exercised or attempted to exercise the slightest control over its utterances.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Railways chargeable to capital, $1,975,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am ready to take up the item which you have read, but I have had a request from one of the hon. gentlemen opposite, in which he said the ex-Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Haggart) joined, that these items might stand until we had the report of the Public Accounts Committee, which they expected would complete its labours during the current week. I have no wish to refuse to accede to the hon. gentleman's request if he desires that that course shall be taken; but otherwise I will go on.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I thought the hon. gentleman was going to make his statement on going into Committee of Supply, for under the rules of the House he could not make it now, because his observations would have to be confined to the particular item before the committee. I made the suggestion to the premier, who told me that the estimates of the Minister of Railways were coming up, that as we need the report of the Public Accounts Committee, and we have a witness still to examine, which I thought would be done this week, it would be more convenient to have the statement made at the beginning of next week. I understood the premier to agree to that, and I suppose the hon. minister is carrying out the suggestion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My right hon. colleague the Prime Minister, mentioned to me that the request had been made, and asked if I had any objection. I had none. At the same time, I think it will be more convenient, if agreeable to the committee, that any general statement I should make—and I desire to make one before going into the details of the estimates—should be made with the Chairman in the Chair. The discussion will then be less formal and more convenient. That procedure was adopted with the consent of the House on a previous occasion. We will then let the railway items stand until a later day, but I would like to have it understood now whether the hon. gentleman will agree to my suggestion.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I have no objection to our adopting this procedure with the unanimous consent of the House. With the Chairman in the Chair, we can have the fullest latitude in discussing every item in reference to the Intercolonial Railway and not be limited to the rules of the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, under the circumstances the railway items will stand, it being understood the general discussion is limited to the opening discussion.

Item allowed to stand.

Experimental farms, $80,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is the usual vote, but I may say that the vote the last year or two has not been found quite sufficient to meet the increasing demands of this work, and in the supplementary estimates for next year I shall have to ask for a slight addition. The work is being continued on the same lines as hitherto, but is gradually increasing and expanding. Last year the vote taken did not quite cover the expenditure, and we found at the end of the year a number of accounts left over which had to be paid out of the vote for this year. The increased expenditure is due to the extension of the work, the greater calls upon the staff, and to some extent to increases in salaries and wages. The expense of living has increased in the country lately, and it has been found necessary also to give some recognition of the efficiency of men during a long period of service by an addition in some instances to their salaries and by increasing in general the pay of a good many of the staff.

Mr. SPROULE. How is the expenditure divided among the different farms ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is not divided in the vote, but is all lumped together. The Auditor General's Report shows the expenditures on these farms :

The Ottawa Experimental Farm	..	..	$48,400
Nappan	"	"	.. 9,700
Brandon	"	"	.. 8,100
Indian Head	"	"	.. 7,200
Agassiz	"	"	.. 6,400

Mr. SPROULE. Where is the increase ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The increase is not shown in this vote, but I will have to ask for an additional amount in the supplementary estimates, so that at the 1st of July next there will be a clean sweep. The same thing had to be done on one or two occasions by my predecessors, so that although the vote for the farms during the past ten years, in the main estimates, has been the same, there has been in every year, as a rule, some increase in the expenditure, which is shown in the Auditor General's Report. I find that it will be necessary to ask for a supplementary vote for this year, and, in view of the circumstances of the last ten years, I think it will be necessary to ask for the supplementary vote for the ensuing year also. Just what the extent of that vote will be, I cannot say at present.

Mr. SPROULE. I take it that the $80,000 voted last year included both main and supplementary estimates.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Last year a large number of accounts were left over and have been paid out of this year's vote. That will make necessary the supplementary vote for the current year. With this supplementary vote I shall be able to pay the bills and start with a clean slate. But, as I say, the experience of the last ten years lead me to believe that the $80,000 now asked for will not carry on the work of the experimental farms in a thoroughly efficient way and that a supplementary vote will be needed.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is the hon. minister taking steps to establish farms in the northern part of the country, in Alberta and Saskatchewan ? There are vast areas there that, in the opinion of those who claim to be able to judge, are better adapted for farming than the more southern regions, where the present farms are located. In a very few years, probably, settlers will be filling up that country, and it would be a great service to the people if experiments were carried out in advance, so that they might know what to sow, when to sow and otherwise be advised as to the best means of taking advantage of the conditions in that country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have been frequently asked for additional branch farms in various parts of the country. The portion referred to has made a request through the representative in this House from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis).

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). And how about Alberta ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not sure, I think that a request came from there within the last year or two. The establishing of more branch farms is not within my power, the number being limited by the Experimental Farms Act. I fear that if I were to get parliament to amend that Act, we should be obliged to go to considerable lengths, and establish as many as eight or ten new branch farms. These could hardly cost less than $5,000 a year each, and might easily cost $10,000 each a year. I confess that, while I realize the good that could be done by these farms, I think that greater good could be done to the agricultural interests of Canada by spending that money in some other way.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What is the object of an experimental farm if it is not to instruct the people in the development in important sections of the country. The farm at Brandon, for instance, covers Manitoba and a couple of hundred miles west; the farm at Indian Head covers the southern region of which it is the centre. But the experiments carried on there cannot be used by farmers in the northern sections as a guide in their operations, and they have a good deal of trouble, and lose, it may be, several crops, before they find out just what the conditions require. In the northern part of Saskatchewan and Alberta there are vast areas of land that are not surveyed, much less settled, that in a few years will be the home of millions of people. I would urge upon the minister the necessity of establishing at least two farms in this northern country.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. minister increased the number of the staff in these experimental farms ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no increase at the Central Experimental Farm, but there have been increases at Brandon and Indian Head. At each of those farms there has been appointed a secretarial assistant to aid the manager in his work. The managers, Mr. Bedford at Brandon and Mr. McKay at Indian Head, are being constantly called upon to make trips through the country and address farmers' meetings, yet their office work was so great that they could not compass all that was required of them. It was thought better to employ a young man at a comparatively low rate to relieve these more important officers and leave them free to do wider and more useful work.

Mr. ROSAMOND. No doubt the minister is spending this money in a useful way. At one time, hon. gentlemen opposite were opposed to these extra expenses and thought that the experimental farms should be self-sustaining. I would like to have the opinion of the minister as to whether this money is a valuable asset to the farmers of Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am glad to tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rosamond) that, if he will go back to the time when these experimental farms were established he will find me on record as concurring fully in the establishment of these farms and saying that I thought a great work might be done for the farmers by this means. As a matter of fact, I was a member of the committee on agricultural industries on whose report these farms were established. I have always believed in them heartily and completely. The work which has been done by the experimental farm has been of the greatest value to the development and progress of agriculture in Canada. I am happy to say that this has been accomplished, first, by the organization and the idea, and secondly, by the happy choice of the officers, and especially of the director who has charge of these farms, and has carried them on in a way most acceptable to the farmers.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I have no doubt that the officers in charge of the experimental farms are very valuable, and have rendered great service to the farming community. Can the minister say off-hand what amount is yearly expended by his department for the benefit of the farming community ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the estimates will show that. I suppose the hon. member means expenditures made directly for that purpose, because all the work of the department is meant to be in the interest of the farmers. I may mention, however, the following items: The experimental farms, $80,000 ; printing and distribution of the reports and bulletins of those farms, $4,000 ; the fumigating stations which, in a different way, have helped very much to protect the fruit-growing and forestry interests, $3,000 ; the commissioner's branch for agriculture, $210,000 is asked for next year; and the vote for Professor Robertson's branch, $40,000. I suppose I might also consider the cattle quarantine vote as directly in the interest of agriculture, although it has also much to do with the public health.

Mr. ROSAMOND. The other evening the minister made a statement with reference to the cheese industry which, I was sorry to hear. He stated that it had not been as successful this year as in previous years. I notice also that he proposed to spend a sum of money for the purpose of improving that industry, and I am personally in favour of such an effort being made. But I would like to call the attention of the government to the fact that if this industry is not prospering under the conditions which have heretofore prevailed, then I presume one member of the government may be expected to say that the farmers ought to get out of that industry, and turn their hands to something else. I do not think myself that would be advisable, but I am pointing out to the minister that such a conclusion may very properly be drawn from recent ministerial statements. For my part, I think it is quite a proper expenditure, and I am glad to see this industry encouraged; but I think the government ought to have the same regard to other industries, which are quite as well worthy of encouragement as the cheese industry.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that anything in the way of investigation into the methods of any industry would be valuable to that industry, in the same way as the work we propose to do with regard to cheese curing would be valuable to that branch, and would be worthy of consideration. We have, I think, shown evidence of our regard for other industries, but perhaps it would be hardly proper to discuss them under this item.

Mr. BLAIN. Were any experiments made on the farm last year with respect to the curing of cheese?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We do not make any cheese on the Experimental Farm, the dairy there makes butter altogether. The experiments that were made in connection with cheese curing were made in outside factories under the direction of Professor Robertson's branch.

Mr. ERB. On this item I would ask the minister, who is it that directs the officials of the Experimental Farm in making the experiments that are carried on during the year? I find in the last report of the Experimental Farm, page 272, an account of a feeding experiment. Two lots of cows were fed; one lot on barley, oats and oilmeal dry; another lot on bran, and gluten meal wet. The tables are given here, and show the quantity of milk given by each cow, both morning and evening, and the butter fat contained in the milk. Now to my mind this table shows nothing whatever, it proves nothing, although the statement is made that the result of this experiment seems to show a slight difference in favour of the dry feed. But in the one case the feed was given dry, and in the other case a different class of food was given wet. Now, we do not know whether the difference in results was owing to the moisture in the one case and to the dry character of the food in the other case, or to the different kinds of food. If the same kind of food had been used, in the one case dry and in the other case wet, then the results might be of some comparative value. As it is, they prove nothing, and I think the officers of the farm might have devoted their time and energy to something of more value to the farming community.

Mr. ROSAMOND.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The experiments carried on in regard to the feeding of animals are done under the special management of the agriculturist, Mr. Grisdale, but under the supervision of the director. The comparison perhaps would have been more complete if the same food had been used dry in the one case and wet in the other. The composition of those two foods, gluten and oil, is very similar.

Mr. ERB. It is not shown whether the difference is due to the moisture in the one case as against the other, or to the difference in the composition of the feeds.

Mr. SPROULE. What stock is kept at the Central Farm now, and what experiments are being carried on at the present time?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The annual report gives a statement of pure bred animals kept at the experimental farm as follows:

Shorthorns.

1 bull calf, Lord Dinsdale (imp.) 6 months old.
3 cows (imp.), 3, 5, and 8 years old.
2 cows, 10 and 12 years old.
2 heifers (imp.), 1 year old.
1 calf (imp.), 1 year old.

Ayrshires.

1 bull, Twin Beauty (imp.), 2½ years old.
4 cows (imp.), 3 to 6 years old.
3 heifers (imp.), 2½ years old.
1 heifer, 1½ years old.

Guernseys.

1 bull, Wedgewood, 7 years old.
1 bull calf (imp. in dam), 5 months old.
4 cows (3 imp.), 3 to 6 years old.
1 cow, Canadian bred, 3 years old.
1 heifer, 18 months old.
1 heifer calf, 5 months old.

These are the pure breds. There are also certain grades. I have not a list that I can turn to immediately of the grade animals but in the herds there were these pure bred animals and a few grade cows. There are 9 milking cows, Ayrshire and Ayrshire grades, 9 milking cows, Shorthorn and Shorthorn grades, and 9 milking cows, Guernsey and Guernsey grades. I think that one Guernsey grade cow is really a French Canadian grade and not of Guernsey blood. In addition we have breeding bulls and some young bulls which have been bred on the farm and which are offered for sale at the present time. We have also a number of animals which we buy for the purpose of feeding during the winter on the farm and sell when they are ready for the market.

Mr. GILMOUR. How many of that kind?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There were about 120 head of cattle last winter on the farm.

Mr. GILMOUR. Of that kind?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Of all kinds.

Mr. GILMOUR. How many were for feeding?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nearly 70. When I say that I mean the number of cattle ready to be sold this year. There are also some young animals which we feed from their birth upwards but which are not ready for the butcher yet. I think there will be between 60 and 70 which have either gone to the butcher or will in the near future.

Mr. GILMOUR. What is intended to be demonstrated by the feeding of 70 head of cattle every year ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We try to feed them on different combinations of food to see which would make the greatest profits, but for the last year or two, we have been rather trying experiments of feeding dehorned or not dehorned steers, and feeding steers running loose as compared with those tied up and also feeding two year olds, three year olds and four year olds. We take some two year olds, some three year olds and some four year olds and feed them on the same rations so as to see which make the best gain at the lowest cost. We have the barns so constructed that we have rows of stalls holding 9 animals to the row, in which we have two year olds, three year olds and four year olds. Then we have two lots one tied and one running loose in boxes and we are comparing the results of this experiment. This has been going on for two years.

Mr. McGOWAN. What is the effect of feeding loose as compared with tied up cattle ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have not been able to come to any conclusion which would enable us to say that there is an advantage one way or the other. When we began it there were a number of statements made in the agricultural press that if animals were dehorned and allowed to run loose in the boxes they would do better. We have carried on these experiments, not only on the experimental farm here, but also at Nappan, Brandon and Indian Head and the results have been somewhat conflicting. There has been nothing to indicate a clear line of advantage in one case or the other.

Mr. McGOWAN. May I ask the hon. minister what he does with the surplus stock of pure bred cattle ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We sell it.

Mr. McGOWAN. By private sale or auction ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When we can, we sell it by private sale, and we have sent some animals to the auction sales which have taken place in the province of Ontario recently.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Have you some for sale now ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, there are several animals for sale. There the several bulls for sale of the three breeds.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). What is the age of these animals ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are quite young calves. I do not think there are any over a year.

Mr. KAULBACH. From the experience at the Experimental Farm, would the hon. minister inform me which is the best description of cattle for stock raising, whether the shorthorn Ayrshire, or Holstein ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think I would like to say that there have been any definite results so far. The dairy herds have only been established very recently on a comparative basis. We have to-day 9 representatives each of the Shorthorns and Shorthorn grades, of the Ayrshires and Ayrshires grades and of the Guernseys and Guernsey grades, and we are compiling the results of their production. I am not prepared to give an opinion as to their special qualities and as a matter of fact, we know that men engaged in stock breeding have very strong predelictions for their own particular favourite breeds and it would be a very difficult task to satisfy them that a particular breed was not the best. All we can do is to show what the herds on the farm do and make a record of it. We publish the records in the reports and the people will have to judge, what, under their particular conditions and circumstances would suit them best.

Mr. KAULBACH. My reason for referring to the Holstein breed in the manner I have done is this : some years ago, the Holstein was looked upon very favourably, and a very large number of that breed were imported into my county. Experience has shown, however, that they are not serviceable for beef. They produce a poor descripton of meat, whereas the Shorthorn is far preferable in that respect. I want to know if that has been the experience of those who have given their attention to the matter at the Experimental Farm.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think I may say that the Shorthorn is a better beef animal than the Holstein. The Holstein is generally looked upon as one of the dairy breeds and I think it is pretty generally accepted amongst farmers to be a fact that the dairy breeds and those which are particularly satisfactory for dairy purposes are not very good for beef purposes. There seems to be a pretty well drawn line between those two purposes in breeding cattle. There is no doubt that the Shorthorn is eminently a beef producing breed. The Holstein is classed among the dairy breeds, and I do not think any one would expect that the Holstein would be suitable for beef purposes.

Mr. KAULBACH. The experience in my county has been that the Holsteins are unserviceable. I would prefer using the word unprofitable, for either beef or milk. The Jersey and the Guernsey are, as a rule, better for milk, but for general purposes we find that the shorthorn Durham is to be preferred. As a profitable investment I would certainly recommend to dairy people—although perhaps it is presumption on my part—that the Shorthorn Durhams should be preferred above all others, if you can get the good milker, at least that is my experience.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In England the great mass of dairy cattle are Shorthorn or Shorthorn grades, although in this country the Shorthorns have not been considered as dairy cattle. There are some Shorthorns which are very great milkers, and I have no doubt that it would be advantageous to the people of this country if we got on the experimental farm a herd of Shorthorns which would fairly be representative of beef animals and still good milkers. Whether we can get a general purpose animal suitable to every one is for the future to tell.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). The people in my country place their faith in Shorthorns, The gentleman who took the sweepstakes and two silver cups at Guelph, Mr. James Leask, who lives at Greenbank, thinks there is no animal like the Shorthorn. At the Guelph sale of thoroughbred stock this spring the Shorthorn females swept everything, they sold the highest of any animals that were offered for sale there. Our people believe that for general uses the Shorthorn is the best.

Mr. SPROULE. What have been the results of the feeding experiments at the farm?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have two herds, one of which is confined in a small space comparatively, and the other is allowed more freedom of exercise, both being fed the same. That is the experiment in the line of feeding. We have also the three milking herds, the records of which are being kept. We have some experiments with regard to the feeding of horses with the idea of discovering whether a mixture of grain feed for horses working on the farm might not be more economical than the almost wholly oats feed which Canadian horses usually get. We have a representative flock of Leicester sheep, and a representative flock of Shropshire, and we keep an account of what they eat and of what they yield. We have also a number of pigs with which we experiment from time to time. We carried on very extensive experiments with them in our investigation as to soft pork and the results of which appeared in the bulletin which was issued by Professor Shutt and Mr. Grisdale.

Mr. SPROULE. What has been the result of the experiments in feeding cattle ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The results have not been conclusive. The impression was that it was more profitable to feed animals running loose. But in some cases we found that the loose animals did better and in other cases it was the reverse.

Mr. ERB. Is the minister in a position to tell us how many acres of the 200 which are set aside for ordinary farm purposes were last year devoted to pasture ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The 200 acres are divided into 5 fields of about 40 acres each. We have always had too much pasture in the rotation for the year of pasture, and we have had to mow the fields ; the cattle not keeping it down. Last year part of it was mowed and part pasture the whole season, and the part mowed in the early part of the season was pastured afterwards. Roughly speaking, there are 40 acres in pasture each year, but that 40 acres each year has been partially mowed. I do not think I can give an absolute statement off-hand of the exact amount of pasture for the whole season.

Mr. ERB. In adding up the number of acres mentioned for the different crops, I can only find 160 acres accounted for, and of that, 16 acres are said to be in pasture. I cannot gather from the report what the other 40 acres were devoted to.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. As a matter of fact, there are not quite 200 acres. We intended to have 200 acres, but in actual measurement there are only about 196. As I have explained, the hay and pasture overlapped, because a portion of the land which was left in pasture is also used for hay, there not being enough stock to keep it down. We had to take the stock away for a few days to cut the hay, and then turn them back. I could not give a full explanation of all the details without studying them more than I am able to do at the moment.

Mr. ERB. I have looked over the figures carefully, and I find that there were 35 acres in oats, 5 in barley, 5 in pease, 16 in mixed grain, 16 in pasture, part of which was mowed, 37 in hay, 4 in clover for ensilage, 30 in corn, 6 in mangels, 2 in turnips, 2 in carrots, 1 in sugar beets, 2 in rape, and half an acre in pumpkins. This makes 160 acres.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the hon. gentleman has left out one field. The idea is to have a rotation of the five fields—one year in pasture, one in hay, one in hoed crop, and two in grain. In the management of this farm we have adopted what might be fairly called the ordinary practice of good farming. We have a definite rotation, and the instructions are that the feed raised on the land shall be fed to the animals on the farm, and the manure put back on the land. We hope in that way to show what can be done in the growing of crops, and the maintenance of farm fertility. We have hardly got far enough yet to show the result. The work has been going on for three years, and it is a five-year rotation. I think I may say, however, that in consequence of this rotation, and perhaps a certain treatment of the soil, the crops on the farm have been materially better during the last year than they have ever been before. Last summer when I was in England, I visited a good many of the leading farms of the country, and had an opportunity of seeing some of the best land in the best state of cultivation. I was much struck with what I saw ; but when I came back to Ottawa, I went to the Experimental Farm within a few days of my return, and drove all over it, and examined the crops ; and I am well within the mark in saying that at no place in England did I see crops which could at all compare with the crops on the Experimental Farm here last season.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he can state offhand the prices charged in feeding experiments, say for hay, oats, pease, ensilage and straw.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They are all given in the report. The hay, straw and ensilage are all charged exactly the same in every case, so as to make a fair comparison. For the grain, the market prices as nearly as possible are charged, but always the same in all comparative experiments. On page 278 of the report, the prices given are as follows : Roots, $2 per ton ; ensilage, $2 ; clover hay, $6 ; straw, $3 ; corn, which I think means the whole corn, unground, $18 ; oats, pease or barley, $19 ; bran, $15 ; shorts, $16 ; oil meal, which means the oil cake meal, $32 ; gluten meal, $16 ; skim milk, 15 cents per hundred weight, $3 per ton ; calf meal, Blatchford's, $90.

Mr. CLANCY. I notice in a return which was brought down in answer to a motion made by my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson), that a statement is given in regard to the farm of 200 acres which is being farmed apart. The fields appear to be given in each case, with the prices charged for the work done by way of ploughing, cultivating, harrowing, and so on, nothing of course being charged for rent ; and there seem to have been some very extraordinary crops. I see that straw is credited not at $3 a ton, but at $4. The hon. gentleman will find at page 5 of this return, and again at page 6, that a profit of $12.30 an acre is shown. The profit on the first field was only $3.25 an acre ; that was a field of 30 acres under pasture. On page 6, a field of 30 acres in corn shows a profit of $12.30 an acre. On page 7 there is an eight-acre field in corn and roots, which shows a profit of $15.46 an acre. On page 9 it is stated that a field of 37 acres in hay gave a profit of $16.10 an acre and, including the second crop of clover, yielded a profit of $18.40 per acre. Those figures are rather startling to those of us who have never been able to realize any such profit. It is reported here that these 37 acres yielded 120 tons of hay or something over three and a quarter tons per acre. I am not going to say that that is not possible, but I feel bound to say that it is entirely misleading to give out to the country that you have 37 acres which have produced so much hay.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can only say that every load of that hay was weighed on the scales at the farm, and the figures are absolutely correct.

Mr. CLANCY. I venture to say that it was not weighed in the matured condition in which it would be found in a farmer's barn, but when the hay was somewhat wet. Of course, I have no personal knowledge, and perhaps have no right to venture an opinion as to the condition of the hay when put in, but no man could take thirty-seven acres under ordinary conditions and get a crop from it averaging three and a quarter tons per acre. It appears somewhat strange to find that the crop measured exactly 120 tons. Then, taking the second crop, we find that there were twenty-one tons from twenty acres. I can quite understand that that might be the case, although a ton to the acre of a second crop of clover is a pretty fair crop. I am now coming to the prices credited. The report says that in addition to the above, 22 milch cows were pastured on the remaining 17 acres during two months, and the value is estimated at $2 per cow per month. There would not be much profit in the milk business if you had to pay $2 a month for the pasture of the cows. Nobody would think of paying that if we were compelled to rent the land. One dollar is about the usual price. I simply point this out because I think our reports ought to be reasonable, and 95 per cent of our farmers would say that this shows a very extraordinary state of things, not to be found in any other 200 acre farm in the country. I want to point out also that the horses and machinery are charged at $2.50 per day. Take the case of the hay crop. You must invest in a mower, a hay rake, a tedder, you must have a wagon, horses and harness, in fact, the whole outfit, and yet the hon. gentleman has charged up for all that $2.50 per day. Every farmer must know that that is below what it would cost, including the feed and the keeping up and maintaining of that machinery, paying a fair rate of interest on the purchase money, feeding the horses and caring for them. Everybody knows that that is not a reasonable price. That includes wear and tear and interest on the whole outfit. It seems to me that such highly coloured statements are not useful in the country.

Mr. KAULBACH. I think I can relieve the mind of my hon. friend. Without any desire to be egotistical or boastful, let me tell him, when he speaks of three tons of hay per acre, on 37 acres, as something extraordinary, in my opinion it is a small average on a well cultivated field.

Mr. CLANCY. Where ?

Mr. KAULBACH. In my own province. On a farm which I own, I average something like four tons to the acre, and I know of other fields that will give something like four and a half.

Mr. CLANCY. Timothy or clover ?

Mr. KAULBACH. Both mixed. We find it more profitable to raise hay for stock instead of raising other crops. While we are on this subject, it may not be out of place for me to say something with regard to our system of farming in the county I represent. We have been using oxen for a long period and some use horses. But we find that the oxen are far more profitable, and for this reason : When you use a horse, you require a harness that will cost not less than $35 or $40, and which will not last a year in daily use without considerable repairing. But with oxen yoked at the head, two straps, at the cost of a dollar, which will last for years in daily use, is all that is required, to have the oxen do excellent work. Neck yoke is a thing of the past. We have made tests at exhibitions, and we find that an ox will haul 50 per cent more than a horse on a fair draft. I find it profitable to use oxen on a farm, and frequently have from four to seven yoke of oxen in daily use. We use them moderately and always keep them in perfect condition, so that if a butcher wants an ox, he goes to the man in charge and purchases at a fair rate. We find them profitable, but of course if you work your cattle from day to day and feed them scantily or perhaps overwork them, they will not be fit for butchers use. As a rule, an ox for work on the farm is far better than a horse, more steady, and will do the same amount of work and as I stated with less cost. We also find that oxen when yoked by the heads, will step as quickly as a pair of horses, particularly when they are managed by a skilful driver.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the hon. gentleman drive them occasionally ?

Mr. KAULBACH. I do not, but I have seen them driven, and I have been told by others that oxen are preferable to horses—they do the same work with a larger return. If anything happens to an ox, you can stall-feed him and kill him. If his foot injured it can be readily cured.

An hon. MEMBER. Or if he gets sick.

Mr. KAULBACH. I am not speaking of cases of sickness, but of an injury. But if a horse is injured, you must set him aside or shoot him, which is a dead loss. I make the suggestion that others should adopt the same system that we adopt. We call it the German method, and the yoke, we call the German yoke.

An hon. MEMBER. What breed are the oxen ?

Mr. KAULBACH. Shorthorns.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The figures given in the return and those given in the report of the Experimental Farm from year to year are absolutely accurate. The weights are given in detail. As to the hay, it was in good cured condition. As a matter of fact, it was fed to the animals all winter and what was left came out in good condition. It could not have been green or wet when it was weighed. I grant the crop was a large one judged by the average crop of the country. But I am glad to say, the crops at the experimental farms, as a rule, are larger than the ordinary crops of the country, whatever the reason may be. I can assure my hon. friend that the crop that he referred to was the actual return of the land. Yields of grain and hay last year at the Central Experimental Farm were really phenomenal, and I do not expect that they can be repeated. I said a few minutes ago—perhaps my hon. friend did not hear me—that returning from England in June, the crops I found at the Experimental Farm, were out of sight, better than anything I had seen anywhere in England.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose the hay was weighed in the barn ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Weighed in the wagon as it was driven into the barn.

Mr. KAULBACH. As we have an Experimental Farm, and are supposed to experiment in everything that is likely to benefit the farmers, would it not be well that some member of the staff when visiting Nova Scotia, should come to my county and see how oxen are used for draught ? If one of these gentlemen would come to me, I could take him to my farm and there he would see oxen in the hands of an expert driver, yoked by the head—not by the neck, and doing excellent work. The driver carries his whip, not as an instrument of cruelty, but to have the cattle to understand that it is there for a purpose, and, if their memory is very short and they are not sharp and up to time, he does not fail to remind them of it by the use of this implement. Each ox has its own name, and the driver can stand on the team and talk to them, and twist them about in any way he pleases, and have them move as quickly as horses. They do the same work that horses do, with a better return. If the minister will send a member of the staff to pay us a visit, I shall be happy to show him around and give him all the information he desires. And I would certainly recommend him to try the experiment of using oxen for work, yoked by the head, on the Experimental Farm.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I should be glad to.

An hon. MEMBER. You are fifty years behind the times.

Mr. KAULBACH. I hear an hon. member say: 'You are fifty years behind the times.' In this respect, I say certainly you are as you have been accustomed to the neck yoke, and know nothing of the excellent labour that can be performed by oxen yoked by the head.

Mr. CLANCY. I am afraid the Minister of Agriculture is somewhat remiss in his duties in not visiting the province of Nova Scotia. If he went there he would see how oxen could be used instead of horses, doing more work, doing it quite as quickly and more cheaply. He would see that the expense of horses and harness, and, to a great extent of modern farm implements is a waste of money. And, if I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) aright, the minister will find that the expense of feeding and housing as carried on in the Experimental Farm might be largely done away with.

Mr. KAULBACH. I did not refer to feeding.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman touched on a subject that involved feeding. He gave the House the useful information that, if you want a fat animal, all you had to do was to unhitch him in the field and he was all ready.

Mr. KAULBACH. They are always in condition.

Mr. CLANCY. I hope my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture will not neglect to go to Nova Scotia and that he will go with an open mind upon these questions. I want to ask the minister, in view of the prices given in this statement, are books of account kept at the Experimental Farm showing the prices of these crops and the cost of these experiments in feeding ? Take this two hundred acres of land—is an account kept of every dollar's worth on that land, and accounted for again in the course of the experiments in feeding and otherwise ? If that is done, and the figures show that the stock are sold at a profit that would be very useful information to the country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is an accurate account kept of every hour's work of every man on the farm; of the use of machinery and the teams, and of the results of their work. And these items are charged against the crop or against the work which they are doing. In the same way there is an accurate account kept of the yield of every field, and it is credited to that field. If manure is put on, the manure is charged against the field. The accounts are absolutely accurate and every statement given out is made up from the books.

Mr. CLANCY. I do not think the minister has quite got at what I want to know. In this return charges are made for the actual day's work. But there are times when work is not done, as on every farm. Yet teams must be maintained, implements are lying idle and earning nothing. There is the original cost and the expense of maintenance besides. I wish to know whether a strict account is kept of every dollar's worth produced on the 200 acres, that is, hay, oats, roots, ensilage, in fact everything that is produced on the 200 acres of land—if there is an accurate account kept of that, and then as to the value of the stock after it has been fed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is an account kept of every crop, showing its cost. That crop is then brought into the barn and used for one purpose or another. When it is used to feed animals they are charged with it ; if it is used, as a good deal of our grain crops are used, for distribution throughout the country, the seed grain distribution is charged with it. Sometimes some of the orchard crops and small fruit crops are sold and the money goes to the Receiver General, but it is credited in the farm books, although the farm vote is not helped by it. There is a certain amount of grain, roots and ensilage raised on that 200 acres, that is all accounted for, it is taken into the barn and used in the course of the year, and every bit of it is accounted for. We have to-day a large number of steers being fed for sale to butchers, and everything they eat is charged against them. The original cost when they are bought is charged against them, and the profit is shown at the end of the operation. In every case of the feeding of steers at the experimental farm a considerable profit has been made between the purchase of the animals and their sale, charging not only the food they have eaten but their original cost. Then again this spring it is likely we will have a considerable amount of ensilage left over ; the farm has been so productive that we have not got barn room enough to-day to hold a sufficient number of animals during the winter to eat up the crop of last year. We propose this summer to buy a number of steers and put them into a lot and feed them that ensilage left over, to see whether, in the summer time, we can feed ensilage to advantage in comparison to feeding the animals in a pasture. In many sections of the country where there is a great deal of drought in summer, the pastures get short, and people have been recommended to grow ensilage and take it out of the silo in the summer season and feed it to the animals. We have a lot of ensilage left over this spring, and we are going to make experiments on that line this summer. In that way I trust the whole of last year's crop will be used up. That ensilage will be charged against the steers, they will be put in a small pasture and fed largely on ensilage, and the results of feeding them in that way will be shown in the price for which the steers are sold.

Mr. LENNOX. Did I understand the minister to say that he is now experimenting to find whether it is profitable to feed cattle on ensilage during the summer months ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said we proposed to try an experiment of that kind the coming summer.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the minister think that feeding ensilage in summer is in an experimental stage at present ? I think that is well understood among farmers at the present time, and is constantly practiced by many.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think it is much practiced in Canada. There are some people who have practiced it, but in no case to my knowledge where an accurate account is kept of all the details and results.

Mr. LENNOX. I have heard farmers speak of it, and I think it is well known among farmers. Where grass is scarce during the summer months they have been in the habit, for years past, of feeding cattle on ensilage.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman says that during the past year most exceptional crops were grown upon the experimental farm; that he has undertaken to account for every particle of stuff grown there in one way or another ; that the feeding experiments have been profitable upon the whole. Now a farmer listening to that would conclude that the experimental farm made a considerable amount of money. In view of the hon. gentleman's statements I want to ask him what the profits were upon the experimental farm during the year. He will agree with me that the average quantity of new machinery should be charged up as against that year, because the life of machinery is not long, and it soon wears out. The hon. gentleman will take the stuff charged up to these fields, and the cost of raising it, with the cost of machinery bought during the year, the horses bought, in fact everything that was paid out for equipment and maintenance. Now what has been the profits as between the two sides of the account for the past year ? It has been an extraordinary year, as the hon. gentleman states, and the farm should show a good margin of profit.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Books have been kept showing the profits of each field in connection with each crop, and we would have to add the various fields to see what the profits on the whole land are. The work of the farm is such that it is necessarily mixed up with the work on the experimental part, and it would be impossible to lay aside certain implements and use them only for that one part. We therefore have to overcome that difficulty by charging to each field its share of the general wear and tear of the implements on the whole establishment. I think any business man would say that is the usual way of doing it in their business establishments. I grant if we were running a farm under ordinary circumstances, and not with a view to experiment, that could be accomplished by just taking the net profits at the end of the year, taking everything into consideration. But, in such an establishment as this it seems to me that the only way we can do is to say that there are 200 acres divided into so many fields of 37 acres, or 40 acres, 38 acres, or whatever it may be, that on that land so much crop was raised, that that crop cost so much, and in that case the land must be credited with it. When we come to work in the barn we have to feed that crop to the animals and we have to charge the value of the feed which is given to each of the individual animals. The aggregate of that is the result of using the whole of that crop. Then the product of the animal, either in milk or beef, or in other things, is credited to the feed and a balance again is struck to see whether there has been a profit or a loss. In the working of the experimental farm I understand that the work of the teams is charged at so much. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) will notice, I think it is charged at $2.50 a day.

Mr. CLANCY. That is too low. The hon. gentleman knows very well from his own experience——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would like to finish what I am saying. In that is included the cost of the maintenance of these teams. Part of the feed which has been got off that land has to be fed to these teams, and they are credited with the work they do. We value a day's work at $2.50 and there are the man's wages besides. That is credited to a certain part of the whole crop which is raised on the farm. A certain portion of the feed is fed to the bulls which give no return beyond a little service fee, to the pigs, the sheep, and so on. It is not all fed to the animals which are under experiment. Part of it is fed to the animals which are not under experiment, but which we keep as an illustration of the different breeds of animals for the benefit of visitors to the farm.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman will see that this report is entirely misleading in view of the statement which he has made himself. In the first place the fields are charged with the use of the horses and machinery by day's work. The hon. gentleman knows that this is not a fair propo-tion. They must be charged, in a fair proportion, to all the fields during the year, because these are not hired teams that are brought in for a day's work. These horses are kept, some of them die, they grow old, the machinery wears out, and yet the hon. gentleman charges just for the day in which he employs them. No farmer would say that that would be a fair charge. The returns, so far as this is concerned, I venture to think, are entirely misleading. I am sure they do not appeal to any farmer in the House as being anything within near range of being accurate. I want to ask the hon. gentleman to follow this up. Taking the first field here, would he be able to show what has become of these 30 tons of straw charged up to four teams. Would he be able to say where it has gone, what account it is charged to, and if it is to be consumed, how much of it has been consumed, and how much of it is on hand? Then, take again the next field, where 510 tons of ensilage is produced and see where that ensilage has been accounted for. I will take the next field, where there are 160 tons of ensilage. Where has that been accounted for? If we do not attempt to account for feed of that kind under the same service, then I venture to say that this calculation is entirely without value. If such an account has been kept and worked out, then, I could understand the utility of it. But, the hon. Minister of Agriculture knows much better than I can tell him, that the charges that are made here are not such charges as would be made in actual farming. While the hon. gentleman says that it runs into the experimental portion as well as into the profitable portion, I admit that there would be some difficulty, but not an insuperable difficulty, in keeping them apart. I could connect the experimental portion with the feeding of stock. If the hon. gentleman's statements are to be accepted the experiments in the feeding of stock are profitable. These are just the expenditures incurred in the growing of grain on the 200 acres, or of crops generally and which, as well as the feeding of the stock, include labour and everything else involving a larger amount of charge against the farm. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman ought to undertake to give to this committee, at some future period, a statement of how the farm stands, and he should also recognize that the expense should be charged to the experimental portion of the work. I will venture to say that if the hon. gentleman reverses this method of keeping the accounts on the books, he will find the experiments making a profit and the farm going behind, because, if he charges the experiments with the day's work of the men, horses and machinery, he wil simply reverse the state of things. I desire to point that out to show that these accounts, on the face of them, are misleading.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that a charge of $2.50 a day for a team was too high.

Mr. CLANCY. No, too low.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Well, I was going to say to the hon. gentleman that while it may be too low, if you went out in the open market to hire teams, as a matter of fact that amount covers the cost of the team to the experimental farm, and so much more does it cover the cost that it makes up for the days when the teams are idle during the year. The actual charge which is made against the crop for team work if it were to be added up, would be considerably more than the cost to the farm of keeping all these teams there.

Mr. CLANCY. And the machinery?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is a charge for the machinery besides.

Mr. LENNOX. Do you know that to be the case by actual experiment?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We know that $2.50 a day is more than the actual cost of a team.

Mr. LENNOX. Can you show that?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, we know practically that it is so, and it is made higher for the express purpose of covering the time when the teams are standing in the barn. But, at the experimental farm, as a general rule, the teams are standing very little in the barn. Of course, in the summer time during wet days they must be in the barn, but during the winter time, when they would be standing in the barn on an ordinary farm, they are hauling manure for the experimental part of the farm and the horticultural work and that work has nothing to do with this 200-acre part of the farm. The men are utilized during bad weather from year's end to year's end in preparing grain for seed distribution, in preparing grain for exhibition work, and things of that kind, perhaps a little outside of the routine work of the farm, but still work that has to be done, and which is paid for out of the grain distribution apportionment of the farm and by the vote for exhibition purposes. If I secure agricultural specimens at the experimental farm, for sending to the exhibitions, every hours work of the men upon that, is paid out of the exhibition vote. That work is done at odd times when the men would possibly be idle otherwise. We have an immense amount of cleaning of grain for the seed distribution, which is done during the winter months. We have the threshing of all the experimental plots. That grain has to be kept carefully separate so that we may be able to find out the result. That takes hours, days, weeks, and even months, for some men during the winter. All the men can be turned on to that work when there is bad weather and when they cannot work outdoors. There is no loss of time of the men on the farm and very little loss of time of the teams. Although this 200 acres is more than half the land cultivated on the farm, it is cultivated much more easily than the experimental plot work which takes a great deal more time, labour and expense, and the crop of which is not expected to pay; the returns from it being its utility to the farmers of the country. I cannot give the statement which the hon. gentleman desires for last years work, but I will try to have it incorporated in the next annual report so that the gross sales and the actual cost of working that part of the farm may appear in the report.

Mr. McGOWAN. How many horses have you on the experimental farm.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have six teams of horses. We have three horses to run the omnibus back and forwards to the city, an express wagon to carry mails and parcels; I think in all we have nineteen horses.

Mr. McGOWAN. How many employees?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I suppose the hon. gentleman means the labour. I am informed that it runs in the neighbourhood of forty all told. That includes all the experimental work and things of that kind.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

THE COSMOS COTTON COMPANY.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth) moved third reading of Bill (No. 64) to incorporate the Cosmos Cotton Company. He said: The hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) called attention to section 8 when this Bill was in committee, and he thought that the wording of that clause might be changed. I receive any suggestion of the hon. gentleman with a great deal of deference because of his experience and his candour, and the fairness with which he always treats matters of this kind. I have no doubt that his suggestion was intended for the benefit of the stockholders of this company. But, I have looked over the statutes for several years back and also the Bills of the present session, and I find that two out of five of them contain this clause word for word. I would ask my hon. friend not to press his objection. I would instance that the Ross Rifle Company Bill contains the same clause and the hon. member did not object to it. This company is chartered for the particular purpose of buying out another company which has a provincial charter, and it was thought that instead of asking for enlarged powers from the local legislature it would be better to ask for a new Bill here.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The only objection I had was that it gave the directors of the company power, without the consent of the company itself.

Mr. FLINT. All these clauses are framed in the same way.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Very well.

Motion agreed to, Bill read a third time, and passed.

CENTRAL COUNTIES RAILWAY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 68) respecting the Central Counties Railway Company.—Mr. Edwards.

On Section 4,

Mr. LEMIEUX. In the absence of Mr. Edwards, I beg to move that the following clause be added to the last section of the Bill:

Section 5. Paragraph 'b' as enacted by section 1 of chapter 60 of the statutes of 1899 is amended by striking out the words 'or Casselman' in line 5 thereof, and inserting after the word 'Russell' in line 6 thereof the following words: 'And then to the city of Ottawa in the county of Carleton.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. State the reason for the change?

Mr. LEMIEUX. I have had no explanation from the hon. member for Russell, but I understand that it refers to the direction which the line is going to follow. The promoters of the Bill do not want the line to go to Casselman, but they want it to go from Russell to Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The members of the committee who are present will remember that the promoter of the Bill stated that the line as laid down in the Bill crossed the Canada Atlantic line either twice or three times, and by this change it would not have to cross the other road. It was stated by the gentleman who addressed the committee that he had a telegram from one of the railway companies, I forget whether it was the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Canada Atlantic, requesting that this change in the route be made. I do not think there is any objection to it. It is purely a local matter, and the change is in the interest of the public.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not suppose there is any objection to the change, but it would have been better to have followed the rules of the House, and to have given notice of the amendment. I will not object, however. This is an added clause which amends a previous section of the same Act. However, if the hon. gentleman is satisfied, let it pass, and it can be amended, if necessary, in the Senate.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Experimental farms, $80,000.

Mr. GANONG. Before examining the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture, I had a great deal of sympathy for the farmers of this country. I still have that sympathy, for I believe them to be one of the most if not the most important class of workers we have. But I think it well for us to examine these estimates a little closely. At page 35, I find such items as these: Aid to agricultural societies $7,000; experimental farms $80,000; printing and distribution of reports and bulletins of farms $4,000; fumigating stations $3,000; for renewing and improving Canadian exhibit at Imperial Institute, London, $3,000; to promote dairying interests, etc. $40,000. And on page 36; I find cattle quarantines and veterinary divisions $7,000. Then at page 74 there is an item to meet expenditure under the Adulteration of Food and Fertilizers Act $25,000, of which $12,000 would probably apply to the Agricultural Department. I have given only a few items, yet we find here a total of $434,000 which is, in effect a direct bonus to the farmers of this country. This is a class of protection which these gentlemen probably do not recognize that they receive. Nevertheless, it is a direct bonus and a protection to them. This does not cover all, for there are such items as cattle inspection, $2,800; protection for timber planting in the west,—designed to afford shelter and to help in retaining the moisture precipitated—$15,000, running the amount up to $450,000, without including the salary of an expensive minister. If you include this and other items it will easily amount to $500,000. We have heard it stated a good many times on the floor of this House that the farmers have no protection. As a manufacturer, I claim that the farmers have protection in these items amounting to $500,000. The claim is made that the farmers were called upon to pay duties on the importation last year of $1,927,000 worth of agricultural implements. But this bonus given outright to the farmers would more than pay the duty on all the agricultural implements imported last year. And this does not cover it all either. If we consider the Glasgow exhibition, the Paris exposition, the Pan-American and others, which cost this country a large amount of money, we find that that money is laid out for the benefit of the industrial portion of the community and largely for the benefit of the farming class.

There are some other advantages that the farmers get, and for which they do not perhaps pay their proportion of the cost. I would not have the House imagine that I am objecting to these amounts, nor am I objecting to the item I propose to speak of just now, that is the postal service. The Postmaster General's Report will show that the postal service of the country districts is not self-sustaining, that the large centres of population undoubtedly have to pay for it. That report will show to any reasonable mind that the people in the country districts to-day are paying more for their postage than they ever paid in the history of the country. They are not paying it directly in the way of postage, but indirectly in other forms of taxation. Every one knows that the large corporations, the insurance companies and others, having a large amount of mailing matter, are receiving great advantage from the change in the postage. Personally, I have no doubt that the change benefits the firm with which I am connected at least $150 a year. But if we save $150, some one else has to pay it; it may not be paid in postage, but it is paid in taxation, and that is largely borne by the farmers of the country.

Then they have other advantages as well. We have expended millions of dollars on transportation, very largely in the interest of the farmers. Our great railways have been built mostly for that purpose, and our canal systems have been built and will be enlarged in the future on the same basis. So that they have not only this direct bonus of $500,000, but they have these other advantages from which they are constantly receiving benefit. In this year's estimates the improvements to harbours will cover a very large amount, directly to the advantage of the farmers. Why are we spending money at Collingwood, at Owen Sound, at Depot Harbour, at Goderich ? Simply in order to afford better facilities for the transportation of the products of the farm. We are spending in dredging harbours, also in the interest of better transportation, a sum of over $600,000. Then in steamship subventions the farmers have an advantage. So that in addition to the protection the farmers have in the tariff on wheat, flour and such products, they have all these other advantages as well. There is also another scheme that may come to the front. Why is the building of the Georgian Bay canal mooted at all ? That is not for the benefit of the manufacturers, by whom the Minister of Trade and Commerce used to say that the country was being bled white, but in the interest of the farming community of the west; and if it is ever built it will be built in their interest alone. The criticisms from this side of the House are in a fair spirit, they are not against these grants themselves, but in the mode of their expenditure. We desire that the farmers of this country may get all the advantage possible for the amount of money that is being expended. That is the object of all the criticisms made in this House by the opposition. We do not object so much to the expenditure, but we believe that the farmers and others are not getting a fair equivalent for their money. We are told that the farmers have no protection, but that the manufacturers are getting all the advantages. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has in years past rather abused the guild to which I have the honour to belong. I say we have as honourable men in it as the hon. gentleman who occupies the position of Minister of Trade and Commerce. We have not in it men who have tied up water powers and are refusing to sell them when they are needed for the development of the country. We have not men who have decried cabinet positions and afterwards accepted $7,000 a year of the people's money to fill those positions. I resent the statement the hon. member has made in so far as the manufacturers of this country are concerned. I think the grants that are before us to-day are all right in themselves, but I want an assurance from the minister that they will be expended in the best possible manner in the interest of the farmers.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the minister tell us what experiments are going on now at the Central Experimental Farm ?

Mr. GANONG.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have about 1,000 different plots of various sizes on the experimental farm. These are all handled separately, and the crops grown on them are carefully weighed and recorded, and the results of the comparisons are worked out in the office, and these are published in the reports of the experimental farms.

Mr. SPROULE. I noticed some time ago there was a change made in the silos, which were originally square, and they are now round. What has been the result of the change ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think I am safe in saying that the results show that the round silos is preferable. There is less waste in the round silo. Some ensilage may spoil in the corners of a square silo.

Mr. SPROULE. What is your experience in regard to the diameter of the silo that is most suitable for ordinary occasions—say where there are 40 or 50 head of cattle to be fed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is desirable to have the silo of sufficient size to enable the feeder to take three or four inches of the surface off every two days, because, when the surface is exposed to the air, it will begin to spoil.

Mr. SPROULE. The ensilage would not be injured in the course of a day or two in the winter ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Two days are quite safe, but many days would not be. The state of the weather may influence the length of time during which it would be safe to allow ensilage to be exposed to the air.

Mr. SPROULE. If you take three or four inches off every two or three days it would not take long to exhaust the silo at that rate of going.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There will be about 18 feet in depth of ensilage.

Mr. SPROULE. What diameter ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The diameter is about 14 or 15 feet.

Mr. SPROULE. What has been your experience in regard to the preservation of wood in the silo ? Is there any difference between a round and a square silo ? What kind of wood did you use ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We used ordinary pine. Its durability depends a good deal upon the way it is treated. The wooden ones which were rotted when these new ones were put in had been there about ten years. They were treated with a preparation of linseed oil and resin on the inside to fill the pores of the wood and prevent it from absorbing moisture from the ensilage and rotting it. The time during which that silo lasted, however, was not as great as the time during which some other silos have lasted. I have a silo at home that lasted for 14 years before I had to renew it, but the ones on the farm gave out in ten years. The new ones have not shown any signs of decay. They have only been in existence about two years. We cannot say whether they will last longer than the old ones.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). If the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) had attended our Farmers' Institute and grange meetings he would have learned all these things years ago. It seems to me that all day we have been doing farmers' institute and grange work and that every farmer in this House ought to know all about these matters without asking the questions that have been asked of the hon. minister. I do not object to it, because the country will be educated, perhaps, and especially those members of the farming community who do not attend these meetings will get information from the hon. Minister of Agriculture to-night that they have not had an opportunity of getting before. But, what astonishes me is, to hear members of this House getting up and deploring the work that the hon. minister is trying to do for the farmers. They appear to complain because he is protecting the farmers, because he is assisting them in the matter of transportation and experimental farms and trying to improve in other ways the work of the farmer. I think if the hon. Minister of Agriculture devotes his time to that work he will be doing a grand thing for this country and when we speak about that as being protection to the farmers I would say that it is an excellent thing that he is protecting the farmers in that way. The farmer has to pay for his clothing a protection to the manufacturer of about 30 per cent. That is $30 on the hundred added to the expense of maintaining his family, which goes to the manufacturer of clothing. If he consumes confectionery he has to pay 25 cents on the dollar and if he consumes biscuits he has to pay 27 cents on the dollar. Every manufacturer in this country is protected more or less and yet an hon. gentleman (Mr. Ganong) gets up and complains because the farmer is assisted in developing his business.

Mr. GANONG. I made no complaint if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Robinson) is referring to me. On the other hand I rather complimented the minister.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Perhaps you did, but I thought you were complaining because we were getting protection in this form. Go on and protect the farmers, give them cold storage, improve their transportation facilities, teach them how to raise more and of a better quality and you will do something for the benefit of the country. But, the discussion of all these little items in this House, thus wasting the time of 213 men who have to sit and listen to it, is, it seems to me, entirely out of place. I have no objection to this item passing.

Mr. SPROULE. The committee must feel grateful to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Robinson, Elgin) for the lecture which he has read to us on the propriety of our proceedings here telling us what we should do and what we should not do. We were innocent enough to believe that when a proposal for the expenditure of public money is before the House it is our duty to ascertain in what way the money is being spent and to bring out such information as will enable us to determine whether it is a wise expenditure or not. It is not a discussion but rather more in the nature of asking questions, which it is legitimate and proper for us to do. It is not a question of whether the party who is asking the questions knows anything about the business or not. There are experiments being carried on at the farm. It is our duty to ascertain as far as possible, whether they are being conducted on proper lines and what the results of these experiments have been. If they have not been conducted on proper lines it is our place to offer such suggestions as in our judgment might be of assistance to those engaged in them. It is for the purpose of bringing out this information that these questions are being asked. In connection with these experiments I want to say a few words on another line. Experiments have been carried on for some time in regard to the feeding of pork to determinate what class of foods produce soft pork. I listened with a great deal of interest to the statement of Mr. Shutt of the experimental farm when he was before the Committee on Agriculture to give information upon that question. My understanding, before the experiment was commenced was, that it was to be carried on for the purpose of determining what classes of food were the most suitable for producing a good quality of pork, but it seems to me that the whole sheet was made out with the aim of determining whether corn produces soft pork or not and it had very little relevancy to the question of determining the effect of other kinds of food. Those who are in the habit of raising pork know that there are certain kinds of food which will produce soft pork and that some food prepared in different ways produces different qualities of pork. I think that experiment fell far short of what it should have been to bring out information that should have been available to the farmers of the country. In all the combinations of food that were made in the course of the experiment corn was one-half of each ration. If half was made up of different things like mangolds, turnips, oats, and barley ; while it might be proper to use corn as one of the rations it was at least equally valuable to determine what were the cheapest possible kinds of feed we could use to produce good pork. In my section of the country the principle feed used is mangolds, beets or turnips, with pease, oats and barley ground up and put over it. There is a great deal of difference in the quality of pork produced from feeding raw turnips and from feeding boiled turnips. There has been no sufficient inquiry into the results obtained from such feed as that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have done just the very thing which the hon. gentleman points out. The bulletin shows that some of the rations were of boiled roots and some of raw roots. Corn did not enter at all into a number of the rations.

Mr. SPROULE. In my judgment one of the most desirable things to know is : What cheap food will best produce a good quality of pork. If you can produce as good a quality of pork from sugar beets and a small quantity of grain, as you can from an entire ration of grain, then you will have a larger profit because roots are cheaper than grain. We had practically no information along that line in the committee. If you can convince a farmer that he can use feed which costs him only one cent a pound or less, and four pounds of which will make a pound of pork which he can sell for 6 cents, you will show him how to make a profit. If grain is high in price it is not profitable to feed it to hogs. In this respect the experiments were deficient. Now, we have had no information given us as to the yield on that part of the farm which was cultivated for the purpose of showing how much profit there was in agriculture, and we were not told how much manure was put on these fields year after year.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The manure is included in the account of every field.

Mr. SPROULE. For one year or for many years ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The manure is only put on in rotation once in five years, and what is done is to charge one-fifth of the manure to each crop.

Mr. SPROULE. It is claimed that the farm being so close to Ottawa there could be a large quantity of manure purchased.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no purchased manure put on that portion of the farm. The manure put on that land was the produce of the feed raised on the land itself. The purchased manure was put on another part of the farm.

Mr. SPROULE. What quantity of manure was put on per acre ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Twenty tons.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. SHERRITT. How do you charge your hay and oats ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hay is charged at $6 a ton and the oats at $19 a ton. The grain we raise for feeding is charged in round figures at a cent a pound.

Mr. SHERRITT. How do you count your hay when you grow 3¾ tons to the acre ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is charged the same.

Mr. SHERRITT. Surely the hon. gentleman does not consider that is a fair report to send out to the country. Every farmer in this House knows that there is about 25 per cent difference in the weight of hay as taken off the field and after it is thoroughly dry.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is a shrinkage, no doubt.

Mr. SHERRITT. I am certainly pleased with the announcement which the minister has made, that he intends to bring down a statement next year showing exactly what the produce of the farm has been, as one cannot tell anything about it in the present condition of affairs.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have all the data, but it has never been worked out in the way the hon. gentleman desires, but I shall be very glad to have that done.

Mr. KAULBACH. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will have no objection to my giving the House the result of my experience in the culture of the soil. For example, I had unwillingly to take a farm which came into my hands that had been exhausted of all fertility. My desire was to have it restored, and to accomplish that end, I went to the experimental farm to inquire what would be the best method to bring the soil back to its virgin condition. I was advised to take a sub-soil plough very early in the spring and turn up the bottom earth. The inquiry was made of me, what did the soil consist of ? I said that it was a red clay covered with a black light loam, which, from having been cropped frequently, was exhausted of all its properties, and grew very little more than carraway, witch grass and weeds. I followed the advice given to me by the experimental farm people and, after having turned up the sub-soil as advised with a good sub-soil plough, I was advised to sow it with clover seed thick, enough to produce a good thick crop. After the clover had grown about six inches, I had it turned under by shallow ploughing ; and then sowed the land with oats, timothy and clover, and had an excellent crop that season, coming in about the month of August, which was cut for food, stored away in the barn, and fed to the stock ; and the next year I had the manure from that stock used as a top dressing. I treated five acres the first year in this way and five acres the next year; and, after applying that method for five or six years, I had an immense yield of good, wholesome food. That farm only kept four head of cattle at first, but now it has thirty-six head on about sixty acres of land, half of which is in pasture. Therefore, I say that farming, if conducted in a proper manner, will give a handsome living to the farmer. A farmer, I contend, is a king among peasants. Now, as the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has referred to hog raising, I may say that I made inquiry on that subject at the experimental farm, and was advised to feed hogs on clover and sugar beets. I received that same advice from other parties, and was also advised to use the sugar beet for horned cattle. The clover and the sugar beet, put into a vat and boiled up together, along with some middlings, pease, beans or any thing of that kind, gave an excellent food for hogs ; and as a result I had an excellent herd of hogs raised principally on this description of food. I imported eleven, out of which I had a product of 101, and from that product I netted in one year, from November to November, a clear profit of $1,000.

Mr. HEYD. On how many acres altogether.

Mr. KAULBACH. I kept the hogs in pens. I did not use any acres at all.

Mr. HEYD. You said you had sixty acres of ground.

Mr. KAULBACH. I dropped that subject. It was on another farm that I raised the hogs. I sold the whole of the young stock, weighing about 250 pounds a piece. I sold them without any difficulty right at my door in the town where I live, for seven and eight cents per pound dressed weight, and I could not give them to the butchers as fast as they were applying for them. The farm had all the trimmings. I employed a party at $14 a month to do nothing but look after the hogs. I gave him his house rent free, all the roots he required for his family, all his firewood and other small perquisites, and I found that it was the most profitable investment I had on the farm. I had an orchard on the farm, and when there was a little breeze some of the apples fell which used to be picked up by hand ; now the hogs are turned in and they pick up the apples without any trouble, and which is good food for them. After the hogs picked up the apples they are sent back to the pen.

This year I only have half the number, because my men had to give their attention to other work, but I advise every farmer to grow pork and use the methods I employ, namely, feed with young clover and the sugar beet. The sugar beet will be far better employed in Canada in the feeding of stock than in the production of sugar. We have had experience in the manufacture of sugar from the beet, which has shown to be an utter failure, and with all due deference to my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule), I believe that if we would give our attention to the growth of the sugar beet and use it in the way I mention, we would have much better returns than we could possibly have by converting it into sugar. Might I ask the hon. minister if any experiments have been made with regard to the destruction of the cattle fly. Our cattle in the maritime provinces are greatly tormented by that pest, and we have used in a rude way every method we could devise to get rid of it. We have applied the fish oil and paraffine—a very slight mixture of paraffine with the fish oil—every day to the cattle, and some of our people have tied rugs about the horns to protect them. That latter precaution, however, is an inconvenience to the cattle, as it makes them too warm in the summer season. If the hon. gentleman knows of any method for getting rid of this pest, I would be very glad to have the information.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The entomologist has dealt with that subject exhaustively in a special bulletin issued three years ago or more. Among the remedies he recommends is fish oil, but that is not quite so easily obtained here as as where my hon. friend lives. Kerosene emulsion he also recommends. But the horn fly is still troubling cattle a good deal, all through the country. I have no doubt, however, that those who take precautions to keep it away from the cattle reap an abundant return for their trouble.

Mr. KAULBACH. Our experience shows that the cattle fly and the horn fly are separate and distinct. The one is larger than the other. The horn fly is very small and gathers round the lower part of the horn, whereas the cattle fly is larger and places his head downwards, penetrating the skin and causing great torture to the animal.

Mr. SPROULE. Experiments were made a few years ago to ascertain how many head of cattle could be kept per acre the year round. Has aything been done in that line since ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nothing definite.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the result of the experiment ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It showed about an average of 22 head of cattle to 40 acres of land. That experiment was carried on four years.

Mr. SPROULE. What experiments are going on with regard to hybridization ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Prof. Saunders has been carrying on steadily experiments in the hybridization of grains and fruits. He is experimenting on the cross fertilizing of different varieties of grain, to see whether new varieties might be found, and when found he tests them and compares them with the older varieties. His work in connection with fruits is chiefly in experiments to get an apple which will stand the North-west climate. By hybridizing the more tender and larger varieties on the wild Siberian crab, which is perfectly hardy but too small to be of much use, we find that we are getting varieties which we may hope to grow with success in the North-west. We find to-day some trees there, the results of such cross fertilizing, which are producing fruit, and in course of time we hope to produce a fruit which will flourish in the North-west and be quite good enough for culinary and household purposes. The progress so far as been very encouraging.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you propose adding any new buildings this year ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I propose to add a horse stable to the Brandon farm.

Mr. BELL. Perhaps I might now introduce a matter which I mentioned to the hon. minister in connection with fumigation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not got the papers here in connection with that and would ask the hon. gentleman to bring it up on another occasion.

Salaries and contingencies of organized districts and public health in other districts, $110,000.

Mr. KAULBACH. I desire, if this is the proper time, to call attention to a case of quarantine, though the nature of it may possibly make it rather a matter for the consideration of customs and come within its province. There was a vessel belonging to Lunenburg that went to Boston and was discharging and taking in cargo within a short distance of the contagious hospital there. The crew, it is reported, were not on shore, but the steward, through flies in the galley, became infected with small-pox. The vessel left on her voyage to Georgetown, Prince Edward Island. Arriving there the captain reported the steward sick, feeling that the disease was of a serious character. The doctor went on board and pronounced it small-pox, and advised the captain that he and the crew should remain isolated, and not leave the ship. After a day or two's delay, the doctor informed the captain that he with his ship 'Monitor' was to proceed to Pictou. The vessel proceeded to Pictou under difficulty, going out in a storm. Reaching the port of Pictou, the captain reported himself through the captain of another vessel, and remained in quarantine waters. After two or three days delay at Pictou, this poor man suffering from this terrible disease, without the necessary treatment, the vessel was ordered to Charlottetown across the bay. What I contend is that this poor man should have had medical treatment during all this time. When the vessel reached Charlottetown, it was after a lapse of six or seven days from the time it had arrived at Georgetown. The sick man was landed, but had been on shore hardly any time when he died. The captain reported to me that it was through the want of proper attention shown by the customs or quarantine official at Georgetown, that the poor man met his death, and the unnecessary detention of the ship in Georgetown and Pictou. It appears that, under the Act, the customs official becomes the quarantine agent when a vessel with sickness aboard is reported. The vessel was kept in quarantine at a late season of the year, after she should have been out of the gulf, the gulf being prohibited waters. She was paying a percentage to go into the gulf, intending to have carried a chartered cargo from Georgetown, and if that vessel had been looked after quickly, she would have been out of the gulf and out of quarantine in time to have completed her charter. But, leaving the port in which the ship was quarantined, then being released, and going into the gulf in a storm and trying to make Pictou harbour in a snow storm for shelter in the night, she met with shipwreck. The vessel, which was a new one, just launched the year previous and specially built of special material for a certain purpose, was lost to the owners, and the crew barely saved their lives. The vessel was sold as a derelict and was bought in by other parties. I would ask the minister to look into this matter carefully and give such satisfaction as is within his power. I will write him a carefully drawn letter giving the facts, to which I will ask his careful attention that he may give me information as to the position in which this poor unfortunate master and owners are to be placed. The vessel was worth $7,000. The captain is deprived of his season's work, which was his living. All he asks now is not the value of the ship, but, in consequenece of the want of proper attention on the part of the custom officials at the quarantine station at Georgetown, that the captain and owners should be compensated to the extent of the charter which would be about $600 or $700—I can give the exact amount by referring to a letter written to me by the master.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly the case comes under this vote. I know the case quite well. The vessel arrived at Georgetown. I do not remember where she came from, but it was at Georgetown she first came into contact with Canadian officials. But my department did not hear anything of her until she arrived at Pictou. I have not the official statement, but I understand that the provincial health authorities at Georgetown ordered the vessel away. Georgetown is not an organized quarantine port. Nor is Pictou, though it used to be three or four years ago. I suppose the health authorities at Georgetown ordered her to Pictou on the supposition that it was still an organized quarantine port. Charlottetown is an organized quarantine port and was the proper place for her to go to with a quarantinable disease aboard. The moment we heard of her being in Pictou, she was ordered to proceed to Charlottetown, which would take but a few hours. The case was attended to by the quarantine officer there in due course. The quarantine law had to be carried out, and neither the government nor the department can be held responsible for damages accruing in carrying out the law, which is for the protection of the whole people against disease coming from abroad. The course of the department in taking the vessel from Pictou, a non-organized port, to Charlottetown, an organized port, was quite in accord with the necessities of the case and with the law. It was extremely unfortunate, no doubt, that the man died in the quarantine at Charlottetown. Whether that death was in any way due to the voyage from Georgetown via Pictou to Charlottetown, we have no means of knowing. The man had every care and attention in the quarantine hospital at Charlottetown, but unfortunately he died a few days afterwards. The vessel had to be quarantined and disinfected, and the people who were on board the vessel and had been exposed to contagion, had to be kept in quarantine until the period of the incubation of the disease was over.

Mr. KAULBACH. I understand how requisite it is that the quarantine regulations should be carried out very strictly. But what I complain of is that this man at Georgetown did not communicate at once to Pictou by wire and inform the officer of this vessel being there. Then he would have been advised that she could not be received at Pictou, but must go to Charlottetown. I think it is clear that this man neglected his duty. I may be wrong, but I understand that the customs official in Georgetown becomes the quarantine officer for the time being in cases such as that. He leaves off his official position as customs official, and becomes quarantine official. But I contend that the quarantine official should have communicated at once with Pictou by wire, because the life of that man depended upon all despatch being used and the shortest time employed to get him off the ship and under medical treatment. And finding that Pictou could not receive him, the vessel could then have gone direct to Charlottetown ; she would have been running on one side of the triangle, whereas she had to make three sides by sailing first to Pictou and then to Charlottetown.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are no records in the department showing what the hon. gentleman says about the customs collector at Georgetown. The first intimation we had of the vessel was when she arrived at Pictou. I will be glad if the hon. gentleman will give me the facts, and I will look into them.

Mr. KAULBACH. I will send the hon. gentleman the full particulars by letter to-morrow.

Mr. HACKETT. This poor sick mariner was a Canadian who had paid his sick mariner's dues. It is true that at Georgetown there is no quarantine hospital, but when a ship arrives the customs officer sees that a doctor is sent on board. The doctor was acting under the authority of the Dominion government, and the customs officer at that port was also an official of the Dominion government. There was a case of small-pox, and they had no means of taking charge of this sick seaman at that time, and I do not know for what reason they did not communicate directly with the Departmet of Public Health at Ottawa. Instead of doing so they ordered this vessel away from Georgetown to Pictou. I cannot understand why such a proceeding was allowed to take place. This vessel having a case of small-pox on board, was ordered from Georgetown to the port of Pictou in Nova Scotia, simply because the vessel hailed from a port of Nova Scotia. Now, we are all Canadians, and there is no reason why this poor sick seaman should have been dragged about from one port to another. Arriving at Pictou, the vessel was ordered back again to Charlottetown, where there was a quarantine hospital. I say it was a case of gross inhumanity, and was so regarded by the people of the maritime provinces, that this poor man should have been carried around in this vessel for seven or eight days without medical treatment, when he was paying into the government his sick mariner's fees. Certainly there was neglect somewhere. The poor man went into the quarantine hospital at Charlottetown and died there, in fact, he was so near dead when he landed that he only survived a few hours. You will understand that the merchants of Prince Edward Island charter these vessels from the province of Nova Scotia to carry away produce in the fall of the year, and it is important that these vessels should come freely into our ports for the purpose of carrying away cargoes. Another case of small-pox occurred, and this time, notwithstanding the experience of the former case, the vessel was boarded by the customs officer, a doctor diagnosed that sick seaman's case, and then he was taken in a vehicle and driven from Georgetown to Charlottetown, a distance of thirty miles, through the country, exposing to contagion the people all along the route. No attempt whatever was made to warn the people of their danger. I have no doubt the minister is conscientious in this matter, but I want to impress upon him the need of taking precautions in cases of this kind where the public health of so many people is exposed to danger. There should be some provision made at a port like Georgetown, some kind of a temporary hospital outside the limits of the town, where cases of this kind can be attended to by doctors and nurses.

Mr. BELL. I think there is a hospital at Pictou for contagious diseases of seamen, a hospital building.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. At one time Pictou was what was called an organized port, having a quarantine hospital and grounds. We found that the arrivals at that port were so few in number that there was no necessity to maintain it. I think Port Hawkesbury was another place in the same position, and was abandoned as an organized port. Having the property there we still keep charge of it, and if occasion arises at any time, it will be possible to use it.

Mr. BELL. I observe that there is a charge in the Auditor General's Report for a caretaker for that building and it would seem, that, having that building available, this person should have been received into the hospital, instead of having him sent back to Charlottetown. The port has a medical officer and it also has a hospital.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have no medical officer under salary.

Mr. BELL. But still, you had the hospital and this caretaker, and it would seem much more in the interest of the sick man if he had been introduced into that hospital which was at hand at the moment. Another point; apparently in the ports where you have no organized system, you rely on the customs officer?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We ask the customs officer to call in a medical man in case of need.

Mr. BELL. There should be such information in the possession of these customs officers as would prevent them from sending a person to a wrong point which possibly may arise from the conflict of authority, as the customs officer is in one department and the quarantine is under the charge of the hon. minister's department. It would be an improvement if instructions were given to customs-house officers which would prevent a recurrence of this incident.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Instructions are sent to them regularly and if a customs officer at Georgetown did send this man to Pictou I do not know why he did so.

Mr. KAULBACH. The medical officer in Pictou informed the captain that the man would be taken on shore there and receive treatment. After he was there three days, this was recalled, and the captain got orders to proceed to Charlottetown, which involved delay again. I quite agree with the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) that, having a building there, the man should have been received and placed under the care of a medical man. If so, and if he had received proper treatment, it would probably have saved his life. The difficulty arose from the customs officer or the quarantine officer at Georgetown not having despatched that vessel immediately to Charlottetown, first having communicated the fact to Charlottetown as quickly as possible. If this had been done there would only have been a day's delay between the time of the vessel leaving Georgetown and her arrival in Charlottetown.

Mr. SPROULE. This item was held over on a previous occasion for the purpose of allowing the minister an opportunity of furnishing certain information to the committee regarding the points at which quarantine officers were employed owing to the prevalence of small-pox. Has he that information?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. I have already given the list of those who are still employed. I was asked to supply a list of those who had been employed and whose services had been dispensed with. I have the list now.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the hon. minister give us the names of the parties who are employed now, what kind of work they are doing, and at what point they are stationed?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All over the Dominion.

Mr. SPROULE. I am specially interested in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In Ontario there is Dr. Gibson at Sault Ste. Marie, whose services were dispensed with on 31st October, 1900. He was reappointed on the 22nd of November, 1900, and is employed still; Dr. Sheppard, whose services were dispensed with on November 30, 1901; at Thessalon, Dr. Baxter, whose services were dispensed with on November 15, 1901; Port Arthur, Dr. G. W. Brown, whose services were dispensed with on 30th November, 1901; at Collingwood, Dr. Aylesworth, whose services were dispensed with on 31st November, 1901; Fort William, Dr. Hamilton, whose services were dispensed with on 30th November, 1901; Bruce Mines, Dr. Carter, whose services were dispensed with on 30th November, 1901; Mine Centre, Dr. D. McKenzie, who is still on; Rondeau, Dr. McCully, whose services were dispensed with on the 15th November, 1901; Owen Sound, Dr. McCulloch, whose services were dispensed with on November 30, 1901; Chippewa, Dr. Gray, whose services were dispensed with October 22, 1901; Beaver Mills, Dr. McCrimmon, who is still at work; Cornwall, Dr. Wheeler, whose services were dispensed with on February 28, 1902. These are all in Ontario.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you none at Sarnia or Detroit or places like that?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The intention is to guard the frontier wherever there appears to be danger of the disease coming over. The parts of the United States opposite these ports that I have referred to and from which vessels are coming to these ports are parts of the United States where, apparently the disease is not well under control. In Detroit and that neighbourhood the reports from the United States authorities and the information of the provincial authorities of Ontario show that the disease is well under control and that there is not any likelihood of persons carrying the disease in crossing the frontier. The same is true of Buffalo on the Niagara frontier and that is why we have not undertaken to place observing physicians at these places. We have worked as far as possible in conjunction with the provincial health authorities and wherever they have considered that there was danger and when they have notified us we have acted, but, where they seemed to consider there was no danger we have believed them to be acquainted with the conditions and we have thought it was not necessary to make an appointment.

Mr. SPROULE. I have seen it reported at different times that the disease was prevalent in Michigan and quite close to Detroit. It has been imported into our section of the country on the train. There was one case at least. Is there no provision for examining passengers on trains coming across the line so as to prevent the importation of disease ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That work is only done where there is danger which the director general of public health ascertains from information supplied him. The frontier at Sarnia and Niagara did not seem to be dangerous and we have not done work there. But in other parts, on the representations of the provincial authorities we have taken precautions.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that people are prevented from going from Canada to the United States unless they are vaccinated.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There may be parts of Michigan where this is done, but it is not general.

Mr. SPROULE. I heard this was done at Buffalo.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think so.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister read a list of men who had their services dispensed with last fall. Does he intend to re-employ these men when navigation opens?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Wherever there seems to be any danger some one will be appointed.

Mr. SPROULE. What rule guides the minister as to where there is danger and where there is not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have representations from the provincial authorities on that matter.

Mr. SPROULE. You mean the provincial Board of Health.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have always taken representations from the provincial Board of Health and in some cases the town authorities have asked for protection. The director general of public health decides if these representations are well founded or not.

Mr. McGOWAN. I understood the minister to tell us that he had only jurisdiction over the frontier and that the provincial authorities look after the public health elsewhere ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. McGOWAN. I see by the report that Dr. James Paterson, of Winnipeg, was sent by this government to the North-west territories.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The territories have no provincial organization and my department has been charged by the government with looking after the health work there. Dr. Paterson has been sent to superintend that work. We have done the same thing in the Yukon.

Mr. BELL. I understand that we have the right reserved to us to discuss other matters affecting this department. I want to speak briefly about the Year-book.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That item was passed last night on the understanding that if any gentleman wished to speak on it again he could do so. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) thinks it desirable he can do so now.

Mr. BELL. Looking at the papers this morning I find that the minister stated last night that some errors had crept into the Year-book, and that he would see that it did not occur again. There has been a very serious misapprehension in regard to this matter. So far as I have been able to look into it I am satisfied that the Year-book has been absolutely correct within the sense it professes to be correct. The criticism that was addressed against the Year-book was based upon the figures giving the estimated population of Canada, and these figures were not quoted correctly from the Year-book by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He did not quote them with absolute accuracy. I am referring now to the unrevised version of 'Hansard.' For instance, the figures for 1897 were quoted by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who substituted 4,875,005 for the correct figures in the Year-book which are 4,875,035. It is not an important error, but it shows that there was not absolute accuracy in quoting the figures. The first occasion on which that hon. gentleman referred to the figures, he gave the estimate as not 4,875,035, but 4,856,236, and so on throughout. Whether there was carelessness in transcribing or not I cannot say, but the figures were not presented to the House absolutely as they are in the Year-book.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. From what Year-book is the hon. gentleman quoting now ?

Mr. BELL. The Year-book for 1889, which the Minister of Trade and Commerce informed the House later he was using. In my first criticism I did not know what volume he used, but I took 1900. I am referring now to the Year-book of 1889. The minister on that occasion, referring to the year book of 1889, made this very extraordinary statement. He said: 'They suppressed 1890 and 1891, and I will supply the figures.' Now, how could any man rationally say that the Year-book of 1889 suppressed the figures of the two following years ? Evidently there was some great confusion of ideas on the part of the gentleman who made the charge. He goes on to say that he will supplement these figures, and he does it, not by quoting from the volume of 1890, where he would have found the estimates for that year ; but supplying an estimate on his own authority while giving the Year-book as his authority. He gave 5,210,000 for 1890, whereas the Year-book gives 5,189,099, and for 1891 he supplied the estimate of 5,345,000, where the Year-book contains the actual figures of the census of that year, namely, 4,843,256. If the hon. gentleman, in giving this calculation to the House, had followed the same system as was followed by the Year-book, instead of adding 134,000——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If I might suggest to the hon. gentleman, he is going into a number of figures, in which I confess I am not able to follow him, because I have not studied the question. He is practically making a criticism of statements made by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. BELL. I may say that that matter is past, so far as I am concerned. I am merely speaking in consequence of what I understood the Minister of Agriculture to say last night.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. member is apparently undertaking to correct what the Minister of Trade and Commerce stated, and I was only going to suggest that he had better do that when the Minister of Trade and Commerce himself is present, when any statements he may have to make in reply to the hon. gentleman could be made. I am not myself in a position to go into the details of all these figures.

Mr. BELL. I was going to call the attention of the minister to the fact that I have already attempted to make that correction in the House, and I am precluded from doing so by the rules of the House. I am not doing that now. I am merely quoting the figures of the Year-book to show that the statement to the effect that this volume is inaccurate was thrown out I think too hastily. That statement was based on the fact that the estimated population of Canada did not turn out to be the correct population when the census figures were obtained. That could scarcely be hoped for. The Year-book does not publish, and never has published, these figures as being absolutely correct, but always as estimated ; and in order to avoid any misleading impression, the Year-book states as follows :

> No information is available for ascertaining the increase of population since 1881 (except as above mentioned), with any great practical accuracy. The population used in different parts of this work is derived from logarithmetical calculations based on census returns, and is believed to be sufficiently near the mark to be of value in the calculations for which it is used ; but it will be readily understood that from the absence of returns of births and deaths and from the incessant movement of population, both ways, across the long frontier, of which it is impossible to keep any record, it is impossible to obtain any absolutely correct statement of the population between census years.

The Year-book in making that careful provision has certainly prevented the estimated figures being the occasion of any error, and I may say that there is no other way in which this House or the departments could have the advantage of knowing what the population of Canada is in any particular year, except by using an estimate made up in this particular way. I would like to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this system is not peculiar to Canada, but that the same system is adopted in the official figures used in all countries. I quote from the Statesman's Year-book of 1892, to show that the system followed in Canada is followed in that publication. It says :

> The registrar general's estimate of the population in the middle of each year is based on the assumption that the rate of increase which prevailed in the intercensal period immediately preceding has since been maintained.

In making up these figures, we have to assume that the census returns are correct, and that the annual increase of population shown by the census returns is correct ; and, using these two factors, by a purely mathematical calculation, an estimate is made each year of the population of Canada. While that is certainly liable not to be correct, still it is apparently made with every degree of honesty, without any intention to deceive, and is approximately correct; and I am sure that the minister, when he looks into the matter more fully, will find that he has nothing to apologize for so far as this publication issued under the authority of his department, is concerned. As the figures are not represented to be the actual figures, but merely estimated figures, and as they are prepared by a system of logarithmic calculation, which excludes any idea of motive in their preparation, they are the same as any official would have to supply in making up these returns. I would not have made these remarks but that the minister last night seemed disposed to admit that there was an error in the calculation, which is not the case.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not going to accept any general statement of errors. If I do not find errors, I certainly will not act as if there were errors.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to draw the attention of the minister to a matter which has been brought to my notice. I refer to the dismissal of Capt. D. C. Stewart, who occupied a position in connection with the quarantine service in Halifax until quite recently. I think he was removed on the 21st of November last, and I would like the minister to make a statement as to the causes which led to his removal.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I would say that it is true Capt. Stewart was dismissed after having being reported to the department as having been off duty without permission. The statement as made was referred to him for a reply. In his defence he distinctly admitted the offence. When the occurrence first took place, Dr. Montizambert was in England attending the tuberculosis convention, and I was also away at the moment for a short time. The gravamen of the offence was his going away from duty without permission, and his making misrepresentations to the head of the quarantine service at Halifax in regard to certain repairs which were being made to the boiler of the ship of which he was captain, the result being that boat was laid up for two weeks sooner than there was any need for, and the department had to hire another boat to take her place. These accusations were submitted to Capt. Stewart, and he was given an opportunity to reply to them. It was clear from his own reply and from the evidence we obtained in regard to the matter, that he had been neglectful of his duty in being away without leave, and also that he had made misrepresentations, causing the laying up of the vessel. Under these circumstances, I did not see how it was possible to maintain the discipline of the establishment if I allowed him to remain in the service. I therefore felt constrained, after long and careful investigation, to dismiss him from the service. I believe that I am stating the main facts correctly, and can supplement them by any further details, if required, from the correspondence before me.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, this gentleman was a very long time in the public service—I understand upwards of twenty years—and I am not aware that any charge of any kind was ever made against him before. I took the liberty of asking the hon. member for Victoria, N.S., (Mr. Ross), who, when collector of customs at the port of Halifax, was the chief of this officer for a number of years, and he told me that, while in his department and under his control, Captain Stewart was a most faithful, zealous and efficient officer. And I have no doubt my hon. friend would repeat his statement were he here to-night. The charges against Captain Stewart were made by his superior officer, Dr. Mackay. Dr. Mackay charges him, in the first place, with having on the 24th of July, left the city between 11 and 12 o'clock in the morning, without permission, and with having gone out on the St. Margaret's Bay road on a spree, and remained away all afternoon. Captain Stewart absolutely and specifically denies this charge. He says that no vessel was expected and that, although he did go for a drive, during an hour or two, on the St. Margaret's Bay road, he had made provision so that in his absence there could be no detriment to the public service in case any vessel should be sighted. In the next place Dr. Mackay charges him with not having been on duty when the steamship 'Nassovia' arrived from Stellin, for coal. Captain Stewart explains that Dr. Jones, the quarantine officer, boarded that vessel at seven in the morning, and that no delay whatever occurred in connection with the quarantine service, and in verification of that statement he referred the department to Dr. Jones himself, who is a well known physician in the city of Halifax, an officer of the department, and whose statement, I believe, would verify that of Captain Stewart. Captain Stewart is also charged by Dr. Mackay :

That in the afternoon of the 25th of July, the steamship 'Ulunda' arrived from Liverpool and steamed up the harbour with her quarantine signal flying and there was no word from you of her coming. Dr. Mackay states he saw the quarantine signal on the 'Citadel' and called up his office four different times to ascertain if there was any word from you about the arrival of a vessel and always received a negative reply.

