I had very strong reasons to assume it, and I know that there are many members of this House who believe such to be the case, and that the construction of this road was delayed because the Crow's Nest people desire to press their coal on Calgary. Another reason I advanced against the adopting of the preamble was the policy of the government. I understood from the minister that it is now the policy of this government that no further land grants to railways will be given in the North-west Territories, and I believe it only fair that all railway companies should be dealt with on the same basis and that this land grant having lapsed, it should not be given to this company and refused to others. I thought as a matter of justice that that was the proper way to view the case. I do not think I misled the committee. I think these arguments were all reasonable and fair and I am quite sure that when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Russell) reviews what I said he will withdraw his charge. I did also state that practically the $50,000 was no guarantee at all for the reasons stated by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). I agree with the policy laid down by the chairman of the Railway Committee, that a Bill should not be referred back unless some new evidence is before the House which did not appear before the committee. We have no new evidence before the House today. We are told by the member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) that the promoter of the Bill was not present. Is it to be supposed that 160 or 170 members are to be forced to await the convenience of the promoter of a Bill if he is not present. There were two legal gentlemen there to represent the promoters, and I think they did fairly well. They did everything that could be expected from solicitors, except perhaps to tell us who the real owners of this charter were. It is alleged also that the votes of two members who were not present when the question was put were not counted. Well, there were about 100 other members who were not present when the question was put, and if we are going to take into consideration the votes of these two, we have just as much right to consider the votes of the other one hundred. The request to refer this Bill back is unreasonable. We must abide by the decision of those who were present and heard the question put. How do we know that these men actually knew what question was being put. They were outside the room, and for that matter another order than this one might have been the question on which the vote was being taken. They were fair and straightforward when the question was asked them, if they were present when the question was put and they said no; and we followed the rule adopted in this House, and their votes were struck off. I think the chairman of the Railway Committee was perfectly right, and I am sure the committee upheld him; and it would be rather a censure upon him to-day were we to reverse his decision and declare that the Bill should be sent back. I have nothing further to say in this matter. I hold the same views that I held in the Railway Committee.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I feel constrained to say a word or two on this question by reason of what has fallen from my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) with reference to the past and present policy of the government with reference to giving land grants by way of subsidies to railways. My hon. friend has merely said what I have heretofore stated, not once only, but on divers occasions, authorized by the government as a whole, that this government did not purpose to continue the policy which had obtained in previous years and under the late administration, of giving the settlement lands of the country by way of bonus to aid in the construction of railways. We have declared that policy, and we are determined to adhere to it; and I was unable to see, when this question was before the Railway Committee, and I cast my vote for the Bill, wherein I had deviated in the slightest as a member of the government from the position I had taken when I declared its policy in that regard. I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that this is to-day an existing contract, and that the company who are asking for an extension of time are an existing company and will continue to be an existing company for a year from the 1st of July next. I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that in time past, though it was 13 or 14 years ago, this company received from parliament a land grant in aid of their undertaking, and as an encouragement to them to carry it through. I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that not only on one or two or three occasions, but on six different occasions, parliament has revived that charter and has ratified and continued the land grant, and that the government has confirmed the Order in Council allocating the land when the road should be constructed. Is not this a totally different case from that of a new company coming to parliament and asking for a grant of land? I maintain that the two cases are as dissimilar as the two poles are asunder. We must recognize the binding character of the arrangement with this company in a moral and equitable sense, in a sense of fair-play and justice, if the company which is seeking the extension of time gives evidence that it is doing its best to carry out its undertaking. We are bound to remember that this company has had an assurance given to it by parliament; and if it is able to convince parliament that it is now in a position to carry this undertaking out, no man can truly say that it is a new departure to continue the charter, as it has already been continued from time to time. I therefore beg to assure my hon. friend that he can with safety go back to the people he represents and tell them that although we have continued this arrangement, we are simply carrying out the policy which parliament has always considered itself bound to carry out in a spirit of justice and equity—an arrangement made years ago, and ratified from time to time since.

Touching the question, then, with which this committee has to deal, I take it that it is within a very narrow compass—nay, in a nutshell; and what is it? Has any sufficient cause been made to appear why this Bill should be sent back to the committee for further consideration? That is a question about which all of us, I think, in times past, I among the number, have held very strong views—that unless a clear case were made out, in which some injustice had been done, some withholding of the facts or misleading of the committee had taken place, or unless it appeared that the action of the committee was not really the action which the committee intended to take, we ought to regard the report which they lay on the Table as a final report, and sustain it. Are the circumstances which exist in the present case of such a character as to bring this Bill within the exceptions? I am bound to say that, in my opinion, it does come within one of the exceptions, and I will tell you why. There was a rule enforced—I will not say improperly—in the Railway Committee in respect to taking the vote which was never done before since I have been a member of this parliament. An exception was taken to the recording of the votes of two or three gentlemen which I never heard taken before in any meeting of that committee. Gentlemen who, to my own personal knowledge, had sat through the whole of the discussion, had listened to it, who had heard the same thing ad nauseam over and over again, and who happened to run out of the committee room just a moment or two before the vote was taken, found when they came back and voted, that they were strictly and technically subject to the enforcement of a rule which said that they ought to hear the motion put from the chair. Now, I want to ask the members of this House, who I believe are disposed to deal fairly in such a matter, is it treating the Bill or the parties interested in the Bill, fairly to rigidly enforce a rule in this case which has never been enforced before, which was not relied upon in any previous instance, and of which no member of the committee had really had any notice? The position seemed to me to be this. So far as the strict application of the rule which obtained in this House was concerned, it was a proper ruling on the part of the chairman. No person could say it was not. But we know that in the House members who have heard the discussion and are thoroughly familiar with the question, and have their minds made up, are notified of the time for the vote by the ringing of a bell if they are not in the chamber at the moment. We have not any such procedure in the Railway or any other Committee, and consequently gentlemen are placed at a great disadvantage if that rule is enforced. It has never been enforced before, but, time after time when the vote has been taken, gentlemen have come in at the last moment, and have participated in the vote and had their names recorded. That condition of things is exceptional, and justifies, to my mind, the return of this Bill to the Railway Committee.

My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) initiated the opposition to this Bill, led it very strongly, but just before the vote was taken what was the attitude of my hon. friend? It was that although he might be deviating somewhat from the wishes of his constituents, he was satisfied that his people would not seriously object to this charter being continued for another year, and he was prepared to support such an extension, but he would not listen to a proposal to allow an extension of fourteen months. He would not add two months to the time for construction. Until the very last moment, until he made his last speech—and my hon. friend made many forcible and argumentative speeches—his attitude was this. That this was a terrible business, that this grant of land was a most indefensible grant, that the company were not entitled to any consideration, that they had been for fourteen years dawdling with the matter, but yet if they would only complete the road within a year, he would be willing to grant them that extension, but would not grant an extension for two months longer.

Mr. OLIVER. I rise to a point of order. Has the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, the right to put words into my mouth, and to inform the House that these are what I have said.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has the right to contradict, if he is not quoted correctly, but any hon. member has the right to quote what has been said by a previous speaker, subject of course to correction, and if contradicted, he must accept the correction.

Mr. OLIVER. Under your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I will have to contradict the hon. gentleman.

Mr. LENNOX. I rise to a point of order. I understood you to have ruled, on a previous occasion, that what has transpired in a committee cannot be referred to in the House. If that be correct, the hon. Minister of Railways is not in order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member is mistaken. When there is no report before the House of what has been done in the committee, no allusion or reference can be made to what has taken place in that committee. But in this case, the committee has reported, and it is therefore perfectly in order to refer to what took place before it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can assure my hon. friend from Alberta that I would be very sorry to misrepresent his attitude before the committee, but I am not doing so. I am not pretending to give the precise language he used, but simply its reasonable purport as accurately as possible. My hon. friend's attitude, as is known to the large number of members who were present in the committee, was such as I have described it. He recognized the reasonableness and fairness of allowing this company a year from the 1st July, 1903, to complete its undertaking, with its land grant and all the enormities which are attached to that condition, but he would not allow the company an extension of two months longer. It appeared to me that so long as that was all the difference there really was between the people in Calgary, who have such large interests in this question, and the promoters of this Bill, it was not sufficiently important to warrant the committee in refusing the extension required, and I was prepared to give the further two months and the committee were prepared to do so. I do not think that a very large principle is involved in an extension of two months. I do not see any other company clamouring for the privilege of constructing this road. The people want it, and it seems to me that they would get it more quickly if we should adopt this Bill, than they would otherwise.

Mr. SPROULE. The people petitioned against it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend from Alberta, who represents the people of that locality, and who has consequently a more intimate knowledge of their state of mind, was convinced that they would be satisfied if a year's extension were given from the 1st of July next, but not if these extra two months were granted. The company, under its chartered powers to-day, is entitled to have until the 1st of July, 1903, to complete its undertaking. I do not know who the promoters are, or what are their means, and they may go on and succeed in completing the construction of the line by the 1st July, 1903. But there may be obstacles, they may not be able to secure sufficient iron early in the season, and consequently the majority of the committee were willing—for it was a majority until the two names were struck out—to give them extra time in order that they might be sure of preserving their rights and carrying out the undertaking.

I do not think it is fair to say that there was not the fullest discussion of the question in the committee, and I do not rest my judgment on that ground. I think that the committee were in full possession of all the facts, and I am sure that if the same procedure had been observed with reference to this Bill, as has been with reference to other Bills the Bill would have been carried and this motion to-day would not have been made.

Mr. OLIVER. Of course I have already spoken, but as there is a question of fact between myself and the hon. minister, if I am in order, I would like to have the opportunity of putting myself right.

Mr. SPEAKER. Question.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). I was present when this Bill was before the Railway Committee, and I voted as did the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). The position which my hon. friend took in the committee, I understood, was simply this. When the Bill was up in the first instance, it looked very much as if it were going to be passed. I understood the hon. member for Alberta to say that he was opposed to the preamble of the Bill, and if it came to a question of voting for the Bill he would oppose the preamble, but as an alternative he would agree to one year's extension of time.

The hon. Minister of Railways has found considerable fault with the ruling of the Chairman.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. INGRAM. He thought that the rule should not have been put into effect. Well, I approve of its being enforced. It may have worked hard in this particular case, but it will tend to prevent a practice which has often been resorted to. I know of instances when, just as the vote in the committee was about to be taken, hon. members were rushed in and called upon to vote, although they had not the first knowledge of the merits of the Bill before the committee nor the first idea of the nature of the discussion. By the decision in this instance, we have good ground for believing that in the future the Railway Committee will not be packed, just as the question is put, by persons who are interested in promoting the legislaton before it.

The hon. Minister of Railways has made rather a peculiar statement. He wants the people to understand that the government are opposed to giving large grants of land. But their conduct with regard to this Bill is hardily consistent with that policy. When a railway charter is granted, accompanied by large tracts of land bonuses, those who obtain the charter know perfectly well that, in order to earn the grant, they must comply with the conditions of their incorporation. And if they fail to build the road in the time provided, they are perfectly aware that their grant lapses. As a matter of fact, their charter becomes null and void. What then must follow ? Should their charter be revived ? It follows that the government are necessarily responsible for its revival. The government passed an Order in Council in 1898 and passed it again in 1900, and notwithstanding what the minister has said regarding the policy of the government, it must assume full responsibility for the revival of that Order in Council granting that large tract of land. I am opposed to granting the large tract of land which is given these people by their charter. The idea of 55 miles of railway through a prairie country, which will cost at the most only a few thousand dollars a mile to build, being bonused by this enormous land grant of 6,400 acres per mile. That may have been a justifiable bargain fourteen years ago. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), who interjects a remark, will not pretend to say that it is a proper bargain today.

Mr. FRASER. If this contract is existing up to the present time I think we would be justified in keeping it on.

Mr. INGRAM. Then if the people who get this legislation violate an agreement, and that agreement becomes extinct because it has not been revived, then they have no right to the land, and the moment you revive it you must assume the responsibility of granting it. So the hon. gentleman's statement does not seem to me consistent. As to the question of referring the Bill back to the committee, I think perhaps there may be something in the contention that it should be referred back. I know it was a very close vote. I kept a strict account of the gentlemen who voted, and I am somewhat doubtful as to whether that vote was correctly taken that day. I know that certain gentlemen in that committee whose names are somewhat similar misunderstood the names when they were read out, and in one or two instances said, No and Yes. I am bound to say, however, that I was closer to those gentlemen on that occasion than the secretary, and I am not sure whether I kept a correct record or not, and I do not know whether the secretary then even took a proper record. For that reason I have no objection to the Bill going back to the committee. But as far as the land grant is concerned, I shall certainly oppose it in committee as I opposed it here.

Mr. OLIVER. Have I the privilege of putting myself right ?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has a right to make a personal explanation, and of setting himself right if he has been misunderstood.

Mr. OLIVER. My attitude, when I stated that I was instructed by the city council of Calgary to oppose the Bill, was not changed by the course I took when I suggested that the committee be allowed a year. I said distinctly to the committee that I was taking long chances as between myself and the people of Calgary, and I held out no prospect that the attitude I then assumed would be satisfactory to the people of Calgary. If I may go as far as to explain what the Minister of Railways and Canals said in regard to the terms of the grant, I think he intimated that I had been willing to extend the time a year, and was unreasonable because I was not willing to extend it longer. I was willing to extend it a year because that was the period mentioned in the Order in Council granting the land. I was willing to extend the charter to a term equal to the Order in Council granting the land, which was all the people had a right to. To extend the charter further was to bring up the question of extending the land grant, and giving them a leverage at any rate, to get an extension of that land grant. I made the proposition to ascertain for the information of the committee, the bona fides of the company. If the company were not willing to build within the year then they were not a bona fide company.

Mr. WADE. Is it not a fact that the hon. gentleman moved an amendment to the Bill limiting the time till the 1st of July, 1903 ; and that subsequently an amendment was moved extending the time to the 1st of October, 1903, and a discussion took place on those two amendments ?

Mr. OLIVER. I proposed such a motion and another gentleman proposed an amendment, but neither motion nor amendment were in order, and neither was put.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Upon the principles which have been laid down by the right hon. gentleman who leads the House, and from the statement made by the Minister of Railways and Canals this afternoon, it does not seem to me there is the slightest ground for sending this back to the committee. The Minister of Railways and Canals has stated that there was the fullest possible discussion of this matter in the committee, therefore, so far as that is concerned there does not exist the slightest reason for sending this matter back to the committee. The right hon. gentleman who leads this House has laid down the principle again and again that when the committee sanctions a Bill this House should sustain the committee, and that the matter should not be reconsidered.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Unless cause is shown.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend says that the leader of the House qualified his statement that way. Well, let us see what cause is shown. The matter of counting votes in the committee is, I submit, a matter entirely for the committee itself to regulate, it is not a matter in which this House is justified in interfering. The vote in the committee, if it is desirable to discuss in this House the manner in which the vote is taken, was taken exactly in the same way as the votes are taken in this House. Hon. gentlemen have talked about the unfairness of excluding members of the committee from voting, because they did not happen to be present when the question was put. Exactly the same argument might be made in this House. Hon. gentlemen here listen day after day to debates, and yet they cannot vote unless they are actually here when the question is put from the Chair. The Railway Committee enforced exactly the same rule that is enforced in this House. I venture to say that if you are going to refer this matter back to the Railway Committee simply because you are of opinion that the chairman of that committee did not do his duty, you are doing something which should not be undertaken by this House. I think that the rule followed by the chairman of the committee was a fair and proper one and that we have no cause to find fault with it. But, if there were cause to find fault with it, that is a matter to be dealt with by the committee itself. The time of the House should not be taken up in discussing for two hours a matter which is really a question of the internal regulation of the Railway Committee, so far as any real question presents itself. For, surely no one will say that the fact that this measure was defeated by a majority of one is a valid reason for sending it back to the committee. It goes without saying that that is no reason at all. The only question is whether the chairman of the committee did his duty. I think he did, and that he properly counted the vote. That being so, I see no reason to refer this measure back to the committee. If it is referred back, it will be quoted in the future as a precedent for taking up the time of the House day after day with a discussion of matters that properly appertain to the Railway Committee itself and that should be dealt with by that committee alone.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It seems to me that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) in the argument he has just offered has not shown the logical qualities of mind which he usually displays. I think I can show conclusively even to himself that the reasons he has urged why this Bill should not be referred to the committee are not adequate and binding. My hon. friend has stated the rule which—of course, I do not claim to have created it—I have observed ever since I first assumed the position I have the honour to occupy. That rule is invariably to maintain the decision of a committee unless adequate cause is shown for different action. The hon. gentleman says that adequate cause has not been shown in this case. We have the report of the committee, which is stated to have been carried by a majority of one, rejecting this Bill. When this discussion commenced, I must say my mind was very strong in favour of rejecting the motion. But an argument has been brought forward, which, it seems to me, puts upon the question an entirely different complexion. The chairman of the committee, the hon. member for London (Mr. Hyman) has risen in his place, and, speaking not as a member of the House, but as chairman of the committee, has stated that, though he reported the Bill as he was bound to do, in his opinion the vote upon it was a snap vote, and that the committee should be seized again of the question and have an opportunity of adjudicating upon it. The chairman's fairness is recognized upon all sides, upon the Conservative as well as upon the Liberal side; and, of course, his opinion must carry great weight. This is the argument to which I would invite the attention of my hon. friend. But I would go further. Suppose that it had happened in the case of this Bill instead of meeting this adverse vote in the Railway Committee it had met it in the Committee of the Whole House, what would have taken place ? The following day, probably, the promoter would have asked the House to reconsider its determination, and the House would have reconsidered and either reaffirmed or negatived it. More than once a Bill defeated in Committee of the Whole has been brought forward by the promoters who has asked the House to reinstate it upon the Order paper. Shall we be told that a proceeding so simple, so just, so fair, shall not be allowed because this vote took place not on the floor of this House, but in the Railway Committee ? This position is so strong that my hon. friend anticipating it, has tried to force himself into another position. He says it is for the committee to rectify the error if an error has been made. But the committee has no power to deal with it. The jurisdiction of the committee has been exhausted, and it cannot again deal with the question unless the report is sent back to it by this House. I submit that in a deliberative assembly no more than in a Court of Justice a mere snap vote should not finally settle a matter. Sharp practice should not prevail. I do not make any imputation against anybody. But, if certain members who were anxious to vote upon the question, who had attended the discussion but happened to be called away had been present when the vote was taken, the report would have been different from what it is. It seems to me that it would be an act of injustice not to allow the promoters of the Bill to have it go before the Committee of Railways and Canals and have its merits threshed out. As to the merits of the Bill, I have nothing to say. That is a matter which does not come before the House, and will have to be dealt with by the committee. If the committee come before us with a report favourable to the Bill, it will be time to discuss the merits of the measure. Up to the present time the question is one of procedure only. It is asked, and I think with good reason that the promoters shall have an opportunity of discussing the merits before the committee. My hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) has said that if this carried it will be the first time such a vote has ever been carried in the House. The hon. gentleman is quite right. But I would say also that this is the first time when a proposal of this kind has been supported by the chairman of the committee whose report was under discussion, and that is to me, sound and good reason why it should carry.

Mr. N. BOYD (Macdonald). Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BOYD. Hon. members can 'Oh' as much as they please. I have a right to speak, I have something to say, and I propose to say it regardless of what may be said upon the other side. A great deal has been said about what took place in the Railway Committee. Some two hours were spent in discussing the measure and seventy-one men were there and voted upon it. And the exception that was raised, that some members did not hear the question put, notwithstanding what was said here, was raised in the committee. And the decision of the chairman was such as from his position he was compelled to give. Now the point is this, and it has been shown here and the hon. gentleman who is the promoter of the Bill has not brought forward anything to the contrary—that this is a new company practically that has charge of this Bill, and that they are coming here, fourteen years after the time a charter was originally granted, to get that enormous amount of land which, since then, has greatly increased in value. And what caused that increase? The settlers who have gone into that country and settled round about that land have made it valuable after these fourteen years, and now a new company, because practically it is a new company, are coming here and asking for a land grant from this government, notwithstanding the policy and the doctrine which has been laid down and announced up and down this country by hon. gentlemen opposite. The vote you are going to give here to-day, and no doubt we will see that you take a vote, will mean that any man who votes to send this Bill back to the Railway Committee votes for giving that land to this railway company. If you vote to send this Bill back you will repudiate the declaration of your leaders and of all those who sought the votes of the people on the pledge that no more land would be given to railway companies. If the suggestion of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) is good, this company may come back fifty years from now and ask for land which is worth from $25 to $50 an acre more, and get a charter from this government. While railways have been a help to that country, they have also been a curse in some respects. Who are the men who held them up to the scorn of the country but hon. gentlemen who are now sitting on the Treasury benches opposite? The right hon. leader of the government knows well that he and other leaders of the Liberal party, when he sat on this side of the House, condemned the action of the government of that day, notwithstanding the fact that they had some just cause that time, 14, 16 or some 20 years ago, to give the land which had no value, but, when you, by your vote to-day, as you shall vote, send that Bill back to the Railway Committee, and if you do, you will come back to this House——

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BOYD. Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, from deviating slightly from the rule. When hon. gentlemen come back to this House and give to this new company this enormous amount of land which the settlers have made valuable to the extent of five, six or ten dollars an acre by occupying the land around it, they will do something which the people of this country will condemn.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, in reference to the argument as to the proper course of procedure in the matter now before the House, that is, as to whether or not this question should be referred back to the Railway Committee, the right hon. gentleman who leads the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has laid down the proposition that nothing can be considered in this House—I am referring to a past utterance of his—except what appears upon the record as it comes before parliament. In this case, I am sorry to say, he is violating the very good and sound constitutional practice which he enunciated to parliament and which will be evident from a few words I will read from a past utterance of the right hon. gentleman :

> The rule which is invariably followed on the floor of this House is that the House maintains the decisions of committees unless adequate cause be shown to the contrary, and unless cause be shown on the record.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) is referring to a previous debate.

Mr. BELL. I unquestionably am. The right hon. gentleman referred to a previous debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) may discuss the point of order.

Mr. BELL. I am referring to exactly the same precedents that have been referred to by the right hon. gentleman and by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) on the occasion to which I have referred, and which arose in connection with a precisely similar motion to have a report referred back to a committee. The right hon. gentleman laid down the rule and supported it by his vote, that the House could take no cognizance of anything whatever except it appears on the record that came from the committee. He specifically debarred himself, or any one else, from using such arguments as he has used to-day, when he objected to the statement of any hon. gentleman being taken, and characterized it as the ipsi dixit of this hon. gentleman or that hon. gentleman, saying that it was a matter of statements being made pro and con, and which could not be considered at all. He practically shut this House out from the consideration of anything that did not appear on the record. I maintain that if this is the case, the right hon. gentleman is entirely precluded by his own action, by his own sound constitutional statement, which I was very glad to accept upon that occasion as being authoritative, from making such an argument as he has addressed to the House to-day.

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). Mr. Speaker, I would not have spoken at all except for the statement of the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) that any hon. member who votes for sending this Bill back to the Railway Committee endorses the principle of giving land grants to railway companies. I am distinctly opposed to the government giving a single acre of Canadian farm land to any railway company and tying up that land in connection with a railway enterprise or a railway charter. I am going to support the motion to send this Bill back to the committee simply because a rule was enforced which never had been enforced before, at least, not in the last six years. I think I have been in that committee at every session which has been held in the last six years, and I have never seen that rule enforced before. In fact, I think the rules have been rather loosely enforced on some occasions. I can remember that on many occasions when votes were taken hon. members have simply come to the door of the Railway Committee room and said 'yes' or 'no,' and their votes have been recorded. This is the first time in six years that this question has been raised. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has endeavoured to make it appear that the case is similar to one which might arise in this House. Now, I say that in this House every hon member knows if he does not come into the House before the question is put by the Speaker, he loses his opportunity of voting, but in the Railway Committee, for six years past, we have had members coming into the committee any time when the vote is being polled, and recording their votes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The same practice has been followed for twenty years.

Mr. LOGAN. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, for a long time chairman of the Railway Committee, says that the same state of affairs has existed for the last twenty years. As far as farm land grants are concerned, I am opposed to them. But, as far as the present circumstances are concerned, it is sufficient to know that there has been a rule enforced which has not been enforced before, that members have been taken by surprise, that this has been a snap vote, and therefore the Bill should be reported back to the committee. I trust myself that no land will be granted.

House divided on the motion (Mr. Cowan).

Motion (Mr. Cowan) agreed to.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE—EXPENDITURE ON GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). I beg to move, seconded by Hon. Mr. Tisdale :

That the Committee on Public Accounts be empowered to make inquiries into the nature of the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway and Prince Edward Island Railways from the year 1895 up to the present date.

In proposing this motion, I may say that it is an appeal from the decision of the Public Accounts Committee——

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) says that this motion is an appeal from a decision of the Public Accounts Committee. I call attention to the fact that the notice he has given does not read at all in that way. His motion has no reference at all to anything that has taken place in the Public Accounts Committee. It reads :

Mr. HAGGART—Gives notice that on Monday next he will move, when notices are called, that the Committee on Public Accounts be empowered to make inquiries into any expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway and Prince Edward Island Railways from the year 1895 to the present date.

This is a substantive motion, and there is no reference in it to anything which may have taken place in the Public Accounts Committee.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The right hon. gentleman has not read the report.

The PRIME MINISTER. But I have read the notice of motion, and the hon. gentleman in the opening words of his speech tells us that under cover of his motion he intends to appeal from the decision of the Public Accounts Committee. He has given no notice of that.

Mr. SPROULE. He is merely giving a reason why he is moving the motion.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then, if this is a substantive motion it must go on the Order paper and cannot come up at this stage. In either case the hon. gentleman is out of order. If he moves a substantive motion he should have given notice, and it would appear on the Order paper, but if he wants to have an appeal from the decision of the Public Accounts Committee, which I do not think he has a right to, I call attention to the fact that he has not given notice of such a motion.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Surely I can characterize my motion as I like. I said it was an appeal from the report of the Public Accounts Committee, and as such I am debarred from bringing it forward in any other manner than when the motions are called. I contend that I am perfectly in order.

Mr. SPEAKER. Under rule 31 two day's notice has to be given of a motion. Then such a motion would go on the Order paper in the place assigned for notices of motion. That procedure has not been followed in this case. Two day's notice has been given, but the motion does not appear on the Order paper. It is out of place to proceed with the discussion of this motion now. I call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact, that following the practice laid down by Sir James Edgar in 1896, I decided that all motions for an appeal from the decisions of the Public Accounts Committee, or for concurrence in reports of the committee, instead of being put on the Order paper with the other notices of motion, should be brought up when motions are called. But this is quite a different motion. Let us look at the procedure. At the beginning of this session a motion was made for the formation of the Public Accounts Committee, and later on a motion was made to refer to that committee the report of the Auditor General and the public accounts for the last fiscal year. The committee has a right to proceed with the examination of that Auditor General's Report, and those public accounts, but a substantive motion such as this now made by the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) is not in order when motions are called.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT, 1898.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 124) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act, 1898. He said : This Bill proposes to make a very slight amendment in the Act in question. The Civil Service Retirement Act takes the place of the Superannuation Act in the case of new officials, or of such old officials as have elected to come under its operation. A certain sum of money is deducted annually from the salary of the official, which with interest is placed in a fund created for the benefit of the official, to be paid by the government upon his retirement or upon his death. Sections 8 and 9 of the Act of 1898 describe the manner in which this payment shall be made. Section 8 reads :

8. On the retirement or dismissal of any person, the amount to his credit in the retirement fund shall be payable to him : Provided always, that if he is, in the opinion of the Governor in Council, unfit to manage his own affairs, such amount may be dealt with for the benefit of such person, or of his wife or children or other next of kin, in such manner as the Governor in Council determines.

Section 9 reads :

9. If a person dies while in the Civil Service, the amount to his credit in the retirement fund shall be paid to his legal representatives.

It will be seen that if a man dies in the service the provision is, that the money shall be paid to his legal representatives, and hence it would be necessary that there should be letters of administration taken out and considerable expense incurred. It too often happens, I am afraid, that the civil servant at the time of his death has very little property on which to administer, and it has been thought better that instead of obliging the family to take out letters of administration, that, as respects this small sum to his credit in the hands of the government, it may be paid to such person as the Treasury Board would indicate. It is a change which I think will commend itself to the judgment of the House.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I had a communication recently from one of my constituents who had been in the civil service for many years and who resigned his position voluntarily to enter commercial life. He had been paying into the superannuation fund during all the years he was in the service, and having honourably retired from the service he asks that the sum he contributed in this way should be refunded to him. Will there be any provision made in the amending Act of the minister to cover such cases ? It seems to me that it is a hardship to a man who has served faithfully in the public service and has contributed for years to the superannuation fund, if that money is retained by the government. I think the sum contributed by him during the years he has been in the public service should be returned to him. If he were dismissed from the service, it would be returned.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Only in certain cases.

Mr. CLARKE. I am advised that in the case of a civil servant being dismissed from the service, the money he has paid into the superannuation fund is returned to him. I would ask the minister if the case I mention is provided for in the Bill ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Bill which I have presented to the House deals with the Civil Service Retirement Act. My hon. friend's question relates to the old Civil Service Superannuation Act, which is a different measure. It is to a certain extent a hardship when a man has contributed for a number of years to the superannuation fund and dies in the service, that his savings are not paid to his family, or, if he retires voluntarily, that they are not paid to himself. But that was a principle of the old Superannuation Act, that a man had to live in order to get the benefit of the Act. A man might have paid into the superannuation fund for many years, and, shortly before the time when he might have retired from the service and received a pension, he passed away ; and under the old Act his family could not receive a penny. My hon. friend is slightly inaccurate when he says that a man who is dismissed from the service has his contribution paid back to him. That is true only in a limited sense. It was provided for in the Act which we introduced in 1897 or 1898 to deal with persons who had been dismissed from the service for political partisanship. It was felt that, as those gentlemen were not guilty of malfeasance, though they had taken a course that was erroneous, they were punished sufficiently by their dismissal, and ought not to lose the money which they had paid into the superannuation fund. Therefore, a special Act was passed which, though not applied to them in terms, was distinctly stated to be intended to apply to them. In no other case has the money been refunded. Under the new system, in case of a man's death the money is recognized as belonging to his family and is paid to them ; or, if he retires from the service, the money will be paid to himself, or, if he is unfit to manage his affairs, to members of his family. There have undoubtedly been cases of apparent hardship under the old Superannuation Act, but I am afraid it will be difficult to make any change in the light of the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

POLICE MAGISTRATES IN THE YUKON.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE moved that the House go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution :—

That it is expedient to amend chapter 41 of the statutes of 1901, and to provide that the salaries of the police magistrate at Dawson and the police magistrate at White Horse shall be $4,000 per annum.

Motion agreed to.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE moved that the House go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution :

That it is expedient to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts and to provide as follows :—

1. That the salary of the third judge of the territorial court of the Yukon Territory shall be $5,000 per annum.

2. That a judge of a county court resigning at any time after becoming disabled by permanent infirmity or resigning after twenty-five years' service, may be granted a pension equal to two-thirds of his annual salary; provided that if he has served less than five years, his pension shall not exceed one-third of his annual salary.

Motion agreed to.

REGISTRAR OF THE EXCHEQUER COURT.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE moved that the House go into committee to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to provide that the salary of the registrar of the Exchequer Court shall be $2,400 per annum.

Motion agreed to.

THE SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—THE TERMS OF PEACE.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, before the House proceeds with Orders of the Day, I wish to give notice that I propose to-morrow, Deo volente, to move upon going into supply the following motion:

This House is of the opinion that British supremacy should be maintained and firmly established in South Africa; to which end Canada has cheerfully contributed men and money. Having in view the effect of a policy magnanimity and mercy at the cecession of Canada, and at the close of the civil war in the United States, and for other reasons, this House is also of the opinion that a like policy of magnanimity and mercy may properly be extended to a brave foe now opposing British arms, and that in the interests of peace, and of future tranquillity, harmony and homogeneity, it is expedient to offer universal amnesty, as a condition of peace and submission to British control, to all persons in arms against British authority, in Cape Colony, Natal, the Orange Free State, the Transvaal, and all other portions of the British dominions in South Africa; and upon this opinion, respectfully presented, with the prayerful hope that it may aid in securing a favourable and honourable settlement of South African hostilities and difficulties, this House invokes the considerate judgment of His Gracious Majesty the King.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to call the attention of the right hon. premier to the fact that a return which was ordered by the House on the 26th of February has not yet been brought down. It is a return showing the total number of employees of the various departments who have been dismissed; and the motion was amended by adding the words, 'not already brought down.'

The PRIME MINISTER. I will take a note of it.

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK.

SUPPLY—PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Speaker, before the House goes into Committee of Supply I wish to move:

That the Committee of Public Accounts be empowered to make inquiries into any expenditure on the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways from the year 1895 to the present date.

My reason for introducing this resolution is this. In making inquiries into the expenditures for the years of which the public accounts have been referred to the committee, it is found that there are many incidents connected with the accounts which it is impossible to inquire into fully without going beyond those years. For instance, in connection with the purchase of locomotives on the Intercolonial Railway, an inquiry was made before the committee as to the weight of the locomotives. We found out the weight and then wanted to know the condition of the road over which the locomotives passed, but we were debarred from inquiry into that particular question on the ground that it might embody an inquiry into expenditure beyond the year referred to the committee. But the Public Accounts Committee, which is purely inquisitorial, is not bound by the rules which apply to the courts of law, but has the fullest opportunity of putting questions in any shape or form, leading or otherwise, and may even inquire into a person's private concerns, if thought necessary. But this rule has been disregarded, and disregarded for the first time in our parliamentary history.

Before that committee, we had a party who had been in the employ of the government, but had left it in order to enter into a contract for the supply of material to the government, and the question was put to him: What was the contract you made with the sub-contractor? A minister of the Crown immediately rose and told the witness he had no right to answer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is the hon. gentleman referring to something I said?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not at all, the Minister of Finance was there at the time, and he interjected the remark that the witness had no right to answer the question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I did not say he had no right to answer it, but that he was not obliged to answer it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The chairman ruled that the witness need not answer, and that is the first time such a ruling was ever made in our Public Accounts Committee. According to the practice, both in the British parliament and this, up to the present, the Public Accounts Committee is given the fullest right to inquire into any particulars with reference to the accounts, even though that should involve divulging a private transaction. Not only that, but a witness may be compelled to give evidence, even though he thereby would admit that he was guilty of crime. And the courts in England are always very careful not to allow any such admissions to be taken as evidence against the witness, because he only made them under compulsion.

