That hon. gentleman has always addressed that argument to the House and I think it is unworthy of him and unworthy of any British subject in the Dominion of Canada. Our great danger, he says, is a struggle that some day may come with our American friends to the south that may take every man and every dollar that we have and that then the result will be doubtful, and he gives that as his reason why we should not do anything along the line of Imperial defence or even consider Imperial defence with the mother country. He is afraid that we may offend our neighbours to the south of us. Would that not be the strongest reason that we should prefer to do our part in the defence of the British Empire so that neither the United States nor any other country in the world would dare attack us either on the high seas or on the lakes ? Should it be a matter of offence to the American people ? Even if it should be a matter of offence we should be unworthy of ourselves if we regarded it as a reason why we should not join with the mother country in considering the question of Imperial defence. The hon. gentleman says that we should not be bound by hard and fast rules in regard to national defence. My answer is that it is not necessary. The hon. gentleman went on to say that we have done a great deal for national defence. Why did we build the Canadian Pacific Railway that will be available for the transport of troops from the east to the west and from the west to the east, and for bringing the forces from one part of the empire to another ? Was it because of any hard and fast rules ? Not at all. I see no reason why we should be bound down by hard and fast rules, but we should work upon intelligent lines jointly with the mother country, and we should have an intelligent understanding as to what are the best lines to be adopted. We should not be bound down by hard and fast rules, but there is a strong reason why we should talk it over and come to an understanding as to what is best to be done on the part of the colonies and the mother country, so that we shall act upon intelligent lines and be able to benefit by the understanding arrived at in time of need. Then the right hon. the leader of the government says : Formulate a resolution for us and we will see whether we can accept it ; or in other words, make a policy for us, and if it is acceptable we will adopt it. The hon. gentlemen have been stealing our clothes too long and they are reform misfits up to the present. They want to do a little more of that same kind of thing. If we were to move a resolution he would call upon his supporters to vote it down, because it would be a motion of want of confidence. We have introduced this subject in the way in which it has been introduced so as to avoid that possibility and in order to secure the freest possible discussion ; yet, the right hon. gentleman says: Formulate a policy. We are asking the right hon. gentleman to say whether he is prepared to discuss commercial and political relations along the lines that we have indicated. It is for the purpose of enabling the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues to understand what the sentiments of this House are that we have made the proposition we have to-night and we have done it in such a way as not to embarrass him, but for the purpose of having the freest discussion so that he may understand that he carries with him the sentiments of the Canadian parliament. He does not require us to formulate a policy for him, because if these hon. gentlemen are not fit to formulate a policy for themselves they should not be there. The Canadian people should put others in their places who are able to formulate a policy that will be suited to Canadian needs and interests. The Prime Minister says that they are going over there and for what purpose ?—To listen. He reminds me very much of a bashful maiden who wants to be wooed but will not make any proposals. He is the Prime Minister of the Dominion of Canada, one of the most important parts of the British empire. He goes to the conference and the representatives of the empire there say : Let us have a free conference to see what we had better do. He says : I am not going to take part in the discussion but I am going to listen. He is like a shy maiden sitting in the corner, waiting to be coaxed out and to be asked, will you do this or not. He says : We will listen and if they propose something that meets our views we will accept it and if they do not we will come home practically with our fingers in our mouths. That is the sum and substance of what he is going to say and do there. Yet, as the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) says, here is a golden opportunity. Parliament is in session and he can get the views and the assistance of parliament to strengthen his hands in the negotiation, but he does not desire to have them. Now, we have not thought it necessary during this session to introduce a resolution. Why ? For the purpose of giving the right hon. gentleman an opportunity of asking parliament for its opinion in reference to these questions. We expected that he would take advantage of the opportunity before parliament prorogued to ask an expression of opinion from the Canadian parliament as to what he should do at the conference, upon what grounds he should consider this question and as to what he should be free to propose to the British people. But, the right hon. gentleman does not want anything from England. If Great Britain proposes preferential trade, he says, we will be prepared to consider whether we shall accept it. The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) says that it is not our place to ask it, but if Britain proposes it we will accept it. How under heaven is Great Britain likely to propose it if every member of the government who goes home tells the people there that we do not want it and that we do not look for it ? They say that such a policy is unsuitable for us and unsuitable for them and they say if England offers it we will consider it. Is England likely to offer it when the people there have been told that we do not want it ? Hon. gentlemen have already given England the strongest excuse for not proposing it. The right hon. gentleman says that what was not possible in 1897 may be possible now. But he has told them that we do not want it whether it is possible or not. Then the right hon. gentleman does not propose to discuss the question. He has told us that he is going over there to sit and listen and not to propose. Is England likely to propose what she has been told Canada does not want ? No, her statesmen are too astute and her diplomats know that a hint is as good as plain statement. Therefore the right hon. gentleman is not likely to get preferential trade. The free trade preferential tariff was a wonderful measure of tariff reform and it was based on the reform misfit principle. It does not fit Canada. It is of no use to Canada and of very little value to England, but it has done great harm to some of the most important industries in Canada. The right hon. gentleman says that we do not want to discuss the question of our political relations, and he tells us that they are all right. He says that we do not want to discuss the question of Imperial defence, that we do not want to touch that. As the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) stated the British Empire may be attacked in any part of her colonies and it is the decisive battle there fought that will tell whether Canada is to be free and whether it is still to be Canada. The battle which is then being fought will be the battle of Canada as well as Britain. Canada must be prepared to take her part in the conflict and to give her assistance in defence of the British empire no matter where the battle may be fought. But, why should we not confer with the British empire as to what may be done along intelligent lines so that each integral part of the empire can come to this conflict in support of the empire prepared to do its part in the defence of that empire ?

If the Prime Minister carries out his intention not to discuss Imperial defence I can tell him that there is not an Anglo-Saxon in the British Empire who will not declare that he has done less than his duty. If he will not discuss the defences of the empire with the representatives of the other colonies he is—I was going to say, unworthy of the name of British and unworthy the position he occupies as Prime Minister of the first colony in the empire. We have been told over and over again in this House that our political relations cannot remain in the future as they have been in the past. The right hon. gentleman has told us many a time that he can foresee the day coming when we will have reached that ripe age that we shall become a nation ourselves. That indicates that the right hon. gentleman believes that a change is going on in our political standing. The premier of the first British colony knowing that and telling the Canadian people that yet proclaims in the same breath that he will refuse to discuss our relationship with the empire with a view of continuing those ties which have bound us to the mother land in the past and strengthening them. But the right hon. gentleman says he will discuss our commercial relations. He will sit in the corner and he will say to the others : Make your proposals and I will consider them. He admits that we want to extend our trade and to open up new markets, but he says that he will have no proposals to make at the conference. He has not the genius of statesmanship to the extent of possessing enough initiative to enable him to make proposals as regards his own country to the representatives of the other colonies. He will not tell them what his own country requires, but he will take chances on their knowing better than he does the needs of Canada, and when they tell him what Canada wants he will consider whether he will accept it or not. Why, Mr. Speaker, a man who is so reticent and bashful that at such a conference he cannot tell what his country wants is not the right man to represent Canada on such a mission. Our representative should be as free to make proposals in the interest of his country as would be the premier of any other colony, or the representatives of Great Britain. If the right hon. gentleman fails to place the needs of this country before that important body he will do less than the Canadian people expect of him. He is going over there to represent the executive of this government, but he does not want to represent the parliament of his country. That is evident from the fact that the right hon. gentleman declines to ask the advice of the Canadian parliament. Far from asking for such advice he spurns it when tendered, and he refuses to be fortified by the strength which the Canadian parliament could lend to his efforts. Now is the time when he can obtain the opinion of parliament if he desires it. Parliament is ready to support him in making demands which would be for the welfare of Canada and of the British Empire, but to-night he rejects the assistance of parliament. He goes to that conference silently to represent the executive, his whole action is very much like unto the deal which that executive made in connection with the Yukon railway, in which case they found out afterwards that they were not in harmony with the sentiment of the country, and perhaps not in harmony with themselves. He tells us that the country wants preferential trade to-day. He ought to know that for he has been told it in a thousand ways. The boards of trade, the municipal corporations, the commercial and agricultural interests of the country have pronounced to him in favour of preferential trade. He admits that the conditions have changed. Formerly he told us that he would not ask for preferential trade from Great Britain because England would not grant it as she would not abandon her free trade principles and tax her breadstuffs. But England has changed her policy, and now that there is an opportunity to get preferential trade the premier does not desire to ask for it. Well, the right hon. gentleman is practically going it blind. He is going to represent Canada at an important imperial conference and he is going without ascertaining the views of the Canadian people through their representatives in parliament. If parliament had not been in session for some months past I could perhaps understand the attitude of the right hon. gentleman, but the fact that he refuses to take the advantage of parliament which he can now readily obtain is absolutely inexplicable. He keeps the country and parliament in the dark and he apparently desires to be in the dark himself. He is treating Canada and the parliament of Canada with scant courtesy, he refrains from disclosing to parliament what he intends to do and in view of his entire conduct we are justified in bringing this matter to his attention. And if, when the right hon. gentleman returns home we find he has disregarded the advice tendered from this side of the House he cannot blame us if we call him severely to task for his sins of omission as well as his sins of commission in connection with this matter.

Hon. WM. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Mr. Speaker, I think it is very unfortunate that it is not the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) who is going to represent the interests of Canada in England instead of the premier. If he would not by argument convince the Imperial government as to their duty, he might succeed better by scolding them, as he generally does in this House. I have not spoken much on this subject when it has been under discussion, and I do not intend to occupy much of the time of the House to-night. Hon. gentlemen opposite appear to take great consolation from the idea that there is a disturbing element in the government. Well, I think we on this side of the House have the confidence of the government at least as much as hon. gentlemen opposite, and we have not heard a hint of anything but the greatest unanimity of sentiment among our friends in the government, and we at least have the happy assurance that there is unanimity on the part of their supporters to keep them in the position they at present occupy. Hon. gentlemen opposite appear to take great consolation from the position of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte). It appears that he made an after-dinner speech somewhere. Now, I do not know that any member of the government should be held responsible for an after-dinner speech. The only after-dinner speeches we hear of for which governments are to be held responsible are those made at the Lord Mayor's dinner in London at which the government announce their general policy and the relationship of the empire with other countries. But that was not the case with my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works. When you think of the horrible pit and the miry clay out of which he escaped when he left the party on the other side of the House and came over to this side, it is almost a miracle that he is as pure as he is. If there is any element of protection in his policy, it is because he has not been perfectly emancipated from the ideas that were once promulgated on that side of the House. To my hon. friend I would say, beware of the leaven of the Pharisees; do not take any advice from that side of the House, and if you will be guided by the advice of your friends, the supporters of the government, you will occupy a sure position and the country will sustain the government of which you are one of the brilliant members.

A good deal has been said about the condition of England and the curse that free trade has been to England. I think it was my hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Gourley) who dwelt upon Cobden and Bright as being the curse of England. But if you look at the condition of England since she adopted free trade, you will find that no country in the world has acquired such greatness or so extended her trade as Great Britain did under her free trade policy. The moment the present government adopt a protective policy, it will be sure to go down. I believe that to-day, if a general election took place in Great Britain, the present government would be defeated because of the small measure of protection they have adopted on wheat and bread.

Mr. GERMAN. What about the election that took place yesterday ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I am going to speak of that. I have in my hand a paper which, referring to the cotton trade of Great Britain, says

> A recent issue of the 'Commercial Intelligencer' published statistics which show that Great Britain has more than double the number of cotton spindles in operation that the United States has, and that, apart from the latter country, Great Britain has more spindles than all the rest of the world put together.

Then it goes on to say that Great Britain has 45,500,000 spindles manufacturing cotton, while the United States, which produces the raw material, has only about 20,000,000. Here is the article of cotton, carried in British ships from Egypt and from the Southern States, manufactured in England and sent to all parts of the world to compete with the rest of the world; although cotton is a material England does not produce. No other country in the world could have succeeded in doing this, nor could England except under her free trade policy.

We have dwelt perhaps too much on what we have achieved in South Africa. I, for one, do not consider, and have not considered from the very outset, that Canada has done as much as we ought to have done in defence of the empire in South Africa. When you compare what Canada has done with what has been done by New Zealand and Australia, I hesitate to say that we have done our duty in that respect.

The PRIME MINISTER. The very same thing.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) We have not the number of men in South Africa today that those other colonies have; but there is one thing certain, that Great Britain need not be afraid, if assistance is wanted, but that Canada will be prepared to do her duty both on land and on sea. When sailors are wanted to supply the navy, we shall be prepared to give our fishermen of Nova Scotia, and they will not be a month on board the ships before they will be just as active as the men who were there before them.

The friends of the government will send to England the premier and the other members of the government with him to discuss the trade policy; and we have the utmost confidence that they will protect the interests of Canada as far as they can be protected; but I do not think that they will be in a position, even supported by the premiers of the Commonwealth of Australia and New Zealand, to dictate to the Imperial government what they shall do; and I have very serious doubts indeed that, with all the interests involved, you will find Great Britain agreeing to preferential trade in favour of the colonies as against the rest of the world. If they will, we will all rejoice. But I have great doubts that the empire will give a preference to Canadian products against the products of other countries. Every step this government takes should be a step, not towards protection, but towards reducing the duties lower and lower, and the lower you make the tariff the higher revenue you will get.

This question is being discussed in the Australian papers. Cable intelligence has been received in the 'Herald' of late to the effect that in Australia public attention is directed to the fact that Canada is desirous of bringing about closer trade relations with Australia. The Canadian government proposed meeting the representatives of Australia and New Zealand in London for the purpose of taking various intercolonial matters into consideration, and the premier of the Commonwealth recently cabled our Prime Minister his consent to that proposal. I have some hopes that perhaps an arrangement for preferential trade or free trade may be established by this means between Canada and the other colonies. That is a practical subject and one that may to some extent be accomplished; but I do not think that, with all the influence which the premiers of the different colonies will bring to bear on the government of England, they will succeed in convincing that government to give a preference in favour of the colonies against the rest of the world.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have been very free in giving advice to the government, but the government have been very cautious in accepting advice from their opponents. They would rather take advice from their friends. Well, their friends prefer that they should go home to London untrammelled by any advice, because we have full confidence in the Prime Minister and those associated with him. We believe that they will do everything possible in the interests of Canada, and prefer that they should go across untrammelled, and not limited even to the views that may be expressed by some of their own supporters, because we know that they will do everything possible in the interests of this Dominion. The eyes of the whole Dominion will be on them, and the whole Dominion is satisfied that they will do all that can reasonably be expected and all that any men in their position could do. Should they fail in any particular, it will not be because they have not advocated the interests of Canada to the most of their ability. I had taken quite a number of notes, but at this hour I shall not delay the House longer, and I shall conclude by repeating that the right hon. the First Minister and the other members of the government, if they should require any advice, should rather seek it from their friends than accept it from their opponents.

Mr. H. LENNOX (South Simcoe). The hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Ross) tells us that when the right hon. the First Minister and his colleagues go to Great Britain, the eyes of Canada will be upon them. In that opinion I quite agree. Not only will that be the case then, but the eyes of Canada are upon the government to-night, and have been since the beginning of this session, and their ears have been open to ascertain whether the government were going to take the country into their confidence or not. This is a momentous time in the history of Canada. It is a momentous time in the history of the empire. Two terms are, to a great extent, concurrent and synomous, because the prosperity of Canada is inevitably wrapped up in the destiny of Britain. In these months that have gone by, I think I am right in saying that the people of Canada did expect, and had a right to expect, that at such a momentous time, when such great issues are involved, both to Canada and the empire, the government would have regarded it as their duty not to wait for the opposition, not to wait for anybody, but of their own initiative to bring before this House a resolution for discussion covering the various matters which must come up for discussion at the colonial conference to be held during the Coronation ceremonies in Britain I would rather be wrong than dilly dally and I want to lay down as my view, whether right or wrong, that it is of the essence of constitutional government that when a great question of this kind arises, the administration should take the representatives of the people into their confidence and discuss in parliament the questions that are to be submitted at that conference. Instead of that, the government, although invited from time to time—and I was one of those who suggested it to the government during this session—the government although frequently urged to lay some broad proposition before parliament for public discussion and ventilation, have seen fit to adopt the policy of silence. And I charge, on behalf of the people of Canada, that the government has been recreant to its duty with regard to this great question. We have to-night a discussion which transcends, I believe, in humiliating the administration before the people of Canada, even those discussions we have had previously in this session—and this session has not been unmarked by humiliating positions for the government of this country. What have we had ? I will refer to the statement made by the hon. leader of the government a little later on, but we have had a statement from the hon. the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), and if the fitness of the administration of the government of this country is to be measured by the utterances of that hon. minister upon this great occasion, I must say that the people of Canada will not form a very high estimate of our present administration. Why, a weak defence is worse than none. And if this was not a weak defence, if it was not pitiably destitute of argument, then I must be singularly unable to appreciate the statement of the hon. gentleman. But his remarks have gone into cold print and the country will be able to estimate them at what they are worth. The hon. gentleman asks would the English workingmen be favourably disposed to Canada, if Canada was the means of increasing the price of food in Great Britain. But these hon. gentlemen opposite were teaching us during eighteen years they were in opposition—true they have dropped it pretty well in the last four or five years since they have got into power—but during eighteen years previous they kept telling us that the consumer pays the duty. Well, what do we propose ? We propose that such a duty should be placed upon foreign goods by Great Britain as would exclude from the British market foreign products and allow Canadian products to enter free. What then will the British artisan and workman buy ? He will buy the produce of the Canadian farm, and he will buy it free of duty. So that it is most idle for the hon. gentleman to advance that argument, because the argument inevitably defeats itself.

But he says, as an argument to support, if he can, this frail and tottering edifice of a one-sided preference, that it was a step towards Imperial unity. Sir, words in favour of Imperial unity do not come very well from my hon. friend. What progress is the government making in the direction of Imperial unity when they send back that deputation which, prematurely and unwisely as I say, refuses to discuss the question of Imperial defence and the unity of the empire. In what regard will the hon. Minister of Agriculture tell us are they advancing Imperial unity when they utterly refuse to even consider the question of Imperial defence ? He also tells us—and it is a pity that these hon. gentlemen cannot have a little more consideration for our home affairs and not travel so far afield—that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach missed the chance of his life when he introduced the change in his tariff and did not declare (without being asked and without being solicited, of course) that he would take off entirely the duty from the produce of Canada. When such a statement is made, I would like to ask the right hon. premier and the members of the government if they were taken by surprise when that change was made in the British tariff ? Did not they know that that change was to be brought about ? Were they the only people in the whole civilized world who did not realize that that change was coming ? Why, I, as one of the youngest members of this House and the most modest, told them what was coming, told them that Great Britain would have to change its trade policy and that the stability of the British Empire depended upon the conbined policy of Great Britain and her colonies with regard to trade. In speaking thus, I was not speaking on my own authority, but on the authority of the greatest of British statesmen, Mr. Chamberlain, who said : If you ask me what will be the destiny of Great Britain for the future, I answer that it will depend on the attitude taken by the great colonies of Great Britain. When all the world knew that this change was to be brought about, I must assume that this government was not altogether asleep and that they knew something about it. But, if they did know about it, what did they do before that policy was announced to secure a preference for Canada in Great Britain such as the Minister of Agriculture says Sir Michael Hicks-Beach should have inaugurated at that time? I say that a more completely condemnatory statement could not have been made by the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite then was made by the premier's own lieutenant, the Minister of Agriculture. Except that it introduces something that I wish to lead up to, I need hardly trouble very much about the speech of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). He wanders from post to pillar, but he always comes back to his first love. He gave us a very nice review of many steps in the history of Canada. I do not think he went back quite to the visit of Columbus, but he did go over most of the important steps in the history of the country for the last fifty years. And it is significant that every one of these steps was a step marking the progress of the Conservative party.

Mr. SPROULE. And he opposed them.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, those steps were opposed by the hon. gentlemen who are now in and of the government. And the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) tells us—and it is a very nice moral sentiment—that the only great thing to consider is what is best in the interests of Canada, and that this should be our guiding star. That comes well indeed from the hon. member for North Norkolk, who, according to his own declaration in this House—and I am sorry he is not present—though he knew in 1876, 1877 and 1878 that the true policy for Canada was the protective policy advocated by Sir John Macdonald, yet, in company with the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) for eighteen years—aye, for twenty-five years and more—kept his mouth shut, so far as saying a word in favour of that policy. On the contrary, he went up and down the country denouncing the policy which he knew to be in the best interests of Canada. And yet he comes here to give us a moral lesson and tell us what to do in the best interests of the Dominion. Of course he is supported by the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) who speaks of him as the gentleman who is responsible for 'the sanctity of the Sabbath and the chastity of the home.' But I object to these hon. gentlemen giving us moral advice. I object at least, to taking it, until, as the hon. member for Victoria suggests, I find that their conduct is consistent with their utterances. Now, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) says that there will probably be many wars in which Canada will not be concerned. I do not join with him in that view. I contend that the position we must take in this colony is that whatever war affects Great Britain, must affect us. Our destiny is inseparably bound up with that of Great Britain and I thank God it is so; for that is where I want my destiny to be. We hear of 'Little Englanders.' Let us not have any narrow Canadians who think there can be prosperity for Canada when the prestige of Great Britain begins to decline. I believe that prestige never will decline, but that, with the unity of the empire, of which the Minister of Agriculture speaks so eloquently, Great Britain, with her colonies surrounding her, will go on and prosper, and, in years to come, will become greater and grander than she has ever been in the past.

Now, the hon. member for North Norfolk has given us advice. He says it is to be a go-as-you-please affair, that we are just to give what we like, and therefore Britain is not to count on anything. What would the hon. gentleman say if, in the case of Canada being attacked by the United States Britain were to say, Oh, you need not count on our defence, you need not be sure we will defend you with men or arms or ships. But what Britain says, and what Britain has verified, is this: In the remotest part of our dependencies, whenever a British subject is attacked, the whole strength of the British army will be put forth in his defence, in vindication of British justice and British rights. That is the position that we have to reciprocate. It is not a question of money alone, but it is a question of the enemies of Britain knowing that the whole empire is united as one man for the defence of every part of it.

Now, the member for North Norfolk says we may run up against the Munroe doctrine. Sir, I think it is unfortunate that matters of this kind should be aired in this way in the parliament of a British country. The hon. gentleman was discussing a proposal to formulate a scheme of universal defence of the empire, and he says if we do that we may run up against the Munroe doctrine. Now what position are we in? Hon. gentlemen opposite do not seem to understand the proposition. The premier and his colleagues are going to Britain where they want something in the nature of a contribution to a defence fund from every colony of the empire, some basis agreed upon by which each part of the empire will voluntarily contribute for the purpose of raising a defence fund available for the whole empire. It has nothing to do with the wars of Britain in Europe, but it is a proposition that each part of the whole shall contribute voluntarily to a fund for the defence of the empire. Yet when it is proposed to do this the hon.member for North Norfolk says we will run up against the Monroe doctrine. Has it come to this, that with all the strength of the empire, united as it would be if any part were attacked, we are to live in fear and trembling of the Monroe doctrine? In the first place, I have no faith in the hon. gentleman's argument; in the second place, I am not prepared to take that cowardly attitude, even if I believed in the suggestion of the hon. gentleman.

Now I come to what is, after all, of more interest to the country, and that is the attitude taken by the hon. gentleman who leads this government. He began his speech with what I may call a left-handed compliment to the leader of the opposition. I think he was not as generous as he might have been, I think he was not as just as he might have been. I think it hardly did credit to the accustomed politeness of the leader of the government. Let me make a comparison. I may be a little partial, I may not be the best judge, but I have endeavoured to listen dispassionately to the arguments that have been advanced, and I would like to have some unprejudiced person who has listened to the magnificent argument—I would call it so if the hon. gentleman himself was not present—presented by the leader of the opposition, and contrast it with the speech of any member of the government, or any supporter of the government delivered to-night upon this question. I acknowledge that in some lines of eloquence I do not think I will be speaking disparagingly of our honoured leader if I say he does not hold a candle to the leader of the government. I am told, and I believe the story is true, that among the very numerous admirers of the leader of the government, a countryman of his own came here from a long distance down in the province of Quebec, to hear the hon. gentleman speak. After listening to him in rapt attention, he went out, and was asked what he thought of the Prime Minister, and he said : 'Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he speak long, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he speak well, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he say nothing.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. LENNOX. Hon. gentlemen may say oh just as much as they like, but we will have the judgment of the country upon this question.

Some hon. MEMBER. You had that before.

Mr. LENNOX. Yes, but that is not the final judgment, as hon. gentlemen know. They pretend to be very happy for the present, and some hon. gentlemen who look very happy are not so. I see one hon. gentleman who is trying to smile, and his smile has just about as much relation to mirth as the grin of a jackass eating thistles. Now, I was going to say that when the leader of this government discussed this question to-night he failed to rise to its importance, and avoided it at almost every point. Although the little incident that I have related was perhaps somewhat exaggerated in expression, still we know that in the matter of talking without committing himself to anything definite, the hon. leader of the government transcendently surpasses anybody upon either side of the House. We are told by the leader of the government that the suggestion put forward by the leader of the opposition, although good in substance, comes too late, that we have waited too long. What has the government done in that regard ? Is it not their duty rather than the duty of the opposition to formulate a policy in this matter, to take the country into their confidence, and to ascertain the opinion of the country as a guide to the Prime Minister and his colleagues when they go to that conference ? They would then be in a far better position to make suggestions to the other gentlemen appearing at that conference than they will be under present circumstances.

Now, although the conduct of the government has been marked by conspicuous silence in regard to many great questions that have been suggested on this side of the House, although the government have adopted a hesitating, vacillating policy in many cases where it would have been well that they should have declared themselves, yet in this one point I charge that silence would have been golden and that it would have been more prudent, and statesmanlike, if the government were not able to agree in that measure of Imperial defence to have kept quiet, at all events, at that juncture upon this point. There was no necessity for making a declaration upon the matter one way or the other. It was at a time when the South African war was still raging and it was all important that in the eyes of the world Great Britain should be seen with her colonies rallied around her and that there should be no suggestion that they were faltering in their defence. Therefore, I charge that it was weak, unwise and unstatesmanlike on the part of the right hon. leader of the government and his cabinet to send that message to Great Britain at the time. It has had a bad effect in Australia. Mr. Chamberlain said that the Australian Commonwealth was following in the wake of Canada, that Canada had set the example and that as Canada was the stepping stone, the Commonwealth of Australia was in that way a stepping stone toward the greater unity of the British Empire. But we are setting a bad example this time. The example of the right hon. gentleman is an incentive to the premier of Australia and he has announced his antagonism to the scheme. What is the principle which he announces ? He announces that they will have an independent defence, that they will defend their own commonwealth. Does Canada want to take that attitude ? Canada cannot take that attitude and there is no destiny for Canada as a British colony except she accepts some reasonable scheme for the general defence of the empire.

The right hon. leader of the government, when in London, told the people of Great Britain that Canada gave this preference out of generosity and out of a sense of appreciation of the many obligations that Canada was under to Great Britain. In Toronto, as has been pointed out, he takes a different position and it is bad enough when these two speeches conflict with each other. But the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is again an unwise friend in coming to the defence of the government, like the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher), because he brings confusion to the ranks. He contends that Canada owes nothing to Great Britain that with the consumption of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Canada wiped out every obligation that she owed to Great Britain for protection in the past. Which of these hon. gentlemen is right? But, the right hon. gentleman said in London that we wanted nothing and that he was ready to give this preference as a free gift. That is not the position that Mr. Chamberlain takes in regard to the same matter. Mr. Chamberlain, I think, hon. gentlemen opposite will admit, is a practical statesman, and in discussing this very matter of closer trade relations and closer relations generally between Great Britain and her colonies, and particularly Canada, he said:

> But my first point is that in the proposal and the suggestion which has hitherto been made there is no sufficient quid pro quo, the advantage offered is not enough to induce this country to take the certain loss and the possible risk which would be involved in revising altogether its present commercial policy.

In other words, Mr. Chamberlain takes the only statesmanlike attitude that can be taken when he says: When I represent my own goods I can be generous, but when I represent the people of Great Britain I can only be just. When I give anything I must have a quid pro quo. That is the position that the statesmen of Canada must take if they wish to meet the views of the people of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Dredging—Dredge vessels, repairs, Manitoba, $12,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How many dredges have you in Manitoba now?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Two. There is the old dredge at Winnipeg and the tug Sir Hector which are in need of repairs.

Mr. MONK. Where is this dredging going to be done?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The dredging that is going on now is at the mouth of the Red river, between the Red river and Lake Winnipeg.

Mr. MONK. Is there to be any dredging to be done this year at Sault Ste. Marie?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes. We have asked for tenders which we have received but I have not disposed of them as yet.

Mr. MONK. What amount will be spent in dredging there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say, but there is a large amount of work to be done there.

Mr. MONK. I do not know if the minister is fully aware that there is a great need of dredging there. I have been there quite recently and I can testify to the fact that while we have on the Canadian side a canal in certain respects superior to the American canal there is a very serious defect in the approaches to the Canadian side. They have asked for dredging there frequently and although that dredging is extremely urgent it has not been attended to during the last three years. I may add that there are no docking facilities at Sault St. Marie. There is a government dock but the water is so low that large steamers cannot come up to it, and in fact the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers are obliged to resort to the American channel. Although Sault Ste. Marie is the twelfth port of entry in the Dominion, yet the custom house is kept in a leased building, and the post office is quite out of proportion to the importance of the place. When I say that 28,000,000 tons a year pass through the Sault canal; 20,000,000 tons more than through the Suez canal and that the facilities on the Canadian canal are inferior to those on the American canal, it will be recognized that is a humiliating condition of things which calls for immediate remedy. I would urge upon the Minister of Public Works to improve the approaches to the Canadian canal and also the docking facilities.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I concur in what the hon. gentleman has said. There is not enough water on the Canadian side and our ships are obliged to go on the other side. I was there a year ago and I know that. I appreciate it to such an extent that we have this year in the estimates a pretty large sum of money to go on with the work. As to the public buildings I may tell my hon. friend that we have also in the estimates a sum to provide for them and a site has been bought. We have therefore looked after the interest of that town, much more than the hon. gentleman would think.

Mr. MONK. What is the amount voted for dredging?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $25,000.

Mr. MONK. I do not pretend to be an expert, but from information I have gathered, I should think that $25,000 will scarcely do anything towards the improvements which I have mentioned. I understand that the necessary dredging to prevent the humiliating spectacle of Canadian ships having to use the American canal would cost about $300,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very glad that one of the leaders of the opposition has at last gone to Sault Ste. Marie. I may repeat here what I said elsewhere: Wait till next year, and when I ask for money then I will not be accused by the opposition of spending too much. I know I am not asking enough to carry on the whole work, but I believe I have asked enough to give a contract that will be completed in another year.

Mr. GERMAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) has just come from Sault Ste. Marie having been up there with the leader of the opposition in the province of Ontario, and I apprehend that he has learned considerable of the existing conditions. I quite agree with him that the government needs to expend a very considerable sum of money in deepening the channel to the Canadian lock, but I would like the hon. gentleman to understand that for many years that lock was existing as it is now under a Conservative government and they never even thought of appropriating any money to deepen the channel. You can search in vain through 'Hansard' for a suggestion from a Conservative member up to the present date, that money should be expended in deepening the Canadian channel. The Canadian lock was built under a Conservative government, and as any engineer will admit the channel was defective originally and is defective now. This government is spending money to deepen the channel so as to allow the Canadian Pacific Railway boats and all other boats to navigate through the Canadian channel. The Canadian Pacific Railway boats never have gone there, not because of there not being sufficient water but because of the fact that they get their supplies from the American side. There is water enough for them to go through the Canadian channel, but they go to the American lock because they get their supplies there, and if the hon. gentleman had not been quite so anxious to make a point in the interest of the Conservative party in the province he would have endeavoured to understand the exact situation. I know the situation and I know that there is water enough on the Canadian side for the large boats to navigate the Canadian lock.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And to reach the wharfs.

Mr. GERMAN. There is really no use of their reaching the wharfs because there is nothing there at present for them. But the Canadian Sault is growing. We hear just to-day that Mr. Clergue is turning out steel rails and he is doing that by reason of the bonus granted and the vim that has been put into that country on account of the concessions granted by the Liberal government in the province of Ontario. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) wants to make any political capital out of the situation we are prepared to argue that point out with him. Perhaps this is not the place to do it, but whatever credit there is for giving a channel for safe navigation through the Canadian lock is due to the present Liberal government which is providing the money to do the work there. The Conservative government never did that when they were in power.

Mr. MONK. I am bound to say that I do not look upon this question as a question of politics, and I do not wish to make a point against this government or for the Conservative party. I consider that a man who has the honour of a seat in this House and who visits the country and finds things that he thinks might be improved upon, is bound to mention these things in the proper place. As to the information which my hon. friend has vouchsafed to me and the House to-night, I have been only two days in Sault Ste. Marie, and I am sure that his information is very defective. I would take, for instance, the point raised by my hon. friend that the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers do not come to the Canadian side because they get their supplies on the American side. That may be so; but it is absolutely contrary to the information given to me there by competent men, far more competent than my hon. friend, and knowing a great deal more than he does about the subject. As to the suggestion that they wished to make a point against this government, I can assure the hon. Minister of Public Works that such an idea did not enter their minds. As a matter of fact, the reason given by business men in the Sault why the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers got their supplies on the American side was that they could not come to the Canadian side. It is true, the lock there was built by the Conservative government, but it is in the right place. Nobody complains of the location of the lock, and in some respects it is far better than the American lock. It moves much more quickly, and is therefore sought by men who want to get their vessels through quickly; but I believe this government finished that lock.

Mr. GERMAN. No. The Conservative government gave Messrs. Ryan & Haney $90,000 to finish the lock before their time.

Mr. MONK. That may be. At any rate, it was finished about the time there was a change of government.

Mr. GERMAN. Before that.

Mr. MONK. However, what is retarding progress there is the need of dredging on a considerable scale. Competent men told me that it was a matter of some $400,000.

The figure surprised me, and probably the dredging could be done for a less sum; but there is no doubt that it will require a far greater amount than the amount mentioned by the minister, to place that port on a proper footing. On the American side they have all the conveniences and facilities that are required, and the vessels go there preferably to coming to our side. On our side there is a wharf, but the water near it is not deep enough for large vessels.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Two wharfs.

Mr. MONK. There is only one government wharf. The other wharf was built by private enterprise. I think it is right, irrespective of politics, for a man who knows these facts and has visited the place, to rise in his seat in this House and mention them without being criticised in the small picayune spirit the hon. gentleman has shown.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I cannot find anything in this item in regard to the Sault canal, and I must insist on the committee keeping to the item under discussion; otherwise we cannot make any progress. I understand from the Minister of Public Works that there are items in the supplementary estimates yet to come in reference to that very question, and that is the proper place to discuss it.

Mr. SPROULE. The question is a question of dredging, and I understand that there is dredging to be done at the Sault canal.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I rule it out of order, and I hope the committee will support me. The item is dredge vessels repairs, Manitoba, $12,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPROULE. If the objection had been taken at the commencement of the discussion I think it would have been reasonable.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We have to stop at some place—carried.

Mr. SPROULE. Not carried by any means. I want you to understand, Mr. Chairman, that I am on my feet, and until I sit down it is not carried. I can talk on that question as well as on any other, and I am not going to be put down in that way. I understand that there are two dredges in Manitoba, but I am told that they are not very suitable for the dredging to be done. I understand that one is engaged at the St. Andrew's rapids. Is this merely for repairing the old dredge, or is the purpose to build another for the work there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The sum of money I am asking is to make repairs to the old dredge, which is doing fairly good work, but which needs to be put in better shape. The next item is to provide a new dredge. That will make three.

Dredging—Man., self-propelling snag boat, $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that the beginning of the new dredge ?—because $10,000 is a small amount to put on a dredge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This $10,000 is to build a snag boat, similar to what the Americans have on the Red river on their side. These snag boats are not expensive. I think with these three dredges we shall have all we require to do the work.

Mr. McCREARY. Before this item passes I wish to thank the hon. Minister of Public Works for the action he has taken this year in assisting the people who own boats on the Assiniboine and Red rivers. The dredge which was built in 1881 and is now to be repaired has been used to dredge out the mouth of the Red river where it empties into Lake Winnipeg. The dredge is entirely out of repair, and it was running last year at great loss. It is not being used in St. Andrew's rapids, but at the mouth of the river. The necessity of renewing the dredge has been brought before the minister for the last two or three years, and I beg to thank him for taking the matter up in a thoroughly businesslike manner. I said some time ago that I thought the word Manitoba was never mentioned in this House by the hon. Minister of Public Works —that he had apparently forgotten it. I wish to take back that statement. With regard to the snag boat, I may say that in the Red river, both above and below the St. Andrew's rapids there are many boulders and sunken logs, so that vessels cannot navigate the river. The steamer 'Gertie H.' went up the river, and has been nine days above the rapids, and cannot get back owing to the boulders and snags in the way. I was at a meeting last fall of the board of trade which is composed largely of friends of hon. gentlemen opposite—in fact almost entirely. A very large deputation came to that board, and the board very strongly recommended that a dredge be purchased to remove those boulders and other impediments in the river. I am sure that the board of trade, composed of gentlemen on both sides of politics, as well as the citizens of Winnipeg, generally, will thank the hon. Minister of Public Works for having put these sums in the estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this the full cost of the dredge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. When will it be available for work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Next season.

Mr. SPROULE. Where are you building it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Probably on Lake Winnipeg.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you building it by contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know yet. I will take the best means.

Bryon Island to Anticosti, cable, &c., connection, $25,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. minister explain this item of $25,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend perhaps will allow me to lay on the Table a map, which will make the whole thing clear to those who take an interest in the question. I want to connect Anticosti Island, which is connected with our north shore, with the Magdalen Islands, which are connected with Cape Breton. Then we will have a complete connection with the cable at Canso and Sydney and a complete Canadian telegraphic system on Canadian shore.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the object of the cable to Anticosti ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Anticosti Island is connected with the north shore by a cable telegraph system on the north shore. We have reached St. Paul's Bay, and my idea is that we should have a complete system of telegraphs on our own soil, and my ambition is to take that system of telegraphs to Montreal as soon as possible. To reach Quebec it would cost about $13,000 to $15,000 because we have already a telegraph system at Grosse Isle. I do not see why, now that we expect the Marconi system will work well, we should not have a telegraph system of our own instead of relying on New York for our commercial news. Montreal and Toronto should be made, and will be made, Canadian centres of distribution for all news, commercial and other. When I have completed those lines to Sydney and Canso our Canadian telegraph system will have communication with all the cables, American, English and French. We have only a very small sum to spend this year to have that complete telegraph system.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are these cables open to use by the public ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it is a regular telegraph system.

For extension of the Magdalen Islands telegraph system to Bryon Island by means of submarine cable, $9,000.

Mr. MONK. What is the distance from Magdalen to Bryon Island ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. 14 knots. From Anticosti to the north shore, 104 knots.

Mr. MONK. Any tenders asked ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, we have had a cable ship. We are asking quotations in Germany and England for cables and wires. We have cabled the best firms in England and Germany, and as we have a cable ship ready, we will do the work ourselves.

Mabou to Port Hawkesbury, $5,600.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any telegraph line between these points now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, we are in the hands of the Anglo-American Company, which I want to get rid of.

St. Peter's to Louisbourg and Scatari Island—extension, Gabarus to North Sydney, $4,900.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose the same is true in this case—there is already a telegraph line there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, there is none. We want to reach the lighthouse there, which is now isolated.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Surely there is telegraphic communication between Louisbourg and St. Peter's ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was speaking of Scatari Island, to which there is no communication. My deputy tells me there is a line of telegraph along the railway from St. Peter's to Louisbourg, but there is none on the coast.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But a person in St. Peter's can telegraph to another in Louisbourg ? The object of this vote must be to establish a system of government telegraphs throughout the country ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is surely a beginning in that part of the country. But my main object is to have direct communication with the cables at Sydney and Canso, and then take the system up to the city of Montreal, and—well, further up if the country desires.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to be a quiet way of undermining the Postmaster General.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, no, the Postmaster General is too strong for that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, perhaps not completely undermining him, but undermining him so far as this telegraph service is concerned. How many miles of this telegraph open for the use of the public service does the government now own outside of the Yukon ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Outside of the Yukon we have about 4,400 miles. With these extensions we shall have about 4,700 miles, and, in the Yukon 2,135 miles.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any substantial revenue from these lines ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, that will be found in my report. I may say, in passing, that the Yukon line is doing very well. The revenue for April was about $11,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). After deducting expenses, or gross ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Gross.

Mr. EARLE. Did the minister ascertain, according to the understanding of some days ago, what portion of the business on the Yukon line was government business ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. During March, the departmental telegrams amounted to about $1,100. I suppose it will run about $1,000 a month. If hon. gentlemen will refer to my report, page 11 of the telegraph report, they will see that the revenue last year outside of the Yukon was about $15,000, and the expenditure about $60,000. I may explain that when these lines are completed we hope to do better. And the House must not lose sight of the fact that these lines are built where private companies would not build them. Take, for instance, the North Shore line—there is no appreciable revenue from it, and no company would build a line there.

Mr. WILSON. Aside from the cost of building, it cost $60,000 to run these telegraphs, and the revenue was $15,000. That revenue included government business, I suppose ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, but we do scarcely any business except on the Yukon line. But, as I say, all the lines have been built where private companies would not build them. The North Shore line, for instance, was built in the interest of navigation and trade.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as the construction of lines between points already served by lines owned by private companies is concerned, it does not seem to me that it is justifiable unless the government is preparing to establish a system of government telegraphs throughout the country. I cannot see any other principle, upon which it can be justifiable. It must be very much more expensive to the country to construct a line for its own use than to pay for the amount of business usually done at the regular prices of the established lines. Perhaps I may be mistaken in my deductions, but that is what I would suppose. So I can only regard this as the initiation of a system of government telegraphs throughout the country. Is that the policy?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would not say more than I have already said. I have not been authorized by my colleagues to say more. My object in asking for this money is to connect our system with the different cables at Sydney and Canso. We have given $80,000 to the Marconi Company to establish a station in Cape Breton. If that system works well, we shall have a means of communicating with the other side of the ocean besides the cable. But we shall have also the cable to rely upon. Speaking for myself, I believe that the cable will be, for some time to come, the safest means of communicating. I hope that Mr. Marconi will be able more and more to improve his system. We have tested it, and are testing it every day between Belle Isle and the North Shore. There are two stations in charge of my department. When the atmosphere is dry and the conditions favourable, the system works well; but when the atmosphere is damp and high winds prevail, it does not work well. It is a very difficult thing to maintain regular communications between the two stations when the conditions are unfavourable. The distance between Belle Isle and the North Shore is twenty-two miles.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are not many of these points where the hon. gentleman now proposes to build cables, points well suited for working the Marconi system, assuming that system can be effectively worked, and if so, would it not be better to learn whether that system would be practicable before expending so large an amount of money in the construction of a cable ? For example, between Louisbourg and Scatari, if I remember the geographical conditions accurately, I would suppose that would be a proper place for the establishment of this system.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, but it is so unsafe now I would not trust it for commercial purposes. It works when the weather is fine, and it does not work when the weather is damp. On different occasions last winter I asked news from our agents, and they answered that the instrument was sticking. I may say that we have not the best receivers, although they have been installed by Mr. Marconi's agents. Mr. Marconi told me these receivers were not the best. Since then we have put in new receivers, and I understand with better results. But I am quite sure the cables will be required for service for some time to come.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to know whether the minister has taken hold of this Marconi system merely as an experiment, or whether he found out before taking hold of it that it would be of some practical use. From his last remarks I would infer that he does not know whether this $80,000 is going to be of any substantial benefit to the Dominion. If stations are to be established at Glace Bay for communication across the Atlantic, I cannot understand why we are establishing cable lines along very much shorter distances, from Anticosti to the Magdalen islands, and from Scatari to Louisbourg. I cannot understand how it is going to operate across the Atlantic when it will not operate between nearer points. I would like to know whether the government is going to establish an experimental station to aid people in scientific investigations, or is he going into this large expenditure to save money to the government on submarine cables ? If that is the case, I would suggest that a very suitable point for the development of the system for a short distance would be from Cape Tormentine to Cape Traverse, where people are suffering a gross injustice by reason of an ineffective service by submarine cable operated unjustly by a private company.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As the minister of telegraphs I arranged for the establishment of two Marconi systems last fall. I thought it was only fair to try it, as it did not cost much. We are paying a royalty of $500 a year for these two stations between the North Shore and Belle Isle. The station at Glace Bay is a government station. I am asking nothing for it in my estimates. It is a government question altogether, so much so that it is not placed in my estimates as Minister of Public Works and of Telegraphs. I am responsible for the establishment of that station, of course, but I did not make a bargain myself. I hope the Marconi system will be worked between ocean and ocean. But I say again that, after having read a good many things that have been written on the Marconi system and all the other wireless systems, I have come to the conclusion that it will take some years before these wireless systems can be worked safely for commercial purposes. Mr. Marconi and others are all the time improving their system, but I am afraid no country will rely on these wireless systems. I would rather rely for safe communication on cables that I know and have tested. Still, the Marconi, the Slaby and other systems are making great progress.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The curious feature of the situation seems to me that we are spending about $70,000 here in cables for short distances which certainly could be supplied by the Marconi system much more easily, if that system can be established across the Atlantic. The Marconi system has either arrived at a stage at which it is likely to be in some measure successful or it has not. Most people think it has, the government evidently thinks that it has, because they are voting $80,000 for the purpose of assisting that gentleman and his system. It certainly has been successful in England over much greater distances than those covered by some of these cables, if we are to believe all we read in the public press. It has been established over distances very much longer than between Louisbourg and Scatari.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In all kinds of weather ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So I understood.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I say no, I am sure of that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then he should not have permitted this sum of $80,000 to be put in the estimates for the purpose of cabling across the Atlantic. He seems to want to relieve himself from the responsibility for that particular vote. If it can be used at all in all weathers and under all conditions for any distance, then it certainly can be used between Louisbourg and Scatterie. How far is it between these two points ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About three or four miles.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). About 15 miles.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). From Louisbourg to Scatterie ?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). From Louisbourg to Scatterie is about 15 miles.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is what I would have supposed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is by land, but the channel is not more than three or four miles across.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Not that much.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Surely, if this system can be used for a distance of that kind, would it not be the proper course to delay proceedings a little before spending a great deal of money on these cables ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The experience that I have had of the Marconi system between the North Shore and Belle Isle is such that I would not like to tell the commercial community that they could rely at all times on it. Last winter I asked for reports between the North Shore and Belle Isle, and I could not get them. This system works well in a dry temperature; that is our own experience. But Marconi and other scientists are working on the wireless system and improving it every day. There is no doubt that Marconi has been ahead of everybody else, but I would not take the responsibility of saying that the commercial community could rely upon the wireless system at all times and that is the reason why we have these cables.

Mr. LEFURGEY. You want to double-track the system.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no doubt as to the usefulness of the Marconi system, because improvements will be made in the future. To-day they are communicating at very long distances, but, I am sure, that at the present time it cannot replace the cable.

Mr. MONK. Is there an officer in the department who is specially charged with reporting upon the system ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Who is the expert ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Keeley, our superintendent general, who is a very capable man.

Mr. MONK. Has he recommended this additional laying of cable between the Magdalen Islands and Anticosti ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, this has his full approval.

Mr. WILSON. I think it would be well perhaps if the hon. minister would make some explanation as to how far he has gone with the bargain with Marconi under which the government pay $80,000, or whether this is only the start and whether we are going to spend larger sums of money on that system ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We have an item, No. 92——

Mr. WILSON. That has been discussed by every hon. member of the committee who has spoken, and I want a little information with respect to this particular item.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We have an item, No. 92, which deals with this question.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the discussion is perfectly regular. We are considering whether or not we will spend money on cables. It is a perfectly proper thing to consider this matter and to point out that this expenditure may be unnecessary because you can have communication by means of the Marconi system. I do not think the discussion has gone beyond the range of what is proper on this item.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This $80,000 will be all.

Mr. WILSON. How many instruments have you ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As to that I do not know.

Mr. WILSON. If it is regular, I might as well find out whether you expect to use this system to communicate with the other side of the Atlantic.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The instruments which the hon. Minister of Public Works holds have no relation to the Marconi contract. These were obtained before we made the Marconi contract. The contract simply is that we shall expend $80,000 to aid Mr. Marconi in putting up a station in the hope that it will be a success. If it is a failure we have speculated in science and have not got much for our money, but if it is a success we gain by the fact that the Atlantic rates are to be decreased.

Mr. WILSON. And you have the instruments besides, which you have bought ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. These instruments bought by the Public Works Department are outside the contract. The contract also provides that for our own purposes we shall be able to get the instruments at cost price free from royalty, but the hon. Minister of Public Works had purchased these instruments before Mr. Marconi came here.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The instruments that are under my care cost $2,000.

Mr. WILSON. You do not know how many you have ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have two stations under my care.

Mr. WILSON. Did they cost $2,000 apiece ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, $2,000 for the two stations. We have one at Belle Isle and one on the north shore. This summer we will give them a fair trial and I think they will work well.

Mr. WILSON. It does seem a pity that before laying this cable you had not made a fair trial with this system.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My own personal conviction is, that, useful as the wireless system may be, cables will always be necessary.

Mr. SPROULE. If cables will always be necessary, would it not be the part of wisdom to allow Mr. Marconi to go on with his experimenting and risk the cables until such time as he has perfected the system ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Governor in Council has decided otherwise.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Minister of Public Works dissenting.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works if the arrangement made with Mr. Marconi includes any improvements made in the future on the system ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As far as the Department of Public Works is concerned, I am perfectly free to make any other arrangement with any other company. I have only instruments for two stations. If they work well I will be very thankful indeed. If they do not I will change them. I have not paid much for them. As to the hon. gentleman's question, the government have made their experiment and, as the hon. Minister of Finance says, if it works well we will have the benefit, and if it does not, we will lose.

Mr. LEFURGEY. That is not the question I wished to ask at all. I wished to know if any future improvements on the Marconi system were included in the present arrangement ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We pay $80,000 towards the construction of these stations, which will be completed I expect within a few weeks or a few months. Beyond that the Marconi Company stipulate that they will give us the instruments for the purposes of our lighthouse service and for the purposes of navigation, &c., but not for commercial purposes, and that will naturally include improvements at fair prices and without royalties. Anything of that kind which we require they must supply at a fair price without regard to royalty.

Mr. WILSON. I thought you said we got it for nothing.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It means that we get them at manufacturer's prices without any cost for royalty. They must not charge us for royalty which is the chief cost in those things.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Have you purchased the future improvements that might be made in the Marconi system ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would not say that.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Will the minister tell us the position exactly that we are in ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Our main contract had relation to the creation of this station, and the other part was rather incidental to the arrangement and no great importance was attached to it. It provides whatever instruments we need for our lighthouses and for the safety of life and property, but not for general commercial purposes, we are entitled to get at a fair price without having to pay a royalty.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Then we are absolutely in the hands of the Marconi Company as regards any improvements they may make upon their system, and after this expenditure of $80,000 we will still have to pay the piper for any improvements they may make.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Justice has sent for the contract and it will speak for itself. We are paying the $80,000 mainly for the station, and Marconi will be interested in making his system as perfect as possible. We are getting the benefit in the shape of reduced rates which is the only way we get our compensation. The Minister of Justice thinks the word 'improvement' is mentioned in the contract.

Mr. LEFURGEY. It appears that we are in a rather precarious position in regard to this matter. We have the Minister of Public Works saying that he has no faith in the system.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not say that.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Well, he says that he has no absolute faith in the system. We are spending therefore $80,000 merely on an experiment, and I do not think we are justified in paying $80,000 out of the public funds to assist an experiment on behalf of any person. The minister himself says that he is not sure that it can be used over a space of ten miles. If we are not entitled to the improvements which may be made in the Marconi system, our money is absolutely wasted and we are simply putting ourselves in the hands of any speculator that may come along.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I differ from my hon. friend as to the experiment, because I believe that whether it succeeds or fails it was a good thing for us to take hold of Marconi and give him a helping hand in a matter which was attracting world wide interest. Whether it succeeds or fails there is no question but that the public opinion of Canada has fully justified the government in taking the step it did. If it succeeds we will get our compensation in the shape of a ten cent rate instead of a twenty-five cent rate, and that is worth risking something for. Like Mark Twain's uncle who took the pork contract, we will be serving our country and making a nice thing out of it.

Mr. MONK. Has the minister a written report about those cables from Mr. Keeley ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have estimates.

Mr. MONK. Prepared by Mr. Keeley ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I differ from the Minter of Finance, for I do not believe that the government of Canada should set itself up as an experimental station of any sort. Scientific investigations have gone on in this world for a great many years and I do not know of any government having assisted mere experiments. There are experiments on flying machines and other things, and the first thing we know the Minister of Finance and his colleagues will be making experiments in this line. We can very well allow such experiments to be carried on by the parties interested, and when completed we can reap the advantage of them. I notice that the government has not yet taken up the experiment of the fast line of steamers across the Atlantic, which is a very desirable experiment for the government to make in the interest of the country, and on which $80,000 could be much more wisely spent than on this wireless telegraphy which the minister himself does not know will be a success.

Telegraph lines, British Columbia—Branch from Port Simpson-Hazelton main line to Aberdeen, $1,500.

Mr. EARLE. Is this under contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not yet, but it will be carried on immediately. There is a large cannery there.

Mr. EARLE. I was going to ask if it would be completed in time to be of use this season ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes; instructions will be given immediately.

Telegraph lines, British Columbia—150 Mile House to Quesnel Forks and Horse Fly, $7,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I ask what brand of cigars they will use in the construction of this line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope they will not use any cigars.

Mr. EARLE. Is this to be constructed by the same party who constructed the Dawson line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, we are going to carry out this work by contract.

Establishment of timber creosoting plant to treat timber required for general repairs to wharfs and breakwaters, $40,000.

Mr. MONK. Where is that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not yet made up my mind as to the best location. It will be necessary to be in the maritime provinces, where that kind of timber is more required. I have really no place in my mind at present.

Mr. WILSON. How does the minister know how much to ask ?

Mr. MONK. I strongly advise the minister to hesitate before he enters upon this work, because the sum mentioned for the establishing of a creosoting plant is quite insufficient.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it is quite sufficient.

Mr. MONK. Has the minister any estimate or report from experts showing that with this sum he can establish a creosote plant ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Where is that report ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not expect me to carry to the House all the reports which I have in the department. When I say I have reports, it does not always mean that I have written reports. In this case, my late chief engineer, Mr. Coste, investigated that matter for years, and Mr. Lafleur, my present chief engineer, shares the views of his late chief. We purchase every year about $40,000 of timber which we have to get creosoted in the States, because we have no establishment here. My officers have investigated the cost of these plants on the spot, and they tell me that a plant will not cost more than $40,000. It is not a very expensive plant; it is a question of large tubes.

Mr. MONK. I am only putting the minister on his guard. I am surprised to hear that he has been getting his wood creosoted in the States, when we have a considerable establishment in this country. There is one in my own county.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. For long pieces of timber ?

Mr. MONK. Both long and short. My hon. friend knows the establishment—that of Mr. St. George.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is not creosoted timber at all. It is not the same thing. The worms would eat it as quick as a flash.

Mr. MONK. They do both. I can tell the hon. minister, from what I have heard of the cost of that plant, that he will not get the establishment for $40,000. It seems to me that when he asks the House to grant the government $40,000 to start a new business of that kind, we ought to have something in writing before us showing plainly what the establishment will cost, and where it will be placed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have here a list of the articles necessary for the establishment, and they make up the amount of $40,000. This is the estimate of my officers, and I cannot give more than that.

Surveys and inspections, $25,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is that a usual vote ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it is an additional vote.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why do you want an additional vote ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because I have a great many more surveys than I ever had before, and, moreover, it has become necessary to make a complete survey of the St. Clair river and the St. Mary's river. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) called my attention to the fact that our American friends had been dredging in our waters, and I want to make a complete survey of these upper rivers, so as to know how the matter stands.

Mr. MONK. I do not think the hon. minister will readily ask the committee to vote a sum of $40,000 on that kind of an estimate ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. member is very difficult to please. I have discussed the matter with my most competent officers, and what more can I do ?

Mr. LENNOX. At this point I think there ought to be an understanding. We are asked from time to time to vote large sums of money for matters which members of parliament necessarily know very little about. The hon. minister does not profess to thoroughly understand this matter himself. I think that before we are asked to vote this money, we should have the best information on the subject that it is possible to obtain. That information should be laid before the House in writing, and without something of the kind it is unfair to ask the representatives of the people to vote the money. I am not speaking of this item in particular but of the system, and I certainly think that in the case of any considerable item, a definite statement of the estimated total expenditure involved should be submitted to the House. It is not a question of $40,000 alone, but the larger question of our spending large sums of money without really knowing what the expenditure is for. When we vote this $40,000, we have no proper means of knowing whether that is anything like the ultimate amount we will be asked to vote.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no objection to give all the information I have at hand. I fully recognize the right of hon. members to ask for every possible information, and I have never refused to give them any information I have. My hon. friend would like to have a written report on every item. Really I would not like to undertake to do that. I believe that when a minister of the Crown says he has a report from his officers, his word should be taken. I do not profess to be an expert on every item. I am not a builder or an architect or an engineer, and must necessarily rely on the competent heads of the different branches of the Department of Public Works. I inform myself the best I can, and more than that I cannot be expected to do.

Mr. EARLE. Will that complete the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My officers inform me that it will.

Yukon system of telegraph lines comprising the Ashcroft-Dawson line and branches—working expenses, additional amount, $33,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have in the estimates $80,000 for the working of our Yukon line and we are asking this addition. I am going to reduce the rates very soon.

Mr. EARLE. I hope that will be done at an early date.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To-morrow morning the rates will be reduced $3 instead of $4.50.

Mr. EARLE. How will be the rates from the Skeena river to the coast ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Our present rate is 50 cents per 100 miles. I do not know how many miles it is to the coast, but I will make a deduction all through. I will try it for a month or two. The reduction will be specially between Dawson and Ashcroft.

Slides and booms, Gatineau river—compensation to Messrs. Gilmour & Hughson for use of their retaining booms at the Cascades, $3,600.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Instead of building booms ourselves, we have used those of Messrs. Gilmour & Hughson and of course we have to pay for them.

St. Maurice district—working expenses, additional amount, $20,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This year there will be four million logs to pass through our booms, we expect, and we anticipate a good incoming revenue.

Civil government—Department of Railways and Canals—To provide for the promotion of F. A. Dixon to the rank of chief clerk, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $1,800.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no difference in this gentleman's salary. The salary is voted in the main estimates, but on the basis of his being a first-class clerk. He is now made a chief clerk, his salary as chief clerk being the same as the highest salary attained by a first-class clerk.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But you have the money voted already, and this should be struck out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But the other amount cannot be paid to him, as it was voted to him as first-class clerk, and the object is to promote him to the rank of chief clerk.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But you should not have the amount voted twice.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When we come to the item in concurrence, if the House thinks it desirable, it can be struck out; but, as I say, the salary previously voted to him could not be paid to him in any case.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know, but I cannot see any sense in, or justification for, this way of doing it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The salary will only be paid once.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The salary we are now voting is the same exactly as the sum already voted, but it is to be voted for a first-class clerk instead of a chief clerkship. There will be no objection to striking the item out on concurrence, but we cannot deal with it here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we were giving Mr. Dixon a larger salary it would be necessary only to vote the difference. But where the salary is the same and only the rank is different it must be voted as it is here.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But the money is voted twice, the first time for a first-class clerk. That means that the minister has a first-class clerkship to dispose of.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But I understand the Minister of Railways and Canals to say that he does not intend to pay two salaries.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We can strike it out on concurrence.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not sure we have not passed the item in concurrence. If we have, we can strike it out.

Railways and Canals—Chargeable to capital—Railways—Intercolonial Railway—Rolling stock (revote, $303,000), $345,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. By adding up all these votes on capital account, hon. members will see that about $800,000 of it is made up of revotes. In this item all but about $42,000 is a revote. This is to pay a balance of $6,750 on locomotives that were not sufficiently estimated for and for two shunting engines estimated at $35,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount expended on rolling stock last year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We had a vote for rolling stock of $2,000,000. At the end of the current year we will have expended that amount less about $200,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not quite understand this item. If I remember rightly there is an estimate in the next year of $500,000. Then, in the supplementary estimates for the current year there is $70,000 to cover an expenditure which the minister seems to have made in excess of his estimates. What, then, is the revote for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We got an appropriation of $2,000,000 for the current year, and we got a supplementary vote of $70,000 for this year. This makes a total of $2,070,000. We will have expended, at the end of the present fiscal year, say $1,800,000 in round figures. We have contracts pending which wil not be executed in time for the rolling stock to be received and paid for during the current year, to the amount of $30,000 in round figures, and we are providing for a couple of shunting engines, as I have said.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But the hon. gentleman asked for a supplementary vote for the year ending 30th of June, 1902, of $70,000. That must have been for a deficiency in the vote of that year. But he has not explained why he wants this $70,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At the time the supplementary votes for the current year were made up we had reason to believe that this rolling stock would be delivered before the current year, and, in order to cover that we required $70,000, and we put it in the supplementary item. Now, we find from the latest reports that the stock will not be delivered to the extent of about $300,000 in round figures, and, in order to pay for that, we have to get a supplementary revote for the year to come.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister had a vote of $2,000,000. And about a week ago he brought down a supplementary estimate for 1902, amounting to $70,000. Now, he finds he has made a mistake to the extent of $303,000. There must be most extraordinary book-keeping in his department.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. minister ask for this $70,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. But the hon. minister has not spent it, and virtually he is asking for $373,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We got $2,070,000. If the contracts we have given were filled we would require that sum. But there will be about $300,000 which we cannot pay this year, and that we will have to pay next year.

Mr. BARKER. As I understand the hon. gentleman, he has only paid about $1,700,000. He has paid less than his estimate by over $300,000. That means that he pays up to the 30th of June $1,700,000. He has taken $2,070,000 to pay $1,700,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I put it very clear as a revote, there can be nothing more explicit.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman propose to cancel that $70,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I do not.

Mr. BARKER. Well, it is a fictitious item, there is no such item.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is an item passed.

Mr. BARKER. I know it is in the estimates, but there is no such item in the hon.

gentleman's books. He has not spent his $2,000,000 by $300,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, that is a fact.

Mr. BARKER. It is a fictitious fact.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it is an actual fact.

Mr. BARKER. But there is no such thing as that $70,000 when he explains the matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, there is a vote for $70,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What amount have you expended last year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We consider now that we will require by the end of the year—we have not expended it all yet—$1,767,000 to pay for rolling stock which we shall receive.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That would leave $363,000 for a revote. He has $2,070,000 voted already and he expects to spend by the end of the year $1,767,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That will leave $303,000, and that amount I am asking to be revoted.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does not the minister see that he should have a better system of book keeping ? He came down here ten days ago asking for a supplementary vote of $70,000 to his $2,000,000, then he comes here a few days after with another supplementary estimate and asks us for $303,000 of that as a revote for next year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot see any question of book keeping in it all. The estimates are presented to the officers of our department, and I say to them : What amounts will be required for the supplementary estimates for the current year ? They, with the knowledge which they possess, say they will require $70,000 for rolling stock to cover contracts we have already made. They find out after we have received that and after the estimate has been brought down that they are not going to be able to secure the completion of the contract by the first day of July to the extent of the whole amount which they have contracted for, and they fall short by $300,000 ; and in order that we may possess the means to pay the articles when we receive them next year, we ask a revote for $300,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Ten days ago the department virtually tells the House that they want, for the purpose of balancing their accounts last year, $2,070,000. Now, they find out they were mistaken by $303,000 which the hon. gentleman asks to be revoted for next year.

Engine house, &c., at Chaudière Junction, $63,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is an enormous sum for an engine house.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The new round house, which will contain eighteen stalls, will cost $37,350. Then there are machine shops, a boiler building, building for repairing stores, turntable, foundation for stationary boiler plant, water service and heating the different buildings. All this will be done by contract that can be so done. You cannot put down a turntable by contract.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will that build the whole ? Was there any vote in the main estimates for that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is the total amount required for Chaudière Junction ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what is estimated will finish it.

Mr. BARKER. You buy your turntable from a bridge builder ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but we put it down by our own people. We allow $4,000 for a turntable and foundation.

Increased accommodation at St. John, $90,500.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to provide for tools, machinery and car shop, $7,000 ; electric lighting, $5,500 ; apparatus for providing and storing compressed air, $1,000 ; stationary engine and boilers, $5,600 ; building for stores and offices, $5,500, making $25,500. We then complete a new engine house, a new turntable and a new machine shop for $35,000 ; to complete the filling of the new yard, laying tracks and furnishing water supply, $30,000, which makes in all $90,500.

Mr. BARKER. Does that include the new sidings at St. John ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND Yes, that is included. The whole item for filling the new yard, bridging the creek, laying these tracks and furnishing the water supply, is $30,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why does the hon. gentleman ask for that vote when I understood in the Public Accounts Committee that he was charging the greater part of that as an expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We did not charge any portion of it. All that was charged was the rails. We have the rails ready to lay down.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount now expended at St. John for terminal facilities with this vote ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That will include the amount that was paid for the land which the hon. gentleman had a hand in, all the Harris property which the hon. gentleman may have heard of.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, I mean the whole of the terminal facilities at St. John. The minister must have it under his eye.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not know I had it here, but I have found it. The total amount expended and estimated to be expended is $2,500,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. For one yard ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman does not mean to say he is making a correct statement when he says it is for one yard ?

Mr. BARKER. One station yard at St. John.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is at St. John, but it is not one station yard. This is the amount which has been expended from the beginning.

Mr. BARKER. Yes, but it was on one station yard.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, but it includes the whole thing from beginning to end.

Mr. GERMAN. How much did the Harris property cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Over $200,000, and if the other property had cost as much as the Harris property it would have been over the $10,000,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does that item include the land bought from the Gilberts?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How many acres were bought at that time ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Thirty-seven.

Mr. WILSON. How much has been expended during the last five years at St. John ? The hon. minister must have particulars. We heard him speak about the Harris property that was purchased during the time of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Haggart), and if he could give us the particulars of this purchase we should know something of what he has done since he took office.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is some excuse for knowing about the Harris property, because we have heard a good deal about it. It struck everybody as a somewhat paralyzing purchase.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When we purchased the Harris property we were accused of having more property than was necessary at St. John for terminal facilities, but it seems we have not enough by 37 acres.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman bought a little bit of land alongside the station which very possibly will be three-quarters of an acre or an acre in extent. With that quantity of land we could not make very much of a railway yard.

Increased accommodation at Stellarton, $17,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the work you have done at Stellarton ? There is another vote already I think of $15,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is necessary for the purpose of completing the works there. Stellarton being a divisional point has to be equipped as a divisional point. It is a divisional point between Truro and Mulgrave, and we require that all engines shall take water, besides which considerable yards are required to accommodate the cars which go to the mines, and so on. We have to handle a good deal of coal traffic at that point. We intend to put up a two-story building for the accommodation of the engine men, register rooms and foremen's office, master mechanic's office, train engineers' lunch room and oil room, which will cost $6,500; heating offices and building, $1,000; new electric lighting plant, $2,000; office furniture, $1,000; building for storing wrecking car, $1,500; tracks and laying tracks, $5,000,- which makes a total of $17,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount expended at Stellarton ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $116,000.

Mr. BARKER. I do not understand why it is that these estimates are brought forward in this way. The hon. gentleman prepares his estimates for the year, and no doubt his officers know what will be required at a particular station. In his original estimates he wanted $15,000 for improvement at Stellarton. How does it come that these extra works are now to be undertaken which were overlooked a few months ago ? Did the hon. gentleman's officers overlook these things or does somebody else suggest that they would like to have these works carried out ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are not overlooked and nobody suggests them to the officers. There are a great many things that the officers think are necessary and they send forward their recommendation that they should be done.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We are talking about the estimates for 1903, and this is for the same year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am talking of the estimates of 1903. We do not, as a matter of preference, always insert in our main estimates every dollar of any one expenditure that may be made.

Mr. BARKER. I think that if the hon. minister's engineer would do that with an ordinary railway company he would be allowed to retire from the service. The engineer is supposed to make up his estimate of what is required on the line. He comes to his chief and says that a number of improvements are wanted at a particular station during the year. If he were to come back in six weeks and say that he wanted double the amount that he had originally asked for he would not remain in the service.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not want to be too harsh.

Mr. WILSON. I think it is because there will be a thin House, and everybody will be anxious to get away, that they keep these estimates from us until this late period of the session. I remember that when hon. gentlemen opposite occupied seats on this side of the House they took this objection very strongly. I do not see any reason why these amounts do not come down in the original estimates. I think this is done for a purpose that it is hard to defend.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman would not defend anything he could help.

Mr. WILSON. I think the hon. minister ought to have some reason better than the one he has given to justify acts of this kind. His party took strong grounds when they were sitting on this side of the House on this question, but he, fortunately or unfortunately for himself, has spent most of his public life in office and as a matter of course he has not had to do much in criticising, and in the province that he came from, I understand, that he did about as he liked.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was always very careful to do what I thought the country would like.

To increase accommodation at Sydney (revote), $50,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Some information is required here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a revote.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You have $70,000 odd in the main estimates, and how is it that when you were preparing your main estimates you overlooked the fact that you would have a revote of $50,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When the estimates came up our officers did not anticipate but that they would be able to complete the work. They are satisfied now that they will not be able to do it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount expended at Sydney ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The total estimated cost of Sydney works will be about $390,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is this going to finish it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Increased accommodation at Halifax (revote $90,000), $143,000.

Mr. BOYD. The committee should rise now. We have been here since 11 o'clock this morning and it is not fair to go on voting large sums of money in this way.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have made no progress.

Mr. BOYD. But we have been doing public business. I appeal to the Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we had been doing any business I would not object.

Mr. EARLE. We have been here day in and day out from 11 o'clock in the morning for more than a week past, and you should not ask us to stay up after two o'clock. We have been criticising the estimates very moderately, and I think we should adjourn.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not one whit worse on us than it is on the hon. gentleman.

Mr. EARLE. Oh, yes it is. You can go away when you get through your estimates but the few of us here have to remain to do the business.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the minister doing with this $143,000 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We had a vote last year of $146,000 and in that was an item of $120,000 under the heading of increased accommodation at Halifax; dredging and blasting work at Halifax, $26,000. Out of the $120,000 we only expect to spend $45,000 up to the end of the current fiscal year which would leave $75,000 out of the $120,000 for which provision has to be made. I explained that this $75,000 was made up as follows :

New works and improvements at North street station $30,000——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Give the expenditure and the estimated amount so that we will get it in 'Hansard.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am reading the items showing the amount that was not expended and there cannot have been any expenditure. The $75,000 that remained unexpended out of the $120,000 consist of new works and improvements at North street station, $30,000; guard retaining wall, Richmond, $20,000; grading behind guards, $2,000; alterations to buildings, $15,000; making the $75,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How do you get the rest of the $90,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have to add to that, dredging and blasting of rock at Halifax which was in last year's estimates.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Under what heading?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Under the heading of increased accommodation at Halifax and dredging, $142,000. For dredging and blasting there will only be expended up to the end of this year $11,000, which will leave the $15,000. That makes the $90,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will this finish it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I mentioned that there was an engine-house at Richmond, which amounts to $53,000, and if to that you add the $90,000 revote, you will have $143,000 for the current vote.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will the minister tell us what is the total amount, including this, expended for terminal facilities at Halifax?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $2,000,000.

Mr. WILSON. Could the hon. minister tell us how much of that has been expended within the last five years?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot tell that off-hand.

Mr. WILSON. Will the hon. minister give us that, with the expenditure at St. John, to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will with pleasure

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any scheme for taking the land between Lockman street and Water street south of the present station?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have to confess to my hon. friend that we have not taken that subject up yet.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I brought it to the hon. gentleman's attention last year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman did, and if these other matters had not been very pressing, we would have turned our attention to that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What I suggested to the hon. minister last year was that if that were done, a great deal of the rock blasting and other work might be dispensed with. It is highly probable that the land will have to be taken some time, and it might be better to take it now than at some future date. However, I trust that the hon. gentleman will take that into consideration.

To strengthen bridges (revote), $50,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will this finish the work? If not, what is the total amount which it is expected will be required to finish it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no data here, but I stated the other day that the estimate which was given at the time we started on this work was that it would probably cost in the neighbourhood of $600,000 or $700,000 altogether. Perhaps that would be a fair estimate yet, although I have not had any recent estimate on the subject.

Mr. WILSON. Will the hon. minister tell us how many bridges there are?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are a great many. I had the data here when we were going through the main estimates, and I think I furnished the House with it; but I have not got these particulars here now.

Mr. WILSON. The hon. minister might bring that to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That makes $225,000 which the hon. minister is taking for strengthening the bridges this year.

To provide additional siding room and increase accommodation and facilities along the line (revote), $135,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Can you explain how it is you ask this? Did you expect to spend that much up to the 1st of July this year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We did certainly expect that when we took the estimate last year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But this year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have received no information which would lead me to any different conclusion. We found as the season was advancing that it would be impossible for us to carry on the work to the extent originally contemplated.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If I understand rightly, there was $150,000 odd voted for increased accommodation for the third year, and you have not expended that by $135,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was $300,000 odd.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am afraid that if it takes all night we must ask the minister at what places he intends to expend that money all along the line ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman will look it up, he will find that when that item of $330,000 was obtained last year, I made a statement of how and where we proposed to spend that money.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. minister has not the information with reference to this item, I will ask him to put in a written statement to-morrow of how he intends to expend this money.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not sufficient for my hon. friend to be told that once or apparently even twice. I told him when the item in the main estimates was going through for the next year, and I told him when the item for $330,000 was passed last year. I did not come provided with a duplicate statement of the same thing to repeat it to-night. I did not anticipate that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister has not told us where he is going to spend the $50,000 he has in the main estimates. Will he tell us now ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot undertake to furnish information on the estimates that we disposed of some weeks ago, as to which I had the explanations, and if they were asked they will be found in 'Hansard.'

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is absolutely necessary that we should know where this large expenditure is to be made, and the expenditure on every part of the work. There are only a few items ; the hon. minister can easily get the information from his department; and we want it on 'Hansard'—where he spent the money last year, and where the amount that remains unexpended is to be expended. The hon. minister says that of the $330,000 he voted last year he expended all but this $135,000. The House would like to know where he expended the vote of last year and where he intends to spend this re-vote.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not got the statement before me, but I will bring all these statements if the hon. gentleman would give me delay.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is only reasonable that they should be furnished. The hon. minister cannot expect to get through his estimates by referring us to last year's 'Hansard.'

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We want an explanation of where this balance of $135,000 is to be expended. If the hon. gentleman has not got it at hand, let him give it to us before the next item passes. While on these items, let me ask him has he the information I asked for with reference to a number of votes ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have that information.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This item may be adopted on the understanding that the hon. minister will furnish the information required.

To change car couplers on passenger cars (re-vote), $8,000.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. minister took a vote last year of $20,000. How is it there were only $12,000 of that spent ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The quantity of repairs required is very considerable and the car shops are very limited in their capacity and found it impossible to get through the work.