Captain Stewart replied :

When the steamship was coming up the harbour I called up Dr. Mackay's house several times and could get no answer. After trying for some time without hearing from him, I then called up Dr. Jones, and was informed at his house that he was off duty attending the reception of Lord Minto, and Dr. Mackay knew it. After looking around the town, I went to the steamer and found that Dr. Mackay had been there ; I did not think the circumstance very remarkable, as I have frequently known Dr. Mackay to be an hour or so late getting to ships. I may say in this connection, as illustrating Dr. Mackay's anxiety to attend ships promptly that on the 9th August, the ss. 'Damara' arrived from England at 11.40 ; it being Dr. Jones' turn and he being away I called Dr.

Mackay who was in bed and he refused to go to her, telling me to let her stay till Dr. Jones got home; he got home at 1 o'clock and went and cleared the ship.

There seems to be no contradiction of that statement in the papers, and it appears that this gentleman who made the charge against Captain Stewart was willing to allow the vessel to remain in quarantine for hours because it was not convenient for him to attend to it. With respect to the statement of the hon. minister that Captain Sewart misrepresented the circumstances with regard to the condition of the boiler on the 'Argus,' Captain Stewart's statement is as follows :

I beg to make a general and explicit denial. I could have no object in pursuing the course with which he charges me; he knew and we all knew that the work had to be done, that Mr. Dodwell ordered it to be done, and that Messrs. Ferguson & Cox had the contract ; it could not be done without the boat laying up. She was there in the hands of the contractors with whom I had no interest in any way, and whether they were a short time or a long time doing the work was a matter over which I had no control, and certainly I had no interest in making any misrepresentations to Dr. Mackay or anybody else about it. He charges me with refusing to answer a letter he wrote asking for explanation of the work : This charge is not true, I immediately went to him making verbal statement of the condition of the work ; having done so, I did not think it necessary to write him a formal letter on the subject which seems to be the essence of his complaint. In connection with Dr. Mackay's charges against me he makes several statements that are not in accordance with the facts; for instance he says that I told him positively that the boiler was finished at a certain date, with the exception of making a few holes. I never told him anything of the sort, I knew the boiler was not finished, and I never told him that it should take so many days to do any part of the work. I could not say anything about such work as it is altogether out of my line, and it would be absurd to suppose that I would be undertaking to give opinions or statements with regard to the same. If Dr. Mackay was very anxious to know about the progress of the work, he should have consulted the contractors or asked Mr. Case, the engineer, whose opinion would be worth something as it was directly in his line.

I have thus answered categorically the several charges which Dr. Mackay has laid against me in the discharge of my official duties, and will now refer the matter in connection therewith.

Captain Stewart says further :

After about sixteen years of official service under the government both in customs and quarantine, I beg to say that Dr. Mackay is the only man who has ever made the complaint against me during all that time. Dr. Mackay is a difficult man to get along with as everybody knows. I have no hesitation in referring to Dr. Jones with the utmost confidence that he will give me a certificate of character as a zealous and faithful officer as I have always tried to be.

Dr. Jones, to whom he refers is a warm supporter of the present government, a man who is well known and highly respected in the city of Halifax, and I would like to know from the hon. minister whether he has any statement from Dr. Jones that in any way corroborates the charge of Dr. Mackay that Captain Stewart was at any time guilty of any dereliction of duty in the public service ?

There is another circumstance which seems to place this matter in not a very favourable light, from the standpoint of fair-play. Captain Stewart had sixteen years of good and faithful service to his credit, without a single mark or charge against him up to this time. It is quite true, and I think I may say, without reflecting in any way on Dr. Mackay, that that gentleman is not a particularly easy person to get along with. Any one who knows him and is acquainted with his disposition, knows that he is sometimes a very difficult man to please indeed. Would it not have been fair for the hon. minister, under the circumstances, having this positive and categorical denial of all the charges, to have allowed Captain Stewart to bring evidence in support of the statements he made and to be confronted with the man who made the charges against him to have these charges determined by some impartial tribunal, with the right on both sides to call, and cross-examine witnesses, and thus be given that fair-play to which any man is entitled in respect of his property and character in this country—the right to have a charge against him determined by an impartial tribunal in his presence. But that is not the course which my hon. friend has pursued. It is true that Captain Stewart admits that he went out driving on Margaret's Bay road, but surely for a trivial offence of that kind—if it can be called an offence, which I doubt—after sixteen years faithful service, the Minister of Agriculture ought not to have dismissed an official of this kind. If he were to follow that line of conduct, there are very few officials in his department who would not be subject to instant dismissal, and I am sure that if he tested Dr. Mackay—and I am speaking not without the book in this connection—by that same measure, he would have been compelled to dismiss that gentleman long ago.

The Minister of Agriculture should reconsider this matter. He has dismissed this man without investigation, and on the statement of Dr. Mackay, which is absolutely disputed by Captain Stewart, except in the one respect I have mentioned, the trifling matter of taking a drive of two or three hours out St. Margaret's Bay Road. But that was taken after precautions that the public interests should not suffer. Surely, on facts of that kind a man is not to be dismissed from the public service. Every charge made by Dr. Mackay is met with an exact and categorical denial. And what I say is that the Minister of Agriculture should have some regard to the statement made four or five years ago by the Prime Minister that no man against whom a charge is made should be dismissed without an investigation. Here is a man who seems to have been dismissed without an investigation. He has been in the public service sixteen years, and after giving his work to the country for that time, he is thrown out upon the world without the means of livelihood, no investigation having been held, and no opportunity afforded him of confronting his accusers or of calling witnesses on his own behalf.

There is another circumstance about it which is of an extremely harsh character, and that is that notwithstanding all that this man has paid into the superannuation fund for a number of years, he is absolutely unable to get the slightest satisfaction from the department as to whether any portion of the money paid will be refunded. Does the government propose to keep the money taken from an official in that way? Will the hon. minister add to the consolidated revenue of this country the few dollars which are nothing to the public, but which mean a great deal to this man? Among the correspondence, I have statements showing some of the payments he has made. And it seems to me that the minister has not only treated this man with harshness in dismissing him, but with absolute indifference ever since on the question of these payments. Without casting any reflection upon any official of the department, I may say that the department did not seem to know, for months after Captain Stewart had sent in his denial of these charges, that he had written a letter on the subject at all. On the 13th August, Captain Stewart made his answers to the charges. On the 5th of September he received a letter from the department stating that on the 10th of August he had been written to by the department, but no answer had been received. On the very day he received this letter he sent a telegram:

Replied to letter August 10th on 13th. Will mail copy to you at once.

The 13th would be the day when, in ordinary course of mail, he would receive the letter of August 10th. On the 7th September he received a letter asking why he did not answer the charges. On the same day he received that letter, he telegraphed to the department and also wrote. So far as the correspondence is concerned—if that is any indication of Captain Stewart's conduct as a public servant—he seems to have been up to the mark and to have conducted it in at least as businesslike a way as the department did. On the 16th September he communicated with the department on the question of whether an investigation would be granted or what course would be pursued. The next he heard in relation to this matter was on the 27th November, 1901, when he was coolly informed that, without an investigation, he had been dismissed. And, according to the Order in Council he was dismissed for 'neglect of duty and misconduct and in the interest of the public service.' That remains against his character without his having had a single opportunity of making his defence before any fair tribunal or of meeting his accusers face to face and producing witnesses on his own behalf. I do not suppose my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture desires to be unjust to this man. I understand that, before he entered the public service Captain Stewart was a Conservative in politics. So far as I know, since he has been in the department he has taken no part in politics. If he has been a Conservative in politics in the past, that is no reason why he should be denied a fair trial or investigation. Why should any man in the public service to whom a salary and a position are an asset as much as property is an asset, be deprived of the position he holds and the salary he enjoys without a trial? If that can be done why should not any man be deprived of his property or rights without trial in court? What possible ground can the minister present for treating this officer in the way he has done?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I take no exception to the way in which the leader of the opposition has presented his case. He has presented fairly the facts he has stated, but he has not brought forward the facts which justify the course of the department. I may say that this matter has nothing to do with politics. Captain Stewart's opinions were not in any way the reason for the action taken by the department. Captain Stewart had been for some time in the department as an employee of the Minister of Customs. Years ago, the boat at Halifax was jointly used by the Customs Department and the Department of Agriculture. Some time after the present Minister of Customs and I came into office a change was made. Though it was known to me that Captain Stewart had been a Conservative, I did not take advantage of the change, though it could have been done quite easily, to let him go from the service. This shows that there was no question of politics involved. Whether Captain Stewart has been, since I took office, a Conservative in politics or not, I do not know, and have not sought to ascertain. I certainly did not wish to be harsh in this case—do not like to be harsh in the case of any officer. At the same time, I feel that the discipline of the service must be maintained and, when it comes to a question between an inferior officer and a superior officer, and when the inferior officer has been clearly shown to have been derelict in his duty, it seems to me I must stand by the superior officer and maintain his authority and prestige in the department. Captain Stewart acknowledges that he was absent from duty without leave. He gives excuses, but the statement of his superior officer was very different from the one Captain Stewart gives. Nevertheless, the fact that he was absent without leave was distinctly acknowledged by him. That was a dereliction of duty. But it was something which might have been overlooked if nothing else had occurred. Here was another matter, however, which was much more serious and which hurt the department much more, and was the fact of his laying up the boat two weeks before he ought to have done so, and worse than that, the misrepresentations, the false statements on his part to his superior officer, as his reasons for doing it. Now it may be said that these facts should have been brought out in an investigation. But as I said, we had first of all the statement of his superior officer, and when it comes to a mere matter of denial or assertion between two officers, I think it is more reasonable to accept that of the superior officer than that of the inferior. I have, however, here a letter written by the people who laid the boat up, who worked on the boat, in which they say distinctly that Captain Stewart's statements and representations are not true, and that as a matter of fact he ought not to have laid up the boat then, that there was no need of doing so. This statement is signed by Messrs. Ferguson and Cox, the machinists who were repairing the boiler of the boat, and it is written in answer to a letter from Dr. McKay asking them about it. It contains a clear statement from a disinterested party that Captain Stewart's representations as to his reason for laying up the boat, was incorrect and untruthful. Further than that, I find in a letter from Mr. Case, who was the engineer under Captain Stewart, that the latter had stated that he had been informed by Mr. Case that the boiler was ready to be put into the boat on the 15th of July, and he laid up the boat on the 15th of July. He represented that to Dr. McKay, and in his defence read by the hon. gentleman that is his excuse and his statement. But here is the statement of the engineer, and here is the statement of the people who were repairing the boiler, declaring distinctly that Captain Stewart had made a false statement and a false representation. Under these circumstances, and with these proofs, and with Captain Stewart's acknowledgment that he was away from duty without leave, I felt that in order to maintain the discipline of the station I had nothing to do but to accept the complaints of the superior officer against the subordinate, and to dismiss the subordinate. I do not see how I could have done anything else under the circumstances.

Mr. BORDEN Halifax). If anything could convince one who has examined the papers that there was an absolute necessity for an investigation, it is the answer the hon. gentleman has just made. Dr. McKay states that Captain Stewart made certain statements to him, and then he goes to these men who were to a certain extent under his control, Ferguson and Cox, and gets from them a letter stating that these representations, which he alleges Captain Stewart made to him, were untrue and incorrect. Captain Stewart's statement which I have read, and which the minister has apparently forgotten, if he ever read it—Captain Stewart's defence is, not that these representations were true, but that he made no such representations at all to his superior officer, and he points out the reasons why he could not possibly have made such representations. My hon. friend, in the hurry of departmental business, has apparently overlooked this, and he thinks there is some contradiction of Captain Stewart.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Why was the boat laid up ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He explains why it was laid up, because Mr. Dodwell, the engineer in charge, decided that the boat must be laid up ; and he refers the minister, who apparently has not seen fit to act upon his suggestion—he refers him by implication to Mr. Dodwell, and he refers him by express direction to Mr. Case. But the letters which we have are not a contradiction of Captain Stewart at all, the letters which we have are statements from these men that the alleged representations to Dr. McKay are incorrect. Captain Stewart's answer is that he never made any such representations to Dr. McKay, that he would have no object in doing so. The hon. gentleman himself has demonstrated clearly the absolute necessity there was that this matter should have been referred to an impartial tribunal for inquiry. Then with respect to this alleged dereliction of duty in going out of town, I want to point out to the hon. gentleman further that no vessel came to Halifax that day, there was no detriment to the public service. Captain Stewart was in reach by telephone all the time, he was only a short distance out on the Margaret Bay Road ; and further than that, Mr. Case, the chief engineer who had charge of the boilers and engines while Captain Stewart was away, and the other men in charge were assigned their duties, and even if a vessel had been reported there could have been no possible detriment to the public service. Now the trivial offence of driving out to Margaret Bay Road in one day out of 16 years, is surely not to be assigned by the hon. gentleman as a sufficient reason for the discharge of this man after 16 years of faithful service. I see before me my hon. friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Ross) who was the chief under whom Captain Stewart served for a considerable portion of his time, and I venture to think that my hon. friend from Victoria will corroborate what I have said as to Captain Stewart having been, while under his direction, a faithful, a capable and an efficient officer.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman has tried to infer that Captain Stewart laid this boat up under Mr. Dodwell's orders. There is nothing to justify any such statement. Captain Stewart's statement is this :

I could have no object in pursuing the course with which he charged me; he knew and we all knew the work had to be done, that Mr. Dodwell ordered it to be done, and that Messrs. Ferguson & Cox had the contract.

That does not indicate that anybody had ordered Captain Stewart to lay the boat up then, nor was there any need for it when the boiler was not ready. He laid the boat up a fortnight before the boiler was ready, when these other people stated that the boiler was not ready, and when Captain Stewart knew it was not ready.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Assuming that his view of the facts is correct, which I do not admit, does my hon. friend suggest that an error of judgment in laying the boat up a fortnight beforehand, is a sufficient reason for discharging this man after 16 years of faithful service ? I do not think he will take that position.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) As the leader of the opposition has appealed to me, I may say, speaking from recollection, that I think Captain Stewart was under me for about ten years. I did not know anything about his politics, whether he had any or not. I found him punctual, steady and attentive. His duties were to go out in his boat upon the harbour and see if there were any arrivals and to report himself to the customs collector in the morning and again in the afternoon. I never had any cause of complaint against him during all the time he was under me, and I am not aware that my successor in the custom-house had any reason to complain of him. I think I may say that if he had been continued under my successor in the custom-house, he would likely have been in his former position to-day. I may say again that this matter was brought to my notice in Halifax. My course, while in the custom-house when any officer neglected his duty, was to suspend him for a certain time and then restore him so as to give him another trial. My own feeling at the time was that to dismiss Captain Stewart without giving him a chance, after two or three months suspension, was, perhaps, applying to the case a more severe discipline than it merited.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Did the hon. member for Victoria, N.S. (Mr. Ross) ever have any occasion to suspend this officer ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I never had any occasion to find fault with him during all the time he was under me.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is the hon. Minister of Agriculture going to restore this officer to his position ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I fear it would be quite impossible to maintain the discipline of the port if he were to be restored. It is evident that the tension between the subordinate and superior officers in consequence of this trouble had reached such a point that discipline could not be maintained if this officer were to be restored. In addition to the inferior officer having been derelict in his duty he has also made accusations against his superior officer.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has he had an opportunity of proving the accusations against his superior officer ? It is no crime for a junior officer to make accusations against a superior officer in this country. Fortunately we have here no tyranny such as that. Does the hon. minister mean to say that the fact of Captain Stewart simply making charges against his superior officer is a justification for dismissing the junior officer ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, I did not say that. He was dismissed in consequence of the facts which have already been laid before the House, and not because he made charges against his superior officer.

Mr. HACKETT. After hearing the statement that the hon. minister has made, I think it is the superior officer and not the subordinate officer who is to blame on this occasion. The proper course for the superior officer to pursue, as we are informed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross, Victoria) who has had the experience of many years in the service, would be to suspend this officer if he was charged with a dereliction of duty instead of dismissing him in the arbitrary manner in which he was dismissed. This is not British fair-play or British justice. This gentleman who had been in the service for a long time, as we have been informed by the hon. member for Victoria, N.S., had the right to a fair trial. He might have been suspended by his superior officer and after investigation if he was found guilty of a dereliction of duty, then, he might have been dismissed. But, we find the superior officer, without giving this man an opportunity of pleading his case, or representing his case before his superior officer, dismisses him in the most arbitrary manner. It is the superior officer and not the subordinate who was guilty in this respect. Captain Stewart should be restored to his position and the man who dismissed him without investigation should be dismissed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to say to the hon. Minister of Agriculture that I have not used all the material in my possession, because I do not desire to do so at present. I would like him to give this matter some consideration, and at a future time I may ask him as to what course he will take in regard to certain officers in his department in the province of Nova Scotia against whom certain neglect of duty very much more serious than anything that has been urged against Captain Stewart can be proved, if I am correctly informed. I will ask the hon. gentleman on a subsequent occasion, with that information in my hand, as to what course he will take if the charges which I will mention to him can be proved, and whether he will give any opportunity of proving them. What is right for one officer in the hon. gentleman's department, if politics do not touch this matter, will be equally right and just for any other officer in this department. I would like the hon. gentleman to give this matter some consideration and probably at a subsequent date I will take the opportunity of bringing to his attention certain information which has been placed in my possession in regard to the management of his department by other officers in the province of Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly. I can take no exception to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) availing himself of such an opportunity, and I can assure him that if wrong-doing is proved against any of my officers I shall treat them in the way that is merited in consequence of it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is a perfectly fair answer.

Cattle quarantines and veterinary division, $70,000.

Mr. McGOWAN. Is this for the tuberculin cattle test?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is included in this vote.

Mr. McGOWAN. We want to know something about it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman will let me know in what particulars he wishes information, I will be very glad to give it to him.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain the item.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This item, I may say, is a combination of three items, which we have been in the habit of placing in our estimates for years. We have always had an item for general quarantine service, including cattle quarantine, an item for hog cholera and an item for tuberculosis The item for hog cholera was to pay the expenses in connection with the outbreaks of hog cholera and to pay compensation for the animals we slaughtered. The item for tuberculosis was to deal with that disease in the country and to guard against its introduction into the country. The item for general cattle quarantine was for the purpose of maintaining the general quarantine staff and of providing quarantine especially at our seaports, and at one point between us and the United States, and also to provide for certain work that has been done inside the country by the general staff. I have found by experience that sometimes one division of this work was less expensive; for instance, there might be more outbreaks of hog cholera and perhaps very little work in connection with tuberculosis. The result has been on several occasions in the last few years that I have had a surplus in one vote and a deficit in the other. Still the vote being devoted to a certain kind of work, I was not able to utilize the surplus of one to meet the deficit of the other. The work is considerably mixed up. The same officers deal with the work under the different votes, and it is difficult to apportion each part of the vote to their different duties. I have, therefore, asked the House to give me one vote of $70,000 this year for the whole veterinary division. The three votes last year amounted to $75,000, but unless there is more disease in the country than we expect, I think I can do with $5,000 less.

Mr. CLANCY. Is the minister disposed to take into consideration the strong protest made by very prominent gentlemen with regard to the tuberculin test. The minister is aware that the test has become very unpopular, and the protest against it comes from those who are in a position to judge of its value. I am informed that the Minister of Agriculture is at cross purposes with Mr. Dryden, the Ontario Minister of Agriculture, in regard to this matter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clancy) alludes to a newspaper report of a meeting of the Shorthorn Breeders' Association at which they condemned the tuberculin test. The minutes of that meeting contain no such resolution as was reported in the papers. On the contrary, there is a resolution in the minutes dealing with the 90 days quarantine against Great Britain, and another resolution expressing the hope that they may have an opportunity of discussing the question of the tuberculin test with the chief veterinarian. I am very glad to meet them in that way, and as a matter of fact the chief veterinarian has already commenced a discussion with these gentlemen on the matter.

Mr. CLANCY. I did not make any reference to any resolution, but I said that strong protests were made by certain very prominent live stock breeders. I do not think the minister will deny that these protests have been made.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am aware that certain protests have been made. I have had myself a good deal of correspondence with certain gentlemen on this question, and representations have been made to me which I have replied to in regard to statements of fact and also in regard to the question of quarantine. This question is considerably complicated and a good many of the statements made have been made without full knowledge of certain facts which I have been able to bring to the attention of these gentlemen. Not more than a couple of weeks ago a meeting of the Executive of the Shorthorn Breeders' Association (at which several of the gentlemen who made the strongest protests to me were present), discussed this question with Dr. Rutherford. There was a pretty unanimous expression of opinion that it was well to have further discussion, and that the situation was not such to-day as these gentlemen thought it was when they made the representations. There are reasons why, in the interest of the stock-breeders of this country, it would not be wise for me to state more than I have said in the present condition of the discussion with my department.

Mr. McGOWAN. At Guelph, the hon. Mr. Dryden was very emphatic in his protest against this tuberculin test, and I think he had the sympathy of most of the breeders who were present at that time.

THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think I appreciate the situation fully with regard to that, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that I am willing to do all that I possibly can to facilitate the importation, provided the interests of the live stock breeders of this country are not jeopardized.

Mr. CLANCY. Has not the hon. minister practically tied his hands by the quarantine arrangements he has made. Is it not a fact that if it is thought well to give effect to these protests it will practically overturn the arrangements made by the minister. If that be the only reason the minister has for refusing to abolish the test, that objection should not be allowed to stand in the way.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can only say that the reason which I have alluded to and which I would not care to state to-night, are not reasons which relate to any work I have done, but are simply in the interest of the live stock trade of the country, as the gentlemen with whom I have discussed the matter fully appreciate.

Customs—Salaries and contingent expenses of the several ports, $969,865.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is an increase of $10,000 in this item, and it is one that is absolutely necessary in the growing work of the department.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman passed a eulogium on his officers not long since, showing how well and economically the service was being conducted, and how the expenses were going down; but it would seem that the growing time is increasing salaries and causing the opposite course to be taken from that stated by the hon. gentleman not many hours ago. Perhaps he will tell us where these increases are made.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I shall be glad to do that. The increase in work is something like 5 or 6 per cent over last year, while the increase in the expenditure amounts to one and one-half per cent. There are applications from officers in all parts of the Dominion for increases, and they receive the best consideration which we are able to give them, but we cannot meet the wishes of all by any manner of means. It is intended at the beginning of the fiscal year to do something for such officers as we consider are underpaid, if the House gives us this amount of money. We also find that during the year expenses come upon us which cannot be foreseen, in the growing business of the country, and I have to ask the House to have some confidence in me, and to allow me the amount I ask, which will not be expended unless it is absolutely required. I think the hon. gentleman will agree that while the expenditure is increasing the work is increasing much more. I do not simply mean that we are taking in extra revenue, but that owing to the immense increase of traffic receipts, the number of entries has greatly increased the amount of clerical work that has to be performed and the outside services that have to be rendered in the transit of goods. For instance, I have now a requisition from my inspector who says that it is necessary to have two extra men at Fort Erie, in order that the increasing transfer work may be properly attended to. Of course, there is no revenue derived from that. Along the boundary in the eastern townships we have the same thing to look after. At Depot Harbour, where a couple of years ago we had none, it is necessary for us to have one officer all the time, and perhaps this year we may have to have two. I merely cite these as illustrations of the work that cannot be foreseen; and I have to ask the House to have some confidence in me, because in reality I have to provide for a year and a half ahead. We cannot tell what demand will be made upon us. I can only assure hon. gentlemen that there is no extravagance so far as I know. In fact many of the officers to whom we have found ourselves unable to give any increase, have made out a pretty strong case, and we have to try to meet these cases and do justice as far as we can.

Mr. LAVELL. I hope the minister will bear in mind the need of an additional transfer officer at Smith's Falls, where the transfer work has very largely increased.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I thank the hon. gentleman for reminding me of that. That is just one illustration of what I have been saying. Such an appointment is one which cannot be deferred much longer in the interest of the service.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has the minister dispensed with the services of any of his officers during the past year ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I dare say there have been some—not many, I think.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will he recall them ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. During the past year I think there was only one, He was at Windsor. Unfortunately we had two or three cases, which I regret very much for the sake of the parties involved, in which there were defalcations. Although these were made good to the department, the view taken by the department is that it is dangerous to exercise clemency in cases involving money. Though if I had followed my own feelings I would have gladly have done so. In a case of neglect of duty or perhaps intemperance, there is a suspension for a little time and a restoration ; but where there has been a misappropriation of funds, we have felt it necessary to make an invariable rule applicable to all officers in all parts of the Dominion. But there have not been many dismissals.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). None for poliitcal partisanship, I suppose ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, I do not remember any for partisanship during the past year. There were some after the election of 1896, but that is all over.

Mr. WILSON. I would like to ask the minister whether the landing waiter at Napanee, Mr. C. B. Perry, has resigned, and if so, whether it is his intention to appoint another.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The landing waiter at Napanee unfortunately had a paralytic stroke, and his resignation, I believe, is in the department, and I think the Treasury Board has acted upon it. If I remember rightly it was recommended that he be superannuated, but I think he was given two or three months leave of absence, the superannuation to take effect at the end of that time. A new officer will have to be appointed there, or, if I am not mistaken, he has been appointed.

Mr. WILSON. Will the minister let us know to-morrow whether he is appointed, and if so, who he is ? Of course he will hardly tell us who recommended him.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I recommended him myself, I suppose. I think the gentleman who has been recommended is Mr. Hanley.

Mr. WILSON. I suppose that is Mr. Hanley who has been station-master a great many years ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not the information here, but if the hon. gentleman will call at my office I will not have the slightest hesitation in telling him.

Mr. HACKETT. Was Mr. James Curry, formerly collector of customs at Charlottetown retired from the service, and if so, why ? Were any charges brought against him ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think that he was superannuated and a successor appointed.

Mr. HACKETT. How old was he ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not the civil service list, but he must have been between 60 and 70. Perhaps the hon. gentleman knows his age.

Mr. HACKETT. Would the hon. minister state upon whose recommendation he was retired ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not expect to be asked for the details and have not got the information here, but I will bring it to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HACKETT. I am very pleased to hear that the minister will bring the information. I know Mr. Curry. He is a man of middle age, in splendid vigour, and quite as competent for the duties of the office as ever he was.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. How old is he ?

Mr. HACKETT. A little over 60, and but very few years older than the man who was appointed in his place.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The successor is generally older.

Mr. HACKETT. In this case he is younger but only by very few years. I have known Mr. Curry since he has been in the public service, and I know that a better, more faithful and more efficient officer could not be had, and he is quite as capable to-day as he was 20 years ago.

Mr. CLANCY. Why was he retired ?

Mr. HACKETT. To make place for a party heeler—a man who supported the government and for whom no place could be found unless somebody else's head were rolled into the basket. I have nothing to say about his successor, but he is not much younger than Mr. Curry. Mr. Curry must have been superannuated on the recommendation or report of one of the officials of the department. Mr. McLaren is the inspector of customs for the lower provinces, and I would like to know if he reported that Mr. Curry should be superannuated on account of age.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will find out and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to ask the minister if any portion of this increase of $10,000 is intended to be used for the purpose of making the town of Dresden a port of entry. Very strong pressure has been brought on the hon. gentleman's department to make it a port of entry. I admit that the business done there in the past would perhaps not have warranted his doing so, but a large beet sugar industry is well under way there, it is now doing a considerable export and import business, and the people are without those facilities to which a place of the importance which Dresden has suddenly developed is entitled to. The people there should not be obliged to go to Wallaceburg, twelve miles away on the one hand or to Chatham twelve miles away on the other, and I cannot conceive of any more pressing case than this one. More than half a million dollars are being expended there now, large quantities of goods are being shipped from other ports and are being brought in, and to make it a port of entry would not entail an expenditure of more than $400 to $500. Or it might be made an outport of the town of Wallaceburg, if nothing better could be done. If the hon. minister knew all the circumstances and was aware of all the possibilities with regard to the business of the place, he would grant my request. If no portion of this vote is to go for that purpose, I would ask my hon. friend to make provision for it in the supplementaries, which no doubt he will bring down.

Mr. STEPHENS. I wish to back up my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) in his request. Dresden is a growing town. A large beet-root sugar factory is being built there, and it is fully entitled to a customs officer. Many smaller places have such accommodation. I have been asked to press this claim on the minister, and I did put it before him at one time but he did not give me very much encouragement. I hope, however, he will see his way clear to open an office there this year.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This is just another instance in which it is desirable to trust me a little in the matter of increasing the expenditure. This is one of the many places asking to be made a port of entry or the outport of some other port. We are unable to meet all the applications, and our usual plan is to send down one of our inspectors to visit the place and ascertain what amount of business is done, and the revenue likely to be derived, and be guided in a large measure by his report. I endeavour to accommodate the people as much as possible. By what my hon. friend as told me, Dresden is likely to become a much more important point than it has been, and while we may not be able to see our way clear to give it the facilities of a port at present, perhaps before I have the opportunity of asking a grant another year, it may become apparent that it should be made an outport. This vote covers the whole Dominion except the Yukon, and I could not possibly meet all the requisitions made out of this vote, but the matter is engaging the attention of the department, and if we have not a report already from the inspector, he will be asked to furnish it.

Mr. CLANCY. I am very glad that the hon. gentleman has this place in his mind, and I hope that before the session closes he will see his way clear to grant the request. Where did they enter principally, Chatham or Wallaceburg ?

Mr. CLANCY. When navigation was closed, it would enter at Chatham, but during the season of navigation probably some would come from the American side by rail, and some by water, requiring entries to be made at both places. I am glad the minister has said that he will take the matter into consideration, and hope that before the session closes we will be able to settle it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Is it to Dresden or to Wallaceburgh that they are moving the factory from Michigan ?

Mr. CLANCY. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) is under a misapprehension. In the early history of the Wallaceburgh factory there was some negotiation looking to an arrangement of that kind. The Benton Harbour sugar factory, it seems, had been built in a locality that turned out unsuitable for the growth of the sugar beet. They did not come to an arrangement with regard to Wallaceburgh, but Berlin, I believe, has been chosen as the place to which the Benton Harbour factory is to be removed. The buildings at Dresden and Wallaceburgh are new, and so are the plants. Taking the two places together, the probability is that about a million and a quarter will be spent. So, the hon. gentleman will see, that it is very important that facilities should be afforded.

Mr. WILSON. Is the collector of customs at Napanee also the collector of inland revenue and inspector of gas meters ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In the absence of my colleague the Minister of Inland Revenue, I am unable to answer that question definitely.

Mr. WILSON. I think Inspector Johnson, of Belleville, inspects the gas.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am under the impression—but I may be wrong—that the collector of customs at Napanee is an officer of the Customs Department alone.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Johnson inspects the electric light.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. And gas too, I fancy.

Mr. WILSON. I may say that this man's predecessor was collector of inland revenue and gas inspector, and I think the hon. gentleman will find that the present collector of customs at Napanee is also collector of inland revenue. I have no objection to that, but wished to know the facts.

Customs laboratory—to meet expenditure in connection with the testing of sugar, molasses, &c., including pay of officers appointed or employed for that purpose, $121,500.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There is an increase of $5,000. That is accounted for by the fact that one of the appraisers who was formerly paid from the inside vote has been transferred to the Board of Customs staff. This was Mr. Breadner, whose salary is $1,500. He is check clerk and Dominion appraiser. As the others were paid out of the outside vote, it was thought desirable that he should be paid from the same source. He is one of the Board of Appraisers. We have appointed an additional special officer at $1,000 a year to appraise machinery imported. There is a great deal of machinery coming in. For instance, sawmills have been removed from Michigan and are brought to Sarnia and other points in western Ontario. Of course this is second hand machinery, and we wanted an expert judge of the values of it. I think we have secured a good one.

Mr. CLANCY. Who is he ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. He is a gentleman who was for many years one of the foremen in the large machine shops of the Waterous firm at Brantford.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That is where the Minister of Customs comes from.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, though I do not represent that riding now, as the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. LAVELL. What work is done in the Customs laboratory ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We have a chemist, with some young ladies as assistants. When we adopted the new tariff we reverted to the old polariscopic test for sugar. Samples have to come here from all over the Dominion to be tested. That is the principal work in the laboratory.

Mr. LAVELL. Are no other articles examined there ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. For instance, there are patent medicines. As the hon. gentleman knows, if there are spirits in these articles, however small the quantity, the duty is double. These have to be tested. Many other articles also have to be tested in the laboratory. But the greater part of the work is the polariscopic test of sugar.

Mr. LAVELL. I mentioned the matter because it seems to me that in some ways the work might be extened. There is one item that comes under the attention of the Minister of Inland Revenue. But, so far as the goods are imported, it seems to me that the analysis and test might be made at the border. I refer to fertilizers. Under the Act, only fertilizers having a certain quantity of nitrogen or phosphorous or both can be sold in Canada. These articles are manufactured in Canada, and when so manufactured come under the test of the Inland Revenue Department. And so do the others, for that matter. I notice that in the last bulletin, No. 75, issued by the Inland Revenue Department, there are a large number of cases where the requirements of the Act are not complied with, and, almost invariably they are fertilizers that have been imported. This ia a matter to which I intended to call the attention of the Minister of Inland Revenue, but the importation of fertilizers affects the Customs Department. The Act says :

No fertilizer shall be sold or offered or exposed for sale unless it contains at least eight per cent of available phosphoric acid, or four per cent of ammonia or its equivalent in nitrogen or nitric acid ; or, when both phosphoric acid and ammonia are present, at least five per cent of available phosphoric acid and two per cent of ammonia or its equivalent in nitrogen or nitric acid.

I find that almost the bulk of the fertilizers imported have under the percentage that is called for and which is required from the manufacturers in Canada. I know at the present time it does not appear to come under the department of the Minister of Customs; but I think it would be a wise thing if these fertilizers as they are imported could be analyzed in the customs laboratory, for once they get into this country it is hard to follow them up.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That work has been wholly done by the Inland Revenue Department.

Mr. LAVELL. But it is only done when samples are found here afterwards. And it seems to me the place to head them off is in the Customs Department at the border. Might it not be possible to have articles like that also analyzed in the customs laboratory ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will remember what the hon. gentleman says, and I will discuss with the commissioner to see what can be done. It has been done hitherto by the Department of Inland Revenue, and I thought it had been done well. I think they are required to send samples of all these fertilizers to the Department of Inland Revenue.

Mr. LAVELL. I think they do so, because an analysis of some samples is given here. I find on one page samples of some eight or ten compound fertilizers, every one of which is a long way below the percentage required.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the Act prescribes what shall be the ingredients of the fertilizers ?

Mr. LAVELL. Not exactly the ingredients. I read the Act, that is subsection 2 of section 7. It does not say what other ingredients the compound must contain, but these ingredients must be present that are mentioned, or they cannot be sold within the Act to which Canadian manufacturers are compelled to conform. It seems to me that those importing fertilizers into this country should be subject to some test, and it could be most readily made by the customs officer at the border.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to point out to the Minister of Customs that he seems to have got a very extraordinary conglomeration of subjects under this item. I should think it would be far better to divide the vote according to the different items. He begins with salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports and travelling expenses of other officers in the preventive service; then he goes to the customs laboratory and to an expenditure in connection with the test of sugar, molasses, &c., then he leaves that and goes to the board of customs ; he leaves that and goes to salaries of officers employed for compiling statistical returns. It is a remarkable mixture of subjects to include under one vote. Perhaps it has always been so, but if that is the case, it is not any more justifiable. The object of dividing these votes into items as to restrict the expenditure for specific subjects to the amount voted. When you bring together subjects so dissimilar in their nature under one enormous vote of $121,000, it does not seem to me that we are carrying out the idea of parliamentary control to any appreciable extent. Has the item always been voted in this way ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why are these subjects grouped together which have no possible connection with each other ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That vote is what we term the outside vote. The inspectors and their travelling expenses are connected with the outside service, and the appraisers are paid out of this vote. The statistical branch has been brought to Ottawa from the outside, and the work is being done here. The quarterly returns were all prepared at the different ports throughout the Dominion and were sent up to Ottawa where they were compiled and published in the Trade and Navigation Returns. When we instituted this statistical department, in order to get out the monthly statements, the officers performing the duties at the different outside points were brought here. It is really outside work, but they were brought here and are doing it here. That being the case, it was put in under this vote. There are a large number employed, and it was thought desirable they should be placed under that vote instead of being brought into the inside service. Perhaps some of them could not come under the inside service from being over age.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not finding any fault with the removal of the officers to Ottawa for the purpose of preparing these statistical returns. While I do not know much about it, I believe it was regarded by people who were competent to judge as rather a good move. But I wish to know why we should group together travelling expenses, the testing of sugar and molasses, the board of customs and statistical returns. This may be all right, but why group them under one item ? The idea of parliamentary control of the expenditure is inconsistent with that. You might come down to this House and ask us for $57,000,000 for the general expenditure of this country ; that might be convenient for the government, but it would not be consistent with the idea of parliamentary control of expenditure. I would like to have an opportunity of looking into that to see whether there has been any recent change made in the manner of presenting this class of votes. Perhaps, as the hon. gentleman has not his assistant here, and has not been able to give us some information we have asked for, it would be as well to let the item stand and not go any further to-night. I noticed a moment ago there were only thirteen gentlemen on the government side of the House.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Shall we vote them down ?

Mr. BORDEN Halifax). I do not think we, perhaps, had better proceed with this item.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have no objection at all if the hon. gentleman desires to allow the item to stand. That is the way it was passed last year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There are some gentlemen who take a little interest in this department who are not here.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Shall we take up any other items or allow the whole thing to stand ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps, as we had rather a late session this morning, we had better allow it to stand. I do not think it will delay the hon. gentleman in any way. We will try to expedite his estimate.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like some information, when the hon. gentleman discusses the other items, in respect to the investigation made at the St. Thomas port of entry in regard to the last collector of customs.

Mr. BOYD. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Customs to the matter of the inspection of coal oil at Port Arthur. During the discussion with the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Bernier), while his estimates were being voted, the matter of the abominable coal oil that passed the customs officer and which went broadcast over the country thereby becoming a scandal, the question was asked as to who was responsible for it and the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, whom we believed at that time to be responsible, said that it was the collector of customs at that port who was responsible. I would like the hon. Minister of Customs to be able to say to the House if he has had any complaints against that inspection, or what explanation his officer has made when he takes his estimates up again. I assume that it cannot have been unknown to the government, or to the minister who has charge of the officer at Port Arthur, that he permitted this enormous quantity of inferior coal oil to cover the whole country from Edmonton to the Red River as was shown by every hon. member from the North-west Territories during the time the question was under discussion with the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I was not in the House when the question was discussed with the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue but, knowing that the question had arisen, I thought we had better have inquiries made about it and I had inquiries made. I did not know whether the discussion would be renewed again or not, but the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Simmons), wishing to go home. I said to him that I did not think my estimates would be reached before he came back. He has gone and now that the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has asked me to let my estimates remain and as the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) has mentioned a question that he desires information on before we go on, perhaps I had better alow my estimates to stand till the hon. member for East Lambton comes back, lest he might think it was a breach of faith on my part, although I told him that I could not tell whether the question would come up or not, and so, my estimates, if there are others ready to be gone on with, may be allowed to stand until next week.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. member for East Lambton stated to me to-day that he had an understanding with the hon. Minister of Customs. He intimated that he was going home and that he felt some security in being able to leave for a day or two in consequence of that understanding.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I would not have gone on to-night at all but there did not seem to be any of my colleagues ready to go on. But I had made up my mind that if the question arose I would ask that an item be allowed to stand upon which to discuss it on a future occasion. If any of my colleagues are ready to go on, my estimates had better stand until next week.

Mr. McGOWAN. Referring to page 169 of the report of the hon. gentleman's department, I would like to know whether the linseed oil mentioned there is entered as imperiol gallons ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I expect so.

Mr. McGOWAN. Do you know as a fact ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will make inquiry. The hon. gentleman is referring to imported oil ?

Mr. McGOWAN. Yes, imported oil. The American gallon is less than our gallon.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. McGOWAN. Is the quantity entered given in imperiol gallons ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, I have no doubt about it.

Mr. HACKETT. Referring to the matter we were discussing a moment ago in regard to the collector at Charlottetown the hon. minister said that he had not the civil list and that he could not tell the age of that gentleman. I have taken the pains to send for the civil list and I find that James Currie was born on the 7th January, 1835, which would make him 67 years of age. He was appointed to his position on the 10th May, 1880, so that he was 22 years in the service. Of course, he was capable of being superannuated. I find also that Mr. William Albert Lochart was appointed collector of customs at the port of St. John, a very important port, on the 7th May, 1900, and that he was born on the 11th March, 1835, being just the same age as Mr. Currie when he was appointed to that position. Mr. Currie has been superannuated because of old age and Mr. Lockhart who is of the same age was appointed two years ago as collector of customs at the port of St. John. I consider that scarcely fair. Mr. Currie belongs to that race of men who, at 60 or 70 years of age, are active and vigorous as may be instanced by our good friend from Victoria, N.S. (Mr. Ross) who is 80 years of age and who is active and vigorous still. I say it is entirely wrong for this man to be superannuated at the age of 67 when you appointed a man two years ago at the port of St. John of the same age, and especially when you superannuated Mr. Currie, not because of old age, but because you desired to find a place for an importunate partisan.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 17, 1902.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY RATES.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick), moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 116) to amend the provision with respect to tolls of chapter 1 of the statutes of 1881 respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway.

He said: The House is aware that in January last an Order in Council was passed authorizing the Canadian Pacific Railway to increase its capital stock by $20,000,000. The Order in Council provided that no part of this stock shall be issued at less than par and also defined the purposes to which the money to be derived from the sale of the stock shall be applied.

It further provides that this increase of stock shall not in any way, be considered as affecting the question of the control of the government over the rates of the company after its earning power has increased to the extent of 10 per cent or 15 per cent on its capital. In order that the House should be fully informed of all the facts, I would ask permission to state the legislation which was in existence previous to the passing of this Order in Council, and which would be affected by the Bill I now introduce.

The statutory provisions relating to the ordinary capital stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are very few and may be stated as follows :

Section 2 of the company's charter, being schedule 'A' of 44 Vic., chap. 1 (Canada) fixes the capital stock of the company at $25,000,000 divided into shares of $100 each and provides that such shares, or any part thereof, may be granted and issued as paid up shares for value bona fide received by the company either in money, at par, or at such price and upon such conditions as the board of directors may fix, or as part of the consideration of any contract made by the company.

This section, it will be observed, enables the directors to sell shares at a discount.

Subsection 20, of section 7, of the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879, enables a railway company, subject to its provisions (and in this respect the Canadian Pacific Railway is subject to its provisions) to increase its original capital stock from time to time to any amount subject to the approval of its shareholders in the manner and form set forth in the said subsection 20.

Under this subsection the capital stock of this company was raised to $100,000,000.

By section 10 of 47 Vic., chap. 1 (1884) the capital stock is limited to $100,000,000, of which $65,000,000 was issued to shareholders and $35,000,000 was deposited with the Dominion government.

By section 3 of 48-49 Vic., chap. 57 (1885) the $35,000,000 of stock then in the hands of the Dominion government was ordered to be cancelled and destroyed, and any further issue was prohibited without the special authority of parliament.

The next and last statute in order is 55-56 Vic., chap. 53 (1892). Sections 3, 4 and 7 of this Act, which are the sections bearing upon the matter, are as follows :

3. In addition to its capital stock at the time of the passing of this Act, and to any which may be issued under the authority of the next preceding section, the company, being first authorized so to do by a vote of at least two-thirds of its shareholders, present or represented at a special general meeting duly called for the purpose, may, from time to time, issue shares of capital stock for any purpose for which the company requires new capital, in such amounts and at such times as the shareholders by resolution at any such meeting determine—such issue being first approved by the Governor in Council and notice of such meeting having been given in writing to each shareholder, delivered to him personally, or properly directed to him and deposited in the post office at least twenty days previously to such meeting, stating the time, place and object of such meeting, and the amount of the proposed increase.

Section 4 reads :

All shares of capital stock issued under the authority of this Act shall be subject to all the provisions of section 2 of the company's charter, as fully as if they were part of the capital stock therein named.

(7) The proceeds of each issue of shares of capital stock or of consolidated debenture stock under the authority of this Act shall be applied by the company exclusively to the purpose for which the shareholders authorized such issue.

In the Bill I have the honour to lay before the House, the government has taken the precaution to make it a matter of statute that the money shall be applied to the purposes for which it was said to be necessary at the time the Order in Council was applied for.

Now, with respect to the tolls. At the time of the incorporation of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, railways were regulated by the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879, being 42 Victoria, chapter 9, which Act, in so far as its provisions are applicable to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in so far as they are not inconsistent with, or contrary to the provisions of the company's charter, and save and except as is specifically provided in the charter, is incorporated with the Canadian Pacific Railway charter. The only provision in this statute which need be referred to is subsection 11 of section 17, which reads :

(11) The parliament of Canada may, from time to time, reduce the tolls upon the railway, but not without consent of the company, so as to produce less than fifteen per cent per annum profit on the capital actually expended in its construction; nor unless, on an examination made by the Minister of Public Works of the amount received and expended by the company, the net income from all sources, for the year then last passed, is found to have exceeded fifteen per cent upon the capital so actually expended.

The only other legislation in existence is section 20 of schedule 'A' of the company's Act of incorporation, 44 Victoria, chapter 1, which provides:

(20) The limit to the reduction of tolls by the parliament of Canada provided for by the eleventh subsection of the 17th section of 'The Consolidated Railway Act, 1879' respecting tolls, is hereby extended so that such reduction may be to such an extent that such tolls, when reduced, shall not produce less than ten per cent per annum profit on the capital actually expended in the construction of the railway, instead of not less than fifteen per cent per annum profit, as provided by the said subsection; and so also that such reduction shall not be made unless the net income of the company, ascertained as described in said subsection, shall have exceeded ten per cent per annum instead of fifteen per cent per annum as provided by said subsection.

And the exercise by the Governor in Council of the power of reducing the tolls of the company, as provided by the tenth subsection of said section 17 is hereby limited to the same extent with relation to the profit of the company, and to its net revenue, as to which the power of parliament to reduce tolls is limited by said subsection eleven as hereby amended.

Now, subsection 11 of section 17 of the Act of 1879 has been repealed; but I still hold that it must be taken as forming part of the company's charter, and must be referred to in order to understand section 20, which I have just quoted. I have gone carefully through all the legislation, and am quite satisfied that there is not now in existence any clause similar to subsection 11, and this subsection and section 20 of the charter form the only legislation which need be referred to on the subject of tolls. Subsection 11 was re-enacted by the Consolidated Railway Act of 1886, and appears there as subsection 11 of section 16, but it was not re-enacted in 1888 when the Railway Act was again consolidated. Now, the Order in Council of January 23rd of 1902, so far as it relates to the increase of capital stock, went into force as soon as it was passed, and has been acted upon by the company.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What was the wording of that subsection 11?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have given this with so much detail that, if hon. gentlemen will look at 'Hansard' to-morrow, they will see what my brief really is. Subsection 11 was re-enacted, as I say, in 1886, but was not re-enacted in 1888. At the same time, in order to understand section 20 of schedule 'A' of the company's Act, which refers to this section 11, it is necessary to read section 11 in conjunction with it. Now, this legislation was necessary only with respect to two points: with respect to issuing any part of this amount of capital stock at less than par—for under their charter they would have had the right to do so—and there is a restriction that the $20,000,000 shall not be issued at less than par; and then with respect to the tolls it is made a matter of special stipulation that when you come to apply section 20 for the regulation of tolls, this additional $20,000,000 shall not be taken into account. And, further, they have thought proper, at the suggestion of the Minister of the Interior, to provide that this money shall be specifically applied for the purposes for which the company say they require to have it—that is, it shall be applied in the improvement of the property of the company.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The company are a consenting party to this, I suppose?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then, if I understand the minister clearly, this Bill leaves the company in the same position as they were in before being allowed to issue this twenty millions of stock and expend it upon the road. That is to say, the 10 per cent or the 15 per cent, as the case may be, which is provided in the Railway Act or in their charter, shall be only calculated on the $65,000,000 of stock as it is at the present moment?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is perfectly right.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). This Bill is a very important one. There long have been grievances in this country in regard to tolls on the Canadian Pacific Railway. This government is on record, some years ago, when the Crow's Nest Pass legislation was introduced, as favouring a principle which was in the public interest—that if the Canadian Pacific Railway were to get any further concessions from parliament they were to give concessions to the people in return. Now, legislation is introduced giving increased stock powers to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and yet the public grievances existing under the original charter are not being dealt with. These grievances are mainly two. First, there is the regulation of the rates after 10 per cent profit is earned. There is no proposition in this Bill, so far as I can gather, to deal with that. The government told us last year that it was their intention to deal with this question by proceeding to ascertain what the actual cost of the railway was, and on what amount this 10 per cent should be allowed. Are there provisions in this Bill for that being done? Here is a government that says that the transportation problem is the great problem. But what are they doing to ascertain the actual cost of this road, and so protect the public? The profit of that road, I venture to say, is away above this 10 per cent. Their statements show it. The time has come when the freights ought to be regulated, and a law passed that the government, in the interests of the people, should ascertain what the cost of the railway was. Another grievance against the Canadian Pacific Railway is that of the exemption from taxation of their land grant. It was a very important question last session, and we were told that legislation was to be introduced, and these lands were very shortly to come under taxation, or, at least, a test case was to be made. And I believe that test is promised to be made. But that is not the way to cure this great grievance. The principle to be adopted is that recognized by the government in the Crow's Nest Pass case—that if a company are to get concessions, they are to make concessions. But here we see things done in the old way,—the old rule is followed, and everything the company wish is being granted, but the two substantial grievances, the exemption of the company's lands and the question of the tolls based upon the actual cost of the road, are not dealt with. I now point out to the House that the government are abandoning that principle which they claimed to be in the public interest in 1897, when the Crow's Nest Pass legislation went through, and they are not taking advantage of the opportunity offered them to procure the settlement of these two grievances which the public are labouring under. Then, as to the raising of this $20,000,000. I contend that a great deal of the money could be raised on the bonds of the company and a great deal of it could be paid out of the current earnings. But it is all to be raised on stock, notwithstanding the provisions of this Act and notwitshtanding that it more or less endangers the power of the public to regulate the rates under this 10 per cent clause. Had the government really been in earnest in seeking to promote the interests of transportation in the country, they would have said to the company: If you intend to issue $20,000,000 worth of stock, as your road is a fine road, we intend to take that stock on behalf of the people of Canada.

But we see none of these things advocated in this Bill. The public grievances are not corrected, there is no effort to correct them. There is no regulation of rates that we were promised long ago. And who were the gentlemen that howled against the rates in that awful charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway, if it was not hon. gentlemen opposite? Now they are in power, now they have an opportunity to remove some of these grievances, especially in respect to the regulation of rates. They know the rates are wrong, and they claim, to have secured a reduction of them in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. Now was the time, not to send the question to the law courts or a special committee to ascertain the actual cost of the road, but now was the time when they should have sat down with the directors of the company in the same way they did with the Crow's Nest Pass Company, and said: Gentlemen, we will give you your increased capital if you state to-day that you are under the 10 per cent clause. I believe they would have been prepared to say they would come under the 10 per cent clause; and therefore the whole question of the rates on that road would have been under public regulation. And the same thing in regard to that hideous thing that exists in their charter with regard to the land grants of the company, the patents for which are being issued now and were issued last year with enormous rapidity; the contention is now that for 20 years hence the land grants of the company not sold should be free from taxation in the North-west Territories. Public policy should have insisted on the public being protected in these respects. But there is no promise of it in this Bill to-day, but there is an indication that even this government who made that arrangement in 1897 with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway Company, are to-day carrying out the will, and behests, and requisitions of the corporations, and doing nothing for the public.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). It is not customary to debate the principle of a Bill upon the explanation which is given by the minister who introduces the Bill; and I think hon. gentlemen who sit upon the front bench of the opposition will agree with me that it is not conducive to clearness or to a fair and reasonable understanding of important questions, that a debate should be sprung upon the merits of a very important Bill immediately the minister who gave the explanation has sat down. I think the House will agree with me, too, that if my hon. friend was interested in a real solution of this large and important question he would have devoted his attention to making inquiries of the minister who introduced the Bill, with the object of eliciting any further information that might enable him to understand the question, and then give it more mature consideration before expressing an opinion. I may say to my hon. friend that this legislation under which he says the people of the North-west Territories are suffering, was placed upon the statute-book by his own party and not by the Liberal party. The grievances of the people in that respect have been redressed to a considerable extent by the legislation which the Minister of Justice has introduced this afternoon, and I would willingly challenge my hon. friend to lay his finger upon any piece of legislation that was introduced prior to the advent of this government, in which, in so few words, so many important matters were dealt with, and the grievances of the people were so effectually redressed, and the rights of the people so effectually protected as they are in the Bill which my hon. friend has just asked leave to introduce.

We had upon the statute-book the clause which stated that the tolls of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should not be reduced until the net earnings were 10 per cent upon the capital actually expended in the construction of the railway. Now they come along and ask us for leave to extend that capital by $20,000,000. It is not suggested that the application is not a legitimate and an honest application. I think we will all agree, however our views may vary in regard to the policy of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that that company has now arrived at such a state of development that we need not look for any cheap huckstering or anything of that kind in connection with their capital. When they come forward with an application to increase their capital, we expect them to do so in a bona fide way, to get money for a bona fide purpose. There will be no question in the minds of members of this House upon that subject. They ask us to give them leave to increase their capital by $20,000,000. The first condition we make is this, that in considering the amount of capital actually expended in the construction of the railway for the purpose of applying the control which the law gives to the government in certain cases, that $20,000,000 need not be taken into consideration. So if the public get the benefit of that $20,000,000, and that sum does not add to the amount on which net earnings should be reckoned before we can apply our principle of control, can my hon. friend suggest anything in connection with our legislation for the Canadian Pacific Railway which would have placed the people in a better position in respect to the control of rates? My hon. friend, I believe, is something of a socialist. Perhaps he would have taken the position that he did not care what the law was on that point, or what the legislation was, that he did not care what the vested rights of the stock holders and bond holders of the Canadian Pacific Railway were, but he would simply have done as he pleased. I am bound to say, Mr. Speaker, that this government is not prepared to take that position; but we are prepared, and I believe with the full agreement of the other side of the House—of the responsible members of the other side of the House—to give full, fair and reasonable protection to every vested right of any person who invests a dollar in the Dominion of Canada. That does not prevent us, however, when government action is required, from taking fair and reasonable measures for the protection of the public, and I think it will be the sentiment of members on both sides of the House that we have gone in this respect as far as we honourably and legally could have gone.

Mr. MACLEAN. Will the hon. gentleman say what this government have done to ascertain, in their five years of office, the actual cost of that railway?

Hon. Mr. SIFTON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Immediately before the Order in Council was passed which provided for this particular matter being dealt with in the way I have stated, another Order in Council was passed with the consent of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and it was required that they should give their consent to the passage of that Order in Council before this Order in Council was passed. My hon. friend will learn I think with great delight, that the first Order in Council provided that an immediate reference should be taken to the courts for the purpose of determining the amount of the capital actually expended in the construction of the road, so that we might know exactly where we are in respect to the control of rates on this railway. That was the first thing to take into consideration and that arrangement was arrived at before the Order in Council was finally passed giving the company power to increase their capital stock. I need only add that we have done something more. We have done something which, I believe, speaking subject to correction, has not been done before in the history of legislation affecting railway companies in Canada. That is to say, that we have ear-marked this money to this extent; we have explicitly provided that no less a sum than $9,000,000 of the stock to be issued shall be expended upon rolling stock. I venture to think that the people of the North-west Territories and the people of Canada who have dealings with the company and who have felt the necessity of a very much larger amount of rolling stock being immediately provided, will look on this provision as one which will prevent a diversion of the money to any other purpose, and as evidence of the fact that the government have striven earnestly to protect the interests of the people. I do not think any further reference to my hon. friend's remarks is necessary. I would not have thought it necessary to speak at all were it not for the fact that he has taken the position, which is not a usual one, of criticising the merits of a measure upon its introduction without taking time to acquaint himself with its provisions.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) answer this question? Are you going to proceed with the reference to the courts?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. At once.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I just want to ask the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) a question. Before doing so, I may say that the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr Sifton), after lecturing my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean) on the impropriety of discussing this measure on its introduction, has proceeded himself, to follow his example by discussing it at very considerable length. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice what has been done in connection with the disposal of the question affecting the tax exemption of this company in the North-west Territories? I do not, at present, recollect whether legislation was passed last session in regard to it or not. If legislation was not passed it was because it was found that there would be no need of special legislation for this purpose. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether this Bill deals with the question at all, and if it does not, would he be good enough to tell us what action has been taken on that question, and whether he expects that at an early date any decision of the court in regard to it will be reached?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This Bill does not in any way affect the question which has been mentioned by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax). I may say that I expected, of course, naturally, to make a statement in reference to that subject when the estimates were up, and I have prepared a statement which I intended to make then.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is quite satisfactory.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

UNORGANIZED TERRITORIES GAME PRESERVATION ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 117) further to amend the Unorganized Territories Game Preservation Act, 1894. He said: This Bill is not quite so formidable as its name would indicate. It contains a provision for the purpose of extending the protection which we have been giving to the wood buffalo in the North-west Territories. There are still a few small herds of wood buffalo in the Mackenzie River district, 500 or 600 or 800 miles north of Edmonton. For the last six years the law has prevented these buffalo being shot, the only persons likely to shoot them being the Indians. For the last six years we have had a mounted police patrol and the law has prevented these animals being shot, in order, if possible, to secure the preservation and increase of the herd. This Bill is for the purpose of extending the protection until 1907.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

SCHOOL LANDS FUND.

Mr. BOYD—by Mr. Roche—asked:

1. Was the reduction of the rate of interest from 6 to 5 per cent made at the request of the Manitoba government, the beneficiaries of the fund?

2. Is it the intention of the government to amend the Act so that at least it will not apply to the sales made prior to the enactment of 1901?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This question lacks something, as in its present form it is not very intelligible. I presume the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyd) means the school lands funds.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I presume that the question refers to the school lands fund, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyd) evidently had an idea in his mind which he did not express in the question. The answer to the first question would be no, and to the second question no.

I.C.R.—RESOLUTION OF WINNIPEG BOARD OF TRADE.

Mr. PUTTEE asked:

1. Has the Minister of Railways received from the Winnipeg Board of Trade a communication recommending that a 'thoroughly qualified expert in the management of railways be appointed to make a report on existing conditions, and what in his estimation would make the Intercolonial Railway a paying concern, and of the greatest benefit to the country; and also to study and make recommendations on the following alternative schemes for the consideration of the government and the people:—

'(a.) As to how the Intercolonial Railway could be extended so as to make it a real and permanent competitive factor affecting the greatest bulk of Canadian traffic.

'(b.) What arrangement for the granting to government might make under the present conditions, by virtue of its general powers, which would tend towards the same end as the above.

'(c.) What arrangement for the granting to other railways of running rights, management or other powers over the Intercolonial Railway would be feasible, and calculated to benefit general transportation; or what running rights over other railways should be acquired by the Intercolonial Railway, to accomplish the same purpose.'

2. If yes, is the suggestion contained therein likely to be accepted and acted upon?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). The answer to the first question is yes. To the second question the answer is: The government has not yet had an opportunity of considering the matter.

SUPPLY—PREFERENTIAL TRADE WITHIN THE EMPIRE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go again into Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the rebuke which I have recently been subjected to in the House, I have still the courage to get up and bring to the attention of the public and of this House a further matter on the lines of the discussion which was raised here two days ago. This question is the most important that there is before the people of Canada to-day. There is no subject of equal importance, and as there is additional light upon it, I propose to bring that additional light to the attention of the House and of the country. I hold in my hand the New York 'Tribune' of yesterday, dealing with the budget speech in England. The correspondent of the New York 'Tribune' in England is a very well posted man. He is in touch with the leading authorities in England. He is in touch, I believe, with the ambassador of the American government to the Court of St. James, and in his despatch to that paper yesterday he uses the following words :

While the colonies will reluctantly surrender their self-governing rights, it is probable that some basis of financial contribution to Imperial defence may be reached if some form of preferential tariff be adopted by the home government. Some colonies may be willing to agree upon a common increase of five or ten per cent in tariff duties and set apart the sum thus raised for defensive purposes, if the mother country be disposed to adopt the preferential system in dealing with the colonies.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a statement made in an important paper, and it is based, I believe more or less on some authority which shows that in the estimation, at least, of that correspondent, the imperial government is prepared to grant a preference to the products of the colonies provided the colonies would be prepared to join with it in defence of the empire. I contend, Sir, that in that budget which was introduced the other day in England, we would have had some arrangement made for preferential trade if the government of this country had said they were prepared to discuss the question of imperial defence. Let me read again the answer of the Canadian government to that invitation, and it is well worth reading it, and re-reading it. The first letter from Mr. Chamberlain to Lord Minto was of a general character, and it is dated the 27th of December last. I ask the House to bear in mind that date. No answer apparently was ever sent by this government to that general invitation. On the 23rd of January, almost a month after an urgent telegram was sent to Lord Minto dealing with this very question, and what does this urgent telegram say. Here it is :

Copy.
Para. of cypher cable.
Confidential.

Mr. Chamberlain to Lord Minto.

London, January 23, 1902.

It is proposed by His Majesty's government to take advantage of the presence of the premiers at Coronation to discuss with them the questions of political relations between the mother country and the colonies, imperial defence, commercial relations of the empire and other matters of general interest.

Mr. MACLEAN.

Should your ministers desire to submit definite proposal or resolutions on any of the above questions or should they wish to suggest any further subject for discussion, I should be glad to be informed of purport by cable in order that the other governments can be communicated with.

With view to proposed conference, hope your premier will be able to remain for a short time, say three weeks, after ceremony, as the guest of His Majesty's government.

Please telegraph reply. Despatch follows.

(Signed) CHAMBERLAIN.

Observe these words. The Canadian government was asked to give a speedy reply 'in order that' the other colonial premiers might be acquainted of its contents. They were asked to telegraph that reply. But what took place ? For ten days the Canadian government had this urgent cable in their possession and they never answered it, and therefore no despatch followed, as the British government said a despatch would follow. After ten days this government sent an answer by cable, and I shall read that answer to the House again. They waited ten days until I suppose the dissidents in the cabinet had been mollified in some way, and until some unanimity was come to. Here is their answer :

Copy—Secret.

Lord Minto to Mr. Chamberlain.

Ottawa, February 3, 1902.

Referring to your despatch of the 27th December, my government accepts invitation extended to Prime Minister to attend Coronation. He expects to sail about 10th of June, accompanied by Lady Laurier, but exact date cannot yet be fixed.

Referring to the several questions mentioned in your despatch of 23rd January, the only one which in the opinion of my ministers, gives promise of useful discussion is that of the commercial relations between the various sections of the empire. The political relations now existing between the mother country and the great self-governing colonies, and particularly Canada, are regarded by my ministers as entirely satisfactory, with the exception of a few minor details, and they do not anticipate that in the varying conditions of the colonies, there can be any scheme of defence applicable to all.

In the opinion of my ministers, there is thus but a limited range of subjects upon which the contemplated conference can be productive of useful action. Nevertheless my ministers realize the desirability of taking advantage of every opportunity for the discussion by the public men of the mother country and the colonies, of questions of imperial interest, and Canada's representative will be prepared to give respectful consideration to any proposals that may be submitted by His Majesty's government or by the representatives of other colonies.

It was that one-sided answer to all these proposals that were made, that froze the heart of the imperial government, and they did not even send that despatch which was promised to follow. The British government were not in the position they hoped to be in of getting a friendly answer from this government to the effect that they would come to London prepared to discuss imperial defence ; prepared to discuss imperial defence coupled with preferential trade as between the mother country and the colonies. The result is that a budget was brought down in the Imperial House of Commons putting a tax on grain and on breadstuffs, and the breadstuffs of Canada are not to be exempt from that tax. That is the result of the action of the Canadian government. When the opportunity presented itself they neglected to say that they were ready to discuss these questions. They refused to take the lead as the English Prime Minister asked them to take the lead. No aid was given by this government to the imperial ministers, and as a result the breadstuffs of Canada are taxed equally with the breadstuffs of other countries. In view of the British budget, I ask : Are the government prepared to-day to tell us that they will go over to England to discuss imperial defences ? I do not wish to commit the country, when I ask the government : Are they willing even to discuss that question on the basis of getting a trade preference ? Last night a very instructive article appeared in a newspaper published in Montreal, and with which the Minister of Public Works is connected. The heading is : 'The Interment of Free Trade.' The Minister of Public Works deals with this question in his paper last night, and he says among other things :

> The war, the unhappy war in South Africa, has forced old free trade England to abjure her economic faith, to tax her bread to meet the expenses of the War Office. . . . . The speech of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach is as a funeral oration of free trade. . . . A number of London newspapers have expressed regret that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach has not seen fit to propose the adoption of a preference to Canadian flour and cereals in the English market. There are other papers that think it peculiar that at the very moment when we are sending other contingents, the English government has struck a blow at our breadstuffs by imposing on them the same tax as on foreign grains.

There is the opinion of the organ of a member of this administration who says that the funeral oration on free trade has been pronounced. He says there are papers in this country who believe the same thing, and he means his own paper, and he means a certain gentleman in the cabinet. He means to say that he regrets that when we are sending contingents to South Africa, we are not getting a preference in return therefor. And, why are we not to get a preference ? It is because of that chilling despatch which was sent by the Canadian government in reply to the invitation of the Prime Minister of Great Britain. On a former occasion the Prime Minister of Canada said that trade and war do not go together. They do go together. If there is anything that Englishmen know more than another, it is that trade follows the flag. The Prime Minister of Canada on a former occasion argued——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has no right to refer to a previous debate.

Mr. MACLEAN. I stand corrected, and I will say that the argument is being made outside of this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. When I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he is referring to a previous debate, it is hardly fair for him to say that he is referring to what has been said outside.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The Minister of Trade and Commerce pursued identically the same lines the other day, and he was not called to order.

Mr. MACLEAN. Mr. Speaker, I bow to your decision. I see in his place the Minister of Trade and Commerce who is especially charged with the duty of looking after the welfare of this country in connection with treaties ; and I would ask him, is he prepared to tell the House to-day that, in view of England having adopted protection and having gone back to duties on breadstuffs, he has brought that fact to the attention of his colleagues, or has made any move to have the existing commercial treaties between the mother country and foreign countries, which interfere with the project of a preferential trade arrangement between the mother country and the colonies denounced ; and is he or the Prime Minister prepared to tell the House to-day, in view of the developments of the past few days, in view of the contingents we are sending and in view of the position taken by the organ of the Minister of Public Works, that they have protested against the tax on Canadian breadstuffs or have made any effort to secure a preference for Canada ? This is the all-important question before the people of this country to-day, and I again call the attention of the House to it mainly for the purpose of giving this government an opportunity of telling the country where they are on the question, and what they intend to do in connection with this most momentous issue.

IMMIGRATION.

Mr. URIAH WILSON (Lennox). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I wish to make a few remarks on the subject of immigration. That subject has assumed very important proportions in this country, not alone because of the amount of money we spend on immigration, being nearly a half a million a year ; I believe the exact amount is $445,000. While that is a serious matter in itself, because the money comes out of the taxpayers of this country, I think there is a very much more important view to be taken of it, and that is the kind of immigrants we are getting. I was asked by an hon. member on the other side of the House the other day to deal with something more than newspaper clippings when I came to speak on this question ; and I am going to do so to-day.

Great changes have been made in our system of immigration agents in the old country, for the reason, I presume, that the High Commissioner in London has told the department in his report that they have done about all they can do on the lines on which they are at present working, and also that we could get a great many immigrants if the government would refund to them the amount of their passage money when they arrived on this side of the water, to assist them in starting life again. I am very glad to know that the minister in other days was strongly opposed to giving any bonuses or assisted passages ; and I hope he will stick to that. I have always been opposed to giving assisted passages to immigrants, because I hold that a man who has reached the age of maturity, if his life has been such as it ought to be, should have saved enough money to pay his own passage, and if he has not, he certainly must have friends who would lend money to him. That being the case, I think it would be a great mistake to advance money to men who would be worthless, and who would in the long run become a burden on the public.

Immigration matters on the other side of the water have become so important that the deputy minister and Mr. White have had to leave this country and visit the old country to make arrangements in regard to immigration ; and I see that material changes have been made there. Mr. Preston's office has been moved out of the High Commissioner's office, and he has an office to himself and is placed at the head of the immigration business in Great Britain and Ireland and on the continent ; and although the deputy minister stated in the committee that Mr. Preston was subject to the High Commissioner, I notice that he reports direct to Ottawa. I also notice that every immigration agent under him has to report to him, and he forwards their reports direct to Ottawa. It used to be that the immigration agents in the old country reported to the High Commissioner, who sent their reports to Ottawa. Another change that has been made is in Ireland. I called the attention of the minister last year to the fact that we have too many paid agents in Ireland, and I see that at last he has come to the same opinion and has sent one agent to England, leaving only two paid agents in Ireland—Mr. O'Kelly and Mr. Devlin. One gets $1,800 and the other $3,000 a year. I suppose the minister, when he explains the difference in salaries, will tell us how he came to raise the salary of Mr. Devlin $1,000 at one time. I tried to find out from Mr. Pedley, who is at the head of the immigration staff, and has charge of the whole immigration of this country, and who is paid only $2,500, while Mr. Devlin and Mr. Preston are each getting $3,000. It may be that the minister can give some satisfactory reason for this difference. There is another feature which I regard as quite as bad if not worse. They are appointing, if I remember rightly, about 100 immigration agents in Ireland, to be paid by commission ; so the deputy minister states. You can easily see the effect of that. It will not be a matter of interest to these agents whether the immigrants they get are good or bad. Their object will be to get as many as possible, because the more they get the more they will be paid. That course, I believe, is pursued in England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales. I notice in the report a letter from the Hon. G. W. Ross, which was written to the 'London Times' on the 9th of September last. Mr. Preston thought so much of it that he copied it into his report. Mr. Ross points out the large number of people who are leaving the British Isles and calls attention to the fact that if the mother country and the colonies united in an effort, these might be saved to the colonies instead of going to foreign countries. I think that is a matter which might well occupy the attention of the Prime Minister when he goes to the old country in June next. Of over 700,000 persons who emigrated from the United Kingdom from 1891 to 1900 only 90,000 came to Canada.

Another matter which I am obliged to bring up in this House is the interview held by Mr. Devlin with the 'Montreal Witness.' That interview has a peculiar history, and I think it was dealt with very unfairly by the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization. We had it read there, together with Mr. Devlin's reply, and the committee refused to have them put in the evidence. I am going to give Mr. Devlin's interview, his denial, and an affidavit from the gentleman who wrote the interview. I saw in Mr. Devlin's own hand writing two paragraphs of this interview.

It was my intention to call the attention of the House to the attacks which Mr. Devlin made upon members on this side last session, but at the beginning of the session I moved for the correspondence, and I found that the rebuke given him by the Minister of the Interior was quite sufficient and that we have not heard of any more attacks since then by that gentleman on members of this House. But after that was rejected by the committee, and I think it should have gone into the evidence, I brought it up in this House as a question, to which the hon. Minister of Finance replied, and replied very cleverly, for he can get around a corner as well as, if not better, than any of his colleagues. The question I put was : Has the attention of the government been called to the interview with Mr. Devlin ? The Minister of Finance replied that it had, both by the newspapers and the Agriculture Committee. My next question was whether there had been any communication with Mr. Devlin since then, and the Minister of Finance replied no, but that Mr. Devlin did not admit the correctness of the interview. That I think was a very inadequate reply to a charge so important.

I am sorry to have to weary the House by reading this interview, but I think it is important that we should know what the facts are. This interview appeared in the Montreal 'Witness' on the 17th January, 1902, and I might add, had this been one of the sensational papers of this country, I would have taken very little notice of the interview. The 'Witness' is known to be a strong supporter of this government, although on general principles, once in a while it has to find fault with the present administration, but it would be impossible for any honest journal to conduct its business without doing that. Here is the interview :

Mr. C. R. Devlin, Dominion Immigrant Agent, Is a follower of John Redmond.

Believes that Ireland should have a separate Parliament—Why Canada does not get the Irish Immigrant in large numbers.

Mr. Charles R. Devlin, the Dominion Immigration Agent, Dublin, Ireland, has often, upon the floors of the House of Commons, and the public platforms of the country, eloquently pleaded the cause of home rule for Ireland. An Irish Canadian, he was always candid in his sympathy with those who were fighting for a separate parliament for the Irish people.

A residence in Ireland itself has but served to deepen his love for the cause. Mr. Devlin is an official of the Dominion government, but he is an enthusiastic follower of John Redmond, who is now preaching a no-rent crusade in Ireland which threatens to have far reaching consequences. But Mr. Devlin, while fulfilling his duties, also subscribes to the land league, and is heart and soul with those who desire to have separation from England.

Mr. Devlin is at present in the city stopping at the Windsor Hotel. He was asked this forenoon to say a word as to the condition of Ireland at present, more especially in regard to the acute form which the Irish agitation had recently taken—the form of an overwhelming organization, whose chief doctrine was that the people should cease to pay rent.

Mr. Devlin replied by saying that it must be remembered that he was not a politician, but an official of the government who was subject to criticism, and who must be careful in the answers which he gave. At the same time he had never concealed his opinions when in parliament, and had not changed since he went to live in Ireland.

He was a follower of John Redmond and a subscriber to the funds of the land league. He was an Irish Canadian, but blood was thicker than water, and he did not forget that England had oppressed Ireland because the Irish were Catholics.

You are not a believer in physical force, are you Mr. Devlin ?

No, I have no sympathy for physical force at all. I am for effecting the purpose by constitutional means. There is no necessity for physical force in the premises.

Do you approve of the agitation of which the object is to prevent the tenant farmers of Ireland from paying rent in any shape or form ?

I am in sympathy with the programme mapped out by John Redmond. Here is the stand I take, I do not care who knows it :

I am in full sympathy with the national movement, and as an Irish Canadian and a Roman Catholic I see no reason why Ireland should not receive the same measure of responsible government as is enjoyed by Canada. To put the whole case in one word—before going to Ireland I was a nationalist, and since that I am now such even in a more pronounced degree.

The whole question is this, said Mr. Devlin, shall Ireland have a separate parliament ? I think she should. Others take a different view. They are entitled to their opinion. Indeed, we have frequent discussions over the matter in my office.

I would like to have the Minister of the Interior just mark the use to which the immigration office is put in Ireland. My opinion is that no officer of this government should take any part in politics on either side. I do not think that our High Commissioner has ever done so, nor do I think that it is in the best interests of the country that Mr. Devlin should do so :

There are those in Ireland who say there should be no legislative separation ; on the other hand, the great bulk of the people are in favour of a separate parliament, and I am with them in this. I have nothing to conceal as far as my personal views are concerned, but of course I have no desire to talk politics.

Do you believe, Mr. Devlin, that the establishment of industries in the south and west of Ireland would go far towards a creation of better conditions ?

No doubt this would be a feature of the case.

Is the country prosperous ?

Well, there was a good crop.

Have the farmers money in the bank ?

I have not studied the economic questions.

How are the county councils working ?

Very well indeed.

Do the people take much interest in the local questions which come up in the meetings.

Well, as much as they do in this country.

Mr. Devlin was asked how it was that Canada got so few Irish immigrants, the bulk of whom went to the United States.

First of all, according to Mr. Devlin, there is the question of the flag, which plays an important part with the Irishman. He does not particularly like the British flag. He does not want to go to another country where he will be under it. He goes to the United States in preference. He had no doubt that the action of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in appearing at Mr. Redmond's meeting would do much to remove the prejudice which was felt against the Dominion, while at the same time the Dominion was in no wise hurt by the action of the premier.

In the second place, Mr. Devlin continued, effort should have been made thirty years ago. That effort was only made yesterday, so to say. Ninety per cent of the persons who left Ireland for the United States did so upon prepaid tickets—tickets which had been purchased by friends who had gone to the United States thirty, twenty, ten years ago. Had the Dominion made an effort thirty years ago, such passages would have been paid to Canada. In the third place, it must be remembered that Ireland had none of the aids to immigration which was so evident in England. She had only three agencies in the whole country. On the other hand, in England there was the work of the Dominion government, the work of the provincial governments, the work of the Canadian Pacic Railway. At the same time, he could say that there had been a considerable improvement, and the Dominion was beginning to get a fair share of Irish immigration. There had been fourteen hundred immigrants from Ireland to the Dominion in eleven months last year, this showed a decided increase over previous records.

The report of the Minister of the Interior shows only 933.

It has been said, Mr. Devlin, that there is lack of zeal on the part of the government agents, who do their work perfunctorily, and who do not stir up the interests of the people in the advantages which Canada can offer.

As I say, efforts should have commenced thirty years ago in Ireland. All is done that can be done under the circumstances.

One of the planks in the new programme of Mr. Redmond, is that the people should be taught to remain in the country. As you are a subscriber to the funds of the league, is your position as an immigration agent not rather incongruous. You sympathize with the desire of the league to retain the people on the soil, and yet you must urge emigration.

But I do not urge it.

No ? Then the office and the work are in the nature of a superfluity ?

Come, come, said Mr. Devlin laughing, you are a desperate interviewer, but I will define my position.

I do not urge emigration from Ireland, and I never will. I agree that Ireland should be the home of the Irishman, and I will be glad when the day comes when no Irishman will have to leave Ireland. I will then gladly come back to work in my own country. But we have to notice the fact that there is a large emigration from Ireland, and my aim is to secure for Canada the largest possible proportion.

Asked if the establishment of a fast Atlantic service would have a beneficial effect upon immigration, Mr. Devlin said he would prefer not to answer the question.

In regard to his present mission, Mr. Devlin said: I am here on important matters connected with my office, and as soon as I can get them settled, I will go back. I am particularly anxious to have a Canadian exhibit at the Cork show made as good and as effective as possible, as I hope to return in two weeks.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like the Minister of the Interior when he comes to reply, if he does reply, to say what Mr. Devlin's position is, whether it is to get people to come to this country or to cause them to stay in Ireland. He says he is a subscriber to the Land League, and their object is to keep all Irishmen in Ireland. In fact, I believe they have a society which gives prizes to people in Ireland who will keep others from emigrating from that country. Now, I will read you what the committee call Mr. Devlin's denial. This letter was written to Mr. Pedley from Halifax. The whole letter was there, but the committee refused to read anything but this part of it and refused to let the committee itself be the judge as to what part should be taken. They allowed the superintendent of immigration to choose one paragraph and say that this was all that applied to the case. I think it was, but I do not think that it was fair to the committee to confine its choice in this way. I think that if the letter was to be produced as evidence before the committee, the whole letter should have been produced :

In regard to interviews alleged to have been given by me, I do not admit their accuracy. They took place in the Windsor Hotel, weeks ago, on my arrival when I was with my friends, and I merely answered, as a matter of politeness and courtesy to pressmen, two or three questions having no bearing on Canadian political questions.

Now, I took pains, before I got the affidavit I am about to read, to make some inquiries about the reporter who had this interview with Mr. Devlin. I inquired of the reporters of the gallery of this House, and I am confident that anybody who knows this gentleman will give him a good character. I did more ;—when I went to Montreal I saw some gentlemen occupying high positions in newspaper work, and they said the same thing about Mr. Lutton. I will read his declaration :

I, William Lutton, of the city of Montreal, in the province of Quebec, reporter for the Montreal 'Witness,' do solemnly declare as follows :—

1. That I had an interview in the city of Montreal with Mr. C. R. Devlin, Dominion Immigration Agent for Ireland, on the 17th day of January, 1902.

2. That the account of this interview as the same was published and appears in the Montreal 'Witness' of the 17th day of January, 1902, is correct in every particular.

3. I further declare that I have in my possession statements in writing in the handwriting of the said C. R. Devlin and written by him in my presence, of which the following are true copies :—

'I do not urge immigration from Ireland, and I never will. I agree that Ireland should be the home of the Irishmen, and will be glad when the day comes when no Irishman will have to leave Ireland. I will then gladly come back to work in my own country, but we have to notice the fact that there is a large immigration from Ireland, and my aim is to secure for Canada the largest possible proportion.

'I am in full sympathy with the national movement, and as an Irish Canadian, and a Roman Catholic, I see no reason why Ireland should not receive the same measure of responsible government as is enjoyed by Canada. To put the whole case in one word—before going to Ireland I was a nationalist, and that I am now even of a more pronounced degree, and I would surrender a position twice as good as that now held by me if, in order to retain it, it would be necessary to modify my opinion in this matter.'

I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, in virtue of the Act for the Supression of Voluntary Extra-Judicial Oaths.

W. LUTTON.

Solemnly declared before me, at the city of Montreal, in the province of Quebec, this 4th day of April, 1902.

HENRY J. ELLIOT,

A commissioner of the Superior Court of the province of Quebec for the district of Montreal.

Now, I think that ought to settle pretty well any question as to the truthfulness of that interview. It seems to me that any man who will make such statements to the public press as Mr. Devlin has done is one for whom the government should have but very little use. Certainly he is not the kind of man whose salary they should increase, giving him a higher salary than that of the superintendent of immigration. They raised his salary on the 1st of July, 1900, just four months before the general election.

Now, having gone into that matter so far, I wish, for the benefit of the Minister of Customs, to show what they are doing now in Ireland. The hon. gentleman spoke very loudly the other night about the great work of immigration. I have been following it for some years, and I fail to see where they have accomplished any great work, especially in Great Britain and Ireland. They certainly have succeeded in spending a much larger amount of money than their predecessors, and with much less results. I have here a table which I made up from returns given by Mr. Pedley, and I guarantee its correctness. I am perfectly willing to submit it to Mr. Pedley, who I believe knows more about this question than any man in Canada, or out of it, because he has apparently made himself the master of it. This table covers a period of nine years. I do not know whether he made a mistake in only bringing it down for nine years, or what the reason was:

I may say that in 1900 the fiscal year was changed, it used to be on the calendar year and they changed it to the fiscal year, and this is only for half a year. But you will notice that in the half year we spent in salaries $9,942, for printing, $4,000, or a total expenditure for the six months of $13,942. Now we got in those nine years from Ireland 7,855 people; we paid in salaries and other expenses $55,854, and for printing and bonuses $28,000, making a total of $83,854.