But we have changed all that in the Public Accounts Committee this session. Objection was made to a certain question on the ground that it had to deal with the accounts of another year than that which had been referred to the committee. I am therefore compelled to ask the House for the power to inquire beyond the particular year the accounts for which were referred to the committee. Never before has the right to do so been questioned, either in England or in Canada. We had no object in inquiring into anything which was not incidental to the accounts of the year as to which we were authorized by this House to inquire, but the moment we put the question we were met with the reply that it might involve an inquiry into the expenditure of something which was done in the past or between the end of the last fiscal year and the present date. The committee was equally arbitrary in another instance. Even when a member of parliament states upon his word of honour the reasons why he wishes to subpœna a witness to give evidence, his request was refused, and we are only allowed to bring the witnesses before the committee which the government think proper.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Might I ask my hon. friend, if he will allow me: Did my hon. friend desire to have the House pass an order to the effect that the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway for the past five years shall be inquired into by the Public Accounts Committee?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does he pretend that the motion to go into Committee of Supply is a proper occasion upon which to ask the House to consider and pass such a motion as he now makes?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I took what I thought was the proper course. There is a report from the committee to the House, and there is no motion to adopt the report. The motion to adopt the report was never moved by the chairman, or I would have moved an amendment, so that there was no other course left me than the one I took. I thought I had followed the regular practice, but according to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I did not. Then there was nothing left for me but to move the motion on the order to go into Committee of Supply. I adopted the form which was adopted on previous occasions, and I was following strictly the procedure when I made my motion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. After you found you were on the wrong track, why did you pursue another wrong course?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I followed the precedents set from time immemorial, and to-day I hear for the first time that the course I took was irregular.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. As I stated before six o'clock, I was inquiring in the committee into the position of the Intercolonial Railway and trying to show that locomotives had been purchased before the road was ready for them to run upon it because of their weight and unfitness for the road and the traffic. I asked one of the witnesses before the committee what was the weight of the locomotive, and he told me the weight. I asked him if this locomotive had run between Point Lévis and Montreal, and he replied in the negative. Then I asked the question what state the bridges were in on the Drummond Railway, which had been lately purchased by the government, and whether tenders had been asked for the building of new bridges or whether any contracts for that purpose were out. I was met by the opposition of the Minister of Railways and the chairman of the committee, who said that we had no business to inquire into anything that occurred or might have occurred since the public accounts had closed at the end of June last, or into the reference in the Auditor General's Report. I remember the latitude given to the committee when I was a member of the government. I remember Sir John Thompson's statement to this House and to the country, that if anything was to be inquired into with regard to the public accounts or anything that might reflect on any minister, or anything which it might be thought necessary in the public interests to inquire into, the greatest latitude would be given by the government. The ruling of the committee in my case may have been correct, and this matter may have been something which had occurred after the date covered by the reference to the committee. But immediately, for the purpose of setting myself right, I moved that the committee should apply to the House for power to make inquiries into these matters from 1895 up to the present moment. The committee rejected the motion. I moved that the report of the committee be immediately sent to the House. It appears, under your ruling, Mr. Speaker—to which I bow as everything that is correct and proper—that in my ignorance I moved a resolution which has not the effect of gaining the object which I sought. I would like to know any other means within the rules of the House by which I could possibly reach that object and send this back to the committee. There is no other course left me but the one that I am now taking, and that is to seek the authority of the House to inquire into these questions. Surely, in the Public Accounts Committee, which is an inquisitorial committee, as I said before, and which is designed to afford every hon. member the power to inquire to the fullest extent into every expenditure made by the government, I was within my rights when I asked for the power to inquire into everything that would be incident to an expenditure which was under discussion. But I am met by a member of the government, who states that I have no right to discuss any of these questions, who refuses me the right to summon witnesses; and, for the first time in the history of this parliament or of that parliament from which we derive our rules, a minister tells the witness that he has no right to answer a question. 'Don't answer the question, you have no right to answer.' And the witness is justified, because it will be divulging something which is his own private affair.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Haggart) allow me to ask him a question ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman refer to something which transpired when the committee was investigating the Public Works accounts ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did not the Minister of Finance correct my hon. friend this afternoon by asking whether the position he took was not this—that it was the privilege of the witness not to answer the question—not that he had no right to answer it, but that it was a private matter and that it was the privilege of the witness to decline to answer ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is a nice technical distinction between telling a witness : You are not to answer, and the statement that I made, that he was told he need not answer. It shows an amount of ingenuity that would do credit to a police court lawyer. Fancy the Minister of Railways and Canals getting up before this House and drawing such a distinction as that. When the witness was asked the question he was warned by a minister of the Crown—and two of them were there at the time—' You need not answer the question, it is your privilege to answer it if you like.' That was done again and again in my hearing. I never heard of such a proceeding before. The committee was fully empowered to inquire into the question, no matter whether it affected the witness' private business or not. I never heard of such a limitation upon a committee of inquiry. As I said before six o'clock, even if it involved the criminal action, it is obligatory upon the witness to answer, unless he is excused by the committee. But the chairman rules that witnesses need not answer questions, as if he had the power to do so. No power devolves upon the chairman but to keep order. It is for the committee itself to decide whether a witness shall or shall not answer a question. The idea of a chairman of a committee ruling upon a question like that is new to me——

Mr. FRASER. May I ask the hon. gentleman one question ? Was not he the member who asked me as chairman of the committee to say whether or not the witness was bound to answer ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. FRASER. Most certainly.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is possible. I will not make a statement in direct contradiction of the hon. gentleman. But I have here the evidence of the committee as it is reported to the House :

Q. What I want to know is whether there were any tenders asked for or contracts awarded for the purpose of building any bridge on the Drummond section of the Intercolonial Railway this year ?

A. Shall I answer that, Mr. Chairman——

That is the appeal of the witness to the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN—I think that if he refers to this year, the effect of the question would be to make an inquiry before this committee we are authorized to do.

We are authorized by parliament to inquire into the public accounts.

Mr. FRASER. Is that the matter the hon. gentleman was discussing ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. The hon. gentleman will excuse me—it was the other question.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, I am discussing the powers exercised by the chairman, and I have shown by the report of the evidence how the witness appealed to the chairman and how the chairman assumed to decide the matter. I say the chairman has no such power. The proceedings before that committee are the most perfect farce that ever was enacted before any committee of this House. Fancy the Minister of Railways getting up and stating virtually that your only power in making inquiries before that committee is to learn whether the money was paid for the particular service named or not. The question of policy, the question of expediency—all this he refuses the committee the right to inquire into. Therefore, there is no other course left for me, desiring as I do to maintain the power and the dignity of this House and to see that the committees are properly conducted, but the course I have taken. I have endeavoured to get this question before the House in a manner which I thought proper. It is late in the session, and there is no remedy open to me except the one I am taking. I only ask that the Public Accounts Committee be instructed to make inquiries from 1895 up to the present moment into any matters which they think pertinent to the subject submitted to them. It has been done a dozen of times in the past in the Public Accounts Committee. There is no reason why they should not do it again, and especially for the reasons which I have stated this evening. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move :

That all the words after 'that' be struck out, and the following substituted therefor :

That the Committee on Public Accounts be empowered to make inquiries into any expenses on the Intercolonial Railway and Prince Edward Island Railways from the year 1895 to the present date.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Before recess I asked my hon. friend from South Lanark (Hon. Mr. Haggart) if he would seriously say that he desired that this committee, at this stage, should be empowered to make the investigation which he proposes, and he answered that he did. If he had not answered the question in that way, if he had not said that he desired that this authority should be conferred upon the committee, I should have been constrained to believe, from the conduct of the hon. gentleman in this House and his conduct before the committee, that this was the last thing that he desired to have done. Is there a gentleman in this House who believes, after what the hon. gentleman has said here to-night, that there could be a more impossible method, a more unreasonable method, of achieving the object which he alleges he has in view, than to move this resolution on going into Committee of Supply ? If the hon. gentleman had wished to appear before parliament and the country as seeking to make an investigation which he was precluded from making by the action of the government, if he had desired to pose before the country in an attitude which would have enabled some one to draw political inferences against the government, he would have pursued precisely the opposite course to that he has pursued. I cannot understand how an hon. gentleman of his experience, who has been a long time a member of parliament, and has been a minister of the Crown, could imagine that such a course of procedure would impose upon the credulity of the most credulous man in this parliament. The hon. gentleman knows that there was another method which he could have pursued before that committee; if he desired such an investigation into the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway there was a course he could have taken, but that course he has studiously abstained from taking. The hon. gentleman could have moved a substantive motion, which would have been reached in due course, and to facilitate which the Prime Minister would have afforded him every opportunity. He could have put in the Orders a resolution to the effect that he desired that the committee should be instructed and empowered to hold an inquiry into the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway prior to or, if he liked, subsequent to the year the committee was considering. That would have been a proper and legitimate course for the hon. gentleman to take if he wished to attain the object he professes to have in view. And the subject could have been dealt with on its merits without blocking the proceedings on a motion to go into Committee of Supply. Why has the hon. gentleman not seen fit to do that ? Because he has preferred to resort to a little cheap tactics which he thinks is going to impose upon somebody who does not understand the matter. He has been pursuing an investigation before the Railway Committee for weeks and months, and has not got anywhere. He has not found out anything, he has not accomplished anything. But he has a grievance, and his chief grievance is that he has not got any grievance. It is absurd for the hon. gentleman to suppose that this parliament cannot understand the position as well as he does himself. He knows better than to imagine that there has been any disposition on the part of any member of that committee, or of any minister of the Crown, to prevent any legitimate inquiry that the hon. gentleman desires to make. He has been spending weeks in pursuing the inquiry, and what has he achieved ? Every subject he has investigated, the more he has probed into it, the more defensible the transaction has become. He is simply in this weak and lamentable position, that he has not got anywhere, and he hopes to be able to go before the country with the pretension that he would have discovered something against this government if the Minister of Railways and Canals had not blocked him in the inquiry, and had not prevented him from investigating the accounts of the railway. That is the attitude the hon. gentleman is in, and he will pardon me if I say that he occupies to-day a very flat, and a very weak, and an entirely indefensible position from any point of view.

Let me tell the House what took place before the Committee on Public Accounts. The hon. gentleman asked the committee to sustain him in a motion that all the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway should be referred to this committee, both past and future ; not alone the accounts of this year, but the accounts of the last four or five years; not alone the accounts of the past four or five years, that was not sufficient for his purpose, but he wanted to reach out into the future, and he wanted to know what was going to be done in the future. Imagine the hon. gentleman asking the Committee on Public Accounts to take up transactions that are pending and unfinished during the current year. The hon. gentleman has had a long experience in parliament, but I will venture to say that he cannot lay his finger upon any instance in which so insane a proposition was ever submitted to the committee. Well, Sir, what took place when the hon. gentleman moved this motion ? There is not an hon. gentleman upon that committee who is present here to-night but who will know that I am making an entirely accurate statement when I say that I think the committee did not exhibit the slightest disposition to preclude him from looking into the accounts and into the transactions of past years, and that it was not disposed to limit the inquiry in the present year. There had been particulars, abstracts and papers brought down covering the whole time of my administration of the Intercolonial Railway. However, I said that if there were any particular directions in which he wanted to have the accounts of past years laid before the committee if he would tell us in what they were, if he would indicate in some way what he desired, and the particular inquiry he desired to pursue, I would facilitate him in every way and would not offer the slightest objection to his motion passing.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is not the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Blair) drawing upon his imagination, when he says he made that statement ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend was present at the committee, and he must have heard what I am now stating.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I never heard it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will be borne out by an hon. gentlemen on his own side of the House, and I appeal to that hon. gentleman, who I know has closely and intelligently followed the proceedings before the committee—I refer to the hon. gentleman from Hamilton (Mr. Barker)—to say if I did not unhesitatingly offer, if the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) would indicate the particular line of inquiry he wanted to pursue that I would support his motion to ask this House to give authority to the committee to deal with these accounts and have these accounts referred to it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), in answer to that offer, took this course ; the hon. gentleman said that his object was to get at the transactions connected with the purchasing of locomotives by the government. He said that during the past few years we had purchased a number of very large locomotives, that we had put them on the Intercolonial Railway, and he had asked one witness a question in reply to which that witness had said that there is one portion of the railway, the Drummond County Railway, upon which these locomotives could not be run because they were too heavy for the bridges upon that line. The hon. gentleman said that he wanted to have an opportunity of seeing whether, in the year now running, we were entering into any contracts, or arranging for contracts to increase the strength of these bridges or changing them so that they could carry heavier locomotives. He did not inquire as far as the locomotives were concerned that were purchased before the year, the accounts of which we are now investigating, had been entered upon. My hon. friend said that he wanted to be able to show that the locomotives that we bought were too heavy to be run on the Intercolonial Railway this year. I said to my hon. friend that as far as the present year was concerned, I did not think it was a proper subject to refer to the committee, but that so far as past years were concerned, the accounts of which we were investigating, I was perfectly willing that the accounts respecting these years should be gone into ; but let him say that that was the particular thing he wanted to inquire into and we would ask the House to authorize the committee to have these accounts laid before it. My hon. friend did not act upon that suggestion, and why ? Because he wanted to be able to come to parliament, make a speech which would find its way into 'Hansard' and be published in the opposition press throughout the country to the effect that we were stifling investigation and preventing a proper inquiry. But later, when my hon. friend had made another speech and when some remarks had been made by hon. members who asked me if I could not make a statement as to the present year, I said 'yes.' I made a statement, and the statement I made covered all the ground. I stated that in so far as entering into, or authorizing any contracts to be entered into with respect to bridges upon the Drummond County Railway was concerned, we had not either made any contracts nor were we proposing to make any contracts at present. I said that the statement which my hon. friend was making to the effect that we had bought the Drummond County Railway as a railway which was capable of carrying locomotives of this kind was not a correct statement, because when we bought the Drummond County Railway it was stated that we acquired it as a road which, with the expenditure we had made provision to make upon it, would be up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway, and I maintain that the Drummond County is a railway up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway. I affirmed and sustained my proposition by saying that immediately we had adopted the policy in 1898 of putting on heavier rolling stock and locomotives, then we had to ask parliament to make provision for increasing the capacity and strength of the bridges all over the line of the Intercolonial Railway. We are doing that to-day. I said to my hon. friend that although we had entered into no contracts the present year for the purpose of strengthening the bridges on the Drummond County Railway, we would be obliged in the near future to do that in order to have our road from one end of it to the other strong enough, so far as bridges are concerned, to carry the heaviest locomotives and trains we have placed on the railway. My hon. friend got an answer to his question. We did not hear anything more about it until my hon. friend asked for the adoption of a resolution, and he renews the request here to-day.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Was not the resolution moved in the committee before the hon. gentleman made that statement?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, never; it was at the very same meeting.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister forgets. He made the statement at the next meeting.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not forget anything about it. I recollect very well that the discussion which I have related here took place on the precise occasion, on which the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) moved that resolution. Now, Sir, my hon. friend, although he refuses to accept the reasonable suggestion which was made by me at the committee, now asks this House, as an amendment to the motion that we go into Committee of Supply, to authorize the Public Accounts Committee to make an inquiry into any expenditure upon the Intercolonial Railway and on the Prince Edward Island Railway from the year 1895 to the present day. I ask in all reason whether it is possible to conceive of a more unreasonable motion than that which the hon. gentleman has asked his friends on the other side to support, and is at the same time, of course, asking the House generally to entertain. What was it that my hon. friend stated in parliament three or four days ago? He made the statement, and he repeated it on Friday last, that the inquiry before the Public Accounts Committee into railway affairs would no doubt terminate on Monday, and when we did not finish the investigation yesterday by reason of the fact that there were a few witnesses who had been summoned, my hon. friend stated that he then expected the inquiry would be concluded on Wednesday. He has asked the right hon. leader of the government to have the railway estimates deferred until this committee had made its final report, and yet in the face of a statement that this inquiry is at an end, and everybody knows it is at an end who has been attending the committee, he comes to this parliament and seriously and deliberately asks us to subscribe to a resolution which would transfer to the jurisdiction of that committee and impose the duty upon that committee of investigating every one of the Intercolonial Railway accounts from 1895 down to the present day. I do not think that the motion is one that will commend itself to any considerable portion of the hon. gentleman's friends. I do not think that the members on the one side or the other of this House can afford to commit themselves to any such proposition as that. It is not reasonable. If the hon. gentleman had any particular point, or item, or class of account which he wanted to investigate, he would not be obliged to come here to get the authority of the House to make his inquiries, because the committee would at once have allowed him to make any investigation that could be considered fair and reasonable. But the hon. gentleman has chosen to take another course. If he had not asserted so strongly to the contrary, every one would have concluded that he took this course because he knew it was futile, because he knew it could not result in anything, and because he himself wished to have his motion defeated.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). If this motion is defeated, as I am afraid it will, the House of Commons of Canada will not have spent a very useful day. What, between granting mountains of coal to people who have to build a small railway, and refusing to allow an investigation into that most advantageous concern, the Intercolonial Railway, which has been defended with so much wrath and with so much irritation by the Minister of Railways that he could scarcely command his language; the Commons of Canada will have spent a most unprofitable day indeed, so far as the interests of the people are concerned. If the representatives of the people desire to throw some light on the administration of the Intercolonial Railway, which during the last five years has proven to be a miserable concern for the public, why should we be debarred from so doing? Does the Minister of Railways think that the people of Canada will not uphold us in our effort to find out why it is that for the past five years the Intercolonial Railway has become a sink hole, into which has disappeared—most of the time uselessly—the money of the Canadian people ? The Minister of Railways seemed to be in a state of frenzy. So furious was he that he could not control his language, and in his rage he qualified the act of his colleagues of the Privy Council as the act of an insane man. Why was the Minister of Railways so furious ? Is there something dark in the administration of the Intercolonial Railway that he will not allow us to investigate. Is it because, as was stated last election, the minister judged fit to go to the United States to get his engines and cars built, instead of spending the money in Canada and encouraging our industries ? If that be the reason—and I have no doubt it is one of the reasons—it explains to us why the Minister of Railways should combat with so much violence the reasonable demand made by my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart). If there be nothing wrong in the administration of the government railways, surely the minister should have been glad to let light in upon it, and surely he should have been glad that we should try to find out why the Intercolonial Railway has been a losing concern for the past five years. But, when we come to examine the reasons given by the Minister of Railways against this motion, we are still more surprised. The members of this House who are not altogether governed by party exigencies, and who look into questions a little upon their merits, will be surprised to know that the minister based his criticism of the ex-minister (Hon. Mr. Haggart) upon the opportuneness of the time the hon. gentleman had chosen to move his motion. That was a weak ground of opposition, indeed. We know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) tried in good faith to bring forward his motion this afternoon at a time when it was reasonably to be expected that the motion would be in order. You yourself, Mr. Speaker, were not perfectly sure on that point, for you took the trouble to investigate authority before pronouncing yourself. And when the ex-minister (Hon. Mr. Haggart) presented his motion to the House, the right hon. the Prime Minister himself rose and took a technical objection. And in view of that, the Minister of Railways has the audacity—I cannot qualify his conduct otherwise—to say that my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) should have given the ordinary notice of motion. He has the audacity to make that statement when there is not a single member of this House who is not aware that we have only one day more reserved for the consideration of such motions, and that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) had done as the Minister of Railways suggests, there could not possibly be a consideration of the motion this year. Every one of us knows that the list of motions on the Order paper cannot possibly be disposed of this session, and I myself, who am interested in a motion that will be the first to be called, entertain the gravest doubt that we will be able to finish the discussion of it. That is the absurd reason given by the Minister of Railways why this motion should not be presented now, and in his violent language he takes my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) to task; and calls upon the people to cry shame upon him because he did not do what, on the face of it, would be an absurdity if he had done. Is it not as clear as the sun at noon-day, that the Minister of Railways does not want this motion submitted in any shape or in any form to the consideration of this House ? That is how I understand his tactics. I do not hesitate to say, Sir, as one of the members of the Public Accounts Committee, that that committee is a most unsatisfactory one, important as it is, by reason of the difficulties which are thrown in our way when we seek to make an investigation of the public accounts of this country. In view of this, is it surprising that my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) should avail himself of his constitutionl privilege as a British subject to air his grievances when this House is moved into a Committee of Supply? And it is because he avails himself of that constitutional privilege that he calls down upon himself the malediction—there is no other expression for it—of the Minister of Railways. But, Sir, the attitude of our irate and domineering friend, the minister, submitted to no doubt in his own province, where he learned to whip his followers into obedience ; the attitude which he takes today is very different from his attitude of last session, when the member for Hants (Mr. Russell) on going into Supply brought before the House, not a grievance, but a motion congratulating the government upon having given preferential trade to Great Britain. I did not hear the Minister of Railways make any complaint then ; I did not hear him call the hon. member for Hants an insane man. Oh no, he thought the member for Hants was perfectly right in doing what he condemns the ex-Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Haggart) for doing to-day. Sir, the people of the country know that we are trying to throw light upon the administration of a public concern in which we have sunk over $60,000,000, and which, under the management of the present Minister of Railways, has repaid us in nothing but deficits, and it seems to me a most natural course on the part of the members of this House in the interest of the people at large to find out the reason by an investigation running back 5, 6, 10 years, if necessary. We are here to investigate these matters—how it is that the money has been spent upon that railway, and why it is that, when the other railways of this country for the most part are paying and remunerative concerns, this one, which is the national railway, is a source of loss to the country. Speaking for myself individually, and representing as I do a constituency where there are a large number of workmen, of people who pay the taxes like my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals, I would be very glad to find out why it is that during the past five years, while the other railways of this country got their cars and engines in Canada, we have been obliged—shameful confession of weakness—to go to the neighbouring republic and spend there vast sums of money, instead of patriotically spending that money in our own country and helping our own labouring men. Although I have not followed attentively the work of the committee, particularly in regard to the incident referred to by my hon. friend, if it be true that the Minister of Railways and Canals—the irate man, the furious man, the angel of justice—has gone to the United States to purchase locomotives for a railway over which these locomotives could not go, and with bridges not strong enough to bear them, then we have a complete solution of the whole difficulty, and I can well understand why the Minister of Railways and Canals has laboured so extraordinarily to block this investigaion.

Mr. F. B. WADE (Annapolis). Mr. Speaker, having been present at the meeting of the committee in question, and there being some conflict between the hon. gentleman opposite and the Minister of Railways and Canals, I thought it would be only right that I should say a few words as to what took place in the committee in my hearing. But, Sir, being of a somewhat timid and retiring nature, the explosion which I have listened to has really knocked all my ideas out of my head. The hon. gentleman opposite has been complaining because the Minister of Railways and Canals has been excited. I hope his friends will be able to congratulate themselves that they have in their ranks a gentleman who can always control himself, and can use the choicest language. I believe the hon. gentleman belongs to my noble profession, which accounts for his calmness in debate. That is the reason why he can use the choice language which he has applied to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, because we have a saying in our profession that when your cause is bad, always abuse the attorney on the other side.

Now, I do not see for my own part why there should be any warmth indulged in on this occasion. I listened to the discussion before the committee, and I left it with full conviction that the hon. gentleman who has moved this amendment not only had no cause for complaint, but that he left the committee feeling assured that he had not any. He seemed to wish to work up a grievance. He wanted a resolution passed by the committee that they should report to this House and ask for power to investigate beyond the year for which they were authorized to investigate, and he was told by the Minister of Railways and Canals: 'If you will point out any one transaction in connection with the administration of the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway concerning which you will say, as a member of the House, that you have reason to believe that any wrong has taken place, I am prepared to support your resolution; or, further than that, if you will state any line of accounts or of dealings in connection with the railway concerning which you will pledge your word as a member of the House that any wrong has been done, in your judgment or belief, that shall be investigated, and every paper shall be brought down.' Could anything more than that be said? But the hon. gentleman flatly and distinctly refused to make any such charge. He said he had a perfect right to have everything brought down for the purpose of investigating, to find out whether anything was wrong or not—in other words, had a right to go on a fishing expedition to see if he could find out anything that was wrong or that was not wrong, or anything that could not be explained or that could be explained.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to ask my hon. friend if I did not say further than that, that if he wished any branch of the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway to be investigated, let him indicate what they were, even if he did not make any charge at all, and I would consent to the authority to have the accounts brought down?

Mr. WADE. That is certainly my recollection of what took place in the committee.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he heard this further, that the Finance Minister said, in reference to the remarks of the Minister of Railways and Canals, 'and get the authority of parliament to do so.' Did you hear that?

Mr. WADE. I will answer the hon. gentleman, that I heard both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Railways and Canals say that it was necessary to get the authority of parliament to have the investigation.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear; hear, hear.

Mr. WADE. Do not make a noise too soon. But they both distinctly said they would join with the hon. gentleman in assisting in getting that authority from parliament for the investigation; and when that offer was made by the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Minister of Finance, and when hon. gentlemen opposite refused to take advantage of it, when I say we might fairly be justified in assuming that they did not want the investigation at all, but simply wished to fire off some cheap fireworks. Now, the position that was taken by some of us who were not very deeply concerned in this matter was this, that when the committee was instructed to investigate the accounts for a particular year, if it was necessary to go beyond that year, some reason should be put before the committee and before this House why that should be done. I submit that is the practice that has been pursued by this House and by every other parliament of the empire. We were told by one of the hon. gentleman's friends that in the year 1892 a certain investigation had been ordered by the House without rhyme or reason; but when we came to investigate the proceedings for that year—and we did not investigate all of them—we found that in each case there had been directions to investigate specific matters, and reasons had been given for those investigations. So in this case I say that if the hon. gentleman or any other hon. gentleman is in a position to come before this House and ask for an investigation into the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway, and to state that he has reason to believe that any transaction in connection with it has been wrong, I for one will support him in his demand for an investigation, and will assist him to the best of my ability.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And that was the statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals, too.

Mr. WADE. I do not think I understand the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am saying that your statement is perfectly correct, and in accord with the statement of the Minister of Railways before the committee.

Mr. WADE. Then what is the trouble?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WADE. If we are quite willing to investigate anything that may be charged or alleged on the other side, is not that enough? Does the hon. gentleman suppose for one moment that we purposed going into an investigation of all the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway from 1895 to the present, when there is not one man on the other side who has the courage to stand up and formulate anything, even in the nature of a charge, against the administration? It is all very well for my hon. friend to talk about buying locomotives in the United States. Why not buy them in the United States if you have to do so? Has he any charge to make in that connection? If he has, let him make it, but let him not make these silly insinuations.

Then my hon. friend talks about the Intercolonial Railway not paying. Did he worry very much about its not paying under the former administration?

Mr. MONK. I did.

Mr. WADE. We were operating very little more than one-half the railway then that we have now, and the deficit was considerably more than what it is now. Will he compare the service we have now with that we had them? I think not. He would be ashamed to see the service we had under the former administration on the Intercolonial Railway at present, and yet he is not allowing any credit to this government——

Mr. MONK. I do not know if all the members from the province of Quebec will agree with the hon. gentleman on that point.

Mr. WADE. Would the hon. gentleman himself agree with me? He would be ashamed to see the service on the Intercolonial Railway now, which existed during the time the late government was in power. He complains that the Intercolonial Railway does not pay. Let me put this question to him frankly. Is he prepared, as one of the leaders of the opposition, to demand that the government shall put that road upon a paying basis and exact the same rates as are charged by the other commercial roads?

Mr. MONK. I am prepared to expect that the government should place that railway on a paying basis, and it can be made to pay.

Mr. WADE. My hon. friend is a lawyer, and I dare say a far better lawyer than I am, but I shall not allow him to evade my question in that simple manner. The question I put is not whether the government should make the Intercolonial Railway a paying road, because that is a very vague question indeed, but I ask my hon. friend whether he, as one of the leaders of the opposition, demands that the government shall exact the same freight rates on the Intercolonial Railway as are exacted upon the commercial roads in the Dominion?

Mr. MONK. If that be my hon. friend's question, I reply that it is not necessary that they should. All that is required is to manage the road in a proper manner.

Mr. WADE. Does that answer appeal to any man within the sound of my voice, who knows anything about railroading? Does any one suppose that you can run a railway and not charge the ordinary commercial rates, and run it successfully in competition with other railways that do charge these ordinary rates? Surely my hon. friend does not intend to impose upon this House to that extent.

Mr. BRODER. You are paying no interest on your capital and ought to be able to do it.

Mr. WADE. I do not think that anybody suggested that we were paying interest on our capital. Nobody spoke about that. I asked whether my hon. friend wanted the rates increased so as to equal the rates charged by commercial roads. In addition

I would ask further: Do hon. gentlemen opposite want the service curtailed? Do they want a cheaper service? Will they make some specific charge? I remember in the days when we were going into confederation, we were told what an advantage it would be to us in the maritime provinces to have the Intercolonial Railway built. We were told how cheaply it would cary passengers and freight between the maritime and the upper provinces and what a great advantage that would be to us. If these statements were all wrong, if it is in the interest of the Dominion that that road should be put upon a strictly commercial basis, let these hon. gentlemen say so and let us fight it out on that line.

But I ask what has that to do with the matter of investigating the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway from 1895 to the present. It is simply an attempt on the part of these gentlemen to throw dust in the eyes of the people, but they will not succeed in the slightest degree. The time has gone by for that. If there is anything the opposition have to charge against the management of the Intercolonial Railway, if they will formulate anything in the nature of a charge, I am prepared to support them to the fullest extent of my ability in obtaining a proper investigation. But they do not want any investigation, they simply want to make this proposition here in order to appear before the country as people who tried to do something and were prevented.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Wade) followed the same line here that he did in the committee, a line, which, in my judgment, is entirely wrong. Both he and the Minister of Finance took the ground that the members of the Public Accounts Committee had no right to ask that a witness be called before that committee, nor had they any right to go back beyond the year for which the Public Accounts and the Auditor General's Report were referred to the committee, unless they are prepared to make a charge in that committee, on their responsibility as members of parliament. If the hon. gentleman knows anything about parliamentary practice, he must know that such a charge can only be made in this House and not in the committee. Both the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Finance also took the ground that this was a fishing inquiry, which should not be allowed. But what is the Public Accounts Committee for, but for fishing inquiries. All the accounts of the year are sent to that committee, and we are instructed to examine them in order to ascertain if the public money has been properly expended. And the committee has the power to subpœna witnesses, to examine them under oath, and compel them to give evidence. In that committee we are doing the duty which the House imposed upon us, when the House referred to us the Public Accounts and the Auditor General's Report for the purpose of investigation. Of necessity therefore our inquiries are in the nature of fishing inquiries. We do not start by making charges. That is not the function of the Public Accounts Committee. What we desire is to inquire into all expenditure—to carry on a fishing expedition, and that is particularly the duty of the committee. We do not make a charge, because that committee is not the place to make them. The committee is not for the purpose of inquiring into charges. There is no charge made when the House sends the accounts to the Public Accounts Committee and tells us go into them. But we were not allowed to call a witness we required. The first obstruction we met with was the refusal of the majority of the committee to allow us to call witnesses. Why was our request refused? No doubt because something might be brought out which would enable us to carry the investigation further and show up wrong-doing. That is the only presumption which we can draw. Why did the majority of the committee not allow Mr. Archibald, the engineer of the road, to go before it? Was there anything to conceal? So far as my memory goes, that was the first time the Public Accounts Committee was refused the right to call before it any witness it desired, in order to get any light on the question under consideration. If there was nothing to hide, there could have been no object in refusing to allow Mr. Archibald to go before the committee. And we have the right therefore to presume that there was some wrong-doing behind, which these hon. gentlemen did not desire to be brought to light. What right has the committee to summon witnesses? Exactly the same right as the House of Commons. It is laid down unmistakably that the Public Accounts Committee has the right to summon any witness required to give information with regard to any item under consideration. Then, when we brought witnesses before the committee and asked questions designed to bring out information which we deemed it to be in the public interest to make known, they told the witnesses that they need not answer the question. The hon. gentleman was like a lawyer instructing his client. Is this the duty of a member of the committee? He abandons his place and becomes a counsel for the witness rather than a member of the committee. But there is the rule that governs witnesses brought before this House and the same rule applies to witnesses before the committee.

A witness who neglects or refuses to obey the order of the House will be sent for in the custody of the Serjeant-at-Arms. Any person refusing to obey this or any other order may be declared guilty of contempt of the House and brought before it in custody that he may be dealt with according to its will and pleasure.

And the same applies to a committee of the House, only the course is for the committee to report to the House, and the House has the right to take action. Then they refused to allow the inquiry to go beyond the year of the public accounts that were referred to us. What has been the course for years with regard to such a matter? The course has been to refer the question to the House and for the House to give the committee the necessary power. Here is a case, to be found at page 350 of the Journals of the House of Commons for 1891:

Mr. Sproule, from the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, presented to the House the fifth report of the said committee, which was read as followeth:—

The following resolution as a recommendation:

Resolved, that all accounts for salaries and extra services or otherwise with the Post Office Department in regard to the following persons, namely: J. G Poston, A. C. McDonald, M. P. Wright, E. A. LeSueur, Miss Kate E. Falconer, Miss J. Craig, Miss A. Graham and A. E. Meighen, together with all cheques given in payment of such accounts, and any and all cheques, vouchers, receipts and other papers in any way relating to their respective services, for the fiscal year 1887-88 and 1888-89; and all the cheques, accounts and receipts for payments of every kind in connection with the Emerson, Deloraine and Gretna immigration stations in the North-west, for the financial years 1886-87, 1888 and 1889, be produced forthwith for the use of the Public Accounts Committee.

And in another case we went back nine years. The House never refused a request of this kind. But here the committee refuses to go into the inquiry except for one year, and when we desire to report it to the House and ask the authority of the House to enter upon the whole inquiry, we are refused. And when we attempt in this House to revive the question and to get the necessary authority of the House, every subterfuge is resorted to, the hon. gentleman's motion is ruled out of order——

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. gentleman that the word 'subterfuge,' as applied to the action of any member of the House, is not a proper word.