Mr. BARKER. Is it not rather because the hon. gentleman bought new cars, instead of repairing the old ones ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all.

Mr. BARKER. It seems extraordinary that he estimated last year expending five times the amount he really did.

To provide new superstructure for six spans of Miramichi bridge (revote), $60,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How is it this is not expended ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The bridge companies could not get the steel and were not able to build the bridges, and will not be able before the 30th June.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Who has the contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have contracts with all the bridge companies.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Did you call for tenders ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What will be required to complete ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will require $50,000 to complete.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will that $50,000 with this re-vote complete them ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I think so.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What will be the total amount of the whole at Miramichi ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars is the total amount, less the value of the old span, $60,000, making $70,000.

To raise Sydney and Louisbourg bridge over Intercolonial Railway at Sydney (revote, $3,300), $4,300.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why should we have to do this ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not headway enough.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is it your bridge ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a bridge of the Sydney and Louisbourg Railway Company. We have been trying to come to some arrangement with the company, but have not yet been able, and we have to provide for this expenditure in the next year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How much was expended last year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nothing at all.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. On what principle do you do this for the railway company ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The railway was built first and the Intercolonial Railway afterwards, and the land of the company had to be expropriated for the purpose.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, we could not compel them to rebuild the bridge for our purpose.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This railway was built under the Sydney and Louisbourg Railway, and it ran along a trestle.

Increaed accommodation at Pictou (revote, $15,000), $70,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The appropriation for 1901-02 was $45,000. We expect to be able to expend by the end of the year $30,000. This leaves $15,000 for the re-vote. The reason for the delay was that the creosote ties were not delivered us in time to allow the contractor to complete his contract. The railway tracks on the wharf cost $3,000. A special gangway for steamers, $500. Approach, $3,250. Engineers' inspection, $2,000. Another item, $800, making $8,550. We require additional amount for land for station yard, a new station building and covered platform, and an addition to the baggage room. We have to make an approach to the station, we have to double the track on part of the approach to the station and the town, and that will make up the additional $46,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why did not the minister bring down this $55,000 in the main estimates ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite sure it is no fault of the engineer that it did not come down.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount expended on terminal facilities at Pictou ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One hundred and five thousand dollars.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Including the $70,000 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Station at Nicolet (revote), $2,500.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What amount have you expended there ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have made no expenditure yet. This item is expected to cover the whole cost.

Station and freight house at Eel river (revote), $3,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This will cover the cost.

Improvements at North Sydney, $40,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for the extension of the Intercolonial wharf 200 feet and to put up sheds, &c.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the connection with Newfoundland.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). A pretty ample amount for a wharf.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a large pier. The extension will cost $17,000; then you have dredging to do of about the same amount and freight sheds and tracks $6,000. There is a good deal of business developing there.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). This is not half enough.

Building a spur line of railway from Intercolonial Railway station at Rivière Ouelle to the wharf on the St. Lawrence, $43,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is this ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is for a spur line we are running down from the River Ouelle six or seven miles to secure a share of the traffic on the north side of the St. Lawrence. This is opposite places that are becoming great summer resorts. Murray Bay and adjacent places. We think it would be of material advantage to our business to have a spur line to that point.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What will be the cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is expected to be covered by this vote.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Where do the passengers come from to these places ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. From every part of Canada, and from every part of the United States.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Murray Bay, Ste. Irénée, Baie St. Paul—these have become summer resorts which are largely frequented.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is this spur opposite Murray Bay ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, there will be a ferry there. I suppose that in the summer months Murray Bay has a population of four or five thousand people. Americans are swarming in there, invading the province of Quebec—and spending their money freely.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In this $43,000 is included the cost of the right of way, which we do not think will be very large.

To increase accommodation at Moncton (re-vote, $32,000), $156,700.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We would like to know about this.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are extending the machine shop to meet the very imperative demand made upon us by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) which will cost $11,000, in addition to the amount we estimated last year. We intend to build a store house and this is for the store department and the mechanical department, and we propose to equip this with electric light and steam heating. For this building we estimated $50,000. We put in steam boilers, foundation under the building with power, heating and lighting, $30,000. Steam engine, electric generators and compressed air apparatus are estimated at $28,000. Then, hot air, hoisting apparatus and other items, $7,000. These improvements are all designed for the purpose of enabling us to build, repair and handle the large locomotives.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When did the hon. gentleman get the estimate for this work ? I think there is only $15,000 and $25,000 in the main estimates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will give the hon. gentleman a statement on that point. The estimates for these items were received from our officers before the opening of parliament. In point of fact they were received before I became ill and unable to attend to the department. The estimates went in but, in my absence, many of the items were coolly cut out. I was not there to stand by them, so they did not stay in. It was not the fault of the engineers in any way.

Mr. WILSON. Will the hon. minister bring down what has been spent at Moncton for the last five years ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Improvements at Rockingham, $4,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for addition to the stations and enlargement of the freight shed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Now, I think we can quit. There is another item for the Prince Edward Island Railway, but we want to discuss the contract on the Prince Edward Island line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This item for the Prince Edward Island Railway is $30,000 to build a new station at Charlottetown, and we are proposing to use the old one for freight and storage purposes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But I want this item to stand so as to afford an opportunity to discuss the Murray Bay extension and the Prince Edward Island road. It will take some time to do it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Item 28 is a canal item.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). You are not going on with any more ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There is an hon. gentleman who has been waiting all night for this canal item, as he wishes to make a few statesmanlike observations with regard to it, I think we might take that up.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to capital—canals—Welland canal—

To deepen portions of long level between Port Colborne and Thorold...	$50,000 00
To remove obstructions in the canal from Port Colborne down to Welland....	95,000 00

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I asked the minister the other day if he was lowering the mitre sill of the lock at the entrance to Port Colborne. I thought there was a necessity for deepening the whole reach, but the minister said there was no necessity for it. I did not know how he would utilize the canal without deepening it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am surprised to hear my hon. friend make this statement, when I said distinctly that we were dredging and deepening all along. There were places where the canal had silted in, and where the water was shallow.

To remove obstructions in the canal from Port Colborne down to Welland, $95,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a mistake in the wording, that should be 'towards Thorold' instead of Welland. I will state what the obstructions are. A good many of these bridges across the canal are turned upon a a pier which is in the centre of the canal.

To put the Welland in proper shape for navigation all these obstructions require to be removed. We intend to appropriate a portion of this amount for the purpose of removing these obstructions and erecting new bridges. We propose that the swing bridge piers shall be on the side, the same as in all new canals.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount required for bridging from Port Colborne down to Welland, and for changing the piers ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The chief engineer tells me it will cost in the neighbourhood of half a million dollars.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We want to know the particulars of the two branches of work, what each will cost.

Mr. GERMAN. The one difficulty in the Welland canal for a full sized canal boat drawing 14 feet of water, 265 feet long, carrying 75,000 or 80,000 bushels of grain, is that when the boat comes to a bridge pier, the pier being built in the centre of the canal, it forms an obstruction to the passage of a full sized canal boat. As the hon. gentleman well knows, every pivot pier is in the centre of the canal. There is 45 feet of navigation on each side of the pier. The locks are, it is true, only 45 feet in width, but here is the difficulty. When these large boats come to a bridge the current, which is of considerable rapidity in the canal now by reason of all the water powers that are taken from the canal, is split at the bridge pier. One of these boats has only about 10 to 12 inches of water under her keel, and it is somewhat difficult to manage. Money is being voted now to deepen that level to some extent, making it a clean 16 feet. That is what they need to have, that is what the Welland aqueduct has, that was built under the administration of the hon. member for Lanark. When these big boats come to the centre piers the current is split, and they have to turn out of their natural course, and may either go into the bank or strike a pier. That does not often happen, but it does sometimes, and the danger of its happening drives vessels away from the Welland canal. If it happens once to a boat it destroys that boat as a money-making commodity. They have to send off for tugs to straighten them around, and they will probably break a portion of the pier. It destroys the earning value of that cargo, and perhaps of every cargo that it will take through the canal that season. Moreover it causes delay, and the charge of navigation by reason of that is so great that these boats will not pass through the canal when the pier is in the centre. The Hamilton and North-western Navigation Company bought two boats from Glasgow, the 'Strathcona' and the 'Donacona,' full canal size, which navigated the canal last summer. They had to take the boats off the canal and they absolutely refused to put them on again as long as these centre piers existed. Mr. Wolvin, an American from Duluth, one of the biggest ship owners and biggest shipping men in the United States, is desirous of establishing a line of ships to run from Buffalo to Montreal or Quebec. His chief captain, Mr. Norcross, who comes from our section, captain of one of his biggest boats, was down here interviewing the government to get them to remove the centre piers. They appreciate the danger and Mr. Wolvin is willing to put on a line of ships if the government will take out the centre piers. The superintending engineer two years ago, I think it was, recommended to the department, if I am rightly advised, to put a sum in the estimates to remove the centre piers. The government did not see fit to do so then, but they have now come to the conclusion that it is the proper thing to do. I think the estimate of half a million is very much more than it will ever cost.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How many bridges are there from Port Colborne to Welland ?

Mr. GERMAN. One of them is on the lock. There is one question that has arisen as to whether or not the government or the railway companies are responsible for rebuilding the railway bridges. For instance, there is the Air Line bridge and there is the Michigan Central bridge. There are three highway bridges between Port Colborne and Welland costing $20,000 apiece

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One will cost $30,000.

Mr. GERMAN. Well, one, say $30,000. Below Welland there is one, exactly at the town of Welland there is one and then there are four or five between that and the locks. When you come to the locks it will not be necessary to remove the bridges, because they all swing on the locks themselves. One might ask : Why is it necessary to have the channel where the bridge is any wider than the channel where the lock is ? When you come to the lock you have the current going into the lock and a boat, with the speed slowed down, will float right into it straight so that there is no splitting of the current, and the difficulty so far as the other bridges are concerned is that the piers stand in the centre of the canal and the split current is liable to turn the nose of the boat against the shore or against the pier. That is one reason why we have not more boats running through the canal at the present time. Navigators do not want to take small boats through and they will not go through with full sized boats so long as these centre piers are there. I think this is a wise expenditure.

Welland canal—To build a concrete centre pier and steel swing span for Montrose bridge over Chippewa river, $9,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the reason for building that bridge ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The present bridge requires to be rebuilt and a swing bridge is necessary.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 2.55 a.m., Tuesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, May 13, 1902.

The Speaker took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT.

House proceeded to the consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 112) to amend the Immigration Act.—The Minister of the Interior.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) moved :

That the said amendments be agreed to, except the amendment whereby the words 'or for any other cause whatsoever' are inserted in the eleventh line thereof, and, as to said last mentioned amendment, the same be disagreed to because such amendment confers upon the Governor in Council power to forbid the landing of any person whatever in Canada in the discretion of the Governor in Council which is an altogether excessive and improper power to rest in the executive authority.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where are the Senate amendments to be found ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I presume they are in the original Bill. I will read them so that they can be followed. The Bill was pretty fully discussed in the House, and I need not go over what was said in connection with the general subject. But in the Senate some amendments have been made. The second section has been amended by adding after the word 'necessary' the words :—

And every owner or master of a vessel who violates the provisions of this Act ; or who aids or abets an immigrant or passenger in acting in contravention of such order or proclamation ; or who refuses or neglects to take back on board the vessel any such immigrant or passenger, shall incur a penalty not exceeding ten hundred dollars and not less than one hundred dollars in the case of each and every immigrant or passenger.

I have no objection to that amendment. It seems to me, perhaps, effective in amplifying the original intention of the Bill. Then, the first section, which enacts a section to follow section 24 of the Act, has been amended by inserting after the word 'any' in the tenth line, the word 'loathsome.' This would make it read :—

The Governor General may, by a proclamation or order, whichever he considers most expedient and whenever he deems it necessary prohibit the landing in Canada of any immigrant or any other passenger who is suffering from any loathsome, dangerous or infectious disease or malady——

—And so on. I see no particular objection to that amendment. but there has been inserted after the word 'malady,' the words 'or for any other cause whatsoever.' Now, that would make the section read in this way.

The Governor General may, by proclamation or order, whichever he considers most expedient, and whenever he deems it necessary, prohibit the landing in Canada of any immigrant or other passenger who is suffering from any dangerous or infectious disease or malady, or for any other cause whatsoever.

So that, as the Act is amended by the Senate, the Governor in Council may, in the arbitrary exercise of his discretion, prevent any passenger for any cause from coming into Canada. I need only point out that if my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), should go across to see the Coronation and the government, not desiring his presence here next session thought it desirable to prevent his landing, under this Act they could legally prevent him from coming into the country again. The persons we may stop, are not classified or restricted in any way. I do not know whether the attention of the Senate was called to the extremely remarkable powers which they desire to confer upon the government, but, certainly, the government does not consider that the executive authority should have such unlimited powers for the exclusion of people coming into Canada. No such principle has been adopted by parliament before, and we think that parliament would like at least to have a full discussion of the matter before adopting such a principle. I agree with the other amendments, but I think this one had better go back.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it would be better not to include these words. They seem to confer very wide power which is hardly necessary at the present time. As to the object of it, possibly some members of the government who are to remain here during the Coronation would like to keep out of the country some of those who are going. However, I would not like to see an unfair advantage taken of any of them in this way and I agree with my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior in this motion.

Mr. SPROULE. While this amendment seems to go too far, I think there should be a wider range of specified ailments and conditions that would be legal ground for excluding a party, so that those who are undesirable immigrants for other causes than such as are here given might be prevented from landing in the country. Notwithstanding this Act, people who are mentally unsound and physically unfit may come in if they are not the victims of some loathsome, dangerous or infectious disease.

Motion agreed to.

MEDICAL COUNCIL OF CANADA.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). With the consent of my hon. friends on the other side, I will call item 39 of the Public Bills and Orders, consideration of amendments made by the Senate to the Bill of the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Roddick), for the establishment of a medical council in Canada.

Mr. RODDICK. I move that the amendments be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. I think we ought to know what these amendments are.

The PRIME MINISTER. If they satisfy my hon. friend from Montreal they satisfy me.

Mr. RODDICK. I am perfectly satisfied.

Mr. SPROULE. I object to that, because, though it may be satisfactory to one or two gentlemen, it may not be satisfactory to the House in general. We have a right to know what the amendments are, because they might be objectionable to some, though not to others.

Mr. RODDICK. I may say that the amendments are practically only an addition to the amendment which was passed in this House some days ago, that is to say, that all the provinces shall consent before this Act can come into operation. There are a few changes in the wording, and an addition of one or two words, which are evidently unnecessary. I went over them very carefully with friends in the Senate yesterday, and I think there is no serious change in the Bill beyond what I mention. The changes are found on page 520 of the Votes and Proceedings.

INCORPORATION OF JOINT STOCK COMPANIES.

Bill (No. 161) respecting the incorporation of Joint Stock Companies by Letters Patent (The Prime Minister) read the second time, and House went into Committee thereon.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This is a new Bill to simplify the granting of letters patent. There are some new clauses.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This seems to be a pretty serious kind of Bill to put through at this stage of the session. I did not suppose, on account of the delay in bringing it before the House, that there was any intention on the part of the government to pass it this session.

The PRIME MINISTER. This Bill has been carefully gone into in the Senate. The object is merely to simplify the method whereby letters patent are now granted. They are now granted by Governor in Council, and there is a good deal of red tape in the procedure. The gist of the Bill is in the first clause. I do not think my hon. friend will find it very formidable. Letters patent are to be issued by the Secretary of State.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it were merely a Bill regulating the issue of letters patent, that would be comparatively simple. It is desirable that the formation of companies should be free as much as possible from any red tape. But this is a great deal more than that, because it deals with the constitution of these companies, with their powers, the liabilities of the directors, the shareholders ; in fact, it is a Joint Stock Companies Act to all intents and purposes—a very important Bill indeed.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). It is practically a re-enactment of a great number of statutes, respecting the several questions the hon. gentleman has just referred to. There are very few new clauses, and these have special reference to the preliminary stages. In other respects my hon. friend will find it practically the old Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course this is quite in order if we are content to accept the statement of the right hon. gentleman and of the Minister of Justice, and to abdicate all responsibility in the matter.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I did not mean that at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know my hon. friend did not, but that is what it means, for at this stage how can we give any intelligent consideration to this Bill, and take upon ourselves the duty of suggesting amendments where we think they should be made. That is what we should do, in view of the existing law, at an appropriate time. But of course we cannot do that at this stage of the session, and if we are not to do that, what are we to do ? We are to sit here and listen to the clauses being read, and accept the assurances of the right hon. gentleman and of the Minister of Justice, that all these clauses are perfectly right—they are the existing clauses, and there is no use of any further amendment. Well, I do not regard that as a desirable way of dealing with legislation of this kind. I certainly did not expect this legislation would be pressed.

The PRIME MINISTER. In view of the very reasonable protest entered by my hon. friend, I will not press the Bill. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—THE CHARLES A. BULL PRODUCE COMPANY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House and of the government to a grievance which has arisen among the produce merchants of Montreal, and which probably exists throughout the Dominion. I wrote to the Minister of Agriculture last night, whose department that matter particularly concerns. He was here this morning, and I suppose I may state the facts. In the early part of the spring the Canadian commission merchants and those employed by them who had business in England, when calling upon their clients there, were surprised to find that in many instances they had been forestalled by the visit of a gentleman named Bull. Mr. Bull had presented himself——

Mr. MACLEAN. Is his name John ?

Mr. MONK. It is not John Bull but Charles Bull. He presented the card which I hold in my hand and by which card he purported to represent 'The Chas. A. Bull, Produce Company, cable address, 'Chasab,' $50,000 subscribed capital,' and gave his address as Montreal, Canada. In presenting himself to the people in the commission business and those interested in the importation of produce from Canada he had a letter which, according to the testimony of one commission merchant of the city of Montreal, who was in England at that time —I speak of February, March and the early part of April—from the Secretary of the High Commissioner in England. Fifteen of these letters had been distributed among the commission merchants there and these letters, of which I have one here, were letters introducing Mr. Bull, written by Mr. Colmer, Secretary to the High Commissioner in England and written upon paper of the High Commissioner's office. I shall read this letter, which was addressed to the merchants and produce importers with whom Mr. Bull desired to establish business relations :

Dear Sir,—I am desired by the High Commissioner to give to the bearer, Mr. Charles A. Bull, this note of introduction to you, in the hope that you will be able to spare a few minutes conversation with him on a matter in which he is interested.

Mr. Bull, who is engaged in the export trade in Canadian produce, brought a letter of introduction to Lord Strathcona from Mr. Fisher, Dominion Minister of Agriculture, with whom he is acquainted.

The High Commissioner will be obliged if you will grant Mr. Bull an interview, and has much pleasure in commending him to your consideration.

I am, dear sir,
Yours faithfully,
J. G. COLMER,
Secretary.

The Canadian merchants having dealings with English merchants, as a rule, found themselves in some embarrassment, being confronted by this letter in most of the places where they went to. One of them took one of these letters and brought it to this country together with the card issued by Mr. Bull. It was represented to these gentlemen that Mr. Bull, although soliciting business for this new company and although having a letter from the High Commissioner's office upon the recommendation of the Dominion Minister of Agriculture, had very little experience in that line of business, and probably on this account the commission merchants lost less than they would have otherwise, because hon. members of this House know very well to what extent a gentleman going from Canada and holding a letter of recommendation in his hand from the High Commissioner, issued at the special request of the Minister of Agriculture—might be placed in a position of advantage. Those who are acquainted with the customs of the trade in England will easily imagine what amount of influence such a document would have given Mr. Bull. At that time Mr. Bull had no legally incorporated company, but there was a project on foot in this country for the formation of a company in which company I find that the brother of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), and I think, one of the employees of the Department of Agriculture were the principal promoters. I wrote the hon. Minister of Agriculture last night before I left the House a letter addressed to his department in which I told him I would bring this matter up. I do not know whether or not he received the letter.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not receive the letter.

Mr. MONK. Well, I wrote it. I can briefly state to the hon. minister the facts which I desire to call to his attention.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am quite ready to listen to the hon. gentleman, but I did not receive the letter.

Mr. MONK. I was stating that the complaint is one made by the produce merchants of the city of Montreal, and I have no doubt that the same complaint is made by some produce merchants outside of the city of Montreal. They complain that they were forestalled in the canvass for business in England during the early part of last spring by Mr. Bull who had a letter of introduction which I have read to the House.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. During the early part of last spring ?

Mr. MONK. During the early part of this last spring. Mr. Bull went among their clients in England armed with a letter issued by the Secretary of the High Commissioner. These letters were left together with a card of the Bull Produce Company at different places of business in England where these Montreal merchants were in the habit of doing business :

Dear Sir,—I am desired by the High Commissioner to give to the bearer, Mr. Charles A Bull, this note of introduction to you in the hope that you will be able to spare a few minutes conversation with him on a matter in which he is interested.

Mr. Bull, who is engaged in the export trade in Canadian produce, brought a letter of introduction to Lord Strathcona from Mr. Fisher, Dominion Minister of Agriculture, with whom he is acquainted.

The High Commissioner will be obliged if you will grant Mr. Bull an interview, and has much pleasure in commending him to your consideration.

I am, dear sir,
Yours faithfully,
J. G. COLMER,
Secretary.

At that time it is claimed that Mr. Bull represented, not a company, because there was no company then formed, but some parties interested in the export trade of Canadian produce, and that principal among these parties were the brother of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and an employee in the Department of Agriculture. I will quote to the House from the Quebec Official 'Gazette,' of the 10th of May, the present month, a notice to the parties seeking incorporation. At page 1,014 there is a notice of an application of some parties for incorporation under the name of the Charles A. Bull Produce Company, and in the sixth paragraph are given the names of the promoters of this produce company applying for incorporation.

Sixth. The names in full and the address and callings of the applicants are as follows :

Charles Irving Knight, of East Hatley, province of Quebec, general merchant ; Aaron Bull, of East Farnham, in the province of Quebec, gentleman ; Charles Albert Bull, of the city of Montreal, produce merchant ; Miss Annie Allison Horrigan, of the city of Portland, England, spinster ; Roswell Corse Fisher, of the city of Montreal, gentleman ; Horace H. Bailey, of the City of Ottawa, in the province of Ontario, clerk ; of which the first three are to be the first directors of the said company. All the said directors reside in Canada, and are subjects of His Majesty.

Now, it is claimed that of all these parties whose names I have given and who were on the 10th of May applying for incorporation, but who had not then obtained incorporation, the only responsible parties are Mr. Aaron Bull, who, I understand, is one of the chief supporters of my hon. friend in his constituency, Mr. Roswell Corse Fisher of Montreal, a brother of the hon. gentleman, and Mr. Horace Bailey, who, I am informed, is an employee in the Department of Agriculture. What the merchants of Montreal complain of is that the hon. Minister of Agriculture should have given this letter of introduction to Mr. Bull which enabled him to obtain from the High Commissioner in England a letter of introduction to each one of the importers, and which consequently placed the exporters of Montreal, who have been engaged in business for a long time and who have built up their business, in a handicapped position in regard to the promotion of their interests in England. It is claimed that in so acting the Minister of Agriculture went beyond the duties of his office ; that if he issued a letter in that way in favour of any one engaged in that line of business—which is a difficult business to build up and in which business some people have been engaged for many years—he should have given that letter, having an official character, to each one of those gentlemen or not given it to any one of them. One of these gentleman found letters of this kind in England in fifteen places where he was in the habit of doing business. They found that in the face of this letter of an official character coming from the High Commissioner upon the recommendation of the Minister of Agriculture, they were handicapped in obtaining orders. That is the complaint which they have made to me. It seems to me that it is a complaint well founded, and in pursuance of their desire I thought it my duty to bring it to the notice of the House.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. (Hon. Sydney Fisher.) I regret that I did not receive the letter of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) beforehand, so that I could have had with me a copy of the letter of introduction to the High Commissioner which I gave to Mr. Bull. I may say that it is quite a frequent occurrence that all persons engaged in Canadian business who are going to England ask for letters of introduction to the High Commissioner. Mr. Charles A. Bull asked me through a letter which I will show to the hon. gentleman for a letter of introduction to the High Commissioner. Having known Mr. Bull for a long time personally, although not connected with him in any business way, I gave him that letter of introduction. Mr. Bull appears to have presented the letter to the High Commissioner's office and to have received a letter from Mr. Colmer, secretary to the High Commissioner, introducing him to certain people with whom he wished to open business relations. Personally, I have always understood that it was one of the functions of our High Commissioner's office in London, to enable Canadians going to the old country to be introduced, when they were known, or when they had proper references, to people in England for business purposes. I have myself on frequent occasions given letters of introduction to the High Commissioner to people from different parts of Canada with whom I was personally acquainted, and I know that others who are acquainted with the High Commissioner have done the same thing. As far as the company which Mr. Bull represents is concerned, what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) has just read to the House is the first which I have ever heard of it. I do not know that Mr. Bull is forming such a company ; I did not know that my brother, Mr. Roswell C. Fisher, was concerned with it, nor do I know who else was concerned.

Mr. MONK. Might I ask if it is true that Mr. Horace Bailey is employed in the department ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is a Mr. Bailey who is one of the patent examiners in my department, appointed many years ago by the Tories, but I do not know if he is the same.

Mr. MONK. Horace H. Bailey.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. His name is H. Bailey, but I cannot say whether it is Horace or not. I now nothing more about that than I do about the incorporation of that company of which I have never heard in my life until the hon. gentleman read the notice of incorporation. Mr. Charles A. Bull is a young man who came from my own county a good many years ago and entered business in Montreal. He has been a produce dealer there, and has done a good deal of buying and selling of butter and cheese in Montreal. He informed me that he wished to open direct communication with the old country and it was for that purpose that he asked from me a letter of introduction to the High Commissioner, so that when he went to England he might have somebody to whom to refer. Mr. Aaron Bull, whose name is mentioned there, is one of the most respectable and substantial farmers of my county, a gentleman whom I could trust and rely on in every shape and way ; an old Quaker, if I may use the term, whose name is noted for integrity and substantial standing in the community in which he lives. Mr. Charles A. Bull is his son, and he is a young man who, as I say, went to Montreal some years ago to enter business, and who, as far as I know, has conducted himself in a proper and trustworthy way. He has been concerned in a business which has not met with the approval of all the produce dealers in Montreal, because he has been a rival of theirs, and has been working up a trade on somewhat different lines from the established lines of the butter and cheese associations of the city of Montretal. In that way he has incurred, if not the enmity, at all events the dislike, of those who have been long established in the trade. I do not know, however, that there is anything in his methods which are objectionable or to which exception can be taken. If there is I know not of it. I do not know, that because his business happens not to have been on the lines of the established houses there, that therefore it is necessarily bad or improper in any way. Not having received notice of this matter being brought up, I have not got with me a copy of the letter which I gave to Mr. Bull, nor a copy of his letter to me asking for that introduction. I believe that the letter which I gave him will not show in any way any improper relations between him and me, or any relations except those of courtesy to one whom I knew and who asked for a letter of introduction in going to England, which I was quite willing to give him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Or to anybody else.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Or to anybody else as my hon. friend says, and as I have given to many other people. I knew I could depend on him, and I considered myself justified and in fact bound to give him a letter of introduction to the High Commissioner. I do not know that I can say any more in regard to this matter and so far as my own family relations are concerned, I apparently gave that letter to Mr. Bull before he tried to form the company of which I now hear for the first time that my brother is one of the incorporators.

REVIEW OF THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the House very briefly, some facts in connection with the expenditure of this country during the present fiscal year, and also with regard to the proposed expenditure for the fiscal year which will end on the 30th of June, 1903. We have been accustomed during the past four or five years to a somewhat different nomenclature with regard to expenditure in this country, from that which prevailed during the years when the gentlemen on the treasury benches were in opposition. In those days, notably the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright), the present Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock), the premier himself—and the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson), was not far behind then—they preached throughout this country to the people of Canada that there was a reckless and extravagant expenditure on the part of the Conservative administration; an expenditure which it was said at that time reached the sum of about $36,000,000 a year on consolidated account.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Thirty-eight million dollars.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Minister of Trade and Commerce corrects me. He is more familiar with these figures than perhaps I am. Thirty-eight millions! I wonder if he has impressed upon him to the same extent the amount to which that figure has swelled at the present day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He remembers that it was $38,000,000 in these days because he preached it throughout this country; because he told the people of Canada so often that it was extravagant and scandalous. I wonder if the hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) has fully grasped the fact that during the present fiscal year the expenditure amounts to $51,000,000, and to this sum is to be added $14,250,000 on capital account, making a grand total of $65,250,000. Why, in days gone by the hon. gentleman would have shuddered at such an expenditure as he shuddered at the nepotism of days gone by. But these things do not shock him now at all. I remember when he said that a Conservative minister who happened to have some relative in the department was as fortunate as a bashaw with seven—no, three tails. Well, I do not really know with how many tails the hon. gentleman himself is now connected. I lost the count some time ago; but perhaps the hon. gentleman has that circumstance impressed on his mind as much as he has the fact that $38,000,000 was the highest expenditure during the time of the Conservative regime. In those days this was reckless and extravagant expenditure. Mr. Speaker, you know what it is now: it is merely generous appropriation. You have noticed that from listening to the debates in this House and from noticing the comments of the Liberal press in the country. Another curious circumstance has taken place. Formerly this money, which was wastefully and extravagantly expended, belonged to the people of this country. It consisted of taxes wrung from the people by an odious and scandalous system of taxation. But now, Sir, that has all ceased. These moneys now belong to this government, who in the goodness of their hearts are pleased to appropriate a portion towards the public services; and when the moneys in their possession are not sufficient for the purpose they are good enough to pledge the future of the country by borrowing large sums of money and adding to the public debt. And how delightful it is to know that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) grows more and more philosophical as the years roll by. In days gone by this condition of things would have stirred his blood; but now, Mr. Speaker, as you have observed during the past four or five years, he sits in his seat and views this wreck and ruin, as it would have been termed in days gone by, with the most charming philosophy and equanimity that has ever been exhibited by any public man in this country. How delightful it is that this change, this philosophic change, occurs in one as the years roll on, and how pleasing it is to be able to view an increase of taxation in the spirit which the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has been able to apply to what has taken place during the past four or five years. I am glad I am able to amuse that hon. gentleman at the present time—that the mere thought of the pleasant change that has come over the spirit of his dream affords him amusement, and that this extraordinary expenditure, instead of producing the result in my hon. friend which it would have produced fifteen years ago, is capable of giving him not simply the cheerfulness, but the merriment which we see him exhibit on all occasions in this House when this subject is referred to. It inspires us with delightful confidence in the sincerity of our public men in this country, particularly those now sitting on the government benches. We cannot help feeling inspired as to the future of this country when we know that public men can retain in this marked manner the opinions and sentiments of days gone by, and also view, as the hon. gentleman does, the increase of expenditure in the philosophic spirit which he has exhibited on all occasions in this House since his party came into power.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I have mentioned to you, an expenditure of $36,000,000 or $38,000,000 was three or four millions too much, according to the statements of not one merely, but three or four of these gentlemen when going through the country. But now an expenditure of $51,000,000 is quite within bounds. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, unless paired, will stand up in a few minutes and vote against the motion which I purpose to offer this House, and he will do it with that cheerful smile and that remarkable equanimity which he has exhibited to us on all occasions when this subject has been mentioned.

The net debt of this country was a subject that used to agitate my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce and my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) in days gone by. Well, we have had in Canada during the past four or five years a time of the most abundant prosperity. The revenues of the country have swelled to an enormous amount—to a figure undreamed of in days gone by. That prosperity has been shared in by this country with all the rest of the world, and notwithstanding the fact that we have had these abundant revenues, there has been no decrease of the public debt; but on the contrary, we have seen that debt increasing from year to year, and during the present year we have had the announcement of the hon. Minister of Finance that it will be increased by no less than $6,000,000. And our hon. friends opposite, particularly the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, regard that circumstance with a smiling cheerfulness which their utterances of former days would have in no wise led us to expect.

These hon. gentlemen were not satisfied with going up and down the country preaching this doctrine individually. They held a convention in 1893 and announced it as one of the planks of their platform. This plank has been referred to so often that I almost hesitate to mention it again. I am bound to say that it ought to be in a good state of preservation, because it has not been trodden on by hon. gentlemen opposite during the last four or five years, and I presume that it is a plank that is capable of sustaining these gentlemen once more when they get into opposition. They do not use it at all when in power, and therefore it will be in a very excellent state of preservation when they come again to use it, as I hope they will very soon, in opposition. The plank was this :

> We cannot but view with alarm the large increase of the public debt and of the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the governments that have been continuously in power since 1878, and we demand the strictest economy in the administration of the government of the country.

My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce could not but view with alarm the large increase of the public debt from 1878 to 1893, and his alarm was more than shared by my hon. friend the Postmaster General, my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) and by other prominent Liberal leaders, some of whom have departed from the political stage, and to whom I will not more particularly refer. Does my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce view with alarm the large increase of the public debt to-day ? Does my hon. friend the Minister of Customs view it with alarm ? Does my hon. friend the Postmaster General ? If so, Mr. Speaker, you will have observed, no doubt, that they have a remarkable faculty of concealing the alarm. They sit in their seats while these sums are being voted without any change of countenance, and without giving any outward and visible sign of that alarm and trepidation which no doubt they must feel in their hearts. They also viewed with alarm the 'large increase' in 'the controllable annual expenditure of the Dominion and the consequent undue taxation of the people under the governments that have been continuously in power since 1878.' Hon. gentlemen opposite lay a great deal of stress on the rate of taxation; but every one knows that a great many more millions are taken out of the people of this country every year than were ever taken by the Conservative administration. Do they view that fact with alarm ? No, they stand up in this House and justify it, because forsooth they say that the rate has been reduced a little. Let us look at just two or three incidents which attracted so much interest on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite in days gone by. The net debt of this country in 1896, when these hon. gentlemen came into power, was $258,427,431. In 1892, it was $241,131,431, or an increase of a little over $17,000,000. These gentlemen came into power in 1896, and in the fiscal year 1901 it had increased to $268,480,000. And the hon. Minister of Finance estimates that there will be a further increase of $6,000,000 in the present year—a very remarkable increase in the public debt considering the abundant and unexpected revenue which this country has enjoyed during the past six years.

Look at the taxes which are being taken out of the people at present as compared with former years. The receipts from taxes in each year of the last ten years have been as follows :

Total Receipts—From Taxes.

1893	29,321,367
1894	27,579,203
1895	25,446,199
1896	27,759,285
1897	28,648,626
1898	29,576,456
1899	34,958,069
1900	38,242,223
1901	38,743,550

I shall not go over all the items of the total revenue, but will merely give the amounts of the first and last of these ten years. In 1892 the total revenue was $36,921,871, and in 1901 it was $52,516,332. And my hon. friend the Finance Minister estimates that the revenue for the current year of 1902 will be no less than $56,800,000. Yet notwithstanding that fact, $6,000,000 will be added to the public debt.

Yet these figures, which would have aroused the attention of my hon. friends on the other side in days gone by, are regarded by them as matters of mere routine, as matters of course, under the present regime, and as matters which entitle this government to the gratitude of the country.

Look at the total expenditures during the past ten years :

1892	$42,272,136
1893	40,853,728
1894	43,008,234
1895	42,872,338
1896	41,702,383
1897	42,572,756
1898	45,334,281
1899	51,542,635
1900	52,717,467
1901	57,982,866

And according to the estimate of the hon. Minister of Finance, the expenditures during 1902 will reach no less a sum than $65,- 250,000, or an increase of nearly $8,000,000 over the expenditure during the past year.

If we look at the expenditure on consolidated revenue account alone, the record is almost as bad:

1892....	$36,765,894
1893....	36,814,053
1894....	37,585,025
1895....	38,132,005
1896....	36,949,142
1897, the first year of this economical government.	38,349,760
1898..	38,832,526
1899....	41,903,500
1900....	42,975,280
1901....	46,886,368

Or an increase of nearly $4,000,000 in one year. And for 1902 the Minister of Finance estimates $51,000,000, or an increase of more than $4,000,000 in one single bound. From 1900 to 1902 the increase in the expenditure of this country, chargeable to consolidated fund, is between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000. Yet my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce does not whisper above his breath on this subject.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. He has nothing to say now about the farmers being bled white.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am reminded of a favourite expression used by these hon. gentlemen in days gone by. The farmers, they were wont to say were being bled white. Of what colour would my hon. friend regard the farmers at present?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. They never were as prosperous in their lives as during the last four years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Owing no doubt to this extra expenditure of from $8,000,000 to $9,000,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Very largely.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I presume then that as we cannot have too much of a good thing we will have another increase in expenditure of $8,000,000 next year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We expect to see it before we go out of office.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). By a judicious application of that principle the farmers of this country will eventually reach the highest stage of prosperity.

I would like to refer for a moment to some items which we are passing from year to year and to the manner in which the public money is being expended. Take, for example, the construction of the telegraph lines in the Yukon, under the administration of the hon. Minister of Public Works. Look at the expenditure on cigars and various drinkables which were necessary for the due and proper construction and maintenance of that line, and observe the efforts which the watch dog of the treasury, the Minister of Finance, made to prevent any unnecessary inquiry into these expenditures. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance is supposed to be the watch dog of the treasury. He reminds me very much of a watch dog spoken of by an American humorist. The burglars seemed frequent in the neighbourhood of this gentleman, and he procured a dog for the purpose of preventing any undue abstraction of his goods and chattels. A burglar did arrive while the watch dog was there. The faithful and intelligent animal fraternized with the burglar and immediately seized by the throat a policeman who arrived shortly afterwards to arrest the burglar. The attitude of the Minister of Finance, when we were pursuing our inquiries in the Public Accounts Committee into the expenditure, seemed to me very much like that of this watch dog. He fraternized with the gentlemen who were making raids on the treasury benches, but was hot and eager to seize by the throat any gentleman who was prepared to make any criticism or inquiry.

Look at the moneys which were voted by this parliament for public buildings in the Yukon and at the mode in which some of those moneys was expended. Officials were provided in that country, not only with a salary but a very ample living allowance as well, in some cases ranging to $3,000, and possibly more, and we found, when we went into the public accounts, that money voted for public buildings in the Yukon had been applied in paying the living expenses of these gentlemen in addition to the salary and living allowance voted them by parliament. When we inquired into this extraordinary condition, the hon. Minister of Public Works simply shrugged his shoulders and washed his hands of the whole business. He said that he was ordered to pay the money by the Minister of Justice, and when we inquired about it from the Minister of Justice that hon. gentleman also disclaimed responsibility by saying that at the time he was not in office. There was not one member of the administration who could give us the slightest information or justification for this expenditure of public money.

Look at the expenditure on the Gallops Rapids. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has an item of $50,000 in his estimates for expenditure on these rapids. Consider the position of affairs there. We are told that the Auditor General, or some official of this government who had a due regard for the public service, gave notice to certain contractors that the vote had lapsed on the 30th June last. Notwithstanding that, we have the Minister of Railways and Canals admitting, as he was forced to admit by cross-examination by hon. members on this side, that the work has been going on there to the extent of a great many thousands of dollars during the past year. We were not able to ascertain by whose direction or to what extent that work had gone on. The only information we were able to get from the Minister of Railways and Canals was that he and his department knew nothing about it, but that the contractors came down here during the present year and presented their bill for a good many thousands of dollars, which they desired this government to pay. It was said that if the government had not ordered this work it would not be paid for. But it transpired a little later on that officers of the government had been in charge of the work, and yet we could not fasten responsibility for the expenditure of this money upon any member of the government. That is the information we have up to the present time. Perhaps we shall have further information before the prorogation of this House. And not only that, but we were assured by an hon. gentleman on this side who professed to know whereof he spoke that the work was not only useless but detrimental because it impeded the course of steamships up and down that canal. Then look at the Intercolonial Railway—contracts let without tender to the extent of twenty or thirty miles of road on the ground that ten miles of the same line had been let at the same figure after public call for tender. Look at the expenditure of public money in the county of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance—and I am not referring to this specially because it is in his own county, but as an illustration of the methods of hon. gentlemen opposite. Consider the matter that I brought to the attention of the House this year, where a canal was cut from the sea to a lake, for the ostensible purpose of creating a harbour for fishermen. But when the canal was cut, it was found that the bottom of the lake was higher than the sea-level, and the only result of the work was that the lake was drained into the sea.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The only way in which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has brought this to the notice of the House is by quoting an anonymous letter. But has never ventured, either before the Public Accounts Committee or in any other way, to enter upon an investigation of any of the cases he referred to. In fact, he has shown by his own action that he has not the slightest faith in the statements that have been made to him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. Minister of Finance deny that what I have stated is correct ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know. And that is just the difference between the hon. gentleman and me. I do not know and I acknowledge that I do not know ; he does not know, but he does not acknowledge it. But, when he brought the matter up in the House he would not give the name of his informant. If the hon. gentleman had investigated, the engineers would have been present.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). 'If the hon. gentleman had investigated !' Here is the watchdog of the treasury, and when I challenge him to deny the truth of the representations made to me not by one or two but by half a dozen responsible men, the only answer he is able to make, this watchdog of the treasury, is that he does not know.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I say that this is an engineering matter. The engineers know the facts, but they have been carefully not brought before the committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister does not know. And yet these engineers are officers of his government, and he could easily have informed himself upon the subject. And I know the hon. gentleman well enough to understand that if the facts had been otherwise than as I have stated them, public inquiry would have been made and the facts would have been heralded abroad.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Will my hon. friend permit me to interrupt him ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Certainly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I can state on the authority of the Minister of Public Works, whose engineers has made inquiries, that the statements were unfounded in nine points out the ten in relation to the works he referred to in Shelburne county.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am talking of one particular work, and the hon. gentleman will not get out of it by trying to distract attention to works in other parts of the county.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What work is it ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The lake to which I have referred.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have made the statement on the authority of the engineer. I do not separate one from the other of the statements——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot even tell the hon. gentleman at this particular moment where the lake is to which he referred. But I state that if he desires an investigation even now, we will take that investigation. Let the engineers be summoned and it will be shown that the hon. gentleman is entirely misinformed. And, let the House bear in mind that he has never to this moment given the name of his informant.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman is somewhat annoyed about this——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Oh, no, I am not.

Mr. SPROULE. He may well be.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). Anonymous letters hurt nobody.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not wonder at the hon. gentleman being annoyed. And his friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) is coming to his assistance by talking about anonymous letters. Why, there ought to be a motion to strike out the hon. gentleman's salary because of the scandalous attack that he made upon census enumerators without giving them the slightest opportunity to make any explanation or to say a word in their own defence. Yet this is the gentleman who talks about anonymous letters. I think that if any member of the government is to come to the assistance of the Minister of Finance with regard to a matter of this kind, it had better be some one else than the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Now, Sir, I have made this statement about the lake, and have made it, as I say, on the authority of information furnished me not by one or two, but by half a dozen responsible men.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Give us the names.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And I have brought the matter to the attention of the Minister of Finance and to the attention of the Minister of Public Works. If the statements made to me are not correct some authoritative denial should have been made with regard to them long before this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have never had any charge ; no names have been given.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman is always very anxious for names and for obvious purposes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, for obvious purposes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The point in all this, however, is not who gave me the information ; the real point in the interest of this country is whether the information given to me is correct or incorrect.

Further than that, I point out that the expenditure of public money, in many respects, does not proceed upon systematic lines or upon any principle whatever. We have brought down to us in the closing days of this session supplementary estimates of large volume. At two or three in the morning, with twenty or twenty-five men in this House, with three cabinet ministers, two of them asleep and the other putting through his estimates, we have been voting here hundreds and thousands, and hundreds of thousands—aye, even millions of dollars for expenditures as to which we could not pretend at this stage of the session without undue waste of time to get any information from the government. We have no less than 258 items in the supplementary estimates relating to rivers and harbours alone, items covering thousands of miles of this country, items concerning which it is utterly impossible for us at this time to gain accurate and necessary information. We have been obliged to allow these items to go through without the information which we should have. And we throw upon this government, as we have a right to do, the responsibility for the expenditure of this money without giving any further information here than that which is afforded.

Criticism has been offered as to the duty of the opposition with regard to items of this kind. It has been said by hon. gentlemen on the other side, and also by the press which supports them, that the opposition, if they object to this enormous expenditure should move to strike out items that they do not approve of.

Well, the record of hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to that indicates that in making this assertion they are departing as far from the principles which they professed in the past as they have in a great many other respects. In 1879, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce proposed to make a reduction of $70,000 in the expenditure for civil government. In 1881, they moved no resolution against the expenditure. In 1882 they moved for a reduction of $8,000; in 1883, no resolution was moved; in 1884, no resolution; in 1885, no resolution; in 1886, no resolution; in 1887, no resolution; in 1888, no resolution. The House will bear in mind that during all these years my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce was going through this country clamouring against what he called the extravagant expenditure of the Conservative administration of that time. In 1889 the present Minister of Trade and Commerce moved that the vote for Manitoba penitentiaries be reduced by $10,526. In the same year Mr. McMullen, the present Senator McMullen, moved that the vote for East Pictou river improvements be reduced by $500. In the same year Sir Louis Davies, a late member of this government, moved that the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway be reduced by $200,000, and gave as his reason the fact that coal was being carried from Springhill mine at less than cost. In the same year the present Minister of Trade and Commerce moved that a vote for the Department of the Interior be reduced by $95,748. In the same year—this was a very active year with regard to motions for reduction of expenditure—Mr. Somerville moved that a vote of $195,135 be reduced by $50,000, because Mr. Henry Smith, who was formerly a member of the House, and Mr. W. A. Webster, who was immigration agent, had not furnished correct dates for their services. In the same year Mr. McMullen moved that the salary of C. C. Chipman be reduced by $2,300, or left out. In 1890 no resolution was moved, nor was any moved in 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895 and 1896. During every one of these years the cry went up from hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly from the hon. gentlemen to whom I have previously referred, that the expenditure of this country was scandalous and extravagant.

Now, where an opposition are not able to get, within a reasonable time, and without unduly protracting the session, information which would enable them to discriminate between hundreds of items brought down to this House, when they are unable to get information which would put them in the same position for forming an opinion that the government are in, the proper duty for an opposition is to protest against excessive expenditure, to throw upon the government the responsibility of making it, knowing as they do that the government have within their power the means of reducing that expenditure by eliminating from it items which are less worthy of public appropriation than those which are necessary to be made. That is the view which has been put forward in the English House of Commons as a sound principle, that an opposition in protesting, as we have protested, against undue expenditure, have discharged their duty without dealing in detail with the particular items of the expenditure brought down by the government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to go over these facts in greater detail, as they have been discussed, not only in the country but in this House for a long time. I say we must bear in mind in this country that we are passing through an era of great prosperity, which the Minister of Finance himself has, on more than one occasion, admitted cannot be expected to last indefinitely. I say that in that period of prosperity we are setting a measure of expenditure which we will find it hard to reduce when the lean years come in the future. I say that in doing that we are not acting wisely. To expend every dollar of the public revenue during the abundant years, to go into debt in the extravagant manner in which this government has proceeded to lay burdens upon the country, is not a wise or judicious course. We should look to the future, we should measure our expenditure by the fact that the abundant revenues we now possess cannot always be expected to continue. In view of the facts and figures which I have brought to the attention of the House, I move in amendment to this motion, that you do not now leave the Chair, but that all the words after the word 'that' in the motion be left out, and the following be substituted therefore :

The total expenditure during each fiscal year from 1892 to 1901, both inclusive, was as follows :

1893	40,853,728
1894	43,008,834
1895	42,872,338
1896	41,702,383
1897	42,972,756
1898	45,334,281
1899	51,542,635
1900	52,717,467
1901	57,982,866

That the Finance Minister estimates that the total expenditure for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1902, will be $65,250,000.

That the annual expenditure on both consolidated revenue and capital account has increased between 1897 and 1901 by no less a sum than $15,010,110.

That during the period above mentioned the revenues of the country have been unusually large and the government claim a total net surplus of $19,743,527.69 but no portion thereof has been applied in reduction of the public debt which with the addition estimated by the Finance Minister for the ensuing fiscal year will have increased from $258,497,432.77, in 1896 to $274,480,000, in 1902, an increase of more than sixteen millions of dollars.

That the Minister of Finance estimates that the total revenue for the year ending 30th June, 1902, will be $56,800,000.

That notwithstanding this very large revenue the Minister of Finance estimates that the public debt will be increased during the year about $6,000,000.

That this House desires to place on record the opinion that the expenditure for the year ending June 30th, 1902, and the proposed expenditure for the year ending June 30th, 1903, are excessive and extravagant and regrets that the government with the exceptionally large revenues at its command has not only failed to reduce but has largely increased the public debt and has incurred capital expenditure for which the country does not receive and cannot expect any adequate return.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, before offering the few observations which I think may be called for upon the general question of the expenditure of the country, permit me to say a word or two regarding what I cannot help characterizing as a most extraordinary action of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) in reference to certain public works in my own constituency. If I refer to them particularly it is because he has referred to them particularly, and there is the further reason that the manner in which he has treated these expenditures made by the government may be taken, I suppose, as a good indication of the degree of fairness and of consideration which he applies to public questions of that character. At a comparatively early stage of the session my hon. friend read a list of a number of works in the counties of Shelburne and Queen's which I have the honour to represent and he charged in general, vague and indefinite terms, but still charged very emphatically, that there had been wrong-doing in some way. It was charged that the works were badly constructed, that they were extravagantly constructed or corruptly managed. The precise meaning of what the hon. gentleman wished to convey was not easy to determine, but that he did desire to convey the impression that there had been corruption, mismanagement and extravagance in connection with these different public works is beyond all question. What are the circumstances under which the hon. gentleman brought these matters to the attention of the House ? He began by saying, and that was to his credit, that he knew nothing about them. If the hon. gentleman had stopped at that, and, knowing nothing about them, had said nothing about them, he would have pursued a course far more creditable to himself and far more in keeping with the good order of our discussions in this House. I grant that an hon. gentleman at times may be obliged to refer to some things of which he knows nothing himself, but if he knows nothing himself he is obliged in all fairness to give the authority of the man who says he does know ; but here the hon. gentleman, on the strength of an anonymous letter, undertakes at the end of the session to make statements that are as slanderous as they possibly can be about these works, without the shadow of an attempt to prove the statements he has made. It was the hon. gentleman's duty, if he believed the statements which he made on the strength of an anonymous letter, to go before the Public Accounts Committee, to call the officials concerned, to bring up the public accounts, to call the Auditor General, to call the engineer who had to do with these things, and to have an intelligent and fair investigation into this matter. Not one of these things has the hon. gentleman done, but he hopes some one may believe, precisely what it is difficult to determine, but at all events that there is some wrong in connection with these works. The hon. gentleman will see that he has pursued a course that is in the highest degree discreditable to himself and unfair to every man connected with these works. It is unfair in a sense to myself, but that is a small part of the matter, because the hon. gentleman does not imagine, I suppose, that I actually did the work down there ; but it is unfair to the people connected with the work, it is unfair to the engineers, it is unfair to the faithful servants of the government for an hon. gentleman, and especially for one occupying the high position of this hon. gentleman as leader of a party, to stand up, and, on the faith of an anonymous letter, make these statements, as he has made them, and then leave the matter there and fail to pursue any inquiry before the Public Accounts Committee or some other tribunal. I say that he is chargeable from his own point of view and that his party has a right to charge him with a great wrong in this matter. If he had information that there was wrong-doing then, it was his duty to probe the matter to the bottom. I will give the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) the credit of saying that in several matters in regard to which they have wished more information, and in which they have thought there was some wrong-doing, they went to the Public Accounts Committee, they called up the Auditor General, they brought the public accounts, they summoned witnesses, they made some attempt to get information upon the point, and the men who were accused had a chance of appearing before the Public Accounts Committee. But, the hon. gentleman has not pursued that course. He has made these statements on the strength of an anonymous letter, he has not gone before the Public Accounts Committee, he has not asked for the Auditor General, he has not asked for a copy of the accounts, he has not summoned a witness, he has been content to make these statements, unjust, ungenerous, untrue ; I characterize them as such. He has been content to repeat these statements, admitting that he knows nothing himself and shrinking from giving us the name of any man who will verify these statements, and now, having been content to make these statements, he is about to go away and leave the matter in that condition. I think I have a right to complain and I do. The House has a right to complain, the public have a right to complain, because, if the hon. gentleman knew that there was wrong-doing, or believed that there was wrong-doing, it was his duty to probe the matter and in failing to do that, he has failed to discharge one of his duties as leader of the opposition.

As to the general question, my hon. friend will probably admit that he has not added very much which is new to the subject in the debate to-day. He has travelled over the same ground that he travelled a year ago, over the same ground that his predecessor travelled for several years, and over precisely the same ground that the former Minister of Finance on the eve of the last general elections travelled. He has made a number of general charges of extravagance and I am inclined to think that the country will take about as much stock in the hon. gentleman's assertions in that line as the country has taken on previous occasions, of which the constitution and membership of the House are the best evidence. But the hon. gentleman, if we were to take his criticisms as being serious, would have us understand that the conditions of Canada are the same to-day as the conditions were in 1896. He would have us understand that it is a fair thing to make comparisons between the expenditure of that day and the expenditure of this day, utterly ignoring the fact that a great change has come over the condition of the country. To use a common phrase it has been a growing time. It is not only a growing time in the affairs of the government but it is a growing time in the affairs of every great enterprise in Canada as well. Every railway, every great corporation, nay, every business firm in Canada which is carrying on more business is spending more money than in 1896, and according to my hon. friend's logic, because it is spending more money than in 1896 it is therefore on the verge of financial ruin. In government affairs and in individual affairs as well a large expenditure may not be an indication of extravagance, it may be an indication of wise administration, it may be an indication of far seeing ability, it may be an indication of the ability of the merchant, or the ability of the government. By providing for a larger expenditure it may be that you are providing means whereby the individual or the government will be more prosperous than they were with a lower expenditure. The conditions of Canada have changed. The hon. gentleman takes our aggregate expenditure and he makes no explanation as to what that expenditure represents. Take for instance the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway. We have spent a great deal of money on the operation of the railway—I will leave out of consideration for a moment the capital account. We have spent a great deal more on the operation of the Intercolonial Railway than our predecessors spent. Therefore, the hon. gentleman says that we are extravagant. But on the other hand the Intercolonial Railway receipts are much larger than they were. Before we took office they were $3,000,000 and to-day the Intercolonial Railway receipts are $5,500,000. Yet, the hon. gentleman would have us understand that the increasing expenditure is an evidence of extravagance. Take if you will the Post Office Department. We are spending a great deal more money on the postal service of the country than we spent before, but what do the returns show ? In 1896 the net revenue of the Post Office Department was $3,200,000, and the revenue for the current year is estimated at $3,800,000. In both these cases the increased expenditure does not represent an increase of one cent on the burdens of the country, but it does represent greater facilities for carrying on the business of the country. The increased expenditure in the Railway Department and in the Post Office Department is something which the government need not be ashamed of, because it marks the growth of the progress and business of the country and the increased facilities which are provided for the people. Take the Yukon. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) gives us the total expenditure of the year, and he compares with the expenditures of 1896, but he forgot to tell us that there was practically no Yukon in 1896. We know that one or two officers of the government had gone in there in the earlier years, but up to the time that this government came into power the Yukon was practically an undiscovered country. It was only under the administration of the present government that the great development of that territory took place. Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us of the total expenditure but they fail to tell that for every dollar that has been spent in the Yukon we have got a dollar back, and more. Therefore, the increased expenditure in that direction is not an indication of extravagance, but it is one of the indications of the development of the country which has come to this Dominion during the past few years.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the increased expenditure in the Yukon since 1896 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was practically no expenditure in the Yukon in 1896.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the expenditure now ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not the figures at hand, but it is only in the year 1897 that the great discoveries were made in the Yukon, and that the Yukon began to be known. It is only since this present government came into power that there was a rush of people from all parts of the world into that country, and that this government had to assume the administration of the Yukon. We had to administer that country far away from railways and telegraph lines, and in the face of all that has been said, I say that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior has reason to be proud of the splendid development of that country under his administration. So far as the working expenses on the Intercolonial Railway are concerned, that road is at least in a better position to-day than it was before. It is less of a burden to the country—if it is a burden at all—than it was before. Its receipts are increasing so rapidly that it will practically pay for itself. I will refer to the capital expenditure later. Then the Post Office Department; that is not only not a greater burden, but it is a greater blessing to the people of Canada than it was ever before. Under a lower rate of postage we are getting a larger revenue, and for a less rate of taxation the people of Canada are getting greater accommodation than ever in the history of Canada. If you deduct from the total expenditures, the expenditure on the Post Office, on the Intercolonial Railway, on the Yukon ; these three revenue producing departments, you will find that in all that remains the increase in the expenditure of the country has been very moderate indeed, and that there is nothing like the increase that the hon. gentleman ((Mr. Borden, Halifax) represents. He can only make out his case by adding the increase on the Yukon and the increase on the Intercolonial Railway, which perhaps during the current year will pay its own way and even though there was a loss last year it was in a better position than in the time of the Conservative government. However, if you take out these items of expenditure, as I say, the aggregate increase remaining will be found to be a very moderate amount indeed. I have already said that it has been a growing time; a time of great progress and advance in Canada. Let us take a rough indication to prove that. I repeat what I said on a former ocacsion, that if one wants a rough illustration of the progress of the country it would be a fair thing to compare the expenditures with the total trade of the country. Roughly, the total trade of the country is a measure of the development of the country, and if you take for a rough calculation your expenditure in comparison with the total trade you get some reasonable measure—I do not claim that it is exact—but you get some fair proportion; certainly a much fairer statement of the accounts than was presented by my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax). Now, what do I find ? I find that in 1895 the consolidated fund expenditure of Canada—leaving out the capital—represented within a fraction of 17 per cent of the value of our total trade; while last year the consolidated fund expenditure of Canada represented only 12 per cent of the total trade of the country. Now, let us add both capital and income together, and take the total disbursements of Canada. In the year 1895 the total disbursements of Canada of all kinds—capital, revenue, &c.—represented 19½ per cent of the total trade of the country, while last year it represented 14·9 per cent, or a fraction under 15 per cent as compared with 19½ per cent in 1895. I do not present these figures as giving any exact measurement of the expenditure of the country, but roughly stated the total trade of the country is a fair indication of the general development of the business of the country, and when we show that the increased expenditure has only kept pace, or less than kept pace, with the development of the trade in the country, then I think we have a very fair and very satisfactory answer to make to the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bordon, Halifax).

My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) talks of the public debt. He says we have increased the debt. Again, I say that we must have regard to the increasing population, and to the increasing business of the country, and taking these into account we need not fear a comparison on this question of the debt. I have on another occasion given a statement showing the increase of the net debt from the year 1896 to the year 1901. That statement is contained in the budget speech, page 1341 of 'Hansard,' and it may be useful to quote it again :

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

Net debt 30th June, 1901	$268,480,003 69
" " 1900	265,493,806 89
Increase in debt in 1900-1	2,986,196 80

	Net Debt.	Increase in Debt.	Decrease in Debt.
	$ cts.	$ cts.	$ cts
1896	258,497,432 77	5,422,505 68
1897	261,538,596 46	3,041,163 69
1898	263,956,398 91	2,417,802 45
1899	266,273,446 60	2,317,047 69
1900	265,493,806 89		779,639 71
1901	268,480,003 69	2,986,196 80
Total for five years		10,762,210 63	779,639 71
		779,639 71
Net increase 5 years		9,982,570 92
Average increase 5 years		1,996,514 18
Average of 18 years from 1878 to 1896		6,563,075 00

The total increase in the net debt of Canada in our five years of administration was $10,762,210.63, less one year of decrease, $779,639.71, showing that the increase in the public debt under the administration of this government was $9,982,570.92, or an average of $1,996,514 per annum, as against an average for the whole eighteen years of the Conservative government of $6,563,075 per annum. Does my hon. friend imagine that in the face of a statement like that he is going to satisfy this country that in the matter of the public debt the government of the day need fear comparison with their predecessors ?

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman think that it is a fair comparison to take the increase of the public debt during the eighteen years of the Conservative administration ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Why not? Most certainly it is fair. I cannot understand what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) means when he asks if it is fair. It is the statement in the public accounts. They are exactly the same figures that hon. gentlemen opposite take when making a comparison, but the difference is, that I present the figures fairly, and my hon. friends opposite do not.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That includes the assumption of the debts of the different provinces, does it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It includes the statements as shown in the public accounts. If you assume a debt of a province, and have to pay interest on it, your expenditure is increased by so much; and what difference does it make ? I am not going into a discussion of what this increase of debt was for. A great deal of it was for the graving docks of Quebec. A considerable portion of it was for that interesting bridge at Montreal. A great deal of it was for purposes which, if I desired to investigate them to-day, might make a very interesting chapter in the history of our predecessors. But I am not dealing with that phase of the question at all. There are the figures; I need not discuss the purposes of the expenditures, whether they were good or bad. It is the increase of the debt we are discussing, and the public accounts show that during the 18 years of hon. gentlemen opposite they increased the net debt of this country to the extent of $6,500,000 per annum, while during the 5 years of our administration, up to the 30th of June last, our increase of the debt was $1,900,000 per annum.

Let us view the matter in another way. My hon. friends like to make calculations per head in some cases, but you will observe that they have not done so in this case. We find that our increase of the debt has not exceeded the rate of increase in the population of the country. This is a fair mode of comparison. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs alluded to it some time ago, and I am only repeating his argument. In 1896, the last year of the late government, the net debt of the country was equal to $50.96 per head of the population, whereas the net debt last year, the debt which the hon. gentleman grieves about as so alarming to the country, which he holds up as such a bugaboo, was equal to $49.18 per head. In this we have but another evidence that, just as the expenditure of the country is only keeping pace with the reasonable growth and development of the country, so the moderate increase of the debt which we are showing is only keeping pace with the increased development and the increasing obligations and burdens which we have to undertake.

So we might go on through all the statements of the hon. gentleman and show that he is comparing conditions of former days with utterly unlike conditions which exist to-day. Will you tell me that the conditions in 1896, when our predecessors had a revenue on the Intercolonial Railway of $3,000,000, are the same as the conditions of to-day, when we have a revenue of $5,500,000 ?

Mr. BROCK. And spend it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend from Centre Toronto is very much worried over the expenditure; but I have never heard that when there were deficits on the Intercolonial Railway in the days of the hon. gentleman's friends, he stood up in Toronto and condemned them. My hon. friend was perfectly satisfied to have a deficit of three quarters of a million dollars under the Conservative administration, and to go and vote the old ticket, and say that the Conservative party was a party of economy; but when he finds us giving a better railway service, one of which the country may be proud, and he discovers that in one year there is a deficit in the operating of the road, the hon. gentleman suddenly discovers that the whole thing is wrong. My hon. friend is a most amiable and respected citizen of Toronto, but in the matter of politics he is about the blindest man in the House.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if perchance we admit for the sake of argument that this is an extravagant government, and that the country needs a government of economy, where are we going to find one ? From hon. gentlemen opposite ? What is the evidence of their economy ? What evidence have they given of it in past years ? Where is the evidence of it to-day ? Why, Sir, again and again we have been asked in this House by hon. gentlemen opposite to do what ? To spend less money ? No, to spend more money. Last year, when my hon. friend moved a resolution similar to this one, I was able to point across the House to an hon. gentleman who complained that we did not double track the Intercolonial Railway for a long distance. I could point to another hon. gentleman who complained that we did not go into larger expenditures in the North-west. I could point to another hon. gentleman, no less than the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who but a few days before had led a deputation to the government to demand that we should spend millions more on the improvement of the St. Lawrence. So I could go along the whole line and show that hon. gentlemen opposite, who talk about economy and who are going to vote for this resolution, have been urging on the government a more lavish expenditure. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier not only wanted greater expenditure on these things, but he complained because we had not appropriated a large sum to send a man to search for the North Pole. I will say in fairness to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier that he has been away lately in Ontario busily engaged in making speeches, not of the same kind that he made in the province of Quebec, and he perhaps did not know all that was going on in the House in his absence; and last night, the first time he got a chance, he demanded—what ? Economy ? No; but he called on the Minister of Public Works to spend more liberally on the approaches to the canal at Sault Ste. Marie.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $400,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And my hon. friend the Minister of Railways reminds me that on a previous occasion the hon. gentleman reproached him because he had not spent a large amount of money in establishing locomotive works at Moncton. My hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. MacLaren) is now in his seat, and I am glad to be able to remind him, as he is going to vote for this amendment, that only three days ago, in a very able address, to which all listened with great pleasure as coming from a gentleman familiar with our commercial affairs, he pointed to the fact that the United States government were spending hundreds of millions for the improvement of their waterways, and he declared that it was time that we set to work and did likewise.

I think I have said enough to show that if perchance this is an extravagant government, which I am not disposed to admit, then heaven help the country if it has to look to hon. gentlemen opposite for economy, when not one of them throughout this session has ever offered a proposal for economy unless the saving of a cent a gallon on a few gallons of oil. I venture to say that these things are understood in the country. The people understand that the conditions of Canada are not the same to-day as they were in 1896. The world has moved since then. Canada, as an hon. gentleman once said, before 1896, was living in a back street, and doing business in a back street; but in 1896, she moved up to the front, and since then she has been doing better business, she has plate glass windows, she has her sign up, and under the administration of this government the name of Canada is becoming known and honoured throughout the world. The country generally recognizes this fact. From east to west the story is told of how Canada has prospered under this administration. Go down to the sea, and you will find a great industrial development in the island of Cape Breton. But, say these gentlemen, it is our policy did that. No, Sir, it is not. They fiddled and faddled with their iron and steel bounties for ten years but never succeeded in building an industry which attracted much notice. It was only when this government took up the matter that the great development down there began, and that the great development in the steel industry began in Sault Ste. Marie. It was when we took steps to give a contract to that factory at Sault Ste. Marie to encourage them in turning out steel rails, that the towering buildings went up, and then these hon. gentlemen opposite quarreled with us because we gave that help. It was only under this government that the locomotive works at Kingston were restored to their old energy and activity. That was due to the aid given by this government, and hon. gentlemen opposite found fault with us for having given that aid. Go to the great west and what do you find? These gentlemen, who pride themselves so much on what they did for the North-west, managed to produce a condition of affairs there which culminated at one period in a great rebellion and which, in 1896, produced a high class stagnation. What has happened since? Under the administration of this government, which has not been disposed to shrink from expenditure when such expenditure was needed, every great industry in Canada has been spurred into activity, and out in the far west, instead of finding people hopeless and despondent, we find that not only are the people who were there before prosperous, contented and happy, but thousands are coming from all parts of the world, even from that favoured land to the south, and now we have a stream of immigration into that country such as has not been known for many years. East and west north and south, we see the indications that under the hand of this government, aye, the extravagant hand if you choose to call it so—but it is not extravagant because wise expenditure is the truest economy—east and west north and south you will find that, under the hand of this government, all the industries of Canada have been spurred into activity, Canada has prospered, and is filled to-day with the hope and belief that we have many years of prosperity still before us.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). I have listened with much interest to the statements of my hon. friend and leader (Mr. Borden, Halifax) and the answer of the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding). The hon. Minister of Finance commenced with a very fierce personal attack upon the leader of the opposition, an attack which was quite undeserved. The leader of the opposition spoke of certain works carried on in Nova Scotia, notably in Shelburne county. One of these works, he said, had been washed away, another was of no public utility, while another, designed to afford a harbour of refuge for fishing boats involved such bad engineering that the canal dug from the sea into a lake only served to drain the lake, as the bottom of it was higher than the sea level. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) did not make these statements upon his own authority, but upon the authority of reports in the neighbourhood and of what the hon. Minister of Finance is pleased to call anonymous letters. These statements were made in Committee of Supply, and the hon. member for Halifax had the right to give any authority he pleased and, the right, if he pleased, to withhold the names of his correspondents. Are the facts true? That is what the country is interested in knowing. The facts are known to the Department of the Minister of Public Works and the hon. Minister of Finance had only to ask the engineer to learn the truth or falsity of the statements made by the hon. leader of the opposition. But, the hon. Minister of Finance does not even take the trouble to deny these statements. Does he dare to say that the facts with regard to this ditch are not as given by the hon. leader of the opposition? He was challenged on this subject a couple of months ago; why, then, does not he produce the evidence? If the facts which are in possession of the department were made known to this House, and if they proved that the statements made were incorrect, no hon. gentleman would be more ready to acknowledge his mistake and make the amende honorable both to the House and to the Finance Minister than the leader of the opposition.

The Finance Minister gives a glowing account of the prosperity of this country, due, as he would have us infer, to the statesmanship of hon. gentlemen who are now in power. Can these hon. gentlemen point to one thing they have done, to one Act which they have put upon the statute-book that has contributed to the advancement or development of the country? That development is due to the legislation of the predecessors of these hon. gentlemen, to the national policy, to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to the building of the canals, to the bonusing of steel and iron works, and other Conservative measures. The hon. Minister of Finance takes credit for the opening of the locomotive works at Kingston and also for the development at Sault Ste. Marie. Why, I had an idea that I was the person who gave the first contract to Mr. Clergue at Sault Ste. Marie; that it was I who leased to him the water power when I was Minister of Railways and Canals; that I was the means of having that gentleman build up his enterprises there after he had been induced by the national policy to come to this country. I had some idea that if there was development in iron and steel works in the Dominion, it was due to the policy which was adopted by the Conservative government and was over and over again condemned by hon. gentlemen opposite. And what has become of the promises of these hon. gentlemen to establish a rule of economy? The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) has been taunted with having accused the Conservative government of extravagance and of over burdening the people with taxation and increasing enormously the public debt. Oh, but these are different times, these are the growing times; and that is the one poor justification that these hon. gentlemen can offer for increasing the total expenditure of the country—the capital expenditure on current revenue combined—from $42,000,000, as it was in the last year of our term of office, to $65,000,000 which the Minister of Finance proposes for next year. The hon. Minister of Finance makes a comparison to show that the amount of increase is not so very large after all. He asks us to deduct from the $65,000,000 of expenditure, the difference between the $3,500,000 which we estimated for the working of the Intercolonial Railway and the $5,000,000, which it costs now. That is perfectly right. That amount should be deducted—$1,500,000. And I will admit also that we should deduct the difference between the amount of revenue which we received from the post office in 1896, and the amount which they receive at the present day—$500,000. And I will admit further that the expenditure on the Yukon would also be deducted from this account. But make all these deductions, and you find that next year's expenditure will be nearly $20,000,000 greater than the expenditure during the last year of our term of office. What are we to think of public men, of statesmen, seeking the suffrages of the people with the promises of reduction in expenditure and in taxes, and, when they attain power falsifying every pledge they made, out-heroding Herod in their extravagance and corruption—even taking their own description of what used to exist—and also adopting the policy of their predecessors on every great public question? The hon. Minister of Finance makes a comparison between the debt of the country now and as it was when the Conservative government went out of power. The public debt has increased $10,000,000 since in 1896, and the Minister of Finance says he will have to increase it by $6,000,000 next year. This makes a total of $16,000,000 of increase. To make a comparison of the results of our policy and theirs in respect to public debt, the hon. minister takes the increase of indebtedness during the last eighteen years of Conservative administration. Does he think that is fair? He tells us he takes these figures from the public accounts. Yes; but would he charge to the Conservative government the $77,000,000 of provincial debts which were assumed by the Dominion at confederation? If not, then, why should he hold the Conservative government responsible for the $20,000,000 of provincial debts taken over by the Dominion under the Conservatives? Does not he know also that in his calculation he took in $10,000,000 expended for the purchase from the Canadian Pacific Railway of lands which had been given to them in consideration of their constructing the road, and that these lands were a quid pro quo for that increase of indebtedness? And does not he know that $62,000,000 of that debt represented an entirely abnormal expenditure, that upon the great work of the Canadian Pacific Railway? Leave out these three items of assumed provincial debt, expenditure in the repurchase of Canadian Pacific Railway lands, and expenditure on the Canadian Pacific Railway itself and the comparison will be favourable to us. He says that he took the accounts as he found them in the public accounts. Does he take the accounts as he found them in 1897 when he came into power, when, for the purpose of making a comparison between his administration and that of the Conservative government for two or three years previously, he falsified the accounts, shall I say? Not, perhaps, falsified them, but altered them to suit his purpose. The accounts are not the same as the hon. gentleman found them when he came into power. We took over the North Shore Railway from the Quebec government, and we were to give them an increased subsidy of so much a year, which was charged each year to the capital expenditure for the Dominion, but he capitalizes it and charges it in a lump sum against his predecessors for the purpose of justifying an expenditure for the several years, and making a comparison between his government and the Conservative government, on capital account, to the disadvantage of the latter.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is wrong. He capitalized it and forgot to put it in the accounts.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We did not capitalize it, and it did not appear in the accounts in any sense.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was capitalized by an Act of the Conservative government, and declared to be capital due to the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh yes, declared to be capital due to the province of Quebec. It may be so, but all that we required to do was to increase the subsidy and pay the interest to the province of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I deny it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And for the same reason, why does he not capitalize the amount of $140,000 which was given to the Grand Trunk Railway to secure an entrance for the Intercolonial Railway into the city of Montreal ? He could do it on the same grounds, because it is an annual amount.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend capitalized it. He was not content to let it stand as a subsidy, but by special Act he capitalized it and declared it was money due to the province of Quebec, which they are free to draw whenever they want to.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, free to draw, and they drew interest on it and it was so charged in the public accounts when we went out of power. And when the hon. gentleman came into power he changed the form of it in the accounts for no other purpose than to make an unfair comparison against the Conservative government. These are the facts of the case. The Conservative government can point with pride to the administration of their affairs for 18 years before the hon. gentlemen came to power. What public work of any utility have they started ? Have they done anything in reference to the great question of transportation in this country ? No, their revenues have been frittered away in lighthouses, in little wharfs around the coasts of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, 15 or 16 of them situated in the county of Shelbourne, as I understand. I may be wrong, but if I remember correctly it is 16.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The whole of them together did not cost as much as the Tay canal.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Tay canal was commenced and finished before the hon. gentleman was born, and the hon. gentleman does not know it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have been there myself. I am one of the few people who even went near it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. He has seen it, then, since it was finished ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes ; in 1832 the canal was commenced, and it was finished in 1834. It was built by Act of parliament of Canada. Under that Act the government had power to take it over from the corporation that built it. They took it from the corporation that built it and expended money to finish it. There is the same justification for the expenditure on the Tay canal that I have heard the hon. gentleman give himself. I remember well the support that he got from Mr. Somerville, the member for Brant. The justification was this : Large sums of money are being expended in different parts of the country, and it is hard that a section of country which does not benefit by these public works and yet contributes towards them, should not receive a quid pro quo. I well remember the arguments used in support of the minister who introduced the first item for the purpose of building the Tay canal, and I was gratified to hear the Minister of Finance, speaking in justification of that expenditure in the county of Shelburne using almost the same words. We agree upon that subject, that there should be a quid pro quo in some way or another in regard to expenditures.