I said we were spending a great deal more money and getting a great many less people. If you will take the first four years, from 1893 to 1896, you will find there were 4,396 immigrants came to this country; and if you will take the next five years, you will find that only 3,457 came to this country, or a decrease of 939 persons. Still, some hon. members of the government think they are doing wonderful work in their immigration business. Then, Sir, it cost for the first four years, from 1893 to 1896, $20,616, and from 1896 to 1901 it cost $63,238. That is a difference of $42,621 to get 939 less people. Still, notwithstanding my efforts to persuade the hon. gentleman to lessen the expenses for immigration from Ireland, he still persists, and I fear he is going to persist at a faster speed this year than heretofore. But whether he does or not, I feel it my duty to call his attention to what is being done.

In a speech I made in this House a year or two ago, I stated that I believed we could get as many immigrants from Ireland if we had no agent there, more especially when things are going as they are now. Let me take the years when we had no agent in Ireland:

I think it is time that the minister took a look around to see what is the matter. I do not wonder though when you look at the Auditor General's Report. I think the extravagance which is there disclosed is something that is beyond reconciling with common sense. Here is a clergyman—I do not know who he is, or where he lives, or anything about him. It makes no difference to me what denomination he belongs to. I say we should not pay such an extravagant price for his services. His salary is $100 a month, and he served six months making $600. His living expenses in Europe amounted to $533.63.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. To whom is the hon. gentleman referring ?

Mr. WILSON. To the Rev. D. A. Twomey, whose account will be found at page L-16 of the Auditor General's Report. Cabs and transfers, $52.48 ; postage, $2.57 ; railway fares, $76.18 ; passage to Liverpool and return, $59.80 ; tips to stewards, $24 ; wharfage, $1.22 ; travel in Canada : cabs, $24 ; fares, $48.87 ; living expenses, $115.50 ; pullmans, $34.50. This makes, for six months of this gentleman's services, an outlay of $1,655.43. I think he is a pretty expensive man for us to send as an immigration agent to Ireland to try and get people to come here. I believe the figures I have given are correct. If they are not, I hope the hon. minister will correct them, because I am anxious to get at the truth of this matter. There is no object that I can see in standing up and finding fault with the administration of affairs unless you are telling the truth, because I do not think a man is worth very much who stands up and misrepresents facts. There is another gentleman, Mr. Mulvihill. He was very moderate. He was only employed three months and he only cost the country $540.85. Then, there was John Webster, whose salary was $1,200. His living expenses were quite moderate. They were only $268.75, and the total expense in connection with his office was $2,-061.62. This is not quite so bad as the case of the Rev. Mr. Twomey, whose living expenses in Canada and the old country amounted to $649.13 for six months. He must have lived pretty well, I should think. Then, we have Mr. E. O'Kelly, whose salary is $1,800, and living expenses $715.40, the total cost of this gentleman including travelling and other expenses being $3,647. There was Mr. C. R. Devlin, with a salary of $3,000, and living expenses of $515.40, the total expense in connection with him being $6,132.41. The cost of printing, advertising and bonuses in Ireland in 1901 was $4,500, making the total amount expended in Ireland in 1901 $18,455.41, and the government got for this expenditure 933 people at a cost of $19.76 per head. I think that the deputy minister, Mr. Smart, said in the committee the other day, without counting the cost in Canada, that the cost of each immigrant on the average was $6.11. I suppose this amount is given without any reference to the Canadian cost. Now, I come to a matter that I would like the hon. minister to give us some information upon. I have been of the opinion for some time that when we vote immigration salaries we should vote them in the same way as we vote anything else. Why not ? Why should we vote a lump sum ? There are only four items in the estimates for immigration. I would like to have the hon. minister tell us on whose recommendation he has raised the salaries of the agents ? It is well known that he only raises the salary of a man in his department when he gets a recommendation from his deputy minister. It is the deputy minister's business. I tried to get the deputy minister before the committee to tell us how it was done. He was as dumb as an oyster, and I hope the hon. minister will take the responsibility of telling us how this is done and why. I want to give him a list of the agents whose salaries have been raised. The list was given to the committee and it is as follows :

NAMES OF IMMIGRANT AGENTS WHOSE SALARIES WERE RAISED.

Names.	When Appointed.	Salary.	When Raised.	Present Salary.
C. W. Speers	March, 1897....	1,500	Nov. 1, 1898....	2,000

Thomas Duncan	" 1897....	1,200	March, 1899....	1,500
		14,500		19,000

There is a total increase in the salaries of these twelve men of $4,500. My own impression is that this deserves an explanation from the hon. minister. I hope he will tell us what the conditions are under which he raised the salaries of these gentlemen, what examination they have to go through, and what the particular work is that they have to do. Is it because of the great success they had as immigration agents or for some other reason? I think he will certainly say that so far as Ireland is concerned they have not progressed very rapidly in securing immigrants. Now, I have some more tables in connection with general immigration business, and while I am satisfied they are correct as they are taken from our records, I fear that if we look at the census we will be led to believe that we have either lost the bulk of the immigrants we have received or that we have lost as many or more of our own people. I think if this is a fact it is to be deplored, because I would rather have a Canadian than any other countryman.

I shall now give you the number of immigrants reported each year to have settled in Canada from 1891 to 1901, and the total for the ten years. They are as follows:

1893	29,632
1894	20,829
1895	18,790
1896	16,835
1897	20,016
1898	30,742
1899	44,506
1900	23,895
1901	49,149
Total for 10 years	282,292

It will be noticed that the number for 1900 only represents six months, and I do not know how I could get at the exact figures for the whole year unless I doubled the number for the six months, but of course I have no authority to do that, and I will let the figures go as they appear in the return brought down to this House. I have here the total expenditure on immigration for each of these years as brought down in the return I moved for. The expenditure on immigration from the 1st July, 1891 to 30th June, 1901 was as follows:

The total expenditure on immigration from 1st July, 1891, to the 30th June, 1901, was as follows:

Year.	Amount.
1891-1892	$177,604 82
1892-1893	180,677 43
1893-1894	202,235 52
1894-1895	195,652 97
1895-1896	120,199 00
1896-1897	127,438 14
1897-1898	261,194 90
1898-1899	255,878 88
1899-1900	434,562 61
1900-1901	444,729 63
	$2,400,173 90

We therefore got 282,292 immigrants during the 10 years and we spent $2,400,173.90. In the first five years of that period under the Conservative rule we spent $873,369, and in the next five years under the Liberal rule we spent $1,523,804. During the five years of the Conservative government it cost us $7.65 per head for our immigrants, and during the five years of the Liberal government it cost us $9.05 per head, or $1.40 per head more during the five years of Liberal rule than it did before. I am sorry that I could not get the figures with regard to Great Britain and Ireland complete. There is one year that I have not got the number of immigrants for. When I applied to the department they said it could not be had very handily and consequently I let it go. I shall therefore have to submit this table with regard to the immigration from Great Britain and Ireland, the number of immigrants we received from those countries, the number of agents and the cost of our immigration staff there during the years mentioned. The following is the table:

Number of Immigrants from Great Britain and Ireland; number of Agents, Salaries, Printing, &c.

Year.	Number of Agents.	Number of Immigrants.	Salaries.	Printing and other Expenses.	Total.
			$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts.
1891-2	5	...	5,886 67	13,805 63	19,692 30
1892-3	8	20,066	7,509 26	19,033 68	26,547 90
1893-4	8	16,004	10,569 64	15,420 84	25,990 48
1894-5	7	14,956	10,638 29	8,669 02	19,338 04
1895-6	6	11,884	9,438 28	8,816 86	18,255 14
1896-7	13	11,383	12,643 41	11,091 00	23,734 41
1897-8	9	11,606	13,240 23	17,611 56	30,851 79
1898-9	9	10,623	13,203 22	18,679 23	31,882 45
1899-0	10	9,888	16,800 00	26,150 73	42,950 73
1900-1	14	13,082	19,950 00	26,931 21	46,881 21
10	89	119,492	119,879 00	116,214 72	286,124 45

The total number of immigrants we got from 1893 to 1896 was 62,910, and the total number we got from 1897 to 1900 was 43,500. I take a four years period here, as I have not the full number for one year. I therefore have to take a period of four years instead of five. The number of immigrants we got from 1893 to 1896 was 62,910, and the number from 1897 to 1900 was 43,500. In the latter period we got 19,410 less immigrants than we got in the previous four years. During the first four years we spent $90,131.56, and in the last four years we spent $129,419.79, or, we spent in the second term $39,282.22 more than we did in the first term under Conservative rule, and we got 19,410 less immigrants for that increased expenditure.

Now, Sir, I believe that these figures are correct, and if the Minister of the Interior will compare them carefully with the official documents in his department, he will find that they are correct. I have other figures here but they are not altogether what I would consider complete. It appears that for a good share of the time they have not been keeping a very correct account of the number of immigrants that come in from the continent of Europe, but I will give the table if hon. gentlemen think it desirable.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. WILSON. I have here an account of the number of immigrant agents employed by the Dominion government each year on the continent of Europe, their salaries and expenses from the 1st of July, 1891 to the 30th of June, 1901 :

I have just one more table—one relating to immigration from the United States. One reason why I am reading these tables on this occasion is that heretofore it has been very difficult to get any starting point, to ascertain how many people have come from a particular country, and at what cost; and if we start right now, I think we shall hereafter be able to get full statements of these matters. If this method is carried out, we shall have tables in which we can get the information we desire without having to peruse all the blue-books issued from year to year by the department. Before reading this table relating to the United States, I may say that this movement was started away back in 1891-92 by the late government, and that country was looked on as a fruitful field for immigration agents to work in. I think it was a wise move, and I will endorse any reasonable effort made by this government to bring immigrants of the proper character from the United States, because that country to-day gets a great many more of the right kind of immigrants than it did in former years. I am fully persuaded that if we get two or three more good crops in the North-west, we shall have a large immigration from the United States, whether we have any agents or not. I was told by a gentleman who deals in land in that country that it was the practice of speculators to go down to the northern states with maps and talk up the land, and sometimes they got capitalists to join with them, and they became immigrant agents of a very important kind. They had a great interest in making sales, because they participated in the profits. The following is the table regarding United States agents :

Approximate statement showing number of immigrant agents employed by the Dominion government each year in the United States of America, from July 1, 1891, to June 30, 1901, the total amount paid each year to the said agents for salaries, and the amount spent each year for printing and other expenses by said agents as follows :

Mr. SPROULE. And commission agents besides ?

Mr. WILSON. Well, they go up into the hundreds. I did not take into account the commission agents, because I did not like to weary the House with masses of figures. I come now to what I consider most important and that is the manner in which the United States deals with its immigrants. About fifteen or twenty years ago, the United States found that crime was steadily increasing in that country, that the alms houses were being filled, and that the American people were being taxed enormously owing to their failure to give proper supervision to their immigrants. The United States government appointed a commission in 1888 to investigate, and I shall only read two or three brief extracts from the report of that commission. In the State of New York alone, the charities cost over $20,000,000, according to the sworn testimony of one of the witnesses. The commission found that in the older countries of Europe there were not only societies established for the purpose of deporting the criminal classes, but the government even gave these societies grants from the public exchequer, and evidence was given to show that government officers in Germany opened the prison doors, brought the prisoners down to the steamers, and paid their passages to America. If the hon. gentleman wants to verify my statement from the report, I shall be glad to hand it to him. I can assure the hon. minister that he has moved altogether too slowly in this matter, and that we are being overrun by a class of immigrants, which the United States government will not allow into their country.

I was told that I should not give newspaper clippings, and I took the trouble to wait upon Mr. Watchorn, the principal inspector of the United States, whose territory reaches from St. John, N.B. to Sault Ste. Marie in Michigan. He at first told me that he had no power to give the information I required. That information, he said, was exclusively for his own government, and not for the newspapers or men who wanted to use it for their own purposes. But he told me that if I would apply to the department at Washington, I would no doubt get what I wanted. I forgot to mention that my attention was first called to this matter by the Montreal 'Star' which, in its issue of the 22nd March, had a graphic description of the kind of people rejected. If any hon. gentleman has not read this article, I would be very glad to give it to him, and I assure the House that it would be well worth any one's while to read it. The following day the 'Star' had an editorial, and people laughed at the idea of its being the truth or even near the truth. But Mr. Miller, who looked this matter up, is an energetic and a thoroughly reliable man. I wrote to Washington and was referred to Mr. Watchorn, and I got from him the following information :

United States Immigration Service,
Office of Special Immigrant Inspector,
Port of Montreal, Canada,
233 St. Antoine St.,
April 12, 1902.

Hon. Uriah Wilson,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I desire to acknowledge receipt of your communication of the 11th instant, inclosing letter written to you by the Hon. T. V. Powderly, Commissioner-General of Immigration, Washington, D.C., and requesting me to furnish you as much information as possible, along the lines of your verbal inquiries, on the 4th instant.

The department rules, under which this office is working, do not admit of furnishing official information either to the public press, or to persons, such as yourself, who desire to obtain such information for their own use. However, the above mentioned inclosure, suffices to indicate that my superior officers have no objection to my giving you such information as is available here, for your purpose; I therefore make the following statement, which I believe will virtually cover the several points to which you gave prominence, in your list of questions :

The jurisdiction of this office extends from Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, to St. John, N.B. Officers are stationed at the following places :

Three at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., two at Sarnia, Ont., and Port Huron, Mich., five at Windsor, Ont., and Detroit, Mich., three at Suspension Bridge, N.Y., four at International Bridge (Fort Erie, Ont., and Black Rock, N.Y.), six at Montreal, P.Q., two at Cornwall, Ont., two at Vanceboro, Me., and one at each of the following places—Malone, N.Y., Alburg, Vt., Rouse's Point, N.Y., St. Albans, Vt., Newport, Vt., North Stratford, N.H., Hermingford, St. Armand, St. Johns, Athelstan, P.Q., St. Thomas, Port Hope, Kingston, Brockville and Prescott, Ont., Lowelltown and Calais, Maine.

In addition to the foregoing, there is a United States Commissioner of Immigration at the port of entry to Canada, who has a full complement of inspectors, interpreters, matron, and physician. All European immigrants destined to the United States are supposed to be examined by this commissioner, and if found eligible to enter the United States, are given a specially prepared certificate of admission to the United States, and it devolves upon the force of officers under my jurisdiction, to take up these certificates at the border stations (copies of certificates having been surrendered at the border inclosed) which are subsequently sent to Washington for cancellation.

Before I read any further I would like to say that, in my opinion, it would be a very easy matter for our government to make an arrangement with the United States, under which all parties, irrespective of whether they go to American or Canadian ports, should be examined. If they are paupers, crippled or insane, or have any dangerous disease, or are found to be criminals, they should be sent back. Why should we consent to admit the off-scourings of creation into this country ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Would my hon friend (Mr. Wilson) send me the letter ?

Mr. WILSON. I will when I get through with it, but I have not more than started it yet.

It was thought that the establishment of a United States commission at the Canadian port of entry would suffice to reject all undesirable applicants for admission to the United States, as it is done at United States ports, but it transpired that very large numbers of immigrants intending to go to the United States, manifested themselves as Canadian passengers, and thus avoided the inspection of a United States force at a Canadian port, and subsequently resumed their journey from their temporary abode, in Canada, to their original destination. Therefore other methods had to be adopted, to cope with this phase of the situation, hence the increase of the border force from a comparatively small number of inspectors, to the present force of forty-four.

Now, that is what our laws are doing for the United States. And, indeed, they are doing a good deal worse. It is a small matter to take a man's money, but it is a very serious matter to expose him to the risks of associating with these families and others whom he meets. Though the United States are spending $100,000 a year on that service, they are not taxing their own people for it, but are making the immigrants or the steamship companies pay all this money. They are charging one dollar a head for every immigrant that enters their country, and there is a Bill before congress to increase the head-tax to $1.50. I believe that Bill will become law. The Minister of the Interior introduced a Bill in this House last night with reference to this matter. And I would advise him—if he thinks my advice of any value—to see the Bill that is now before congress before he presses forward his own. For, if he would reach an understanding with the people on the other side of the line we would save money and also save ourselves the annoyance of getting a lot of people who are of no use to anybody. I saw a man who came to Halifax, and wanted to go to New York. He was a little bit of a fellow. He had been unfortunate and lost one eye, the other eye was badly affected with trachoma. The United States officials rejected him. But he got hold of some society, and they gave him money enough to go to Niagara, and there they sent him back. They do not mince matters when any one tries to steal into that country when he has no certificate, and who is not a proper person to be admitted. They arrested him and put him on board a ship, and if they have to pay his way back they do so. But we ought not to do that. If any ship that brings people who are not fit immigrants, to this country, that ship ought to be obliged to take them back whence they came. I may be told that that is an extreme view, but perhaps I am a little extreme in some things.

It is incumbent upon all the border inspectors to demand a certificate of admission issued by the commissioner at the port of entry, as a condition precedent to lawful admission. All alien immigrants minus said certificate of admission, are subject to detention, and rigid examination at the border, at the following places :—Sault Ste. Marie, Port Huron, Detroit, Niagara Falls and Montreal.

There are just a few places, you will notice, and, no matter where these immigrants come from they are sent to one of these places. I think Mr. Watchhorn is a first-class officer for the position. While he is courteous, he is firm, and tells them in very plain language what he thinks about them.

If an immigrant minus a certificate of admission, attempts to enter the United States at any other border station, it is imperatively necessary that the inspector on duty at such place shall return him to one or other of the aforementioned stations.

You will observe from the last report of the Commissioner General of Immigration, that only six persons were rejected along the Canadian border because they were suffering from loathsome contagious diseases. Investigations made by the Bureau in Europe, disclosed the fact that a tremenduous discrepancy was represented, in those known to have emigrated from Europe to the United States via Canada, and those actually rejected at the border.

This discrepancy led to still further investigations, which together with the above-mentioned facts, resulted in the present somewhat rigorous system of border inspection. The present system was inaugurated on September 1st, 1901, since which time, at all points of this jurisdiction, they have been rejected for various causes, more than one thousand European immigrants——

Now, these immigrants were rejected because they were not fit to be citizens of the United States. Somebody said they were not fit mentally, morally, physically, or financially. I do not think that anybody in this country wants to be hard on a poor unfortunate. But I think, at the same time, that the country that has these unfortunates is much more bound to take care of them than are we in Canada.

—and while some of them were rejected because of their total destitution, a very large majority of them have been rejected because they were suffering from loathsome contagious diseases, notably trachoma, a dangerous affection of the eye, and favus, a loathsome affection of the scalp. Both these diseases are born of filth, and yield favourably to treatment, only when taken in their earliest stages.

You will observe, on page 34 of the Commissioners General's Report, that the increase of immigration through Canada to the United States, from 1896 to 1900, has been very heavy, and is in fact very much in excess of what these figures indicate.

I think your official records will bear out the statement, that for the year ended June 30th, 1901, approximately fifty thousand immigrants arrived at Canadian seaports, twenty-four thousand destined for the United States, which leaves the inference to be drawn, that twenty-six thousand remained in Canada, but these figures are totally misleading, because of the twenty-six thousand credited to Canada, for the time specified, no less than three hundred per month were given certificates of admission to the United States, in Montreal alone, within thirty days of their arrival at a Canadian port.

I would like to know now what the minister thinks of that, or what his deputy or what the superintendent of immigration thinks of it. If within thirty days of their landing in Canada about four thousand people, of their own motion went to the United States, who had to be able to pass a most rigid examination—these people having been billed for Canada originally—what would it be if we take the whole country over ? It does seem to me that it bears out pretty well the statement that I made two years ago. My hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) and some other hon. members and myself, went into a careful analysis of the immigration from the various countries, and we could not satisfy ourselves that we got more than 26,000, although we were reported to have got 44,000.

Assuming that a like ratio of admissions were made at other border stations (not at all an unreasonable assumption), it will be seen that more than half of the European immigration credited to Canada has proceeded to the United States within thirty days after arrival, and there exists no doubt in my mind but a very large proportion of the other half have likewise proceeded to the States at more or less subsequent dates.

This is what Mr. Watchorn says, and I will show you the document I saw him sign myself.

I cannot better illustrate to you the difficulties under which we are labouring than to cite to you the fact that only this very day we have had to send to New York, under a strong escort, under arrest by authority of warrants issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, fourteen immigrants suffering from favus and trachoma, who landed on the 31st of March last at St. John, N.B., all of whom are credited to Canada, but who, as you observe, are regarded as unfit for domicile in the United States (and who evidently did not wish to remain in Canada, despite their having been manifested thereto), that they are being placed on board steamers in New York harbour to-day and sent back to the country whence they came, at the expense of the United States government.

I saw the telegram saying that they had been safely put on board the steamship, and I would be very glad if the others to whom objection was made were put on board another steamship and carried back to the countries from which they came.

In addition to these fourteen sent to New York we have rejected forty-one other persons similarly afflicted who were carried on the ship at the same time, but the latter forty-one, not having surreptitiously gone over the border, have been returned to various places in Canada —notably Windsor, Hamilton, Toronto and Montreal, where, so far as I know, they now are.

I am going to read all this letter for the reason that this gentleman says he takes no part whatever in Canadian politics, and he does not want one party to make any capital out of it against another party. He had no objection to the facts being given, but he did not want it to be supposed that he wished to favour one side more than another. Therefore I want to read this last part of the letter, although it does not appear to concern the immigration business; but I am doing exactly what he expected me to do.

The same spirit that prompted me to be reluctant to comply with your request for information on the 4th instant, influences me to desire to avoid the very appearance of criticising or attempting to criticise the way in which your honorable government sees fit to conduct its affairs, and I do not wish you to construe anything herein stated as casting any reflections on any person or persons whatsoever connected with your government. I give you the information for what it is worth, and venture to express the hope that, ere long, we shall find that your government, in its wisdom, has decided to exclude from Canada all persons suffering from loathsome, contagious diseases, and who are otherwise obviously and unmistakably subjects only of charity, public or private.

It has been found in the United States that as efforts have been put forth to exclude the vicious, the diseased and the burdensome, in contrastive proportion, efforts have been increased on the part of the healthy, strong, vigorous, and desirable classes, to enter the United States.

Hoping that what I have herein stated may in some measure serve the purpose of enlightening you and others through you who desire to become more or less familiar with the subject.

I remain, yours very respectfully,

ROBERT WATCHORN,
Special Immigrant Inspector.

Now I think I have fully complied with the promise I made in the beginning, that the proofs of my statements should be as nearly as possible official. This gentleman is in a position to know all about the people who are coming in to this country, because, as I said before, he is in charge of the whole force of inspectors from St. John, New Brunswick, to Sault Ste. Marie, in the west. I hope the minister will carefully consider not only the enormous amounts of money we are spending on immigration, but whether it would not be worth while to put a head tax upon steamship companies bringing immigrants to this country. Somebody said to me a while ago: You don't have to send immigrants to the Yukon, you can hardly keep them out. And my opinion is that if we have two or three more good seasons in Manitoba and the North-west we will have very little trouble in filling up that country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The subject which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) has brought to the attention of the House will, I presume, be admitted to be of sufficient importance to justify an ample discussion, in order that the House may be as fully informed as possible respecting the work of the Immigration Department, and that the department may have an opportunity of listening to suggestions made from both sides of the House as to the manner in which the department may improve its methods. I had a good deal to do with immigration for some years. For four years before I became a member of this government I had much to do with matters relating to immigration in connection with the Manitoba government, and in many other ways, although that subject was not specially under my jurisdiction.

I have necessarily devoted a very considerable amount of attention to the subject, and I have had an opportunity of informing myself as to the method of carrying on the work to be pursued. I can find no fault with the criticisms which the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) has addressed to the House as to the conduct of the department, but, when I say that I do not say that in every respect I agree with him. I desire to find no fault either as to the method or spirit in which he has performed the task of criticising the work of the department. I am quite satisfied that an examination of the work of the department, conducted in that spirit and simply with a desire of finding out and informing the House fully as to what has been done, can do the department no harm, but that, on the whole, it is calculated to bring about improvements in the conduct of the work. The House will understand, of course, that where half a million of dollars has to be expended under the direction of a minister who has a large number of public interests to look after, and of departments of one kind or another to superintend, that it is extremely difficult to keep track of everything that is done in connection with the work, and I am bound to say that I do not at all object to the officials of the Department of Immigration being aware of the fact that they are likely to be overhauled by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House before the Committee on Agriculture. Possibly that fact may have a healthy influence upon their conduct and their work and if so the government and the public generally will profit.

I suppose there will be no difference of opinion as to the importance of immigration work in Canada. It need not be discussed. The length of time which we spent in this House in discussing the census returns would indicate a general consensus of opinion that the question of population in Canada is, as it is in other new countries, one of the first importance, and I therefore think it justifies any amount of attention that hon. gentlemen feel themselves able to give to the subject. It goes without saying, Mr. Speaker, that there is perhaps no country in the civilized world to-day that will profit so largely and so immediately from a rapid increase in population as would the Dominion of Canada. We have such an enormous store of natural resources, not simply in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, where a vast extent of fertile agricultural land lies waiting for settlers, but in all the provinces of the Dominion. The northern portion of the province of Quebec where there are vast regions which have scarcely been touched as yet, the northern regions of the province of Ontario, New Brunswick, and the maritime provinces as well, with perhaps the exception of Prince Edward Island, and the western provinces all together give us enormous dormant natural resources easy to develop by an industrious and willing people, the equal of which cannot be found in the world to-day. Therefore, it becomes a question to which the wisdom of the members of this House may well be devoted to decide upon the best method of attacking and carrying on the work which is under the charge of the Department of Immigration. Now, I have no desire at all to place before the House the suggestion, or the claim, that the work which has been carried on under my supervision for the last five years has been perfectly done. I can only say that to the best of my ability I have endeavoured to see that every possible opportunity was taken to make that work successful and I may say without very much difficulty that on the whole the work has been successful and that we have done even much more than we could reasonably have been expected to have done before that work was undertaken. I desire, before going into any details in regard to the work, which I have not time to do before six o'clock, to answer in detail as far as possible a few of the criticisms which the hon. member for Lennox has brought to the attention of the House. One of the references particularly was to the personality of our agent in Ireland. Let me say in the first place, before I speak of that, that under any possible system of carrying on the work of immigration an hon. member of this House will be able at the end of four or five years to point to this place or that place and to say that the work has not been as successful as we would have liked. You cannot hope for phenomenal success everywhere. As, when firing off bullets on the battle field you cannot hope to kill with every bullet, but if you do not fire off any bullets at all, you cannot hope to kill anybody. We set our agents at work in various countries. In some places the work will turn out to be successful, while, with equally energetic and capable work in other places, it may happen that on account of adverse local circumstances the work is not successful, and you will be able at the end of a period of four or five years to lay your hand on some place where the work has not been as successful as we might have wished. As far as Mr. Devlin is concerned, I think every hon. member of this House who is acquainted with that gentleman will agree with me when I say that Mr. Devlin is a man of very extraordinary and exceptional ability. I do not think that any person who knows Mr. Devlin will dispute that fact, and if any person may be regarded as being well qualified to take charge of the work in Ireland and succeed in turning the tide of public opinion and of the people moving from Ireland in favour of Canada, Mr. Devlin would be the man likely to do it.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that Mr. Devlin, when he was appointed, was in charge of the immigration business in Ireland. Now, I understand that he has been reduced to the position of an ordinary immigration agent, that he has nothing to do with any other agent and that he has to report to Mr. Preston. Will the hon. minister tell us whether that is so ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no substantial change in the position which Mr. Devlin occupies now as compared with the position that he occupied before. The Deputy Minister of the Interior has lately been in the old country and he has made recommendations in regard to the method in which the work shall be carried on, but, to all intents and purposes, so far as the practical carrying on of the work is concerned, the work of Mr. Devlin is just what it was before. The London office has always had general supervision of the work in Ireland and the British isles generally, and the London office will continue to supervise that work. But what I was saying was, that, so far as Mr. Devlin's personality is concerned, I do not think anybody who knows him will dispute the fact that if we were to look out for a man who would be competent to make a success of the work in Ireland, Mr. Devlin is the man that any person in this House would select for the work. I know that there are gentlemen on the other side of the House, and there are gentlemen on this side of the House too, who upon certain subjects entertain different opininons from those held by Mr. Devlin as to——

Mr. WILSON. I did not discuss Mr. Devlin's ability. So far as he was concerned I only discussed his indiscretion in giving that interview.

The MINISTER OF INTERIOR. My hon. friend (Mr. Wilson) must permit me to say something he did not say. My hon. friend was discussing the question of Mr. Devlin's salary, and that rendered it incumbent on me to discuss Mr. Devlin's ability to earn his salary. While we all recognize Mr. Devlin's ability and capacity—and I do not think that any one however violently prejudiced he may be against his opinions, will dispute his ability—I know it to be a fact that there are gentlemen on both sides of the House who have very violent differences of opinion with Mr. Devlin in regard to certain questions. I wish to say that so far as the question is concerned as to whether Mr. Devlin sympathizes with Mr. Redmond's political opinions or with the political opinions of Col. Saunderson the noted fire eater from Ulster who occupies a position directly opposite to that of Mr. Redmond——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the minister allow me to correct him, Col. Saunderson is not a fire eater, and he represents the city of Glasgow and he lives in Glasgow.

The MINISTER OF INTERIOR. If he is not a fire eater I beg his pardon.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Col. Saunderson is a gentleman Sir ; a most distinguished gentleman.

The MINISTER OF INTERIOR. Well, I will speak in general terms and I will say 'any fire eater.' However, I may tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes) that my idea of Col. Saunderson being a fire eater arose from the fact that the last time I saw his name mentioned it was in connection with a free fight in which the two sides were represented.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Yes, and he won.

The MINISTER OF INTERIOR. That gave rise to a slight impression in my mind that Col. Saunderson might be a fire eater.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). He stood up for his rights.

The MINISTER OF INTERIOR. However, that may be, what I desire to say is that so far as Mr. Devlin's opinions upon the subject of home rule for Ireland or the Nationalist question in Ireland are concerned, they do not concern either myself or the officers of the department particularly, and I am bound to say that I do not see why they should. There may be agents, and there will possibly be agents in the Department of the Interior scattered over various countries, who at times may be guilty of what may be regarded as political indiscretion which it would be quite impossible for any minister to prevent taking place. I do not know but what perhaps we might better leave Mr. Devlin to decide whether it is judicious for him to entertain opinions of a strong character upon political questions, so long as he does not do anything offensive to the government of the country in which he is doing his work. It appears to me that is the limit we ought to place upon the expression of political opinions. So long as Mr. Devlin does not make himself offensive to the government of the country in which he is working, I do not think we need concern ourselves particularly about his political views.

I venture however to say that if it were thought that Mr. Devlin was not a Nationalist in that part of the country in which he is doing his work, his usefulness would be largely gone, and therefore we cannot find fault witht him for at least allowing the people to believe that he entertains that political faith.

As to the effect of Mr. Devlin's work I shall quote a piece of testimony, and that is all I shall say on that phase of the question. I am not going to ask the House to take my own opinion or the opinion of any officer of the Department of Interior, nor even the opinion of any member of the Liberal party, but I shall quote the opinion of a gentleman who is a member of the same political party as our friends opposite, and who, I think is very competent to give an opinion on this subject. If the members of the House will look at the Ottawa 'Journal' of March 31st, they will there find a leter signed 'J. J.,' headed 'Mr. Devlin and Irish emigration.' Now 'J. J.' are the initials of the name of the writer. and I have the permission of the editor of the Ottawa 'Journal' to state what the name is. I knew the name of the writer at any rate, but I did not desire to disclose it without authority. The name of the person who wrote that letter to the Ottawa 'Journal' is Mr. James Johnson, a gentleman who corresponds in various parts of the British Isles, for a number of Canadian newspapers.

Mr. WILSON. Who is that ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Jimmie Johnson.

The MINISTER OF INTERIOR. Mr. Johnson was formerly editor of the Kingston 'News' and later on the editor of the Ottawa 'Citizen.' He was an intimate friend of the late Sir John Macdonald, and an active and aggressive member of the Conservative party, so that I cannot be accused of quoting the evidence of a person who has any prejudice in favour of the present government. I shall not trouble the House by reading all of this long letter which extends over a column. It will be found in the Ottawa 'Journal' of March 31st of this year. I will read a portion of it which I think will convince the House that they must not be mislead into taking an adverse view of Mr. Devlin's course, by the separated extracts from his statements which have been placed before the House by my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson). Mr. Johnson, first of all, discusses the condition of affairs in Ireland. Referring to the statement as made by Mr. Devlin that he did not urge people to leave Ireland, Mr. Johnson points out that this statement is quite consistent with Mr. Devlin doing effective work. The condition of the people of Ireland is that large numbers are emigrating. It is therefore not necessary for any one to urge people to leave Ireland and if Mr. Devlin did so it would be unpopular, and he would array against himself very influential classes of the community. Mr. Johnson points out, that knowing the fact that large numbers were certain to leave Ireland the true position for Mr. Devlin to take is to induce those who are leaving to direct their course to Canada. That is exactly what Mr. Devlin is doing.

The MINISTER OF INTERIOR. Mr. Johnson goes on to write as follows :—

Irishmen, of all classes, will emigrate ; millions have done so, and the percentage of them who regret their action is infinitesimally small. As (if I remember rightly) I remarked in a letter from Ireland some time ago, Mr. Devlin's attitude is this : He addresses the countrymen of his forefathers and says to them : 'I do not urge you to leave Ireland ; I do not want a man or woman who thinks he or she can get along well enough at home to pull up his or her stakes and to bid farewell, probably for ever, to the land of your birth, to which you are attached by so many natural ties. If, however, you have resolved upon seeking an existence in a new land—if you are determined upon trying your fortune elsewhere, I come to you as the representative of a government which can offer you terms of settlement as satisfactory as those to be obtained in any portion of the habitable globe. Canada is a country of vast extent, of unlimited personal freedom, of great possibilities—a country whose inhabitants can boast of its health-promoting and invigorating climate, of magnificent scenery, unparalleled in the world ; of great lakes and noble rivers ; of natural resources which are rich and varied and practically inexhaustible ; of a system of government unequalled in its advantages in the general interests of the people ; of educational advantages within the reach of all ; a country where, as the result of industrious perseverance and frugality of living, a man may, within a reasonably short time become, in the most absolute sense his own landlord—the owner not only of the house in which he lives, but of the land upon which it is built.' Such, I understand, is Mr. Devlin's attitude ; and can it be successfully challenged ? I do not think so. And, in my humble opinion it is perfectly consistent with the declaration, 'I do not urge Irishmen to leave Ireland.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that I can offer no more satisfactory evidence than this, from a gentleman of the same political faith as our friends opposite, a correspondent of Conservative papers, who is in England at the present time, who has been all over the ground, and who feels compelled to express his opinion that Mr. Devlin's attitude cannot be successfully challenged.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman one question ? I understood him to say that he did not consider Mr. Devlin's statement, that he would never advise immigrants to leave Ireland, inconsistent with his duty as an immigration agent. Does he regard it as consistent with Mr. Devlin's duty to belong to the National Land League and to give subscriptions to it—a body which advises the people not to leave Ireland ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will answer the hon. gentleman's question after 8 o'clock.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair, at 6 o'clock, I had devoted some attention to the remarks which were made by the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) in regard to the work of Mr. Devlin in Ireland. I think I had said practically all that I desired to say on that subject, except, in reply to the hon. member who interrogated me at 6 o'clock, that I do not think it is possible or desirable for the government to attempt to make inquisitorial examination into the opinions of men in the civil service. We have Irish Catholics and Irish Protestants, French Catholics and French Protestants, English Catholics and English Protestants in the government service. They do not agree on all subjects either political or religious, and in a country like Canada I do not think it is desirable for us to undertake to scrutinize too closely the opinions arrived at to some extent from the nationality of the individual. Our friends the Irish Catholics will entertain opinions on the subject of home rule for Ireland as long as they see fit to do it, and no opinion that may be expressed to the contrary by any other portion of the community is likely to affect those opinions. It is quite true, we have not secured a large immigration from Ireland ; but I have not thought it desirable materially to change the position there, except to withdraw one of our agents on the report of the deputy minister. We now have one agent there in addition to Mr. Devlin, the third agent, Mr. Webster, having been taken from Dublin and sent to England to be attached to the High Commissioner's office ; and he is now in this country in charge of a party of British immigrants who have lately come out.

With regard to the increase to Mr. Devlin's salary, that was made on my own motion, on Mr. Devlin's application to me, repeated several times, and I am quite prepared to take the responsibility of it ; and I do not think that the House, particularly those members who are acquainted with Mr. Devlin, will say that the salary he receives is out of proportion to his ability and the energy he brings to the work in which he is engaged.

With regard to the attitude of the hon. member for Lennox as to the number of immigrants we get from Ireland, I can only say that while it may be quite possible for him to pick out the year 1896, in which no agent was stationed in Ireland, and to say that because we got so many immigrants in that year, therefore the agents who have been stationed there have done nothing, and that we would get as many immigrants if there were no agents in Ireland, if the hon. gentleman had any acquaintance with immigration work he would know that such is not the case. We would get a certain number of immigrants from the British Isles if we had no agents there at all ; but the number would dwindle very largely. The general rule of immigration work is that we get immigrants just in proportion as our efforts are vigorous or otherwise. There is no rule more clear, as is shown by the results of the past five years, than that just as soon as you stop spending money and making efforts the number of immigrants you receive from any special section falls off. Local circumstances may control in some cases and cause a slight variation from this rule ; but the general rule unquestionably holds good.

Respecting the criticism of my hon. friend as to the form of the statements prepared by the Department of Immigration, I can only say that if my hon. friend will confer with the leader of the opposition, and take the responsibility of making any request respecting that matter, I will consider it very carefully, and do the best I can to meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen opposite in that respect.

Just a few words with regard to another question which my hon. friend brought up, and which has been brought up in other places and at other times ; that is, the question which is to some extent dealt with by the Bill I had the honour of introducing yesterday—the question whether it is or is not true that Canada is being over run by immigrants of an undesirable character, persons of criminal antecedents and tendencies, and persons suffering from diseases of a malignant type. I can say at once to the House that there is no foundation whatever for that statement. It has grown out of a few trifling circumstances ; it has been magnified by a certain portion of the press ; and for reasons which interested persons entertain and are influenced by ; but as a matter of fact it is not worthy of discussion in this place. The circumstances are of the most trifling description. The position at the present time is this. A large number of the agents which the United States Immigration Department keeps in office along the line of the Canadian frontier are not kept there for the purpose of preventing people going from Canada to the United States because they are suffering from diseases or because they are undesirable immigrants.

They are kept there for the purpose of enforcing the Alien Labour law, and it might happen in an odd case that some person, diseased or deformed, who attempted to cross the boundary, might be stopped. But they are not there for that purpose, and there is no occasion of that kind sufficiently general to require any attention whatever on our part. What we do require is to keep close watch on the people coming to our shores from foreign countries. The inspection of these people is made at Quebec, Halifax and St. John. None is required at Montreal, because they are landed at Quebec and inspected before being sent forward. The United States department has officers and medical inspectors at these three places—Quebec, Halifax and St. John. Inspections are made there by the American officers, and our officials know every person who is rejected by them. It is all done within a few yards of where our officers are stationed, so that they know every person rejected. To show the wild statements made sometimes in the press, let me refer to the report, which was published not long ago, that there were over 200 diseased persons in the hospitals at Montreal who had landed there on their way to the United States and had been stopped by the American officers and thrown on our community. That was a serious statement and it received attention. I took the trouble to have an investigation, and I found that in Montreal the medical superintendent of the Notre Dame Hospital reported that in January there were two immigrants admitted to his hospital, in February two, and in March six. The medical superintendent of the Royal Victoria reported that there had not been a sick or diseased immigrant admitted there during the past three months. The Montreal General Hospital reported that there were not at present any diseased immigrant patients in the hospital, nor had there been any within the past three months. The Hotel Dieu reported that during the past three months there were seven patients in that hospital, some of whom might be classed as immigrants, but their diseases were of the most trifling character, and nearly all were discharged as cured. As a matter of fact, out of 25,000 people who came to Canada and landed at the three ports I have mentioned, on their way to the United States, 132 were rejected by the American commissioners, and out of these 132 there are 39 in Canada at present. Of these 39, 21 are Germans who were rejected for a most trifling and absurd reason. They were rejected because some slight disease had broken out among the people. Our medical examiner declared that there was no reason why they should not be allowed to remain in Canada, and they were sent to the North-west and are there now. They were of a fairly good class and quite desirable as immigrants. That leaves 18 out of the 39, of whom seven or eight are at St. John awaiting deportation, as soon as the Act is passed which I have introduced, so that the House will see that the wild statement I have referred to is entirely without foundation.

I have a copy of the interview with Mr. Watchorn, the special inspector of the United States government, which was given to the Montreal 'Star.' I shall not criticise that interview in detail, further than to say there is nothing in it which would cause me to qualify the statements I have made in any way. It will easily be understood that men stationed as officers along the Canadian frontier line are desirous to show their government that they have a great deal to do, as otherwise their offices would be abolished, and we may therefore look constantly for indications in the press that these gentlemen are extremely busy.

As regards the suggestion that there should be an arrangement between the two governments respecting persons unfit to be admitted to Canada, that arrangement now exists and is being carried out as completely as possible, and when the Act I have introduced is on the statute-book, we will have the power to deport unsatisfactory immigrants which we cannot well do now. The only thing necessary to enable us to carry out the arrangement with absolute perfection is the power to deport immigrants rejected alike by our American commissioners and our own officers. As soon as we have that power, it will be exercised. This question has only arisen during the past year, and only within three or four months has our attention been called to the necessity of legislation of that kind. That is all I need say upon the examination of the immigrants as they enter Canada.

I think it might be well for me to indicate the general scope of the work of the immigration branch. We spend over half a million dollars a year for the purpose of promoting this work. At present in Canada our work consists in receiving immigrants at the ocean ports. We have large accommodation sheds at Halifax, and commodious quarters at St. John and Quebec, and officers, matrons and medical attendants where necessary. In some places the quarantine officer does the medical work. At these places we receive immigrants and have every facility for making a proper examination and seeing everything is done which is required. We have also an office in Montreal, and in addition we give a grant to the immigration society in Montreal, which does a very valuable work in connection with looking after women who come out as immigrants and who are, for the time being, homeless or in need of assistance or protection. In the North-west, we have a staff at Winnipeg and officers stationed throughout the various parts of the country. The intention of the department is that every person who is shipped forward and reports at the Winnipeg office shall be taken care of as early as possible, and every effort made to keep track of that person until he is actually located on land and becomes a bona fide settler. That work differentiates our system very clearly from that followed in former years. The result of my residence for many years in the North-west convinces me that the reason for the failure of immigration work by the late government, was that when these people got to Winnipeg they were simply dumped out and left to take care of themselves. I am not adverting to that for the purpose of attacking or criticising the late government, but am simply pointing out what everybody in the west knows to be the case. One of the first things I did was to organize a staff for that purpose. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) was put in charge as immigration commissioner, and until he became a candidate for a seat in this House, he performed that work with great energy and capacity, as is universally recognized by both political parties and citizens generally in the North-west. The result of the change was that instead of poor immigrants, but well deserving enough and willing enough to work, but lacking direction and knowledge of the country, being thrown on the community, those people were looked after and provided for, and care was exercised over them the first three months, in which time they became self-sustaining, and in nearly every case settled down and became self-supporting citizens. We practically have no trouble in the west in regard to taking care of our immigrants. The system has been thoroughly worked out, the officers understand their business, and the work goes along with great regularity. Consequently, we are practically free from annoyances and difficulties which my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) had to contend with during the earlier years when he took charge of it.

We have in Ireland two agents, in Wales one, in England five, in Scotland one, on the continent of Europe one, and in the United States twenty. That is to say, we have in the United States twenty salaried officers and agents, besides about two hundred and fifty local agents who are paid entirely by commission. That gives the House a general idea of the scope of the work and the places where the work is done. The only material additions to that summary which I require to give is with regard to the continent of Europe. We are not allowed there to carry on openly an immigration propaganda. But we have an arrangement with what is known as the North Atlantic Transportation Company—I think that is the name, though I may not have it technically accurate—under which the bonuses formerly paid to steamship companies are paid to that company. The company is an association of steamship agents, booking agents, who have been long in the business of booking passengers from the continent of Europe, and who understand the business far better than any government officer could. We pay the bonus to them on satisfactory evidence being furnished that the immigrants have become bona fide settlers of Canada. We have had a contract with the company for the last year or two, and it has lately been renewed. They are men of wealth and substance and standing in the business they follow, and the relations of the department with them have been of an extremely satisfactory character.

Now, just a few words with regard to the results of the work. In the first place, I think hon. members who have heard the discussions that have taken place on this subject in past years will bear me out in saying I have not been excessively sanguine in the remarks I have made on this subject. I have not sought to give the House the idea that we were entitled to claim any wonderful amount of credit for the work we were doing. Nor have I sought to overdraw the success of the efforts we were making. But I have indicated to the House from time to time the great difficulty under which the work was carried on, and have tried to point out the systematic and persistent effort that is required if the work is to be successful. When I took charge some five years ago, it was admitted between the Prime Minister and myself when we discussed the subject—and time has not changed the opinion of either of us, I fancy—that the successful prosecution of the work of the immigration branch was one of the most important things, if not the most important thing the government of Canada had to deal with. It was thought and I think present circumstances indicate the truth of it, that there was no line of expenditure that would produce for the people of Canada more desirable and satisfactory results than a successful immigration propaganda, resulting in the addition to our population of a large number of people who would engage in productive agricultural operations. I have no desire to waste time in recriminating or in calling special attention to the history of this work in the past. My hon. friend from Lennox has given certain statistics, some of which, perhaps, I would have given if he had not. The information is there, and it is not necessary for me to repeat it. But I do desire to point out that, at the time when the change of government took place and when we took charge of this work of the immigration department, the work carried on by our friends of the late government had proven to be an absolute failure. They did not succeed, apparently, in taking hold of this movement and carrying it to a successful conclusion. And the best proof of that is in the fact that they had themselves voluntarily reduced the amount of money they were expending in connection with the immigration operations, they had discharged their agents in various places, and the operations that were being carried on by them during the year when the change of government took place were the reverse of vigorous and showed that no great interest was being taken in this question. We had to begin and build up the work almost from the beginning. In certain parts of the work we have been extremely successful, in other parts, perhaps, not so successful. On the whole, I can say that the money expended has been well expended; I claim that no money has been expended by the government in the past five years that has produced more desirable, substantial and satisfactory results, or that will redound more to the credit and prosperity of Canada than the money expended by the immigration branch. I do not propose to enter unnecessarily into statistics upon this question. But I may say that we had, in 1896, from all sources, 16,835 immigrants. The number has grown steadily. Last year it was, in round numbers, 50,000. I shall be very much surprised—and I am not inclined as a rule to be sanguine or to over-estimate what is going to happen—if that 50,000 does not grow to 70,000 during the present year. While, during the first two or three years of our work, the results were not so great, perhaps, as we might have hoped, it was not unreasonable that such would be the case. Let me point out some of the difficulties under which we labour. My hon. friend from Lennox has said that he would be prepared to back the government in any reasonable expenditure to get desirable immigrants from the United States. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when we began our work in the spring of 1897, in the states of Minnesota and Dakota, we were faced by the fact that the farmers in the southern portion of the United States did not believe that we could raise wheat in Manitoba or the North-west Territories. Their ignorance of the situation, their ignorance of our country was so dense as to be almost incredible. To overcome that, we had to adopt every means we could think of—means that, necessarily, were very expensive. The first thing we did was to send agents to the fall fairs throughout the southern portions of Minnesota and Dakota, and also in parts of Iowa and other western states, with exhibits of farm produce. These men took such things as grain in the sheaf and vegetables of all kinds and exhibited them at these fairs, advertised their exhibits in the local papers and induced people to come and see them. In this way we got many to understand what kind of a country it was we were inviting the people to come to. We found that by this means we accomplished something. But we found we had to do something more radical than that, and we adopted the following means: We found that the editors of the papers in the western states had state editorial associations, and that those associations were in the habit every year of taking pleasure trips through various parts of the country, and we utilized that fact by inviting these state editorial associations to take their pleasure trip through the western portion of Canada. We secured transportation for these associations over the Canadian Pacific Railway and took them through from Winnipeg to the Pacific coast. We did this three years in succession, and we saw while they were on the trip that they enjoyed themselves as well as possible. The expense was not very great, the visitors were accorded a hearty reception at the hands of the people along the line, and they saw the country under the most favourable circumstances. They were quite ready to accede to our request, when they went back home, that each editor should write a fair and reasonable account of what he had seen in western Canada. The House will understand that the result of that policy being followed respecting three or four of the great western states, and the distribution of literature favourable to Canada, and descriptive of western Canada, was entirely to change the sentiment of the rural classes in those states. The result is shown in the growing figures of immigration which we have received from those states. We started in the first year with an American immigration in 1897, of 712; in 1898, of 9,119; in 1899, of 11,945; in 1900, of 15,500; in 1901, of 17,987. I do not think it is possible that we should have less than from 25,000 to 30,000 this year, and gentlemen who are in a better position to make an estimate than I am put the figures considerably higher. So it will be seen that for the purpose of making known the resources, not only of western Canada, but of all Canada, through the western states where there is an agricultural class who are ideal settlers for Canada, the money we have spent and the efforts we have made have proved to be almost phenomenally successful and satisfactory.

Before I speak more upon that point, I am going to give a few figures to show the results of the policy which has been carried on. I have already said that the total number of immigrants who have gone in there rose from 16,835 in 1896, to about 50,000 last year. During the first three months of this year, to the 31st of March, we have reported over 10,000 immigrants through the Winnipeg office; the Winnipeg office keeps track of all the immigrants who go into Manitoba and the North-west Territories. Last year during the same period, from the 1st of January to the 31st of March, the number was 5,800; so that this year we have almost doubled the record of last year. The House will see that I am within the mark when I say that as against the 50,000 last year we are very likely to have not less than 70,000 this year.

The statement is also made that the immigrants we are receiving are mostly foreigners of a doubtful class, and it may be interesting to give some figures in that connection to show what the facts are. Last year, out of 49,000 immigrants that we received, 11,810 were British, 17,983 were from the United States, 1,750 were Scandinavians, 984 were Germans, the rest were miscellaneous nationalities from the continent. Now let it be remembered that all these immigrants passed through the hands of our officers, who know exactly to what class these people belong. I am therefore quite justified in saying that there is no foundation for the statement that these people are not of a class that are likely to become good settlers and good citizens of Canada. Apart altogether from that opinion which I express, the House will see that in round numbers 30,000 out of 50,000 were British and Americans.

The question of the cost of the immigrants is one respecting which the House may not have consulted the report of the department, and I will mention the figures, which can be found in the annual report. The cost of immigrants from the continent last year was $2.65 per head; the British immigrants cost $9.58 per head; the United States immigrants cost $7.96 per head; the average per capita was $6.07; including the expenditure in Canada for looking after them, the total was $8.34 per head. Now if hon. gentlemen have paid much attention to the question of populating vacant lands and colonizing generally, they will know that these figures are small. The experience of land companies in the western states, and of railway companies generally has been that on an average—I think my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary), who has had a good deal of experience in this line will confirm what I say—on an average each head of a family who has located upon railway companies' land has cost the land company about $50. As against that we are able to show that our expenditure with respect to immigrants that we have received is about $8.34 per head, or allowing four to a family, about $35 per head of a family.

Now as to the actual results which have followed in the way of settlement, I think it will be seen that they are satisfactory. During the four years which preceded 1897, the number of homestead entries made in Manitoba and the North-west Territories was 9,844 ; the number of homestead entries that were made in the succeeding four years was 27,130. Now it will be evident to any person that this growth could not happen by accident, it is simply the result of persistent work which we have carried on for the purpose of colonization. The net number of homestead entries which were granted in 1896, taking off those that were cancelled, was less than 150, in 1901 the number was 8,136. For the first three months of the year 1902, the number of homestead entries that have been granted in Manitoba and the North-west Territories amounts to 3,024, and we may confidently expect that at the end of the year we will be able to show a total of over 10,000 homestead entries in the west. I do not know that I need to go into any further details for the purpose of showing the success of the work we have carried on.

But, I may point out to the House that not only is settlement carried on by the granting of homestead entries, but settlement has progressed to the extent and the class of settlers we are getting in is improving to the extent, that, I fancy, fully one-half of the settlers that are actually located on the land in the west are located on purchased lands and have not taken up homestead at all. The division, I would say, roughly speaking, would be about one half, so that in addition to something over 8,000 homestead entries last year, there was practically an equal amount of land sold by various railways and land companies with the result that practically an equal amount of land was settled in addition to that which was settled by the taking up of homesteads, or of free grant lands. The statistics in regard to the sale of lands show very clearly what has been going on.

Let us take the case of five companies having land for sale in the North-west Territories—the Hudson's Bay Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Manitoba and South-western Colonization Railway Company, the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railroad and Steamship Company, and the Calgary and Edmonton Railway Company, these being the companies which are the principal land owners in the North-west. The sales since 1893 have been as follows :

Year.	Acres.
1893..	120,000
1894..	68,666
1895..	114,000
1896..	108,000
1897..	222,000
1898..	448,000
1899..	462,000
1900..	648,000
1901..	621,000

And for the three months of this year these five companies have sold 443,000 acres of land. The House will see that there has been an enormous change in the position of affairs. In fact, I need not say anything to convince hon. gentlemen from the west, or hon. gentlemen who are following the state of affairs there, that a transformation has taken place in regard to the position of affairs in that western country. In 1896, it would be safe to say, that there was no progress being made. This was the position of the population of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. Practically, things were at a standstill and in the great territory of Alberta, I think I am safe in saying, that the people, to some extent at least, were actually moving out of that territory. At the present time there is an enormous stream of population going into that territory and not only going into Alberta but into different portions of the Canadian North-west. As a result of the effect which our work is having we find that the inauguration of a movement of settlers from the western states to Canada has caused speculators from the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis and other western cities to go into the North-west Territories and buy up large quantities of land. We find now that the work which we as a government are doing in the western states through our agents is being enormously supplemented by the efforts of these American speculators who have bought land in Manitoba and the North-west Territories and who are endeavouring to co-operate with us in getting settlers to go upon the land which they have purchased. I might give to the House a practical indication of one result of the work which we have been doing. I had sent to me the other day a special issue of the Minneapolis 'Journal,' a paper published in the city of Minneapolis which has a very large circulation and I find, Sir, that the Minneapolis 'Journal' has actually published a special edition dealing with the resources of western Canada in which they describe the resources of our western country in as glowing terms as any government pamphlet could do. I fancy that between the time when the farmers of Minnesota would not belive that we could grow wheat north of the international boundary line and the time when we find a great Minneapolis paper making a special issue for the purpose of advertising our land, there must have been a large amount of effective work done. I find on the front page, head lines to this effect :

American Invasion of Western Canada a Peaceful Invasion.

Bumper Crops of 1901 made Western Canada Canada's Land of Rich Promise.

I simply bring this to the attention of the House to show one of the results of the work we have been doing in the western states, and that we have secured the co-operation of the most important agency that could possibly be obtained. The people who would not believe the representations of our agents and who would not read the government pamphlets will read the representations and statements of their papers, will believe these statements and will be influenced by them to a much greater extent than they would be by any other agency that could be employed. We have these land companies in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Omaha, and we have therefore co-operating agencies in these western cities of the most effective description and the result is seen in what is taking place in our western country at the present time.

I am not going to burden the discussion by quoting extracts to any extent at all, but I am going to cite, for the benefit of hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, a few remarks from papers which support them and which, therefore, cannot be accused of being unduly biased in favour of the government. There is no paper in Canada that has more violently attacked me and attacked the policy which I have pursued in regard to immigration than the Winnipeg 'Telegram.' The Winnipeg 'Telegram' in its issue of the 3rd of this month used language to this effect:

> Probably there has never been a greater movement with 'back to the land' behind it than is now going on in the province of Manitoba and the North-west. The general tendency from all quarters of the globe seems to be concentrated in the pursuit of agriculture. Settlers are coming in from all quarters of the globe, but the most notable influx of land buyers is from the republic to the south.

The Winnipeg 'Tribune' refers to this special edition and describes the influx of people in much the same terms. We have had articles in the New York 'Sun,' the Springfield 'Republican' and in the leading United States papers describing the movement, and all attributing a vigour and extent to it, which I, myself, can hardly believe to be well founded, because, if the statements which we find in these papers were correct, the numbers who would be coming would be much beyond anything we have hitherto ventured to hope for.

I have called the attention of the House to these facts for a purpose, and that purpose, Mr. Speaker, is, if possible, to enlist the sympathy of hon. members on both sides of the House in the vigorous prosecution of this work and in everything that tends to the promotion of immigration in the west. I want to say, as a responsible minister, having before me the fact that what I say is taken down and that I am likely to be judged by it in the future, that I have formed the deliberate opinion, and I entertain the deliberate opinion to-night, that Canada has, during the next two or three years, the greatest opportunity of promoting its own greatness that it has ever had since confederation.

I beg to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not believe that there is a gentleman in this House who fully realizes what can be done for the Dominion of Canada during the next five years by a progressive agricultural settlement in the west, if all is done that ought to be done for the purpose of promoting it and assisting it, and encouraging it. Of course things may happen which we do not anticipate. Unexpected misfortunes may check this movement, or something may occur to prevent us reaping the full benefit of it. But speaking to-night from the information I have at my command, speaking with as full knowledge of the subject as it is possible to derive from the reports of officers who are engaged in the work; I believe I am safe in saying that we have inaugurated a movement of population towards western Canada much larger than that which existed in 1881 and 1882, when the first movement of population went there, and moreover, the present movement is coming from the outside and not from within Canada herself. The movement, in fact, is adding the very best class of people of the western states, by thousands, to our British population.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not mentioning this for the purpose of getting any special credit for myself. The work has been carried on to the best of the ability of the men in whose hands it has been placed. I do not agree with my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) when he says that a good crop or two would do the work and bring in settlers to fill up the country. I have lived there for a good many years. I have seen good crops, and I have seen good prices; I have seen bad crops and I have seen bad prices; but I never saw this immigration movement from the western states until the work was done there which got into the minds of the people of that country a full and complete knowledge of the resources of Canada. When that was done, and only when that was done, did we begin to reap the results of our work. If the House will consider for a few moments the possible effects of what is going on now, hon. gentlemen will realize its vast importance to the whole Dominion of Canada. Last year the production of Manitoba and the North-west Territories was enormous considering the size of the population. It must be remembered that out of the total population, perhaps not more than two-thirds contributed to that crop. Out of the population of 450,000 (or nearly 500,000 now), about one-third were persons who had come in within the last three years, and it is not until a settler has been in the country three or four years that he is able to produce to any considerable extent or to add appreciably to the general production. Therefore, only about two-thirds of the population of the west contributed to last year's crop. When you consider the enormous production of last year coming from certainly not more than 300,000 producers, you have only to reflect for a moment to realize what the production will be when we have from 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 upon these fertile prairies.

What I desire to impress upon the House is this: That while we have been talking in past years about having a large population upon our western prairies, we have been talking about a thing that did not appear to be in sight; a thing that was in the future; a thing that might come, but as to which we had no evidence that it was likely to come in the near future. I want to tell the House now, that if we can get several thousand settlers into the Territories, this year, and increase that again next year, then in six or seven years we will have such a producing population as will be of untold benefit to the whole Dominion of Canada. When we talk now about peopling the prairies, we are talking about something that is present; something that is tangible; something that we can all unite on no matter what our political predilections may be.

I do not plead this in order to escape criticism, because I perfectly understand that the work of the Department of Immigration, like the work of any other department of government is a matter for political criticism, and I expect to get my share as do other members of the government. But I desire to say, that so far as the result is concerned, we must all agree that the result is most desirable and if matters are carried on as they ought to be, that result is almost within our grasp.

While I am upon this subject, I want to say a word or two more upon the necessities of the situation in the west. The House will pardon me for departing a little from the question immediately before the House, but perhaps there will be no discussion in this House again in respect to which it will be as opportune as it is now. What I want to say is this: Many gentlemen who represent constituencies in eastern Canada are unable to understand the importunity of our western people in regard to railroads. They are apt to think, and not without apparent reason, that our people are sometimes unreasonable in their demands for railway accommodation, which would seem to be far in excess of that which older portions of the eastern provinces possess. I want to call the attention of the House to a fact known to persons who are familiar with the western country. In the first place, that is a wheat raising country; in many sections it is almost exclusively a wheat-raising country, and the conditions are different from what they are in any other portions of Canada. The farmer from the western states who has been accustomed to live in a wheat-raising state, will not go anywhere that he does not think he is going to be within twenty miles of a railway. He simply won't go. He will go 200 miles or 500 miles away if he has reason to believe that there will be a railway there within a few years, but he will not settle down with the idea that he is going to be thirty or forty miles from a railway, because he knows from experience that no man can raise wheat and haul it that distance to a railway station and make it pay. The enormous labour of hauling large crops of wheat a long distance has proven by experience to be such that wheat growing cannot be successfully carried on under such conditions. Our people have learned that lesson by experience. The result is that if there is a section of the country thirty or forty miles away from any railway that is projected, and the people get the idea that there is not going to be a railway there within a reasonable time, they will simply get out and go to some other part of the country which is favourably situated, and which is likely to get a railway soon. My object in making this reference is to commend to the favourable consideration of the House the idea of a liberal policy in respect to the construction of colonization railways through the Northwest. I am satisfied that if parliament desires to reap to the fullest extent possible the benefit which can be reaped from the position in which we stand to-day in respect to immigration, parliament will have to face this railway question in the Northwest. Without being too sanguine, I think I can say to the House: That we practically have got over the hill upon the immigration question; we have surmounted the principal difficulties, and we may now hope for a pretty rapid return for the money which we have been expending in past years.

Just a word or two in regard to the work of the department in Great Britain. My hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) mentioned that changes have been made in Great Britain. Members of the House will remember that two years ago I stated that I was not altogether satisfied with the way in which the work in Great Britain was being conducted, and that an attempt was being made to improve the character of the work there. The work in other places had been brought under the direct control of the department, and for the last year Mr. Preston, the inspector in England, had been devoting his attention largely to continental immigration, with a considerable degree of success. I stated to the House last year that the work in London had been placed under the High Commissioner, but practically, as to its actual superintendence, in charge of Mr. Preston. That was the result of a conference which I had with Lord Strathcona when I was in London, and when I discussed the subject very fully with him. When Lord Strathcona came to Canada some time ago, I again discussed it with him, with the result that the work was put more decidedly under the charge of the department and separated from the other work of the High Commissioner's office. While it was to remain under Lord Strathcona's direction as High Commissioner, the reports were to be sent direct to the head office here, and the officers were to receive instructions directly from us as to how the work should be carried on. I was not satisfied that that arrangement would be carried out successfully without some supervision here, and therefore I sent over to England Mr. Smart, the deputy minister, who has given special attention to the subject of immigration during the time he has been in charge of the department, and who is thoroughly competent to deal with any question in connection with it. Under Mr. Smart the change was made, and I think that those who follow the English papers will admit that the amount of attention he received from the English press was extremely gratifying, and the practical results, as far as immigration is concerned, have been still more gratifying; because the work of the office has assumed larger proportions from the time the change was made and a different method of carrying on the work was inaugurated. One thing that was done when Mr. Smart was in England I may mention to the House as an illustration of the difference in methods applied, and the result of it. While Mr. Smart and Mr. White, the press agent of the department, were in London, they conceived the idea of getting out an issue of a newspaper devoted specially to Canada. They got out the paper, had 500,000 copies printed, from an advertising agency got lists of names of agricultural labourers and farmers, to whom they thought it desirable to send the paper, and had the 500,000 copies distributed to them through the mails. The result was that the department received an enormous amount of inquiries from parts of the country from which no inquiries had been received before, showing that the change in method by which direct communication was had with the class of people whom it was desired to reach, did have very satisfactory results. It is intended to follow in Great Britain more largely the method which has been followed successfully in the United States, that is, to relieve the agents largely of the work of lecturing, and to trust more to advertising and literature to bring about a desire on the part of immigrants to move. This, particularly advertising in the regular press, is the best method of calling attention to the resources of the country, and inducing people to make up their minds to come. I do not know that there is anything else to which I desire at the present moment to draw attention; but if, in the course of the discussion on the estimates any other information is desired, I shall be very happy to give it.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Salaries of agents and employees in Canada, Great Britain and foreign countries, $110,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think it might be satisfactory to the House if I stated in general terms how the vote was expended in 1900-1901. Salaries of agents and employees on the immigration staff, $109,590.44. Salaries of extra clerks at the head office, $4,757.72. Travelling and office expenses—in Canada, $23,-724,90; in the United States, $31,185.62; in England, $11,696; in Ireland, $6,804.05; in Scotland, $5,119.88; on the continent, $4,-065.99; total, $82,696.45. Miscellaneous expenses in the High Commissioner's office in London, $4,704.77. Postage at the head office, $4,827. Commissions and bonuses—in the United States, $11,879.67; to children, $2,716; British and continental, $28,-136.19; total, $42,418.47. Services for land guides in the west and interpreters, $8,-701.20. Advertising and printing—in Great Britain, $74,429.50; on the continent, $2,-238.86. The last item is very small, the explanation being that under our arrangement with the North Atlantic Company, they paid for the advertising and all the expenses in that respect. The general expenses for immigration were as follows: On medical expense we spent $3,424; on laundry and miscellaneous $700; on supplies, &c., $735; on uniforms and equipment, $5,215; on collections of exhibits, $2,150; on literature and expenses of delegates, $2,781. Then we provided some medals for competition in the British schools so as to encourage the children in acquiring knowledge of Canada. For those medals we paid $614.14. We gave a special grant to the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, which we have been in the habit of giving some years, that being a railway company which has done a good deal to promote settlement and colonization in the neighbourhood of Lake St. John. We have given that company $8,000. We are giving a colonization society which works amongst the French Canadians in the eastern states and locates them in the neighbourhood of Lake St. John, $2,400. We have spent on hospitals, $3,696; on a colonization society at Algoma, $250; and on exhibits at Winnipeg Industrial Exhibition, $1,000. A good many people from Dakota and Minnesota visited this exhibition. Then we paid a gratuity to one of our officers of $200; miscellaneous expenditure, $1,696; the Workingmen's National Immigration Society, $1,-000; the Girl's Home at London, $1,000; the Girl's Home at Winnipeg, which takes care of young women who have no home, several hundred dollars; making a total expenditure of $447,739. That was the expenditure in 1900-1. and will give a fair idea of the manner in which the money is distributed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Can you give us an idea of how the $100,000 for agents and employees in the three countries mentioned is distributed ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is distributed as follows : Salaries of agents in Canada, $60,312.50 ; United States, $27,250 ; Great Britain and Ireland, $20,100 ; the continent, $3,400.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What does the amount expended in Canada cover ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That pays all the officers of the department, including those who have charge of the buildings at Halifax, St. John and Quebec, our staff in the North-west and Winnipeg, and all over the country, as well as some extra clerks here.

Mr. PUTTEE. I understand that the principal office in Liverpool has been moved to Birmingham. Why has that been done ? It seems to me that Liverpool is the proper place to have a head office.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The office has not been changed from Liverpool, but when the deputy minister was there he came to the conclusion that the staff might be better distributed. He is leaving one of the officers in Liverpool, who had been working there, Mr. Jury, and the other officer named Mitchell—a very excellent officer, with whom I am personally acquainted—has been sent to Birmingham, so that the office at Liverpool is not closed, but we are sending one of the officers to Birmingham.

Mr. PUTTEE. Is Birmingham to be the principal station ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Liverpool must be the principal station because it is the shipping port.

Mr. PUTTEE. I can hardly see what is the object of having an office in the city of Birmingham. It is hardly likely you are going to procure agriculturists from that district. You might as well expect to find them in Whitechapel. The labour interests of the country, in years past and this year, have approached the different governments and Ministers of the Interior, and have always pointed out their opposition to state aided immigration to labourers, and the reply has always been that the policy of the government was only to encourage people coming into the country who are going to settle on our lands. I was on a deputation only last month, which waited on the First Minister, and he then reiterated that policy. He told the deputation that he would have instructions sent to the agents instructing them that they were not to go out of their way to induce mechanics, labourers, wage-earners to come to Canada, and the next thing I heard was that the office was being moved from Liverpool to Birmingham.

There is another matter to which I would like to draw the attention of the hon. minister. Last August, just when the western crop was ready, there were not only large excursions inaugurated in eastern Canada, but also in Great Britain, and circulars were sent out from the High Commissioner's office in London, stating that nine shillings and ten shillings a day, with board, was being paid harvesters in western Canada. That was not true. Harvesters were not being paid $2.25 or $2.50 a day, with board, in the west. The result was that during the third week of August quite a large number left England and arrived in the west about the first week of September, only to find that they had been practically misled. This caused a great deal of dissatisfaction, and those who could do so returned straight to England, and no doubt that offset, to some extent, the work which our agents are doing over there. We should be very careful not to publish statements so much overdrawn when the facts can be ascertained. I believe that the lack of proper direction in the importing and distributing of the excursionists was the means of driving a great many British citizens across the line to the United States, and I mention this in order that it may be avoided in the future.

The thing was done in this way. In England, and also in the east here, there was a good deal of publicity given to the very true statement that there was a tremendous crop to be gathered, and that 20,000 harvesters were needed. About 18,000 came up, nearly as many as were wanted. The country had to get them. There was so little planing, so little ordering of this movement, that it was left mostly to the railway companies ; and I submit that a railway company does not go into these things thoroughly enough, and is not the proper authority to trust in such matters. The result was that large numbers of men were gathered together in small towns, sometimes after the market had been fully supplied. Unfortunately, at that time we were struck by a wet season there.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When did that occur ?

Mr. PUTTEE. From about the 4th of September. It is true, that after the men got there the local government bestirred itself and tried to relieve the situation. But it was too late then, arrangements should have been made two weeks before. There was a lack of proper handling of these men, and they suffered seriously in consequence. And we suffered also as a country. At that time the harvest to the south, in Minnesota and Dakota was not finished and numbers of our people were so disgusted with the treatment they had received that they crossed the line. They blamed the railway company, or the government or anybody they pleased, but they blamed somebody, because they found themselves there and no provision made to look after their interests. Though no figures can be got upon these matters, I am justified in saying that hundreds, probably thousands, drifted across the line into the two states I have mentioned. These were our own Canadian people mainly, people from Ontario, and from all the country east as far as Prince Edward Island, just the people we want to keep in that country. And it does seem to me that, when we are going so deeply into expenditure in immigration matters, we should, at least, not drive our own people out. I am not opposed to immigration. I am glad to say that at last we begin to see the west fill up as we expected it to. At the same time it is not good policy and it is not sound business to give all our attention and spend all our money to bring in people from other countries and not take even ordinary precautions to keep our own people. We should, at all events, make it easier for these people. If this matter had been handled properly no complaint would have been made. But there were hundreds, and I do not know that I should be wrong if I said thousands who were driven across the boundary. In case of another crop such as that, if the country has to appeal for help, thorough and early action should be taken by this government and the local government and all interested in transportation, in settling the country and in getting out the crop. I think it is only right to bring this to the attention of the minister, in order that similar difficulties may be avoided in the future.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It has not, for many years, been the policy of the department, either under the late government or under this government, to make any attempt to induce mechanics or wage earners to come to Canada. The committee will see that, of course, it will be impossible for us in our immigration work to say that we will induce nobody to come except persons who have been farmers or farm labourers in the old land. Many of our best and most successful settlers were not farmers in their own country. The test we have tried to apply is this: Does the person intending to come to Canada intend to become an agriculturist? If he does, we encourage him to come and give him every assistance we can. But we give no encouragement whatever to persons to come here to work for wages as a rule, and we give no encouragement under any circumstances to persons desirous of coming out to get clerical situations of any kind, the view being that we have enough persons to fill all situations of that sort. I think I can say that every officer of the department understands this and persistently tries to carry it out. There will be little mistakes made sometimes, but I do not think there will be any substantial violation of that rule.

As to what happened last year, I think I have a fairly good knowledge of the facts, though I was not west at the time. And I think that what happened is what would have happened in spite of the existence of any government or any effort that might have been made. The general idea on the part of the public seems to be that the officers of the department can make the people go where they like and do what they want them to. That is a mistake. It takes a great deal of tact to handle four or five hundred people when they land on the wharf at Halifax, Quebec or St. John. Very few men are qualified to do it. Great difficulty arises in inducing these people to go to the places we know they ought to go to, and to do the things we know they ought to do. Last fall the local government made an honest effort to cope with the labour situation, which was of the most extraordinary character. Sixty-five millions of bushels of wheat had to be harvested and there was not nearly enough help in sight to do the work. Men who have not lived in a wheat country do not understand the situation that arises when an enormous crop develops suddenly. I think that the local government made an honest effort to grapple with the situation, and so did we; and I think we assisted materially in saving millions of bushels of wheat that would otherwise have been lost. We induced labourers to go there and thought that was a good thing to do, because going out there with the idea that they would be farm labourers for a time they would probably become settlers, and they are the class of people who make the best settlers. But, in many cases, these people going in congregated at the larger places. The result was that there was congestion at such places as Brandon, Virden, Portage la Prairie and others, yet farmers outside were without help and were unable to get it. The officers of the local government and the members of the government also, knowing the situation did what they could to meet it. The Dominion officers also did their best, and, after a little while the congestion was overcome. But there was some little damage before it was overcome. That, however, was not due to any fault of ours, or, I believe, to any fault on the part of the local government. It was due simply to the fact that the men who came refused to take the advice of the officers of the department and go where they wanted them to go. So far as the general policy of the department is concerned, the hon. gentleman may rest assured that there is no substantial departure from the rule, no violation that would not occur under any circumstances, under any minister or with any officer. We seek not to bring persons to Canada except persons who intend to become settlers.

Mr. HENDERSON. Perhaps the greatest difficulty about the men who went out to the west on the harvest excursions last fall was that they were men entirely unaccustomed to that kind of work. Whether the government or those who invited the harvesters to go out took the precaution of warning them of the peculiar kind of labour that would be required of them, I do not know. Certainly there was a mistake made somewhere. I am informed on the very best of authority—that is by a gentleman who was on the ground—that it was not an unusual thing for the farmer to drive into town and take out a load of men to his farm in the morning and drive them back at night, because they were utterly useless for his purpose, and, to use a common expression on the farm, became 'bushed' before night. No doubt, a great many more went out than could get work at certain points. But I believe that the men who were capable of doing the work were able to obtain employment.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Where did the persons come from the hon. gentleman mentions ?

Mr. HENDERSON. I would say from every where in Ontario. There is no question that many of these people who went out there were not accustomed to farm work. They had been following occupations that did not harden them sufficiently to work in the harvest field and perform the labour that was required of them either in driving the reapers or in stooking. That perhaps is one of the hardest parts of harvest work. I think if the government had anything to do with the invitation to labourers to go to Manitoba, they should specially have warned the young men not to go out there with the idea that they were going to have a holiday, as many of them no doubt did last summer. They found it a very different thing. Many were dissatisfied and disappointed, and compelled to return. That is the only point I desire to make, that whilst a general invitation is extended to farm hands to go west during the summer, caution should be given them that they will be required to do a heavy day's work.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I desire to say to my hon. friend that so far as the movement of people from Ontario to the west is concerned, this government has nothing whatever to do with it, we keep absolutely clear of that. We do not conceive it in our business to move people from one part of Canada to the other. That is the principle adopted by the late government, and we have followed it. The invitation that was extended must either have been by the local government of Manitoba or by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I think perhaps they co-operated to get labourers to go up there. My hon. friend will see that it would be a difficult matter for them to make any distinction in the persons who accepted the invitation.

Mr. TAYLOR. In 1895-6 the late government brought down immigration estimates amounting to $21,500 ; the hon. gentleman is now asking for $110,000, a very large increase indeed. I am satisfied there is no gentleman on this side of the House who objects to a judicious expenditure of money to promote immigration. In 1895-6, the late government had agencies in England and foreign countries, and in the United States. They brought large numbers of farmers from the United States, and took them on tours through the western country. A good many people settled there coming from the old country, besides the Galicians and Doukhobours, and I think we brought as many immigrants for the $21,500, in proportion, as this government has been bringing in, and more from Ireland, as the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) has shown. We all remember the attacks that were made on the late government by the hon. gentlemen who are now occupying the Treasury benches, for even that expenditure of $21,500, and they declared that it was a waste of money to maintain agencies in the United States. What do we find now ? If the hon. gentlemen will turn to the Auditor General's Report, L-12, he will find T. O. Currie was paid $2,993 for services and expenses last year. T. O. Currie was the leader of the Patron movement, and he is paid the sum of $1,200 a year salary, and $712 for his board and lodgings, and other incidental expenses, bring the total up to $2,993. I would like to know what benefit we are getting from Mr. Currie for that sum of money. He is only one of twenty or thirty agents that are over there.

Then we have a sum of money paid Reid Bros., London, $4,060 for 101,500 copy books, at four cents a piece. I would like to know why he pays Reid Bros. of London for printing copy books. Then we have on L-16 an account that my hon. friend from Lennox referred to to-day, the Rev. D. A. Twomey, paid $1,572 simply for a pleasure trip across the ocean and back, and for travelling here in Canada. He got $600 for six months up to February 28 ; living expenses, $533.63 ; cabs and transfers, $52.48 ; postage, $2.57 ; railway fare, $76.18 ; passage to Liverpool and return, $59.80 ; tips to stewards, $24 ; wharfage, $1.22 ; travel in Canada : Cabs, $24 ; fares, $48.87 ; living expenses, $115.50 ; pullmans, $34.50, total, $1,572. Then I find that the hon. gentleman went over to Chicago, and he paid Rand, McNally & Co., $30,594 for printing, all of which ought to have been done in Canada and the money spent here. There was nothing done there but what might have been done here just as well and better. These are the items of the account:

Concise atlases, 48,625, $2,985.33; concise maps, 100 M. at $4.50; Dominion maps, 100 M. at $10.50; Norwegian pamphlets, 20 M. at $52.50; school atlases, 200 M. at $42.55, 775 for $47.58; Western Canada atlases, English, 260 M. at $43.69; French, 10 M., $433.05; German, 10 M., $407.60; Swedish, 10 M., $406.75; Danish, 10 M., $409.30; readers, flexible, 50 M., $3,069.75; printing on back and folding maps, 20 M. at $5.50, 40 M. at $4.10; binding in cloth, 1,000 Western Canada atlases, $140.40; small items, $1.17.

The money collected from the taxpayers of Canada is sent over to the United States to pay for printing that should have been done in Canada. Now I think there is much wasteful extravagance in that expenditure of $110,000. Providence has done more to help immigration, by the magnificent crops we have had for the last year or two in the west, than all the efforts of the hon. gentleman, assisted by his Curries and Twomeys. Providence has blest that country with a bountiful harvest, and pioneers have been going in there for a number of years, induced by one or two Canadian agents who went through the United States under the late government, and brought in farmers to view the land, many of whom settled there. These men have written to their friends, and the seed then sown, along with the bountiful crops for the last year or two, have done as much or more than Mr. Currie and the other fifteen or twenty agents who are now employed. I see one gentleman in Detroit draws $5,545.33 in salary and expenses, Mr. McInnes, and so they go. I suppose Mr. McInnes is, like Mr. Currie, another political friend. In my opinion, one-half of that $110,000 has just been spent in jobs of that kind.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is a political friend of your own.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not care who he is; this is too much money. Because he is a political friend of our own this additional salary has been granted to buy him up and in the same way Mr. Currie was bought up from being a Patron.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior to the fact that the offices of the different immigration agents are unfit for a country like Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Which offices?

Mr. REID (Grenville). I mean all the different offices, and I will refer to each one. In the city of London, for instance, the High Commissioner, of course, has his offices, but, as the hon. minister knows, he has simply taken off a small room for Mr. Preston. That is perhaps large enough for Mr. Preston, but, what I claim is that we should have a nicely fitted up office so that when intending immigrants do come in it will have the appearance of showing that there is some backbone to this country. I would like the hon. minister to provide a proper office in the city of London for this purpose. In the city of Paris I asked Mr. Fabre, who is the agent there, why he had not a better office and he complained that he had only got the office he now has a short time ago. You have to go through a back alley and away up stairs, and it is an impossibility to find out where our offices are, so much so that very few Canadians register there. Then, again, in Liverpool, I could scarcely find out where the office was. The same is true in the different offices that I visited to register, as every Canadian likes to do. Then, coming to this country, we have an office in the city of Montreal. The minister, I suppose, has visited the immigration office where Mr. Hoolahan is the agent. It is situated in a little side street off St. James street. I have been there two or three times, and I think it is a disgrace to this country to have an office of that kind.