Mr. SPROULE. All I can say is that every effort of ingenuity that the hon. gentleman could suggest is made use of to prevent us getting this question before the House, to prevent us, in fact, from properly discharging our duties as members of that committee. If there is nothing to hide, why are we refused this right? Why are witnesses told not to answer questions? Why is not the engineer of the road brought before us? Why cannot we get the information that the Public Accounts Committee has the right to get? Why all this attempt to prevent information being made public, if there is nothing to hide? The only conclusion that we can come to is that there is something to hide, and that this is the reason why we find ministers going beyond their duty and refusing to allow the committee of this House to perform the duty assigned to it by this House of Commons.

Mr. FRASER. There is no need of quarrelling about this matter, but there is need of knowing where we stand. Reference was made to myself, and I wish to state just how this matter came up, and what I think about it. I thought, and I still think, that the committee has only a delegated power, that, like any other committee of parliament, it is to do certain things which are named by this House, and beyond that it has no power to go.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the hon. gentleman if it is not the fact that from time to time the House sends further instructions to the committee?

Mr. FRASER. Decidedly.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what we want.

Mr. FRASER. This House has power to order a committee to inquire into the public acounts from confederation down to the present time, if it sees fit to do so. But that is not the question. My point is that there were certain things referred to that committee. Beyond the things thus referred to it, the committee had no power to go. It was absurd to ask that committee of its own power to inquire into a single dollar outside the book of the Auditor General and the public accounts that were referred to us. That was my decision. And the only way we could get further instructions was for the committee to come back to the House and ask for those instructions.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what we are doing.

Mr. FRASER. This is the right place to get those instructions. But, I stated in committee as chairman, when the point was raised, that I did not propose, for one, that this parliament should be able to snub us for going beyond the powers they gave. Now, what has been asked here? I venture to make the statement—and I have looked over all the votes and proceedings from confederation down to the present time, but if I have overlooked anything I should be glad to be corrected—that never was it proposed that accounts from one year to another relating in a general way to one or to all departments should be submitted to the Public Accounts Committee. Let me give some cases showing what I mean. The whole point at issue here is whether the House should give general instructions to the committee to inquire into all the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway from 1896 down to the present time, or whether certain specific accounts are to be submitted to the committee. Now, for example:

Mr. Wallace, from the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, presented to the House the fourth report of the said committee, which was read, as followeth :—

The following resolution as a recommendation :—

Resolved that in regard to the sum of $600, charged in the public accounts for 1885 and 1886, as paid to one Fournier, as caretaker of the immigration office at Emerson, it being alledged that said Fournier was not such caretaker, and that the office in question then and since has continued under the management of one Têtu, your committee recommend that they be empowered to investigate all amounts paid to or through said Têtu, or in connection with any office or public service under his charge.

There is a specific charge and a specific statement of accounts. Will any hon. members say that this House would ever in order to get at that question of account of $600 paid to one Fournier, adopt a resolution that the public accounts for the year 1895-96, in connection with the Department of the Interior, under which this immigration branch is carried on, were to be investigated by the committee ? That would be as sensible a resolution as the one before us. Now anybody can see a very good reason. There is not a lawyer or a layman here but can see that the reason why you must be specific is that it saves time, and you will not have to go to a lot of useless expenditure in getting witnesses about a matter that is not specific. Here is another :

On motion of Mr. Somerville :

That all accounts in the Department of the Interior for salaries paid and for extra work done during the years from 1884 to July 1, 1896, inclusive, together with all the cheques and other vouchers for payment of the same, be produced forthwith before the Select Standing Committee.

There is a specific thing. Then I find another one here by the hon. gentleman himself. On motion of Mr. Sproule it was ordered :

That all accounts for salaries and express services or otherwise with the Post Office Department in regard to the following persons, namely : J. G. Poston, A. C. Macdonald, M. P. Wright, E. A. LeSueur, Miss Kate E. Falconer, Miss J. Craig, Miss A. Graham and A. E. Meighen, together with all cheques given in payment of such accounts, and any and all cheques, vouchers, receipts and other papers in any way relating to their respective services, for the fiscal years 1887-8, and 1888-9 ; and all the cheques, accounts and receipts for payments of every kind, be produced forthwith for the use of the Public Accounts Committee.

That is the hon. gentleman's own resolution. He must have been very far astray or his motion would have been this : Resolved that all accounts in connection with the Post Office Department for the fiscal years named be forthwith produced and handed into the committee. But he did not do that then, he could not do it, and he knew it, because parliament would never have permitted it. Parliament understands that you go on one year at a time with your accounts. Now after giving five successive years in the Public Accounts Committee, after considering five sets of accounts for five years, all the hon. member has to do is to rise and move that the whole accounts for the last five years be submitted to that committee again in addition to the work they are doing this year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman look at the journals for 1891, page 355 :

On motion of Mr. Wallace, seconded by Mr. Roome, ordered : That all accounts and payments for equipment and supplies for the Printing Bureau, also, the accounts, vouchers, and cheques for the following payments for the years 1888-9 be referred.

Mr. FRASER. Very well, I will take that instance to prove my case, I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WADE. He only read half of it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. With your permission, I will read the whole of it.

Mr. FRASER. Here it is :

That all accounts and payments for equipment and supplies for the Printing Bureau.

That would be the same as saying here that all accounts and payments for equipment and supplies for the engines, or for any particular year, which would be perfectly legitimate.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. For the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. FRASER. Excuse me, the equipment and supplies for the Printing Bureau is a particular building, and you can get at it any time ; it is not the whole supply for the department throughout :

Also, the accounts, vouchers and cheques for the following payments, as found in the report of the Auditor General on appropriation accounts, for the following years : 1888-89, J. L. McDougall, $26.60 ; J. B. Lynch, $70.55 ; J. Gorman, $26.90 ; F. Hayter, $73.95 ; 1887-88, J. L. McDougall, $103.65; James Patterson, $50.00 ; F. Hayter, $222.35 ; 1886-87, J. L. McDougall, $50.78 ; F. Hayter, $218.15 ; 1885-86, J. L. McDougall, $17.75 ; John Gorman, $86.67, be produced forthwith.

Where is there anything like that in the hon. gentleman's resolution ? I appeal to him as a man of very great ability, as I consider him—where is the similarity ? I would not be so particular if the hon. gentleman had not mentioned the names of the parties, but if he would say all accounts, as the minister offered him, in connection with so many locomotives of such a year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is too fair now to do anything wrong. The statement was made that I only read half the resolution. It is the first part of the resolution which says that every account in reference to the Printing Bureau should be referred to the committee. Besides that, it says also the following accounts.

Mr. FRASER. Nobody denies that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The inference was that I concealed a portion of it.

Mr. FRASER. I do not know what is the matter with the hon. gentleman opposite. I never saw him so peppery in my life.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not like to be accused of garbling anything.

Mr. FRASER. I cannot understand it, they are not themselves at all. The hon. member for Lanark cannot sit still. His motion is circular and ambidextrous, vaulting and changing. Let us look at this as reasonable men ought to :

All accounts and payments for equipment and supplies for the Printing Bureau——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. For the two years.

Mr. FRASER. There is no year mentioned at all.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I beg your pardon, immediately afterwards you will find it is for 1888-9.

Mr. FRASER. I will read the words relating to the Printing Bureau again, and these are the only words :

That all accounts and payments for equipment and supplies for the Printing Bureau, also the accounts, vouchers and cheques for the following payments.

That is all, there is nothing about the Printing Bureau.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Read the whole of it.

Mr. FRASER. When I was a boy I was considered a fairly good reader. Let me read it again :

Some hon. MEMBERS. Spell it for him.

Mr. FRASER. It is not fair for any hon. gentleman to call in another reader.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Spell it.

Mr. BROCK. You are wrong.

Mr. FRASER. No, no. Now, I will read it again for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), after he has satisfied himself by the cool headed reading of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) that he or I, one or the other, is correct. Does the hon. gentleman want me to read it again ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. FRASER. After the trip the hon. gentleman made to have himself reassured by the cool headed, clear brained member for Hamilton he will be satisfied that I am right.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No.

Mr. FRASER. Well, I will read it again.

That all accounts and payments for equipment and supplies for the Printing Bureau ;

Semi-colon.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART.

Also, the accounts, vouchers and cheques for the follwing payments, as found in the report of the Auditor General on appropriation accounts, for the following years : 1888-89, J. L. McDugall, $26.60 ; J. B. Lynch, $70.55 ; J. Gorman, $26.90 ; F. Hayter, $73.95 :

Colon.

1887-88, J. L. McDougall, $103.65 ; James Patterson, $50.00 ; F. Hayter, $222.35 :

Colon.

1886-87, J. L. McDougall, $50.78 ; F. Hayter, $218.15 :

Colon.

1885-86, J. L. McDougall, $17.75 ; John Gorman, $85.67, be produced forthwith——

Mind you.

--be produced forthwith for the use of the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the seventh report of the said committee.

There is not a word there except that the accounts and payments for equipment and supplies for the Printing Bureau—and if the year is not mentioned it must mean the year—be produced also with the accounts I have named.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You say it is confined to the year 1891. What was the need of a resolution calling for the production of the accounts for the year ?

Mr. FRASER. Probably the hon. gentleman and some of his friends were refusing to bring them down, and we had to move that resolution. I care not what the reason may be ; I am quoting the words of that resolution and I am explaining them as any English words ought to be explained. I will leave it to any hon. gentleman if they do not mean exactly what I say. There is not a word about the year. What foolish people there were here in 1891. I was here, and I was one of the idiotic members that thought that ought to be done. We had not learned then that we could go over a whole series of years, bring down all the papers and submit to the poor overworked Public Accounts Committee the accounts of the Dominion of Canada, amounting to $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 a year, for the last five or six years. The hon. gentleman will not deny that his resolution is untenable. He might have added to the resolution that the public accounts relating to every dollar of payments from 1885 to the present time should be inquired into. You cannot draw the line in one case and not in the other, and consequently you might as well go back to 1890. I know we will be a long time here, but I am afraid our grand-children would be here if we were to undertake to go into all these accounts from that time to the present. I have mentioned a case only to show how wrong the thing is. I do not think hon. gentlemen opposite, if they wisely consider the matter, would desire that a resolution should be adopted for the first time deviating from anything we ever did in parliament or that ever happened in any other parliament. I make the statement subject to correction by those who are better students than I am, and who may have studied it more closely, that there has never been a resolution like this introduced into any parliament in Canada, and I am certain that no such legislation was ever introduced into the parliament of Great Britain, because we have been following the British parliament as closely as possible in this respect. If, in the committee, you name a certain account, or any number of accounts and say, first, I believe there is something wrong about this, or, secondly, I desire that we shall inquire into this to ascertain whether there is anything wrong or not, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) says that you shall have any specific account that you name. Does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) know that that is reasonable, that it is fair and just? Does he desire that we shall establish in this parliament a precedent that no parliament has adopted? Had we not better keep to the land marks that have been found useful in the past? For myself—I may be wrong and I speak subject to correction—I say that I do not think so lightly of the chairman's position as that it implies that he is simply to keep order. I did not accept that when the point was raised as to contracts made since the report of the Auditor General was published and the accounts to be paid in this present year, showing what amount of money was to be expended this year. I had to decide that was not within the scope of our reference, and I think I was right.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You were right in that.

Mr. FRASER. I did not think it was within the scope of our reference, and I do not think that hon. gentleman opposite will say that I drove any partisan ruling to the length of excluding anything which it was the right of the committee to inquire into. I have read this and I submit to hon. gentlemen opposite that we ought not to pass the resolution which the hon. gentleman has made here. I am sorry that the midland leader of the opposition is not here. I really was amused, and I was no more amused than I think were some hon. gentlemen opposite. We may make mistakes in parliament. We may sometimes get a little worked up, we may perhaps make statements with a good deal more emphasis than is necessary, but it was to me the most laughable scene that I have ever witnessed when, with twice the energy, twice the exertion and ten times the hard saying that were necessary, we saw that hon. gentleman calling in fault the Minister of Railways and Canals, reading him a lecture in tones that were so stentorian—as loud as my own, and that is saying a good deal—that they could be heard in any part of Ottawa. If we rebuke, let us rebuke decently after the manner and method as proposed by the apostle.

Mr SAMUEL BARKER (Hamilton). I think the question before the House is one simply of principle. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) chose not to treat the question as one of principle, but rather sought, I think, to enter into a discussion here, to-night, as to whether the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), or other hon. members of the committee had succeeded in the Public Accounts Committee in proving anything at all after all their labours. I do not propose to follow the minister in that line; I do not think it has anything to do with the question before the House. The Minister of Railways will probably hear a good deal about what is passing in the committee before this session is brought to an end. Let me say to the hon. gentleman from Annapolis (Mr. Wade) that while he professes to be so precise and accurate, he gave utterance to a most extraordinary statement when he said that the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) left the committee perfectly satisfied with what took place. Nothing could be more contrary to the fact than that statement. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) must know that immediately on the committee refusing to pass the resolution, the hon. member (Mr. Haggart) asked that the proceedings be reported so that he could bring the question before the House. A moment afterwards the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) suggested that we should divide the committee on the question, and the chairman ruled that it was too late, because the resolution had been carried to report the matter to the House. The hon. member for Lanark then said: I will bring it before the House in its present shape. In face of that, how can the hon. gentleman for Annapolis say that the hon. gentleman from Lanark left the committee perfectly satisfied. I merely mention that to show how an hon. gentleman can either misconceive or forget what took place in the committee.

Now, Sir, the Minister of Railways undoubtedly did say that if the member for Lanark would point out any particular subjects he would consent to investigating them. The Minister of Railways and Canals said that once; he said it twice; I think he said it a third time; but every time he said that, the Minister of Finance, who was at his elbow, added: 'upon the order of the House.' It is quite true that the Minister of Railways was very generous, but his language was qualified by the words of the Minister of Finance, and we who were about the table heard the qualification and the member for Gusborough (Mr. Fraser) heard it also. Although the member for Gusborough now tells us that we ought to be content with what the hon. Minister of Railways promised, we have to take the language of the Minister of Railways as qualified by the Minister of Finance. Even without that qualification, it was not our duty to accept the proposition made by the hon. Minister of Railways. We were there investigating—practically auditing—the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway for the year in question, and it was not for us to leave to the Minister of Railways to decide whether we should investigate any subject out of that year or not. If we had the right we did not require his consent, but when the minister refused his consent the resolution was moved in the committee to request authority from the House for us to go outside the accounts of the particular year in question. The question now before the House is, whether it is reasonable to give the committee authority to investigate beyond the accounts of this particular year. On that subject I propose to say a few words. We do not ask to go into all the dealings of the government during the last five years; we simply ask authority to look into the administration of the Intercolonial Railway during the period of years in which the Minister of Railways has been pursuing a particular policy. There is hardly a single item in the whole accounts now under investigation that is not closely related to certain other expenditures in almost every year since the present government has been in power; there is hardly an item in the present accounts that is not affected by expenditure that is going on to-day. That is shown by the very question upon which this whole trouble arose in the committee. The enormous amount of money which the minister has expended for heavy locomotives was under consideration, and the member for Lanark in trying to show that that expenditure was unwise and improvident, proceeded to examine the witness as to the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars two years ago for these heavy locomotives, and as to the fact that they could not yet be used between Quebec and Montreal, because the bridges on the Drummond County road are not strong enough to carry them. Is not that connected with the wise or unwise expenditure of money in 1900? Surely it is proper criticism to show that the Minister of Railways had bought these locomotives two years before he could use them. Take almost any item in the accounts and the same principle is involved. Take the expenditure in the city of St. John, N.B. Year after year for several years the Minister of Railways has incurred enormous expenditure there, amounting to about $1,000,000, and you cannot to-day properly discuss one dollar of that whole expenditure without reference to every dollar which has been spent in St. John. An elevator has been built, and surely it is a question as to the expenditure in 1900, whether that elevator has been properly built or not. Why, Sir, the Minister of Railways has charged in 1900 some $17,000 for marsh land that he bought in St. John to build sidings upon; he charged to that year $46,000 for material with which he proposed to lay twelve or thirteen miles of sidings, but to this hour there is only one mile of siding built, although $46,000, in addition to the $17,000 for land, was expended in 1900. Surely in criticising that expenditure we should have the right to go into the question as to whether the minister has even this year got these sidings laid. The minister admits, I believe, that he has only laid one mile, and are we not entitled, as of right to ask by what authority he spent over $60,000 in 1900 for sidings that are not in existence to this very hour. Is it reasonable to say that the committee can investigate railway accounts which run from year to year, and that we must be confined to the actual dollars and cents that are spent between the 30th June, 1900, and the 30th of June, 1901, without having power to inquire into the hundreds of thousands of dollars which have been spent before and after? That is the position we are in. We want to know if the House will consent to that state of affairs. When a witness is under examination and we are asking him questions about the expenditure in 1900, we want the power to ask him such questions as will show whether that expenditure was reasonable or not. We send for a witness from Moncton; we have him before us; we enter into his examination. In the course of that examination some facts are developed which lead directly to an inquiry into what has been done before or since. Immediately the hon. gentleman says: 'You have gone out of the year; you must apply to the House for permission to ask that question.' What is the good of such an investigation? The hon. gentleman says: 'Tell us what you wish to go into, and I will let you go into it.' The question is not what the minister will let us do; the question is what we should have the power to do.

Let me put another case. In 1900 the hon. gentleman brought down an estimate and got the authority of this House to spend $39,000 at Sydney. How much did the hon. gentleman spend? He spent something like $137,000 on his authority to spend $39,000. He charged $41,000 of that to another item, and he came down in 1901 and got the authority of the House for $57,000 of what had been spent a year before. There is thus an expenditure in 1900 with authority extending over two years. Are we to be confined to just the particular year, or must we on every occasion come down to this House and explain all the circumstances, and ask the authority to ask a particular question of a particular witness; and must we let that witness stand over until the next meeting of the committee until we get that authority? We are not seeking a general sweeping power to go into all the proceedings of the government. We are asking authority to investigate the accounts in connection with a particular railway, the government railway, for the period during which it has been administered by the hon. Minister of Railways, and to see whether the dollars and cents that were spent in 1900 were properly spent, having due regard to what has happened before and since.

Now, I say that is a perfectly reasonable proposition to make to the House. I say the House ought to grant such a power, and unless they do the whole inquiry of the Public Accounts Committee, so far as it is an attempt to inquire into the administration of the railway, is a palpable farce. It cannot be otherwise. A witness comes before us. After a great deal of labour we get perhaps particular facts. Those facts lead up to further expenditures. We are stopped unless the minister chooses to say, 'You can go on.' Now, that is not right. Surely, that is not a reasonable position for a committee to be in. Why should the government object to our going back to these matters? Has there been any attempt made on the part of the committee to unwarrantably use their position? I think the Minister of Railways will say that the committee have been perfectly fair to him—every member of it without exception. We have not sought unreasonably to investigate his proceedings. There has not been one subject brought before the committee that we were not warranted in probing to the bottom, and I think it is not right, either in regard to the railway or to any other subject that has been brought up, that we should be subject to the interruptions and the objections to which we have been subjected.

I wish to refer to another case which has been alluded to on both sides of the House—a similar question as regards a witness who was called in relation to the accounts of the Minister of Public Works, and which illustrates the kind of objections we have met with in the committee. Mr. Rochester was an employee of the Public Works Department——

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend will allow me to call him to order. The motion before the House is strictly confined to the expenditure on railways, and I think my hon. friend will admit himself that it is not in order to go into anything outside of that.

Mr. BARKER. I do not wish to pursue the matter if I am not in order; but it was referred to on both sides of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. If it was, I will not press my objection.

Mr. BARKER. Mr. Rochester is an employee of the Public Works Department. He was engaged at $200 a month on the construction of the Yukon telegraph. He kept the books of Mr. Charleson. While he was so employed he conceived the idea that he could sell telegraph poles to the government at a certain price. He continued to keep the books for the government, but he dropped his salary temporarily, and he was given by Mr. Charleson a contract to supply poles to the government at $2 each. As soon as he had completed that contract he resumed his salary, and a little later on he was given a higher position at a considerably increased salary. Mr. Rochester had no transactions in the Yukon either with the government or anybody else as a trader except that one contract to supply poles to the government. He admitted that he had no other transactions and was not going to have. This gentleman was before the committee and was asked what the poles had cost him. The instant that question was put two ministers said: 'You are not obliged to answer that question.' The chief of his own department, the Minister of Public Works, was present, and this witness was cautioned that he was not obliged to answer a question that a member of this House chose to ask. I do not know what the Prime Minister will say about that. It does seem to me a most extraordinary position that an employee in the public service should be cautioned in the Public Accounts Committee that he need not answer a question. Why, Sir, what was the position of that gentleman? At the time he proposed to Mr. Charleson to supply poles to the government he was a servant of the government. He knew he could obtain the poles for less than $2 apiece, and instead of telling the government, his employer, that they could get poles at less than $2 apiece, he droped his salary for four months and entered into a contract with the government. Now, I think the man should have been obliged to answer that question. I think it was a most improper thing to warn him against answering it. The man himself did not refuse to answer until he received the hint from two ministers that he need not answer it. That does not indicate a desire on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to have that full inquiry into the public accounts that we on our side of the House think the public interest demands.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. Israel Tarte). Let me say only one word in reference to the Rochester incident. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) was not in the committee the first time the question was put to Mr. Rochester. Without any hint or intervention from any one of us, Mr. Rochester, when the question was put to him first, declined to answer. He was sustained in his refusal by the chairman, and in my opinion, very properly.

Here are the facts. Mr. Rochester was engaged by Mr. Charleson to go up the Yukon as a conductor of work. He was a man of long experience in lumbering and in the bush. Mr. Charleson made an arrangement, under which he was paying $3 for poles for the construction of the line. Mr. Rochester came to Mr. Charleson one day and told him he could supply the same poles for $2 each. Mr. Charleson thought that would be a good bargain to make, besides having the poles supplied by a man of long experience whom he knew thoroughly, and he made a contract with Mr. Rochester for $2 a pole instead of $3. Mr. Rochester who had been receiving $200 a month, ceased from that moment to be in the employ of the government. He did not receive a dollar from the department, as an employee, from the moment he became a contractor for the poles. That cannot be denied.

Mr. BARKER. He went back immediately afterwards.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Certainly, there was no reason why he should not. But during the time he was contractor, he did not get a dollar from the Department of Public Works. He then farmed out his contract to a man named Johnson, and in the committee he was asked how much he gave Johnson for the poles, and declined to answer. The first time the question was put, Mr. Rochester declined, without any hint or notification from anybody. When I interfered—and I do not deny that I interfered and told Mr. Rochester he was not bound to answer, it was simply to remind one of the members of the committee that the witness had rights which could not be taken from him. I take it that Mr. Rochester was perfectly in his right in declining to answer. My department gives out every year many contracts. Will any one say that a contractor is obliged to tell me or any committee of the House how much he pays for his material or for any sub-contract he may farm out? I have been for years a member of the Public Accounts Committee, and I never heard before a question of that kind put. When contractors are awarded contracts, they pay for their materials, men and labour or they pay their sub-contractors just what they see fit. It is no one's particular business what they pay. If my hon. friend had attempted to prove that $2 was too high a price, he might have sought for evidence to show at what prices the poles could have been obtained. But he did not attempt to do that. He could not do it, and Mr. Rochester was perfectly right in declining to say how much he had paid for his men and materials or sub-contracts. The ex-Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Haggart) was several years the head of a large department, and I would ask him if ever, on any occasion, he compelled a contractor to say how much he was paying for his material, men or sub-contracts. Such a question is never put. No one has any right to put it. We were paying $3 a pole, and Mr. Rochester furnished us the poles at a dollar each less. If there is any crime in that, I am responsible for it. But I submit that Mr. Rochester was perfectly right in declining to say how much he paid his sub-contractors. Whether he has made or lost money nobody has anyright to know.

Mr. W. B. NORTHRUP (East Hastings). The further this debate progresses, the clearer seems to be the fact that there is an impassable gulf between the members on your right, Mr. Speaker, and those on your left, regarding the principles on which legislation should be carried on in this House. We, on your left, labour under the impression that we are here as representatives of the people. Our idea is that the people of Canada have elected 215 representatives to meet in this chamber and legislate in their interest. The majority, of necessity, are bound to elect a certain committee to preside over the affairs of the country, but that committee, according to the view of gentlemen on this side, are but the servants of the people, and when we the representatives of the people meet here annually, we find that our servants have expended $40,000,000 to $65,000,000 of the public money, and we have a perfect right to know where that money has gone. But hon. gentlemen opposite seem to have the idea that as soon as, by a brute majority the estimates are passed, the money so voted becomes the absolute property of the ministers, who can do as they see fit with it without being called to account.

When the Public Accounts Committee is constituted, at the beginning of the session, I quite agree with my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) that it has only a delegated power and can only act to the extent of the powers conferred on it by this House. But it happens that the power conferred by this House, according to practice, is the power to investigate certain specific accounts. I quite agree with the chairman of the committee that when a member of the committee asks to have an investigation go beyond the period covered by the public accounts which were referred to the committee, he is perfectly justified in declining to allow the investigation to go further, but the fact that that committee finds itself unable, for any reason, to do the work which it has been appointed to perform, is a most conclusive reason why this House should clothe it with full power and authority to make whatever investigation may be necessary in the interests of the people. Let me cite an analogous case. Supposing the directors of a bank, after they had presented their balance sheet for the year, and had it audited and passed satisfactorily, were attacked at the subsequent annual meeting of the shareholders, and supposing certain shareholders said they would like to know how it was that the accounts were in such and such a condition, two or three or four years ago, could any one imagine the directors refusing to allow any investigation beyond the current year? Can it be supposed that the shareholders would submit to any such refusal, or if they did, would not public confidence in the bank be irretrievably shaken ? We appeal to hon. gentlemen to allow us to investigate the accounts. But we are met by the challenge : If you will charge that such and such a minister has done wrong, or that a certain minister has stolen such and such moneys, we will give you an investigation. But surely it is not to be assumed that a minister is a common criminal. Surely we are not going to say that everybody who is handling public money is a thief. We do not pretend to make any such charge, but we do say that an immense amount has gone through the minister's hands and the accounts are so connected that we cannot possibly investigate this year without inquiring back from one year to another, and we ask that this House should give us the right to investigate all those accounts and summon witnesses. If any hon. member should abuse the power he enjoys of having a witness called, and thus unnecessarily causes the expenditure of public money, the committee has every right to decline in future allowing such member to call witnesses.

Although the Public Accounts Committee is a comparatively large committee, everybody knows that the supporters of the government do not contribute one iota to its investigations. It is all very well to talk about hon. gentlemen opposite having an equal interest in the matter, but we know from experience that hon. gentlemen opposite, having more confidence in the ministers than we on this side, do not contribute in any degree to the investigation of the public accounts.

Therefore, Sir, the whole burden of the investigation of the public accounts falls upon hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. Now, that is a thankless task, and a task that no hon. gentleman on this side enjoys. You may be sure that any hon. gentleman who spends his time studying the public accounts and in attending the Public Accounts Committee to pursue investigations and conduct examinations is engaging in that task solely in the public interest. And the question is whether, if hon. gentlemen on this side are willing to give their time and their energy to investigating the accounts of public expenditure, hon. gentlemen opposite will assist them, or whether they will hopelessly block their inquiry. I do not intend to go into the various side issues that have been dragged into this discussion. It seems to me a very simple question, and I cannot understand why it is necessary to go into the dozen or more of outside questions that have been discussed. It cannot effect the question before us what the views of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) are with regard to the management of the Intercolonial Railway. Nor can it help us in deciding this question to discuss whether the present system is better than the old system or not. The simple question is this—the Public Accounts Committee, finding that it has no authority to carry its investigation beyond a certain period, one of its members asks that it be allowed to carry its investigations over a longer time. Shall that power be given to the committee ? We may be unable to secure that power from hon. gentlemen opposite who have a majority in this House. But there is a higher tribunal than hon. gentlemen opposite, and to that tribunal, to the people of this country, we shall appeal with confidence. The people will feel that their interests were protected by those who wished to carry on the investigation, and that their interests were opposed and overruled by those who refused this power of investigation and who say that, because during the accounts of one year nothing seriously wrong was discovered, therefore, for all time to come, no matter what suspicions may be aroused, no hon. gentleman shall be allowed to investigate the accounts unless he is ready to assume the grave responsibility of saying the minister is a thief or that some particular individual in connection with the department is a common criminal.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). As a member of the committee before which substantially this resolution was proposed, and as one who did not support the resolution, I desire to make one or two observations. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) I think, gave away the whole case in the observations he made. If I understood him correctly, he based the argument in favour of the large and comprehensive resolution now before the House upon a principle which would naturally call for at least all the accounts of the previous year. The hon. gentleman, although drawing into the arena of the discussion a large number of irrelevant facts which threw no light upon the question, made the argument upon the supposition that, during the discussion of accounts of the past year actually referred to the committee, arose items which required for their explanation some of the accounts of the previous years, therefore a resolution of this kind ought to be permitted. In other words, if it was necessary to have the light of the previous accounts on those of the present year, therefore, we ought to have all the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway for a period of five or six years. I think that the offer made by the Minister of Railways and Canals and concurred in by the committee that if any particular account were required by the committee, if the hon. gentlemen conducting the investigation deemed any account necessary to throw light upon the subject before the committee, those accounts would be laid before the committee without hesitation. The ground has been changed entirely by the resolution asking this House to dump upon the table of the Public Accounts Committee all the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway covering a period of five or six years. The hon. gentleman stated that there was a question of principle and a question of reasonableness. On the ground of reasonableness, I would base the whole argument against the passage of the resolution now before the House. It is unreasonable because of the period of the session at which we have arrived. It is unreasonable on account of the vast number and complexity of the accounts upon which the committee would have to enter. It is unreasonable because not even a prima facie case has been made out by the investigation so far conducted why these accounts should be produced. As to principle, I do not see any fundamental question of principle except the principle of procedure that has been involved, and upon that hon. gentlemen have lost all claim, for, though the records of the House for years have been investigated, no case of a demand parallel with this has been found. If papers are referred to the committee it is always upon the recommendation of the committee that accounts relating to special sums are needed. Hon. gentlemen opposite have mentioned a large number of matters and some of them quite out of order, I think. They have brought forward their own recollection of evidence which will be laid before the committee in a few days as the words were taken down. This is not fair to the House, for no matter how honestly they may intend, they may unintentionally give a prejudiced view of that evidence—and I must say that in one or two instances my own recollection differed from the version given by the hon. gentlemen. Take the case of the Rochester contract, The ground upon which the committee declined to enter into a consideration of the witness' private affairs was upon the strictly legal ground that the question asked and the facts it was intended to educe were not relevant to the inquiry before the committee. No committee, no court, no person with the slightest ideas of justice, in a matter of that kind, would for a moment permit valuable time to be taken up with evidence that was absolutely irrelevant to the inquiry.

Mr. BARKER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to say that the witness Rochester distictly gave as his answer that it was his own private business.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Which was true.

Mr. FLINT. It was his private business. That was his reason for not answering the question. But that would not necessarily have been sufficient if the question had been relevant to the inquiry. Very frequently evidence may be relevant, but it may be excluded on account of some higher principle. However undesirable evidence may appear from the standpoint of the witness, if it is held that the question is relevant and admissible upon general principles, his private feelings and private interests must give way. But the fact that the evidence was absolutely irrelevant, the fact that even if it had brought out what the hon. gentleman expected, the information would have had no bearing upon the inquiry or upon the result of it, was the reason for refusing to press the question. In fact, all the evidence the hon. gentleman required was before the committee—first, that Rochester had a contract, second that under it the poles were got for a less price than the government had been previously paying, and, third, that the gentleman had admitted that he had made a profit out of the contract. The amount of the profit, the price he gave for the poles, the details of his contract with another person, were irrelevant and improper to be introduced before the committee, because they could not have the slightest effect upon the inquiry. But that was not so much the point under consideration as the desirability of passing the resolution of the hon. gentleman from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart). It is solely on the ground of reasonableness and convenience that I object to the passage of this resolution. It would be impossible for any committee to discharge the great functions assigned to it by the House if we should act upon the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman in the case of the Public Accounts Committee, that all the accounts covering a large period of years and for all the sums expended by the department should be laid before the committee. The committee is not formed for any such purpose ; the committee has not the time nor the powers, the physical powers at any rate, to enter into such an investigation. But if a prima facie case is shown of some wrong doing, or some gross mismanagement, or some negligence which demanded further inquiry, then every person would feel impelled by a sense of public duty to insist upon the accounts bearing upon these points being laid before the committee. But the hon. gentleman appears to be seeking for a grievance, and for that purpose he has brought forward this resolution. I would call attention to a phase of the question which perhaps hon. gentlemen have not considered. The resolution is brought forward no doubt with a desire to ascertain facts beneficial to the public ; and in a secondary sense, every one supposes that the facts are sought for in the view that they might possibly throw some discredit on the administration of the Intercolonial Railway, show mismanagement in that regard, and expenses of an unreasonable character. What would follow ? Hon. gentlemen holding another view, hon. gentlemen having reason to believe that past expenses upon the Intercolonial Railway, while the Conservative party were in power, might also be discussed, the motion would be amended by adding that all accounts from 1890 be also laid before that committee. I ask hon. gentlemen where would the committee be, where would the House of Commons be, if they acceded to such a demand ? Legislation would practically be blocked, it would be impossible for any gentleman to give the necessary time to make an investigation covering so long a period. If it was shown before this committee that the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway were of such importance that a long and thorough examination of the policy and management of the railway, covering a period of ten or fifteen years, was required, there is a much better way to accomplish that end by means of a special committee of experts, with counsel on both sides, taking the whole summer and autumn to investigate and report. But to shovel upon the Table of the Public Accounts Committee this enormous mass of accounts without any definite object in view, except to fish for some evidence of mismanagement, would be an injustice to the committee, an injustice to the House, and unfair to the administration of that great public work.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). It seems to me that after all that has been said hon. gentlemen opposite fail to understand the duty we owe to those whom we represent. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Flint) speaks of a royal commission as being more suitable than the Committee of Public Accounts to make this investigation. Now, I assume that the public understand this matter in an entirely different light. They are told that we have the Auditor General, a gentleman who is to a large extent removed from the arena and influence of politics, and who is in the first instance responsible to the people for the proper audit of the accounts of the Dominion. After he has audited those accounts, as I understand the matter, the Public Accounts Committee, if they are an instrument of parliament for any purpose, have a subsequent duty to perform regarding these accounts ; they have to make an investigation more thorough and more searching than that of the Auditor General, in order to instruct the people of the exact position of affairs, and to show whether they have been administered honesty and judiciously. I understand the function of a government to be, not to block the inquiry in any way, but, whilst endeavouring to show that they have done what is right, at the same time to afford every facility for a reasonable investigation of those accounts. It has been said, and I think very justly, that no great attempt is made by those supporting the government to investigate these accounts or to facilitate the investigation. In fact any one who attends the Public Accounts Committee must be struck by the anxiety of more than one gentleman supporting the government, not to facilitate the investigation, but in the direction of burking the investigation so far as they possibly can. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat speaks of a fishing inquiry. The hon. gentleman from Annapolis (Mr. Wade) seems to repudiate the idea that this is in any sense a fishing investigation. While I do not adopt the phrase 'fishing inquiry,' I do say that it is an investigation for the purpose of finding out the state of the accounts. We are not discharging our duty if we assume that they are correct ; we are not bound, in the discharge of our duty, to assume that the ministers are dishonest, but we are bound to call upon the ministry to furnish sufficient evidence that these accounts are correct and honest, and in investigating that matter we are bound to ask the government for, and the government is bound to furnish us with, every reasonable evidence to satisfy us and the public in that regard. Now the hon. member for Annapolis, who comes forward occasionally and adds his weight to the argument, told us incidentally in connection with a fishing inquiry that we had no bait. I do not know what he means by that, I do not know what kind of bait would be proper with which to angle the hon. gentleman from Annapolis. I do not know what kind of bait is required in order to draw forth the information we want. I understand that when we formulate a request for information in a matter, that ought to be sufficient, and hon. gentlemen representing the administration should be the last to throw an obstacle in our way. But to-night we are met with the contention of hon. members opposite that we have no precedent for anything of this kind. I have not been able to remain in the House during all the time the discussion has been going on, and I do not know to what extent quotations have been made. But I will refer the House to a precedent. In 1886, on the 19th of March, we had a motion by Mr. Davies, and it was ordered, that :

> The items of the expenses for the year 1884 on the Dalhousie Branch of the Intercolonial Railway, contained on page 259, part II of the public accounts of that year, were referred to the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

That is one precedent that seems to be fairly analogous to the one that we are dealing with now. This was a motion concerning the expenditure in the year 1884 ; and in 1897, on the 19th of May, we find that, on motion of Mr. Lister, it was ordered:

> That all accounts for timber, lumber, &c., furnished to the government for use on the Welland canal, from and including the year 1885 together with all advertisements and notices inviting tenders, the tenders received, and all contracts entered into for such timber, &c., together with all letters from officials of the government to the department relating to the same, and copies of all returns to the House respecting the same matter, be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts for examination and investigation.