But the hon. gentleman surely must be satisfied with the expenditure that is going on now in the maritime provinces. It is about enough to eat up the whole of his surplus since he got into power, $21,900,000—if you capitalize the amount that he has given to the Grand Trunk Railway at $4,660,000—has been expended in betterments on capital on the Intercolonial Railway. He has expended the whole surplus earnings of the Dominion in these prosperous times, not on his little wharfs, or lighthouses, or improvements in the different parts of his province, but all expended upon that work which we thought we had finished, and the capital account of which we had closed long ago ; the whole of that expenditure has been wasted on new locomotives and for certain other purposes on the Intercolonial Railway. Do the people of this country fully understand it ? Do they realize that the whole prosperity of the Dominion of Canada has been pitched in, has disappeared in what I declared before to be a useless expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway ? $22,000,000—who denies the figures ? Who dare contradict them to this House? I will give him item by item the whole expenditure on capital account, and the deficits on that road, and will show that the people of this country have expended the whole of their surplus revenue in these prosperous times, for what purpose ? Building up the Intercolonial Railway ? No, for the purpose of disgusting the people of this country with the management of the Intercolonial Railway, so that it may become in a short time a property for some company or another to take off our hands, when the country will be so sick of it that it will be glad to get rid of it. The hon. gentleman says : Look at the comparison between the management of that railway now and what it was under the Conservatives ; the management and the deficits in the later years under the Conservative government were as bad as they are under my management. Yes, if the same system of book-keeping is followed he can make a surplus.

The proper way to look at the expenditures and receipts on the Intercolonial Railway is to see what amount of money is expended upon it and what are the receipts. Never mind the capital account, never mind the sidings, never mind the new rails, the new locomotives, or anything of that kind ; ask only : What money do you put into it ? The money you put into that road, as I said before, since the hon. gentleman has been administering it, is $22,000,000, or within $10,000 of that figure, more than the receipts of that road. That money would have given us one of the best systems of transportation in the world, that money would have built the Georgian bay canal ; that money would have put the Canadian people in possession of the best system of transportation in the world. Yet the whole resources of the country must be frittered away for the purpose of enabling these hon. gentlemen to maintain themselves in power by extravagant expenditures. Where is the justification for the 200 or 300 little lighthouses that the hon. gentleman is building down in Nova Scotia, somewhere ? This is not a penitent session. If it were the last session, as the hon. gentleman said, and votes of this kind were perhaps for the purpose of catching the electors without any intention of spending the money it might be different, but two or three years will elapse before an election takes place and it means that this money shall be expended. As I stated before the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals are looking after their provinces well. I cannot congratulate the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), I cannot congratulate other members of the government when I see the enormous sums of money taken out of the coffers of this country and expended in the useless manner in which they are being expended in the maritime provinces. If confederation is going to exist, we intend to, and we shall have our share of the moneys which are being levied on the people of this country and expended upon works of utility and for the use of the Dominion in other particular provinces. It is not sufficient, as it is in France and other countries, that the sole and only object of portions of the Dominion should be to see how much they can get out of the Dominion treasury. This must be put an end to ; there must be a fair division of the funds of the people between the different provinces or there will be an end to confederation. This practice was not pursued in the past. We built the Intercolonial Railway. Of course, they contributed, they contributed a sum towards it. We said : You may have the use of that railway without the people of the country expecting to receive a cent for it for the purpose of carrying your grain and traffic. It is, to a certain extent, of mutual advantage, but we never contemplated that after the people of this country had been drawn upon to the extent of $62,000,000 or $70,000,000 for the purpose of constructing that road that there should be an additional expenditure taken out of the coffers of the country to the extent of between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 a year. This is not fair to the rest of the community. If the country is prosperous and growing, the revenue resulting from the growth should be distributed fairly between the people of the country. We have always looked with pride to the growth of the North-west Territories and we have always expected that we would get a return from the development of those territories and from British Columbia. We are willing to make an expenditure in excess of the amount that is received from that country for the development and building up of that magnificent heritage of ours ; knowing that in the shape of trade and in other ways we will indirectly get a return from the development of that country. Our expectations have been verified and we are getting that return, but, from this expenditure down on the sea coast we are receiving no benefit whatever. Where is the expenditure for the purpose of improving our waterways ? Why cannot we have a magnificent harbour in Montreal ? Why have we not terminal facilities provided ? Why has not the St. Lawrence been deepened from Montreal to the sea so as to enable large ships to come to Montreal ? The people in every part of the Dominion are all anxious that this port should be developed. We are anxious to secure a fast Atlantic service and every man in the Dominion would be willing to contribute his share towards that object. What have we done towards that ? Not a single thing. Nothing has been done in the way of improving our transportation, and notwithstanding the abnormal development of our trade, nothing has been done for the purpose of improving our waterways or harbours. The hon. Minister of Finance takes pride in the development of the country. Can he put his hand on a single work in this country which tends to the development of this country which did not have its initiation and commencement under the Conservative regime ? He cannot put his hand on a single work, and in that respect, instead of receiving any assistance from the hon. gentlemen who then were on this side of this House we had nothing but opposition to everything we undertook. We can point with pride to the past. We glory in the prosperity of the country at the present time, we hope the country will go on and prosper, but we expect from the administrators of the affairs of this country fair-play at least in the expenditure of the public money. We expect, instead of having the money frittered away in the manner in which it is being done from one end of the country to the other that there shall be some plan of transportation adopted and carried out, some project which will result in the development of our trans-Atlantic service and that there shall be something done to which the people of this country can point with hope and with pride. We have looked in vain for any such policy in the past from these hon. gentlemen. Their only object seems to be in each of the departments to get as much money as they possibly can to expend for the purpose of purchasing locomotives that cannot run over the road, for the purpose of putting down new rails on the road which was perfectly railed already, for the purpose, as the hon. Minister of Finance says, of taking the Dominion of Canada from a back street and putting it on a front street, so that all the nations can look at us and admire us. This expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway is a useless one. The idea of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals getting from his colleagues in a country like this the enormous sums which he has got for the purchase of larger locomotives to carry freight when he has the evidence of his own deputy to the effect that it would be impossible to carry this trade in competition with the roads that are at present in existence. When he purchased the Drummond County Railway he knew that he could not run these locomotives over it from Lévis to Montreal, he knew, or at least, he ought to have known, that the locomotives that were in existence on the Intercolonial Railway, that the road-bed and that the rails were sufficient and equal to the traffic, that they were in first class order ; yet, he gets from his colleagues authority for an expenditure of $23,000,000 and it is not ended yet, because, I expect to find out from him how much of the road is completed and how much it will take to bring it up to the standard he requires. He now requires $23,000,000, a sum which ought to have built and equipped the road from beginning to end. The expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway when the road was first constructed was in the neighbourhood of $27,000,000. Of course, it is a longer road now, but the means of building the road are cheaper now. The hon. gentleman, as the evidence produced before the Public Accounts Committee shows, purchased 1,300,000 ties when the normal requirements were 400,000 ties, instructing his tie inspector to take them over or to inspect them in the form that he took some others, or, in other words, to take everything that could possibly be supplied at the time of an election.

In view of an election, the number of workmen was largely increased in excess of the requirements of the road, and kept on to the present day; contracts were let to Mr. Clergue for steel rails two or three days before an election, and the contract with the Kingston Locomotive Works which the hon. gentleman brags about, was made almost on the day of the election. Of course, all this was not done for the purpose of debauching the constituencies, because has not the Minister of Railways and the member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) stated that there are no politics now on the Intercolonial Railway ? Well, with these facts staring us in the face no one will believe that statement. The Conservative government can point with pride to its record. The comparison made by the Minister of Finance with regard to the public debt is absolutely misleading, and no one knows it better than he does. He knows well that he should not charge against us the debts of the provinces which we assumed, nor the $10,000,000 cash which we paid for lands to the Canadian Pacific Railway, nor, if he was just, would he charge against us the $62,000,000 for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. However that may be, there is not one of these gentlemen over there who can explain how it is that in view of the solemn pledges they gave to the people when they were in opposition, they have largely increased the expenditure of this country even throwing out of the calculation the Intercolonial Railway, the Yukon, and the Post Office Department, as the Minister of Finance has asked us to do. Take these out, and even then let me hear the Finance Minister offer a justification for the enormous expenditure so much increased, in flagrant violation of the pledges of the Liberals before they obtained power.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). Mr. Speaker, I happen to be in a most desirable position to discuss this question. Up to the year 1891 I belonged to the Conservative party, and for 20 years in my life I had to defend large expenditures and increases of the public debt. The country was prosperous; we were going on with large works, we were developing Canada, and I think my defence was successful. The chances of war placed me on this side of the House, and I have to defend to-day a large expenditure of money and also an increase in the public debt. I have heard over and over again speeches which were pretty similar to that delivered to-day by the leader of the opposition. I have heard my hon. friends on this side of the House in times past predicting all sorts of disasters because the expenditure was so large. Will my hon. friend the leader of the opposition permit me to say, that he has made to-day what is essentially a party motion, but at the same time he has raised a great national issue. I do not ignore the existence in both political parties of a school which believes that we should not spend much money. I think I know this country as well as any other public man of my years, and I know that there is another school which I believe is in the great majority; a school which has confidence in the future of this country, and which is ready to make all necessary expenditure to develop the great national assets we possess. We are spending money. There is no doubt as to that. We are not spending too much money. I see on the opposite benches business men of first rank and standing, and they will not stand before any audience and declare that we must not spend even more money than we have spent in the past. I hope there are enough men in this House to rise above petty party questions on important occasions. We have to face to-day the competition on land and sea of our American friends. Large combinations of capital are monopolizing American railways and English and American steamship lines. Are we going to sit idly by and not do anything ?

Mr. BROCK. That is what you are doing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I say to the contrary.

Mr. BROCK. What have you done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will grapple with the question in a moment. We have not been idle. We have before us to-day the motion of the leader of the Conservative party asking us to pause because we are spending too much money, and my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock) tells me now that we are remaining idle and not spending enough

Mr. BROCK. What I say is that you are wasting the money that you are spending.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, that is a mere play on words. When I have taken my seat, I invite my hon. friend to show where we have wasted any money. I know that my hon. friends on the other side will assail the Intercolonial Railway policy of the government. My hon. friend the Minister of Railways will defend that part of the government policy. I am not the Minister of Railways and Canals, and it is not my duty to take charge of the department of one of my colleagues, but my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) is quite able to take care of himself. Speaking of the general policy of this government, I ask : Have we been idle ? We have this year a magnificent crop of over 100,000,000 bushels of grain in the North-west. We have not been able to carry that crop to the seaboard through Canadian channels because we were not sufficiently equipped to do so. We all recognize that. Now, Sir, our duty is to have a strong and progressive policy of equipment by land and by sea. I altogether share the view of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) when he says that the country expects that a fast Atlantic service will soon be established; and in connection with it we must have, as I have said before, a fleet of large carriers to take charge of our crops and trade. But, Sir, there is no government that may take charge of the affairs of this country that will not be obliged to spend more money even than we have spent. Why, Sir, our hon. friends opposite are afraid. The hon. leader of the opposition has invited us to shudder because the debt of this country has been increased during the last 6 years by about $10,000,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Sixteen million dollars.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, a private corporation, have just increased their indebtedness by $20,000,000. They have asked from parliament the power to increase their stock by $20,000,000, which means an expenditure of that much money and that much additional indebtedness. Why have they done so ? Because they have confidence in the future trade of this country. And why should a great country like this, full of resources, be afraid because we have been obliged in order to carry on large public works, to increase our indebtedness by the small sum of $10,000,000, when there are private corporations which have incurred a larger indebtedness than the Dominion of Canada itself ? One hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, an hon. member for Toronto, said a minute ago that we are wasting our money. I will not discuss the policy of the government with regard to the Intercolonial Railway. My hon. friend and colleague the Minister of Railways will deal with that part of our policy.

Leaving that aside, as it is not my business to take charge of it, of what waste of money are we guilty ? The hon. leader of the opposition has paid me a great compliment this afternoon, and I am very thankful to him for it. After years in this parliament, and after all the inquiries that have taken place in the Public Accounts Committee, he believes that he has been able to find out that one of my engineers has made a mistake, and that a little pond has emptied itself into the Atlantic ocean. Where is that pond ? I would like to find it. I pray somebody on the other side of the House to find it for me to-day.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It cannot be found.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals has invited me to place on the Table of the House the evidence that there is a pond, and that it has emptied itself into the sea. I hold in my hand the appropriation Bill of last year, and I invite my hon. friend the leader of the opposition to tell me where that pond is. I tell my hon. friend that there is no pond of that kind. Even if there were, even if one of my engineers had made a mistake, and had spent $500 or $1,000 in trying to build a harbour, we are not infallible in the Public Works Department, and I think my hon. friend might have spared me the trouble of looking for the pond. I am very much afraid that the effect of that pond on the Atlantic ocean will be just about as much as the effect of my hon. friend's speech on that point upon the country.

My hon. friend has also alluded to what he called a raid on the exchequer in connection with the construction of the Yukon telegraph line. There are a great many business men in this parliament, and I want to know who is the one among them who has never made a mistake in his life, or whose employees have never made a mistake? I would like to see his face. I have followed the proceedings of the Public Accounts Committee in regard to this matter, and what has been proven there is this: Mr. Charleson, who had charge of the construction of that line, had with him a gentleman of the name of Rochester. It was understood that he would act as a foreman of the work. After they had been two or three months on the work, Mr. Charleson, rightly or wrongly—imprudently, I grant—let a contract to Mr. Rochester for the supply of poles. After having heard my hon. friend, one would think that millions of dollars had been wasted, thrown into some pond or other. What are the facts? My department was paying $3 each for poles to a local Yukon company. Mr. Rochester, who was a man of great experience, having been brought up in the lumber trade, made an offer to Mr. Charleson to supply the poles for $2 each. Mr. Charleson accepted his offer, Mr. Rochester supplied the poles, 6,000 of them; these poles were received by a gentleman, a former employee of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Mr. Richardson who in his evidence last year declared that the poles had not cost too much. These are the facts of the case, and this is the famous raid that causes my hon. friend to invite us to shudder. Well, it will require a little more than that to make the country believe that we have administered their affairs in an unworthy manner.

My hon. friend has also referred to the fact that the government have paid the rents of the residences of the judges in the Yukon. Rightly or wrongly, when Mr. Justice Dugas and Mr. Justice Craig were invited to take up their residence at Dawson, it was understood and agreed that the government would supply them with residences. We did not erect residences, but we paid the rents of residences for them. These are the facts, rightly or wrongly; but again the amounts involved are very small. My hon. friend will permit me, I am sure, without my meaning to be in any way offensive, to say that this is peanut politics, and peanut politics has never carried any party into office. I remember very well when on the other side of the House, after the death of the great chieftain, whom I followed as long as he was in public life, when the Conservative party changed their policy and became small and mean—and they became small and mean because there was at their head a man who was not a broadminded man—they started these petty cries all over the country. I speak here in the presence of some of my former companions in arms, and I say that when the Conservative party started a small and narrow policy, they were defeated at the polls, as they will be again defeated if they do not change their ways. The country never takes any stock in reproaches like those levelled at us by the hon. leader of the opposition. I grant immediately that the policy we have adopted in regard to the Intercolonial Railway is worth discussing. It is a large question; we have spent a large amount of money upon it. The question is whether that expenditure was right or wrong. The government have thought it was right. The country will judge. All the other railways are spending to-day large sums of money in order to handle the freight which is increasing in quantity every day. We have followed the same course. We heard all sorts of rumours when the Public Accounts Committee was sitting, but no scandal has been proved. Let me mention that in passing. My hon. friends, both of them, reminded us that in former days the leaders on this side of the House promised to reduce the expenditure and debt of this country. My hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Ross), alluding to a speech of mine yesterday evening, said that, generally speaking, a minister should not be held responsible for any of his speeches other than those he would make at the Mansion house. No doubt my hon. friends on this side have said in former days that we were spending too much. But times have changed, circumstances have changed. Mr. Justin McCarthy, in his life of Mr. Gladstone, says in so many words that the public man who would attempt to be consistent all his life would simply be an ass. And I think that Mr. Justin McCarthy is perfectly right. I appeal to all men who have brains—I do not appeal to those who have none for I do not care what they may say—but I appeal to those who have a thinking of their own, and who are able to think.

Where is there amongst us the man who thinks to-day at fifty, fifty-five or forty-five years of age, what he thought when he was twenty or twenty-five years old ? Where is he ? There is not one among us. Our minds have undergone evolution, we have studied, we have learned, we have observed, we have moved in the world. Public men move as well as private individuals. This is a great country, and those who are in office are responsible for its development; and whatever may be the speeches delivered twenty years ago, this government is in office to administer the affairs of the country and make it prosper, and to make it prosper it is necessary that we should spend money—not waste money, but spend it judiciously. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock) said a moment ago that we had stood idle. In that my hon. friend was not accurate. He knows better. We have been going along at a high speed developing our waterways. There is no use in denying it. Let my hon. friend count the number, for instance, of new elevators on the great lakes. Let him count the number of harbours improved. Let him consider the large sums my department has spent in developing harbours and deepening our rivers and waterways. The hon. the ex-Minister of Railways said a moment ago that with the money spent on the Intercolonial Railway, we could have deepened and widened the St. Lawrence. Well, that work will be completed in a very short time. It is going on now.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I said it would build the Georgian Bay canal.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let me beg my hon. friend not to call that splendid French river a canal.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. A waterway.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let him say that the French river should have been improved. But public education has to be made as well as private education. Great public works have to be carried out gradually. This country is spending large sums on its railways and cannot do everything at once. My hon. friends say we are spending too much, and two minutes later they say that we should have spent more. They tell us that the French river should have been improved, and the Georgian Bay canal should have been built. Well, if the whole system of canalization of the Ottawa river were attempted to be carried out by this government or a private corporation, it would cost in the neighbourhood of $80,000,000. The country is not yet prepared to incur that expenditure, but when the country is more advanced, when we have a greater population, perhaps it will then be ready to take hold of that undertaking.

My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways has uttered words which, when he reads them in 'Hansard,' will appear to him as very imprudent indeed. He has said that unless we take care not to spend so much money in the maritime provinces, something wrong will happen. He has spoken of the disruption of confederation. Mr. Speaker, the people of this country are masters of the situation. Should they find we are spending too much on the Intercolonial Railway, they will say so. They will not destroy that magnificent fabric of confederation. I hope that there is not in this country a public man who would destroy it because an unwise expenditure of money should happen to have been made. Even if we should make an unwise expenditure, let us not speak in such a manner. We are old men. We may not take for granted everything that is said here, but there are in this country people who are not as old as we, and who perhaps might interpret in a serious way words of that character. Let us not speak of destroying confederation. We are a very happy people. We have only to stand by our country and strive to understand each other as well as we can, and we have a great future before us. There is no reason for destroying anything, but there may be reason for improvement. There is always room for improvement. Let us go on and improve.

I do not see that there is much more to be added by me. A moment ago I alluded to the inquiries that have taken place in the Public Accounts Committee. The officers of a great department are no more infallible than are any other employees, either of a bank or a commercial firm. My own employees may make mistakes. I have made mistakes myself. I know that some of my hon. friends have tried very hard to prove that in the purchase of certain things for the quarantine station, we paid too much. Perhaps we did. I do not deny that on certain occasions a public employee may be just as well imposed upon as many another man. There are able men in this House. Where is the one who has never been imposed upon by anybody ? My hon. friend the leader of the opposition, is a very able lawyer indeed. He has argued many cases and he has lost, no doubt, a lot, but that does not prove that he is not an able man. My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock), who conducted the inquiry in the Public Accounts Committee, is a very able man and a great manufacturer. I want to ask him whether he has never made a mistake, or whether any of his employees have never made mistakes ? We are all apt to make mistakes, but, speaking for the department over which I have the honour to preside, I challenge the fullest investigation as to any of my employees having ever participated in any dishonest deal. My department is an open book. I have nothing to hide. I may have made mistakes. But there has not been any money stolen, to my knowledge, and outside of my knowledge it has not been proved that any dishonest acts have ever been committed.

In closing, let me repeat what I said in beginning these few remarks. Last year, the appropriation of the department of Public Works, including both main and supplementary estimates, reached the very large amount of $8,454,000. In all those large appropriations the fault has been found only with two or three small items that have been mentioned here. No greater compliment could be paid to me or to the able officers who administer that department with me. Before I sit down, perhaps the House will permit me to thank hon. members on both sides for the courtesy that has been extended to me not only this year but on other occasions. I have been a sick man for a year or two. On every occasion I have had extended to me on both sides of the House the greatest kindness.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) seems to be a good judge of human nature. He has thrown himself upon the mercy and charity of the House, so that hon. members may not deal too harshly with the shortcomings of himself or his colleagues. In the course of his remarks the hon. gentleman said: We have spent money lavishly, it is true—

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No; I did not say that.

Mr. SPROULE—because the development of the country requires it and the necessity of the country justifies it. Now, so far as that expenditure is needed, so far as it is in the interest of the country, so far as it was properly and economically carried out, we have no complaint to make, but it is because of unwise expenditure, because of improper and extravagant expenditure that we are justified in complaining. The history of this government has been one of great expenditures and extravagances. I make that broad and general statement, and I am sure it is susceptible of proof from the public accounts not only with regard to the government as a whole, but with regard to every department of it. The amounts appropriated for the current year were $65,801,000. And yet, when their predecessors proposed to expend over $15,000,000 less they declared that that was far too much for the requirements of this country. How then, can they deny that this last vast expenditure of theirs is a lavish and unnecessarily heavy expenditure? For next year, that is the year ending June 30th, 1903, we have already voted $65,564,042. And, before the year is out, when we come back next session, no doubt we shall be called upon to vote $4,000,000 or more to cover various shortages that will be found. We are justified in assuming that that will be the case, for it was the case this year and last year and the year before. So, before the next fiscal year is over, we shall have been called upon to vote supplies for the year of about $69,000,000. Yet the Minister of Public Works tells us that while they have been somewhat lavish in their expenditure yet they have spent no more than the demands of the country have required. It is with nations as with individuals in matters of economy. It is very easy to be extravagant, and a nation like an individual can form a habit of extravagance. And, with the nation as with an individual, it is the most difficult thing in the world to curtail extravagance, and, after an era of extravagance, to practice economy. We know how it is with young men commencing life or with men of any age. Supply them lavishly with money and they will be apt to make their expenditure even more than their incomes. If adversity comes they find it almost impossible to economize. Hon. gentlemen opposite enjoyed a season of overflowing revenue, but large as has been their revenues, their expenditures have been still greater. When their revenues are less buoyant, when hard times come and the question of economy must be faced, what will be the condition of the country? It will be a condition of economic disturbance, of curtailed trade, and of sorrow for the people. We are writing a new page in the history of our country, a page which will, for all time to come tell not to the credit but to the discredit of hon. gentlemen who to-day control the affairs of the nation. Because their performance is the very opposite of their promises to the people, the page of history that these hon. gentlemen are writing they are writing to the everlasting disgrace of themselves and of the party to which they belong. They promised us stringent economy, they have given us increased expenditure in every line. Although our revenues have been so large that we had surpluses in a few years amounting to no less than $19,743,537, yet, as the Minister of Finance has admitted, the public debt of Canada has been increased in the same time by $16,000,000. This cannot inure to the credit of hon. gentlemen opposite, but must stand to their disgrace in the history of the country. We are told that the public debt has not increased rapidly. And the Minister of Public Works gave a comparison which he said justified the House and the country in coming to the conclusion that the management of the present government compared favourably in this respect with the management of their predecessors. How did he endeavour to prove that? By taking a few years of the eighteen years of his predecessors, during which the expenditure was exceptionally heavy, and made so in order to carry out the obligations entered into before confederation, such as building the Canadian Pacific Railway, taking over the debts of the provinces, giving them assistance when they had almost fallen into bankruptcy, taking back 10,000,000 acres of land from the Canadian Pacific Railway and giving them $10,000,000 in money instead, adding all that to the public debt. During three years of those eighteen the minister said the increase had been $6,000,000 a year, whereas under the present government it has been only $1,900,000 a year. But had the hon. gentleman desired to be fair in that comparison he would have shown a very different state of affairs under the present government. But take these years out of the eighteen years and the public debt increased during the balance of the time on an average at the rate of $3,000,000 a year. Taking the whole three years out and it would show an entirely different condition of things in the interest of the Conservtive party.

Now, the revenue expected for the present year is $56,800,000, the highest revenue Canada has ever had. When $38,000,000 were taken out of the people under the Conservative administration the Minister of Trade and Commerce said Canada was being bled white by taxation. This year he is taking out of the same people $56,800,000, yet he has not a word to say against it. He is perfectly satisfied so long as he is allowed to remain in office and draw his salary, and have the honour of the situation.

The Minister of Finance gave us a very interesting exhibition for a few minutes this forenoon. I watched him carefully, and he reminded me of a certain little fish very common down in his part of the country. Whenever it sees danger approaching it commences to work its tail at an awful rate of speed, mixing up sand and mud and water until it surrounds itself with a cloud that hides it from view. That is exactly what the Minister of Finance did. Or as another hon. gentleman suggested, he reminded us of a badger in the North-west Territories. Whenever you frighten it it makes one race for its hole, and it runs with such rapidity that it raises a cloud of dust around it which conceals it from view until it gets into its hole. So it was with the Minister of Finance. Like that little fish, he worked himself into a state of excitement, and so stirred up the muddy waters around him that he thought he could hide himself from the criticisms directed against him.

He says the country will take no stock in charges of extravagance, because it knows the money is wisely spent. I ask him if the money was wisely spent in the Yukon in connection with the telegraph out there ? I have here some expenditures made by the government in that connection, and I would ask the people of this country to say whether they have been wisely made. They send a party out there to build a telegraph line, and they think they must treat some of their employees very much like themselves, as if they owned the whole country and all its resources, and were entitled to live in luxury on the fat of the land. They sent out Mr. Charleson with a party, giving him carte blanche to build that telegraph. I have looked at the public accounts to see what supplies were furnished these men, and I will give you a few items by which the people will be enabled to judge whether their money is being wisely spent. The government are purchasing clothing for their employees, 8 dozen pairs of cashmere socks at $5 a dozen, the very best class of goods they could possibly buy. I ask the labouring man who is working in the streets of Ottawa if the man who employs him furnishes him with that quality of garment. Then eiderdown quilts at $25 a piece. What farmer in this country would be so extravagant as to furnish even his choice bedrooms with quilts at $25 a piece ? I want the farmers to see the way their money is being spent, and I am sure they will tell the Minister of Finance that they have analysed his statements and that they do not believe them. Caps, 6⅔ dozen at $18 a dozen ; yet the country has nothing to complain of says the hon. Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Does not the hon. gentleman know that all these articles were bought to be sold back again to the men ?

Mr. SPROULE. I have not seen anything in the accounts to show that they are charged to the men at those prices. Then we have three waterproof coats at $25 a piece. The prices are most extravagant all the way through, yet I have taken them from the Auditor General's Report. Three cases of Abbey's Effervescent Fruit Salts at $5.25 a case. They must have all the luxuries of the country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To be sold back again to the men.

Mr. SPROULE. Ten gallons of lime juice at $1.10 a gallon.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To be sold back again to the men.

Mr. SPROULE. One hundred and twenty-five pairs of boots at $4.50.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To be sold back again to the men.

Mr. SPROULE : Twenty pairs of boots at $9 a pair.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To be sold back again to the men.

Mr. SPROULE. Do the labouring men of this country invest their wages in goods at that price ? Do they pay back $9 a pair for these boots ? Thirteen pair of boots at $8 a pair ; 23 pairs of boots at $6.50 a pair ; 7 pairs at $5 a pair.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To be sold back again to the men.

Mr. SPROULE. Ten dozen pairs of moccasins at $33 a dozen ; 5 dozen of rubbers at $44 a dozen. I want to ask if these are sold to the men as well ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, all those goods were in stock, and kept in stock, and were sold to the men.

Mr. SPROULE. And was the money taken out of their wages, because I have not seen any account of it yet.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It has been proved that these goods were kept in store as any other business firm working in the bush keep goods in store for their men. How could they get those articles in any other way ?

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister tell me if he knows of any labourers in the city of Ottawa who are paid that rate of wages, and who purchased goods at those prices ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Is it true that the hon. gentleman will compare wages in the Yukon with wages in Ottawa ? If so, I will leave it to the country to judge whether the comparison is fair.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no comparison between the two because the difference is so great that there can be no comparison. But, the hon. gentleman tells us that these men bought all these things. They bought two cases of Hennessy's B. O. brandy, $16.75.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Was it unreasonable that men who went into that wilderness should have their whiskey or their brandy ?

Mr. SPROULE. They were supplied with all the luxuries of life and they were given these luxuries because they were enabled to fall back upon the public treasury to pay for them. They were allowed to have all these extravagant luxuries of life because they were employed under the hon. Minister of Public Works. Ten gallons of rum, at $5.25 per gallon, for the poor labouring men up there. How many of the poor labouring men employed on the streets of Ottawa are able to buy rum at $5.25 per gallon ; or how many employees are there who would do it for them ? It is only when men are employed by the hon. Minister of Public Works that they are treated in this fashion. Three thousand Representative cigars, $180. This sum was expended for the choicest cigars that can be produced, to be sent up there to add to the luxuries of these men. Then, there were 1,000 of another brand, Flora Espana cigars, at $45 a thousand. Ask the boys who are going around Ottawa smoking 5-cent cigars, how they would like to be employed by the hon. Minister of Public Works, and be enabled to smoke these expensive cigars. One thousand El Bondoso cigars, at $37 a thousand; 105 pounds of Myrtle Navy tobacco, $73.50 ; 70 pounds of Tuckett & Billings tobacco, $51.80; 86 pounds of Prince of Wales tobacco, $58.48; 1,000 Manual Garcia cigars, $75 a thousand. These men were supplied with the most expensive luxuries and the best cigars that the country could provide when they were sent up there to build that telegraph line by the hon. Minister of Public Works. The hon. gentleman has done this because he is drawing upon the public chest, and yet the hon. Minister of Finance says that the country will take no stock in the statements we have made as to the extravagant expenditure of the country's money. Well, the information is before the country, and it is for the country to say whether it takes any stock in it or not. In my judgment it will take a great deal of stock in it.

Now, I will deal with another point. The hon. Minister of Finance asked us why we did not go before the Public Accounts Committee if we thought there had been anything wrong and prove it. Did we not go before the Public Accounts Committee, and attempt to prove it ? We did. But when the men who could give evidence in regard to this wrongdoing were asked for information they were not allowed to answer the questions. For two years we attempted to get Mr. Charleson before the Committee on Public Accounts, but as soon as the order went out to bring Mr. Charleson before the committee his coat tails were seen flying out of Ottawa, and he was absent for the rest of the session. He was here until the subpoena was issued, but he left immediately for the west and we could not get him back. The excuse was that he was obliged to go away.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether Mr. Charleson has not been here during the whole of the session ?

Mr. SPROULE. He has, but owing to the short session we have not had time to get him before the committee. The Public Accounts Committee has not been called once for five times it ought to have been called, and we have been unable on that account to pursue the inquiry in regard to Mr. Charleson to the extent that we would have liked to. We desired to secure the attendance of Mr. Charleson before the committee and we would have done so had the length of the session enabled us to do so. But when we do get people before the committee we cannot get the information out of them. It would have been possible to have proved the charges that we have made but for the impediments that have been thrown in the way by the government of bringing the witnesses before the Public Accounts Committee whom we desired to have. But, we did have a few witnesses before that committee. We had Mr. Rochester, who gave us some information about a contract for the supply of telegraph poles. We endeavoured to ascertain how much he paid for these poles. We were told that Mr. Rochester bought these poles for 90 cents apiece and sold them to the government for $2 apiece. When that question was asked, who objected to the answer ? I am told that it was the hon. Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not do that.

Mr. SPROULE. It was said that the hon. gentleman instructed him not to answer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I did not do that.

Mr. SPROULE. I was not at the meeting, but I am told on reliable authority that it was the hon. Minister of Public Works, and no other. With these impediments thrown in our way we could not prove what otherwise was capable of being proved, if we could have got the evidence which the parties should have been able to give and which should have been taken on oath in regard to these transactions. Something was said in regard to the Intercolonial Railway. We presented allegations of extravagance in connection with that road and we brought before the committee different employees to prove them; or, to speak more correctly, we asked that they should be brought up. They were not brought up. We asked to have Mr. Archibald summoned before the committee. We fought it out in the Public Accounts Committee for a whole day, and we fought it out in this House for a whole afternoon, but the government called upon their majority to vote down our request and we were denied the right of having the evidence of Mr. Archibald before the committee. We were told that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals bought 1,300,000 ties when an election was going on when there were not more than 400,000 ties required for that year. The hon. gentleman bought them to help the friends of the party to control the election and when we desired to prove that there was extravagance in the administration of that road the witnesses we required were not allowed to come before that committee. Mr. Archibald was not allowed to come here and we were in this way unable to prove what, under other circumstances, was perfectly capable of being proved, because, when we attempted to bring a witness before the committee, or to elicit information from a witness who did appear, obstacles were placed in our way by hon. gentlemen opposite. The Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) says that the country will not take any stock in our statements about the extravagant expenditures of the government. They have been quite proper, says the hon. Minister of Public Works. How about the expenditure that we will be called upon to vote either to-day or to-morrow for indemnifying Mackenzie & Mann for a contract which ought not to have been made amounting to $328,000, an item for which appears in the supplementary estimates ? What will this be after we have voted it ? It will be a monument to the eternal disgrace of the present government, a monument to their folly and incapacity as public men and to their lack of business ability. It will stand as a matter of record against them. They made a contract that should never have been made.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that it is not regular to discuss a vote which is to be submitted to the Committee of Supply.

Mr. SPROULE. I will say the expenditure which we will be called upon to make in payment of the award of the Exchequer Court, to which the government referred this disputed question. The Exchequer Court has given an award in favour of Mackenzie & Mann that will mean an expenditure of $328,000. Is this wise or otherwise ? Will the people of the country say whether it is wrong or right ? I will leave it to the people and I have no doubt what they will say about the payment to Mackenzie & Mann for the loss of that contract. But, we are told that the expenditure has not been extravagant and that it has always been wise. What about taking the census ? Let us give the House and the country a little information about that. Has the expenditure for taking the census been extravagant or economical ? That work has been done before and we have a fair opportunity of making a comparison. The predecessors of the present government twice performed work of taking the census of the country. Let me make a comparison of the cost of taking the census so that the people of the country may know whether the present government have been spending money extravagantly or economically.

The census of 1891, taken under the Conservative government, cost the country $548,000 all told, but the census of 1901, taken by the present Liberal government has up to date cost $980,000, and we are told it will cost $170,000 more, making in round numbers a total cost of $1,150,000. It is true that the population has slightly increased, and no doubt there was a little more work to be done, but the last census cost $602,000 more than the census taken by the Conservative government, and that enormous increase in cost can be pointed to by any honest man as a sample of gross extravagance on the part of this government. Every act of this government proves that there is a system of extravagance reigning which is not compatible with economy and wise judgment. The Minister of Finance told us that our expenditure on consolidated revenue account in 1895 was equal to 15 per cent, while last year it was only 12 per cent, thereby trying to prove that the present expenditure was comparatively less. Well, it is easy to prove the fallacy of that comparison. The revenue of 1895 was only $33,000,000, whereas last year it was $52,000,000, and 12 per cent on $52,000,000 is proportionately larger than 15 per cent on $33,000,000. We cannot turn our face to any quarter without seeing evidences of this extravagance. Look at the Galops rapids. The Minister of Railways was obliged to admit the other night that he had a company of contractors dredging these rapids all last year, and he did not know it, and yet the country will have to pay for it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why does the hon. member state that I had them there, when they were distinctly instructed that they should not go on, and that there was no appropriation?

Mr. SPROULE. I am justified in saying that the minister had them there in view of the fact that his own engineers were on the boats all the time directing the work. And yet the minister did not know it, and his chief engineer did not know it. But the company has rolled up an aggregate claim for $50,000, while the minister did not know that this work was going on. There is no doubt in the world but that this amount will be paid. The minister says he notified them there was no vote, but he let the contractors go on.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why do you say I let them go on ?

Mr. SPROULE. So far as ministerial responsibility can be brought to bear the minister did that, because his subordinate officers were superintending the work and keeping the accounts which were presented to the minister when the time came to pay them. Is that proper management of the affairs of the country ? I leave the people to judge. I have given a few samples of extravagance and waste on the part of this government, and I could give many more. I could speak of the Yukon railway, the Drummond Railway, the Yukon telegraph lines, the purchase of ties and rails on the Intercolonial Railway, the Mackenzie and Mann contract, the census expenditure. I could speak of all these and I can submit them to the unbiased judgment of the people of Canada, feeling sure that the verdict would be that this government is spending the money of the country extravagantly, unwisely, improperly, dishonestly and corruptly.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Halifax). I know that any person who attempts to speak during this debate at such a late period of the session, incurs a serious responsibility, but some sentiments were expressed this afternoon by a veteran politician on the other side which I think require reply from a member representing a constituency in the lower provinces. One would think from the style and quality of the remarks of that hon. gentleman, that there might be a provincial election pending in one of the western provinces, because the attack was made under the guise of a criticism on the expenditure for great public works, whereas, divested of that adventitious envelope it was nothing more than an unjust attack on the maritime provinces. The gentleman who made these observations is, and ought to be, perfectly cognizant of the fact that the maritime provinces have given uniformly and without stint their support to every expenditure that was for the benefit of the country, and was a wise and legitimate expenditure. Whether that expenditure was made in Quebec, or whether in Ontario, or whether in the North-west, the votes of the lower province members have been in favour of such expenditure for wise public works. We regard it as a very unreasonable and a sectional cry, when the lower provinces are held up as a butt, and represented as partaking in the expenditure of public money for electioneering purposes, and from which no adequate return comes. I allude to the remarks of my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart). He has had a good deal of experience in this House; he occupied for a considerable time the responsible and honourable office of Minister of Railways, and he ought to know better than he speaks. Let me point out to the hon. gentleman that the money spent on lighthouses and wharfs and other works in the lower provinces is a very insignificant sum indeed when compared with the very large amounts which have been voted for public works in the other parts of the Dominion. We, from the maritime provinces have not quarrelled with this expenditure in the other provinces. We have not regarded it, that every dollar expended in Ontario and the North-west and on the St. Lawrence was so much taken from the lower provinces. We have no such narrow or limited or sectional feeling.

Now, Sir, I know the generosity of my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) ; I know his disposition and I know that his heart is perhaps capable of responding to any just appeal. I would like him to take a trip down to the lower provinces, especially around the shores of Nova Scotia, and enter into the lives of the fishermen and others there. He would observe at once that he was among an entirely different population from those with whom he was familiar, the farmers and others of the province of Ontario. If he did so, we would not again hear him complain that so much money was taken from the coffers of the country to be expended in aiding those poor fishermen in their precarious avocation. It is important to the business of these men that these public grants should be made for the construction of public works in their vicinity. They have no railroads, and they do not partake of the benefits of many of the expenditures in other parts of the country. Their whole interest is in the sea. Suppose that for the want of a paltry grant of $100 for some lighthouse, all the inhabitants of one of those fishing districts should be swept away in consequence of not being able to make a port in a gale of wind. Again, in regard to the expenditure of $4,000 on the breakwater of Herring Cove, which is one of the subjects of discussion to-day, last year an Atlantic gale swept over that unhappy village, and carried away all the possessions of the fishermen of the place. It swept away their boats, their nets, their fishing houses, and all the means they had of getting a living. One of these Atlantic gales is sufficient sometimes to dam up the mouths of these little harbours, and destroy a whole year's living for the fishermen. It may be a most serious matter for them, because the fishing business is not a steady business like farming in the Northwest, but is a most precarious business. Sometimes two or three years will go by without the fishermen being able to obtain enough to pay for one year's living. Suppose the welfare of a community depends on the trifling expenditure of $100 for a lighthouse, what man in this House would rise up and give his vote to the proposition of my hon. friend from Lanark to withhold an appropriation of that kind, when so trifling an expenditure would be attended with such beneficial results? Then there are people along the shores who have no means of communication, who have to carry their goods to and from vessels in their boats. What man who has any understanding of the difficult business of these men, and the very small amount of money that passes through their hands, would withhold a grant of say $1,000 for a wharf at some place where there is no man with sufficient money to build a wharf for the accommodation of the people? And so, when the hon. gentleman rises and in his grandiloquent way inveighs against the waste of public money in the maritime provinces, I think I can see the poor fishermen in those localities reading that speech—and I will take care that it is read by a good many of them. When the hon. leader of the opposition goes among them to solicit their votes—and he has obtained a good many of them—I do not think he will promise that when his government comes into power, he will withhold the expenditure on wharfs, harbours, breakwaters and lighthouses in the maritime provinces, and especially in the county of Halifax. My hon. friend from Lanark dealt with the expenditure in a department with which he is supposed to be more familiar than he is with lighthouses, breakwaters and wharfs; and I would answer him, as other gentlemen have been answered on other occasions, and he knows it very well, that the maritime provinces were not disposed to enter into the union with Canada except on the express stipulation that the Intercolonial Railway should be built to connect the provinces, and that it should be efficiently maintained. The maritime provinces were not disposed to enter into the union with Canada, and that was held out to them as an inducement. Now, Sir, it has been a favourite subject in Ontario and perhaps elsewhere to describe all the expenditures on the Intercolonial Railway as expenditures for the exclusive benefit of the maritime provinces, and as matter of indifference to the other provinces—as a matter in which they have no pecuniary interest, but as a sort of boon to pacify the maritime provinces. It is no such thing. A large portion of the province of Nova Scotia has no direct connection with the Intercolonial Railway, and a great many of the inhabitants derive no benefit from it whatever. The province of Nova Scotia, in common with the other provinces, enjoys the benefit of transport over the Intercolonial Railway, but it enjoys no special benefit. It is true, some of the productions of the maritime provinces, a very limited number, are carried over the Intercolonial Railway; but the large bulk of the products carried over that railway have their origin in the province of Ontario, and that province derives very much more benefit from the Intercolonial Railway than the province of New Brunswick or the province of Nova Scotia; and any hon. gentleman who rises in this House and describes that railway as being maintained for the benefit of the maritime provinces simply errs in judgment and mistakes the fact. The great bulk of the benefit is derived by the province of Ontario in the transport of its productions to the markets of the maritime provinces, which take almost every production that originates there, and welcome it gladly as the production of one of the sister provinces of the Dominion. We make no complaints on that score, nor on the score of the expenditures lavished on the canals or on other projects in the western part of the country; but we hear it with ill grace from a mature and veteran statesman like the hon. member for Lanark, when he rises in his place, and, perhaps for the purpose of securing some votes or some eclat in the province of Ontario, denounces the expenditure on these public works which run through the maritime provinces, but which are not for their exclusive benefit. I warn the hon. gentleman that if he expects his party ever to return to power, he should not place before the eyes and ears of the inhabitants of the lower provinces these denunciations of expenditures which are identified with the daily life and avocations of the working people in those obscure localities and, which they could not carry on successfully without these necessary public expenditures made by the Department of Public Works.

House divided on the amendment of Mr. Borden (Halifax).

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill), East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), East Durham (Mr. Ward), East Kings, N. B. (Mr. Fowler), have not voted.

Mr. CARGILL. I have paired with the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Bickerdike).

Mr. POPE. I forgot that I was paired with the hon. member for Shefford, and wish my vote erased.

Mr. FOWLER. I was paired with the hon. member for Westmoreland, (Mr. Emmerson).

Mr. BALL. On this question I made a sign that I wished to vote on the side of the government but being essentially a Conservative the deputy clerk of the House paid no attention, and my vote was not recorded either on one side or the other.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the main motion is carried, I wish to say the hon. Minister of Justice has handed me the Bill with regard to Joint Stock Companies, together with a brief, showing what portion is new and what is old. I have looked over the portion that is new and have no objection to the Bill being proceeded with at some convenient time to-day.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

To pay amount of judgment of Exchequer Court in favour of Messrs. Mackenzie and Mann to recoup them for their outlay in connection with proposed contract for a railway from Stickeen river to Teslin lake.. .. ..$327,678 10

To pay amount of costs, including disbursements for evidence, witness fees, &c..	$830 20

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. POPE. No, some one ought to father this item. We do not know whom to look to, whether the Minister of the Interior or the Minister of Railways and Canals. The original Bill for the construction of this road was introduced by the Minister of the Interior.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This amount covers the judgment of the Exchequer court in respect of the claim of Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann under the contract made with them by the government for the construction of a railway in the Yukon. The amount of the award itself was $327,628.10. The cost including evidence, witness fees, &c., amounted to $830.20. This makes a total of $328,508.20, the amount of the resolution. The original claim was for $493,785.32. The present award includes the amount allowed by the Exchequer court with interest after deducting sales made of the supplies which had been taken into that country by the contractors.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Can the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals tell us how long before the opening of parliament in 1898, this agreement was made ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the original papers have passed out of my department, but my information is that they are in the Exchequer court as yet. Speaking from recollection, not only from my own but the recollection of other members of the government, this agreement was made a month or thereabouts before the opening of parliament.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). According to the Order in Council, the agreement was made on the 25th of January, 1898, I think the House met that year on the 2nd of February.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Was it so short a time before the session as that ? The hon. gentleman had all the papers laid on the Table some weeks ago, and they would show the date of the agreement.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The House met on the 3rd of February.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So, the agreement was made eight or nine days before the opening of parliament. Of course, so far as those contractors are concerned, I think it was recognized, to some extent at least by some members of the House, that, inasmuch as the contractors had proceeded at the instigation of the government before parliament had sanctioned the contract, there might be some claim on their part to be reimbursed for their actual outlay. Therefore, in any remarks I make, I direct attention to the government who are responsible for the loss to the country and not to the contractors themselves. It seems to me a new phase of parliamentary government that this contract should have been made, signed and sealed just eight days before the meeting of parliament and made subject to the approval of parliament, and yet the contractors should have been directed by the government to proceed with the work immediately. I do not recollect that there were any circumstances which would justify the government in taking the course they did in this matter. Subsequent events in that country have not shown that there was any cause for the very extreme haste with which the government insisted upon these gentlemen incurring liabilities at the expense of the country before parliament had any voice in the expenditure. I have had my attention directed, not during the present session, but during last session to the English practice in regard to such matters, and I think the government departed from the principles of constitutional government, and the due administration of public affairs in taking the course they did, and that they are reprehensible for causing this loss of public money by acting without the sanction of parliament and by urging the contractors as this Order in Council shows they did, to proceed with the construction of this work before parliament had an opportunity to pass upon it.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the minister if the correspondence—I suppose there was some correspondence calling upon the contractors to proceed with the work pending the decision of parliament—has been laid before the House. I presume that there must have been written instructions, because under the terms of the contract, strictly there would be no claim for damages. But, presumably because the executive saw fit to order them to proceed with the work we are called upon to pay this large amount. What explanation does the minister give as to the instructions given by the government before the decision of parliament ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All the correspondance exchanged between the contractors and the government or any department of the government has been laid on the Table. I know of no verbal instructions having been given. Perhaps the Minister of the Interior might be able to throw some light upon that, if there was any verbal instruction given. As I recollect the circumstances, our action was necessitated by the extreme urgency of the case at that time. We had a very grave problem pending before us with which we had to deal, and, according to the view we took of the question of urgency we could not allow any time to be lost.

Mr. MONK. I think that when we are called upon to vote such a large item as this, we are entitled to have from some member of the government a statement of the negotiations which led these contractors against whose claim I have nothing to say, if they received instructions to proceed at any rate and under any circumstances—taking the course they did, what instructions were given at the time, and who gave them those instructions. Having such a judgement I think some member of the government ought to be able to tell us how it came about that, although there were only eight days intervening, even less I think, between the signing of this contract and the meeting of parliament—three days, my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) says—still we are called upon to-day to pay an immense amount when parliament itself is not at fault. I think somebody ought to explain how such a very large bill was run up against the country. If it was a judgment, I would have nothing to say. From the little I know of the circumstances, I think the contractors were entitled to a petition of right. But this is merely a reference establishing the quantum of damages.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like the government also to give this explanation: Is this a judgment by the Exchequer Court, or did the government admit its liability, and only go to the Exchequer Court judge to have the amount settled which would be paid to these contractors? Is the item which is now before us founded upon a judgment by the Exchequer Court after the parties have been heard, or did the government admit its liability?

Mr. OSLER. This is evidently a very expensive coffin for a still-born child, and the child is so monstrous that the members of the government would be glad to have it buried out of their sight at any expense.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was undoubtedly a hearing before the courts. It took several days and witnesses were examined.

Mr. CASGRAIN. At the same time there is something very singular about this. This is a large amount of money. Was there a petition of right filed? Was a fiat given? Was there a case made out before the Exchequer Court? Was the Crown heard? And if the Crown was heard, and judgment was rendered, how is that no appeal has been lodged from this judgment? If it is a judgment, it seems to me a most extraordinary one. That a court should deliver judgment against the government on a claim of this kind, when it was stated in the contract in so many words that it would be subject to the decision of the House—the whole thing seems very strange. Then if that is true, the contractors took this contract and began work subject to this condition, and the government and the House not having approved of the contract, I cannot understand how the Exchequer Court could have rendered judgment holding the Crown liable under these circumstances.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think the award and reference, not to the Exchequer Court, but to the judge of that court acting as commissioner, have been placed upon the Table of the House. At all events, the Minister of Justice was to produce them, under my instructions. I do not see them on the Table, therefore I will have to give the reference by memory. The circumstances out of which this whole matter arose are familiar to the House. But though they may be familiar, in order to make the thing more intelligible, and the present appropriation better understood, perhaps it is just as well that I should give a history of the circumstances from the beginning. The House remembers that in 1898 the government introduced a Bill to construct a line of railway from Telegraph Creek up to Teslin Lake, which was to be the means of communication between the eastern world and the Yukon. The matter was brought, I admit, hastily to the attention of the House. The contract was made in the month of February, if, I remember right, and our intention was that the contractors should proceed immediately with the work, that they should put themselves at once in motion, and have everything ready so that at the opening of the season they would be able to go on at once with the work. What was the reason of this haste? Why did we instruct the contractors to proceed at once without any delay in order to begin work with the opening of the season? The reason was that in the previous session, that of 1897, the parliament of Canada passed an Act authorizing the construction of a railway from Skagway, on the Lynn canal, to the waters of Lake Bennett, that is to say to the source of the waters of the Yukon. This Bill was passed, as a good many Bills have been passed every year, without the government or parliament having any knowledge of the conditions of that country. The Yukon at that moment was a terra incognite. Nobody knew that it contained the vast wealth which events have subsequently shown it to contain. Undoubtedly if, when this charter was granted in 1897, parliament had been informed of the existence of this vast wealth, as it was later on informed in the summer of 1897, when the great discovery of gold was made, this charter would not have been granted. For my part I would have opposed it with all my might; and I am sure the same sentiments which would have actuated me to oppose it, would have actuated every other member of this House. This charter was granted from the waters of the Lynn canal towards the Canadian portion of Lake Bennett, that is to say, from a point which is now, and was then, in possession of the United States, from Skagway up to Lake

Bennett, which is undoubtedly in Canadian territory. The parties who had that charter had also a charter from the American Congress to build a railway from the waters of the Lynn canal through Canadian territory. I say Canadian territory, because the boundaries had not then been settled, we did not know where the true line was. We knew it was somewhere between the waters of the Lynn canal and the waters of Lake Bennett. It has since been established that the boundary is some fifty miles from Skagway. But we were in ignorance of the country then.

Mr. BELL. But that point is not accepted as the boundary.

The PRIME MINISTER. I meant to say the provisional boundary. It has not been accepted, but it has been recognized to be the boundary, at all events, it cannot be worse for us than it is at the present time. The boundary can be extended from the summit between the waters of the Pacific and the waters of the Arctic ocean. But in the summer of 1897 this gold discovery was made. There was a rush, we had to provide at once for a system of communication between the eastern world and the Yukon. We then made the contract with Mackenzie & Mann for the construction of that railway. The great object we had in mind was to have a railway, not from Skagway, but from Telegraph Creek, from one point in Canadian territory to another point in Canadian territory. Under that contract we intended to provide at once for the construction of a railway which would be altogether under our control. I may say it was only a provisional contract, because the Stikine river, though we have the right to navigate it, empties into American territory. But if our contract had been carried out we would have realized our intention to bring this railway to the waters of Observatory Inlet. We made haste to complete that contract for this reason, that if we did not take advantage of the time which was at our disposal, then the other charter which was given a year before would be proceeded with, and a railway would be constructed from the waters of the Lynn canal, at Skagway, up to the waters of Lake Bennett, and of course this railway being built, it would be a great detriment to our national railway. If our idea had been carried out, if the Bill which passed in this House had not been rejected by the Senate, then this railway would have been constructed, the railway between Skagway and Lake Bennett would not have been constructed, and we would have to-day an all-Canadian route in the Yukon, instead of having a hybrid route such as we have at the present time. That was the justification in our judgment. That is why there was such haste to have this railway built. The White Pass Yukon Railway people had been watching and were ready to proceed with the construction of their railway, and our own contractors were also ready to proceed. They made haste, there was a great deal of work to do, they sent provisions into the country, they purchased materials, they proceeded to carry on the work in the hope and expectation that their efforts would be approved by the Canadian parliament, that the contract would be ratified, and that as soon as spring was opened they would be ready to proceed and have the railway built during the season of 1898. They spent a large amount of money with that object in view. Unfortunately, the Bill, after having passed this House, was rejected by the Canadian parliament. These contractors made a claim upon us to be recouped for the expenditure which they had made. We asked them to furnish us with a detailed account which they did, but, before we proceeded to have the account settled, we asked them to dispose of all the material they could dispose of, which they did. Lastly, we had the account audited by judicial authority. We referred the matter to Mr. Justice Burbidge, who audited the account and examined it carefully. Mr. Justice Burbidge made a report to the government that Mackenzie & Mann had honestly expended the sum that is established now to be in the neighbourhood of $300,000. Of course, I am bound to say at once that there is no legal recourse against the Canadian government which can be enforced in a court of law, but we admit that Mackenzie & Mann have a moral claim against the honour of the Canadian people, against the honour of the Canadian government, and against the honour of the Canadian parliament, for the money which they then expended in an enterprise which was national in its character and which in my opinion, though, perhaps my opinion is not shared by all the members of this House, in an enterprise, which, if it had been carried out, would have been of the greatest advantage to the Canadian people at large. For these reasons we submit to the Canadian parliament that these men should not be subjected to the heavy loss which would be entailed on them, but as this is a loss which must be borne by somebody, it should be borne by the country and not by the contractors. We may be told that they were hasty, that they should have waited until the contract had been ratified. The excuse and the reason for this haste, and in my estimation it is an ample reason, is that there was not a minute to be lost, that time had to be taken by the forelock, that they had to proceed immediately to collect the materials and to take the measurements necessary in order that as soon as the spring was opened they might be enabled to go on with the work of construction. Of course, if it had not been for the charter which parliament had granted—I will not say improvidently or imprudently granted—but granted in ignorance of the conditions existing in that country, there would not have been any necessity for such haste. But, this haste is justifiable by the events which have taken place since. As soon as the contract which we made with Mackenzie & Mann had been rejected by the Canadian Senate, the charter which had been granted by this parliament and by Congress to the White Pass and Yukon Railway Company was availed of, and in the spring the company proceeded with the construction of the railway between Skagway and the Yukon. This makes it a task of great difficulty for us now to have a national railway on Canadian soil. Under the circumstances, we say, and it is the only ground upon which we put it before the committee, that Mackenzie & Mann have against the Canadian people a moral claim which ought to be satisfied. The country can bear the loss, but individuals could not bear such a loss as that. The money was expended honestly and in good faith, the money was expended for a good purpose, the money was expended for a purpose, which, if it had been carried out, would have been of untold advantage to the country, and for these reasons I appeal strongly to hon. members on both sides of the House. As to the amount, as I have said, we thought we should not deal with the matter ourselves, but that we should refer it to a person most competent to deal with a matter of this kind, that is to say, to a judge of the land, who has carefully investigated and audited the account. We believe that on moral grounds Mackenzie & Mann should be repaid the amount they have expended, and for these reasons we have asked for this appropriation.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is the result of an infringement of the law by hon. gentlemen opposite, when they entered into this contract with Mackenzie & Mann. This system of entering into contracts without the authority of parliament should be put a stop to in some manner or other. It is unconstitutional. One of the principles that is laid down by the authorities as being one of the conditions on which a contract should be made is that:

> It is equally clear that the government have no constitutional authority to make a contract which shall be binding on the House of Commons——

The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) admits that.

> ——by whom the necessary funds for carrying on the contract must be supplied; and the consent of parliament should be first obtained to all new contracts.

The contract was entered into only eight days before the meeting of parliament, and therefore hon. gentlemen could have obtained the consent of parliament by waiting for eight days, which would have been a very short time indeed to have waited.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was a delay——

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman speaks in reference to the delay. As to the advantage of building that railway from Telegraph Creek to Teslin Lake, he says that we would start on our own soil and that the railway would be built through our own country and be independent of the United States. The hon. gentleman forgets a fact which was pointed out to him in the House at the time, that in order to get to Telegraph Creek, the road would have to pass through American territory, or through American waters, over which the hon. gentleman alleges we have a right of navigation. The Americans have the right of navigation down the St. Lawrence, but one of the conditions we have a right to impose is, to require that their vessels shall call at the custom-house, that they shall make an entry and go through other formalities, and the Americans require the same of us at Fort Wrangel in American territory, through which we must go on our way to Telegraph Creek. The disadvantage of building that road was pointed out again and again in the debate which occurred in the House at that time. As a commercial undertaking, the absurdity was made clear of attempting to compete with a railway built either from Skagway or Pyramid Harbour. There was authority from congress to build a road from Skagway to the American boundary, wherever it might be found, and there was the authority of this parliament to continue it. In view of such legislation, no matter how rapidly you might build a road from Telegraph Creek to Teslin lake that undertaking could never enter into competition with the other road. However, that question has been threshed out again and again. What is the position to-day? The right hon. gentleman says that there was not a legal submission to the Exchequer Court. Is it a part of the duty of that court to pronounce on hypothetical questions submitted to it. The Supreme Court does on constitutional questions submitted by this parliament, but I thought that the judge of the Exchequer Court had stated in connection with the hard-pan cases that he would no longer deal with such cases as that; that he would no longer deal with such cases unless they were submitted under a petition of right, when he would decide them according to the law of the land. There is no petition of right here. As a matter of fact the claim is admitted by the government before they go to the Exchequer Court, and the case is submitted to the judge under a special condition. Indeed, it was not a case at all; it was simply a reference to find the amount, and the fact is that the amount found was $302,000 which was exactly the amount agreed upon between the department and Mackenzie & Mann after deducting the value of material sold. In fact the Exchequer Court accepted the arrangement come to between the two parties. Eight days before parliament met the government entered into a contract which it had not the right to do without the authority of parliament and unless it was made conditional that parliament should give authority afterwards. To show how jealous they are in England in repect to this, I may quote the following authority :

An amendment was proposed in Committee of Supply to reduce the vote for work on the House of parliament by £2,500 with a view of censuring the office of works for undertaking a new kind of decoration with mosaics in the central hall because it had been contracted for previously to being sanctioned by a parliamentary vote. After a short discussion the amendment was negatived, but on July 8th, on report of the resolution an amendment was again moved to reduce the vote by £5,500 in order to prevent certain structural alterations to the central hall as well as to condemn the decoration thereof with mosaic work. Another amendment was then offered by the commissioner of works, Mr. Laird, to reduce the vote by £3,000 only as a guarantee that the proposed structural alterations in the central hall should not be undertaken until approved of by parliament.

Therefore we see that even adornments of a building which is authorized by parliament and which introduced a structural reform were not permitted before parliament voted the money ; so jealous is the English House of Commons of its right to control contracts made by the executive. It has been the habit in this country, contrary to all law, for the Department of Railways and the Department of Public Works to enter into contracts for which they have no more authority than has the man on the street. Each department is limited to the expenditure voted by parliament, but that law is constantly contravened by this government. The Minister of Railways gives a contract for 11 miles of road and he extends that contract for 30 miles more without the slightest authority in the world to do so. I admit that it is pretty hard that a contractor should suffer after having entered into a contract in good faith with the government. I suppose they thought that the House of Commons was at their back, that the scheme would go through, and so they made a large expenditure and wish now to have it recouped. But it seem to me that in eight days or in sixteen days, or even in a month, $328,000 is an enormous sum to have lost on preparations of that kind. I have not looked into the accounts and I do not know anything about them, but it is clear that there was an agreement between the government and the other party as to the amount due and that the courts simply accepted that agreement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has looked into some of the papers, I suppose ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He has observed, no doubt, that the account of materials furnished was carefully gone into, and that one of the officers of the Railway Department, Mr. Shannon, a very competent and a very reliable man, went out to this portion of the country, and compared the materials and merchandise there with the items of the Mackenzie & Mann claim, ascertained wherein he thought it was in his opinion excessive ; ascertained as to the correctness of it, and made his report accordingly. The account was not by any means submitted to the judge of the Exchequer Court without having been inquired into previously in the most thorough and exhaustive manner by a competent officer of the department.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am not saying anything about that. I say that the judgment of the Exchequer Court is for the precise amount that was recommended by the officer of your department. The contractors claimed a certain amount ; they agreed that a certain amount should be deducted ; afterwards the sale of material reduced that amount, and the award was for the amount that remained.

The PRIME MINISTER. I find no fault with the position laid down by my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) as to the status of parliamentary government. He says that the government should not enter into a contract unless they have previous parliamentary authority or unless it is provided that the contract shall be ratified by parliament. That is exactly what was done in this case. The contract which was entered into by the government with Messrs Mackenzie & Mann provided that it should be ratified by parliament, and it failed of its ratification. My hon. friend asks why the contractors engaged in the work of the contract before it was ratified. Of course, if it had been like the case mentioned by my hon. friend a moment ago, simply for the adornment of a public building, they would not have been so hasty to do so. But he understands that from the very nature of the work, and from the fact that it was to be carried out in a part of the continent very difficult of access, they could not wait, but were obliged to have their materials on the spot so as to be in a position to go on with the construction as soon as the season opened. There was not an hour to be lost, and they proceeded on the expectation and the presumption that the contract would be rafified by parliament. I repeat that we do not pretend that Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann have a legal claim against the government.

Mr. BELL. Had they nothing more than the presumption that parliament would ratify that contract to warrant them in going on ?

The PRIME MINISTER. They had the presumption and the necessity of the case, which would have made their efforts absolutely fruitless unless they had taken advantage of the winter season to send their materials to Telegraph Creek. When the accounts were presented to the government they were carefully inspected and audited by an officer of the Department of Railways. But we were not satisfied to have that audit alone. We thought that a judicial audit of the accounts should be made, and we appointed Mr. Justice Burbidge to make that judicial audit; and I call the attention of the House to the very terms of the reference under which Mr. Justice Burbidge proceeded :

> The minister, therefore, recommends that the said claims be referred, under the statute, in that behalf, to the Exchequer Court of Canada, for investigation, adjustment, and judgment, but that no claims which do not come within those mentioned in paragraph 4 of this minutes of council and the sum total of which is given in paragraph 5, be inquired into.

Paragraph 4 says :

> The minister considers that the claims which should be recognized are for time and services and money losses actually sustained and money expenditure actually made or liabilities therefore incurred in good faith in connection with said agreement, and in preparing to carry out the same, and in procuring and transporting men, materials, plant and supplies therefore, and in carrying on the works so far as they may have been proceeded with, and the interest paid on the moneys expended.

This was the nature of the claim which was referred to the judicial audit of Mr. Burbidge. He investigated the claims and made his report, and accordingly, this appropriation is now asked for. I have only to repeat what I said : we cannot present the claim as a legal one ; we present it simply as an equitable one which ought to appeal to the sense of fairness and equity of hon. members on both sides of the House.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When the right hon. gentleman interrupted me I was going on to argue that the Crown has no power to enter into a contract unless the money is voted by parliament or unless the Crown makes it a condition of the contract that it shall not come into force until the money is voted. But here is an expenditure which fell upon us the very moment the contract was entered into. There is no provision in our constitution for anything of that kind. If there is a necessity for any extraordinary expenditure, or if any emergency arises which justifies an expenditure, the only other method by which it can be incurred is by a Governor General's warrant. But no government has a right to enter into a contract by which any expenditure of money can be made before the money is voted by parliament. It is an attack on the privileges of parliament to enter into any such contract. The contract may be made subject to the approval of parliament, but no expenditure under it is justified until parliament votes the money.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That proposition is all right stated in a general way and applicable to ordinary circumstances; but the British constitution recognizes that in a case of great urgency, such as the purchase of the Suez canal shares by the British government—a case in which the government considers the matter is of such supreme importance it will be warranted in taking upon itself the risk of getting the approval of parliament in acting without previous parliamentary authority. This has been done more than once, and is regarded as being within the purview of the constitution, although no constitutional sanction is granted to it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. gentleman cannot give any authority for that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg pardon. The constitution is of that elastic character that it recognizes that such a contract can be made if it is made on the responsibility of the government, and if the sanction or approval of parliament follows, although it is not a thing that is regular or usual.

At six o'clock committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is a remark or two I desire to make in reply to the hon. member for South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) which I did not have an opportunity of making before the House took recess. The hon. member pointed out that there was no reason whatever for the government entering into this agreement with Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann eight or ten days before parliament met. We could have waited, he said, until parliament met and consulted it at the earliest moment, and the transaction could have been done in the ordinary and customary way and in a strictly legal manner. In making that criticism, which would, on the spur of the moment, seem to have considerable weight, he entirely ignored not only the fact of the extreme urgency which the case demanded but also that it would have been impossible to have secured any action by parliament for weeks or months after the opening of the session. That proved to be the actual fact. The Bill legalizing and affirming the agreement was submitted to parliament shortly after its opening, but there was such a determined opposition made to it that the session was well advanced before it could be sent to the upper chamber. Finally it was approved by the House of Commons, and whatever the contractors may have done and no doubt they did a great deal, in the intermediate period, to prepare themselves for the opening of navigation on the Stikene and the commencement of the work—they would be confirmed in going still further with these preparations when the representatives of the people, who were the proper persons in the ordinary sense to determine whether or not a contract of this kind should be confirmed, had pronounced in its favour. It would be considered ordinarily as rather a stretch of the functions usually exercised by the Senate—although I do not say it is not within the right of that body—to interfere with Supply, and this Bill was of the same nature as a Supply Bill. The Senate, however, threw out the Bill, with the consequences which we all know—consequences very serious to the interests of Canada, not the interests of that particular portion of Canada alone, but of Canada in general. We found the complaint freely made that the American people were acquiring a very large share, if not almost the entire control, of the business going into that country, so much so that even the leader of the opposition of that day (Sir Charles Tupper) was impressed with the urgent importance of having the railway put through, and declared himself in favour of that policy, and two years later confirmed the opinion he had in the first instance expressed in favour of an early and immediate construction of the line by the government, as a government work. So much for that argument of my hon. friend.

The hon. member for Lanark further argued that we had entered into a contract without any authority whatever of law. I recognize at once that, in all cases, legislative authority is necessary in order that the government may legally enter into any contract which involves a charge or burden upon the treasury. That is the essential requisite. Nobody questions that. The government has no power in itself, and can only get power to make a binding contract, one which can be legally enforced in the courts, from this parliament. My hon. friend went on to say that this government is in the habit of doing that continuously. He asked what the government had done with respect to the Murray Harbour Railway, and he went on to say that, without any authority from parliament, the government extended the contract which had been given for a portion of the line to another portion. It must be plain to any one who considers a moment what the hon. gentleman has been contending for, that he is confounding a constitutional Act with an Act by legislative authority. He is confusing what the government may have authority to do, such as, when an appropriation has been made, to enter into a contract without inviting public tenders, with the case before the committee. There is no similarity whatever between the cases. The hon. gentleman cannot show it because it is not true, that with respect to the contract made by the Department of Railways and Canals for the extension of the Murray Harbour Railway, that contract was not made by authority of law. There was an appropriation, and the only question that can be raised is whether or not that contract should have been extended without again inviting tenders. Hon. gentlemen opposite are quite free to contend that we should have invited tenders. But it is a totally different proposition to say that we entered into a contract without the authority of law, because we had the authority of law in the appropriation authorizing us to carry on the work.

This question no doubt is an interesting one. The hon. gentleman can readily recall his own acts. These will throw some light upon it and help my hon. friend to reach a sound conclusion. He will remember his own act when he gave a contract to Hugh Ryan & Company for the purpose of constructing and putting in valves and other works for the filling and emptying of the Sault Ste. Marie canal. My hon. friend had authority from parliament to do this because the money had been voted for the purpose, but though he had the authority of parliament to do it he did not ask for tenders. The hon. gentleman handed the work over to Hugh Ryan & Company. Nobody was invited to tender. No one was given the opportunity of saying whether he could do it any lower than Ryan & Company. My hon. friend exercised his discretion, and no doubt he took the authority of his colleagues in council and they approved of the contract, and it was given. Does my hon. friend say that the contract made with Mr. Hugh Ryan & Company was not, under the circumstances, a contract made by the authority of law. He cannot do it. I would be very sorry to say that because it is not the case. All the same, he did not ask for tenders, and that case is on all fours with the Murray Harbour Railway case.

I could give a number of instances for the information of my hon. friend which are parallel to the present one. Let me give him a stronger case, the case of the contract which he entered into with Mr. M. P. Davis for the erection of the Sheik's island dam, to cost near half a million. Mr. Davis was not entering into competition with any one when he got that work. He got it from my hon. friend without competition at all, and there was no calling for tenders. My hon. friend talks about this government extending this contract to the contractor of the Murray Harbour Railway as though nothing of the kind had ever happened before and as though it outraged his sense of what was proper.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I invite him to distinguish between the case of the half a million or four hundred thousand dollar contract which he gave to Mr. M. P. Davis for the building of Sheik's Island dam and the case of the Murray Harbour Railway work, which he condemns so unhesitatingly.

My hon. friend can do so if there is any possibility of distinguishing between them, but I think he will find it more difficult than he seems to think. It is an interesting question. I could furnish my hon. friend with a number of similar instances which would occupy his consideration, and he might probably be able to tell us wherein the contracts were perfectly legal in the one case and absolutely null in the other. It is germane to this subject, because my hon. friend has dragged in this Murray harbour affair for the purpose of pointing the argument against us in connection with the Mackenzie & Mann contract, to show that the Mackenzie & Mann arrangement was in line with the policy we were in the habit of pursuing. While I am upon this point, I wish to say a word with regard to the general question of inviting tenders for public works. I do not think there has been any department of the government, either under the present administration or under the former administration, in which there has been fewer cases of contracts being given without public competition than in the Department of Railways and Canals during the past five or six years. But cases will occur, and may properly occur, in which that may be done. If the people and parliament have confidence that the government and the minister will only take that course when the case justifies it, and when the contract is a proper one for such treatment, why should not the public interest be furthered, as it often may be, by placing the contract for work of this character in the hands of a responsible man? Some people fall down and worship the idea of publicly inviting tenders for every contract, as though that alone would secure the best results for the country and for all concerned. But that is not my view. I do not think that is a position which one who has had any experience in public affairs would feel called upon to adhere to. I think if it were the ideal and the only proper way in which contracts could be given by the government, it would have been followed in that country to which we all look for what is wisest and best in the administration of government. But they do not follow this course in England. They very rarely, so far as I can learn, publicly invite tenders. If they want competition among men for any particular service, they privately notify chosen parties by sending circulars to them, and from the tenders received they chose the man who shall receive the contract. But they do not by any means bind themselves to give the contract to the lowest tenderer even then. Nor are the cases infrequent, as anybody who has followed the subject must know, in which tenders are not invited at all. I believe that it is often the best and wisest course, where you have a man who is already carrying on a work who is responsible, and is doing his work satisfactorily, and at prices which are just and reasonable, to give the contract for any extension of the work decided on. It is better that such a contractor should be permitted to continue —better for the government and for all concerned. I think that one of the last things that any man who has had experience in these matters would wish is that a contract which he has to let should fall into the hands of incompetent people, people who know nothing about how to do the business, but who are ready to jump at every opportunity of getting a contract and who, very often, when they have a contract, do not know what to do with it. It is not at all the best thing for the government always to get the work done at the lowest possible prices. On the contrary, it is the best thing for the government that its contracts should be let at prices which are fair and reasonable and will allow a fair—not an exorbitant, but a fair—return to the contractors for the investment they make and the work they do. These are the conditions under which contracts should be let. Whatever the nature of the work may be, whether the construction of a railway or the putting up of a public building or other works of that character, the very greatest difficulty arises if the contracts get into the hands of men who are really undertaking to do the work for less than will give them a fair return for their labour, or is being done at a loss. With such people, you encounter trouble at every turn. You cannot have staff enough to see that such people do not evade you. They have every motive to do so, and sometimes even the motive of saving themselves from ruin; and they resort to all sorts of expedients for the purpose of evasion. If we were not opposed to one another here, some on one side of politics and some on the other, if we were not discussing this question from two sides of the House, there is no hon. gentleman who would not admit that the public interests will be best served by having contracts placed in the hands of responsible people and at prices that will give the contractor a fair return while being also satisfactory to the government. So, I say, I do not admit at all that cases may not properly arise in which the action should be taken which was taken. I do not criticise the action taken by the hon. gentleman—I have no doubt he has good reasons for recommending it to his colleagues. But cases will arise in which it is necessary for the government to take this course in the public interest. Now my hon. friend has not given to this committee, it appears to me, by any of the arguments he has presented, any reasons why this item should not pass. He has admitted that it would be a great hardship for these people to be called upon to bear this loss, and that parliament would not be willing under the circumstances, that these people should bear the loss. With the best intentions and with the fullest confidence that parliament would ratify the arrangements made, and yielding to the strong opinion which was entertained in the country that something must be done immediately for the Yukon, this work was proceeded with. People were rushing in there, and predictions were freely made that fifty thousand people would go in during that season. These people had no means of carrying with them sufficient food to maintain them for any lengthened period. So, it was necessary that, as speedily as possible, easy means of transport should be provided by which the needed supplies could be carried into that country. The government were aware of that necessity. Not because they wanted to act hastily, or because they felt they were acting hastily, but because they felt the responsibility resting upon them, and that failure to do what was best would lay them open to criticism and condemnation, they took this means to insure, to the utmost extent of their power, the providing of the best means of communication at the earliest possible moment. The contractors guaranteed us that by the end of September there would be a railway to Lake Bennett, and that at the earliest possible moment we should be able to get through that otherwise impassable barrier the supplies that were needed by the people who were rushing into that country.

Mr. MACLEAN. I am not going to argue with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) whether party government is a failure or not, or whether public competition should or should not be abandoned, both of which principles he supported in the address he has just made. But I would like to ask him a question which is pertinent to the subject under debate. Did the government as a whole or did any member of the government—and if so, which one—give instruction to Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann to go on with this contract and incur this expense pending the ratification of the contract by parliament? That question has been asked two or three times and we have not had an answer yet.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The question which my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) asks is a perfectly fair and pertinent question. There were no specific instructions given by the government or any member of the government to the firm of Mackenzie & Mann, or any of their agents, to proceed with this work before it should be ratified by parliament, that is to say, no member of the government gave specific instructions.

Mr. MACLEAN. Were there any general instructions?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No general instructions, no instructons at all.