Something has been said about the salaries of the different agents. I believe that any man who undertakes the position of head immigration agent in the city of Dublin, or Liverpool, or in any other place, leaves this country, takes his family over there, settles down, assumes that office, pays his living expenses, rental, &c., and accepts $1,200 a year, is not qualified to fill the position. I believe that a man who has the ability to fill the position of immigration agent in Liverpool, will never leave this country and go over there for $1,200 a year. I inquired what rents and living expenses were. I did that in Dublin—I may say I happened to be where Mr. Devlin was—and taking into consideration the amount that any gentleman would have to pay to keep up his position as commercial agent there, it is evident that he cannot live in Dublin on $1,200 a year and do his duty. Therefore, I claim that these men who are over there and who are accepting $1,200 a year are not qualified for their positions. Mr. Jury, who is in Liverpool, gets $1,200 a year, and I would like to know what he does. I made inquiries about him specially and he is not looked upon as a man of ability or as a man possessing the qualifications necessary to discharge the duties of the office. So far as Mr. Preston is concerned, of course, there was no person that I could get information from, but, when I went to Victoria street and looked at the immigration office, I thought it was a disgrace to have an office of that kind. Therefore, I believe that either a sufficient amount should be taken out of the $110,000 to give the immigration agents respectable offices, or the necessary amount should be added to the vote so as to place us upon an equal basis with other countries that have offices which are very much superior to those of Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. With some of the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid) I quite agree, although with other things that he said I cannot entirely agree. I may say that when Mr. Smart, the Deputy Minister of the Interior, went over early this year for the purpose of overhauling the work there, he was instructed to endeavour to find a suitable location for a first-class office in London. That was one matter to which he specially directed his attention. The High Commissioner has lately secured an addition to his offices. I do not know whether he had done so when the hon. gentleman was there or not, but the offices occupied by the High Commissioner and which were occupied by him the last time I was there, was doubled, by procuring the other half of the building and which is now occupied by the immigration branch of our work under the High Commissioner. We are satisfied that it is not a suitable office, and the recommendation of the deputy minister was that suitable quarters shoud be procured on Trafalgar Square, in the neighbourhood of Charing Cross station. That is the very best place in the city of London that we could get.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes, that is the very best place.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) is considering the idea of having a commercial office in the same quarter as the immigration office, where his department could directly communicate with an agent for the purpose of assisting in connection with commercial matters. Whether that project should materialize or not it is the intention to have a suitable office, to have it in the very best place in the city of London, and have it properly equipped. When we have established our new office, I think the hon. gentleman will find it satisfactory. But, where the department has had quarters before we have not seen fit to disturb them. The Liverpool office is in the same place in which it has been located since Mr. John Dyke went there many years ago, and the same may be said of the city of Montreal. At Quebec, St. John and Halifax, the quarters are very good. So far as the city of London is concerned, I quite agree with Mr. Reid, and I think I can promise that within the year we will be able to have quarters of a creditable character. In respect to the question of salaries, and particularly in respect to Mr. Jury, I can only say that I knew something of Mr. Jury before he was appointed, and I think that if the hon. gentleman knew him personally he would not say that he was not a man of ability. There are differences of opinion in regard to Mr. Jury's character, his opinions and qualifications, but, I think that if the hon. gentleman were acquainted with him he would say that he was a man of good capacity. His work has been in the line of lecturing at agricultural fairs in the west of England particularly, and I think he has done a good and useful work. Under the present arrangement, he having been there for some years, and understanding the work very well, has been put in charge of the Liverpool office, and I believe the work which is required to be done there will be satisfactorily done. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that our salaries are not too high, and being personally acquainted with the agents we have in Great Britain and Ireland, I think I can say that without exception they are men who are thoroughly qualified for their work.

I knew Mr. Webster for many years, and any person who knows him would say that he is thoroughly qualified. He is a capable, educated man with a good knowledge of Canada and of the country he is working in. I know Mr. Duncan well, and I can say that he is a man of unusual ability. His work is very satisfactory. On the whole our agents are pretty well qualified and the work which they are doing is I think satisfactory. I have said to the House a couple of times that I was not satisfied with the progress of the work in Great Britain formerly. I think, however, that any lack of success there was not due to the agents themselves, but rather to the manner in which they were directed. For that reason we have made a change. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) spoke about the purchase of the atlases. I agree with him that where it is possible to buy anything in Canada it ought to be bought in Canada. I would go further than that and say that I would rather pay a little more for a thing in Canada than I would in a foreign country. But in the case of the atlases there was such an enormous difference in the price that I felt constrained to purchase them from Rand & McNally. Some members of the House have taken the trouble to examine the atlas, and I think they all agree that it is a very creditable publication. The cost is remarkably small. My deputy minister informs me that the cost of the first edition of the atlas, which is a very creditable production indeed, is less than 8 cents each. I discussed the matter with publishers in Canada, and they told me that they could not get out this publication for less than 20 cents a number. In an issue of 200,000 or 300,000, the difference between 8 cents and 20 cents was so large that I felt it my duty to buy from Rand & McNally. That is perhaps the greatest map publishing firm in the world. They have facilities which render it wholly impossible for any one to compete with them in price. They produce these things in enormous numbers, buy their paper at the very lowest price, and practically all we pay for them is the cost of paper and press work. Such atlases intended for free distribution in enormous numbers, must be got at rock bottom prices or else we could not distribute them at all. No firm in Canada could begin to do the work at such a low price.

Mr. HENDERSON. Was it the larger atlas or the small atlas that cost 8 cents.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was not speaking of the smaller one. It is the large publication with a lot of maps in it that cost 8 cents.

Mr. BOURASSA. I have no desire to criticise the minister for not purchasing these things in Canada when there is a very special advantage to be derived by purchasing them elsewhere. However, this summer, while pasing through the different agencies in England, Ireland and Scotland, I gathered a number of pamphlets that are printed in London, by McCorquodale & Co. for the government of Canada. Possibly some of these pamphlets may be purchased at a much cheaper price in London than here. I notice, however, that some of them are very ordinary printing. Much better work could have been turned out in Canada, and if they can be purchased here in the future it would be better to do so. I wish to call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to one matter which no doubt has escaped his notice. Here is a small map distributed by the government of Canada and published by the same firm of McCorquodale & Company of London. I find from this map that the richest part of the province of Quebec has been annexed to the United States ; that the city of Montreal is put on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, just on the borders of the United States ; that the counties of Chateauguay, Beauharnois, Huntingdon, St. John, Iberville, Laprairie, and even the county of the Minister of Agriculture are already annexed to the State of New York and the state of Vermont.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BOURASSA. I am not surprised in view of this, than when an alderman of the city of Montreal went in to a London telegraph office last summer to cable home, he was asked by the agent : in what state of the American Union Montreal was. Of course I do not suppose that people who want to get accurate information as to Canada would rely upon this small map, but at the same time it is a pity that a map issued by the government of Canada in 1901, should contain such a mistake. I hope the minister will see that these maps are withdrawn from distribution, and that a map will be substituted which will show that the province of Quebec still belongs to Canadians and not to the Americans.

Mr. GOURLEY. I was loath to make any remarks on this question, because I am opposed to this whole grant in regard to immigration, not because I would not vote this sum or double the sum if I believed there was an earnest desire to get people into this country, but because I do not believe that the appropriation is properly expended. I am in accord with the minister in his statement, that immigration is the great need of Canada. I listened with pleasure, when he told us, that 50,000 people had come into this country, but I have listened to that kind of statement so often, when my own party was in power and since, and I have so often been disappointed in its accuracy, that I have learned to be very cautious. Whenever the census, comes around, we find, that such statements are not true, and I venture to say that at the end of ten years more, the 50,000 immigrants, announced by the hon. Minister of the Interior, will not be found on Canadian soil. I desire to attack this whole vote because the system of expenditure must be unscientific and unsystematic from beginning to end. If it be true, as stated by my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid), that a number of the friends of the hon. Minister of the Interior, occupy high positions and receive large salaries, in these offices, and if this grant of money, is used simply for the general purpose of giving offices to the friends of the hon. Minister of the Interior, then I can quite understand why the results have been so unsatisfactory. It is a lovely thing for the Minister of the Interior to be generous. It was counted a beautiful thing in the old times for a feudal chief to settle all his retainers in homes where they could acquire a living. If the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sifton) is to use this grant, as a feudal chief, for the purpose of giving all his retainers offices, then if these officers, recognize only that the gift of the office is simply a grant of favour, from the Minister of the Interior, I can understand why the immigration service is so unsatisfactory to this country.

I want to assist the Minister of the Interior to bring immigrants to this country, and before I sit down, I think, I shall be able to suggest, one or two, practical ways in which that can be done. I think we should recast, the whole system of expenditure, in this country, for immigration purposes. I do not defend the old system ; I know very little about it. I presume that the Minister of the Interior, like his colleagues in the cabinet, has put on the old clothes of the Conservative party ; but the old clothes of the Conservative party may be worn out, and not fitted to clothe the new ministry in these days, and in this particular instance, the policy of the Conservative party, if the hon. gentleman has followed it, was not a wise policy. But there is an excuse, for the Conservative party. It had to grapple with the building of the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway ; it had to create a nation out of a few scattered fragments ; it had to frame a national policy. It was engaged in occupations which would draw its attention away from a question like immigration, which were not as dominant as the questions to which I have referred. Now, however, the policy of the country is settled; all the great lines of transportation have been established; and hon. gentlemen opposite have nothing to do but to look after the mere details of their respective offices. Therefore, I advocate a recasting of our immigration policy, on lines which will be conducive to the prosperity of Canada. I was struck with the remarks of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) with regard to the people of England, and I understand why the real results of immigration to Canada are so meagre and unsatisfactory. If a prominent map-publishing firm in England, which publishes maps of every country in the world, can so utterly misrepresent the geography of an old country like Canada, we can have some realization, of the ignorance of Canada, that exists in that country. We must look, largely to England, for our immigration. We must look largely to England, to give the cue to the old world, as to the most desirable country, on this continent for immigrants to come to, and any minister who desires to create a wise immigration policy, must direct his efforts, to convincing England, that Canada is that country, else his policy will fail. If Englishmen, who are our kin and blood, will not, come to our shores, who will ? I see that during the past year some 450,000 people have gone to the United States, a great many of them from the British isles, and a great many from countries, which are dominated, in public sentiment and commerce, by England. Why is it that these immigrants, go to the United States, instead of Canada ? There is just one explanation : The Minister of the Interior, has not made Canada well known in the old land. If that is true—if that map is published, in the way, it is said to be, with Montreal, the commercial capital of Canada, which should be as well known as the commercial capital of the United States, as New York or Boston—if Montreal can be placed in the United States, by an English geographer, then I say, the first duty, which we must perform, before we can expect much British immigration to this country, is to educate the people of England, and make them aware of our position on the map, and of the immense possibilities of Canada. I think that is the whole solution of this problem. This attempt to waste half a million dollars, by employing uneducated people, who perhaps could not earn a living here or anywhere, to go to the old country, and attempt to divert immigration, to this country, is folly of the most striking character. We all know, that the people of England, are influenced by caste, by social distinctions ; and there should be three or four men of high social position employed in England to take charge of our immigration, in order to give a character, and in order to tell the people who are about to immigrate, that Canada is the country to which they ought to go. Unless we do this, I can understand that the people of England, who are so much influenced by caste, by social position, more perhaps than any other people, might easily say : 'This Canada is an unknown country ; I have heard very little about it ; I will go to the United States, about which I have heard so much, and which fills the eye of the world to the exclusion of Canada.' The point I wish to make is this, that the first duty of this government, this year, is to sit down with the English cabinet, or with that portion of it, which may be charged, with considering the welfare of the colonies, and discuss this question of immigration with them from beginning to end ; for I am persuaded that until you can get the government of England, with its vast ramifications, of power, and its official importance, and influence, to take hold of this question, and to make it, its business, to assist this country—and it ought to be the pride and pleasure of Englishmen to do that —the results of our immigration policy will be disappointing and not what they ought to be. Our ministers should say to the government of England : 'The greatest export you have to-day, the greatest capital you have to distribute to the world, are the strong, healthy men and women, who go out from your shores ; and you could not confer on the United States a greater gift than to send them every year 100,000 or 150,000 of these strong men and women ; but if you are looking to the colonies for aid, if you expect them to stand by you in the hour of stress, and difficulty, what you ought to do, is to help us to increase the population of Canada, which is a country, of splendid climate and great resources ; then in a few years we shall build you a nation, of fifteen or perhaps thirty million of people, and after that is accomplished, England, need not fear, the world in arms, against her. The government of Canada, is to-day, largely, a matter of administration. Hon. gentlemen, on the Treasury benches, occupy the happy position, of being the inheritors of eighteen years of the most distinguished statesmanship the world has ever witnessed. They are, I may say, the unworthy inheritors of this good fortune, because if they were honourable, respectful heirs, they would be on their feet, every day, declaring that they were grateful, to such distinguished men as Sir Charles Tupper and Sir John Macdonald, who provided the magnificent inheritance which they enjoy. Is it not a most extraordinary thing, that hon. gentlemen opposite, enjoy an inheritance which they never worked to create, for to-day the government of Canada is the easiest government in the world to administer. Everything has been prepared and since the government of Canada, has come to be largely, a mere matter of administration, this question of immigration is a most important one, and I think the government is censurable, in not having addressed themselves, to an attempt, to mould, the public opinion of England upon that question. The lack of information, in England, about Canada, is notorious. Talk with a gentleman from England or Scotland, about Canada, and it is painful, to find how little he knows, about Britain's most important colony. If he knows anything about the American continent, his knowledge is confined, to the United States. He is familiar with New York, Boston or Chicago, but is completely at sea with regard to Canadian cities. That no doubt, is largely the fault of the Canadian people themselves, but of course, it ought properly be attributed, in a great measure, to hon. gentlemen opposite. I was struck, with one remark of the Minister of the Interior. Speaking of immigration, he said we had crossed the hill. I hope we have. Though in opposition, and a strong supporter of the Conservative party, and of the administration of the late government, I hope I shall never be induced to follow the example of hon. gentlemen opposite, when on this side of the House and utter a word against the interests of Canada. In the last campaign, when my opponent, and a very generous opponent, brought up the question of Canada's prosperity, I immediately removed it from the arena of discussion. I said I hoped that this country was prosperous, that it ought to be prosperous, for it had within itself every element of prosperity and greatness, and I did all that I could to spread that belief, in order to do my share, in promoting that Canadian national spirit, which we ought to have, and the lack of which is our great weakness. Having no national spirit, the ambitions of our people have been depressed, and they have been allured by the splendour of the United States. You never find, an American, letting up for a moment in lauding his country. Every man, in the United States, is convinced, that he belongs to a superior, dominant race, and that his country is the greatest aggregation of men on earth. But unfortunately, we have had men in this country—and able and accomplished men, such as the Finance Minister, and the Minister of the Interior, and others, espousing the same cause—who went over the length and breadth of Canada, instilling into the minds of the people, that this was a worthless country, which men ought to leave. And I am delighted, to hear, from these hon. gentlemen, that in six years, they have been able to undo the injury, they had done in eighteen years, and that we had now crossed the hill. I would not have supposed, that they could, in six years, have corrected the errors they have been committing, during eighteen, but if they have succeeded, in doing so, they are to be congratulated. However, I do not wish to dwell on past errors. What we want, now, is to deal, not with the past, but with the present, and the future. We should endeavour, to get, into the heads, of the people of the old country, that this is a great country, and that we are a great people. At present, according to to the evidence before us this evening, even educated people among them, do not know, that Montreal is in Canada. They think it is in the United States. If that be the case, with leading people, in England, what under Heaven must be the idea of the man in the street. The man in the street cannot be reached by an agency, with quarters such as we have heard described to-day—a little office in a little alley-way—which it would require a guide to discover. Can such an establishment, as that, impress any one, with the vastness and prosperity, of this new country ? What we must do, first and foremost, is to create a strong, dominant national sentiment in our own country. We require to imbue, our people, with the idea, that Canada, is the greatest country, in the world. Our people, should be ready, at all times, to give expression, to that conviction. Of course, it is very difficult, for gentlemen, who have been belittling the country, for eighteen long years, to turn around, and say now, that it is a great country, but we will forgive them, their past eighteen year's defamation, if they will turn around now honestly and say, let us forget the past ; it is a splendid country ; and though we have been wrong during the eighteen years, we will do better in the future. We require also, to change public opinion in England, and there is only one way of doing it. We must interest the British government in the matter. We must educate English public opinion, no matter what it may cost. I would be more prepared to vote a million and a half, or two million dollars, to carry out, our immigration policy, upon a scientific basis, than to spend, only half a million to satisfy, the debts, which are due, by the hon. Minister of the Interior, to those, worthy retainers of his, all over the globe. The proper system, would be, to approach, the minister in charge of colonial affairs in London, and say to him : You have in Britain, an extraordinary wealth, which we want in Canada —a wealth in bone and sinew and intelligence, that is now finding its way to a foreign country. How can that be diverted to Canada ? It cannot be, unless we can catch the public eye, of the people, of the British Isles—unless we can get the common people of England, to know Canada, as well as they do, the city of London. I am persuaded, that, that could be accomplished—not easily perhaps—but in two or three years, and in accomplishing that result, we would do more for immigration than has ever been done before, even if we did not get fifty immigrants in the meantime. We would accomplish more, by putting our immigration policy, on a sound basis, than by peddling out these little sums, as we are doing to-day. Let the representatives of this government go to the Colonial Secretary in London and say to him, and show him, that the whole press of England, know nothing about Canada. I see in that press, the most extraordinary statements, about this country, and I cannot imagine, how intelligent educated men, in England—men who command such splendid salaries, in connection with the press—can possibly know so little about this great dependency of the Crown. We have been helped, a little, by sending the contingents, but we have not yet touched, the dense ignorance, that exists, in the old country, with reference to Canada. Let us get the government of England, to give us its assistance. Suppose that government were to call a meeting of the representatives, of the English press, in London, and have a representative of the Canadian government, discuss the situation with these men, and get their co-operation, in having that large population, which is yearly leaving the shores of England, Scotland and Ireland—a most desirable population—diverted from the United States to Canada. The newspaper men, in England, like most Englishmen, seem to take the word, of the leading men in their government, as final and conclusive, upon all subjects, and if Mr. Chamberlain could be convinced, as I have no doubt he is, that Canada is a most desirable country for immigrants, he could say to the press of England : We want each of the great papers of England, to devote one member of its staff, to a study of the conditions of Canada, and to visit the country in order to become thoroughly conversant with all its capabilities. Even, if the whole press of England, had to send a delegation to remain in Canada six months, it would pay this country to meet the cost of the delegation, or let the English press send a representative to Canada to stay here a year or two, and if necessary let the government of Canada pay him a salary. Let him go over the country and familiarize himself thoroughly with it, so that when he returned home he could write intelligently from personal observation. I would even advise the government of England, to revive a law, that existed a hundred years ago—and there were many wise laws passed in the olden days—which are now obsolete. Let England adopt the system which was in force at one time, when she needed the services of every man she had, and under which, no man, woman or child, was allowed, to leave England, without reporting three months ahead to the government, when he proposed to leave, where he was going, and what was the object of his going. England, would then have three months' notice, that so many of her citizens, were about to leave. The Colonial Secretary, could then communicate with the government of Canada, and some system be devised, for taking charge of these people, and bringing them to this country. There people, constitute a most valuable property, better than the gold and sovereigns of England, and if they were landed in the British colonies, England would then be irresistible at home and abroad, because every man, woman and child belonging to her would stay in her empire. That is a scientific and sensible policy. It would require the expenditure of some money, but the money would be expended intelligently. Every man desiring to leave England could easily report three months ahead, and the British government might well afford to spend £100,000 or £200,000 on such a sound policy, because she would then be serving her own interests, by increasing her strength in the colonies.

The empire needs the assistance of every man, woman and child of British birth. It would be well, to have them in colonies, with strong national feeling. Therefore, it is the duty of England, to carry out that policy. The government of this country ought to tell the statesmen of England : If you expect us to have national feeling, you must reciprocate, you must awake from your lethargy, you must treat your colonies, as great, independent, growing and giant nations. I have stood by England, even at times when they did not treat us, with the sympathy and good will, that we deserved. But I make every allowance ; for the statesmen of England during the past five years have had many great questions, pressing upon their attention. There has never been any question, however, which could engage their attention of more importance, than that, of directing population, to their own colonies. What, we want, is a complete and organized system. Let us have done, with these small questions, that have been debated in former times ; let the dead past bury its dead ; and let the minister devise some system adequate to the work in hand. If he is going to England, with his fellow ministers, let him take steps, to cause, the English government, to regard, this outgoing population, which is a great weakness to England, as a means of building up the empire, by adding strength, to this country. What made the United States? England created it. I do not fear, that the United States, can beat England down in commerce ; I believe that with the new spirit we are creating, we shall conquer and triumphantly lead the world. But should the United States even, be in a position, to prove successful in that contest, it will be because England has unwittingly contributed to build up that country. England, has given millions, to the population of the United States—never trying to send them to her own colonies—and millions to develop the United States lines of transportation. Between 1860 and 1870, the United States built sixty thousand miles of railways, and it took nine billions of pounds sterling for the work. What did England contribute of that enormous sum ? Eight billions sterling out of the nine billions required. In this country, hon. gentlemen opposite, were frightened out of their wits, when we undertook, to build three thousand miles of railway, while the United States, in ten years, built sixty thousand miles. They have in the vicinity two hundred thousand miles of railway—as much as all the rest of the world put together. That is why the United States became great and dominant. They had great men, men of ambition, men of ideas, men of strong imagination. One of the newspapers said the other day that I had imagination. No man is fit to be in parliament, or to attempt to do anything for Canada, unless he has imagination. Too many of our public men have not this part of a statesman's equipment. Blake had no imagination, when he made that historic speech, about the Canadian Pacific Railway, not being able to earn its axle grease. That was the trouble with the man—lack of imagination—and he went to the wall. We need, here, men of imagination, men of heart and feeling and sympathy. If we had, had, men of that kind, during the last sixty years, Canada would have been an equal competitor with the United States. We had Sir John Macdonald. He was a great lion, but, unfortunately, he could not exercise his magnificent powers, because there were thousands, of small men, attacking him on every side. But, in spite, of all they could do, he did achieve extraordinary things for Canada. But, what could he not have done, had he been backed, by an enthusiastic and generous parliament in his great imaginative schemes ? What I urge, upon hon. gentlemen opposite, is to imitate Sir John—at a reverent distance, for they can never approach him in statesmanship. If they do that, I will applaud them, and say : You have done the best, that God, ever fitted you to do. I urge them to go to Mr. Chamberlain, and lay, the case before him. Let them sit down with Lord Salisbury, and urge him to be informed, with regard to Canada. Tell him that by reason of the splendid position he occupies in England, if he will, he can, lend Canada powerful aid. He makes speeches, at the Mansion House, and elsewhere, on every subject, except the colonies. Let them induce him to go to the Mansion House, and make a speech about Canada. If you are to attract, the attention, of the people of England, to Canada, you must have speeches made about Canada, by the men, to whom Englishmen, are accustomed to look, for direction in public affairs. And, without that, all that our ministers and others can do, will have but little result. Let these gentlemen, ask Mr. Chamberlain, to devote six months, to the question of upbuilding Canada, and assure him, the people of Canada, will heartily reciprocate, by adding to the strength of the empire. I think the Finance Minister, would be a good representative for such work, for his diplomatic ways in Nova Scotia are well known. Besides, I think, there is an ingenuity about the Nova Scotian, that always, stands him in good stead. I urge attention, to broad and far-reaching purposes. We debate little twopenny-ha'penny questions about men getting ten cents a pound for sugar and so much for bacon——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GOURLEY. All that is very important, and it shows that even little things do not escape the attention of the opposition, but I would rather that the government would indulge in these little peculations undiscovered ; that these men should make two or three hundred thousand dollars improperly, than that they should refuse to engage in a great and comprehensive system of immigration, by which we can get the surplus population of the British Islands. Everybody in Canada would support the government in this policy. This government has a splendid opportunity—they have a loyal and patriotic opposition to assist them. We, on the other hand, always had an opposition, that seemed to be opposed, to the country. We join with the government, and if a man comes to this country, he will hear every Conservative from Nova Scotia to British Columbia praising Canada. Let them bring the people here, and the opposition, will undertake to fill them, with the most patriotic notions of Canada, so that they will never leave. Therefore, this government have a chance, that they never gave us, when we were in power. But, so far as I am concerned, I will not find fault with them further, if only they will do better. To err is human, and these hon. gentlemen opposite know it well. Let them take up this great question with the statesmen of Great Britain. Let them stop these petty salaries to these favourites, and devise a system, based upon the recognition, by the statesmen of England, of the fact, that they ought to help us. Instead of sending five or six agents to England, whose work must be practically useless, let them tell the men who have England's affairs in charge : If you will help us in immigration matters, it will cement this country to you, more than anything else that you can do in a decade of years.

Holding these views, I undertake to say, that the immigration estimate after this will form an occasion for a field fight, unless a new system is adopted. I am here only in the interests of Canada, I have no other object on earth while here to serve. I like my own country, better than I like myself, and my own interests, and I desire only to serve my country. I would like to help this country along, I want to see it the grandest country on earth, because I expect to live forty or fifty years longer, coming as I do from a strong and healthy breed ; and I expect to see this country the dominant power on this continent. If Enggland will help us, if she will take advantage of the present national feeling, if she will take Canada by the hand and give us her emigration, we shall go on conquering and to conquer.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I am afraid that the member for Colchester (Mr. Gourlay) is too pessimistic altogether. The member for Colchester ought to know that the greatest and most intelligent minds in England know nearly everything about Canada. Some of the best men in England have been governors of this country, such as Earl Dufferin, Lord Aberdeen, the Marquis of Lorne. Earl of Derby and others, who have advertised this country, and are doing it still. I think the member for Colchester has not been properly informed if he thinks that one example of an illiterate topographer who made a mistake in that map shown by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), represents the ignorance of the English people with regard to Canada. I know that the people of England generally are well acquainted with the map of British North America. The reason why Englishmen do not come to Canada in greater numbers is because England has such immense territories to fill up in other parts of the world. She has colonized Australia within the last fifty years, she has colonized New Zealand, she is colonizing South Africa. Wherever the sun shines, wherever there is money to be made, Englishmen are always ready to go. If we will wait our time England will fill up this country the same as she is filling up others. I think the immigration office is doing its duty. A few days ago I saw in a newspaper published in the Midland counties of England a letter written by Lord Strathcona, the Canadian High Commissioner, setting forth reasons why the English peasantry should emigrate to Canada. I know that Lord Strathcona has bought at his own expense a great number of maps and distributed them among the schools of England, and the immigration department also has sent descriptive maps to the rural schools of England. I think it is only a question of time when the people of the British Isles will find that Canada is an excellent field for emigrants.

But there is another point to which I wish to call attention. We should be very careful whom we send there to represent us. If we send men there of the stamp and enthusiasm of the member for Colchester, they will bring out immigrants in multitudes ; there will not be enough vessels in England to bring the people that will want to come after they hear the member for Colchester speak. But if we send men like the individual we have heard about to-day, who says that he is making no effort to bring Irishmen to this country, that he does not urge them to come, that he would rather they stayed at home, then we cannot expect the British people to come here. We have got to be very careful whom we send. We must send men who are loyal to our country and are loyal to Great Britain. I am sorry indeed to learn that this government selected as immigration agent a man who is not loyal to our country.

I think this government should take steps to bring out the best class of people that can be found. We heard last session from the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) that the class of people they were bringing out were very indifferent. We know that the class of people we are sprung from are not indifferent, and we must make an effort to bring more of them here. There is one good reason why immigration from the British Isles is at a low ebb just now. For the last two or three years a great many of their young men have been required to fill up the ranks in order to keep the empire together. We know too that the county councils, the township councils, the urban councils in England have gone into works of public improvement such as sewage work, the supply of towns with water, and these works afford employment to a great many men. Very few men will leave their home when they can get a fair living. I think that the immigration department are making an effort to fill up the vast territories we have in the west. The last year's crop has well advertised our country and the men who are already settled there are writing letters back to their friends in the old country, and these letters will do far more to bring out people than the immigration department are doing.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to inform my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) that he is labouring under a mistake if he thinks Mr. Jury is serving his time in Liverpool for $1,200 a year. If he wil turn to the Auditor General's Report, L-15, he will find that Mr. Jury gets a salary of $1,800 a year. and $897 for his board, and that he draws in perquisites $10,265.16 for maintaining that little office on a back street. I also want to tell the minister that we on this side of the House are pretty well acquainted with Mr. Jury. The hon. minister said that if we knew him as well as he did we would know him to be a man of ability. I think he is just as well known to most of us as he is to the minister, because, previous to the advent to power of hon. gentlemen opposite, Mr. Jury, who was a Toronto tailor and a Liberal agitator, travelled through this country speaking in the interests of hon. gentlemen opposite. We know pretty well who Mr. Jury is. He came into my county and into my town and stumped against me during my first or second election—I forget which. We are pretty well acquainted with Mr. Jury and we do not think he has the qualifications of a good immigration agent, although he is good on the platform as a lecturer. I do not think, being a Toronto tailor, that he would be able to enlighten the farmers very much on the question of how to farm. The hon. minister did not reply to the inquiry I made as to what he wanted with these 101,500 copy books at four cents apiece. He paid $4,060 to his friends in London, the Reid Bros. for these copy books. I want to know in what way they were used to assist immigration.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We conceived the idea of having a number of copy books prepared and circulated in the schools of Great Britain in which the head lines were statements in regard to Canada, and in which the facts respecting the geography, resources and that sort of thing were briefly summarized. We had these prepared and circulated in the schools so that the children using these copy books would acquire a knowledge of Canada. We had replies from a large number of people connected with these schools of a very complimentary character, and I am quite satisfied that this has proved a very effective means of disseminating knowledge and of giving practical information to the school children of Great Britain.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the hon. minister should supply each member of the opposition with a copy of all these productions.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I should be most happy to do so.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have not seen a copy of it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Now that my attention is drawn to that I may say that when there is anything of special importance got out I generally direct that copies be sent to every member of the House but, this being a small thing published in Great Britain, no attention was paid to it.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Mr. Chairman, before this item is adopted, I would like to offer a few remarks, realizing more especially the great importance of this subject, and if there has been any doubt upon that question there surely cannot be any doubt now after the eloquent speeches we have heard from our hon. friends on the other side of the House and especially from the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley). The committee, I am sure, listened to-night, with a great deal of attenton to the eloquent statement made by the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton). Immigration is, I believe, of all questions, one which should not be considered from a party point of view. It is the infusion of new blood into this country. Immigration is, as has been truly said, the most important question with which this country has to deal, and if in the past all Canadians, regardless of origin or nationality, witnessed with pain the exodus which existed in this country for so many long years, the exodus which resulted in 2,000,000 Canadians leaving our country and settling in the United States and who to-day are citizens under the American flag, it is certainly a source of gratification to learn that at the present moment, while the exodus has not been entirely stopped, there is a change in the tide and that immigration is coming towards our country. I have the honour of representing a county in one of the older provinces of Canada. The province of Quebec contributed their share, as I believe the province of Ontario did also, towards acquiring, building up and opening up our great western country. The province of Ontario and the province of Quebec paid out millions upon millions of dollars to make the North-west country what it is today, and to create, if possible, there, a granary for the world. The progress which is being made in Manitoba and the North-west Territories surely is satisfactory to all citizens of Canada regardless of province because the greatness of the North-west Territories means the greatness of Canada. But, Mr. Chairman, satisfactory as has been the progress of western Canada, satisfactory as may be this immigration from the British isles, and the continent of Europe and from the United States, satisfactory as I believe have been the efforts of the present hon. Minister of the Interior and his officials in bringing about the present state of affairs, there is a kindred subject to immigration which I think should not be overlooked and which, in the province of Quebec, we consider to be on a par of importance. That is colonization. The province of Quebec has for many years past given a great deal of attention to this subject and only during the last session of our provincial legislature a special commission was appointed to inquire into the cause and if possible to bring about a remedy for this state of affairs. This commission is to be composed of men of both political parties and they are to endeavour to solve if possible once and for all this problem of the exodus of the citizens of Quebec to the United States. I am glad to know that the efforts that the Department of the Interior have put forth in the past are to be continued in the future. This very morning I had the satisfaction of attending a deputation which called upon the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the hon. Minister of the Interior, composed of the leading citizens of the city of Quebec, men of both political parties, men occupying positions of importance in politics, in the public life, and in the business life of the province, who came and asked the Dominion government not to give up altogether the work of colonization in the older provinces. Colonization is one of the very few subjects, which, under the British North America Act comes within the jurisdiction and scope of both the federal and provincial governments. We have, therefore, in the province of Quebec, reason to expect that the Dominion government, while carrying on the vigorous policy of immigration towards the North-west Territories, while if possible peopling that immense territory with citizens of our own blood and gaining other citizens from the United States who will easily become adapted to our Canadian institutions, will not overlook this all important fact that it is more important to keep one Canadian in the country than to bring in two strangers. We have in the province of Quebec a peculiar condition of affairs which calls for the attention of the minister and of his staff. We have a population which doubles in twenty-seven years. If the province of Quebec had not lost by the emigration of French Canadians who have gone to the United States that province to-day would have been the first province in Canada in the matter of population, and in the very last census it is the only province which has shown a satisfactory increase in population. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is important that the Dominion government should not over look this subject of colonization. We have the assistance of the local government and we have in the districts of Montreal and in the districts of Quebec the co-operation of men headed by the Roman Catholic clergy who give close attention to this class of colonization. In the city of Quebec we have the Lake St. John Colonization Society, and in the city of Montreal la Société Générale de Colonisation et de Répatriement de la province de Québec. During the last five or six years the Lake St. John district has made wonderful progress in colonization. The official report of the society, which devotes itself to the welfare of that region, shows that since 1898, no less than 6,977 bona fide settlers have taken up land there. Mark you, these are Canadians or the descendants of Canadians who have returned from the United States to settle in their native land. The report also shows that in the year 1900, 922 Canadians returned from the United States and took up land in that district, and in the year 1901 the number was 1,013. We have also the evidence that in 1900, 788 fathers of families living in the cities and in different parts of the province, went into the Lake St. John district, instead of as in former years emigrating to the United States. In the year 1901, 872 settlers of a similar character also took up homes in that region. This morning we had the evidence of Mr. Scott, the manager of the Lake St. John Railway, who gave us a partial idea of the immense resources of that vast region ; its great lakes ; its immense water powers ; its grand rivers and the unlimited field which it opens up for the pulp industry, and which when developed will enable Canada to lead in the vanguard of Norway and Sweden, the countries which in the past have supplied Europe with pulp for the manufacture of paper. There are other matters connected with this question to which I wish to call the attention of the minister and of the hon. members of this House. I shall speak more particularly for the province of Quebec, because I know there are other hon. gentlemen who will speak for Ontario and the other provinces. Let us look at what the Canadian Pacific Railway did when it opened up its line from Ottawa to the west. Leaving the district of Ottawa it passed through a barren tract up to Lake Superior, but the company looking for settlers turned its eyes towards the French Canadian population of the province of Quebec. The Canadian Pacific Railway people knew that the French Canadian is a hardy tiller of the soil ; that he will work in the forest for twelve and fifteen hours a day and endure cheerfully all those hardships of pioneer life which other men fear to undertake. The Canadian Pacific Railway encouraged the French Canadian people to settle in that territory and in less than ten years that district of Nipissing and a portion of Algoma, became prosperous and productive. Cannot the Department of the Interior take its cue from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. We have in the province of Quebec the Metapedia Valley, extending from Ste. Flavie to the borders of New Brunswick, through which the Intercolonial Railway runs for 100 miles, and which is now comparatively unpopulated. If the Department of the Interior would apply the same policy to that region as the Canadian Pacific Railway did to the northern part of what is to-day the New Ontario, then in a few years the Metapedia Valley would be settled by a thriving population. There are in the Metapedia Valley to-day a dozen or more thriving parishes, but there is room there for 50 parishes. The climate is probably the mildest in the entire province. Its proximity to the Ocean makes its climate at least twelve degrees warmer than that of any portion of the province of Quebec. I would ask the Minister of the Interior in his colonization work, to pay special attention to that region. There is one very strong reason why the government should do this. We know that the receipts from the Intercolonial Railway are not as satisfactory as they might be and we know that that particular part of the road hardly pays working expenses. From the standpoint of the Dominion Exchequer it would, therefore, be sound policy for this government to encourage colonization in that district, because it goes without saying that the more people you have there the more the Intercolonial Railway will earn. But there is a more patriotic reason still. There is the patriotic object of keeping Canadians in their own land. Every day French Canadian farmers and artisans from different parts of the province apply to the colonization society in Montreal to be directed towards new spheres of labour. If these people are not taken in hand and pointed to a new opening in life the chances are that they will drift to the United States to become white slaves in the factories of New England, as unfortunately thousands and thousands of their fellow countrymen have done before them. The French Canadian priests in the province of Quebec are strenuous in their endeavours to keep Canadians at home ; but when these people make up their minds that life is no longer possible upon the old homestead in the old parish, they flock into the cities of the province, or else they leave for a foreign land. This colonization society warned in advance can extend its helping hand to these men and can point them to a new lease of life in the undeveloped fields of their native land, rather than to exile. There is no family in the province of Quebec which would not infinitely prefer life in the fatherland, to exile abroad. These colonization societies have received in the past some help from this government, as also from the provincial government, but I would like to see the Department of the Interior extend its work in this direction and encourage the societies to a still greater extent than at present. There are no more suitable men on the face of the earth to undertake pioneer work in a country like the Metapedia Valley, rich in natural resources, than are the people of the province of Quebec. I am a Liberal; I come from Liberal stock; I respect the religion of every man, but at the same time the foreigners who settle in this country, are nothing to me as compared with my own countymen, the descendants of the pioneers of Canadian civilization. These are the men I would infinitely prefer to see retained in Canada. It is to their retention in their native land I would rather see our resources directed, than towards the encouragement of immigration from foreign lands. I submit that the best way to keep our people at home is to encourage these colonization societies. I earnestly commend that view to the Minister of the Interior. I have spoken more particularly of the Metapedia Valley because I represent that district. I must say that the Intercolonial Railway management has already recognized the importance of this region as a field for settlement by granting during the last six months, the low rates to the settlers which have prevailed on the Canadian Pacific Railway for years past. At the present time a large excursion of 400 or 500 people is being organized in the French Canadian centres of the United States to visit that district, and I would like the government here to make a special effort to bring about happy results from that and similar movements. Before closing I would point out that it is not only the colonization societies who are directing their efforts towards the possibilities of developing that region, but I notice that the capitalists are also paying their attention to Gaspesia, which comprises Bonaventure and Gaspé counties. We received to-day a prospectus from the Atlantic Pulp and Paper Company, which has a capital of $3,000,000, and of which the president is the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards). That company proposes to start three mills in that district : a paper mill with a daily capacity of 54 tons ; a ground wood pulp mill with a daily capacity of 50 tons and a sulphide pulp mill with a daily capacity of 40 tons. We have heard a great deal of Sault Ste Marie, and of its great natural resources. But this fact must not be overlooked, that the whole resources of Canada do not lie in the western part of Canada—that the old provinces also have resources which should be husbanded. We have had evidences of that in the last few years, in the district of Three Rivers, where Shawinigan and Grand Mere have risen as if by enchantment, and are to-day attracting attention in the industrial world ; and we have the developments down by the sea. Therefore, while the colonization department of this Dominion is devoting its best efforts to bringing immigrants from Europe, especially Englishmen, Irishmen, Scotchmen and Welshmen, who have done so much for this Dominion, with whom we descendants of the French Canadian race have entered into a compact, sealed in former years by the blood of heroes for the building up of this Dominion, we all learn with satisfaction, regardless of party and regardless of origin, that that department is first and above all determined to keep in this country the sons of the soil, and help them to live and bring up their families to become good citizens of Canada.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). I need not add anything to what the hon. gentleman for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) has so eloquently expressed. I also represent a county in another part of the province of Quebec where this work of immigration is going on. I wish to emphasize the fact that we are too much inclined to forget the burdens which the older provinces have placed on their shoulders in connection with these matters of immigration and colonization. Not only have they placed upon themselves an enormous debt for the building of a railroad through the North-west country, but they have also assumed the whole burden of the expenses connected with the colonization of their own territories. Some of our people are alarmed in the province of Quebec at the amount of debt which we have put on our shoulders, though we are not alarmed as a rule. Nine-tenths of that debt has been incurred in order to keep our people in our own province. When I find by the census, though the result is not entirely satisfactory, that the province of Quebec is the only province which has succeeded in keeping its rural population, and that it shows a little increase in that direction, I do not regret the money we have spent. I quite agree with what the hon. member for Bonaventure has said as to the means that should be taken by this government to help the colonization work of the provincial governments, the government of Ontario and the government of Quebec especially. We must not forget that increased population adds no revenue or very little to the provinces, while it increases the number of consumers and therefore adds to the revenue of the Dominion.

Another point on which I agree entirely with the hon. member for Bonaventure is that we French Canadians have no objection at all to the policy of the hon. Minister of the Interior, who, I think, will admit that he has had no more straight supporters than the representatives from the province of Quebec, especially on this side of the House, for his policy in sending so many agents abroad to bring people to this country. We are so exclusively Canadian that we hope that the people who come to this country will become as good Canadians as we are. We have no objection to people coming, especially from the British Isles, who have not the same language or education as we have, but in these respects resemble our fellow-Canadians of English origin. I hope therefore that a report of certain remarks of the deputy minister of the Interior which has been sent to me is not a correct report. I find in a paper which has nothing to do with Canadian politics, and has no interest in one party more than the other, the 'North Express' of Liverpool, dated the 10th of February, the following :

> The Hon. J. A. Smart, Deputy Minister of the Interior for Canada, and Mr. T. R. Preston, immigration agent-general for the Dominion, arrive in Liverpool to-day from London and Glasgow to arrange a gigantic system of British emigration to Canada.

It then goes on to give the details of the project, after which follows a little paragraph of which I am sure the hon. Minister of the Interior will be happy to give an explanation, and tell us that there must be some mistake in the report. It is entitled 'British blood needed,' and says :

> The present, therefore, is deemed a favourable moment to turn the attention of British emigrants to Canada, which has been neglected by them in the past, and is now in crying need of population to till her soil and develop her great mineral riches. More British blood is also needed to be infused into the veins of the Dominion, if Canada is not to be Frenchified by the rapid growth of the French population.

If that had reference to immigration from France, I would quite agree with the gentleman that an overflow of immigration from France, stronger than British immigration, would not be agreeable to the loyal feelings of this country; but if the gentleman meant—which if this report is correct he must have meant—that the rapid increase of French Canadians was a danger to Canada, I hope the minister will take this occasion to say that there is no danger in the increase of the French Canadian population. The past is a proof that the French Canadians are no danger to this country from any point of view, whether industrial, agricultural, material or intellectual. They have done their duty not only by themselves, but by their neighbours in this country, and by the British crown ; and I think it is a great mistake that it should go abroad in the old country that there is a certain element in Canada the natural increase of which might be regarded as a danger to this country or a danger to the British crown.

Mr. GOURLEY. Nobody believes it.

Mr. BOURASSA. I hope not. I am simply making this point—not that I believe the deputy minister, certainly not with the assent of the Minister of the Interior, made any remarks like these, intending to be offensive to the French Canadians—but we know, from articles published in certain newspapers in this country, that the attention of the British people is always called to the fact that the French Canadian people are growing more rapidly than others, and that there is a danger of this country being Frenchified. So far as the rapid increase of the French Canadian population is concerned, I admit it, though I am not one of the responsible parties ; but I am sure that is not a crime that should be charged against the French Canadians. What I am objecting to is the statement that by the rapid increase of the French Canadian population, this country is being Frenchified.

We are French by origin and are proud of it, and certainly have no reason not to be. There is one fact which cannot fail to impress itself upon all those who have any knowledge of the different provinces of the Dominion, and that is that of all the elements that compose our population, there is not one more attached to the Canadian soil than the Canadians of French origin. It is an attachment based on common sense. The French Canadian has no attachment other than to Canadian soil and to Canadian institutions, and the more rapidly we grow, the more French Canadians we bring back from the New England towns in the eastern states, the better will be the result as regards Canadian institutions and allegiance to Britain. British allegiance is not a question of blood with us but of loyalty and common sense. If I have brought up this matter, it is not with the object of casting any reflections on the minister in charge of the department ; but it is to be regretted that statements of this kind should appear in the British press as well as in the English press of Canada, and it is for that reason that I ask for an explanation by the hon. minister. I would conclude, as I have begun, by assuring my hon. friend that he will never find a more faithful supporter of his immigration policy than myself. But I want to insist that in all our immigration policy, we should have an eye solely for the benefit of Canada and not be actuated by any idea of preventing French Canadians from gaining influence in this country, or from enjoying that influence which is due to the position they occupy ; and should that position become stronger in the future, let the hon. minister's mind be at rest, for even if we should become a majority in this country, it will be as safe in the hands of the French Canadian majority as it would be in the hands of any of the other races which compose our population at present.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. With reference to the printing of some of the books in London, to which my hon. friend has referred, the facts are explained in this way : Some of the printing was done under the direction of the officials in the High Commissioner's office, and the particular literature referred to was issued without direct communication with the department here. I may say that we have made a change with regard to the issuing of literature, and have concluded that it is better it should be prepared here instead of being prepared and printed in London. It will therefore in future be prepared at the head office here, and any maps that may be issued will first pass through the hands of the geographer of this department, which I am sure will be a guarantee to my hon. friend that they will be correct. I must call the attention of my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) to the fact that the paper he cited does not exactly purport to give the statement printed as an interview, and no doubt he has noted that distinction. I think, however, that he himself must know the deputy minister of the department too well not to be satisfied that he did not make any statement of the kind. I inquired of my deputy whether he was responsible for any such statement, and he said he was not, and attributed it to the enthusiasm of this British reporter. As to the general question of colonization in Quebec and elsewhere, the committee will appreciate the difficulty which the department meets when called upon to incur expenditure for the purpose of transplanting people from one part of the country to another. While avowedly we do not engage in work of that kind, the importance of which my hon. friend has so eloquently referred to, when the machinery of the department can be used for that purpose, we have not hesitated to make use of it, even if it entails some additional expense; and as my hon. friend from Bonaventure will admit, we have done a considerable amount of work in that direction. As regards the Lake St. John district, we have paid out a considerable amount of money to the Lake St. John Railway Company to aid it in conducting this work, which it has done through its own officials. We have also paid something to the repatriation society. The application to which my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) refers, will receive careful consideration, and I think that the department will be well sustained, if I can judge by the feeling of the committee, in allowing its machinery to be made use of to the fullest possible extent for the purpose of assisting the natural movement of our population from the older portions of the eastern provinces to our newer territories. We are doing the same thing in Ontario. Our officers assist very largely in the movement of the population of that province from the older to the newer portion, and wherever they can contribute to the success of any such movement, they are only too ready to do so.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Does the hon. minister say that he assists the movement of people from the older parts of one province to the newer parts of the same province ?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. From one part of Canada to another.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). No, I understood him to say that he encourages his officers to assist the people moving from the older part of one province to its newer part.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We do not make any distinction between one province and another. We take the country as a whole, and assist the movement from one part of it to another.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would like to impress on the minister the fact that people who want to move from the maritime provinces to-day to settle in the great Canadian North-west, cannot do it as advantageously as if they came from the New England States. In fact they find it cheaper to go to the New England States first and then go to the North-west, as they can get lower rates on the railways. It is cheaper for them to go to Boston and ship from there rather than go direct over our own Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is worse than that. It would pay a man to go from Boston to Liverpool and then go to Winnipeg than to go direct from Boston to Winnipeg. So far the department has been utterly powerless to grapple with that difficulty. We have that difficulty, the people of eastern Canada have that difficulty, and it is one that, so far, the department has been utterly powerless to grapple with. We have tried all sorts of schemes to get over it. A plan that has been suggested time and again, is that we get the railways to combine and offer for, say a month in the year, a special rate to intending settlers. But there are two difficulties in the way. In the first place, it is impossible to get the railways to agree to it, and, in the second place our good friends of the eastern provinces do not like it. They say that it is encouraging people to move away who otherwise would stay at home, and, probably, do well. Whether there is anything in that, it is hard to say. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) will recognize the difficulty in the situation.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I do recognize it, and my object in bringing it forward is that the minister may have the officers of the department consider it, so that, if there is any way of having the boys from the maritime provinces who go to Boston and elsewhere in the United States and take labouring jobs, become settlers in the Canadian North-west, it may be done. That is an important object. There is another point to which I will take the liberty of directing the attention of the committee. I address myself particularly to my good friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) for I wish to make him happy. He spoke of my good friend the Deputy Minister of the Interior referring to the danger of this country being Frenchified through colonization schemes. It was my priviledge to visit two settlements in the Canadian North-west made up almost wholly of French people from old France. These settlements are illustrations of the fact that it is not necessary to get the old country farmer to become a farmer in Canada. My own theory is that the old country farmers do not adapt themselves as readily to farming in this country as do the old country mechanics. One of the best farms that it has been my privilege to see in the North-west—that is, for only three or four years of settlement—is managed by a former London pastry-cook, who had never been in the country in his life in England, but had his first experience of life outside the city when he came to Canada. The French settlements to which I refer are made up almost entirely of people who have never been on farms in their lives until they came to this country. One fine-looking lady had been manager of a large millinery store, and her husband had been a watchmaker in Paris. These people have been doing well in our North-west. And I want to tell my good friend from Labelle that they are readily adapting themselves to the ways of the country. They have only been in these settlements two years, yet they have made very rapid progress, adding a knowledge of English to that of their own beautiful mother tongue. I may be a little prejudiced in favour of immigration. It has been my privilege to meet the Doukhobors, the Galicians, and, of course, the Mennonites, and all that class of immigrants who have come in from continental Europe. And I want to tell this committee and this country that we owe to these people one thing at all events—they have taught Canadians to value their own country. These people, in many cases, are living on tracts that Canadians would not have thought of colonizing. Take, for instance, the Snipe Hills, a locality that my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) must know well. People from Ontario would never think of settling such a country. I wish to assure you, Mr. Chairman, that among those hills to-night are hundreds of as happy homes—that is, as comfortable-looking homes, and comfort usually brings happiness—as in any part of Canada. And these people have been there only a few years. The verdict of the English-speaking people in that region, people from Carleton and Renfrew counties in Ontario, is that they want no finer neighbours than these people. But, I am free to say that they are of the better class of European immigrants. West of that, around Beaver lake, there is a settlement that does not meet with the approval of the hon. member for Alberta, and I must confess that some are rather an indolent and doless class of people, taken, I presume, from a poor settlement in the old country But, as I say, these people from the continent of Europe have taught us that we have a country in the North-west that is illimitable in its capacity for the production of wealth and in the opportunities it offers for the making of homes by harvest settlers.

It may not be amiss to point out a few of the reasons why our great North-west has possibilities which we down in the eastern provinces are apt to underestimate. It is often said that this territory is away north, and therefore is not habitable. Let us place before ourselves a map of the world, and consider the latitude of the finest parts of England and compare it with our own Canadian North-west. Go far north of Edmonton, and you find you are only in the latitude of the northern part of England. Even the Peace River region is in about the same latitude as the south of Scotland. Another glance at the map and you see the Rocky Mountain range running down from Canada into the United States. From Mount Sherman, the highest peak in the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific in the United States is about 1,250 miles. Until you get near the coast, not a foot of that is less than five or six thousand feet high. And there is not a pass through those mountains in the United States from the 49th parallel to the plains of New Mexico that is less than seven thousand nine hundred feet high. Therefore, the warm air current from the ocean which seek to reach the plains of the western United States must traverse a mountain range varying from 5,000 to 8,000 feet high throughout its entire area, while the point of crossing the plains would be not less than 7,900 feet. Further, what do we find in the United States ? I happened to be in Texas and Kansas in January last. The temperature there varied from nine to seventeen degrees below zero. There was a penetrating wind that chilled one to the marrow and froze the cattle in great numbers. The people of those regions are realizing that these raw winds are intolerable. And, besides, they have drawbacks in the summer in the way of malaria and hot winds.

Mr. GOURLEY. They should come to Canada.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). They are coming to Canada in thousands. When you come into our North-west the first pass is the Crow's Nest, 4,000 feet high. Then, the Canadian Pacific Railway passes through the Kicking Horse at 5,400 feet. North of that, is the Yellow Head Pass, 3,700 feet high, and then the Pine River Pass from 2,400 to 2,800 feet high, and, still further north, the Peace River Pass 2,000 feet high. Beyond that the passes in the Rocky Mountains are even lower, though the Cascade or Coast Range may be higher. The passes anywhere in Canada are from 5,000 down to 2,000 feet high. A glance at the map will show that the distance from the plains to the coast, instead of being 1,200 miles is only from 250 to 300 miles, and, in the southern part, 400 miles. Therefore the warm winds from the Japanese current—crossing the ocean they follow the same law that regulates the currents—pass rapidly through the low passes in the Canadian ranges and spread themselves over the plains, bringing fertility to the soil and establishing conditions most favourable to agricultural development.

Another point that it may be worth while to state here—because the members of this House should be the exponents of the advantage of our country—is that, the northern Atlantic ocean opens into the Arctic ocean without let or hindrance, and the icebergs from the Arctic region pass into the Atlantic ocean untrammelled. Of course there are other cold currents flowing. But the northern Pacific ocean is closed, practically speaking, Behring Straits is very narrow, and we find the northern Pacific ocean is not subjected to the great icebergs and ice floes that exercise such a chilling influence upon the eastern coast of Canada. Any one who has crossed the ocean knows when he is approaching an iceberg. An ice floe can be experienced hours and hours before one sees it, the chill in the atmosphere is so great. This is all spread into the northern Atlantic ocean, because of the narrow entrance from the Arctic into the northern Pacific.

Moreover our great Canadian North-west reaps a benefit from the warm winds coming from eastern Asia which cross the western coast of North America, you may say in general terms, from the boundary of the United States, northward to Alaska. I may point out in passing that the temperature at the island of Sitka, in Alaska, has fallen to zero only once in the last 45 years. There is another reason. The northern regions away up in Athabasca, northern Alberta and Saskatchewan, vary from 500 to 2,000 feet lower than do the plains, even along the Canadian border on the 49th parallel, or away down in Montana or Dakota. The altitude is much lower, and the scientific rule for altitudes affecting heat, I believe, is that it varies about one degree for every 200 feet of altitude ; that is, if you descend 200 feet the temperature decreases one degree, other things being equal. I may also point out that the vast lakes in our great Canadian North-west, while possibly retarding the early opening of spring, nevertheless more than counterbalance the lateness of the spring by the lateness of the fall. The water in these lakes, which are more or less shallow, become warmed during the summer and retain their heat in the fall. Accordingly, take the east and south-east side, and the southern side of any great lake in the Canadian North-west, and you will find the crops along those lakes have never been frozen as early as they have in the open parts where they have not the benefit of these waters. Another point. The sun is north of the equator about 170 or 180 hours more than it is south of the equator, in a year. Figure that up, and it amounts to six or seven days of extra sunlight in the northern hemisphere. Northern latitudes have very long days in summer. I have not made the scientific calculation, but if you figure it up you will find the extra sunlight these remote northern regions get over regions even in our own latitude here, about 45 degrees, or away up anywhere north of the 52nd, 53rd, 54th or 55th parallels of latitude, and you will find in those regions an average of fully a day or two extra sunlight in the year over what we have here.

There is another reason why we should have high hopes for our magnificent Canadian North-west. Those of you who have heard Dr. Saunders before the committee from time to time lecturing on our great North-west, have heard him point out that the barren region upon which trees do not grow lies from a point away down in the United States extending north into Canada say to the 52nd parallel. Now why does the prairie land not extend far beyond the 52nd parallel towards the north ? Simply this, that once you pass the 52nd and 53rd degree of north latitude, you come to a point that scientists term the region of calms. Any one familiar with the mathamatical geography of the earth knows that the winds blow very strongly in southern parts ; any one who has travelled through Dakota, Montana, and the southern part of Manitoba and Assiniboia, knows right well that there is scarcely a day of summer or of winter when strong winds do not prevail in those regions. Go into more northern latitudes, and strong winds are not found to anything like the same extent. So scientists term the northern regions the regions of calms.

The fertility of the soil is undoubted. Those who have visited that region have seen oats, and wheat and farm products of every description, raised as successfully and, I believe, more successfully, than in any portion of the province of Ontario. Prof. Macoun states that at Battleford, where there is nothing but a narrow sand plain, which in Ontario would not be farmed at all, he has nevertheless seen a field immediately adjoining the town that had excellent wheat upon it each year in succession for 20 years ; and he claims there must be something in the character of the soil, whether it is that the frost remains in the ground in the spring and keeps the roots cool and moist, or whether it is owing to the extra quality of the ground, he does not pretend to say; but he points out that in those regions, even in arid regions, grain is grown much more successfully than in the province of Ontario. That district has a future. Mr. Speaker, I would like to see our Canadian boys going up there to settle, I care not whether they are French Canadian or English Canadian, whether they come from Ontario, Quebec or the maritime provinces. I do not want to see our boys becoming ditchers and carters in the city of Boston. I want to see them move up to our own North-west and take up farms there. At Wetaskawin you will find a magnificent colony from Prince Edward Island, a splendid lot of young people who moved there from Prince Edward Island, and are doing well. I trust our maritime province members will take this matter in hand, and that gentlemen like the member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan), the member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac), the member for Colchester (Mr. Gourley), and the member for Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) will take pains to influence these young men, if they want to go anywhere, to go to our own Canadian North-west. But in case we cannot fill our country with our own people, let us do our best to get settlers from the old mother land, that mother of nations; let us get as many people as we possibly can from Great Britain and Ireland.

And here I must say, in passing, that I disagree with some remarks that have fallen from the Minister of the Interior this afternoon in relation to the necessity existing for Canadian immigration agents in Ireland, bowing, or pandering, or actually believing in the doctrine of home rule. It is not necessary to be a home ruler in Ireland in order to get immigrants to Canada. Sir, I have great faith in the Irish people. I never yet met a people, whether Irish, French, Scotch or English, who, when they are properly educated, when the facts are placed before them, will not seize a truth. I resent the idea that the people of Ireland are all home rulers, that they are all anti-British. When an immigration agent, sent from this country, paid by this country, says there is no use in his doing anything to encourage the Irish people to come to Canada because they are all anti-British, I tell him that is not true.

I care not what part of Ireland you go to you will find home rulers and yelpers, but from Connemara to Dublin and from Londonderry to the coast of Cork you will find that 90 per cent of the people are true at heart to the British empire, and if there are home rulers it is merely because they have been pandered to by the kind of talk that the immigration agent sent from Canada has indulged in and they have been pandered to for political purposes, besides which they have not been educated in the proper way. I have faith in the Irishmen, too much faith to believe that they are the kind of men that this immigration agent would have us believe they are. Then, in case we shall have filled up our country, I have this faith, Sir, that by educating the people instead of cringing to their bad habits, to understand and appreciate our institutions and our civil and religious liberties and by establishing our school system properly amongst them, I have faith that whether we have a Galician colony or a Doukhobor district, or a settlement of people from Roumania or Transylvania or from any other European country, the Canadian national spirit and the Canadian national life is so strong and vigorous that we can make good Canadian citizens of them in a generation or two. It is not long since the Icelanders in thousands were brought to Canada. Our good friends now on the government side of the House who were then in opposition placarded this country from one end of it to the other, as I am sorry to see both sides are now doing in regard to the Galicians and Doukhobors, and said that they would not be any use to the Dominion of Canada, that they were seal eaters and fish eaters and that sort of thing. Ask the officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, ask the people of Winnipeg and of the North-west Territories who are the finest men to work, who are the finest women to work and they will tell you that they are the people belonging to this same race of Icelanders. The children of these Icelanders who have been born in Canada are as fine a looking race as you will find anywhere. Unfortunately it is the custom in this country and it will be for a time to come to form little race cliques and coteries and to pander to them for political purposes and we have evidence of this from time to time, but I believe, Sir, that that will soon pass away. Those who have studied the history of England know that for hundreds of years there was a struggle, and it has not altogether passed away yet, between the various old counties, each representing settlements from continental Europe, and to this hour you can distinguish the dialects that have been in existence in England for hundreds of years. We can all remember reading about the old Robin Hood days. These were incidents of the struggle between races, but these contentions have now passed away and we have to-day a fusion in that country of the best blood the world can produce. After the lapse of time—it will not come in our day—but the day will come in Canada when each nationality, while preserving its own peculiar characteristics, brought up in the broad, strong, national life of Canada, educated to understand our constitution, educated to understand free institutions and responsible government in the broadest sense, educated in tolerant national schools, will combine to form the grandest race that the continent of North America or the world has yet produced.

Mr. A. E. TALBOT (Bellechasse). Translation.) Mr. Chairman, at this advanced stage of the debate, I do not intend to take up at length the time of this House; and even did I feel so inclined, I do not think I should feel equal to the task, after what has fallen from the mouth of the hon. member (Mr. J. Hughes) who has just addressed the House. As a matter of fact, his description of icebergs and ice floes from the Arctic Ocean, and of the cold currents which spread themselves even through the beautiful river St. Lawrence, in my own province, has exercised such a chilling influence upon me that, as I said, I feel unequal to the task of taking part in the debate at any great length.

Under those circumstances, I shall confine myself to one subject, and it is in connection with the demand made by the deputation of the Colonization Society of the province of Quebec, which waited this morning upon the Minister of the Interior, to report about their operations.

Last year, the province of Quebec, through the agency of that society, obtained a grant of three thousand dollars. With this grant, they have been enabled to place upon the vacant lands of the province one thousand immigrants. And to-day, they have pressed upon the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior, when the estimates of his department are up for discussion, the desirability of doubling the appropriation, which would enable them to bring back to Canada three times as many immigrants as they did last year.

Mr. Chairman, there is one thing which is a matter of deep regret to us, French Canadians, from the province of Quebec : it is the lamentable exodus that has taken away such a large number of our fellow-countrymen, from the province of Quebec, within the last twenty-five or thirty years, who have annually found their way over the border, in the hope of bettering their position. But a great change has come over the country, and now our exiled fellow-countrymen of French extraction are willing to come back to the homes of their fathers. What we press upon the attention of the government is this, that they should bring as much energy to the prosecution of immigration work in the New England States as they are devoting to missionary work in the western states, so as to bring back to their native soil immigrants which are as desirable a class of settlers as any immigrants that can be induced to settle in the western states.

I should like to urge upon the hon. Minister of the Interior the desirability of sending out some of his agents to canvass in the New England States. I feel confident that the hon. minister will not turn a deaf ear to my prayer and that he will respond to my earnest appeal, by directing his agents to carry on in the New England States a similar work to that which is now being pursued in the western states of the Union ; for the purpose of repatriating French Canadians who have gone from the province of Quebec to the United States. I appeal to the hon. minister in favour of granting to the Immigration and Colonization Society of the province of Quebec—a society which numbers eight hundred members—the increase for which they are applying. This is, it is true, a matter of public expenditure, but I do not think public money could be put to a better use than bringing back to this country as desirable a class of settlers as those who are induced to settle in the western states, and a better class, I dare say, than the immigrants coming from the different countries of Europe.

It is by no means a parish policy that I am now advocating ; for, whether those immigrants be directed towards the Metapedia valley, as stated by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) ; or whether they be settled in the north, as the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) would have it ; whether again they be directed towards the North-west Territories or to Manitoba, is perfectly indifferent to me, so long as those French Canadians who are willing to come back to their native soil are given the same inducements and offered the same advantages as those given to immigrants from foreign countries.

We have thousands and thousands of French Canadians who are longing to come back to the land of their fathers. Those Canadians are scattered through the New England States and throughout the country to the west of the Mississippi. What I most earnestly desire, and it is a consummation devoutly to be wished for, is that the Department of the Interior should take the necessary steps to repatriate those of our fellow-countrymen who live in the United States ; and that they be given by the department every possible assistance and all desirable facilities of transportation.

As I said a moment ago, the conditions are quite different from what they were when the stream of immigration set in the direction of the neighbouring republic ; and when our fellow-countrymen began to drift towards the New England States, to become white slaves in the American factories. A great change has come over the country, and nowadays Canada is attracting the attention of the whole world.

On these several grounds, I hope the hon. Minister of the Interior will see his way clear to comply with the wishes and views of the Immigration and Colonization Society of the province of Quebec, as set forth by the delegation which waited upon the hon. minister, this very morning ; the more so, as their demands are by no means exaggerated and that they are conducive to the promotion of colonization and the development of the country.

Contingencies in Canadian, British and foreign agencies, and general immigration expenses, including salaries of extra clerks at head office, $333,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This was included in the statement that the hon. gentleman has already given.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to say a word on a subject that has already been mentioned, namely: whether or not the efforts of the department might not be with advantage directed to persons who are emigrating from Canada, and more particularly from the eastern provinces. The hon. gentleman stated that no effort was made to retain such people here except by giving them information. I recognize the difficulty of dealing with that matter, but it does seem to me that the question of immigration into this country and the question of emigration from this country, are very intimately connected. I do not know that the difficulties are so great as the Minister of the Interior suggests. For example, the hon. gentleman apparently acquiesces in the position which Mr. Devlin takes in Ireland, that he can do effective immigration work there although he does not urge the people to leave that country. I am not mentioning that for the purpose of criticising it at present, as it has been dealt with by other speakers. But, might not the same idea be carried out with regard to the eastern provinces. The minister says that there is the objection that the older provinces do not want their population depleted. Well, if you put an agent in the eastern provinces who would act upon exactly the same principles as these which have the approval of the minister with regard to Mr. Devlin, I do not think there could be any objection. What I mean is: That without urging them to leave the eastern provinces you might go among these people who are leaving, and try to induce them to go to the North-west. In that way you might induce some of the people who are now going to the United States to settle in our western country, especially if you gave them some of the assistance which you are now offording to people from other countries to come to Canada. I am not sufficiently familiar with the subject to say that there is anything in the suggestion I offer, but it does seem to me that when with one hand we are spending money very lavishly to induce people to come to this country, and on the other hand we are making no efforts to direct the people who are leaving the older provinces towards the North-west, we are possibly not doing all we might in regard to that particular matter. I am quite in accord with these gentlemen who have said that it is quite as important, indeed possibly more important, to direct our efforts towards keeping our own people in our own country, than towards inducing people from Europe to come here.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I quite recognize the force of what the hon. leader of the opposition has said. My own personal inclinations have been much in that direction, but I have been restrained from doing more than I have done, largely from the fear that my efforts in that respect might not meet with the approval of the House. I have so far confined the efforts of the department largely to co-operation with the colonization societies and provincial governments, and to giving information. In addition to that, in some cases we have advertised the free grants of land and the homestead conditions in different parts of Canada. So far as the province of Ontario is concerned, I would suppose that the information with regard to the west is very complete, but in the province of Quebec, I think, perhaps, something could be done, and possibly in the maritime provinces more could be done than anywhere else, because being so far from Western Canada they are not brought into contact with our literature, and the difficulty and expense of transportation are so great that unless there is some counteracting influence, the natural movement will be to the United States. I shall give the whole subject the best consideration I can, and if any practical suggestion should be made I shall be happy to consider it.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 12.10 a.m., Friday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 18, 1902.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SUPPLY—THE EXPORT OF NICKEL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Before you leave the Chair, I desire to refer briefly to a matter of some importance to the country. I shall do so without making any motion in reference to the subject. I refer to the export of nickel from Canada.

This country, for fifteen years, has been the chief source of supply of nickel for the world. The business has been managed by our American friends in such a way that they have derived nearly all the advantages that could be obtained from the extensive and lucrative business of refining nickel and converting it into finished products. The American policy as regards the nickel industry is to admit the matte or refined ore free of duty, and to impose a very heavy duty upon the refined nickel, that duty amounting to $120 per ton. The result has been that our nickel deposits have been worked by the companies owning the mines in Canada, and the matte has been exported to the United States and refined there, giving to that country a very lucrative business. But the policy we have permitted the United States to pursue towards us in this matter is one that certainly has not been conducive to our own interests. The use of nickel promises to be increased, and therefore the control of the industry will be one of much greater importance in the near future than it has been up to the present. The manufacture of nickeliferous—pig iron will play a very important part in the manufacturing operations in connection with nickel in the very near future. Nickel is not only essential in the manufacture of armour plate, but it can be used to great advantage in material for bridges, in material for building, in fact for material for structural purposes generally; and the control of the business will be a matter of great importance to whatever country obtains it. The United States capitalists and business men are quite wide awake to the advantages to be derived from the control of this business, and, within a few days a great nickel company has been formed in the United States entitled the International Nickel Company which is operating in connection with, and is largely controlled by the American Steel Corporation, commonly known as the Steel Trust. This new company I see by the 'Engineering and Mining Journal' of April 5, was incorporated in the week of that issue of the 'Journal.' I will read one or two paragraphs from the article on this subject:

> The International Nickel Company, which was organized this week in New Jersey, is the result of the plans to consolidate and control the nickel production of the world, to which reference has been made in our columns heretofore. The plan was originated by Colonel R. M. Thompson, president of the Orford Copper Company, and has been carried through chiefly by his efforts, that he has had recently the aid of Mr. Schwab, of the United States Steel Corporation and Colonel J. R. De Le Mar.
> The purchase of the stock of the Nickel Corporation, Limited, from its London owners was one of the steps towards the present consolidation. The case of that company, which owns valuable concessions in New Caledonia, has already been discussed in the 'Journal.'
>
> The International Nickel Company will issue $12,000,000 in common stock; $12,000,000 in preferred stock, carrying six per cent dividends, non-cumulative, and $10,000,000 in five per cent bonds having 30 years to run. Of the authorized capital stock $9,000,000 common and $9,000,000 preferred will be issued at once to acquire the properties named below. The remaining stock will be reserved for future use. . . .
> The properties in which the new company will own a controlling interest—if not, the whole—are those of the Canadian Copper Company in Canada and the United States; the Orford Copper Company, with extensive reduction works at Bayonne, N.J.; the Anglo-American Iron Company and the Vermillion Manufacturing Company in Canada; the American Nickel Works of Joseph Wharton in Camden, N.J.; the Nickel Corporation, Limited, and the Societe Miniere Caledonienne in New Caledonia.
> The Societe Le Nickel, with its extensive properties in New Caledonia and its reduction works in France, is not included in the combination. It is intimated, however, that the International Nickel Company has already a full understanding with the French Company. It is believed that a community-of-interest plan has been arranged which will regulate production, prices and a division of the markets.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we see here not a proposed but an actual formation of a great nickel trust, with a capital of $24,000,000, with bonds of $12,000,000, associated with the Steel Trust of the United States with a capital of $1,000,000,000, the avowed purpose of which is to acquire the nickel properties and control the nickel business of the world. Now the question is whether Canada is advancing its own interests in promoting the continuance of the policy which has hitherto prevailed with regard to the nickel industry. The question is whether it is in the interest of Canada to promote the exportation of nickel in its lowest prepared form, that is, in concentrated ore, to be refined in the United States, and to submit to the policy of the United States which imposes an enormous import duty upon refined nickel and admits the matte free. The result of this policy has been that we have never refined a ton of nickel in Canada. This great company has purchased the Copper Cliff property for $4,375,000, payable in stock partly, and partly in cash; it has purchased other properties in Canada on conditions of a similar character.

The significance of the launching of this scheme, the significance of the formation of this trust, the fact that a great nickel iron company, in concert with the great Steel Trust of the United States, has been formed, is one which I think the government of the day is called upon to take into careful consideration. We have an interest in this matter, England has an interest in this matter. If the plans of this great international nickel corporation can be consummated and carried into effect, it will have a very serious influence upon England's interest in the matter of acquiring armour plate; it will have a very serious influence upon England's interest and upon our own in the matter of nickeliferous pig iron and the manufacture of nickel steel for the various purposes that that metal is adapted to. Our interest in this matter, the interest of England in this matter, the scope and character of this combination or corporation, are matters to which, in my opinion, we are called to give careful consideration. I do not see, Mr. Speaker, why it is not possible to refine the nickel that is mined in our own country; I do not see why, with the adoption of a proper policy, Canada cannot only control practically the nickel supply of ore, but also the nickel supply of the refined article. The government has in its own hands power to deal with this question, and it is unnecessary to introduce legislation. We have in the statutes, 60 and 61 Victoria, chapter 17, powers given with reference to the imposition of export duties which will enable the government, by a simple Order in Council, to meet the policy of the Americans by the imposition of an export duty upon nickel matte that will give us a chance to secure at least our share of the business of refining this metal in Canada.

In connection with this matter, while I am on my feet, there is another one which I wish to refer to, another case in which our respected and highly esteemed Uncle Samuel is a little too smart for us. When the United States acquired the Philippine Islands, I believe there was an explicit understanding or agreement with the English government that the policy of the United States with reference to the Philippines should not discriminate against other countries. I see that this matter has been made, the day before yesterday, the subject of a parliamentary inquiry in the British House of Commons. Now, Sir, there was, during the Spanish occupancy of the Philippines, an export duty levied upon manilla of $7.50 a ton, or 37 cents per hundred weight. The imposition of this export duty has been continued by the Philippine government, and the tariff which embodies this provision among its other provisions, has received the sanction of the United States government. Manilla, under this tariff, pays this export duty of $7.50 per ton, and when it is imported into the United States, that export duty is remitted, and this provision places the American manufacturer of cordage in a position where he has the advantage over the manufacturers of cordage in other countries; it is practically giving him a bonus of $7.50 per ton upon the cost of his raw material. Now the United States government are debarred by constitutional limitations from the imposition of an export duty, but they have taken a course which enables them to avail themselves of this export duty levied in the Philippine Islands as efficiently and completely as if it were levied by the United States government. The Canadian importer of manilla cannot go to the United States and purchase manilla without having it subject to the export duty, he has got to pay an export duty, whether he buys manilla in the Philippine Islands and imports it direct, or whether he buys it in the United States of the American importer; and paying this export duty he is placed at a disadvantage with his American competitor in the sale of cordage in our own market.

Then with reference to manilla binder twine, this is admitted free. Now the Canadian producer of binder twine cannot compete with the American producer, because the American producer has the advantage at the outset of $7.50 per ton in the cost of the raw article. It has been supposed that there is reciprocity between the two countries in the exportation and importation of binder twine; but an examination of the American tariff will show that the binder twine we can export to the United States free of duty must not contain manilla fibre, and if it does contain manilla fibre, then it goes under the head of unenumerated articles and pays 20 per cent. Now this is the condition in respect to this article, where we are placed at an unfair disadvantage. The imposition of export duties which are made to serve the purpose of the United States manufacturer by reducing the cost of his raw material to the extent of the export duty as compared with the cost of the raw material to all other countries, is a matter which, in my opinion, requires the attention of the government; and this thing can only be met by countervailing duties. If we were to impose a specific duty of half a cent a pound upon cordage and upon binder twine, then we would equalize the conditions, and put our manufacturer upon the same footing with the American manufacturer. But unless we do this, the American manufacturer has the Canadian manufacturer at a disadvantage, and I hold, Mr. Speaker, that it is the duty of the government so far as it is able to do this, to protect our own interests. I place those facts with regard to these industries; with regard to the nickel industries and with regard to the manufacturer of cordage and twine before the government for its consideration.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding.) The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) has called attention to two matters of importance, both of which have somewhat engaged the attention of the government. With regard to the export of nickel, the House is aware that several years ago the government took power in the Customs Act to levy export duties on nickel, but after very full consideration of the question it was not deemed to be in the best interests of the mineral development of Canada that these export duties should at the time be imposed. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) represents that some new conditions have arisen through the creation of a great monopoly in the nickel industry, and so far as that presents any new aspect of the case the government would be bound of course to give it due consideration and will do so.

The other question to which my hon. friend has referred was brought before us recently both through notice in the public press and through representations made during the past few days by gentlemen interested in the business affected. It is a very curious condition of affairs ; I think unlike anything in connection with our tariff matters which has ever been presented to the House before.

Mr. CHARLTON. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All I can say for the present is, that the matter is engaging the attention of the government. Whether or not it is an evil which needs a remedy is a matter which will have to be determined at an early date, and I trust my hon. friend will not expect me to say more than that at the present stage.

MANITOBA SCHOOL LAND SALES.

Mr. N. BOYD (Macdonald). I wish to ask the Minister of the Interior if he will lay on the Table at an early date the report of the commission that was appointed to inquire into the irregularities in regard to school lands sales ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Was a return ordered by the House ?

Mr. BOYD. I do not think so.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman desires, I will have it brought down.

Mr. BOYD. I hope it will not take too long.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Civil government : Department of Indian Affairs, including J. D. McLean at $2,400, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $55,167.50.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The net increase here is $4.097.50, of which $3,200 is for the appointment of a deputy superintendent general of Indian affairs. There are 33 statutory increases of $50 each ; one at $25, and one at $12.50 ; increase of the salary of the secretary, $100, making a total of $5,027.50. There is a reduction caused by the removal of a first-class clerk and the appointment of a second-class clerk in his place, leaving a saving of $400. There is the difference between a third-class clerk who got $1,000 and who has been superannuated owing to ill health, and a new junior second-class clerk at $600, giving a saving of $400. A clerk now deceased got $750, and the clerk appointed in his place gets $600, giving a saving of $150. This leaves a total saving of $950, which deducted from the gross increase of $5,027.50, leaves the net increase $4,097.70. Respecting the appointment of a deputy superintendent general of Indian affairs ; we have not had for the last five years a separate officer occupying that position. The deputy minister of the Interior discharges the duties of the office. If the work of the Department of the Interior had remained in the condition in which it was when I took office it would be quite possible to go on without making this appointment ; but the increase in the work of the department has been so enormous that it is absolutely impossible for the deputy minister of the Interior to give all the attention to that work which it should receive. There are many important matters in the Indian Department which ought to receive that attention which it is impossible for myself or for Mr. Smart to give them, for the reason that they are matters which would necessarily take considerable time in considering to deal with properly. I refer more particularly to disputed questions between the Department of Indian Affairs and the various provinces. There is no department of the government which comes in conflict so often with the provinces as does the Indian Department. There are questions constantly arising with regard to land and minerals which require a great deal of attention, and I have not been able to give as much attention to these subjects as I would like. That is one reason why we feel that in the public interest we ought to have an officer who would be competent to give all his attention to the subject.

Mr. SPROULE. Who discharges the duties of this office now ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Smart, the deputy minister of the Interior.

Mr. SPROULE. You abolished this office a few years ago, and you then claimed there was no need for it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the work had remained the same it would be quite possible to have carried on the work with one deputy. If the hon. gentleman looks at the returns of the Department of the Interior, he will see that the work of that department has multiplied three or four times during the last five years, and the correspondence alone has increased three times at least. I am satisfied that the making of this appointment is absolutely in the public interest.

Mr. SPROULE. Do I understand that the present occupant, Mr. Smart, is to be the deputy superintendent general of Indian Affairs, or is he the deputy minister of the Interior.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is both.

Mr. SPROULE. The question I asked was : Who is to fill the office in future ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot say that to the hon. gentleman because I have not come to a conclusion yet. No appointment can be made however until the salary is voted.

Mr. SPROULE. This is another illustration of the failure of hon. gentlemen to keep their promise that wonderful changes would be made when they came into office. They kept it for a short time until they got rid of the incumbent of the office, and thus made a vacancy, and in a little while they re-established the office for the purpose of putting in one of their own friends. It seems to me that this is one of the main objects in view at the present time.

Department of Indian Affairs—clerical and other assistance, $3,130.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is an increase of $150 which is made up as follows: There are five clerks who are paid out of this vote and two messengers. The statutory increases to these clerks amount to $210. There is a saving effected by the difference between the salary of Miss Garfoote, who has resigned and who was receiving $460, and the salary of the clerk who has been appointed since in her place and who gets the minimum salary of $400, thereby effecting a saving of $60. Taking $60 from $210 makes a net increase of $150.

Ontario and Quebec—relief, medical attendance and medicine, Quebec, $5,600.

Mr. SPROULE. I see there is an increase in the item of relief, medical attendance and medicine for Quebec of $2,000. What is the explanation of that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The total increase in these two amounts is $1,000, but there is in reality an increase of $2,900 in the item for relief, medical attendance and medicine in Quebec and Ontario, $2,000 in Quebec and $900 in Ontario, making $2,900. We have dropped the vote of $200 which has appeared in the estimates before to provide for the removal of Indians from Oka to the township of Gibson and we have dropped the vote of $1,700 for the repairs to the mission house at Caughnawaga. That makes $1,900 and it leaves a net increase of $1,000. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that in reality there is an increase of $2,900. It is for relief, medical attendance and medicine in Quebec and Ontario. As I have explained to the committee on various occasions the department of Indian Affairs has had very great difficulty in dealing with this question. They have endeavoured to keep the amount of expenditure down to the lowest possible figure, but they have always had to come before the House and ask for a supplementary vote. The officials inform me that they have asked for this increased amount because they believe it will cover the expenditure for the year and that they will not then have to ask for a supplementary vote.