Now, to-night we have heard a reference made to the examination of Mr. Rochester. I was in the committee at the time that Mr. Rochester was under examination, and although I am almost as modest and bashful as the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade), I did feel called upon to intervene at the time and I have a very clear recollection of what took place. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) has spoken to-night. When we made the statement in reference to Mr. Rochester that he was a gentleman in the employment of the government, and when we ventured to say that he was a servant of Canada, he (Mr. Tarte) repudiated it and said that he was not a servant of Canada. We said that he was a servant of Canada and that therefore he was obliged to furnish us with a correct and clear statement of all the transactions in which he had been mixed up as far as the government was concerned of which he was a servant. We said that at all events he was a servant of the administration. He was hired and paid a regular salary by the administration. During that time, and the government seemed to have allowed him to do so, he went into a little speculation on his own account. In the course of that speculation he entered transactions in the government accounts and he also entered in the same accounts what he was pleased to term his private affairs. He was not alert on that point. He was asked some questions by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) and by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) in the committee and he was not evidently prepared to take the position that they were private affairs. But, what do we find ? We find that the ministers of the Crown, men whom he was supposed to serve in their capacity as representing the people of Canada, telling him not to answer. They said : You are not compelled to answer those questions ; those are your private affairs. I submit that when we come to this stage of public life in Canada, when we have ministers of the Crown, whose accounts are under investigation, professing that they have nothing to fear, that they desire a full and fair investigation, suggesting to a witness not to answer, when a man working for them, who, in keeping his accounts mixes his private accounts with his public accounts, who acts upon that suggestion and refuses to answer, we have a disgraceful state of things in the Dominion of Canada. But, we went a good deal further than that. I raised the question before the chairman of the committee and the hon. Minister of Public Works, who intervened and prevented the question from being answered, undertook to defend his course. I should say that I had claimed that if an objection was taken it could only be taken by the witness, and could not be suggested by any member of parliament, or by any member of the committee, and much less could it be suggested by any hon. gentleman whose accounts were under investigation. I submit that the intervention of the Crown was unfair. The hon. Minister of Public Works got up to defend it and among the other arguments he used was this : He said that if a witness is being cross-examined and the judge thinks it is unfair, it is the duty of the judge to interfere. Why, Mr. Speaker, are hon. gentlemen not driven to desperation for an argument in a case of that kind ? I ask the House who are the judges in this matter. The hon. Minister of Public Works and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, are on trial in this investigation and the committee are their judges and should decide whether a witness should answer the question or not. I submit that if we are to have responsible government in this country at all, if it is true that the members who are sent to parliament are charged with the duty of investigating these accounts, it is also true that the people have a right to know whether or not public accounts are honest. If that is true, then, it must come to this sooner or later that whenever a responsible member of parliament, whether he is on the opposition or the government side, shall ask that further evidence be given in an investigation of the public accounts it must be granted. So, I submit to the administration that unless they are going before the people to admit beyond all question and cavil that they have something to fear and that they do fear the result, unless they are prepared to take that alternative, they have no other course open to them than to grant an investigation into this matter.

Mr. C. S. HYMAN (London). Mr. Speaker. The hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Lennox) seems to object strenuously to the use of the term 'fishing expedition', yet his whole argument, as presented to the House, practically is made upon the principle of a fishing expedition. Whatever effect his argument may have had upon members on this side of the House, I am very glad to know that he has convinced the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Rosamond). The hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Northrup) said that the people ought to know how their money is spent and I quite agree with that principle, and I have only a few words to say in regard to the motion before the House and in regard to a particular point which has not been touched upon. The motion made by the hon. member for South Lanark is :

That the Committee of Public Accounts be empowered to make inquiries into any expenditure on the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways from the year 1893 to the present date.

Now, it would seem from the motion, that the Public Accounts Committee have not been able, during their sittings, to make inquiries into the public accounts from 1895 to the present day. As every hon. member of this House knows, and knows perfectly well, the Public Accounts Committee in the different years from 1895 to the present time have been seized with the power of making the most searching investigation into all the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway. In the year 1896 they had full and adequate power to make a full inquiry into the working of the Intercolonial Railway in 1895; in 1897 they had full and adequate power to make an inquiry into all the accounts of that railway for the year 1896, so in 1898, so in 1899, so in 1900, so in 1901, and so in 1902. We may fairly take the view that as in the case of sustaining a report made by a committee of this House; that unless some new facts are elicited we should sustain the ruling of the committee. We may fairly say that before we consent to go back through a whole number of years to allow a fishing expedition, there should be some responsibility thrown on the member or members of this House who desire to take such action. It is only fair to ask that there ought to be some specific statement made on the responsibility of a member of parliament in support of such a demand being made on the House. Neither the Minister of Railways nor any member on this side of the House objects to a proper inquiry, however full may it be. We have no objection to a proper inquiry into any specific subject, and that has been stated over and over again by the hon. minister. There is no objection to inquiry being made over all these years into the purchase of engines or into the purchase of anything else, but it is surely a fair ground to take, that unless some hon. member on his responsibility demands an investigation into a specific matter, this House should not sanction the kind of inquiry which the amendment proposes we should sanction.

House divided on the amendment (Hon. Mr. Haggart.)

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) has not voted.

Mr. PRINGLE. I am paired with the hon. the Minister of Justice. If I were not paired, I would have voted for the amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Harbours and rivers—Yukon Territory, $50,000.

Mr. MONK. Who is the engineer in charge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The engineer now is Mr. Paul Mercier. He was last year with Mr. Taché. He is going up again to finish the work we began last year and the year before.

Dredging, $619,000.

Mr. WILSON. We should have some explanation of this very large item. The word 'plant' is mentioned in the estimates several times. It would seem as if we needed to build a great many dredges to require all this plant.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The word 'plant' means a new dredge; not plant to build a dredge.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the minister entertain the same views as he did a while ago ? Suppose we allow some of these items to pass without discussion, will the minister hold next session that we have no right to inquire into the expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never held these views.

Mr. INGRAM. But the hon. gentleman a short time ago, because we allowed an item to pass without discussion, said that we had no right to re-open the discussion upon it. If the hon. gentleman holds that view now, we want to know it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never heard that view.

Mr. MONK. Have we now a sufficient supply of dredging plant to do our own dredging, or are these items for dredging to be done by contract ? I believe myself that we ought to be able to provide ourselves with sufficient dredges; but if we do that we should not need to have any dredging done by other people.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sorry to say that for this year I shall be obliged to hire some dredges. My hon. friend would be surprised at the list of demands made upon my department for dredging. The water is falling in all parts of the lakes and rivers, and trade is expanding. It is the part of my department in which I receive the greatest number of demands. I hope that by next year we shall be sufficiently equipped to do our own work. The two or three new dredges which we are building now I hope will enable us to do the work ourselves, and at a cheaper rate than we have done it at in the past.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to know if this vote contemplates dredging around the piers at Cape Tormentine for the convenience of the winter boats ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, the order was given three or four days ago for a dredge to go and do the work at Cape Tormentine, which is a very necessary work indeed.

Mr. MONK. I notice that for Quebec and Ontario the same amount is asked for this year for dredging by contract that was asked for last year, and yet we are spending a great deal of money for the purpose of providing ourselves with dredging plant.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This $75,000 is not for contract work. It is to pay the wages and the working expenses of our own dredges. It will also include some outside dredges.

Mr. McCREARY. Before the item for dredging in Manitoba passes, I would like to say that I observe with pleasure that the minister has added $4,000 to the vote. I presume that is to improve the dredge 'Sir Hector' at the mouth of the Red river. That dredge was constructed I think about 1882. It is in a very bad state at the present time. The coal barge is out of repair, and things are in rather a deplorable condition. It may be news to some of the members present that we have in the province of Manitoba some very large lakes, like Lake Winnipeg, which is in extent in Canada next to Lake Superior, also Lake Manitoba and Lake Winnipegosis. Then, there are the rivers running into those lakes. Recently there has been established on the shore of Lake Manitoba very important gypsum works, and there are other industries on Lake Winnipeg, and we feel seriously the need of more dredging to be done on those lakes and rivers to enable steamers to get about. I would like the minister, in the supplementary estimates, to include enough to put the dredge 'Sir Hector' into proper shape and to provide a new coal barge. A very strong petition was sent in from the Board of Trade of Winnipeg asking that a snag boat be put on the Red river in order to clear the river of trees and stumps and boulders from Lake Winnipeg to the boundary line. There are important stone quarries on the shores of Lake Winnipeg, which could be made available for both Manitoba and Dakota if the river were navigable to vessels drawing five or ten feet of water ; but these vessels cannot get up the river unless it is cleared of these obstacles. Some dredging should also be done on Lake Manitoba, part of which is in my county, and in which there are no harbours. The Northern Pacific built a branch line to Delta on Lake Manitoba, and built a wharf there 1,800 feet long ; but vessels are unprotected on account of there being no harbour. I think the minister would do well to put a little more into his estimates this year and more next year for the purpose of dredging these lakes and rivers.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I fully recognize the importance of the representation which the hon. gentleman has made to me both this year and last year. I hope my colleagues will allow me an amount in the estimates for building a snag boat, and I trust that next season that will be in working order.

Mr. WADE. I would like to ask the minister if the fact has been brought to his attention that during the recent extraordinary floods on La Haye river an enormous amount of silt has been brought down and forms an obstruction to navigation over a considerable area, and particularly at the anchorage where vessels go to load lumber, and if it is his intention to do anything to remove it. I understand that some dredging of the river is in contemplation as soon as the dredge which is now being built is completed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have given instructions that some means be taken to remove the accumulation to which my hon. friend has referred, and I hope they will be successful. With the powerful new dredge which we are building at Sorel for the maritime provinces, and which I hope will be ready for the next season, I expect to give a satisfaction that we could not possibly give hitherto. That dredge, if I may say so, will be, I hope the most complete and most perfect in the world, as we have taken advantage of all the progress that has been made in the building of dredges. This dredge is being built on Canadian soil by Canadian hands and with Canadian material; we imported only one man from England, and I hope it will prove that we can build dredges and ships in Canada just as well as they can be built on the other side of the line or on the other side of the ocean.

Mr. MONK. We only want to confine our remarks to the general principles of the administration of the department. I would suggest that my hon. friend have his office open at stated hours, when we could interview him and complain of the wants of different localities. We want to get through the estimates as quickly as possible.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not adverse to being criticised, because I fully recognize that complaints lead to very good results sometimes.

Mr. MONK. I would like to have some dredging done in my county. I presume the minister will be able to receive my complaint in regard to that matter.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I received a few days ago a petition from Judge Davidson for dredging in my hon. friend's county. My hon. friend asked for part of it last year, and this year, at the request of Judge Davidson, I will do the rest.

Mr. MONK. I am perfectly satisfied.

Mr. BOYD. Before the item passes, I wish to draw the attention of the hon. minister to the promise he made last year that he would have some dredging done on the west shore of Lake Manitoba. The hon. minister also promised that a wharf would be built. I understood that he had an engineer examining that work, but that is all that has been done. I would like to ask him what he proposes to do. A great deal of fishing is done on the lake, and there are settlers, such as the Icelanders and some half-breeds, located at various points, to whom it would be a great accommodation if other means were provided them of getting their supplies across than the one vessel that is now on the lake. Heretofore they have had to put up a staging in the shape of wharfs for themselves.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Unfortunately we have no dredge available. I have tried to buy the dredge of Mr. Lemoine, used for the cut we made to regulate the water, but have not been able to do so on account of some difficulty in getting a deed. But I think I will be shortly able to get that dredge. My hon. friend last year called my intention to the importance of this dredging, and I said I would do it, and I now give a reason why I have been unable to do it. If in a week or two we have a dredge I will have the work done.

Dredging—British Columbia, $30,000.

Mr. EARLE. Is any portion of this to be applied to the dredging of Victoria harbour.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are using the new suction dredge that used to work on the Fraser river, now in Victoria harbour.

Mr. EARLE. The hon. minister only applies this to the filling of the flats and not to the general dredging of the harbour. Just previous to the last election, he pledged himself to do work for the filling of the flats, but the harbour has been silting up for years, and representations have been made to the department over and over again to have dredging done in the harbour. As the tonnage of the harbour is very large, it would be only right that some portion of this vote should be applied to the general dredging of Victoria harbour.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I wish to correct my hon. friend. It was after the elections that I pledged myself.

Mr. EARLE. My memory is very good, and I know that just before the elections the cry was : Elect Riley and get the dredge. If you elect Riley, you willl have the dredge.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. You will have both the dredge and Riley.

Mr. EARLE. No doubt we will have the dredge, but I want to call attention to the fact that the general dredging of the harbour requires to be done besides special work.

St. Maurice district—Improvements to boom works to facilitate the floating and storage of logs, &c., $50,000 ; slides and booms generally, $5,000.

Mr. MORIN. As I understand it, the government builds the booms and repairs them, does the government charge the lumbermen for the floating of logs through the slides and for holding the logs in the booms ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, and we made out of these St. Maurice booms and slides $21,000 last year. It is one of the rare works that bring us financial results. We are earning more money than we are expending.

Mr. MORIN. Does the hon. minister charge so much per 1,000 feet or so much per piece ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So much per log on saw-logs and so much per cord on pulp wood.

Mr. WILSON. How much money is invested in these booms and slides at this particular place where you have such large profits ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Those booms were in existence, some of them, before confederation. We have expended about one quarter of a million dollars on them but the trade is increasing very rapidly. It is a part of the country where the trade is expanding every year. Large manufacturing establishments are being erected there.

Mr. WILSON. Speaking in a general way, have these booms and slides been paying concerns ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. On the St. Maurice they did not pay up to the last ten years, but during the past eight or ten years they have been paying. On the Gatineau they are also paying.

Mr. WILSON. Before that did they pay running expenses ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say.

Mr. BROCK. When you say that you earn more than you expend, did you spend $50,000 and earn $71,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Our earnings are more considerable than our working expenses. This is capital expenditure.

Mr. BROCK. And you are merely earning over your working expenses ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. BROCK. But nothing on the investment.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. MORIN. Why not let the lumbermen build their own booms and slides ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These works were built before confederation and have been going on since. In some parts of the St. Maurice there is good navigation just as on the Gatineau. Navigation has to be protected against the lumber, and we are simply going on with what we found when we came to office.

Mr. MORIN. Slides and booms do not impede navigation.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Take the Ottawa river and the Gatineau. If the logs were allowed to go free, these rivers would be filled and steamers could not run at all. You have to build booms and slides to keep the logs in a certain direction and leave a space for boats.

Mr. MORIN. That is all right, but the government could very easily compel the lumbermen to build the booms, and slides. I am not in the habit of having anything to do with the slides and booms. And I do not see exactly where the navigation comes in on the Gatineau river. You go about two miles to one rapid and fifty yards to another, and a little further on you come to another power. I do not see any navigation about it, unless you use bark canoes.

Mr. BOURASSA. There is a feature about this question of slides and booms which should not be forgotten, and that is the interest of the settlers in the valleys of the rivers where these slides and booms are maintained by the government. I think the policy of the government should not only be continued but extended, because, when the slides and booms are left in the hands of private companies, they are apt to manage them in such a way that small operators cannot come in and buy timber from the settlers. My own constituents have had experience of that kind. The result is that there is a great desire that the government should establish slides and booms on all the rivers, not only on account of the navigation—that is only one side of it—but on account of the fact that the booms and slides, which left in private hands, are used for the promotion of private interests. Of course, they cannot refuse passage to other people, but in the practical management they give all the advantage to their own company. This may be natural enough, but it has the effect of depriving others practically of the use of these rivers for timber purposes. In the case of government booms, there is a government officer in charge and he seeks to do justice to all. Thus, not only do all the lumber companies get justice, but the settlers have the advantage of competition in the buying of their timber, their pulp wood especially. That is why I say that, instead of merely maintaining this policy, I hope the government will extend it. Moreover, this is not a case of additional cost to the government, for, on such rivers as the Gatineau and the St. Maurice, the fees pay the expenses, and I hope that the same will be found true on the Rouge and the du Lièvre also.

Public Works—chargeable to income—roads and bridges—Ottawa—Maria Street bridge over the Rideau canal, reconstruction, $5,000.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the minister please explain this item ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That money is asked to complete the approaches to the magnificent bridge erected at Maria street to help toward making Ottawa the Washington of the North.

Mr. INGRAM. What does the hon. minister mean by 'approaches' ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The grading of the approaches at both ends.

Mr. INGRAM. The street ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And the earth works.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood that the money we voted last year was to be the last to be expended. Did the Canada Atlantic Railway pay their share ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. What will be the total cost of the Maria street bridge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS ? It will cost in the neighbourhood of $110,000, including the share of the Canada Atlantic Railway.

Mr. INGRAM. What proportion did the Canada Atlantic Railway pay ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Their share was $17,000.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not know whether, upon this item, we are free to discuss this matter of making Ottawa the Washington of the North. But I know that the public money has been used to beautify certain streets. I am not aware who has the say as to which streets shall be improved, but if report is true, the men who are acting as commissioners and directing the expenditure of this money have large interests on certain streets that are improved under their direction. If that is true, if the members of this commission have property on certain streets and have the power to direct this expenditure of public money to improve those streets, I think affairs are conducted in the wrong way. There should be some person above these men, or in some other way they should be deprived of the power to say where this money should be expended.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The matter to which the hon. gentleman refers does not touch these estimates. The grant to the Ottawa Improvement Commission is fixed by statute, and I have given notice of a Bill touching that subject, which will bring up the whole subject. What the hon. gentleman speaks of is a fair matter for discussion, but it does not touch these estimates in any way.

Mr. SPROULE. Then, what compels us to spend this large amount of money that has been voted for this bridge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In 1885 there was an arrangement made between the city of Ottawa and the Department of Public Works by which the government undertook certain works, including the Maria street bridge. I am merely carrying out the policy that was agreed upon years ago.

Mr. SPROULE. Will this finish the bridge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it is completed now.

Mr. INGRAM. How did the hon. minister arrive at the proportion to be paid by the Canada Atlantic Railway ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We asked for tenders, and then we made a division of the cost, based upon the additional length of the bridge rendered necessary by the fact that the Canada Atlantic Railway tracks had been put under it. We tried to make the fairest possible division.

Mr. MORIN. Two or three years ago, I asked the Minister of Public Works for $200 toward the building of a bridge in my county. The minister replied that we did not give a cent toward bridges. But here I find $5,000 for a bridge in Ottawa, $16,000 for the Portage du Fort bridge, and so on.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend will, perhaps, remember that this Portage du Fort bridge was an interprovincial bridge built long ago by the Federal government. I am only rebuilding a work that was constructed by my predecessors. My hon. friend will admit, and hon. members generally will agree, that the federal government's duty is not to build small bridges all over the land. That is not our duty, that is not our right; it belongs to the municipal councils and the provincial governments.

Telegraph lines, land and cable lines, Gulf of St. Lawrence. To repair and improve roadways and increase operating facilities generally to the eastward of Godbout, $1,000.

Mr. GANONG. I would like to ask the minister if he has still in mind the necessity for a telegraph line in the county of Charlotte, to which I have frequently called his attention. I think the minister will admit that I have been fairly persistent in bringing to his attention the question of public works in the county of Charlotte. I see there is no item in the main estimates covering that amount, and I would like to know if the hon. gentleman will have an item in the supplementaries to cover telegraphic communication between Deer Island, Campbobello and the city of Eastport?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say what the supplementary estimates will contain, I might, after they have been discussed in council.

Mr. GANONG. The minister will admit that I have frequently brought this matter, as well as others, to his attention. It is a very important work. I have occasionally had to make some little criticisms, not on the expenditure of money in my county, but on the manner in which it has been expended. I trust those criticisms will not influence the minister to any extent against doing justice to my county in the way of public works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend may rest assured that any adverse criticisms that he may have made will make no change in my treatment of his county. I recognize fully the right of the opposition to criticise the appropriations of my department.

Mr. GANONG. I am glad to hear that statement from the minister, it will be a great relief to the minds of some people in my county who have heard contrary statements.

Mr. MORIN. Could the minister tell me how far the telegraph is extended below Quebec, and to what place ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Our telegraph system has now reached Belle Isle.

Mr. MORIN. Do you know the distance ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think between Quebec and Belle Isle the distance is about 800 miles.

Hon. Mr. TARTE.

Telegraph lines, British Columbia, $5,000.

Mr. EARLE. A short line of telegraph is asked for from the terminus of the Skeena river line down a few miles to a place called Aberdeen. Is there any provision made for the construction of that this year ? It is a short distance from the canneries, and my information is that if they had a few miles of telegraph there it would be a great convenience.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have made arrangements to build that small piece of line, which will cost in the neighbourhood of $1,500 or $2,000.

Surveys and inspections, $25,000.

Mr. HACKETT. These surveys are supposed to be general all over Canada, and this amount is to cover them ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. HACKETT. I would ask the minister if he has received a petition from the people of Percival River, in West Prince, asking for a survey preliminary to building a pier at that place ; and also if he has received a petition from the people of Victoria West, in West Prince, for the same purpose. They simply ask for surveys, they are not asking for an appropriation of money at present. They desire to have the site surveyed and to have the approval of the department before commencing any work there. Those petitions came, one from the people of Percival River, lots 9 and 10, and the other from Victoria West, lot 13 ; will the minister have those surveys made, and have reports from his engineers in connection with the propriety of building those works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not remember having received a petition from the Percival River people ; doubtless one has been sent if the hon. gentleman says so, but I cannot carry in my mind all the details. As to Victoria West, I remember having received a petition. There will be no objection whatever to make these two surveys. My chief engineer is within the sound of my voice now, and I will instruct him to make the surveys.

National Art Gallery, Ottawa, including the purchase of paintings on the advice of a committee of artists, $4,000.

Mr. EARLE. I have not visited the art gallery this year, but I have been told by some who have seen it that it is in a most filthy and miserable condition, and is hardly worthy of the name of an art gallery.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I fully recognize that it should be in a better condition. Up to last year I only had $2,000 for that so-called national gallery. Hon. gentlemen on both sides will admit that we should have a decent place for that purpose. Last year we improved it a little, and I hope it will be improved still more with the limited means at my disposal.

Telegraph line between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, $2,000.

Mr. HACKETT. Just one word. I am not criticising this item at all, but I want to impress upon the hon. Minister of Public Works that promise that he made the other evening when this matter was so ably discussed by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Hughes) and the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Lefurgey), that he will see that some relief is afforded the people of Prince Edward Island in connection with this telegraph business. I would simply remind him of his promise and express the hope that relief will be afforded.

Telegraph line, Ashcroft to Dawson, $87,500.

Mr. MONK. I want to ask the hon. minister in reference to these telegraph lines, whether they are to remain under the control of the Department of Public Works, or, as it is in England, pass to the control of the Post Office department.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far these works have been under the control of the Department of Public Works for the excellent reason that the Department of Public Works has built them and for the excellent reason that this country is not situated as England is. We have telegraph lines in this country for the purposes of trade and navigation especially. These are my humble views. It may be that they are not shared by everybody.

Mr. MONK. Are they the views of the government ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far the question has not been discussed, except in the newspapers.

Mr. BENNETT. I may remind the hon. gentleman that the Toronto 'Globe' took the stand that these telegraph lines ought to be handed over to the Postmaster General. However, we will understand that for the coming year the hon. Minister of Public Works is in control of the lines and will hold on in his department.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not see why, having built these lines in a successful manner, we should not keep them in charge. While I should attach weight to the opinion of an important paper like the 'Globe,' as an old newspaper man I think I am as well informed as the 'Globe' is on this question.

Mr. INGRAM. You have possession now, anyway.

Mr. EARLE. In regard to the Dawson line, I would like to ask the hon. minister whether there would be any possible reduction in the rates for telegraphing ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would like to be able to say that we will reduce the rates, but I cannot hold out any hope just now. The line is an expensive one. I think it will be less expensive next year than it was last year, because, as my hon. friend (Mr. Earle) knows, the first year of the working of a line like that is a most expensive one. It is a very difficult country indeed. When I tell the committee that during last winter we had at times as much as 27 feet of snow on the lines, it will be seen that it is no small matter to be able to keep such lines open. I cannot extend any hope just now. Perhaps I am not feee to say everything that I would be free to say later on. I intend trying to convince my friends to extend the line in certain directions which will make it pay better and give better accommodation. I am negotiating with the Canadian Pacific Railway with the view of extending the line without too much cost. I do not know whether there will be any result or not.

Mr. MONK. What has been the total revenue of the telegraph lines in the direction of the Yukon during the past year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In one minute I can give the information to my hon. friend.

Mr. EARLE. Can you give the length of line that is constructed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have in the Yukon 2,100 odd miles, I think.

Mr. EARLE. From the coast ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, from Ashcroft, and including the Port Simpson line—2,100 miles in round numbers.

Mr. EARLE. Can you give the cost and the number of messages handled ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not the information under my hand, but I am going to ask for a supplementary vote and all the information will be brought down.

Mr. MONK. Then I will not insist if all the information will be brought down.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will bring down all the information when I ask for more money.

Mr. MONK. Then, I will supplement my question. I would like to have the total revenue from the North-west lines, including the Yukon, and the total capital expended on those lines to date. Would the hon. minister make a note of it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors of ports, and travelling expenses of other officers on inspection and preventive service.

Customs Laboratory—To meet expenditure in connection with the testing of sugar, molasses, &c., including pay of officers appointed or employed for that purpose.

Board of Customs—To meet expenditure in connection therewith, including $800 salary of Commissioner of Customs as chairman of the board.

Salaries of officers appointed or employed for compiling statistical returns of imports and exports, $121,500.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson.) I explained the other night briefly when the committee rose that the $5,000 extra that is asked for is made up in this way: One of these officers who was formerly paid out of the inside vote was transferred to the outside vote, and an additional special officer has been appointed at $1,000 salary whose expenses are $700. That, with a few increases which are required, makes up the extra amount.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman promised to give some information about the port of St. Thomas. I would like to have it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I asked for the information; in fact, I knew about it. I suppose it is information in a general way which the hon. gentleman requires; otherwise, he would have to tell us more particularly what he wants. He asked for information in reference to the collector at the port of St. Thomas. Unfortunately there were, upon inspection, irregularities found in the conduct of that office of such a nature that while no loss has accrued to the department, everything having been paid up, yet the service of the officer were dispensed with and another officer has been placed in charge.

Mr. INGRAM. Have the bondsmen made good the shortage?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes. Shortly after I took office I found that private bonds were given, and when any loss occurred very great pressure was brought to bear from the bondsmen who in some cases represented that it would be ruinous to proceed against them. I thought the better plan was to adopt the system followed by mercantile institutions, and so arrangements were made with the four Canadian guarantee companies to guarantee our officers. Now, when we appoint a new officer, the guarantee company that takes the risks for that province is notified, and from that moment they become security. In the particular case referred to there was no loss to the country.

Mr. INGRAM. Was he guaranteed by a guarantee company?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. HENDERSON. What rate is paid to the guarantee companies?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. We get a special rate, but I cannot remember it just at the moment. The percentage, whatever it be, is deducted from the salary of the officer.

Mr. HENDERSON. Does not the minister think that it would be better for the government to guarantee their own officers? My idea is that the losses are very small indeed, and if the government carried the risk they could afford to do so at a reduction of about one-half the rate which the officers now pay to the guarantee companies. I think that suggestion is worth being considered by the minister.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have an idea that such a system is adopted by the Post Office Department, in part. We have found our present system satisfactory and the officers do not complain. I think myself that the officer would prefer to go to a guarantee company rather than to ask a friend to go guarantee for him. I am very happy to say that considering the number of officers we have, the loss is comparatively small; but the fact that the guarantee company is interested makes an officer more cautious if he were disposed to be lax in his methods.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Postmaster General has in part adopted the plan which I suggest, and I know that under that system the postmasters are not called on to pay as much as they formerly did. Even in that case, I believe the Postmaster General collects more than necessary to meet the losses because the defalcations are so few.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think the rate of the guarantee company is 40 cents on the hundred dollars.

Mr. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.) I think it would be injudicious for the government to guarantee their own officers, because in case of defalcations great pressure would undoubtedly be brought to bear on the government to deal leniently with the offenders. When the officer knows that he has to deal with a company which conducts its business on business principles, it has a very deterrent effect.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not approve of personal bonds, but I fail to see why all this money should be handed over to the guarantee company to enable that company to make a fortune. To my mind the government could conduct this business itself, and charge a far less percentage to their officers.

Miscellaneous, $35,000.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That increase of $5,000 is absolutely necessary for printing and stationary. In connection with the new statistical branch there is a great deal of cost for printing, but I trust the country appreciates the benefit that is derived from it. I consider it to be a great benefit to the country to have the statistical information promptly furnished as it is now.

Expenses of maintenance of revenue cruisers and preventive service, $30,000.

Mr. BENNETT. In connection with this vote, although it may not be quite relevant, I wish to ask what is to be the policy of the government this summer in reference to admitting American tugs to coast in Canadian waters ? On the 27th of February, I asked the minister : What tugs of American register were permitted to ply in Canadian waters in the coasting trade last year; and he replied : None were so permitted. I accepted the answer of the minister at the time, although I knew it was incorrect. The minister had evidently been misinformed. Surely those tugs must have been permitted with the consent of the minister. I can tell the minister the names of the tugs and the concerns who own them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. How many of them ?

Mr. BENNETT. I had three reported to me, at all events. Of my own personal knowledge I know of one, because I saw the boat repeatedly. These tugs are of American register but are owned by powerful friends of the government, and they are permitted to come in and coast in contravention of the law, while at the same time a Canadian tug cannot cross the border line and do business on the American side. If the government are going to sit in council and immediately after the close of the session, or when parliament is in session, are going to say to their party friends, 'You can bring your American registered tugs into Canada and engage in coasting,' let it be known, so that all can be placed on the same footing. But do not make invidious distinctions by simply selecting the friends of the government. You hit your own party friends on the Georgian Bay last year in this respect, because there are Liberals up there who are owners of tugs. The result was that there were days when Canadian tugs were tied up at the docks while American tugs were plying on the waters of the Georgian Bay. I say, with all deference, that the minister was incorrect in the answer he gave, because I know he was. I ask the minister if it is going to be the policy of the department to allow these American tugs to come in there and do business. I say that it is unfair to men who have spent the best parts of their lives in working up from subordinate positions until they obtained certificates as masters or mates or engineers, that they should be obliged to walk around the streets with their hands in their pockets for the want of work, simply because American tugs are allowed to come in and take the bread out of their mouths. I ask the minister if it is his policy to allow this to go on again this year.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I say it was not our policy last year to allow it, and our policy has not changed. It is contrary to the coasting law for American vessels to come in and trade between Canadian ports, and the answer I gave to the hon. gentleman, which he thinks is incorrect, is the only answer which I can give him. I do not think a permit could be given without the knowledge of my department, and I asked my commissioner particularly and got the answer from him. I do not think there is any deputy in the government better informed or more reliable, and that is the answer I must adhere to. I answered the question frankly. I said a permit had been given to a scow which had a sand pump to come in ; but our policy is not to allow American vessels to violate the coasting law. It was not our policy last year, and will not be this year. If there has been anything done in that respect, it has been done without any permission from the department, and if the hon. gentleman will give me any information as to the violation of the law that has come under our notice, I shall be very much obliged indeed. We have just issued a new circular. It was reported that certain Canadian vessels would take a tow of logs from a Canadian port and tow them out to American waters, and there drop the tow and allow it to be taken up by an American vessel, which would tow it part of the way and then another Canadian vessel would bring it in. We had an exhaustive inquiry made into the matter, and it may be that it is something of this kind to which the hon. gentleman has reference. Last year there were no permits issued. The year before that I think there was one granted in an exceptional case—a case in which a saw-mill was being removed from Michigan to Sarnia. The circular which we have issued states that if a foreign vessel comes in to take a tow of logs, there must be an export entry with the clearance, and the vessel must, of course, clear for an American port. She would not be allowed to receive a clearance for a Canadian port. So that if there was an evasion of the law last year, we have taken steps which we think will prevent anything of that kind this year. As I said before, if the hon. gentleman will give me any information of any evasion that has taken place that we have not detected, I shall be only too glad to receive it.