Mr. MACLEAN. Then the contractors proceeded of their own notion?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. But first I want to refer to the question which the hon. member for Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has brought up. I desire to say to my hon. friend that he seems to be very anxious that the constitution should be observed in all respects. I think it is very creditable to the hon. gentleman that about once a day he points out the necessity of sticking to the constitution. There need not, however, be any haziness upon the constitutional question involved in this contract. Every member of parliament, I apprehend, without being a lawyer, understands exactly what the position is in that respect. The government have no power to make a contract which binds the country, nor have they any power to expend any money, nor have they any power to incur a liability which the country is bound to pay without the sanction of parliament. That is sufficiently evident, even in the circumstance with which we are dealing at the present time; because the government could not pay the amount without a special appropriation of parliament.

But while the rule is abundantly clear and not to be disputed by any person, that contracts cannot be made without the sanction of parliament or without parliamentary authority in the shape of an appropriation, yet that rule is subject to exceptions. While I am not desirous of going over the ground which was gone over at such wearisome length when this contract was under discussion in parliament, I may simply refer to the fact that it is well recognized that in some cases the government does, in the exercise of its functions as a government responsible to parliament, decide that it will take the responsibility of departing from this well recognized rule. If we were a government such as, for instance, there exists in the United States, where they have a President bound by the limitations of a written constitution, such a thing of course could not occur, because the president could have no authority, and could not be justified in taking such responsibility. But inasmuch as our government is differently constituted we have the power of taking that responsibility upon ourselves, being bound to account to the House of Commons, from which we derive our authority, for the exercise of the power that is vested in us, and bound to account for the step which we took in incurring that responsibility. We took the responsibility because we thought that circumstances demanded it. It would be a wearisome waste of time to undertake to go over the circumstances which were discussed in this House, I think more lengthily than any other subject which has been debated since I have been a member of it. But we did take the responsibility of deciding that this action ought to be taken, and we caused this contract to be executed.

Now, for my hon. friend's question. No specific instructions and no general instructions were given to the contractors to proceed; but every member of the government perfectly understood, and the contractors perfectly understood, that they were expected by the government to proceed, because the very terms of the contract—if my hon. friend will take the trouble to look at it again—necessitated the contractors proceeding immediately to expend a large sum of money if they were to fulfil the terms of the contract and the obligations which they had entered into with the government. So the question whether there were or were not any specific instructions given to the contractors, is of no account whatever in endeavouring to arrive at the merits of this question. Undoubtedly, Mr. Chairman, the contractors were perfectly justified, in so far as their relations with the government were concerned, in proceeding with the work. They perfectly understood that the government expected that they would go to work and put themselves in a position to fulfil this contract, and they could not possibly have done that if they had not anticipated the meeting of parliament by taking the action which required the expenditure of a very considerable sum of money.

Now, as to whether it was wise that the government should come to the conclusion that circumstances were so urgent as to require this departure from the regular usage, is a question in regard to which we are quite prepared to take our stand, and to accept the responsibility before this committee, before parliament, and before the people of Canada. My hon. friend will, I think, admit that some of the circumstances, at least, would assist in justifying the government in coming to the conclusion that there were circumstances of peculiar urgency. Suppose that some time about next September or October, some very peculiar set of circumstances should arise, which, in the opinion of the community, seemed to demand special action, and my hon. friend the leader of the opposition should come to a member of the government who was particularly charged with dealing with that special emergency, and urge upon him to take special action in regard to it, to take it immediately, without waiting for a meeting of parliament, then I think that we would be justified in assuming that there were some grounds at least for supposing that a strong case of urgency had been made out. It is within the knowledge of hon. gentlemen, I think, that while that contract was under discussion Sir Charles Tupper, then leader of the opposition, came to my house and urged that the contract should be made; and when I said that the terms were under discussion and that the government had difficulty in agreeing upon the terms, the expression of Sir Charles Tupper was that it was not necessary to stand so much on the question of terms, but that time was the important thing; that the question was one of extreme urgency, and we should act at once; that the contract should be made for the construction of a railway. And by what route ? By the Stikine route, by the very route which we were adopting at that time. And the hon. gentleman, who then occupied the position that my hon. friend the leader of the opposition now occupies, then and there joined hands with the government in the action which they took in that respect. Surely, Mr. Chairman, we had a right to expect that the honour and good faith of the Conservative party were pledged to us in that undertaking, surely we had a right to expect that a man of his years, and experience, and high position, having come voluntarily, of his own motion, to a member of this government for the purpose of suggesting the very action which was taken, would not allow himself to be put in the position of swallowing his own words, dishonouring himself, and going back upon the position he had just taken. I think, Sir, our hon. friends upon the other side of the House have placed themselves in a very invidious position, when, knowing that their leader had gone so far as to indorse the position which the government had taken, they practically took him by the throat and in broad daylight, before the whole people of Canada, compelled him to swallow his own words, to dishonour himself and the Conservative party in this House, as he did upon that occasion. There is at least fair ground, I think, for the suggestion that the case was one of urgency where the responsible leader of the Conservative party in this House went so far as to pursue the very extraordinary course that he did, in coming and urging upon the government the very course which the government afterwards pursued.

I am far from undertaking to justify the action of the government by anything that was said by the then leader of the opposition. The government does not require to go behind the leader of the Conservative party or any member of the Conservative party for the purpose of justifying its action. The government is prepared to take the responsibility of its action ; and if hon. gentlemen opposite are prepared to take the responsibility before the people of Canada, for the present position of affairs in the Yukon territory, then this government is prepared to take the responsibility of paying $328,000. We will take our share if hon. gentlemen will take their share, which they have placed upon themselves.

Now, after the firm of Mackenzie & Mann had gone on in good faith—and I apprehend from the tone in which this claim has been discussed that our hon. friends on the other side are not disputing the righteousness of paying the claim, or paying whatever may be found to be a proper amount, but after that contract had been executed, and the firm had gone on and expended their money in good faith, the contract, as the members of the commitee are aware, was thrown out by the Senate at the instance of friends of the Conservative party. After the contract had been drawn up and the operations had been called off, the members of the contracting firm came to the government and explained the position in which they were and asked what redress they were to have and how their claim was to be recognized. The government came to the conclusion, that it was a fair and proper thing that the firm of Mackenzie & Mann should be paid the actual moneys which they were out of pocket, not any profits upon the operation, not any damages for the failure to ratify the contract, but the actual amount of money which the firm were out of pocket in consequence of the operations which they had undertaken for the carrying out of the contract which they had made with the government. I make that statement clearly and definitely so that this committee might understand exactly what the government decided to do. We decided, that, under the circumstances of the case which the members of the committee are perfectly familiar with from first to last, it was fair and reasonable and right that the government of Canada should pay to these contractors the actual amount of money which they were out of pocket in connection with the carrying out of the contract insofar as they had gone. Then the question arose as to the adjustment of these moneys, as to the proper ascertainment of the amount which the government should pay. They were told to file their claim with the Railway Department and that their claim would be considered. They filed their claim with the Railway Department and the officers of that department examined and audited the accounts. The government had no other way of arriving at the amount which should be paid except by referring the claim to the proper department of government where were officers skilled in the examination of such accounts and knowing thoroughly well whether the figures, the items, the prices which had been submitted to them were just, or reasonable, or proper. That is the only way in which the government could proceed in the adjustment of these accounts. We did proceed in this way and the accounts were sent to the Railway Department and they were audited by the officers of the department. I am not familiar with the names of the officers who audited these accounts. They were sent there and under the direction of the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) they were placed in the hands of the proper officers and audited. The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) says that the award of the judge of the Exchequer Court agrees with the amount which had been agreed upon between Mackenzie & Mann and the officers of the Railway Department. This is not a correct statement of the facts. The officers of the Railway Department made no agreement as to any amount with Mackenzie & Mann, nor did the government make any agreement as to any amount with Mackenzie & Mann. The officers of the Railway Department had no authority to make any agreement. It was the business of the officers of the Railway Department to make a correct audit of the accounts that were placed before them and to report to the minister the result of their examination.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The officers of the Railway Department went out to that country, made an investigation as to the goods, materials and supplies which they had on hand.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was not aware of that, but I know that the greatest care had been taken, because, at the time, the government took the position that the most careful overhauling of these accounts should be made, because, as hon. gentlemen have said, and as the government quite agree, the amount was very large, much larger even than we had any expectation it would be. What the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) should have said was that the finding of the judge of the Exchequer Court proved that the officers of the Department of Railways had properly audited the accounts. That is what the finding of the judge of the Exchequer Court proved. After the examination had taken place by the officers of the Department of Railways and Canals and after they had reported as to the amount which they found these accounts totalled up to, and which constituted their finding upon the claim which was filed there, we were in this position : Should we bring that claim to parliament, or should we accept the finding of our officers, the officers of the Railway Department, or, should we require some further examination of these accounts? We were quite aware that parliament would required that the utmost care should have been exercised in connection with the auditing of these accounts.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Before the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) proceeds from that point was there not an agreement or understanding between Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann and the Department of Railways and Canals as to the prices or the amount ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, there was no arbitration, none whatever.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not that I ever heard of.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am not saying that there was an arbitration. Was there not a settlement between the representatives of Mackenzie & Mann and the officers of the Department of Railways and Canals as to the prices, the amounts, and the reductions ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, not in the Department of Railways and Canals.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We decided as a government that Mackenzie & Mann should be paid the moneys which they had properly expended in attempting to carry out this contract. They filed a statement of their account, we sent it to the Department of Railways and Canals in order that the officers might decide as to what was the proper amount. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) asks: Was it agreed? If he calls it an agreement that when the contractors filed their accounts in the Department of Railways and Canals the officers decided what they were willing to recommend and allow, then, that was an agreement. That was exactly what the accounts were sent there for, but the officers did not agree that the amount should be paid. The officers were in the position simply of auditors for the purpose of making an audit. As to whether that amount should be paid or not, or whether a smaller amount should be paid, was a matter respecting which they had nothing to do, and the government was in no way bound by the result of the examination which they made. I was going to say that we fully recognized the facts that this House would not take it as reasonable that they should be asked to sanction a payment of this character unless a very full and thorough examination of the accounts had been made. Therefore, after the audit had been made by the officers of the Department of Railways and Canals, in order that there could be no possible question about the amount, in order that there could be no possible suggestion that the accounts were cooked, or that they were padded, or that it was unfair, or unreasonable that any of these accounts should be paid, we sent the accounts to the judge of the Court of Exchequer for the purpose of having his findings upon these accounts.

It is upon the finding of the judge of the Exchequer Court in review of the result of the examination of the officers of the Department of Railways, that we bring this amount before the committee for the purpose of being authorized to pay it to these people. I cannot conceive at this moment of anything more that the government could do for the purpose of getting at a fair adjustment of this account, and I venture to say that hon. gentlemen upon the other side of the House will not in the course of the discussion be able to suggest anything further that the government could have done, or that the government ought to have done for the purpose of adjusting this account, than that which we have done already. We have endeavoured to protect the treasury, we have endeavoured to protect the public, we have endeavoured to protect this House in every way, and in the only way which was open to us. Under these circumstances, so far as the question of the amount is concerned—although it is large upon the face of it; larger perhaps than any of us anticipated—yet we are not in a position to say that it is not a fair and reasonable adjustment.

What is the position therefore in which we are placed as a government in connection with this matter? It is, that we decided upon a certain line of action at a certain time, and that we took the responsibility of taking that action. We were burked in our endeavour to carry out that project by our hon. friends on the other side of the House, who, not having a majority in the popular Chamber amongst the representatives of the people, sought to prevent us from carrying out our wishes; sought to prevent the majority in this House from having its own way in regard to the handling of the public property of this country, by having the Bill thrown out in another place. So far as we are concerned we are prepared to accept the responsibility of our action. I venture to say that hon. gentlemen upon the other side will not find as time goes on, that their position in connection with this transaction will be regarded by the people of Canada as flattering to them. If this transaction had been allowed to be consummated as it was intended it should be, we should have had a Canadian railway to the Yukon Territory; we should have had a railway which we would have reached in the first instance by means of a stream over which we have the right of navigation, and we should have been able to reach our own territory by a Canadian route. The scheme of that railway contemplated an extension to a port in British Columbia, and if the first section of the road had been built, undoubtedly the second section would have quickly followed, and long before this we should have been enjoying the benefit of an ocean port in British Columbia, from which we would have running a railway over Canadian soil which would have enabled us to reach the Yukon Territory without crossing American territory. That would have been the position in which the country would have been placed to-day. It would not have cost the exchequer of this country a single copper, and as to the importance of it, I may say that during that very session or the next session of parliament, we had the admission of the responsible leader of the Conservative party, when he stood upon the floor of this House and actually suggested that this government should propose legislation under which we should provide that that very same railway should be built out of the public funds of this country at an enormous cost. That is the position which the Conservative party committed itself in parliament at that time.

But what are the conditions at the present time? Instead of a Canadian railway and a Canadian sea port, and a Canadian trade, what have we got ? If our friends opposite think that the present position is a satisfactory one and that it flatters them, I wish them all possible joy of it. We have at the present time a territory rapidly developing, in which there is a great and growing trade; a territory which we absolutely cannot reach, speaking in a commercial or economic sense, except over territory which is occupied by the American people. We are absolutely in the hands of the American people in regard to our dealings with our own territory there. At the present time the steamboats which run from the ports upon the Puget Sound to Alaska are making it almost impossible for the Canadian boats to carry on business, and this government has an application before it from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company asking for assistance to enable them to maintain their line—the only Canadian line upon the route —because they are subjected to such unfair competition from the Americans. That is the position in which we are in respect to shipping. So far as trade is concerned, if hon. gentlemen opposite will look at the returns they will find that a vast proportion of the trade is done by the Americans. Upon the upper Yukon it is altogether in the hands of the Americans. The large commercial companies are American companies, and by reason of the fact that we have to pass through American territory, and that we are handicapped in every respect in connection with that trade, it is almost impossible for Canadian merchants to compete upon fair terms with their rivals there.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, leaving out of sight for the moment the question of trade, we are in this unfortunate and humiliating position, that we cannot send a policeman or a soldier into our own territory without that policeman or soldier taking off his uniform and asking leave of the American government to cross American territory. That is the humiliating position in which we are placed in the Yukon Territory by reason of the action of our friends on the other side of the House. More than that, we cannot take a prisoner from Dawson city to a penitentiary in the older portion of Canada, because we would have to take him through American territory, and we would be liable to be called upon to surrender that prisoner, and would be called upon to surrender that prisoner if we attempted to take such action.

Now, Sir, in connection with that country we are placed in a most ridiculous and humiliating position, and we are placed in that position by reason of the action of hon. gentlemen opposite who have forced us to it, or else to incur the enormous expenditure of the building of an all-Canadian road out of the public funds. But further, the action which was taken at that particular time had this effect. As the right hon. the Prime Minister has said, there has been a railway charter to run from the town of Skagway, known as the British Yukon Railway, but now popularly known as the White Pass Railway. It is a fact which is well known to many members of this House, that the promoters of that railway were in the city of Ottawa waiting to learn whether the Mackenzie & Mann Railway Bill would pass or not before they should ask their friends to subscribe a dollar for the purpose of constructing the White Pass Road. They waited in this city until they found out that the Senate had determined to throw out that Bill, and so soon as that action was taken, they went to work and got the money to build the road. And if that Bill had not been thrown out; if the Mackenzie & Mann charter had gone through, then the White Pass Railway could never have been built, because its promoters would never have risked a dollar of investment in that road. What is the result to-day ? By the throwing out of the Mackenzie & Mann charter the construction of the White Pass Railway has been made possible, and the existence of that road makes it an economic impossibility almost to get any money upon a commercial basis for the purpose of getting another railway constructed over Canadian soil. We are therefore in the unfortunate position, that unless and until the trade of that country would justify the government of Canada in making enormous sacrifices for the purpose of getting a railway in there, we shall not have a Canadian railway, and we shall be in the unfortunate and humiliating position of doing everything practically by the leave of our American friends. I am bound to say that so far, our relations with the American government in respect to the right of way and passage across the strip of territory at Skagway, have been of a reasonable and satisfactory character. But there is no member of this House who reflects for a moment who cannot see the difficulty of the position in which the Dominion of Canada is placed, by having access to its own territory only by permission of a foreign power. I have only to say in conclusion on this point that so far as the government are concerned, they regret that they are called upon to ask the committee to pay this sum of money; but they have no reason to doubt that the position they took at the time in connection with this enterprise was correctly taken, and we adhere to the opinion more strongly even than then that the Bill which we placed before parliament at that time was in the public interest and should have been passed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the estimated cost of a railway such as was proposed by this contract ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not an engineer's estimate by me or I would be happy to give it to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. OSLER. I do not propose to discuss the question of the constitutionality of this payment, or whether it should be made in the way proposed. But, considering it on ordinary business principles, I thoroughly approve of the payment to Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, the contractors, of whatever amount is found to be fairly due to them, they having expended money under a contract that was entered into by them in good faith with a government having a very large majority at their back. I think that any contractors are justified under these circumstances in immediately making a large expenditure of money, and I think that the government and this House should pay them whatever is properly due to them for that expenditure. It may be that the government are not going about the matter in the right way. It may be that the amount settled upon is not the right amount. That, I should gather from what I have heard of this discussion, is quite open to question. It is evident that the amount which the Exchequer Court awarded was an amount that had been arrived at between the government and Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann before the accounts were submitted to the Exchequer Court.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, no.

Mr. OSLER. Necessarily that is the only inference that can be drawn, because the amount fixed by the Exchequer Court is practically the precise amount that the government had agreed to before submitting the case. It is quite evident further that there was very little if any investigation into the accounts by the Exchequer Court. There was practically no evidence whatever taken in regard to those accounts. That is quite plain from the fact that the total amount asked from this House in connection with fees and disbursements is only a little over $800. I do not pretend to be able to say from the discussion whether the amount awarded was right or was not right, but I for one am of opinion that the principle of paying what these contractors expended in good faith under such a contract is one that ought to be approved of by the House and carried out. As regards the contract itself which the hon. Minister of the Interior has attempted to defend, I think it was a very vicious one. The statement which the hon. Minister of the Interior makes in reference to Sir Charles Tupper has, so far as I am aware, been heard for the first time in this House to-night. That statement, I venture to say, would not have been made if Sir Charles Tupper had been present, but would have been contradicted by him flatly and emphatically. It is a statement that was never made when that gentleman was in this House. It is quite true, Sir Charles Tupper said at that time that it was a wise thing to build that railway, but the terms of the contract were denounced by Sir Charles Tupper, as they were by every other member on this side of the House, and as they were denounced by every man in the country who looked into them. But let us go further. It is the duty of those who assume the responsibility of government, if they meet with difficulties, to find a way out of those difficulties. But what steps did the government take when the Bill which they introduced was defeated by the Senate? Did they do what men would have done if they were in earnest—at once set to work to carry out the object which they had in view and which they said they approved of? No, they dropped that Bill and they shirked all attempts to re-enact the measure, knowing that their own followers and the country would not for one moment have endorsed the carrying out of another contract. If the condition of affairs is as humiliating to-day as the hon. Minister of the Interior says it is, what is to prevent the government bringing in a Bill for building another railway on somewhat similar terms? I do not suppose it will be denied for one moment that much more favourable terms could be obtained to-day than the terms which were then given.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We could not get as favourable terms to-day.

Mr. OSLER. You could get a contract to-day on terms so much more favourable to the government and the country that there would be no comparison between the two. If that contract at that time was worth the enormous grants of land and privileges given to Mackenzie & Mann, it is worth very much more to-day. The terms of that contract were such as outraged the sense of justice and fairness of this country and the government dropped as quickly as possible all further reference to the Yukon Bill. What have we seen this session? We have seen a contract, less in value to the extent of its being less in scope and volume, but similar in its terms, made with the private firm of Messrs. Treadgold & Barwick—a contract quite as outrageous in its terms as the Yukon contract; and what happened in regard to it? As soon as the governor of the Yukon came down here and remonstrated with the government, and advised them that there would be a revolution in the Yukon if it were carried out, the objectionable terms were cancelled immediately. Why were those terms given? They were given either without any knowledge of what was being given away, or for some purpose, because the moment the outrageous terms of the contract were brought to the attention of the government those terms were withdrawn. I say that if the railway which the action of the Senate prevented the construction of, was as important as some members of the government now assert, the government could now have that railway built on much more favourable terms than those of the Mackenzie & Mann contract.

They have a Senate which is practically favourable to them now, and they need not fear that it will throw out their Bill. I have not been long enough in the House to make the statement with authority, but I venture to say that, if there ever has been a case, it is extremely rare, when the Senate has thrown out a Bill twice. Why did not the government re-enact the Yukon Railway Bill? Because the Bill was so vicious, because the contract was so inadvisable, and so much against the interests of the country, that they dared not re-enact it. I did not intend to discuss any subject beyond the actual policy and principle of paying this money, and would not have done so had it not been for the defence made by the hon. Minister of the Interior. As regards the payment of money to Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, if the amount has been arrived at fairly, and is fairly known to be what was expended, I believe that the government should pay it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) has talked to us about the humiliating condition in which this country finds itself on account of the action of the Senate in rejecting this contract. He does not seem to understand in what a humiliating position he has placed himself and his colleagues by the statement he has just made. He says that the Canadian trade has been lost to that country and that a great many evils have befallen the Yukon on account of the action of the Senate in throwing out this Bill. I asked him, how much it would take to build the railway, and he did not know. What was there to prevent the government from building the railway itself that same year if it had desired?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would have cost a great deal of money.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They were deterred by the expense. They were willing to place this country in the humiliating position in which he says it is, because they were afraid of spending the money. Well, I have no doubt that it would have been a great deal cheaper for us to have built that road ourselves than to have had it built by Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, under the proposed contract. But whether the sum required to build it as a government road be great or small, this government had the responsibility cast upon it of dealing with the matter; and if the facts are as the hon. the Minister of the Interior has stated them, this government has failed in its duty in not having brought down an appropriation for that purpose. These hon. gentlemen are on the horn of a dilemma. Enther we are not to trust the statement of the hon. the Minister of the Interior, or if we do, this government has been recreant in its duty in not having provided for the building of that railway by a public grant and appropriation and in not having done the work itself if necessary. I would like to know how the hon. gentleman is going to get out of the difficulty. The government did not seem to want a railway into the country. I recollect myself that when a company asked for a charter, the government laid down the policy distinctly, in rejecting the measure proposed, which did not call for the expenditure of a dollar of public money, that while they were considering the whole subject they would not give any charter to parties to build a railway, and they had that charter voted down. They adopted that policy because they said they were considering the subject. They took a whole year to consider it. Why did they not come down the next year with a proposition to build a railway if its construction was of so much importance? Why did they allow four years to pass and a condition of things continue to exist such as has been described by the hon. Minister of the Interior to-night? The hon. gentleman, instead of placing in a humiliating position hon. gentlemen on this side, who have no power to deal with the subject, has placed himself and his colleagues in a most humiliating and extradordinary position by the statement he has just made.

I agree with my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Osler) that, so far as this claim is concerned, it ought to be paid. It is the government we are censuring for their conduct in connection with this contract, and we are not objecting to the payment of the claim of Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann.

There is another thing I would like to say to the hon. the Minister of the Interior, and it is this, that when Sir Charles Tupper was face to face with him in this House in 1898, when this matter was discussed for a month, and when Sir Charles Tupper was face to face with him in the session of 1898, and in the session of 1900, it is most remarkable that the hon. Minister did not take occasion, in any one of these sessions, to make the statement he has seen fit to make to-night about Sir Charles Tupper going to his house. These hon. gentlemen are very sensitive sometimes about statements concerning people who are absent. This matter was discussed, as the hon. gentleman has said, in wearisome detail in 1898, and I heard no such statement from him then as that which he has seen fit to make to-night. He has waited until Sir Charles Tupper was absent, to charge him with dishonour, to cast imputations on him, but he never saw fit to make any such charge when Sir Charles Tupper was present to defend himself.

There is just one more circumstance I would like to mention. The hon. gentleman said that the Conservative party threw out that measure in the Senate. Well, if all rumours be true—and we heard a good many on the subject at the time—there were a great many Liberal members here, who voted for that measure, under the stress of party discipline, who were as much opposed to it as gentlemen on this side. And if we are to believe what is told us by gentlemen in the Upper Chamber, some of those members exercised influence on the senators to have the measure thrown out, because although they felt compelled to support the government in this House, they felt that the passage of the measure was not in the true interests of the country.

It is not worth while for me at this day to go into a great many of the matters dealt with by the hon. Minister of the Interior, for the purpose of making party capital. So far as I am concerned, I think that these men should be paid, but at the same time I think that the government are to be censured for having entered into this contract in the way they did, and for not having waited until parliament could pass upon this measure before committing the country to the expenditure we are now called on to vote and pay over to Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have just a word to say in reply to some observations made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler). I do not know how my hon. friends on the other side can entertain the opinion, and repeat it in this House that the account which parliament is called on to pay is one which had been settled between Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann and the Department of Railways. Nothing of the kind has ever taken place, and such an assertion is purely imaginative.

Mr. BELL. Was there a report made to the government or the Railway Department by the officers of the department who investigated the accounts ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Here are the accounts themselves, presented by Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, and which have been audited again and again by the officers of the Department of Railways and Canals, and audited with great care.

Mr. BELL. What is the amount of the account ?

The PRIME MINISTER. About 302,000.

Mr. BELL. Practically the same amount as the award.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know what mysterious feature there can be in the fact that the accounts, which were audited by the officers of the Department of Railways and Canals, were found to be accurate, or about as accurate, by the official auditor. The claim was handed in by Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann to the government. It was audited again and again by the officers of the Railway Department. Items were eliminated, all the profits claimed by Mackenzie & Mann were eliminated, and after it had been audited, by the officers of the department, a judicial audit was ordered by the government. The judicial auditor went through it no doubt with great care, and I am surprised that any doubt should be passed on the auditor, Mr. Justice Burbidge, and that he should be supposed not to have done his work with accuracy.

Mr. BELL. The hon. Minister of the Interior has just stated that the judicial auditor sat upon the reference, and that the reference was the papers audited by the officials of the department.

The PRIME MINISTER. Does my hon. friend find fault with that ?

Mr. BELL. The auditor simply dealt with those figures.

The PRIME MINISTER. If the judicial auditor was satisfied, if he had sufficient evidence in the record to dispense him from calling for other evidence, will my hon. friend insinuate that Mr. Justice Burbidge had not acted properly ?

Mr. BELL. No.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend says that because Mr. Justice Burbidge did not seek other extraneous evidence, therefore some doubt must be cast on his audit. I do not know what evidence he should have sought. I am content with believing that since Mr. Justice Burbidge has reported that a certain sum was due, he must have found evidence in the record to justify such a conclusion.

Mr. BELL. The right hon. gentleman said, in the course of his speech, that the judge of the Exchequer Court acted simply as an auditor.

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly.

Mr. BELL. Therefore he dealt with no other documents than those presented here. Was there any interest included in the award ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. BELL. If you add a reasonable amount of interest to the $300,000 you will come pretty close to his award.

The PRIME MINISTER. What fault does the hon. gentleman find, then, if Mr. Justice Burbidge finds that the claim presented to him was correct in amount that he should say so ? If he found that the amount claimed was the amount due, what fault does the hon. gentleman find that he should so declare it ? Why, he could not do anything else. And I presume that the character of Mr. Justice Burbidge will satisfy every hon. member that the work was properly done; and, since he has reported that the claim is correct in amount, every hon. member of this House ought to be satisfied so far as that is concerned. Now, I come to the statement of the leader of the opposition a moment ago. He found fault with the government for refusing to allow the passage of another charter for a railway to communicate with the Yukon. So we did. But why? Because this charter if we had granted it would have been the means of establishing communication with the Yukon through American waters, and we should have no relief, so far as having a national railway is concerned, from the position of having to communicate with the Yukon through American territory. The reason was that we would not again complicate the settlement of the boundary question which we have enough difficulty in settling already. The hon. gentleman says also that we did not bring in a new measure for a railway after this one had been defeated. Sir, there was all the difference in the world between building a railway to that part of the country in 1898 and building it afterwards. When we asked parliament to sanction the contract which we had made with Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann for the building of a railway from Telegraph Creek to Teslin Lake, there was no railway between Calgary and Lake Bennett. It is a matter of fact, unfortunately, that the best line of railway to communicate with the Yukon country is by way of Skagway. That is the shortest line. Before 1898, contractors could have been induced to put money into the enterprise, because there was no rival to compete with them. But after a shorter railway to the Yukon has been built, as it was in the summer of 1898, everybody realizes that to build and run a line of railway from Telegraph Creek to Teslin Lake would involve a very much larger expense. My hon. friend said that the terms we offered to Mackenzie & Mann were extravagant. On the contrary, I venture to say we might offer the same terms to-day, and there is not a firm of contractors who would accept them and build the road. In 1898, we were told on the floor of this House that we were giving to Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann an enormous area of gold-bearing territory. The fact is that over that whole space of country not a single discovery of gold has been made ever since, outside of Klondyke Creek, except that last winter there was a discovery on Stewart river. But in the parts where we gave Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann the option to locate their claims, not a single discovery has been made. And I venture to repeat what I have just said, that no firm of contractors would to-day accept the contract on the same terms as those given Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann. Had the contract gone through at that time they would have had a monopoly, whereas now they would have to compete with the American railway which has a monopoly. These are the reasons which have prevented us up to this time from asking parliament to sanction the building of that railway. I venture to say that we may have to propose a project of that kind at a future time. We cannot remain very long as we are, dependent as we are upon the good-will of the American people to give us access to our own country. The position is not only humiliating, but, as stated by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, it is dangerous and dangerous in the extreme. Why, last year, we were told that there was a conspiracy about Skagway on the part of some American desperadoes to 'rush' the country and take possession of it. There was such a conspiracy. It did not amount to much, I am glad to say. But, with the character of the population there we do not know when attempts may be made to 'rush' the country and take possession of it. And we are absolutely helpless. If we are to send men to that section, as was stated by the Minister of the Interior, we have to send them as civilians, they cannot go through as a military force. We have almost to smuggle them into the country. This is a most alarming position, and one which we must ask parliament to remedy. And when that proposal comes before parliament, then parliament will realize what an egregious mistake they made in 1898.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. leader of the opposition was exercised by two things. The first was that I should put myself in such a humiliating position as to say that the country is suffering from the lack of a railway, and yet that the government should not bring down a Bill to construct that railway. I venture to say to my hon. friend that if he should have the good fortune to sit upon this side of the House, he will find that there will be a great many things that would be of service to the country and for the want of which the country might be said to be suffering, and yet he will not be able to bring down an appropriation to parliament to furnish them. That is the position we are in with respect to many things in the Dominion of Canada. We know that the Dominion of Canada is suffering to a very considerable extent by reason of the fact that there is not an all-Canadian railway to the Yukon district. Yet, we are not prepared to take the responsibility of recommending to parliament a sufficient appropriation for the construction of that railway. That is a very plain and reasonable and intelligible position, and I am quite unable to agree with my hon. friend that, in any respect whatever, the statement of that position places me or any member of this government in a humiliating position. My hon. friend is further exercised by the fact, as he believes it to be, that I would not have made the statement with regard to Sir Charles Tupper calling upon me or saying what he did to me upon this matter, if Sir Charles Tupper had been here. I did not hear what my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Osler) said, being unfortunately, unable to hear him very well when he addresses the House, but an hon. friend beside me tells me that the hon. member for West Toronto took the same view as his leader upon this subject. My hon. friends are forgetful in this debate of many circumstances, and they are particularly forgetful of the debate which took place on this very question. Members of the House will remember what I said to Sir Charles Tupper who then led the opposition, when he made his famous somersault upon this question and, at the dictation of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), allowed himself to be compelled to swallow his own words and to do what was directly contrary to his own judgment, because the hon. member for East York and those who were with him thought they could gain a small party advantage over this government by that course. It is not necessary that I should have Sir Charles Tupper here to refer to a fact which he has admitted himself. If the hon. leader of the opposition will take 'Hansard' of 1898, and refer to the report of my remarks when the subject of this Yukon Railway Bill was under debate, he will find in the first place, that I called attention to the fact that Sir Charles Tupper had taken this somersault on this question and I said he had done it not in accordance with his own judgment, but because he had been dragooned into taking it by hon. gentlemen on that side of the House. Then I went on to quote an interview with Sir Charles Tupper himself in the 'Mail and Empire' newspaper, and hon. gentlemen will find it on page 572 of the 'Hansard' of 1898. I said:

> The authenticity of this interview is vouched for by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), the gentleman who, in the Conservative party, fills the role of private detective and regulator of the party leader.

I do not know whether he fills that position in regard to my hon. friend who leads the opposition at present.

> It appears that Sir Charles Tupper was asked by the correspondent of the 'Mail and Empire' to state his views regarding the arrangements the government had made. This is what he said:
> He stated that the route chosen is the best that could have been selected. 'When I was in the west,' he said, 'I made inquiries, and I reached the conclusion that Canada ought at the earliest possible moment to have communication with the Yukon. I impressed it upon the British Columbia government that it should co-operate with the Dominion government to secure the construction of a link between the Stikine river and Teslin lake. At Winnipeg I declared that the undertaking was a necessity, and when I returned to Ottawa I went immediately to Mr. Sifton. I impressed upon him the absolute necessity of opening up the route to secure Canadian trade.

Hon. Mr. SIFTON.

Mr. MACLEAN. There is an imputation throughout this debate that the Senate of Canada did a wrong thing in throwing out that Bill. Sir, if the Senate of Canada ever justified its existence it did so in throwing out that Bill. Hon. gentlemen have an idea and they are always formulating it, that because they control the majority of this chamber therefore what they say ought to go in parliament. But the parliament of Canada is made up of this chamber associated with the other chamber, having equal authority, and associated with it also is the Governor General. What rules in this country is, not a brute majority of one party in this House, but it is ultimately public opinion that rules; and the public opinion of this country on that occasion was voiced by the Senate who threw out that infamous proposition.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Where was public opinion in 1900?

Mr. MACLEAN. Where will public opinion be on the 29th of the present month, in the province of Ontario? But the Minister of the Interior, who has just left his seat, has never got over the soreness he felt because his pet project was thrown out of this parliament and was condemned by public opinion. He could not get public opinion to endorse it to-day, and therefore he cannot bring it in. It still remains a sore point with him that in some way the Conservative party, through its leader, was committed to that proposition, and because he didn't get the support he expected, he could not put it through. The government of this country has come to this, that they cannot bring forward any measure without its being in some way endorsed by the Conservative party before hand. If they want to undertake any great railway project they first try to get the endorsation of the opposition, and then they bring it forward. Now, that has come to an end. The government, or at least certain members of it, have a great proposition in connection with the Georgian Bay ship canal, and in an insidious way a petition was circulated on this side of the House, and they tried to dragoon this side of the House first to give support to the proposition. Now, we are not here to do business in that way. I resent the doctrine that is laid down here to-night, and a great cry is made over it, and we hear a lamentation made before the country that the project fell through because they could not count on the support of the leader of the opposition. All that must end. The government must come forward with their proposition supported by themselves, and they must assume responsibility for it. We hear to-night that their scheme failed because it was not supported by the opposition. Sir, their scheme failed because it was a bad one; their scheme failed because it meant the giving of an enormous amount of territory to a private company who proposed then and there to exploit the London market with a $16,000,000 or a $20,000,000 proposition ; and if that agreement had been sanctioned and had been exploited on the London market—and it had actually been underwritten—there would have been the greatest Yukon scandal the world had ever heard of. The country would have been disgraced. We never would have got a railway, or if we had, it would have been a railway at the mercy of the Americans, just as hon. gentlemen have said that the present scheme puts us at their mercy. If there was an all-Canadian route independent of American territory, hon. gentlemen never had the courage to bring it forward, because they knew it involved too large an expenditure. I say to-night in face of the whole country that if the Senate of Canada ever gave a reason for its existence, it did on that occasion. There are times when public opinion can only find its expression and its outlet through the Senate, and it did find its outlet there on that particular occasion.

Mr. SPROULE. I consider this question as one of the most important that ever came before this parliament. It is important because it involves a radical departure from the well understood principle of constitutional government, the principle that the executive are responsible to parliament and parliament is responsible to the people. In this particular case the executive incurred a very large and unwise expenditure before parliament was consulted, and within a few days of the meeting of parliament. The reason given for their justification is that of urgency. The contract was entered into nine days before parliament met because, as they said, the case was an extremely urgent one. What has taken place since then to justify the plea of urgency) Have we seen any of those direful results taking place that we were told would take place if this contract was not sanctioned ? Not by any means. We were told that it was necessary to build this railway immediately because we could not get our soldiers in there, and there was danger of an insurrection. Have there been any signs of an insurrection ? Have not the North-west Mounted Police been able to make life and property just as safe there as in any other part of the Dominion ?

There is no evidence to indicate that there is the slightest trouble, but there is evidence to show that peace and harmony prevail there and that the authority of the Canadian parliament has been maintained the same as it has been maintained in all the other provinces of this Dominion. Therefore, I say, that the argument advanced on that ground has no force. In the next place, it was said that we would lose the trade of that country and that the trade would go entirely to the United States. I would remind hon. gentlemen that one of their own friends made a statement inside of the last year in regard to the trade of that country, if my memory is correct, in the city of Toronto before a commercial audience, which was something to the effect that of the trade of the Yukon to-day, about 60 per cent is done by Canadians, that the goods which are supplied to the people of that country are Canadian and English to that extent, and not American. Therefore, so far as that argument is concerned, there is nothing in it. It has not been verified. These predictions have not been verified, these forecasts have not come true and these prophesies have been unfulfilled. The next thing was that the people were crowding in there in such large numbers that they would likely die of hunger and starvation, because provisions could not be got into that country. How many people have died of starvation on account of not being able to get provisions into the country ? We have never heard of any difficulty in that regard. After the charter was thrown out by the Senate, people went about their ordinary avocations just as they had done before. They had plenty of provisions, there was no sign of starvation and they continued in the enjoyment of the luxuries of life. This was one of the strong reasons urged why it was desirable that parliament should pass that Bill. As none of these forebodings or prophesies have been verified, and as none of them are likely to be verified, we are justified in saying that when parliament threw that Bill out at that time parliament did right. But, the government are doing a very improper thing, and for another reason. What is it ? I say that they are violating one of the well understood principles of constitutional government in entering into specific contracts, giving orders to go on with these works, and incurring expenditures which undoubtedly the country will be called upon to pay without parliamentary assent having first been sustained. I do not blame the contractors for asking for an indemnification for what they have lost. The government were instructing, either by implication or direct authority and advice, these contractors to go on and make heavy expenditures and in doing so they knew that parliament would be called upon to indemnify them in the event of the contract not being ratified by parliament. It was not ratified, and we find this condition of things that we have here to-day. Our constitution never contemplated it, it never authorized it, it is contrary to free parliamentary government, and it confers no right upon a minister to do what the hon. Minister of the Interior did at that time. Therefore, these hon. gentlemen are violating a well understood principle of constitutional government, which above all things ought to be sacred, not only in Canada, but in every other colony in the British Empire. But, they are doing more; they are establishing a very bad precedent, a precedent that no doubt will be taken advantage of in the future by designing parties who wish to get claims before the government, by parties who desire to make money and who can find a government weak or servile enough to co-operate with them in entering into a bargain—I will not say that it would be a collusive bargain, but a bargain which they know parliament will not ratify, because, when they see proceedings of this kind taking place, and a precedent of this kind established, they will know that they would be justified in coming before parliament and asking to be indemnified, not only for every dollar they have put into the undertaking, but for the interest on their money, and for the costs which they have paid to the lawyers who have conducted the case for them. Such a precedent is bad on the face of it in Canada or in any part of the British Empire. Yet, we have lived to see the day when the Reform party, the party which above all others have always professed a desire to live up to the well known principles of free constitutional government, will depart from the principles in a most radical way, at the same time establishing a very bad precedent in the country. We are adopting a very bad precedent, a precedent that may work any amount of trouble and injury to the country in the future. To-day, we are asked to go it blind in this matter as to the amount of money to be voted. Hon. gentlemen have said that this question has been submitted to the Exchequer Court, but what information has been given to the House as to the question that was submitted to the Exchequer Court? If it were the sale of a dog, involving a transaction of $2, as much trouble would have been taken to see that the transaction was a fair one as has been taken in regard to this transaction involving $328,000. They submitted the accounts to the Exchequer Court that were received from Mackenzie and Mann, they were looked over by an officer of the Department of Railways and Canals, who was instructed, no doubt, to prepare a report on them which would be submitted to the House, and which would be of such a favourable character as to justify whatever action the government took upon the claim, but they gave no opportunity for the opposition to analyse it in such a way as to determine whether we are justified in voting this amount or not. In looking over the accounts carefully, I came to the conclusion that the government have taken no more interest in this account than they would in a transaction involving an expenditure of $100. They submitted the question to the Exchequer Court, and the judge was to report his judgment, but the court was not asked to determine the legal standing of the parties, or how far this country was liable or responsible for this transaction, how far the country was called upon to indemnify the contractors for the loss they had sustained. That question was not submitted to the Exchequer Court or to any other court in the country. No effort was made to appeal from the decision of that court to a higher tribunal. The government claim that they have taken the ordinary course, but if this had been an ordinary contract, if advertisements had been published and an invitation had been given to contractors to submit tenders, and the contractor who had secured the work had a claim of $200 or $300, or $3,000 for work done under his contract, the government would have submitted the claim to the Exchequer Court, and if an adverse decision had been rendered by the Exchequer Court they would have appealed it to a higher court. Did they do so in this case? No, they accepted the judgment in silence, and they paid no more attention to the matter than if it had been a claim involving $100 or $200. They did not take it to an independent tribunal with the view of determining the legal rights of the contractors who were applying for this large amount of money, or the legal liability of the country to pay it. They simply submitted the claim to this House and asked this House to ratify it. Then, there is something behind all this yet that seems to be of a very important character. When the Bill was before this House, and when it was considered and forced through the House by the majority that the right hon. leader of the government and his friends have at their backs, and it went to the Upper House, and after being carefully looked into, that house decided that the bargain was a very bad one, they decided that the reasons given as a justification for the passing of that Bill were not good, they decided that it was an attempt to exploit the domain of the state unwisely and imprudently, and they decided that a young Napoleon had floated one of his transactions on the country that would not bear the light of day, and the result was that they threw the Bill out. But, now, we are asked to vote the sum of $328,000 to indemnify these contractors. What say have the Senate whether that shall pass or not? They were the portion of this parliament which prevented the Bill from passing; they threw it out.

The Senate has no say as to whether this item shall pass or not, because if they reject it they could only do so by rejecting the whole Supply Bill, which they would not do, and so this procedure on the part of the government has wrested from the Upper Chamber the power to pass judgment upon this matter. I do not blame the company for preferring this claim against the government, but I blame the government for giving them instructions to go on with expenditure under that contract. And although the government have hedged very adroitly upon that question I have no doubt in my mind that they gave instructions to Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann to go on with the work. Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann are too astute to be guilty of the blunder of spending even $100, if they had not a well understood agreement with the government that they would be indemnified if the contract was not ratified by parliament. I oppose this because it is in violation of the well understood principle that no expenditure should be incurred without the assent of parliament. In a matter of extreme urgency the government has power to raise money by Governor's General warrant, but in this case they did not dare resort to that expedient. We are told by the Minister of the Interior that we appealed to the electorate of Canada in 1900 on this question and that as a result we are in opposition. What was the result in the minister's own province? Were it not for the most bare faced corruption he would have come back here with but a single supporter from Manitoba. What was the result in the great province of Ontario that will be called upon to pay the largest share of this? The result was a majority of 16 or 18 members against the government, a clear and distinct condemnation of their action and policy. The Minister of the Interior tells us that he cheerfully accepts the responsibility for this action, and he intimates that the majority behind him will carry him through. Well, majorities have done many improper things in the past, and I have no doubt they will repeat it to-night. It is not the first time that the Minister of the Interior has done an improper thing and trusted to—I was going to say his servile majority—to carry him through. He is called the young Napoleon because he was willing to exploit anything which in the judgment of wise people would be regarded as unconstitutional and improper, and he does that because he depends upon his majority. We know that after the election of 1896 he illegally incurred the expenditure of public money in violation of all constitutional principles. He ordered an inquiry at the cost of the public treasury for which he had no legal authority under heaven. He did it because he depended on his majority, and therefore his statement that he accepts responsibility does not mean that his action was either constitutional or proper. He tells us that in this matter he endeavoured to protect the treasury, when as a matter of fact it is an act of piracy perpetrated upon the treasury. Why, the men who above all others should protect the treasury are the men who are burglarizing the treasury through their contractors in this scheme. There is nothing to show whether these accounts are correct or not. There is nothing except the statement of the contractors who ask that they shall be paid out of the treasury their claim and their costs and everything else.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman make that statement ofter having read the report of the auditor of the department. Does not the hon. gentleman know that the cheques, the accounts and all these documents were carefully looked into by the auditor and passed by him showing the actual outlay of cash made by these people.

Mr. SPROULE. What auditor?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The auditor of the Railway Department.

Mr. SPROULE. Ask my brother if I am a rogue.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. SPROULE. That is about the principle involved. The Minister of Railways knows as well as I know, that he has not a public servant under him that he cannot get to make an account to suit him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is very complimentary to the service.

Mr. SPROULE. Let me be well understood. I do not mean to say by any means that he would falsify an account, but I say he would go there knowing that the minister desired to have these accounts passed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He could not know anything of the kind.

Mr. SPROULE. Would he raise the objections he would raise if it was his own money he was handling?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has no right to say that Mr. Shannon knew the minister wanted to have these accounts passed. The minister wanted nothing of the kind. The minister wanted a proper audit made of them. The minister had no communication with Mr. Shannon at all. The instructions went to the Deputy Minister and by him were communicated to Mr. Shannon requiring him to make a careful audit of every one of the items of that account.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, and the auditor knew well that his superior was committed to the payment of them. He knew that his government had made that unwise contract. He knew that his government had given such information to the contractors as justified their spending money with the implied understanding that it would be repaid. His auditor knew that very well. Therefore knowing that the government and his minister had that dilemma confronting them, would he be likely to do otherwise than try to get them out of it in the best way. I say he would not. Had that auditor an opportunity to analyse these accounts ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. How could he analyse them ? Could he go to every part of the country and see whether the expenditure alleged to have been made had been made, or whether the materials alleged to have been sold at the market price had been sold at that price or squandered ? How could he go into these questions sitting in his office in the western block ? The country would laugh at such a suggestion. There is not a business man in the country who would say that was a proper audit in any private transaction. He would go through a dozen courts before he would pay such accounts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let the hon. member ask the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals whether he believes that Mr. Shannon, who was in the department in his time, and whom he knows very well, is the stripe of man the hon. gentleman represents him to be.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not talking about the stripe of man he is at all. I assume that the work was done in every particular as it would be if the stripe of man was the highest possible in honour and integrity ; but he had not before him the available means of examining into these accounts, sitting there in his office.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He did not sit in his office. He went to the Yukon, the very place where the work was done and where the goods were got. He had all the money and all the time that was necessary to enable him to make a thorough audit.

Mr. SPROULE. How long was he at it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He was at it long enough to enable him to say that the report made was an accurate report from a close personal inquiry into all the items of the accounts.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister knows how long he was at it; why does he not say how long ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. SPROULE. I have nothing to take back at all, but something more to say. What had that auditor to do ? Place before me a thousand accounts, and I examine them. I see vouchers of payments that were made, and I put one beside the other and I pass them as all right. I do not know whether the accounts were cooked beforehand or whether two prices were paid. I do not know unless I take some means of ascertaining in order to satisfy myself. The hon. Minister of Railways says that the auditor went to the North-west. Yes, he went to the North-west and he examined certain accounts. Where did he examine them ? Did he bring before him the parties who were paid ? I say he was in the dark; and while I have no doubt he attempted to do his duty faithfully, it was utterly impossible for him, with the time at his disposal and in the way he did the work, to safeguard the interest of the country as a man would safeguard his own private pocket. We have endeavoured to protect the government, says the Minister of the Interior. Yes, we have endeavoured to protect the government—how ? By endeavouring to satisfy our friends that they ought to support us. What protection have they given the government ? They allowed the contractors to go on and operate under an unconstitutional contract. How have they endeavoured to protect the government? Only by keeping the majority behind them to vote them out of this dilemma. They have endeavoured to hide their tracks as much as possible, by keeping from the House the information it ought to have. When were these papers laid on the Table ? Only last week. We have not one-tenth of the information to-day that we ought to have. Where is the correspondence that passed between the government and the contractors and the correspondence that passed between the contractors and the parties who furnished the supplies ? Where is the information to show that those supplies were sold at the prices at which they are said to have been sold at ? How do we know that they were sold at those prices, or at lower prices? We have not this information, and in the absence of this information it is impossible for us to do our duty. The Minister of Railways says that we need a railway in that country very badly, and but for the action of the Senate in throwing out that Bill we would have it. I ask the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Railways why they stood in the breach for four years and refused to allow any other company to build a railway into that country if we need one so badly ? We have had two Bills before the Railway Committee, one of which I remember distinctly. The company asked to be allowed to go on and build the railway without an acre of land or a dollar of subsidy, and they offered to deposit $50,000 as a guarantee that they would begin the work within six months.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where was that railway ?

Mr. SPROULE. They offered to build into the country from Pyramid harbour and ultimately to extend the railway to British Columbia; but the government refused to accept that deposit and give them a charter; and they have refused not only that company, but other companies as well which have declared their desire and willingness to build a railway there without asking an acre of land or a dollar of subsidy from the government.

Mr. SCOTT. Was that to be an all-Canadian road ?

Mr. SPROULE. At first it was not; but ultimately it was to be. Was the road which was proposed to be built from Telegraph Creek to Teslin Lake to be an all-Canadian road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Not a bit of it. One end was to be in the United States, and you would have been obliged to make use of the navigation which would put you just as much under the power of the United States as if you went over a railway built in the United States territory; and it would not answer the purpose which the Minister of the Interior declared they had in building that railway. These hon. gentlemen have given no evidence that they want a railway into that country, or they would make an effort to get it. They have had companies knocking at the doors of parliament for permission to build a railway there, but they would not give permission. I have often thought they held it back for the purpose of using as an argument against the Senate the action of the Senate in throwing out that Bill. The Minister of the Interior will have to convince us in a different way that the government desire to have a railway built in that country. He went on to tell us of the wonderful bargain they had made, and the advantages they were to get from it. By that contract they were giving away all the gold land in the country. I heard an Englishman say in the Brunswick hotel at the time that Bill was before the House: 'If Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann make over to me by power of attorney the right to handle that scheme in the British market, I will make a fortune for myself and bring them back $40,000,000 of hard cash.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did you believe it ?

Mr. SPROULE. I did, because I knew the man to stand high in the financial world.

Mr. SCOTT. Does the hon. gentleman think the land was worth $40,000,000 ?

Mr. SPROULE. I can answer the hon. gentleman by telling him that the government would not sell the land for less than $10 an acre. That is the price they asked from the poor miner.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nobody ever asked $10 an acre.

Mr. SPROULE. Why did the government hold the land at $10 an acre and refuse to sell for less ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They did not.

Mr. SPROULE. They did not offer to sell it at less.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Nobody wants to buy it.

Mr. SPROULE. Why then make such a regulation ? Why not have said that you would sell it at a dollar an acre. I am justified in taking the valuation which the government themselves put on the land, and what does that valuation amount to for the building of the railway. I think it is $37,500,000.

Mr. SCOTT. I will stake my word to this fact that the government could not sell that land in any bulk for fifty cents an acre.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. gentleman a miner ? Has he been out there in the mining business ? Or, is he simply a newspaper editor in Regina. What does he know about it ? He knows no more than I do. What does the government know about it ? What does the Minister of the Interior know about it ? Why did the hon. Minister of the Interior recommend to Council the land should be valued at $10 an acre if it was not worth half a dollar an acre ? On what authority did he make that recommendation ? What, the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Scott) says to-day is the strongest condemnation of the Minister of the Interior and the government. They have not offered for sale or sold a single acre of mineral land in that country since that time at less than $10 an acre. I am therefore justified in taking their own valuation as the consideration they were giving that company. What were they charging the poor man for a royalty ? Ten per cent on the gold he took out, no matter how poor he might have been or how unable to pay it. And all they were charging this wealthy company was one per cent royalty. Taking all these things into consideration, we would be doing less than our duty if we did not raise our voices in the strongest protest against this transaction. It is a violation of the principles of constitutional government. It establishes a bad precedent, and for my part I enter my protest against it in the strongest possible language I can use.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am sorry that the right hon. leader of the government is out, because I wished to refer again to a statement I made as to an arrangement having been come to between the Department of Railways and Canals and Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann regarding the amount of the latter's claim, which statement my right hon. friend contradicted. I thought I remembered that I had seen in the papers laid on the Table some time ago some correspondence between Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann and the department regarding their claim. It seemed strange that the final claim of these gentlemen should amount to $302,-239.69 and that the amount recommended by the Railway Department is exactly the same. Mr. Shannon of the Railway Department went over the accounts and found that that was the correct sum due them. There is another thing which appears in the correspondence, and of which we have not heard before. These parties were entitled to the money they had expended on the road with interest. That was the understanding. That was the interpretation of the submission as given to us, but when I look into the account, as arranged between the department and Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, I find that they are allowed, in addition to the money they actually expended, nearly $60,000, or fifteen per cent on the amount they expended on the road. We never heard of that before from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals nor have we heard it from the right hon. the First Minister. I remembered seeing in the papers some correspondence between the department and Mackenzie & Mann regarding the amount due the latter. And perhaps I had better read the correspondence so as to put it upon record and in order that there may be no doubt about it in the future :—

TORONTO, July 18, 1899.

Leonard Shannon, Esq.,
Accountant of the Department of Railways and Canals, Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Re our account and claim for disbursements in connection with the Canadian Yukon railway matter. I beg to advise you that the claim against us of the Alberta Railway Company, amounting to $105,000, as set out and included in our account to you has been settled for the sum of $11,000. Our solicitor's fee and disbursements in connection with defence of suit and settlement of the claimants to $750 more, making a total of $11,750. Will you, therefore, kindly note that this settlement adjusts the whole account as follows :

Amount rendered you.. ..		$493,735 22
Deduct the Alberta Railway Company's claim including Edmonton above.	$105,000 00
Also 15 per cent on the above..	15,750 00	120,750 00
Total..		$373,035 22

The House will see therefore that in this claim for $493,735 there is included fifteen per cent, because when the $105,000 was deducted there was also deducted fifteen per cent on that amount, or an additional $15,750.

Add—

Settlement with Alberta Railway Company	$11,750 00
Also 15 per cent on above..	1,762 50	$13,512 50
		$386,547 22

Then there is a further letter :—

New rails and fastenings at Vancouver purchased for the Canadian Yukon contract.

We beg to advise you that we have disposed of these rails and fastenings for the sum of $83,270.43, less cost of checking out and superintending transfer at Vancouver, $150, leaving $83,720.43, which sum we have credited on the account rendered you as follows :

Balance of account advised you in our letter of 18th inst..	$386,547 72
Present credit..	83,720 43
Balance due	$302,827 29

Just the amount the department found was due, just the amount given by Mr. Justice Burbidge in favour of Mackenzie & Mann, and that includes $58,000, or 15 per cent advance upon the claim against the government, besides the interest which was awarded by the Exchequer Court. And I would ask hon. gentlemen to give me reference to the statute under which they referred the question to the Exchequer Court. Nobody seems to be able to answer this. But it is a very important question. We do not want the country to believe that a judgment was rendered by the Exchequer Court to pay this amount to Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, because, as I said before, this contract had a saving clause under which the contractors knew they could not oblige the government to carry out the contract unless they had the authority of parliament to enter into it. The contract was with that condition, a condition sine qua non, that it should be approved by parliament. It was submitted to parliament, and, rightly or wrongly, parliament refused to approve it. Therefore, the condition under which these gentlemen entered into the contract never arose, and they had no binding legal claim, as was admitted by the right hon. gentleman who leads the House. The only claim they had against the country and against the government, was an equitable claim which they could not enforce in law. That is the reason why I asked whether this was a judgment or whether it was an order, or what it was. It becomes evident now that the only thing that the government did was to refer the question to the judge of the Exchequer Court as a persona designata as to whether the account could be audited in a proper manner and was a proper account to be paid, supposing the government were bound in law to pay it. Moreover, the first thing the government did before submitting this to the judge of the Exchequer Court was to acknowledge its liability that this amount should be paid by the Dominion. Therefore, I object, and I say that the resolution should be amended. This resolution, if I may use the word, bears upon its face a falsehood. For, if there was no judgment, it is not a true representation of the facts to say that there was a judgment of the Exchequer Court. There has simply been a report made by Mr. Burbidge, it may be, by any other person, but not by a court. Therefore, I call the attention of the Committee to the fact that this resolution proposed to us bears upon its face a falsehood when it says 'to pay amount of judgment of Exchequer Court to Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann.' Why, the Committee cannot pass that resolution; the Committee cannot say that there was a judgment when it was admitted on all sides that there was no judgment and that there could be no judgment. I am in the judgment of hon. members who are of the legal profession when I say that no judgment of this kind could be rendered against the government in connection with this contract. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said himself, and nobody can deny it, that these gentlemen have no legal case against the government. At all events, this resolution must be amended so as not to make it appear that there was a judgment. Otherwise, what would happen? When hon. gentlemen opposite go upon the hustings to defend their policy in connection with this item, they will say: We were condemned by the judgment of the Exchequer Court to pay the amount. We had no discretion, for if we had not paid it, execution might be issued against us or other means taken to compel the government of the Dominion to pay the amount. But that is not a valid excuse; and it cannot appear in the resolution that there was a judgment when there was no judgment. If the resolution passes, as I think it will, it will have to be amended so as to read otherwise than as a declaration that there was a judgment of the Exchequer Court, when, by the admission of all the hon. gentlemen who have spoken, there was no judgment either by Judge Burbidge, sitting as a judge, or by the Exchequer Court.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) is to be congratulated upon making a remarkable discovery at this late period of the debate. He has read the item which goes to show that there was, in point of fact, a recognition of this claim and an acknowledgment that it had to be paid. My hon. friend tries to draw a very large conclusion from very limited premises. There is not a word in this paper that will justify any man of business, any man who has experience in affairs, in making any such statement as he has made. The claim was handed to the government by Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, and by the government referred to the Department of Railways and Canals for audit. The department was not asked to say whether the claim ought to be paid or whether any item of it ought to be paid.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But they objected to some items.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All the department were asked to do was to ascertain whether or not the items which went to show large disbursements for the purposes stated, had been made by Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann in connection with this business. The question was, whether the disbursements which these gentlemen claimed to have made for supplies, for freight, and other proper charges in connection with their preparations for the construction of this railway had, as a matter of fact, been made. Now, how would you go to work to ascertain that, preliminary to a decision as to whether or not you are going to pay it or pay any part of it? Mark you, the government had not declared, it had not come to any decision, as to what would be paid, whether the whole or any portion of the claim. The government simply felt, as several hon. gentlemen on the other side have said they would feel under like circumstances, that Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, having been induced by the government to enter into this contract, ought not to be left to pay the loss which has resulted to them from their endeavour to carry it out. Now, the auditor, taking up the claim item by item, examined it. What are these items? They are for material of all kinds, for supplies for wages paid to men, for moneys paid for all the purposes which will occur to the minds of hon. gentlemen as likely to be called for in connection with this undertaking. Now, how would the auditor satisfy himself upon that point? What ought he do to satisfy himself as to the correctness of the items? One thing you will say he ought to do—he ought to go to that portion of the country wherever it was, where the supplies were which had not been used.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What was the finding of the auditor. Tell us. Don't be all night about it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will pardon me, I will take as much time as I please, and if he does not like the fullness of the answer I give him, he will have to bear it with such patience and serenity as he can command.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the hon. gentleman do this—will he, instead of showing at great length what the auditor ought to do, tell what he did do?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is what we want.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am charmed with the clearness and acuteness displayed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox). It is not often that we have an opportunity of congratulating the hon. gentleman upon the clearness and lucidity with which he puts a point. But, had he been following me, he would not have felt called upon to interrupt me in doing the very thing which, with the clearness and astuteness of his intellect, he sees I ought to do.

Now I was proceeding to say that the auditor went to that country, he went to where these supplies were that had been purchased for the use of this railway but that were not used on the railway. He makes his inventory, and he compares the inventory which Mackenzie & Mann had given in this bill with the articles themselves on the ground; and he finds that it either corresponds or does not correspond with their inventory, as the case may be. He found that it did not entirely correspond, although it did to a large extent, and where it did not correspond the items were struck out.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the minister tell us in what respects they did correspond and in what respects they failed to correspond?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will read for the information of the hon. gentleman the statement which the auditor himself has made:

Sir, in accordance with your instructions I have personally made an audit of the account presented by Messrs. Mackenzie, Mann & Co., in connection with the Canadian Yukon Railway, and have the honour to make the following report:

I find that the vouchers submitted for the expenditures of each month, with certain exceptions to be hereafter mentioned, represent the amounts charged in the statement and are correct as to amounts, and that the necessary details have been given to enable a proper audit to be made. In nearly every case each voucher contains not only the receipt of the parties to whom money was paid, but also the retired bank cheque, which in itself is sufficient evidence of the money having been paid out. I found the following errors which I have altered to the correct amount in the statement, namely:

Then he enumerates a number of errors.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the amount of the errors?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Some are small and some are large. I will read it all to the hon. gentleman, if he would like to hear it:

Voucher No. 46, March, originally charged $816.50, but one account of $61.50 has been withdrawn, making the amount not charged, $755.

Voucher No. 29, June, should be $106.80 instead of $116.30.

Voucher No. 45, June, contains items to the extent of $120.30 which are also included in voucher No. 46. I have, therefore, reduced the amount to $161.25.

Voucher No. 47, June, returned as $138.50, should be $128.50.

Voucher No. 70, July, returned as $11,642.11 should be $11,632.11.

Voucher No. 10 and 11, December, for $100 and $630 respectively, are not yet paid, so these amounts have been transfered to the list of vouchers approved by Mackenzie, Mann & Co., but unpaid.

I also found in the pay lists submitted several sums amounting to $80. Twelve representing overpayments to men, and have accordingly deducted them, but Mr. Lukes representing Messrs. Mackenzie, Mann & Co., informs me that those items should be considered inasmuch as they were caused in all cases by the store account, and other charges against the men being in excess of the amounts earned, and not due to any clerical error.

After making the aforementioned corrections, I find that the actual amount of vouchers paid and pay rolls, including interest at six per centum per annum up to January 1st last, to be the sum of $317,767.65 which together with accounts approved but not yet paid amounting to $26,800.88, makes a total of $344,568.53, and with 15 per cent added by Messrs. Mackenzie, Mann & Co., $51,685.28, and less proceeds of goods sold as per statement of credits, viz., $34,362.09, makes a grand total of $361,891.72. In connection with this I would draw attention to the 15 per cent being calculated upon the sums of interest claimed.

In addition to the above, the statement contains accounts and claims in dispute to the extent of $114,890 which with the 15 per cent added makes a total of $131,893.50.

I also beg to draw attention to the nature of the following vouchers:

He enumerates the vouchers which he thinks ought to be brought to the notice of the department.

Mr. LENNOX. I presume the minister, having gone over these figures, can tell us what was the difference made by the auditor. It was a matter of less than $100, was it not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is really making a desperate effort to be sarcastic.

Mr. LENNOX. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS: Yes, he is making a painful effort, but he has not succeeded.

Mr. LENNOX. It is not painful to me, though it may be to my hon. friend. But can he tell us what was the total difference made by the auditor as the result of going over these accounts?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The total amount finally settled upon was $302,239. There appears to have been a claim for $510,422. There appears to have been credits which were afterwards brought in to the extent of $208,182. What the auditor did by this finding was to see that the disbursements which the company proved as having been actually made, amounted to $302,239. The very moment that the auditor came to that conclusion, Mackenzie & Mann, recognizing that the audit was fair and just, withdrew any larger claims they had, and preferred a claim for the amount which the auditor had declared to be proper, a very reasonable and proper course for these gentlemen to take. Now the hon. gentleman draws the inference that there must have been some collusion between the government and Mackenzie & Mann because the judge, when he came to examine into this matter and hear witnesses under oath, came to the conclusion that the amount which the auditor had passed upon was a proper amount to allow with the additional interest, whatever it might be. If the audit was properly made, and if the disbursements were truly shown, and it was proper to allow interest upon the money actually paid out, and something for services given by these contractors to the work, then the claim would be that allowed by the audit, and so the judge finally decided. This matter passed into the hands of the Department of Justice, and immediately upon the auditor's report being received, the claims, papers, reports and everything else went over to the Department of Justice. The Department of Justice made a recommendation to Council as to what would be a proper mode in which finally to have this matter determined, and Council was advised by the Department of Justice that a reference should be made—not a petition of right, because a petition of right would have to be founded upon a legal basis, but this was regarded as a claim of an equitable nature, rather as an application to the grace and bounty of the Crown than as the preferment of a legal claim founded upon a legally authorized contract.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It was not a judgment at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A reference was made to the judge under the Order in Council.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There cannot be a judgment except there be a suit. There was no suit, there was no petition of right and the hon. gentleman does not say there was. There was really no reference under the law as far as I can see. There was not even an award, and further the right hon. leader of the government said this afternoon that there was simply an audit of these accounts by Mr. Justice Burbidge. There was no judgment, there was no award, there was no decision.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Was there not a finding ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. No, there was no finding ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) is quite correct in saying there was no judgment of the court. I am prepared here to admit that the hon. gentleman is absolutely right ; there was no judgment of the court in which that expression can be technically used. There was a reference. No one wants to have the item appear in any other form than according to the fact. This matter was referred to the judge, the judge took evidence under oath, he examined witnesses, he heard what they had to say, and he came to the conclusion that the amount was properly made up, that these disbursements had been actually made and that, under the terms of the reference, $328,000 was the proper amount to pay.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The result of what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says is that the reading of this resolution is not correct, and the committee cannot decide that there was a judgment when there was not. The committee cannot say that this amount is the amount of a judgment rendered by the Exchequer Court. I would suggest that these words be substituted : 'To pay the amount due under the report of Mr. Justice Burbidge to Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann.'

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A rose by any other name would smell as sweet. I do not suppose that we need quarrel over the words. As a matter of fact the Order in Council distinctly states that this matter is to be referred to the Exchequer Court, that the judgment of the Exchequer Court is to be accepted, and the Exchequer Court does not appear to have taken any exception to the form of the reference.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am sorry to differ with the hon. gentleman, but I hold in my hand the statute which shows that there can be no judgment of the Exchequer Court because the statute says :

> The head of any department in connection with the administration of which any claim arises may, instead of referring such claim to the court for adjudication thereon, refer the same to one of the official referees for examination and report, both as to the matters of fact involved and as to the amount of damages, if any, sustained.

The statement which is made is that a decision has been rendered by the court in a case which has been regularly instituted by these gentlemen, Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann, against the Crown. This is important to this extent that if this question came up for discussion on the hustings, hon. gentlemen on the other side will get up and say that as this was a judgment of the Exchequer Court we had no discretion in the matter, but we had to pay it. I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite, whether, in view of the facts which have been stated by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and by the right hon. leader of the government, it is fair to put in this resolution that there has been a judgment of the Exchequer Court. I do not care what the reference, or what the Order in Council said. I am very much surprised to see that such an eminent lawyer as the hon. Minister of Justice should have drafted an Order in Council in the terms which have been mentioned by the hon. Minister of Finance because that would not be according to the law at all. This is a simple reference to Mr. Justice Burbidge and in this matter he is not even acting as a judge of the Exchequer Court but he is merely acting as a persona designata.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As to the question of the words, we do not attach any importance to them. I do not think the great public of Canada will see as clearly as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) does the distinction between a judgment of Mr. Justice Burbidge in the Exchequer Court and the report which Mr. Justice Burbidge has made in this matter. The fact has not been disputed that the duty of the court was simply to pass the accounts, and I think the great public will not see the distinction between a judgment of Mr. Justice Burbidge and a report of Mr. Justice Burbidge, but, that the public will see that this is the opinion of Mr. Justice Burbidge whether you call it a judgment, or a report, or a finding.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am sure that if the hon. Minister of Finance and myself were on the hustings discussing this question, he would be astute enough to take the position that this was a judgment of the Exchequer Court. I would not have very much to say because I would not be able to deny that, if this were a judgment of the Exchequer Court the government are bound by it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But, as the Order in Council distinctly declares that the liability is admitted, I would not put myself at the mercy of the hon. gentleman by making any such statement.

Mr. LENNOX. I think we are getting into greater difficulty by reason of the statement of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). He tells us that by the Order in Council it was referred to Judge Burbidge of the court of Exchequer to give judgment. If it is the case that no judgment has been given we are not in a position to treat of the matter at all, but I think we may take the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals as putting the matter in a fairly clear light, and keeping that in mind, I think the hon. Minister of Finance does not give the great public credit for the astuteness which it really possesses. I think the public will see a very broad distinction at once between a judgment of the Exchequer Court, as it has been pointed out by my hon. friend here (Mr. Casgrain), and the case as put by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. What I understand is that there had been an audit by the Department of Railways and Canals for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of the items, that they did go into the matter and did ascertain the correctness of the items and that for the purpose of verifying that further—if I understand the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals correctly, and I hope the hon. minister will not say that I am sarcastic in any degree——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are not now.

Mr. LENNOX. I am improving all the time. For the purpose of verifying that and for greater assurance and for the purpose of justifying the government in any action they might subsequently have to take they referred the matter to Judge Burbidge, as a persona designata. It might have been referred to any other well qualified person. He could corroborate by a report the amount arrived at by the audit that had been previously made. This is not a judgment and the public will apprehend that point if they get an opportunity of being seized of the facts and therefore it is important that what is suggested by my hon. friend on this side of the House (Mr. Casgrain) should be complied with.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will bring the trouble to an amicable end by proposing that the item be changed to read :

To pay the amount reported by the judge of the Exchequer Court on a reference made of the claim of Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann to recoup them, &c.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is satisfactory.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Knowing that it will be a great relief to my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) I will tell him that $10 an acre for land in the Yukon, except it may be choice land, is too much. The hon. Minister of the Interior tells me that in the Department of the Interior they have valued this land at a dollar an acre and that they find some trouble in disposing of it at that.

Mr. SPROULE. But mining lands are worth $10 an acre, and it was mining lands that Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann were to select.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of the Interior stated that the amount paid to Mackenzie & Mann was solely the cash they expended. I believed that at the time, but I find now that the amount awarded to Mackenzie & Mann includes $58,000 for remuneration besides interest.

The PRIME MINISTER. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I beg your pardon, there is 15 per cent allowed for remuneration.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Only 12½ per cent.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The amount claimed is $302,000, and if you add 15 per cent to that and costs, it comes to the award of the Exchequer Court.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. 12½ per cent is all that is allowed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The judgment is for $58,000 for remuneration.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is there a judgment ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The award or recommendation or whatever you want to call it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. 12½ per cent is allowed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. A few days ago the minister promised to bring down the amount expended on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway since he went into office, the quantity of miles of rail laid and the number of miles still unfinished. He promised that information before he would go on with the estimates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have here a statement showing the amount chargeable in connection with the Canadian canals, statement of expenditure of construction, cost of enlargement and total estimated cost to the 1st of May, 1902. I have also a statement here of the renals paid on the different canals. The deputy minister does not seem to have made a note of the other question. The information can be obtained, I suppose. I will hand these documents to the hon. member for Lanark.

Item, as amended, agreed to.

Rideau canal, $1,200.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I call the attention of the minister to the report of his officer on the condition of the Poonamalie bridge, and I would ask the minister to insert an item in the estimates to put that bridge into proper shape. The government engineer reports :

I can see no appearance of the bridge being damaged or shifted by high water as stated in the petition because it appears to be fairly in line throughout. It is of course in very bad repair, and in my opinion most dangerous for vehicles to pass. In fact, Mr. Snider said nothing to me about damage being done to the bridge but admitted that it was simply worn out by old age, and that their council had to renew it ; but that as the holding up of the water by the canal bank at Poonamalie lock necessitated an increased length of bridge, which is in my opinion true, they were for that reason praying the government to assist them to do so.

The engineer states the amount they were entitled to. Therefore I hope the minister will see his way to put a sum in the estimates to carry out the recommendation of the engineer as to the claims of the municipal council of the township of Elmsley.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is hardly a recommendation of the engineer. The difficulty we have had in making any allowance in respect to that work is this, that it does not appear that the bridge required to be renewed, because of our having raised the level of the water at that point ; but it does appear that the bridge requires to be renewed because it is worn out and decayed from old age. It is too late to put an item in the estimates this year, but I would be disposed to consider the matter for a future estimate.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is the minister not going to contribute to the additional length of the bridge rendered necessary by the raising of the water level ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If there is any substantial increase in the length of the bridge by reason of our having raised the level of the water I think that would be a fair ground for a claim; but I do not know that the length has been increased to any appreciable extent.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. All the council ask the hon. minister is that that portion of the work they have to do by reason of the raising of the water above the normal level of the dam shall be contributed to by the government. The amount which they say will be required to complete it is $1,000. The hon. minister's engineer says $900, and he says that a fair amount to contribute would be one-third of the cost, that is, $300. It is not worth arguing about.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot put it in the estimates this year, but I am willing to consider it for next year.

Trent canal—Rebuilding dam at Peterborough, $9,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I thought that was a new dam, which we built not long ago ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not finished yet. This is to finish it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Last year we had an appropriation of $12,000 which, with this vote will bring the total cost to $21,000.

Prince Edward Island—To increase accommodation at Charlottetown, $30,000.

Mr. BARKER. Will the hon. gentleman tell us whether any estimates have been prepared as to what the 31½ miles which he is constructing will cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The engineer has not got the estimate here. He has it at the office.

Mr. BARKER. Was the estimate prepared as a whole or in sections of 10 miles?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As a whole.

Mr. BARKER. When was that done ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He got it inside of last week.

Mr. BARKER. Then, no estimate was made before the contract was let ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not up here at Ottawa.

Mr. BARKER. Do I understand that the minister let the contract for these 31½ miles without knowing what the works would cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He had the calculation showing what it would cost, but he had not the engineer's estimate.

Mr. BARKER. I understand, from the discussion which took place on the 6th of May, that the contractor had a contract two years ago for 11½ miles, that that contract was let by tender, that since then recently the minister has let a contract for 31½ miles additional at the same rates ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. For the same class of work.

Mr. BARKER. How did the minister know whether these rates were reasonable or not ? How could he tell that the price per yard for earth cutting or rock blasting or anything else was reasonable without having an estimate ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He had the tenders for 11½ miles—for earth, rock and all the other items.

Mr. BARKER. Does the hon. gentleman suppose that the earthwork at one point of the railway must necessarily cost the same as the earthwork at another point. At one point it may cost 27 cents or 30 cents and at another 15 cents. How can he tell whether the price was reasonable for the 31½ miles unless he had an estimate ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had a total estimate.