Mr. SPROULE. But, your old item in your last estimates included the supplementary vote of last year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman understands that we have supplementary estimates for the current year as well as for the next year and for these particular items we have found it necessary towards the end of the year to bring in a supplementary estimate for the current year. We are voting this amount for this particular year and the hon. gentleman will perceive that in the supplementary estimates to be laid on the Table there will be a supplementary amount for this year. We have now increased the main vote so as to avoid the necessity of taking a supplementary vote again.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that is a much better principle and it enables us to understand it more easily. I understand the hon. minister to say that he has dropped out of this vote the amount which has been voted every year for the transfer of Oka Indians to Muskoka. Have they all died, or has he transferred the last one of them?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They will not go.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister gave us no statement in regard to the Indians on the island near Cornwall with whom the department had some trouble. Is there any change in the situation?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The difficulty which we had at St. Regis was of a very serious and trying character. When I took charge of the department I found that some of the Indians there had made up their minds to defy the authority of the department, and the first attempt that was made to enforce the authority of the department was met by a state of turbulence on the reserve which was very alarming. I do not think the difficulty would have arisen or would have continued to the extent it did, if it had not been for the fact that immediately opposite the reserve is a place where a lot of American Indians reside, and the line between them is only an imaginary one. The Canadian Indians and the American Indians passed freely backwards and forwards, and the American Indians unquestionably excited the Canadian Indians to turbulence and a disregard of the law. The House will remember that a couple of years ago we had a very serious difficulty on the reserve, and sent down the chief of the Dominion police to quell it, and a very serious attack was made upon him which resulted in one of the Indians being shot, and his death resulted from the wound. A number of Indians were brought to trial for this affray, and after their trial were allowed to go on suspended sentence. After consulting with the late member for Huntingdon, Mr. Scriver, a man in whose judgment I had considerable confidence, and who was well acquainted with the circumstances, and after consulting with the officers of the law of the province of Quebec in that neighbourhood, and getting all the information I could, as well as having an inspection by one of the inspectors of the department, I came to the conclusion that the ends of justice would be best served by allowing the Indians to go on suspended sentence. They were allowed to go, and for a time matters were quiet, and it was thought that the trouble was at an end. A little while afterwards signs of disturbance again manifested themselves, and I came to the conclusion that undue lenience to the Indians would rather give them the impression that the government was afraid of them, and that they could do as they pleased. The next outbreak was due to a dispute about the lease of a number of islands in the St. Lawrence. I need not trouble the committee by giving a full account of the whole matter, because it is very complicated. A number of the islands in the St. Lawrence were held under leases, which had been assented to by the Indians fifty or sixty years ago, and from time to time a number of these leases had fallen in. Some years ago the department decided that, although these leases were renewable under their strict terms, they would not allow them to be renewed, but would let the islands revert to the Indians whenever the leases fell in. After the leases of several islands had fallen in and the Indians were getting the use of the land of these islands, they conceived the idea that they could force matters, and insist on some of the islands on which the leases had not terminated being also turned over to them. In order to bring the matter to a head, they arranged to put an Indian with his family on one of these islands, and in that way take possession of it. The department was notified of the fact by persons who had built summer cottages on the island, who were in the habit of going there in the summer, and who were afraid to go for fear of violence from the Indians. I gave the matter the best consideration I could, and came to the conclusion that anything in the nature of extreme leniency, or allowing the Indians to have their way in violating the law, would be a mistake. Consequently I determined to take hold of the matter with a firm hand. I caused the chief of police of the town of Cornwall to go there and make an examination of all the facts of the case, and under the authority of the Indian Act the Indian who was there with his family was taken off and put out of possession of the island. As soon as this was done, the Indians determined that they would put this man back again; and as often as he was removed they would put him back and put others along with him, with the object of intimidating persons who went on the island. When I ascertained this, I proceeded under the terms of the Indian Act, and had the man arrested and put in jail for violating the order that had been made, and the Indians were notified of the fact. The result was that they gave up the fight, and since that time we have had peace, and I do not anticipate any more difficulty in connection with the matter.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister said that when the supplementary estimates for this year came down he would ask for an additional amount. We have these supplementary estimates before us, and in them $2,800 is asked for to pay the balance of the expenses in connection with the Indians in the province of Quebec. Last year the sum asked for was $3,600. If my hon. friend will refer to the last estimates of the late Conservative government, brought down in 1895, he will find that the amount then asked for, which included the entire service, was $3,500, included in which was an amount for seed grain, for which I do not see anything included in this vote. Why is this vote increased by $2,100 in five years? There are no more Indians, but there are less, because some have moved away. This whole increase is for medical attendance.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The increase seems to be due to the fact that the department has taken over a certain amount of work in connection with the Indians on the lower part of the River St. Lawrence. Under the existing conditions, we have a considerable amount of expense in connection with the increased quarantine work, which has had to be undertaken by the Department of Indian Affairs. I quite understand that the expenditure in connection with this branch of the service ought to be as low as possible, and there is a continual struggle on the part of the department for the purpose of keeping down this expenditure on Indian affairs, and my hon. friend can rest assured that there is no money expended except in cases where actual services are rendered. So far as the medical attendance is concerned, there is always the possibility of an increase. When an Indian gets medicine one day, he imagines he cannot get along unless he gets more the next, and there are bound to be increases from time to time, but we are doing the best we can to keep down the expenditure. The epidemic of small-pox, which has prevailed in all parts of the country, has called for more medical work, particularly among the Indians. The Department of Agriculture makes this expenditure among the Indians of the North-west, but in the lower provinces the work has to be done by our medical officers.

Mr. TAYLOR. We know that this is a growing time, but the Indians are not growing in the province of Quebec, but rather decreasing. The hon. gentleman is asking for an increase over the money expended by the late government. In the supplementaries he is asking for $2,800 more this year. If there was an extra expenditure on account of vaccination last year, there ought not to be any this year, but yet this year he is asking for a still larger amount to carry on this work. How many Indians are there in the province of Quebec, and how many medical men are employed to treat them ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are 17,000 Indians, and I cannot say exactly how many medical men are employed. There are only three or four paid salaries. Most of the work is done by physicians in the neighbourhood who just send in their accounts. It is much more satisfactory when we can get physicians to do the work on salary, because where we have to pay separate accounts, there is endless difficulty.

Mr. TAYLOR. No doubt a lot of the hon. gentleman's friends have to be considered and given employment treating the Indians.

Relief medical attendance and medicine, Ontario, $2,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. This item shows an increase of $900 since 1895-6. The work was done then for $1,100.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The increase is caused by the fact that we have undertaken to do some work for the Indians on the north shore of Lake Superior, which was not done before. We are also providing $200 for the salaries of the medical attendant at Mattawa, who attends the Indians that come from the northern posts, north of the Mattawa, and who is at the call of the department for cases among the Indians in that neighbourhood. We used to have complaints frequently from the people there that no provision was made for the care of sick Indians, and we found it necessary to provide for this service.

Mr. SPROULE. This, I take it, includes the Indians on the Manitoulin Islands ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. What doctors are employed there now ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Dr. Carruthers, Dr. Johnson and Dr. McIntosh. They are all paid out of the band fund.

Mr. SPROULE. Where are they located?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Dr. Carruthers, at South Bay, Dr. Johnson, West Bay, and Dr. McIntosh, at Manitowaning. They are paid out of the Indian fund.

Mr. SPROULE. They are paid by salary, I presume ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. Dr. Carruther's salary is $600; Dr. Johnson's salary is $250, and Dr. McIntosh's, $1,000.

Mr. SPROULE. That is exclusive of medicines, I suppose ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That includes medicines.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the minister's order with regard to vaccination ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The rule is that the physicians on the reserves where at all possible are supposed to keep the children vaccinated. That, like a good many of the rules in connection with the Indian reserves must be carried out with some discretion and cannot always be executed with the same exactness as in a civilized community. I may say that within the last year we have had a great deal of difficulty, because the physicians claim where there was a very large amount of vaccination to be done, that they were entitled to extra fees for it. I do not think we have paid any extra fees as yet, but that question has come up lately. The rule, as I say, is that, where possible, they are to keep the children vaccinated, but they are not bound to vaccinate the adults.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the minister a return of the vaccinations year by year among the Indians ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. It is not given in the report ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, but we can furnish it if the hon. gentleman desires.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the Indians were much averse to vaccination ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are in some places. But not much more than among white people. You come across some who object, but as a rule they do not make much difficulty over it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand that these doctors are paid out of the Indian fund. Will the hon. minister tell us who are paid out of this vote on Manitoulin Island ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Indian bands have their funds——

Mr. SPROULE. But, if the doctors are paid out of the Indian funds, what is this vote for ? Are there Indian bands which have no fund ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have to make a virtue of necessity and, where the Indians have no funds, we vote the money that is absolutely necessary for the service.

Mr. SPROULE. But this cannot be an unusual matter, because this money is voted year after year. Where are the Indians located for whom this vote is made ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can give the hon. gentleman the names of persons who are employed in this way where salaries are paid them, but, at present I cannot give the names of those who are paid by fees. I fancy they are scattered all over the country, and we have not a list of the names in the report. The following are paid salaries voted by parliament : Dr. J. W. Evans, $100, attending the Indians between Chapleau and Pogamasing ; Dr. M. James, Mattawa, $200 a year, attending the Algonquin Indians north of Mattawa ; Dr. James A. McEwan, $300 a year, attending the Oneidas of the Thames.

Mr. INGRAM. What about Dr. McIntosh on Manitoulin Island ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is paid out of the Indian fund.

Mr. TAYLOR. At page J-156 of the Auditor General's Report I find a charge of $184.08 as paid to Dr. McIntosh, Manitoulin Island. Why is that not paid out of the Indian fund ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is a service rendered to a band on Manitoulin Island that has no fund of its own. There are a number of Indians who are entitled to participate in the funds of what is generally known as the Manitoulin band.

Mr. SPROULE. The amounts given by the hon. minister represent a total of only about $600, while this vote is $2,000. There must be others the hon. minister has not given.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman will refer to page J-7 of the Auditor General's Report, he will find an account of the manner in which the money was expended last year.

Indian Affairs—Ontario and Quebec—schools, Ontario, Quebec and maritime provinces, $42,-190.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister tell us where these schools are and also why this vote has crept up to the present amount from the $8,000 or so that was spent some years ago ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I may say that a good deal of my time with the Indian Department is spent in resisting demands made on behalf of these schools. If the hon. gentleman desires I will give the particulars in regard to the schools. In Ontario there are 72 day schools and 6 industrial and boarding schools. The aggregate number of pupils enrolled in the day schools in 2,201 ; the aggregate number in the industrial schools is 466. The average attendance in the day schools is 1,036, and in the industrial schools 423. We have found by experience in connection with Indian education that the average attendance at day schools bears a very small proportion, much smaller than it ought, to the total number of enrolled children ; whereas at boarding schools or industrial schools, the average attendance is very much greater. Of these 78 schools, 42 are either wholly or in part provided for by government grant, the remainder from the funds of the bands themselves. There are 2 schools at Caradoc, 1 at Manitoulin Island, 3 at Fort William, 1 at Garden River, 1 at Golden Lake, 1 at Georgiana Island, 1 at Hiawatha, 1 at Jack Fish Island, 1 at Nepigon Lake, 1 at Nepigon River, 1 at Lower Muncey, 1 at Mattawa, 1 at Michipicoten, 1 at Henvey Inlet, 1 at Mississauga River, the Mohawk institute with 91 pupils, the Mount Elgin institute, with 100 pupils, 2 schools at Oneida, 1 at Pic River, 1 at Port Arthur, 1 at Pays Plat, 1 at Rama, 1 at Spanish River, 1 at Serpent River, 1 at South Bay, Manitoulin Island, 1 at Shawanaga, 1 at Six Nations, 1 at Spanish River, 1 at Shingwauk Home, 1 at Wallpole Island, 1 on the Watha reserve, 1 at White Fish Lake, 1 at White Fish River, 1 at Wikwenikongsing, 3 at Wikwemikong, and 1 at Thessalon. Total grants for schools in Ontario, $31,660.

In Quebec the total number of day schools is 18 ; aggregate number of pupils on roll 763 ; average attendance, 731. Of these schools, 13 are provided for by government grant, the remainder from the funds of the bands themselves. There is one school at Becancour, 3 at Caughnawaga, 1 at Lorette, 1 at Oka Village, 1 at Restigouche River, 2 at Temiscamingue, 1 at Maria, 1 at Lake St. John, 2 at Lake St. Francais, and 1 at Betsiamits. Total grant for Quebec, $3,480.

In Nova Scotia, the number of day schools is 10 ; aggregate number on roll, 205 ; aggregate average attendance, 89. All are provided for by government grant. 1 school is at Bear River, Digby, 1 at Cow Bay, Cape Breton, 1 at Eskasoni, Cape Breton, 1 at Middle River, Victoria, 1 at New Germany, Queen's, 1 at Salmon River, Richmond, 1 at Whycocomagh, Inverness, 1 at Shubenacadie, Hants, 1 at Indian Cove, Pictou, 1 at Millbrook, Colchester. Total grant for Nova Scotia, $2,500.

In New Brunswick the number of day schools is 6 ; aggregate number on roll, 143 ; aggregate average attentance, 74. All are provided for by government grant. 1 school is at Burnt Church, Northumberland, 1 at Eel Ground, Northumberland, 1 at King's Clear, York, 1 at St. Mary's, York, 1 at Tobique, Victoria, 1 at Big Cove, Kent. Total grant for New Brunswick, $1,400.

In Prince Edward Island the number of day schools is 1; number on roll, 21; average attendance, 11. This school is at Lennox Island. Total grant for Prince Edward Island, $300.

Then there is an item for total general expenses of $2,850, made up as follows: To provide for cost of inspection, rent, fuel, cleaning, and repairing outbuildings, and erecting outbuildings (including $725 for accommodation and furniture for teachers of Roman Catholic schools. Lakes Huron and Superior), $2,725; to provide scholarships for the Mohawk institute, to pay fees at the Collegiate institute, Brantford, $125. The total expenditure for all the provinces is $42,190.

Mr. SPROULE. What standard of education must your teachers possess to qualify them?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are required to have the usual certificates, a third class certificate. In the province of Ontario the schools are inspected by the public school inspectors.

Mr. FRASER. I know about one of these schools in our own county, conducted by a Miss Connelly. She has transformed the character of the Indian children at Pictou Landing. She has not only instructed them in school work but she has instructed them in their homes, she has gone to their homes and taught them habits of cleanliness, and has made such a change in them that I do not know any better expenditure this government has made than for the Indian schools in our own county.

Mr. SPROULE. What progress generally are the children making in those schools? We hear it said frequently that they are not making much progress.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no foundation for the idea that no progress is being made, or that the money is being wasted. Our position with reference to the Indians is this: We have them with us, and we have to deal with them as wards of the country. There is no question that the method we have adopted of spending money to educate them is the best possible method of bringing these people to an improved state. I can speak from my own knowledge in the North-west, and generally speaking there is a vast difference between the Indians who have passed through the day school and are now adults or becoming adults, and the Indians who have not had that advantage. There is the difference between the savage and a person who has become civilized, though perhaps not of a high type. I do not think any great improvement can be made in the work which is being carried on; we have to have inspection just as we would if we were dealing with day schools. You cannot have exactly the same degree of efficiency. You cannot press the Indian children as you can the children of white people, you cannot require so much from them. In Ontario we do not have very much difficulty because the schools are inspected by the public school inspectors, but in the other provinces we have to pay a little closer attention to detail. In outlying places there is difficulty in getting competent teachers. When you pay $300 a year and send a young woman, or a young man, out to a lonesome place where there are no social advantanges it is very difficult to get a competent teacher under those circumstances. We can only do the best we can from time to time, and if we find that a teacher is not competent on the inspector's report, we try to make a change as quickly as possible.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see that the hon. minister is asking for $42,190 for schools in Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces. I turn to the Auditor General's Report at J—156, and I find that the expenditure for schools in Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces amounted to $12,331.59. The Auditor General gives the names of all the teachers. I do not find the name of the one that has been mentioned.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) will turn to J—8 he will find the expenditure there.

Mr. TAYLOR. In connection with the schools, the Auditor General gives all the names of the teachers and the expenditure, which amounts to $12,331.59. I turn to the next page, J—157, and I find the following:

H. Jacques, M.D., physician, King's county	$ 50 00
F. H. Kelly, M.D, physician, Queen's and Lunenburg	50 00
J. F. Macaulay, M.D., physician, Inverness county	75 00
D. Macdonald, M.D., physician, Inverness county	12 50
H. N. Macdonald, M.D., physician, Victoria county	62 50
H. A. March, M.D., physician, Lunenburg county	75 00
Daniel McDonald, M.D., physician, Victoria county	225 00
D. K. McIntyre, M.D., physician, Sydney, C.B.	250 00

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend is not referring to the expenditure in connection with this vote.

Mr. TAYLOR (reading):

J. C. McKinnon, M.D., physician, Antigonish county	$150 00
E. D. McLean, M.D., physician, Hants county	150 00
R. Withers, M.D., physician, Annapolis county	50 00
F. S. Yorkston, M.D., physician, Colchester county	150 00
J. S. Benson, M.D., physician	100 00
J. F. Desmond, M.D., physician, Newcastle	179 17
A. G. Ferguson, M.D., physician	25 00

And so they go on.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Is that at page 157 ?

Mr. TAYLOR. That is at page 157. I would like to know how many Indians there are down there, and how many doctors are required to look after them ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman will look at J—8 he will find the expenditure under this vote—schools, Ontario, and Quebec, and maritime provinces. He will find that it was $38,827.83.

Mr. McLENNAN. Mr. Chairman, with regard to the expenditures in Inverness county for these schools and for medical attendance, I beg to say that the sum of $150 has been set aside to pay for medical attendance. There are two Indian reserves in the county of Inverness. One of these physicians attend the Indians on each reserve, and $150, at my suggestion, has been divided between them. Hence it is that so many names appear as receiving money from this government for medical services in Inverness. The whole amount does not exceed $150. I do not know how it is in other counties, but that is what holds true in the county of Inverness. With regard to the schools, I can only say that the government, at my suggestion also, built a very fine school there at an expenditure of $700 or so, and I may say, as the hon. minister said in regard to the schools in Ontario, the public inspector visits the Indian school just as regularly, and is bound to do so, as he visits any other school in the county of Inverness. The teacher also must be licensed, holding a provincial license, as the gentleman in charge of the Indian school now does. Sometimes I regret that the young Indians in that school are making such progress that they are very greatly adding to my correspondence. While I am up here they write to me and make known their wants like ordinary mortals in that county.

Mr. SPROULE. They know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLennan) is controlling the patronage. I was going to ask the hon. minister what books they use for the instruction of the children. Are they taught in various languages or are they required to be taught in any other language than English ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are taught in English.

Mr. SPROULE. English only ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There may be a few teachers who know the native Indian language, but it is not required. They are taught in English.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, we are to understand that the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. McLennan) is responsible for the extra medical attendance down there ?

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. McLENNAN. I do not hear the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister tells us that the children are making satisfactory progress. I hope they are. He says that these schools meet with his approval and on looking over his report I do not doubt but that they do. Looking over the report, I take up the Elkhorn school, and I see that one of the principal items in connection with that school is as follows :

The event of the year was the visit of the Hon. Mr. Sifton, with regard to which the Manitoba 'Free Press' of October 29, says : 'Mr. Sifton visited the industrial school in Elkhorn on Saturday, and after receiving a most cordial reception from the staff and pupils, he was presented with a kindly worded address, accompanied by a bouquet.

He should have had the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) there. I wonder if he paid for the bouquet himself.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not know whether it was paid for out of the Indian vote or not.

Mr. SPROULE. Or was it paid for out of the Indian vote ?

The hon. gentleman spoke nicely to the children in reply, thanking them for their tokens of esteem and encouraging them to prosecute their studies diligently.

Did the hon. gentleman speak in Indian or in English ?

He was highly pleased with the work being accomplished there.

I suppose he would be, as that address was presented to him there.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson entertained him at lunch after the inspection was completed. The school is an admirably equipped institution.

This was the event of the year at this Indian school, and of course, the hon. gentleman is highly pleased with the progress which is being made. I do not wonder he would be, as he got that bouquet. Will he present it to the House and lay it on the Table ?

Grant for the agricultural society—Munceys of the Thames, $90.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). Is that all that is granted to the Muncey Indians ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We give them a little medical attendance and I think they share in some other grants, but not much more. These Indians are highly advanced as the hon. gentleman knows, and this is merely a gratuity to their agricultural society.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). The Muncey Indians have an excellent institution on the Thames. They have a splendid school presided over by a very able gentleman, and to meet the Indian children on the roads you would see that they are as well dressed and fully as refined and cultured as most of our farmer's sons in that neighbourhood. The institution is a credit.

To assist in the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians belonging to bands in the older provinces, which have no funds of their own, $500.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is this money spent ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When reports come in that liquor is being sold to the Indians in any particular place, we send out special instructions and sometimes we send down a special detective.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you require this in Ontario, where they have license inspectors, whose duty it is to see that the law is enforced ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They do not consider it their business to do anything special in connection with the Indians.

Mr. SPROULE. They don't consider it their business to prevent liquor being illegally sold. That is a sad reflection on the license inspector in the province of Ontario.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the provincial officers find an Indian drunk of course they will lock him up as they would any other man, but they will not make any special exertion to ascertain who sold the liquor. The sale of liquor to an Indian is in contravention of Dominion legislation, and none of the provincial authorities consider it their business to look specially after the violations of the Indian Act. In one case, I sent a special detective three times to the same place and he entirely failed to find evidence to secure a conviction.

Mr. SPROULE. I always understood that liquor could not be sold to an Indian under a penalty of $200. Surely it is the duty of the provincial inspector to see that punishment is meted out when the law is broken. Would the provincial inspectors not consider it their duty to prosecute if they were informed that liquor had been sold in contravention of the law, to the Indians ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a great difficulty in this case, because the men who sell liquor to the Indians are very unscrupulous and they are well posted in all the tricks to avoid detection. Sometimes they corrupt a member of the band of Indians, and as a rule the Indians are extremely loath to give evidence. We find it necessary to have a special officer to look after this work occasionally.

Mr. LANCASTER. I see that $194.30 of this vote last year went to Mr. J. D. Leduc for legal services. Who is this Mr. Leduc, and what does he do ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not that information, but I will get it at the evening sitting.

Mr. INGRAM. Where did these prosecutions take place ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Principally at Restigouche and Bersimis. The details are on page 10.

Mr. INGRAM. There is no detail there as to whether these things occurred in Quebec or in Ontario. It is important for us to know that, because the license laws in Ontario are supposed to be enforced by the inspectors.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will give the hon. gentleman the exact information to-night.

Mr. INGRAM. Who is J. B. White, license inspector ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will include that in the information which I will give to-night.

Indians, Nova Scotia, $7,650.

Mr. INGRAM. We want some explanation in regard to seed-grain.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount of seed-grain which it is actually necessary to distribute is worked out by the agents in each county, and the grain is purchased by the agent at the lowest possible rate and distributed, the vouchers being sent to the department. The transactions are very small.

Mr. INGRAM. At whose request are these amounts expended ? Is it at the request of the gentleman representing the constituency ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Practically the agent has it altogether in his own hands. We find it impracticable to do it in any other way.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the same rule apply as in the North-west Territories ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, not at all. There the supplies are very large in quantity and in most cases are purchased by tender by the department here. Printed schedules are issued every year, and the contracts are awarded to the lowest tenderers. Where there are some small supplies required in the immediate neighbourhood of a reserve, they are purchased under the direction of the Indian Commissioner at Winnipeg. He sends his estimates of the quantity and price to the department, and after these are checked over, he is authorized to buy them. In the North-west Territories, where the supplies are very large it is possible to follow a system, which is not possible in the case of small supplies in the maritime provinces, where, if we attempted to follow any system, it would cost more than the goods.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister is asking $3,700 for medical attendance and medicines, whereas in 1896 the amount was $2,000. I would like him to explain this increase.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The actual expenditure last year was $3,768.58.

Mr. KENDALL. The minister at my request in one or two instances has increased the expenditure, and I am going to make the request that it be increased still further, because the appropriations which we have made hitherto for the Indians have been simply criminal. We have not taken charge of these wards of the nation as we should have done.

Mr. INGRAM. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us whether the Indians in Nova Scotia are troubled with disease, and if so, what class of disease ?

Mr. KENDALL. The Indians there are subject to the same diseases as Indians in other parts of the world. Indians who are not supplied with proper food and clothing are more apt to be ill than other people, and I say that our appropriation has not been adequate to the needs of these people.

Mr. LANCASTER. How many are there?

Mr. KENDALL. I do not know.

Mr. LANCASTER. Then, how do you know that the appropriation is not adequate ?

Mr. KENDALL. I am a medical man, and have had a great deal to do with them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The Indian population of Nova Scotia is 2,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman has not favoured us with the reason of this extraordinary increase.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman must realize that we are taking care of the Indians a little better than before, that is all.

Mr. INGRAM. According to the statement made by the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Kendall), that is not the case. He stated that owing to bad food or something of that character, it was necessary to increase the fees for medical attendance. Why should that be done ? Do they not get sufficient food, or are they not properly clothed or housed ?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes, I can say that they are not properly fed, clothed or housed.

Mr. INGRAM. How long has that been going on ?

Mr. KENDALL. Ever since we have had possession of the country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are considerably better taken care of than before. My hon. friend asks whether a band of Indians on one of the maritime province reserves are properly housed or clothed. He asks a question which cannot be answered categorically. It depends on what we consider to be properly housed and clothed. If the hon. gentleman refers to the kind of clothing and houses that white people have in the county in which he lives, then they are not properly housed and clothed by a long way. There is always plenty of room for increasing the expenditure largely for the Indians, and leaving a large margin.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the increase is for want of food and clothing why is it not put down as such, instead of medical attendance, which is misleading to the country ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N. S.) The doctors who attend these Indians may live perhaps thirty miles from them. There are no doctors in close proximity to the Indian reserves in different parts of the Island of Cape Breton. The doctors have to travel long distances to visit the Indians whenever there is any sickness prevailing among them. As a rule there is more sickness among the Indians than among the white people who are better fed and better clothed.

Department of Indian Affairs, N.B.—Medical attendance and medicines, $3,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. I cannot understand why the increase in connection with the Indians in New Brunswick should be all in medical attendance. In 1895-6, it was $1,295 ; now it is $3,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend will find the details on page J-12 of the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. INGRAM. There must be some particular reason why this item is increased. I could understand an increase in clothing and food, but the increased cost of medical attendance I cannot understand.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are constantly trying to keep the expenditure down but it constantly shows a tendency to rise. Continual applications are made to us by members representing the different counties, on the ground that the Indians have not the medical attendance they require, and we feel that perhaps they were not as well looked after by the late government as they should have been. We are told that the Indians are not sufficiently looked after from a medical standpoint, and that more expenditure is required, and we increased the expenditure a little in each case for reasons which certainly can be justified on the ground of humanity. I think my hon. friend can rely upon this, that the Indians are getting the medical attendance we are paying for.

Mr. INGRAM. We have not objected to the expenditures on salaries and relief and seed grain, but the increase in medical expenditure seems unaccountable.

Mr. KENDALL. $3,000 would not provide them with coffins in the spring of the year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are simply meeting the demands made upon us as far as we can. We do not send out word that we want to pay so much more for medical attendance, but we are simply meeting the demands made upon us.

Medical attendance and medicine, Indians, P.E.I., $650.

Mr. HACKETT. I would like to ask the minister the reason for this increase of nearly 100 per cent.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think that the expenses for the next year will be substantially any more than there were last year on the whole.

Mr. HACKETT. If the Indians required the medical attendance, I would have no objection to the item, but I would like to know who asked for it? Was it the Indian agents or the doctors?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When the Indians become sick and there is a medical attendant in the locality, who is paid a salary, he is obliged to attend them, but where there is none, a medical man attends them and then sends in his bill, just as he would in the case of a white man, and the department has to exercise its own judgment as to the correctness of the charge. In the case of an account coming from a reserve or a district, as is the case in Prince Edward Island, the account has to be certified by the agent.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many Indians on Prince Edward Island?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Three hundred and fifteen.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the hon. gentleman is asking for $300 more for medical attendance and medicines than was spent in 1895-6. We have here the names of a dozen doctors to whom various amounts were paid, does that list include all the doctors in Prince Edward Island of the political belief of my hon. friends opposite?

Mr. HACKETT. I must say that the minister has not been very partial to his own side in that respect. The list of doctors includes men of the different political creeds. The principal doctor, Dr. Long, who resides at Port Hill, and attends the Indians on Lennox Island, is a neutral in politics, I believe. Being the nearest to where the principal body of Indians is situated, he has the most of this work to do. The Indian being nomadic in his habits, ranges about the island in the summer, and is attended by different doctors. So far as this list shows, the minister has not discriminated against the Tories very much.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the custom in Prince Edward Island, that when an Indian takes sick that the nearest doctor is called upon to attend him and the bill charged to this fund? That is not the case in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The bill has to be certified by the agent, then it comes here and is passed upon by the secretary of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. But if you sent such a bill to an agent in Ontario, I understand, he would refuse to certify it. I speak from personal experience to this extent, that I have at different times attended Indians but never had a bill against the Indian fund. I have always done it for nothing and supplied the medicine myself.

Indian Affairs—Manitoba and North-west Territories—agricultural implements, $11,647.

Mr. SPROULE. What success are the Indians achieving in agricultural pursuits?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Their progress is proportionate to the capacity and energy of the farm instructor. The position of the Indians is much improved, and it has been shown that great advance can be made where attention is paid to the matter by a competent man. We have had such striking illustrations of that, that we have made some changes within the last year or two with a view to getting more competent men in charge of the farming work on the reserves. As hon. members will readily understand, a man may be competent as a clerk or overseer on the reserve, yet not have the faculty of teaching the Indians how to succeed in farming. The department can learn only by experience, and we have endeavoured to put in these positions men who are qualified for the work. On what was formerly called the File Hills reserve, now the Qu'Appelle agency, we have a gentleman named Graham, who has been in charge of that reserve for some years, and the progress made by the Indians under his direction has been simply remarkable. Two years ago I visited the neighbourhood of the reserve and the Indian school not far from it, and got full particulars regarding progress made. That fall the Indians on the reserve had over ten thousand bushels of first-class wheat, and also a considerable number of cattle. With a view of improving matters there, we put this Indian agent in charge of three reserves, because of the capacity he has shown for the work. It requires a peculiar combination of faculties to succeed in this work, and it is impossible to know in advance just how a man chosen for it will turn out. Some men whom we expected to succeed have failed and some of whom we expected but little have succeeded. On the whole, the committee may be satisfied that substantial progress has been made and, instead of having a horde of savages in the North-west, as we had a few years ago, we shall soon have an orderly, fairly educated population, capable of sustaining themselves. They are taking much greater interest in cattle-raising than in other lines of agriculture. They apply themselves to it more readily and show better capacity for it. The Blackfeet and the Bloods, not far from Calgary are the reserves upon which ordinary agriculture has made, possibly the least progress. But the Indians there have lately manifested a desire to conform themselves to what they see on other reserves, and I think we may look for progress there. They do a good deal already in the way of raising horses and cattle.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the minister to refer to the Pine Creek reserve. His report shows that the Indians there have not made satisfactory progress in agricultural pursuits. 'Grain growing on these reserves, so far as it has been tried, has not proved successful.' The present statement of the minister does not seem to be in accordance with his own report.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was speaking of the File Hills reserve, not the Pine Creek reserve.

Mr. SPROULE. In the case I referred to it seems that the Indians have not been successful in grain-growing—though a little more successful not very much—in cattle-raising. The report says:

> Thoroughbred shorthorn bulls were supplied this year to Ebb and Flow, Lake St. Martin and Lake Manitoba reserves; but as they were only yearlings, it is hardly probable that much benefit will be derived from them for another year. The Indians take fairly good care of their stock, and no loss has occurred from neglect during the past year. As the young men grow up, I think they will take more interest in cattle than their parents.

I have noticed in former reports that, on some of the reserves the Indians used to leave their agricultural machinery out of doors, and, as for their cattle, when they got hungry they killed an animal for food.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend has exercised considerable ingenuity on picking out the case of a reserve in northern Manitoba where we have not accomplished a great deal as yet. But if he will read the report of Mr. Graham, beginning page 153, of the Report of the Department of Indian Affairs, he will get a fair, unbiased statement of the position of affairs on the various reserves referred to. As I have already said, Mr. Graham is one of our most successful agents in inducing the Indians to settle down and take care of themselves. Mr. Graham has been about 15 years in the service, and is still in the prime of life. It is only on account of his capacity that he has been put in charge of an additional amount of work. There always have been one or two places where the work has not been satisfactory. That arises from the effect of local circumstances, or because the agent or officer has not turned out as well as we expected.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here of $1,455 for agricultural implements. Is that due to the increased number who are going into agriculture?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There has been a necessity for providing threshing machines on three agencies.

Field and garden seeds, $1,845.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Where operations are extensive there is always a certain number of requisitions coming in for seed. Of course this sum does not by any means provide all the seed required on the Indian reserves, that is just for a little sorting up that is required from the various agencies.

Supplies for destitute and working Indians, $193,557.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This estimate is made up on the basis of an exact statement which has been prepared by the Indian commissioner in Winnipeg, stating the goods that are actually required, and the cost. His report to me is that the increase in this item, which amounts to $4,690, is due almost entirely to the increased price of goods in the classes that are required.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are they all bought by tender?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. The general rule in regard to these purchases is the same as has prevailed for many years in the department. An advertisement is published in the papers saying that tenders will be called for, and the schedule can be seen here. The lowest tenderer gets the contract.

Mr. TAYLOR. I used to be furnished with a copy of these schedules, but I have not received any this year.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I shall be glad to send a schedule to any member of the committee who desires it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I always forward them to the Rathbun Company, who generally tender for flour and other supplies.

Sioux Indians, $5,545.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. These Sioux Indians came over from the state of Minnesota at the time of the Minnesota massacres, 30 years ago, and settled, most of them, in the neighbourhood of Crooked Lake, 30 miles west of Brandon. They have a reserve there, and are getting along fairly well. We changed the instructor a couple of years ago; the instructor we have at present is getting along very well, and the Indians are making satisfactory progress.

Grist and saw-mills, $948.

Mr. SPROULE. How many of these mills have you now for the Indians in Manitoba and the North-west, and how do you run them ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are five altogether. We get, for instance, an estimate from the Carleton agency of what they will require for their mill, mentioning the articles, such as oil, tools, furniture, &c. The commissioner sends us his bill, and it is passed by an officer of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. Are the mills under their own control, or do you put a man in charge of each mill and pay him a salary ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have a man in some cases who is called a farm instructor. But there is some particular officer of the department on each reserve who has charge of the mill.

General expenses, $149,369.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is a large increase in this item. Since 1895-6, the item for general expenses has increased by $35,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman will understand that within the last five years the work of the Indian Department in the North-west has very largely increased. We have recently made a treaty known as Treaty No. 8 in which a very large territory is involved, necessitating a considerable amount of expenses. We have to send a man up to that territory specially each year. This officer has to travel north of Edmonton to the Great Slave Lake, and a special party has to be equipped for the purpose of taking him up there. This year the officers who went up were accompanied by a couple of mounted police and the expense of travelling, where a special party has to be organized and equipped, is very great. The expense last year was not as great as the year before, owing to the better knowledge of the department as to how to go about it and do it in the least expensive way possible. If there has been any increase in the cost of looking after the Indians in the last five years it has been in the direction of furnishing live stock to the Indians.

Mr. TAYLOR. In 1893-94 we furnished $12,000 worth of live stock, the same as now, and in 1893-94 the expenditure was $799,000. Next year the amount asked for was $770,000. The late Sir John Macdonald stated that the Indians were getting more self-sustaining and that this vote would be every year a decreasing one, but, I find that his words have not been verified, because neither he nor his successors have had charge of the administration of the department, and I find that under the hon. gentleman that instead of it being a decreasing expenditure it is an increasing one.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The vote this year is $11,000 less than last year.

Mr. TAYLOR. But it is not less than it was in 1893-94 or 1894-95.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If my hon. friend will look at the method in which the money was voted in former years, he will find that there were two items, farm wages, and maintenance of farms, that were voted separately, and which are now voted in connection with the general expenditure. It is now put into one vote. Speaking from recollection, I am quite safe in saying that there has been no increase in the vote so far as Indians are concerned. There was a reduction of $20,000 or $25,000 for the first two or three years after I took charge. I think now the expenditure is about the same as it was before.

British Columbia—Medical attendance and medicines, $11,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. There is an increase of $2,500 for medical attendance and medicines that ought to be explained.

Mr. EARLE. Before that item is passed, the hon. minister might explain the increase in the vote for medical attendance and medicines.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The position is simply this: In British Columbia we are having the experience that comes from the white people coming into contact with the Indians. As the white population spreads the Indians, who formerly did not bother the department very much, make demands upon us, and we have pressure put upon us continually for an increase in the expenditure. The work in connection with British Columbia is practically altogether under the control of Mr. Vowell, the superintendent.

Mr. EARLE. I would like to ask the hon. minister if the request for an increased expenditure for medical attendance comes from the superintendent, Mr. Vowell, or from some other source ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The increased expenditure is altogether upon the report of Mr. Vowell. There is nothing done in that connection except on his recommendation, and if in any case I should be asked for an increased expenditure, for instance, by one of the party in his constituency, the course adopted would be that the secretary of the department would at once send the request to Mr. Vowell, and he would be asked to report upon it. I have not had a great deal of personal acquaintance with Mr. Vowell, but I may say that he is one of the officers of the department in whom I have the greatest confidence as to his ability and integrity, and I am quite sure if there was any possible way of getting this expenditure down he would get it down. It is not being allowed to grow unnecessarily.

Mr. EARLE. I have every confidence, myself, in Mr. Vowell, but as this expenditure seems to have taken place through all the provinces, on the recommendation of somebody other than the agent, I would like to know whether the same is the case in British Columbia.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There has been no increase in the expenditure for medical attendance except upon the recommendation of Mr. Vowell. I can give the hon. gentleman the exact words Mr. Vowell uses in his report upon the question if he so desires.

Mr. EARLE. No, it is all right.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. minister give us an explanation in regard to the payments of Dr. G. E. Drew and Dr. W. A. D. Jack, one of whom received $585 and the other $501 for medical attendance? Where are these medical men located?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are simply medical men who are paid by fee according to the amount of work they do.

Mr. INGRAM. Where are they located?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Dr. Jack is at Vancouver, and I cannot tell where Dr. Drew is at the present time.

British Columbia industrial and boarding schools, $77,250.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are receiving more pressure from British Columbia for expenditure at the present time in connection with Indian education, than from any other part of the country. I want to warn the committee that this increase of $8,200 does not represent all we will be asked to vote this year, because there will be some items in the supplementary estimates. Last year the mission buildings were burned at Metlakahtla on the north-west coast, and this $8,200 represents our contribution to the erection of the industrial school. That is the only Indian school on the north-west coast and it has been most successful.

Mr. INGRAM. Is the increased vote for the purpose of increasing the number of schools?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It will be for new schools.

Mr. INGRAM. Is this $8,200 to cover the cost of the new building?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Nearly all of these Indian schools are in charge of one church or another, and this particular one is in charge of the Church of England. The $8,200 is the estimate of the church authorities. They are rebuilding all the mission buildings, but we make this contributed only towards the school. The estimate has been checked over by our officer.

Mr. LENNOX. The minister spoke frequently of pressure being brought upon the the department, and he said there is special pressure from British Columbia. What is the nature of that pressure? Has it anything to do with votes?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The pressure comes from the different ecclesiastical bodies of the Dominion. There is constant communication between the various churches and the Department of Indian Affairs. I suppose the Indians bring their pressure to bear upon the church, and the church brings its pressure to bear upon the department.

Mr. LENNOX. It is perfectly legitimate I presume.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Ecclesiastical pressure ought to be legitimate if anything is.

Inspector of Indian agencies and reserves, $1,800.

Mr. INGRAM. Who are these inspectors?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. McCrae and Mr. Chitty. They have both been in the department for a considerable number of years.

Mr. LENNOX. Does that $1,800 include all that was paid to Mr. McCrae?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. They are paid by salary, and get no fees.

Indians—Printing and stationery, generally, $6,000.

Mr. INGRAM. What does that mean?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This apparent increase of $6,000 is a mere matter of bookkeeping. The items that have been voted for printing and stationery in other votes have been collected into one vote.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 50) respecting the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Company.—Mr. Calvert.

Bill (No. 78) respecting the Trans-Canada Railway Company.—Mr. Talbot.

House again in Committee of Supply.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Before proceeding with any other items, I propose to give the committee some information which was asked this afternoon, respecting legal services performed in connection with the prosecution of parties for having sold liquor to the Indians.

J. D. Leduc is agent of the Minister of Justice at Ste. Scholastique, and was paid $194.30.

His services were retained in the case Regina vs. Napoleon Boucher for selling liquor to Indians. The case was appealed and it was necessary to retain counsel and his bill was the amount specified in the Auditor General's Report.

Blodin vs. Courchene, Pierreville, was paid $10.75 for court fees.

D. M. Brodie was paid $10 for services in connection with a liquor case at Thessalon, Ontario.

A. Gagnon, Indian agent, at Betsiamites, North Shore vs. Lawrence, was paid $44.72, travelling expenses in connection with liquor license prosecutions.

James Gedlon, constable, MicMac reserve at Maria, county of Bonaventure, was paid $30 in connection with liquor cases. The following payments were also made in connection with liquor cases:

Thomas Isaac, constable, Restigouche reserve	$66 00
J. B. White, license inspector, Thessalon, Ont.	29 00
Mr. Wioncne, constable, Restigouche	6 00
Wm. Irving, constable, Thessalon, Ont.	17 70
D. Legault, constable, Oka, Que.	9 50
A. J. Nault, constable, Maniwaki, Que.	11 10
J. Perrillard, agent, Oka, Que.	5 25
H. S. Sims, constable, Massey Station	23 75
Urbain Turcotte, constable, Pierreville, Que.	36 05

Geo. E. Drew, M.D., resides at New Westminster, B.C., and attends Indians at Fraser agency, Fort Rupert, Katney Hope, Coquitlam, Langley, Pemberton and Harrison River.

Civil government—Department of the Interior, including A. P. Collier at $1,400 and E. E. Turton at $600, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $113,121.50.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the reason for the increase here, and why this provision: 'Notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act?'

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The total increase is $4,157.50. There are forty-five statutory increases of $50 each, making $2,250. There is one statutory increase of $37.50 and two of $30, $97.50. Messrs. Pope, York, Egleson and Badgley are promoted to the second-class from the third. They were at the maximum of their class, $1,000, and this will give them each an increase of $100 or $400 for all. Mr. Ackland is promoted from the position of a messenger to the position of a junior second-class clerk. He is a very competent and capable man. He was receiving $540 and he now gets $600, an increase of $60. Mr. Turton gets an increase from the position of messenger to that of junior second-class clerk also. Mr. Cote is promoted from the second to the first-class with an increase of $50. There are two additional second-class clerks with $600 each making $1,200. This makes a total of $4,457.50. One of the clerks promoted from a junior second-class to a second-class and who was receiving $1,000 is replaced by a clerk who receives $700, making a reduction of $300. This taken from the gross increase makes the net increase of $4,157.50 given in the estimates. The reason of the words 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act' is that Mr. Collier is promoted from the second-class to the first-class. He is private secretary and did not write on the examination.

Department of the Interior—Clerical and other assistance, including $820 for J. D. Bollard and $515 for T. W. Hodgins, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act	$ 3,932 50
Printing and stationery	8,500 00
Sundries	7,000 00
	$19,432 50

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no change there, except a slight decrease of $282.50.

Mr. SPROULE. Why this 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act?'

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. These gentlemen were in the service when I came. They have not passed the examination. The Auditor General holds that, year by year, we must carry that clause in order to allow them to be paid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It may have the merit of antiquity, but it has no other. Why would it not be better to repeal the Civil Service Act than to do this? Of course, this case is not singular, but the custom prevails in every department, and seems to be on the increase. I do not think that my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) himself would say that this is very desirable legislation. For it is legislation, and it is repealing the Civil Service Act pro tanto, and repealing it without giving the Upper House the opportunity of saying whether it shall be done or not. I have protested against it many times, and have asked the government to consider whether an amendment of the Act could not be made so that this kind of thing might no longer be necessary.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think everybody will agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that it is not desirable to have exceptions in the administration of the Act. But when the hon. gentleman gets to this side, I think he will find cases arising in which he will think that the rule ought to be relaxed. At the same time, I think we ought to have it on the statute-books, for otherwise a minister's life would not be worth living.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not mean that the Act should be repealed, but that an endeavour should be made to get it into some such shape that it would not be necessary to repeal it in so many cases in the estimates. I remember counting seventeen or eighteen instances on one page of the estimates in which the Act was repealed for particular cases.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. And I think if the hon. gentleman will look at the estimates and will consider the number of officers provided for he will see that seventeen or eighteen cases is a very small proportion. Peculiar cases will arise in which this provision is necessary. Take, for instance, the case of Mr. Hodgins. He was in the government service before the last Civil Service Act was passed. That provided that everybody who was in the government service at a certain time should be held to be regularly there so far as examination was concerned. But the Order in Council under which he was appointed ran out, and there was an interregnum of one day in the term of his service after the passing of this Act. The Auditor General held that he was not continuously in the service and could not be paid without this special provision. It happened when the change of government took place, and it was nobody's business in particular to look after the matter, and so the poor man was not paid for some time. I provided for his case in this way. Cases of that kind will arise, and I do not think that the hon. gentleman will find that the number of them is larger than might be expected.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister says that these cases are very exceptional. On the same page of the estimates as that on which the present item appears are three cases out of eight, and, on the next page, three more. It seems to me it would not be a bad plan to have a year of jubilee every ten years or so, and put these civil servants straight on the list, and so try to observe the law with some kind of regularity. If it cannot be observed, then, amend it or repeal it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. Mr. Fielding). Even with the number of exceptions stated, my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) can fully justify his statement that the proportion is not large. For instance, in the Department of the Interior there are perhaps, over a hundred officials, and, of that number, there are only four that must be treated in this exceptional way. That is only 4 per cent.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. minister mean to say that there is not more than 4 per cent ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the Department of the Interior, of which we have been speaking. Cases arise under conditions which cannot be dealt with under any general rule. If they were numerous, the view of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) would be correct, and it might be better to make some general amendment.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They are not as numerous in this department as they are in some others. In some of the departments I have found them quite numerous; it may be that circumstances make them more necessary in some departments than in others. I am not finding any fault, I am not making the slightest criticisms of the officers. I do not know either of these gentlemen, I have no doubt they are very capable and efficient officers. It is not with the officers or their services that I am finding fault, but with the system which makes it necessary to repeal the Act in such a way as this. I have pointed out the objection to it, and the Minister of Finance recognizes it. This branch of the legislature passes these estimates in such a way that the other branch cannot say a word about them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is strictly a money matter as respects these individual cases.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But this branch of the legislature enacts a statute in such a way that the other branch cannot have any voice in it unless they reject the whole appropriation.

Government of the North-west Territories, $425,359.

Mr. SCOTT. Taking into view all the circumstances, I believe this item is second in importance to no other that can be found in the estimates this year. The main part of this item which relates to the North-west Territories is equivalent to the cash subsidies paid to the various provinces under the federal constitution. For a considerable time past the people of the North-west Territories have been looking forward to the formation of that country into a province or provinces. I took occasion during my first session in this House last year to call the attention of parliament at some length to some phases of that matter. I did not deem it necessary then to argue that the time had arrived for granting full provincial powers to the people of the North-west Territories, because some time previous we had had a statement from a member of the government to the effect that it was their intention in the near future to take up that matter and deal with it. I have to express my regret that a decision has been arrived at by the government not to deal with that question this year. I would not go so far as to say that the people of the North-west Territories unanimously regret the decision of the government; there may be a considerable number who hold the view that it is yet too early in their circumstances to grant full provincial powers. But I believe I express the opinion of a very large majority of the people when I say that the conditions have now reached a stage when it would be advantageous to those people as well as to the entire Dominion, to have this question settled without further loss of time. Some hon. members may be aware of the fact that within the past two weeks the question has been debated in the local legislature at Regina, and by a vote of 23 to 7, I think, in a House of 31 members, it was decided that it was a matter of regret that this question had not been taken up and an endeavour made to settle it this present year. Perhaps, as the House is now in Committee of Supply, it may not be a proper occasion for me to discuss the provincial establishment question at length, and there may be another opportunity of doing so before the close of the session.

But I want to point out that until provincial powers are granted to the people of the North-west Territories, the responsibility devolves upon this parliament of providing for the services which come within the purview of the North-west Assembly. Those services are much the same as the services performed by the various provincial governments, with a few minor exceptions. The services for which the North-west Assembly is responsible are the same as those of which the provincial governments have charge. We know that the various provincial governments have definite and final arrangements with the federal power as to the amount of money they shall receive from the Dominion exchequer yearly, and they are themselves responsible for performing certain duties. But with regard to the North-west Territories at the present time, that responsibility devolves upon this parliament, and especially upon the Department of the Interior. In reality the business of governing the North-west Territories is but a branch of the department in the charge of the Minister of the Interior. The services which the North-west Assembly performs in the North-west Territories are just as important and possibly more so than any of the services that are performed by this federal parliament. The subjects of education and local public works are possibly just as important to the people up there as any of the subjects with which this parliament has to deal. As I said, the subjects of legislation in the North-west Territories are very similar to those dealt with by the various local legislatures of the provinces. I will mention a few of them. Public works, for instance, for the management of which there is a special department as in the provinces. The Department of Public Works in the Territories has to deal with the construction of roads and bridges, with the building of dams, and with the matter of drainage in certain parts of that large country. They have to operate ferries where it has not been possible yet to make bridges. They have to undertake a certain other duty that is not required in any of the provinces, that of making fire-guards. During last year the local Department of Public Works in the territories constructed somewhere in the neighbourhood of 2,000 miles of fire guards. The administration of irrigation legislation too, comes under that department. This is the department which supervises and to some extent, administers the affairs of a large number of local improvement districts. These local improvement districts take the place of the municipalities which are to be found in Ontario and the other provinces. It has been thought wise in that country, where the population is yet sparse, and until the population becomes more dense, to have a simpler form of municipal organization than in Ontario or the older provinces, and a scheme for the establishment of local improvement districts was some years ago worked out and put in force—a very simple scheme suited to the conditions of the country, and the plan is administered, to a considerable extent, and is altogether supervised by the local Department of Public Works. There are, in some parts of the country, where the population is very spare, what are called large local improvement districts, and the administration of these is entirely attended to by the Department of Public Works. The department too, supervises and inspects the coal mines of the territories. It has a branch too, for the inspection of steam boilers. A very important part of its duties is in regard to testing for water. In some parts of that immense country settlers have found difficulty in securing water, and it has been deemed advisable to undertake a plan, and very good service has been rendered by the plan which the government undertakes, to provide well borers, drills, and augers, and to test in various localities for water. I do not need to say to this committee that these duties are very important to the people of that country, and when we look at the amount of the vote which has, in previous years, been given to the legislature to enable it to carry on these duties, when we look at the amount of the vote which it is proposed this year to grant to the legislature, and when we take into consideration the very large extent of country and the very great importance of these duties, some few of which I have enumerated, I think the committee can reach no other conclusion than this, at all events, that not too much money has been voted and is proposed to be voted to the legislative assembly to carry out such duties. The total amount in the item before us is $357,979. There are works which are needed in that country in the way of bridges—single bridges—which if the legislature attempted to carry out and which would be of very great benefit to the people, would take nearly all the sum of $357,000. There are places in that country where works are needed and which would be a benefit to the people, and such works would take the entire vote which it is proposed to grant to the legislature, namely, $357,000. I need only refer to the matter of public works, a matter of very great importance, a matter which requires a very great expenditure in a country of the immense extent of the North-west Territories, some parts of which are of a broken character and having very large rivers. The subject of education is one of no less importance. In a country like the North-west Territories, where a very large immigration is coming in and where a very large immigration and an increasing population are expected, the subject of education is, to the people there and to the people of Canada, one of the very highest importance. As illustrating the need of an increase in the vote by this House for the purposes of the legislative assembly, I will quote some figures to show the way in which the school districts have been increasing in number. At the end of 1896 there were 436 public school districts. These had been organized since 1884, when the public school system was inaugurated. At the end of 1897 there were 459 school districts, being an increase of 21 districts in that year. At the end of 1898 there were 480, there being an increase of 23. At the end of 1899 the number had risen to 524, there being an increase of 44. At the end of 1900 there were 576, an increase of 52. At the end of 1901 the number of school districts which had been organized was 684, showing an increase during the last year of 108 districts. The expenditure of the North-west Territories upon education in 1901 was $204,000, being something more than half of the total grant made by this parliament for all the purposes of local government in the North-west Territories. I neglected to mention, in regard to the subject of public works, that the expenditure made last year was in the neighbourhood of $250,000, so that it will be seen that the expenditure on education and public works, on these two subjects, more than took up the whole of the yearly grant made by parliament last year for all purposes of local government in the territories. The local authorities find that these necessary subjects are practically all that they are able to undertake. Of course, there are necessarily some other expenditures, for instance, the expenses of the meeting of the legislature, and there are other incidental items which are necessary and which cannot be avoided. Last year, in addition to these items of public works and education, which took up a very large amount of the total appropriation, there was an amount of $80,000 for the yearly expenses of the local civil service and the meeting of the legislature a vote of $8,000 for the administration of local ordinances and civil justice, which comes under the purview of the legislature, and a vote of $20,000 to meet the expenses of the Department of Agriculture, which is performing some very important and necessary work. The Department of Agriculture administers amongst other things what is known as the Brands ordinance. In the ranching country the brand upon the animal is the chief evidence of ownership, and it is important that the legislation in regard to brands shall be carefully administered. During last year, I believe there were no less than 10,000 new brands issued by the Department of Agriculture. There was a vote of $15,000 for the purposes of grants to hospitals and the maintenance of public health, and there was a miscellaneous vote of $5,000, making a total, outside the subjects of public works and education, of $128,000. I do not think it would be profitable for me, or for any hon. member of this House to make comparisons between the expenditures in one part of the country and in another, or between one province and another, or between the North-west Territories and any of the provinces. Such comparisons might be made, and I may say that I think I could make them at the present time, and possibly convince the House by such comparisons that a very large increase might properly be made in the grant for the purpose of government in the North-west Territories, but I do not think it would be proper for me, or for any other member, to endeavour to make such comparisons. We from the North-west Territories, at all events, are not sectionalists, we believe in nationalism, we believe in coming into the House and advocating only that which will be for the general benefit of Canada. I hope the day will never come when I will be found here advocating anything which I have not proved to myself, at least, and which I have not some reasonable ground for believing I can convince the House is for the general benefit of Canada. While I am not going to endeavour to make any comparisons between the expenditures in one part of the country and in another, I am going to say, and I think this principle has been largely followed, that wherever any service seems to be advisable and necessary this House should endeavour to provide adequately for that service. I believe that is the proper principle, and I believe that if that principle be applied in this case, parliament will at the present session grant a very large increase in the vote for the purpose of governing locally the North-west Territories. Just to show what is the position of the local authority up there at the present time, I will quote a few brief figures. In the year 1899 the grant made by parliament for government in the North-west Territories was $283,000, but the total amount expended that year by the local authorities was $414,000. There is, of course, a small local revenue which is year by year increasing to some extent. For four or five years it has amounted annually to $30,000 or $40,000, and it is expected that this year and from this on the local revenue will not be less than perhaps $80,000 or $90,000, which is largely derived from a small direct tax which has been placed upon land. But while the total expenditure in 1899 amounted to $414,000, and the total grant from this parliament was only $283,000, the explanation is that in that year the Yukon was still to a certain extent within the administration of the local authorities of the North-west Territories, and from the Yukon a revenue of about $160,000 was obtained. That local revenue enabled the North-west government with fair adequacy to meet the wants of the country for that year. In the year 1900 the grant from this parliament was increased to $424,000, and with the local revenue the North-west government had $465,000 at their disposal. For the year 1901 the estimates which the North-west government presented to Ottawa amounted to $600,000. That amount, on a close calculation by the North-west government was deemed to be necessary to cover the actual needs of local government. The grant which they received from parliament for that year was only $357,000, the same amount as we find in the present estimates. The local authorities of the North-west Territories represented to the powers at Ottawa that the needs of that country for the year 1901 demanded $600,000, and they received only $357,000. What was done last year by the local authority to cover the evident deficiency was this: The appropriation by this parliament is for the fiscal year from the 30th of June to the 30th of June following, but the financial year in the North-west Territories is the calendar year from the 31st December to 31st December following. The vote made by this parliament last year was intended to cover the period until June 30th, 1902, but the local government found that unless they took the whole vote that was made here last year and expended it within their calendar year of 1901, they could not commence to properly meet the needs of the people of that country, the cost of education and the cost of necessary public works. The position in which the North-west government finds itself to-day is, that an ordinary vote does not put them in the same position as they were in last year, because last year they were compelled to anticipate the money that should ordinarily have gone to them in the first half of this present calendar year. Suppose we vote $357,000 for this present year, the consequence is that the North-west authorities will only be able to expend within 1902 one-half of it, or a little over $175,000. Now, if their needs this year amount approximately to $600,000, it will not take this committee long to comprehend that if a very largely increased appropriation is not made at the present time, the people in the North-west Territories who depend on the local government for their needs in the way of public works and education and local purposes generally, are going to be left in a very difficult position, and it will simply be impossible for the local government to meet these needs in any proper and adequate manner.

We had a discussion in the House yesterday upon the subject of immigration. It is unnecessary for me to say that at the present time the population in the whole of western Canada is increasing very largely. From a national point of view that is very encouraging, but from the point of view of the local government it is not an unmixed blessing to see hundreds of people literally pouring into that country daily, because every new settler means an additional tax upon the local governing authority. It means that increased expenditure will have to be made upon the construction of roads and bridges, because the greater the number of people in that country the greater the area settled, and it was found in practice last year that many of the new comers went upon areas which had not been before that time settled, and thus rendered necessary the construction of new roads and the building of culverts and bridges by the local authorities. Consequently, the local government of the North-west cannot look upon this influx of immigration as an unmixed blessing from their point of view; while from the larger point of view it is indeed a very encouraging circumstance that immigrants are coming into Canada to-day in larger numbers than they ever came in any previous time. In fact every newspaper one takes hold of from the western part of the country is half filled with accounts of new settlers coming in with large quantities of settlers' effects, bringing added riches to the country. I had a note a couple of days ago from a gentleman at North Portal, who stated that in the previous week no less than 186 cars of settlers' effects had been passed through that port from the United States into western Canada. I had another letter this evening from a gentleman in Regina which is simply an illustration of what is occurring generally in that country. He writes me:

> I wish you would impress upon the department the necessity of granting more assistance to the land agent here as soon as possible. The staff are over worked and still the work is getting further and further behind, so that when letters are written here for information the parties have to wait a week or two before they can get an answer, and you can imagine how annoyed a man would be who, a stranger in the country, has to pay a weeks hotel bill or more while he is getting an answer to his letter. I do not know of any qualified persons here whom you could appoint.

The condition of affairs in the country is becoming so prosperous that it is difficult to obtain people to accept positions in the public service.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the salary ?

Mr. SCOTT. I think I can assure the Minister of the Interior that if he grants the needed assistance, I shall be able to find a person who will take the position, notwithstanding the great prosperity that exists. This letter goes on :

> The agent tells me that during the first week of April over one hundred homestead entries were made at the office here. The rush of Americans in over the Soo line has assumed tremendous proportions, the railway company being unable to handle the traffic. It takes about a week for a car of settlers' effects to come from St. Paul to Moosejaw. There are not half a dozen homesteads between Regina and the Soo line, the only part of the south plain where there are any homesteads being along the Arcola extension and I don't think that there will be any there in three months.

As I say, nearly every letter one receives from the North-west Territories and nearly every paper that comes to hand, is filled with intelligence about hundreds of newcomers who are arriving daily in that country. The Winnipeg 'Free Press,' which came to hand to-night, states that on Wednesday of this week no less than 1,000 settlers arrived in Winnipeg, and a very considerable proportion of all the settlers who arrive at Winnipeg go to some point in the North-west Territories. This is a very encouraging feature of the times, and I thoroughly agree with what was said by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior last night, that we appear to be at the dawn of a new day. The present prospect is more encouraging than it has been at any time at least in my lifetime, and I think the committee will agree that it would be too bad if any check were given to the tendency of the people towards that country, by parsimony on the part of this House in dealing with the local needs of the people. As has often been said, any effort that may be put forth by this government to promote immigration must be secondary in effect to the work which will be done by satisfied settlers in the country, who, as is often said, are the best immigration agents. For my part, I think one of the most important duties coming within the purview of the Department of the Interior with regard to immigration is to see that the local needs, in the way of public works, education, and other things, are properly and adequately met. For these reasons, for my part—and I believe I speak for every member from the North-west Territories, and I believe as well that our friends from British Columbia and Manitoba will support us unanimously in this—I think the House should very largely increase the grant to the local government of the North-west Territories.

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to support what has been said by the hon. member for Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) with regard to this vote for the government in the North-west Territories. It was with some considerable surprise that I saw in the estimates that the amount to be voted for this purpose for the coming year was no larger than the vote for the present year. I am at a loss to understand upon what basis of calculation this sum was arrived at. If it is necessary or desirable to meet the requirements of the public service in any part of the country, account must be taken of the increase of those requirements. Now, this whole country is ringing with a knowledge of the increase of population and therefore increase of requirements in the North-west, and that knowledge has produced no result in the way of meeting the requirements which necessarily arise. It may be said that the amount required for the purposes of the government of the North-west Territories is an uncertain amount. So it is. It is an amount which depends from time to time upon the requirements as they arise. With the increase of population, those requirements have increased from year to year. By reason of climatic conditions during the past year, those needs have been tremendously emphasized. By reason of heavy rains, bridges have been washed out by the dozen, and a very large part of the revenues of the territorial government which should have gone to extend the facilities of travel throughout new settlements in the country, has been used up in replacing the damage done by the floods in older settlements. It may not be altogether plain to members of the House why an increase of population means an increase of requirements. The reason is that the territories have immense areas, compared to population. They are not at all on the same footing as the province of Manitoba, where the population is contained in less than one-third of the total area of the province, and the total area of Manitoba is not over one-fourth of the area over which settlement is scattered in the North-west. An increase of settlement in the province of Manitoba means simply a thickening up of the population, and does not require the opening of new roads or the establishment of new school districts, and does not increase materially the expenses of government; while an increase of population in the North-west Territories means that people have spread out into new country, necessitating new roads and new schools and an increase in every way and materially of expenses of government. It is of course under our present condition a matter of arrangement or consideration of this parliament what shall be done from year to year to meet financial conditions. That is not the fault of the people or the government of the North-west Territories. The government of the North-west Territories has approached this government repeatedly during past years, and most formally during the past year, asking for a definite financial arrangement based on the terms of confederation, as applied to the different provinces of the Dominion. They are not here from time to time clamouring for unknown and unheard of amounts. They are asking simply that the government or parliament either meet the requirements of the case, as they arise from time to time, or else put the territories in the same financial position as the various provinces of the Dominion, so that they may enjoy as a right what they now must ask as a favour. I submit that the position is this: This parliament and government are required either to meet the conditions that exist by an adequate vote, or else to put the territories in the position of the various provinces of the Dominion as regards financial arrangements. Either one thing or the other, and the responsibility is upon the House and the government in the matter.

As to the amount that is demanded and the comparisons that may be made with regard to that amount, the vote for carrying on the government of the North-west Territories, which stands in the same position as a subsidy voted to one of the provinces—out of which provision must be made for the construction of public works of all classes throughout the Territories, chiefly roads and bridges, the requirements of education, and the administration of all the departments of government—amounts to only $268,000. That is the total amount provided for all the expenses of government of the Territories, which are, in the existing circumstances, necessarily higher proportionately than in any other portion of the Dominion. And it is to cost the country $445,000 in the coming year for the expenses to be incurred in endeavouring to bring people into the North-west. I claim, Mr. Chairman, that these two expenditures are not proportionate. I claim that if $445,000 be a reasonable expenditure to bring people into the country, $358,000 is not a reasonable sum with which to provide for all the needs of local government, both for the people who are in the country now, and those who are to come in as the result of this expenditure on immigration work.

I need not add to what my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) has said with regard to the effect that an inadequate provision for the needs of education, the opening of roads and the general matters of local government, must necessarily have on immigration into that country. The class of people who are going there in largest numbers are those whose first demand is for the facilities of schools and markets. They are an enterprising and an energetic people, who have built up the great country to the south of us, and who come over the line to build up a great country on our side. They will not be satisfied, unless they can have facilities for the education of their children and the ordinary advantages of civilization in due measure, as the circumstances permit. And now when those people are coming in large numbers, attracted by the desirability of our country, it would be the worst policy that ever was entered upon, to stint the means whereby they may be rendered satisfied with the country. Do not forget that we had a rush of immigrants to the North-west many years ago, and at that time people seemed to think that the rush could not be stopped, but it was stopped and it remained stopped for nearly twenty years. There is a rush on again, and I counsel members of this House to take such measures that it shall not be stopped until that country has been satisfactorily developed. Every one knows that the best immigration agent is the contented settler. Therefore, our best policy is to provide adequate means to give intending settlers those advantages of civilization, which they will demand, and which they consider of the very highest importance. It is because these people look for these advantages of civilization and prize them so highly that they are valuable settlers. It is because they want schools and roads and good government that they are good settlers. People who would not make those demands, to whom it makes no difference whether or not there are schools or roads or good local government, are not the kind of people we want at all. They are dear at any price, and it is the best thing that ever happened this country that the people who are coming in and filling it up now are imbued with those civilizing tendencies.

I hope that the present government will see that the public services of the North-west Territories are not starved at this critical stage in our history. I hope they will provide for those services according to the requirements, or else place the territories upon a provincial footing, so that there shall be no question about our rights in the matter.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I only wish to make a few remarks in addition to what has already been said on this question. I would like to emphasize, if possible, in the mind of the committee, the statements that have been made by my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) and my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver). This question of an increased subsidy is a very important one in the estimation of the people generally. We should have either an increased subsidy or provincial autonomy. As far as I have given the matter attention, I think it would be much better for the country, in its existing circumstances, to receive an increased subsidy at present rather than provincial autonomy. I know that there is a tendency amongst many members of this House to say that we, the people in the west, are always clamouring for special advantages. They point to the early settlers of the older provinces in the east and tell us that we are looking to be spoonfed and ought to have the courage, endurance and hardihood of the early settler in Ontario and elsewhere. Let me say that the people in the North-west, especially those who went in twenty years ago, have passed through experiences of hardship and endurance, which show that they really possess, in a large measure, those qualities of resistance, and patience, and have indicated by their persistent effort that they believe in the country and are willing to endure privation in order to make it prosperous. I do not think that the early settlers of Manitoba and the North-west are, in any sense, behind those of the eastern provinces. I can speak from experience, having lived in that country from 1883 to date. I know something about the hardships of the people in the early days of that country.

In reference to public works, it is quite evident that the sum at the disposal of the government of the North-west Territories is wholly inadequate. I can speak with special knowledge of that part of the country that I represent, the eastern part of Assiniboia. Take, for instance, the district lying north and south of the Qu'Appelle river. It is true, we have some steel bridges that are a credit to the territorial government that erected them. But even they are of little use in the spring season. I venture to say that to-day the great majority of the people living on the north side of the river are not able to cross the valley or approach the bridges to reach the market with a load of grain. That is a hardship. They have grain on their hands that they are anxious to get rid of and to settle their liabilities. But this they cannot do because the approaches to these bridges are in a state that altogether forbids their reaching the markets. Perhaps they will not be able to reach the markets till the end of May or the beginning of June. We have a local organization for the improvement of the roads, and this has been a step in the right direction. I think the system is even superior in point of organization to the municipal arrangements of the older provinces. The local improvement districts of the North-west Territories are doing good work and proving that the scheme will be a great success. Up to the last three or four years it has been largely in the hands of the settlers to help themselves in making roads to reach their markets, to call upon their neighbour, and they collect a number of individuals who voluntarily gave their work to make the road. But the government has organized the local improvement districts which entails a direct tax upon each quarter section for the improvement of the roads. And that certainly, as I have said, is a step in the right direction. But I have always felt that the sum that was given for the government of the North-west Territories was entirely inadequate. It is quite true that we have a claim upon the treasury of this Dominion, in common with the other provinces to a certain amount per head according to population. But it seems to me, in view of the rapid growth of immigration and of the population of that country that the future ought to be discounted by the present government and a very liberal allowance made for the increase, to enable the territorial government to make the provisions which the circumstances at present demand. The fact that we are spending more upon immigration than upon the government of that country is one argument for the increase of indemnity. There is another fact that I would like to point out to the committee. It may not be popular, perhaps, for me to call attention to it. We would not say that this Dominion is paying too much for the wards of the country and for our Indian population. I would not for a moment insinuate that the government is paying too much for the Indian youth of the North-west Territories. But it is a fact—I am not prepared to give the exact figures on the instant, but what I say can be verified—that we are spending more upon the Indian industrial schools of the North-west than for the whole government of those territories. Now, I would like to emphasize what has already been said that under existing circumstances something ought to be done and a very liberal addition ought to be made to the subsidy of the North-west Territories, and that at the present session.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to say a very few words on this subject, first, because this affects the prairie country, and I would like to endorse the sentiments of my colleagues, and, second, because this is one of the most important questions that is to come before this House in the near future—the subsidy of the territories, or provincial autonomy therefor. I have been reading what has taken place in the House in Regina with regard to territorial autonomy and I must say that I was struck with the force of the arguments. But my own impression is that, at the present time, there are good arguments why provincial autonomy should not to be given to the territories. I believe that within the next three or four years, if immigration should continue as at present, the population of the territories will have so increased and so tended to certain portions of the territories that probably the local jealousies that now exist as to whether there should be one or two or three provinces, and where the capitals shall be, will have disappeared. I sometimes think also that they have not considered the expenditure that would devolve upon them if they had to govern themselves. Take, for instance, the mounted police. I am not sure, but I suppose the number of police in the territories must reach from five hundred to a thousand. If the duty of policing the country devolved upon the local government, what a large percentage of the subsidy got from this government it would take.

I believe the older provinces of Canada have not looked upon this matter in the proper light. Some hon. gentleman here said—

I think it was the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver)—that it is one thing to bring immigrants to the country and another to keep them here. I was one of the unfortunates who left this eastern part of Canada twenty-two years ago last month. I arrived in Winnipeg some time in March, got my ox and cart and started across the prairies with others. I shall never forget as long as I live some of the hardships I saw the settlers undergo. We met violent storms at Portage la Prairie, and further west where Brandon now is, and also about the locality of Rapid City. There were no towns there then. I have seen strong men shed tears when they saw their wives and children in water three or four feet deep trying to cross the creeks and ravines where there were no bridges. A large number of people left the country as soon as they could get out of it. I believe 85 per cent of those who came from the British islands in 1882 and 1883 left that country before 1885. In the first place, they could not get to a market or to a railway centre. They saw no sign of civilization. They had no company and they got lonely. There were no post offices, they could not get a letter or send one without going fifty or sixty miles. They had no schools, and their children were growing up in ignorance around them. That same condition exists in the territories and it will have the same effect if this government do not wake up to the facts. I know a family; I could give their names—I will give their names. Mr. Richard Lyons and his family, who settled in Manitoba, thirty-five miles from Swan River, in 1898. Mr. Lyons had eleven of a family and came from the north of Ireland. Although we have provincial government there, he remained there for fifteen months before he had a school or post office nearer than Swan River thirty-five miles away. He wrote me letters, and in one of them he said: I will leave this country in three months, unless I can get a school or post office. I wrote to the superintendent of immigration and finally succeeded in meeting his wishes. That is one example of the kind of thing that may happen in the territories.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when you think of $357,000, with, I think $40,000 the hon. gentleman said of local revenue, say $400,000 altogether, to supply all the municipal and other services required in that vast territory, I think any man who has had experience in municipal matters must wonder how it has been done. Most of you who live in cities and towns in Ontario probably know the condition here in Ottawa, as I know the condition in the city of Winnipeg. The revenue of the city of Winnipeg is some $635,000, of which $135,000 is paid yearly for schools. The revenue of the city of Winnipeg, a town of 50,000 inhabitants, is nearly double the sum with which they have to govern that whole territory 500 miles by 400 miles. I ask if that is fair. I say it is great credit to the Hon. Mr. Haultain and his colleagues that they have been able to administer the affairs of that government as economically as they have done during the last ten years. I do not believe there is a province in Canada where the same amount of money has yielded so much benefit to the people as has the money spent by the territorial government.

Hon. gentlemen from the east may think this is pecularily a western question. Now it is not, it is more an eastern matter. A great many gentlemen on the other side of the House live in cities and towns which are manufacturing centres. For instance, we have three members from Toronto, none of them here to-night. I would ask those gentlemen in the city of Toronto who understand the Massey-Harris people, what a good settler is worth to the Massey-Harris people every year. I ask them what every new family who goes into the territories is worth to the manufacturers of eastern Canada. They are worth nothing to western Canada in that way, we have no manufacturers, we have no implements, no cloth, woollens nor cottons, no fruits—everything these people have to buy must come from the east. Every settler you put there increases the wages of your artisans, increases the population of your cities and towns in Ontario. It does not help us half as much as it helps you people here, and I think it is your duty to wake up to the fact that the more settlers you get in there the larger your towns will grow, and the higher the value of your lands will become in older Canada. I say this is a matter of gigantic importance. I believe that in the supplementary estimates to be brought down this session a very large sum of money should be granted in aid of the people of the territories. Bear in mind also that while the population that is going in there now very largely comes from the United States, Europe and Great Britain, a considerable percentage, in fact I should imagine 30 or 40 per cent, are your own brothers, and sisters, and sons from the eastern provinces. Are you going to allow them to endure the hardships that your forefathers had to endure here in the Ottawa district, and other districts of eastern Canada? I say times have changed, and those people should have enough money to support their schools, to build their bridges, and to make the necessary improvements to keep pace with the advancing population. I may remark to the Postmaster General, as I remarked the other day to his deputy, that he should not expect to get, in a new country like that, sufficient revenue to run the post offices. In Ontario where your farmers are settled on 50 to 100 acres of land, it is quite easy to have a post office where there is no settler further than three miles from the post office; but out there where the settler has got to occupy 320 acres of land to make it pay, you cannot expect, at least for some time, that the post offices are going to pay. You have got to charge up any deficiency in your postal department to some other appropriation. you can charge it to immigration if you like. But I say post offices ought to be given to the people out there without any regard to whether there is sufficient revenue to make them pay. I think that in the subsidies to be brought down at a subsequent period of the session, there should be a sum of at least $200,000 or $250,000 to supplement the grants already made to provide for running the territories.

Mr. INGRAM. Hon. gentlemen from the North-west Territories have referred to this matter as being of interest to eastern members, and I take the liberty of discussing it from that point of view. I listened with a great deal of attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott), and of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. McCreary), who represents a Manitoba constituency. The point these gentlemen from the territories made was that a provincial government should be granted to the people of the territories. The hon. member for Selkirk says it should not be given to the territories owing to the friction that exists there at the present time.

Mr. McCREARY. I did not say that.

Mr. INGRAM. I took down his words, and I think that is what he said. Now, I would like to ask my hon. friend, and the minister too, if there is friction now, and we all know there is more or less, how is it going to be avoided if you create the territory into a province ? Doubtless these gentlemen have perused the report of negotiations that have taken place between the authorities of the North-west Territories and the Dominion government ; they know full well that for some years past a strong agitation has taken place there with a view of forming those territories into a province. Why ? Because the people find that the immigrants coming in there in large numbers have changed the conditions, and entail additional expense on the government of the territories, and that the amount at present given by the Dominion government is insufficient. Therefore they are agitating for a provincial government so that they may be put on the same footing as other provinces.

Now, I think the Minister of the Interior said in his letter to the Hon. Mr. Haultain that the population in the North-west Territories was too sparse, that was one of the reasons why the government of Canada refused to organize the territories into a province. The next reason given was that the increased population going into those territories was changing the conditions, and that the government of Canada did not think it wise at present to organize a province, as it might soon be necessary to have more provinces than one. The Minister of the Interior, in his letter of the 21st of March, 1901, admitted that this question was of the utmost importance to the people of the North-west Territories. I think he suggested that the authorities of the territories should meet the federal executive with a view of arriving at some conclusion on the matter. I think these are three of the points in that letter sent by the Hon. Mr. Sifton stating why the Dominion government did not grant their prayer. Now, we are in Committee of the Whole here and my hon. friends from the North-west are in a position to speak more than once on this question. Let me ask them, do they differ with the Minister of the Interior in his conclusion, and if they do, will they say so ? They must know something of the facts in the document brought down in the North-west Assembly the other day. Do they consider that the territory there mentioned should comprise one province or more ? If they think it should comprise more than one province I think it is their duty to say so in this House. The people of Canada should not be kept in the dark on this subject. It is in the interest of the people of the east as well as of the west to know whether there should be one province or two, and whether the territorial government is at present administered in the interest of the people of Canada as a whole.

There is another question and it is whether the present machinery of the territories can be extended cheaper than creating new machinery. The question is whether there is any justification for refusing to organize these territories into a province. If we go to the far eastern provinces of Canada we find that the population comprising what is now the province of Prince Edward Island was much less when it was organized into a province than the population of the territories to-day.

Mr. McCREARY. It had a much smaller population.

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, a much smaller population. We find also that the territories today have as large a population as British Columbia when British Columbia was brought in as a province.

Mr. SCOTT. Quite a bit larger.

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, quite a bit larger. Now, let us make a comparison with the area of the North-west Territories with that of British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec. If the territories are brought in as they are proposed to be, I believe the area of the new province sought to be organized would be about 302,000 square miles. British Columbia has 383,000 square miles. Ontario 222,000 square miles, and Quebec 228,000 square miles. I find that so far as area is concerned, the people of the North-west Territories are as much entitled to be organized into a province as are these other provinces which I have named and so far as population is concerned they are in a better position than Prince Edward Island and British Columbia. If the people of the North-west Territories are organized into a province I hold that they would be able as local authorities to understand their requirements very much better than we could as members of this House or as members of the Dominion government. I say that it would be better in the interests of the local government that the request should be acceded to and that the reasons given by the hon. Minister of the Interior are not sufficient why these people should be refused to be organized into a province. Some better reason should be given why these people should be refused that which they believe to be in their own interests. Let as take another point ; I recognize that there are some very ticklish questions that come up in the different provinces. I recognize that the British North America Act gives each province certain rights as to the administration of its own affairs, and we know as a matter of fact that the residents of the North-west Territories of all classes and of all creeds will be alive to their interests, and that once you undertake to organize them into a province and give them rights under the British North America Act they will be very jealous of these rights and may be hard to please. Is that the chief reason why the government refuse to organize these people into a province ? It strikes me, after considering the whole question as carefully as I can, that there is really more in that objection than there is in the reasons given by the hon. minister who represents the government in this matter. I do not desire to take up more of the time of the committee, nor do I wish to advocate an expensive form of government, but, taking the views of the representatives who come from the North-west Territories, who have expressed themselves in favour of the organization of these territories into a province. I for one, feel that if they can do that without imposing any additional burdens on the people of the country, they are justified in advocating that course.

Mr. McCREARY. Leaving to one side the question of provincial autonomy for the territories at present, leaving that question to be settled by the territorial government at the next general elections, we will say, taking the situation as we find it, may I ask the hon. gentleman if he will endorse the government in increasing the subsidy by, say $200,000 a year ? Let him commit himself upon that point.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) has not been long enough in this House to get an answer from me to a question of that kind. I have been too long in this House to answer any questions of that kind. If the members of the opposition occupied seats on the government side of the House, I would be very glad to hear the leader of my party answer that question.

Mr. OLIVER. In consequence of the suggestion thrown out by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram), it may be thought by members of the committee that there was some question as to the position taken by the government of the North-west Territories on this subject of provincial organization. There is no question whatever on that point. The North-west territorial government has gone so far as to lay a proposed Bill for the establishment of the territories into a province before the government

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) approve of that Bill as he finds it ?

Mr. OLIVER. I think, if the Bill is agreed to in all its provisions, that it would be a very satisfactory arrangement, but, of course, whether I would agree to the formation of a province or not would depend entirely on the terms of the agreement. I hope the hon. gentleman will understand that, but I think that I would be perfectly safe in endorsing the Bill as it is prepared. If a province can be secured on those terms I think it would be a satisfactory arrangement to the people of the territories. What I wanted to particularly point out was that the people of the territories are not responsible in any shape or manner for coming to this parliament and making any indefinite demand. They came and made a definite demand and if that definite demand is not accepted, then, we say, the only alternative you should take is that you should ascertain what their requirements are and meet these requirements. I wish to add to what the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) has said in regard to the making of expenditures in the territories. I had the honour to be a member of the local assembly for a number of years and without going into details I will back up the broad assertion made by that hon. gentleman that there is no province in this Dominion, and there is no country in the world, where every dollar of revenue goes as far in meeting the actual requirements of the public service as in the North-west Territories. That is as has been and that is as it is.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) a question. The hon. gentleman has not answered the point raised by the hon. Minister of the Interior, representing the government. He said that organization having been refused he is prepared to take the alternative of increasing the subsidy as the next best thing, but the point that the hon. gentleman who represents the North-west Territories should make clear is this : Does the hon. gentleman approve of the ground and steps taken by the hon. Minister of the Interior, representing the government? Does he think the reasons given by the hon. Minister of the Interior are sufficient reasons for refusing the North-west Territories organization into a province.

Mr. OLIVER. When a Bill on the subject is presented to the House and the hon. minister gives his reasons I will be prepared to discuss them.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister has given his reasons.

Mr. OLIVER. In the words of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) I have been too long in the House. The question under consideration at the present time is, the vote of certain moneys, and that is what we are to discuss now and not to answer all questions under the sun.

Mr. INGRAM. Here is the statement made by the Minister of the Interior to Mr. Haultain :

> Respecting present financial requirements the question of an increase in your subsidies is now receiving consideration, but the result cannot as you are aware be communicated until the estimates are brought before parliament. This, I have reason to hope will take place in a very short time.

Here are the estimates now, and instead of an increase there is a decrease of $10,000. Last year there were $435,359 and this year they are $425,359.

Mr. SCOTT. What I spoke about was the vote of $357,000 which is in reality the subsidy granted to the North-west Territories. There are some other items included in this vote, but that is the subsidy, and it is the same as last year.

Mr. INGRAM. And those other items appeared last year in the vote, and the fact remains that the vote for the North-west Territories is $10,000 less. The minister should tell us why this vote is not increased, and whether he intends to increase it or not. The member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) told us that this question was second to none in importance before this parliament, and if that be so ; and hon. gentlemen from the North-west Territories being friends of the government they have the public documents at their disposal in the departments, and they should be prepared to come to this House and tell us whether they endorse the action of the government on that question or not. They have not done so, and it appears they are not going to do so. As an eastern member of this House, I say that the three objections raised in the letter of the Minister of the Interior are not sufficient to warrant the government in refusing to give an increased subsidy.

Mr. OLIVER. We are now discussing the vote for the North-west Territories and the hon. member (Mr. Ingram) ought to be satisfied that we have placed ourselves thoroughly on record on that point.

Mr. INGRAM.