Mr. BENNETT. I can assure the minister that there can be no doubt that there was an American tug last year plying on the Georgian Bay between Canadian ports. I can give him privately the name of the tug and the name of the owner. I had the information from a captain who, on clearing a Canadian tug had handed to him by mistake the clearance which the customs officer intended for the American tug. It stated that under instructions from the Department of Customs the tug was permitted to clear from that port, and that tug was a tug of American register, and every one knows it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Was she clearing to another Canadian port ?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, from a Canadian port on the Georgian Bay to another Canadian port on the Georgian Bay. I have seen the tug myself repeatedly. It is a matter of common notoriety, and I was told that there were others up the lakes, although I have no personal knowledge of them. However, as the minister has stated that there will be no such permits issued this year, that will be an assurance to the tug owners of the Georgian Bay.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not wish the hon. gentleman to misunderstand me. He asked me what the policy of the government was. I would not wish the Governor in Council not to have power in an odd case to grant a permit where Canadian interests would not be damaged, such as in the case of the erection of a sugar refinery in the county of Bothwell, where it was necessary, if the work was to go on, to have a scow with a sand pump. We would make inquiries whether there was any such vessel to be had in Canada. If we found that there was, we would not give the permit ; but in the case where Canadian interests can be served and no appreciable harm can be done to any Canadian interest, we are warranted in granting a permit, and I would not wish my hon. friend to take my pledge in any other sense. I do not know that there will be any permit granted this year, but if under exceptional circumstances one is granted, I do not wish to be charged with having misunderstood my hon. friend. But the policy of the government is that the work between Canadian ports shall be done by a Canadian marine. We want to build up a Canadian marine. The hon. gentleman stated fairly that under the coasting laws of the United States our vessels are not permitted to do anything of that kind between their ports, and we propose to maintain the same policy in Canada. It is our duty to do so ; it is the law of the land.

Mr. McGOWAN. I would like the minister to explain the importations of linseed oil into this country. We imported from Great Britain 735,900 gallons, of which the total value was $427,270, or the average price per gallon was 58 cents. From France we imported 536 gallons, total value $307, average price per gallon 57½ cents. From the United States we imported 21,562 gallons, total value $8,925, average, 41¼ cents. But when I take the market quotations of raw linseed oil on the Chicago market, from July 1st, 1900, to June 30th, 1901, I find that the price per gallon, by the car load, was 76 cents in July, 75 cents in August, and the lowest was 67 cents. And the average price for the twelve months per imperial gallon was 73·35 cents, and per wine gallon, 61·13 cents. These figures are taken from the Chicago 'Paint, Oil and Drug Review,' and are therefore authoritative. It seems extraordinary that American oil should have passed through the customs in this country at 41¼ cents per gallon, and paid the duty on that valuation, when the average price in Chicago was 73·35 cents per imperial gallon and 61·33 cents per wine gallon.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Will my hon. friend let me have the figures, and I will make inquiries.

Mr. McGOWAN. Certainly. Taking the customs valuation, let us see how much advantage Great Britain got under the preferential tariff. I find that in 100 gallons from the United States, the average cost of which was 41·25 cents per gallon, or $41.25 per 100 gallons, the duty paid was $10.32. On the same quantity from Great Britain the duty paid was $9.67, thus leaving only 65 cents on 100 gallons in favour of Great Britain. It seems to me that there is something extraordinary about these figures.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If my hon. friend will call around to the office, I would like to discuss this matter with him. If any oil is undervalued, it is our duty to see that such undervaluation be put a stop to.

Mr. McGOWAN. And the hon. minister must remember that the American oil is of a higher class than the English oil, and ought to be worth more. There is certainly no reason why the customs value of American oil should be only 41¼ cents when the average price in the Chicago market on carload lots is 73⅓ cents.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I understood that the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) wanted to make some remarks about coal oil when these items were up.

Mr. BOYD. When the Minister of Inland Revenue's estimates were under discussion, the inspection of coal oil at Port Arthur was brought to his attention, and he said that it was not his officers who were responsible for the oil that had passed in at that port, but the officers of the Customs Department. What I wanted to know was, how it came that this inferior oil was allowed to pass, and to pass in such a large quantity, and what precautions have been taken to provide against a recurrence of this thing ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I was not in the House when the discussion to which my hon. friend refers took place, but the matter was brought to my attention afterwards. It appears that a cargo of coal oil was brought to the North-west which caused a good deal of inconvenience. We ascertained that it reached Fort William in a tank vessel and we immediately corresponded with our officer there, because it is the duty of the customs officers to apply the test as fixed by the Governor in Council. Our officers have been supplied with the instruments, and it is their duty to apply the test to imported oil. This was American oil, and I have a report from my officer at Fort William to the effect that the oil passed above the flash and the gravity test. I had a conversation with those interested in the oil business, and they are quite concerned over the matter, and are at a loss to explain further than to say that in all manufactured articles it is possible there may be a miss once in a while. I am told that they have made every effort to prevent such a thing occurring again. My officer is not to blame, because the oil passed the test, and exceeded what is required, both in gravity and plank.

Mr. BOYD. That is all we can hold the Minister of Customs responsible for, except on the general policy of the government, and that we discussed when the items of the Minister of Inland Revenue were being put through. If what the hon. minister states about his officer is correct, it will be absolutely necessary for either the Inland Revenue Department or the Customs to see that instruments are obtained which will give a more perfect test. The information I have is that the same class of oil was sent broadcast throughout Dakota and Minnesota, in the adjoining territory. But, as I say, I do not wish, at this hour, and after the explanation given by the minister, to go further into the discussion at the present time.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I will add that a special circular has been sent since this took place to all the customs ports at which oil is received, directing the officers to be exceedingly particular in the test. I do not seek to weaken the statement already made that the officer did make the test, but this is to remind them that it is a matter which we wish them to be very particular about.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) The instruments may be very correct, but the officers may require particular training to use them efficiently. There are a good many officers who though you place the instrument in their hands do not know how to use them.

Mr. PUTTEE. I am surprised that the minister has informed us that this shipment of oil passed the test. To my mind, the officers are simply wasting their time in making tests of oil if such oil as this could pass. Since this subject was discussed before, I have learned on good authority that that particular shipment to this country was entirely a mistake, that they had no expectation that such oil was coming in and that such oil was never sent before. But if such oil passed the test, what is the use of making tests at all ?

Mr. McCREARY. Might there not have been some adulteration of the oil between the time it passed at Port Arthur and the time it reached the consumer ? Hon. members may think we make too much of this question of coal oil, but I would remind them that it was a vitally important question with us up in the west. We have to use coal oil in many of the small towns and in practically all the farm houses, for we have not the electricity to the same extent that we have in the older provinces. In the recent election in Lisgar, during three or four weeks, at almost every meeting one of the most important questions discussed was that of the quality of the coal oil. Unfortunately, I was not in a position to give the information that most of the farmers desired. I would suggest to the hon. minister that he should supplement the test at Port Arthur. It seems to me strange that this one shipment of oil should be the only shipment that was wrong. This oil seems to have got into every village, every hamlet and every house on the prairie. I submit to the minister that he should see to it that further examination is made. I understand that there is on the statute-book a law with regard to the adulteration of food under which a public officer can take samples of food offered for sale to see if they are all right. I know that under municipal law we have a system of that kind. The officer can take a loaf of bread out of the bakers' cart or a quart of milk from the milkman and submit them to a test to see that they are what the law calls for. I do not see why the same rule should not be carried out with regard to coal oil. The minister whose duty it is to look after such things should have a law passed, if there is not one already, under which his officers could go to any wholesale or retail dealer, take a sample and test it to see whether the oil that is supplied by him has been adulterated, and impose a penalty if it is found that the dealer has been imposing upon the public.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I conferred with the Deputy Minister of Inland Revenue, who understands the technical part of this matter better than we do in our department. I understand that instructions have been sent to their analyst in Winnipeg to have samples advanced. The deputy minister has been looking for that report every day. I was not able to see him to-day and do not know whether the report has been received or not. No doubt, there will be something in the supplementary estimates, either under Inland Revenue or Customs, on which this question can be further discussed, and we shall then probably, be in a position to give more information. I do not pretend to any technical knowledge of the subject, but, in conversation with a man in the oil business, I was informed that it is possible that the weather might have affected the oil to a certain extent.

Mr. McCREARY. Wind.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, the temperature. Whether it is that in cold weather the oil congeals more and the heavy oil sinks to the bottom of the tank and when it is drawn off it is thicker and will not rise on the wick—whether that is the case, or whatever effect the weather may have I do not pretend to understand. I would leave that to my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Simmons) and some other gentlemen who are better informed than I am. However, the Inland Revenue Department are giving their consideration to the matter and tests are being made in the direction my hon. friend (Mr. McCreary) speaks of. I trust we shall be able to give further information before the House rises.

Civil government—contingencies—Department of Finance and Treasury Board, $7,590.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That item was dealt with in an earlier discussion on civil government. The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) asked me to let it stand, as he desired to discuss some overrulings of the Treasury Board. But, in conversation with him since he told me that he did not wish the item to be longer held.

Superannuation—extra allowance to Mr. Wallace, ex-postmaster at Victoria, B.C., $240.
Authorized by statute, probable amount required, $328,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is the usual vote for superannuation. The only vote we are asked to make is $240, which is the old item for the ex-postmaster of Victoria. The remainder of the item is fixed by statute. As the House knows, it is a matter which we cannot control.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, the House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. Wednesday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, April 23, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

ORTHODOX RUSSO-GREEK CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta) moved :

That that portion of the 49th rule which limits the time to present petitions for private Bills, be suspended in reference to the Bill to incorporate the Bishop of the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church ; in accordance with the recommendation contained in the fourteenth report of the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders, and that leave be granted to introduce the said Bill.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). Has the report of the committee been adopted yet ? Is not two days' notice required before the report of the committee can be adopted ?

Mr. SPEAKER. Under rule 31 when a report has been made by a committee, a Bill may be presented on that report without any motion for the adoption of the report itself. Consequently the motion is in order.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. But the rules of the House cannot be suspended except by unanimous consent. I do not wish to offer any opposition to this Bill now, but I would ask my hon. friend to postpone his motion for a day or so.

Mr. OLIVER. I have no objection to postpone the motion for a sitting or two. If the hon. member (Mr. LaRivière) has the privilege of refusing to allow the introduction of this Bill now, and if he chooses to exercise that privilege, of course I cannot help it.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. It was understood that I should be invited to this meeting of the Standing Orders Committee, but I was not notified and I knew nothing whatever about it. If it was considered not worth while notifying me, I think it is only fair that I should exercise my prerogative now. I will not oppose the Bill going to the committee later on, but I hope the hon. gentleman will not press his motion to-day.

Mr. OLIVER. At what date may I have the privilege of making this motion ? I would like to have an understanding on that.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The day after to-morrow.

Motion (Mr. Oliver) withdrawn.

ROCKY MOUNTAINS PARK.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 133) to amend the Rocky Mountains Park Act, 1887. He said : The Bill is for the purpose of enlarging the boundaries of the park. The present park is 260 square miles, or 166,400 acres. That is, as the House will see, considerably less than 20 miles square. The suggested park including the present one, will be 4,900 square miles, or 3,136,000 acres. But alongside of that on the British Columbia line we have by Order in Council set apart a portion of the railway belt of British Columbia, extending down to Field, under the name of the Yoho park, which is 832 square miles, or 532,480 acres. The suggested park and the Yoho park combined will amount to 3,668,480 acres. I may say that the number of visitors to the park is increasing very rapidly, and it is found that it is likely to become a place of very considerable resort, especially for American tourists. We have a thriving herd of buffalo there and a number of other animals, such as moose, elk, a couple of varieties of goats, and we are trying to get together a collection of animals that will be attractive. We find that these animals are exceedingly attractive to visitors. It is the opinion of everybody who has visited the park that it would be a great mistake to let it go any longer without increasing the boundaries to a sufficient extent to have room to carry out the original intention. I lay a map on the Table, so that members can look at it for themselves.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. What will be the shape of the park when it is enlarged ? Will it be square ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It will be almost a triangle. The longer side of the triangle will be the boundary between the North-west Territories and British Columbia, and there will be two straight lines culminating in a right angle out into the territories.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. It was my good fortune to visit the park last summer, and I am very glad the Bill has been introduced.

Mr. MONK. Will this enlargement entail any expropriation ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, there is no expropriation provided for or contemplated. The only land which I believe is in any way alienated consists of some timber berths which will come back to the government in the course of a little time.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

REPRESENTATION OF THE YUKON.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 134) respecting the representation of the Yukon Territory in the House of Commons. He said : The explanation of this Bill will not necessarily be long. It provides that the Yukon Territory shall be represented in the House of Commons by one member. The entire contents of the Bill are taken up in making detailed provision for the holding of the election. I observe, on making an examination of the Bill as it is drawn, that one clause has been left out by the law clerk, that is the clause declaring the time within which the election shall be held ; and I shall ask to have that put in in committee.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What are the qualifications of voters ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The same as in the territories. We have followed the terms of the North-west Territories Representation Act, so as to avoid differences on the question of qualification.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PETITION OF RIGHT ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 135) to amend the Petition of Right Act. He said : The object of this amendment is to give to the Governor General the right to require from the petitioner in certain cases security for costs. At the present time a fiat is granted on the recommendation of the Department of Justice, and we refuse to grant fiats in cases in which we think there is no merit. The petitioners may consider, notwithstanding the opinion of the department, that they are suffering a hardship by not being granted a fiat, and the intention is, in cases of that description, to require security for costs, so that the Crown may not be mulcted in costs when successful.

Mr. MONK. Is there any special amount fixed ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, the amount will be discretionary. The circumstances of each case will be carefully considered. I believe that in the province of Quebec, where there is a similar provision. the security is fixed at two hundred dollars. But it is optional with the court at any time to increase the amount of security if thought desirable.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do you provide that the writ will issue as a matter of course ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Practically as a matter of course.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INSPECTION OF FRUIT PACKAGES.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 136) to amend the Fruit Marks Act of 1901. He said: The first amendment is with regard to section 4, and indicates clearly whose name should appear, as there has been some slight confusion in one or two instances owing to the fact that the name of the person on whose behalf the fruit was really packed was not put on the package.

With regard to the grading of fruit, certain grades are suggested and are required to be on, even though some other grading may be put on. The suggestion is that No. 1 or XXX be for first quality, No. 2 or XX for second quality, and No. 3 or X for third quality.

Where a package is falsely marked, the inspectors have no power to put on the package 'falsely marked.' We want that power given them.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS.

FISHERY REGULATIONS.

Mr. FARQUHARSON asked:

Does the government intend to so modify the fishery regulation of the 28th December, 1893, which is in force in Quebec and the maritime provinces, which forbids the digging of mussel mud within two hundred yards from any live oyster bed, and then only at such place or places as may be prescribed in writing by a fishery officer, so as to enable the farmers to procure the mussel mud necessary for the cultivation of their farms?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland). It is not the intention to amend the Order in Council, unless the encroachment is made on the live lobster beds, and instructions have been given to the inspector to use discretion in the enforcement of this regulation, and those digging mud will not be interfered with under the present regulations.

KING BROTHERS' CLAIM.

Mr. LAVERGNE asked:

1. Is the government aware that, in June last, an investigation was held in regard to a claim that Messrs. King Brothers have against the government, for damages caused to their property, in the Seigneurie of St. Jean Deschaillons, by the Intercolonial Railway?

2. Does the government purpose soon settling that claim?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair):

1. The government is aware that such an investigation was held.

2. The claims branch of the department at Moncton is of the opinion that the claim is not meritorious, and until the same is considered by the department here, no final decision can be reached. I cannot say, until I have an opportunity of looking into it, what action will be finally taken.

POSTMASTER OF CREDITON.

Mr. SHERRITT asked:

1. Has the Postmaster General been informed that the postmaster at Crediton, Ontario, is dead?

2. If so, when was the notice received; who has been in charge of the office since the death of the late postmaster; has any person been temporarily or permanently appointed?

3. If no appointment has been made, does the government intend making an appointment before the Ontario provincial elections take place?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland). In the absence of the Postmaster General, I beg to reply that information was received on the 29th of October last, of the death of Mr. Jacob Eilber, postmaster of Crediton, Ontario. The office has since been in charge of Mr. W. W. Kerr, who was assistant postmaster under the late postmaster. No appointment, permanent or temporary, has yet been made to the office, and it has not been decided when the appointment in question will be made.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that the House go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow on the following resolution:

That it is expedient to provide for the appointment of an assistant commissioner of the North-west Mounted Police for the Yukon Territory, at $1,600 per annum.

Motion agreed to.

BRITISH COLUMBIA FISHERIES.

Mr. T. EARLE (Victoria, B.C.) I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries when we may look for a report of the commission appointed to look into the conditions of the fisheries in British Columbia?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland). I think that the short time the commission had to investigate into this matter does not put them in a position to report, and they have to ask for a further delay in order to make investigations, especially with regard to traps, &c. I think the delay will have to be granted for futher investigation before they will be able to report.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 76) further to amend the Pilotage Act.—Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick.

YUKON POLICE MAGISTRATE.

House went into committee on the following resolution :

That it is expedient to amend chapter 41 of the statutes of 1901, and to provide that the salaries of the police magistrate at Dawson and the police magistrate at White Horse shall be $4,000 per annum.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). Both these police magistrates receive $2,400 salary and $3,000 living allowance each. The intention is to raise their salary to $4,000 each, and their living allowance to $1,800 each.

Mr. SPROULE. Are those all the police magistrates in the district ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Resolutions reported.

SALARY AND RETIRING ALLOWANCES OF CERTAIN JUDGES.

House went into committee on the following resolution

That it is expedient to amend the Act respecting the judges of provincial courts and to provide as follows :—

1. That the salary of the third judge of the Territorial Court of the Yukon Territory shall be $5,000 per annum.

2. That a judge of a county court resigning at any time after becoming disabled by permanent infirmity or resigning after twenty-five years' service, may be granted a pension equal to two-thirds of his annual salary ; provided that if he has served less than five years, his pension shall not exceed one-third of his annual salary.

Mr. SPROULE. You will have three judges in the Yukon ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). This resolution provides for the appointment of an additional judge in the Yukon Territory. We have now two judges of the High Court residing there, and it is proposed that hereafter three shall be there, with salaries of $5,000 each. The expectation is that the three judges shall form a Territorial Court of Appeal, to which there will be appeals from the High Court sitting as a court of original jurisdiction, and also an appeal from the findings of the Gold Commisioner. At present the appeal from a single trial judge is to the court in British Columbia. It is extremely inconvenient to the people of the Yukon to be obliged to come down to British Columbia for the trial of their appeals. If this resolution is passed, a Bill will be introduced which will provide for three judges of the Territorial Court who will form a court of appeal, the appeal from them being to the Supreme Court of Canada. It is expected that this will not add very much to the expense of the administration of justice in that territory. It is true that there will be an additional judge, but we are amending the Act so that members of the High Court will be able to do some of the work that is now done by the police magistrates, and, in that way, we hope to dispense with the services of one police magistrate.

Mr. MONK. In this Court of Appeal, or Court of Review, will the judge who tried the case in the first instance sit as one of the judges ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes. The present intention is to have it as our Court of Review in Quebec was originally formed, that is, the trial judge will be one of the three judges sitting in review. Personally, with the knowledge I have gained of our judges, I think it is not a bad principle, because the judge of the first court, it seems to me, would help to further enlighten the judges in appeal when he is a member of the court. I think that the departure from that principle in our province was not a step in the direction of progress. As to the second portion of the resolution, my hon. friends are aware that, under the existing law, a High Court judge becoming incapacitated at any time after he has entered upon his duties is entitled to receive his retiring allowance. He is also entitled to retire after fifteen years on the bench. But, in the case of county court judges in Ontario, we find that one of these judges cannot be given retiring allowance until after he has served ten years. A judge may become incapacitated through illness and be obliged to retire, yet not receive any allowance. It will be seen that that is a hardship. There are cases of special hardship which will be met by this amendment. One case, I think, is a case of extreme hardship. I think my hon. friend will admit that it is proper that if a judge becomes incapacitated, whether he be in the High Court or in the County Court, he should be entitled to a retiring alowance.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This applies to judges in Ontario, not in the Yukon ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In Ontario and all other places where there are county court judges.

Mr. BENNETT. Is there any legislation proposed, looking to the compulsory retirement of judges after reaching an age limit ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No. I may say that there never was any intention to introduce legislation of that kind with respect to the judges of the Superior Court —there will be none this session.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. minister will excuse me, but there was a Bill introduced by himself for the retirement of county court judges who had reached the age of seventy years.

Mr. INGRAM. This feature is not included in this measure ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, there is no intention to do so.

Resolutions reported.

EXCHEQUER COURT—SALARY OF THE REGISTRAR.

House went into committee on the following resolution :

That it is expedient to provide that the salary of the registrar of the Exchequer Court shall be $2,400 per annum.—(Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick.)

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). The salary of the registrar of the Exchequer Court is $2,000. But ever since his appointment he has been receiving annual increments of $25 and $50. The result is, hon. gentlemen will find in the estimates this year a vote which brings the salary up to $2,375. I thought it was better to fix the salary once and for all at what it is represented was intended to be the salary, rather than come back here every year or two for an increased vote.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is he a barrister ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Who is he ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Mr. Audette. He came into the court when it was originally formed and has been there ever since. I think I can safely say that he has performed his duties with great satisfaction to the court.

PENSIONS TO NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

House in committee on Bill (No. 40) respecting pensions to officers of the North-west Mounted Police—(Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier).

The PRIME MINISTER (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). When this Bill was in committee before, sections 7 and 5 were reserved. Section 7 provides that if an officer is constrained to leave the service before a period at which a pension may be granted to him, by reason of severe bodily infirmity, through no fault of his own, and in the discharge of a public duty, the Governor in Council may allow him a pension not exceeding three months pay for every two years service. Section 8 provides that the Governor in Council may grant a pension to the widow and children of any officer who, having completed twenty years service, was at the time of his death in the receipt of a pension. It was suggested at the time that with regard to widows of officers who had been disabled before the period of twenty years, it should be made compulsory upon the government to allow a pension. This is practically what is done by the Bill. The wording of it is ' may ' instead of ' shall.' The reason why we have used the word ' may ' is that there may be reasons why a pension shall not be given. But in every case where no such reasons exist it is expected that the widow will be entitled to the pension. With regard to section 5, it provides :

If any officer is constrained, from any infirmity of body or mind, to quit the force before a period at which a pension might be granted to him, the Governor in Council may allow him a gratuity not exceeding one month's pay for each year of his service ; and if any such officer is so constrained to quit the service before such period by reason of severe bodily injury, received without his own fault, in the discharge of his public duty, the Governor in Council may allow him a gratuity not exceeding three months' pay for every two years' service.

The point was made, I think by the hon. member for Toronto, that there was here an invidious distinction The Bill provided that if a man had been twenty years in the service then he may retire with his pension. He may be in comparatively good health, but having served the country twenty years, he is entitled to his pension. It was suggested that if an officer, after twenty years of service, is in good health and is still entitled to his pension, why should we not do the same thing for an officer who has been disabled in the service of the country before he has been twenty years in the service. Well, this Bill provides for pensions to those who have served the country for long periods. The intention is that officers shall contribute to a fund, and it is expected that a fund will be created which will be self-supporting. But there may be cases where a man has not served twenty years, he may have served only nineteen years or ten years, and may be disabled in the performance of his duty, and then it may be said : Are you going to turn that man adrift and do nothing for him ? Why not provide for him ? The reason we do not provide for him in this way is because the Act is intended to give pensions for long service only. But I may say to the committee that those who have served the country and been disabled, are not turned adrift. Since 1885 we have always provided for cases of that kind. We have adopted in that respect the law which regulates the militia, a provision has been introduced in this Bill exactly like that which is found in the Militia Act. In 1885, an Order in Council was passed under the Militia Act to provide pensions for officers who have been disabled in the rebellion of that year. In 1886, a similar Order in Council was passed adopting the same rule and the same rates of pension for officers of the mounted police who had been disabled during that rebellion. The Order in Council reads thus :

On the 19th of May, 1886, an Order in Council was passed providing that the members of the mounted police and Prince Albert volunteers who were wounded, and the families of those who were killed during the troubles in the North-west, be granted compensation in the same manner, and upon the same scale of gratuities and pensions as was provided for the active militia by the Order in Council of the 8th July, 1885.

Under this order is another order. We have every year in the estimates, including this year, taken an appropriation to cover all cases of disabilities occurring in the mounted police while in service. If members of the committee will look at the estimates of this year, page 37, item 108, they will find an appropriation of $2,510.03 to cover pensions payable in connection with the North-west rebellion of 1885. They will find also, in the same item, appropriations of $109.50 and $182.50 for widows and children of members of the mounted police killed in the performance of their duty. Again on page 70, item 242, there is an appropriation of $2,000 as compensation to members of the North-west Mounted Police for injuries received in the discharge of duty. At present, under these three heads, we have given pensions to members of the mounted police who have been killed and injured in the rebellion of 1885. We have sixteen pensions for which we ask appropriations this year as follows :

Major Moore, loss of leg, pension, $800 ; Private Newitt, shot in leg, $91.25 ; Mrs. A. Anderson, son killed, $91.25 ; R. Middleton, son killed, $91.25 ; Mrs. M. A. Smith, son killed, $91.25 ; Private Pembrun, loss of arm, $109.50 ; P. W. H. Smart, father killed, $109.50; Sergeant Ward, shot through lungs, $328.50 ; Sergeant Fury, shot in chest, $219 ; Sergeant McRae, shot in leg, $164.25 ; Constable Pocock, lost part of foot, $83.95 ; Constable Loasby, shot in body, $83.95 ; Special Constable Harpur, rheumatism, $219 ; Mrs. Burke, husband killed, $136.88.

Then we have in the estimates pensions to Mrs. Grundy and Mrs. Colebrooke, names which have not been forgotten, of men who lost their lives in the rebellion, and their widows receive pensions of $109 and $182. Then we have also a certain number of pensions to men who have not been killed or injured but who have been disabled. Under such circumstances I think we had better leave the law as it is, because no wrong has been done so far, and it is found that in every case parliament, at the suggestion of the government, has provided for relief in the manner contemplated in that section. This is a reproduction of the law respecting pensions for the militia.

Mr. MONK. In regard to sections 8 and 9 I would like to call the attention of the government to the fact that with these two sections, as they are to be read, even if the applicant does not fall under the exceptions provided in section 9, it still remains absolutely optional with the government to grant him any pension at all. After he has completed twenty years of service as provided in section 8, and if he is on a retiring allowance and dies, the widow has no right to any pension nor the children to any compassionate allowance if the government do not choose to give any. In reference to the exceptions provided in section 9 there is a great deal of certainty, and under section 8 the widow and children are still dependent on the good-will of the government.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is in error as there is no intention to interpret the Act in such a harsh manner. This Bill is an exact reproduction of a similar Bill which was introduced last session and discussed at great length providing for pensions for the militia. We have taken it verbatim and it would not be advisable I think when these two Bills are intended to serve the same purpose that there should be a variation of the language even if the criticism of the hon. gentleman were well founded. My hon. friend knows that the word 'may' is very often construed by the courts to mean 'shall.' That is what is intended here. I do not say that if I had had the drafting of this Bill it might not have been well to have amended it in the light suggested by my hon. friend, but finding a Bill exactly similar, to apply to another branch of the service, the militia, we thought it advisable not to vary the language, but to take it as it is, it being well understood that the widow of an officer under section 8 is entitled to a pension provided she does not come within any of the exceptions mentioned in section 9.

Mr. MONK. The statute does not say so.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, I think we had better leave it alone.

Mr. OSLER. Would a pension granted in the cases the right hon. gentleman has cited be about the same as a pension obtained in the usual manner under the Pension Act, or would it be larger or smaller ?

The PRIME MINISTER. The pension of the widow which would come out of this fund would be much larger than any pension that has been granted in the usual manner.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice in subsection (c) that if an officer marries after retirement he is not entitled to a pension, while subsection (e) reads :

In the case of an officer who is married after the first day of July, nineteen hundred and two, if he was more than twenty-five years older than his wife.

That is a very odd provision.

Mr. BRODER. While we are on this question I wish to refer to a matter which is not covered by this Bill, but I think there should be some provision made for it. There are instances of South Africa volunteers who have been disabled in action. I have a case in my own county, that of the blind Trooper Mulloy. It seems to me that a case of that kind should be considered by the government and I understood, last year, in reply to a question I asked, that the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) said that the matter would be considered.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. BRODER. I now mention it here because I think a case of that kind should not be overlooked.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would remind my hon. friend (Mr. Broder) that in the despatch of October 19, 1899, under which the contingents were authorized, the British government undertook to deal with pensions and I have no doubt as soon as the war is over, which I hope will be over in a very few days now, that matter will be attended to by the British government and then it will be opportune for the Dominion government to consider what action it should take. I am not prepared myself, to-day, to say, but, the matter will receive consideration.

Mr. BRODER. Trooper Mulloy is receiving a very moderate stipend now, I think 65 cents a day.

The PRIME MINISTER. Trooper Mulloy is geting a contribution from the patriotic fund.

Mr. McCARTHY. I would ask the committee to reconsider the 17th section of the Bill for the reason that I think there is some ambiguity in the language used and that it does not carry out the evident intention of the preceding sections. You will observe in reading subsection (b) that it is made to apply to :

To every officer now in the force who, within six months from the coming into force of this Act, elects to accept the provisions of this Act in lieu of those of the Civil Service Superannuntion Act or of the Civil Service Retirement Act.

There are officers in the force who are neither under the Civil Service Superannuation Act or the Civil Service Retirement Act. They, therefore, have nothing which they could give up for the purpose of coming under this Act. I think that section must be amended to make it clear that it is intended to cover these officers. I, therefore, beg to move :

Mr. SPROULE.

That the words 'instead of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, or the Civil Service Retirement Act,' in section 17, be struck out and that there shall be inserted as subsection (b) of section 17, the following :

(b) To every officer now on the force who is not subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act or the Civil Service Retirement Act.

And that the subsection now lettered (b) be lettered (c) and that there be inserted after the word 'who' in the first line of said subsection the following 'is within the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act or of the Civil Service Retirement Act and who.'

The effect, as you will see, is that it applies to every officer who is now on the force, or who hereafter may come into the force and likewise it is made to apply so that any officer who is now receiving a pension under the Civil Service Superannuation Act or the Civil Service Retirement Act must, within six months, elect whether he will continue under the provisions of either of these Acts or come under this Act. It must apply therefore to all of the officers and it is the obvious intention of the Act that such should be so. As it now stands it is doubtful and this removes any possible doubt about it on that score.

The PRIME MINISTER. The section would then read :

17. This Act shall apply,—

(a) To every officer hereafter appointed to the force.

(b) To every officer now in the force who is not subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act or the Civil Service Retirement Act.

(c) To every officer now on the force who is within the provisions of the Civil Service Superannuation Act or of the Civil Service Retirement Act, and who within six months from the coming into force of this Act, elects to accept the provisions of this Act in lieu of those of the Civil Service Superannuation Act, or of the Civil Service Retirement Act.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY—SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—TERMS OF PEACE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to bring to your notice certain matters connected with the motion of which I gave notice yesterday. I have thought proper to vary the language slightly, but the purport of the motion remains unchanged. Before proceeding to discuss this motion I had better perhaps read it, so that the House may be in possession of the features that it contains. It is as follows :

This House is of the opinion that British supremacy should be maintained and firmly established in South Africa, to which end Canada has cheerfully contributed men and money. Having in view the effect of a policy of magnanimity and mercy at the cession of Canada, and at the close of the civil war in the United States, and for other reasons ; this House is also of the opinion that in the interest of peace and of future tranquillity, harmony and homogeniety in South Africa, the broadest policy of magnanimity and mercy may be extended to a brave foe now opposing British arms, upon condition of submission to British control. And upon this opinion, humbly presented with the prayerful hope that it may aid in securing a favourable and honourable settlement of South African difficulties ; this House invokes the considerate judgment of His Gracious Majesty the King.

The question, Mr. Speaker, is brought before the House in this manner and at this time, for the reason that another opportunity will not be afforded during the present session. It is not offered as a motion of want of confidence ; it is not offered in any sense as a motion having political significance or having anything to do with the policy of the party in power in this country, or with the policy of the opposition. The resolution, it will be noticed, provides expressly for submission and for the establishment and maintenance of British authority in South Africa. It is not a pro-Boer motion ; it is not a motion that in the remotest degree would counsel the establishing of Boer independence or the establishing of any condition of things in South Africa except British supremacy. At my request the motion will be seconded by a gentleman who, in my opinion, as fully as any other member of this House perhaps, represents French Canadian sentiment. I move the motion as an English representative ; the gentleman who will second the motion, I have asked to second it because he is a representative French Canadian. I am happy to say, Mr. Speaker, that that gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) is prepared to-day to endorse the assertion, that it is proper and desirable to maintain British supremacy in South Africa, and that the people in arms in that country against British authority should be called upon to submit to British control. This is all that can be required. This lays the foundation for the settlement of this question upon a basis which would be to the interest of all portions of this empire, and this motion deals simply with the character of the settlement that it is hoped may be obtained with the belligerents in South Africa, and obtained for the purpose of establishing in that country unquestioned and unimpaired British authority.

The motion, Sir, is an humble expression of opinion on the part of this House. It may be asserted that it will be considered an act of impertinence to offer such a motion here.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. Some hon. gentlemen say 'hear, hear.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. The motion says : It is humbly presented with the prayerful hope that it may be conducive to the securing of a settlement. Now, Sir, has this House of Commons of Canada no right to express an opinion upon a great imperial question—a question with reference to which we have been called upon to pour out millions of dollars ; and send thousands of our sons to maintain British supremacy. Have we no right, Sir, to express humbly an opinion as to the proper course to be pursued in securing the settlement of this war in South Africa——

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. I say yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. Suppose that my hon. friends on the opposite side of the House were to secure the adoption of their policy for imperial defence ; suppose Canada were called upon to pay annually into a common fund ten per cent of all its duties for imperial defence ; would it be said that Canada would not be allowed to have a voice as to the expendlture of that money ; that Canada would not be permitted even to express an humble opinion as to what course might be taken in regard to the expenditure of the money she had so contributed.