Mr. BARKER. That is a most extraordinary way to make a contract.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It was a most peculiar contract. The first time I asked the Minister of Railways whether this work was let by tender, he said yes. I understood then that the whole work was let by tender from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour. On April 9th the question was asked in the Senate by Mr. Ferguson, whether the work had been let by tender, and the answer was that it had, but in the neighbourhood where the work is being done, it was believed that only one portion, 11½ miles, had been let by tender, and on the 1st May the Hon. Mr. Ferguson inquired in the Senate :

Whether it is the intention of the government to invite public tenders for the construction of the railway from Charlottetown to Murray harbour other than section 2.

If so, when will the notices for such tenders be issued ?

The Hon. Mr. Scott replied as follows :—

The answer sent me is as follows :—The department invited tenders by public advertisement for section 2 covering 11½ miles from Mutch's Point towards Murray Harbour and the contract was awarded accordingly to a responsible contractor, at prices which the engineers pronounced reasonable. The next section was continued at the prices for the work as settled under the first tenders, by Order in Council. The contract has been sent for execution by the contractor.

In reply to my question as to whether any work had been done before the Order in Council was passed, the hon. Minister of Railways said no, that the Order in Council was passed before the contractors had begun to do the work on the other sections of the road. But what are the facts ? Here is what Mr. Ferguson said in the Senate :

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is most extraordinary, in the face of the replies that were given across the floor of the House on the authority of the chief engineer of railways, that no work was being done on any section but No. 2, when now it appears that by an Order in Council the work was prosecuted on other sections of the road on the same terms as No. 2.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is right except as far as the date is concerned. After my hon. friend made the statement that work was going on, I called the attention of the Minister of Railways to it and he denied it, and I spoke to Mr. Schreiber about it. It appears the contractor went on with the approval, perhaps, of the local engineer. Subsequent to the statement made, on a report from the local engineer, confirmed by Mr. Schreiber, a continuation of the work was given beyond the 11½ miles to this contractor at schedule prices contained in the first contract.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is all right, but what becomes of the denials given by my hon. friend on the authority of the department, that work was being done by the government ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Evidently the department did not know the work was going on.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And it was done by Order in Council ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, he went on before the Order in Council. The Order in Council was passed, if my memory is correct, after my attention was called to it by my hon. friend.

What becomes then of the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways that the work was, in the first place, let by tender for the first 11½ miles, and then that a contract was given for the other 31 miles, on the schedule prices of the first tender and without inviting any competition. I need not go into the constitutional question, whether the hon. gentleman had the right to do this or not. There are enough sins against the government without charging it with anything more. But the hon. minister did what he had no right to do. By law he is bound to advertise for tenders for the construction of all these works. But the hon. gentleman does not seem to pay much attention to the law in these matters. However he extended the contract, and he told us that no work was done by the contractor until the Order in Council was passed. It appears now, however, that the contractor was doing the work by some one's authority, without the knowledge seemingly of the minister, and without any Order in Council having been passed. According to the hon. minister's colleague in the other House, he seems not to have known anything about this. The work, it seems, was going on without his knowledge, and it was only authorized by Order in Council when the attention of the minister's colleague in the Upper House was brought to the fact by Senator Ferguson.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has discovered a mare's nest. Let me tell him that the questions which he has asked and which have been answered, have been truthfully answered. The question he asked me, whether or not the Order in Council authorizing the giving of the second contract to the contractor, on the schedule prices of the first, was made before any work was done, I replied in the affirmative. I still say that it was.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Before the work was commenced ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Before any work was done on the extension. I am confident of that because that Order in Council was passed long enough ago, and I do not think that the contractors could possibly have begun the work before it was passed. Let me make a suggestion to my hon. friend. He has been during last summer with his hon. friend beside him (Mr. Barker) travelling over the Intercolonial Railway. The attention of these two gentleman has been given during the recess almost exclusively to the subject of the Intercolonial Railway. They travelled over the line, listening to all the stories they could hear, and they were convinced that when parliament was called together and when the Public Accounts Committee went into all these transactions, they were going to make a great exposure of wrongdoing. The minister was to be proved guilty of all sorts of transactions next to criminal. The air was blue with the predictions they made. They took a certain amount of comfort out of that. They were buoyed up during the recess by the confident expectation that something was going to happen disastrous to the government. as the result of their labour. Well, I would suggest to them now that they should proceed at once to Prince Edward Island and gather all the reports and information they can regarding the Prince Edward Island Railway, and let them buoy themselves up until next session with the expectation that they are going to prove any quantity of misdeeds. Let them go into the Murray Harbour transaction, sift it to the bottom, and make a great exposure of it. That is something to which they can devote their attention during the recess with great benefit. no doubt, and from their point of view, to the country . But it is rather late now to go into an inquiry of that kind. It is a thing which will keep. If everything is in such a deplorable condition. no doubt they will have abundant opportunity a year hence to make a reputation for themselves even exceeding what they have succeeded in establishing this session.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Did the hon. minister contemplate, when he began building the railway from Mutch's Point, 11½ miles south, to continue it to Murray Harbour ? If so, why did he not, when letting that part of the contract, let also the whole line ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was not intended then to carry it on so soon.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You only intended building 11½ miles then.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was very largely in the discretion of the minister on the island then, and he recommended that 11½ miles be taken up.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. As a business proposition, I should think that you would have intended building the whole section.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was a very serious question about the route, as to the direction we would continue. And that matter had to be looked into, as the hon. gentleman knows. That was the reason why only 11½ miles were taken.

Mr. HACKETT. I would say with regard to the building of these lines on the island——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Which one ?

Mr. HACKETT. Take the whole enterprise. It should not be dealt with as a number of small sections. If the hon. gentleman is going to build fifty miles he should call for tenders for that work. But I can understand why tenders were first called for this 11½ miles from Mutch's Point. It appears the hon. gentleman contemplated building only 11½ miles, but, since then, he has changed his mind and is building 45 or 50 miles, and is giving these parties an opportunity to build through the level section the grading of the railway, the ballasting and track laying, on the basis of a tender for 11½ miles. I think that is very unfair to the contractors in that part of the country that they should not be afforded an opportunity to tender.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But they had an opportunity.

Mr. HACKETT. On the 11½ miles, but not on this.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The small contractor could handle 11½ miles easier than he could 30 or 40 miles.

Mr. HACKETT. They had an opportunity to tender for the work in the most hilly part of the country——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Which is the most profitable for the contractor.

Mr. HACKETT. We know which is the most profitable. And if the hon. minister will consult his deputy and chief engineer, who built the railway in Prince Edward Island, he will learn how it was built around the hills in every direction, and it has cost the country over $17,000 within the last few years to strighten out those curves. Now, the hon. gentleman is building this railway through the country south of Hillsborough, the hilliest part of Prince Edward Island.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hackett) object to the location of the railway in this section ?

Mr. HACKETT. I am not objecting to the portion of the country the railway traverses. But I am objecting to the hon. minister giving the contract for building 11½ miles through the most hilly part, and then continuing the contract to the contractor for 31½ miles through a level section without giving others an opportunity to tender.

Mr. HUGHES (King's). Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hackett) say that it is easier to build the 31½ miles than to build the 11½ miles ?

Mr. HACKETT. I do.

Mr. HUGHES (King's). On what authority does he make that statement ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. On his own.

Mr. HUGHES (King's). I asked the hon. member for West Prince (Mr. Hackett).

Mr. HACKETT. I make the statement on this authority, that, in building the Prince Edward Island Railway, the line was run around the hills, and it has cost this country, as I say, almost $20,000 within the last few years to straighten out the curves. The hon. gentleman will understand that it is more difficult to make a straight line through hills and levelling up the valleys than to build it in a level country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But it is much more profitable to the contractor. So, the hon. gentleman is not making out a very strong case.

Mr. HACKETT. As the straightening out of these curves has cost the country so much one would suppose that the minister in laying this track for 11½ miles would lay it in a straight line through that section of the country, so that trains could be run without difficulty. If you gave a contract for this 11½ miles for a straight line through the hills levelling up the valleys, then it would be a different matter to get contracts for 31½ miles where you have a level surface.

Mr. HACKETT.

Mr. HUGHES (King's). Starting at Mutch's Point where would the 11½ miles bring you to ?

Mr. HACKETT. About to the ten-mile house.

Mr. HUGHES (King's). About to O'Neils. It does not pass the ten-mile house at all, but passes beyond it. The hon. gentleman does not know the location of the road. Has the hon. gentleman ever been over that road that he says it is a more level road from Mutch's Point to O'Neils than over the other part of the road ?

Mr. BELL. That is the very opposite of what he said.

Mr. HACKETT. Does the hon. gentleman understand that, in going from Mutch's Point to O'Neil's you go over Tea Hill ?

Mr. HUGHES (King's). No, you go east of Tea Hill. Has the hon. gentleman ever been over that road ?

Mr. HACKETT. I have been over it, I can assure the hon. gentleman, and I was down to Vernon river last summer.

Mr. HUGHES (King's). How far did the hon. gentleman go ?

Mr. HACKETT. To Murray harbour. And let me say that I think the hon. gentleman's interruption on this occasion has been quite impertinent.

Mr. HUGHES (King's). Now I make this statement, and I venture to say I shall be borne out by the engineers, that the latter portion of the road is more difficult to build than the former. The hon. gentleman stated that the first of the road was over a more level country.

Mr. BROCK. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, King's) is making a worse case for his friends.

Mr. HUGHES (King's). I mean, that the hon. gentleman said it was through a hillier country. But that was not in accordance with the facts. Does the hon. gentleman know the settlements through which the road extends ? They are Vigg, Kinross and Caledonia. And Caledonia, with the exception of de Sable, is the hilliest part of the island.

Mr. BARKER. And the hon. minister says that is where you can do the cheapest work.

Mr. HUGHES (King's). I am making my statement in contradiction of the hon. gentleman from West Prince (Mr. Hackett). He says that the 11½ miles was the hilliest section of the road and that the rest was a very level country, and I must say that that is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. BARKER. There is one thing that is in accordance with the facts—that the minister did find it expedient and proper, when he was constructing only 11½ miles of road to ask for tenders, and to receive them from four or five different contractors. But now that he is constructing 31½ miles he does not think it is necessary to call for tenders, though the statute under which he exercises his authority requires him to do it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We can go into that next session, when we have plenty of time.

Mr. HACKETT. I may say, in reply to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes), that I was over that section of the country last year. I drove through from Charlottetown to Murray harbour, and I saw the work that was being done as far as Vernon river. I want to assure him that my experience in driving through the country was that the most hilly part of it was between Charlottetown and Vernon river. From Vernon river to Murray harbour I found a more level country that I could drive through easily. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Hughes) cannot make it appear that there are mountains in that part of the country.

Post Office Department—Salaries, to provide for 3 additional second class clerkships, $3,500.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Those are promotions, one from a third to a second class, and the other two are for the outside service whom it was intended to transfer to the inside in connection with a change of work.

Provisional allowance, $180.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is for a clerk in the dead letter office at Victoria.

To provide for increases of salary for employees in the inside service not provided for in the main estimates, $2,260.

Mr. MONK. Like many other estimates, this appears extremely vague. Who are those clerks whose salaries are to be increased ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In the main estimates provision was made for all whose salaries were not over $800. At that time the officers had not gone through the whole list. This provides for statutory increases for all whose salary are above that should they be recommended for the fiscal year, and the fiscal year is not yet concluded.

Mr. SPROULE. I may as well take occasion of this item to refer to a question asked by the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson) with regard to the dismissal of the postmaster at Holstein. I have in my hand a copy of the information given to the hon. minister as to why he was dismissed.

Memorandum for the Post Master General in reference to the removal of the Postmaster at Holstein.

The Postmaster General is informed that complaint was made that the postmaster was conducting a public library in the room where the Post Office was located, and that looking after his duties as librarian conflicted with his duties as postmaster, causing thereby both delay and inconvenience to the public. It was further complained that the postmaster was not exercising proper care over mail matter, and that the public in going to the library had more or less access thereto.

This complaint having been referred to the inspector, he reported on the 11th of March, 1902, that the Postmaster was acting as librarian and also attending the public telephone, that he was also engaged in the grain trade, to which he devoted the greater part of his time, and that he found considerable dissatisfaction at Holstein on account of the public library being kept in the Post Office. In his opinion the Post Office is not a suitable place for such library. He also stated that during the time he was examining the accounts of the office a person called and asked for twelve books, that the person in charge left the Post Office work to look over the library to see if such books were in stock ; that at the same time the telephone was ringing, which also had to be attended to by the same person, causing thereby considerable confusion in the office. The Postmaster himself was absent from the office that day.

The inspector further states his opinion that the office was of sufficient importance to be separated distinct from the public library and telephone business, and that sufficient privacy for those depositing money in the savings bank and seeking money orders, could not exist under existing conditions.

Under the circumstances the Postmaster was removed on the 12th of March, 1902.

Now, I have here a copy of a petition sent to the Postmaster General with reference to that. I may mention the fact that this petition is signed by 151 parties who use the office, and I am told represents about leighty per cent of all those who use the office. It reads as follows :—

We the undersigned who are served by the Holstein Post Office have learned with most profund regret that our present Postmaster, W. T. Petrie, has been notified that the postmastership is about to be changed. We are thoroughly satisfied with the equipment and arrangement of the public library and telephone being in the post office building, and also that the service and accommodation are entirely satisfactory. And your petitioners do humbly pray that you reconsider your decision and leave the office and service in its present form.

The postmaster, writing a letter regarding this question, draws attention to the fact that in Dromore the library is in the post office as at Holstein, and no complaint appears to be raised. In several other post offices the same thing is done. I have personally known Mr. Petrie for many years. He is a most enterprising man in the community, enjoying the respect and good will of almost the entire community. He is a business man of many years standing and has done everything that could be reasonably expected to benefit the place and serve the public. I do not wonder that it is regretted, as this petition expresses it, that a change should be made in respect to a man who has served the interests of the public so long and so faithfully.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know that my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) expects me to make any observations as to the report of the inspector to which he has referred as a justification for the action taken. It is quite clear that the convenience of the public was not being sufficiently regarded in the management of the office. In the course of carrying on the department complaints were made, the matter was referred to the inspector and he made his report. I do not think the department could have done less than change the postmaster under the circumstances.

Mr. SPROULE. The office seekers seem to be satisfied that their interests are being very well served.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I know this office, I know the postmaster, and I know personally the service he has given to the community in that place. It is a pretty well known fact that a simple matter of keeping a village library in the post office is a convenience to the public. It is something to which there is no emolument attached, it is a gratuitous service to the public which is very much appreciated, I am sure, in this case. There is one thing in the inspector's report that carries with it great improbability, and it is the statement that somebody comes into that village library and asks for twelve books. It seems to me to be incredible unless it was arranged specially when the inspector was there that something of the kind should be done. Usually only one book is allowed out at a time, or two at the outside. I know how the library is kept and it does not require any one to go out of the office to see whether the books are in their places or not. I know Mr. Petrie is very highly esteemed by the community there and that the petition is, I am credibly informed, signed by 90 per cent of the people who are served by the office, irrespective of political lines altogether. It does seem somewhat strange, with a petition of that character presented, that no further inquiries seem to have been made, but that on this flimsy pretext, the postmaster is simply dismissed in order that a place may be made for a man who has been a very active politician and supporter of the government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is a matter that I brought to the attention of the Postmaster General some time ago, upon his estimates, in regard to the dismissal of two postmasters, one at Middle Musquodoboit, and the other at Oyster Pond Jeddore. Mr. Kaulbach, who was the postmaster at Middle Musquodoboit has written a letter in reply to certain documents which were brought down by the hon. Postmaster General, and which I sent to him. The letter is as follows :

Middle Musquodoboit, May 10, 1902.

R. L. Borden, M.P.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—In reply to the affidavits of Jno. A. Shaw and George B. Phalen, that I had previous to the general election, canvassed and tried to induce them to vote for the Conservative candidates I positively assert that the statements of these men are false ; that during the campaign I was from home looking after mining business and that at no time did I take any part other than using the franchise by voting. That the argument which was used to obtain the sympathy of the public here, was that I did not need it ; and that I had plenty of money without it. The petitions sent to William Roche, M.P., signed by both parties showed that I had been an efficient officer and the confidence the public had in me. I considered I had a right to reply to the charge, or an investigation would have been in order neither of which was given me.

I am, yours truly,
ROBERT KAULBACH,

This is simply another of those cases in which the Postmaster General has seen fit to dismiss men without giving them any opportunity whatever to reply to the charges made against them, and has acted upon ex parte statements without giving the officers of his department an opportunity to make a defence. I have a similar letter from Mr. David Mitchell, of Jeddore, who states that as far as political partisanship is concerned, he canvassed no man for or against the government, he was on no committee and had nothing to do with the elections.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Is the statement of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) there ? I do not remember the case. I sent the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) the particulars.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The documents that were handed to me in Mr. Kaulbach's case were two so-called affidavits of a very indefinite character, taken before a justice, not giving any dates or particulars, but making a general charge of political partisanship against Mr. Kaulbach, which he has denied.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In what constituency is that ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is in my own constituency.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Does Mr. Roche represent that too ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, Mr. Roche represents it also.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think there is some communication from him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Nothing from the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Roche) was brought down by the hon. gentleman.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I may be in error.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What I submit to the hon. gentleman is that it does not seem to be a very fair way of dealing with these men to dismiss them without even letting them know anything about the charges against them, and upon ex parte statements of this character, to dismiss them from their positions with a certain imputation upon their character without giving them an opportunity of making their own defence. I have put that forward in this House a good many times without any effect. I think it is absolutely unfair to the officers of the department to dismiss them for alleged political partisanship without giving them an opportunity of making their defence against these charges. I know that notwithstanding the pledge which was given by the right hon. gentleman who leads the government, the practice has been defended from the other side of the House of dismissing these men upon the statement of a member of parliament purporting to speak from actual knowledge. I do not think that the hon. member from Halifax (Mr. Roche) would pretend to have any personal knowledge of the alleged partisanship of these men, because they live a long distance from Halifax, where he resides, and he must, in any statements he has made, have had information given to him by other persons, so that the cases do not even come within those that I have mentioned. There is another difficulty in regard to the Jeddore postmaster, and it is that the people of that community are to be deprived of any opportunity to communicate to the outside world by telegram, because the only person who is capable of taking charge of the telegraph office there is Miss Mitchell, daughter of the postmaster, and it would not be worth her while to devote her attention to that work, as her father has been deprived of the post office. I have had a communication from a strong supporter of the Liberal party living in the vicinity, who has complained to me very bitterly in regard to this matter, and I think the hon. gentleman had better look into that and see whether the public are not likely to be inconvenienced very greatly by the dismissal of this man without any opportunity being given him of saying anything in his own defence.

There is another matter I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. gentleman, and that is that 21 petitions of right were filed three years ago and the fiat asked for, which has not been granted in regard to any of them up to the present time. We have had at least two cases this session where people have been offered fiats and have declined to receive them, and their claims have been submitted to the Exchequer Court, not on the question of legal liability, but on the question of what is fair and right apart from legal liability, and very substantial claims have been voted by this parliament upon the reports made under references of that kind. If the government see fit to grant references with respect to claims where there is no liability; on what ground does the Postmaster General persist in refusing petitions of right to these men who simply ask that claims against the Crown shall be adjudicated on in the Exchequer Court. Under a statute passed this session, the Crown has the right to exact security for costs from all these men, and whatever justification there might have been before—and I think there was none—there certainly is no possible justification now for refusing these men the right to have their claims decided on before a properly constituted tribunal.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In cases where the claimants have any substantial claims ; claims in good conscience as well as legal claims, I would agree with my hon. friend that a fiat should issue as a matter of course. But you have to look at these cases in order to see whether it is in the interest of right that they should be facilitated in proceedings against the Crown. It is rather late at night to take up the whole subject, but speaking generally what are the facts ? My hon. friend has not perhaps studied all the facts. Permit me to tell him that in the year 1895-96, the government—probably because they expected an early election or for whatever reason—proceeded to disregard the statute which governs the Postmaster General, and right and left they issued contracts for the carrying of mails in contravention of that statute which says that tenders shall be invited for mail service and the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer; but, that in special cases the contract may be renewed. The cases that my hon. friend refers to are renewals of contracts. Now, not in one instance is there a special circumstance so far as appears in the department to warrant entering into these renewal contracts. They were renewed not only without justification under the statute but against the interests of the public. I do not know whether the observations I am about to make apply in detail to each one of the twenty-one cases, but I am sure that an analysis of the facts will show that many of the cases fall within the class I am about to describe. Tenders had been invited in many instances by the late government and after their receipt sometimes opened and the amounts ascertained, and then disregarded, the contracts were let to the old tenderers at prices in some instances enormously in excess of the general average of prices for which the new tenderers were prepared to perform the contracts. In some instances tenders were not even opened and scores and scores of new contracts were let for services which had been advertised and for which there were tenders by the score in the department. In some instances contracts were let—and I believe one or more of the contracts referred to by my hon. friend—were let to the tenderers at higher prices than their tender. There are instances—and I think there are one or more among the twenty-one cases speaking from memory—where the old contractor put in his tender in the ordinary course for the new contract, and yet the government of the day chose to ignore his tender and let to him the contract at the original contract price, which may have been 50 per cent in excess of the amount of his new tender. These contracts, I submit, are not worth the paper on which they are written. There is no equity in their claims. If the contracts are good in law; if the statute does not mean what it seems to say, then it will be on the barest technicality they could recover. If they choose to disregard the right, and by their understanding with the government of the day or for whatever reason obtained improper contracts from the government, they have no claim upon the government to aid them, because they did not enjoy the full fruits of these improper contracts. Rather, they should be compelled to account for the portion of the excess they received during the currency of these contracts. It is incredible to suppose that in hundreds and hundreds of the simplest service that Canada affords, there were special circumstances that warrant the abandonment of the principle of inviting tenders, and yet that is what took place wholesale, and these cases are of that class. Under the circumstances there is no merit in good conscience in these claims, and the claimants have nothing to claim, but rather they should congratulate themselves that the government proposed to have the contracts treated as null in the first instance, and did not call upon them to make good to the Crown the excess of money which during the time they purported to render service, they received.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The doctrine laid down by the Postmaster General is absolutely subversive of the principle upon which petitions of right have been granted in the past. The Postmaster General in effect says: Because my predecessor was guilty of laxity in the public service, I will annul these contracts whether I have the legal right to do so or not, and I will refuse these men a fiat which will enable them to substantiate their claims in court.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The other party is just as guilty.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What other party?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The petitioner is a party to the wrong.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the petitioner is a party to the wrong; if this contract is not worth the paper it is written on, it is perfectly competent for the Crown to go into Court and say that. If the argument of the Postmaster General means anything it means that there was a conspiracy between these men and his predecessor in office to defraud the government. If that can be established in court, then not one of these men can recover. But the Postmaster General sees fit to judge these men behind their backs. He refuses these men the right to urge their claims in court, just as he refused the two postmasters the right to be heard in their own defence before he dismissed them. That is the position which the Postmaster General takes. I would be willing to leave it to the House and to the country as to whether that is a position which can be fairly maintained by any man who is desirous of doing right. If what the Postmaster General says, is true, then the government has nothing to fear because these men cannot substantiate their claims in court. If on the other hand these men are able to prove that what they say is correct, they have a valid claim against the government and they should have the privilege before the court of seeing whether they are right or whether the Postmaster General is right. But that right the Postmaster General denies them. He judges their cases himself and he deprives these men of that which every man in this country is supposed to have: The right to have his claim determined in a court of law by a proper tribunal, and after hearing both sides of the case.

Mr. HACKETT. I desire to bring to the notice of the hon. the Postmaster General a case which I brought before the House last session when he was away in Australia, and the acting Postmaster General could make no reply. It is the case of a man named Kehoe who had the contract for carrying the mails between Tignish and Mail Point. Mr. Kehoe was requested by the inspector of post offices in Prince Edward Island, Mr. Brecken, at the expiration of his term of three years or so, whether he would renew his contract on the same terms, namely, $30 a year. Mr. Kehoe said he would, and signed the bond in my presence, and entered into a new contract in accordance with the request of the inspector. A few days afterwards an order came from Ottawa that the mails were to be delivered to another man, Thomas Nelligan, that Mr. Kehoe was not the contractor. Mr. Nelligan has been carrying the mails for the last two years and has been receiving $50 a year for the same work that Mr. Kehoe did for $30 a year. I would ask the hon. Postmaster General if he has any knowledge of this matter.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am sorry to say I have no recollection of the transaction. I was not aware that it had been referred to in the House on a former occasion. If my hon. friend had intimated to me that he was going to bring it up I would have been prepared with a statement of the facts. But even at this late date I will endeavour to obtain such a statement, and if he does not receive it in the House I will send him a communication explaining what the facts are, and I feel certain that he will find it to be a satisfactory explanation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to say with regard to the post office at Holstein, that if inadvertently an injustice has been done to the late postmaster and also to the public who by petition have expressed their satisfaction with the service and their desire to have the post office conducted by the same man, in view of the fact that no irregularity has been found in the office conducted by him for many years, and that he had no opportunity of hearing the charges made against him or making any defence. I think the Postmaster General should at least make some further inquiry into the matter. This is a case in which a gentleman who has rendered good service to the public for many years has been suspended on short notice without any opportunity to defend himself, and the position given to a very active political partisan.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know what my hon. friend would suggest could have been done. It was a question of the proper management of the office, and the course pursued seems to me to have been a reasonable one. Charges were made, the proper officer was instructed to investigate he did investigate, and he ascertained that the public were not receiving fair consideration. The officer was conducting a telegraph or telephone business and a public library and was also engaged in the grain trade, so that the public were not receiving reasonable service. If the public are to be considered, it seems to me that it was a case calling for a change of postmaster. The inspector was at the office and saw for himself what was going on there. The postmaster, or his assistant, or his people were there. A new officer has been appointed, and I suppose the transfer has taken place, so that new rights have arisen. I see by the papers that the report was made early in March last. If so, the new officer has entered on his duties. He has his rights now, and it will be quite impossible to undo what has taken place.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I understand that it is a very common thing to have a telegraph or telephone system conducted in a post office. The emoluments are so very small in these offices that these businesses have to be combined for the convenience of the public. As to the other little matter of keeping the village library there, only five miles away a village library is kept in the post office and no complaint is made, and I do not believe there would have been any complaint in this case if it had not been got up by a few people who were opposed to the postmaster. I know that he is a popular man. I believe that this petition asking that he be continued in the office has been signed by from eighty to ninety per cent of the people served by the office. It certainly seems to have been a case in which there might have been an investigation and opportunity given to comply with requirements of the department with regard to keeping library or telephone office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There was an investigation and the inspector made a report.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That was the only investigation. He had no opportunity of making a defence.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He had every opportunity.

Mr. MORIN. There was a postmaster in my county who was dismissed last fall. The other day I put a question on the Order paper about the dismissal and the Postmaster General replied that he was dismissed because Mr. Talbot had asked that he should be, as he had taken an active part in the election of 1900. Mr. Talbot was at that time, like myself, busy at home, and he knew nothing about what was going on in my county. All he could say was that some one told him so. Well, the hon. Postmaster General should not listen to what he hears in that way, especially from politicians. He cannot expect to hear anything else, whether it is so or not. I remember very well in 1896 that question came up in the House, though not with regard to my county, and the Prime Minister said that people employed by the government would have the right to vote for whom they pleased and they would not be deprived of talking politics if they wanted to, but he said that a man employed by the government had no right to make speeches nor to publish articles in the newspapers. He said it made no difference whether the parties were Conservatives or Liberals, they would be dismissed. Now, to show you that this promise has not been carried out at all, I know a man perfectly well—he is a friend of mine if he is a Grit, and I do not like to mention his name—who last January spent some eleven days in the county of Beauce. On his return home he and I rode on the train together, and he was telling me how much money he had spent in the county and how many days he had been there. He was also in the company of the Minister of Justice. Some time ago this question was brought up in the House by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Leonard), and the Minister of Justice replied that he knew nothing of it. In this case it would not do to say that he knew nothing of it.

The hon. member for Bellechasse and the hon. Minister of Justice were in the county of Beauce doing electioneering work. I do not ask that this man be dismissed, but I say it is rather strange to find one man treated in one way and another man treated altogether differently. If a Conservative works, or even if he does not work, but is reported to have been working in an election, he is dismissed. But a Grit is allowed to work right along, right and left in election time, and he is not interfered with. Is that treating citizens of this country on an equality ? I say it is not. Let me draw the attention of the Postmaster General to another case. In 1890, there was a man in my county who got a contract for carrying the mails and he got it by tender. In 1895 that contract was renewed without public tender. In 1896, the present Postmaster General dismissed that man and gave the contract to somebody else. I have no fault to find with that, but what took place in 1897, right in the very town where I live ? I know all about the contract and the man. The contract expired and was given to another man, after public tenders were asked, for $55 a year to carry the mails from the station to the post office. That contract expired some time last fall. The contractor wrote the department asking that his contract be renewed, but he got a reply that it was given to another man without any tender having been called for at all. Why is it that the Postmaster General condemns men and contracts just when it suits him and in any way he likes? If it was not right in 1895 to give a contract without public tender, why was it right to give it without public tender last fall ? If the hon. minister can explain that, I will be very grateful to him.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With reference to the first point, the dismissal of a postmaster, I think that my hon. friend moved for a return.

Mr. MORIN. Not that I know of.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Some one did, and I think that the declaration of Mr. Talbot was produced upon which this change took place. I think it took place last summer while I was away, but of course I assume the responsibility. I looked up the papers when my hon. friend asked the question and I found that Mr. Talbot did not in any way qualify his statement. but spoke as if he had positive knowledge of the facts. Therefore, although my hon. friend thinks that he had not that knowledge, still Mr. Talbot assumed full responsibility. I remember speaking to him personally on the subject, and he assured me that his statement to the department last summer was perfectly correct; and if he were here, I think he would be prepared to discuss the facts with my hon. friend. With reference to my hon. friend's inquiry as to the contractor in his town, he will understand that I cannot carry all these transactions in my head and remember an incident that occurred five years ago, and which has reference to one out of ten thousand contracts. I will, however, look the matter up and find out all about it.

Mr. MORIN. The hon. minister says that he is sorry Mr. Talbot is not here to defend himself. Will the hon. gentleman give him a chance to defend himself ? Will he tell Mr. Talbot that I spoke from personal knowledge, that I was in the county of Beauce myself, and that I know he was in the county working with the gentleman who gets $800 a year from the government ? The hon. member for Belchasse (Mr. Talbot) and the Minister of Justice and that man were there together. If Mr. Talbot wants to make reports and have everything done right, let him look after his own man who worked with him in the county of Beauce.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have received a communication with regard to withdrawal of the mail service from the village of Bayside in my constituency. It is regarded as a great hardship by the people that the mail service should have been withdrawn. There was some talk of dispensing with it two years ago, and the person who carried the mails offered to do the work for a lower sum in order that the people might not be deprived of the mail service. The service was continued a couple of years, but lately has been withdrawn. There are three or four business places in the village, which do a large business and ship a large quantity of fish. There is no railway to that village or telephone communication, and they had only mail service twice a week. Now, I believe that service is altogether withdrawn. I would like the hon. gentleman to consider the matter and see whether it would not be possible to continue the service to that community.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not see that the office has been closed. I think it is a case of removal of the site.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know. They regard it as a withdrawal. They say that they had a service in the past and that it is now withdrawn. They speak of a more frequent service in some other place.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My recollection is that the inspector made a report in which there were some recommendations and what is done was the result of his report. There certainly was no intention to disregard in any way the convenience of the people.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is a triweekly service to a village five miles away and it is proposed to open an office at another place seven miles from Bayside, where there are only two or three houses. It seems to be largely for the convenience of the people that the post office should remain where it was, if the statements I have in this letter are correct. It seems to me that it was a mistake to withdraw the service from these people.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We went simply on the inspector's report.

Mr. POPE. I would like to call attention to the change made in the post office at Keith. A post office existed between the two villages of Robinson and Gould, and that has recently been removed. A post office had been established many years at a point supposed to be the most central, marked out in former days, by the joint action of the mayors of the two towns. It is about 12 miles from Robinson to Gould, and the point that had been selected by the community, in which the office has existed many years, is supposed to be the most central and most accommodating to that district. By the change, the office has been removed many miles nearer Gould. To-day there are four farmers and their families living between the location of the present post office and the village of Gould. Naturally those farmers would be served at Gould which is the natural place for them to transact their business. The result has been to compel the people living for many miles in that vicinity to travel all this distance in order to get their mail. To meet these conditions I understand that an open bag of some sort is carried by the mail carrier and a sort of distribution takes place between Robinson and the present location of the post office known as Keith. I know no good reason why this change should be made. There is a large petition, I presume almost a unanimous petition, which was forwarded to the hon. gentleman from that section asking that this change be not made.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When was it made ?

Mr. POPE. Perhaps sixty days ago. Perhaps thirty days ago. I understand that the postmaster who previously handled the mail there was a Conservative, which, I suppose, is no great crime in the estimation of the Postmaster General. The present occupant, I presume, is a Liberal. I do not know. It is sometimes difficult to ascertain in my constituency those who are Conservatives and those who are Liberals. The Postmaster General has been asked on more than one occasion to make changes in my constituency. None of these changes have been favourable to the public. Some of them have been moved back again to the section in which they first were—not to the same parties, I admit. But I am perfectly willing to have the hon. Postmaster General appoint his own friends, provided he serves the public well. But I must say that in my constituency he has been particularly unfortunate in the advice he has received in the past. If he has no better source of advice in the future, I would ask him to come to me—not that I could give him any particular advantage, but I would at least give him the prestige of serving the public well, and I am sure he will estimate it at its proper value such an advantage.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is a way by which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pope) can get the patronage.

Mr. POPE. That would be to expensive to principle. Ambitious as I may be, that would be too expensive, I am sure the hon. gentleman will see that. I feel somewhat interested in the post office at Keith, because it is an inconvenience to a lot of people as the mail has to be carried along this entire route, nine or ten miles until it gets to the post office as now located. I would ask the hon. Postmaster General, in the interest of these people, to open a way office that might possibly be more convenient and very little more expensive to the country. We have been told that this is a growing time, and I trust that the Postmaster General will regard this district as growing with the rest of the country and will hold it entitled to better service than it has ever received. I would ask him to open, somewhere, between the present post office, Keith and Robinson, a way office that can serve the farming community. There is not a village, but a straight road, and farmers located as they usually are in a district of that kind. I am pleased to see the Deputy Postmaster General on the floor. He has always treated me with great courtesy, and I trust that my words to the Postmaster General will strike the pan of his ear somewhat favourably, and that the people of that section will be given the accommodation to which they are entitled.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will promise that the application of my hon. friend (Mr. Pope) will receive careful consideration. The general practice—I do not think it is ever departed from—is to change the location of a post office only on the report of the inspector.

Mr. POPE. I believe that in this instance the Postmaster General is more or less correct. From my information, the inspector did recommend the change. But that does not alter the fact that the present arrangement is an inconvenience to the people. The cost of putting in a way office would be small and it would be a great accommodation to the people. Therefore, I ask it.

Mr. HACKETT. I would ask the Postmaster General to inform me why the change at Alberton has taken place, and Mr. Thomas Keith, who was postmaster for nearly twenty years has been retired and somebody else appointed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will make a note of it and will let the hon. gentleman know to-morrow.

Mr. HACKETT. These notes are very well. But we have no difficulty in understanding that Mr. Keith was dismissed because he was a Conservative.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will give the information to-morrow.

Mr. HACKETT. That is old to-morrow. However, I shall be pleased if the hon. gentleman will give it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I can give it, I daresay on going into supply, or I can give the hon. gentleman a memorandum as I did before.

Mr. McLENNAN. I am glad to learn that it is the intention of the Postmaster General to transfer the mail carrying service in the county of Inverness from the present carrier to the Inverness and Richmond Railway. As this is an important portion of the county which I represent, I would like to know how it is intended to carry the mails on the trains. Does the hon. Postmaster General intend to have them sorted by mail clerk, and delivered as is ordinarily done, or merely as baggage in the baggage car ? I can tell the hon. gentleman that this is a most important part of the community, that there are three very thriving mining towns springing up in the county of Inverness along this very route. I hope that the delivery will not be made in such a fashion that the change will be regarded by the people as a retrograde step. For the last thirty-five or forty years, the mail has been delivered twice in every twenty-four hours along this route. I am sure that anything short of a delivery by mail clerk from the train would be considered by the community over this long distance, fifty-eight miles, as a step of a retrograde character. I did not have an opportunity within the last week or two to discuss this with the Postmaster General. I did talk it over with the gentleman in charge of the railway mail service, but he was not very clear then as to the manner in which the mail service in this connection was going to be carried out. And I would like to learn what is intended ?

Mr. HACKETT. That reminds me of the fact that the mails going west of Summerside are delayed at Summerside for twenty hours. There is no connection between the steamboat arriving at Summerside and the train going west. I would ask the hon. gentleman in the interest of the public living west of Summerside that close connection should be made between the boat arriving and the trains going west. There are several towns, two of them 70 miles west of Summerside, and I hope that the Postmaster General will see to it that the mails shall not be delayed at Summerside for twenty hours, where you have only to run trains four or five hours to reach the homes of the people and convey the news that they are expecting from all parts of the world. I trust the Postmaster General will consider this matter. At present we have a steamboat running between Pointe de Chêne and Summerside, and when mails go to Charlottetown there is no connection to carry them west. Supposing I left here to-morrow morning, I would reach Summerside on the evening of the next day, and there I will be delayed until the following day. For just 60 miles, there is no connection between the mail and steamboat service.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will say to my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. McLennan) that the matter he has brought to my attention is a very important one, and it will receive the careful consideration of the department. I will say to my hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Hackett) that I think the mails are despatched on all trains between Summerside and Charlottetown, and Georgetown and Charlottetown. Probably if there is any interruption it is because of there being no railway communication.

Mr. TALBOT. I deire to know from my hon. friend from Dorchester (Mr. Morin) the name of this Liberal postmaster who, he says, accompanied the Minister of Justice and myself during the last campaign in the county of Beauce.

Mr. MORIN. I did not say that.

To provide for an additional second-class railway mail clerkship, $720.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is for the reappointment of a mail clerk named Gingras. He was dismissed from the service because of supposed irregularities. He was charged with having thrown mail matret off the cars and delayed it in transmission. He was reinstated, and this is to make good the reinstatement.

To provide for the salaries of additional stampers and sorters, letter carriers and clerks, $10,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is to provide for any increase in the staff during the year at any place in the Dominion where it may be required. Owing to the expanding business, it is found that in different cities we have to make additions that are not anticipated.

To increase the salary of Mr. E. B. Bates, assistant postmaster at Ottawa, from $1,800 to $1,900, notwithtanding anytaing in the Civil Service Act, $100.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Assistant postmasters are paid a salary based upon the revenue of the office. But the Ottawa post office does a great amount of free business on account of the quantity of matter franked from parliament and from the departments, so the revenue of this office does not fairly represent the business done by it. We think that rule ought not to be adhered to in the case of Mr. Bates.

To provide for increases of salary for employees in the outside service, not provided for in the main estimates, $2,500.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When the fiscal year closes, the officers, as in the case of the inside service, will go through the staff and report to the deputy and the deputy will report such as are entitled to the increase. If they should all be reported for an increase it would exceed the sum of $2,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the hon. gentleman able to give the names of the employees who salaries are to be increased ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When the fiscal year closes then the officers make a report as to who are and who are not entitled to the increase. At present we are assuming they will all be entitled to it. I trust such may be the case. The report is made to me by the deputy. He, I presume, gets his advice from the officers immediately under him. In the inside service there are heads of branches, and I presume that he bases his judgment largely upon the recommendation of those heads of branches. In the outside service, I presume, he would have the report of the postmaster. It is the duty of the postmaster to inform himself of the efficiency of his staff and report. In the case of inspector's offices he would have the report of the inspector ; and in the case of the railway mail clerks, the report of the controller, I suppose. He in turn will get the advice of the local superintendents of the railway mail service.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this the usual way in which the vote is passed, waiting for a report to be made at a subsequent date ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That has always been the practice, I am informed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Pass the vote in general form without stating how many persons are entitled to it ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The usual practice has been to provide for everybody and then get reports.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It may be the practice in the hon. gentleman's department, but it certainly is not the practice in other departments. The minister usually comes down with his estimates and says : I propose to recommend an increase to certain persons whose names are given, and if necessary I will ask the House to appropriate a sum of money for that purpose. I do not see why a different principle should prevail in the Post Office Department, and I do not see any reason why the officers of the hon. gentleman's department cannot make up their report.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We cannot do that until the years' services has expired.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not see that that has anything to do with it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know about other departments.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, if a method of this kind is not necessary in other departments why is it necessary in the hon. gentleman's department ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These estimates were prepared before Christmas.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They may have been prepared two years ago, but they are presented to the House now, and we are asked to deal with them now. When the hon. gentleman comes down with his estimates he should be prepared with the report of his officers as to those whom he proposes to recommend for increases. I do not think it is a very good practice to ask parliament to vote a general sum in this way subject to a further recommendation. We can have nothing to say about it at present. We do not know what is going to happen in the future. If the hon. gentleman would name a particular individual we would know from him as to what the report was, and we would know something as to the length of the officer's service. We cannot know that very well when we have an appropriation in this general form.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know what the practice is in the other departments, but I cannot myself understand how an officer could give a report as to a person entitled to an increase until the year of his service had expired. When, as a result of the year's service you can tell from his efficiency and fidelity whether or not he is deserving of the increase. To-day, no officer can report whether A B of this department would be entitled to an increase in July. There is a month and a half's time yet to expire. He might disqualify himself in the meantime and therefore the report for the whole period can only be made after the lapse of this time. We cannot anticipate how the service will be performed before the end of the fiscal year. This seems to be the common sense system. If there is a different system I think it ought to give way to one like this because we cannot give a certificate until we come to the conclusion that the officer is entitled to promotion.

Mr. SCOTT. I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Postmaster General an instance in the North-west Territories, where I think there is fair ground for asking for increased postal facilities. The Pasqua branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which runs from Moose Jaw to North Portal on the boundary line, is a part of the Soo railway line, the greater portion of which is in the United States. There is a first class daily train service each way on that line and has been for eight or nine years past, but up to the present time there has never been a mail car put on the trains running on that line of railway. Until within perhaps a couple of years this has not caused any grievance, because, on the Canadian part of the line, there was not a very large population, but within the past three years, and within the past two years particularly, a very considerable immigration has been coming into that particular district chiefly from the United States, and there are now some eight or nine considerable towns between Moose Jaw and North Portal. The hon. Postmaster General will remember that some time during the past winter an application came into the department from Milestone, asking the privilege of a daily mail from the train each way; that is to say a double daily mail. The application came from the representatives of a very large American Land and Immigration Company which had established offices at the town of Milestone, and this company found that it was put to considerable inconvenience owing to the lack of the facilities which it asked. For instance, a letter posted at Milestone, addressed to the company's general offices in the United States, had to go first west of Moosejaw and then back towards its destination. I think there is good reason for asking now that additional facilities be furnished to the people of these towns by placing a mail car and a regular mail clerk on that branch railway.

Mr. KENDREY. Before that item is passed, I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Postmaster General a matter in reference to the post office in the town of Peterborough. The Postmaster, I understand, from the 1st of July is to be reduced in salary from $2,000 to $1,750. I also understand the salaries of the assistant postmaster and some of the subordinates are to be increased. The revenue of the post office in Peterborough has increased at the rate of about $1,000 a year, the work has increased with this increase in revenue and I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General on what principle he makes this reduction in the salary of the postmaster at Peterborough.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Whilst there is no absolute equality in the salaries of postmasters there is an effort as nearly as possible to bring post offices of this character under the same conditions. The postmaster of Peterborough, I have noticed, has a salary which is exceptionally high, as compared with the salaries of postmasters in other offices of the same character. I think that as a rule postmasters in offices of that importance do not receive $2,000 a year. Speaking from memory, I think I would be safe in saying that the postmaster at Owen Sound, which is a town perhaps almost equal in importance to Peterborough, but probably the responsibilities of the office are equally great, the postmaster at Berlin, which is another town of that character and of Brantford do not get as much as the postmaster at Peterborough. I do not think the postmaster at Brantford gets $2,000 a year. In fact, the salary of the present postmaster at Peterborough is exceptionally high as compared with the salaries of postmasters in similar towns. I think there is one other town where the postmaster has a salary equal to that of the postmaster at Peterborough, but perhaps that will have to be looked into. It is not finally decided to carry out that arrangement. Mr. Edwards, of Peterborough, has brought the matter to my attention and has written a very lengthy memorial on the subject. I propose to look into it carefully and to endeavour to prevent any injustice, but you will find that it is a little difficult to defend giving a postmaster $2,000 a year and not much more to half a dozen others. Of course, the postmaster occupies a more responsible position, but at the same time there should be some reasonable relation between the salaries.

Mr. KENDREY. The reason that I bring this matter up is that in the office in Peterborough the work has been increasing from year to year and the hon. Postmaster General knows that the revenue from that office is increasing at the rate of about $1,000 a year. It does seem to me that so far as the postmaster at Peterborough is concerned, the responsibilities of the office are greater than those in many other cities and that it would be unfair to reduce the salary of the postmaster in order to raise the salary of the assistant postmaster and the subordinates on account of the work which has to be done there. It seems to be unreasonable because I can compare Peterborough with Belleville. Our revenue was very large and I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that while the revenue has been increasing the work has been increasing. I understood some time ago that the salary of the postmaster was to remain at $2,000. I do not think that the Postmaster General intends to do anything that is unreasonable, and I hope he will not do an injustice in this case.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the hon. gentleman will find that the salary of the Belleville postmaster is a good deal less than $1,750.

Mr. KENDREY. I understand that the postmaster of Belleville pays his own subordinates and that in Peterborough the subordinates are paid by the government.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the same principle applies in each case. There is a sum of money set apart to meet the salaries of all the staff, and instead of the postmaster hiring his staff and paying them as formerly, he is limited to a certain amount in regard to his own salary, and the remainder must be apportioned amongst the staff.

Mr. KENDREY. I understand that the postmaster in Peterborough has a salary of $2,000, and the staff are paid by the government, while in Belleville the postmaster has a lump sum and he hires the help in the offices.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the arrangement is precisely the same in the two places. When there is a vacancy in the post office the postmaster reports it to Ottawa and then the department calls upon our friends in the district to recommend a suitable person, and that name is submitted to the postmaster for his approval. No person is forced upon the postmaster, and he can veto the recommendation. The money set apart for the maintenance of each office is divided by the government and a certain amount is fixed for the postmaster and the amount assigned to the members of the staff goes to them.

Mr. KENDREY. Do I understand that the Postmaster General has recommended that the salary of the postmaster of Peterborough shall be reduced from $2,000 a year to $1,750, and that the $250 taken off his salary shall be distributed amongst the employees.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Nothing has been done in that way. The postmaster's salary is one thing and the salaries of the staff another. There may be an increase in the salaries of the staff, and there may be a reduction in the salary of the postmaster.

Mr. KENDREY. Has the postmaster of Peterborough been notified that on the 1st July his salary will be reduced to $1,750 ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was in contemplation and he may have been so notified. Mr. E. B. Edwards, of Peterborough, called upon me and asked me to reconsider the matter, and I requested him to put his views in writing. My secretary, I think, told me that a lengthy communication covering a good many pages of foolscap has come from Mr. Edwards, and I have deferred the pleasure of reading it until after prorogation.

Mr. KENDREY. Has the notification been sent to the postmaster ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Probably he has been notified, but I have told Mr. Edwards that I will reconsider it.

Mr. KENDREY. All right.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I wish to say a few words in defence of the Postmaster General who has evidently been wronged by some of his friends. The hon. gentleman stated a few moments ago that he was endeavouring to regulate the post offices throughout the Dominion on some principle. I am perfectly prepared to accept the hon. gentleman's word, but I would point out to him that so far, the Belleville post office has not been treated by his department on any principle. Before the advent of the Postmaster General to power, Belleville was a city post office and had a postmaster under the Civil Service Act. Envious people, without any grounds whatever tried to get that postmaster removed from his position. Attack after attack was made on him and in fact he almost lost his position on the ground that he had driven a voter to the polls during my last election, but on inquiry it was found that the voter he had driven was a warm supporter of the Liberal party. When it was impossible to secure his removal with the consent of His Excellency, Belleville was reduced to the status of a country post office for the sole purpose, it is said, of getting rid of the postmaster. It is now announced by the Postmaster General that he desires to apply the principle, and desires to act fairly. Every one will be pleased to hear that, because the fact remains that of all the cities in Canada, Belleville is the only one reduced, while other offices with less revenue and greater expenditure are not interfered with. The fact remains that there are men in the States drawing superannuation allowances while others are filling their places at the salaries the gentlemen who were superannuated were willing to work for. I am sure that the Postmaster General must intend to apply the principle to which he has just referred, or otherwise he would not have spoken of it. I would call his attention in all humility to the Belleville post office and ask him to apply precisely the same principle to that office that he has expressed his intention of applying to every other post office in this country. If the hon. gentleman keeps his word he will restore Belleville to the list of city post offices, and see that the country is not burdended by having to pay to some persons superannuation allowances while others are drawing salaries for doing the same work.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The changes in the Belleville post office were deliberately made on my own judgment without advice from any one else. Belleville was on a city basis, as it is called, and if it had remained on that basis, the expenditure on the staff would to-day probably have attained to $10,000 a year. I do not wish to be held bound by the figures I now mention, because they may be slightly incorrect; but my recollection is that up to the time it was moved from a city basis the salaries had attained to $8,000 or $9,000 a year. The expenses of that office were out of all proportion to the revenue. With the exception of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, I think there was no city office in Canada having so small a revenue as Belleville. Therefore, I removed Belleville from the city basis for the purposes of economy and to prevent an abuse. My hon. friend is wholly in error in suggesting that the public is under anything like as great expense now, even including the superannuations, as it would have been had Belleville been left on the city basis. I think the reduction in the expense of the office was not less than $4,000. With regard to the question of my hon. friend from Western Assiniboia (Mr. Scott), with reference to an increased mail service on a branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, I can only say that the matter will be carefully looked into.

Mr. NORTHRUP. I accept with pleasure the statement made by the hon. Postmaster General, and I presume that if I can show him that there are other cities in this country whose returns are less satisfactory compared with the expenditure than those of Belleville, he will either reduce those offices to a basis of country post offices, or restore Belleville to the list of city offices.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not wish to enter into any controversy with my hon. friend. I said that at the time Belleville was reduced, it made a worse showing than any other city in Canada, except Charlottetown; but the latter, being a seat of government, I felt was entitled to a little different treatment.

Mr. NORTHRUP. It is not a question of controversy with me. I am merely asking the hon. Postmaster General to apply the principle which he himself stated in this House a short time ago it was his intention to apply, not only to Belleville, but to other places; and as he gives certain reasons why Belleville has been reduced, I take for granted that if those reasons are proven to be erroneous, he will do justice, and restore Belleville to the list of city offices. That is all I ask.

Mr. KENDREY. I wish to call the attention of the hon. the Postmaster General to the fact that the town of Peterborough, though it has only a town post office, has a revenue of $21,000 as against $14,000 of revenue in Belleville.

Militia, $500,000.

Mr. MONK. Has the hon. Minister of Militia given any thought to the claim of Joseph Larose referred to during the present session, to whom he said he thought it would be possible to grant the indemnity voted some years ago?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, we have undertaken to pay that amount.

Halifax provisional garrison, $315,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I brought to the attention of the hon. minister last session the case of Private Sievert, of Halifax, who fell at the charge of Paardeburg. I have had some inquiry from relatives of the young man, and I wish to ask the hon. minister if he is able to tell me anything with reference to the position of that matter?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think it was with reference to the granting of the Victoria Cross. I may say that I brought the matter to the attention of the imperial authorities through His Excellency the Governor General, but have been unable to accomplish the object, so that the matter remains in precisely the same position that it was in before. There seemed to be some difficulty as to the chain of evidence with regard to the alleged action of Private Sievert, which the War Office seemed to consider was necessary, and it was not forthcoming

To provide for engraving, lithographing, printing, &c., to bring out maps of work already done..	$ 9,000 00
To provide for the salary of a geologist to the International Boundary Survey from July 1, 1902, to July 30, 1903....	2,000 00
	$11,000 00

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why was not the general item brought down in the main estimates?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We brought down the usual vote, and Dr. Bell said that in order to keep up with the work we required an additional amount. The mapping of the geological survey has been behind for years, and I have been making strong efforts to try and get out the general geological map. I hope the map will be got out this summer.

Mr. POPE. If it were not so late in the session, the subject of the geological survey would be worthy of discussion. Considering the great resources of this country, the exhibition we have in the building of the geological survey and the limited information which it is possible to get there, is a shame and a disgrace. I take this opportunity of placing myself on record as having voiced my opinion with regard to this subject.

Government of the North-west Territories—Further amount required for schools, clerical assistance, printing, &c., to be paid half yearly in advance, $100,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems extraordinary that a large sum like this was not brought down in the main estimates. Why is it brought down so late?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Some little time ago we had a lengthy discussion in Supply on the necessity of increasing the subsidies to the North-west Territories. We had practically made up our minds to give some increase but had not decided what it should be, and in the light of that discussion, we made up our minds to give $100,000. This $100,000 represents an increase in the subsidies referred to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am inclined to think that the amount previously granted was very meagre, and from the discussion which took place I think this amount might very reasonably be voted.

Mr. SCOTT. Without doubt, Mr. Chairman, this item shows what a difference is made by the point of view. Ordinarily an amount of $100,000 appears very large to me, but in this particular instance the amount does not impress me at all in the same way.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am speaking absolutely and not relatively.

Yukon public buildings---Rents, heating, &c., $25,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the session were not so far advanced and the hour not so late, I would like to say something about the terms of the concession granted by this government, known as the Treadgold concession. The terms were not submitted to this House at the opening of the session as they should have been. Whether or not they were required to be so submitted by any statute or regulation, the interests dealt with were so large that I think the government should have brought the papers down and have had them printed earlier in the session, for the purpose of informing the House as to the nature of that concession. That was not done. We did not get them until a date at which the government, in consequence of representations made to them from the Yukon, had themselves come to the conclusion that the terms on which that concession was granted in the first instance were not such as should be continued. But it does seem to me that that contract must have been entered into by the government in a very hurried way and without much consideration. To illustrate, I might mention the fact that the miners were to be charged at the rate of $1 per inch for the water supply and this was afterwards reduced to 25 cents an inch. I do not know the provisions of the later Order in Council with regard to this. Looking over it to-day, I could not see any provision on the subject at all. Some communications which I have had from the Yukon Territory indicate that the dissatisfaction with the conditions of the contract as at first framed was very strong, and was not confined to those who are opposed to this government, but was widespread and was felt as strongly and deeply among gentlemen who otherwise approved the policy of this government, as among their opponents. It seems to me, so far as I have been able to consider it, to give a monopoly in the Yukon which will be very valuable to the gentlemen who receive it, and will probably—if we may rely upon statements made by the press of the Yukon and by a great many men interested in that country—prove very detrimental to the miners there for a long time to come. In addition to this monopoly, the men who have obtained the concession have rights which are very much more valuable, so far as I can understand the situation, than those which can be obtained by ordinary miners in the district. For example, what is called the necessity of representation or something of that kind was dispensed with in the first concession so far as these men were concerned. I do not know whether or not that still continues. The effect, as I understand it, was that persons who obtained that concession were not obliged to perform the work of development or pay the annual sum which was necessary on the part of other miners. But these are only a few of the circumstances to which my attention has been directed with regard to this concession. I think it would have been better if the government had submitted a proposition of that kind to parliament before entering into the contract. But putting that aside, there can be no doubt that the terms should have been brought down to the House in the early part of the session so that discussion could be held for which opportunity up to the present time has not offered.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I admit that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has some ground for finding fault because the Order in Council was not laid before parliament sooner. But, as my hon. friend knows, I was away, being in ill health, and even when I returned, I was not able to give attention to the House for some days. The papers were prepared as soon as the motion was made for them and they were brought down. I can assure the hon. gentleman that whatever questions may have arisen, whatever difference of opinion there may have been as to the government's action, that action was not taken in haste. The whole subject has given the government a great deal of consideration, and anxious consideration, in order to bring about the best results. A question which has not yet been realized in regard to the development of the mining ground of the Yukon Territory as completely as it will be realized is the question of the water supply. So long as the rich pockets upon the creeks now well known continue to be worked, the effects of the lack of a proper water supply are not likely to be seriously felt. But as soon as these beds begin to be exhausted—and we are getting pretty near to that now—the difficulty about the water supply will press for attention. There is an enormous quantity of gravel of a much lower grade than the miners have been heretofore operating upon which it will be necessary to work if that portion of the country which is producing the largest quantity of gold is to be kept up to its present position. It was the desire of the government to secure the inauguration of some scheme whereby water would be brought in on a large scale, and, to do that we felt that it would be justifiable and proper in the interest of the country that pretty liberal privileges and concessions should be given to those who engaged in that enterprise. If the scheme as originally contemplated had been carried out, the expenditure involved would have been $7,000,000 or $8,000,000. It was thought that all the water would have to be pumped from the Yukon river. But subsequently the promoters came to the conclusion that water could be got from a stream called Rock creek and brought by gravitation, reducing the cost of operating considerably, though, perhaps not the cost of putting in the plant. Under that arrangement, the corporations were bound to introduce certain quantities of water under certain conditions and supply it to the miners. The dissatisfaction which arose, I think arose owing to the changed conditions as time went on and the matter was further considered. If, when the contract was first entertained, the proposition had been promulgated I do not think there would have been any opposition. But the condition of affairs had changed. Gold in paying quantities was found in some of the abandoned claims though not to the same extent that the newspapers would lead us to believe, and there was a disposition on the part of those who had no mining claims to take these abandoned claims. My own opinion is that the abandoned claims were probably of no great value, but it is hard to tell with certainty. The change was of such a character as to demand consideration. Mr. Ross, the commisssioner of the Yukon, was here on other business, and Mr. Treadgold, representing the promoters, was here and we endeavored to remove the objections. Under the second Order in Council the plan was passed so that, while many of the privileges given to the promoters are surrendered, the obligation on the part of the promoters to deliver water is removed and it is left practically in the shape of a voluntary enterprise. I still have strong hopes that this arrangement will be successfully carried out and that it will result in the production of an enormous amount of gold from places where at present it cannot be produced at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to know whether the concession in this amended form is meeting with any opposition in the Yukon at the present time ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think so. Mr. Ross informed me that the delegates who had been sent from Dawson had seen the amended Order in Council, and agreed that it would be perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With regard to the abandoned claims, the information I have would show that in many cases those claims afterwards proved to be very valuable. Another objection that was brought to my attention was that a scheme of this kind was not required in the Yukon at the present time because it could not be properly carried out until the lower levels had been more thoroughly worked. As I understand it the operation of a scheme of that kind would prevent the working of the lower levels. Am I correct in that ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is one other circumstance I would like to mention. There was a memorial of some kind presented to the minister by a number of miners. I saw a copy of that printed in the public press. I would like to know whether the amended Order in Council meets the objections, either wholly or partially, which were made by the miners in this memorial ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. To all intents and purposes I think I can say that it does. I went over the memorial with the delegates, Mr. Wilson and Mr. Sugrue. Mr. Wilson was one of the elected members of the Yukon council, and Mr. Sugrue was a newspaper man. I went over the memorial with them, and they agreed that the Order in Council in its amended form substantially met their objections. Possibly some of the abandoned claims may turn out to be very valuable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As it may be necessary to discuss this subject on some other occasion when we have more time, possibly at another session, and as we have not much knowledge of these objections or conditions, perhaps the hon. gentleman would be willing to bring down this memorial and have it laid on the Table of the House and printed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Any papers whatever which the hon. gentleman suggests.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The only one I have in my mind is this memorial of which we have been speaking. Are there any others ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I gave instructions that all the papers should be brought down. If there are any papers in the department other than those already brought down, I will lay them on the Table of the House at the beginning of next session, or if possible before this session closes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The memorial I speak of is one of recent date, about two weeks ago.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think my hon. friend must have seen something printed which was sent down a good while ago. There has been nothing lately.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not want to detain the committee, but while other business is being proceeded with I will get a copy of what I have and submit it to the Minister of the Interior. I think it will be found it is somewhat later in date than he supposes.

Dominion lands—Chargeable to capital—further amount required for surveys, $100,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you going to do extensive surveys this year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This amount was made up by an exact detailed estimate from the surveyor general, giving the locality where each survey party is going, and the exact cost. Each party costs on the average $5,000. We are getting a considerable portion of the work done by contract now. We found it was necessary to do so, because the work done by day costs very much more. There are sections where day work may be preferable, but the surveyor general has to exercise his own judgment about that.

Additional amount required for museum building at Banff, N.W.T., $3,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are putting up a new building here. As first estimated it was to cost $5,000. Subsequently the superintendent submitted plans to me, and after consideration we decided it would be advisable to make the building larger, and we are making the total cost $8,000. That is not a large sum for a building in a place like Banff Park. It will be of rustic style with a reading room and museum.

Further sum required for boundary surveys, $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How are you geting on with the boundary survey ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The work that is contemplated during the coming year will involve an expenditure of $41,000, including this $10,000. There is the survey by Mr. J. D. McArthur, of the 49th parallel in the province of British Columbia, and the surveys of J. O'Hara, of the 49th parallel, along the Columbia river in the province of British Columbia. Then, there is the survey of the boundary between Canada and New York State for the purpose of setting some new monuments and of replacing monuments which have been destroyed or moved. Then, there are the expenses of four or five of the officers of the chief astronomer's department who are engaged in determining the longitude in different parts of the country, the time service at Ottawa and the expenses of the men who go out with these different parties to which I have referred. The estimate which was made up by the chief astronomer amounts to $41,000, $31,000 in the main estimates and this additional $10,000 that we are now voting.

Mr. SPROULE. In your survey in British Columbia and the territories, you are carrying on the work jointly with the American surveyors, are you not ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The work is being carried on under an arrangement with the United States government. They have a party and we have a party. They co-operate with each other, they collaborate their work and check it over together.

Mr. KEMP. Are the surveyors engaged upon the New York boundary working in the province of Quebec ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It will have to be in the province of Quebec.

Mr. KEMP. Would that not include the boundary between Canada and the state of Vermont and New Hampshire as well ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not at this moment remember whether the marks have been obliterated so far east as that, but the arrangement is that they shall go over the boundary line and wherever it is necessary re-survey and place the marks where they have been obliterated.

Expenses and salaries connected with the commission appointed to inquire into the half-breed claims in the North-west Territories, $3,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The commission will complete their sittings on the 1st of July, and this is to pay the clerks who are winding up the work finally.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are the commission doing ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are adjudicating upon claims for half-breed scrip. This has been going on for the last couple of years. Mr. McKenna. the commissioner, is now in Winnipeg and he expects to get the matter closed up by the 1st of July. He has two or three clerks doing the clerical work there. This is for the purpose of paying them.

Engraving, lithographing, and printing maps of the Dominion and the North-west Territories, $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you getting out a new lot of maps ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are getting out what I hope and trust will be a first class map of the Dominion of Canada, the only first class map that has ever been got out. The Geographical Department have spent a vast amount of time and taken a great deal of trouble to make it correct. The map will be 8½ feet long by 5 feet wide. It will be engraved on copper, and I think it will be a thoroughly first class production and the best workmanship that it is possible to get out in Canada. There is a firm in Toronto that does engraving on copper and it is capable of doing first class work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is a good deal of the country still unsurveyed. I think there is a paper by the late Dr. Dawson, director of the geological survey, which gives a full statement with regard to the unsurveyed country. In respect to further surveys, while I am not disposed to urge undue expenditures on any of these matters——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Without prejudice ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) desires me to discuss that again I will be very glad to do it. If I may be permitted to observe, I think that particular country might be surveyed and very much less of a debt piled up in this country if due regard were had to the public interest in the expenditure of public money by the government of which the hon. gentleman is a member. I would say that as far as is consistent with due regard to economy those portions of the country which are referred to by the late Dr. Dawson should be looked after in the early future. You cannot have an accurate map of the Dominion of Canada without proceeding with these surveys, and while I hope that the hon. gentleman will bring down the best map that we can have at the present time, it will not be a very accurate map as far as these particular portions of the country are concerned.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I apprehend that it will be a great many years before we can bring down a map that will be accurate as to all parts of Canada, but there are a great many portions of the Dominion in regard to which it is now possible to give information which it was not possible to give some few years ago. The method of surveying by photography has rendered it possible to secure a large amount of topographical information at comparatively small expense which a few years ago would have been absolutely impossible. The survey of the Alaskan boundary was carried on by the photographic method which is a development of modern surveying and for which I believe our own surveyor general, Captain Deville, deserves the greatest amount of credit. We have of late years been able to get a large amount of topographical information, which, under the old system, it would have been impossible to get, and it would have cost an enormous sum of money and a tremendous amount of time and work to have got that information. We purpose having an accurate map made, as accurate, as the present information will enable us to make it. There has heretofore been neglect in not getting out a first class map of the Dominion, but I am satisfied that when the members of the House see that map they will be satisfied with it.

Mr. SPROULE. When will the map be issued ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The geographer told me he hoped it would be out inside of a month. It is my intention to send a copy to each member of the House of Commons and of the Senate.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Mr. SPROULE. I hope it will not contain any mistakes like those in the Ontario school books, where the High School Geography says that the population of Winnipeg is 28,000, while the common school geography gives it correctly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before we leave the Department of the Interior I may say that I have found the document to which I referred a moment ago. It is dated the 15th of April and would have been received only very recently.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not received it yet.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is a document signed by a long list of names, and they set out the objections which the miners have to this concession. Of course they are dealing with it in its original form and what I wanted to know from the minister was whether the concession in its amended form met the objections set forth in this memorial.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If my hon. friend will let me have a copy of it I will have the question answered.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would suggest to the minister that he would bring the memorial down so that we may have it printed. It is perhaps impossible that we can discuss it with any thoroughness this session, but we may want to do so at some other time and it would be convenient to have the document printed.

Additional plant for Printing Bureau, $7,500.

Mr. SPROULE. We were promised information as to the amount of printing that was done for each department outside of the Bureau.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I called the attention of the officials to 'Hansard' containing the hon. gentleman's remark and I have been furnished with the following memo. on the subject :

How much printing was done outside ?

The amounts for the last fiscal year are given in the Auditor General's last report—Part B, pp. 1-6, in the second column. The amounts for engraving and lithography are, however, included. The amounts for printing separately are as follows by departments :

Interior....	$47,327 69
Intercolonial Railway..	61,193 37
Agriculture....	34,241 68
Reports—Legislation..	11,999 53
	$154,762 27

The details of these amounts are given in the Auditor General's last report at the following places :—

Part L, pp. 18, 46.
Part W, pp. 150, 207.
Part D, pp. 88, 19.
Part T, pp. 58, 59, 64, 67, 62.

The number of hands in the Printing Bureau is 446.

I have been informed that all the reports for the present session have been printed at the Bureau and that during the current year the outside work is chiefly binding and press work and mostly in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not quite the information I asked for. If we had sufficient time we could go through the Auditor General's report ourselves.

Department of Marine and Fisheries, $8,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to refer to a statement made in the House by the Minister of Justice while I was absent the other night. In connection with this settlement of the Noble Bros. claim, the Minister of Justice made the following statement :

I have not looked into the matter very fully. According to the report, the whole proceedings were the result of a conspiracy started by this man Elliott. The learned judge finds that the fishery overseer deliberately plotted to bring about the ruin of the Nobles in accordance with threats which he had previously made to outside parties.

I want to say, with reference to that, that I know the Nobles and Mr. Elliott and all the parties concerned, and there is not, in my judgment, one solitary word of truth in that statement.

An hon. MEMBER. Order.

Mr. SPROULE. I say so, and I am in a better position to know than the hon. minister or the hon. gentleman who interrupts me. I was here in the department at the very time and heard Mr. Noble declare to the minister that they were not violating the law in any way; and within five minutes of the time that statement was made a telegram was laid down on the Table giving the information that the fishery inspector had seized those boats, because they were fishing illegally. I have this to say with regard to the fishery inspector. I have known him since childhood, I believe him to be an intelligent, respectable truthful and honourable man, who would be above entering into a conspiracy to injure any one carrying on work up there; and I think I know the source from whence that statement comes; and it comes with very bad grace from the parties who gave that information to the hon. Minister of Justice. If he knew the parties and the facts as well as he should, he would never have made the statement he did in the House of Commons against the fishery overseer who was doing what the department instructed him to do, and what any overseer ought to do. He reported the result to the department, and the department handled the case after that. Therefore it was out of his hands. If any injustice was done to the Nobles, it was done by the minister in charge of the department, and not by the overseer; and a statement of this kind in the House of Commons, traducing a respectable man's character, does not come with very good grace from the hon. Minister of Justice, unless he makes sure that the statement is absolutely correct. When the overseer endeavoured to stop that illegal fishing, he was dealing with a crew who had been practically outlaws on the Georgian Bay for years; and he did what he was instructed to do by the minister, and reported the result, after which it was out of his hands. To say that it was a conspiracy is to do a great injustice to the overseer, and it is not waranted by the facts.

Department of Marine and Fisheries—To provide for the salary of Mr. R. E. Tyrwhitt, technical officer in the hydrographic survey, $900.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This was not voted before ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. This is a young man who was appointed temporarily some years ago. He has proved to be a very good officer, and this is to appoint him permanently.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is a son of an old member of this House, and a very deserving officer.

Amount required to pay balance of contract for steamer to replace 'Newfield,' $93,570.

Mr. SPROULE. What did the steamer cost ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The total cost is $193,570.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where was she purchased ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. At Paisley, Scotland. We advertised for tenders, and the contract was let to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this steamer now in use ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, no. She will not be here for perhaps two months. We shall have to send a crew to bring her over. She will be used on the coasts of Nova Scotia.

To provide for the furnishing, outfitting, disbursements and cost of sending crew to Scotland for steamers under construction in Paisley, $25,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose this sum is arrived at on some estimate of the hon. minister's officers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. This is to cover the cost of bringing out both of the new steamers. One is to be launched in a couple of weeks. We expect a cable almost any minute notifying us to send a crew over. I made careful inquiry of the officers of the department, and they say that from past experience this is the most economical and satisfactory way of bringing the boats out.

Further amount required for building and maintenance of fish breeding establishments and lobster hatcheries, $27,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hatchery in Georgian Bay included in this ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have called a conference of the provincial governments to meet the Dominion government here on the 20th instant, when the whole matter of jurisdiction with regard to the fisheries will be considered. If settled satisfactorily, this work will be gone on with, but we will first get all the information possible with regard to the results of the various hatcheries in our own country as well as some of the United States and other places. My intention is out of this vote to establish a hatchery in Ontario, but where it will be established will have to depend somewhat on the report of the officers in the fishery branch as to what is the best locality. In Quebec they want a salmon-trout hatchery. In New Brunswick the experiment at Pictou of the lobster hatchery has been very satisfactory, and we may establish two small hatcheries there. The opinion of the inspector, who is a particularly good man, is that it would be greatly in the interests of the lobster industry if the hatcheries were established.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister was not perfectly frank when he referred to the matter before. He gave me to understand that in the supplementary estimates I would find an item for the purpose of establishing a fish hatchery in Georgian Bay. Now he says that he will await the result of the conference and then decide on the best places to put hatcheries.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not intend to mislead the hon. gentleman. I thought he wanted the name of the particular locality on the bay.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister neither admits that it is to be on the bay at all nor in any particular place in the bay. I referred to the advantages of the locality. I understood him to say that the government had been considering the matter and it was the intention to establish one there and that when the supplementary estimates came down, he hoped hon. gentlemen who were interested in the matter would be satisfied.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. This does include a sufficient amount, according to the estimates given me by the officers, for the establishment of a fish hatchery on Georgian Bay, as well as the others I referred to. As regards the conference, I meant to give the impression to the House that upon the result of it would probably depend whether or not this money would be spent. If the result is that the fisheries revenue and the full control are handed over to the provinces, why, I suppose, the provinces will look after the hatcheries. But if the position is, as I hope it will be, that they will be left to the jurisdiction of the Dominion, either by amicable arrangement or after reference to the courts, then my intention is to spend this money as I have indicated.

Mr. FARQUHARSON. Does the hon. minister mean to pass by Prince Edward Island ? We expected a hatchery.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was not the intention to pass by Prince Edward Island. I have caused inquiries to be made, but the report has not been yet received to warrant me in saying at the present time that this season we will establish a hatchery there. But if the decision of the conference is satisfactory and the report is satisfactory, that work will be carried out.

Mr. SPROULE. That, I take to mean, that if the fisheries are left within the jurisdiction of the Dominion government, they will establish these hatcheries. But the hon. gentleman does not tell us where these hatcheries are to be or how many. In fact he gives us no information about that question whatever.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know what more information I could give than I have already given. I have stated that this amount was intended for the purpose of establishing hatcheries, one in Ontario, one in Nova Scotia, two in New Brunswick and one in Prince Edward Island. But I shall certainly only spend the money on being satisfied that the localities are suitable for the purpose. And I informed my hon. friend—and that is all I could have said before—that I am taking this vote with the expectation that the officers of the department, after investigation, will submit a report as to the most suitable places in the several provinces.

Mr. LEFURGEY. Has there not been time since last year to find all this out ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No vote was taken last year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why are the legal expenses of arbitration delayed so long?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The matter was brought to my attention a month or two ago by some of the solicitors connected with the matter. I communicated with the Hon. Edward Blake, who was acting for the Dominion government. If my memory serves me well, the arbitrator appointed died and a delay took place. And now we have had a report from Mr. Blake with his opinion with regard to the matter and that has been submitted to the solicitor interested in this case. So, it depends on them what progress is made.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the position of the arbitration itself ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is in statu quo. I have sent a copy of the opinion of Mr. Blake to the parties interested, and it is for them to take the next action. I believe another arbitrator has been appointed by Great Britain.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There has been really nothing done.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Except what I have stated.

Excise—Travelling expenses, rent, fuel, stationery, &c., further amount required, $5,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why is this further amount required ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. (Hon. M. E. Bernier). Owing to licensing of new establishments, the expenditure for travelling, &c., is increasing. The expenditure for the first eight months of current fiscal year has been at the rate of a little over $57,000 per annum. The vote in the main estimates is now $50,000. The revenue for the past ten months has exceeded that of the same period of the last fiscal year by over $680,000.

Excise — Weights and measures — Further amount required for the purchase of standards of the metric system of weights and measures and to pay the salaries, travelling and other expenses of inspectors, &c., $10,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why is this further amount required ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Last year the department procured five sets of metric weights to be placed in the hands of inspectors of weights and measures at the most important centres, viz : Montreal, Quebec, Hamilton, St. Johns and Winnipeg. The cost of these five sets was $336.20. The department now purposes securing and distributing to the same inspectors five sets of measures of length and capacity at an estimated cost of $2,000. It has become necessary that the department should appoint, or promote, from the service, a chief inspector of weights and measures at an estimated salary of say $2,500. The travelling and other expenses of said chief inspector in connection with the instruction of subordinate officers as respect the metric system and to bring about a more uniform inspection throughout the Dominion, it is estimated will cost $2,000. To provide for a provisional allowance for the inspector to be appointed in the Yukon, $1,800. In the main estimates $1,500 was provided for the salary of an inspector for the Yukon, but no special provision was made for extra cost of living. The salary estimated at $1,500 may be exceeded, as it is difficult to secure a competent man at this salary to undertake the work, more particularly as he would be required to act as inspector of electric light without additional compensation therefor.