Mr. BOYD. I wish to say a few words on this question, and principally for the reason that last winter I had the pleasure of attending a public meeting at Indian Head in East Assiniboia, where about 1,000 people were gathered to discuss this very question as to whether the territories should or should not have their own provincial government or governments. Whatever doubt Mr. Haultain may have had previous to that meeting, there was not the slightest doubt that the people present there were quite unanimous on the question. I could not help smiling when I heard the members for the territories speaking, and when I watched the only three or four ministers present and how they acted. The Postmaster General and the Minister of Finance were industriously reading their newspapers; the Minister of Agriculture was busy with his letters ; they were all very indifferent, and they thought the question of so little account that they took the first opportunity to get up and slide out of the House. They have left the whole thing to the Minister of the Interior. It is true that he has told the people of Manitoba and the North-west that he assumes responsibility, and is to be held responsible for the management of that country, but if he were to tell us what he thinks to-night—I do not expect he will for he has been too long in the House for that—he would tell us that he really believes that he would give the people of the territories what they want. The objection raised by the hon. gentleman for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) is not a good one. He tells us that when the country fills up with people we will be better able to know whether it is better to have one or two provinces—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Might I interrupt my hon. friend to ask him what he refers to when he says 'what the people want' ?

Mr. BOYD. What the people desire. In reply to the statement of the hon. member for Selkirk, I may say that every one knows that this question can be settled with a great deal less difficulty now than it can years hence, when the population becomes larger. The gentlemen who represent the North-west Territories know that very well. They know that the larger the population the more diversified will be the opinion, and the greater the difficulty in settling that question as to whether it shall be one province or whether it shall be two provinces or three provinces. The meeting at Indian Head was equally divided as to whether it should be one or two provinces. I am speaking now, frankly as a man who viewed the proceedings there impartially.—

Mr. SCOTT. Will the hon. gentleman permit me to interrupt him ?

Mr. BOYD. Yes, all you like.

Mr. SCOTT. What evidence has the hon. gentleman that that meeting was equally divided in its opinion ?

Mr. BOYD. The applause that was given to each of the speakers. How would you judge the feeling of a meeting, except by the sentiments expressed by the people in front of you. Now then, I say that the government might just as well face the question at once. If we knew the truth of the matter I believe we would find that this is one of the questions that the cabinet is fighting like blazes about, because has not the Minister of Public Works told us that they frequently fight like blazes on different questions ? If the truth were known, it is one of the questions which is causing trouble to this cabinet, formed of the ex-ministers of different provinces. It is not a question of finance or a question of the division of the territory, that is causing the delay. The government might just as well admit that the delay is caused by the question of the schools, and the question of the language, and don't think for a moment that the people in the North-west are not pretty well aware of that. You might just as well face the question now, and the less people you have in the territories the more easily it can be dealt with. At the Indian Head meeting the complaint was that the territories were not able to aid railways, were not able to do what they would do in the matter of transportation, and what they would do if they had their provincial government. That is the important question that is now agitating the people of the territories. I agree with my hon. friend from East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) that the gentlemen representing the territories should speak out frankly on this subject. I understand the difficulties of supporters of a government. I have been over there. But if they would speak out frankly and say whether or not they approve of the action of the government in this instance, they would be giving much more satisfaction to their constituents than they are doing by the little by-play which we have had here this evening.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat draws his conclusions from the meeting at Indian Head, he is very gravely mistaken as to the state of feeling on this question in Eastern Assiniboia. I think I can safely say that not one-tenth of the people there are in favour of provincial autonomy in the immediate future. They know that it must come and that we must prepare for it; but it would saddle additional burdens on the people. They feel that under existing circumstances they could not carry out even a complete municipal organization because of the sparseness of settlement. There may perhaps be a few people or a considerable number of people about Indian Head who desire provincial autonomy, who have the opinion that it would enable them to get more support for the development of the country in the way of building railways. I remember very well the argument of Mr. Haultain, the premier of the North-west Territories. He argued that there should be only one province, because the larger the province the greater its facility in raising money to build railroads; but if that is an argument, then it is better that the Territories should remain under the supervision of the Dominion government, which has better credit in the money markets of the world than any province could possibly have. Therefore, under existing circumstances and for some years to come, I think we are better as we are than we could possibly be with provincial autonomy. We know it must come, and no progressive settler would desire to retard it unduly; but just now it would certainly impose additional burdens on the people, and, voicing the sentiment of Eastern Assiniboia, I would state decidedly that as far as I can interpret the feeling of the people, they are not in favour of provincial autonomy immediately.

Mr. BOYD. As the hon. gentleman has been a long time in the country, I would like to ask him how long a time would it be before it would be ready for provincial autonomy ? I am very glad he has placed himself squarely before his people on this point.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Quite so ; we do not hesitate at all. In meetings where we have opportunities to test the feelings of the people, they do not support the immediate formation of new provinces. I am not prepared to say how long it should be. If the population goes on increasing as it has been doing of late years, it may come in the near future ; but certainly, under existing circumstances, I am not prepared to advocate the immediate organization of the country into provinces.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would not the question of additional burdens depend altogether on the terms under which the North-west Territories were formed into a province ? And are not the hon. gentleman and his friends arguing now that the subsidies should be increased ? If the subsidies were increased and the territories were formed into a province, what difference would it make ? I do not understand the logical conclusion of the hon. gentleman's remarks.

Mr. DOUGLAS. We are asking an increase in the subsidy not as a matter of charity, but as a matter of right, in view of the increased population and the growing demands on the funds of the territorial government, because it is found that they cannot possibly overtake the work which is brought under their notice, retain the population, and minister to their comfort and consolidation in the country without an addition to the subsidy. As I understand, a certain amount has been granted in each province per head of the population. This the government has been pleased to grant in past years, and sometimes they have discounted the future, and at periods of some ten years have drawn on the fund in favour of the province or the territory. What we wish them to do in this case, in view of the rapid increase of population, is not only to give us the proportionate grant per head that is given in the other provinces, but to discount the future and enable the government of the territories to overtake the work which is piling up in their hands.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps I have not made myself clear to my hon. friend; but certainly he has not made himself very clear to me. I asked him how provincial autonomy could possibly increase the burdens of the people if adequate terms were given to the North-west Territories, which I understand perfectly are being asked, not as a matter of charity, but as a matter of right. I did not suggest that they were asked as a matter of charity. Whether or not the territories are formed into a province cannot possibly affect the burdens of the people, if a subsidy which the North-west Territories regard as adequate is given to them when they are formed into a province; and we know that such an adequate subsidy is being asked now. Then, how can the establishment of provincial government in the territories result in any additional burdens on the people?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think I can answer the hon. gentleman's question. The burdens I have reference to are simply these: If we have two provinces, or probably three, we shall require three separate sets of buildings, three sets of organization, and a large body of officials all over the country, which at present we do not need. It is one thing to speak of one of the older provinces maintaining municipal organization to the full extent to which it is enjoyed in Ontario and Quebec, and quite another thing to deal with a country where the people live four or six or eight miles apart, and where you may have a stretch of fifteen miles with nobody living upon it. Hon. gentlemen need to know the country, the immensity of the area, and the necessity of this area being filled up, in order to maintain and carry out with comfort and success municipal organization. So that we believe the burdens of the people would be very largely increased, and the taxation would became much higher than it is in any of the older provinces. Hence we say it is better to delay somewhat the organization of the country into provinces, and to wait until it is more fully settled.

Mr. INGRAM. I take it, from the remarks of the hon. gentleman, that in the constituency he represents the feeling of the people is not in favour of provincial organization. I understand that the majority of the local representatives coming from his constituency support Mr. Haultain's government. I find that at Yorkton, which I think is in the hon. gentleman's constituency, Mr. Haultain made this statement—I am quoting from the hon. member for West Assiniboia:

> Before the local elections in 1898, the Hon. Mr. Haultain spoke at various points throughout the territories on this subject, and I shall quote from the language he used at one place to show that even three years ago this change was looked forward to and that the present legislature of the territories was in reality given a mandate to open up negotiations with respect to the subject. Speaking at Yorkton, the Hon. Mr. Haultain said:
> If the financial question is capable of other solution, I will be satisfied to remain as at present. The only thing there seems to be to do is to think at least of negotiating for provincial establishment. I feel convinced that it will be the principal work of the new legislature before the end of its four years' term to enter into such negotiations. With the greater development that now seems assured, the needs in respect of schools and improvement will certainly develop. Outside of direct taxation, there seems no possibility of a solution except by provincial establishment.

That language was used, I take it, all over the territories during the contest previous to 1898. Then what do we find? When these very same representatives went to the North-west Territories legislature, this document, with several other sections was passed unanimously by the representatives of the North-west Territories. And here is a sample of these several clauses that passed unanimously in the North-west Territories legislature, that deals with the question of provincial organization:

> 4. And whereas, in the said address it was represented to Her Majesty as a reason for the extension of the Dominion of Canada westward, that the welfare of the population of these territories would be materially enhanced by the formation therein of political institutions bearing analogy, as far as circumstances will admit, to those which existed in the several provinces then forming the Dominion.

That was passed unanimously with the other clauses in this resolution. That shows that the people of the territories are in favour of provincial organization, and the sentiment in the constituency represented by the hon. gentleman must be strongly in favour of that course. That being the case, I cannot understand how he can oppose that policy here. I can understand why he personally should be opposed to it. Take, for instance, the tax levied now for school and road purposes. Is it not a fact that it is fairly high in the territories just now? Would it be reduced if they had provincial organization or increased?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Increased.

Mr. INGRAM. That being the case, and the hon. gentleman being a large landholder, I can understand that he might object to the formation of provincial government for the reason that it would interfere with him directly.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Oh, no.

Mr. INGRAM. It might cost him something. I do not say that that is the case, but where a large landholder might find his taxes increased were the territories given provincial organization, that might be a justifiable reason for his opposing such a policy. I do not charge him with being actuated by such a motive, because of course it is not his personal interest that he is considering, but the interests of his constituents.

Mr. SCOTT. If the fears which the hon. gentleman attribute to my hon. friend from East Assinaboia (Mr. Douglas) have any basis in fact, the same cause would no doubt prompt every person in the territories to oppose our being given provincial powers.

Mr. INGRAM. Then they should not support the resolutions in favour of provincial autonomy

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. gentleman from Elgin (Mr. Ingram) was not frank enough to answer the question put to him. Very properly, in connection with the item in the estimates to provide a sum to enable the North-west government to carry on its administration this year, a straight question was put, and he declined to answer it. I shall be more frank than he was. I notice that he had last year's 'Hansard' before him. He has been quoting from the remarks I made last year on the subject of autonomy, and probably does not need to be told what my answer is to the question he asked North-west members to answer. I said that I believed the time had come when the question of giving the territories provincial rights should be taken up and dealt with. As far as I am concerned, I believe that the people in the territories in general are ready to accept provincial autonomy. Of course they are not unanimous, and I think that if the powers at Ottawa wait until they are, they will wait until Kingdom come, because neither on that or any other question will the people of so large an area ever entertain one opinion. It is a fact, as has been stated by my hon. friend opposite, that the population of the territories now is vastly larger than was that of Manitoba when that part of the country was formed into a province. It is probably 600 or 700 per cent greater, and if the population of the North-west Territories is not as large to-day as that of the province of British Columbia with a smaller area, it will be before the close of the present year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the population of the territories and British Columbia respectively ?

Mr. SCOTT. According to the census of a year ago, the population of the North-west Territories was in the neighbourhood of 160,000 and that of British Columbia a little less than 200,000; but we received in the territories last year a very large immigration, the exact number of which cannot be stated. To-day, however, I think we have a population of between 180,000 and 190,000, and probably before the end of the year it will have swelled to 220,000 or 230,000. I have stated my own opinion very positively, but at the same time there is a large number of people who are very much of the opinion expressed by my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), and as has been stated by Mr. Haultain, the premier of the territories—whose remarks were quoted a moment ago—if a sufficient grant were made annually by this parliament, there would be no cry from the territories for provincial establishment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Hear, hear.

Mr. SCOTT. Year after year, however, the local authorities in the territories have been obliged to come to Ottawa for an increase in the grant. In some years they obtained an increase fairly satisfactory, but the position taken by the North-west government to-day is that which I am supporting. If my hon. friends in this government would agree to an increase perfectly satisfactory for this year, still it would be better for the territories that the question of provincial establishment should be taken up and dealt with, because next year we will find our needs again largely increased, and the Minister of the Interior would have a difficult task in obtaining from this House the increase required. Even if he were able to provide this year the necessary increase, one which would be perfectly satisfactory, the position next year would be just as it has been heretofore.

The testimony which has been borne by my hon. friends from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) and Alberta (Mr. Oliver) to the character of government which the people of the territories have been enjoying for years past, is a fair argument which can be urged in favour of their being granted provincial autonomy. I am willing to join in the assertion which has been made that better government than has been enjoyed in the last ten years by the people of the territories has not been enjoyed by the people of any province in the Dominion. We have as able, shrewd, judicious and careful men at the head of our government as are at the head of government in any province of the Dominion. We have an educational system, which was framed by Premier Haultain, and in which my hon. friend from Alberta had a hand, when he was a member of the legislative assembly, which has not a superior anywhere in the Dominion. We have in the matter of education, a system as satisfactory as that which now prevails in Manitoba, and we have arrived at that position without any of the turmoil which was created before the Manitoba system could be brought to its present satisfactory state. But we are getting a little beside the question. I did not intend this evening to give rise to any lengthy discussion upon the question of provincial autonomy. We are dealing now with the grant to the North-west assembly for the purpose of carrying on their business this year, and it would not do our people any particular good this year if the House were to decide that full provincial powers ought to be granted and at the same time allow the vote for the present year to remain as it is, and leave us, in some measure, in a state of starvation.

I think we should direct our attention, as I endeavoured to direct my remarks in the first instance, to the question of the vote and to providing this session for a considerable enlargement of it. Possibly, it would not be out of order to make the comparison of the vote for this service, a service for which this parliament is entirely responsible, and the votes for other services. My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) did make a comparison in one particular. I have taken the pains to copy the total figures devoted to some services voted for by parliament. I may say that, for fear some of our friends might say I was introducing sectional questions, I have taken votes which apply to one part of this country as much as to any other. For penitentiaries, we spend a total of $491,490, considerably in excess of the amount deemed to be sufficient for the whole purposes of the government of the North-west Territories. Legislation costs $446,290, entirely apart from the indemnity paid to the members of parliament. This is the amount it costs to manage these parliament buildings and supply the printing in connection with the work of parliament. To the Agriculture Department we vote about $400,000, apart from the vote for the taking of the census. Then, as my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) pointed out, we spend almost half a million dollars on immigration. That is, we spend fully as much to bring people into the North-west Territories as we spend for all their local needs after we get them there. Fisheries inspection costs $337,000, or almost as much as this whole vote to the North-west Territories. The expense of looking after the Indians is considerably in excess of a million dollars. And, as the hon. member for Eastern Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) remarked, we spend $417,000 for the education of Indian children, much more than we spend for the whole cost of education and all other purposes as well in the North-west Territories. On the North-west mounted police in that territory, one single service, we spend $400,000, and, on the mounted police in the Yukon $450,000. The Yukon government vote, which is exactly similar to the item under discussion and which applies to a country where there is not a population, probably, of more than 25,000, costs $250,000. There is voted this year for superannuation, $328,000, almost as much as the entire vote for local government in the North-west Territories. I wish to say that I am not taking the slightest exception to these votes. Speaking more particularly to my hon. friends in the government, and to my friends on this side, I may say that it has been a matter of pride to us that the general services throughout the Dominion has been so well looked after since the Liberals came into power. Under the government's policy of a revenue tariff——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. SCOTT. Whatever dispute there may be about the name, there is no question that it lives up to the name of a revenue tariff, for under it Canada has been getting a sufficient revenue. And it has been a matter of pride to us that every service that has required looking after has been generously, properly and adequately looked after. But, unless a very considerable increase is made in the vote for the North-west Territories there is one item in which we shall be obliged to admit that there is no cause for pride.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am glad, that, in one respect the education of my hon. friend (Mr. Scott) is improving. I think he is one of the gentlemen who were not able to understand the meaning of the word 'adequate' in a resolution lately moved in this House. I have noticed that in the various addresses with which he has favoured the House, he has used that word at least fifteen or twenty times this evening. It is evident that during the period intervening he has made excellent use of the dictionary. I trust that some hon. gentlemen who laboured under the same difficulty have been employing their leisure in the same excellent way.

Mr. SCOTT. I have been trying to learn the resolution by heart.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am glad my hon. friend's endeavours have had such excellent results. There is a good deal of food for reflection in what the hon. gentleman has said. I, for one, am convinced that the administration of the government of the North-west Territories must have been carried on in a very excellent way in order to have given the people any semblance of provision for the public service, seeing they have what seems to me a very meagre sum, considering the large number of people and the enormous territory that has to be dealt with. It does seem that this service cannot, out of such a subsidy, be provided for quite as well as the people of the North-west have a right to expect having regard to the interests which have been mentioned by hon. gentlemen opposite. I am still not quite clear as to what my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) means when he says that provincial autonomy would increase the burdens of the people. There are certain services to be provided for in the North-west. They must either be provided for by the people in that country themselves, or they must be provided for by all the people of the country, that is, through the Dominion government. I do not see how the adoption of provincial autonomy will necessarily affect the question one way or the other. It is entirely a question of the terms upon which autonomy is established. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat (Mr. Scott) has brought to the attention of the House certain services upon which a good deal of money has been spent in this country. We on this side might add to the illustrations he has given. I might point out to the hon. gentleman that the bringing down of a contract with respect to the building of a railway in the Yukon eight days before the meeting of this parliament has resulted in a claim against the government which will probably cost this country nearly as much as the whole grant to the North-west Territories in one year.

Mr. SCOTT. That was the fault of an out of date Senate.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would be inclined to think it was the fault of a government that was not able to wait for eight days until the parliament met and the matter could be dealt with. Of course, these are different points of view. Another thing I would call the attention of the hon. gentlemen to is that this government spent, I think unnecessarily—and I think anybody who fairly examines the evidence will say unnecessarily—in the purchase of the Drummond County Railway, enough to double the subsidy to the Territories for five or six years. The same remark is true of the contract this government made with regard to the Grand Trunk Railway and also with regard to a great many public works in respect to which, during the past five or six years, enormous sums of money have been, as I believe, spent unjustifiably and extravagantly. I have no doubt that if a proper system of administration had been adopted with regard to a great many of these works, the amount granted to the North-west Territories might have been increased 50 per cent during the past five or six years without increasing the burdens of the people of this country by a single dollar. As my hon. friend has brought some illustrations with regard to this subject, I thought it only right to remind him of this, because he has given me some food for reflection in the sensible remarks he has made, and I desire to give him food for reflection with regard to these matters, and I trust he will take my remarks as much to heart as I have in all sincerity taken to heart the remarks he has addressed to the House on that subject.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). At last we have had one member from the North-west Territories on the other side of the House coming out and expressing himself as strongly opposed, at the present time at any rate, to provincial autonomy being granted to the territories. I think he is the only member from the North-west Territories who has had the boldness to come out and in explicit terms to take that stand. But that hon. gentleman, I think, when he was elected in 1896, came to this House as an independent, he came as representing a patron organization, and he rather scorned the average Conservative or Liberal who came down here to be caucused with the rest of the members, and to respond to the party lash. I notice that he is now just as servile a supporter of the government as you will find on the other side, and he does not think it any disgrace now to be caucused with other members, and to respond to the party lash with the best of them ; so much so, that he is willing to give credit to the government for having taken a stand that will displease the people of the territories, in refusing to grant them provincial autonomy at the present time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. May I ask a question ? The people of the west have not asked for provincial autonomy, and the member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) is not advocating nor opposing provincial autonomy. He has only stated that in his judgment the time has not fully come when it ought to be given, but it must come in the near future.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Now the hon. member for East Assiniboia has stated that the people of the North-west Territories have not asked for provincial autonomy. I would like to know who their government represents. Does not the government represent the people ? Do they not voice the sentiments of the people, and has not the territorial assembly asked this parliament to grant them provincial autonomy ? You may just as well say that this government do not represent the people of Canada at the present time, as in many things I grant they do not. But the member for East Assiniboia stated in his remarks that he did not think the time had fully come when it would be wise to grant provincial autonomy. I do not know what he means by that qualified statement. Probably next session, if the government comes down with a Bill granting provincial autonomy, he will be the first to get up and give them credit for it, stating that he is very glad to see them do it, and I have no doubt that had they taken that stand on this occasion, he would have been equally ready to give them credit for so doing. That shows what a good party man he is. Now after the declaration of the Minister of the Interior he falls in with the views of the government and says he believes the people of the territories do not desire provincial autonomy at the present time. One reason, he says, is that it will increase the burdens of the people. I think the question asked by the leader of the opposition was very appropriate, and I could not see exactly what the member for East Assiniboia meant in his reply. As the leader of the opposition has said, it rests entirely with the two governments as to whether the burden of the people will be increased or not, according to the terms that will be made. I agree with the members from the territories that the present subsidy is not adequate; and by the way, the leader of the opposition took the words out of my mouth when he jollied the member from West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) on his education having been advanced to that position that he understands that word adequate far better than he did when the budget debate was on.

Mr. McCREARY. Probably the hon. gentleman will be a little more definite on this point than he was on the tariff, and say what an adequate amount will be.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I will reply to the hon. member in the words of the leader of the government when he was in opposition, that is time enough to prescribe when you are called in. I hope the hon. gentleman will agree in the opinion of his chief. I admit that the subsidy granted at the present time to the territories is not sufficient, and if autonomy was granted to those territories, as a Manitoban I would be quite agreeable to see better terms granted to the new province, for then we would have a lever to get a little better terms ourselves. The member for West Assiniboia says that at the present time, if the subsidy was increased, the people of the territories would prefer not to have autonomy. I do not agree with that sentiment. I think there is a feeling in the average elector of the west that the subsidy should be increased.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the hon. gentleman attribute that opinion to me?

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. member said a few minutes ago that if an additional subsidy was granted to the North-west Territories the people would not ask for provincial autonomy. If the hon. member looks in the 'Hansard' to-morrow he will find that statement.

Mr. SCOTT. If I said that, I said something that I did not mean to say.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I took down the hon. gentleman's words, and I think he will find that declaration in the 'Hansard.'

Mr. SCOTT. I think I said that, even if the subsidy for this present year were made entirely satisfactory, I would still think there was good reason for asking for a final settlement, because next year, with the increase in population, and the increased needs for an additional amount of money, the Minister of the Interior would be in the same difficulty as has been experienced in the past in obtaining the increase annually made necessary by increasing population and needs.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). The hon. gentleman should thank me for having drawn his attention to his statement, as it has given him an opportunity of setting himself right, and to-morrow he will have an opportunity of revising his speech in the 'Hansard.' I think the people of the west, notwithstanding that there might be an additional subsidy would still be in favour of local autonomy. They all desire to manage their own local affairs, and even an additional subsidy would not long quiet them. Now the reasons given for refusing provincial autonomy by the Minister of the Interior I do not think were sufficient in themselves, certainly they were not satisfactory to the government of the North-west Territories. Mr. Haultain had been led to believe that this government would take into immediate consideration the question of granting provincial autonomy. The Minister of the Interior, in writing to him, said that no doubt it would not come as a surprise to Mr. Haultain that the government at the present time had decided not to grant autonomy; but Mr. Haultain was surprised. These are the words used by the Minister of the Interior when he refused provincial autonomy to Mr. Haultain:

> It is the view of the government that it will not be wise at the present time to pass legislation forming the North-west Territories into a province or provinces. Some of the reasons leading to this view may be found in the fact that the population of the territories is yet sparse.

I think that is an argument that will not hold water very long. As has been pointed out by some hon. members, the population is not as sparse as it was when Manitoba was created a province.

> That the rapid increase in population now taking place will in a short time alter the conditions to be dealt with very materially; and that there is a considerable divergence of opinion respecting the question whether there should be one province only or more than one province.

I think that objection in itself is very weak, it is, as has been said, one that will always exist. There will always be a difference of opinion on that subject. There is one thing I can tell the hon. member for East Assiniboia, and that is, if only one province is granted, a great many of his own constituents will favour annexation to Manitoba. But most people, I think, in the territories are favourable to two provinces. However, that is a question of detail, as Mr. Haultain said, that could be left in abeyance.

> Respecting the present financial requirements, the question of an increase in your subsidy is now receiving consideration, but the result cannot, as you are aware, be communicated until the estimates are brought before parliament. This I have every reason to hope will take place in a very short time.

Well, the estimates have been placed before parliament and no increase in the subsidy has been thus far announced, though the hon. minister may later on in his supplementary estimates, and I trust he may, bring down an increase in the subsidy. There is a reply made by Mr. Haultain which shows that he was surprised at this declaration by the hon. Minister of the Interior. He quotes a portion of the minister's letter addressed to him some time previously, in which it was stated :

Without at the present moment committing myself to any positive statement I am prepared to say that the time has arrived when the question of organizing the territories on the provincial basis ought to be the subject of full consideration. It would appear to me that the better way of bringing the matter to a more definite position would be to arrange for a conference upon the subject between the representatives of your government and a committee of council representing the federal government.

From that declaration on the part of the hon. Minister of the Interior, Mr. Haultain was led to believe that this conference which was suggested by the hon. gentleman would result in granting immediate provincial autonomy to the North-west Territories, and he thus expresses himself in his reply to the hon. minister :

These opinions and the long delay that followed, in order to choose a convenient time for that 'mature and careful consideration of the various and important subjects which will require to be debated and settled in connection with the establishing of the territories as a province or upon a provincial basis,' led us to suppose that when the subject was finally taken up it would be taken up with a view to immediate settlement.

These were the views expressed by Mr. Haultain, and I think the reasons assigned by the hon. Minister of the Interior for not acceding to their demands, are poor reasons, and surely there must be something else behind these which, if the hon. gentleman would be candid enough to admit it, have influenced his position in refusing the territories autonomy at the present time.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR: Mr. Chairman, the discussion which has taken place on both sides of the House has, I think, been a desirable discussion because of the fact that it has placed before the country and before hon. members from the eastern part of the country—I am sorry that there are not more of them here this evening—a very fair and moderate statement of the position of affairs. I can find no fault with my hon. friends from the North-west Territories for the manner in which they have stated their position, although hon. members in the committee will see that they, themselves, are not agreed in regard to what ought to be done. This is no particular discredit to any of the members who have expressed their opinions, because the circumstances are of such a character that there is plenty of room for a difference of opinion. It would be a very strange thing if, amongst men who have formed their opinions themselves, there should not be differences of opinion in regard to a matter of such importance, where all the circumstances are of such an unusual character. It does not very often happen that any legislative assembly has to deal with a question involving the constitutional status of a territory such as that which we are now discussing. The committee, perhaps, hardly realizes the fact that we are discussing the questions of the financial and constitutional status of a territory which has almost as much fertile land as the continent of Europe, and which bids fair, under existing circumstances, to be an enormously important factor in the development of the business, not only of Canada, but of the north American continent before very many years pass away. When I speak of the extent of that territory, I am not speaking of the extent of its superficial area, but of the number of acres which are actually fertile and are capable of producing in such a way that they are fairly and reasonably equipped for settlement in the ordinary sense of the word. I do not know that it is necessary for me to go into a very lengthy or detailed discussion of the matter, but, I would say to the committee, that I think I am justified in taking the position that the North-west Territories have not been badly treated during the last five years. Immediately upon assuming office, I was met by the members of the territorial government, and they made a proposal to me in regard to what they thought they ought to have in the way of subsidy for the next four years. If I remember rightly, this took place in the fall of 1896, before I was sworn in, and before I had actually assumed the performance of my duties in this place. I indicated to the members of the government what I thought, under the circumstances, I could recommend, and I was led by these gentlemen to believe that the amount which I was disposed to recommend would be satisfactory for the next three or four years. The amount which I recommended was added to the subsidy of the North-west Territories at the next session of parliament, and I think, under the then existing circumstances, I had the right to believe that in the opinion of the members of the executive at the time of the conference that for three or four years the amount thus added would prove a satisfactory addition to the subsidy. Then circumstances changed, and demands were made upon the government here for increases and additions to the subsidy of the North-west Territories, to some extent, inconsistently with the understanding which was reached at that time, although I am quite prepared to admit there was nothing of a binding character, but at the same time, it was of such a character that I had reasonable grounds for believing that they had succeeded in getting the government to deal satisfactorily with the position as it then existed. Population began to flow into the territories, and as an hon. member from the North-west has properly and pertinently explained to the committee, the expenditure necessary on the part of the territories has been to a very considerable extent affected and affected unfavourably in the sense that the expenditure has been increased to a very considerable extent owing to the fact that there has lately been a series of wet seasons which have resulted in making a very much larger demand on the resources of the territorial government for necessary public works and for the construction of roads and bridges. That increase, having been made, was continued. A still further increase was made a couple of years ago, and when last year the members of the territorial government waited upon us and explained that, owing to the floods which had taken place in the northern part of the territories, many of their bridges had been washed away and that renewals were an urgent necessity, a very large additional amount was voted for the purpose of assisting them in making these renewals.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). May I ask the hon. Minister of the Interior a question? Was the amount of the subsidy based in any way upon estimated population or on what was it based?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, it was arbitrarily fixed. Every year the premier of the North-west Territories sends down a detailed estimate. When I say it is detailed, I should explain that it is not detailed, as it is not a detailed estimate in the way in which our estimates are detailed, but an estimate generally stating what is required for each service, and giving a certain amount of detail in connection with the moneys that are asked for. As I said, last year or the year before, $100,000 was voted for the purpose of enabling the territorial government to renew bridges and public works which had been destroyed by the floods which had taken place the previous year. On the whole, therefore, I think we have been, in a fair and reasonable way, endeavouring to meet the wishes of our friends in the North-west Territories, and therefore, I do not think that the members of the territorial government feel that we have treated them illiberally, or that we have been disposed to turn a deaf ear to their representations. I may add that in the first year after the government took office, we extended to the North-west Territories what they had been vainly seeking for years before, a system of responsible government. But I remember very distinctly that the day I brought that Bill into the House, the late Mr. Davin stood up and expressed agreeable surprise at the Bill being brought in, declaring that he had been trying to get the Conservative government to introduce a similar Bill for the previous ten years.

Great progress has been made in the North-west. We have in the last five years established in that country a system of responsible government, we have increased their subsidy largely and we have reasonably and fairly endeavoured to meet them in their demands of a financial character. I am free to say that in the last year or two circumstances have changed rapidly, and the march of events has been quicker than in former years. That is due to the rapid increase of the population and the prospect of a still more rapid increase in the future. I do not suppose that my hon. friends would think that the situation were so urgent if it were not for the fact that the population has increased with great rapidity. I believe the subject is one that requires the greatest of consideration, and I fully agree with the members from the territories who say that it would be a national disaster if we neglected to provide for the public service of the territories, so that the people would go in there and become dissatisfied, and that the tide of population which is flowing in that direction should be turned back as it was turned back some fifteen or twenty years ago.

But I venture to say, Mr. Chairman, that there is no such grievance existing in the North-west Territories at the present time as, within the next year at least, renders it in the smallest degree probable that any such disaster would take place for the reason indicated. I think during the next year the territorial government will be somewhat strained in their efforts to meet their obligations if some increased assistance is not given. I indicated in my letter to Mr. Haultain that the subject of an increased subsidy was under the consideration of the government. If I recollect aright the main estimates had been brought down on the Table of the House at that time. I may say for the satisfaction of my hon. friends on the other side, that the estimates to which I referred were the supplementary estimates which have not yet been laid upon the Table.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. In regard to what will be done or what can be done, I shall not be able to say anything until the supplementary estimates appear, and they will speak for themselves. As to the criticism which has been made on the action of the government with respect of the application for provincial autonomy—

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the hon. gentleman leaves that point, might I ask him: Has the government of the North-west Territories any independent source of revenue apart from that which it derives from this grant?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Nothing substantial. The local revenues of the North-west Territories are of a very trivial description. I think they amount to not more than $30,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Last year they amounted to $80,000, and possibly this year they will amount to $100,000, derived from the local land tax.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Respecting what has been said in connection with the conduct of the government upon the application of the territorial government for provincial autonomy, let me say I do not think that in respect to that application, that as yet at least there is any serious, reasonable grievance existing on the part of our territorial friends. The settlement of the constitutional and financial status of that vast territory is surely worth a little consideration. The time to consider the question, even in the opinion of the most urgent friends of provincial autonomy, did not arrive until a year ago. It was not suggested until about a year ago that the subject should be seriously considered, and if hon. gentlemen will remember how long it takes to settle questions of this kind and to settle them satisfactorily, I think they will admit that rash haste with regard to a question of such vast importance—a question which must be satisfactorily settled if settled at all—rash haste would not at all be conducive to a settlement which would be satisfactory in the long run to the people of the territories. I would not feel that I was taking an unreasonable position before this House if I said: That if the people of the North-west Territories get a reasonable and satisfactory settlement, a settlement that the people of Canada and the people of the territories particularly will regard as a good settlement; a fair and reasonable settlement promising permanency; promising lack of agitation, and difficulties, and applications for re-opening of the case in future years—if they get such a settlement within three or four years I should feel very well satisfied indeed, and I should feel that we have accomplished that result in a comparatively short time. In saying that, I am not at this moment indicating any view I have just now as to when this question will be finally and definitely settled.

I wish to say in answer to my hon. friend for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) whose face I see wearing a smile of a somewhat critical character—I wish to say a few words in regard to what he evidently has in his mind. He evidently has in his mind the idea that we are deterred from dealing with the constitutional question relating to the North-west Territories by the possible difficulty of the separate school question being raised in connection with that constitutional settlement. I think some of his friends are under the impression that the reason why we have not dealt with it at this session of parliament is, that there is some political game to be played, and that the party with which the government is identified hopes to gain something politically by reason of the delay. I am bound to say Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned and so far as I know, there is no political advantage to be gained by either party in connection with the settlement of this question. I know of no political game that can be played, and so far as the separate schools are concerned my own view is that the school question is settled so far as the North-west Territories is concerned. I understand that the settlement at which they have arrived—and I am very happy to be able to express that opinion—is a satisfactory settlement, and that the Roman Catholic people on the one hand and the Protestant people on the other, feel that they have a satisfactory compromise and that there is no necessity for difficulty or agitation upon the question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Therefore, I think we may possibly be able to look forward to a settlement of this constitutional question, at least when it is proposed by the government to this parliament, being carried out without any acrimonious discussion upon a question of that kind which might be a most difficult and unpleasant one to have to decide, if there were any contention upon it.

I gave certain reasons in the brief letter which I wrote to Mr. Haultain as to why the government did not feel disposed to deal with this question at the present time. Now, I have lived a great many years in the western portion of Canada and I think I have some little understanding of our people there. I sympathize with them, but I know that when they get an idea about a thing to be done they generally have an idea that it should be done right off. They are not disposed to allow the march of events to proceed very long without having a final settlement of what they claim ought to be settled. They are not generally desirous to listen to counsel which goes in the direction of delay. My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has possibly been the clearest exponent of that principle which is generally followed by western people, and he puts it very well. He says: We have asked you for certain things and if you are not prepared to do just exactly what we say, why pay the shot and pay as much as we ask. My hon. friend (Mr. Oliver) forgets that he takes for granted the whole of the discussion and all the points involved in the discussion because he says: We are entitled to what we ask in the first place, and if you do not give us what we ask we are entitled to fix the amount you will give us. I think the House of Commons will hardly admit that that is the case, because we shall have to take the position, however much we sympathize with our friends in the North-west Territories, that there are two parties to the question of their financial status, and two parties to the question how much they ought to have. These questions cannot be settled by a logical proposition such as my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) puts with such clearness. A good deal of thoughtful consideration will have to be given to the details.

I want to say a word on two phases of the question—what the position of the territories is, and whether it is desirable for them to have provincial autonomy at the present time. I am bound to say that I think the view expressed so strongly by certain gentlemen representing the territories is not justified by the facts, although there is considerable difference of opinion on the subject. They express the opinion that the financial difficulties of the territories would entirely disappear if they had provincial autonomy. Now, it has been pointed out—and it might be pointed out more in detail if it were necessary—that there are services performed by the government of Canada in the North-west territories at the present time which are of an exceptional character, because of the exceptional position of that country. We maintain a large police force there; but let not our friends think that that police force is maintained solely for what may be called Dominion purposes. Not at all. We require to maintain a force of some kind for Dominion purposes; but at present we maintain it not only for Dominion purposes, not only because it is desirable to have a military force in so large a territory, and where in former years at least there were a considerable number of Indians who were somewhat hostile in their tendency, but at the present time we maintain a large number of those policemen scattered about the country, singly or in groups of two or three, for the purpose of performing the duties of local constables; and if we undertook to remove one of those constables from the neighbourhood where he is placed, such a storm would arise as no minister would care to face. There is a stronger demand for local police in the North-west Territories than in any other part of Canada. I will not be so uncharitable as to say that it is so strong simply because the Federal government has to pay the shot; but the demand is there, and there is some reason for it, because at the present time and for some years to come the population will be so sparse that they will not be able to form themselves into local communities and by small local taxation give themselves the police protection which is provided in other parts of Canada. When the population of the North-west Territories increases to five of six hundred thousand, circumstances will be different. The people will be closer together, municipalities will be formed, we shall be able to collect our police force into military companies for military purposes, and the people will look after their own police protection. But that time has not come yet, and that is one of the things that are to be considered in connection with this question. The territorial government would not be prepared to undertake any such expenditure for police purposes, and if we withdrew that police force from local service, they would have to come back to the Dominion government and ask us again to undertake that kind of work.

There are other circumstances which I think might well lead the House to take a year or two to consider the questions which have to be settled. We have in the North-west Territories a vast extent of country, and if you will take the trouble to note the discussions which have taken place, you will find that the people who live in the district of West Assiniboia are almost unanimously in favour of immediate provincial autonomy and of the territories being constituted into one province, whereas in the neighbourhood of Indian Head, where the meeting was held to which my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) refers, there is not that same amount of unanimity of opinion. My hon. friend said he was at a public meeting, where 1,000 people were present, and where there was a very unanimous expression of opinion ; and, if I understood him rightly, he said that he judged of the view of the meeting by the applause given to the speakers. I was not at the meeting, but I read a very full account of it made by a shortland reporter, to the effect, which I think was not disputed, that the meeting was a large and very intelligent one, that they gave a reasonable and courteous reception and applause to the speakers on both sides, and assumed the attitude of intelligent men who had come to listen and consider the arguments that would be presented to them; and it can hardly be said that the people at that meeting, which assembled to hear Mr. Haultain on one side and Mr. Roblin on the other side of the question, whether the territories should be formed into one province, or that portion of the territories should be united with the province of Manitoba, fully made up their minds on the question that evening. There is still some difference of opinion among the people. There is some sentiment in favour of that district being united to the province of Manitoba; but the prevailing sentiment is that it should remain a part of the North-west Territories. If you go to the district of Saskatchewan, you will find an entirely different sentiment prevailing among the people there. They are not in favour of the territories being formed into one province, and they are not in a hurry for provincial autonomy; but when it comes they do not want their district to be united with the territory to the south. At the present time you have a vast territory there containing about 200,000 people. The census showed about 150,000 in the organized territories; there are perhaps 10,000 or 12,000 in the country to the north; and with the increment caused by the immigration of last year, there are at the present time approximately about 200,000 people. The analogy as to the number of people who were in Manitoba when it became a member of the confederation, or as to the number in British Columbia, does not hold at all, because those provinces were brought into confederation by way of a necessity which existed at that time. It was not in the deliberate exercise of the discretion of the parliament of Canada, thinking that it would be an ideal or desirable state of affairs to have 17,000 people constituted into a province, that the province of Manitoba was formed. It was formed because the necessity arose. There were people there who demanded local powers, and the peaceful settlement of the country could not have been effected, and that territory could not have been brought under the rule of the Dominion of Canada, without those terms being granted at that time. Hon. gentlemen will remember that there was a rebellion, and it is possible that the trouble arose only on account of the belief that was created by interested persons that the government here did not intend to give them provincial autonomy or to treat them fairly. They had to be treated in that way, because they were insisting that the existing status should be recognized, and it was recognized as a matter of necessity. British Columbia came in as a sovereign colony under a bargain made with the people of Canada, and the people of Canada had no choice in that respect. But that is no reason for saying that when you get 17,000 people in a territory in any part of the Dominion of Canada, you are to form them into a province. That is not justified by common sense or by the precedents cited in favour of it. I think what parliament will be disposed to do will be to treat this question on a fair and liberal basis; but they will desire, when they come to deal with it, to have before them sufficient data to enable them to feel that they are working out a settlement which has in it the element of permanency. And I think parliament would be rather prepared for two or three or four years to vote sums of money, which might be reasonably arrived at as approximately what the territories actually require for their immediate necessities, and let us get more information with regard to what the position will be and what the necessary requirements of the territories will be, so that when we do arrive at a settlement, it shall have some of the elements of finality. At this late hour, I shall not undertake to discuss the various details which will have to be considered in the formation of a province in the North-west. If hon. gentlemen will look through the Bill presented for our consideration by our friends from the territories, they will see at once that there are items in it quite sufficient to make any government take a little time for their consideration. We have in this Bill a provision that all mines, minerals, timber and royalties, belonging to the Crown, situated or arising in the territories, and all sums due and payable on the 1st of January, 1903, for such mines, minerals, timber and royalties shall belong to the province. In addition to other matters relating to the finances, which were supposed to be dealt with somewhat on the line, that has been taken in the other provinces, and as to which possibly no serious objection would be taken, there is a provision that the province shall be entitled to receive, by half-yearly payments in advance from the government of Canada, interest at 5 per cent per annum on the sum of one dollar per acre for every acre of land granted by the Dominion otherwise than as homesteads or pre-emption. I see some hon. members smiling, and I think I have convinced the committee that there is sufficient material in that Bill for a year's consideration. When I said that it was desirable that we should take a little time to consider, I do not think I was asking anything unreasonable. I did not discuss with premier Haultain the details of the Bill. I desire to say, in all frankness, to the committee, that I did not think it desirable to discuss the details. I do not think it desirable, in a matter of such vast importanece to the people of Canada generally and of the territories in particular, to unnecessarily rush the government of Canada into a record on these questions. They are questions upon which a good deal of light may be thrown by further discussion. The circumstances during the last year were not propitious to a complete discussion of the question with the members of the North-west government, and perhaps that is one of the most important features which I ought to bring before the House.

Mr. INGRAM. Did the delegates of the North-west Territories come down over a year ago to discuss the question with the hon. gentleman?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, but it is pretty hard to make a categorical statement about what the members of the territorial government did come down to discuss. The hon. gentleman will appreciate that difficulty. I suppose that there has been no time when I have met the members of the North-west government—and I have met them every year since I have been Minister of the Interior—that I have not discussed with them, in a casual manner, the question of provincial autonomy.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood Premier Haultain and Mr. Ross were here a year ago and discussed this very question with the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The point which I want to convey to my hon. friend is this, that during the last four or five years, on every occasion when I had the pleasure of meeting the members of the territorial government, there has perhaps not been a meeting at which, in a casual way, the question of the time when, and the circumstances under which, provincial autonomy would be given the territories, has not been more or less discussed. But as to any meeting for the purpose of taking up the question of provincial autonomy, in the sense of a serious discussion of the terms upon which we would contemplate forming a province of the territories, there has only been one discussion in that sense of the word, and that is the discussion which took place during last year, after Mr. Ross went out of the government. There was a preliminary talk about a year and a half ago, and of course some correspondence followed, and it was arranged that there should be a discussion when we would atempt to come down to details. And let me say that until the discussion of this last year, 1901, it was not understood, either by myself or the members of the territorial government, that we were at close quarters upon this question. We were simply discussing it as a thing which would come in the future, but no attempt was made to fix a time for discussion when any settlement would be arrived at. Last year it was arranged that a discussion should take place, and our friends of the territorial government did urge that it should take place earlier. But the Minister of Finance was obliged to go to England immediately after the session, and a discussion in his absence would of course have been impossible, he being one of the members of the government whose presence would be absolutely necessary in addition to the Prime Minister and myself. So that until the Minister of Finance returned from England, it was impossible altogether to arrive at any arrangement as to when the conference should take place. When the members of the government who were away in England did come back, the happy event of the visit of the Prince of Wales occurred. That engaged the attention of everybody some little time, and the result was that it was impossible to give any time for the discussion of this question until after that event took place. Two members of the territorial government came down just about the time His Highness was leaving. We proceeded to get together to discuss the question on two or three occasions, and go into the details as fully as possible. From time to time members of the government gave the various phases of the question consideration, and the conclusion I arrived at was that notwithstanding a case, strong in some respects, was made out by our friends in the territories, it was better that the matter should be laid over for the present, and I am bound to say that the more I have thought of the matter since that decision was arrived at, the more strongly I am convinced that it was a wise one. I am not desirous of binding myself this evening to any expression of opinion, as very rapid changes are likely to take place in the position of the territories in the next year or two, and it would be most unwise for us now to undertake to settle a question of this character, the settlement of which must largely depend on the amount of population in the territories. Why, one of the first things we would have to deal with would be a per capita allowance according to the population, upon the assumption that the cost of government is to be based to some extent on the number of the population. We were asked to fix a per capita allowance based on a population of 250,000; but if our anticipations turn out to be at all correct, it will increase very rapidly, and our estimate of the number of people upon which the per capita allowance should be based might prove to be wholly inadequate and erroneous within two or three years.

The suggestion was made that we should take frequent censuses. But, there are unusual features about that; and, moreover, we would have to face another difficulty, as to what the limit would be upon which the per capita allowance would be granted, because there is a limit in the cases of the other provinces. So, the House can see at a glance, that if you take this enormous territory which is six or seven hundred miles long and runs from the international boundary to north of Prince Albert—speaking of the territory habitable in the sense of being useful for agricultural settlement, and consider that people are likely to go in it at the rate of 50,000 a year and that quite probably those places where settlement is now the thickest will be the thinnest in that respect in a few years, for unquestionably, settlement will go in places where it has not been hitherto—taking these things into consideration the House will understand that rapid and great changes will take place in the territories within a few years, and it would hardly be the part of wise statesmanship to make arrangements that would so completely lack the element of permanency. The House will understand that there would be no advantage in giving provincial autonomy to these people and having them come down here every year for better terms. Every province has had to come to the Federal government for better terms. I was a boy in Manitoba when the representatives of that province had to come every year for better terms. Every year they made their pilgrimage to Ottawa, for this purpose. This was because the elements of permanency and finality did not exist in the terms between Manitoba and the Dominion. The arrangements were made at a time when population was so small and the circumstances were of such a character that nobody could understand what the financial arrangement of the future needed to be. There was constant agitation going on in the province as to what better terms were acceptable. And there was constant difficulty over these questions between the provincial and Dominion governments. We should bring upon ourselves exactly the same condition of affairs in the North-west Territories. If any settlement were made which it would be possible to get this House to ratify, within twelve months you would have the territorial government asking for better terms and for a re-opening of the financial situation. From my experience in the west, I venture to say that that is what would happen. I feel confident that if some hon. gentlemen who have agitated for autonomy, will quietly think of the matter, they will agree with me that this would probably be the result. So, we should not be in a better position if they were given autonomy. We have already given them responsible government. To all intents and purposes they have the advantages of provincial life, except that they do not look after the administration of justice, registry office or the police force. This is a great financial relief to them. One or two things like the registry office we would be prepared to hand over to them if they desire.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Sifton) be good enough to inform the House what the exact status would be if the provincial autonomy were granted. I am not as familiar with the legislation as the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They have responsible government, but the jurisdiction of the government is defined specifically by the Act of this government. There are, as I have said, certain departments in which they have no jurisdiction, one being the police, another the administration of justice and another the registry office. This last is a small matter, as I say, which might be turned over without discussion. We get a little surplus revenue out of the registry offices, but it might readily be admitted that they might have it. These are the three principal subjects with regard to which they have no jurisdiction, which occurred to me at the present moment. My hon. friend will see, without provincial status, they have no power to incur debt, and I am not sure that that is an unmixed evil. Let the House consider that a moment——

Mr. SCOTT. Is there really any difference with regard to the police in the state of the territory and the state of the provinces ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Speaking from recollection, I think there are only two clauses in the constitution under which the police jurisdiction of the provinces arises. The province has control over municipal institutions, which has been held in some cases, I think, to give a certain amount of police power. In addition, the province has power over the administration of justice. That is in reality the clause in the constitution which gives the provinces the power to do and to control police work. The North-west Territories have not the power under the present condition of things, that power being held by the government here.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This government retains control of mines and land and minerals ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Of all the Crown lands.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In that respect the position differs from that of a province.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. From the position of the original provinces. The only two portions of Canada where the Crown lands belong to the Dominion are the province of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, including, of course, the Yukon. The control of the administration of justice and police by the Dominion governmens brings upon this government very great expense, caused very largely by the present peculiar circumstances of the case. The proportionate expense would be nothing like the same if there was a large population in the territories. The position would be very substantially changed if there was a reasonably large population in that district. On the question of the power to incur indebtedness, I speak with some deference. I do not wish to express the idea that the people of the North-west Territories are not as competent to conduct their own affairs as the people of any other portion of Canada, for I think they are. But it must not be forgotten by a body like the House of Commons who are responsible for what may happen in the future, that you have there a very sparse population of about two hundred thousand people situated in a vast and very rich territory. If they had the power to mortgage that territory for all time to come, which they would have if they were granted provincial powers, it might be mortgaged for very unwise and very unnecessary purposese. In saying this, I wish to guard against the imputation of saying that the people of the North-west Territories are not as capable of taking care of themselves and doing their own business as any others. But I say it is a fair subject for consideration for this parliament whether the time has come when power should be given to the people of the North-west Territories to incur indebtedness.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. minister has stated that if the government entered into any financial arrangement with the North-west Territories to form it into a province, the financial arrangement that the government would make would not last long, that the new province would be here in a short time, asking for better financial arrangements. Here is what they say, if the hon. gentleman will allow me :

A subsidy of $50,000 and 80 cents per head on the estimated population of 250,000 is asked for at the outset, with an increase at the same rate until paid on a population of 1,396,091, which is what the province of Ontario is paid on.

Now, coupling that agreement to be entered into with the statement made by the hon. gentleman that the increase of population will be so vast that he thinks it is necessary to delay this whole matter, I want to point out that when the territories start in with $50,000 at the outset, and 80 cents per head for every additional person coming in, the subsidy will increase very fast until they come to the limit of the sum paid to the province of Ontario.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think my hon. friend will not find that his inference is justified by the facts, if he infers that the result of the increase in population would enable the people of the North-west Territories adequately to discharge their financial responsibility by an allowance for government fixed simply upon the number of population arrived at in the way suggested by Mr. Haultain. Mr. Haultain's confidence in the ability of the North-west Territories to discharge their financial obligations is, I think, derived much more largely from certain other clauses of his Bill, the clause, for instance, which suggests that they should have control of all the mines, timber and royalties thereon, and the clause which suggests that $1 an acre should be given them for all the land grants in the North-west Territories. I think if those grants were provided for they would be able to get along very well.

Mr. INGRAM. Supposing the hon. gentleman entered into an arrangement to grant every prayer they asked, does he intimate that they would not be satisfied with that arrangement, and that they would be back in a short time for additional money ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, the hon. gentleman misunderstood me. I did not say that if they got everything they asked they would not be satisfied, I had no idea of suggesting that. On the contrary, I think if parliament were prepared to give them all they asked in that Bill, they would be willing to stay away for quite a while. I think if they got an allowance of a trifle over a million dollars a year it would be a very adequate allowance.

Mr. INGRAM. I will put it in another way. Supposing this government and the North-west authorities entered into an agreement, agreed upon by both parties, does the hon. gentleman mean to say that that agreement would be broken within a short period, and that they would be back here for an additional amount ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The experience of the government is that in governmental matters you cannot make a bargain, agreed to by both parties, that will bind people not to come back again if it does not meet the necessities of the case. If it does not enable them to discharge their financial responsibility, then they will come back. It does not make any difference whether you make a bargain with them or not, they will come back any way.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman says that if they did enter into an agreement with them they would come back in a short time.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The question whether they would come back for further assistance depends upon whether you make a permanent arrangement which will enable them properly to discharge the functions they have to discharge. My hon. friend will see that my argument has been to show that circumstances are changing so fast that the wisdom of man cannot devise any arrangement, such as this parliament would sanction, which at the present time would enable them to discharge the financial requirements of their position.

Mr. INGRAM. The longer you wait the more difficulties there will be, I suppose.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not at all. I think for the next few years circumstances will change very rapidly in the North-west Territories, and I think that when they acquire a population of 600,000 or 700,000, which may not be very far away, then we shall have arrived at a position of affairs in which parliament can fairly understand what is ahead of the territories, and can fairly address themselves to the question of permanently settling the financial status of those territories.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Minister of the Interior has referred to the very explicit statement or demand by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver), with regard to the amount of subsidy. I will mention to him, however, that the views of my hon. friend from Alberta with regard to the granting of provincial autonomy to these territories, do not seem to be quite so clear ; because, so far as I was able to understand that hon. gentleman, he said that if we passed a Bill for that purpose such as exactly suited him, it would be entirely satisfactory to him. That is about as near as he could get the hon. gentleman to commit himself.

Mr. OLIVER. Was not that clear enough?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I admire my hon. friend's caution. Now with regard to the details of the Bill, with which I am not at all familiar, as I have not had an opportunity of seeing it—I do not think those details have much to do with the question. It is a question which will have to be dealt with by this government, it is a question of course, which should be dealt with in a manner satisfactory to the territories for the time being. But because the government of the territories submits a Bill which this government does not regard as satisfactory, that of itself is hardly a sufficient reason for putting off a settlement of this question for four or five years. I would like to say to the Minister of the Interior, that some of the reasons which he has advanced for not dealing with this question at the present time seem to be reasons for never dealing with it. He speaks of the question of population. Now we do not apprehend that population in the North-west Territories is going to stand still after the expiration of four or five years. It will probably continue to increase, at least we hope it will, at the rate of 60,000, 70,000 or 80,000 every year, and that for many years to come. My hon. friend suggests that the question should be put off four or five years, or until the population attains 600,000 or 700,000 people. Well, is there any particular reason why the people of the North-west Territories, when they have attained the number of 200,000 or 300,000, should not be entrusted with the government of their own territory? My hon. friend refers to the fact that they have a very rich country, a country of great resources. Is it not true that we may place the same confidence in the people of that country as we place in the people of other communities in Canada? Is there any special reason to suppose they will unduly mortgage their future? There is not a province in Canada that is not capable at this very moment of abusing its borowing powers so as to make itself hopelessly bankrupt, not one; and why should it be supposed that these people are any more likely to abuse their borrowing powers than the people of Ontario, Quebec, or the maritime provinces? I am glad to note that my hon. friend regards the school question in that country as satisfactorily settled, and I trust that it is so. With regard to his view that if terms were made with that territory now these gentlemen would come again year by year, I suppose that is more an argument of convenience, from the standpoint of the government, than otherwise. It does not seem to possess much value, even from that standpoint, because the people of the North-west Territories are coming every year, as it is now, and if they should continue to come it will occasion no greater inconvenience to the government than it has in years past.

I do not see that the financial question, or the question of making an arrangement on a per capita basis, if it is an adequate reason now, will not be an adequate reason in the future for preventing these territories from having self-government. My hon. friend says that it is difficult to arrange it upon a per capita basis and that even the proposal which has been suggested of holding a census at frequent intervals is not sufficient. How will my hon. friend deal with it at the expiration of four or five years? Will not exactly the same difficulty present itself then to the government that presents itself now? We do not suppose that the population of the territories will not continue to increase by leaps and bounds after the next four or five years, and will there not, therefore, always be the same difficulty that exists now? My hon. friend did not make himself very clear to me on that point, because I do not see, if there is a certain difficulty now existing which the government has to face, that it will not present itself in the future if the settlement is delayed for four or five years. There is, it seems to me, a strong reason for lending an ear to what these people demand in this respect, and it is that the people of the North-west Territories will be more adequately represented in respect to local matters if they possess provincial autonomy than they are at present. Certain branches of their government are dealt with here as my hon. friend has stated in his speech. If provincial autonomy were granted to them, if they had the right of provincial self-government, then, such matters would be dealt with in their own legislature by gentlemen who are more familiar with the wants and necessities of that country than the majority of the members of this committee. I feel, here, that the great majority of the members of this House are not adequate—if I may be pardoned for the use of the word—to the discussion of these subjects because they do not understand the country, because they do not understand the people, or their wants, or necessities as well as the people who live in that country, or as well as hon. members from that country. In that respect it would be a very important advance in the government of that country if these local matters, which are ordinarily assigned to provincial governments, should be dealt with by the people of the North-west Territories themselves, through their representatives in their own provincial assemblies. I do not pretend to have given this subject sufficient consideration to make my remarks of any great value. What I have said is merely my impression gathered from what has been placed before the committee to-night so fully and ably by my hon. friends on both sides of the House from the North-west Territories, and from statements which have been made by the hon. Minister of the Interior; but, having regard to the information which I have derived from these hon. gentlemen, it does seem to me that the hon. Minister of the Interior is inclined to unduly postpone the granting of provincial rights to the people of the North-west Territories in stating that it is not a matter which can be properly or reasonably considered until the expiration of four or five years from the present time.

Mr. BOYD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to correct a wrong impression which the hon. Minister of the Interior derived from my remark about the Indian Head meeting. What I wished to convey to the committee was, while the meeting was divided as to whether the boundaries of Manitoba should be extended into the territories, or whether they should have provincial government in the territories as they are now known, if I could gather anything from the meeting at all, it was that there was the greatest possible unanimity that some form of local government should prevail.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is time for a change.

Mr. BOYD. Apparently that is the way they viewed it. I think we must admit that it is an unfortunate thing, after the experience which the hon. gentleman, now the head of his department, has had in Manitoba, if an arrangement cannot be arrived at which will be satisfactory. There might have been some excuse in the years gone by with the government that preceded the present government in total ignoraunce of Manitoba at that time, but I think that it is unfortunate, to say the least, that at this time and with the experience that these men have had of the west, we are not able to agree on some form of government here. I am pleased that this debate has brought out something that it is quite evident was not known at the time of the Indian Head meeting. I heard many of the people say after the meeting that they were pleased to have Mr. Haultain placed in such a position that they could understand where he was. It is evident that Mr. Haultain has not been able to ascertain exactly where the hon. Minister of the Interior stood. However, I think that this debate has brought forth very clearly the fact that he, for the present, at least, is not prepared to say that they should have provincial government in the west for the next four or five years. It is quite clear that has been brought forth and also it has been brought out that the form of school legislation that they now have would have been satisfactory to him. I, for my part, trust that it may be and whatever will satisfy them will satisfy me. We have also had brought forth in the debate the fact that the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) is not in favour of a provincial government.

Mr. DOUGLAS. You are mistaken.

Mr. BOYD. Not at the present time. The hon. gentleman wants four or five years delay.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I did not define.

Mr. BOYD. He is not very definite. We know where he stands. We know where the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) stands, but we are not so fortunate as to the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). He will probably tell his constituents all about it. I am quite free to admit that if the government are not going to give the people of the North-west this form of government I will support a proposal to increase the amount of the subsidy to them. While I do not suppose it would affect the action of the present government, I do not mind telling hon. gentlemen what my position is in regard to the form of government in that country. I believe we should have two provinces in that country. The experience which we have had in the country from which the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) and the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) come, I think, shows us that a multiplicity of governments is not the wisest or the best thing to have. But, in the west, I do not think it would be wise to have three or four small governments. Nor do I believe that the people of that country, or the members of this House will be satisfied if you say to them: We propose to form one government in the North-west Territories and to constitute a province comprising 1,250,000 square miles alongside of another province with 250,000 square miles. I do not think that the people of the western country will be satisfied with that; at least, I do not believe the people of Canada will approve of it, nor do I think the people of Canada will look upon it as a fair distribution of the territory, but I do think that if it is fairly discussed and laid before the people of Canada, they will agree that there is room for two large and prosperous provinces in that country. That will be extending the boundaries of Manitoba a reasonable distance, and that each of them shall be in that way sufficiently large. I do not hesitate to say that this is my view, and the government is welcome to the benefit of it; not that I expect they will give attention to any opinion that I may express on the subject.

Mr. SCOTT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyd) has endeavoured to explain the reference he made to the feeling expressed at the Indian Head meeting. I understood him to say that the people were divided there on the question as between one or two provinces.

Mr. BOYD. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. The question as between one or two provinces in the North-west Territories on which the people are divided, is as between two provinces or one province to be made up out of the present organized territories. The Indian Head meeting was called to hear a discussion between the premier of the territories and the premier of Manitoba on the question as to whether the North-weset Territories should be formed into a province, or whether part of the North-west Territories should be placed in the province of Manitoba, which is an entirely different question. My hon. friend the Minister of the Interior stated that there were various opinions amongst the people of the territories, and that in certain parts of the territories there was a feeling in favour of a portion being placed in the province of Manitoba. I would bring to the attention of the House that within the last few days this matter was voted upon in the legislative assembly at Regina, and by a practically unanimous vote the representatives of the people in the legislature there decided that they did not wish any part of the North-west Territories to be placed in the province of Manitoba. There may be a few people scattered here and there who would not object to the annexation of some part of the territories to the province of Manitoba, but the opinion as expressed by the representatives of the people in their assembly was unanimously against division of the territories, by taking away any part lying to the westward of Manitoba and adding it to that province. I do not know that this debate upon provincial autonomy in all its phases is appropriate to a discussion of this item, but let me say a word with reference to certain 'demands,' if we may call them so, or, suggestions that were made by the responsible people representing the North-west Territories. The Minister of the Interior has quoted a clause in which they practically demand—or in which they suggest, at all events—that the public resources should be handed over to the local authority. The hon. minister also said that he doubted whether any agreement which the House of Commons at the present time could be got to accept, would be such an agreement as would not compel the North-west Territories to come back here within one or two years. That simply proves to my mind that the demands or suggestions made by the government of the North-west are not unreasonable. It may be that to a majority of the members of the House of Commons at the present time, they might seem unreasonable, but if, unless these suggestions are adopted, the position is going to involve a lack of permanency in the arrangement, then we must come to the conclusion that there is reason in the suggestion made by those who represent the North-west Territories.

I dealt at some length last session with this phase of the question, devoting myself not to an argument in favour of the proposition that the time had arrived, but to some phase of the terms which I thought ought to be arranged. I say now, as I said then, that I do not believe that any arrangement will have the basis of permanency, or that any arrangement will ever be arrived at that would be satisfactory to the people of the North-west, except an arrangement by which the public resources shall be handed over to the local authority, and that they shall be placed upon the same basis as are the people of the other provinces of Canada, except the province of Manitoba. Leaving that phase of the question, and turning to the item, it is evident that the people of the North-west Territories are not going to be granted provincial autonomy this year, and that being so, the local authority needs money to carry on this year's business. I accept what has been said by my hon. friend the minister, and I am glad to have the intimation that there will be an increase brought down in the supplementary estimates. But with regard to the reply he made to my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) respecting the fact that there were two sides to the question, even with regard to the estimate; I do not know that it would be fair to adopt that statement with too great positiveness. As I endeavoured to explain at an earlier stage, this in reality at the present time, is simply one of the ordinary services which parliament is in duty bound to provide for. With regard to every other department of government, the minister has the advice of officers who are directly responsible to him, as to the money he asks the House of Commons to vote; but with regard to this particular service the Minister of the Interior has no responsible officer who is in a position to declare whether the estimates that are submitted by the North-west government are reasonable estimates or not. I therefore say that the demand that is made by the North-west government has in a great measure to be accepted as final. The North-west authorities are the people who make the estimate; they are responsible to the electors there for the amount of the estimate which they present, and therefore this service is in a different position from probably any other service that the House of Commons has to provide for. The authorities there have this year stated that they need an amount approximating $600,000. As a matter of fact, estimates were brought down in the House of Assembly at Regina last week appropriating about $600,000. I accept with pleasure the intimation of the Minister of the Interior that an increase will be provided in the supplementary estimates, and I wish again to impress upon him as strongly as I can the real necessity for a very large and substantial increase.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is early yet, only two minutes past twelve, and we have a large subject before us. Possibly we cannot do better than discuss it fully even at this late hour of the night. To my mind we have a very serious problem to settle in the North-west. I look upon this question as one that will require the very best consideration this government can give to it. A new population is coming in to the North-west Territories; coming in from various countries, and no doubt that population will demand increased rights. To my mind, so long as the people of the North-west Territories consider themselves only as wards of this government, no spirit of self-reliance will ever assert itself amongst them. They will realize that they are dependant on us for the little bit of money we choose from year to year to dole out to them, and instead of becoming a great people, they will feel that they are simply the wards of the rest of the Dominion. Now, I would regard that as a matter of considerable importance. The sooner these people realize that they stand on the same basis as all other portions of the Dominion, the better it will be for Canada. Who has a right to say when provincial autonomy should be given to the North-west ? I do not claim that we here have any right to dictate to those people or coerce the North-west Territories to any form of government. When confederation was brought about we obtained our charter from the parliament of Great Britain ; but the parliament of Great Britain did not pass the British North America Act until the people of Canada asked it to do so; and when that parliament was asked by the people of Canada to crystallize into law a constitution for the united provinces, it did not hesitate to do so ; and it framed that constitution, I believe, entirely on the basis which we desired. Now, we stand in relation to the North-west Territories very much in the same position that the parliament of Great Britain did to the old provinces of Canada ; and to my mind, when the people of the North-west demand provincial autonomy, this parliament had better not hesitate one minute, but give them what they desire. I believe that will be better for the Dominion as a whole, and materially better for those people, more especially for the new population who are coming in, and who will join in giving effect to the new form of government which will be permanent ; and there will be a greater spirit of independence among the people. They will realize that they have their rights, that they are Canadians in the true sense of the word, and they will become better citizens. For my part, I would not for a single day withhold provincial autonomy from those people after we learn that they desire it. There seems to be some difference of opinion amongst the hon. members who come from that section of the country as to what the people of the North-west do desire. One hon. member says that in his section they are opposed to provincial autonomy, and other members say that the people in their sections take the opposite view. To my mind the best guide we can get is the government of the North-west Territories. Mr. Haultain, the Prime Minister of those territories, is certainly more immediately in touch with the requirements of that country and the sentiments of the people on the question than hon. members representing that country in this parliament. I find, in a letter which he has written to the hon. Minister of the Interior only within the past few weeks, he says :

> I am prepared to say that the time has arrived when the question of organizing the territories on a provincial basis ought to be a subject of serious consideration.

Mr. Haultain, we are told, is a good ruler and administrator, has economically handled every dollar handed over to him, stands high in the estimation of the people, has been kept in power for a considerable length of time, and seems to voice the requirements of the country. Therefore I am disposed to attach considerable weight to what he says.

We are told by our friends from the North-west Territories that there would be no cry if a sufficient amount of money were given by this parliament to the North-west Territories to meet their expenses. I am not sure that the whole thing is a matter of money. I think there is some sentiment above that. Those people realize that they are simply the children of the Dominion, being taken care of by the rest of the Dominion, that they have no such status as we have in Ontario, in Quebec or in the small province of Prince Edward Island. They feel that they are the wards of the nation, like the Indians, that we give them so much money and send police out to look after them. In that way they feel that they are not citizens of this great Dominion to the same extent as the people of all the other provinces. I have no objection to vote more money to the North-west Territories. I think the present allowance is too small for their growing needs, and I do not think the government will meet with any opposition if they increase the grant. At any rate, we cannot afford to have those people feel that they are not treated fairly. We shall have to submit very largely to what they determine to be best in their own interest, and if we can satisfy them more readily by giving them provincial autonomy than by giving them a larger grant. I would say, give them provincial autonomy, and let us satisfy them in the best way we can. But if hon. gentlemen stand out and say that the time has not arrived for provincial autonomy, and that further demands must be made on the treasury of this country, in order that adequate assistanec, as we are told, may be given to them to meet their requirements, the best thing they can do to obtain that adequate assistance, is to join in giving adequate protection to the industries in the east where a large part of this money comes from, and then they will have better hope of fulfilling their expectations. Hon. members from the west must sink some of these small ideas which they have, and become men of broad minds ; and when they want to get an adequate sum to carry on the affairs of their country, they must deal on adequate terms with the rest of the Dominion, where a large part of the money is raised.

I hope the day is not far distant when we will realize that another great province has been added to the Dominion. If there is the slightest fear that there is going to be trouble in the west over the question, I hope that the government will at once take the matter into their most serious consideration. They should not have allowed the simple matter of the Finance Minister having to go on a pleasure trip to England, or the visit of a royal personage to Canada, or any reason of that kind to prevent their taking up this question. Let us have the question settled before any trouble arises which might perhaps cause another rebellion in the North-west.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think we might very well now adjourn. In any case there is no quorum, and considerable business has been done.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance House adjourned at 12.20 a.m. Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 21, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

ORTHODOX RUSSO-GREEK CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta) moved that the report of the Committee on Standing Orders on a petition of the Right Rev. Tikhon for an Act of incorporation under the name of 'the Bishop of the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church' be referred back to the said committee for obtaining their recommendation for the introduction of the Bill, notwithstanding rule 49.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). This petition has already been twice referred to the Standing Orders Committee. The first time the committee reported that the rules of the House had not been complied with, and then my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) moved that it be referred back to the said committee for reconsideration. The committee has reconsidered the petition, and instead of amending their first report, they call the attention of the House to further objections to the petition, to the fact that the petitioner is not a British subject, and is not living in the British possessions, but that he is a resident of San Francisco, and an alien, as he admits himself in his petition. Now I do not know whether my hon. friend expects that this committee will stultify itself by making a different report than that which it has already twice made. Moreover, I do not know that the rules of the House will admit that this report may be referred back to the same committee without giving any reasons therefor. There is no reason adduced, there is no instruction asked to be given to the committee. The committee has considered the question twice very attentively, and I may say that the officers of the Crown were present at its meetings. In the first place the Solicitor General (Hon. Mr. Carroll), and in the second place both the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick)) and the Solicitor General were present, and the last report of the committee was made, in fact, at the suggestion of the Minister of Justice himself. I am not usually a supporter of the government, but on this occasion I think I will have to support them. I am not at all objecting to the incorporation of the Russo-Greek Church, but I think this should be done in a regular way, in such a way that the people who are most interested should know what is taking place. We are asked to incorporate a bishop, a foreigner, who resides in San Francisco, and who claims to be Bishop of the Greek Church in North America and of the Aleutian Islands, he wants to be recognized as such in his petition, and he wants to control the Greek Church in Canada. While my objections are perhaps not relevant to the point of order, I desire to say that in this very important matter we ought to make haste slowly. The committee has taken all these questions into consideration and found everything irregular. The petition itself that came before the Committee on Standing Orders is not even endorsed by the member who presented it to the House, there is no responsible name to the petition, it is irregular in every way, and we cannot expect that the Committee on Standing Orders will stultify itself by reconsidering for the third time a question they have already sufficiently considered. I am not a member of that committee, and, contrary to the statement made by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton), I did not take advantage of my position as a member of the committee to bring about the report which was made. I was there as a private member, and I was there as a representative of a portion of the population that it is sought to incorporate without their knowledge. I have one or two thousand of these people in my riding, and it is for that reason that I protest against the way things are arranged, and the way in which the incorporation has been sought. I raise the point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I ask your decision upon it.

Mr. OLIVER. May I make a statement, or at least give the hon. member some information in regard to the motion that I have made? I understood him to say that it was indefinite, that the Bill was asked to be reported without consideration. My motion asks that the Bill be referred to the committee for the purpose of getting the committee to recommend the Bill for the consideration of the House. We understand that that was the understanding of the House, and I supposed it was the understanding of the committee. There has been a mistake somewhere, I think. The committee has reported on the Bill, but has not reported the Bill, which I understand was the intention of the committee. The report of the Committee on Standing Orders may be found on page 338 of the Votes and Proceedings, and is as follows :—

In obedience with the Order of the House of the 15th instant, your committee have again taken into consideration the petition of the Right Reverend Tikhon, of the city of San Francisco, California, bishop of the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church, for North America and the Aleutian Islands, for an Act of incorporation. The attention of your committee having been drawn to the fact that the petitioner in this case is, by his own admission, an alien, living in a foreign land, and desiring as such to be created a corporation sole within the Dominion of Canada, they beg to report the same for the information of your House.

Now I read that report as reporting the Bill to the House. But I am informed that another construction can be placed upon it, and that it does not report the Bill to the House ; and that therefore the Bill is not and cannot properly come before the House without further consideration by the committee. As I read the report the Bill is reported to the House, but in deference to the views of other parties I have to ask the House to refer it back to the committee so that there may be no mistake.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). As chairman of the committee, I may say that there is a little misunderstanding. The point having been called to the attention of the committee that the petitioner appeared, on the face of the petition, to be a non-resident of Canada, I understood the committee to decide that the point should be called to the attention of the House and that only, as regards notice the petition is all right, but that the point should be called to the attention of the House; therefore, nothing more was said and the petition was accepted with that understanding. Of course, there was a haziness about it. My own impression is that when it was considered it was the intention that the petition should go before the House in the usual way and that the committee should simply call the attention of the House to that particular point in order that it might be considered by the House. As far as that point is concerned the committee expresses no opinion, but I think it would be well that it should go back to the committee to have the question settled as to whether the committee intended to recommend the Bill in calling attention to that point.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly evident from the proceedings which have come before the House in connection with this Bill, that technical objections are sought to be raised as against this Bill for the purpose of preventing the House from considering its merits. In the first place we had the objection raised as to insufficiency of notice. It went back and it was perfectly evident that the notice was substantially sufficient. When the question of the residence of the petitioner was suggested, it was of course admitted by everybody that it was a question either for the House, itself, to consider, or for the House to consider through its committee on private Bills. But, what is attempted now is to prevent the House from considering that fact altogether. This House, itself, either in proper session, or through its committee on private Bills, ought to consider objections such as those that have been raised. If the objection to the consideration of this Bill be raised under a rule of the House, then, it is quite clear, that it is not customary to enforce that rule. The precedents upon the subject are quite clear. I would ask your attention, Mr. Speaker, to Bourinot, page 320 :

Aliens, not resident in this country, have strictly no right to petition parliament. In the case of applications for private bills, however, this rule is not enforced. It was agreed in 1878, at the suggestion of Mr. Speaker Anglin, to receive a petition from the Hartford directors of the Connecticut Mutual Insurance Company, on the ground that it was a mutual company, partly composed of Canadians, and that it was the subject of parliamentary legislation, the company being required to make a certain deposit before doing business in the country. In 1883, a petition from certain persons in the city of Portland in the state of Maine, asking for an Act of incorporation, was received on the ground that the subject matter came within the jurisdiction of the House, as in the case already cited. The reception of such petitions may be considered as an act of grace.

While a petition has been presented and has gone to the Committee on Standing Orders, I understand that the members of the committee and the promoter of the Bill understood that the Bill was being reported to the House. After it had gone to them, as was quite proper, it was called to the attention of the committee that the petitioner was an alien and they desired to call the attention of the House to the fact, so that the House might consider it and might, in its judgment, agree to the usual grace being extended to this petition. I submit that the House ought not to put this petitioner in the position of not being able to get before us at all. Having complied with the rules so far as notice is concerned, having done everything that the law requires him to do, and the Bill having been passed upon by the Standing Orders Committee, he should be put in the position of being able to come before the House and of having it decided by the House whether his Act of incorporation should be passed or not. Certainly, he has that right, and every person who comes asking for legislation has that right. If this House decides that it will not extend the usual grace to him but that on the ground that he is an alien it will refuse to give him the legislation which he requires, and I am not going to assume that the House will decide in that way at all, he certainly has a right to have a decision from the House. If it be necessary under the terms of the report, as the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has read it—that is a matter upon which you, Mr. Speaker, will rule—if it be necessary that the Bill shall go back to the Standing Orders Committee in order that the committee may amend this report, I submit, that it is only fair and just to the petitioner that he should have a decision from this House on the merits of his Bill.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I think there is only one matter before the House and that is: Does the report convey what the committee agreed to? I certainly understood that the committee was to report the Bill with the statement that they did this for the information of the House, because the petitioner had, in the petition, represented himself as a citizen of the United States, and that the matter would come up in connection with the Bill. Certainy, I agree that the Bill should not be left with the committee without coming back at all. The question is: Does the report of the committee bring back the Bill to this House? I think it is very doubtful. I think that while I would inquire into the standing of this man that the Bill ought to come back here as the committee agreed and then we will take action. I do not say that I will vote for the Bill, but, if it comes back, it will come back from the committee, and, as I understand, they were to report on the Bill, adding the words that were there. As we have had the report the committee do not report the Bill at all. I think we should have the Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER. Objection is raised to this motion which has been made by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) and which demands that the report of the committee presenting this petition shall be referred back to the Committee on Stand-Orders. If I understand the situation, a petition was presented some time ago by this reverend gentleman, and was received by the House. The petition has been actually received by the House and has been referred to the Standing Orders Committee. Now, I think also that the petition, even though it be signed by an alien, can be received by this House if the House is disposed to receive it. I see that in many instances, especially concerning private Bills, petitions signed by some aliens have been received. This petition has been before the Standing Orders Committee, a report has been made upon it and the report according to the motion is not satisfactory. I think that the motion to refer back that report to the committee is absolutely in order.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). The only thing referred to this House is a particular fact regarding the Bill, and the Bill is before the committee yet to report on it or not as they see fit. In view of this, I submit with great respect that this motion is entirely irregular. The committee have not technically reported on the Bill, but only on a fact in connection with it, and the House can deal with that or not as they see fit. I submit that there is nothing in the world to prevent the committee proceeding to deal with this Bill just as if this fact had not been reported to the House.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS—EXPENDITURE FROM 1895.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I wish to give notice that I will move to-morrow the motion which stands in my name.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I thought the Minister of Railways was to make his statement to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not until after the committee reports.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very well.

YUKON TERRITORY ACT.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 119) to further amend the Yukon Territory Act. He said: The first section of this Bill changes the wording of the clause which gives the Commissioner in Council of the Yukon territory jurisdiction, and the effect of the change is that in case of a conflict between an ordinance passed by the Governor in Council and an ordinance passed by the Commissioner in Council, the ordinance passed by the Governor in Council shall prevail. It is simply for the purpose of avoiding unnecessary litigation where there is a dispute in regard to jurisdiction. The Bill also gives the local council of the Yukon territory the control and regulation of the sale of intoxicating liquors in the territory. It will be observed by the House that that clause does not affect the section in the Act which deals with the manufacture of liquor in the Yukon territory. The second section refers to the sittings of the court. The third section makes an important change in connection with the local council of the territory. It is the view of the government that matters have now arrived at the stage at which a further measure of representative government may be extended to the Yukon territory, and it is therefore provided in accordance with the application of the Yukon council: That instead of two elected representatives in the local council there shall hereafter be five. The fourth section of the Bill amends the clause which relates to the powers of the Governor in Council respecting the territories. The amendment as drawn removes the prohibition as against the Governor in Council imposing a tax in that territory, but I desire to explain to the House that this clause was drafted by error, and I will ask an amendment to be made, the exact terms of which I will announce on the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How many members will compose the council under this Bill?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are five appointed members now, and there will be five elected; with the commissioner.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 120) to amend the Dominion Lands Act. He said: I need not explain in detail the different sections of this Bill, but the purport of it and the effect of it if passed will be: To provide that hereafter sales of land and homestead entries which may be granted in the North-west Territories shall be subject to the provision that the government of the North-west Territories may open a road not more than 66 feet wide and comprising not more than 5 per cent of the particular parcel of land in question, without paying anything for the right of way. That is to say: Homestead entries and sales shall be subject to the right of the government of the North-west Territories to open a road across the lands sold. It is found that a large number of roads have to be opened by the government other than on the road allowances, and the difficulty of opening these roads is largely increased by demands for compensation for the right of way. I have thought that we should assist them to the best of our ability by providing that hereafter, lands when sold shall be subject to the right of the North-west government to open a road without paying anything for the right of way. The details are worked out in the Bill. There was formerly a similar provision with respect to the right of way of the Canadian Pacific Railway so that there is no special difficulty in practice in working this arrangement out.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT—AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 121) further to amend the Acts respecting the North-west Territories. He said: The intention of this Bill is to give the Legislative Assembly of the North-west power to pass ordinances in regard to road allowances which have been handed over to the territorial governments. There is also provision as to the returns of the survey being filed after the change in road allowances is made.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ALIEN LABOUR ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Vancouver) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 122) to further amend the Act to restrict the importation and employment of aliens.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. SMITH (Vancouver). The object of the amendment which I propose by this Bill, is to put the enforcement of the Alien Labour Act in charge of the Minister of Labour, instead of the Attorney General as now. I propose to amend the Act so as to give effect to section 6. The House will remember that since certain amendments were made to the Alien Labour Act last session, the government have interpreted the law to mean that they have nothing at all to do with the enforcement of the Act. The amendment in this Bill will give effect to section 6, so that the government will be called upon to send out their commissioner at the request of the labour unions to investigate any complaint with regard to the importation of alien labour into the country, and to report on each case, and if necessary deport them.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

REPORTS PRESENTED.

List of shareholders of chartered banks.—The Minister of Finance.

Report of commissioners appointed to inquire into the alleged paper combine.—The Minister of Finance.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 69) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. Guthrie.

On section 11,

Mr. OLIVER moved:

That section 11 of the said Bill be amended by striking out the words, 'at such rates as may be fixed by agreement.'

He said: I do not wish to detain the committee; but this section incorporates the railway company as an irrigation company. I have no objection to that whatever; but as the only irrigation district in Canada is within the constituency which I represent and the adjoining constituency, I feel bound to be satisfied as to what the law is in regard to irrigation in that district. It seems to me that the words which I have moved to strike out conflict with the general Irrigation Act, chapter 35 of 1898, section 51 of which provides that 'the minister may regulate from time to time the water rates which may be charged by licensees, and the publication of tariffs of rates.' My contention is that if we empower the company specifically in this Act to charge such rates as may be agreed upon, we relieve them from the control of the general Irrigation Act in that particular, which I need hardly say is the most important provision in the Act. I am anxious to have this question clearly decided before allowing the section to pass. If the words of the section do not conflict with the provision in the general Act, then I wish to withdraw all opposition to it; but if there is a possibility of these words conflicting with that vital power in the general Act, then I would respectfully ask that they be struck out.