An hon. MEMBER. That is different.

Mr. CHARLTON. Sir, the condition of things to-day is exactly the same as it would be under such circumstances. While we have not a law which compels us to contribute a certain sum of money for imperial defence, yet we have done so voluntarily. Our soldiers have gone to South Africa ; our money has been expended ; we, as an integral portion of this great empire, have surely an interest in this question. I maintain that we in this parliament as the representatives of six millions of British subjects have a right to express humbly and respectfully an opinion, and that is all that the resolution asks shall be done.

Now, Sir, the motion may be useless, but the spirit manifested in offering it cannot be questioned and cannot be condemned. The motion may have no weight, but on the other hand it may perhaps be extremely useful. It may aid the imperial government in the settlement of this question by showing that in one of the great colonies of the empire the same spirit of bitterness does not exist that probably does exist in Cape Colony and Natal. This motion may have a counteracting influence possibly, to the pressure from the British colonists in these colonies asking for the exacting of vengeance upon the Cape rebels. If the motion does produce that effect, it will have a beneficient influence ; it may counteract that influence upon the British government which would be a most prejudicial and harmful one. In any event, while the motion is meant to do good ; while the motion is respectfully expressed ; while it is merely an expression of opinion ; in any event if it does do no good, in my opinion, it can do no harm. I shall no doubt be subjected to criticism for offering this motion, but that is a matter of utter indifference to me, provided I can feel that I have done right.

What troubles me is whether it is a judicious act, whether it is a proper act, whether it is something I ought to have done or ought not to have done. As to how it will be received by my fellow citizens is a matter of minor importance. It is my firm conviction that in the course I have taken I have been actuated by a sincere desire to benefit my country, to offer an influence that will aid in the settlement of a melancholy struggle. The motive, at all events, in offering this resolution is a good one. My own record with regard to this matter would render it absurd to say that I am actuated by pro-Boer sentiments. The House will remember the position I took on this question, the defence I made of the action of the authorities here and of the policy of the imperial government in this war. The House remembers that I would never for one moment have entertained the idea of parting with one foot of South African territory, or of lowering the British standard in the slightest degree. I have always maintained that British supremacy must be maintained in South Africa. I take that position to-day, and the question with me now is, what is the best course to pursue in seeking such a settlement as will place matters in South Africa on a just, humane and enduring basis.

Now, Sir, nobody would venture to make the assertion that Canada is not loyal to the empire. The expression of this humble opinion, if the House chooses to sanction that expression, will not be accepted in England as an evidence of disloyalty. It will, on the contrary, be accepted in England as an evidence of the sincere desire of Canada to aid, if it possibly may aid, in securing a settlement of a question which it is desirable to have settled. Canada is loyal to the empire, and its loyalty has been proved. Nobody in this country or in the world at large doubts that Canadian loyalty is something that will bear the strain, something that can be relied on, something that is thoroughly imbedded in the hearts of the people of this country.

Now, what were Canada's interests in this struggle ? Here we are on a continent, possessing more than two-fifths of it, with vast resources, with our own destiny to work out, with our own nationality to erect, with our interests requiring our utmost efforts for their advancement, with enough to command our utmost labours and resources. What had we to do as a matter of self-interest with the struggle in South Africa ?

With 3,000 miles between us and the motherland, with 7,000 miles of ocean between us and the scene of conflict, with our commerce with South Africa of the most insignificant character, if we had been governed by merely material or selfish considerations, we never would have put a dollar into that struggle or have sent one man to the scene of conflict. But we sent the men and voted the money because we wished to maintain and uphold the integrity of the British empire; because we wished to maintain the prestige of England; because we wished to have that country which afforded us a market, that country with which we were allied by the bonds of race affinity and by political institutions, furnished with aid, not from any selfish consideration, but purely as an offering to the welfare of the empire, given freely and fully by one of her great colonies without hope of securing reward for the sacrifices made. Canada stands in the position to-day where, having made these sacrifices, having put forth these efforts, having proved by its conduct that it is thoroughly loyal, it naturally desires to see an end put to this struggle that has been in progress for three years, and an honourable peace obtained; and Canada actuated by that desire may venture to express to the imperial authorities a humble and respectful opinion as to what course, in the estimation of the people of this country, might be pursued.

It is preposterous, Mr. Speaker, to assert that that expression of opinion can be or will be considered in England or anywhere else an impertinence. Of course, British authority must prevail; that is an absolute condition. No proposition of peace will admit of consideration involving Boer independence or anything but the absolute sovereignty of Great Britain over all South Africa—the Orange Free State, the Transvaal, Cape Colony, Natal, Rhodesia, and the whole of that magnificent country. British authority and sovereignty must prevail. This House perhaps has not been fully aware of the importance of that country, that great region of 1,500,000 square miles now in the possession of Great Britain, with vast possibilities for the increase of territory, with resources almost beyond the dream of the enthusiast, awaiting to be developed. A few days ago Cecil Rhodes was buried on the Matoppa Hills with imposing ceremonies, and his grave overlooks that vast region which his genius and his energy secured for his native land—a region which embraces the ancient Ophir, a region of untold possibilities, a region which England never could have afforded to have lost and must have put forth great efforts to retain. Happy perhaps it would have been if the genius and the experience of Cecil Rhodes had exercised more influence upon the counsels of British commanders and British authorities in South Africa. But this conflict has nearly run its course. It has been a great struggle, a greater struggle than was anticipated at the outset, a struggle which will form one of the epochs of history, a struggle which has demonstrated the resources, the credit, the perseverance, the indomitable grit of the British citizens. We perhaps fail to understand the obstacles which they have overcome. With a single line of communication from Cape Colony penetrating into the far north, 1,500 miles in length, liable to be cut at almost any point; with the transport over that overloaded line of the supplies for a large army; with an aggressive and acute foe, familiar with the country; the subjection of the Boer has been a great achievement. It has been, I repeat, a great struggle; and Great Britain has learned in this war lessons with regard to the conditions of modern warfare that will be worth to her all the money she has expended.

And now we come to the point when this war is practically ended, when the opposition that remains is merely guerilla warfare. We come to the point of considering what were the causes of this war, and what distinction shall we draw between the belligerents in one section of South Africa and those in another? Shall we make a different rule of settlement for the Orange Free Stater, the Transvaal man and the Africander of Cape Colony? Is the one a rebel whom we shall put into chains and hang, and the other an honourable belligerent whom we shall treat with and pardon, and deal with on the terms of civilized warfare.

Sir, the deep-seated case of the hostilities in South Africa was the determination on the part of the Dutch element in that entire country from Cape Town to the Transvaal, to make South Africa a Dutch country. The Afrikander Bund, for years before the hostilities began, was laying its plans, accumulating its resources, buying arms and munitions of war, erecting fortifications and preparing for this struggle, which it entered upon deliberately. It had one clear purpose in view and that was to expel the British from South Africa, and when it found that Great Britain was transporting troops to that country, and threatening the success of that policy, it precipitated hostilities by invading British territory. I hold that every belligerent in South Africa should be dealt with on the same principle, that we should draw no distinction between the Dutchmen of Cape Colony and the Boers of the Transvaal or the Dutchmen of the Orange Free State. They all belong to the one nationality. They were all actuated by the one purpose and fought in the one common cause. We were contending, not with the Transvaal Dutch or the Free State Dutch alone, but with the Afrikander element in South Africa from Cape Town to the Zambesi.

Mr. BRODER. The Free Staters had no cause of complaint?

Mr. CHARLTON. No, but they joined in the general purpose of the Dutch in South Africa to erect a Dutch empire in that country. The Boer was a brave foe. He fought for his race, for his ideals. He staked his life upon the issue, and he has lost. It was known by close observers from the outset that there could be but one of two results. Either the Afrikander must prevail or the British; either South Africa would be Dutch or British. One thing or the other had to come to pass. And the thing that has come to pass is that the Afrikander has been driven to the wall, that the British forces are supreme and the contest practically ended. The question now confronts the imperial authorities: How shall this war, which has degenerated into murder, rapine and foray, how shall these useless hostilities be terminated? It is a question of delay in putting an end to useless suffering. It is a question of delay in the advent of prosperity and peace in South Africa. How is peace to be secured? How is this delay in securing peace to be obviated? How are these useless struggles in South Africa to be terminated? They can be terminated by protracting this struggle until the Boer cause is ground into fine dust. But it will take long to do it, many lives will be lost, and when that result is reached there will be left the seeds of bitterness and hatred in every Boer heart south of the Zambesi. It can be done in another way. It can be done by the exercise of mercy and magnanimity. The exercise of these two qualities will hasten peace, and not only hasten peace, but place that peace, when it comes, upon a sure and certain foundation, and leave these people satisfied that the struggle is indeed ended, and that it is useless to perpetuate it longer. On the other hand, severity will retard peace and leave endless hate to fester in the heart of every Boer in that country.

The imperial authorities are facing today the question of African reconstruction. The conditions of things that existed before cannot be continued. There can be no Transvaal with its dim shadow of suzerainty to the British Crown. There can be no independent Free Orange State. There can be no divided authority in South Africa. The whole country must be under one flag and one king. It must be a part of the one great empire. That is a foregone conclusion. How is this South African reconstruction to be accomplished? Not by the exercise of vengeance, not by the exacting of the pound of flesh, not by pursuing a fallen and noble foe to the utmost extremity of vengeance. But African reconstruction will be accomplished, if it is ever accomplished on an enduring basis, by Afrikander assimilation. Afrikander assimilation will be the hope of South Africa, and without it peace upon any enduring basis and success in the formation of a South African confederation cannot be secured. We have the exercise of a great principle now in operation which is peculiar to the Anglo-Saxon—the principle of federal union, first adopted by the American states after the revolution, in 1787, next adopted by Canada in 1867, since then adopted by Australia, and waiting now to be adopted by South Africa. In that country there will be the colony of Natal, the colony of Cape Colony, the colony of the Orange Free State, the colony of the Transvaal, the colony of Rhodesia and other colonies to the north in that magnificent valley of the Zambesi, beyond which British possessions reach to the great inland sea of Tanganyika. This African reconstruction will be accomplished. It will build up in South Africa an empire under British influence and British laws. It will be another of the great commonwealths formed under British influence, and in accord with the genius of British laws and institutions. Does any man doubt that magnanimity will promote this result, that the exercise of mercy and generosity will have a favourable influence on the population of these colonies and tend to cement in ties of common interest their institutions and their laws? I think it cannot be doubted, and one reason why I introduce this resolution is the belief I entertain that the imperial government is probably embarrassed at this moment by the demands of the English colonists of Cape Colony and Natal, who refuse to consider the Dutch in arms against British authority in Cape Colony in any other light than rebels, and who demand the condign punishment of these men after the war is through. I do not believe that it would be good policy to adopt such a course. I do not believe that we should make any distinction between the Cape Town rebels and the Orange State belligerents and the Transvaal soldier. I believe, if any distinction is to be made, that it will simply retard the settlement and make it less satisfactory and less likely to be enduring after it is accomplished. This feeling, no doubt, impedes reconstruction. In my humble judgment, this feeling is an embarrassment to the imperial authorities, and for that reason I believe that the expression of a respectful and humble opinion on the part of the representatives of this great colony of the Dominion would have great weight with the British authorities and be most welcome. In this view I have ventured to offer this motion, and in so doing I believe that I am acting in the interest of my country and of humanity and on lines which would promote settlement in South Africa and hasten the realization of that condition of things for which we all hope. A great many thousand Boers are in captivity. Some are in Bermuda, some in St. Helena, some in Ceylon—thousands and thousands of these men who must be restored to their country some day—and it is a matter of the utmost consequence whether these men come back with sore hearts and cherishing vengeful feelings because of undue severity which they believe their conquerors have practiced, or whether they come back with gladness of heart, with thankfulness for mercies granted to them, for magnanimity, for generosity, for the restoration of privileges, for the expression of a desire that they should go back to their native land and become good citizens and obedient to the country that had treated them with magnanimity which I believe it would be wise to display.

The Boer, Mr. Speaker, will make a magnificent component ethnic quantity in South Africa. His is a noble race, the race that held at bay Alva in the Netherlands, the race that furnished to England the Prince of Orange, the race that has the lofty faith of the puritan and the endurance of the puritan—that is a constituent portion of the population of South Africa that it is worth the while of the British authorities to cultivate. It is worth their while to make this Boer element a loyal element, to make of this Boer element an element attached to the English institutions, an element that realizes that it has been treated with generosity, with magnanimity, and that it can put its faith in the power with which it is dealing. Now Britain wants in this matter, I apprehend, not revenge, that is not a British characteristic. Britain faces its foe, conquers its enemies and then deals with them generously. Britain wants no revenge; but she wants a united people in South Africa, the restoration of prosperity to that country and the creation of a commonwealth there that, in its history and progress will redound to the glory of English institutions and of English government. England wants no revenge, no devastated farms, no ravaged lands, reduced to the condition of a desert; no hords of beggars and fugitives harrying the country; she wants a prosperous land, a return to fixed conditions, and the gathering together of these people in their homes, and the use by them of their energies and industry to the advancement of the state. And, Sir, in gaining this aspiration, the three angels, mercy, amnesty and peace stand ready to give their services to securing the consummation of that which every true citizen of Canada must desire.

Now, it may be asked, Mr. Speaker, when the exercise of the qualities of mercy and magnanimity is urged, when the granting of amnesty is proposed, have we any parallel for this policy? I answer: Yes. And every parallel we have is a shining, a glorious example of the success of this line of policy. In 1759, Canada passed from one authority to another. Prior to that, the scapling knife, the tomahawk and the torch worked their savage will along the frontier from Penobscot to Fort Du Quesne. For generations the English colonists and the French colonists were engaged in bitter war, and the hatred of each side for the other was intense and consuming. We had the slaughter of Braddock's army at Monogahela; we had the battle of Ticonderoga and the British reverse there; we had the war-whoop and the Indian foray; we had bitter and deadly hostilities along this whole border year after year. And when, at last, Wolfe took Quebec, and under the treaty of Paris, Canada was ceded to Great Britain, the policy that was pursued toward the French people of this country was to allow them to retain their laws, their religion, their language, their social and ecclesiastical institutions. And this broad, comprehensive, liberal policy adopted with these sixty thousand Canadians in British North America has had results for which we cannot feel too thankful.

Mr. SPROULE. Is not England's action in that case the best guarantee in the world that she will deal generously with a conquered foe, even without any resolution from any outside country ?

Mr. CHARLTON. Possibly that is so. But does it follow that it is wrong to counsel that policy which the hon. gentleman assumes that England will pursue ? Is it wrong to express the humble opinion here that the policy he says England is likely to follow will receive our approbation ? I think not. As I said at the outset, the expression of this wish can do no harm if it is unnecessary, and it may do good. This historical example to which I have referred resulted in firmly attaching all this race to British institutions. Thirteen years after the treaty of Paris the American revolution broke out, and an attempt was made by American agitators to carry the French colonists with them. But they failed. Those French colonists were faithful to British institutions then, they have been faithful to British institutions since, and they are faithful to British institutions now—and their history affords a shining and crowning example of the results following the policy of mercy and magnanimity in treating with a conquered foe. We had another case in the thirteen colonies. There was a Dutch colony there, which was called the New Netherlands. That colony was conquered and re-christened New York, and the Dutch colonists were incorporated with the Anglo-Saxon population. They were treated with generosity ; their rights and privileges were assured to them, including their language if they chose to use it. To-day it is one of the most loyal elements in the country. It has given one president to the union—Van Buren—it has its representative in the United States Senate—Depew—and it has given rise to a great family of railway kings, the Vanderbilts. Its history affords an illustration of the desirability and propriety of treating nations thus incorporated into another with generosity. And we have a still more striking example in the United States itself, in the great struggle of the civil war. That war was carried through with relentless and remorseless energy. It was a titanic struggle. The north and the south were arrayed against each other on a question of principle, and the hostilities between the sections was of the bitterest kind. The battles fought in that war were remarkable for their sanguinary character. In all the great battles of Europe, the number of men killed was smaller in proportion to the number engaged than in the great battles of this terrible war. There was Chancellorsville with its seventeen thousand dead ; there was Vicksburgh; there was Chicamauga ; there was Missionary Ridge. They fought the fierce seven-days' battle in the wilderness. Great struggles. Great loss of life. The south planted thick with graves. The soil soaked with blood. The war was fought out to the bitter end with relentless hate and animosity. And at last, at Appomatox, Lee surrendered to Grant. The southerners were exhausted. They were treated with the greatest generosity. A union soldier would deprive himself of his breakfast to give food to the starving confederate. And when the southern army was disbanded, Grant said : 'Take the horses, you will need them to put in your spring crops ; take anything that you can make use of—anything that will be of service to you as private property—I will take as public property only what you cannot use.' And these men disbanded with the kindest feelings toward their conquerors. And but for the unfortunate death of Lincoln, the reconstruction of the south would have been speedy and complete. There was a great cry for vengeance on the leader of the southerners, Jeff. Davis, but he was never punished except by temporary imprisonment. There was no confiscation of the property of a rebel, there was no disfranchisement of a rebel, there was no vengeance inflicted upon the heads of rebels; but there was magnanimity, there was generosity exercised by the conquerors to the conquered ; and the result has been a reconstructed nation, and those two belligerent sections fighting under the same flag in the wars that have since occurred where their country has been engaged. So, Sir, this struggle in the United States, which passed beyond the limits of a rebellion and became one of the great wars of history, is but a type of the struggle that has occurred in South Africa. In South Africa where the principle at issue has been whether one race or another should possess the country, where the prize has been the possession of South Africa either for Boer or for Briton, as in the case of the United States, so in the case of South Africa, let the same generosity and magnanimity be exercised towards the foe now as was exercised towards the foe then.

Heretofore, Sir, the Dutch in South Africa have fought against our progress. We have had no sympathy with the Burghers. If we can possibly attach to our interest that element of the African population ; if we can make them loyal to British institutions ; if we can make use of their energy, and their courage, and their powers of endurance to forward the British cause in South Africa, why, the whole southern half of the continent lies at our feet. It is a question of great importance what our possessions in South Africa shall be. We have in the north, from Alexandria and Khartoum to Uganda and Victoria Nyanza, possessions reaching across 36 degrees of latitude and to the very heart of the continent. We have in South Africa possessions reaching from Cape Town away north to the Zambesi, and beyond the valley of that great river and the great inland sea of Tanganyika ; and we can make great additions to that empire—it is not necessary to state in what direction. It is of enormous importance to British institutions and British interests that the Boer element, the Dutch element in South Africa, should be consolidated and made a loyal element of the population of that country. And, Sir, we can afford to dispense with all desire to gratify feelings of revenge, we can afford to be generous and magnanimous, we can afford to say to these men : Lay down your arms, resume your allegiance, and you shall have, as fast as you can be safely entrusted with it, the franchise and every right of a British subject, and representation in the colonial bodies that will be erected here ; and we will establish a confederation in South Africa with provincial autonomy and a great central government as in Canada, attached to the government of Great Britain.

Now, Sir, the measure of blood is full, the measure of misery is full ; and I imagine that no man in Canada wants any more. We are warranted in looking for a day when South Africa, like Canada will be a great commonwealth with two races moving together hand in hand, as is the case here, in promoting the interests and extending the boundaries and increasing the power of that South African commonwealth. Sir, mercy, and magnanimity, and amnesty are the powers that need to be exercised to secure this result. In moving this motion, Mr. Speaker, I have been governed by a sincere desire to place a statement before the House, to urge reasons to this House, that would warrant us, as I believe, in expressing an humble opinion as to the propriety of inaugurating that policy which I have set forth, which I believe to be the touchstone for the settlement of our difficulties in South Africa upon a permanent, a desirable and an enduring basis.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). I desire to add a few words to what the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has said in support of this motion. I need not say that with all the views expressed by that hon. gentleman, as well as with some parts of the motion itself that he has placed in your hands, I do not fully agree. Professors of logic in this House will probably find a great deal of comfort and pleasure in such a declaration as this. But, Mr. Speaker, having no other aim in this matter but to fulfil what I believe to be my duty as a representative of the Canadian people, and my duty as a British citizen, whenever I find an opponent of mine coming towards my position I am willing to meet him half way. So far as British supremacy in South Africa is concerned, from the very beginning of this unfortunate war I stated clearly that I thought British supremacy was a necessity in South Africa. I admit that the warlike spirit which reigned in this House as well as in this country has perhaps made some hon. gentlemen forget the position I took at that time. But the position I took then, the position I have taken all along, and the position I take now, is that the only way by which British supremacy can be established in South Africa is by adhering to the best British traditions of respect for minorities and of generosity to foes in war.

As to the right of this parliament to offer its opinion to the British government, I think there can be no doubt. I was astonished to hear hon. gentlemen opposite interrupt, with what I might call sneers, the assertion made by the hon. member for North Norfolk, that we have a right to express our opinion on this matter. It is strange that, along with the development of what is called the new imperialism, and along with so much profession of fraternity on the part of the upholders of the new policy, they are always ready to take the subservient position that they are willing to be taxed, they are willing to give the blood and the money of this country, but they dare not express a single opinion on the issue of a war towards the prolongation of which they have contributed.

From the start of this question, I held, of course, that it was not our business to interfere at all in Africa. But from the moment we did interfere, either wilfully or not—from the moment this parliament called upon the Canadian people to vote a cent towards the carrying on of this war—we acquired the right of saying what should be its result. Now, if the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) would come in with a motion interfering with the position taken by the British government—that, of course would not hurt my feelings very much—but it might lead a majority of the members of this House to say that it would be a mistake for this parliament, at this moment, to propose anything that might embarrass the British government. But, Sir, we should not be more loyalist than the King of England, we should not be more attached to British institutions than the parliament and government of Great Britain. It is now a well known fact to the entire world that the British government and the British people are endeavouring to secure peace in South Africa and are just as anxious for it as are their opponents. We have not yet the text of the speech that was delivered a week ago last Monday by the Chancellor of the Exchequer ; but what do we see in the reports sent through by the associated press ?

Sir Michael Hicks-Beach is seldom dramatic; but when he referred to-day to the government's intention to restock the Boer as well as the colonial farms, his voice rose to an eloquent pitch. His gesture, as he spoke in praise of the valor of the Boers and expressed his hopes for subsequent friendship between Britons and Boer, took the House with him, and the cheers, especially from the opposition, prevented the speaker from continuing his speech for several moments.

When the hon. member for North Norfolk, a moment ago, gave expression to almost similar feelings, there were also some interruptions, but interruptions indicating that the broad feeling of generosity which is passing now through the British parliament, which is animating the mass of the British people, has not yet, unfortunately, penetrated this House. Whatever may be our differences upon this question, whatever may still be our private opinions as to the merits of this war, as to the causes which have led to this war and to the way in which this question should have been treated in years past, I think we can afford to bury these differences. We should be ready to help the British government and the British people in putting an end to this cruel and unfortunate war.

It has been stated in the press, and may be it will be stated in this House, that by adopting this motion we are embarrassing the British government and helping the enemies of Great Britain, and thereby preventing the war to be brought to a satisfactory conclusion. But, Sir, what did Sir Michael Hicks-Beach say in the British parliament, in the name of the British government ?

After the war was over there would be the great expenses of the relief and settlement of the two colonies and the re-stocking of the farms. He hoped that when durable peace was made, parliament would be generous and loan money for restocking the farms, not only of those who fought on the British side, but of those who had been honest enemies and whom they now hoped to make friends, and for railroad and other enterprises to serve to develop the two states.

So it is proper for the Chancellor of the Exchequer of Great Britain to say that the British people are ready to tax themselves and to borrow money in order to give the Boers back the farms, and restock them, after the British government had declared two months ago that they would seize these farms and sell them to pay for the support of the concentration camps. If the British government have come to the conclusion that they must change so radically their policy, is it not proper for the parliament of Canada to say simply and solely that a policy of mercy and generosity should be the basis upon which this war should be settled ? Not only are we not embarrassing the government of Great Britain, but by passing this resolution we are helping the British government.

The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) interrupted the hon. member for North Norfolk and asked : 'Is not the example given by Great Britain in 1763 a guarantee that the same policy of generosity will be adopted in this case ?' Circumstances alter cases. In 1763 there were two great powers fighting upon this continent. turies, and hon. gentlemen in this House They had been fighting in Europe for censeem sometimes to forget that if England had conquered on the soil of America she had been conquered on the soil of Europe during the Seven Years' War; that the treaty of 1763 was a treaty of give and take between England and France ; and that some advantages which France secured on the continent of Europe were compensated for to England by the cession of Canada, securities being given that the rights of the French settlers should be respected. The hon. gentleman seemed to assume a condition which does not exist in this case ; but I put that altogether aside. Contrasting the tone of the present English with the tone of the Canadian press, I am quite ready to say that, if I were a Boer myself, I would rather submit my whole case to British public men than to some colonial public men. But, Sir, this fight is not merely a fight between Great Britain and the Boers. This fight is a fight between the Boers, the Cape Colonists, or rather those who are called Cape Loyalists, and the paramount power of Great Britain. That the British government and the British parliament are disposed to show generosity in their treatment of a conquered foe, I have not the slightest doubt ; but, at the same time, that there are in Natal and Cape Colony a certain number of people who are ready to exact the pound of flesh, who are only looking to their own personal interests, and who would be ready to see the peace of the empire sacrificed if their personal interests were thereby secured and their personal feeling of revenge were assuaged, there is not the slightest doubt. You have only to read the statements which have been published in the British press to get evidence of this fact ; and the purpose of this resolution is neither to embarrass the British government nor to dictate terms to the British government, but it is to give strength to the British authorities in order that the very proposition that they are ready to uphold shall be upheld, and that they will be strengthened against the exactions of the very narrow loyalist element of Cape Colony. When I speak of the loyalist element of Cape Colony, I am not referring to the whole English speaking population of Cape Colony. There are, in South Africa, thousands of English-speaking people who have looked upon this war as a most unfortunate period of British history, and of African history, and who would like to be helped so that this policy of generosity and mercy might be granted to the enemy.

It is true that the example of 1763 is to a certain extent a guarantee to us that the policy of generosity will be adopted. But there were other rebellions in other periods of the history of England which showed that some of the officials of Great Britain are not always animated by this sentiment of generosity. We have the history of the Jamaica rebellion where the British governor—after having notified the home authorities that the rebellion was over and that there was no more danger of uprising—caused hundreds of people to be hanged and flogged. I know that such is not the policy of the British government to-day; but we have unfortunate instances which show us that among the loyalist population of South Africa there is an element that would be glad to carry out, not the policy of the British government, not the policy of Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, not the policy of Mr. John Morley, not the policy of the leading spirits of British opinion to-day; but the policy of Governor Eyre of Jamaica. I am sure that the British government will not give away to such pressure, but at the same time I believe that should their hands be fortified by expressions of opinion from the colonies generally, and especially from the Canadian parliament, it would be all the better to confirm them against temptation.

I agreed to second this motion in a spirit of conciliation. My opinions upon the merits of the war have not changed. My opinions as to the conduct of the British government previous to the war and during the war have not changed. These opinions were held by me sincerely and honestly, and I still hold them. But when I saw that a representative of the English-speaking majority in this House was ready to join hands with me in a motion like this, I was willing to put aside for the moment many of my opinions upon this question, and I did so in the hope that this House would receive the motion in the same spirit of conciliation, of peace, and of harmony.

One more word. I have my opinion and my strong opinion as to the policy of the British government upon this whole question—as to the policy especially of Mr. Chamberlain. But, I suppose hon. gentlemen opposite have a great deal of admiration and consideration for Mr. Chamberlain and his policy. For the past two years, previous to, during and after the last general election, what was the position taken by Mr. Chamberlain? It was: That the policy of the British government was framed not only in accordance with the wishes of the British people, but it was framed in accordance with the wishes of the people of the whole empire. His strongest argument against his Liberal opponents was: That the entire opinion of the colonies being in favour of his policy, he would not accept the views of a small handful of Englishmen and Scotchmen as against the views of the whole empire. That was repeated a hundred times by Mr. Chamberlain in parliament and out of parliament. We have therefore the very words of the Colonial Secretary, that he considers the opinion of the colonies as a great weight.

What is the opinion of the British government at the present time with reference to this matter? Up to within the past few weeks it was announced time and again by nearly every member of the government that unconditional surrender was the only basis upon which the war could be settled. But now we have the straight declaration of the government organs and supporters, and of members of the government themselves, that a policy of generosity and mercy is going to be the basis of the settlement. It may be said that when the Boers lay down their arms, then would be the time for this parliament to say that they should be treated leniently. But, if the British government, who know their position in Cape Colony—if the British authorities, both civil and military, who know exactly where they stand and where the enemy stands—if they should still persist in saying that unconditional surrender is the only basis upon which the war can be settled—I then would agree with the argument that this parliament should offer no suggestion until surrender is made by the enemy. But although hostilities are yet going on, we have the announcement that the British government will probably agree upon a policy of mercy and generosity; and that being the case, the passage of this resolution by the Canadian parliament would be a great help to the British government. It would not mean that we came between the British government and their enemy; it would not mean that we came between the British government and British public opinion; it would mean that having heard that the British government were ready to settle this question upon the basis of mercy and generosity, we, the representatives of a people who have given their money and their men to uphold British power, are now ready to help the British government in according mercy and generosity to the enemy. Let me say here—and I believe the Prime Minister will not contradict me upon this point—let me say that the French Canadians as a whole are opposed to this war. They detested, and they still do detest this war; but at the same time they are ready to join with their English-speaking countrymen in saying that the policy which has secured amity and friendship in Canada is the only policy that can secure amity and friendship and peace and harmony in South Africa.

I claim that the French Canadians have a special right to have their voice heard upon this question. We stand here as living testimony that this policy of conciliation is the only one which can secure the acceptation of British institutions by a foreign element. Sir, that acceptation by us was not made in one year; it was not made in fifty years. We had to fight against British governments and against British governors, and against British civil and military authorities to get the rights that we now enjoy. It was not always peace in our history. Our freedom was not always a free and generous gift from the British authorities. It was very often a matter of fight, and had it not been for several outside circumstances, at times perhaps we would have lost what we had gained. But on the whole, why are we satisfied with the conditions under which we live? Why have we become year after year more loyal and devoted supporters of British institutions? It is because we have found that British rule, in its general and higher spirit and manifestation, is a good rule; British rule is a rule of peace; British rule is a rule of conciliation, of progress and of prosperity. I therefore say that this parliament, more than any other representative body in the British world, is specially entitled to express an opinion at this period of the war. I insist on the point that this will not be an interference with the policy of the British government, but that on the contrary it will strengthen their hands in showing mercy to their foe; it will strengthen them in carrying out that policy of generosity which all well-thinking British people wish them to carry out.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). For my part, I have no doubt whatever that both the mover and the seconder of this resolution are animated by the very best of motives. I have no doubt that both hon. gentlemen are thoroughly sincere in their hope that peace should be restored speedily in South Africa, upon the broadest possible basis of generosity to the Boers. On the whole, I do not regret this debate. At the same time, I must express the fervent wish that my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) will not press his motion further, and that the debate shall stop here and now. My hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), who seconded the motion, told us that he took some exception to the speech of the hon. member (Mr. Charlton) who proposed the motion. We who know the views long entertained by my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) are not at all surprised at that.

He has stated at the same time that he takes exception to the motion which he has seconded. For this, I may say, I was not so easily prepared. But I will not quarrel with my hon. friend on this score. My hon. friend has thought it advisable, and for this I do not blame him, to make a compromise with himself, to not carry out to the fullest extent the views he entertains on this matter. My hon. friend realizes that conciliation and compromise is an instrument of government, and that while it is quite proper and right for any one to hold his own convictions, it is also proper to remember that other people have convictions which they also hold dear. My hon. friend will realize that in a country like this, inhabited as it is by two different races, a policy of compromise and conciliation is indispensable if we want to make Canada a nation. This is the principle he wants to apply from Canada to South Africa, and in this I abundantly agree with him.

With the terms of the resolution, I may say without any hesitation whatever, I altogether agree. The resolution advises that the war in South Africa should be settled on two principles. The first is the principle of British supremacy. I am glad to hear from my hon. friend from Labelle that he also agrees that the interests of South Africa and the interests of civilization at large require that South Africa should be under British supremacy. There are two races in South Africa, the British race and the Dutch race, equally proud, in many respects equally strong, so intermixed that it is impossible for either to have an absolutely homogeneous government. The Dutch and the British are there together—in the Cape, in Natal, in the Orange Free State, in the Transvaal, in Rhodesia. They are neighbours who meet together every day in the ordinary avocations of life. It is impossible to separate them. They must be governed by the same authority—which shall it be, Dutch or British? This resolution affirms that this authority shall be British. With this we are all agreed. British civilization is the very civilization which will give what the Transvaal hitherto has not had—equality of rights for all, whether they be Dutch or British. That was the cause of the war—to secure this equality, which did not exist in the Transvaal. The Outlanders had long sought to obtain it, but failed to do so. The resolution affirms that the authority in South Africa shall be British; and we know from past experience of British civilization everywhere, that if British supremacy reigns over South Africa, there shall be freedom, not only for the British, but for the Dutch as well.

The second principle affirmed in the resolution is, that there should be most generous treatment accorded by the victors to the vanquished, by the British to the Dutch. Sir, for my part I do not think any resolution is necessary to obtain this generous treatment for the Boers in South Africa. A brave foe always commands the respect of a brave opponent, and that is enough to show that the Dutch shall receive generous treatment at the hands of the British. Why, it was only a few days ago that on the banks of the Hart's river a position had been entrusted to a few men, most of them I am proud to say, Canadians. They were assaulted for the best part of a day by an enemy at least eight times their superior in numbers. Each assault was repulsed, but after each assault the thin band of defenders were reduced in numbers. So reduced were they at last that there was not one man in that small force who had not been either killed or wounded. At last, when the position was carried, there was still a man defiant and proud—Bruce Carruthers was his name, a Canadian officer, I am proud to say—a name that is honoured in the heart of every one of his countrymen. By all the rules of war he might have been killed ; but from the ranks of the enemy, in their sympathy, came the cry : 'Do not kill him ; he is too brave a man ; he must live.' This, Sir, is the lesson of the war, and I have no doubt the victorious British now in South Africa will display the same spirit. I have no doubt they will say : 'The Dutch must live ; they have earned it by their gallantry in the field.' Sir, this is the position left to the men who are now engaged in South Africa, not only with war, but also with the negotiations for peace.