The department has expended up to this date the sum of $1,642.57 for model metric sets which have been distributed to universities, colleges, high schools, seminaries and to various boards of trade. There is an item of $500 in the main estimates for a further supply of these sets, but I am of the opinion, from present requests still unfilled, that possibly a further sum of $500 may have to be expended for this purpose. It is believed that the distribution of these metric sets is bringing about a good understanding of the metric system amongst the pupils of our educational institutions and that the money expended thereon is well spent. Each set costs $7.79.

The estimate of the expenditure of this sum of $10,000 is practically as follows :

Five standard sets of length and capacity	$2,000
Salary of chief inspector	2,500
Travelling and other expenses	2.000
Provisional allowance for inspector in Yukon	1,800
Additional model metric sets say	500
Unforeseen expenditure	1,200

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the intention to introduce the metric system generally ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I suppose we shall have to follow the example of England and the United States, and we are preparing to do so by distributing these metric systems throughout the schools of our country. At present the system is optional, but perhaps within a year or two we will have to make it the legal standard for the whole country. So we are affording the means of teaching our inspectors throughout the Dominion how to inspect these measures of weight and length. We have already been requested by some people in the trade to inspect measures of the metric system. We must therefore have a standard of the same nature, and we need at least one, or two, or three of our officers to be competent and ready to inspect these measures. The system being optional now, every merchant or trader can use the metric system if he chooses. We recognise the fact that within a short time we shall have to adopt the metric system. There are already, if I am not mistaken, two or three Bills before the American Congress to adopt this system, bringing it into force gradually.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is a mistake to have two systems of weights and measures in the country. It is not many years ago since we spent over $20,000 to purchase standard weights and measures for general use. I understand the minister to say that this system is an optional one. I think it would be wise for the government to decide whether they intend to introduce it in the future or not.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There are not two systems at present in use, for while one is only permissive, the other is a compulsory and legal one. I am not in a position now to state what I shall do with regard to the adoption of the metric system.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the opinion of the government ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I do not think the government has formed any idea with regard to that subject, except that we shall be compelled to follow the example of other nations. If we wish to trade either with England, or France, or Belgium, or the United States, or Germany, we will have to use the same system of weights and measures that those countries use. I appreciate the difficulty we would have if we had in use at the same time the metric system and our present system. To introduce the metric system and make it universal would be a revolutionary measure in that branch of business. We cannot expect our people who have been long accustomed to the old system, readily to adopt the new system. Therefore we are commencing to educate them to the use of the metric system, by distributing the sets of weights and measures throughout the various educational institutions of the country. Last year we purchased fifty sets. I am receiving quite a number of requests for them, even from members of parliament, who wish to distribute them among the schools in their constituencies.

To provide for the inspection of binder twine, $2,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this a usual vote ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) introduced a Bill this session putting binder twine on the list of articles to be brought under inspection, and as the item is a new one there must be a corresponding appropriation to provide for it.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the inspector visit the various institutions where binder twine is made and the establishments of the wholesale importers as well ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think that is the intention, but I would not like to speak definitely in the absence of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. That is the object, however.

Additional for commercial agencies, including expenses in connection with negotiation of treaties, or in extension of commercial relations, $20,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Where are these commercial agents to be appointed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is carrying out the policy announced at the opening of the session, of enlarging the scope of our agencies. I think the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has not yet determined all the places at which these agencies shall be located. There will probably be two additional agents in England and some in the colonies. The locations have not as yet been agreed upon. The item can stand, if the hon. gentleman desires it.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not want it to stand. I think it would be a good plan if you appointed a great many more commercial agents than you have. I understand that some of the business men of Toronto were down here urging that this should be done, and I would ask if the government could give any information upon the subject.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The government fully appreciate the importance of all that had been said on the subject, and in voting this amount the desire is to make a beginning. No doubt this will only be the beginning of a larger scheme and that in later years we will have to vote additional sums. I think, however, this will be sufficient to enable us to make a fairly satisfactory beginning.

Mr. SPROULE. What would be the duties of these agents ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They will perform the general duties of commercial agents, going out into different sections of the country, interesting the people in our manufactures, and bringing to their notice the many good things that we have to offer. A good deal of work can be done in that way.

Mr. KEMP. What does the negotiation of treaties mean ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is merely the form of the old vote. It really does not mean anything in particular.

Mr. KEMP. Our agents have no right to negotiate treaties.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, this does not contemplate any treaty negotiations, but it is the usual form of the vote.

Steam service between Victoria, Vancouver, way ports and Skagway, $12,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this a new appropriation ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is an additional appropriation. The trade in that region has been rather going away from us owing to the lack of efficient steam communication from Vancouver to Skagway. The design is to get a more efficient steam service.

Department of Agriculture—To provide for the promotion of F. C. Chittick to a first-class clerkship at $1,500, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $150.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Sometimes we are told that the whole salary must be put in where there is a promotion, as in this case.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is the difference between what is already voted in the main estimates for the same clerk and the amount which the promotion would entitle him to.

Mr. BELL. Is that not a very large sum at which to start a first class clerk ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Fourteen hundred dollars is the usual amount and he is getting $1,350 already.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I dare say that is all right but I want to understand it. I was told that the salary of a man advanced from a lower class had to be voted in that way. The hon. Minister of Agriculture is not doing it in that way. He has voted the salary of Mr. Chittick and he is providing for his promotion now to a first class clerkship. That means from a second class to a first class clerkship, does it not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why did we not do it in the other cases ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know why we did not do it in the other cases.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not criticising this. This seems to be all right.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A salary of $1,350 as a second-class clerk has already been voted in the main estimates for Mr. Chittick. I wish to promote him to a first-class clerkship and give him $150 extra and therefore I have asked the committee to vote this amount. I think that when the item appears in the Bill it will appear together with the original vote as placed in the main estimates, and the two together will make up the sum which he is to receive. Why this was not done in the other cases I cannot tell.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That seems to be exactly right. That is the way I do it myself. It must be right, of course. That is not the way in which it has been done in the other departments.

To increase the salary of James O'Regan, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $100.

Mr. SPROULE. You seem to give James O'Regan a double increase.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know that Mr. O'Regan has been applying for an increase of salary for a number of years. He is a very faithful and diligent officer, and I would be inclined to think that possibly no objection would be made.

Mr. SPROULE. Let it go.

Junior judge—Leeds and Grenville, $2,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the appointment been made, and if not, who is likely to be appointed ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Justice left me a note to say that the appointment is to be made, so that no one has been yet appointed.

Library of parliament, $500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I may say to the Speaker in connection with the Library, that I think it would be desirable to have more copies of the Statutes of Canada. I intended to mention the matter to Mr. Griffin, but I take the opportunity of mentioning it to the Speaker now. There is no reason why there should not be more copies of the Statutes, so that members could have them when they require them.

Mr. SPEAKER. I will be glad to bring the matter to the attention of Mr. Griffin.

Mr. SPROULE. How many messengers are there in the Library ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I think there are four.

Experimental farms, $10,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is it for ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is to pay off an accumulation of arrearages.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The operations are not being extended, but there has been a deficit in the past.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There has been a deficit in the past, and the wages of all the labourers on the farms have had to be increased 25 cents a day.

St. Louis and Osaka exhibitions, $175,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What preparations are being made for these exhibitions ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The preparations are only just beginning. I have had communications with regard to space and the opportunity for exhibiting at both exhibitions. The Osaka exhibition in Japan opens on the 1st of March next, and the St. Louis exhibition on the 1st of May next. The preliminary work in connection with the collection and arrangement of the exhibits is now beginning.

Mr. POPE. Do you intend to send cattle to Japan ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Experimental farms, $22,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is a supplementary vote for the current year, to pay off the accumulation of arrears that has been going on for several years back.

Mr. POPE. How many past years is this supposed to cover ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The accumulation covers about three years.

Mr. POPE. Do I understand that these men have not been paid for three years ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, but one year has run into another, and we found this year that we had a very large arrearage to pay in the first two months of the year, which left us with a deficit at the end of the year.

Mr. POPE. This does not appear to me to be a legitimate proceeding. The minister appears to have been paying out money which he had no legitimate right to pay out.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That has unfortunately occurred more than once in the past. Before I came into office supplementary votes of this kind were called for.

Pan-American exposition, $17,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether there are any more arrearages of this kind in his department ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not aware of any except the other vote similar to this.

Paris exhibition, $2,000.

Mr. POPE. For what purpose is this money utilized ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is to pay off one or two claims for exhibits which were slightly damaged on their return. We have been discussing the validity of the claims, and it was only recently that we found that they were justified.

Quarantine—public health, $60,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is due to the small-pox difficulty along the American frontier.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I oberve that recently a vessel came into Halifax with small-pox on board, and there seemed to be a great deal of difficulty as to who should take charge of the unfortunate man who was suffering from that disease. As far as I can gather, the Department of Agriculture refused to assume any responsibility, and there was a conflict between that department and the local authorities. Will the hon. minister state how that dispute was settled, and what became of the unfortunate man who was suffering from small-pox ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The vessel to which I suppose the hon. gentleman has referenec was a fishing vessel from Lunenburg which went out to the fishing banks, where one of the crew took the small-pox, and then the vessel sailed to Halifax. The Department of Agriculture does not deal with vessels which sail from one port of Canada ta another, but only with vessels coming from foreign ports. I believe the sufferer was not a passenger but one of the crew, and I understand that he had paid his mariner's fees, and that he was taken charge of by the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I trust that the House will not find fault if I ask for a vote for taking care of this unfortunate man, because I was advised that it was not legally the duty of the department to take charge of him ; but under the circumstances, as there was a conflict between the local and the Dominion authorities, I thought it was only proper that the department should take charge of him as he had paid his mariner's dues, and I gave instructions to have him taken care of.

Quarantine—Compensation for slaughter of hogs and sheep and all other expenses connected therewith, $15,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this the usual vote ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. This is an addition to the usual vote. The vote asked for this year is $15,000, and this is to clean up the arrearages in the same way as we have been doing in connection with the experimental farms.

Mr. SPROULE. What percentage of the slaughtered animal do you pay for ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When the animal is diseased—I am speaking from memory—we pay one-third ; when only in contact and liable to partake of the disease, we pay one-sixth.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—TIME OF PROROGATION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When does the hon. minister expect to reach prorogation; to-morrow or the following day ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I suppose the hon. member means to-day or to-morrow—we are now in Wednesday. I hardly think it is possible for us to prorogue to-day, but it will depend somewhat on the progress that is made.

THE CASE OF J. M. HURLEY.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland). With the permission of the House, I desire to mention this one matter briefly. When the estimates of the Marine and Fisheries Department were under consideration, the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Porter) stated that he had some information with regard to one of the fisheries inspectors taking part in an election. The hon. leader of the opposition also made some remarks, and I gave my promise that I would write to the officer referred to. I wrote inclosing him a copy of the remarks of the hon. member for West Hastings, and have received his reply and also the affidavit of the party who was alleged to have been influenced by this officer to sign the protest against the hon. member. The hon. member for West Hastings has spoken about it once or twice, and if he had been present when the estimates were up I would have been pleased to lay the information before the committee. I believe this should be done, and I think every one will recognize that it is only due to the officer whose conduct has been called in question that his letter should be given. This is the letter :

Belleville, Ont., March 6, 1902.

The Hon. James Sutherland, Minister of Marine and Fisheries,
Ottawa.

Hon. Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter, dated Ottawa, March 3rd, respecting the statements made by Mr. Porter, M.P. for West Hastings, that I took an active part in the recent by-election in that riding, and that I solicited the petitioner to sign the petition against him.

In reply to the first statement, I beg to say that I took no part, directly or indirectly, in the recent election contest in West Hastings, nor did I ask any man to vote or not to vote. I may say further that I did not attend any meeting, either public or private.

With regard to the second statement made by Mr. Porter, I beg to say that I did not solicit the petitioner to sign the petition against him, nor did I ask any one else to sign it nor did any one consult me about signing the petition.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,
J. M. HURLEY,
Fishery Officer.

The following is the affidavit of the party referred to :

In the matter of the West Hastings Dominion by-election.

I, Cornellius Mullins, of the city of Belleville, in the county of Hastings, sailor, make oath and say :—

1. That I am the person whose name is signed to the petition filed herein against the return of Mr. E. Guss Porter, as member for the West riding of Hastings.

2. That I have been advised and believe that certain charges have been made against Mr. J. M. Hurley, Inspector of Fisheries, to the effect that it was by his inducement and representations, I was prevailed upon to sign the said petition.

3. That the said J. M. Hurley did in no wise try, procure or endeavour to procure my signature to the said petition, nor did he have anything to do therewith, nor was the question of election of, or protest against the return of the said candidate ever spoken of by him to me.

And it was not on his inducement or procurement, or by any request on his part that the said petition was so signed by me.

C. MULLINS.

Sworn before me at the city of Belleville, in the county of Hastings, this 6th day of March, A.D. 1902.

E. J. BUTLER
Commissioner, &c., H.C.J.

I am sure hon. members will be pleased to know the state of affairs, and no person, I am sure, will be more ready than the hon. member for West Hastings to accept the facts with regard to the case.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am sure that every one will be glad to know that this officer did not take part in election contests. But there is just one observation I would like to make, and that is, that a great many officers of the government have been prepared with evidence equally cogent of their freedom from political partisanship so far as taking part in elections is concerned, but who, nevertheless, have been dismissed without being given an opportunity of making their defence before an impartial or indeed any tribunal.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 3.20 a.m., Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 14, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the chair at Eleven o'clock.

BILLS WITHDRAWN—RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that Orders No. 30, Bill (No. 28) respecting Telegraph and Telephone Companies—Mr. Fitzpatrick ; No. 31, Bill (No. 120) to amend the Dominion Lands Act—Mr. Sifton ; No. 36, Bill (No. 104) to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways—Mr. Blair ; and No. 37, Bill (No. 146) for the settlement of railway labour disputes—Mr. Mulock, be discharged.

He said : I may say in reference to these two Bills, to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways and for the settlement of railway disputes, that they will be taken up again next session. The government, in introducing these Bills, did not intend to follow them up at the present session, but rather to give notice to the public, so that their features might be carefully considered, and perchance be ready to deal with them at the next session.

I may also take advantage of this opportunity to give an answer to numerous applications which have been made for assistance in railway construction. The government has determined not to ask parliament this year for any appropriations for that object. At the same time, we are not unmindful of the fact that railway development is more than ever a pressing necessity. This is specially true of railway construction in those fertile lands of the North-west Territories in the valley of the North Saskatchewan river, towards which immigrants and settlers are now rapidly and numerously flocking. It is due to those people that they should be assured that their wants in that respect are engrossing the attention of the government, and it is hoped that next session assistance will be given to the construction of a railway by as rapid stages as possible from some point in the western boundary of Manitoba, through the Saskatchewan valley towards Edmonton.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the Bill respecting Dominion lands ? I thought that some measure of that kind had already been passed.

The PRIME MINISTER. It did pass, but the amendments of the Senate have been such as to make the Bill nugatory. Therefore, we do not intend to proceed with it this session.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that Orders No. 30, respecting telegraph and telephone companies, No. 36, to amend and consolidate the law respecting railways, and No. 37, for the settlement of railway labour disputes, will be presented and pressed next session ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think we were promised the second reading of the Railway Commission Bill, but I suppose the time has not been found available for that purpose.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is it.

Motion agreed to.

YUKON TERRITORY REPRESENTATION.

House proceeded to the consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 134) respecting representation of the Yukon Territory in the House of Commons.—The Minister of the Interior.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are the amendments ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The amendments are not of an important character. There is an amendment to section 22, which is purely clerical, by which the words 'two candidates where two members are to be elected' are struck out. It does not alter the meaning of the Bill, and it is a better way of expressing it.

Section 23 in the Bill as passed reads as follows :

If at the time fixed for receiving nominations there remain more than two candidates in nomination where two members are to be elected, or one candidate where one member is to be elected at the election then pending, the said officer shall grant a poll, &c.

This section has been amended so as to read :

If at the time fixed for receiving nominations there remain more than one candidate, the returning officer shall grant a poll, &c.

The draughtsman in drafting the Bill provided for a case in which there was more than one candidate, but it is unnecessary, as the Bill provides at the present time for only one member, so that this amendment is quite in accord with the rest of the Bill. Section 28 is amended by the Senate in accordance with a suggestion made by the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick). The hon. Minister of Justice suggested that it might be possible that the chief justice or the senior judge might be away from the territory when an election was to be held, and that it would be better to provide that the senior judge who should happen to be there should act. I see no objection to the amendment, and I move that it be concurred in.

Amendments read the second time, and agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS—AID TO RAILWAYS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the right hon. premier. He said that the government did not intend to bring down any subsidies for railroads this session, but I understood him to say that at no time was it more desirable that assistance should be given to railroads in particular parts of the country, and he intimated that in the opinion of the government there should be some assistance given to certain railroads next session.

The PRIME MINISTER. To one railway.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Has the right hon. gentleman supplemented the opinion of the government by Order in Council in that direction, or does he intend to do so between now and next session ? He is pledging the government to introduce a Bill next session for the purpose of giving assistance to that particular road.

The PRIME MINISTER. There has been no order passed, and no order shall be passed either.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In the budget speech I stated that we proposed to extend the time for the free admission of machinery for the manufacture of beet root sugar, and I gave notice of the following motion:

Resolved, That it is expedient that the provisions of chapter 22 of the Acts of 1901, respecting the free admission of machinery and structural iron and steel for use in the construction of factories for the manufacture of sugar from beet root, be extended until the 1st day of April, 1903.

I now beg to move that this resolution be agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. If the minister extended the time for more than one year it would be proper for him to do so. He will undoubtedly have to extend the time next year if he desires the advantage to apply to those who are building or contemplating building beet sugar factories.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have had no representations made to me that a further extension would be necessary. If the matter comes up again it will be considered on its merits, but I do not think that it is wise at this moment to extend the time further in view of the resolution, notice of which has been given.

Mr. SPROULE. I doubt if the companies will be able to get in their machinery within the time fixed in the resolution.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Has the Minister of Finance power to remit that duty without a resolution ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That may be debatable, but the more of these things we do by resolution of the House and the fewer of them we do by executive act the better. It is always better to have these things fixed in the tariff and then the public at large understand them and not a particular individual. The next motion is this. The Minister of Militia has made a contract for the manufacture of the Ross rifle in Canada, and one of the conditions of the agreement was that the company should have the right to import the machinery and parts of their rifles free of duty. Instead of leaving that to be expressed in the contract only as applied to that particular company, it was thought better that, for the same reason I gave a moment ago, it should be set forth in the tariff, so that if it should happen that any other company should at any time make arrangements with us of a similar character, this item would stand in the tariff free to all. Practically it only applies at present to the Ross Rifle Company, because that is the only company with whom the government have this contract, but instead of leaving it to be expressed in the contract itself, we thought it better to put these items on the free list as applying to all persons with whom similar arrangements might be made.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman mean the parts of the rifle which are to be taken over by the Dominion government, or the rifles manufactured ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The aim of the government was to have these rifles manufactured in Canada, but it was remembered that the machinery would have to be imported, and there is practically no harm in admitting that free. If we made them pay duty we would have to put up the price. As respects the other part of the resolution, certain parts of the rifles, it is claimed, cannot be conveniently made in Canada, and these parts may be imported. That is the substance of the resolution.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But this rifle company manufactures rifles not only for the government but for sale. They have a contract for the manufacture of a certain portion of them for the government. What I want to know is whether the parts of the rifle which are imported into the country and not used by the government, come in free to be sold ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not under this regulation. It only applies to work they do for the government. The machinery, of course, which makes the rifle for the government of Canada may also make a rifle for somebody else. To that extent the machinery would apply to all. I think the clause (a) makes it clear that it is only for the manufacture of rifles for the government of Canada.

Mr. MONK. How does the minister think it possible to prevent the manufacture of rifles generally for the public ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We do not want to do that.

Mr. MONK. Will it be possible to limit it to the manufacture of rifles for the use of the government ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We do not propose to limit the factory to the manufacture of rifles for the use of the government. They may do it for anybody in the world ; but they cannot have these admissions free of duty except for the use of the government.

Mr. MONK. How will you guard against such a thing happening ? If they choose to import the material in the rough for the rifles which they will sell to the public at large, how can you prevent it ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is to be left to the inspection and regulation of the Customs Department. The same question my hon. friend puts might arise in connection with some other items where the article is admitted at one rate of duty for the purpose of being manufactured, and at a different rate of duty when it enters into general consumption. It is a form of legislation that has been in our tariff for a long time, and practically it works out very well.

Mr. SPROULE. I am inclined to think they should bring in their raw material free in any event. But where the government give a consideration that is not extended to any other factory, for the purpose of supplying the government's need, there would of necessity require to be some arrangement whereby the company would not take advantage of that clause and apply it to the general public. How would the government regulate it so that they could not use the same parts of a rifle for general manufacture ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I admit that it requires very careful observation by the Customs Department. We have the same question arising in other branches of business, but in practice I understand the department manages it very well. I think it is regrettable that we have to have these distinctions in the tariff, but experience has shown that the Customs Department can watch them and guard against any abuse.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would much rather see the whole rifle manufactured in Canada. Under the resolution which the minister proposes they can simply assemble the different parts of the rifle when they come into the country. I think that a provision ought to be made so that the whole of these parts except, perhaps the forgings, or something of that kind, in the rough, might be obtained from other countries ; but the whole material that enters into the rifle ought to be manufactured in the country.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend is mistaken. In the first place the arrangement made between the Commissioner of Customs and the manufacturer sets forth just what pieces are required. Practically the whole gun is made in Canada. There are a few small pieces, easily designated, in regard to which it is very simple to know just how many of them are used, and would be entitled to come in free. Supposing they manufactured 10,000 rifles for the government, the customs would know that only 10,000 of these articles, or sets of articles, used in those rifles would be entitled to come in free. I do not think there will be any difficulty in working it out. I was on the committee examining the matter, and we found it was only a few small articles that we have not yet perfected in this country, that will have to be imported from foreign countries.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) is perfectly correct in what he stated with regard to the effect of this resolution. He said, as I understood him, that it is quite competent for the manufacturers to merely assemble everything, importing all the materials from abroad.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If there was not a contract, it might be possible; but the contract specifies what is to be done.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The contract has nothing to do with this resolution. My hon. friend from Lanark was not dealing with any contract, but with what is before the House; and he is absolutely correct in his statement as to the effect of this resolution.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Theoretically, yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The English language could not be plainer :

> All materials or parts in the rough, unfinished and finished, screws, nuts, bands and springs, to be used in rifles to be manufactured at any such factory for the government of Canada.

You could not get a more comprehensive statement than that by employing any language. Of course, it is to be done under regulations made by the Minister of Customs, which may afford some safeguard; but apart from that, it is certainly open to the very grave objection which the hon. member for Lanark has suggested.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend has perhaps not observed the distinction drawn in subsection 'b' between the rough materials and the finished materials. If he reads it again, he will see that while they are at liberty to import rough and unfinished materials generally, the finished articles which they import are limited to screws, nuts, bands and springs. Then there is the general proviso that the Minister of Customs must make the regulations.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The whole of what the hon. minister states depends on the punctuation marks, which are not generally taken into consideration by the courts. There might be a very strong argument made to prove that it means exactly what the hon. member for Lanark says. These punctuation marks, though regarded as important by many people, have practically no effect in determining the meaning of language in a court of law.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think the meaning depends on the punctuation. I think the language itself is very clear. Before the resolution is disposed of, I wish to ask the attention of the committee to another item which is not included in it, but about which I do not imagine there will be any difference. There is a provision in the tariff for the admission free of duty of certain machinery for mining operations and for blast furnaces and operations of that character. Under this provision we have allowed coke-making machinery to come in free of duty. There is certain machinery which is used in common for the manufacture of coke and the manufacture of charcoal, and the department has held that the provision might reasonably include machinery for the manufacture of charcoal. About the only difference is that coke is made from coal, while charcoal is made from wood. The department has so interpreted the provision; but the Minister of Customs has called my attention to the matter, and he thinks it advisable that there should be a clear definition in the tariff in accordance with what has been the interpretation of the department. I propose, therefore, to add to the item as clause 'c' 'charcoal-making machinery.'

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will it have an ex poste facto effect?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Customs Department having hitherto interpreted in this way, I suppose in that respect it has an ex poste facto effect. But the Minister of Customs desires that it should be made a matter of tariff instead of a matter of departmental regulation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is no objection to that so long as there is no discrimination.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. None whatever.

Amendment agreed to, and resolution as amended agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the first time and the second time and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 169) to amend the Customs Tariff, 1897. He said: this is simply a transcript of the resolution which we have already agreed to.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and the second time, considered in committee, and reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Bill finally passes, we shall expect the government, by means of customs regulations which are referred to in the Bill, to use proper safeguards so that the danger pointed out by my hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) shall not be realised.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I entirely concur in the suggestion of my hon. friend. The Customs Department must be instructed to look carefully into the matter.

Mr. MONK. Why does this change date from the 17th March?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All tariff changes date from the date of the budget.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—THE TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring briefly to the attention of the House the matter which I mentioned in a very superficial way to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior last evening. Some considerable interest is taken, especially in the western part of the country, with regard to the concession known as the Treadgold Concession, and a good many communications have been sent to members of parliament from the Yukon concerning certain features of the arrangement between the government and Mr. Treadgold and his associates. The matter was to have been brought up in parliament by certain gentlemen on this side, but about the time when they were instructed on this matter, it was announced in the public press that the government had rescinded the Orders in Council, which had created so much excitement, and revoked a great many of the features of the concession which were regarded as objectionable. I do not propose to discuss at present, as it is too late in the session, certain constitutional features beyond saying that as it seems to me, though I have not carefully examined the question, there is a great deal of doubt as to whether the terms of this concession did not exceed the powers which could fairly be regarded as vested in the Governor General in Council. I also would have suggested to the House that a concession of this kind, covering so wide a range, involving such enormous interests, might properly have been submitted to parliament in the first instance, and should not have been passed by Order in Council, even if the Governor in Council possessed the technical right to pass it under the authority of the statutes. I also would have taken the ground that assuming that the powers possessed by the Governor in Council were legitimately exercised in this instance, it was a matter upon which parliament should have been informed at the very commencement of the session, so that the House might have had occasion to fully consider the terms of this concession, which are of such great interest to the people of the Yukon. Apart from that all I have to say at present is that I have not been able—nor indeed do I profess to possess the knowledge which would so enable me—to clearly distinguish between the effect of the concession in the terms first granted and its effect in the terms granted by the subsequent Order in Council. And I do not know to what extent the excitement which prevailed among all classes in the Yukon, by reason of the terms of the first concession, has been allayed by the fact that the concession has been rescinded as well as the Order in Council granting it, and a concession in some what different terms granted the same gentleman. What I desire to do at present is this. I brought to the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior last evening the fact that a memorial with regard to this matter had, as I understood, been submitted to my hon. friend, and I was anxious to know to what extent the objections raised in that memorial, which demanded the repeal of the concession, had been met by the terms of the new Order in Council and the new concession. It appeared that either through some difficulty in the mail service or on account of the pressing engagements of my hon. friend during the closing days of the session, this memorial had not been brought to his attention, and I believe he saw it for the first time when I handed to him what purported to be a copy of it, taken from a Dawson newspaper which had been sent me. I do not suppose that the hon. minister has been able to take this matter up to any extent in the meantime, as it was three o'clock this morning when I brought it to his attention, but upon consideration I think that it may be well to read the memorial to the House in order that hon. members may be acquainted with its terms and that it may be useful to them perhaps, if there should be any occasion at a subsequent date to discuss the terms of the new concession. I think that possibly the House will pardon me for taking up its time in the few minutes necessary for the purpose of reading this document, and I trust that my hon. friend, the Minister of the Interior, will not think I am bringing this matter to his attention without notice, because I have really had no opportunity of giving him notice except that which I gave him this morning, when I told him I thought I would briefly discuss the matter in the House and desired that he should be present. The memorial is signed by a large number of gentlemen who purport to be the holders of very large claims in the Yukon. It was published in all the papers at Dawson, I believe about the 16th of this month. The newspapers I received were dated the 16th, and contained a copy of this memorial. It is in the following words:

The preamble to the Order in Council of June 12, 1901, gives as a reason for the privileges granted the following :—'The mining now carried on in the Klondike district because of the inadequate supply of water, is necessarily confined to the washing of the richest gravel only, comparatively small in area, thus leaving large tracts of gold bearing gravels unworked.'

It is true that there are large quantities of ground unworked for want of a sufficient quantity of water ; at the same time the men at present in the district are gradually absorbing this land and applying capital and machinery to the purpose. Among these are operators who are identified with the country since its discovery and have grown up with it.

The statement that the richest gravel only is worked at present is not correct ; it is partly and only partly true. The hydraulic system has already been introduced by private enterprise. For example : Mr. Alexander McDonald has employed it on the Bonanza creek, Mr. Johannsen on Hunker, and others have followed their example and have placed hydraulic machinery upon the ground for use during the coming season. The operators above mentioned work not the richest ground only, but all the gravel on their claim, leaving nothing undisposed of. In the natural course of affairs, if miners are allowed to proceed as they have been doing hitherto and without interference, other capitalists will undoubtedly proceed on the same lines, and by this means without any cost to the country, without any special concessions, without favouritism and without injury to any other interests, the whole of the gold bearing gravel will be operated up to a certain height, which height will be determined by the cost of raising the water from the creek level up to the hill side gravels and by the values of the hill side gravels encountered.

The grantees under the Orders in Council are only required to give a 300 ft. elevation; the miners who are already using hydraulic apparatus are raising water themselves to a height of 300 ft. at a less cost than Mr. Treadgold and his associates are authorized to charge.

It is possible, though not probable, that paying dirt might be found at a height at which a private operator under ordinary circumstances and with a small amount of capital, would find unprofitable work. In such a case it would be justifiable to grant special advantages to a largely capitalized company, which by operating on a wider scale and employing more expensive machinery, would lift the water to the highest levels at a cost sufficiently small to allow them a fair profit.

This, however, is a contingency for the future and a plan that can only be adopted fairly and with profit to the district after the creeks which are now being worked have been exhausted. Under present conditions the creeks are worked continuously, but, should a large company with an extensive volume of water operate the higher levels, there would be a discharge into the creek beds of so much dirt or debris as to effectually put an end to operations in them. For economical mining it is absolutely essential that the creek claims should be worked out before hydraulic operations on a large scale are commenced on the hill sides. The miners who work on the creeks carry on their business at present with a fair profit, having only to handle the dirt naturally belonging to the creek, but a discharge of debris from the hill side would so add to the expense of their operations as to take away their profit and drive them out of business. In our opinion it will be from 10 to 20 years, if then, before the district has been so far worked as to call for any such wholesale grant of lands as is included in the Treadgold concessions or justify its adoption.

Injurious Effects of the Concession.

The above incontrovertible facts and considerations establish clearly, we believe, the following propositions :

That no capital has been kept out of the country by the want of such a scheme ; that the needs of the country, in so far as the application of hydraulic machinery to mining operations is concerned, are being amply met as they arise by private enterprise and will continue so to be for many years to come ; that the concession secures nothing that the miners are not already providing for themselves ; that it saves nothing in the cost of the water to those who require it, and that if taken advantage of to carry out the purpose indicated in the preamble of Orders in Council, it will have a disastrous effect upon the operations at present going forward in the creek beds.

We now propose to consider another important feature of the arrangement. It is provided by the Orders in Council that all abandoned claims on Bear, Bonanza and Hunker creeks and their tributaries—this includes Eldorado—shall be deemed to be vested in Mr. Treadgold and his associates, on and after the first day of January, 1902.

It might be supposed by a person ignorant of mining that a claim which has been abandoned is by that very fact proven to be inferior and non-productive, or at least not sufficiently productive to pay for being worked by the private individual. This, however, is very far from the truth. It is the universal experience in mining countries that claims may be prospected three or four times and abandoned and may yet turn out to be rich and profitable. The value of the gift made to Mr. Treadgold and his associates is incalculable, but we believe it is no exaggeration to say that it runs up into millions of dollars.

The effect of a blanket concession like this is to close up the district and withdraw it from relocation. When it is remembered that the district included in the grant comprises the greater part of the gold bearing area which has been exploited in the vicinity of Dawson city and that it contains almost all the roads and improvements that have been made by the government in the mining territory, it will be seen how important the consequence of this measure will be.

The prosperity of the district, the diffusion of comfort among all classes, the continued influx of population and the attraction of further capital for development—all depend upon the abandoned claims being left open to be further prospected by private individual miners and relocated.

The closing of the district will be injurious to the interests of the wage-earner. At present the mining area is thickly populated with individual wage-earning operators. These men are not occupied continually, being usually idle part of the year. During the idle period they are accustomed to prospect and try to find something for themselves.

It is not alone those who are for the time being idle who engage in prospecting, but there is another class of wage-earners even more useful. These are men who are ambitious to better their condition. They work first, in order to earn a small reserve, and spend weeks, sometimes months, searching for the precious and valuable metals. More often than not they fail and have to begin again. It is in this way that the resources of the district are exploited. Such is the universal practice throughout the world.

The capitalists who have been engaged in developing the country depend upon the two classes of labourers above mentioned for their supply of workmen. By closing the district to further prospecting, both the capitalists and wage-earners above spoken of will gradually disappear.

There is no longer any incentive for the individual wage-earner to stay, as he is prevented from looking about for claims for himself, and, as explained above, he cannot obtain continuous employment the year round.

The capitalist must go because he will be compelled to import labour for a short period of the year at higher wages and consequently the cost of production will be increased. Banks of gravel that would be worked with wages on the present scale could not be profitably operated on a higher scale. Further, the ground now owned by individual miners will be worked out in many cases in from three to five years, and the operators will then be compelled to seek further locations, not from the government or under public regulations open to all the world, but from a private firm, whose interests is strictly financial, and whose only object will be to get every dollar they can out of the property they control.

The machinery belonging to miners and mining companies now in the country represents millions of dollars ; this would be rendered idle and consequently valueless, since the owners would be at the mercy of a universal landlord and must either submit to his terms or leave the country.

It may be asked why they could not remove their machinery outside the Treadgold concession and commence operations anew. The answer is that the concession covers nearly all the roads and improvements made in the district by the government ; consequently in moving to a location outside the concession new roads would have to be built to reach the objective points, and no individual could stand the expense. It would in fact be cheaper to bring in machinery for a new district from the outside up the natural water-ways of the country than to attempt to move it from its present position across intervening mountains and valleys to other places.

Minor Details.

The ordinary miner has to prospect, mark out and enter upon his claim. The grantees under the Order in Council are saved all that trouble since it is provided that all mining locations now or hereafter abandoned on the various creeks included in the grant, are to be deemed to be vested in them without entry.

The ordinary miner has to pay $15 per claim per annum rental and to do work to the extent of $200 on each claim (called 'representation' —see Order in Council, June 12, 1901, sec. 18, sub-sec. 5). Mr. Treadgold and his friends are relieved of these expenditures—sec. 13, sub-sec. 4 and 5.

The grantees are to expend during the present year at least $250,000, and this is presumed to be some kind of return for the enormous grant made them.

It is stated that 1,310 abandoned claims became vested in them January 1, and March 1, of the present year. In the hands of private miners, these would have entailed an outlay as above of $215 each, at least, or in all $281,650 per annum, some portion of which would go to the government, while the government will get none of the $250,000 required to be expended by the concessionaires.

In any event we consider the expenditure required of the grantees trivial in comparison to the extent of the gift made to them.

We are confident, from our experiences in this and other mining countries, that every abandoned claim in the district will be taken up within two years, at least, if the district is left open to individual prospectors, and that most of them will be taken up within one year.

The grantees are required to deliver within the district during the summer of 1905 a flow of 3,000 cubic feet of 18,600 gallons of water per minute at such an elevation as to afford a pressure at an effective head of not less than 300 feet, and this at a charge of 25 cents per miner's inch per hour. One private operator in the district himself raises 1,500 gallons per minute for his own use to a height of 300 feet at a less cost than 25 cents. There are others doing the same thing quite as cheaply, and additional new machinery has been placed on the ground for the same purpose by still other parties.

Generally.

It is our firm conviction that if the arrangement is not repealed and the Orders in Council rescinded, they will put an end to individual enterprise in the Yukon, will paralize every branch of industry there, will cause the people at present in the country to get out of it as quickly as they can work out existing holdings, will hand the country over bodily to a gigantic monopoly whose interest it will be to carry on their operations with Chinese or Japanese labour, and will in fact complete the ruin of the Yukon Territory, not at a distant day, but within the next four or five years.

Dated at Dawson, this 15th day of April, 1902.

I thought it was desirable to bring this to the attention of the House, in order that hon. members may be made familiar with the claims of the miners regarding this concession, and also in the hope that the Minister of the Interior may be able to give some statement to the House as to whether the indictment which has been preferred against these gentlemen interested in that country has been met in any way by the changes which have been made by the recent Order in Council. The hon. gentleman will notice that the statements with regard to the effect of the former concession are very strong, and they are supported, apparently, by a great many people who have large interests in that country. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries seems to be amused by this indictment. Is there any particular cause of merriment ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes it is rather amusing to me.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what way ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman wants an explanation, I will say that the communication seems to be from a young lawyer who is a very active partisan, and who could not possibly know much about the conditions existing. I would be very doubtful as to the accuracy of his statements. When I was myself acting in the department, applications came in from people with interests in that country, setting forth the necessity for improvements being made for furnishing water. From the language in which the representations are made, I cannot understand them, it looks very much as if the people making them had no knowledge of the country or of the business. It seems to me a purely partisan or political statement. That is the way it strikes me. So far as I am concerned, the only object I had in view was doing the very best for the development of that country. Of course mistakes may be made. I am satisfied that one of the great needs for getting out the wealth of that country is a supply of water. If my hon. friend and I both live to be here another year, I think we will find that representations will be made by those interested, not by people who have no interests in the country at all, asking the government to take similar action to that we have already taken. I have myself had applications from people in that country, pointing out the great urgency of the government taking some action to provide water, so that the ground can be worked.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know that there is any particular cause for amusement in what the hon. gentleman has stated. I understand the hon. gentleman to assert that these gentlemen who purport to have signed the petition have no substantial holdings in that country.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The author of the communication is, if I am not mistaken, a young man——

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is Mr. Shannon. The hon. gentleman is amused because Mr. Shannon has apparently been employed by these gentlemen to draw up, under their instructions, a communication to the Minister of the Interior. Well, cannot my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries free himself from partisan feelings with regard to a matter of this kind long enough to realize that a solicitor, whether he is a Liberal or Conservative, usually acts in these matters under the instructions of his clients, to carry out their views.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If he was retained by these people I would look upon the matter as very serious but I doubt it very much.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, my hon. friend sees fit to cast a doubt upon the professsional integrity of this gentleman.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then I do not know what he does mean. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman is very clear as to what he does mean.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then we are even in that respect. I have been listening attentively to the hon. gentleman, and I do not think he is very clear himself.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am endeavouring to point out to the House the objections to this concession made by people having interests in the Yukon, and this seems to touch my hon. friend very closely, for some reason or other. Possibly there may be some reasons which I do not understand on account of which he takes so deep an interest in this communication. I thought it my duty, because the Minister of the Interior said this communication had not reached him, to bring this matter to his attention. So far as the language of this communication is concerned, I cannot see anything amusing in it. If the facts are as stated, it seems to have been a very improper thing on the part of the government to have passed such a concession, and I should feel disposed to think the hon. gentleman would agree in that conclusion. Of course I do not vouch for these statements. I have not been in the Yukon, I have not cross-examined these gentlemen, I do not personally know about the technical matters of this kind which are dealt with in this memorial. Possibly the hon. gentleman himself is not as completely acquainted with these matters as gentlemen who reside on the spot, and have some personal knowledge of them. It may be he is in a position to dispute everything that is said in this memorial, from his personal knowledge, and to say that it is absolutely false, unfounded and incorrect. But if these gentlemen are to be believed, there was a very serious condition of affairs arising from the concession first made. I was disposed to submit this matter to the Minister of the Interior in a fair spirit. I had only one object in doing it, to know whether, with the very limited time at his disposal since I brought this memorial to his attention, he would be able to tell me whether these objections have been met by the new Order in Council, and whether in so far as they have not been met by the new Order in Council, he, with his special knowledge of that district, attaches any particular importance to them. I do not know that there is anything in the course which I have adopted as a member of this House which should excite the merriment of any hon. gentleman, particularly of a member of the government who are responsible for the concession which has been made, and which has been the subject of such strong condemnation in this memorial, and which, as we know without any doubt, has occasioned the most intense excitement and indignation in the Yukon among a very large portion of people. Now, Mr. Speaker, I realize the fact that this memorial is new to my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, and I should not blame him in any way if he tells me that he has not had time to take it into consideration since I brought it to his attention this morning. But I would like to know whether he has examined it for a few moments, and if so, what he has to say with regard to the statements which are made in this memorial, and to what extent the objections raised by the miners have been met by the terms of the new concession.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When my hon. friend called my attention to this document this morning I was under the impression that it was the same document, or a copy of a document, which had been received by me some weeks ago. But when he mentioned the date it was supposed to bear, I think the 15th of April, I was satisfied that I had not seen it, and it had not been brought to my attention. I caused inquiry to be made this morning in the department, and I find that no document has been received, either by my own secretary, in my own private mail, or in the department. So as a matter of fact, the document which purports to be addressed to me and to be for the purpose of bringing certain objections to my attention, has not been forwarded in such a way as to lead any person to suppose that that was the bona fide intention of the person who got up the document. If it had been the bona fide intention of the person who got up the document, surely he would have sent it to me or to the department, instead of circulating it through the newspapers, and leaving it to be brought to my attention by any person who might happen to see it. I do not even now know whether the signature of the lawyer who is supposed to have it in charge is genuine ; I do not know whether the signatures of the persons who purport to have signed it are genuine. There is nothing in it to show that such a petition had ever been prepared or signed. The fact that it is printed in a newspaper is not, unfortunately, evidence of the authenticity of the signature.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Not even there?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As far as that phase of it is concerned, we will have to leave that for the proper evidence to be presented to be dealt with when it comes in.

Mr. BORDEN Halifax). When I brought this matter to the hon. gentleman's attention, I supposed that he had received a copy of it in the usual way.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not finding fault with my hon. friend, because even if I had not received a copy my hon. friend would be quite right in bringing it to my notice. But all I can say is, that it has not reached my officers as yet. It will be quite evident, however, that the gentlemen who have taken part in preparing this document have not taken the most expeditious way of arriving at a proper consideration of the circumstances which they allege he desires of bringing to my attention in good faith for the purpose of having the grievances removed. I can only say that I hope the document will be sent in, and that the gentleman who has charge of it will enable me to have proper evidence of the authenticity of the representations which have been made. However, this is beside the question of the merits of the statements which are made. I had an opportunity this morning of hurriedly looking over a copy of the document with which the hon. leader of the opposition furnished me this morning, and while from my hurried consideration of it I would not be disposed to make an unqualified and positive statement, yet, my impression is that by the changes which we made in this Order in Council, when the document was recast, with the consent of the parties, substantially every objection that has been raised was met; that is to say, every objection that is of a character that can in the nature of things be met. The objection that a water scheme of this kind is not necessary now and that the creek claims should be worked out first before anything of that kind is undertaken is something that could not be met, and I intimated to my hon. friend last night that I did not at all agree with the proposition which was set out in that portion of the document, and I do not agree with it now. After having discussed this matter with different persons from the Yukon in whose judgment I have confidence, more especially with Mr. Ross, the commissioner of the district, and with others, I see no seriousness in this objection, and I have not thought it necessary to consider that as a serious difficulty in connection with the matter. But, so far as the real objections are concerned, I think I can safely say that all of these objections have been removed in the charter as it stands at the present time. The changes which were made were made with the consent of the parties after a full discussion with the commissioner of the district and two delegates who were sent down by the people of the Yukon district to represent them in the discussion. One of these delegates was Mr. Wilson, who is one of the elected members of the Yukon council, and who, therefore, apart from his capacity as a delegate, may fairly, I think be considered to be a man qualified in every way to act in a representative capacity. Mr. Wilson, I believe, himself, is also a miner and therefore in a practical way as well as representing others he was well qualified to discuss the whole matter. There was another delegate named Mr. Sugrue. The changes that were made were after full discussion with these gentlemen, and with Mr. Ross, the commissioner of the district. And these gentlemen, Mr. Wilson and Mr. Sugrue, the representative delegates who were sent down from the Yukon, expressed themselves as being satisfied with the position of the government, so that, I think I may say that every reasonable objection has been met. When the gentlemen who were sent here as the representatives of the public meeting which was called to discuss the question in Dawson City, and who were well acquainted with the whole of the circumstances of the case expressed themselves as satisfied with the changes that were made, I think I may safely say that everything has been done that could be done to make the charter satisfactory to the people there.

Perhaps it would have been more satisfactory to the House if at an earlier period of the session, when we were not in a hurry with the proceedings necessarily pressing upon our minds at the close of parliament, a fuller discussion of this whole matter could have taken place. I have only to say that I should welcome the subject if it is brought up by my hon. friend or by any other member of the House, at some future time, because the whole subject is one in regard to which I will welcome full and complete discussion. There are many difficulties connected with the operation of affairs in the Yukon district which do not present themselves upon the surface, and one of the difficulties is that, as in most mining countries, there is a population which has a certain interest which is of a temporary character and the immediate interest of that portion of the population is not necessarily the permanent interest of the mining country or the permanent interest of the whole country. We have been endeavouring, in dealing with this subject, to serve the permanent interest, not only of the district, but of the Dominion of Canada, by attempting to provide means whereby the vast quantities of low grade gravels which cannot at present be worked at all shall be made productive and profitable not only to the country at large by reason of the fact of the trade of the country being stimulated by the business being carried on, but profitable directly to the treasury of the country in that the production shall pay a royalty to the treasury. We have been attempting to formulate plans whereby that result might be brought about. We have in the course of the operation found that in regard to certain phases of the question there were popular objections which, while in my judgment not of a character which rendered the scheme unworkable, yet, by reason of the fact that in a country of that kind, unless the people are satisfied with such an arrangement it is practically impossible to carry it out, we felt that it would be desirable if possible to get all parties together and make an arrangement which would be of an harmonious character, and as far as possible remove all the objections that had been raised on the part of certain classes of the people there. I think that has been successfully done. As I said to my hon. friend, I cannot say in the most unqualified way, on such a cursory hearing of the objections, which are mentioned in this document, that everything that has been mentioned there has been removed, but I think every objection which is of a substantial character and which can be removed has been removed, and I think the evidence of that fact is that the changes have given full satisfaction to the delegates who were here from Dawson City urging the objections which were considered at the public meetings which were held in the Yukon district for the purpose of discussing the matter. I have nothing to say in regard to the bona fides of the document except that I think the hon. leader of the opposition will agree with me that if the gentleman promoting it wanted a fair consideration of the representations, a businesslike forwarding of the document to my office for consideration would have been the proper course rather than publishing it in a newspaper and having it brought to my attention in an indirect way. I may say, however, that I will give it the most careful consideration, and beyond that at the present time it is impossible for me to go.

Mr. G. O. ALCORN (Prince Edward). I am very glad that the Minister of the Interior has intimated that next session a full opportunity will be afforded to discuss this question, and to place it in its true light before the country. The minister has stated in a very general way, and without in the least particularizing in what respects the Order in Council of the 23rd April last has bettered the condition of the two former Orders in Council—he has stated, that all objections practically are now removed. From what little attention I have given the matter, and from some information which I have been in receipt of, I believe that the hon. gentleman's impression in that direction is to a large extent in error, and that when particulars are discussed and when the matter is more elaborately presented, it will be found that the order of the 23rd of April is a very slight, if any, improvement upon the two preceding Orders in Council. I might mention the matter of abandoned claims, which as all interested in the matter know, has been the chief cause of complaint. With regard to these abandoned claims I am entirely unable to say that the latter order in any respects betters the position of the free miners of that district. It is said that some 4,000 of these abandoned claims are in a position to be absorbed by these concessionaires. I would draw the attention of the minister to the fact that the first Order in Council vests these abandoned claims on the 1st of January of this year in these concessionaries, and that the last Order contains no clause divesting them of these claims. The effect of that would on its face appear to be that a large number of these claims of very great value have become vested in these three gentlemen named in the original charter, and that they are in a position to-day legally to claim these properties as their own. Further, both Orders in Council free these concessionaires from the matter of representation, that is, as the leader of the opposition has explained: the payment of a fee of $15 annually, and the doing of work of the value of $200 a year upon the claims. The matter of monopoly is by no means amended by the last Order in Council. These gentlemen are granted as full a monopoly under it as they were by the former Order in Council. That monopoly as a fact amounts to a tax upon the free miners of that district, and as we all known the Yukon Act expressly prohibits the imposition of any tax by Order in Council upon the people of that territory. The free miners if they carry on hydraulic mining are compelled by the terms of this concession to purchase water from the concessionaires and that in effect amounts to a tax upon their business.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. ALCORN. It has been stated, and I believe correctly, that the terms fixed by these Orders in Council—even by the amended order—at 25 cents a miner's inch would upon an ordinary claim during an ordinary season amount to something like $18,000 of fees which these concessionaires would be in a position to collect from the free miners of that district. That, as hon. gentlemen will see, would be almost a prohibitive tax, and the effect of it would be that they would be compelled to abandon their claims, and under the clause with regard to abandoned claims, these concessionaires would thus become seized of the whole of these claims in that district. I do not intend to further pursue the particulars, especially in view of the fact that the minister has not seen fit to go into the particulars at all.

What we complain of more particularly is that the government in this as in other matters, have taken the course of proceeding by Order in Council instead of by Act passed by this parliament. I think it will be admitted—in fact last night the right hon. Prime Minister admitted it with regard to the Yukon Railway claim then under discussion—that that course is entirely indefensible. The right hon. gentleman frankly admitted that Mackenzie & Mann had no legal claim upon this government, and for the reason that the government had seen fit to proceed by Order in Council instead of by legislation. Many instances of this will occur to hon. gentlemen—there is the Clergue steel rail contract, the Yukon Railway, the present concession and others; all of which we on this side of the House believe should have been presented by the minister in charge by statement from his place in the House before any Order in Council was passed, before any contract was signed, and before a Bill was introduced. What we complain of is that the members of the administration, being as a matter of course perfectly aware of the law upon this subject, of their rights in that respect, and of the practice and procedure obtaining in England and by which they are bound here ; we complain that they disregard these precedents and pursue a course which we regard as wholly improper and irregular, and which the Prime Minister last evening admitted to be so. While the government are well seized of the state of the law in that respect, others may not be so well informed, and I think the country should be placed in a position to judge of the acts of the members of the present administration in this respect. For that reason possibly the House will bear with me for a very few moments while I state some of the points in that respect by way of precedent laid down by Mr. Alpheus Todd in his 'Parliamentary Government in England,' a work of very high authority and character. At page 450 Todd says :

> The ancient prerogative of the Crown in legislating by Orders in Council has been subjected to the control of parliament, and is now mainly exercised as a deputed and not as a prerogative power. The Crown still retains the right to regulate various details of administration by its own prerogative authority, but it is an admitted principle that the sovereign has no right, by a mere Order in Council, either to sanction a departure from the requirements of an existing law, or to interfere with the established rights or privileges of any class of persons within the realm. It is competent to the Crown to declare and enforce, by proclamation, the execution of any existing law, but it is not within the power of the Crown, either to add to, alter, or dispense with any law of the land.

At page 461 he says :

> A large proportion of what may be called the details of legislation rests upon the authority of Orders in Council, some of which are issued by Her Majesty in virtue of her prerogative, while others derive their force from the provisions of Acts of parliament. It is competent to a court of justice to inquire into the validity—or accuracy, in the statement of alleged facts—of an Order in Council, duly passed and gazetted.
> As examples of the variety and importance of the subjects to which this form of quasi-legislation is applicable, it may be stated that Orders in Council or royal proclamations which are usually issued in pursuance of the same, are promulgated for the assembling, prorogation and dissolution of parliament——

And for various other purposes which are mentioned, but not for matters such as the one in question, in which the public property of the country is attempted to be disposed of.

> As a general rule, all Orders in Council restricting trade, unless issued under the authority of an Act of parliament, or justified by reference to cases coming within the prerogative of war—and all orders suspending the operation of any statute—would require an Act of indemnity.

We say that the matter in question is strictly a matter dealing with trade and in restraint of trade in connection with abandoned claims, and our contention is that this amounts to a tax on the miners of the Yukon district. On page 464 the author says:

> In the working of constitutional government, experience has proved that certain subordinate powers of legislation must be intrusted to almost every leading department of state. So long as these powers are exercised with the knowledge of parliament and in direct subjection to its control——

I wish here to point out that parliament prorogued last year on the 23rd of May, and that the original Order in Council is dated the 12th of June, from which it is apparent that in a matter with the elaborate detail incident to this transaction, the government must have been in treaty with the applicants during the time parliament was sitting; yet not one syllable of the matter was communicated to parliament. The whole transaction was conceived in the dark and in secret, and parliament heard nothing whatever of it until a return was brought down this session in answer to a motion by the hon. leader of the opposition. Therefore I say the transaction cannot be said to come within the definition contained in the text, that:

> So long as these powers are exercised with the knowledge of parliament and in direct subjection to its control, they can be more advantageously discharged by responsible ministers than if it were obligatory that they should emanate from parliament itself. For all such regulations are framed by a responsible minister for the sanction of the Crown, and no premature interference therein ought to be attempted by either House. Minutes of council, departmental regulations, and other authoritative directions emanating from the heads of the principal executive departments, must needs be frequently issued in regard to particular matters of administration, which require to be determined by competent authority, but it is essential that all acts of quasi-legislative authority which may be performed by any department of state, shall be within the limits defined and prescribed by parliamentary enactment; and also that, whenever either the expenditure of public money, or other great public interests, are concerned in the matters thus disposed of, an opportunity should be afforded to parliament of expressing its opinion upon the same, before the government proceed to take action thereon.

This government have seen fit entirely to reverse this order of procedure. Instead of communicating the matter to parliament through the mouth of the minister having charge of the transaction, and informing parliament of their intention to enter into this arrangement, and then obtaining the authority of parliament to carry it out by Order in Council or by an Act, the first we hear of it is, after the matter has become an entirely completed transaction. On page 470 it is stated:

> The constitutional control of parliament over the exercise of legislative powers by ministers of state, executive departments, and other public bodies, being admitted. It is evident that there is an undeniable advantage in the practice itself.
> Thus, by the Contagious Disorders of Animals Act of 1848, the Privy Council were empowered to make orders and regulations to carry out the intent of the Act, the same to be laid before both Houses of parliament within a specified time.
> It is customary to provide that Orders in Council, departmental regulations, representations, rules of court, or tables of fees, framed and issued under the authority of particular Acts of parliament, shall be laid before both Houses within twenty, thirty, or forty days (as the case may be), after the making thereof—or after the re-assembling of parliament, should they have been issued during a recess—(it is usually added), before they become operative and binding * * * * *
> If within that time either House address Her Majesty to withhold her consent from any scheme, or any part thereof, the Crown can only assent to so much of the same as may not have been objected to.

Showing the complete control which the representatives of the people in parliament assembled should have, and in England have, over matters of this kind, and which control is entirely withdrawn from parliament in this country by the practice adopted by the present administration. Surely, if that practice is adhered to, we are returning to the days of irresponsible government. The rights and privileges of parliament are infringed upon in a greater degree than perhaps could be done by any other course which the administration could pursue. If the practice is right, there is nothing whatever to prevent the government dealing with any part of the property of the country in the same manner, secretly, in the dark, and without communication even to the House, much less to the country. In a note, the learned author then gives an instance which occurred in the year 1871:

> On June 30, 1871, an address was moved to the Queen, in the House of Lords, that for certain reasons therein stated Her Majesty would withhold her assent from the proposed scheme of the Endowed School Commissioners for the management of Emmanuel Hospital Charity School, heretofore governed by the corporation of the city of London. The motion was opposed by ministers, but agreed to on division. Immediately afterwards another address was moved praying that the royal assent might also be withheld from the schemes relating to St. Margaret's Hospital and the Greycoat Hospital, Westminister. No reason was assigned for the request in the motion; but the mover stated that these schemes were open to the same objections that had been urged against the first mentioned scheme. Notwithstanding the opposition of ministers, this motion was agreed to. On July 3, Her Majesty's answer was reported, 'That she would withhold her assent from the several schemes objected to in these addresses.'

On page 482, referring to the rights of ministers to legislate in a quasi manner within certain prescribed limits, and in regard to certain prescribed subjects, it is said:

> But admitting its obvious advantages, it is liable to serious abuse. It has been well observed that there 'is no modern innovation which needs to be watched with more jealousy than the practice of delegating the authority of parliament (even in small and local matters) with no better check than the chance that some unusually vigilant legislator may move an address to reject the scheme of law before it has had time to mature into an indefeasible enactment. The whole scope and genius of our legislative system is to afford by the forms of parliament every possible security that no law shall be made which has not been deliberately and repeatedly affirmed in all its details, and it would be alien to the essence of free government to substitute for this a system in which the relations of the Crown and parliament should be reversed, and statutes should be octroyés by the government, and nothing but a bare veto left to the Lords and Commons.

From the authorities I have quoted, Mr. Speaker, it is abundantly plain that the course pursued by the administration with regard to this and kindred matters is entirely contrary to the constitutional rule, and is not justified by any precedent on which hon. gentlemen could rely. That is very well shown by the very frank manner in which the right hon. premier last night, when the Yukon railway vote was under consideration, admitted that it was not to be defended on any legal or constitutional ground. As I have said, I am glad to know that on a future occasion we shall have an opportunity of discussing this matter in detail; but I content myself at present with presenting these few observations on the constitutional view of the matter.

REDHEAD, N.S., BOAT HARBOUR.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would like to ask the attention of the House while

I refer to a matter which has received perhaps more importance than either the amount of money involved or anything else justified, except by reason of the manner in which the hon. leader of the opposition brought it before the House. I would ask to be permitted to quote a statement made by the hon. gentleman a short time ago, not for the purpose of commenting on it or continuing the discussion, but merely to follow it up by certain official reports relating to the matter. On the 11th of March the hon. gentleman brought to the notice of the House certain representations made to him concerning some public works in the county of Shelburne, and I take the following quotation from what he has said. It will to be found on page 1032 of the unrevised 'Hansard':

Take the expenditure for the purpose of cutting a canal between a lake at Black Point in the county of Shelburne or Queen's—I do not know which—and tidal water. The information given me by a gentleman, who has personal knowledge, is that the project was to cut a canal between tide-water and the lake for the purpose of affording shelter to fishermen. The project had been reported on years ago adversely by the engineer in charge, Mr. Dodwell. This is the information given, not by Mr. Dodwell, but by this gentleman to whom I refer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no Black Point in our books. Is there any other name by which the place is known?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The harbour at Black Point near Lockeport. It seems that afterwards a gentleman by the name of Locke, a civil engineer, who was placed in charge of a portion of the south shore, reported favourably on the construction of this canal. Mr. Dodwell has said it was no use undertaking the work because the bottom of the lake was higher than tide-water, and the construction of the work could not possibly result in any advantage to the fishermen; but under Mr. Locke's report, the canal was cut at considerable expense, and it was found that the bottom of the lake was above tide-water, so that the water simply ran out of the lake, and the expenditure was absolutely thrown away. This is worse than waste of public money, and the Minister of Public Works should inform the House whether or not the statement I have made is correct.

There was a difficulty in meeting this statement for the reason that the place indicated by the hon. gentleman contains no such work as that to which he alluded. There is no such work at Black Point, and it was difficult to find out the work he referred to. But we have discovered a work which perhaps corresponds with the description he gave, and which he may have had in his mind. I shall simply read a report from the assistant engineer, Mr. Thomas J. Locke, addressed to Mr. Lafleur, acting chief engineer of the Public Works at Ottawa:

At Redhead, Shelburne county, we expended about twenty-one hundred dollars to convert a pond on inside of beach into a boat harbour in the spring of 1900, and built cribwork protection walls to low water about 300 feet in length. On November 10th, 1897, Mr. Dodwell reported on examination of this place. The work is substantial and the boat harbour is now and has been used as a shelter successfully. The class of boats used are skiff boats about 18 foot keel. The channel, from low water to pond is twenty feet wide and at low tide the boats seek its mouth as shelter, and as the tide rises, go into the pond at about approximated half tide. For additional details, please see my annual report for fiscal years 1899-1900.

THOS. J. LOCKE,
Asst. Engineer.

That is a recent report. I wish now to present a report made by Mr. Locke on this work, not recently, not since this session opened, not since this matter was the subject of controversy, but at the time the work was done, two years ago. This is an extract from the report of Mr. Locke, the assistant engineer, for the year 1899-1900:

(Extract from my Annual Report, 1899-1900.)

Redhead is situate about two miles east of Roseway and 12 miles south-west of Shelburne town. It is a fishing station of some considerable importance. There are from 40 to 50 three-handed boats at present fishing from this point, and in olden times when a safe harbour was afforded the fishermen, a much larger number was engaged at this place. At the site of our work is a shingle beach about half a mile in length and separating a small lake from the sea-coast. Through this beach there was at one time a channel or inlet by means of which in stormy weather, the owners of the boats were able to seek shelter and protection for their property through this channel into the lake. In 1840 or thereabouts the provincial government, upon representations being made to them that this channel was gradually being filled up, deemed it advisable to advance the interests of the fishermen by protecting the west side of this channel with a groin of stone-filled cribwork from the lake to within 40 feet of L.W.O.S.T. This work, however, was not suitable for the purpose, and within 15 years the channel was entirely closed, so that the fishermen had no shelter whatever provided for them. Examinations and surveys of this place showed it to be necessary in order to have a permanent haven that the channel should be reopened and cribwork protecting walls built for the entire length on both sides. Accordingly the sum of $2,000 was appropriated for this work, and during the last fiscal year it was undertaken and completed at a total cost of $2,097.87. The work done consisted of the excavation of a channel 20 feet wide, and from four to eight feet deep for a total length of 306 feet to L.W.O.S.T. Protecting walls were built along the sides of this channel, consisting of stone-filled cribwork, 10 feet wide on top and at an average height of from eight to eight and one-half feet. The length of the western wall was 316 feet, while that of the eastern side was but 266 feet. Besides this, we constructed a retaining cribwork wall along the face of the beach, 220 feet in length, six feet wide and three feet high, so as to more fully protect the beach and keep the violent storms of the ensuing two or three years from washing portions of the beach into the lake, thus preventing the destruction of the outlet of the main work. I may mention that the estimated cost of this work was $2,360, and although we constructed more work than was at first estimated to be necessary, yet the total cost was slightly under $2,100. The credit for this apparent saving is due to no engineering skill, but to the earnest and honest manner in which every labourer engaged in the work performed his duties. Too often, in employing labour upon government works, are the employees inclined to shirk responsibility, thinking in their ignorance that the money to the credit of the work is inexhaustible, but in this case each and every man knew that the building of the work meant a great deal to himself personally, and in consequence we received more than just recompense for the wages paid to labourers. The work is strong and substantial, and I have much pleasure in informing you that this work is satisfactory in every respect.

I certify the above to be a correct copy taken from my annual report, 1899-1900.

THOS. J. LOCKE,
Asst. Engineer.

This is the work which my hon. friend describes as utterly useless. I have not got the date of this report, but the engineer certifies that it is a copy of the report sent by him to the department for the fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1900.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the name ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Redhead. There can be no doubt that that is the place that my hon. friend refers to, because there is no such place elsewhere on that shore. But one other point—the hon. gentleman says that the work was wastefully carried on. I have shown by the report of the engineer that it was exceptionally well managed and that it was a work of great benefit to the people of that section. My hon. friend stated that Mr. Dodwell, the engineer in charge had previously reported against the work. I have now Mr. Dodwell's report made in 1897, addressed to the chief engineer of public works. That report is as follows :

November 10, 1897.

L. Coste, Esq.,
Chief Engineer, P.W.D.,
Ottawa.

Sir,—In accordance with instructions, contained in your letter, No. 2866, of August 6th 1897, I made a survey and examination early in September, at Red Head, Shelburne county, and I now beg to submit the inclosed plan and the following report :

Red Head is a small promontory or head-land on the west side of the mouth of Shelburne harbour, 12 miles due south of the county town. The settlement on and near the head comprises some two or three hundred people dependent for a living almost exclusively upon fishing.

A fresh water pond, of ten or twelve acres in extent, separated from the ocean by shingle beaches, through which was a narrow channel, used many years ago to afford a safe and convenient harbour for the fishing fleet, but it gradually filled up, owing to the drift of the gravel, until it was with difficulty that a boat could be forced through even at high water. Some few years before confederation, therefore, an attempt was made to re-open the channel and a grant of $100 was made by the provincial government. With this sum together with labour and materials furnished by the inhabitants, a piece of crib and pile work about 200 feet long was built on the south side of the channel. The north side of the channel being unprotected, it soon filled up and the work gradually became buried in gravel.

At the present time, and for some years past, the fishermen of the neighbourhood, on the approach of a storm, and also for winter quarters, are obliged, in order to save their boats from destruction, to haul them up on the beach, and often, before this can be done they are dashed on the shore and injured or broken to pieces.

To enable the fishermen to carry on their operations under somewhat more favourable conditions, it is desirable that the boat channel be permanently re-opened.

This can probably be accomplished by the construction of the two-winged walls of crib-work, and the digging of the channel between them, as shown on the accompanying plan, which would give a protected channel having about six feet of water at H.W.O.S.T. (spring tides rise 7 feet, neaps 5½ feet). That would probably remain open for some years and prove a great boon to the inhabitants.

I estimate the cost of this proposed work at $2,360.

(Sgd.) C. E. W. DODWELL,
Resident Engineer.

So, every statement that my hon. friend was induced to present to this House with regard to this work is shown to have been unjust, unwarranted and unfounded. This work was necessary; it was useful; it was not reported against by Mr. Dodwell, but was favourably reported on by him. Mr. Dodwell reported that the fair cost of the work would be $2,360, and, under the administration of Mr. Locke, who carried it out, the work was performed for $2,097.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as the present report of Mr. Locke is concerned, it was apparently made by telegram, and I presume a telegram was sent him. I suppose that it will be produced.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, no doubt, will produce it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman will look closely at the wording of the report he will see that it carries out practically the information given to me :

The channel from low water to pond is twenty feet wide, and at low tide the boats seek its mouth as shelter, and as the tide rises go into the pond at about approximate half tide.

Indicating that the boats cannot use this pond at all at low water, nor until it rises to half tide. Then, further :

This work has never been useless, although at time of commencement the pond had a deposit of mud from five to eight feet deep which has mostly scoured out.

Now, if boats can only enter at half tide and that with from five to eight feet of mud scoured out from the bottom of the lake, what would be the condition when it was first opened ? I shall send this document to the gentlemen who gave that information—for the information came to me from more than one source, including some who are political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite—and I shall ask these gentlemen what they have to say with regard to this report. But one of the first things I would expect them to say is that it is a practical admission of the truth of the statement they gave to me. With respect to Mr. Dodwell's report, I informed the hon. gentleman when I brought this matter up that the information I had about the report did not come from Mr. Dodwell himself.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I read what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But I also said, which the hon. gentleman has not read :

> Of course, I have no personal knowledge, but the information given me comes from an entirely unprejudiced source — from political friends of the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Finance, in whose constituency —I refer to the Minister of Finance—a good deal of this expenditure has been made.

And so, not having personal knowledge of these matters, I asked for information. I shall be glad if the circumstances are not as reported to me. I can only add, and I think the hon. Minister of Finance knows it from other sources than myself, that with regard to many of the expenditures on the South Shore, there has been, and I think are at present a great many rumours at least, and a good deal of dissatisfaction. Therefore, with these rumours current and with dissatisfaction existing, it is only right that these matters should be discussed in parliament in order that the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Public Works as well, may put themselves right in regard to them. As to this particular item, I do not think that the report of Mr. Locke shows that the suggestions are unfounded. I do not so regard it at present. But, as I said, I will send it to the gentlemen who gave me the information and will ask them what they think of it, and I will deal with the matter, if necessary, in a succeeding session.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I dissent from the statement that there are rumours of the uselessness of these expenditures or dissatisfaction or any trouble with regard to any of the works to which the hon. gentleman has referred. He has specified this particular work, and this is the one under discussion, and I want to say that I have no doubt that every dollar expended along that shore under the direction of Thomas J. Locke has been expended honestly, intelligently and economically and in such a manner as to meet best the requirements of the people. The hon. gentleman says that if the work is what it is to-day, it must have been much worse before the bed of the lake was deepened. But his informant was not writing of the work as it was at first, but as it is to-day. The hon. gentleman finds fault because boats can only enter at half tide. But is that any reason why the fishermen should not be permitted to get their boats in at all ? The essence of the hon. gentleman's charge was 'this is worse than waste of public money.' I venture to say that there never was a case in which there has been more complete vindication of the work of an engineer in preparing a useful public work. The hon. gentleman said that Mr. Dodwell had reported unfavourably, but that another engineer had gone in and done a useless piece of work there. That was the strongest point in what the hon. gentleman said, and it is shown that his statement was quite unfounded, because Mr. Dodwell recommended the work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Dodwell made no other report, I suppose. I take it that the hon. gentleman means that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no knowledge of any other report. Will the hon. gentleman say that he did make another ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have not said that he did. But I have said that I have certain information regarding it. That is all I said about it, and all I brought to the attention of the House both with regard to Mr. Dodwell's report and other matters. So far as the credibility of my information is concerned, and certainly as to the good faith of my informants, I believe in it still, and I do not think the report differs practically from the information given to me.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let me say that Mr. Dodwell made no other report than the one here presented. I investigated this matter since yesterday, and there is no other report from the resident engineer. Let me add that this kind of work at Red Head, not Black Point, but Red Head is not the only work of the same character that has been done in several places in the county of Gaspé. It is not a costly work. You make a channel and a couple of jettes, and without a large expenditure of money you have a harbour very useful for fishermen. That is the kind of work that has been done at this point. But that is not the only one, very far from it.

PASPEBIAC AS AN OCEAN PORT.

Mr. C. MARCIL (Bonaventure). As the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce were adopted en bloc, I was deprived of the opportunity of making some remarks with reference to the needs of my county, and I would like to take this opportunity, probably the last one I shall have, of doing so.

At one o'clock House took recess.

House resumed at Three o'clock.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Mr. Speaker, previous to the House rising at one o'clock I asked the privilege of speaking on this motion before you left the Chair, and I do so for the reason that no opportunity has been afforded me during the present session of referring to the subsidy which is paid by this government for a line of steamers between Dalhousie and Gaspé basin. At a previous sitting of the House in committee it was agreed to vote the estimates for these steamship subsidies en bloc, and I was promised an opportunity before prorogation of referring to some of them. I am glad the Minister of Trade and Commerce is now in his seat, and I will particularly draw his attention to item 202: 'Steam communication during the season of 1902, from the opening to the closing of navigation between Gaspé basin and Dalhousie, $12,500.' The county of Bonaventure which I represent is situated on this route, half way, as it were, between Dalhousie, New Brunswick, and Gaspé basin, in the county of Gaspé. A line of steamers is at present subsidized by this government running practically from the 1st of May until the 15th or 20th of November. The conditions prevailing in that section of the province of Quebec are such that an effort, I believe, should be made by this government to extend the present system of communication as much as possible, in view of the fact that the county of Gaspé is altogether deprived of railway communication of any kind, and that a portion of Bonaventure is also in that position. The North American Transportation Company has had a contract on this line for a number of years past. That contract expired at the close of navigation last year, and if I am correctly informed, the company have been allowed to run for one year more on the understanding that when tenders are called for a five years contract beginning from next session, more improved methods will be applied, and that an attempt will be made on the part of the government to meet the legitimate wishes of the people inhabiting that coast. The steamer 'Admiral' which is at present on the service, has certainly given satisfaction in the past. She is good enough as far as she goes. But, Mr. Speaker, when you take into consideration the fact that the steamer 'Admiral' was formerly the property of General Grant, and navigated American waters as far back as 1861, you will probably admit that in 1902 the time has arrived when a more modern vessel should be placed upon that route. The 'Admiral' is a paddle steamer. Now people want an iron screw steamer able to begin earlier in the spring and to continue later in the fall and winter. At the present moment the counties of Bonaventure and Gaspé have, roughly speaking, merely eight months of navigation, although navigation is possible for ten, eleven, and in some seasons twelve months in the year.

A number of petitions have been received by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on this subject. Some of them asked that the service to Dalhousie be discontinued because it is a parallel line with the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway from New Carlisle for nearly a distance of 100 miles. The views expressed by those petitioners have led me to believe that the present service might be continued, but that it might also be vastly improved. If communication is desired with the province of New Brunswick via Dalhousie, we should see to it that the facilities of the eastern end of the line are extended. I would beg leave to urge that if the present line to Dalhousie is to be continued, the line from New Carlisle, the terminus of the railway, should be kept up as long as possible during the fall and winter, starting as early as possible in the spring. At this moment there are people in the county of Bonaventure who have to drive thirty miles to reach the first railroad station. There are people in the county of Gaspé who have to drive 80, 90, and in some cases 100 miles before they can reach the nearest railway station on the Atlantic and Lake Superior, and then go over 100 miles to reach the Intercolonial Railway at Metapedia. Their arguments have been set forth in the resolution which I beg most respectfully to read, and which I believe contains the essence of what is now asked for. It is to the following effect:

That an improvement in the steamer service between the Baie de Chaleur and Gaspé is absolutely necessary.

That in 1899 the Department of Trade and Commerce called for tenders for said service, to terminate not earlier than the 31st day of December.

That notwithstanding said condition on the part of the department, the steamer 'Admiral' has invariably discontinued the said service in the month of November.

That a paddle boat is not adapted for fall and early winter navigation. That the interests of the coast suffer great injury by the steamer service being cut off at a season when navigation is perfectly feasible and safe.

That small sailing vessels of about 100 tons load and sail from Gaspé during the month of December for Europe and South America. That the harbour of Gaspé was closed to navigation this year on the 18th January. That it is a matter of vital importance for the prosperity and welfare of this coast that the steamer subsidized to run between Gaspé Basin and a railway terminus should be a screw steamer.

I believe that when we call the attention of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce to this important matter, taking into consideration the fact that these people are deprived of railway communication, he will see, during the year, that no contract is entered into with the North American Transportation Company, or any other company, until it is stipulated that navigation shall be maintained on the Baie de Chaleur as long as it is possible to do so; that a screw steamer is provided so as to be able to go into the bays when there is a formation of two, or three, or four inches of ice, and that this service shall be maintained from the terminus of the railway at New Carlisle or Pasbebiac. The North American Transportation Company have, so far as I have been able to ascertain, given a fairly satisfactory service in the past, and if all things should be equal, I think they should be given the preference, provided they will undertake to put on a modern steamer and that they will undertake to run from the terminus of the railway until the close of navigation.