Mr. SCOTT. The power to be conferred by section 11 of this Bill is, I understand, to be exercised wholly within the district of Alberta, and the district which I represent. I may say that I have no objection to urge generally. On the contrary, I am very pleased to know that a strong company like the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, having financial ability, has in contemplation the construction and operation of irrigation works, likely to largely promote the development of the country. But while I have no objection to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company obtaining the powers of an irrigation company, I have objection to them being put in a position different from that of other irrigation companies already organized, or which may hereafter be organized. Other companies are under the general irrigation laws subject to public control of rates. It may be that the words which we move to strike out of section 11 do not relieve the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from such control, but if the words do not have this effect, then it seems to me they are wholly unnecessary. At all events they may serve to cast a doubt, and give rise to difficulty. If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as an irrigation company, is to be exactly on the footing of other companies, the words which we wish to be struck out are unnecessary.

Mr. GUTHRIE. This matter was fully considered when the Bill was in committee, and if hon. members will study the clause they will find that it only applies to lands now owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway. As regards their own lands the company can surely claim the right, which any individual enjoys, of making what agreements they please for the furnishing of water, but the moment they seek to go off their own lands, or in what are known as the even number sections, the general Irrigation Act will apply to them as well as it does to other companies. The saving clause which defines the whole position is the following:

> At such rates as may be fixed by agreement, and for the purposes aforesaid, generally exercise the powers of irrigation.

That puts it beyond reasonable doubt that the moment that company seek to irrigate lands not their own they will come within the scope of the general Act.

Mr. OLIVER. The ownership of lands does not relieve the owner from the control of the government in the sale or disposal of the water, which is specifically declared by the Act to be the property of the Crown. The owner is given the privilege of selling that which belongs to the public, but only at such a price as may be fixed by the Minister of the Interior. It makes no difference, under the general Act, who owns the land. The point is that the country owns the water and has the right of fixing the rates at which that water shall be sold, and when you allow the Canadian Pacific Railway to fix its own rates, you are relieving it from the general operation of the Act and enabling it to sell public property at such figures as it may choose to fix, thus giving it a privilege by statute over every other irrigation company. That is absolutely contrary to the spirit and intention of the Irrigation Act.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). When this matter came up before the Railway Committee it had not previously attracted my attention, and when the general proposition was advanced by some member of the committee that this company, as an irrigation company, would be subject to the general Irrigation Act, I felt that except, in so far as the company might by statute be exempted from the operation of that Act, the proposition was well stated, and, in a general way, I expressed my assent to the statement of the law as made. On further consideration I am inclined to modify the view I then expressed as respects this particular portion of the clause. The company, it is true, has only asked for powers to construct irrigation works upon its own property, but the concluding portion of section 11 contemplates that the water which it may conduct through its own property, it may dispose of to municipalities or individuals who may own property adjoining or contiguous to that of the company, or be within reach of the company's operations. In that case it does not strike me that the company is simply providing water to persons who may occupy its own property but is obtaining a general irrigating power. And when they do so supply all persons outside, I would think it only reasonable and just that the provisions of the general law should apply, which says that the rates shall be fixed in accordance with its provisions. In that view, the words which are proposed to be struck out by the motion, it seems to me, might properly be struck out, so I support the amendment. I think there is no difficulty or trouble at all likely to arise from that, because the provisions of the general law are ample to enable this company which is supplying the general public to do so under as favourable circumstances as any other irrigation company that may be incorporated.

Amendment agreed to, and Bill, as amended, reported; read the third time, and passed.

LAKE CHAMPLAIN AND ST. LAWRENCE SHIP CANAL COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 103) respecting the Lake Champlain and St. Lawrence Ship Canal Company.—Mr. Geoffrion.

On section 1,

Mr. LaRIVIERE. At the request of the party acting on behalf of the company, who have met this morning in Montreal, and in the absence of Mr. Geoffrion, I would move that the names of Thomas Craig, of Montreal, and W. Dale Harris, of Ottawa, be added to the list of directors. I take it that there will be no objection.

Amendment agreed to, and Bill, as amended, reported; read the third time, and passed.

THE NORTH SHORE POWER, RAILWAY AND NAVIGATION COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 73) to incorporate the North Shore Power, Railway and Navigation Company.—Mr. McCarthy.

On the preamble,

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has this Bill anything to do with the North Shore Navigation Company?

Mr. McCARTHY. Not the slightest.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Are not the terms somewhat confusing? There is already a company incorporating the North Shore Navigation Company.

Mr. McCARTHY. Their place of business is going to be down east of the Saguenay, 300 miles below Quebec. I don't think there is any chance of their coming into conflict.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not the slightest.

On section 6,

Mr. ROSAMOND. I think these are altogether too wide powers to give to any company. Everything under the sun is taken in.

Mr. McCARTHY. I could not hear what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rosamond) said. I am in charge of the Bill if the hon. gentleman wants any explanations.

Mr. ROSAMOND. What explanation or excuse is there for giving such extensive powers to this company? About every trade and business in the country is to be carried on by this company.

Mr. McCARTHY. The power, as far as manufacturing industries is concerned, is limited to the territory east of the Saguenay river on the north shore of the St. Lawrence. The territory is an absolute wilderness. The incorporators of this company have purchased about 600 miles of limits, they have acquired a water power on the Marguerite river and their business operations will be carried on at Bay of Seven Islands. That company is going into a district in which there is no habitation, which is an absolute wilderness and it will have to develop as it goes ahead. While the powers which it asks for are considerable, I think the hon. gentlemen will agree with me that, having regard to the circumstances, they are not too great. They will enter there and they will immediately have to put up a saw mill and a pulp mill as the limits will require both a saw mill and a pulp mill. They may find in that district clay out of which they can make brick and tile and they require the power that is given in the Bill for the purpose of enabling them to manufacture their own brick for the erection of buildings and other uses. They may find certain kinds of ore which can be manufactured there. Perhaps my hon. friend will agree with me when I say, that if they take sheep down there and find that they propagate and increase they may be allowed to sheer these sheep and manufacture the wool into material for the clothing of their employees.

Mr. ROSAMOND. What about the cotton mills?

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not know that they have discovered any cotton in that district. Having these matters in view the committee did not think the powers they were conferring upon this company were too great; in fact it was stated, that people who have the nerve to put their money into an enterprise of this kind and purchase the licenses and the territory upon which they are going to operate, asking no concessions from any body, ought to be encouraged to the fullest extent.

Mr. MONK. We should encourage them, but it seems to me that these powers are very extensive. I do not know all about that district, but it is a very wealthy district. There is very large mineral and timber wealth and I think there are companies already organized to work in that district. Although we must give the greatest encouragement to parties who are willing to invest their capital down there, we must not lose sight of the fact that this is a very rich district in natural resources. If my hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy) reads section 6 he will find that this company is authorized to do almost anything—build canals, for instance. Where will these canals be built?

Mr. McCARTHY. That is only for power purposes. The company's works are on the river six miles from the Bay of Seven Islands.

Mr. MONK. I am very glad to see a company extending its operations down there but I am afraid that these powers are too various and too numerous.

Mr. McCARTHY. Speaking as an Ontario member I may say that we are very sorry to lose them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it would be simpler to enumerate two or three things that the company may not do and say that it may do everything else. I do not observe any restrictions upon the operations of this company at all. My hon. friend (Mr. McCarthy) says they are restricted to a particular area. Where is that ?

Mr. McCARTHY. It is in the amendment, —east of the Saguenay river on the north shore of the St. Lawrence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If you go far enough east on the Saguenay river you can come round to it again and that practically takes in the whole earth.

Mr. McCARTHY. You cannot stay on the north shore of the St. Lawrence and come around to it again.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me absolutely unrestricted as to territory. Take only one of these clauses in the Bill and you will find a numerous variety of things in which this company may engage : The company may :

(b.) carry on the business, in all its branches, of manufacturing pulp wood, pulp, paper and all other business incident thereto ; and also the business of manufacturing and burning of bricks, tiles, drain pipes, terra cotta and other materials from clay ; and also the business of general merchants and general contractors ; and also the business of general manufacturers, millers, common carriers, wharfingers, warehousemen, and may construct, charter, acquire and navigate steam and other vessels between any port and place in Canada, and any other port or place in Canada or elsewhere ;

This is only one of many sections.

Mr. McCARTHY. If my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) would like to discuss the Bill clause by clause I think I could satisfy him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think some special reason ought to be advanced for giving a company such an enormous variety of powers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland). I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) what possible objection, from a public standpoint, there can be to giving these powers to a company to carry on the business enumerated in that clause ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Sutherland) a question. Why not incorporate the company under some general form of this kind : The company may carry on any business it sees fit in any part of the world ? Would the hon. gentleman think that a desirable class of legislation ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have not that power. As far as Canada is concerned, in my humble opinion, an enterprise of this kind must prove a public benefit. It is always difficult for me to understand why, when a Bill comes before the House incorporating a company which is raising capital to develop the country in a legitimate business way, there should be so much discussion and so much opposition to it. I believe it would be in the interest of the companies and in the interest of the public if we were to incorporate companies of this kind in a very simple way, making them subject to the laws of the country. I believe that almost every limitation is against the interests of the public and I believe that legislation interfering with enterprises of this kind which is supposed to be in the interest of the public and against the interests of the corporation, is very frequently against the interests of the public. Such limitations are not imposed upon companies in other countries doing business here. These companies, if they go on at all, simply go on by evading the law if the limitation put upon them is found to hamper their operations too severely. I feel very much interested in this class of legislation and I should like to know why we should not follow the example of England and the United States and give more liberal terms to companies like this which are investing their capital and carrying on a legitimate business in the country.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I presume that the powers conferred on this company could have been conferred upon it by the legislature of Quebec. It need not have come here at all for these powers and I take it that this House will be chiefly interested in securing the rights of the Dominion in this territory. There are very many parts of Quebec in which there are waterways and other resources of value to Canada as a whole, that might possibly be interfered with to the detriment of any similar company.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know if there is anything of that kind.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). As long as these interests are safeguarded I think the conferring of these powers would be all right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think this Bill must have been before the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee and that it did not get so far as the Railway Committee, because I have been attending the Railway Committee—

Mr. McCARTHY. It is reported from the Private Bills Committee.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, I am right in my conjecture. My interest in the Bill before the committee is as to how far the railway portion of it has been properly safeguarded. I see that power is taken also to 'maintain, construct, use and operate canals.' That language is very general.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is limited to the country below the Saguenay.

You will not be able to build any canals down there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I see also that the Bill states that the Railway Act is not to be applicable. If that has been amended so as to include the application of such provisions of the Railway Act as would be proper and necessary, I would not have any serious objection to the Bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That section is amended.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have seen the Bill since it came to the House, and I do not see that the ordinary clauses of the Railway Act which are made applicable to railway undertakings apply in this Bill, but only certain amendments which were made to the general Railway Act in 1890.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is so. If the members of this committee understood the conditions under which this company will be called upon to operate, they would realize that there is nothing dangerous in the powers conferred in this Bill. The operations of the company are limited to that territory on the north shore of the St. Lawrence which is east of the Saguenay river. That means that they are going into a country that is at the present time almost absolutely a barren desert.

Mr. MONK. Not barren.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have fished and hunted over this part of the country and there is not one inhabitant to a hundred square miles. Perhaps the word barren does not apply, but there is practically nothing there except timber, minerals and fish. There is, however, in that district possibly the best harbour on the St. Lawrence, east of Quebec, and known as the Bay of Seven Islands ; a bay which is 25 miles wide, and which is the only harbour of refuge on the north shore of the St. Lawrence east of Tadousac. These gentlemen have bought 1,000 miles of limits down in that territory and it is their intention to develop these limits. They have also acquired a very extensive water power. Up to the present time, almost all the pulp wood of that territory has been exported to the United States, but the intention is to populate that country so that we may manufacture our own timber into pulp. They must have means to export that pulp. This territory is absolutely inaccessible for seven months in the year, and for the other five months it is only accessible by water, there being a bi-monthly service by steamer from Quebec. The territory of this company does not extend as far as the Bay of Seven Islands but they have acquired a stretch of land fronting on the bay where they propose to build wharfs, and to which they wish to have communication by a railway, ten or twelve miles long, in order that they may bring their pulp down to the harbour. A mile, or a mile and a half back from the shore there is nothing but mountains, so that this short railroad must run alongside the shore. It is absolutely necessary that they should have this railway to the Bay of Seven Islands in order to export the products of their mills. I said that the country was barren, and I was perhaps very properly corrected by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). The country is not barren, but it is practically uninhabited and it will be necessary for the company to bring people down there and to provide them all the necessaries of life. They therefore ask to have a grist mill, to have a farm, and to have all these things which are necessary to start this new company in a country which at the present time affords absolutely no facilities for business. While these powers may appear extraordinary, I would remind the House that they are limited to this territory on the north shore of the St. Lawrence east of the Saguenay, and the company is not going to enter into serious competition with industries in other parts of Canada. Suppose that even they had power to operate a cotton mill, they could not compete with cotton mills elsewhere. I would point out that last year this House gave just as extensive powers to the Ottawa and Hull Power Company, and moreover, they gave to that company the right to operate throughout the whole of Canada and elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What Bill was that ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Chapter 108, 1 Edward VII. In view of the fact that we have limited the operations of this company to the territory I have described, and in view also of the precedent created last year, I think we can well afford to let this Bill go through.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not wish to be understood as endeavouring to create any difficulty about the passing of this Bill. It may be quite true that this territory is comparatively unpeopled to-day and there may be no town or villages and no public highways, but if there be even one public highway it is liable to be crossed by the railway.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Draw the amendment the way you want it.

Mr. McCARTHY. The railway is only ten miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But ten miles of railroad may cross at least one highway, and there are strong reasons why it should be subjected to the Railway Act. There may be many highways 3 or 4 years hence, and we are creating a railway corporation with power to obstruct the highways, and we ought to see, in granting that power, that the company is made subject to all the provisions which govern railways.

Mr. WADE. I would suggest as to section 15, which provides that the Railway Act shall not apply to the company, the words be added 'except as respects the company's undertaking.'

Mr. MONK. Does not the Minister of Justice think some of these clauses are a little too general? I am glad to see that this company has succeeded in acquiring a thousand square miles of territory, because, although not inhabited much at present, it is a very rich territory. There is a pulp industry at Chicoutimi which sells its whole output to England at $18 a ton, and I think it is kept very busy. Here is a clause which states that 'the company may construct, acquire, use, maintain and operate canals, watercourses, raceways, and water powers, and construct dams, sluices, conduits and buildings in connection therewith.'

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Let that power be limited, if you wish, to be exercised in connection with their enterprise.

Mr. MONK. They have also power 'to lease and acquire rights and privileges with respect to fisheries and fishing in the waters of the St. Lawrence river and gulf and streams emptying therein.' I question very much if that clause would satisfy what population there is down there. We may find this company in the position of those two powerful companies which acquired such large fishing rights in Gaspé that they are considered to-day to be a considerable deterrent to the advancement of the county.

Mr. McCARTHY. I move that subsection 'j' be amended by adding the words 'in connection with their undertaking.'

Mr. ROSAMOND. The hon. gentleman in charge of this Bill mentioned that the company are bringing down sheep, and that they propose starting a woollen factory. I think there must be an omission from that clause, because if they bring down the sheep, it would be well for them to make provision for tanning the sheepskins. Therefore, I would suggest that a tanning business be added.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have no objection.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to ask the promoter of this Bill whether he seriously means us to carry sub-clause 'd,' which provides that the company may carry on the business of farming and stock-raising. I do not know that this parliament is accustomed to license companies to carry on a farming business. I have heard with a good deal of interest what the Minister of Justice said about the country being uninhabited; but I protest against this company going into an uninhabited country and doing all the farming there instead of bringing in immigrants. Apparently no immigrant can go into that country to engage in farming unless he deals with this corporation. I think we ought to have some restriction placed upon this company, that will bring in the policy of the immigration department of this government, so that we may know whether immigrants are to be excluded from going into that uninhabited country, unless they make such arrangements with this company as it thinks fit. It seems to me that this is nothing but a hugh trust or monopoly for that part of the country.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Will my hon. friend explain what he means when he says that this company is a trust? The Bill authorizes the company to run a farm.

Mr. LANCASTER. I ask you to restrict this company so that it will not have power to prevent any one else going there to farm.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My trouble is to understand what is in this Bill to prevent any one going there to farm.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is but one clause that prevents it. You ought to embody in the Bill a provision that the company may engage in banking.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They have a good substitute for money in that part of the country, where the people use little bits of paper called pitons. I cannot see anything in the Bill which prevents a man going there to farm. It simply gives the company the right to farm, but does not prevent any one else doing so.

Mr. LANCASTER. This is the first time I have known any incorporated company to be given that power.

Mr. WADE. This company, I think, owns a thousand miles of land. Will any hon. gentleman tell us what possible objection there is to allowing it to farm that land; or if there are any minerals there, to its being allowed to mine or smelt them; or, if there is timber, to its being allowed to cut that timber or manufacture it into pulp. What reason is there for preventing the company utilizing their thousand miles of territory in any may they possibly can? These gentlemen, by going into the state of New Jersey and filing their application, could have created themselves into a legal entity, and could have come here and done everything they ask for power to do under this charter. Or they could have gone to Nova Scotia and done the same thing or, I understand, in Ontario, under the Joint Stock Companies Act. Certainly they could do so with us, or they could have gone down to Maine and have got it. Is there any objection to their working that property in every possible way, I do not care how, that will make it most productive. Hon. gentlemen make objections to this kind of charter but they do not say what their objections are or what hardship or possible wrong can be accomplished under it.

Mr. HENDERSON. I assume of course that this company will have an exclusive right, and that no other company or individual will be able to operate without its consent, because the company owns the land and can prevent anybody else going upon it. It seems to me then that it makes very little difference to us what power we grant it. But it is quite possible that when this company secures incorporation, it may not carry out more than a very small fraction of the powers we are giving it. It is difficult for us to know, when Bills of this kind are introduced, just what the intention is, and I have no doubt that a great many Bills are drawn up in this way, with the intention of misleading the House and causing us to believe that the parties seeking incorporation are going to do a great many things, when they only intend doing two or three. The company asks power to carry on the business of lumberers, timber merchants and manufacturers of timber and lumber in all its branches. That gives it the power to cut all the timber on its territories and possibly it will do nothing more. For my part, I do not believe it will enter into one-twentieth part of all the other undertakings, for which it seeks incorporation, and therefore I think we should limit its powers as far as possible and have them exclusively exercised for the benefit of Canadians. One restriction we should put into this Bill would be to prevent this company from exporting a single stick of pulp wood, and compel it to do all its manufacturing in this country. When it is asking for such extraordinary powers, we should hedge our grant around with everything that will compel the company to give the country something back in return instead of simply carrying away our natural products. The power in the first section will enable the company to cut all the timber on its property and export it from the country—to put as little labour into it as possible, and distribute as little money as possible in the country, which possibly would be the most profitable way for the company to conduct its operations. Before giving the company such extraordinary powers as it asks for, we should insist on some limitation in the interests of the people. I would suggest that the promoter of the Bill should agree to the insertion of a clause, which will prevent the export of pulp wood from this territory to any foreign country, and will oppose the Bill unless that be done.

Mr. McCARTHY. So far as the timber products of the company are concerned, they are entirely within the purview of the local government. When any one obtains the right to cut timber from a local government, he purchases that right subject to any restrictions which the local government may deem fit to impose from time to time. The Ontario government, for instance, some time ago prevented the export of pine logs, and altered the licenses they had given in this respect. There was a lawsuit, but the alteration was sustained, so that any man who purchases timber limits does so subject to the conditions and regulations of the Crown Lands Department of the province. Thus the purchase by this company from the Quebec government is subject to the regulations and conditions which that government may impose, and that government may impose an export duty on any pulp wood exported and not manufactured in the territory. I am informed, however, by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister that in the province of Quebec the license holders have to pay so much timber dues on the wood they cut, but if that wood is manufactured in the province, they are allowed a rebate. In Ontario the license holders have no right to export pine logs, and I think the same regulation applies also to pulp wood. When a lumber merchant purchases, as those seeking incorporation have done, he does so subject to the regulations and conditions imposed by the Minister of Crown Lands in the province of Quebec, so that I do not see why this House should interfere in the direction suggested. I might further add that the parties seeking incorporation have told me that their intention is to proceed at once to erect a large saw mill and pulp mill on the territory they have purchased and build up a large industry there. I may tell my hon. friend that his statement that these powers are asked for in order to mislead parliament is entirely incorrect. It is necessary for people who are developing a country to have these powers. The hon. gentleman well knows that when the Sault Ste. Marie Company was incorporated, it began operating in pulp. Then the proprietors discovered mineral wealth in their territory, and immediately began developing that. Then they found that they required ships for navigation purposes, and immediately began to develop in that direction. All those who have gone into the work of developing the country have learned by experience that it is necessary they should obtain the powers mentioned in this Bill. It is most important that this company should have the right to acquire ships—more so than it is to the Sault Ste. Marie Company, because there is at present only bimonthly trips by steamer to that locality and ships do not call regularly there, and probably could not be induced to go there. These people will require the necessary ships to transport their supplies and materials in and the manufactured products out, and I do not think that we ought to curtail the powers they are asking. The incorporators of this company are all Canadians but one. The two first named gentlemen are old Toronto men who went to New York and made money there in the paper business and who desire to develop largely the territory they have acquired. One of them is a United States citizen, but the other is still a Canadian. The other members of the company are all Toronto men of substantial means. These people have paid their money for the limits and are going to a territory, which is now practically a wilderness, for the purpose of developing it as Canadians and for Canadians.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why is it, if the operations of this company are to be restricted to a portion of the province of Quebec, that this parliament is asked to incorporate it ?

Mr. McCARTHY. There are several powers which they would require to have from this parliament. For instance, there is the power of navigating.

Mr. BORDEN (Hailfax). I observe that.

Mr. McCARTHY. If they do manufacture pulp to a large extent, they will probably require their own ships to bring the product to the English and European markets.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not regard that incidental consideration as a sufficient justification for the interference of this parliament. I do not know what proof was laid before the committee that it is absolutely necessary that this company, which is entirely in the embryo at present—

Mr. McCARTHY. It is only in the embryo as regards its charter. It has acquired and paid for all this territory.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). These gentlemen have not yet commenced to manufacture so that the company, as regards its operations, is still entirely in the embryo, and I would not suppose that it was an absolutely necessary incident of a company formed for this purpose, that it should own its own ships. But if that be the case, the proper mode would be to go the provincial legislature, which has primary jurisdiction over this matter, namely, the legislature of Quebec, and seek incorporation there in the first instance. And then, when the company has been formed, if it is necessary that it should have this power, let it come and get that incidental power from this parliament. That has been done in many cases in the past and is the proper way to legislate, it seems to me. For, what we are doing is this—in order to grant an incidental power, such as is mentioned by the hon. gentleman and which may never be exercised by the company at all, we are invading the jurisdiction of the legislature of the province of Quebec, and, without giving any voice to the representatives of the people of that province in their legislature, we are dealing with a great multitude of subjects which are properly matters to be considered by the legislature and not by the Dominion parliament at all. I would like to know from the right hon. gentleman who leads the House (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether he regards this as a good mode of legislation. I raised this question once before during the present session and gave my opinion that the proper mode was to go to the provincial legislature for such powers as they could give, and not for this parliament to seize jurisdiction from them. I have not changed my mind on this subject, but so far as I have been able to give consideration to the matter, that seems to me the proper way. For otherwise you usurp the functions of the provincial legislature by dealing with ninety-nine things that they could properly deal with on the plea that there is one subject concerning which the company wishes powers and which can be dealt with only by this parliament.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The organization of capital for the development of industry is one of the latest achievements of civilization. It is quite within the memory of hon. members present that companies could not be incorporated except by an Act of parliament. Men who wished to associate for the purpose of carrying on business had to come to the legislature to get their powers. It was found, after this had been carried on for some time, that no danger would be incurred, and, on the other hand every good purpose would be served if, instead of parliament dealing with these matters, power were delegated to the government. An Act was passed in this country following similar Acts passed in the mother country and elsewhere, giving the government power to grant charters for certain purposes. That Act has been in force for about twenty-five years. Now it is found too cumbrous, and a Bill has been introduced in another branch of the legislature to facilitate the creation of corporations. For my part, I cannot see what objection there can be to granting to any corporation the amplest powers to engage in business which will develop the country. I can see that there is one ground for restriction, and that is that no company should be granted a monopoly. When the question of granting a monopoly arises, that introduces another principle. But I cannot see why this company should not be organized to do business in pulp, to engage in navigation or to do anything in the way of that kind of business, especially in such a territory as that which is to be the scene of this company's operations. If there were danger that this company would come into conflict with existing interests, we should carefully study its nature, but so far as I know the provisions of the Bill, no monopoly is given. We give this company power to carry on its business, but I do not know any reason why another company cannot go into business right alongside of it. What wrong is done then, and what danger is involved to the interests of anybody ? I do not see that any good purpose would be served by refusing this incorporation, and, on the other hand it seems to me such a refusal might restrict the development of the country and put a damper upon the use of capital. I have followed the discussion with care, but have not heard any suggestion that there is a monopoly granted. But, if there is, we ought to attend to it. If the only objection is that the powers are too large and cover too many industries, I must say that I do not think there is force in that objection.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But I asked the right hon. gentleman as to the power of the provincial legislature and the advisability of our invading their jurisdiction for merely incidental purposes.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not see that we are invading any right of the legislature or that they are invading ours. We clearly have power to incorporate such a company as this, and I am strongly of opinion that it is wise for a company of this kind to seek its powers from the Dominion legislature. We can give it more extensive powers and more elasticity—

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My right hon. friend, perhaps, is forgetting that the provincial legislatures have power to incorporate companies—

The PRIME MINISTER. So it has.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). To incorporate companies for provincial objects.

The PRIME MINISTER. We also have power to incorporate companies.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But I say that every power sought by this company could be given and should be given by the provincial legislature, except the incidental power which may never be exercised or used of carrying on the business of common carriers between Canada and other countries. Are we to invade the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature in respect of ninety-nine subjects because there is one power which may or may not be required by the company and which is within our jurisdiction ? Is it not much better to let the provincial legislature deal with these ninety-nine subjects, and then, if the hundredth power is required, let the company, having secured incorporation from the provincial legislature, come before this parliament and seek this power if it is necessary ? Is not that the better mode of legislation in the interests of good government ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know that it is. No doubt, a great deal of what is done by this parliament could be done by the provincial legislature. The hon. gentleman goes further and says that it should be done by the provincial legislature. I do not see that, in passing this Bill, we are invading a single right of the province. We give them power to do business all over the world, and this company if it is in earnest, as I understand it is, can be better served by securing its powers from this parliament than by securing them from the provincial legislature.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) if he considers the case more fully will realize that the power to carry on business as a common carrier is absolutely essential to the proper exercise of the rights conferred upon the company in other respects. The company could not get out the material necessary to their work from the Bay of Seven Islands except by the aid of navigation, nor can they hope to export their product in any other way than in steamers. Therefore, the right to carry on the business of common carriers to foreign countries and to other provinces is as essential to their business as the right to manufacture lumber.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Has the amendment been made to properly safeguard the railway interests ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. J. GIRARD (Chicoutimi and Saguenay). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, the Bill which is now before the House relates to a company which is seeking to implant a new industry in the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay. As the representative of that county, I think it my duty to say a few words on the Bill under discussion. It was my intention at first to have spoken English ; but as I am not quite familiar with the English language I thought it preferable to speak French.

The company is going into a territory which is almost an absolute wilderness, and in which there is practically nothing, except fishing, which is confined mainly to codfish. There is a very small population, and with the exception of a few fishermen and telegraph employees, it consists mainly in Indians who repair to the Bay of Seven Islands several times a year. The Quebec government have gone to great expenditure in order to make known the natural resources of the province, its mineral wealth and its water powers ; and they have brought to light the fact, that on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, there is considerable forest wealth, notably around the Bay of the Seven Islands. There are also good farming lands and a pretty extensive agricultural area. Apart from the surveys made by the provincial government, a few capitalists have also taken the means of ascertaining the accuracy of those surveys and data The promoters of this Bill, after going to the trouble of making those surveys, have purchased from the Quebec government one thousand miles of limits down in that territory and they have also acquired water-powers. They have, started building a railway and they are putting up a pulp mill, with a force of over a hundred men.

I do not intend to go now into the merits of this Bill, nor do I wish to inquire whether this parliament have the power to incorporate this company, or whether we are invading the rights of the local government in so doing. But from the standpoint of the public interest, I am free to say that on the North Shore where there are now only a few fishing settlements, the news that this manufacture was being put up was heard with the greatest satisfaction. This morning, I received several letters from Pointe aux Esquimaux, from Magpie and other places, and these people want to know whether the fishermen, who have no other means of livelihood, could find employment with the company at the Bay of Seven Islands.

There is no doubt that the whole region of the North Shore will be greatly benefited by the fact that this company has acquired this territory and is going to put up those mills ; and on that ground alone, great credit is due to the promoters of this Bill, despite the fact that they are asking for such extensive powers around the Bay of Seven Islands.

It is well known that there are large deposits of magnetic iron ore all along the Moisie river, and that, many years ago, those deposits were worked by Mr. Molson, of Montreal ; but, for the want of transportation facilities, that mining enterprise had to be discontinued. But now, there are many chances of that industry being revived and put on a paying basis.

Some hon. gentlemen object to granting the company the power of carrying on the business of farming and stock-raising. I do not think such objection can be raised in the interest of the settlers. If I understand aright the Bill now before the House, it does not encroach upon the rights of the provincial legislature in that respect.

Now, as long as the provincial law governing the sale of lands is enforced, there is no danger of a monoply being granted, or of this company coming into conflict with the agricultural interests. With the bad record they have been building up for the north shore, which has been described as a barren wilderness, altogether unfit for farming purposes, surely, if this company were not to go into that territory and attempt to carry on a farming business, no private individual, unless he could dispose of unlimited resources, could ever dream of making the attempt. On the contrary, should the company succeed in its operations, and should its venture be attended with paying results from a farming standpoint, other settlers would undoubtedly follow in its footsteps. As I remarked a little while ago, from the reports of the Crown Lands Department of the province of Quebec, we gather that around the Bay of Seven Islands, there are agricultural lands enough for two parishes to be carved out of them. But that territory is inaccessible except by water in the summer season. Now, the company which is seeking incorporation from this parliament intends to provide communications for the carriage of its agricultural and other products. On the other hand, such settlers as may go into that country will have a considerable market at their door, for the sale of their products, as they will have to supply the wants of all the workingmen in the employ of the company.

I do not think that the powers this company is asking for, extensive as they are, can come into conflict with the interests of the district. Should there be a monoply, the action of that monopoly would be restricted to the territory to the east of the Saguenay river, which is included in the county which I represent here. I have no hesitation in saying that the people down in the Saguenay region will only be too glad to welcome that monopoly ; the more so as, with the exception of Escoumains and Manicouagan there is no manufacturing industry at all in that district. As this company is willing to invest its capital down there, it ought to be encouraged to the fullest extent, and we ought to give the people all the necessary powers. Should their venture prove successful, other capitalists are likely to go into that district and invest their money in other manufacturing industries ; for there are many other water powers that could be operated in portions of the country which have not yet been granted.

On these several grounds, I hope that the objections raised may be waived, and that the company will be granted the charter it is seeking from this parliament. From the granting of this charter and the exercise of the powers asked for, there is no danger to be feared from the standpoint of the agricultural interests ; whereas from the standpoint of the manufacturing interests it cannot be fairly claimed that a monopoly is being created.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I wish to relieve my hon. friend (Mr. Girard) as to the position we are now taking. I have indeed listened with a great deal of pleasure to his remarks, and I think he has given us very useful data on a territory with which we are not very familiar. We have no objection to granting this company all the necessary powers for the carrying out of its undertakings. But the only question is whether we have the power to incorporate such a company as this.

I, for one, believe—and I have no hesitation in saying so—that, judging from the various subject matters enumerated in this Bill, the provincial legislature has primary jurisdiction over the matter. You cannot deal with these subjects without invading provincial rights, and this is well worth considering. There are but two or three words in this charter that would justify us in claiming jurisdiction. If you remove these two or three words, the scope of the Bill is purely provincial, and we cannot constitutionally legislate. These two words are to be found in subsection 2, empowering the company to carry on the business of common carriers between any port in Canada or elsewhere. Well, in my opinion, this is insufficient to bring this Bill within the purview of the federal government, because any company, be it ever so provincial or local in character, can seek and secure such a power, and exercise or use it without invading the legislative sphere of its province. So, a purely local company, incorporated for carrying on the business of stock-raising in the Saguenay district, could ship its cattle to other countries. It is a privilege inherent in its character, which can be legally exercised by a purely local company. So I do not believe that even these words, under which the company is empowered to carry on business as common carriers and ship its products to foreign countries, are sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon this parliament.

Let my hon. friend bear in mind that we are willing to grant the company all the necessary powers, but we may well inquire whether in conferring upon such a powerful company the power mentioned in section D of owning and farming lands, it will not work to the detriment of the settlers down there who are engaged in agricultural pursuits. Moreover, there is the very extensive power, conferred upon the company under subsection J, which was amended by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, empowering the company to build canals, raceways, sluices and dams without any restrictions upon their operations at all, so as to protect the people down there. There is also the power of acquiring fishing rights. I think there are in that district a good many fishermen. I am not so familiar with that country as my hon. friend from Chicoutimi and Saguenay, but I doubt whether the whole people in that district would be in favour of conferring on that company so extensive and such a variety of powers. I am quite willing to give all these powers to the company, but I am anxious to know whether it would prove agreeable to the people of that locality.

Mr. GIRARD. (Translation.) Let my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who objects to the conferring on the company of the power to carry on a farming business, look over the provincial statutes, and he will find, I think, that any company may undoubtedly enjoy a similar right without being incorporated. Under similar circumstances, it is lawful for any one to run a farm. The Price concern, the pioneer of the lumber business in the district of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, also went into farming—when they started their operations—and they did so, with a view to raising, as extensively as possible, all the necessary produce for their operations. And by this, the settlers who later on went into that district to engage in farming pursuits, were largely benefited.

At present it may be said that this territory is an absolute wilderness, and that it is wholly unpeopled. Well, if that company carries on a successful farming business, those who will come and work for it with the preconceived idea that that region is unfit for settlement will soon be undeceived.

The people cannot object to the company owning two hundred acres of land in its own name. Under the provincial legislation, it would be entitled to no more. I do not say that in addition to that it could not acquire as many more acres of land in the name of its employees, but I hold that it cannot own any more in its own name.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) I understand that the company has bought 1,000 acres of limits. Is it wholly timber limits ?

Mr. GIRARD. (Translation.) There is a wide difference between the lease of timber limits and the sale of colonization lots. In the first case, the leaseholder can only take away the timber ; he is not proprietor of the ground.

With regard to the rights of the shore fishermen—and a large number of people have no other means of living—they are subordinate to both the federal and provincial governments. The company could have no fishing rights unless with the consent of both the federal and provincial authorities, who, anyhow, would have to consider the nature of the company's claims.

On these grounds, I do not consider as serious the objections that have been raised. The people do not oppose the granting of this charter. Besides, a federal charter could not invade provincial rights as to those matters pertaining to the province. Assuming that this charter be granted, I do not think it will ever be considered as a stain upon the federal legislation. If we do not grant the privilege asked for, the company will apply to the provincial authorities, and will no doubt obtain everything that can be conceded there. But it will be without power as far as navigation is concerned, because these powers cannot be regularly granted by a provincial charter. Navigation is under federal control.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. (Translation.) The aim we have in view by the present Bill is to create a corporation whose object is to develop the natural resources of this part of the country, especially the lumber industry, the pulp industry, the fisheries and the magnetic iron mines. To develop these resources, not only must we manufacture pulp wood and iron, and catch fish, but we have also to export these products elsewhere ; otherwise it would be useless to attempt going into this industry. Now, it is just as necessary to give this company the power of exporting its products as the right of manufacturing its products. The one is just as essential as the other. With this end in view, it is absolutely necessary for the company to apply to this parliament, for everything connected with navigation is under federal control. Therefore it is necessary that this parliament should give the company its whole legal entity. The local legislature can only grant it a partial legal entity. It has to come here to obtain complete powers. That is the rule which should apply in the present case.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) I understand that the pulp company at Chicoutimi is doing considerable business. Does it hold its charter from the federal parliament ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. (Translation.) It has been incorporated by letters patent.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) This company exports its products to England, and I think they are sold in advance for seven or eight years to come.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. (Translation.) I know something about this company. As far as the export of their products is concerned, for a good many years back a pretty large fleet of ships have visited the very place where this company is carrying on its business, so the company has the choice of the best markets. But that is not all, there is also a railway near by, and three-fourths of its products are exported via Quebec. With regard to the Bay of Seven Islands, as my hon. friend of Chicoutimi (Mr. Girard) is aware, it is not frequented by oceanic steamers, but by coasting vessels only—schooners and other small craft of that description.

The promoters of the Bill intend to establish a line of steamers to carry the products of those different industries to the markets of the world, and so far as shipping facilities are concerned, the town of Chicoutimi is better provided than the Bay of Seven Islands.

Mr. GIRARD. (Translation.) At the present time the Chicoutimi company has no means of transportation of its own. The goods, as soon as they are manufactured, are piled up on the wharf and placed on board the steamers or railway. But as to the company which is now seeking a charter from parliament, what they want is the power to own steamers and to give shipping facilities to a locality formerly considered as inaccessible by water. My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) said that this place had never been visited by oceanic vessels. Quite a number of vessels have entered the bay ; it is a safe harbour of refuge. As a matter of fact, the only argument put forth to show that oceanic vessels cannot enter the bay is the sad wreck of a French steamer which had made for the bay without knowing the way. The wreck took place at the entrance of the bay.

On section 18,

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That clause should not be in the Act. If we have jurisdiction let us exercise it, and not say that this company, a private enterprise, is for the general benefit of Canada in order to bring it under our jurisdiction. That is the only thing that gives them jurisdiction. We can take the jurisdiction over nearly everything in Canada by adding a clause like that. If we have not jurisdiction such a Bill ought not to have been introduced.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We are doing it all the same.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not with private enterprises.

Mr. MONK. It may be better to enact that clause so as to give us jurisdiction.

Mr. McCARTHY. If the opinion of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) is correct, we certainly need it.

Mr. MONK. I take the position that we have not jurisdiction unless we make use of the power we have under section 92. Under that section we can declare that this work is for the general advantage of Canada, and what the hon. member for Saguenay (Mr. Girard) has said, would lead me to that opinion. Then it gives us jurisdiction ipso facto.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 93) respecting the Hudson's Bay and North-west Railways Company.—Mr. Oliver.

QUESTIONS.

TELEPHONE COMPANIES IN CANADA.

Mr. MORRISON—by Mr. Sutherland (Essex)—asked :

1. How many telephone companies are there doing business in Canada ? In what provinces do they operate ? (a.) What is the total mileage of each company ? (b.) What is the capitalization of each company ?

2. What is the mileage of the Bell Telephone Company ?

3. How many of such companies have transfer or other connection with the Bell Telephone Company ?

4. What is the amount of unissued stock of the Bell Telephone Company ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) :

1. We have fifty-five telephone companies on our list of 1902. Of these, six report themselves as sold to the Bell Telephone Company; three not operating in 1901; one sold to Bellechasse Telephone Company, and one amalgamated with New Westminster and Burrard Inlet Telephone Company, leaving forty-four telephone companies in operation.

Of the fifty-five, twentyfive are in the province of Quebec, seven in Ontario, six in Nova Scotia, five in New Brunswick, eight in British Columbia, two in the North-west Territories, and one in Prince Edward Island.

The Bell Telephone Company has offices in more than one province—in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

2. The return of the Bell Telephone Company gives the miles of wire as 94,314.

3. I have no information as to the number of companies which have transfer-connection with the Bell Telephone Company.

4. The Bell Telephone Company report that they have no unissued stock.

I am unable to state the capitalization of the several telephone companies.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE WITHIN THE EMPIRE.

Mr. KEMP—by Mr. Hughes (Victoria)—asked :

1. Did the government, since February 1st last, receive copies of resolutions from any board of trade or other commercial organization of a similar character setting forth the opinion of such boards of trade or other organizations, that in the event of the imposition of duties upon wheat and other cereals by Great Britain, the products of Canada should be exempt from such taxation, or should receive preferential treatment ?

2. If any such resolutions were sent to the government, from what organizations did they come, and at what dates were they received ?

3. Has the government, since the first day of February last, made any and what representations to the British government, that in the event of the imposition of duties upon wheat and other cereals, the products of this country should be exempt from such taxation, or should receive preferential treatment ?

4. If so, what is the date of such representations ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) :

1 and 2. Yes, certain resolutions were received which will be placed on the Table of the House.

3 and 4. Parliament has been made aware that a conference is to take place in London this summer, at the invitation of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, between the Imperial authorities and the self-governing colonies of the empire. In respect to the imposition of duties upon grain and flour, communications have been and are still exchanged on the subject between the two governments, but in the present stage of the negotiations, it is not expedient to bring down any correspondence relating thereto, until such conference has taken place.

RIFLE PRACTICE FOR YOUNG CANADIANS.

Mr. SAMUEL HUGHES (North Victoria) moved :

That, in the opinion of this House, the best interests of the country demand that the youth of Canada should as soon as possible be afforded opportunity of practicing target shooting ; and to that end, it would be advisable to supply each school district or similar locality with rifles and the new safety practice ammunition for use on the Peters or similar inexpensive and safe target, where all citizens from the age of fourteen upwards should be afforded opportunity of practice.

He said : As it is near six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I shall be exceedingly brief in presenting some observations in support of this motion. All authorities on constitutional law and government agree that one of the greatest dangers to the permanent stability of any nation is the maintenance of a large standing army. But as every nation must take adequate measures for its defence the alternative of an effective militia force is offered in substitution for a standing army. Such a militia force might be deemed adequate for the purposes of a country situated as Canada is. Except on occasions of great emergency, I can imagine no easier way to maintain what would be the equivalent of a standing army, than the maintenance of a system by which the youth of the country would be thoroughly trained in rifle shooting, and in the simple and necessary movements in drill which the new strategy and tactics require. The proposition which I make in the resolution is simple on the face of it. There is a very inexpensive system of target practice provided at the present day, and I wish to see that system placed at the disposal of the youth of our country. In the United States they have what is called the gallery or pratice ammunition, whereby a regular service rifle and short range ammunition can be used without any danger of the bullets doing injury, beyond the range of the target. Of course with the regular service ammunition it would be impossible to use these rifles in practice, but with this ammunition which I understand the Minister of Militia is about introducing into Canada, there is no danger whatever. I would point out that the good rifle shots of to-day who are beyond the age of forty years, learned the use of the rifle by snapping caps at candles. The best shots at Wimbledon in the old days and the best shots at Bisley nowadays learned rifle shooting by snapping caps at candles, and hitting or missing as the case may be; the great thing being the practice in pulling the trigger. If the system which I have outlined in the resolution is adopted, it will be of great service to the militia of Canada. I may point out that Mr. Beck, mayor of London, has placed at the disposal of Colonel Peters, the D.O.C., a very handsome trophy to be competed for by the people of the schools in his district.

Mr. INGRAM. Is not that confined to collegiate institutes ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). It applies to wherever there are cadet corps in the district. In the city of Montreal there are some excellent cadet corps, among others the Highland cadets of Montreal, and the Highland cadets of Westmount, both of which corps are maintained without one cent of cost to the government, and both corps, chiefly the Montreal Highland cadets have furnished nearly one hundred men to the South African contingents, as well as several hundred well trained and well drilled men to the militia corps of that city. In Toronto there is a most excellent cadet corps made up of detachments from the different schools. When I had the honour to be first English master of the Toronto Collegiate Institute years ago, I had a battalion composed of the young men of that institution, and I may say that a number of officers in the city regiments and in different regiments throughout the province received their training in that cadet battalion. Wherever the young men of a country are drilled early in life, experience has proved that they maintain in after years their zeal and interest in military matters, and this very fact in Canada has kept the militia force of our country together, in spite of the many drawbacks that have combatted it during a number of years. It was my intention to speak at greater length, but it being six o'clock I will simply draw the attention of the minister to the necessity for drilling the youth of our country in their early days when their sympathetic interest is most alive to matters of this kind. If we can adopt the system foreshadowed in this resolution, together with the system of training officers which I previously outlined, I am satisfied that Canada will have at her disposal a reserve of men such as no country in the world could equal. I believe, Sir, that without the slightest trouble Canada could turn 1,000,000 men of fighting age and not draw her resources to any greater extent than the Boers have drawn on their resources during the war in South Africa. With such a body of men, Canada would be impossible of invasion, I care not how powerful the enemy might be. I trust the minister will accept this resolution, and with that hope I submit it to his judgment.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). I am in entire accord with the spirit of the observations made by my hon. friend (Mr. Hughes). We have in Switzerland an object lesson as to what can be done in the way of making the militia effective. In that country they have an army of 250,000 men which is exclusively a militia force. I wish, however, to point out that while I am in sympathy with the observations that the hon. gentleman has made, I think we cannot pass a resolution of this kind here, because the matter with which it deals is within the purview and control of the local legislature. Education being in the hands of the provincial legislatures, I think it would be impossible to carry out a resolution of this kind without the consent of the provinces. It seems to me the proper course would be to open up correspondence with the governments of the respective provinces with reference to the matter, and I may say that I had it in contemplation to do this ; and now that my hon. friend has given his views to the House, and has received the assurance I have given him, I think it would be more convenient if the resolution were withdrawn.

Mr. INGRAM. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the Militia Act gives him power to supply free ammunition to the different clubs and associations ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. But the Act does not allow him to give free ammunition to the cadet corps ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is what I said.

Mr. INGRAM. That is very unfortunate. I hope the hon. gentleman will carry out the suggestion he made some time ago.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I would point out to my hon. friend that the militia is composed of men from 18 years up. We have no power to include in the militia any below the age specified in the law.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand it is the hon. gentleman's intention to amend the Act ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, next year.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The resolution does not in the slightest degree infringe on the constitution. I would like it to stand, so that we may have some discussion on the question.

Mr. LANCASTER. Under the circumstances, I move that the debate be adjourned.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) moved :

That the consideration of notices of motion be postponed, and that the House proceed forthwith to order No. 10 of Public Bills and Orders, House in Committee on Bill (No. 3) and Act to amend the Railway Act.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT—CATTLE-GUARDS.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara) moved that the House go into committee on Bill (3) to amend the Railway Act. He said : In moving that the House resolve itself into committee on the Bill, I realize at the outset of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, that I am met with an obstacle but one which I hope on reflection the House will not regard as sufficiently serious to defeat this Bill. I am appealing to the whole House from the decision of the Railway Committee which has not seen fit to report the Bill. This committee perhaps, does not voice the feeling of the House and the report being the vote of only some fifty members, is only twenty-five per cent of those who sit in this House, and is at most a minority of those who are here to-night, or who will be here later.

The law, as it stands at present, with regard to cattle-guards on highway crossings was admitted by the Railway Committee, as it is all through the country, to be in an improper state. Although the railway companies were originally required to have cattle-guards at all highway crossings, so as to prevent animals straying on the lines of railway, that Act has been so amended as to practically relieve them from that obligation. By the amendments of 1888 and 1890, the whole value of the original legislation regarding cattle-guards was taken away, because these amendments provided that the railway companies shall only be liable for damages, even when they do not have these cattle-guards at their crossings in cases where the animals were properly at the points of intersection between the railway lines and the highway when the accident occurred. In fact the law, as it stands at present, provides that the companies shall only be liable under a circumstance which cannot reasonably be expected to exist at all. It would be more frank and honest to repeal the whole section requiring cattle-guards. I do not suppose that the people would stand it, but still it would be better to do so than to delude them, as we are now doing, with the mere semblance of a protection which has not the slightest existence in reality. It would be far better to say that the railway companies shall not be bound to have cattle-guards at all than to say that they shall only pay damages for not having them, when the animal that happens to be killed 'is properly on the highway,' bearing in mind that the courts have construed those words as meaning in charge of a human being. But it can be easily seen that there is no need for a railway company to have a cattle-guard when the animal is in charge of a human being. No one in charge of an animal will allow it to get on to a railway line, and the legislation in the first instance was no doubt intended to compel the railway companies to take means for preventing animals, that were not in charge of anybody, from straying on their track, and the reason is evident. An animal cannot read the sign 'railway crossing' or appreciate the danger of getting on to a railway line, and therefore it was deemed necessary that the companies should be compelled to provide some obstruction against its doing so. I am quite well aware that the speed of railway trains and the necessities of railway service may require changes in the cattle-guards from time to time, but I submit that the railways should be compelled to put up some guard that would be reasonably sufficient to prevent animals getting on to their tracks from the highway, whether these animals be in charge of a human being or not. In the discussion in the Railway Committee, it was urged against the supporters of the Bill I have introduced that it would encourage farmers to become careless and allow their animals to run on the highway and thence on the railway line, and that we should do everything possible to teach the farmers that they must keep their animals off the highway, but we all know that, despite the greatest care, an animal may escape on to the highway. The wind may blow down a farmer's fence, a neighbour coming to visit him may accidently leave his gate open, and thus a farmer, who takes every care, whose gates are fastened and whose fences are good, may still find that by the purest accident one of his animals has wandered on to the highway and thence on to the railway track, and yet though the railway company may have wilfully neglected to provide the protection required by law, he must bear the whole loss.

But then look at the other side of the question. Here is a most positive enactment requiring railway companies to provide sufficient cattle-guards, and they do not comply with it simply because, under the amendments to the law as originally passed, it is scarcely possible for them to be ever required to pay any damages. The farmer is to be held responsible for any accident which might occur, despite his greatest care, and the railways are allowed to go scot free even though they deliberately neglect to comply with the law. The railways are only held responsible where the animals are properly on their tracks and the courts have decided that an animal is only properly on their tracks when it was in charge of a human being and strayed into the danger despite all his care. It must be obvious to everybody that an animal which is in the charge of anybody, would not be allowed to stray into danger, and the railways therefore may violate the law with impunity, whereas the farmer has to suffer the loss should one of his animals, by the merest accident, which the greatest watchfulness cannot always prevent, make its way on to the highway and then to the railway track and be killed.

If the railway companies want the inhabitants of this country to conform to the law they ought—rich and powerful as they are—to set the example and first comply with it themselves, and the effect of my Bill would be that the danger would be met on both sides and there would consequently be very little danger of any accident happening. There is no doubt that by the neglect of the companies to provide these cattle guards, when an animal does stray on to a railway track, it runs great danger of being killed, and yet although the railway company was in fault in not complying with the law, the owner of the animal has to bear the whole loss. But even though the owner should be somewhat in fault, why should the chief offender go scot free? And it must be perfectly evident that the railway companies will not supply those cattle-guards while the law is in its present condition, because people are not likely to do things when they are not subject to any penalty for not doing them. And the law as it stands to-day does not require them except as against a human being to keep a cattle-guard there. The animal comes to that point. If the cattle-guard is not there, there are three directions for it to take—one to the left, one to the right—along the railway track in either case—or straight ahead, where there is no danger. If there is no cattle-guard, there are two chances out of three that the animal will be killed. It is quite as likely to turn to the right or to the left as to go straight ahead, particularly when you remember that the pasture, during some seasons of the year, is better along the railway track than elsewhere. It is not unfair to say that the animal is twice as likely to go down the railway as it is to go along the highway. If it goes down the railway it is pretty sure to get killed, and if it gets killed, no one is practically responsible. The railway will say that the animal was running at large and had no right to be where it was. Though, by Act of parliament the railway is compelled to have—or, rather, is supposed—to have cattle-guards for highway crossings, their answer is: It is true we had no cattle-guard, and so are violating the statute, but we are not liable, because your animal was at large, not controlled by a human being. But, if the cattle-guards are there, is it not plain that the animal will go straight ahead, because the guards will prevent it from going to one side? I know it is said that there is no cattle-guard that will keep every animal from turning upon the railway track. Even though that is the case, yet, if we reduce the likelihood of accident, we are passing good legislation. At the very least, cattle-guards can be put in that will turn a large percentage of the animals and prevent them from getting on the track. So it does not come down to a question whether the owner or whether the railway shall lose the animal, but whether there shall be any animal lost at all. I am not seeking to bring about a state of the law under which a railway will be liable to kill animals. It is not my primary object to cause the railway company to kill an animal and then cause them to be liable for it; the primary object is that there shall be no animal killed, and so no liability. I seek to create a state of affairs under which both the railway and the owner of the animal will take a certain amount of responsibility, and these responsibilities meeting, so to say, will leave no room for accidents. The law will make it clear that the farmer will be liable if the animal is killed at the point of intersection, that is, upon that part of the earth which is both highway and railway. That being so, he will want to keep his animal at home. But, if it is not killed there, but goes down the railway track because there is no cattle-guard on either side to prevent it, and is killed there, the railway will be liable. This could have no other effect than to prevent the very losses that are making all the trouble. So it is not a question of whether the farmer or the railway shall pay for an animal willy nilly, but whether we shall put responsibility fairly on both parties, so that both parties will work together to prevent accident and loss to anybody. With this general statement of the purpose of the Bill, let me pass on to one or two other matters which I wish to enter on before I sit down.

It was said in the Railway Committee that, if this Bill were allowed to stand over until next year, there would probably be a standard cattle-guard introduced, and made acceptable by Order in Council, or order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, or in some other way. Because, it was said, you cannot expect any guard that any railway company will put in to turn every animal. There is something in that, as in a great many other contentions, if you do not carry them too far. But if you carry it to the length of saying that because of that this Bill should not pass, then, with all due deference to those who use it, I submit that it is unreasonable. For, if you make a standard cattle-guard next month or next year, you must pass an Act like this to compel the railway companies to put those cattle-guards in, because, at present, the company is not liable without any guard, if the animal is not in charge of a human being. So, even if I concede that there will be a standard guard authorized in some official way and that if these guards are put in by the railways, they will prevent animals from straying from the highway to the track, you will still be under the necessity of passing some such Bill as mine. It may not be in exactly the same words, still, it must have the same effect, or the railway company will not be obliged to put in these standard guards.

Now, here is a grievance which is admitted to exist, a grievance so clear that nobody has gone further in opposing my measure than to say that we will get the railways to put in a better guard by next year, if you will allow the Bill to stand. But the grievance being what I have just shown it to be, I ask this House why that grievance shall be allowed to continue for another year? Why should the report of the committee prevail? What good reason is there for saying that it is wise not to proceed further with this measure? Why should another twelve months go by with this state of affairs allowed to continue, now that the attention of the House has been drawn to it? Why should not the railways be bound to do something as much for the next twelve months as for twelve months after that, or ten years from now? Why should the railway companies go on for another year without responsibility while we are waiting for some guard which it may suit the railways to put in? Why not compel them to put in the best guard they can and leave it to the courts to say whether they have put in a guard that is 'suitable and sufficient' to turn animals. When the Bill is in Committee of the Whole, the principle having been admitted, if it is thought by the majority of the committee that the wording is not such as to secure justice, amendments can be made. If any amendment can better carry out the object desired, I am here to say, before we go into committee, that any amendment that does not really kill the measure I am introducing will not be refused by me, will not be opposed factiously by me, because it is not of my own drawing. I do not know that any amendment can be drawn that will make the Bill any better or that will carry out the idea better than the form of words that I have proposed:

> And no animal not allowed by law to run at large shall be held for the purpose of such liability-----

—that is, the liability mentioned in the Act to keep up the cattle-gard——

> —to be improperly on a place adjoining the railway if such animal gets upon the railway from the highway by reason of such omission or neglect to maintain such cattle guards or fences at the highway crossing.

You will notice that, under this amendment, the railway will not be responsible unless the animal goes upon the land which is the railways own individual property, and which the animal cannot reach if the railway company have a cattle-guard at each side of the highway where the railway crosses. There is no responsibility upon the railway unless the animal gets right over the land where the cattle-guard ought to be and on the railway itself, on the property of the railway which is separated entirely, or if my Bill passes, will require to be separated entirely from the railway by the cattle-guard. As other gentlemen desire to speak upon this Bill, I will not trespass any longer on the time of the House. I trust that the Bill will be allowed to go to committee and will be passed, if not in the exact language in which I have drawn it, at least in language that will make it as efficient, and will remedy to a reasonable extent the grievance which I submit I have proved exists, and put the responsibility upon the railway which, for the reasons I have stated, ought to be placed upon them.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 1.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with considerable interest and with close attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). I may say by way of apology in offering a few observations to the committee that I certainly do not find in my conscience the accusation that I have taken up a great deal of time of the House thus far this session, so I hope and trust that hon. members will bear with me for a few minutes while I discuss what to some of them seems to be a matter of no importance, but which to others of us who know and understand the feelings and wishes of our constituents, is a matter of considerable importance. I shall endeavour to avoid all those points made by the hon. member for Lincoln, and to confine myself to other phases of the question upon which he has not touched. In the first place many hon. members seem to have the idea that the legislation proposed is along the lines of a return to the old pit-guard. I intend to deal first with this phase of the question. I, for one, if this amounted to a return to the old pit-guard, would most decidedly vote against the proposed legislation. I believe that the pit-guard can find no proper place in railroading at the present day. We know that in the pit-guards of former times water often found a lodging place and froze in the winter, and the road bed was so disturbed as to make railroading uncertain. More than that, when a railway train ran off the track it was quite a usual thing, or a not unusual thing at least, for the trucks of the carriages to plunge into the pit; the trucks were then pulled from the bottom of the carriage and a frightful accident was the result. With the surface-guard, on the other hand, derailment meant nothing so serious, and the train might run along a good half a mile on the track and then be pulled up with no accident of any consequence. So I say that a return to the old pit-guard is quite out of the question. Many petitions were laid before this House in the earlier part of the session asking for legislation along the lines of relief to the farmers, and afterwards this House was flooded with a number of petitions from the railway employees praying that pit-guards should not be restored. Mr. Chairman, I say that pit-guards will not be restored, and I propose to show why I think they will not be restored, and if they are not restored, then the petitions of these railway employees are met. Now, I am going to tell you why I think they will not be restored. Some two or three days before this matter was taken up for discussion in the Railway Committee, one of the great railroads of our country, the Canadian Pacific Railway, was good enough to send each member of this House a very carefully and neatly prepared brief giving its side of the question with regard to cattle-guards ; and I think if, from the four corners of this instrument, I can prove that there will be no return to pit cattle-guards, that there is no reasonable probability of such a return, why then I am proving our case out of the mouths of the witnesses of our opponents, a doubly strong way to prove it. I intend to read some extracts from that brief to bear out my contention that there is no possibility of a return to the old pit-guard if we pass the legislation proposed by the hon. member for Lincoln. In the first place, an official high in the service of the Canadian Pacific Railway—I have not his name here, but hon. gentlemen can find it in the brief to which I have referred—says :

> I learn from the railway people---

And by the railway people he refers to the employees of the road to whom certain questions were put with regard to cattle-guards.

> I learn from the railway people that the dangers to track of the pit cattle-guard are so many that it is practically out of the question for them to use them.

Strong testimony from the same source is that of Mr. H. J. Cambie, no less a person than the divisional engineer at Vancouver, says :

> The old fashioned open pit guards with the track rails laid direct on the stringers are complete traps for wrecking trains, and are not worth discussion.

Finally the last statement, which is more important than all the others, is that of Mr. Tye, chief engineer of construction, who says :

> The damage caused by one wreck is more than sufficient to offset any loss or injury to stock for many years.

Now, Sir, the whole argument of the opponents of this measure is this, that a return to pit-guards would cause not only one accident but many accidents ; yet here is one of their chief employees saying that a single accident, as opposed to many accidents, would cause a damage to the railway in dollars and cents far exceeding the sum they would have to pay for every head of cattle killed in a number of years. And so since these great corporations well know their own interests, it is fair and reasonable to argue that they would prefer paying for all the cattle they killed to going back to the old pit-guard which would cause them so much more financial loss. So, I think I have demonstrated from that instrument that there is no danger of a return to pit-guards, and that therefore the petitions of these railway employees against pit-guards are fully answered.

Next, Sir, with regard to the surface-guard ; and here, if I may be permitted to make a bull—and surely a discussion of cattle-guards might be some excuse for doing so—I will say that surface-guards can be divided pretty generally into three classes : The first-class where there is no guard at all, the second-class where there is only a bluff-guard, and the third-class where there has been an honest endeavour to meet the law as it stands upon the statute-book. First, with regard to no guards, I can assure hon. gentlemen that to my personal knowledge, and I only know but a very small part of Ontario, there are a number of crossings at which no cattle guard at all has been installed. What is the reason for this ? The present state of the law is directly responsible for this, and I am going to tell you why. If a cow now gets on to the railway because she is wandering on the highway unattended, even though there be no cattle-guard to stop her, the railway says : 'Oh, your cow was unlawfully on the highway,' and the farmer cannot collect from it. But, if on the other hand, the cow is properly tended by a human being, why, then, she is not going to get killed on the right of way and the railway does not have to pay either way ; so that, which ever way you take it, it is heads I win, tails you lose. The railway company do not have to pay either way, and they have only to fly in the face of public opinion and not build a cattle-guard at all. But here, they entirely forget the fact that they offer a direct insult to public intelligence which will arouse such a storm of indignation as will compel the peoples' representatives in this House to provide by legislation a remedy for this grievance. Next we come to what is called the bluff cattle-guard.

Mr. CLARKE. What ?

Mr. THOMPSON. That is a term sometimes used in a game called poker. This bluff cattle-guard consists of a succession of slats of wood laid lengthwise and just slanting a little bit. It never stops an animal for one instant ; the animal crosses that guard and goes upon the track. It is perhaps a little better than none at all because it is not such a bare-faced slap at the intelligence of the people. It is an attempt to cajole the farmer into the belief that the railway company are trying to comply with the law. And then, we come to the third kind of cattle-guard which is an honest endeavour to meet the law. This is a metal guard which is reasonably sufficient for the purpose. I have seen a number of these guards on the Canada Southern Railway, now known as the Michigan Central Railway, and they are giving very fair satisfaction indeed, but, these cattle-guards are expensive in their installation and they are very few and far between. Now, we may go further than that because I have in my hand a copy of the brief with which the Canadian Pacific Railway has furnished us,

I may say that if it be arguable whether we have a cattle-guard which is suitable and sufficient, the legislation proposed by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) does not propose any particular kind of cattle-guard, but simply that the law requiring the company to provide suitable and sufficient cattle-guards shall be enforced. Have we got these cattle-guards to-day? Let me turn for a moment to this question. Here we have the report of Mr. James Beattie, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and he says:

There are a number of surface cattle-guards on my division giving the best of satisfaction.

This out of the mouth of a witness on the other side. He says:

The new surface guard being put in this season, I am satisfied, is all that could be desired. It has a neat appearance.

That is nice for the cattle and for the farmers.

And I fail to see how stock can possibly get over it. It is a common occurrence for sheep and swine to walk over the stringers across the old pit-guard. This is impossible with new cattle-guard.

There is a witness of their own saying that he has something better than the pit-guard, and he winds up:

I think every point should be strained to keep to the present system of surface cattle-guards.

Mr. Kilpatrick, in his statement, is equally emphatic:

I would therefore recommend the use of surface-guards very strongly, as if properly put in——

If properly put in, mark you.

—they are effective for the purpose intended, and do not become a trap endangering life and property.

This cattle-guard now, if properly put in, will meet the requirements of the law and perhaps if we change the law to make it more important for the railways to put this in, the companies will see that the cattle-guards are properly put in. Finally, Mr. Leonard, himself, says:

One of the most effective surface-guards is the 'Sheffield' in use on some parts of the division, and the Canadian Pacific Railway guard made standard by drawing No. 16702 last year, is reported as giving good satisfaction.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I have quoted enough to prove by the evidence furnished by the brief of the Canadian Pacific Railway that the railway companies have to-day in existence a surface cattle-guard which is suitable and sufficient to turn the cattle back, or if we have not got that perfected cattle-guard, we are at least going so rapidly towards it that if we apply the financial spur to the flank of the rather lazy railway horse, he will be put into a gallop that will take him under the wire a winner with a suitable guard as the prize, and I think it is the members of this House who should see that that spur is properly applied. There have been arguments advanced against this law, and one of the strongest and most frequently quoted which I have heard, is that the farmers of this country will to a great extent resort to this means of selling their cattle. I do not think that any one in this House will seriously entertain that idea for a minute. The farmers of this country have now a very good market for their cattle, and I misjudge their decency and public spirit if to any extent they will adopt this means of selling their cattle. But they cannot be sure of making a sale even if they were purposely to turn their cattle on the highway. If one of these animals goes down the road and is killed at the point of intersection with the railway, the owner gets nothing for the animal. In almost every township in the province of Ontario there is a by-law against cattle being allowed to wander at large upon the public highway. This by-law can be enforced by impounding the cattle found on the highway. I maintain that it is only in the season of the year which is dryest that there is any great danger of cattle getting on the railway, and the reason for that is obvious. Cattle, like human beings, often look for pastures green and pastures new, and so it is that cattle, having eaten the last mouthful of grass on their pasture fields, and seeing the pastures green and pastures new on the roadside, break out and go wandering down the road, and it is in this way that they get upon the railway track provided with defective cattle-guards. Now, Sir, this dry season is the very season when the railway companies have their lines patrolled from one end to the other by their section men who are on the constant watch for fires. These men see these cattle at large, they can impound them, and if they do impound them the farmers have to pay the poundage. I maintain, as a man who knows the conditions existing on the farm, that farmers under these circumstances are not going to allow their cattle to wander about. Now, there was some suggestion made as to an amendment of this Bill along the lines of it being necessary for the railway company to show that the farmer is guilty of negligence in order to shift the responsibility from itself to the farmer. An amendment of that kind I would gladly welcome. It seems to me that if the farmer has been negligent, it is only reasonable that he should pay for his negligence and get nothing for his animal, but the railway should be obliged to show that he has been negligent, provided he has first shown that they were entirely negligent in not providing proper railway cattle-guards. It has been said that this is a matter of very great difficulty for the railway company, that the railway should not be asked to prove any such thing, that it will be very hard for the railway to get witnesses from among the farmer's friends to prove that he wittingly and purposely drove his cow on the railway. There are two sides to every question. One phase of the law is in regard to fires kindled by railways on the property of farmers. The farmer, if a fire is kindled, has not only got to show that the fire was kindled by the railway, but he has to show that it was kindled negligently by the railway. He has got to show that the engine which has set this fire alight was false in its construction, and by what evidence can he prove that ? He can only prove it by the employees of the railway, each one of whom is afraid of his life to give evidence, for it may cost him his position. If you reverse the case, and ask the railway to prove from the mouths of the farmers that there was negligence on the part of the farmer whose beast was killed, a great hubbub is raised and it is asked : Is this fair and just to the railway ? I do not wish to say much about the objections raised by other members of this House who do not come from the province of Ontario. I believe that this grievance is largely confined to the province of Ontario, and I judge that from the overwhelming majority that was given by the Ontario members in the Railway Committee in favour of this legislation. I think they were almost as four to one. I appeal to the members from other provinces. If this matter is not a grievance with them let them trust to us in Ontario; let them take our opinion and if they see an overwhelming vote in favour of this legislation by the Ontario members, let them be guided by the view of the majority from Ontario and give us a sympathetic vote, even as time and time again in Ontario we have given them sympathetic votes on some matters of local concern to them. Frequently we are guided by the opinion of the North-west members with regard to this or that railway charter, and we ask a return for that confidence from them now. One member from the Territories said he was going to vote against this Bill because it interfered with the Herd law. I do not believe it does. It proposes a change in the existing law and that existing law does not touch the Herd law at all. Another member said that the Bill did not go far enough and that he would vote against it. That member came from a province by the sounding sea. We are content to take half a loaf; it is much better than no bread, and we would be glad of that gentleman's sympathetic vote even though this Bill does not go as far as he would like. For my part, I never yet had so much pleasure in supporting any legislation as in supporting this. I believe the Bill is in everybody's interest. I do not feel that this Bill will be adverse to the interests of any of those concerned, and I will tell you why. First of all, it is going to be better for the farmer, because if this Bill becomes law he will get paid for his cattle when they are killed by the railway, whereas before he had to go without compensation, which was often a very serious hardship to him. It is going to be better for the travelling public, which so frequently has been invoked in this discussion. The farmers, I may mention, are a large percentage of the travelling public. If we pass this legislation the railways will put in suitable and sufficient guards, and there will be fewer accidents than now, and the travelling public will be killed and injured less often. It will be for the benefit of the railways themselves, for the reason that there will be fewer accidents, and consequently less loss to the railways, and in a year or two the extra expense of these cattle-guards will flow back into their coffers two-fold. I will give another reason why it is better for the railway companies. I believe, as a business man—though I admit of comparatively little experience—that the sentimental aspect of the case must never be forgotten. I do not care how strong a railway is; it is better for it to have the good-will of the people of the country through which it runs than to have their ill will, and I can assure the railway companies that there is a feeling of indignation in many parts of Ontario to-day against them, because the farmers believe they are tyrannized over by the companies. If the railway companies will remove this grievance, that feeling of antagonism would be effaced, and in time to come there would be a better feeling.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, after having talked the matter over with several people, since this Bill came before the House, I reached the conclusion that it was desirable to amend it by adding after the word 'animal,' in the 9th line, the following words : 'without any negligence on the part of the proprietor.' Under the English common law, contributive negligence debars the injured party from any recourse.

If the railway company has neglected to provide the protection required by law, and if the proprietor was guilty of neglect, each must bear his loss.

Under our law, farmers are bound to keep their animals off the highway. The proprietor, whose animal was found straying on the railway track, is supposed to have violated the law. They can take and impound the animal found straying on the railway track, and the proprietor has to pay the poundage. But we also know that, despite the greatest care, an animal may escape on the highway, without the farmer being in the least guilty of neglect. Under the law as it is now, he has no right of action. Under the Bill now before the House and by the Bill under consideration, he shall have the right to sue the company, provided he is not guilty of neglect.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) Please read your amendment.

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) I propose to amend the clause by adding the following words : 'without any neglect on the part of the proprietor.'

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) In addition to those words, it should be expressly stated that by the fact that the animal was not in charge of a human being, the proprietor is presumed to be guilty of negligence.

Mr. DEMERS. (Translation.) That presumption already exists ; because the proprietor is always supposed to keep his animals off the highway, and to prevent them from straying on the railway track. Should an animal get on to the railway line and wander about, that is a presumption of negligence on the part of the proprietor.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) You then throw the onus of the evidence on the proprietor of the animal.

Mr. LANCASTER. I understand that the amendment proposed by the hon. member (Mr. Demers) is to the effect that as a condition precedent to recovering damages, it must be shown that the animal is on the track without any negligence of the owner. I submit that this amendment puts the onus in the wrong place. Here is a railway with an enactment against it requiring it to put in cattle guards suitable and sufficient for a certain purpose, and if it does not put them in it should be liable. I submit that the amendment suggested by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Demers) might be very harmful, and that a provision to say that the animal must be there without negligence on the part of the owner will lead to interminable lawsuits. While one judge would hold that the fact that the animal was not attended was not negligence, another judge might hold that the farmer would have to prove a certain thing a negative, and shrug his shoulders and say : I do not know how you can prove it, but you have to prove it. I submit that this amendment is not fair. What my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) and I want to be provided, is, that where the railway companies have no cattle-guards they shall be responsible, and to say that a farmer must prove a negative will be making a good deal of trouble in the country and creating lawsuits with the chances against the farmer, whereas my hon. friend (Mr. Thompson) and I want to make the law simple and plain. It is the unattending of the animal that is the whole gist of the matter. If you ask the court to hold that a farmer has to prove that it was without any negligence on his part that the animal got there, probably the court will say : It is pretty hard on you, but there is some evidence of negligence here, or how did your animal come unattended when there is a statute which says your animal must not be unattended within half a mile of a highway crossing—and which statute I am not interfering with.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If my hon. friend's Bill passes, I understand that the law will be that if an animal gets on to the roadbed of a railway, whatever may be the negligence of the owner, the presumption will be that the animal is legally and properly there, and that if an accident occurs, the company will be liable ?

Mr. LANCASTER. If there is no cattle-guard.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If there is a cattle-guard, assuming the cattle-guard not to be sufficient, the company would be liable.

Mr. LANCASTER. The railway company would be responsible, unless the company proved negligence on the part of the farmer other than the negligence of letting the animal be at large. That is a negligence, we must admit ; but it is a trivial negligence. It is no such negligence as the railway company would be guilty of by not having a sufficient cattle-guard, and I do not want the big liability to be killed by the smaller and trival one.

Mr. FRASER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he considers that there are degrees of negligence ?

Mr. LANCASTER. Certainly there are.

Mr. FRASER. And they would be so construed in an action ?

Mr. LANCASTER. Certainly there are degrees of negligence. I do not say they would be so construed by a judge in an action ; but I say there would be proof of the most positive negligence on the part of the railway company, the deliberate breach of a statute which says that it must have a sufficient cattle-guard—a most malicious, or at least wilful negligence; and against that there would be an accidental, trivial negligence on the part of the farmer whose animal happened to be at large. So my hon. friend, if he wants the Bill to be at all fair to the farmer, should provide that the fact that the animal is not attended on the highway, should be no evidence of such negligence. We must admit that the animal will be unattended once in a while, else the Act would not be required; but that fact alone should not be held to be sufficient negligence to prevent the farmer recovering against the railway company.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The object of the law as we have it is to protect the general public, and the law provides two things : First, that the railway company shall provide a suitable cattle-guard, and, next, that the farmer shall not allow his cattle to run at large on the highway within half a mile of the crossing. Because we are legislating for the protection of the public ; and in order that the public may be protected, we require, on the one hand, that the railway company shall do something, and, on the other, that the owner of the animal shall do something. What is intended by my hon. friend would be to the detriment of the public, by removing all liability from the owner of the animal.

Mr. LANCASTER. Only if the railway company itself perpetrates a most wilful negligence.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is not a question of half or semi-negligence ; it is a question of the public protection. It is a question whether you are going to obliterate this element of protection to the public.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the Minister of Justice if the public interest will not be promoted by compelling the railway companies to keep efficient cattle-guards at their crossings ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, and I think that is what we ought to seek to obtain; and we shall obtain that if we carry out the recommendation of the Railway Committee made at the suggestion of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. CLARKE. And if we carry that out, there will be nothing done within the next twelve months.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, there will.

Mr. CLARKE. It seems to me, representing a city constituency——

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Don't you let cattle run at large ?

Mr. CLARKE. No, we do not let cattle run at large in Toronto. It seems to me, as I understand the matter, that if an animal gets on the right of way of a railway company, and is killed, the farmer is completely out of court, and has no chance at all to make a good case against the company.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, that is not correct.

Mr. CLARKE. The court never gets so far as to ascertain whether the company had a proper and efficient cattle-guard at the crossing or not.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Oh, yes, it does.

Mr. CLARKE. Perhaps the Minister of Justice will tell us how and when it does ? I think we ought to legislate not specially in the interest of the farmers or in the interest of the railway company, but in the interest of the public generally; and if the law now requires the railway company to have an efficient cattle-guard at each crossing, I think parliament should insist on that being done. It is a fact, as I have been advised by many hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, that since the onus of proving that the cattle were not improperly or illegally upon the highway has been placed on the farmers' shoulders, the railway companies have allowed the cattle-guards to deteriorate. One hon. member on the way from Smith's Falls to Ottawa the other day, told me that he could point out several crossings where there were no cattle-guards at all; and if a farmer's cattle, through accident, strayed out of his field and got on to the railway right of way and were killed, the farmer would have no recourse whatever. He would have to prove that the cattle were legally where they were when they were killed, and he could not do that. The law as it is at present throws the entire responsibility upon the farmer of proving that the cattle were where they had a right to be, and unless he could do that he would have no recourse against the company. It appears to those who try to look dispassionately at the matter that there is something wrong with the law as it now stands, and that under it the farmer does not get fair play; and it is an insult to him to say that he desires to have the law amended for the deliberate purpose of letting his cattle on the track in order to have them killed. He can do better by selling them than by trying to collect damages from a railway company, and I do not think that statement should be made again. I am firmly convinced that under the law at present, as it is interpreted by the courts, the farmer does not get fair play. I am in favour of the amendment of the hon. member for Lincoln. If it is wrong, a year's experience will show wherein it is wrong, and then, if necessary, we can have it amended and made what it ought to be.

Mr. HENDERSON. In dealing with this matter, my view is that we should not endeavour to complicate the question so as to involve a farmer in a lawsuit on every occasion when an animal is killed. We should make the law as clear as possible, so clear in fact that the farmer himself can interpret it and know whether he can recover damages or not. I believe that the law can be made so clear that there need be no litigation, and with that view I propose to move an amendment to the amendment. Reference has been made by my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) to the old pit-guard. I am not going to discuss that point because I understand that the general public do not approve of this guard. The railways are also very much opposed to it because it has a tendency to weaken the track, and with rapidly running trains, it is next to impossible for the railway companies to continue that style of guard. The law, as it now stands, provides simply for a suitable and sufficient guard. The difficulty is to determine when a guard is suitable and sufficient. I do not propose to interfere with the wording of the Bill of my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). I am quite satisfied that we should enact every word of it, but I propose to add something, which I think is only fair to all parties concerned. We are not here to legislate in a way that will simply secure damages to a farmer if his animal be killed. What we want is to legislate so as to prevent animals getting on the railway tracks and being killed, and if we can do that we will be doing a great deal more than simply enabling the farmers to recover damages. We have also the interest of the travelling public to consider, whom we desire to protect, and for whose protection it is necessary to have an adequate guard. I, therefore, propose to move, in amendment to the amendment, that the following words be added to the Bill :

Provided, however, that no liability shall accrue against any railway company for damages caused at any point where a cattle-guard approved by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council has been erected and maintained.

If a railway company at any time puts in a guard which has the approval of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, then the company is exonerated from all damages should animals be killed. If a farmer should own a horse, accustomed to jump hedges, hurdles and ditches, which would get over the best guard you could devise, you could not expect a railway company to pay damages, should such an animal be killed in spite of all its precautions. Or if a farmer should allow a breachy steer—an animal that ought to be kept in stable at all times—to remain out in the field, and that animal should break through the fences and get over the railway guard the railway company should not be held responsible. I have sufficient confidence in the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to believe that it would only approve of the very best guard that can be obtained, either in this country or the United States or any other country, and the farmers would know that once a railway company had put up a guard of that character they would have no claim for damages. On the other hand the railway companies, having complied with the law, would feel that they had protection against any claims, and this would act as an inducement to them to put up the guard required by the Railway Committee. I can see no other solution of the question than to adopt a standard guard and the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is the most competent tribunal to decide what that standard should be. If that committee cannot determine this question, no other court can. Once the Railway Committee have decided upon a standard cattle-guard, the farmers will know just where they stand. I believe that the farmers would then be perfectly satisfied. I have conversed with some of them during the past few weeks on this matter, and I did not find one say that such a law would be unfair. When the best guard that could be found was put in, the railway companies should be protected against damages, but until they complied with the order of the Privy Council they should be held liable. I may be told that the railway companies will not put in a guard. Well, if they will not, they will be liable for all damages, but the moment they do so, they are afforded all the protection that can be demanded by them.

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). This question has been so fully discussed that I need hardly say much about it. The fact that so many petitions have been sent to this House during this session from all parts of Ontario is plain proof that the farmers will not be satisfied unless some action is taken by this parliament regarding this cattle-guard business. All points have been discussed, from the farmer's point of view and that of the railways and the travelling public, this evening. Next to the travelling public, the farmers are more interested than any other portion of the community, because their cattle are liable to be killed, and if so, no damages can be recovered by them under the present law. If a proper cattle-guard be erected, as can be done and as has been done before, the travelling public will be sufficiently protected. The travelling public will be safe, because no cattle can get on the railway to be killed, and the farmers will be safe for their cattle will not be killed unless upon the intersection of the highway if they wilfully allow the animals to stray. The farmers are too much interested in this matter to allow the railways to be unprotected in the manner they have been. The men who man the railway trains, engineers, conductors, firemen and others—nine out of ten of them—are farmer's sons. Moreover, farmers make up a very large proportion of the travelling public. Altogether the farmers are more interested in the safety of the railways, perhaps, than any other class. I think it only right that at this session we should determine that the railways shall place cattle-guards. As it is at present, when a man wishes to drive cattle down the road, as I stated to the committee, he has to take two or three men with him to keep the cattle from getting on the track. Cattle driven away seek to return home, and they take the first opening and make a rush hoping to get away from their drivers. If there are no cattle-guards, they get on the track, and if a train comes along, the cattle are killed and the lives of the people in the train endangered. But, if the cattle-guards were there, the cattle would pass on across the track, and would not be killed, nor would there be that risk of killing passengers in the cars. I think this matter should be decided and decided at once.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WADE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Allow me to put the amendment. Mr. Henderson moves to amend the clause by adding the following words :

Provided, however, that no liability shall accrue against any railway company for damages caused at any point where cattle-guards approved by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council have been erected and maintained. This Bill to have force and effect from and after the first day of 1902.

Mr. HENDERSON. April.

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WADE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LENNOX. Who has the floor ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I was reading the amendment and did not see which of the hon. gentlemen rose first. The last speaker was on that side. The hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) has the floor.

Mr. FRASER. Mr. Chairman——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FRASER. I am bound to assume that these hon. gentlemen are merely standing up and that there is nobody to speak, and therefore——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) has the floor.

Mr. LENNOX. I wish to call your attention to a point of order——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. LENNOX. But I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When a point of order is raised, both hon. members take their seats until it is decided.

Mr. LENNOX. But, I cannot state my point of order if I take my seat. The point of order is that I had undoubtedly risen and addressed the Chair, Mr. Chairman, and you asked me to resume my seat until you had read the amendment. I was bound to allow you to read the amendment, and I submit I had the right——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LENNOX. Allow me to state the point, and if I am wrong I will sit down.