As to the right of this parliament to interfere in this question, to affirm this resolution, I, for my part, unhesitatingly say there can be no discussion whatever. The parliament of Canada to-day is a sovereign parliament. It is a sovereign parliament within the British empire. Many years ago the parliament of Canada asserted this authority, and claimed not only the privilege but the right to interfere in any question which might affect any part of the British empire of which we form a portion. It is now almost twenty years since the parliament of Canada passed a resolution in favour of granting home rule to Ireland. We were not directly concerned with the question ; but why did parliament twice in succession affirm the position that home rule should be granted to Ireland ? Because we felt that it was in the interest of Canada as well as of the empire that the wrongs of Ireland should be righted. It was only two years ago that parliament passed a resolution in favour of praying the British parliament to amend the Coronation oath. Why did we do so ? Because we considered that it was a question which affected the rights and priviledges and consciences of a large section of His Majesty's subjects. It was only three years ago that this parliament passed a resolution expressing its sympathy with the Outlanders in the Transvaal. We then affirmed that we sympathized with the efforts of the British government to right the wrongs which the Outlanders were suffering. Surely to-day we have the right to pass such a resolution as the one presented by my hon. friend from Norfolk and seconded by my hon. friend from Labelle, to ask that the rights of the Dutch population be generously considered.

But while I do not hesitate to say that we have the inherent right to pass such a resolution and to present our views as to the conditions of peace, I ask myself, and I ask my hon. friend from Norfolk and my hon. friend from Labelle, is it opportune, is it judicious, is it advisable to present such a motion to-day ? That is the question and I do not hesitate to say that in my opinion at this moment such a motion is very injudicious. I will go further, and I will say to my hon. friend from Labelle that if I felt as he does, that the passing of this resolution to-day would strengthen the hands of the British government to be merciful and to grant an amnesty, I would not hesitate to agree to it. But the question to-day is not in this position. On the contrary, in my humble judgment—and I think I can make it clear to any man in this House—if we were to interfere at this moment, we might hinder that peace which we all desire to see established. Sir, my hon. friend from Norfolk knows, and my hon. friend from Labelle, who has been a close student of all these events, knows that at this very moment negotiations are going on for a settlement of the terms of peace. My hon. friends know that only a few days ago Lord Kitchener and Lord Milner met the heroes of the war on the Boer side—General De Wet, a brave soldier, General Delarey, another brave soldier, General Botha, another brave soldier. They have been in close conference, and we have every reason to believe, though we are not yet informed officially, that terms of peace have been agreed upon.

We know that the Boer delegates have gone back to the commandos in the field to submit to them the terms upon which peace may be secured. What these terms are we yet do not know, but is it advisable at this moment, when the conditions are submitted to the Boer commandos, that we should interfere and excite perhaps in them hopes which might clash with what has been done, and prevent the negotiations being brought to a peaceful and satisfactory conclusion ? My hon. friend from Norfolk may say perhaps that this is a remote contingency. My hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) may say that what we want is not to reach South Africa but England, but in these days of rapid communication, when news travels on wings, we were to pass such a resolution, its very terms would be wired at once to South Africa and possibly induce the Boers to break off the negotiations in order, if possible, to gain better terms. We are still in the dark as to the precise nature of the conclusions which have been reached but let me suppose a case, which is not a violent supposition. My hon. friend from Norfolk a moment ago referred to the civil war in the United States. Well, it is due to the American people to say that there never was more generous treatment accorded by a victorious foe to its enemy than was accorded by the men of the north to the vanquished south. There never was a page more glorious in the history of any nation than that which was written. But my hon. friend knows as well as I, perhaps better—because he also has been a close student of those times and events—that after the war, the amnesty granted was not given to all those who participated in the strife. It is to the eternal pride of the American nation that not a drop of blood was shed on the scaffold, that not a man was punished for his participation in the war, that even Jefferson Davis, after a few years of seclusion, was set at liberty again. But my hon. friend knows well that immediately after Appomattox, which he described to us so eloquently, the amnesty granted to General Grant and later by Sherman did not cover all those who took part in the war, but only those who had laid down their arms after the surrender. A number of civilians were then debarred from the enjoyment of civil rights, but gradually, as the peace of the country increased and dangers were removed, all the shackles and disabilities were struck off, and at last a universal amnesty was proclaimed. Suppose at this moment terms were agreed on between Lord Kitchener on the one side and the Boer generals on the other, and suppose those terms did not include a general amnesty, but only an amnesty which covered the great mass of the belligerents, but excepted certain individuals. And suppose the resolution of my hon. friend were adopted and wired over to Africa, might not the Boers then say: 'Oh, we have the Canadian parliament standing behind us, and we must insist on better terms.' I do not know that my hon. friend would then find that by his resolution he was promoting the cause of peace. I think we had better at this moment leave this question in the hands of the brave soldiers who are dealing with it—Lord Kitchener on the one side, and Generals Delarey and De Wet on the other. I think we had better leave them to determine the settlement, and I firmly believe in my heart that the terms which will be granted and accepted by these brave soldiers will be such as can be accepted by every British subject all over the world. When the terms of settlement have been agreed upon, when the country enjoys again the blessings of peace, should it be found that the terms were not as generous as, in the judgment of my hon. friend from North Norfolk and my hon. friend from Labelle, or perhaps my own, they ought to be, we shall not abdicate the right of the Canadian parliament to affirm and send its views to the imperial authorities. It will not be too late then, because that will be the time when we can speak effectively. But at this moment, when negotiations are pending, it seems to me the argument is overwhelming that perhaps we would lose all in attempting to save all. These are the views I have to submit to the House and to my hon. friend from North Norfolk, and if I have any wish which I can express to him, speaking, I believe, the sense of both sides of the House, it would be that he ought not to press this motion, but agree to withdraw it.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I regret extremely, Mr. Speaker, that the unavoidable absence of the leader on this side of the House imposes upon me the task of offering a few remarks in respect to this resolution, but I must confess that what has fallen from the lips of my right hon. friend the First Minister has rendered much easier the task imposed upon me. It struck me from the very first that this resolution was extremely untimely—I might almost say out of place, to use no harsher expression. The circumstances are these. After a protracted and very bitter struggle, the two great enemies have entered upon negotiations in order to arrive at some basis of arrangement. I believe also that they have agreed upon terms, but what these terms are it is impossible to say. In fact the home government itself is probably at present not informed as to the details. It seems to me, therefore, that, under these circumstances—and I believe that in this respect I am fortunate in representing the opinions of my friends who sit around me to-day—regrettable, whatever may be our prerogatives—and I would be the first to revindicate the rights and privileges of parliament—that we should take any action which might interfere with the negotiations. Such interference might defeat the very object of this resolution, to which in reality very few, I am sure in this House, have any objection. It might imperil not only the beneficent work upon which the home government is at present engaged, but also the advantages which the Boers are anxious to secure.

The hon. gentleman who moved this resolution took up considerable time in explaining its opportuneness and purport, in which he was perfectly right, but it seems to me that at this critical moment in this deplorable war, the voice of the politician—and in using that term, I am not implying anything which is not meritorious—should be silent, and we should leave the settlement completely in the hands of those armed foes who are now deliberating in order to secure if possible what we all desire—a satisfactory conclusion of this terrible conflict.

I believe that this parliament, with the sovereign rights which we undoubtedly have, can deliberate and express its opinion on every question. Yet I have been forced to the conclusion that, in a matter of this importance, in view of the constitutional principles which govern us, it would be better for our parliament, as it would be better for the British parliament, to observe the rule which I think they have steadily adhered to, and to which they have shown their adherence within the past few days—the rule that the conclusion of a treaty belongs to the executive authority. Parliament, of course, as my right hon.

friend (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) observed a moment ago, has reserved the right to criticise the conditions of the treaty when that treaty is concluded. And that is a rule which we should adhere to under the present circumstance, particularly in view of the fact that we have not the information necessary to enable us to form an opinion. In listening to my hon. friend from Norfolk, in listening to the remarks so vehemently urged by my hon. friend from Labelle, I was struck with the thought that, at this very hour, when great and courageous men are deliberating in the field in South Africa upon the conditions of the cessation of hostilities, how pitiful, if these hon. gentlemen will allow me the expression, how commonplace must appear the remarks which we make here, and how deficient in any truth and correct comprehension of the necessary important details which must attend any settlement. We can well take example form the attitude of the mother of our parliaments, that great assembly upon which this is modeled. It is a significant fact that, at this moment, the parliament of Great Britain has not taken up the study of this question, but has abstained, as it seems to me it should abstain, from deliberating on the question which, in its present critical stage can only be settled upon the field of battle itself. And I have remarked with no small degree of admiration that the great public men of England, the foremost men of that great country, where the almost constant necessity exists for public utterance on public questions, have refrained studiously from offering any deliberate opinion upon this serious question, as they are obliged to offer opinions every day upon other questions which present themselves for deliberation and decision in that free country. At a moment like this, and holding this view of the situation, I would not for an instant take up the task of pointing out certain serious discrepancies which have struck me not only in the speech of my hon. friend from North Norfolk, but also and more particularly in the remarks offered by my young friend the talented member for Labelle. I will not do that. God forbid that, holding the opinion that this discussion should, as soon as possible, drop, I should commit the indiscretion of entering upon the discussion of these discrepancies, which, under other circumstances, I should certainly deal with. I must say that, amongst many painful circumstances which attend public life, it is very satisfactory to see that upon a matter of this gravity, I believe I may say that there is a quasi unanimity in this House. I believe—and I may add this to the remarks made by the right hon. Prime Minister who preceded me—that not only could we do serious injury to the British cause, which has been so courageously upheld by our own fellow-countrymen in South Africa, not only could we do serious injury to the cause of the Boers themselves, a cause which must arouse our sympathy, if not to the extent indicated by my hon. friend from Labelle, certainly to that extent which is always won by courage and valour—but I do believe that, upon the occasion of the visit to England of the Prime Minister of this country to take part in the coronation, any resolution which we might adopt, any view which this parliament might authoritatively express would place serious obstacles in the way of the performance of the task, which is a noble one and in which we all take an interest, of representing this great Dominion at that imposing ceremony. I believe that any resolution that we might pass might embarass the right hon. gentleman himself. Whatever views we may hold upon the great public questions in our own country, I, for one, would be extremely sorry on a matter of this gravity to embarass the right hon. gentleman in a mission which I submit, in more than one sense, he performs on behalf of both sides of this House. Mr. Speaker, I do regret that my hon. friend from North Norfolk has seen fit to bring this motion to the notice of the House ; I do regret that my hon. friend from Labelle has taken part in supporting it. My young friend from Labelle, who has many qualities that I very much admire, has not the deep interest in this matter that some others have. Let me remind him of that day when the friends and adherents of Macduff brought to him the harrowing news of the death of his wife and children. His henchmen surrounded him, sought to inspire him with the legitimate desire of revenge for this awful outrage. When Malcolm urges revenge upon him, we all remember the answer of Macduff—'He has no children.' Sir, my thoughts and my feelings go out generously to those who have a greater interest, a nearer interest, perhaps, in this matter than I have myself. And I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that many a man far and near—aye, Sir, and many a woman, too—will silently experience a feeling of deep gratitude to those of us in this House who, remembering that others have so many dear relatives upon the field of battle in South Africa, adopt the suggestion which some of us have ventured to make, that at this moment the discussion of this subject should be dropped.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I would not say anything on this subject——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Drop it, drop it.

Mr. SPROULE. I would not attempt to say anything on this subject but for the fact that I think we have been introducing a principle in this House of late years that is not conducive to the best results, and that is, upon every little occasion, of giving advice to the mother country. If I thought the mother country required advice, I would be one of the first to offer it. But it is because I do not share that opinion that I desire to protest against this principle and against this resolution. I may say, in passing, that in my judgment the whole tenor of this resolution and of the speeches supporting it are an implied denial that the instincts of the British nation are humane and generous, and that they are disposed to do what is right. If we believe conscientiously and implicitly that the instincts of the British nation are to do what is right, what is generous and humane, where is there any necessity for such a resolution ? I oppose it also because I think it is ill-timed. It is ill-timed to start a discussion in this House at the very moment, as hon. gentlemen have admitted, when negotiations are going on, negotiations that we sincerely hope and believe will bring about a peace to the satisfaction of all. I believe the resolution is unnecessary because England has ever been generous, as all her history shows, to conquered foes. It is an instinct of the Anglo-Saxon race, and that instinct has been in evidence in all the history of the British power the world over. England has been most liberal, most humane, most generous, in her treatment of those who have been conquered by her. But we cannot but remember how necessary it is that peace should be established on a firm basis in South Africa; because thrice already England has had trouble with her South African colonies, and it is absolutely necessary that peace should be established upon a firm basis in order that the rights of every British subject may be secured beyond peradventure in that country. For this reason, if for no other, I say it is unnecessary that we should interfere by resolution at the present time. It is because I think this resolution is improper, uncalled for, and is an unwarranted interference with the prerogatives of the British government, that I oppose it. I do not think that we are warranted by our past services in passing a resolution in the Canadian parliament giving advice to the imperial government, notwithstanding our liberality and our endeavour to sustain British authority in that far distant country. It is also because I believe this resolution is in very bad taste that I offer objection to it. To justify it upon the ground of what we have done, I think is in bad taste. What we have done we have done believing it to be right, believing it to be our duty; therefore, I do not think we are justified in invoking our past services as a plea for passing this resolution. I think the resolution is indiscreet. Once before when we offered advice with regard to the internal affairs of the British empire, we are reminded that the Queen would have regard to the advice of her constitutional advisers, or in other words, that she did not think it proper that the Canadian parliament should offer advice to the mother country regarding affairs which concerned her and not ourselves. Now I am far from saying that we have no right to tender advice; I believe, with those who have already spoken, that we have such a right; but I do not regard it as the part of wisdom at this time that we should offer any advice. We are here to legislate for Canada and not for the purpose of settling South African affairs. Believing that we should attend to our own business, and believing as I do that we are drifting into an unsound custom of tendering advice to the imperial parliament on the most trivial occasions, I hold the views I have expressed, and I believe that this motion should be withdrawn.

Mr. CHARLTON. Of course, I do not need to recount any of the arguments I made in justification of my motion.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I hope the hon. member is not closing this debate, because I intend to speak on this motion.

Mr. CHARLTON. I may say that at the request of the premier, I was about to withdraw the motion. But I will take the opportunity, Mr. Speaker, as I am upon my feet, of stating that my attitude on this occasion is not based upon any change of opinion as to the propriety of the motion. I do not by any means withdraw any of the opinions I have expressed; the country may judge of the correctness of those opinions by the facts and the arguments I have advanced. But I realize that the leader of this government has a right to demand of me in this case a certain line of conduct; he is responsible not only for his own opinions, but for the opinions of the government. While I do not concede that the position that I occupy is an improper one, and while I take due notice of the premier's own admission, that he was glad the discussion had taken place, and that he approved of the principle of the resolution, still as he asks that the motion be withdrawn upon the ground of its being inexpedient and inopportune, I think I am bound to be governed by the desire expressed by the Prime Minister; and with the consent of the seconder of this motion, and with the consent of the House, at the suggestion and request of the government, I beg to withdraw the motion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Mr. Charlton moves, seconded by Mr. Bourassa, for leave to withdraw his motion.

Mr. MONET. Does that prevent me from speaking on the motion ?

The PRIME MINISTER. That does not prevent any one speaking.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

SUPPLY—SOUTH AFRICAN WAR—TERMS OF PEACE.

The House resumed debate on the motion of the Minister of Finance, that the House go again into Committee of Supply, and the motion of Mr. Charlton in amendment thereto.

Mr. D. MONET (Laprairie and Napierville). Mr. Speaker, I wish for a few moments to refer to some of the remarks made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). That hon. gentleman admitted the unquestionable right of this parliament to express its opinion on every important issue with which the motion now before us deals, but he claimed that the resolution was untimely. And in that contention he followed the right hon. the leader of the House, and his own lieutenant-leader, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). This contention being the very contention of the hon. leader of this House and his own lieutenant-leader, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), I hope the hon. member for East Grey will not charge me with any lack of courtesy if, instead of replying to every item of his speech, I merely refer him to the criticism which I intend to make on the speech of the leader of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier opened his remarks by saying that he regretted very much the absence of his leader from the House to-day, because owing to that absence it became his duty to voice the feeling of the opposition on the subject that was being discussed in this House. I believe the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was right when he regretted the absence of his leader. I believe it would have been far better for the hon. member for Jacques Cartier if his leader had been here, and had himself taken the responsibility of the attitude that has been taken by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. What is the conclusion to be drawn from the speech of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier ? It is this : that the lieutenant leader of the Conservative party, the leader of the Conservative party of the province of Quebec, refuses to send to the British parliament a humble prayer in favour of the poor victims of this imprudent war in South Africa, asking for mercy in their favour, when this very prayer was called for by an English-speaking member, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). I do not believe that this attitude of the lieutenant-leader of the Conservative party will ever be highly appreciated by the Conservative party in that province.

Then the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, while not explicitly finding fault with the hon. member for Labelle for joining hands with the hon. member for North Norfolk, referred to the fact with a certain ironical smile covering his lips ; and it was very easy to see that he was amused at such a spectacle being given in this House. But if the hon. member for North Norfolk has been converted to the ideas that have been expressed by the hon. member for Labelle on the question of the South African war, he is not the only member of this House who has been.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier himself, in his capacity of lieutenant-leader of the Conservative party, is a convert to the views of the hon. member for Labelle. In the by-election that took place since the last session of this parliament in the county of Laval—and I see the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Léonard) sitting close to the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, and I challenge him to deny the assertion I am going to make—is it not a fact that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier in his capacity of leader of the Conservative party in the province of Quebec, said that he blamed this government for allowing England to recruit soldiers in this country to go to the front in South Africa ? This is the very attitude that was taken by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier in the by-election in Laval, and I ask him and I ask the hon. member for Laval to tell me if the hon. member for Labelle has ever gone further in that direction ? The hon. member for Jacques Cartier took the very same attitude in the by-election that took place in St. James Division, Montreal, where Mr. Bergeron, an ex-leader of the Conservative party, was candidate. He said there that he would have supported the motion brought before this House by the hon. member for Labelle if that motion had not been an academic motion, because, so far as the ideas were concerned, he sympathized entirely with the views expressed by the hon. member for Labelle. So, if the hon. member for Jacques Cartier saw fit to sneer a little about the hon. member for Labelle joining hands with the hon. member for North Norfolk, I think every member of this House can accord the same sneering to himself, because he has done the same thing as the hon. member for North Norfolk ; and why did he do so ? I am very far from blaming the hon. member for Jacques Cartier for having done what he has done. I believe he has done so knowing that he voiced the feeling of the province of Quebec when he turned in the opposite direction from that which he had always followed on the South African question since he first occupied a seat in this House. Now, it is true that the hon. member for North Norfolk has changed a little his opinions about the South African war, or rather about the quality of the Boers peopling the Transvaal and the Orange Republic. I remember very well, when this question of the South African war was first brought up before the House, the hon. member for North Norfolk gave us one of the best reasons that could be adduced in favour of England waging that war, that England had the undoubted right to force British institutions on these very same ignorant and half-barbarian people of the Transvaal. To-day I am glad to see that the hon. member for North Norfolk—and I congratulate him on the fact—considers that this brave race of the Transvaal deserves better treatment than he himself formerly thought should be accorded to them.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier, in discussing the resolution which we are now debating, admitted that this parliament had the right to express its opinion on the question at issue ; but he said that the resolution was extremely untimely. Mr. Speaker, did the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, or did even the hon. leader of the government, give a single reason why this resolution is untimely ? It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution is very timely. In what circumstances is it brought before this House ? We know perfectly well that just now the question in England is, what treatment are we going to give to the Boers ? We know perfectly well that the decision is not arrived at yet. We do not know very well on what basis the peace will be made. Then, I say, if this parliament has a right ever to give its opinion on the terms of the peace which is going to be made, now is the time for giving that opinion. Those who claim that this resolution is untimely would do well to state when it will be timely for us to offer it. When will it be timely for us to ask the British parliament to give such treatment to the Boers of the Transvaal and the Republic of Orange ?

An hon. MEMBER. Never.

Mr. MONET. An hon. member says, never. Then he does not share the opinion of his leader, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, who said very plainly that he agreed with the very terms of the resolution. When will it be timely for us to express our opinion in the matter ? Will it be after the peace is concluded ? I say it will then be untimely for us to say anything about it, because the decision then will have been arrived at and there will be no use in our saying anything about it. The attitude of the right hon. leader of the government and the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Monk) reminds me of that taken by a lawyer who, though he appeared to plead a case before the judge, would not speak. And when the judge said to him : Well, give me your opinion before I decide the case, the lawyer would reply : No, it is not time now for me to plead the case, but when the judgment is rendered I will give my opinion. It seems to me that if we accept the view of those who claim that this is not the proper time for us to express our opinion, that time will never come. If we are to express an opinion at all, there can be no doubt that to-day is the proper time to do so. No valid reasons have been given why this resolution should be declared untimely, but on the contrary very good reasons can be given why it is now very opportune indeed.

Let us look back to what took place before the war broke out. A few months before war was declared, at a time when there were only rumours of war, the right hon. the leader of the government rose in his place in this House on the 31st July, and taking advantage of the silent consent of the whole House, proposed a resolution without having previously given notice. The first part of his resolution read as follows :

> Resolved, that this House has viewed with regret the complications which have arisen in the Transvaal Republic, of which Her Majesty is suzerain, from the refusal to accord to Her Majesty's subjects now settled in that region any adequate participation in its government.

Then the resolution concluded :

> That this House, representing a people which has largely succeeded——

Mind you, Sir, the very circumstance mentioned in support of the resolution I am quoting presents itself again to our consideration.

> —which has largely succeeded, by the adoption of the principle of conceding equal political rights to every portion of the population, in harmonizing estrangements and in producing general content with the existing system of government, desires to express its sympathy with the efforts of Her Majesty's Imperial authority to obtain for the subjects of Her Majesty who have taken up their abode in the Transvaal such measures of justice and political recognition as may be found necessary to secure them in the full possession of equal rights and liberties.

On the 31st July, 1899, we considered it advisable for this House to pass a resolution assuring the British parliament that we sympathized with them in their efforts to secure to the Uitlanders of the Transvaal, who were still termed British subjects——

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONET—the rights to which they were entitled. My hon. friend behind me says 'hear, hear,' and no doubt we may be told that in this resolution we were simply expressing our sympathy with the British parliament in their endeavour to give equal rights to British subjects, whereas to-day we are asking that same parliament to grant a certain measure of magnanimity to the Boers. But I would remind hon. gentlemen that since the proclamation of Lord Roberts, the Boers have become British subjects at an English point of view, and when we are asking the British parliament to give the Boers the best terms possible, we only asking in their favour the equal rights which in our former resolution we asked for the Uitlanders. If, therefore, a few months before war was declared, it was right to take the step we did, why have we not the right to-day, before peace is concluded, to say on what basis we would like to see peace effected between England and the Transvaal ?

I do not suppose that much more can be said on this question. It seems to me that it has always been recognized in this House that the Canadian parliament has the right to make any representations to the British parliament concerning any matter in which we are but indirectly interested. We have done this several times in favour of home rule, and to those who object to this resolution because it is untimely and because we may rely on the magnanimity of the English people, I would say : Could not the same objection have been urged against those who asked this House to pass resolutions in favour of home rule ? Could we not then have been told that we might rely on the magnanimity of the British people and the British parliament in their dealings with the Irish people ?

The right we have to express our opinion is one that no hon. member in this House can dispute, especially in such a case as this, owing to the contribution which Canada has been called on to make in favour of England—a contribution which has been pretty heavy for Canada. That certainly gives us an undoubted right, apart from every other consideration, to send across to the home government the prayer embodied in the resolution before the House. Of course, owing to the fact that the mover of the resolution has withdrawn it, no practical result can ensue from this debate, but I believe it my duty to record my opinions on the matter, and if the hon. gentleman would press his resolution to a division, I would vote in its favour.

Mr. SAM. HUGHES (North Victoria). It has been my misfortune, Mr. Speaker, not to have been present to hear the excellent addresses made by the mover of the motion (Mr. Charlton) and by my good friend the right hon. leader of the government as well as the other speeches made on this occasion. However, the motion is here and it speaks for itself. The introductory paragraph speaks of ' maintaining and firmly establishing '—I should imagine that our worthy friend (Mr. Charlton) would have transposed these terms and have first spoken of establishing and then of maintaining British supremacy in South Africa. The resolution reads :

> This House is of opinion that British supremacy should be maintained and firmly established in South Africa.

At present British supremacy is not firmly established there, and it has to be firmly established first, and then maintained irrespective of what the consequences may be.

The second part of the resolution I entirely dissent from :

> And that in the interest of peace and of future tranquillity, harmony and homogeneity, it is expedient to offer universal amnesty as a condition of peace and submission to British control, to all persons in arms against British authority in Cape Colony, Natal, the Orange River Colony, the Transvaal, and all other portions of the British dominions in South Africa.

From that view I entirely dissent. There is a statement—I have forgotten exactly where it is to be found—to the effect that the road to the nether regions is paved with good intentions. I am not impugning the motives of my good friend, the mover of this resolution, the hon. member for Norfolk, but there can be no doubt that it has been maudlin sentiment such as this that has prevented this war being closed long before now. We have had the pro-Boer in Britain sympathizing with the Boers. On any and every occasion, when disaster befell the British arms, no word of sympathy was heard from these gentlemen. But let the slightest victory be obtained by the Boers and they were jubilant ; let any treatment be meted out to these people in the way of forcing them to move from their farms and go into concentration camps and this maudlin sentiment—I use the word advisedly—has been shown by the pro-Boers, and not only the pro-Boers but by a large class of sentimental people. This it is that has given encouragement to the Boers that some European complication might arise, that some nation might intervene before the close of the war to engage Britain's attention elsewhere, and then they would be guaranteed their independence. To my mind there has been but one course open to Great Britain from the outset. As was said by the right hon. leader of the House, in language that, I believe, no tongue in this Dominion could match for beauty, the Boers themselves chose the arbitrament of war and they must be content to abide the consequences. There can be no conclusion to this war except that Britain shall force it to a finish, and that would mean the entire subjugation of that people. When they are subjugated, that is the time to extend the right hand of fellowship, that is the time for Great Britain to treat them as she has done the people in all her other colonies and give them every opportunity to become true British citizens. Our good friend the member for North Norfolk must have had some object in bringing forward this motion. I cannot say what it has been however. If his object was to bring about peace, I can assure him that if his tone could have been heard in the Boer camps it would have given those people great encouragement and would have tended to the prolongation of the war. His object certainly could not have been to promote the well-being of the Boers, because that would imply that Great Britain in the past has not accorded good treatment to the people she has conquered. But I think the pages of history will be searched in vain for evidence in support of any such contention. Britain has never treated any people whom she has conquered otherwise than in the most merciful and magnanimous spirit. But there is danger in being magnanimous and great with a people you have not conquered. Even after you have conquered them there is danger of their misunderstanding your magnanimity and greatness and mistaking it for weakness. Again and again have the kindness and generosity of heart of Lord Roberts and other British commanders in the field been laughed at by the Boers, their magnanimity sneered at as weakness and they themselves held in scorn. There is only one way to manage a man if he is your opponent—conquer him and then treat him kindly. So, with the Boers, there is only one way—conquer them first, and then let magnanimity and greatness and mercy follow. Some are inclined to say that there is a desire on the part of our good friend to advertise himself. I would not endorse that for an instant, because our good friend has been well known in the history of this House and the country as undertaking to lead in all this class of sentimental subjects, which really amount to nothing so far as benefiting the people is concerned. And the trouble is, when it is all over, from his own professions we are never really sure where to find him. There are people who are unkind enough to say that this is a put up job between the hon. member for North Norfolk and the right hon. leader of the government. I do not believe that for an instant. I am satisfied that that is not so. It may have been that the right hon. leader of the government may have been consulted before this motion was brought to the attention of the House. He should have been consulted. But, if he gave our worthy friend the answer then that he gave him to-day, that he could not endorse his motion, that it was inopportune, or had told him that he wished him to withdraw it, would not a loyal follower, such as the member for North Norfolk has been of the leaders of his party through all their devious turnings and twistings for twenty years or so—would not he have been only too willing to withdraw it instead of taking up the time of the House and placing it before the country? I am satisfied he would. I do not object to the motion because it is ill-timed or inopportune, or anything of that kind. I oppose it on principle and I will give my reason.

I deal first with the Free Staters, and Transvaalers. I do not find that the hon. gentleman mentions these but speaks of 'persons in arms.' But, so far as concerned those who were Free Staters and Transvaalers before the war, I will join hands with him. More than that, I stand here to say that if these people had been properly used they would have laid down their arms nearly two years ago. It is a well known fact that General DeWet offered to lay down his arms and those of 18,000 followers. When the Free State was annexed by that beautifully-worded proclamation, got out by some of these artistic young ink-slingers—I was not in the party, I want the House to understand—annexing the Free State the condition was promulgated that those who would lay down their arms would be allowed to return to their farms and enjoy their civil rights. That was all right, but it was in another, a negative clause that the difficulty lay—that those who did not lay down their arms would be treated, when captured, not as prisoners of war, but as rebels. That clause could not have reached half the Free Staters in the field, but I maintain that every self-respecting Britisher must have found it objectionable. DeWet withdrew his army to the mountains away on the eastern side of the Free State and gave General Roberts an almost uninterrupted march to Pretoria. It is well known that a bitter feeling existed between the Free Staters and the Transvaalers. The Transvaalers deserted their capital, refusing to defend it. As soon as that news reached DeWet, he sent word to the British General—General Rundle, I think it was—that he was ready to lay down his arms, and gave as his reason that, inasmuch as the Transvaalers had failed to defend their capital he felt, as a Free Stater, that, in the interest of the two races and in the interests of the great future of South Africa the war should come to a close. He asked as a condition, a condition which I believe they will grant to-day, a condition which should have been granted then by any magnanimous general, that in place of being treated as a rebel, he and his kin of Free State birth and nationality should be treated as prisoners of war. It was denied him by the highest military authorities, I believe, in South Africa; and as if to drive him to surrender, his property was destroyed and his vineyards and his home were wasted. General DeWet is reported to have registered an oath that he would make the British pay in blood and treasure for that piece of work, and I kind of reckon he has carried out his threat. To-day I believe the same terms that General DeWet demanded then are being accorded to these men, the Free Staters and Transvaalers, and I say, rightly so, for they are Free Staters and Transvaalers. I never questioned their right to fight against us and bowl us over on any and every occasion, but I questioned their right to deprive us of the rights of British subjects in their republics.

But there is another question that my hon. friend from North Norfolk laid stress upon, that is the colonial rebels. Now, my worthy friend has read history, as every intelligent member of this House has. Many revolutions have been justifiable. No man to-day, and no man at that time, ever questioned the right to rebel of Hampden and Cromwell. No lover of responsible government has ever questioned the righteousness of the rebellion of 1688; no man I ever met in modern times questions the righteousness of the American war of independence from the colonial view point. It has established throughout the world the principle that taxation carries with it the right of representation. When tyrants and oligarchs undertake to govern and tax people without giving them the right of representation, then they expose themselves to rebellion. In the American civil war the people of the south had, as they thought, a justification for rebellion in the defence of their old established principle of slavery. But it was a principle not consonant with the great principles of British and American liberty, and therefore it was deemed in the eyes of the world as an unrighteous cause, though others undoubtedly deemed it a righteous one. But I ask the hon. member for North Simcoe can he——

An hon. MEMBER. North Norfolk.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The two hon. members, Mr. Speaker, for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) are so intimately associated with each other in little affairs in this House, that I find myself referring to the member for North Simcoe instead of to the member for North Norfolk—I ask the member for North Norfolk to lay his finger upon one solitary cause for rebellion that any Boer in the British colonies of South Africa ever had. He has not done it, and the man does not stand in this House who can do it. Who can give any more reason why any Boer in South Africa, any British Boer in South Africa, should rebel than why any man in the city of Ottawa should step out and rob a bank or murder his neighbour? He can't do it. The mere fact that they are of the same race and lineage is no reason. Thousands of loyal Boers have fought for Britain against their own kinsfolk. The records of history show that great movements have never necessarily brought men of the same race together. Let us go back to the days when the ancestors of these men were fighting for the liberties of Europe, when the old Batavians, or as we know them in later times, the Dutchmen of Europe, who were fighting for liberty against the tyranny of Spain and Austria. Were they fighting as men of one race? Not at all. It was people of one race fighting against the tyrants of the same race, only they were allied with the free men of all nationalities. In France, the country of those gallant fellows, the Huguenots, whose descendants we find distinguishing themselves in South Africa to-day, when these men were struggling for liberty in the days of Coligny and Colbert, and that grand hero whose statue stands prominently in the old citadel at Quebec, Samuel De Champlain—when those men were struggling for liberty in Europe, who was it that fought side by side with them? Why, Sir, the free men of Britain, and in every struggle that Huguenots and Dutchmen engaged in all through history they have fought shoulder to shoulder with the free men of Britain. And, Sir, had they been fighting in a just cause in Africa to-day, mark my words, they would have had the free men of Britain standing shoulder to shoulder with them again. There were also in that cause thousands of loyal Boers fighting for Britain.