I am sorry that I cannot allow my opportunity to escape without dwelling upon another matter in connection with the navigation of the Baie de Chaleur, which is of more national interest than that to which I have just directed attention. The House will remember that a couple of days ago we adopted a Bill providing, as far as we could see into the future, for the extension of the railway service in the counties of Bonaventure and Gaspé. That Bill met with the approval of my hon. colleague from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux), it met with my own approval, it was discussed at a meeting of the Railway Committee, and we thought that a fair compromise had been arrived at, and that all the conditions had been taken into consideration, but I learn that at the Railway Committee of the Senate the bondholders of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company succeeded in having this Bill thrown out, so that now the eastern portions of the county of Bonaventure and the county of Gaspé are again condemned for I do not know how long to be deprived of railway facilities. In view of this fact, I appeal to the government, to, between now and the coming session, view this matter in the light that it should be viewed, and see whether the people of these counties are not entitled to generous treatment at their hands. These counties are amongst the oldest settled portions of the province of Quebec. For many long years they have contributed their share to the building up of the magnificent railway system of the Dominion, they have contributed their share to the construction of the trans-continental lines, to the construction of the canals and the improvement of our harbours; in a word, they have paid their proportion to make Canada what it is to-day. Yet, owing to unfortunate circumstances, they have been deprived of the boon and the benefits which have been extended to every nook and corner of this Dominion, barring merely the grants for harbours, rivers and ocean service. In view of the action which the Senate has taken, I beg most respectfully to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to the consideration of a few facts which I will submit to him. He stated, in the course of the debate on the Intercolonial Railway, that the Intercolonial Railway is not yet a complete system, and that the time cannot be far removed when the Intercolonial Railway shall be extended westward to the lakes. We heard, during last session and during this session also, the transportation question discussed in all its phases. As far as the western portion of this country is concerned, I need not say one word in reference to that part of the question, but I would beg most respectfully to urge upon the attention of the government the importance of what may be called the eastern phase of the transportation question. When, after the 25th of November, the last steamer leaves the port of Montreal for Europe, the St. Lawrence being closed to navigation, in what position is this country placed? It means that this route is closed for five or six months in the year. The first American seaport is Portland, and the others are Boston or New York, far removed. There is St. John, which has to be reached through American territory. To reach a seaport in our own country, on a purely Canadian line, you have to travel 740 miles on the Intercolonial Railway to St. John, you have to go 839 miles to reach the port of Halifax, or you have to go 989 miles to reach Sydney or Louisbourg. It is not a matter of surprise that the Intercolonial Railway, being handicapped in this fashion for five months in the year, being deprived of a seaport except at the expense of travelling an enormous distance, is working under a disadvantage, but I think the time has come for the government to take this question into consideration, as it is doing now, and try to solve it. I hope that it will consider whether the time has not come when the Baie de Chaleur, one of the most magnificent bodies of water that we have on this continent, situated midway between the St. Lawrence, the maritime provinces and the Atlantic seaboard should not be utilized with the view of establishing a steamer route to Europe. I am in possession, at this moment, of evidence submitted to me by the most competent officials of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and by men who have navigated the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Baie de Chaleur, which goes to demonstrate that the Baie de Chaleur is navigable for at least ten months, if not eleven months, in the year for ordinary steamers and for twelve months in the year for steamers specially constructed for that purpose. In view of the fact that the Senate has thrown out this Bill which would extend this railway along the Bonaventure coast, I would submit whether it would not be wise on the part of this government and of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to see whether it is not possible, when the trains reach Metapedia, instead of sending them across the province of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, to find a seaport, whether it would not be possible to use the present line of the Atlantic and Lake Superior down to Paspebiac and there find a seaport which could accommodate the largest vessels on the ocean and a seaport which is open for practically eleven months in the year. I do not ask the government to go into any reckless expenditures. I do not ask the government to increase the cost of the Intercolonial Railway to this country, but I ask the management of the Intercolonial Railway and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to consider if the port of Paspebiac, which is now connected with this system of railways, could not be utilized instead of hauling the whole of our western and general trade to the seaboard through the maritime provinces. I have not a word to say against the city of St. John, or the city of Halifax, or the port of Sydney, or Louisburg. I would like to direct the attention of this parliament for a very few minutes to the fact that what I have called the eastern phase of the transportation question is not a new question. As far back as 1875 a committee of this House was appointed :

To inquire as to the best and most direct route for the conveyance of mails and passengers, between the Dominion of Canada and Europe ; the possibility of navigating the Gulf of St. Lawrence, during the winter months ; and of finding on the shores of the Dominion a harbour accessible both in winter and summer, to be the terminus of such shortest route.

The advantages of Louisbourg, the advantages of Sydney, the advantages of St. John, the advantages of Halifax are all well known, but the advantages offered by the port of Paspebiac are not so well known, and I shall read a portion of the report which refers to Paspebiac, a port which is now accessible to us and which practically forms part of our system of railways, and a port which is nearer to Montreal than any winter ocean port we have on Canadian territory.

That Paspebiac harbour, situated on the north side of Baie de Chaleur, offers all the advantages of a first-class harbour, and is, as the evidence shows, open and approachable from the Gulf of St. Lawrence at all seasons of the year.

In examining into the merits and demerits of Paspebiac harbour your committee deemed it advisable to elicit all the information possible regarding the navigation of the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

It appears from the evidence given by Colonel Farijana, based upon careful hydrographical examinations, that the southern and western portions of the gulf are perfectly navigable at all seasons of the year.

It has been shown your committee that the Arctic ice which is carried into the gulf through the Strait of Belle Isle, strikes the N.E. of Anticosti with a velocity of current of half a mile per hour ; that the ice from the river St. Lawrence is born upon the southern shore of the same island with a force of current of two miles per hour ; and that the stronger current from the river forces the Arctic ice towards the western shore of Newfoundland, thus, leaving, as we have stated, the southern and western portions of the gulf safe for navigation.

It has further been shown your committee that the tidal current entering the gulf between Cape Breton and Cape Bay, is divided by the Magdalen group, and that the wave which passes southward of the Magdalen islands, holds in check any ice which may appear north of the islands, thus keeping free from accumulations of ice that portion of the gulf lying north of Cape Breton and south of the Magdalen islands, and as far north as Cape Gaspé.

That report was made by the committee as far back as 1875, and in 1876 another committee was appointed to determine if the river and Gulf of St. Lawrence could be made navigable during the winter season. There are persons in the city of Quebec who contend that the River St. Lawrence can be made navigable for twelve months in the year. I am not now dealing with that question. I am not asking this government, when it calls for tenders for the fast line to stipulate that the boats shall be built in such a way as to overcome the difficulties of ice, difficulties which are overcome now by the ordinary ferry boats plying between Lévis and Quebec. My point is, that if you do not utilize the River St. Lawrence between the 25th of November, and the month of May; if for five months in the year Canada is to be a frozen desert, so to speak, debarred from communication with the outside world except through American harbours; then I say that the time has come to consider the phase of the question which I present in connection with the transportation problem. The committee of 1876 also came to the conclusion, that the Gulf of St. Lawrence is perfectly navigable for the whole winter and that the port of Paspebiac was opened and easy of access. I may be told that four years ago an attempt was made by the steamer 'Gaspesia' to engage in winter navigation, and that the attempt failed. Let me present evidence which will show the nature of the venture made by the steamer 'Gaspesia.' I have here the statement of Captain Wakeham, commander of the government steamer 'La Canadienne,' a gentleman who has lived on the coast of Gaspé for nearly forty years, and who is more competent than perhaps any other to speak on this question. Here is what he says with reference to the 'Gaspesia' conditions generally in winter in that portion of Canada :

But very little ice enters the Bay Chaleur from the gulf. Northerly and westerly winds prevail during the winter, and the gulf ice is carried past the mouth of the bay, and does not drift into it to any great extent. With prolonged easterly wind, some ice would enter the bay ; but owing to the overlapping of Point Macquereau by Miscou Point, the Bay Chaleur is never closely packed with ice.

'Gaspesia' was an old vessel, not at all fitted for winter navigation in the gulf. She arrived off New Carlisle at a very unfortunate season. There was no wharf provision whatever for her. She was forced to anchor a considerable distance off shore in the running ice. The season was an unusually severe one ; the thermometer was at 20° below zero, and lower, nearly all the time she was in the bay.

On making for sea, the captain of the 'Gaspesia' took an unfortunate course, and one which he was advised to avoid by every one having the slightest knowledge of the ice conditions in the gulf. As a consequence he was caught in the pack which is always found to the westward of the Magdalen islands from the end of January to the end of March. Soon after getting into the pack, the 'Gaspesia' lost her rudder, which was not strengthened or protected against ice, and the vessel simply drifted about until she was relieved. Had she not lost her rudder I believe that, poor vessel even as she was, she would have worked out of the pack, got round it to the north, and made her way to sea without much difficulty.

On her second trip, the 'Gaspesia' reached Paspebiac during the last week in January. She left there again on the 3rd February. She had no difficulty in reaching Paspebiac from sea, and was not bothered with ice when going out of the Baie Chaleur and working down along the Gaspé shore. She afterwards got caught in the ice to the westward of the Magdalen islands. It is the opinion of all conversant with the matter that had she on leaving Paspebiac steamed direct for the east point of Anticosti, and from thence outwards towards Cape Ray, she should have got out of the gulf without difficulty.

But, had I not further evidence at my command, I would not ask the government to test the possibility of utilizing the Baie de Chaleur for navigation during the winter months. I have here evidence which convinces me that the navigation of the Baie de Chaleur is perfectly feasible after navigation has been abandoned on the St. Lawrence, and that it presents none of those risks from shoals and other natural obstacles which the navigation of the St. Lawrence is exposed to. Captain Wakeham speaks of the conditions at the present time, and of the conditions which have existed for thirty years to his knowledge. I know from letters which I have received that the Baie de Chaleur has been free from ice this winter, and that no ice has been seen at all in the port of Paspebiac. Captain Wakeham reports regarding the navigation of the Baie de Chaleur during the months of December and January :

There can be no question as to the navigability of the above waters in December. No ice whatever will be met with anywhere. The weather in December will generally be more moderate, that is, freer from storms than it is in October and the early part of November. For many years (over one hundred) small sailing vessels have cleared from the ports of Paspebiac and Gaspé in December with fish cargoes for the Mediterranean, South America and Jersey. These vessels usually make a quick and safe run out of the gulf. Their sailings have at times been made as late as Christmas week. The prevailing winds will be from west to northwesterly. On her first voyage the 'Gaspesia' reached Paspebiac on the 19th December, and left a week later. She saw no ice either coming or going.

We generally have a cold spell about the 1st January, when ice will make in sheltered coves, and in the inner parts of the harbours ; but this sort of ice will not bother an iron screw steamer. No ice will be found adrift in the gulf or Bay Chaleur, or along the shores of Bonaventure and Gaspé counties during the month of January.

I have frequently inquired of residents on the Bryon and others of the Magdalen islands as to the earliest dates at which drift ice begins to be seen about the islands. In very severe winters, that is rather when the winter has set in early, the first ice is seen off the Bryon island about the end of January. This ice is not at that date heavy, and there has been no rafting so that an ordinary ocean steamer would have no difficulty with it, as it is only when ice is in large heavy pans or fields and rafted that there is difficulty and risk in getting through it.

In a mild season, or when the winter has been late in setting in, ice will not be met with anywhere in the gulf before February.

In this connection I would particularly refer you to the evidence of Mr. Bourke, keeper of the Bird Rock Light, as given in 'La Presse' on the 25th November, 1901, in which this gentleman, who resides on the Magdalen islands, has navigated the gulf for over thirty years, and has for some time been keeper of the light on the Bird Rocks, and was also many springs at the ice as a sealing captain, and who has thus had exceptional advantages to judge of the matter, speaking of the question of winter navigation says :

'The greatest difficulties exist in March and April ; that there is no ice in the gulf until the 15th February.'

You have therefore a magnificent port on this bay, which is open to navigation without any difficulty at all for two and a half months after navigation is closed on the St. Lawrence. You have the Intercolonial leaving Montreal and reaching Metapedia, a distance of 439 miles. You have a branch of the Atlantic and Lake Superior, running down to Paspebiac 100 miles. You have therefore a port accessible, practically over your own lines of railway, which is open to navigation half the winter without any difficulty at all. I humbly submit that when this transportation question is taken up, the government should consider whether it will not utilize this port as long as it can be utilized, without crossing the whole of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia to secure an ocean port.

Allow me now to give the table of distances between Paspebiac, to Liverpool as compared with other ports. I will give the southern route, that is by Cape Race, because the northern route via Belle Isle is somewhat difficult at that season of the year :

From Liverpool to		Paspebiac	2,480
"	"	Halifax	2,450
"	"	North Sydney	2,282
"	"	St. John, N.B.	2,700
"	"	Louisbourg	2,274
"	"	Portland	2,766
"	"	Boston	2,837
"	"	New York	3,034

If we take into consideration the advantage of having the shortest route to Europe over our own system of railway, through our own territory, we have here a route which can be maintained easily without any additional expense by the use of our present railway system. You can leave Montreal for Paspebiac and reach there by the shortest route to Europe. Here is a fact which cannot be contradicted. Here are the figures taken from the official statement of distances, prepared by Captain Smith, let me read this to show the advantages of the route I am advocating.

	Miles.
From Montreal to Liverpool via Pasbebiac by Cape Race	3,034
From Montreal to Liverpool via Belle Isle	2,876
From Montreal to Liverpool via Louisbourg	3,255
From Montreal to Liverpool via North Sydney	3,271
From Montreal to Liverpool via Halifax by the Intercolonial Railway	3,287
From Montreal to Liverpool via St. John by the Intercolonial Railway	3,440
From Montreal to Liverpool via St. John by the Canadian Pacific Railway	3,181
From Montreal to Liverpool via Portland by the Grand Trunk Railway	3,059
From Montreal to Liverpool via Boston by the Central Vermont	3,141
From Montreal to Liverpool via New York by the Central Vermont	3,484

Here are the advantages in favour of Paspebiac over the other combined railway and ocean routes :

	Miles.
Over Halifax via Cape Race	253
Over Halifax via Belle Isle	411
Over St. John by the Intercolonial Railway via Cape Race	406
Over St. John by the Intercolonial Railway via Belle Isle	564
Over St. John by the Canadian Pacific short line	147
Over St. John by the Canadian Pacific Railway via Belle Isle	305
Over Portland by the Grand Trunk Railway via Cape Race	25
Over Portland by Belle Isle	183
Over Boston via Cape Race	107
Over Boston by Belle Isle	265
Over New York by Cape Race	450
Over New York by Belle Isle	608

I respectfully submit that, in view of these statements, it is the duty of the government not to undertake to solve the fast line question or make any change concerning the eastern phase of the transportation question before fully weighing these facts, which I have the honour of submitting, and which are confirmed in every respect by the reports of the two select committees of this House appointed to investigate the matter. This is not an attempt on my part to raise a cry against the ports of St. John or Halifax, but it is well known that these ports, by our present system of communication over Canadian territory and our government road, cannot compete with the short lines to Portland and to St. John through the state of Maine.

There is another portion of the evidence I would like to submit before resuming my seat, and this is evidence which has been forwarded me through the courtesy of the senior member for Cape Breton.

We all know that during the last five years the steamer Bruce has kept up a line of communication from Cape Breton to Newfoundland during the whole winter. I inquired from Captain Delaney, the commander of that steamer, what are the conditions in the gulf of St. Lawrence and the Baie de Chaleur, to see if it was possible for a steamer to reach Paspebiac during December and January without meeting any ice. Here is his answer :

> I have been making tri-weekly trips between Port-aux-Basques, Newfoundland, and North Sydney for the last five winters, and I have not seen any ice before the latter part of February and the beginning of March, during that period, which would lead me to believe that ships could run to Paspebiac up to the end of January.

We have been told that North Sydney is the closest port to Europe and that Louisbourg is a great competitor for that honour, but if we take into consideration the combined rail and water route you will see that Paspebiac can beat both of them. You can reach it from Montreal after covering 539 miles of rail, and you cannot reach North Sydney without going over 989 miles of rail. I consider that we should utilize our water communication as much as possible when available in preference to our railways, in order to reduce the rates of freight and exploit most effectively our natural advantages. In order to reach Cape Sydney or Louisbourg, you have to cover 400 miles more of rail than to reach Paspebiac. Our attempt to make Halifax a national port has practically failed because the bulk of our exports go to St. John, and we all know that to reach St. John they have to go, not only over the Intercolonial Railway, but through American territory by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Between this and next session, the government may be in a position to submit a well defined scheme on this most vital question, and I would urge them to take into consideration this fact that the Baie de Chaleur is free from obstacles, that it is situated nearer the great centres of population of this country than any other portion of our waters after the closing of the St. Lawrence, and let me say that if the St. Lawrence could be utilized after the 25th of November, I would not ask that we should convey our passengers and freights to the Baie de Chaleur.

But, the St. Lawrence being closed, why cannot we use this beautiful expanse of water as long as it can be utilized and then if any difficulties arise because of ice, there is no reason why the Intercolonial Railway trains should be switched off on the Atlantic and Lake Superior to Paspebiac ; they can go on to Halifax or St. John. I have submitted these facts for the consideration of hon. members of this House and for the consideration of the government. I have done so in the interest of the people I represent, who, I believe, have been the victims of another injustice added to the long series of injustices inflicted upon them during the last fifteen or twenty years. But beyond fulfilling my duty to my own county and to the neighbouring county of Gaspé, in which I take a great deal of interest, and which is so worthily represented in this House by my learned colleague (Mr. Lemieux), I have come to the conclusion that the Baie de Chaleur not only offers advantages for prolonged local traffic but is the natural outlet of the great national highway to Europe. Paspebiac is, beyond doubt, as the facts demonstrate, on the shortest route to Europe. I believe that for the solution of the eastern phase of the great question of transportation we should go back to the Baie de Chaleur, which has been so neglected by all governments, and the we shall find in it the solution of our winter port and difficulties. We may find there what Jacques Cartier found when he first came to this country, for it was in the Baie de Chaleur that Jacques Cartier first discovered this beautiful land; we may find there the solution of the problem before us as he found the solution of the great enterprise he had undertaken.

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I shall not add anything to the very able argument presented by my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) with regard to this question. I wish only to say a few words with regard to winter navigation along the shores of Gaspé and our railway communications. I share his views as to the possibilities of Paspebiac becoming the terminus of a fast line between Canada and Europe. But I beg to differ with him as to the best harbour in the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure. I believe that Paspebiac is a fine harbour, with excellent facilities and splendid possibilities. But it has been recognized beyond the shadow of a doubt that the best harbour on the coast is in the county of Gaspé, and it is called Gaspé Basin. Indeed, my hon. friend has made a very able argument and I must congratulate him. He began by speaking of the steamer service which has existed for twenty or twenty-five years between Dalhousie in New Brunswick, and Gaspé Basin. Last winter, I know, there was a certain agitation in our respective counties with a view to improve that service. I may say at once, that the old 'Admiral,' has been a faithful servant of the coast of Gaspé. But, at the same time I must admit she is too old to continue the service. As my hon. friend says, the line needs some improvement. I hear that the directors of the North American Transportation Company intend crossing the ocean this summer and getting a fine iron-built screw steamer, which is expected to begin semi-weekly trips by the beginning of next October.

Last winter I was assailed with petitions and resolutions asking for all-winter navigation in the Bay of Gaspé and the Baie des Chaleurs. Whilst I am a believer in winter navigation in some degree, I do not share the optimism of my hon. friend as to continuous winter navigation in the Baie des Chaleurs or the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Though some reports may have been made by captains and commanders to the effect that navigation could be carried on the whole year around, yet I have often conversed with some good old sea captains and navigators of my county, men who have spent their lives in navigating the waters of the Baie des Chaleurs and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Most of them speaking as honest men and experienced sailors, agreed in saying that while navigation was possible in the months of December and January, yet, during February and March it was almost impracticable. I say it again, I have the testimony of old sailors born and bred on the coast, men who have navigated these waters all their lives, who have been officers of the Marine and Fisheries Department, who have made a special study of the tides and currents, the winds and the movements of the ice in the Baie de Chaleur and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and they tell me that all-winter navigation is not feasible. Against such testimony, it is not sufficient to offer statistics and reports. So I would not advocate before this House a project based upon the idea of navigating those waters during the whole winter. As I said a minute ago, I have consulted some authorities on this subject, and I have summed up their opinions on the movement of ice in the Gulf of St. Lawrence in the following lines: The temperature on the coast of Gaspé is milder than the rest of the province of Quebec. Fresh water will freeze at 30 degrees above zero. Salt water will not freeze above zero. During the severest winter the temperature will not go below zero except for eight or ten days. Therefore there is practically no ice in the salt water. The ice found in these waters is fresh water ice, which is formed in and is carried down by the St. Lawrence and other rivers emptying into the gulf. When this ice strikes Anticosti island it is met by a branch of the Arctic current, and is deflected towards the south. This deviation of the current, helped by the northern and western winds, which generally prevail in that region, causes the ice to accumulate in the straits of Northumberland and adjacent waters. The prevailing western winds cause the sea generally to be free of ice along the coast of the county of Gaspé. There is not much of that ice before the 1st or 15th of February; and although the month of March is very mild, the ice remains until it is washed away in April. The sea is free of ice in December and January, and navigation along the coast is possible until the 1st of February, and can be resumed on the 15th of April at the latest. Last winter the temperature was exceptionally mild, and there was no ice in the gulf; there being no ice a steamer could have run between Dalhousie and Gaspé. In conclusion, during the winter months, navigation is feasible between the 1st or 15th of April, at the latest, until the 1st of February in the following year. Perhaps it would be possible for vessels to resist the ice from the 1st of February to the 15th of April, but such vessels should be built as the 'Stanley, which, until lately was running between Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, but such vessels are very costly.

Now, Sir, there was, last winter an agitation in my county in favour of a winter steam service. But last winter was an exceptionally mild one, there was no ice, and the same circumstances might not exist another year. We can have, as my hon. friend from Bonaventure has said, a steamer service between the 1st or 15th of April, until the 1st of February, or at least the 15th of January. As I stated it a moment ago, the 'Admiral' is an old steamer, and although she has rendered very good service to the coast, a change is needed. My hon. friend and myself, have urged upon the government to induce the North American Transportation Company to put an iron screw steamer on the route, and I am glad to learn that by the 1st of October next, this new steamer will be ready to start, thereby rendering certain navigation during ten months, an event which the people along the coast will hail with satisfaction.

I might also mention another scheme that has been discussed in the county in connection with this question. Some people wanted a steamer service between the terminus of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway at New Carlisle, and Gaspé Basin, instead of between Dalhousie and Gaspé Basin. I have objected strenuously to such a change, and my reason for doing so is obvious. The county of Gaspé and a part of the county of Bonaventure get their freight from Toronto, Montreal and Quebec. Now take a barrel of flour coming from Toronto, Montreal or Quebec; it would be placed, say on board the cars of the Intercolonial Railway at Lévis, would have to pay freight to the Intercolonial Railway, then to the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway, and it would have also to pay tribute to the steamer running between New Carlisle and Gaspé Basin. You can readily understand, Mr. Speaker, to what would amount our freight rates if such conditions existed, and I was justified in objecting to such a change. I am pleased to state that the Department of Trade and Commerce did not yield to the suggestions evidently made by the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company. Now, Sir, if as I expect, we have a good iron screw steamer put on the route next October, the coast of Gaspé will be satisfied provided the terminus is not changed.

As regards our railway communication, I fully agree with my hon. friend that the action of the Railway Committee of the Senate this morning was most deplorable. I regret to state that after our Bill had received the support of the Prime Minister, of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and of the Minister of Justice, and the unanimous assent of this House, the leader of the government in the Senate, the hon. the Secretary of State, saw fit to throw in his lot with those who for a quarter of a century have opposed the legitimate aspirations of the counties of Bonaventure and Gaspé. I cannot understand how the leader of the government in the Senate found his way to vote against a Bill which had been to some extent, drafted by some of his colleagues. Yes, Sir, my hon. friend from Bonaventure and myself submitted the amendments agreed to by the interested parties, to the Minister of Justice, and to the Minister of Railways and Canals; the amendments to the Bill were in fact drafted by them. How does it happen that the leader of the government in the Senate found his way to vote against that Bill? Sir, I repeat that the Bill as amended, after having been sanctioned by the Minister of Justice, by the Minister of Railways and Canals and by the Prime Minister himself, should have been, to say the least, given fair play by the Secretary of State. As I have already stated in this House, my hon. friend from Bonaventure and myself opposed the Bill as at first introduced, because we found in it no protection for the interests of the people we represent. But when these amendments had been accepted by the Prime Minister and his colleagues in this House, it was the duty of the Secretary of State to support the Bill and not nullify our common efforts as he did by his vote. I regret his action, and I desire to say that next year we shall make another attempt to get justice, not only from the government side but from the other side of the House as well.

THE MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). I have listened with much interest, and I have no doubt the House has also listened with much interest, to the remarks of the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil). It is apparent from the remarks of his colleague from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) that this is a question which has two sides to it, and I may be pardoned if I decline to express an opinion when two gentlemen having far superior opportunities of understanding the situation than I can boast of, have hitherto failed to agree. With respect, however, to the matters more particularly belonging to my own department, I will just say that I have carefully considered the request made by my hon. friend from Bonaventure and Gaspé, and the government will endeavour to supply as good a service as they possibly can obtain for the benefit of the inhabitants of those two counties. I believe that up to date the steamer 'Admiral,' which has been engaged for a good many years, has rendered a very efficient service. But I am aware that there are difficulties connected with the employment of paddlewheel steamers, and it may be necessary to substitute another. I am in correspondence with the company on that subject at present, and I hope to be able to meet the views of my hon. friends.

SMALL-POX ON SCHOONER 'JEANIE MYRTLE'—FISHERY AWARD—COASTING TRADE.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). Mr. Speaker, I take advantage of this opportunity to bring to the notice of the government a matter of very vital importance to every citizen of this Dominion, especially those residing near the sea engaged in shipping, but more particularly the sick seamen whose life as a rule is a hard one, when away from home and friends, and stricken down with dread disease. It will be remembered the Halifax newspapers on the 5th inst., reported the La Have schooner, 'Jeanie Myrtle,' Creaser, master, having entered the port of Hailfax from sea the day previous, with a sick seaman on board, and reported the same to the customs a hour after the port physician visited the ship, and when viewing the patient, at a glance pronounced it small-pox. The doctor was doubtful as to the case coming under the jurisdiction of the Dominion, but, as a precautionary measure ordered the yellow flag to be hoisted, and required the crew to remain by the vessel. When reaching the shore he wired the facts to the Minister of Agriculture, and asked for instructions, receiving as an answer, that the case was one for the local authorities, and as a result, the port physician acting under orders from here—Ottawa—refused to take any action beyond the precautions I have described.

The city authorities were next interviewed, and the chairman of the Board of Health of Halifax was asked about it, when the following episode, as reported, ensued :—

'What are you doing about the small-pox schooner?'

'We have nothing to do with it.'

'Who has ?'

'I don't know, but not Halifax. The Ottawa telegram says "local authorities," but Dr. Gilp'n on behalf of province, says "it's a county charge".'

'Are you going to allow the schooner to remain there a menace to the health of the community ?'

'The people on board have been told to stay there, and in the morning we will order the schooner to sea.'

'Where will she go ?'

'To LaHave, where she belongs, I suppose. When ordered from Canso she should have gone straight home, and not put in here at all. Why should Halifax be saddled with the schooner that lies anchored over there near the Dartmouth shore ?'

'How can you order the vessel out of the harbour if you have no jurisdiction in the case?' the 'Herald' asked.

But at this stage the conversation with Dr. Chisholm ended, for the genial chairman of the board of health declined to continue it.

A telegram was sent to me also the same day, which reads as follows :—

Halifax, N.S., May 5, 1902.

Schooner 'Jeanie Myrtle,' Creaser, master, Ritcey's Cove, here with case of small-pox. Authorities refuse allow man land here. Has paid sick mariners' dues. Bad weather may detain vessel here days, with no attendance for man. See Minister Agriculture, ask him instruct Dominion physician to act.

BLACK, BROAD & CO.

This telegram was acted upon by me in the most energetic manner, by my calling first on the Minister of Agriculture, who informed me that he had a telegram from Halifax also, but was powerless to act at it was clearly provincial, and had answered in that way. I next applied to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and had the satisfaction of his telling me, after some slight inquiry and conference with his friends, that he would wire the officer of customs for the port of Halifax to attend to the matter, though in reality it was no part of the requirements of his department, but that his action was purely from a motive of sympathy, under the peculiar circumstances of the case. I would say here, that both the Minister of Agriculture and Minister of Marine acted promptly in the matter, and I have no cause for complaint as respects either of them in that connection.

But I do say, and here state, that there is something radically wrong in this connection, that the Dominion, provincial and civic health authorities—all three should decline to act in this case, or care for this sick seaman, as a duty on their part. The very fact of the Dominion government receiving a sick mariner's fee, should in justice entitle a sick mariner having contagious disease to admission into the nearest contagious hospital that offered, and there cared for, with the best attendance possible, come from whence the patient may, within the province or from without. The expression of the chairman of the Halifax Board of Health, in the cold-hearted words, as referred to, 'In the morning we will send the vessel to sea,' if correct as reported, and I have no reason to doubt it, was very uncalled for, but in justice to him would say, that he must have given such utterance in an unguarded moment.

What is the object in exacting the sick mariner's due, I would ask, if it is not to give the sick seamen that comfort, and medical aid necessary to lead to his speedy recovery, and in the dread disease of small-pox I contend the greatest effort should be exercised in the care of such patients, that they be kept isolated to prevent a spread, which can only be accomplished successfully in a regularly established contagious hospital, with a proper staff of attendants, that the patients may receive all necessary medical aid, care and attention.

I claim in all sincerity that the federal government should take this matter promptly in hand, and make such arrangements and regulations as to settle this difficulty for ever, and have it clearly understood in future, that all sick seamen with contagious disease are to be received into the nearest contagious hospital and cared for at the expense of the federal government. This is most essential, and I sincerely hope the right hon. the First Minister will see that prompt action is taken with the view of better attention being given to this class of seamen.

Whilst I am on my feet I would ask the indulgence of the House to bring to its notice the subject of the fishery bounty. I may say that I greatly regretted my absence from the House (which was unavoidable owing to my having a cold) when the hon. member for Hamilton called attention to the statement of Premier Peters in the legislature of Prince Edward Island that 'there was no need of levying additional taxes to meet the prospective expenditure, because he was certain the Dominion government would pay over to the island government $1,000,000 as the island's share of the Halifax fishery awards.' It is also currently reported that approaches have been made by New Brunswick with the same object in view. The right hon. leader in reply stated that 'there was no ground for apprehension of this sort.' But I did not approve of his utterance that 'It would make no difference whether this fund was administered by the Dominion or provincial authorities for the benefit of the fishermen.' I take serious exception to this, and in my mind it would make a very great deal of difference, were there to be no apportionment of this fund to the respective provinces, they to dispose of the fund as they thought proper, as the other province, Nova Scotia not excepted, would have the same view as to the appropriation as the island province expressed, and the matter of bounty for the encouragement of the fishermen would be a thing of the past. These governments have proved themselves in the past to be by no means, in the sense of the term parsimonious and would, were this money given them, spend it in an improvident manner, and the poor fishermen would in a short time have nothing in the way of bounty whatever.

The question of the division of the fishery award, and the payment even of apportionments to the respective provinces, should not be entertained by this government for one moment, as the Dominion government is the most suitable body to be the trustee of such a fund, and not the provinces, as they would use the money to pay their provincial current expenses, and the bounty would be lost for ever. I here, in the most emphatic manner, protest against any attempt being made to take this fund out of the hands of the Dominion government, they being the most suitable trustees, or custodians of the fund, where we can feel assured it is safe from any attempt to have it utilized for any other purpose than that for which it was intended, viz., bounty for fishermen, it having been paid for the sacrifices the fishermen underwent, when the maritime fishing grounds were used by the United States fishermen in common with Canadian fishermen. The fishermen of the maritime provinces have a hard struggle at present to move along successfully even with the benefit of the bounty, as they have to compete with the bounty fed French fish of St. Pierre which means about $2 of a bonus on every quintal of French fish exported outside of France, Canada being excluded in the sale of fish to any French dependency, Guadoloupe and Martinique included, by reason of their prohibitory tariff. The French have the trade of these islands practically to themselves, and at the same time come into competition with us, with their bounty fed fish in the other markets of the world, the British West Indies included.

There is another matter of very great importance that I desire the First Minister to take cognizance of, and that is the coastwise trade of the West India Islands, enjoyed by British shipping from time immemorial, but now greatly interfered with by the embargo set up by the United States since their acquirement of the island of Porto Rico, and the monopoly of that market, which up to a recent date was largely the market for Nova Scotia fish, in fact the very best of all the West India group. Of course I am aware that we cannot now control this matter, but it might have been managed satisfactorily to us had active measures been taken by this government, and I strongly advised to have the imperial government informed of our interest and trade with this island, and to induce Great Britain to demand an undertaking from the United States government that they would not be allowed to plant their flag on that island—Porto Rico—inhabited by a law-abiding and peaceful people, unless they consented to allow the same privileges for trading with them, in common with the United States, that we previously enjoyed. I tried to impress this government with the importance of the Porto Rico trade to Nova Scotia, and pointed out how essential it was in our interest to have them take prompt action to this end, but without avail. What is the condition of matters now? Simply that we are handicapped by the United States in that market, and in addition prevented doing a coastwise trade; that is in carrying fish to that island and having a return cargo of their products to any port in the United States which we had hitherto enjoyed, whilst the United States is allowed all the coasting trade she desires with the British West India Islands without interruption.

Jamaica trade with Great Britain should be thought of also at the Coronation convention, in order that the bounty-fed beet root sugar of Germany, France and other countries should not be admitted into Great Britain to the exclusion of Jamaica cane-grown sugar, unless a bonus, or preference is given to Jamaica. I refer to this particularly, as our Nova Scotia trade with Jamaica is little at present, owing to their poverty stricken condition, brought about by England's free trade policy under which, in sugar, she can not compete with the bounty-fed product.

I mention this now, in the hope that the right hon. First Minister will make a note of it, and bring it forcibly to the notice of the Coronation convention meeting next month in London. Effective measures are demanded in the interest of Canadian trade, and the trade of the British Empire, I feel assured will co-equally be benefited by it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland). Mr. Speaker, two of the questions brought to the attention of the House by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) have already been discussed, one of them at a very early hour this morning. In regard to the last question I would say that it is one, perhaps, more requiring the attention of the imperial authorities than of this parliament. I hope that the ministers who will attend the conference in London will give the suggestion which he has made their attention. In regard to the case of small-pox on the fishing craft I would say that when it was brought to my attention by the hon. gentleman and by other hon. members of the House and also by a message from the authorities in Halifax I was advised by the department that it was a provincial or local matter and that it was outside of our jurisdiction. However, as there seemed to be some doubt as to the question of jurisdiction, in my own mind, at least, and as we had a report stating that the unfortunate sailor was very ill on a fishing craft lying out in the harbour, I made every possible effort to see that he was taken care of and I requested the use of the contagious diseases hospital there on the island. I also instructed the officer of the department at Halifax to see that every provision was made to take care of this unfortunate man.

In regard to the fisheries award I suppose that my hon. friend and that all of us will have to abide by the decision that may be given by the courts in this matter. It may be possible that it will be decided that the fund is to be administered as it now is by the Dominion. If on the other hand, the courts decide that the provinces are entitled to have this money handed over to them, then, I do not see what else we can do than hand it over. However, as that matter is now under consideration I do not think it is necessary to take up the time of the House in discussing it at the present time. It is a question that will come up for discussion and probably for final settlement at the next session of parliament.

Mr. BELL. Are you discussing this matter with the provincial premiers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, on the 20th instant. If an amicable arrangement is made we will have a final settlement, and if it be referred to the courts I hope we will have it decided before next session.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I wish to set my hon. friend the leader of the opposition right with regard to a statement he made yesterday, and I am quite sure that he will be glad I should do so. It is with reference to the work on the Galops rapids.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Oh, yes, I may say that I was yesterday told by my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) that during my absence on one occasion the vote had been withdrawn.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that. The minister is quite correct in making reference to the matter.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) was not properly informed on the subject. The expenditure upon this work for which we asked an appropriation this session was not for work that was done during the previous or current fiscal year, nor was it the Auditor General who made any communication to the effect that the work had not been authorized or that there had been no appropriation for it. The officer who advised the contractor, and advised him before he did any work during the last fiscal year, was the chief engineer of the department, whose duty it was to do so. The contractor appears to have gone on with the work to a limited extent, and he has been pressing for payment, but the hon. gentleman was wrong in saying that the department recognized his claim. There is no ground whatever upon which any gentleman in the House can say that the government intend to, or will pay for work which was done against notice and without appropriation and with the full knowledge that there was an intention on the part of the government not to continue it. This party no doubt assumed that the work would be proceeded with later, but he assumed it without any warrant. No officer of the government, certainly with my knowledge, held out to him any such promise, and he therefore took upon himself the entire risk of getting recouped for any work he may have done. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax), also made the statement that a member of this House had asserted that this work was not only useless but it was detrimental to the public interest and even injurious to navigation. I was present when the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) made that statement, and it is a statement which is entitled to proper consideration, but it would be a great mistake for this House to assume that any member of parliament, no matter how strong his opinion may be upon a question of that kind, can settle the matter on his mere ipse dixit. We will have to consider whether his judgment is sound on such a point, and whether he is in a better position to form an opinion upon it than experts who have made a life study of the business.

The question of the Galops rapids is not by any means an easy question to determine. The work was originally started by one of the most eminent engineers who had ever been in the service of the government. I had not the pleasure of knowing Mr. Page, but there is a tradition that Mr. Page was an engineer of exceptional ability and that he was an efficient and capable officer. Mr. Page initiated this work. It was upon his strong opinion and judgment that this work was undertaken as being a necessary and proper work, and the Minister of Railways and Canals of that day agreed in Mr. Page's opinion. After Mr. Page died the work was continued under Mr. Trudeau, who is recognized as an engineer whose opinion would be entitled to very great weight, and when Mr. Rubidge took charge of the St. Lawrence canal afterwards, his judgment was in entire accord with that of Mr. Page and of Mr. Trudeau. I am afraid to say how many years Mr. Rubidge has been in the service of the government, but he has been for probably fifty years, so that he has a very lengthened experience. Mr. Rubidge has now attained the ripe age of eighty-five years. All the officers and engineers of the department who had to do with this work were of the same opinion, so that there was a continuity of approval in the department in reference to it. I am sorry that the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) is not here, but I may say that I understand that some dispute arose which led to difficulties between Mr. Rubidge and the hon. member for Grenville, and that hon. gentleman brought this subject of the Galops rapids into parliament before I had the honour of a seat here, and he condemned the project very strongly and has continued of that opinion. But what course should a Minister of Railways and Canals take when a controversy arises in respect to a particular work upon which $700,000 or $800,000 have already been expended and for which $250,000 more will be required to complete ? The work proceeded for three years or so in my department before any doubt was raised at all with regard to the wisdom of continuing it. I am not an engineer myself and could not give an expert opinion, and until the matter was mentioned in parliament by the hon. member for Grenville I did not know that a doubt had arisen, and I concluded that as there was that doubt I would not ask for an appropriation for the work further. I have not done so except for the sum of $25,000 this session which was needed to pay, not for work which had been done since the appropriation had stopped, but for work which was done previously.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have been under a misapprehension with regard to a matter which took place when I was not in the House, and my attention was not directed to it up to the time I was addressing the House yesterday. I understand that while I was absent the vote was reduced by one-half. The hon. minister is quite right in directing my attention to it now. The gist of my criticism was that it seemed to me that the government might be responsible for the work which was done, owing to what I understood to be an admitted fact, viz., that officers of the government had been on board the dredge and in charge of the dredge during the time the work was being proceeded with.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are advised that the party has had notice that there was no authority, and that he should not go on with the work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understood that. I am only gathering, from what took place when the estimates were under discussion, that an engineer of the government was on board the dredge which was performing this work after the appropriation had lapsed, and I thought that there might be some question as to whether the government would not be liable for that very reason.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are advised not.

Mr. SPROULE. Had the minister any correspondence with the contractor about the money he earned ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I think not. I think he sent his estimates in, but I do not think he applied for anything in any other way. He came here during the present session, and called at the office to see me, and I told him the work would not go on. I notified him that there would be no appropriation asked for to continue the work. He did not say a word to me about the work that had been done, and I did not know at that time that there had been any work done.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The question is a very simple one. The work was abandoned in June of last year in consequence of a message from the department stating that the appropriation for the work had been expended. But the minister brought down to this House an estimate for $50,000. What was it for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I explained that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It could not be for anything but work executed after the expiration of the year, and to pay percentages which were retained by the government from the contractors for work already done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. Perhaps the hon. gentleman did not follow me or he has forgotten what I stated, and I will repeat it. I said that the estimate was handed to me by the chief engineer, and I took it to council with this statement, that the amount would be required in order to cover what was retained by way of drawback in respect to work done prior to the 1st of July, 1901, and for a balance—he did not know exactly how much it was, but he was sure that $50,000 would cover it—that was due up to the 1st of July, and after the estimate had been made previous to that date. The amount had not been ascertained accurately and definitely, and therefore though we had enough to close that, we had not one dollar for any work done subsequent to the 1st of July; and in order that there might be no possibility for any one to say that we were proposing by the vote of $50,000 to cover anything subsequent to the 1st of July, and because we did not know, and do not know, just what amount is necessary to pay for work done prior to the 1st of July, and after the estimate, I asked the committee to allow me to strike out everything but the drawback of $25,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is exactly the statement that I made in reference to the matter. The minister, in the first place, comes down to the House and asks for $50,000. He says that $25,000 or about that amount is drawback retained by the government for work executed by these contractors. The peculiarty of the drawback is this, that they were working by the day, except in the case of a small portion of the contract for which the drawback could not possibly amount to one-fourth of the amount which the hon. gentleman has retained. Why did he ask for $50,000 ? He thought possibly the drawback and the amount due to the contractors was due before the 1st of July. It could not possibly be so. The Minister of Railways would not spend an amount greater than the appropriation which was made for these works. He did not say that the amount expended was greater than what had been appropriated. All that the department said to the contractor was : 'This appropriation for the year is expended, and there is no more money with which to go on with the work.' What does the hon. minister ask the $50,000 for ? It is as plain as possible that his officers were on that dredge and were in charge of these excavation works from July to the end of the summer, and the intention of the hon. minister evidently was to pay the contractors for the rest of the year. But when he heard from my hon. friend from Grenville (Mr. Reid) the absurdity of the work he was doing and what enormous sums he was paying for a useless work, he took the House into his confidence and said : 'I will make no more payments upon that work except the amount of the drawback,' and I took that promise from the minister at the time—that he was to apply the $25,000 which was voted for this particular work solely on the drawback which is retained by the government from the contractors. Under these circumstances, we will let the amount pass; but you can easily see how the right hon. leader of the government made the mistake he did when he stated that $50,000 was voted for the Galops rapids, because he was not in the House when the hon. Minister of Railways withdrew half the vote and only retained the $25,000 for the purpose of paying the drawback.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

To provide for additional aids to navigation, principally on the St. Lawrence route, including the purchase of a steamer for tidal and surveying purposes, $280,000.

Mr. EARLE. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if any portion of that is contemplated to be spent on the coast of British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is provision in this vote for some improvements to aids to navigation on the Pacific coast. Although the greater portion of it is intended for improvements on what is known as the St. Lawrence route, part of it is to be used in other parts of the Dominion. As the House is aware, very strong representations have been made for many years that the lighting and other aids to navigation on the St. Lawrence route are deficient. It is only necessary for me to mention, what every hon. member knows, that the larger portion of the trade of Canada is in Europe, and the object to be aimed at is to place the Canadian producer in a position to compete successfully with the exporters from other countries. To enable me to do this, I must be placed in a position to have the lowest possible charge imposed on the shipments of Canadian products to the European markets. This charge consists of two items—freight and insurance. Ship owners have to provide for a profit on their enterprise. They have to add to the other expenses the insurance on the hull and there is also insurance on the produce to be taken into account, so that it will be seen that the high rates of insurance now charged are a heavy tax on the Canadian producers as against those of another country, who are charged lower rates. My information is that the insurance from St. Lawrence ports is from two to five times as great as from American ports. Figures given me by leading shippers of Montreal show that on a large steamer, worth say $500,000, the extra insurance charge is $5,000 per voyage, or $25,000 per season of five trips. Every one will see what a very heavy tax this is on the Canadian producer as compared with the American shipper. The reason of this high rate is undoubtedly the many casualties which have happened on the St. Lawrence route. It has been represented to us by the large shipping interests and by the marine and insurance people, that if we had very much improved aids to navigation, the rates would be reduced to those charged at American ports or at any rate would be very much reduced. I might quote from one of the official statements of the shipping interests of this country, that if the improvements recommended by them are made, the insurance rates would be very materially reduced. I have also had representations made to me by representatives of the largest marine insurance companies, and a representative of Lloyds, to the effect that the result would be, as I have said, to reduce the insurance very materially, if not to the same rates as are charged at American ports. Having been promised these reductions, I have come to the conclusion that it would be very much in the interests of this country to improve the aids to navigation. It must also be remembered that as our shipping season is short, lasting only during a portion of the year, we have to be particularly on the alert in competing with ports that are open all the year round, and must provide ourselves with the best facilities.

Mr. SPROULE. On what principle is this money to be expended ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will give my hon. friend and the House a full statement of how we propose to expend these moneys. On the southern route entering the St. Lawrence the following improvements are contemplated :

Cape Race—A quick flashing light to be established and whistle changed to syren.

Cape Pine—A first-rate light and fog signal to be established here, and as this is in Newfoundland, it is proposed to invite the imperial and colonial governments to co-operate with us.

Cape Ray—Improvement of light and signal.

Bird Rocks—Light to be made occulting.

Byron Island—Light to be established.

Cape Rosier—Fog alarm to be strengthened and light made occulting.

Fame Point—A syren is now being erected and light improved.

If any hon. gentleman is sufficiently interested to look at the map, which I have laid on the Table, he will see on it those points at which we propose to make these improvements.

Entering the St. Lawrence by the Strait of Belle Isle or northern route, we propose to make the following improvements :

Belle Isle—A new light and fog alarm will be placed on the north-east end.

Cape Bauld or Cape Norman—One of the fog alarms will be changed.

Point Amour—Light will be made occulting.

East End Anticosti—Lightship will be placed.

And between the points where the two routes above mentioned join, namely, Fame Point, and Quebec, the following improvements are contemplated :

Matane—Bell buoys being placed on extremity of shoal, a syren established at station and light improved.

Father Point—A syren is being erected and the light will be improved.

Princess Shoal—This danger at the mouth of the Saguenay is being marked by a combined gas and bell buoy, which will be placed in position as soon as one can be procured.

Lower Traverse—A pier light being erected.

Belchasse—Light being made occulting.

West end of Island of Orleans—Occulting light was established at this point last autum to guide vessels on making the turn at Quebec harbour.

With regard to the route from Quebec to Montreal, I wish to state in general terms that the policy of the department is to thoroughly mark each section of the ship channel, as improved, with buoys and range lights, and changes in aids to navigation are rapidly being made.

On the 1st day of May this year, three new range lights were established at St. Antoine, to more efficiently mark a turn complained of by the pilots, and three pairs of range rights were established near Vercheres to mark a new channel where the Department of Public Works have done splendid work in straightening and widening an intricate reach.

The next stretch that it is proposed to improve is a dredged cut at Pointe aux Trembles.

The deepening of Lake St. Peter will be followed by a rearrangement of the lights, and the semaphore showing the depth of water over Ste. Croix Bar, where the dredging has been completed, is being moved to show the depth over St. Augustin Bar, which is now the shoalest point above Quebec.

Gas buoys are being provided for different points on the ship channel and will be placed as fast as they can be utilized.

The aim of all these improvements will be to enable a ship to run through from Quebec to Montreal without stopping, either by day or night.

I may say that this item was under discussion yesterday, and, at the request of some hon. members, I had it stand over. But I find that these hon. gentlemen are not present. Still, I am taking the time of the committee to submit this information, because I know that it is of the greatest possible interest to those engaged in shipping. With regard to the establishment of lights in British Columbia, I intend to ask the officers of the department to visit that province at an early date, and to learn what additional aids to navigation are urgently required. The different routes to be protected are first :

The route outside Vancouver Island on the great Circle Route to Japan, principally for the safety of the Canadian Pacific Railway steamers ; second, the inside routes to Ladysmith and other coal shipping centres for the protection of the large freight steamers now engaged in carrying coal to the United States and other ports, a traffic that is rapidly increasing ; and third, the coasting trade of British Columbia, largely increased by the rapid development of lumbering, fishing and mining industries and Yukon trade in all the inlets and inside passages from the boundary line north to Fort Simpson.

Then there is the small light to be provided in Prince Edward Island, three in Nova Scotia, one in New Brunswick and two in the province of Quebec, on the Gaspé coast. In Ontario, five new lights have been urgently pressed upon the department on account of the increase of trade, particularly on the Georgian Bay.

With regard to the portion of this vote to be devoted to tidal survey work, I may say that the survey of the tides and currents will be extended and it is particularly desirable that the set of the currents off Cape Pine and Cape Race should be at once investigated.

Tide tables are now prepared annually from tidal record secured by this survey for all the more important harbours in eastern Canada ; and also for the principal harbours in British Columbia. Tidal differences have also been determined, which enable the time of the tide to be known at a number of harbours of secondary importance.

An investigation of the currents was carried on during three seasons, as follows:—

1894.—In the Strait of Belle Isle and Cabot Strait ; two of the entrances to the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

1895.—The Gaspé current and the general circulation of the currents in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

1896.—The north-eastern arm of the gulf and the steamship route from Belle Isle to Anticosti.

The regions most requiring investigation are :

(1.) Around the south-eastern coast of Newfoundland, off Cape Race and the southern bays.

(2.) At the entrance to the Bay of Fundy.

(3.) Further investigation in several regions within the gulf, and off the outer end of Belle Isle Strait.

I am satisfied that this improvement of the St. Lawrence route will give satisfaction to the large shipping interests especially in the old country, and that it will so meet the views of the marine insurance people that we shall get a very largely decreased rate as compared with that in force at the present time. From this comparatively small expenditure, I believe the country will reap great benefits.

Mr. EARLE. In addition to the expenditure on lights, on the coast of British Columbia, I think it will be well to have a minute hydrographic survey of that coast. The steamer 'Quadra' has been doing that work spasmodically. But now that the department has two steamers to replace her, one for the lighthouse and one for the fisheries' protection service, could not the whole time of the 'Quadra' be occupied with this hydrographic work in future ? Her chief officer is a very competent man, who has been doing as I say, more or less of this work ever since she has been in commission. But the great difficulty is, he has not time to do all that needs to be done. He rarely comes in without being able to add to the stock of information possessed as to the dangerous rocks on that coast. As the hon. minister knows, wrecks have been frequent on that coast since the larger vessels began navigating there. Their presence makes the need of surveys all the greater.

Mr. BELL. If I understood the hon. minister right he said he intended to devote a good deal of the grant to improving our knowledge of Newfoundland around Cape Race.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. BELL. A large part of the bad reputation under which the St. Lawrence route labours is due to the number of wrecks that have taken place in the neighbourhood of Cape Race. The marine casualties in those waters are so numerous and so unaccountable that I think it not surprising that the marine insurance companies exact high rates. If, by any reasonable expenditure, any reasonable expenditure at all, our knowledge of that locality can be enlarged so as to render impossible, or at least improbable, the occurrence of more of the mysterious wrecks that every season occur there, it will do more to improve the reputation of the St. Lawrence route than any work that could be done within the gulf of St. Lawrence itself. The chart showing the wrecks that have occurred upon this south-eastern portion of the coast of Newfoundland must convince us that it is one of the most dangerous places for navigation in the whole world. It is not within our own waters, it is true. But if we are to make the St. Lawrence route safe and available we must master, no matter at what cost, the knowledge of that very difficult and dangerous coast. I am glad to know that the minister has taken enough money to enable him to deal with that in a satisfactory and efficient manner. Anything short of that would be an unwise expenditure. Enough expenditure must be made in the shape of vessels and the employment of enough competent men to make that coast reasonably safe, and. if possible absolutely safe.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The particular point to which my hon. friend (Mr. Bell) refers is being covered by the British government. We have been in communication with them, and at the point where they leave off we are taking up the work. So that, for the whole coast, we shall have the information which is so necessary.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope the navigation companies will do their part and share, as we are doing our part and share. It is hardly the thing perhaps, for one minister to congratulate another publicly, but I ask to be allowed to do so in this case. My hon. friend and colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has undertaken to carry out improvements that should have been carried out long ago. He is doing a most useful work for this country. But again let me ask the navigation companies not to forget that in spite of the best buoys, the best lights, the best dredged channels and other improvements, if they do not employ the right men, there will still be accidents and wrecks. It is within my personal knowledge that, in many cases our navigation companies—Canadian navigation companies as well as others—employ men who should not be engaged in such important work. They employ men who drink. For instance, I was on a ship two years ago. It was a clear day, and we were nearing Father Point, the ship struck. The captain had gone down to his room to write despatches. I had just been on the bridge, and I was glad not to have been there when the accident happened, or I might have been accused of having distracted the attention of the man who had charge of the ship. I inquired of the captain how it could be that, in full daylight, with a buoy clearly in sight, the vessel could have struck bottom. He did not tell me at the moment, but when we reached port, he said: Well, Mr. Minister, here are the facts : This is simply a result of false friendship; the man who was employed as my second had been commander of a steamer, but he had been drinking and was discharged, and we employed him—and here is the result of my kindness. We do our part, let the navigation companies do their part also.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the minister if he has received any suggestions from, or has had any communication with the underwriters whose rates have been so high on the St. Lawrence, with regard to the steps he is taking and for which he proposes to provide by this vote. The association of underwriters, or at least certain companies, have made representations to the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries as to what they thought ought to be done. I suppose it would be well, if we expect the rates to be reduced, that we should endeavour, so far as consistent with the public interest, to meet therir views in regard to this matter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I may say that when I took charge of the department I found that representations with regard to this matter had been made by the representatives of the marine insurance companies, by the large ship owners, and by the Board of Trade of the city of Montreal, in fact by merchants generally; and when I undertook to consider this question I took the reports furnished by these different bodies and asked for an interview with their leading representatives. Having gone into the matter with the chief engineer and officers of the department, we have formed a plan which I think will carry out almost entirely the views of the shipping interests and of the marine and insurance people as presented by them to the department. I think if we give them what they ask, and they certainly ought to be good judges of what they need, we shall meet their views on almost every point. Of course they have asked for a great deal, I suppose that is human nature, and they have been perhaps exacting; but the plan I am recommending meets their wishes almost to the whole extent.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) delivered a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the message, as follows :

MINTO.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons further supplementary estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1902, and in accordance with the provisions of 'The British North America Act, 1867,' the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, May 14th, 1902.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the message together with the estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Relief to sufferers in Martinique and St. Vincent, $50,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). It had been understood that we would have no more estimates this session, but when I state the purpose for which this vote is asked, I am sure it will have the unanimous assent of the House. We have all had our attention drawn by the press to the story of the appalling disaster which has fallen on the French island of Martinique, and to the disaster, perhaps not so great, but of a very serious character, which has fallen upon the neighbouring British island of St. Vincent. The whole world is moved to sympathy by this terrible circumstance, and there seems to be a general desire that aid should be given to those who are suffering in consequence. It is thought well that the government of Canada should contribute to this relief fund. We have therefore presented to the House an estimate appropriating the sum of $50,000 for the relief of the sufferers from the volcanic disasters in the West Indies. We propose that one-half of that sum shall be at once supplied to the relief fund for the island in which the greatest disaster has occurred, the island of Martinique; and we think that perhaps it can best be applied by placing the money at the disposal of the French colonial minister in Paris, who will, of course, be able to see that it is applied in the right direction. As respects the balance, it will, either in whole or in part, be applied for the relief of the sufferers in the island of St. Vincent. The information respecting the disaster in St. Vincent is not yet perhaps sufficient to enable us to know whether the whole sum will be required there; but if the necessity seems to arise, the balance will be applied to St. Vincent. At all events, the aim is that all who are suffering by these terrible disasters shall have some assistance from the government and the people of Canada in this moment of their great need.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I fully concur with and support the action of the government in asking parliament to make this appropriation. On occasions in the past when our own people have been in need of substantial sympathy from other countries, they have received it on many occasions in a very substantial manner. I think it is a fitting thing that the government should take this step at the present time. The appalling suddenness of this disaster, its tremendous extent, the amazing number of people who, in, but a moment of time, were absolutely destroyed and their homes wiped out of existence, render this an occasion on which this country may well testify its sympathy in this effective manner. I am glad that the government propose to apply a portion of this sum at once to the relief of the sufferers in the island of Martinique, and I believe that the action of the government in that way will be regarded as an indication of the neighbourly feeling and good will which exist between this country and the great nation to which that island belongs. I have very much pleasure, therefore, in supporting the motion of the Minister of Finance.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received a communication from the Secretary of His Excellency the Governor General, as follows:

Office of the Governor General's Secretary,
Ottawa, May 14th, 1902.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber, on Thursday, the 15th instant, at three o'clock, for the purpose of proroguing the session of the parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. S. MAUDE, Major,
Governor General's Secretary.

The Honourable
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Militia—Rifle ranges, $75,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have received a communication from Halifax respecting the Bedford rifle range, and I will read a brief extract from it so that it may be brought to the attention of the Minister of Militia whom I do not see at present in the House. The letter says:

As one of a number of interested militiamen I take the liberty of writing you to ask you if you will try and get some definite answer from the Minister of Militia as to when Bedford rifle range is going to be ready for the use of the militia. Perhaps it may not be possible for you to obtain the same publicly owing to the session being so nearly to a close.

Briefly the case stands this way. A contract was awarded for the making of the new range, work being commenced in the early fall, 1900, it being stipulated I understand that it was to be completed some time in June, 1901. Certain work done in the fall of 1900 not being properly arranged was destroyed by the spring freshets in 1901, the result was the militia had no range to shoot on last year and it was only through the kindness of the imperial government that the annual shooting of the provincial association was enabled to be held at Macnab's island.

The range is not ready yet and no one seems to know when it will be, at least no one here. It looks very much as if the militia will be without any rifle practice this year as well.

A gentleman who was up viewing the range a couple of days ago, says that before the targets could even be used there is fully 1000 loads of earth that would have to be removed that had fallen into the trench from the embankment at the back, this there would have been no trouble in guarding against, because it could have been foreseen, as last year they had a cave in only of a larger extent.

Entries for the 'Canadian Military League' close on May 17th, the matches commencing June 14th, our militiamen always took an interest in these matches but owing to the uncertainty of any place to shoot there will be no entries from here, and there were none of course last year. (Barring a few individuals who formed a club and managed to shoot the matches at Macnabs with considerable expense to themselves.)

There seems to be a very strong desire on the part of this gentleman, whose name I could give to the minister if he desires, that some active measures should be taken in order to place the range in a condition so that the militia may use it at the approaching season.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the hon. gentleman's remarks.

Royal Military College, $75,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is another matter which I intended to have mentioned to the hon. Minister of Militia when he was in the House, and it is this. Last year I brought to his attention the desirability of some memorial being erected by this country in memory of the graduates of the Royal Military College who have fallen in South Africa. The hon. Minister of Militia seemed disposed to take that matter into favourable consideration. I think the idea was to have a memorial placed in the college buildings. I have had another communication from the gentleman who brought this matter to my attention last year, and I trust that the hon. Minister of Finance will be good enough to bring it to the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will do so.

Quarantine—Salaries and contingencies, $110,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to bring to the attention of the government the fact that a medical practitioner, Dr. Andrew E. Porter, who resides in my province, has informed me that he has a claim against the government as to which he cannot get any reply or any satisfaction. He has brought it to the attention of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Customs, the Department of the Interior and the Prime Minister, and the only satisfaction he is able to obtain is that one department says that another department should attend to it, and occasionally a department says it will give the matter consideration. He has sent me a statement under oath of what his claim amounts to, and I will read it in order that the government generally may have it brought to their attention:

I, Andrew E. Porter, at present of River Hebert, in the county of Cumberland and province of Nova Scotia, physician, duly admitted to the practice of medicine, do solemnly declare that:

1. I have been engaged in the practice of medicine since 1876, and was admitted a practitioner in the Yukon Territory in the year 1899.

2. During the summer of 1900, a small-pox epidemic broke out in the city of Dawson.

3. I was instructed by D. Menzies, a customs officer and acting quarantine officer at White Horse in the said territory, to make an examination of the passengers and crews of all steamers arriving from Dawson during the prevalence of the disease.

4. In accordance with such intructions I inspected such steamers between the 11th day of July, 1900, and the 22nd day of August, A.D. 1900.

5. The account attached hereto gives the dates of such inspection and the steamers so inspected.

6. The amount charged per steamer is the regular medical fee allowed in the Yukon at that time for such medical work and is a reasonable charge, to which I am justly entitled.

7. The certificate at the end of the said account is in the proper handwriting of D. Menzies, collector of customs and acting quarantine officer as aforesaid.

8. I have tried all reasonable means to collect this Bill, but I have not been able up to the present date to collect the total amount or any part thereof.

I do not know whether this man has any claim or whether his statements are correct or not; but there is no reason why he should not receive an answer one way or the other, and be told whether the government intend to pay his claim or not. If they do not intend to pay it, I suppose he would ask them to grant him a petition of right, so that he could enforce his claim if he has any.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. How much is the claim?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know.

The PRIME MINISTER. Dr. Porter wrote to me on one or two occasions, and I think he was informed that his claim would not be entertained. Of course, if he wants a petition of right, he has only to address the Department of Justice, which he has never done. When he wrote to me, if I remember rightly, inquiries were made, and as a result of the inquiries, he was informed that nothing more could be done for him than what he had already received.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He has received a part?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is my impression at the present time. I would not speak positively as to that, but I will send word immediately to have the matter again brought to my attention, and I will give an answer to my hon. friend to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I distinctly remember the claim coming before me. It came into the hands of my deputy and was referred to me, and I instructed my deputy to ascertain whether this man was instructed by any officer of my department to do the work. It was ascertained that he had not been instructed by any officer of my department, and he was notified to apply to the department who employed him. I have not heard from him since.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I cannot imagine that he did not reply to the hon. gentleman's letter, because he has written a good many letters to me on the subject, and shows a disposition to follow the matter up. He says he was instructed by the customs officer, who was acting as quarantine officer, to make this examination, and he acted for a period of some months.

Railways and Canals—Chargeable to capital—Intercolonial Railway—steel rails and fastenings, $600,000

Mr. BARKER. I wish to enter my protest——

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. member please wait until the whole resolution is read.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would it not be more convenient for the hon. gentleman to make his remarks on this special item ?

Mr. SPEAKER. There is only one motion before the Chair—that the resolution shall be read the second time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But the result of that ruling would be that, instead of having one single subject for discussion, there may be a great many, according to the number of items covered by the resolution.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman prefers to proceed item by item ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes ; otherwise we would have many subjects to cover.

Mr. BARKER. Before the item, is concurred in, I desire to enter my protest against charging this expenditure to capital account. I do not propose at this stage of the session, to make any extended remarks on the subject, because I have already discussed it at some length. Shortly, my objection is this—that all the hon. gentleman is really doing, in relation to a capital charge, is adding to the structure of the road 13 pounds per yard of rail. He has at present rails of 67 pounds per yard, which were originally provided out of capital. He is putting down rails weighing 80 pounds per yard. He is entitled to charge the 13 pounds of increase to capital account, but no more. That is one of the most elementary principles in companies, whether railway companies or any other. The least important business concern in the country is dealt with precisely in that way. It makes no difference whether the government own a property or whether that property is owned by a corporation, the principle is just the same. Unless you adopt a recognized principle in keeping accounts no man can tell whether the business is worked at a profit or at a loss. The importance of observing that principle was illustrated by the fact that the Minister of Finance yesterday contrasted the results obtained by the hon. Minister of Railways, as shown in his report laid before this House, with the result of the operations of his predecessors. The absurdity of such a comparison must be obvious to everybody who will consider that the predecessor of the Minister of Railways would have charged not merely the 67 pounds per yard, but the whole 80 pounds per yard to maintenance account and not to capital. By charging these rails to capital, the present minister, by this one item alone saves, as compared with his predecessors, no less than $600,000. I do not say that the hon. gentleman's predecessors were under any obligation to charge the whole 80 pounds per yard to maintenance. On the contrary, I say, it would be reasonable to charge the betterment, as it is commonly called, in this instance the 13 pounds per yard, to capital. But it is absurd, and every business man in this House must see that it is absurd, when capital has provided rails of 67 pounds per yard that the hon. gentleman should replace them and charge the new ones to capital also. Why, what is the result ? You would have 67 pound rails on the road, but a charge on the books of 134 pounds. Suppose that stock was being taken of this property—that the property was being sold to some company. An accountant would be sent over to examine the property. He would find there 67 pounds of rails per yard, plus the 13 pounds, but the accounts would show a charge of 134 pounds against capital. He would naturally say : You are committing a fraud ; for your accounts represent that you have 134 pounds of rails per yard in your track, whereas you have only 67 pounds. According to the principle on which he proceeds, if the minister renews the rails again he will again charge them to capital, making the discrepancy still greater. The principle of charging to capital and to maintenance, respectively, is well understood, and, for my part, I never heard it questioned. If the hon. minister kept his accounts as any business man would keep them, he would charge to capital the betterment which he has made in the property and would charge to maintenance the replacing of the original 67 pounds of rails per yard, taking credit, against that charge to his maintenance account, for the value of the old scrap that he was taking up. If that method is followed from year to year and from administration to administration, you can compare one working with the other. But, under the system of the hon. gentleman, not only can you not compare the hon. gentleman with his predecessor, but you cannot compare two years of the hon. gentleman's own administration. I, therefore, enter my protest against this charge, as I have done before, and I desire it to be distinctly understood that, in passing this vote without dividing the House, we do not for a moment admit the propriety of the course pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

To provide additional siding room and increased accommodation and facilities along the line of the Intercolonial Railway, $135,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Railways and Canals was to furnish to the House information as to the particular lines that he intended this vote to be applied to. He is not here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot furnish my hon. friend the information. I will call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to it, and try, before this House closes to-morrow, to see that the hon. gentleman gets it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It will be rather late then.

Rolling stock, $500,000.

Mr. BARKER. I wish to say a few words on this item, and to call the attention of the House to the question of rolling stock. I object to this capital charge very much on the same grounds as I did with regard to the item of steel rails and fastenings. In taking up this item as the first since my remarks on steel rails, I do not wish to be understood that it is the only item upon which criticism might be offered; because there are several items here that should call for remark. But I want to take up some special items and call attention to them. The question of rolling stock is a very large one and a very important one as regards the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railways. Hon. members will see that last year the Minister of Railways and Canals obtained authority to expend $2,000,000 upon rolling stock for the Intercolonial. In the present estimates he asks for authority to expend half a million dollars. Now the principles I refer to with regard to steel rails apply directly to the present item. The moment that a corporation, or a company, or a government, has provided for a particular work or thing upon capital account, whether it is a structure, whether it is a car, or a locomotive, or anything else, the going concern, must thereafter maintain that which capital has once provided. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and his predecessors have received from time to time certain sums on capital account to provide rolling stock with which to operate this railroad. As a going concern the railroad is required to maintain that which capital has thus provided. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, if he maintains out of his revenue that which capital has provided, and finds that in the improvement of his business, in the increase of his business, additional rolling stock is required, he is entitled to add to his capital account whatever may be necessary to provide that additional equipment. But that is always subject to the maintenance primarily of what capital has already provided. Now, the Minister of Railways and Canals, in his last report, has shown that of his cars, provided by capital and which it was his duty, as head of the going concern, to maintain out of its revenue, 364 were condemned as unfit for the service. In addition to that, Mr. Muhlfeld, his mechanical superintendent, who was examined as a witness before the Public Accounts Committee, admitted that there were in September last from 25 to 30 locomotives which ought to be condemned, that 12 or 14 of them were already abandoned and the balance were unfit economically to be continued in the service; and all of these 25 or 30, he said, ought to be replaced, and he admitted in his evidence that they should be replaced out of revenue and charged to maintenance.

Now, if the hon. Minister of Railways were conducting his railway as any ordinary railway company in America or anywhere throughout the world carries on business, he would before charging one dollar to capital for additional rolling stock be required to bring up to working standard the rolling stock that capital had already provided him with. If he were to replace out of maintenance these twenty-five or thirty locomotives, and to replace the 364 cars instead of allowing them to lie as he has been allowing them to lie year after year, dead and useless stock, he would not require this money on capital account. It is his business, before he asks one dollar from the country on capital account for rolling stock, to put in proper working order what he has already been provided with. I say, Sir, that before the hon. Minister of Railways is entitled to come here and ask for more stock it is his duty to show that he is already using to the full capacity what capital has provided him with; that is to say that it is his duty to replace and put in service these 364 cars, which he admits in his report to be condemned as unfit for service, and these twenty-five or thirty locomotives, which his mechanical superintendent condemns as unfit for service. Therefore, I protest here against this authority to him to expend $500,000 until he assumes the responsibility of restoring the condemned stock. It is the hon. gentleman's duty, as it would be the duty of the manager of any ordinary railway, to charge the cost of replacing these cars and locomotives to his ordinary expenses. If parliament would insist upon that it would do something to protect the public against wild extravagance in the administration of government railways. I do not propose to enter into any elaborate argument upon that point. I am addressing gentlemen, who, I think, know that what I say is the ordinary rule in their own business. There are gentlemen sitting upon the opposite side of this House who are connected with large corporations, and these gentlemen would not for one moment permit the officers of those corporations to charge to the capital of the company the items that are here sought to be charged to capital, but they would say to them: You must maintain that out of your revenue, and though it will add to your operating expenses you will be telling us the truth and you will enable us to know whether the concern is working at a profit or a loss. What would be said of a board of directors, who, year after year, allowed their management to charge to capital that which was a charge upon revenue, and thus declared a profit, or a dividend, and distributed that dividend among their shareholders though it had not been earned, when it was a fictitious dividend, when the surplus they claimed to have was really due to the fact that they were improperly charging to capital that which did not properly belong to capital? Why, Sir, the board of directors guilty of that sort of thing would be personally responsible for their misconduct and in some countries would be severely dealt with. I protest under these circumstances against this item being made a charge to capital. Nobody, I think, from the province of Ontario desires to limit in the least degree the capacity or the usefulness of the Intercolonial Railway. We desire to see that road a success, but because we desire to see it a success we want it administered on business principles and under conditions applicable to every business organization. I repeat, that if such a manipulation of accounts as is allowed under the present administration and endorsed by hon. gentlemen opposite, were carried on in any business concern in England, the board of directors, who in this regard have the like responsibility as the hon. gentlemen who sit as ministers in this House, would be held personally responsible for their misleading statements, for such statements as produced the so-called surplus or surpluses which have been claimed in this country during the last two or three years. It is time we should stop that sort of thing.

Murray Harbour branch and Hillsborough bridge, Prince Edward Island Railway, $500,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am sorry the Minister of Railways is not here. He promised that he would furnish information in regard to the amount of the expenditure for improvements on the government railways. I asked for the amount of the new steel rails that have been laid, the amount that was required to finish the work, and the sum necessary to provide additional rolling stock in order that parliament might know exactly what improvements are contemplated. I have not received that information and I suppose I must wait for it until next session. When the minister makes a promise of that kind he ought to carry it out. When we are discussing the government railways it is essential that we should know what changes he contemplates and what expenditure his changes entail. He has promised me that information time and again since I asked him when the first item was presented to the House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Railways will be here before we conclude and the hon. gentleman will have the right to put the question to him no matter on what item we may be.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is very desirable that a promise on which items are allowed to be carried should be most carefully observed, because otherwise it will be impossible for us in future to allow items to pass on such an understanding. The Minister of Finance knows that even on concurrence the opposition is not by any means powerless, because we can move the adjournment of the House after every one of these items.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We could stay here a month.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, and while we have no disposition to obstruct the business of the House as has been perfectly evident by our conduct during the whole session, still we do not propose to have promises of this kind made and absolutely disregarded.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I should state that the Minister of Railways came over and spoke to me to-day and said that his deputy had telegraphed to Moncton for the information, but surely when the government adopts a policy in respect to its railways it must have decided on the extent of these improvements, and to have had before them some estimate as to the cost it was binding the country to in respect thereof. That information should have been laid on the Table before the minister asked for a single dollar from parliament.

Mr. BARKER. I wish to raise a point in respect to this particular item apart from that which my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) has brought up. No one on either side of the House can doubt, from what has transpired here for the last week or two, that it is ample time that some restriction should be placed upon ministers who seem to wish to rule their departments as autocrats quite outside of the law and regardless of the law. The Minister of Railways admitted in his speech of the 6th of May that he had entered into a contract for the construction of 11½ miles of this railway a year or a year and a half ago. He complied with the law in regard to that contract by asking for tenders and presumedly he gave the contract to the proper party. The work has been proceeding on that 11½ miles which the hon. gentleman, as reported in 'Hansard,' declared to be a distinct portion of the railway. According to the statement of the minister, he having entered into that contract for that 11½ miles, was approched by members of parliament—not by parliament but by members of parliament; no doubt gentlemen in the neighbourhood who took a particular interest in the work—and not only by members of parliament but as he says in a general way, by other persons. And having thus been approached by members of parliament and other persons, the minister, as an individual—not representing this country, not representing parliament or the government even; not representing anybody but himself, for he had no authority to do what he did do—the minister arrives at the conclusion that it is expedient to let the same contractor construct the additional 31½ miles of the road. Looking at it simply as a matter of business, on what basis did the hon. gentleman act? Anybody who has ever had any experience of public work knows that you cannot take 11½ miles of railway in one district and accept the cost of work upon that section as a criterion or guide as to what you should pay for work upon another portion of the road. In all government contracts of this kind you find the road divided into sections because every one knows that the cost of moving earth and the blasting of rock, and so on, on any particular section varies materially from the cost on another section. A simple way to explain that to the House is by stating that on one section you may have earthwork that has to be excavated and carried for half a mile, while on another section it may not have to be carried further than 100 yards. Everything depends on the particular circumstances of the particular section under contract, but the Minister of Railways having got prices for 11½ miles jumps to the conclusion in his wisdom that these prices should apply to the 31½ miles beyond.