Mr. COWAN. What is the point ?

Mr. LENNOX. Mr. Chairman, I submit that having called that to your attention it is my right——

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Lennox) is perfectly right, and I recall the case now that he has reminded me of it. The hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. Lennox) was on his feet when I asked him to sit down.

Mr. LENNOX. I wish to call your attention and the attention of the committee to the fact that the amendment read from the Chair was not the amendment as read by the hon. gentleman who moved it, and, therefore, I submit, it is not under discussion. While I have the floor, which seems to be a desirable position to-night, I will make a few remarks, with the permission of the committee. If the amendment of the hon. member for Halton had remained in the form in which he read it, I would be prepared, although it is not exactly what I would like, to support something along that line. Although I do not entirely agree with his view, I think there ought to be some sort of compromise in a matter of that kind. I do not understand the farmers of this country to ask any more than what is reasonable, and they seldom, in my opinion, ask as much as they are entitled to. Therefore, I think I have the concurrence of the committee in saying that when the farmers do come and ask for something that they really need to redress a grievance, the matter should receive ready consideration at the hands of this committee. That there is a great grievance we need not argue. I think that is admitted on all sides. I wish to say one thing and say it very distinctly, and that is that I repudiate as strongly as I can the accusation made against the farmers by the argument that they want to sell their cattle by driving them or permitting them to go on the track. That argument has been advanced many times, but I think that any hon. member who says that does not understand the farming community in this Dominion. I need not say that they are an honest class and that in coming before the committee they are seeking redress for a grievance under which they have laboured for fourteen years—a great deal longer I am bound to say, than they ought to have submitted to it. The question whether there can be any instance in which a farmer could have redress in case his cattle are killed by going on the railway track at a point where there should be a cattle-guard, has been suggested by the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) I hear every opinion of that hon. gentleman with great deference ; and would have been glad to hear him state any instance where a farmer could recover. But, in the absence of such a statement from the hon. gentleman it will not be deemed presumptuous in me to express my own opinion. From the study I have given the matter, I understand that as the law now is, if there are no cattle-guards and the cattle go down along the track and are killed, the farmer can not possibly recover. And for this reason, which is very plain—that, by the fact of the cattle going down the highway unattended the law was broken. Therefore, there is no lawyer who would for a moment advise the farmer in such a case to bring action.

We do not need to speculate upon the law in that regard, because the law has been so decided in more than one case in the province of Ontario, and also in Manitoba. So then we have this fact, that we have a law upon the statute-book which says that the railway company shall have suitable and sufficient cattle-guards, and yet if they do not have them, as they have not had them, they can snap their fingers at the public as well as at the farmers, that they can openly violate the law, and there is no possible redress in case of cattle straying upon the highway and thence upon the railway track. Now that is a matter which I submit cries for immediate redress.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend speaks with a great deal of authority, as coming from Ontario, because these rulings do not apply in the province of Quebec, where we have not the doctrine of contributory negligence. But he says, assuming that the railway company is in default and that the farmer is not, and an animal gets on to the track and is killed—there is no recourse against the railway company. Now let us assume that the farmer is in default, that the railway company has got a suitable cattle-guard, and that the animal gets on the track and is killed, what would be the result in that case ? As I understand the hon. gentleman, he says the farmer is out of court because of contributory negligence. Is that not his opinion ?

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, not because of contributory negligence.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. On the doctrine that he has not properly taken care of his animals.

Mr. LENNOX. Because it is contrary to the statute, as I understand it. It amounts to the same thing.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Practically the same thing. Now if the railway company meets with an accident and their cars are thrown into the ditch, where is their recourse ?

Mr. BROCK. None whatever.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It seems to me there are two sides to this question.

Mr. LENNOX. My hon. friend has put two or three questions to me.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Take the converse of my hon. friend's case.

Mr. LENNOX. In the last case, you say, supposing there is damage to the railway, in what condition do the company stand ? I may say that if my hon. friend thinks that is a matter for consideraaion, it should be attended to. But my hon. friend from Lincoln is dealing with a matter which is specific and clear in itself. But I may tell my hon. friend that if my recollection of the statute is correct, if a farmer through negligence allows his cattle to get upon the railway, he is liable in case damage is done to the company. But coming back to what is more important, the farmer cannot recover at the present time in case cattle go from the highway upon the railway, notwithstanding that the company have been guilty of a direct breach of the statutes. That is the position of the law to-day.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is where both parties are in default.

Mr. LENNOX. I am stating what is the fact, I am not inquiring into the cause. The fact and the law are that to-day if a farmer's cattle go upon the highway, whether by accident or design, unattended, and are killed upon the railway, the farmer cannot get any redress.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Nor the railway company either.

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. LENNOX. One moment. What I say is this, there is a penalty in case the farmer's cattle get upon the highway, that is, he runs a risk of having them killed at the place of intersection, and when they are killed there he has no redress. Now my hon. friend says there are two wrongs, and there is a great deal in that argument, but not enough to stop this Bill. The farmer is wrong in having his cattle upon the highway at all, and the railway company are wrong in not having a proper cattle-guard there. Now the question is, what is the proximate and immediate cause ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Apply the doctrine of civil law and you have got an answer.

Mr. LENNOX. I am going to apply the doctrine of civil law to my hon. friend if he will wait. Now we have these two wrongs and I submit that the doctrine of the immediate and proximate cause is the one which should govern in a case of this kind. The farmer's cattle getting upon the highway may or may not meet with an accident. If there was a cattle-guard there they certainly would not meet with an accident at the point where they are killed.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If they were not straying they would not be there.

Mr. LENNOX. Excuse me, if it were not for the absence of a cattle-guard they would not be killed between the two crossings upon the railway. It is plainly laid down that if a person is negligently crossing a railway track and is not acting with reasonable diligence the railway may not be liable ; yet, if the company could have averted the consequence of the plaintiff's negligence and did not, the company is liable. Now, if the railway company had done what the law prescribes it would not have been guilty of statutory negligence, and this accident between the two highways never would have occurred. Therefore I say you should compel the railway company to comply with the law, you should say to them, 'We will compel you to comply with the law, and if you do not, then you will be liable in case cattle are killed between the highway crossings.'

Mr. WADE. I think this measure is one of the most important that has been brought before parliament this session. It involves not only damage that may be done to cattle struck by a railway train, but damage that may be done to the train itself, and it involves the life of the travelling public and of railway employees. These are matters we must consider when we approach this question. For three days this matter was discussed before the Railway Committee. Upon the last day the Minister of Railways and Canals made a statement, which to my mind seemed most reasonable ; it was that the government would undertake during recess to find out what was the best cattle-guard or cattle-guards, and then at the next session to enact a law compelling all railway companies to put in one or other of these guards. I think that in the discussion of this question one very important provision of the railway law has been entirely overlooked. Section 194 of the Railway Act says :

Fences should be erected and maintained on each side of the railway through such township, of the height and strength of an ordinary division fence, with openings or gates or bars or sliding or hurdle gates of such width for the purpose thereof, with proper fastenings at farm crossings of the railway, and also cattle-guards at all highway crossings suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle and other animals from getting on the railway.

I mean to say that there is no gentleman who can tell us, that there is no railway man who can tell us of a cattle-guard which is sufficient to answer the requirements of that section. It is admitted to-day that no cattle-guard has been devised which is sufficient. The nearest approach to it is the old pit-guard and everybody is unanimous in admitting that that guard causes dangers which are far greater than the compensation of the safety to the animal.

Mr. FRASER. Are the words 'suitable' and 'sufficient.'

Mr. WADE. 'Suitable' and 'sufficient.' A cattle-guard is not sufficient that permits an animal to get over it. Under section 271, if cattle are imporperly on the highway and not properly attended and the railway kills them at the point of intersection, the owner has no action. That is where the highway crosses the railway, and experience has shown that if cattle are at large, if they are loose, and if they are upon the point of intersection and the train approaches, in nine cases out of ten, they will not turn to the right or the left, but they will rush madly over whatever obstruction there may be in the shape of a cattle-guard, and upon the line, and it is there that they will be killed. The first thing we have to consider about this statute is that it lays an impossible burden on the railway company, and whenever an Act lays an impossible burden on an individual or a company, that Act, to a certain extent, becomes nugatory. I submit that the root of the whole evil is in the impossibility of the railway company to comply with the provisions of the law as it stands to-day, and if you are to remedy that evil the Governor in Council, or the Minister of Railways and Canals, or the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, must lay down exactly what shall be a suffcient cattle-guard, giving its dimensions and specifications. Then, in case the company shall put in one of these guards or any such guard as may be prescribed by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and as it will then be possible for the railway company to comply with the Act, the disposition of parliament would be to force them to do it. There, I submit, is the root of the whole evil. I submit that the railway law as it stands to-day is nothing more than the common law of England. Here is the obligation resting upon the farmer on the one side to take care of his cattle, here is the obligation resting on the railway company to see that reasonable precauttions are taken not to let these cattle get upon the line of their railway. If one of these parties neglects the obligation that rests upon him that party is liable for any damages which may result, but if both parties are negligent, then, surely, neither party should have an action against the other. This section is a section which has been in the Act since we have had a railway law. It is true that the phraseology of subsection 3 has been altered, but the only effect of the alteration is to lay a little heavier burden on the railway company. Subsection 3 as it stood formerly was as follows :

Until such fences and cattle-guards are duly made and completed, and if after they are so made and completed they are not duly maintained, the company shall be liable for all damages done by its trains and engines to cattle, horses and other animals, not wrongfully on the railway.

The amendment of 1890 makes use of different phraseology and says that :

If the company omits to erect and complete, as aforesaid, any fence or cattle-guard, or if, after it is completed, the company neglects to maintain the same as aforesaid, and if, in consequence of such omission or neglect any animal gets upon the railway from an adjoining place where, under the circumstances, it might properly be——

That is the only difference, and I submit a careful consideration of that amendment shows that it lays a heavier burden on the railway company. Now, the amendment which has been proposed here by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) proposes, in effect, to say that in so far as railway crossings are concerned—he does not deal with fences, or any neglect so far as fences are concerned—but so far as cattle-guards are concerned, cattle shall not be considered improperly in an adjoining place simply because they are at large upon the highway. In other words, it would leave the law in the position that there is a provision which the company cannot perform. The company cannot put a cattle-guard there which would be a sufficient obstruction to cattle going upon their line. Then, if cattle going along the highway pass over this guard which is not sufficient to keep them away and they are killed, the company is liable in every case, no matter whether the cattle of the farmer were upon the highway by the grossest negligence on his part or not. I say that as between the company and the farmer it is not a fair or just provision, and it is proposed to change one of the safest principles of common as well as railway law. Then, there is the trainman upon the engine, or on the car. Has he anything to do with this cattle-guard ? Has he anything to do with these cattle that are running at large, and yet his life is jeopardized, as are also the lives of the travelling public, because there are all manner of disasters which may overtake them. I read in the newspapers the other day of a cow which strayed near a station in the vicinity of Toronto, was struck by a locomotive, hurled against a carpenter who was at work nearby, breaking his back and killing him. Although that cow was at large through the gross negligence of the owner, we would have this state of affairs that here is a man killed by this cow being at large through negligence, yet the owner can recover damages against the railway company. I think I am in a position to speak with some slight authority upon this question. In the first place, I was born and bred on a farm, and in the next place, I have the honour to represent a county which is largely agricultural, through which, from one end of it to the other, a railway passes, another railway crosses within nine miles of its entire breadth, and still a third railway is being built. I have had some experience in operating a railway, having operated a railway for some six or seven years under an order of the court, and I make the statement with all deference to hon. gentlemen who have expressed contrary opinions that it would be a matter of the greatest misfortune, not only to the travelling public but to the farmers themselves, if we were to adopt this amendment to the Railway Act. I am sure that the farmers in my county and that the farmers in Nova Scotia do not demand anything of the sort. They are reasonable enough to see that the only way you can have safety is by keeping the burden on both sides. Hold the farmers to their duty, hold the farmers to the exercise of ordinary care and diligence in keeping cattle off the track, and hold the railway company to its duty in maintaining cattle-guards.

Mr. LANCASTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) says : Hold the railway company to its duty. How are the railways bound by any obligation ? How are the railway companies liable if they do not put in cattle-guards ?

Mr. WADE. I have read the section and the hon. gentleman has seen it.

Mr. LANCASTER. I read the section also, but I asked the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) to state a case if he can where the railway would be liable if they had not a cattle-guard.

Mr. WADE. I could state many such cases. In any municipality where there is no by-law prohibiting cattle running at large, the owner of the cattle would have an action against the company.

Mr. LANCASTER. At common law they could not run at large.

Mr. WADE. The principle of the common law in most of the provinces is, that the owner of the cattle must fence them in. The opposite, however, prevails in my province, and cattle are allowed to run at large unless there is a by-law of the municipality against it. I think, by their civil code, the province of Quebec is in the same position as under the common law in England in that regard. But mark you; we are making a law here not only for Ontario and Quebec and the maritime provinces, but for the whole Dominion, and for that vast section of country where cattle roam at large month after month. If you pass this law, then if a railway company had not cattle-guards over the prairie sections, the owner of a herd of cattle which is allowed to roam at large, could recover from the railway company if his cattle were killed. A railway company cannot fence along its line in the prairie sections, and so if you pass this law it will be absolutely unworkable in some parts of the Dominion, and it would land the farmers of the country in chaos, confusion and litigation.

Mr. AVERY. If a farmer is driving his cattle along a road taking them to market, and they get on a railway track and they are killed because there is no cattle-guard; what recourse has the farmer under the present law ?

Mr. WADE. Under section 271; if he is driving cattle along a road he is required to have them in charge of some person who is reasonably capable of managing them, and if he does that and his cattle are killed on the railway track through the want of a cattle-guard, the railway company is liable under the law as it stands to-day. That is a fair provision. The owner should have his cattle in charge of one reasonably capable of managing them, and if through his negligence in not complying with that provision his cattle are killed, he should be responsible for the damages that he sustains. One of the first cases that I have to try at the approaching session of court is an action brought by myself for a client against a railway company, for the value of a herd of cattle which were killed on a line of railway. I have advised my client that he is able to recover against the railway company. I say that every protection is here in the Act if we eliminate the word 'sufficient' from the section we are now considering. If the government prescribed one or more cattle-guards and said that these cattle-guards would be 'sufficient,' then I say that we will have met the whole difficulty.

Now, we come to this question of a sufficient cattle-guard. I listened with great attention to the very excellent speech made by my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Thompson). He discarded the pit-guard, and I believe we all agree that the day of the old pit-guard is gone, but we have to search around to ascertain what is the best guard.

Mr. CLARKE. What kind of guard is now most largely used in the maritime provinces ?

Mr. WADE. The old pit-guards are used on the old lines of railway, but the guard which is in most general use on the new lines, and which is deemed to be the best for all practical purposes, is what is called the gridiron.

Mr. CLARKE. What is used on the main line of the Intercolonial Railway ?

Mr. WADE. They have the old pit-guards which were originally put in, but I understand these have been changed wherever a new one is required and the gridiron is substituted.

Mr. SCHELL. Is this gridiron guard made of iron or wood ?

Mr. WADE. It is made of wood. There is a large gridiron guard with spikes in it, but that has been found to injure the cattle, and the gridiron which has been found to work fairly well is made of wood. but it is not a sufficient guard because it does not keep the cattle off the track in all cases. Let me tell my hon. friend that the man who to-day would invent a sufficient cattle-guard which would comply with the provisions of section 94. would be a millionaire to-morrow, because I have not the slightest doubt that every railway in the Dominion would be anxious to adopt it. It is not fair to say that railway companies do not care whether the guards are there or not. To assume that, we would have to assume that the companies are utterly regardless as to whether they destroy the property of others or not; we would have to assume that they are callous as to whether they destroy life or not, and we would also have to assume that they are regardless of the destruction of their own property. The amendment to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) has a great deal in it to commend itself to my judgment. After all, it is only the proposition that was put by the Minister of Railways before the committee the other day, when he said he would undertake on behalf of the government to ascertain by commission or otherwise the examination of all cattle-guards in use on the continent of America if necessary, and when one or more of the best guards were selected he would undertake to introduce an Act next session requiring the railway companies to put in the prescribed guard. Some hon. gentlemen may say : How are you to compel the railway companies to put in that guard. That is the easiest thing in the world. You can provide, that if they do not put the guard in within a certain time after the passage of the Act they shall be liable to a penalty for every day of such neglect, and the penalty can be made so high that they must put in the required guard. You could make them liable for damages if you will, but I hate interfering with the well known principle of common law. We could accomplish the result by making the railway companies liable for heavy penalties to be recovered by any person suing. If that be done we will remedy the wrong complained of by the farmers. I will take the responsibility that such a provision will be absolutely satisfactory to the farmers I represent. If we do that we will be compelling the railway companies to do what they should do. We will have then dealt fairly between the railway company and the farmers, and in dealing fairly between the two we will have had due regard for the safety and interests of the travelling public and the men who are employed upon the trains.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) explain to the committee what he means by saying that he will take the responsibility that it will be satisfactory ?

Mr. WADE. I said : Before my constituents in my own county. I suppose almost any gentleman would understand what I meant by that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Almost.

Mr. GILMOUR. In view of the fact that I represent a rural constituency and that I have had petitions sent to me with regard to this matter which I presented to this House, I wish to say a few words on this question. A lot of energy has been wasted to-night in trying to show that the law as it stands with regard to protection at railway crossings is not sufficient. I think it is generally conceded that the law at present is not sufficient, and that it is against the interests of the farmers of Canada. But it is needless for us to say that the law as it stands is not sufficient and that it should be amended as proposed by the hon. member for Lincoln, becuse if we amended it in that way we would just be putting it as far wrong the other way. The railway company should be placed in the same position as an individual. I do not think there is an hon. gentleman here who would say that they ought to be put in a worse position than an individual. Uuder our present municipal law, it enables individuals to establish what is called a lawful fence ; and if an individual puts up a lawful fence, he is absolved from any consequences that may come from that, and he can collect damages should his neighbours' cattle get over such. So with a railway company. They ought to be given the opportunity of putting up a lawful fence, and if they do that, they should be absolved from any consequences. But, under the proposal of the hon. member for Lincoln, no matter what kind of a fence the railway company should put up, if anything should happen they would perhaps be held liable. I do not think any hon. member of this House would say that is fair. I go further and say I do not think there is a farmer in the country would say that is fair. The farmers of this country do not wish to put even a railway company in a worse position than they would desire to be put themselves. That is my position clearly in this matter. I do think the government ought to take this subject in hand, and declare what would be a lawful fence, so that the company would be put on a fair footing with other individuals. The hon. member for Lincoln deserves credit for bringing this matter forward, and I understand that the government next session are prepared to take it up and deal with it, and I think he ought to accept the statement that they will do something to put it in that position. I think his Bill might be so amended as to provide that a legal fence would be declared by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and a certain date might be fixed when the law would come in force and by which time the railway company would be absolved from blame if they put up such a fence.

Mr. McCARTHY. I occupy a somewhat similar position to that of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat. I have not any doubt that there exists a grievance and that by reason of the law as it at present stands. But I also think that by reason of an agitation which has been propagated throughout the province of Ontario by a newspaper, and by reason of the fact that certain hon. members of this House have been given by that newspaper a certain prominence and have obtained a certain kudos, the question has been unduly pressed, and they have apparently been afraid lest they would lose that kudos if they would accept any fair or reasonable compromise which might be suggested. It may be charged that, because I was referred to in terms anything but flattering by that newspaper last week, I speak as I do now. But I repudiate the charge before it is made. Perhaps it will be said that is because I have an uneasy conscience; but I repudiate this because I took the same position at the time it was proposed that this question should be disposed of in the House, and not referred to the Railway Committee, which was before the newspaper article appeared, that I would not stigmatize myself as a member of that Committee by saying that that body was not capable of dealing, or would not properly deal with the question. When the measure first came before the Railway Committee, I feared I would not be able to be present when it would be disposed of, and I spoke on that occasion saying that if an amicable arrangement could not be arrived at, and the railway companies would not accept any compromise, I would be prepared to support the hon. member for Lincoln's Bill; and I still occupy that position. The newspaper to which I refer did not give me credit for saying that; but said that the member for North Simcoe was a runaway. Therefore I feel it necessary to state now the position which I occupy. I agree entirely with the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) that there is a grievance, but that by legislating as the hon. member for Lincoln suggests, we would make the law go as far in the opposite direction as it does in favour of the railways at present. If that is the case, and if after three days' discussion in the Railway Committee and two or three hours' discussion here, hon. members cannot reach a fair and reasonable compromise, though both sides agree that a fair and reasonable compromise is possible, the difficulty must be to put it into proper words. What is the grievance? Only that a certain standard cattle guard is not maintained. If a standard cattle guard can be got, which is capable of keeping cattle off the railways, and that cattle guard is maintained, then the grievance is obviated and the difficulty is removed. Now, it is said that the Act as it stands at present does not arrive at that result, and in that I entirely agree, because unless the cattle, when on the highway, are in charge of an individual, it is held that they are not properly there. Consequently, the railways have in no way kept up their cattle guards. But as the Minister of Justice puts it, if the cattle, through the negligence of the farmer, being the first step of negligence, get upon the highway, and stray further, and then get upon the railway, then it is said that the farmer should profit by his negligence. I do not think he should; and in this I entirely agree with the hon. member for East Middlesex, who himself is a farmer, and who knows the feeling of the farmers. I have also had the opportunity of discussing this matter with the farmers of my constituency, and they entirely agree with what he says, that no farmer desires that farmers as a community should be allowed to take advantage of their own negligence. Nor do the railway companies I should hope, desire to take advantage of their negligence. If they do it is our duty to legislate so that they should not. But surely it is possible to arrive at a compromise whereby the farmer and the railway company should be on the same basis as individuals, and the law should be as fair towards the one as it is towards the other. If we agree in that, why should not some fair compromise on these lines be drafted?

It seems to me that the English language is not so barren that a fair compromise cannot be framed; and I am informed—the hon. member for Lincoln will correct me if I am wrong—that when his Bill was under discussion before the Railway Committee on the third occasion, on which occasion unfortunately I was not present, it was suggested that the matter should be referred to a sub-committee, composed of seven on one side nominated by himself, and five on the other side. Seven members to be appointed by himself and five members representing the opposite view, and he would not accept that proposition.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is not correct I have never heard of it before.

Mr. McCARTHY. Then I must have been misinformed. At all events, amendments were submitted along the lines of the suggestion made by myself on the first occasion the Bill was before the committee, and the hon. member would not agree to anything of the kind. Am I correct in that ?

Mr. LANCASTER. An amendment was suggested by one of the members from Essex—I think the hon. member for South Essex. I argued, as I have done to-night, that the fact that the animal was unattended should be no presumption of negligence, and I did so with regard to the clause suggested, namely, that a farmer could only recover when there was no negligence on his part. If it were provided that the fact of an animal being unattended was no presumption of negligence, I was willing to accept the clause proposed, but I did not know that the hon. member for North Simcoe had anything to do with it, and I have not seen any proposition of the kind to-night.

Mr. McCARTHY. The information that came to me was that the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) had either conveyed or was asked to have conveyed a message to my hon. friend from Lincoln to the effect that a sub-committee should be appointed to be composed of seven members, selected by my hon. friend himself, and five holding the contrary view, to deal with the measure. He would then have the thing in his own hands, and the sub-committee would be bound to report. But of course, if that message did not reach him, I have nothing more to say on that point. But it seemed to me that this difficulty must be worked out on the basis of compromise, and I thought it unreasonable on the part of my hon. friend not to have accepted the offer which I supposed was made. I come now to the other suggestion, to which my hon. friend from Lincoln has referred, and for which I do not claim any credit. It was that if the cattle got on the road by reason of the negligence of its owner, he could not recover ; and I admit that the further suggestion of my hon. friend was a good one, and I think that if those holding opposite views could be got together, a compromise could be arrived at to the effect that if in the opinion of a court or a court and jury, if the case is tried by a judge and jury, the owner of the animal was found guilty of negligence, he should not recover, but that the fact of an animal being unattended on the highway should not be taken as a presumption of negligence. If such an amendment as that meets with the approval of the hon. gentleman, it seems to me the difficulty is removed. That I think would be a solution of the difficulty, satisfactory to both sides, but should it be impossible to arrive amicably at a reasonable arrangement and no compromise be arrived at, I am prepared to support the Bill of my hon. friend from Lincoln.

Mr. INGRAM. In view of the number of amendments put forth to-night and the statement made by the hon. Minister of Railways in the committee, I think that we ought to have some statement from some member of the cabinet, in the absence of the Minister of Railways, as to whether or not the government are prepared to carry out the promise made by that hon. minister in the committee. In my judgment, it would be in the interest, not only of the farming community but of the travelling public, that this matter should be seriously considered before any legislation be passed affecting it. It is not fair to say that hon. gentlemen who may take a different view from those who support this measure is opposed to any legislation that will remove the difficulty. I do not think that there is an hon. gentleman in this House who is opposed to legislation on this matter that will relieve or remedy the grievance. We are all agreed on that point, but where we disagree is as to what is the best way to remedy the grievance and do away with the complaints of the farmers. It has been stated here that this is to be an amendment to the General Railway Act of Canada and is to apply to the different provinces throughout the Dominion. But when we hear men from Manitoba and the North-west Territories and the other provinces outside of Ontario say that this Bill does not meet their views, it seems to me that it is the duty of the government and especially of the Minister of Railways to make a thorough investigation and so amend the Act that it will meet the requirements of all concerned. No doubt the railway companies have been more or less negligent in the matter, and where they have been negligent the head of the Railway Department should see as far as possible that they carry out the law. The fact of cattle roaming at large and causing accidents on lines of railway has been pointed out, and no doubt in such cases the farmers cannot claim any damage for the loss of their cattle. But, on the other hand, are not the consequences far more serious than the loss of cattle, when, in consequence of cattle thus roaming at large, they are struck by railway trains and damage is done to the property of railway companies and the lives of travellers imperilled and injured and sometimes lost ? All the cattle-guards from here to the Pacific coast will not prevent accidents of that kind. The animals are on the highway, through the negligence of their owners, and by reason of that negligence loss of life occurs and great damage to railway property, so that the actual placing of a cattle-guard would not prevent accidents in that way. But the great difficulty of passing legislation in this House is that you may possibly, if you are not very careful, frame it of such a character that it will make the farmer more negligent than he is, and thereby cause great danger to the travelling public as well as the property of the railway company. I can speak from my railway experience, and

I have known of many incidents, in which, by reason of the negligence of those who own stock throughout the country, serious accidents have occurred, and therefore I look upon this question as a very important one which should be seriously considered by the head of the Railway Department before any action can be taken. If the first minister will say that they are prepared to thoroughly investigate this matter and bring down legislation next session that will remedy the grievance, I am prepared to support the government in that course. But if they are not prepared to make any such declaration, I will have to be guided on other lines entirely, but until I have their declaration I am not prepared to state what course I shall take now.

Mr. PRINGLE. I was on the sub-committee last year that was appointed to consider this Bill. I took the view then that it was not one which should become law. One of the reasons I gave has been pretty well gone into, and that is that while it holds the railway corporation liable for negligence, it relieves the other party, no matter what negligence he may be guilty of. When this Bill came up this year, I proposed an amendment on these lines, namely, that we should insert the words 'Without any negligence on the part of the owner or person in charge of the cattle.' That amendment did not seem acceptable to the promoter of the Bill, and after considerable discussion, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals said that if it were allowed to stand over until the next year, some steps would be taken to see that sufficient cattle-guards were placed, where necessary, by the railway companies. Now I take the view that what we all desire is not only the safety of the cattle but the safety of the public, and that safety we will best provide by having the most efficient cattle-guards that can be procured.

In the year 1900 on some 18,000 miles of railway in the Dominion of Canada upon which there were 21,500,000 passengers carried, there were only seven persons killed through accident—less than one for every three millions of passengers carried. That is creditable not only to the railway corporations of this country, but also to the farmers, that they, on their part, have observed the law and kept their cattle from running at large on the highway. For, on looking at the statistics for the United States of America, I find that there were 530 accidents through cattle getting on the railway track. I say we should legislate in the interests of the great public of which the farmers form very much the largest portion; and we should not put upon the statute-book any measure which would be a retrograde measure and open the door, if I may use that word, for accident. For, as this Bill is framed, it would induce men to be careless and, perhaps, to permit their cattle to run at large, knowing that no matter how careless they had been, if the judge or jury say the cattle-guard is not sufficient they would recover damages. I am very sorry the Minister of Railways is not here to-night, for I would like him to make the statement in the House which he made in the committee. It was upon that statement that I voted to let the matter stand over until next session, because I believe that what we want is a proper cattle-guard, the best possible cattle-guard that we can obtain. And we want it left to the Minister of Railways or the committee to say what is a proper and sufficient guard. We find that, in the United States of America, the railway commissions of the different states inspect the cattle-guards and decide what is, or is not sufficient guard. If they pronounce the cattle-guards sufficient, that is the end of it. But, if this Bill were to become law, we should be in a difficulty as to whether a cattle-guard was sufficient or insufficient, judges or juries in different places taking different views. Therefore, I take it that it is in the interest of the public and in the interest of the farmers themselves that this Bill should be left in the hands of the government, that is, if the government assure us that they will take it up and give it every consideration, and come down next session with a Bill that will give the relief that is looked for.

Mr. FRASER. When I hear the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) and the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson), for whom I have the very highest respect, and who understands the position of the farmers in Ontario much better than others who are speaking more strongly for them, I am bound to say that it is evident opinion is not all one way. There is no cyclone in this matter; there is no reason why we should not take time to consider what we are doing. As both these hon. members said, we must look at the case fairly. The difficulty with a number of gentlemen who have spoken is that, under the fearful pressure of a number of people clamouring for a change in the law, they have forgotten that they were going to pass an Act of parliament, and have substituted this clamour and their own feelings in response to it, for the legal words and the legal facts——

Mr. LANCASTER. Where is the clamour in this Bill? If it is not in proper legal phraseology, will the hon. gentleman point out where it fails?

Mr. FRASER. The clamour is from the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster) and he is substituting his clamour——

Mr. LANCASTER. Let me ask the hon. gentleman if he did not say that we had introduced mere clamour into this legal document?

Mr. FRASER. I said they were substituting this clamour to give an appearance of strength to their speeches instead of considering the cold words of an Act of parliament. You could not put clamour into an Act of parliament.

Mr. LANCASTER. I thought the hon. gentleman said we had.

Mr. FRASER. I was about to refer to what the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) said. He called upon the members from the lower provinces, because this was an Ontario matter, to join him. Does he want us to do violence to the principles of common law because there are people in Ontario who wish it? If the hon. gentleman wants that, he should provide that this Act shall apply only to Ontario; and, then, if Ontario is unanimously for it, I will not say a word against it. Now, we in the lower provinces have a fair number of miles of railway. Yet I have not received a single letter in support of this Bill, nor have I seen a single word about it from my own portion of the country. I have no doubt the difficulty arises in Ontario, and perhaps elsewhere. But we should never forget, as the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) has so well said, that it would be idiotic for us to remedy one difficulty merely by creating another. Legislation should be designed to remove difficulties, not to create new ones, that, perhaps, would be worse than the others. Wise men will seek to lessen a difficulty, or do away with it if possible, but will not pass legislation that will merely irritate the other side and create a difficulty greater than the cure. So, as one member from the lower provinces, I cannot accept the flattering invitation of the hon. member for Haldimand that, because he and others want it we should support this amendment to the law. We must consider what the effects of the change would be, not in Ontario only, but elsewhere. It seems to me that this would put the farmer in a position of unfair advantage, and as the hon. member for East Middlesex said, there is no farmer in Canada who wants that. It is not necessary for us to talk about the farmers being honest; the farmers of Canada need no defenders here or elsewhere. Under the wording of this Act, it would be possible for any man to recover whose cattle were killed. Even the present law is mixed up with this phrase of 'suitable and sufficient,' but if you will read the words as they appear in this Bill:

> And no animal not allowed by law to run at large shall be held for the purpose of such liability to be improperly on a place adjoining the railway if such animals get upon the railway from the highway by reason of such omission or neglect to maintain such cattle-guards or fences at the highway crossing.

In connection with this, you must read 'by reason of neglect to maintain such suitable cattle-guards or fences.' That, it appears to me, would make it almost impossible to defend any action, and I do not think any hon. gentleman would want that. I think we should accept what the Minister of Railways has said. But, if that is not accepted, I will vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Halton, for that is the next best thing in my opinion. I would not have taken up time but that I wished the committee to understand that we who come from the lower provinces can look at this question not only from the point of view of our own provinces, but from the point of view of the general effect of this statute.

Mr. SCHELL. I come from a county through which three railroads run the fastest trains probably in the Dominion of Canada. Upon this question of cattle-guards there has been a good deal of feeling amongst the farmers on account of the number of cattle killed. I have a number of letters which I could read from farmers who have had cattle killed, and are unable to get any recompense from the companies. The discussion this evening has turned largely on the question of negligence. Now I will cite a case to show how far the farmers are justified in complaining of the law as it stands at present. Mr. W. D. McCrimmon, of Glenroy, on the Canadian Pacific Railway line, writes that one stormy night his fences were blown down, the cattle came from the rear of the farm, passed down the road, and got on the track, and laid down on the track, and six thoroughbred cattle were killed by a train before morning; and he could get no recompense for those cattle because they were illegally on the track.

Mr. INGRAM. Supposing the train was thrown from the track and several lives lost, who would be liable then?

Mr. SCHELL. I am merely discussing the question of negligence. Was that a case of negligence? I think that was a case where the railroad were clearly liable under the law, because if they had had a sufficient cattle-guard those cattle would not have got on the track and would not have been killed. I believe that in 90 per cent of the cases where cattle are killed it is in the night time when they have strayed upon the track in that way. There are very few cases indeed where cattle get upon the track in broad daylight. The root of the matter, as the member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) says, is the question of the sufficiency of the cattle-guard. So far as the farmers are concerned it is usually in the night time that their cattle get upon the track, and through no negligence of their own. Railroad men will almost invariably tell you that very few cattle get upon the track in the day time. They do not feed upon the track, but upon the side of the track. In the night time, if they get on the track, they lie on it because it is a warm place. I think the law should be made to protect the farmer whose cattle, by no negligence of his own, break out of the field and stray upon the track. Another question we have to consider is the sufficiency of the cattle-guard. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) read extracts from the railroad people to show that they used efficient cattle-guards. Some railroads claim they have sufficient cattle-guards when they have only a few wooden slats laid upon the track. The member for Annapolis spoke about a gridiron cattle-guard. That gridiron cattle-guard is used in the United States to-day, and is recognized as sufficient by the law, but it is made of steel. The Canadian Pacific Railway had a large number of thse steel gridiron cattle-guards upon their track, and so did other roads in this country, but they were expensive, and so they substituted for the steel gridiron cattle-guards a few six inch boards put down upon the track which would allow any animal to walk over. The law said the company was not obliged to pay for animals that went upon the track so long as they had a semblance of a cattle-guard, so long as they had a few boards there. That was considered sufficient under the law to protect the company from liability if cattle strayed upon the track and got killed. These facts are well known to every railroad man. The gridiron cattle-guard made of steel is to-day practically an effective cattle-guard, but it is an expensive one, and it was dispensed with because the law admitted as sufficient a few cheap boards put down as a cattle-guard which would cost 75 cents, whereas the other kind would cost $20. That is the kernel of the whole matter. If the railroads had these gridiron steel cattle-guards in use we would not have this discussion to-night.

Mr. AVERY. A good deal has been said on both sides with regard to what constitutes a sufficient cattle-guard. I think it is high time we should amend the law and put it in such a shape that the people will know when they have a sufficient cattle-guard. It has been said that if a man is driving cattle over the road and they get killed, the owner can recover from the company. That is not the case. There was a case where the judge decided that if a man was in charge of the cattle, that was sufficient to protect the owner, and there being no cattle-guard on the railway and the cattle being killed, the owner had no recourse I think the motion of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) should be adopted, as I think that will protect the farmers of this country.

Mr. HENDERSON. Exception has been taken to the amendment which I introduced, because I failed to read the latter portion of it. I was under the impression that in committee it was not necessary for a member to read his amendment, but that it was the Chair who read the amendment in putting it. Therefore in my opinion the amendment is properly before the House even though I failed to read the last few words. My intention was to fill in the date with the 1st day of April, 1903, and when my motion is put from the Chair. I would like those words to go in, in order to allow the railway companies time to comply with the requirements of the Act. I am sure the committee will be reasonable in a matter of that kind. No hon. member would expect the railway companies to be prepared to-morrow, or in two weeks, to put in the guards which the Railway Committee of the Privy Council might decide upon. They must have reasonable time, and we must, as reasonable men, deal in a reasonable way with the companies. It was suggested by the member for Annapolis that my amendment was along the line of what was suggested by the Minister of Railways and Canals in the committee. I think it is somewhat different. In the Railway Committee I had my amendment prepared, but I did not catch the eye of the Chairman soon enough, and another suggestion was made before I could read my amendment. My amendment was different from that suggested by the Minister of Railways and Canals, in that I proposed immediate legislation. I favoured that, because the petitions that were sent in this year asked for legislation this session, and my desire was to comply with the prayer of those petitions. Consequently I moved an amendment in the Railway Committee, but it was held that I was not in order at the time. Perhaps I was not, I did not find fault with that ruling. But I take the opportunity of moving it here. Now I desire to say here that my policy is a standard guard. I am not so particular how that standard is obtained. I would call that a solution of this difficulty. I would prefer that it should be obtained along the line I have suggested. I think that would be the better and the more acceptable way. I think this the more speedy way, because, before parliament could be able to pass an Act next year, we would have these guards put in by the railway companies, and if the railway companies did not put them in, they would become liable under the Bill of the hon. member for Lincoln. If I cannot secure a standard guard in that way I am not going to oppose the policy of securing a standard guard in any way as soon as possible.

Mr. LANCASTER. Under the circumstances and in view of the opinion of a good many hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, I think it perhaps would be the best I could do in the interests of the country, as I understand the country's interests, to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson). It seems to me, that if not quite the same thing that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) has suggested, it is almost the same thing and the difference is that we get a certainty now instead of an uncertainty, not meaning to impute for a moment that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals would not carry out next year what he intends to, but there is, as the hon. member for Halton has said, a great demand at present for a certainty in regard to this question, and I think the country will not be satisfied with any promise that may mean anything or nothing as far as practical results are concerned. Having in view the fact that the hon. member for Halton, as it seems to be understood by members on both sides of the House, adopted the main part, or the gist of the contention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals when he provides that if there is a standard guard provided the company shall not be liable under the amendment which I am asking the House to pass, I think the House will say that I have accepted as reasonable a compromise as I could be asked to accept understanding the rights of the parties to be as I have understood them to be. The effect will be that a company will be liable until that standard guard is put in and not liable afterwards if the standard guard is put in and maintained. The Act will not go into force until April next; that is practically what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals undertook to do next year. I can see no objection that he can make to putting that in this year provided that it does not go into force until next year. We get practical legislation through and are really carrying out what a great majority of hon. members want. It will suit the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour), it will suit the hon member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) and I think it will suit the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), although he did not go so far as these other hon. gentlemen in saying what would suit him, while he was arguing for a compromise. I hope it will suit the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), because he says that we are compromising in the sense that we let the railway company off if they provide what the Railway Committee of the Privy Council has said is a proper guard. Provided that they do that I think it is fair that they should be let off if the guard is sufficient. I think therefore they all ought to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Halton and be unanimous for once this session.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It is admitted on all sides that there is an evil from which the farming community is suffering at this moment, an evil which the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) is trying to remedy by the Bill to which he has called the attention of the committee. But, at the same time, it seems to me to be admitted on all hands, also, that the remedy provided by this Bill is not adequate and will not meet the object which it is intended to serve. This proposition has been made to me very clear by the speeches of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson), my hon. friend from Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) and my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), gentlemen for whom I have the highest respect and who can speak with authority upon such questions. It has been made clear that the farming community do not want to have one-sided legislation. They want legislation which will work both ways and which provides that the company shall perform their duties and that the farming community should perform their duties also. Such being the case, I may call the attention of the House further to the fact that it seems to me, that, at this moment, my hon. friend from Lincoln is scarcely in order in the proceeding which he asks the committee to adopt. I will call the attention of the committee to the rules of the House upon this subject. This is a private Bill introduced by the hon. member for Lincoln.

Mr. LANCASTER. No, a public Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is a public Bill, but to serve an object as to which the procedure applied is the procedure of a private Bill. Certainly, it is a public Bill. It has been referred to the Railway Committee of the House. That Bill was read a second time with the distinct reservation that the House would not commit itself to the principle of the Bill, but that the principle of the Bill should be discussed by the Railway Committee, and that we should receive the report of the Railway Committee before we committed ourselves to the principle of the Bill. Now, I find that this Bill was not reported on favourably by the Standing Committee on Railways :

> Your committee have had under consideration Bill No. 2, an Act respecting telephone companies, Bill No. 3, an Act to amend the Railway Act, and Bill No. 28, an Act respecting telegraph and telephone companies, and recommend that the said Bills be not further proceeded with during the present session.

That is the report which we have before us, and my hon. friend altogether ignores this report. He has not even, so far as I have been able to follow the discussion, and I have followed it with a great deal of care, and I do not recollect that the hon. gentleman has referred to this report.

Mr. LANCASTER. In moving the House into committee I did.

The PRIME MINISTER. In a very casual way, but he has not moved to have the report set aside. While he stated that the report of the committee made certain recommendations the recommendation was that the Bill should not be proceeded with this session. He has ignored this, has put it aside and has asked the committee to proceed with the Bill as if the Bill had been reported upon favourably by the Standing Committee on Railways and Canals. I suppose if the Railway Committee had reported favourably he would have said that the Bill should have been taken clause by clause and section by section by this committee and that the Bill should be accepted. Now, my hon. friend proposes that we should do the same thing. There is no difference whatever in his procedure to-day. If the report of the Railway Committee had been favourable to his Bill he would have proceeded just as he is proceeding now, he would have asked that the Bill be taken section by section and approved by the House. But, the report has been against him. The Railway Committee have not reported the Bill, but have recommended to the House that the Bill should not be proceeded with this session. He puts that aside altogether, he does not take it into account and he asks the committee to pass the Bill as if the Bill had been reported favourably by the committee. What shall we do with this report? What is the object of it? Why did we refer this Bill to the Railway Committee? We referred it to the Railway Committee to have the opinion of the Railway Committee upon the subject. The opinion of the committee is that we should not proceed with the Bill this session. For my part I have always maintained that the best course for the House, is to support its committee unless very strong reasons can be shown to the contrary. I am informed that the reason why the committee would not entertain the Bill this year was because of the statement made by my colleague the Minister of Railways: that in his opinion the best way to deal with the question was not to support the legislation presented by the hon. member (Mr. Lancaster) but to decide first what proper cattle-guards are and then to say that they shall be adopted. The Minister of Railways reported to me that he had stated to the committee that during the recess he would take means to collect information as to the best cattle-guards in existence; that he would appoint experts to ascertain that, and that next session he would introduce legislation dealing with the matter. In fact that matter was arranged between us beforehand and the Minister of Railways spoke by authority of the government. The pledge which the Minister of Railways took before the committee, I now take on behalf of the government before the House. We shall during the recess employ experts and collect information to find out what is the best cattle-guard that can be devised, and we shall then undertake to deal with the question. I think that is the best course which can be followed under the circumstances, and I would submit it to the approval of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson). This is a very important question, and a question which should be carefully considered. For my part, I am strongly of the opinion that the legislation now before us, will fail of its object, and I agree with my hon. friend from Middlesex (Mr. Gilmour) that the best way is to provide that the railway companies shall have the best cattle-guards. I submit to hon. gentlemen, and particularly to the hon. gentleman from Halton, that we will serve best the ends which all of us have in view by following the course that has been suggested by the Minister of Railways, and allow the matter to stand until information is collected during the recess, when the question can be dealt with next session.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. MONK. Has the right hon. gentleman considered that if the amendment of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) is adopted now, the law will be ready at hand next year. The amendment will not in any way prevent the government from putting into execution its resolution of examining into which is the best cattle-guard during the recess, but on the contrary it will facilitate the government in doing so. The amendment will thus give us a law coming into force next parliament, and will allow us to put the results of the inquiries of the government into force without legislating again. In the province of Quebec it is a very serious matter for us. I will not say that it has been agitated as vigorously as in the province of Ontario, but there is no doubt that we have suffered a great deal from this defect in the legislation. This grievance has been mentioned very often in the House. We have petitions asking for immediate legislation, and in my opinion the proper course for the House to pursue now is to adopt the amendment of the hon. member for Halton.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am aware that this grievance is not confined to the province of Ontario. We have suffered in the province of Quebec perhaps as much as in other provinces, but at the same time I would suggest that there would be more security, if, since we have to wait under any circumstances, we should wait a little longer and have before us the result of the inquiries which will be made. In the meantime we will try to find an adequate remedy for the wrong, and if we incorporate that remedy in the statute-book next session, no harm will be done. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson) has suggested that he would be quite satisfied to leave the selection of the cattle-guard to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. That may be, but I think we can leave it with greater safety to parliament itself. Next year we will be able to prescribe the nature of the cattle-guard in the law, and it will occur to everybody that that would be still more satisfactory than if we now adopt the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Henderson).

Mr. INGRAM. I do not think that the right hon. gentleman has gone so far as the Minister of Railways in his statement. I understood the Minister of Railways to say that he would carefully weigh the law as it affected the different provinces, and that he would be prepared at the next session to come down with legislation that would remedy the evil in so far as it affected the whole Dominion.

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot say that I have discussed that point with the Minister of Railways and Canals, but I did discuss with him the question of the cattle-guard. If we provide a safe cattle-guard then we can very well adopt the reasoning of my hon. friend from Halton, that if there is an animal who jumps over a proper cattle-guard he should bear the consequence.

Mr. MONK. The right hon. gentleman would greatly reassure me if he would tell me that next April we will have a law in force remedying this evil.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think I can answer that. If the hon. gentleman will not delay the session then we will possibly have such a law in force next April. That matter rests with the hon. gentleman himself. If he delays the session of course the law may not be in force in April.

Mr. MONK. It would be in force at once, if I had the power.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand the government is ready to remedy this evil and bring down legislation next session. Otherwise I should be compelled to vote on the question now, but if the right hon. gentleman gives that promise I will stand by the government.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think I said that. With the object of securing the approval of my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) I will not hesitate to say so.

Mr. BRODER. I think there was a promise like that made two years ago, made by the Minister of Railways and Canals.

The PRIME MINISTER. Give us a trial now.

Mr. BRODER. Our experience does not lead us to much hope. The Minister of Railways and Canals has now a Bill before the House proposing to do away with the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and what is the use of referring this matter to a body which is going to be dead and buried in a few months.

Amendment to amendment (Mr. Henderson) negatived: Yeas, 28; nays, 75.

Mr. DAVIS. I move, seconded by Mr. Scott, that the committee rise.

Motion agreed to: Yeas, 67; nays, 35; and the committee rose.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 11.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, April 22, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 123) to incorporate the Canada Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. Fraser.

RED DEER VALLEY RAILWAY AND COAL COMPANY.

Mr. M. K. COWAN (South Essex) moved:

That Bill No. 86 respecting the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company be referred back to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines for further consideration.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. COWAN. Mr. Speaker, I was unfortunately absent from the city when this Bill came before the Railway Committee, and therefore no person had charge of it for the purpose of giving explanations. However, I quite readily appreciate that when a Bill has been fairly considered by the Railway Committee and has received fair treatment by that committee, very strong reasons indeed should be advanced for asking the House to refer it back. In this particular case the Bill was defeated by a majority of one. There was an actual majority in the committee in favour of the Bill. There were members of the committee who were present during the entire discussion, who were familiar with its merits, but who happened to step outside of the Railway Committee room during the time the motion was being read and when they returned for the purpose of voting the objection was taken that they had not been in the Railway Committee when the motion was being read and the objection was sustained. This charter has been renewed upon previous occasions. The promoters of the Bill only ask now that they shall receive an extension of time until the 1st of July, 1903, for the purpose of the commencement of construction and until the 1st of July, 1904, for its completion. All the time they ask is a year from next July. As an evidence of the good faith of the promoters I may say that they have started operations and have graded some eight or nine miles of the road at a cost of $25,000 or $30,000. Earlier in the life of the charter it was in the hands of some English capitalists who became financially embarrassed in connection with other ventures and did not carry this work to a successful completion. When there was a renewal of this charter, one of the conditions which was imposed upon the new incorporators, or the company, was that they should deposit $50,000 in cash in the hands of the Minister of Finance as an evidence of good faith. That $50,000 has been deposited in the hands of the Minister of Finance and it is in the hands of the Minister of Finance to-day. I think that under the circumstances, and in view of the technical objections that were taken to certain members of the Railway Committee voting, in view of the fact that these people have gone on with the bona fide construction of the road and have expended $25,000, or $30,000, in grading eight or nine miles of the road, in view of the fact that the incorporators have deposited $50,000 in cash in the hands of the Minister of Finance, and further, in view of the fact that they only ask an extension of time of a year from next July for the commencement of the work and of two years from next July to carry it to a successful completion, I do not think I am asking too much in asking the House to refer this Bill back to the Railway Committee that it may be considered upon its merits.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I think the hon. mover of the motion (Mr. Cowan) spoke very truly when he said that there should be some substantial reason for referring a Bill back to a Standing Committee after that Bill has been fully discussed and decided upon by the committee. I do not agree with him that on this occasion the reason given is a substantial one. The Bill was discussed before the committee during the entire two hours of sitting. While the committee was at a loss for the lack of the presence of the hon. member (Mr. Cowan), the solicitors of the Bill were present, and another member of the House, certainly a very prominent member of the House assumed charge of the Bill for the occasion. There is no question but that the committee was thoroughly aware of the merits of the Bill and there was no question as to the vote of the committee. To call in question the vote of the committee is to call in question the ruling of the chairman, which has not been done so far during this session of parliament. I think all the members of the Railway Committee will bear me out when I say, that the Chairman (Mr. Hyman) has been scrupulously correct in his rulings ; and on this occasion as on others.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. If hon. members were not sufficiently interested in the Bill to listen to the discussion of its merits but were ready to come in and cast a vote on a Bill the merits of which they do not understand because they did not listen to the discussion or did not consider it sufficiently important to warrant them spending their time listening to it ; I submit that is not a reason why this House should refer the Bill back for the consideration of that committee. However, the hon. member who has charge of the Bill has seen fit to exercise his privilege to make this motion.

I believe that this motion raises the question of the merits of the Bill, and on that supposition I take the liberty of placing before the House some of the reasons why the Railway Committee rejected the Bill. It would almost seem from the statement of the hon. member (Mr. Cowan) that this was a much abused company ; that this was one of the very few railroad companies applying for charters in this Dominion who really meant business and who had not had fair treatment from the Railway Committee of this House. It may surprise the members of the House to know a little of the history of this company which begins as far back as the year 1888—and it does not begin with an Act of parliament, but with an Order in Council granting to the company, not then in existence, an area of 350,000 acres of the public lands of Canada in order that the company might be brought into existence ; and be profitable I presume to the promoters. That Order in Council is dated November 28th, 1888, and recites :

> On a report dated November 19, 1888, from the Minister of the Interior, stating that representations had been made by Mr. J. Ick Evans, of Toronto, that he has succeeded in forming a company of English capitalists who have given notice of their intention to apply for an Act of incorporation under the name of the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company for the purpose of building a railway from Cheadle Station, Alberta, to the coal mines found to exist in townships 28, 29 and 30, ranges 21, 22, 23 and 24 west of the 4th principal meridian, provided a bonus of 6,400 acres of land per mile of railway to be built, estimated at 55 miles, being about 352,000 acres, can be obtained, and he asks that such land grant shall consist of the odd and even numbered sections, exclusive of Hudson's Bay and school sections, in the following townships and parts of townships, as shown upon the annexed map.

The townships are then recited and the conclusion of the paragraph is : 'which would amount to about 358,400 acres.'

> The minister is satisfied as to the financial ability of the parties who have offered to assist Mr. Evans in this undertaking, and as the proposed railway would not only give access to an excellent agricultural section of country, but would also enable the government to sell some of the coal lands in that district which otherwise might remain unproductive for a considerable time; he recommends that, subject to the approval of parliament a free grant of 6,400 acres of land per mile to aid in the construction of a railway from Cheadle station, on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to a point in or near township 29, range 23, west of the 4th meridian, be made to the company now seeking incorporation under the name of the 'Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company,' to consist of so much of the available lands in the townships hereinbefore enumerated as may be required to make up a subsidy to this company at the rate of 6,400 acres of land per mile for the whole length of railway found necessary to build in order to reach the coal fields above mentioned, such distance not to exceed in any event fifty-five miles, and the location, gauge and grade of the railway to be subject to the approval of the Minister of Railways and Canals and with whom the contract must be arranged.

You will notice Mr. Speaker, that the basis of the extraordinary action taken on that occasion was the urgency of the necessity of the building of this road for the development of certain coal mines, and to enable the government to sell its coal lands in this locality. The government was then satisfied of the financial ability of the man to whom the grant was made. That was on the 28th of November, 1888, and to-day an hon. member comes to the House and asks that his Bill to give the company, not until the 1st of July 1903 but until the 1st of July, 1904 to finish this 55 miles of railroad, shall be again considered by the Railway Committee of this House. Now, if it was urgent in 1888 that this railroad should be built, it is surely as urgent in 1902. I therefore say that when these parties ask for two years and some months time to build 55 miles of railroad over prairie country, they are giving poor evidence of their ability to build, even under the remarkably favourable conditions set forth in the Order in Council. For the information of hon. members of this House I may say, that the principal bulk of population which is interested in the building of this road, have been heartsickened by the action and attitude of this company. I speak of the people of the city of Calgary. At a meeting of the city council of the town of Calgary some months ago, a resolution was passed and forwarded here, asking parliament to reject any application for any further extension of this charter. The Calgary city council which represents the people principally interested in the development of that district have asked that the ground be cleared; that this company be wiped out so that other people may come forward and have an opportunity to build the road. You may say that is an extreme position to take, but I would remind the House that this company holds absolutely locked up from settlement nearly half a million acres of land so that the country tributary to the city of Calgary cannot be developed until it pleases this company to open that land for settlement by the building of the railroad. Instead of this charter being a charter granted for the development and advancement of a part of the North-west Territories, it has been a dead weight upon that development. If even yet there was a prospect that the charter was in the hands of people who meant business, I presume the people of that district would be glad to have the company own it and build the road. At this late date, fourteen years after the original charter was granted, the company comes forward and asks for two years more time to build these 55 miles, making at least 16 years from the first inception of this company which then had satisfied the minister that it was competent to build.

I say it shows a lack of willingness or ability, either the one or the other, and it makes no difference to this parliament which. It is the duty of parliament to protect the public interest by preventing lands from being locked from settlement any longer at this time, when settlement is rushing into the country, and when those lands are in demand. The rush of settlement which took place into the North-west twenty years ago was turned back, and the progress of the country was hindered for twenty years, by the holding up of lands, just as in this case; and it is as necessary to-day that the lands should be opened to public settlement, or that the railroad should be built to afford advantages to the pubiic and to give value to the lands as it was twenty years ago.

It is perhaps not necessary to follow the somewhat devious course of this company between the year 1888 and the present time; but inasmuch as these people come before us now and say, 'Oh, we only want a little extension of time,' I will trespass on the time of the House enough to show that that has been their plea ever since 1888—that it has been extension after extension; that they were always able to build the road, but they never built it. In 1888 they got their first Order in Council, granting the land; in 1891 the order was revived and amended; in 1893 it was revived and amended again; in 1894 once again; in 1895 again; and let me draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to a very peculiar provision in this revival of 1895. It relates to the control they should exercise not only over the lands but over the settlers who were on the lands, before the date of this Order in Council:

> Each bona fide settler found on the land granted to the company at the time such land grant is earned who settled thereon before the 1st of January, 1891, shall have the right to retain the land occupied by him——

Mark the generosity of this noble company—— > —to the extent of 320 acres on paying the company therefor at a price not exceeding in any case $2.50 per acre.

That is, the people who settled on the land before the company had an existence, when land was worth a dollar an acre, were to pay this company $2.50 an acre for it.

> —and if he settled thereon after the 1st of January, 1891, he shall have the right to retain the land occupied by him to the extent of 160 acres

—only if you please——

> —on paying the company therefor at the price ruling under the Dominion lands regulation in force at the time he went into occupation of the land.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I draw your attention to the generous way in which this company proposed to deal with the settlers upon their tract. But particularly I draw your attention to the value which they placed upon this land grant. They have a grant of 358,000 acres, which they themselves value at a price varying from $2.50 to $3 per acre, amounting to a total value of from $750,000 to over $1,000,000; and they are not able to build 55 miles of railway on that land grant, but want a further extension of time. They came again in 1898, and again in 1900. Their land grant was renewed by Order in Council dated 1900, and expires on the 1st of July, 1903. Now, Mr. Speaker, for the information of the House, I beg to say that I suggested to the Railway Committee that the extension of time to be given the company should coincide with the date limiting their land subsidy. But they said: 'No, we cannot build in that time; it will not be of any use to us.' Then I said: 'If you cannot build within the time that enables you to earn your subsidy, you cannot build at all, and you do not want to build at all. It is simply a case of trying to hold up a land grant and of holding up the public until something turns up that will enable you to sell the charter to better advantage.' These were the reasons, as I understood, which caused the Railway Committee to reject the application of the company; and I submit that if this House has any regard for what is fair and right to the country at large, or to the people who are developing the country, they will support the action of the Railway Committee, and refuse to refer the Bill back.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, it strikes me as somewhat singular that the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat should take the position he does with reference to this Bill. It struck me, from the remarks made by the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan), that the request of this company for an extension of time for the completion of the road for two years from the 1st of next July, was a moderate and reasonable request. It seems from what my hon. friend says that a company has been in existence for the last fourteen years which has possessed the charter for the construction of the railway under consideration; but I am told that that company has ceased to exist, that there has been a reorganization of the company within the last year, and that one of the reasons why the company did not proceed with the construction of this railway was the impossibility of getting iron, which has been a difficulty in the way of many railway companies in America making extensions or improvements. Now, if this reorganized company, which I am told was not represented when the Bill was considered by the Railway Committee, has not for this reason received fair consideration by the committee, if the facts which it is necessary for the committee to have in their possession in order to arrive at a fair decision, have not been placed before them, I see no reason why the Bill should not be referred back. On the contrary, I think the refusal of this House to refer it back would be a high-handed act, an unjust and tyrannical act.

Mr. SPROULE. Might I ask the hon. gentleman if they had not two solicitors there representing the company?

Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am told that the parties upon which the company relied to place their case before the committee were absent. This company, I am told, has already proceeded to grade a portion of this road, and has, in fact, graded some seven or eight miles, and placed $50,000 in the hands of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. OLIVER. If the hon. gentleman will permit me, I will take the liberty of saying that the company has not graded seven or eight miles.

Mr. CHARLTON. Very well, that is a question of veracity between the representatives of the company and my hon. friend. That is a matter for the committee to inquire into if the Bill is referred back, and that is an additional reason for referring it back.

Mr. PUTTEE. Might I ask a question? Is the hon. gentleman aware that all these matters were gone into by the Railway Committee?

Mr. CHARLTON. Probably they were, but I am dealing with what I believe to be certain facts in relation to this matter. My hon. friend says that his friends in Calgary want the ground clear, that they want this company obliterated. Very naturally. He is interested probably in some other company that wants to get hold of the charter and the land grant. Supposing he succeeds, suppose this House should refuse to refer this Bill back to the Railway Committee——

Mr. OLIVER. I rise to a point of order. I wish to ask if the hon. gentleman is in order in imputing interested motives to me in my opposition to the Bill.

Mr. CHARLTON. I was not imputing motives. I say that the hon. gentleman's friends are very anxious to have the deck clear and this company obliterated, and I am drawing an inference from that statement. Who is anxious for this, and what is the reason? Can a company be formed in place of the present one which can finish the road any sooner? Why, the new company would have to get a charter and could not take the first step until another session. The present company, however, asks for two years from next July in which to build the road, and it is not in the bounds of reason to suppose that any other company can excel this one in celerity in giving to this locality the railway accommodation it requires. Under the circumstances, the public interest cannot suffer by giving the extension asked. Any company that may succeed this one is prevented by physical means from completing the road any sooner than the time in which the present company pledges itself to complete it. The present company has given evidence of good faith by having performed certain work, by having put up money, and by asking for a limited period in which to complete the enterprise, and the fact that it could not get iron last year, and consequently could not proceed with the work, points to the conclusion that justice will not be done if this Bill be not referred back to the committee.

Mr. CHARLES S. HYMAN (London). I am not going to take up any time in discussing the merits of the case, but as the circumstances under which the committee reported are somewhat peculiar, it is only fair that the hon. members should know them before voting. I have taken the ground in the House before now, and intend always to take the same ground, that unless there are good substantial reasons, unless there are practically some new matters brought before us, it is the duty of the House to stand by the reports of its committees, especially a committee consisting of so large a representation as does the Railway Committee, over which I have the honour to preside. When the merits of the Bill were presented, there was a good representation of the Railway Committee present —seventy-one members. When the vote on the preamble was put, the preamble was carried by a vote 36 to 35. But there were two members of the committee who, to my knowledge, had been present during the greater part, if not during the whole of the discussion on the merits of the Bill, and who happened to leave the room just previous to the question being put. They returned as the vote was being taken, and their votes, in the first instance, were recorded, so that the vote stood 36 for the preamble to 35 against. The point of order was then raised, I think by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver), that two members of the committee, who had voted, were not present when the motion was put by the Chair. I upheld the point of order, rightly or wrongly, and ordered the names of the two gentlemen to be struck from the record. The consequence was that the preamble was rejected by a majority of one, namely, 35 against, and 34 for, and the Bill was not reported. Under the circumstances, as there was an actual majority in the committee in favour of the preamble and as it was only on a technicality that the Bill was not reported, I think that another opportunity should be given the promoters to present their case before the Railway Committee.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I do not think that the hon. member who has just taken his seat could contend that the number of members present at the meeting of the Railway Committee referred to was not a fair proportion of the whole. There was seventy-one present, and seventy-one voted. After a very lengthy discussion pro and con, after the two lawyers representing the company had said everything they could to influence the committee in favour of the Bill, the Bill was defeated, and the adverse vote given was given largely on the history of that company as laid before that committee. As the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has said, the object of granting a charter at all was to enable coal to be carried by rail to Calgary from the Red Deer country at the earliest possible date, and the House agreed to give a grant of 6,400 acres per mile, and a reasonable time for the accomplishment of the undertaking. Before that time expired, the company asked an extension which was granted. When that extension was about to expire, they asked a renewed extension. And so from year to year ever since, for the last sixteen years, we have been granting renewals of this railway charter, and nothing so far has been done. The appeals of the company were based nearly always on the ground that they were unable to raise the money required. The prime necessity for a railway in that district is to bring cheap fuel into Calgary, to which place, for many years back, coal has had to be drawn from the Red Deer country, some sixty miles. From time to time extensions were made of the period originally granted. Previous to 1897 several extensions had been given, and in 1897 the company was given an extension of two years to begin and four years to complete, but it neither began nor completed. In 1899, there was a further application made and a strong fight put up against it, but the company were given a further extension of one year to begin, during which they were to expend 15 per cent of the amount of capital stock on the construction of the road. Yet they expended nothing and none of the road is built yet. When the solicitor of the company was asked in the Railway Committee if the road was graded, he replied that he thought not, but that the company had got out plans and made specifications and done provisional surveys, which had cost it a great deal of money. He did not say, however, that they had built any part of the line, and as far as we know, none of it has been graded or built, and yet we are met again by a request for a further extension of time.

Mr. COWAN. There are between eight and nine miles graded.

Mr. SPROULE. The solicitors of the company did not say so.

Mr. COWAN. Yes, they did.

Mr. SPROULE. And the representative from the district did not say so, nor did the petition from the people of Calgary, who strongly urged that this company should not be given any further extension, on the ground that it was evidently holding the charter for no good purpose and had no intention of building the railway. For sixteen years this charter has been extended, and ever since the land grant was given, that grant has been kept for that company. At the time that land grant was given, the land undoubtedly was not worth a dollar an acre, but, at present, it is worth from $4.50 to $5 an acre. At 6,400 acres of land a mile, their land grant would amount to 352,000 acres of land; and, allowing $4.50 an acre, you get a total of $1,604,000, to build a railway 55 miles long that, we are told on good authority, can be built for less than half the money. But these people do not intend to build it. What did we see in the committee? I asked the solicitors several times who were the stockholders of this company, and they would not tell the committee. Why? They gave only one name, that of Mr. Elias Rogers, of Toronto. We know who Mr. Rogers is in connection with some other affairs. We know that he is the moving spirit in the Crow's Nest Coal Company, which is bringing its coal a long distance into Calgary and selling it there to-day. Is it supposable that these people will open up the coal lands of the Red Deer valley and bring this coal into Calgary to compete with their own from the Crow's Nest? If they had given the names of the other stockholders, it would have disclosed beyond any question the inwardness of this company's holding up the construction of that railway and keeping this land grant in this way. It is easy for the House to see that they do not desire to build the railway, and never did. This land grant is increasing in value very rapidly, and these men desire to retain it, and, to retain it they must keep this charter alive. The hon. member in introducing this motion gave us an evidence of the bona fides of the company that they had deposited $50,000 with the government, and he declared that if they did not commence and go on with the line that money would be forfeited. But when we look at the law, we find that the money is not forfeited, but that if they do not do the work the money reverts to the company. So, even if they do not begin to build the railway,—and, so far as I can learn they do not desire to build a mile of it—there is not a dollar of that money in jeopardy. Coal is very plentiful in the vicinity of the land granted to this company, and the government are selling coal lands at $10 an acre, if they sell them at all. Before this Bill is referred back we should have much stronger reasons than those just given. There was a large attendance at the committee when their decision on this question was reached, and the matter was fully and fairly discussed. The company had their solicitors and their friends there to bring out the facts. But they dared not give the names of the stockholders of the company. They knew that if they did the committee would see the inwardness of the measure. This was the reason why the committee refused to renew it. Why should the company be allowed to hold land, away from homesteading and settlement for sixteen years, while the inrush of settlers is filling up the country and causing the rapid increase of values? The road has not been built, and this corporation is still benefiting by holding up this charter and preventing the development of a rival company to bring coal into Calgary as it ought to have been brought years ago. For these reasons the committee refused to renew the charter, and these reasons were good ones. I think the House would do a very improper thing if it referred the Bill back to the committee to have this charter extended.

Mr. B. RUSSELL (Hants). I think that, at least it can be said that this Bill has had very bad luck before the Railway Committee. It seems to me also that my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is taking very narrow and technical ground when he says that, because it happened that a couple of hon. gentlemen who were in sympathy with it and who did not, technically speaking, hear the question put from the Chair, and so were not able to have their votes counted, this report should be accepted as the deliberate decision of the committee. But that is entirely in keeping with the general ground taken against this measure, which is an insistence upon the strictly legal and logical forfeiture of the rights that this company has under its charter. Now, it seems to me that we ought not to insist upon that forfeiture, but should give the parties interested in the Bill a fair opportunity of having their case fairly and fully heard and decided by a fair vote, and not by a snap vote of the committee before we impose upon them such serious results as the forfeiture of the rights they have acquired. This was the one case, it seems to me, in which reason was given why there should be an extension of the charter. We had extended charters over and over again without even the slightest evidence that money had been expended or deposited for the construction of the road. But in this case we had the facts that there had been at least a sum of $50,000 actually deposited in the treasury as evidence of good faith on the part of the company, and there was a great question whether that money was not actually forfeited under the terms of the statute. It seemed to me, therefore, that the company should have the chance to go on and earn their land grant by building the road. The hon. gentlemen who speak against this proposal are taking quite inconsistent ground. The hon. member for Alberta says the company cannot build the railway, while the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) represents that the company have an enormously valuable asset—an asset worth three or four millions of dollars. Both these things cannot be true. If the company have these enormously valuable coal lands, it is clearly not reasonable to say that they cannot build the road if they desire to do so. But the argument which led the committee to take the action it did, which took the committee by storm in fact, was such a one as my hon. friend has made—but it was made far more powerfully by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson)—that there was something mysterious about this company and that they did not intend or desire to build the road, but had the sinister desire of preventing the road being built and the land being opened up. That, I say, carried the committee by storm. And no wonder, for it was presented most ably and powerfully by the hon. member for Halton, who spread the floor of the committee room so to speak, with the brains of the lawyers in the case. The committee was misled by that spacious argument, of which there is not a single proof before the House, and never was any proof before the committee. This being so, I say it is fair and reasonable to say that we should give these people, who have only been in possession of this charter, as I understand, for two years, and who only ask two months more than the hon. member for Alberta was willing to concede to them when he addressed the committee, a chance to be heard.

I think it is only fair and reasonable that we should, without undertaking to pass upon the merits of the measure, which we cannot pass upon intelligently here, give counsel for that company an opportunity of coming before the committee and proving if they can the facts which are so vehemently combatted by the hon. member for Alberta. This hon. gentleman says, first of all, that this road has not been commenced; and when I have been informed on what I regard as the most reliable authority that the road has been commenced, and when we were told that conclusive evidence could be produced before the committee, and had been before the government, to show that there had been a bona fide expenditure of $90,000, evidence which was sworn to, I do think that, under the circumstances, we are doing a very hard thing and a very cruel thing if we do not, at all events, give this company an opportunity to be heard more deliberately before insisting upon the absolute forfeiture of the rights that they have acquired by an expenditure of $90,000, and by the deposit of $50,000. As to this deposit, there is a grave question as to whether it can be demanded back, and I think it is extremely doubtful, at all events I think it is rationally argueable, that under the terms of the statute they cannot recover back a single penny of the $50,000 which has been deposited as security for the construction of the road. Under these circumstances I think it would be unfair and unreasonable for us to say, as we are asked to say, that they shall not have another opportunity of having their case threshed out before the Railway Commitee.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). In viewing a case such as this, one consideration will affect one mind and another consideration another mind. My main reason for objecting to this Bill being referred back is that at the present time an opportunity is afforded this House such as may not rise again, to settle the question as to the principle on which renewals of charters should be granted. I have felt for a long time, and I know hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House feel as I do, that we are not as careful as we should be in this House, in the first place, in giving grants of lands, and in the second place in renewing charters. I submit it is a reasonable proposition, that when a charter has been given and a public franchise has been entrusted to certain people, the duty devolves on those who have received that franchise of carrying out its terms to the letter; and if they are unable to carry out those terms, and fail to do so, then, when they come to parliament and ask for a renewal of the charter, I submit the whole burden of proof should be on those who have received this public trust and have failed to execute it, of showing that there was some insurmountable obstacle that prevented them from doing what the House expected they would do when that charter was granted. We know that when a Bill such as this comes before the Railway Committee, the rule of the committee is to allow, as a matter of course, a renewal of any charter. In my opinion this is a question which should not be made political, it is too important to the people. While I think the present administration is doing wrong, and the former administration erred in the same way, I do not think that at the present time one party can find fault with the other for having erred more than it has done itself. We have a charter which was granted some fourteen years ago, but according to the statement of an hon. member of this House, not a dollar's worth of work has been done since. It is true that statement has been challenged, and I was surprised to see that what I considered a well recognized rule, that a member's word should be accepted here, was not observed with regard to this particular Bill. When I find an hon. member in this House stating that of his own knowledge no work has been done, I am prepared to accept that statement, and am prepared to justify my voting on the ground that no work was done, and taking it for granted that no work was done because an hon. member of the House has so declared.

Mr. OLIVER. If there is any doubt on the point I would like to say that to the best of my knowledge and belief, and according to the information that I have, no substantial work whatever has been done on that railway.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. In the committee it was asserted without contradiction, that a certain number of miles had been constructed.

Mr. OLIVER. I contradicted it at the time.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. I was in the committee, and it was asserted that a certain number of miles had been constructed, and the statement was not challenged except that some gentlemen said it was done several years ago.

Mr. OLIVER. I answered in the committee what I have said just now.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is only fair to state that the evidence before the committee last year was conclusive, that a certain amount of grading had been done; figures and statements were submitted by the engineer showing, I think, conclusively that a certain amount of grading had been done on some eight or nine miles of road.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I was saying that when we find a charter granted some fourteen years ago to certain persons who are now before the House, and when we find the applicants and promoters unwilling to say who the present holders of the charter are—I now ask the hon. gentleman who has in charge this Bill if he is prepared to state who the present applicants for this charter are.

Mr. COWAN. Do I understand the hon. gentleman wants the names of the directors or the promoters of the Bill ?

Mr. NORTHRUP. The promoters of the Bill.

Mr. COWAN. I can give them, though it strikes me that the question now before the committee is not on the merits of the Bill, but as to whether it should be sent back to the committee. I had no idea of discussing the merits of the Bill on this occasion. The information I have is that the original incorporators were Joseph Ick Evans, Daniel McFarlane, Joshua T. Johnston, Henry Percy Withers, James W. Bain, James Bicknell, and now, associated with such of the original promoters as remain are Elias Rogers and Wm. Beith.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I have been informed, and it has been stated on the floor of this House, that the original incorporators have handed over their interest in this charter to some other parties, and if I remember rightly, the present charter does not bear the names of the original incorporators at all. But these parties obtained a charter fourteen years ago when land was of little value, and now when other parties are coming before us and asking a renewal of the charter, it would be a fair principle to lay down that the parties coming to-day and asking for a renewal of the charter should be put in the same position as if they were applying for it for the first time; and if they were now applying for the first time, would it be contended for a moment that what was a fair and reasonable land grant fourteen years ago would be a fair and reasonable land grant to-day when prices have increased so much in the interval ? That was the main objection I have to this Bill being referred back. I think now this House should lay down the principle that in future no renewal of any charter would be granted—I am not so unreasonable as to say that no renewal should ever be granted, but none should be granted unless, the burden of proof being on the applicants, they can satisfy this House that they originally applied in good faith, and that owing to insurmountable obstacles they have been prevented from carrying out what they intended to do. Then there is another objection I would like to refer to. It was contended by the chairman of the committee that two gentlemen had voted, making a majority in favour of the Bill, but that owing to circumstances under which they had voted their names were struck off. I am sure there is no gentleman on this side of the House, who is not of the opinion that the chairman of that committee is a gentleman of absolute fairness and impartiality.

I am perfectly sure that if that hon. gentleman, as chairman of the committee, struck off the names of two members who had voted, it is abundantly clear that they had voted improperly. Then, we come down to the simple fact that when the vote was taken properly and legally there was a majority against the Bill. This House has laid down the principle that when a Bill comes from the railway committee it should be accepted by this House unless there are the best of reasons given to the contrary. The only reason given against the acceptance of the report of the committee is that there were some members of the committee who were absent when the question was put and who would have voted for the Bill. Who can tell but that, out of the seventy members of the railway committee, if they had all been present, perchance, a greater majority would have voted against the Bill, because, if one member has the right to conjecture in one direction another member has the right to conjecture in the opposite direction. I believe we have no right to go beyond the report of the committee when it is presented here and whether the majority is small or whether it is large I submit that we are bound to take the report of the committee and stand by it. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan), it having been stated in the committee that the road could not be constructed in time to secure the land grant, if the road has any assurance that the land grant will be renewed to the company if the Bill is carried in this House ?

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that since I have been a member of this House on not a single occasion has a motion of this kind been adopted and while there have been several occasions when similar motions have been made on not one has a Bill been sent back to the railway committee. Time and again, during last session, in this House, the rule was stated clearly and absolutely that the proper policy was not to complicate business by questioning the decisions which came down to this House from the railway committee. I remember that on one occasion last session I was very much interested in having a measure referred back to the railway committee and I was able to state, as other members interested in the Bill were able to state, that they had not been present in the railway committee through no fault of their own. On one occasion last session, and I believe on only one occasion, a meeting of the committee was called for 10.30 o'clock in place of the usual hour of 11 o'clock, and on that morning there was a Bill brought up in which several members were interested. When I arrived at the committee at the usual hour of 11 o'clock I found that the committee had been at work for half an hour and that this Bill had been already reported. I brought the fact to the attention of the House and notwithstanding the fact that I and others urged that there was new matter to be brought to the attention of the committee in respect to that Bill the rule was held to that the Bill should not be sent back after having been dealt with by the railway committee. In connection with the Bill now under discussion it has been pointed out that there was the very fullest discussion before the railway committee. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair), after we had been thrashing out the matter for an hour and three-quarters, stated that he thought more discussion had taken place than was necessary to give every member of the committee an opportunity of understanding the merits of the case. I may urge, and urge truthfully, that the Bill was given the very fullest discussion by the railway committee. If we have a rule, as we have, that rule ought to be adhered to in all cases and we should not make fish of one and flesh of another. Is this House going to take the position that when railway promoters are interested in having a Bill sent back the rule shall not be adhered to, but that when the public interest demands that a Bill be sent back the rule shall be adhered to ? On the merits of the Bill I may say that I am opposed, and resolutely opposed to it on the ground that it involves the voting of a land grant. It does not matter whether the land grant is large or small, I am opposed to an acre of public land being voted by this parliament, or being alienated to any railway company or to any other company of that class. It has been stated during the past five or six years many times by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) and by other members of the government that no more public land should be alienated to railway companies. I may confide to hon. members on this side of the House and to the members of the government that during the general election campaign I went up and down the length and breadth of the district of Assiniboia claiming and receiving the support of the people on the ground that since my friends had come into power there had not been an acre of land alienated to a railway company, and I further pledged myself, on the strength of the statements made by members of this government, and particularly by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that so long as the Liberals were in power there would not be an acre of land alienated to a railway company. Therefore, to-day, the position I find myself in is that I am compelled by my pledges to vote against this application, because there is no question in my mind that a vote for this Bill is a vote to alienate something over 300,000 miles of land to this railway company. It has been contended, and it may be contended that this is not alienating land, that the land has already been alienated, but hon. gentlemen do not say that if we do not pass this Bill the land will be parted with. If we do not pass this Bill this railway company will not come into possession of the land. It will remain in the possession of the people of Canada. It is true that a bargain was made fourteen years ago, by which these railway promoters, for a certain consideration, were granted this amount of land—352,000 acres.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Can the hon. gentleman inform me whether that land is scheduled to this particular railway company ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. That is a point upon which a little more stress should be laid. It may be asked: How did it come that under legislation passed by this parliament this area had been put under the control of this railway company, because they have not raised their finger to earn the land, further than the grading of possibly four, five or six miles of road, grading which, I believe, to-day has become useless, if it ever was in existence. So I say, the matter would bear a little investigation as to how, under any legislation that has been passed by this parliament, these railway promoters have been allowed to come into possession of this land because they have never carried out their part of the bargain. I was going to point out, referring to the contention to the contrary, that to vote for the Bill at the present time must be held to be a vote in favour of the alienation of this land. While the bargain was entered into fourteen years ago the time for the completion of that bargain has long since passed. There have been renewals of the charter time after time but the company have never done anything to earn the land until the present time and if we vote now to again extend the time for earning this land we are giving a vote to alienate the land which, to-day, is certainly worth more than $1,000,000. If this was a fair subsidy for building this 55 miles of railway 14 years ago, it must be held to be three times too much subsidy to vote for building the same road to-day. As a matter of fact it is an exorbitant and excessive subsidy to vote to build that 55 miles of railway to-day, which I venture to say, will not exceed in cost $500,000. To build a prairie road does not cost more than $10,000 per mile, and the building of these 55 miles would cost very little more than $500,000.

Mr. HEYD. What about the coal ?

Mr. SCOTT. Figuring the cost of the road, of course, is not taking into consideration the value of the coal land. I do not believe any member of the House will contend that the building of this road will cost more than $500,000. I also venture to say that no member of this House will attempt to say that this land is not worth at least $1,000,000. Is this House going to say, that on account of some bargain which was made 14 years ago with regard to which the parties of one part have failed in their contract and lost every figment of their rights—is the House going to say that because of that we must vote a subsidy amounting to twice as much as the cost of the railway. It has been pointed out in favour of the promoters of this Bill, that they have made a deposit of $50,000 in the hands of the government. As I said before the committee, in view of the fact that they have got an area of land which to-day is worth not less than $1,000,000 it is not a matter of very great virtue on their part that they have put in the hands of the government $50,000. But, we find on looking at the Act, that to call that a deposit is not a proper description, because as a matter of fact the company are to-day entitled to go to the Minister of Finance and to claim and to receive that $50,000. This is the legislation which was brought to the attention of the committee very pertinently by my hon. friend from Halton.

If such deposit is so made, the Minister of Finance and the Receiver General shall publish notice thereof in the Canada 'Gazette,' and upon such publication this Act shall be taken to have come into force on the first of July, 1900.

The Minister of Finance and the Receiver General shall repay such deposit to the company, if (a) the chief engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals has certified that to his satisfaction twenty-five continuous miles of railway measuring from the point of commencement at or near the city of Calgary have been built, and the track has been laid thereon ; or (b)

This is the peculiar section to which I wish to call the particular attention of the House.

Or (b) If on the 1st July, 1901 (last year) the construction of the railway has not been begun and 15 per cent of the capital stock has not been spent thereon.

The construction of the railway had not been begun on the 1st of July last year and fifteen per cent of the capital stock had not been spent thereon. This condition has therefore not been fulfilled, and the promoters are entitled to go to the Minister of Finance now and claim their $50,000, and I venture to say that if they do so they will be able to get back their money. Some doubt was thrown upon this phase of the question by the hon. gentleman who sits beside me (Mr. Russell). He was careful however not to state an absolute opinion, and I challenge any lawyer in this House to say that the interpretation which I have put upon this statute is not correct. I am not a lawyer, I never had a legal training, but I challenge any lawyer in the House to publicly assert that my interpretation of the language of the statute is not correct. For these reasons Mr. Speaker, I am resolutely opposed to the sending back of this Bill to the Railway Committee.