A contractor is generally presumed to know his own business, and I think we may take it for granted that the contractor was quite satisfied that the cost of moving the earth on the 31½ miles would not exceed what it cost on the 11½; but the gentleman who is supposed to be looking after the interests of this Dominion does not take the ordinary precautions to see whether he ought not to get the work done at a very much less price. What does the hon. gentleman do? Does he get estimates? Does he send his engineer over the 31½ miles to report to him what the earthwork is, what the haul is, what the rock blasting is? Not a bit of it. The hon. gentleman sets the contractor to work even without making a contract. The contractor goes to work upon no other authority. That is absolutely clear from the statements made to this House. After the work is actually going on, the hon. minister brings the matter before council and gets an Order in Council authorizing it. He has not even then the ordinary estimates that would be required by any business man. The hon. gentleman admitted last night that it was only within a week that he had got the estimates, although this work has been going on for some time; and what were the estimates he got? Did he get from his engineer an estimate of what would be a reasonable price per yard to allow this contractor for earthwork, for stonework, for blasting rock, for all the different elements that enter into the construction of a railway? Not a bit of it. He simply gets a lump sum estimate from his engineer of what the whole thing would probably cost; that is what he tells us. And what is the contract he enters into? Having got the lump sum estimate of the probable cost, does he enter into a contract with these gentlemen to do the work for that lump sum or any lump sum? No. The hon. gentleman simply tells them to go on at the price per yard at which they were doing the original work. The hon. gentleman has not a scratch of the pen that will enable him to say whether the work is going to cost double the price of the lump sum estimate of his engineer or half of it. And this is what is called a business administration! The hon. gentleman's colleagues support the hon. Minister of Railways, and hon. gentlemen opposite will support him on every occasion that the question is brought up—and they are all, I presume, business men. As a mere matter of business discretion, it seems to me the most outrageous thing ever presented to any assembly of intelligent men. But I am not arguing this matter on the question whether it was a matter of reasonable business discretion on the part of the minister. If it was the most reasonable thing that was ever presented, the minister had no more right to enter into that contract than I had. The Minister of Railways is acting under a statute which defines what he shall do, just as the Minister of Public Works in his department is acting under a statute which defines and limits his authority. But the difference between the two gentlemen is probably this, that the Minister of Railways is above all law. What does he care about statute law or any other? The hon. gentleman does what he pleases, and he relies on his supporters in parliament to back him up and stand by him, and no doubt they will. Is that what might be expected from sensible business men. Surely we ought to expect something better than that from a number of gentlemen such as we see opposite to us. Last session their attention was directed to the method in which railway affairs were administered, and I did hope that among a number of business men who sit on the government side of the House there would have been one man with backbone enough to have gone to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Railways and to have said: 'Sir, this thing must stop; we will not be parties to it.' But apparently hon. gentlemen opposite are a party of invertebrates. Perhaps it is a little too much, in an assembly of this kind, to expect hon. gentlemen to stand up in the House, or even in the committee, where their votes are not recorded, and vote against their party; but surely we might have expected that some of these gentlemen would have gone to the ministers in the recess, or in caucus, and told them, 'This thing must come to an end; the reputation, if not of the government, at any rate of the men who sit behind the government, is at stake, and we will not submit to it any longer.'

But this matter goes away beyond that. It is not a question of business discretion at all. The minister lets this contract, he admits, without tender. He does not even ask for a tender. I beg to call the attention of the House to the 11th section of the Act of 1886, which gives the hon. Minister of Railways all the authority he possesses, and that section reads thus :

> The minister shall invite tenders by public advertisement for the execution of all works, except in case of pressing emergency in which delay would be injurious to the public interest, or in which from the nature of the work it can be more expeditiously and economically executed by the officers and servants of the minister.

The hon. gentleman cannot pretend that this work comes within the last exception, because he is not doing the work. He has not made a pretense that there was any emergency in this case which prevented him calling for tenders. It was simply done at the arbitrary will of the Minister of Railways who, in the eyes of hon. gentlemen opposite, is apparently such a success in his department that they are willing to go it blind for everything he does. I can understand that hon. gentlemen facing us may look at the matter somewhat differently from what we do ; but to gentlemen on this side of the House the idea that the Minister of Railways should be allowed to exercise such authority is simply ridiculous. Even if ministers have absolute confidence in their fellow minister, they have no power to confirm this action of his ; they themselves are subject to the law, and while that statute is on the book they have no right to do what has been done. The whole thing from first to last is absolutely without authority, and I protest against it. As I said before, I do not desire to occupy time at this late hour by dividing the House, but we have heard so much from hon. gentlemen opposite about our not making any objections to such items that I think it is incumbent on this side to protest when we see such a gross avoidance of the provision of parliament has made for the protection of the country.

Mr. FARQUHARSON. Having referred to this matter some days ago, I find it necessary now that the opposition have returned again and again to this question, to repeat what I have already said. Considering the circumstances in connection with the road referred to, of which I consider myself in a position to judge, because I know the ground, have known it all my life and have travelled over it many times, I think that the giving of the contract for the balance of the 31 miles to the contractor who had built the other 11½ miles, was in the interest of the country. While the letting of contracts after calling for public tender is the principle to which we are all committed and while I think that principle is a good one, there are exceptions to every rule.

Mr. BARKER. Does the statute allow any exceptions ? It is imperative.

Mr. FARQUHARSON. I am discussing what was done from the point of view of a business man, and I say that under the circumstances the government acted wisely. The first 11½ miles had been tendered for and the lowest of five tenders accepted. Mr. Kitchen proved himself a good contractor. He did not belong to our province, but any prejudices we might have had against him on that score were removed by the fact that he showed himself a good man, and an able contractor. To get a good man and a good contractor is a great deal.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

Mr. FARQUHARSON. Get a man who does not understand his work and you will soon find yourself in trouble. The question was asked why, in the first instance, the contract was not let for the whole distance instead of for 11½ miles, and the hon. Minister of Railways properly answered that after the 11½ miles had been located, the government were undecided whether the road should continue by Vernon river or take a northerly course, and it could go no further until the location was determined.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman claim that the government let the contract before the road was located.

Mr. FARQUHARSON. I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You said that you did not know where the 11½ miles would go.

Mr. FARQUHARSON. I did not say that. I went over this road with the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and his engineer. We spent a whole day, from morning till night, travelling over it. The engineer of that road is a man, I think, above approach, and he has examined all the ground carefully, and no doubt reported to his superiors, and therefore when the 31½ miles were let on the same schedule rates as the 11½ miles, I do not think the government could have done better. And when that contractor had all his apparatus on the ground for building the 11½ miles, we thought no other man could do the rest of the work as cheaply or as well. But of course prejudices are apt to be created by letting a contract without tender, and the minister is liable to be under a cloud so to speak until the facts are all fully known.

Mr. FARQUHARSON. If these hon. gentlemen will wait a moment I will explain what I mean. This contract was not let after inviting tenders, but there are exceptions to every rule, and this is one of them. I do not think that this country has lost a dollar by the transaction. I am satisfied that no good business man would have done otherwise than the Minister of Railways did. But prejudices are liable to be created when contracts are let without tender. If, however, hon. members opposite knew the circumstances as well as I do, I have no doubt that, as honest men, they would take the same view. The contract was a fair one and a good one and one in the interests of the people, and I am pleased to be able to congratulate the government and people, as a new member, that the opposition can find nothing greater to complain of during this session.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman thinks that if we were honest men on this side we would concur in his view. Well, I do not want to proclaim that I am an honest man because whenever you see a man declaring to everybody that he is honest, you had better look out for him. The hon. gentleman said: We on this side could let the contract. I have not heard as yet that the hon. gentleman has become a member of the cabinet; but as there are great dissensions in the cabinet, it is quite on the cards that within a few days we may have the announcement that this hon. gentleman, who went up the hills and down the vales with the hon. Minister of Railways, in order to bring about the letting of this contract without tender, has become a member of the cabinet. He has told us the greatest lot of goody goody things I have heard from any hon. gentleman opposite. We had a good man he said, and if we get a good man we ought to keep him. Hon. gentlemen on that side ought to take that lesson to heart, because good men on that side are not any more plentiful than in the interests of the country, they ought to be. He says: We got a good man, a good contractor, a good engineer—and I have no doubt he said also a good government. There was one thing he omitted to say. He did not say that they had a good contract. No doubt this man got an eminently good contract for himself out of the government on that occasion. The hon. gentleman tells us that honourable and honest men would not protest against this transaction. Well, I am responsible to my constituents, and I venture to protest, and I want to make that protest as distinct and emphatic as I can. What are the circumstances? According to the statute the government are bound to call for tenders in every instance except in the case of an emergency. Was there any emergency in this case? I do not think that the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has shown us there was. I do not think that any hon. gentlemen on the government side can show us that there was. What does it all amount to? It amounts to just this. If you can disregard the statutes in a case of this kind, the government or the Minister of Railways can let one mile of railway after calling for tenders, and then build 999 miles without tender. Is that the meaning of the statute? Is that the meaning of responsible government in this country? It was not the meaning of responsible government when hon. gentlemen on this side were on the government benches, nor was it the meaning of responsible government when the Liberals of old were in power, but it is to a large extent the meaning of responsible government today, as enunciated and proclaimed by these hon. gentlemen who now administer the affairs of this country. If they can do what they have done, they can do something more. It happens, but it is only a coincidence, that these two pieces of railway, the 11½ miles and the 31½ miles, are portions of the same railway. They might just as well have been portions of two different railways, and these hon. gentlemen might just as well have done this. They could have let the 11½ miles at the time when, according to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Farquharson), they did not know what the location of the balance of the railway would be or whether there would be any more constructed,—they could have let those 11½ miles after calling for tenders, and then let to the same contractor, say 300 miles of railway, in another province on the same terms, and without tender.

This shows us just where we are at, and it emphasizes the point that was made so plain by my hon. friend from Hamilton that this is a distinct violation of the statute by the government. I understand that we are not going to divide the House on this question. But I want to say to the government that we do protest. We may not have the remedy now, but we do not want them to do this again. We have called their attention to it as we have called their attention to a great many former violations of the principle of constitutional and responsible government. In old times who called so loud for responsible government as the old-time Liberals ? But if these old-time Liberals came to this parliament to-night, I venture to say that they would go back to the retirement from which they came rather than associate themselves with the so-called Liberals of to-day.

Trent Canal—construction (revote), $300,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We had some discussion in Committee of Supply on the claim of Messrs. Corry & Laverdure, contractors on this canal. That claim was dealt with under a reference of some kind. I do not know whether it was before the Exchequer Court, and, if so, whether it was on a petition of right, and whether the government stood upon their extreme rights, or whether there was a special reference as in the case of Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann. But I understand from the Minister of Railways and Canals that these contractors succeeded in obtaining a decision in their favour of $126,000—I am not very sure as to the amount. Is any portion of this vote to be appropriated towards the payment of that arbitration ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. This is the vote for next year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, the hon. minister is now taking a vote for the present year—a revote of $300,000 for construction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, that is for next year. Whatever is paid we expect to pay out of the current year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does the minister intend to pay that $126,000 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have explained the matter, I think, four times since the session opened; but as the hon. gentleman has asked the question, I do not mind giving the explanation once more. The gentlemen selected as engineers, Messrs. Hobson, Surtees and Brophy, all examined into the claim for these extras, judging of the correctness and fairness of the prices, and made a report that, that of this claim, which was for over $400,000, the chief engineer might properly, in their opinion, certify to $126,000—I think the hon. gentleman has given the correct amount. I think the report came in after parliament opened, and since then no further action has been taken. The matter is now awaiting the consideration of council, as, in the midst of our other pressing duties, we have not been able to deal with the matter finally.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I must protest against the system adopted by the Minister of Railways and Canals. Under a contract——

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. gentleman that we are not now in supply, and, under the rules it is not permitted to an hon. member to speak more than once upon any question.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But I simply asked a question of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am calling the hon. member's attention to the fact that we are not now in supply but in concurrence.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I can put myself in order very easily. I move that the item be struck out.

Mr. SPEAKER. As the hon. gentleman has spoken, he has no right to move a motion.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I move that this item be struck out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the result of this motion is to prevent the appropriation, it will cause the suspension of work for the year, and all those interested will be placed in a very awkward predicament. The hon. gentleman must contemplate the possibility of that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister can restore the item if he likes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The responsibility is upon the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Here is a claim made by a firm of contractors against the government. Under the law, the responsibility is placed upon the deputy minister to certify as to the correctness of the claim of the contractors. In this case, the deputy minister refuses to certify that the contractors are entitled to this amount. There is no way by which the money can be obtained from the government without the certificate of the chief engineer, and he, by refusing to certify, virtually declares that the contractors are not entitled to the amount they claim. How does the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals get over it ? Instead of applying to the court that was specially established for the purpose of finding out whether contractors have just claims or not, he refers the matter to an arbitration of engineers. I do not know the case that was put before them, but it was not conducted by the Minister of Justice. The government did not stick for its extreme rights, and the legality of the claim is not decided upon. These arbitrators report to whom ? They report to the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, who, after all, is the man who must certify in order that the claim may be paid. We have the statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals that his deputy minister has refused to certify to the amounts. Does the minister deny that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I asked the minister, when the deputy was present, whether the deputy, on the recommendation of the three engineers, had amended his report, and the deputy minister stated to the minister that he had not done so, and the minister made that statement to the House. Then he goes over the report of his deputy minister who refuses to certify to this claim, and asks for an Order in Council to have the amount voted by this House. I contend that we should have an opportunity of inquiring into this matter, and that we should have a promise from the minister that this $300,000 we are voting at the present moment for the Trent canal, shall be expended on the Trent canal, and not expended on something else. The law requires that an expenditure on the Trent canal shall be certified by the deputy minister, and not ordered by an Order in Council superseding the report of the deputy minister, given contrary to the law, and contrary to the contract entered into between the government and the contractors. Under that contract, the chief engineer is to judge as to whether the work is performed and as to whether the quantities are right. He refuses to certify to that amount, the Minister of Railways and Canals overrules his own chief engineer, and asks three other engineers to come in for the purpose of assisting the conscience of the chief engineer. Then the chief engineer does not support the recommendation of the three engineers, and the Minister of Railways and Canals goes to Council for an Order in Council. Then I ask for some assurance that the sum we are voting to-day shall not be applied to the payment of any such claim as that when the law is not fulfilled. Under the contract entered into between the minister and these two parties, the chief engineer is to be the judge of the quantities and the judge of the performance of the work, and the chief engineer refuses to certify to that. If the chief engineer is wrong there is a remedy. We do not want, parliament nor the people of this country do not want, to be bound by the opinion of the chief engineer. If he is wrong in his opinion, there is a court established for the purpose of overruling him, the Exchequer Court has to decide whether the chief engineer is right or wrong.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is difficult to understand what the hon. gentleman who has addressed the House, is driving at.

Mr. COCHRANE. When you do not want to understand.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think the hon. gentleman understands it either.

Mr. COCHRANE. Yes I do.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then I am sorry for the hon. gentleman's understanding if he does. The hon. gentleman, the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, wants an assurance that this money shall not be expended on anything else than the Trent canal. There is no necessity for any assurance of that kind. The money is voted for the Trent canal, the Auditor General will see that it is expended on the Trent canal and nothing else. It is simply childish to ask for an assurance that this money shall be expended upon the Trent canal. The appropriation itself says it shall be. What more assurance does the hon. gentleman want than the fact that parliament has voted that money for a special object, that is, it is to be expended on the Trent canal. The Auditor General will see that it is expended on the Trent canal; and I repeat again it is simply childish to ask for a guarantee that it shall be so expended. The hon. gentleman is wrong again in the application which he wants to make to this item. He has in his mind the contract of Messrs. Corry & Laverdure who, I understand, are contractors for a section of the Trent canal. Now Corry & Laverdure have a disputed account, as I understand it. The hon. gentleman says that this account must be paid upon the certificate of the chief engineer of the department. Certainly it must be so paid, and the Auditor General will see that it is not paid to Corry & Laverdure unless he has before him the certificate of the chief engineer of the department. The chief engineer of the department is the referee under the circumstances. If there is a dispute between the contractors and the department, the contract, which the hon. gentleman has cited, says that under such circumstances the chief engineer shall be the supreme arbiter. Payment cannot be made unless the chief engineer gives his certificate to that effect. But there is more than that. There may be circumstances under which the chief engineer will refuse to certify, he may say the account is disputed, somebody is in the wrong. The contractors make a demand, and I understand the chief engineer will not certify to the account. There is a dispute which has to be determined in the courts. So far so good. I know nothing of this contract personally, the matter has not come before Council, and I speak simply on the statements made by the Minister of Railways and Canals and by the hon. member for Lanark. As I understand this matter, the chief engineer, finding his opinion was disputed, before issuing his certificate, has thought advisable to have the opinion of three expert engineers instead of sending the matter to the courts.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do you mean to say the chief engineer has thought so?

The PRIME MINISTER. I do say so, according to the statements made in the House.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I asked that question of the Minister of Railways and Canals, whether his chief engineer had accepted the opinion of the three engineers who were called upon to report upon the question, and the chief engineer, standing beside the minister, instructed him to answer, no.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very good, let it be so. Then the hon. gentleman ought to be satisfied. If the chief engineer is not satisfied with the account then that account cannot be paid. The hon. gentleman ought to know that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, I do not.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, he ought to know it, because the chief engineer must certify to these accounts. The chief engineer has thought it advisable to take the opinion of other eminent engineers. One of them I know personally, Mr. Hobson, of the Grand Trunk Railway ; I think he is well known throughout Canada. I do not know that there is a more competent authority than Mr. Hobson. The other gentleman I have not the honour of knowing personally ; he lives in Ottawa, and I think his record in the city of Ottawa is unimpeachable, I refer to Mr. Surtees. The third engineer, Mr. Brophy, I think also stands high.

Mr. COCHRANE. Has not the Treasury Board overridden the decision of the Auditor General time and again ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The chief engineer and the Treasury Board have power to pass over the Auditor General. But whenever they do so their overruling comes before parliament and has to submit to the sanction or censure of parliament. But in this matter the chief engineer, as I understand, will not make a report, or has not made a report so far. As he has not made a report the matter cannot be dealt with. therefore like any other matter, it has to be reported in the way provided by law, either favourably or unfavourably. The hon. gentleman stated a moment ago that he was protesting because the law was not followed. He has no reason to speak in that way. The report will be made by the chief engineer, either one way or the other. Now the hon. gentleman says that instead of sending this matter to the arbitrators it should have been sent to the Exchequer Court. That is the way that the law provides for parties who cannot agree. They shall have their differences adjusted by the courts of law, and the Exchequer Court is established to determine disputes between subjects and the Crown.

Now, Sir, there is another mode of dealing with this matter. Arbitration has been found in a good many cases to be just as satisfactory as the courts of law, but up to the present time we have nothing that I know of to show that there has been an arbitration or a judicial adjudication. The whole thing is still pending, the whole thing will have to be determined according to the rules provided for by the law.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If there is no arbitration it would be interesting to the House to know what there really is in regard to this matter. Is it merely the fact that the chief engineer has been so impressed by the difficulty of the situation that he has had to call to his assistance three other engineers ? The chief engineer of the Department of Railways is a man of great experience, a man who has never been afraid to deal with a question of this kind, in the past, as far as I know, and I find it difficult to believe that he has been so impressed by some difficulty in regard to this claim that he has called upon other engineers in the country to do work which he declares himself to be incapable of doing. If it is not that, what is it ? Has there been any reference of the claim, and if so what are the terms of the reference ? As to what has been done, we are entirely in the dark.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have had all the papers before you.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know that we have had any papers before us disclosing these matters. Occasionally papers are brought down by hon. gentlemen and, handed to some hon. member of the House, not printed, not placed before the House in a way to convey information to most of us.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I did not get them and I do not think they were brought down to the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have not had them and the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) says he has not had them.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. They were not brought down to the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know who has had the advantage of perusing these documents. The hon. member for South Lanark says that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has told us that he proposes to go to Council——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. He said that he had gone to Council but that the order had not been passed yet.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals attempted to obtain an order for the payment of this money without obtaining the certificate of the chief engineer. That is the position attacked by the hon. member for South Lanark and that is the position which the right hon. leader of the government seems to think is the correct one.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, I have told the hon. gentleman that I did not remember that the matter had been brought up at Council. I am quite sure it has not.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals stated that he had prepared a report to Council recommending the payment but that Council had not acted upon it.

The PRIME MINISTER. That may be so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The right hon. gentleman may find that there is more for him to consider in this matter than he thinks. As far as the Auditor General is concerned, he has been overruled a great many times, and we have even had occasion to consider, during this very session, the appropriation of moneys voted by parliament to purposes that seemed somewhat foreign to the vote. I have pointed out in connection with the expenditure of money voted for Yukon buildings that large sums went to pay really for the living expenses of officials out there. Attention has been directed to sums, not great in amount, it is true, but still public money of this country, voted for the purpose of taking the census of 1901 and applied to other purposes. These are matters which are clearly the subject of criticism from this side of the House and matters which I think the right hon. gentleman ought to thank us for bringing up in order that he may direct the members of his cabinet to be a little more careful in future and not subject the government to the criticism which they so richly deserve in this case. I would have supposed that the right hon. gentleman would have been inspired by feelings of gratitude towards the hon. member for South Lanark for referring to these matters in the terms in which he has done, and I say again that I think this is a subject which will demand the careful consideration of Council when the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals brings it up for further consideration.

Mr. LENNOX. I am sorry that this session is so nearly at an end, as matters which are of great importance are crowding up very rapidly at the close. The right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) intimated that he took from the statements of the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) sufficient information upon which to form an argument in answer to that hon. gentleman. Now, I do not possess, of course, any measure of the ability of the First Minister, but, I think, all the same, that he, in the course of his remarks, has raised a question which it is very important the government should in future take seriously into their consideration and as has been suggested, I hope they will take it in the most kindly spirit. The fact is that the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals is acting under a delegated authority. He is acting under a statutory authority and beyond the provisions of the statute he cannot go. He is the person pointed out by the statute who has to decide certain questions in cases of contract. It is well known as a universal principle of law that if a person possesses delegated authority he has no power to delegate that authority to another. Therefore, I suggest to the government and to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that it is not competent to delegate to these three engineers the power which can be exercised by the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals alone. Therefore, if this course is pursued I submit, of course, with a great deal of deference, but with a certain amount of confidence, that unless there is an express provision in the statute to the contrary, this delegated authority must be exercised by the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals alone, and that without any enlightenment to be brought about by the instrumentality of the gentlemen who have been appointed in the matter, however eminent they may be.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is only Bill (No. 161) respecting the incorporation of joint stock companies by letters patent, remaining ?

The PRIME MINISTER. That is all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And the Supply Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, and there are also the amendments made by the Senate to the Bill about the remission of penalties.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, May 15, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

CANADIAN AGENTS IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

Mr. BOURASSA asks (translation) :

Is the government aware that the commissioners and agents of the Dominion of Canada in the United Kingdom are subject to the income tax, while the foreign ambassadors, consuls and agents are not ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). (Translation.) The attention of the government has not been drawn to this matter, but it will soon be taken into consideration.

INSPECTION OF COAL OIL.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called I would like to ask—I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Hon. Mr. Bernier) is not in his place—what conclusion has been arrived at in regard to the inspection of coal oil, pursuant to a discussion which took place here some time ago.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I expect that the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue will be in his seat within a few minutes, perhaps before the recess, and I would ask my hon. friend to renew his question when he comes in.

TAXATION OF CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LANDS.

Mr. OLIVER. I would also like to ask if a statement has been made by the hon. Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) in regard to the procedure to be taken to arrive at a decision before the courts in the matter of the taxation of Canadian Pacific Railway lands. I understood from the hon. Minister of Justice that he would make such a statement on his estimates. I do not know of my own knowledge whether such a statement has been made, and I would ask if any such statement has been made or if it is to be made ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I think I can give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) the information which he asks for. The land commissioner in my department and the Deputy Minister of Justice had the subject before them, and they have been engaged from before the beginning of the session endeavouring to get the matter into shape so that it can be placed before the courts as quickly as possible. Of course, the hon. Minister of Justice and myself have given instructions that no delay should occur. I presume that both of the officials concerned have been endeavouring to expedite the matter so that it will be got into shape in a very short time now.

Mr. OLIVER. Can the hon. minister give me an idea as to the contention that is to be maintained by the government ? Has it been decided what is to be the contention of the government in regard to the period at which taxation begins ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is, as to the time that the government should contend that the land becomes liable to taxation ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot speak as to that with any degree of positiveness. I had a discussion with the Deputy Minister of Justice when I placed the facts before him, and I asked him to give full consideration to the question. I may say that proceedings would have gone on faster except that the Deputy Minister of Justice was obliged to go to England after I gave the instructions to him, and that was responsible for a good deal of the delay. I asked him to consider the whole case carefully and to take a position as favourable as possible in the interests of those who desire that the land should be taxed. No conclusion has been arrived at in regard to this point.

Mr. OLIVER. As this is an important point, I would like to know whether the decision is to rest with the Deputy Minister of Justice, or is to rest upon the government.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The decision will not depend on the Deputy Minister of Justice. My hon. friend, of course, will understand that the Deputy Minister of Justice will consider the various points and after he has looked into the law and the decisions applicable to the case, the result will be communicated to us and the decision will rest with us.

EMPLOYEES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. J. B. MORIN (Dorchester). Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) is not in his place. I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if he will be kind enough to carry free from Montreal to the east the employees of the House who have been engaged here during the session. We all know that the session has been short, the expenses have been pretty high, and these employees this year have very little to take home with them, and if the government would carry them free from Montreal east, it would be very acceptable to them.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman wants to make a statement and not merely to ask a question, if he waits until we go into Committee on Ways and Means he will have an opportunity of discussing the question.

Mr. MORIN. That is all I have to say.

The PRIME MINISTER. We will take it under advice and consideration.

Mr. MORIN. Thank you.

JOINT STOCK COMPANIES BILL.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 161) respecting the incorporation of Joint Stock Companies by letters patent.—The Prime Minister.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. (Hon. Clifford Sifton). Mr. Chairman, the Bill which is before the committee, the Joint Stock Companies Bill, is a formidable-looking one, but in reality the changes that are proposed in the law are comparatively few. I may say that the object of the government in introducing this Bill was to bring the position respecting incorporation of joint stock companies into a state somewhat more in accordance with the requirements of modern business. It is our opinion that the law, as it at present stands upon the statute-book and the practice in regard to the incorporation of joint stock companies, is altogether cumbrous, unsatisfactory and out of date, and any member of the legal profession who has had anything to do with the incorporation of companies under the Joint Stock Companies Act of the Dominion, will agree that it requires amendment. The principle that is being followed now in countries where business is carried on under modern conditions is, that, in respect to that class of companies which can be described as industrial companies every possible facility should be given for incorporation, that incorporation should be made as speedy, as free from unnecessary difficulty and as inexpensive as possible. This is the most important object which we have in view in connection with the Bill which is now before us. The general provisions constituting the law respecting joint stock companies are not substantially changed, and the number of new sections is very few.

The effect of the law as it exists at the present time has been to drive the business away from the federal government. Persons have been compelled to go to the various provinces and the various states of the Union for the purpose of getting charters of incorporation. It will be agreed by the House that we should have our law in such a state that persons would not have to go somewhere else to get a charter to do business in Canada. The Bill was introduced in the Senate because it was thought that the Senate would perhaps give more time to the consideration of its various clauses than would perhaps be possible in this House. If any hon. gentleman thinks that a substantial change is required in any particular section, he might perhaps give the matter due deliberation, and bring an amendment if necessary next session. Our desire is that the Bill should be gone through with now, so that the proceedings for incorporating joint stock companies may be put upon a more modern and up-to-date basis. This subject of joint stock incorporation has received a great deal of attention, both in England and in the United States, and I think that the English system is perhaps the most simple of any. The principle of this Act is to some extent followed in this Bill. Most of the sections will be found just as they were in the old law. The second section is new, but it simply declares what companies the Act should apply to. The 5th section says : 'That upon an application being made by persons, not less than five in number, the Secretary of State may issue a charter.' It obviates a long process of advertising, and the passing from one department to the other, and is somewhat similar to the English law. Section 13 is new, and it enables persons who have been incorporated in any province or in a foreign country to get incorporated under Dominion charter, so that if people have been incorporated in the province of Ontario and desire to do business in another province, they can come here, and without expensive legislation get a charter from the Dominion. In the same way, if they become incorporated in the United States, with the object of doing business in Canada, they can get a Canadian charter. Proper precautions have been taken in the section to prevent any abuses. Section 18 provides that the company shall not commence its operations until ten per cent of its authorized capital has been subscribed and paid for. The provisions of the Joint Stock Companies Act in the past have been for the purpose of preventing companies starting in business until they had taken steps to put themselves in a bona fide position to do so. Many of the provisions in the existing law are in effect ludicrous. For instance, the provision which requires that a company had to pay a certain amount of money before they got their incorporation has at least the merit of age. But every lawyer knows that it is a common practice to borrow money from the banks to make the deposit, and when the incorporation is issued they get the cheque back. This section requires that ten per cent shall be bona fide subscribed before the business is begun, and it seems to provide all the safeguards that can be provided in a case of this kind. Section 35 provides that the corporation shall not make use of its funds for the purchase of stock in other corporations, unless and until a by-law for that purpose has been passed by two-thirds of the value of the stock, except the charter specifically provides otherwise that it may be done. It is claimed that the law heretofore has not been sufficiently flexible. Sometimes a trading company desires to take stock in other trading companies for the purpose of protecting themselves respecting the indebtedness of one company to the other, without incurring any liability for the general conduct of the business. Under this section, while there is a proper safeguard, they would not be prevented from taking that course. Section 46 is new. Section 57 provides for the borrowing of money by the corporation, and it is taken from the Ontario law, which received very careful consideration at the hands of corporation lawyers and of bankers, and has been found to work very satisfactorily. Section 79 provides for the inspection of the business of the company, and is new. There are two methods, one of which is that by which the shareholders representing one-quarter in value of the capital stock of the company may apply to a judge for the purpose of having an inspection of the affairs of the company made. That is for the purpose of protecting the minority shareholders who might not feel that the majority were handling the business as it ought to be.

Mr. BELL. Can that inspection be required at any time ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. At any time upon the application of shareholders representing not less than one-fourth of the value of the stock.

Mr. BELL. It might be used to embarrass the company.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The application must be supported by such evidence as a judge may require for the purpose of deciding that the inspection is necessary, and it is in the discretion of a judge of the Superior Court, to whom we must leave a great deal of discretion in such a matter. Section 89 provides that returns shall be made to the government. That, I think, covers everything that is new in the Bill.

On section 13,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I objected at first to having this Bill taken up on account of the very late date in the session. The Minister of Justice afterwards pointed out to me that a very small portion of the Bill was new, and indicated to me the sections that were new. I have not had an opportunity of verifying what portion is new and what portion is old. I take for granted that what he said in the House with regard to that is correct, and the government, of course, are responsible for the Bill. With regard to this section, I do not know whether it is taken from any existing legislation or not ; but it struck me, looking at the wording of it, that there may be some difficulty in working it out. The latter part of the first subsection provides :

> After the issue of the letters patent the company shall be governed in all respects by the provisions of this Act, except that the liability of the shareholders to creditors of the old company shall remain as at the time of the issue of the letters patent.

A difficulty is, I believe, not unknown in the United States, in the case of companies having double charters, the provisions of which are sometimes inconsistent with each other. Certain provisions of this Act, according to this section, are to be applicable to the company, and it may be incorporated under the laws of a foreign country, which are not in all respects the same as the provisions of this Act. There may be some difficulty in working it out, but I suppose there is no harm in allowing it to pass, with the suggestion that it may be amended afterwards if that is found necessary.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That point has been pretty well considered in the course of dealing with the incorporation of joint stock companies. The provinces have laws authorizing the granting of licenses to foreign corporations, and the practice under this Act would be to all intents and purposes the same as that which the provinces follow. If any difficulty occurs in the working of the Act, which is the only way in which we can find out, we can amend it from time to time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I observe that the fees for letters patent fixed by the Governor in Council in the past have been considerably higher than they are in some other countries. For instance, in the province of Nova Scotia, it is not unusual for people siderably higher than they are in some other well known in the shipping trade, to form a joint stock company for every one of those ships.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Do they incorporate in the province ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They usually come here, because they send their ships all over the world. The result is that the fees amount to a considerable sum. I brought this matter to the attention of the Secretary of State some years ago, because I thought the fees secured by the government would be more if they were somewhat lower.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is a great deal in what my hon. friend says, and an attempt ought to be made to prepare a scheme of fees which would be commensurate with the size and importance of the business with respect to which the incorporation is taking place, so that we could incorporate companies such as those to which my hon. friend refers at a very moderate expense.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It may be true, as the hon. Minister of the Interior has stated, that the former provisions of the law were very often evaded, or that attempts were made to evade them in the way he mentions. I am not quite sure that these attempts would prove successful if they were really tested in a court of law. I do not see any provision in this statute which would prevent a similar evasion in future, so that I do not know that it effects any improvement in that respect. I am not able to suggest at present any alteration in the section which would make it more secure.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman will see that the Act does not profess to provide that any particular sum of money shall be paid in for the incorporation.

On section 38,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This section, by postponing the rights of the holders of common shares against their will to the rights of the holders of preference shares, might possibly work an injustice. However, I suppose you cannot provide against everything of that kind, and I have no objection to the section passing in its present form, subject to the future possible necessity of amending it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think it is practically the same as the law at present. It was amended in 1900.

On section 51,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to draw the attention of the minister to the language of this section, which says that it shall not apply to companies whose stock is listed and dealt with on the stock exchange. That is rather a general expression. What does it mean exactly? There are half a dozen stock exchanges in Canada. What would be the effect of that?

Mr. BELCOURT. It is very likely taken from the English Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The language may be taken from the English Act as there is only one stock exchange in England.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think it is taken from the English Act.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend will see that subsection 2 simply removes, as regards stocks listed in the stock exchange, the prohibition provided in section 51, under which every transfer of stock must be entered in the transfer book of the company before it can be valid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What do you mean by the term 'the stock exchange.' Suppose you have a company incorporated in Nova Scotia, where there is no stock exchange. The stock is listed in Montreal, and listed nowhere else. Is the Montreal Stock Exchange to be considered 'the stock exchange' within the meaning of the statute or not? Or could a transfer by means of endorsing the scrip be made in Nova Scotia?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think there will be any difficulty. The by-laws of the company will provide where scrip and certificates of stock will be transferable by delivery. There is no reason why a company should not provide by a by-law that its stock scrips shall be transferable by delivery.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it would better carry out the idea of this section and make it a little more definite, if we were to say 'any recognized stock exchange' instead of 'the stock exchange.'

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. What do you mean by a recognized stock exchange?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The stock exchange of Montreal or Toronto.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The courts will decide that such and such a place was a recognized stock exchange, just as the courts in England decide what is an open market.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Would it not be better to use the word 'incorporated' instead of 'recognized.' There are a number of stock exchanges which are not incorporated, and are of very inferior order to those which are incorporated. While I do not know sufficiently about the scope of the Act to say whether it is right to exclude those, I can see some inconvenience in the use of a term which might be held to apply to stock exchanges not incorporated.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). A broker will sometimes establish in his office what he calls a stock exchange, in cities where there is no recognized stock exchange, and I think the intention is to avoid legalizing transfers of scrip in such places. Probably we had better use the word 'incorporated,' as suggested by the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think there would be any difficulty in practice if we were to use the term 'recognized stock exchange.' The courts are competent to decide, in cases of dispute, whether a certain stock exchange was in reality a recognized stock exchange or not. I move that this section be amended by inserting the words 'recognized stock exchange,' in place of the words, 'the stock exchange.'

Mr. BELCOURT. Why not use the word 'incorporated'?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are all sorts of stock exchanges, and if you use the word 'recognized,' that may lead to difficulty. If you use the word 'incorporated,' there are stock exchanges where a good deal of business is carried on, which are not incorporated. If the stock is listed on a regular stock exchange, it can be dealt in by curb brokers, and a purchaser who buys innocently from a curb broker should not suffer. I do not think there is any necessity for the amendment. After a year's trial of this Act, if any amendments be thought necessary, we can make them next session. I do not think any harm will result in leaving the section as it is, and we might do some injustice by amending it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is rather too indefinite to talk about 'the stock exchange,' and more difficulty will likely arise if the clause be left as it is than to make some change as suggested.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If it were left open as it is, merely 'the stock exchange,' I think it would be interpreted by the court as it would appear to me to be—the incorporated stock exchanges of the various centres.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) quite appreciates the conditions which may arise. For instance, in Nova Scotia we have no stock exchange as that word is ordinarily accepted. The securities of many Nova Scotia companies are listed on the Toronto or Montreal stock exchanges, and they are purchased on these exchanges by the people in Halifax. Suppose you have a case before the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, in which this question was involved, would these words mean the Toronto Stock Exchange, or the Montreal Stock Exchange—or would they mean anything? It would leave us in a position of very grave uncertainty. I do not think it makes much difference whether you say 'recognized' or whether you say 'incorporated' stock exchange, assuming that all the stock exchanges are incorporated.

Mr. BELCOURT. I quite agree with the hon. leader of the opposition that that word ought to be defined. Particularly in view of the wild speculations in the stock markets recently, this change is a very desirable one. I would prefer to see the word 'incorporated,' because 'recognized' is a relative expression and vague. What would constitute 'recognition?'

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Recognition in the markets of the world.

Mr. BELCOURT. But what is the stamp of 'recognition?' How are you to determine whether a stock exchange is 'recognized' or not? The word 'incorporated' is the one to use, as the stock exchanges in Montreal and Toronto are incorporated, as any other recognized stock exchange ought to be incorporated.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Is there a stock exchange in Halifax?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Not an incorporated stock exchange.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Is there an institution carried on as a stock exchange, but not incorporated?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The brokers, who have a very extensive business, call themselves the 'Halifax Stock Exchange,' or something of that kind. There is no place where brokers meet and go through the usual manœuvres that brokers do on first-class stock exchanges, as in some of the larger cities of the continent; but they carry on operations by purchasing in New York, Montreal, or Toronto.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Practically, they are brokers?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The difficulty about using the word 'incorporated' is simply that a company might be incorporated under the name of a stock exchange, yet have no substantial standing in the country whatever.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then, say 'recognized and incorporated.'

Mr. MONK. I have not followed this discussion, but, if this refers to mining exchanges, I would point out that we have a very important mining exchange in Montreal, and I do not think it is incorporated.

Mr. BELCOURT. Is it not part of the Canadian Mining Institute, which is an incorporated body?

Mr. MONK. No.

Mr. BELCOURT. They surely must be incorporated, otherwise they could not carry on business.

Mr. MONK. They carry on business in Montreal, but they are not incorporated. The stock exchange is incorporated, but not this mining exchange.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I should think the word 'recognized' might bear the burden for a year. My hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) suggests that it has no very definite meaning, but the position of the Prime Minister of this country is constituted by a word in the statute-book very much the same.

The MINISTER. OF THE INTERIOR Words that no difficulty is found in interpreting.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I agree with the hon. Minister of the Interior, but we might use the word 'recognized' and thus get over difficulties such as the one suggested by my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk).

Amendment agreed to.

Bill, as amended, reported, read the third time, and passed.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 77) to provide for the appointment of Assistant Judges of the Supreme Court of Canada in certain cases.—Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick.

WAYS AND MEANS—RAILWAY EXTENSION IN NOVA SCOTIA.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go into Committee to consider of the Ways and Means for raising a Supply to be granted to His Majesty.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). As the work on the Halifax and South-western Railway is about to be commenced, I desire to offer a few remarks in that connection, interested as I naturally am in the road which is to pass through the county I have the honour to represent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Will my hon. friend allow me to make a suggestion?

I was proposing that the House go into Committee of Ways and Means for the purpose of disposing of the Supply Bill, for which the Senate is waiting, and if my hon. friend desires to make any observations, we will afford him an opportunity after that is over.

Mr. KAULBACH. I will only be a few minutes. The Nova Scotia Southern Railway, better known as the Hervey Line, was started, if I remember rightly, in 1894, upon which it is reported $400,000 was expended in preliminary surveys and construction, but owing to an interference or friction between the promoter of it and the Coast Railway Company—a war of route, if it may be so called—and the Dominion and Nova Scotia governments, not having sufficient decision to give the Hervey line so called the preference, it being the first that was subsidized, operations were suspended pending results. I am very desirous, nevertheless, that a road shall be built between Halifax and Shelburne, and properly located where it will open a country for settlement, and develop the resources for the farmers, miners and lumbermen. Some would say, locate the road where it will give convenience to the greatest number, meaning along the shore. This would serve the purpose for Halifax and Shelburne counties very well, as these counties, unfortunately, have little or no farming country in both, the settlers being on the shore, but I am happy to say it is not the case with Lunenburg and Queen's, as the interior of these counties possesses the very finest of land for farming, suitable for producing anything that can be raised in Canada, and for purposes of fruit growing cannot be excelled, settled by a thrifty people, the places being known as Caledonia, South Brookfield, North Brookfield, Pleasant River, Hempford, Ohio, New Germany, Foster Settlement and New Ross, which are villages and settlements thrifty and full of promise, awaiting the completion of the Hervey road. How are these places to be reached, I would ask, if the proposed road is to follow the shore route, where the settlers have now all the facilities for travel by water and for the transport of all their sea and soil products ? I say that the settlers referred to, attracted to the rich agricultural lands in the interior of Lunenburg and Queen's, who have made homes for themselves and their families, are they to be refused a road to a market, places proverbially well suited for agriculture and horticulture, with lakes and streams to beautify the scene, well supplied with fish to attract the sportsman, and as I said, for richness of soil and adaptability for agriculture and fruit growing is not surpassed by the far-famed reputation of Annapolis and King's county valleys, nor in any part of Canada ?

The interior also possesses rich productive gold mines, notably the Libby, Maliga and numerous others, as well as other mineral deposits, as also valuable timber of hard and soft wood, stretching from the confines of Halifax and Lunenburg counties in the east to Shelburne in the west, all awaiting railway facilities to reach a market. This country, rich as I have described in natural resources and other advantages, should be considered in the location of this road, more particularly as the right of way can be had 'without money and without price,' as we all have agreed to give the lands required for the road without charge, whereas by the shore road a tax will be exacted. As to the cost of construction of the road through the interior, as compared with the shore route, I feel safe in saying, as I have been advised, that there is a difference of 40 per cent in favour of the interior, as the interior has only brooks instead of rivers to cross, and the country moderately undulating, or almost a level, with few cuttings, and that alluvial, and a straight route with little expense for bridging, as the bridges would be little better than culverts, as the streams are light. Whilst the shore route would require heavy bridging, precipitous cross hills to overcome, which means moving around them, thereby necessitating a more expensive, circuitous, and necessarily a longer route.

Now, Mr. Speaker, after this brief review of the situation, as to the location of the proposed interior route, as compared with the shore route, you will permit me to state that I am familiar with the geography of the counties through which this proposed road will pass, and the locations of the two proposed routes, so far as projected surveys have been made, and the rich and varied resources and advantages of the interior route as compared with the other, and possessing this knowledge, I feel it my duty to give it to the country and the public free of any personal or political bias. My view as to route is as follows : Start from the city of Halifax at a convenient point for passenger and freight traffic, and from thence on a line as straight as possible for the head waters of St. Margaret's Bay and Hubert's Cove, and thence for Chester, Chester Basin, and Gold River, thence following the valley of said Gold River, which is all but a straight line, as far as New Ross, thence straight for Shelburne via Foster Settlement, New Germany, Ohio, Hempford, Pleasant River, North Brookfield, South Brookfield, Caledonia and Indian Gardens—Shelburne having a harbour second to none in the world for depth of water, easy of approach by night or day, on the shore of the blue waters of the Atlantic, with no tortuous waters, such as we encounter on the Bay of Fundy, and a harbour of refuge not to be excelled. This road would form the main artery, or trunk line from Halifax to Shelburne, and an international road as well, as by a line of steamers from Shelburne to Boston, or New York, it would be the shorter route by five hours, and the most delightful of any of the routes at present travelled.

By this route Hubert's Cove and Chester, the favourite resort for tourists, Chester Basin, New Ross, and the other places I have named, will have direct communication with either Halifax or Shelburne, they being on the main artery or belt lines, and from this belt line, branches will run to Liverpool and Lockeport, Bridgewater, Mahone Bay and Lunenburg, being provided for already, thus practically making each town on the shore the terminus of a railway line, and receiving the products and traffic of each branch, as also a part of the main trunk. By this method the interior of the country with its resources, will be developed, and through it encourage a population five times that we possess at present.

As the road between New Germany and Caledonia is well on towards completion, with a heavy cut stone bridge across the La Have River, now built, the heaviest on the route, with other bridges and culverts either placed in position or the cut stone and material on the grounds to build them, sleepers piled up along the beach sufficient to lay the entire road between Caledonia and New Germany, road-bed all but completed for the laying of the rails, I would therefore ask that this portion of the road be cared for at once, so that the sleepers, tending to decay, may be utilized, as a very small outlay would be called for to complete this entire section.

There is one special feature I desire to present most forcibly to the attention of the government, and that is that the local government be advised as well as themselves of the necessity and justice for the payment of back bills due to workmen and traders for labour performed, and material furnished, including sleepers, in the construction of the road between New Germany and Caledonia; that every dollar of these bills be paid, before an appropriation is made for any other purpose, as the value of the road at present is the labour that has been put into it by the workmen, and those who supplied them, and as a consequence should first be paid.

As this portion of road is so near completion, I would ask when are the contractors intending to commence work, and will the work be submitted to tender ?

I would also ask if it is the intention of the government to have the entire road between Halifax and Shelburne definitely located by survey, before any portion of construction begins ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The subject of railway extension from the city of Halifax along the south shore of Nova Scotia, or through the south-western counties of Nova Scotia, has long occupied the attention of the government, and I am glad to say that during the last year or two the matter has taken a much more satisfactory shape than in former years. By the co-operation of the local and Dominion governments—I put the local government first, because they are bearing the heavier end of the burden—an arrangement has been made which I feel assured will give the people of that section of the country, at a very early date, the railway construction which they have so long desired.

Mr. KAULBACH. Hear, hear. I quite endorse that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As to the question of the rival routes—that is to say, the interior route and the shore route—I am afraid that I shall not be able to agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) as fully as he could desire. We gave a contract for a large portion of the railway by the interior route to a company, which failed to construct it, and we now find that the workmen who are employed on that construction are clamouring to be paid. The people interested in that interior route have had their opportunity, and unfortunately the enterprise has failed. The probability is now that the new company which takes hold of the enterprise will not build the interior route as it was originally contemplated, but will build the shore route from Halifax to Shelburne, and on to Barrington Passage, from which a road is now constructed to Yarmouth. However, a portion of the interior route has been constructed, the line starting from the village of New Germany, and running as far as the village of Caledonia Corner, in the county of Queen's. It is a fact that that portion of the road is far advanced ; it is in a condition that the expenditure of a very moderate amount of money would bring it up to the point where it could be operated. But, the bills remain unpaid. It is our strongest desire in dealing with a new company that we should bring about some arrangement whereby these bills can be paid, but we cannot expect any new contractor to pay any bills unless he gets value for them. If the value is there it will be our endeavour to use that value to pay the people who performed the work, and we will do our utmost in that direction. But. I think I must qualify that statement by saying that if there is no value to be got out of that portion of the road, I do not see how we can expect a new contractor to pay for anything he is not getting, but where he will get value, it is only right that he shall pay the money to the people whose time and energy and skill went into the work, and we shall do our utmost to see that these bills shall be paid. I anticipate that that portion of the road, although it will not form part of the main line from Halifax to Yarmouth, will be completed at a very early date. I do not like to speak too confidently in a railway matter, because difficulties frequently occur, but I am in hope that before the present calendar year ends the twenty odd miles between New Germany and Caledonia Corner will be completed, and will be in operation, and I am in hope that it will ultimately bs extended down as far as Liverpool. That is a matter for future consideration, and I can say nothing further about it. As to the general location, I have already stated that I believe the shore route will be preferred for several reasons. The first reason I have already given, and it is that the company which undertook to carry out the work in the interior route did not carry out the work. We have a company offering to build the shore route, and we have no company offering to build the interior route. Besides that, the local government, who have borne the heavy end of the burden, have undertaken to make an arrangement for the construction of that road, which they have made with no other company in Nova Scotia. They propose that they shall aid the company by loaning them in cash $13,200 a mile for the whole road. That aid is granted on the understanding that the line shall follow what is generally called the shore route. Of course that will have to be so located as to meet the various districts along the shore as far as possible. While we are entitled, under the terms of our contract, to reserve the right to approve of the location, still, the government realize that the local government are bearing the heavy end of the burden, and that their views ought to have very great consideration—and they will have. So much for the general question. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) asks whether we shall approve of any part of the location before any work is commenced, or whether we shall require the whole of the location to be decided before the work proceeds. There are portions of the road as to which there is no question about the location, and if the company shall begin work immediately upon those portions we shall be very well satisfied, but I do not anticipate very much delay in the road being located. There is only a small portion of the road in regard to which there will be very much difficulty about the location. The general subsidy Act contains a provision which requires that these locations shall be subject to the approval of the Governor General in Council, and that approval must be applied for. As the local government are bearing the heavy burden in the matter, we are disposed to defer very largely to their views in regard to the location, not giving the matter up entirely, but still meeting them in every way possible, in order that this long delayed work may be carried out. As to the way in which the work is to be done, whether by tender or not, my hon. friend must see that as the work is to be done by a company and not by the government we have no right to dictate to them in that respect at all. They will make the best arrangement they can, and if they can make a better arrangement by tender than in any other way you may rely upon it that they will make it by tender ; but this is a matter for the company to do what they think proper, and one in regard to which we cannot lay down any terms.

RESTIGOUCHE BRIDGE.

Mr. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure). Mr. Speaker, I received a communication this morning from my county, dealing with item 122 in the main estimates for railways and canals chargeable to capital.

New superstructure for Restigouche Bridge, $102,000.

This new Intercolonial Railway bridge, which is about to be constructed, runs over the Restigouche river between the counties of Restigouche, N.B., and Bonaventure, Quebec. This is a federal undertaking, and it is one of an interprovincial character. I am sorry that the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. Reid) is not in his seat at the present time, because the people of both counties are anxious to know if, when we are expending this money, provision cannot be made also for ordinary traffic passing over the bridge. There is no communication between the two counties at that point at the present time. Communication is very difficult, and it is twelve miles lower down, where the river is a tidal river. In view of the fact that we are going to spend this money, I would like to ask whether a change cannot be made in the plan, so as to provide for ordinary traffic passing over the river. I regret that I have brought this matter up so late, but the matter was only called to my attention a short time ago. I hope that the matter will be carefully considered, and that the government will see its way clear to grant this request.

TAXATION OF CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LANDS.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, I would crave the indulgence of the House for a moment to make a suggestion in regard to a subject brought up by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), namely, the taxation of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands, and the proposed test case which is to be instituted. I may say that this matter is of more direct interest to the school districts and municipalities in the localities affected than to this parliament, as the school revenues, the municipal revenues, the provincial revenues, and in the case of the North-west, the territorial revenues are very closely related to it. The suggestion that I wish to make is that the Attorney General of the North-west Territories, and the Attorney General of Manitoba, shall be allowed to be associated with the Justice Department in the prosecution of this action which was to be taken, and in the preparation of the case.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Ways and Means.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It becomes necessary that we should adopt certain resolutions in the Committee of Ways and Means to give effect to the estimates, and I therefore move :

Resolved, that towards making good a supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending June 30, 1902, the sum of $5,866,-922.56 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Resolution agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I now make a similar motion with regard to the year 1903. A considerable portion of the expenditure which is dealt with in the House is governed by statute, and we only have to vote specifically the remainder, so that the total sum here does not represent the total expenditure, but only that which we are required formally to vote. I move :

Resolved, that towards making good a supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending June 30, 1903, the sum of $38,271,-129.68 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Resolution agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think we forgot to strike out certain items which should have been struck out in regard to civil government.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think there were one or two cases, but we will have to ask my hon. friend to accept assurance that in no case was it intended there would be a duplication of the officers, but merely that the promotion should be made or the increased salary paid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That intention will be carried out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is another matter which escaped my attention until this moment. The Minister of Justice promised he would make a statement with regard to the test case between the government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, in reference to the taxation of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands in the North-west. Perhaps the Minister of Justice made the statement when I was not present, but I have not noticed it in Hansard.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We had it this morning.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was here this morning, but the Minister of Justice was not here, and therefore he could not make the statement to which I refer. On one occasion when a Bill was passing through the Commons the Minister of Justice promised that he would make a statement with regard to the test case between the government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and at the request of the Minister of Justice the matter was postponed upon the understanding that we would make a statement when his estimates were being considered, setting forth the position of that matter. I do not think that statement has been made.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It has not. The member for Alberta brought up the question this morning, and I explained that the matter was under consideration between my department and the Department of Justice, but I was not in a position to say positively what exactly was the legal position the government would take. That was the point which the Minister of Justice was to make clear, and I presume it escaped his attention.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is to be regretted that the statement was not made, because when we let business pass on the understanding that certain statements will be made at a future date, we rely implicitly on that promise being carried out. I have no doubt that the Minister of Justice spoke in the most perfect good faith, and I am not imputing anything to the contrary. What I am suggesting is, that understandings of that kind should so impress themselves upon the minister that they should not be overlooked and the session pass away without the opposition obtaining the information which it could have insisted on at the time, except for the understanding.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am satisfied that it was forgetfulness on the part of the Minister of Justice, because I know that he had a statement prepared.

Mr. SCOTT. I fear that the minister did not hear the suggestion I made a moment ago, which was that the Attorney General of Manitoba and the Attorney General of the Territories be allowed to be associated with the Justice Department in the preparation of this case and in the prosecution of the case. I make this suggestion for the reason that Manitoba and the North-west Territories are more directly interested in this matter than is the Dominion. The school districts and the municipalities are chiefly interested, and school revenues and municipal revenues are intimately related to provincial revenues. I think it would be wise to have the law officers of the provinces of Manitoba and the Territories associated with the Minister of Justice in the matter.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will see that the attention of the Minister of Justice is directed to the suggestion of my hon. friend, but of course I cannot say what view he will take.

Mr. BOYD. The Minister of the Interior says that a statement has been prepared, and if so, the Minister of Justice can present it at three o'clock.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Justice is out of town.

Mr. OLIVER. I would like to urge on the government the adoption of the suggestion of the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). As the case stands now, there is on one hand a party who is deeply interested, and on the other a party which is not directly interested at all. The Dominion parliament has no direct interest in enforcing taxation upon these lands, whereas the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has every interest to prevent that taxation as far as possible. It is the provincial government and the territorial government which has a direct interest in enforcing the taxation, and it is only fair that the parties who have that direct interest should have a part in the preparation of the case and in the conduct of the case. It may not be giving the case away, but it certainly is not taking the strongest ground to protect the interest of the people concerned, if through their governments they have not an opportunity to take part in the preparation of the case and its conduct before the courts.

Mr. BROCK. I do not doubt at all the interest which Manitoba and the North-west Territories have in this case, but the Dominion government ought to be very careful not to create a precedent in this matter that might cause great difficulties in time to come. The Dominion government should be very careful before giving away their prerogative in a matter of this kind.

Mr. BOYD. I do not think the government needs to be warned, because they have taken abundant time in regard to this matter. In fact, if I mistake not, they have had time since they came into power, and the government before them had time, to consider that question, and I do not think we can be said to be at all hurrying the government to take it up when we say that the time has come when, in the interest of Manitoba and the North-west Territories and of all the people living there, we should know exactly where we stand in regard to that matter.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no fault to find with the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd). He will of course understand that it was only at the expiration of the year 1901 that this question came up for consideration.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second time and agreed to.

SUPPLY BILL.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 168) for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial years ending respectively June 30, 1902, and June 30, 1903. He said: In presenting this Bill I desire to say, just in a single sentence, what I am sure will be gratifying to the whole House, that since the budget speech was delivered two months ago the conditions of our revenue have proved to be so very favourable that I am satisfied that the outcome of this year will be considerably better than I then ventured to predict. We shall have a larger surplus and a smaller addition to the public debt.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

INSPECTION OF COAL OIL.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, at an earlier stage of the session I addressed a question to the government relating to the Department of Inland Revenue; and as I see the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue present, I would like to ask what decision has been reached by his department as to the means to be taken to prevent a recurrence of the distribution of coal oil of low illuminating power throughout Manitoba and the North-west, such as occurred during the past winter.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier). When my main estimates were before the House, that question of coal oil was brought up, and I promised then that I would investigate the matter and report to the House later on. In order to make the matter more clear, I will read to the House a report or memorandum which was prepared on that subject, giving the whole story:

(Memo.)

Ottawa, April 28, 1902.

At the end of December, 1901, the attention of the department was called, through the Hon. the Minister of the Interior, to complaints made in the North-west as to the inferior quality of coal oil.

On December 30, the Hon. Mr. Sifton was informed that if a sample of the oil complained of was forwarded to the department, a chemical analysis thereof would be made.

On the 10th January, 1902, two samples were received and submitted to the Chief Analyst for examination.

On the 7th January the Chief Analyst reported that from Mr. McGill's investigation it did not appear that the samples were of inferior quality. Both samples stood the tests provided by the Petroleum Inspection Act. The incrustation on the wick as well as the deposit on chimney, by burning in an ordinary lamp, was normal.

On January 18, Collector Alexander, of London, was instructed to visit the refinery at Sarnia and personally select several samples from the stock of refined petroleum on hand, said samples to represent the highest, lowest and medium grades.

These samples were collected by Mr. Alexander from barrels ready for shipment, and represented all the grades, except high test oils, put upon the Canadian market by the Imperial Oil Company.

On January 24, Inspector Barrett was advised of the reports that had reached the department relative to alleged bad quality of coal oil, and was requested to instruct the officers throughout his district to make a systematic inspection of oil in the hands of dealers.

Twenty-two (22) samples were collected in Winnipeg and St. Boniface, four (4) at Portage la Prairie, six (6) at Brandon, four (4) at Moosomin, one (1) at Prince Albert, three (3) at Regina, two (2) at Moosejaw, one (1) at Souris, two (2) at Deloraine, three (3) at Boissevain, two (2) at Killarney, two (2) at Manitou, three (3) at Morden, two (2) at Morris, three (3) at Pincher Creek, three (3) at Macleod, two (2) at Lethbridge, five (5) at Calgary, four (4) at Edmonton, one (1) at Strathcona.

In all seventy-five (75) samples were collected and tested, and in every instance the sample was found to stand the flash-test and to be within the gravity established by the Act.

The collector at Winnipeg reported nine (9) samples as complained of by dealers. These samples were submitted to District Analyst E. B. Kenrick for chemical examination. The result of Mr. Kenrick's investigations failed to establish that any of the samples were of objectionable quality. In addition to the chemical analysis, oil from each of the nine (9) objectionable samples was burned in an ordinary lamp for six (6) hours and not noticeable incrustation was found upon the wick nor fouling upon the chimney. Mr. Collector Gosnel, of Winnipeg, reports that he personally burned oil from these nine (9) samples and found them all to burn well except a sample obtained from Mr. Geo. Wheeler, of Winnipeg, which for seven (7) or eight (8) hours gave a good light, then became dull and practically went out. After removal of the incrustation upon the wick the lamp was again lighted and burned satisfactorily. This sample, as reported on by Mr. Kenrick, was found to contain a much larger proportion of fixed residue than any of the other samples examined, the percentage being ·33, as compared with an average of ·061 in the remaining eight (8) samples. The oil represented by those nine (9) samples was believed to be all of American manufacture.

The three (3) samples of Canadian oil collected at the refinery at Sarnia and examined by Mr. McGill at the laboratory in Ottawa show that they are good oils, although the more delicate instrument used by Mr. McGill showed the gravity of the ·805 oil to be ·8063. Mr. McGill reports that neither the deposits on the lamp chimney nor the incrustation of the wick were sufficient to sustain serious complaint against them.

A fact apparent by the examinations made by both Messrs. McGill and Kenrick was that the oils of heavy gravity contained the largest percentage of sulphur. In the Canadian samples this ranged from ·03893 in the oil of ·797 gravity to ·07655 in that of the gravity of ·805. In the sample examined by Mr. Kenrick it ranged from ·0221 in an oil of a gravity of ·7921 to ·0365 in an oil of a gravity of ·8039. In none of these cases is the percentage of sulphur as large as that permitted by law to be found in ordinary coal gas, viz., 35 grains per 100 cubic feet or, computed as in the coal, oil ·147.

Any attempt made to reduce the range of gravities as now established by the Act, viz., ·775 to ·805 would add to the cost of production and give the oil refiners a reasonable excuse for increasing the cost to the consumer.

So far as it was possible to ascertain, the trouble arose in connection with a lot of oil placed in storage tank No. 2 at Fort William in July, 1901. This oil was discharged from tank barge No. 36, shipped by the Standard Oil Company, Chicago, and consigned to the Imperial Oil Company, Fort William.

This storage tank holds 10,000 barrels of oil. Mr. Inspector Barrett reports that 9,000 barrels drawn out of this tank gave perfect satisfaction but the remaining oil, taken from the bottom of the tank, did not give satisfactory results.

Mr. Barrett further reports that as soon as the Imperial Oil Company learned that complaints were made they examined the oil and found that it was unsatisfactory, inasmuch as the wick clogged after burning for a time and caused a diminution of the flame. They at once recalled the oil and paid freight both ways.

At the request of Mr. F. Oliver, M.P., further inquiries were made at Lethbridge where it was alleged serious complaints had been made. Mr. Acting-Collector Saucier advises the department under date, April 24, 1902, that he called upon the following dealers, viz. : A. McDonald & Co., H. Bentley, Hudson Bay Company, Brodie & Stafford, Sherlock & Freeman and Wm. Scott.

Of the above, A. McDonald & Co. state bad oil was first noticed in October ; H. Bentley had no complaints ; Hudson Bay Company had a few complaints ; Brodie & Stafford had no complaints ; Sherlock & Freeman had received complaints in October or November and some bad oil was returned to them in December, and Wm. Scott had complaints continuously from September, 1901, to February, 1902.

The Acting Collector states that there was probably not more than one consignment of inferior oil last October and that it was on the market from the middle of October to some time in December.

In conclusion, the department is of the opinion from the reports received that a quantity of inferior oil was put upon the market late in the autumn, that as soon as the Imperial Oil Company were advised of the fact that the oil was not giving satisfaction it was recalled at the company's expense, that in all probability this inferior quality of oil was not on sale for a longer period than three months, that with the exception of this one consignment the oil supplied has given satisfaction, and that for some months past no complaints have arisen.

Attached hereto are copies of the results obtained by Messrs. McGill and Kenrick.

It will be seen, therefore, from the reports and the correspondence attached, that as soon as complaints reached the department, we did our best to collect the oil in the North-west Territories and Manitoba, and subject it to an analysis, the reports of which are contained in this return.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish the hon. minister to assume——

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no motion before the Chair.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think there will be no objection taken to the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) speaking.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member might put himself in order by making a motion.

Mr. OLIVER. I move the adjournment of the House. I do not wish the hon. minister to assume, as he apparently does assume, that there was any desire to attack his department or the administration of it. But a certain condition of affairs existed, and it was felt to be in the best interest of the country as of the government that the facts should be made known, with a view to finding a remedy for that condition at the earliest possible moment. I am willing to accept the statement of the hon. minister that every effort was made by the department to arrive at a knowledge of the facts, but I am compelled to call attention to this, that the efforts made by the department through its officers were not as successful as they should have been. The hon. minister has read us a statement of the reports of his officer that would indicate that there was no bad oil sold in Manitoba or the North-west Territories last winter. But after reading the result of these official reports, the hon. minister makes a statement from another and a higher officer who admits that at least a thousand barrels, or was it gallons ?——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Barrels.

Mr. OLIVER. A thousand barrels of inferior oil were put upon the market.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There was ten thousand barrels of oil in the one tank. Of this, nine thousand barrels gave satisfaction, but the residue of one thousand barrels did not.

Mr. OLIVER. Then one thousand barrels of inferior oil were put upon the market of Manitoba and the North-west Territories last fall, and consumers were supplied with inferior oil during a period of three months. And yet the officers who were sent out into Manitoba and the North-west Territories to examine the samples of oil were not able to —did not, as a matter of fact—locate that bad oil. I am not blaming either the minister for his intentions, nor his officers, but I point out this, as I did in my remarks when the question was under discussion before, that the present tests for flash and gravity do not determine the illuminating power of the oil. That, I claim, is unquestionably established by the report we have had placed before us to-day. And I again call upon the hon. minister to provide in some way for some test of the oil as to its illuminating qualities. It is not as to its flash or as to its gravity that we want to know in regard to this oil ; what we want to know is whether it will give light. And, if it is a fact, as it appears to be, that the present tests do not enable the officers to judge of the illuminating quality of the oil, then we must urge upon the minister, for our own protection and for his credit, to secure such expert ability as may be possible to provide a test that will determine whether the oil will give light or not. The facts are as he stated, that, for three months during the darkest part of last winter, the oil supplied throughout Manitoba and the North-west was of inferior illuminating powers. Whether it would stand the flash test or the gravity test is of no interest to the public. The fact is it would not stand the practical test of illumination, and we want such a test applied as will ensure that when we pay for oil we shall get light. Now, the assertion is made that the company withdrew the bad oil and paid the freight both ways. I am not in the oil business, but I am perfectly satisfied that that statement is not universally correct. What may have been done in some parts of the country I do not know, but I am perfectly satisfied that, so far as the town in which I live is concerned, the company certainly did not withdraw the oil or pay the freight both ways.

Mr. BOYD. Let me merely call attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that here, within twenty minutes of the close of the session, this question, the most important to the people of Manitoba and the North-west, except the transportation question, is brought up. The people of that country were to a very large extent in the dark last winter ; but here at this last moment of the session we have some light thrown on this subject. It will be most gratifying to the people of Manitoba and the North-west Territories to find at last they have this light. And the intimation is given us that we do not know anything about it. When we buy bad oil and that oil will not give light, it will be most consoling to know that we do not understand the ' gravity ' and the ' flash ' and all that business that the scientists of the department are so familiar with. The local conditions are such that we do not understand these things. But next winter, or some future time when the lamps will not burn, when the oil only blackens the glass, and sticks in the wick, we shall be able to send for some of these officers so that they may enlighten us with the explanation of the ' gravity ' and ' flash.' Or it will afford us delight to send for the Minister of Inland Revenue himself to come up. But I wish to warn him that if he comes up with the great document he has read us today and undertakes to read it, he will not be able to do so.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Why not ?

Mr. BOYD. Because there will not be light enough—unless he should do as he has done to-day, bring his report in in the middle of the day, when he will not need lamp light. The hon. minister tells us that his officers did not find any of this bad oil. And how could they, when, according to the hon. minister the bad oil had all been brought back ? This oil was taken into the country in October, and it was not until January that any practical move was made by the Department of Inland Revenue. The result of it was, to use the hon. minister's own words, 'they recalled the oil and paid the freight both ways.' Then, after the oil had been recalled, the officers of the department were sent out, and, strangely enough, they were not able to find any of the bad oil in the country.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me a second ?

Mr. BOYD. Certainly, a whole minute.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I merely desire to repeat that the first intimation that the department had was received from the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) in December, and it was acted upon at once. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyd) knew the facts. If he had given us information of the facts earlier, we certainly would have taken action earlier.

Mr. BOYD. Why, the facts were published broadcast in the press and discussed everywhere. And, in the first place, it was the fault of the officers of the Minister of Customs that the oil was allowed to come into the country. If it was necessary, in order to rectify their error, to notify the Department of Inland Revenue, why did they not do so ? But no, the information must come from a member of parliament and be communicated to the Minister of the Interior, and so be passed on up to the Department of Inland Revenue. I say it does not lie in the mouth of the Minister of Inland Revenue or of the Minister of Customs, as at this late hour particularly, to make the excuses they have made. They need not think for a moment that these excuses will be accepted by the people of Manitoba and the North-west. When this subject was under discussion before, I quoted the Act to show that it had been changed. These hon. gentlemen said that it had not been changed. But, if so, what is the explanation of the fact that the officers of the Customs Department did permit ten thousand barrels of bad oil to come into the country ? Was the oil inspected, or was it not ? It is evident, from the facts laid before the House by the Minister of Inland Revenue, that the department did not inspect it. After the oil was found to be bad, they recalled the oil. Seventy-five cases of that oil is found, and it is all right. I have just this to say, that it will take a great deal more than the statement that is read by the Minister of Inland Revenue at this late moment of the session, to convince the people of Manitoba that the government has taken that care they should have taken in regard to this matter.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. So far as the Department of Customs is concerned, the hon. gentleman should not say that the oil was not inspected. I informed the House that it was inspected. If it was not inspected, how does the hon. gentleman know that a personal test would not be effective? That shows the weakness of his objection. I say it was inspected.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would ask the hon. gentleman, if it was inspected, of what good is his inspection ? The oil was no good, and if it was inspected he is in a worse position than when he started out.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If it is necessary, and that seems to be the idea of some hon. gentlemen here, that there should be new tests applied, that is a fair question for consideration. It is to be remembered, however, as the Minister of Inland Revenue tells us, I suppose from information in his possession, that if the test is altered and a stronger test required, either in the gravity or the flash, the probability is that you will have to pay an increased price for oil. The question is whether, on account of one misshipment you would be willing that a test should be applied that will raise the price of oil used by the people of that country for all time to come. That is the question for these gentlemen to consider. Perhaps the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane), who seems to understand the question so thoroughly, would give us his advice on that point.

Mr. COCHRANE. I would be very happy to do so if I thought the minister would accept my advice. In our section of the country, I want to tell the hon. gentleman that we have not been so long in the darkness as he thinks we have. It is evident enough to my mind that if the test is all right the hon. gentleman's officers are not all right. If the test is all right his inspectors do not know their business any more than the hon. gentleman knows his own business. We import oil in our section of the country, the officers of the Customs Department test the oil, and we never have any complaint. It occurs to me that the people might well pay a little more for their oil and have some more light than to pay what they do and sit in darkness. They are paying for oil that has no illuminating qualities at all. I think this is a serious matter, although we may treat it lightly, that the inhabitants of Manitoba should be paying for oil, when the officials of the department are not doing their duty. If they are doing their duty, the test they make is of no use.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. This oil is American oil, brought in in tank vessels, and the Minister of Inland Revenue says that his officers simply have to test the oil for gravity and flashing point. It comes in through the customs, and our officers have been furnished with the necessary instruments for determining the gravity and the flash test according to the regulations laid down by the Inland Revenue Department. When the subject came up I made inquiry, and I was informed by the Commissioner that he had received from our officer a report, giving the actual test which he had taken. That convinced me that he had made the test. Now, this is what we have to consider. A mistake has occurred; it may occur again. There must have been many shipments going on. You can conceive of nothing much more irritating and annoying for people living in the country and having to illuminate their dwellings, than that they should find the oil unsatisfactory. But the point I want to ascertain is whether hon. gentlemen wish the test altered and made stronger, as a result of which the price of oil would be increased.

Motion withdrawn.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

House resumed at 2.45 p.m.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Taylor. Speech.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). When you left the Chair at one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, we were discussing the coal oil question, but inasmuch as there was no one speaking when I entered the Chamber I do not know whether this is a motion to adjourn or not.

Some hon. MEMBERS. To prorogue.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am glad to see that the messenger which has been sent to the Upper Chamber has returned in the person of my colleague (Mr. Calvert) the chief whip of the government. I can sympathize with that hon. gentleman very much because I occupied the position of chief government whip for a good many years. I know the troubles that the hon. member (Mr. Calvert) has in keeping his party in order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Other hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. TAYLOR. I know there are more kickers in that party now than there were even when the Minister of Marine was its Liberal whip. As for myself, I have a pretty easy time of it in opposition. There are no kickers over here, and no dissensions. However that may be, I think the goverument and their supporters will give us credit for having fought a manly battle during this session and although we have criticised the government we have not criticised them nearly as much as they deserve. But on this side of the House we are anxious to get home to drive the Grit party from power in Ontario, which we hope to do two weeks from to-day.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. TAYLOR. I hope my colleague the chief government whip will entertain you for a few minutes by telling you all the troubles he has had in keeping his party in order.

Mr. W. S. CALVERT (Middlesex). Mr. Speaker. This is entirely unexpected. So far as I am concerned, I have been one of the silent members of the House pretty nearly the whole session. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) that my duties as chief whip of the government party have been extremely light, because there are no kickers at all over here. We have not a single kicker in the whole party.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Other hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CALVERT. It has been the greatest pleasure to me to work with my fellow-members on this side of the House, and I can add that I have had not the slightest trouble with my good friend the chief whip of the opposition (Mr. Taylor). I have not had as hard a time as he had when he was chief government whip. My associations with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) have been most pleasant. We have trusted each other implicitly, and when the chief whip of the oppposition gave me his word I took it for granted that it would be carried out, and it has been carried out in every case. I have to thank my good friends on both sides of the House for their courtesy and kindness to me during the past session. Whatever the Liberal members were asked to do they did it willingly.

An hon. MEMBER. Right or wrong.

Mr. CALVERT. I cannot say right or wrong, because we have always been right.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Other hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Speech. Jabel Robinson.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). Mr. Speaker, I cannot say much——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. ROBINSON. I cannot say much in favour of the whip of the Independent party, because if I did I would have to sound my own praises——

An hon. MEMBER. Tell us about your leader.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). If you consider that I have a leader, I might be able to say a few words with regard to his conduct. But most hon. members understand the position of an independent member perhaps as well as I do. I only say that since I have been a member of this House I have endeavoured, as far as my ability would allow, to discharge my duties. I have no favourites in the House. There is nobody that I call my master. I do not know any man as master. I do my own thinking, and I vote as I please. However, I am much pleased to know that this assembly is about to disperse with the happiest feelings, and I trust that all of us will go home feeling the better for this session, and ready to discharge our duties faithfully at home—much more faithfully than some of us have done here.

PROROGATION.

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these Bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General, as follows :—

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY :

The Commons of Canada have voted the Supplies required to enable the government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill :—

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial years ending respectively June 30, 1902, and June 30, 1903.

to which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Clerk of the Senate, by His Excellency's command, did thereupon say :—

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks His Loyal Subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the second session of the ninth parliament of the Dominion with the following

SPEECH.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In relieving you from further attendance in Parliament, I desire to thank you for the care and attention given to your important duties.

The unusual number of Acts that have been passed incorporating industrial and railway companies may be taken as an evidence of the rapid progress that Canada is making in wealth and prosperity. Further proof of that satisfactory condition is afforded by the increase in the trade and revenue of the country.

It has been gratifying to note the unprecedented flow of immigrants from Europe and from the United States that are now seeking homes in Manitoba and in the North-west Territories. The rapidly increasing population in that fertile section of the Dominion must yearly add to the trade of the country.

The agreement entered into with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, when authorizing an increase of its capital, to expend over nine million dollars in providing additional rolling stock, will, it is hoped, materially diminish in the future the serious losses that have arisen from the insufficient supply of cars to carry the products of the west to eastern ports.

The amendments made to the Manitoba Grain Act authorizing the farmers in Manitoba and in the North-west Territories to erect flat warehouses for storing their grain at railway stations will, it is believed, be found to serve a useful purpose, and defeat any attempt to depress prices by combinations.

The growing population in the Yukon territory and the rapid development in the trade of that section of Canada amply justify the Act granting to its residents a representative in Parliament who will be authorized to speak for his constituency in all matters affecting the more important interests of that remote part of the Dominion.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I thank you in His Majesty's name for the liberal supplies you have granted for the public service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In bidding you farewell, I desire to express the hope that when we meet next year we shall be able to again rejoice in the continued prosperity which now prevails over this wide Dominion.

The SPEAKER of the Senate then said:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

It is HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued until Tuesday, the twenty-fourth day of June next, to be here holden, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until the twenty-fourth day of June next.