Now what are the conditions? The Boer people had been repeatedly saved by Britain from the attacks of the natives, they had been placed on their farms by Britain, they had been given their liberty by Britain, they had been protected. There was not a solitary farm that was not regularly visited by the Cape mounted policemen, and law and order were everywhere dominant. They were free from taxation, they were free from excise duties in South Africa. Neither directly nor indirectly have I ever heard any man pretend to say that the British Boers in South Africa had any cause of complaint, and I never met one of them that pretended to have any. Their only excuse was the race cry. Now, Sir, there has been a little too much of this race cry, not only in South Africa, but in Canada. We don't want these appeals to race and religion in this country. We want men to stand out in South Africa, and in Canada, on the basis of principle, and to leave race and religious cries out of the question entirely. Their only excuse in South Africa was the race cry. When you come to analyse their plea, they say they were promised by the Kruger and Steyn oligarchy exemption from debt, they were promised the farms of the British loyalists, and the Boer loyalists too; they were promised shares in the Rand and in the other great mining corporations in South Africa. These were the excuses they offered, and the excuses that are offered to-day by the Boer rebels, by the British colonials who rebelled in South Africa. These are the only excuses they make; and yet my hon. friend from North Simcoe—North Norfolk—coolly stands up in the House and asks for an amnesty for this type of men. Now, I want to point out to him that these Boer rebels in South Africa have lost little or nothing. I could name scores of them who took the poor whites, labouring men and their families on their large estates, and forced them to go on much against their will and fight against Britain. But whenever things got dangerous they—the leaders—withdrew to their own farms, and as soon as the British came along they would then hob-nob with the British and become advisers, or interpreters, or counsellors, in order to escape the penalty due them for their disloyalty. I will give you one instance, a very wealthy man named Duplessis, who comes from the bank of the Vaal river, at Middle Drift, near Kimberley. He brought a number of those poor Boers to work for him on a Saturday, and his excuse was that he wanted them to build kraals for the cattle and sheep and goats. These poor whites came over with their utensils and implements in order to build these kraals. On Monday morning Duplessis, who was a field cornet of the Boers, commandeered every man of them and made them go to the front to fight. A number of these fellows were killed, and others were taken prisoners. There was one of them, whose name was Van Vuren, and the incident in connection with whom I know very well. He was taken prisoner, tried for being a rebel and sentenced to two years' imprisonment in South Africa for the offence of taking up arms against the British government, while the man who brought him over under false pretenses, commandeered him and compelled him to fight, because he is rich and stands in with the British officers, was let off with five year's disfranchisement. The prime mover of the whole district is disfranchised for five years, while the poor beggars who were commandeered are either buried under the sod, or breaking stones for a period of years in South Africa. This is one of the gentlemen that our hon. friend wishes to let off. The leading rebels have lost nothing. Their stock was unmolested by the Boer forces. It was always the loyalists' stock that was raided, and I say it would have paid the British loyalist in South Africa hands down ten times over, from a dollars and cents point of view, to have joined the Boer forces in South Africa at the beginning of this war. The Boer rebels in South Africa are treated better than the colonial loyalists in South Africa. The loyalists—both British and Boer—were driven from their homes. They had to escape as best they could, they had to leave their property at the mercy of these people, their women and children were left on the farms at the mercy of these Boers. I am very glad to say that in the great majority of cases the treatment accorded them was fair, but it was imprisonment all the same. They dared not communicate with their friends, they dared not touch one of their own animals, and they were practically prisoners on their farms. Their property was taken, yet the claims of the loyalists have been actually denied while their Boer neighbours who were disloyal have been paid pound for pound for all that was taken from them by the Boers in the course of the war. There is one case which I think is the most scandalous on record. Before one of these compensation courts a gentleman and his wife were proving their claim, but the British officer refused to allow their claim on the ground that the wife should have stayed on the farm—the wife, a young English lady, about 23 or 24 years of age, with an infant baby—and should have protected the farm against the Boers, and cared for the animals upon it. She inquired where was the strong right arm of Britain upon which British rights had depended. She depended upon the British soldier to protect her, and when he failed her, she was expected to have guarded the stock against the Boers. Her husband and all her relatives were fighting for Britain, and she was forced to leave the farm as a refugee. That is the treatment which was accorded British loyalists in South Africa. When I speak of British loyalists, I mean loyalists of British stock as well as of Boer stock, because I am proud to say that there are tens of thousands of Boers out there who from the start to the finish have been thoroughly loyal to Britain in this affair.

There is another class besides the colonial rebel, that, I maintain, should be excluded from any such resolution as this, and it is the hired mercenary, the soldier of fortune, the adventurer who joined the Boer ranks to fight against Britain. He certainly should be excluded from any such resolution as the one proposed by the hon. member for North Norfolk. If this resolution were to carry, or if this principle were to be adopted, it would put a premium on revolution, and that sort of thing will not do. If men have a just cause for rebelling, why, then, by all means, let us be civil to them when the war is over, but until the hon. gentleman can point out one solitary case of complaint on the part of the colonial rebel against the British government, then, I maintain, he has no excuse whatever for bringing any such resolution before the House. It must be made a risky job for these gentlemen to turn out and murder a neighbour, destroy his property and rob him of his stock. The hon. gentleman who has preceded me spoke of the settlement when this war is over. There can only be one settlement for the British government, and I trust it will be a settlement along British lines. We will give them the rights and liberties of Britain, the rights and liberties that have made Britain great, we will give them her language, her literature and her history. If those institutions which have made Britain great, which have made her the envy of the nations, are not sufficient for the people of South Africa, then let the war continue to a finish, or until we bring these people to their senses. I would treat them fairly. The Free Staters and Transvaalers who lay down their arms should be treated in a fair spirit, and I never would ask them to surrender as rebels, but with the colonial rebels I have no sympathy whatever, nor has any man who is at all cognizant of the facts of the case. I maintain that this is a mere piece of maudlin sentiment, and at all times in the world's history it has done more harm than good to bring any such opinions as these before any country on an occasion of this kind. It is time enough to be magnanimous and great when the people you are dealing with prove themselves magnanimous and great, prove that they regret the course they have pursued, and that they are ready to give an absolute guarantee that on the first occasion which presents itself in the near future they will not rise and seek to destroy that flag that I saw floating from the top of this tower to-day. As I came in on the train to-day I saw that grand old flag torn almost to tatters, and I wondered what was going on in the House. When I reached here and found that the hon. member for North Norfolk had been holding forth upon the notion of granting amnesty to the rebels of South Africa, who had arisen and murdered their neighbours, destroyed their property and robbed them of their goods, and who had turned the women and children into camps up and down the country—not the concentration camps that hon. gentlemen talk so much about—I could not but feel that the breeze blowing at the top of the tower had found possibly a fitting semblance in the wind that was blowing in the House of Commons.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, I quite appreciate the magnitude of the task of dealing with an imperial question in this Canadian parliament, but I do not object to the motion moved by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) on that account. If plain every day Canadians are good enough to give their lives to the empire, I suppose plain every day members of parliament are good enough to give their views in support of the prestige of the empire, or to pull down that prestige if it so pleases them. I consider it is perfectly legitimate for this parliament to discuss the question of the war in South Africa, but not altogether because of Canada's contribution in men and money. Canada has reason to be proud of her contributions in men, but I am not so sure about her reason to be proud of her contribution in money.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. Neither am I sure that Canada, so far as this war has yet gone, has reason to be proud of the way in which she has treated her soldiers who have suffered disability, or the relatives of those who have suffered loss of life in that war. Let that be as it may, I would not feel that I was doing my duty if I allowed a motion against whch I feel so strongly to be lad before this House, and to let it go by giving only a silent vote against it. I look upon the prestige of the British empire as a question of the most intimate local character, concerning every dependency and every citizen in every dependency throughout the empire. The maintenance of the prestige of Great Britain is just as necessary to the peace and welfare of Canada as it is to the peace and welfare to the county of York in England. So long as Canada is a part of the empire, the safety of Canada depends upon the strength of the empire. Anything that weakens the empire weakens Canada, endangers Canada, and hurts every citizen of Canada. Just as this is the sentiment which prompted our young men to volunteer in thousands to risk their lives on the battlefields of Africa, so it should be the sentiment with which this parliament should approach this question. I am not above giving advice nor am I afraid to give advice to the government of Britain upon occasion, but I object to the character of the advice on this occasion. I object to the advice, I object still more strongly to what appears to be the motive behind that advice. The motion, as I understand it, is a motion demanding—I say demanding—in the name of the men we have sent and the money we have spent; demanding amnesty for the rebels of Cape Colony; for the men who have added treachery to treason; the men who have added murder and pillage to treachery; the men who are outside the law of civilization in any civilized country in the world ; the men whose lives, liberties or civil right are forfeit under the law of every civilized country.

Mr. BOURASSA. Was that because they released Methuen ?

Mr. OLIVER. I do not understand that the Cape rebels released Methuen. I do not understand that General Delarey was a Cape rebel. I understand that certain Cape rebels who were captured were hanged according to the law of nations, and I say that others deserve to be hanged. I say that when this parliament of Canada or the members of this parliament of Canada ask the government of Great Britain to violate the law of nations, they weaken the prestige of the empire to that extent, and they violate the sense of right of this Dominion of Canada, and of loyalty throughout this empire. They throw disrespect on the empire in the minds of every civilized nation and every honourable man in every civilized nation in the world. I say that such advice is beneath contempt. I say it is of itself and in its nature treasonable.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Other hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. OLIVER. It is of itself and in its nature treasonable, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. OLIVER. It is absolutely unworthy of any loyal citizen, to say nothing of any loyal representative in a loyal colony of the empire. Let there be no mistake on this question. We cannot be both for and against the empire. If we are not for the empire then we are against it, and if we are not for carrying out the laws of civilized nations in the protection of the prestige and the dignity of the empire, and the safety and welfare of its loyal subjects, then we are against the empire, and neither more nor less. I say, Sir, that this motion comes with ill grace. A motion asking for leniency, for clemency for rebels—or for belligerents if you like—addressed to a nation whose whole course of clemency during the war towards her enemies has made her the laughing stock of these enemies and of the friends of these enemies in every country in the world.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, Britain has been made a laughing stock because she was as lenient as she has been; because she has taken the sworn word of men who do not honour their oath; men who have given up their arms, have been sent through the British lines as free and peaceful citizens, and then returned that clemency by shooting British soldiers in the back. I say, Sir, that it is ill-judged to address requests for clemency to a nation which has gone beyond the limits of reason in extending clemency to their enemies in this war. I have no hesitation in saying on my responsibility—which is equal to that of other hon. members—I say on my responsibility as a member of this House, that what is needed in the present case is not more but less clemency, so that it shall be understood by the world that it does not pay to be treasonable and disloyal; that it does not pay to burn and destroy the property of the loyal subjects of this empire. I am glad to know that merciful feelings prevail in the minds of so many hon. members. So am I merciful, but my merciful feelings are towards those who are loyal to the empire, and not to the disloyal enemies of our empire. Let me ask: Who has suffered more in this war—the British or the Boers? It may not be to our credit; unfortunately it is not to our credit; but it is a fact that the British people have suffered more in blood and money than have the Boers up to this time, and I say, Sir, that in mercy to ourselves we demand that such means be taken as shall bring this war to an end. But it will never be brought to an end so long as our opponents—believing them to be sensible and self-respecting men—are allowed to remain under the impression that they can stay in the field and carry a gun with impunity. If the Boers are what they are; then there is only one way to secure peace and that is by fighting this war to a finish. There is only one way to secure safety to the British empire in South Africa; there is only one way to secure safety for the loyal people of South Africa, be they Britain, or Boer, or black, and that is by fighting this war to a finish and letting it be known from sea to sea in South Africa, that it does not pay to be treasonable and disloyal; that it does not pay to organize treason and sedition year after year; that it does not pay to pillage your loyal neighbours and then give up your gun and go home pretending to be a peaceable citizen. Let it be understood that that game is not a good one; let it be understood that it does not pay to do that kind of business, and when that is understood, then a long step will be taken towards peace in South Africa.

From the beginning of this war to the end, whenever Britain showed the slightest inclination to slacken the iron hand, what was the result? Was it praise for the clemency of Britain? Was not the declaration heralded from every capital in Europe, and from city to city in the United States—I do not know but what it was whispered from house to house in some localities even in Canada—that Britain was getting weak; that it was fear or inability to cope with the conditions that led to that clemency? In every case Britain's clemency was a mistake. It encouraged the continuance of the war; and within the past week or two, because the Cape rebel Kritzinger was not put to the death penalty, as he richly deserved to be, it was heralded throughout the world that Britain was afraid to execute the death penalty upon him. Under these circumstances, I say that if these hon. members who moved and seconded this resolution are loyal to the empire—if they are——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has no right to impute any motive.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not impute. I asked the question.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has not even the right to doubt the loyalty of any member of this House.

Mr. OLIVER. If I am out of order, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw whatever part of my remarks you rule to be out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I say it is forbidden by the rules of this House to impute motives to any hon. member, and it is out of order to declare that any members of this House are disloyal, or even to express a doubt of their loyalty.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, if I am not allowed to express a doubt as to the loyalty of these hon. members, the only thing I can do is to leave it to the members of the House to draw their own conclusions. I will merely say, Mr. Speaker, that the facts have shown that wherever and whenever undue clemency was exercised by the British towards their enemies in South Africa, that occasion was used as an argument to prove, not that Britain was using clemency, but that Britain was cowardly and weak. That was the argument that was used by those who were the enemies of Britain and of Canada, who were the enemies of civilization and liberty, of which throughout this world the prestige of the British empire is the greatest, if I should not go so far as to say the only safeguard. We are interested in maintaining that prestige, man by man, in this country. Our citizens have done their share, some part of their share, at any rate, towards sustaining that prestige ; and I can only again express regret that it should have been the part of any members of this House, at a time when there was danger of Britain erring, as she has erred before in her negotiations with her enemies and ours—at a time when Canada is sending two thousand more of her sons to fight the battles of the empire in South Africa—at a time when our men are dying day by day in South Africa for the glory and prestige of the empire and for the honour of Canada and the honour of every one of us in Canada—that this time and occasion should have been used by members of this House to move a resolution throwing discredit on the motives of Great Britain, and strengthening the enemies of Britain and Canada and of civilization and liberty and enlightenment throughout the world.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I wish to add, in the fewest possible words, my protest against the resolution which has been introduced into this House to-day by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). I never can find language to express myself to this House to my entire satisfaction ; but never have I been so much at a loss, as I am on this occasion, to find language to adequately express my feelings, I may say my indignation, at the terms of this resolution. I can only say that I consider that, not only is the present time inopportune for introducing such a resolution into this House, but if it were carried as the sense of this House, it would no doubt embarrass the British government in their present negotiations to bring about a peaceful settlement of the war that has been going on in South Africa. It would also, it seems to me, embarrass the Prime Minister in his negotiations with British statesmen when he goes to London in the coming June. But, Sir, the resolution is also inopportune because it offends the British people. It offends Englishmen all over the world. It is inopportune because it is introduced on this day, which all Englishmen honour as the day of their patron saint, St. George. I also protest against introducing such questions into this House as wasting the time of the House. As soon as two or three members had expressed themselves on the resolution, the hon. member for North Norfolk was going around and trying to withdraw it. It was too serious and far-reaching a matter to be introduced with any such intention. I felt, when the hon. member for North Norfolk was talking, that it was a great pity that he had not offered his services to Great Britain, and that the British government had not employed him to go to South Africa to supercede such eminent statesmen as Lord Milner and Lord Kitchener in disposing of this whole question. I have watched with interest the political wanderings of my hon. friend from North Norfolk. We saw him pass from a protectionist to a free trader, and from a free trader back to a protectionist, and from advocating a policy which would result in the annexation of this country to the United States to advocating that a regiment of British soldiers be stationed at the city of Quebec, though there was no more necessity for stationing a regiment of soldiers at the city of Quebec than there was at the city of Toronto. I have watched the hon. gentleman's inconsistencies in all these courses, and we see his inconsistency to-day in introducing this resolution.

He must have made his peace with the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), otherwise surely that hon. gentleman could not possibly give his support to one who made the ridiculous suggestions, on the eve of the last general elections, that we should station soldiers at Quebec. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) must have recanted that sentiment before he could have got the hon. member for Labelle to second this resolution. The hon. gentleman referred to the millions of dollars that we have spent in sending men to South Africa, our noble sons whom we despatched over there to risk their lives in this campaign. Well, we have spent but little over the $2,000,000, and certainly very little considering the great advantages we have always enjoyed under the protection of the British flag. What credit or honour is due to this government for the bravery of these men to whom the right hon. the Prime Minister referred ? What credit can this government take to itself for the conduct of that noble son of Canada, Lieut. Carruthers, and that other hero, Private Evans, who died so nobly on the veldt, and who, when he found his life blood ebbing fast away and his strength nearly gone, broke his rifle rather than allow it to fall into the hands of the enemy, and Private Milligan, who left his wife and family in this country, where he was surrounded by all the luxuries of peace, and volunteered to go to South Africa and fight for the British flag ? Those men were not sent by this government at the expense of the tax payers of Canada, and this government is entitled to no credit for their sacrifices other than that which falls to them as citizens of the country which has produced such men. The hon. member (Mr. Charlton) referred to the fact that the object of the Boers was to drive Great Britain out of South Africa and make it a Boer republic, and yet he brings up this resolution. Can one understand his proposing such a resolution, admitting, as he does, that the Boers were on the offensive from the start? Who doubts Great Britain's generosity? Nearly every hon. member who has spoken has referred to the generosity with which Great Britain has dealt with her defeated foes in the past. Who then doubts her generosity to deal with the Boers at the present? Is Great Britain to-day less civilized than she was in years gone by? Is she retrograding towards barbarism now? I cannot, for my part, see what ground there is in the slightest degree for suspecting that Great Britain will not treat the Boers with the greatest possible consideration. Do we want another settlement such as we had at Majuba Hill or when the British troops were withdrawn from Khartoum? We had subsequently to go over the whole ground again and spend millions upon millions, and the loss of so much human life to reconquer in both cases, and we do not want any such weak-kneed administration or policy in Great Britain to-day as when Mr. Gladstone administered the affairs of the empire. I think that a greal deal of unnecessary sympathy in this discussion has been given the Boers. We have not heard very much said by those hon. members who have supported the resolution about the relatives of the 25,000 odd who have died on the veldt of South Africa, either from wounds or diseases, or about the billion of dollars which Great Britain is spending in defending her South African possessions. I think, with the hon. gentleman who has preceded me, that we ought to hear a little more in regard to this feature of the question. It ill becomes us, who are enjoying all the blessings of peace to interfere. Surely we can leave this difficulty to be settled by the statesmen and soldiers of Great Britain, who represent those who have borne the greater part of the brunt of the war. It is not only the lowly sons of Great Britain who have risked their lives in this war but the scions of her nobility as well. From every class, her children have gone and offered up their lives for the country, and it is the representatives of these on whom we can rely to deal out every justice to the enemy. I think that this motion is a very ill advised one. I look upon it as embodying a mischievous policy, and regret very much that the question should have been introduced into this House at all. But I would suggest a resolution which, I think, would meet with almost the unanimous consent of the House, and which I drafted in the few moments at my leisure during recess. It is as follows:

That this parliament regrets that Mr. Kruger, the acting presidents and the generals of the Orange River and Transvaal Colonies who are still leading a small but brave remnant of the Boers, have not seen fit to cease the hostilities in which they took the initiative against the British empire, by invading and annexing British territory. That we point them with pride to the great liberty and many privileges enjoyed by the people of this country, as well as the other parts of the empire, under British institutions by all races, creeds and nationalities, and realizing the magnanimity shown in the past to a defeated foe we have the utmost confidence that the most generous terms of peace will be extended to the Boers by the statesmen and soldiers of Greaat Britain.

That is a resolution which nearly every member of this House I venture to think would support.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). I understood that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) had consented to withdraw his motion before recess, but I also, like the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Kemp), have drafted an amendment to the resolution. The amendment I would suggest is as follows:

In the opinion of this House, it is not advisable to offer any advice or give any instructions to the British people relating to their duties regarding the Boers in South Africa, believing that the well known magnanimity and generosity always practised on all occasions by the British government will be exercised on the present occasion.

I think that that will fill the Bill. From what I have learned to-day, I am sure that it is not the desire of any hon. member of this House to say a word that would interfere with the making of peace between Britain and the Boers, and I think that the resolution introduced by the hon. member for North Norfolk will have that tendency. If carried in this House it would lead the Boers to believe that a large number of the people of Canada were in sympathy with them. I am satisfied that there are few people in sympathy with the Boers, except to the extent that the underdog is sympathized with. Britain has always shown magnanimity to her foes, and where is there any nation in the world which has shown it in the way she has done to her foes in South Africa? Is she not educating the children of her foes? Is she not supporting the lone and fatherless on the veldt? Is she not doing everything she possibly can to conciliate these people? I contend that she is and doing it very graciously, and if we were to show sympathy to the Boers now, we would be not only encouraging them, but giving comfort to many nations of Europe, which are only too pleased to see the British in difficulties.

They have shown their sympathy with the Boers throughout the whole of this war, and would have been only too glad, had they thought they could have done it, to assist the Boers. There is no doubt about that. But they know that Britons are united, that the old lion's teeth have not dropped out, that her whelps are around her and assisting her, that Canada has given her aid, and so have Australia, New Zealand and all other parts of the empire, and that they stand ready to back up Great Britain for the reason that they know she is right in this cause and for the reason that they are determined that the British empire shall not be dismembered by a few Boers or a few disaffected men in our own country. I make no insinuations against anybody. I do not think the brainy men of Great Britain will be coerced or cajoled or influenced by anything that members of this House say, and, therefore, I think it is time that we should refrain from discussing this matter any further. Mr. Speaker, I hope that if you put my amendment, it will carry.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must tell the hon. member (Mr. Robinson, Elgin) that it is not permitted by the rules of the House to move an amendment to the amendment to motion for Committee of Supply.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, it is simply because you did not notice me first, for I was on the floor.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, after what has fallen from the lips of the right hon. the leader of this House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), and of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), the lieutenant of the leader of the opposition, who have, in such eloquent language, spoken the sense of this House in favour of the peace negotiations being brought to a satisfactory conclusion, I should certainly have refrained from participating in this debate. But as the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) and the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) have deemed it fit to give a new trend to the debate, and as they have insinuated that some hon. gentlemen were not in favour of peace and harmony being restored in South Africa, and were not anxious to see an end put to this struggle that has been in progress for three years, I think it opportune, under such circumstances, to protest against such statements.

The hon. member for Victoria, in his speech, referred to rebels, and stated that many revolutions have been justifiable. But, Sir, do you know under which circumstances nowadays rebellion is not justifiable, and when the right to rebel of a people can be questioned ? It is when the rebels are vanquished. But when they triumph, and when victory perches on their banners, oh, then it is quite another question, and we find it recorded in history that they had a right to rebel, and that the righteousness of their cause cannot be questioned. In 1837, we had a rebellion in Canada. In Upper Canada and in Lower Canada the patriots rebelled, not against Great Britain, but against a bad and tyrannical government. But is it not agreed on all hands to-day that those patriots had a right to rebel against that oligarchy, and that they had serious grievances ? From the events that transpired in this country, in the province of Quebec, we ought to learn a lesson, and it is that it is always bad policy for a victorious foe to wreak resentment upon a vanquished people, and that sooner or later, when the recoil ensues, the vanquished foe will resent that treatment. The memory of those heroes DeLorimier and his unfortunate companions is still living in the hearts of their fellow-countrymen. Had Colborne shown magnanimity, and extended to the foes the right hand of fellowship, would he not have better secured peace and harmony between the two races in our country ? Nobody, I think, will question that it would have been good policy to have pursued such a course. I agree that the social fabric must be upheld and order secured in the community, but the victors can always afford to accord a generous treatment to the vanquished, without any danger or peril.

By the resolution which is now before the House, we tell the imperial parliament—provided this resolution should ever reach parliament—that, in our opinon, the Boer cause is lost, that British supremacy should be maintained in South Africa, but we further affirm that the broadest policy of magnanimity and mercy should be extended to a brave foe now opposing British arms. We further tell the vanquished that they may look forward with confidence to the future, and that, when they have laid down their arms, they shall have the franchise and every right of the British subject, and enjoy the boon of a wise and just administration.

When the American colonies which now form the United States of America rebelled against Great Britain, eloquent voices were heard in the British parliament in favour of a policy of magnanimity, but, unfortunately, those voices appealed in vain to the sense of justice of parliament, and what was the result, Sir ? The result was that the finest British colonies were lost to the mother country.

Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset, if all the hon. gentlemen who have participated in this debate had taken their cue from the right hon. the leader of this House, who has displayed, throughout the whole of his speech, a judicial spirit and a serenity which are the true characteristics of statesmanship, I would have refrained from interfering in the debate ; but I thought it my duty, the more so as I pride myself on my descent from one of those rebels who, in the course of this century, fought for securing freedom to their fellow-countrymen—to protest against the intemperate language used this evening by some hon. gentlemen in this House. And if there is some ill-feeling against England still rankling in the hearts of my fellow-countrymen, the reason is to be found in the fate of those unfortunate fellow-countrymen of ours who died on the scaffold. That is our main grievance against England. And when I heard, this evening, a Christian gentleman appeal to us in the name of civilization, and tell us that it is the duty of a nation to take revenge of her fallen foe, I could not help regretting that principles so utterly at variance with the tenets of our modern civilization should still be taught and upheld in this country of ours. These are growing times, Sir, and in this twentieth century we ought to keep abreast of the spirit of the times. In former times there was no mercy, no magnanimity exercised by the conquerors to the conquered; and a fallen foe was reduced to slavery. But, nowadays, the very moment a man lays down his arms, his life is held sacred. Nowadays when a vanquished foe lays down his arms, not only is his life spared, but he is also entitled to whatever makes for the happiness of life; the enjoyment of freedom and of his property.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) have leave to withdraw his motion.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I object, Mr. Speaker.

Amendment (Mr. Charlton) negatived.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Arts, agriculture and statistics — census, $120,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) explain why he requires so large an amount for taking the census as compared with ten years ago? The census of 1891 was taken for about $500,000. The hon. gentleman has already announced that he has spent on the present census over $980,000, and estimates that it will cost $172,000 to complete it. Why is so large an expenditure required?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In explanation of that, I need not go into any long details, I may say, in the first place, in general terms, that the cost of everything has materially increased as compared with 1891. It does not matter what one undertakes to-day, the cost is materially increased. This is due, no doubt, to an increase in the cost of living, and an advance in the scale of living. The result is that one cannot get people to do work for what one could get the same class of people to do work for ten years ago.

In 1891 there was a general lack of employment throughout the country, whereas in 1901 the contrary was the case, and employment was seeking the people rather than the people seeking employment. For that reason it was necessary to establish a higher scale of pay than the scale of 1891. The pay in 1891 was sufficient to attract a large number of people to census employment, but in 1901, on the contrary, it was found rather difficult to get people to do this work, even with the higher scale of pay. Another reason for the increased cost, was that in the census of 1901 a great many more questions were asked by the enumerators, and the filling up of the schedules required more time and labour. For this reason a good deal more labour was thrown upon the commissioners. Then there was the additional fact that in 1901 there were several territories and outlying districts which had to be covered by enumerators, and which had not to be covered, or not to the same extent, in 1891. This involved a considerable additional expense, and an expense greater in proportion than the additional number of people to be taken in the same section of country. In those outlying sections population is sparse, and the difficulties of the enumerators were greater. Even in those territories and sparsely settled parts of Canada where the enumeration was taken in 1891, there was a larger number of people to be enumerated in 1901, because the population had increased during the decade. There was also the fact that we undertook to take the census of 1901 in a shorter time, to do it more rapidly, so as to get the returns sooner before the people. For this purpose we employed a larger number of enumerators, and although the actual population to be taken by them was not so very much larger, the increased number of enumerators did cost a larger amount than a smaller number would have cost to do the same work, the object being to take the census more rapidly and to get the results quicker. These different reasons, shortly stated will, I think, account for the increased expense which the hon. gentleman has alluded to. No doubt hon. gentlemen will ask questions with regard to this matter, and I shall be happy to answer them to the best of my ability.

Mr. TAYLOR. The first argument the minister advanced, that wages were higher in 1901 than in 1891, I think the general public will not agree with, I do not think there is a manufacturer in this country who will say that he is paying more to his hands now than in 1891. It will be admitted by every manufacturer in this country that wages have not increased materially during the last ten years. I know it is not so in our town, and I think our town will compare favourably with any other town in the country. Then he says that the territories are now better filled up than in 1891. Well, if the population in the territories was sparse it would cost more to take the enumeration. I think the argument he advanced in reference to the territories is an argument against himself. I find that under the late government the census was taken three times. In 1871 it cost $511,000; in 1881 it cost $552,000; in 1891 it cost $549,000. Now the Minister of Agriculture, in reply to a question on the 3rd of March, stated that he had already expended $948,000. I asked the question the other day how much was expended up to the 3rd of April, and he made the same reply, $948,000. Now will the hon. gentleman tell us what the expenditure has been up to date on the census?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not got the figures of the expenditure made since the date on which I gave the answer, a week or two ago.

Mr. TAYLOR. On the 3rd of April he said the expenditure had reached $948,000, and he estimated it would take $170,000 to complete, making $1,118,000 altogether.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. With the sum I am asking for the ensuing year, the expenditure altogether will be $1,050,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then the hon. gentleman is not asking for enough, according to his own estimate on the 3rd of April, he is $68,000 short, and will have to bring down another sum in the supplementaries. I estimate that it will cost a quarter of a million dollars yet to complete the census, judging from the staff the hon. gentleman has got in this building, for which he is paying $6,000 a year rental.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the hon. gentleman state when he expects to have the census completed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I hope to get the great bulk of it completed in the ensuing fiscal year for which this vote is being asked. I cannot say positively that all the tabulations will be done within that time.

Mr. FOWLER. I understood the minister to say that there was great difficulty in getting people to do this census work. I would like to ask him if he advertised for clerks or enumerators, and if so, in what papers and at what cost to the country ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, I did not advertise.

Mr. FOWLER. In what way did the hon. minister find difficulty in getting clerks to do the work ? I think the difficulty would be that there would be too many applications.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A number who were asked to do the work declined it at the rates we proposed to pay.

Mr. FOWLER. I suppose it would be impossible for the hon. minister to give the names of these parties ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, they could not be Liberals, because it has never been known that Liberals have declined an office of emolument.

Mr. GANONG. I would like to ask the hon. minister if it is not a fact that 90 per cent of those who were recommended were recommended by his Liberal friends to these positions ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Could you not make it the whole hundred ?

Mr. OSLER. This is a most extraordinary instance of government extravagance, when the cost of taking this census is compared with the expenditures upon previous ones. The cost of taking the census in 1891 was a little under 11 cents per head of the population. This was under a Conservative regime that hon. gentlemen opposite condemned as being extravagant and corrupt. The cost of taking the first census under Liberal rule is a little over 20 cents per head of population, or nearly twice the cost of taking the census in 1891. This either indicates gross and absolute incompetence, or something worse, because there is no increase in the salaries paid. There is nothing but the grossest extravagance that could possibly have taken place to account for doubling the cost of the census from 11 cents per head of the population to 20 cents per head. This is a condition of affairs that is not to be excused by any such explanation as that given by the hon. minister.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the hon. minister if he has settled with the census enumerators yet ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. With very nearly all of them.

Mr. SPROULE. How did the hon. minister settle up the dispute between the enumerators and himself regarding the schedule by which they were to be paid ? Did the hon. minister pay $3 a day or were they paid by the name ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were paid by a schedule of rates which was published.

Mr. SPROULE. By the name or by the day ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. By the name and on other items. There was a schedule of rates published by which they were to be paid 5 cents per name, 5 cents for every death, 25 cents for every farm and 30 cents for every manufacturing establishment recorded. That was the same principle on which the other census was taken.

Mr. SPROULE. I have here a copy of a paper which seems to leave another impression on my mind :

There is considerable discussion going on as to the usefulness of the Labour Bureau. It is claimed for it that it has already done good work in effecting settlements between employers and their men, and it is said that it is well worth its cost. I do not desire to dispute this claim. I merely want to call the attention of the Labour Bureau to the trouble which has arisen between the Department of Census and its employees, and ask if it is not a proper subject to be dealt with by the Labour Bureau ? I understand that the Census Department set some 8,000 men to work throughout Canada on the understanding that they were to get $3 per day of eight hours, and after the men had been at work several weeks the employers repudiated the $3 a day arrangement and fixed a kind of a piece work rate, which means a reduction, in wages of about one-half. The men, I understand, have refused to accept the reduction, and are to all intents and purposes on strike. Lawyers have been employed and the matter is to be taken into the courts at great cost to the men who, in the meantime, are left unpaid. Now, if I understand the object of the Labour Bureau, it is to settle such disputes as this, and see that the workingman gets fair treatment. Without passing any judgment on the dispute one way or another, it is reasonable to assume that there is good ground for the stand the men have taken, or their lawyers would not have advised them to take it into the courts. It would be a great triumph for the Bureau of Labour if it stepped in now and effected a settlement of the whole trouble.

The hon. minister says that it was by piecework they were to be paid, but I would draw his attention to the fact that the instructions given to the census enumerators in regard to their employment were something like the following :

> The day's work of census officers, commissioners, enumerators and other employees for the taking of census will consist of eight hours of proved effective service, and all overtime will be allowed as part of a day at the same rate of enumeration as is provided for a day's work. Ten hours of proved effective service will count as one day and one-quarter and twelve hours as one day and one-half.

If the payment was to be by the name, what was the necessity for stating what would constitute a day's work. It goes on to say :

> Section 24 of the Act reads as follows :
> The Minister of Agriculture shall cause to be prepared one or more tables setting forth the rates, allowances, or remuneration of the several census commissioners and enumerators, which rates shall not exceed in the aggregate a total amount of $3 for each day of good effective service for any enumerator; or $4 for each day of like service for any census commissioner.

That seems to indicate plainly that they were hired by the day. Referring to this matter, 'Events' says :

> Hon. Mr. Scott, who is acting Minister of Agriculture, and therefore, for the time being, head of the Census Department, has given an interview to the press in which he declares that the enumerators have only themselves to blame for falling into the error that they were to get $3 a day for eight hours work. He says the basis of payment was plainly stated to them at the start.

Well, they have not themselves to blame at all. The instructions issued by the government clearly led the enumerators to that conclusion. As 'Events' says, if the Bureau of Labour was of any value whatever, the Deputy Minister of Labour should have been called in to settle the dispute between the employer and the employee. The men being helpless had no recourse against the government, and they feel to-day that they have been deliberately cheated out of what they regard as their honest wages. They cannot sue the government, of course, unless the government allows them, and so they have to grin and bear it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman has quoted a newspaper.

Mr. SPROULE. I cited the regulations given in your own instructions, not a newspaper report.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The instructions given by the minister were under the wording of the Act itself, which says : That the enumerators shall be paid by a schedule of rates to be fixed by the minister and published—

> Which rate shall not exceed in the aggregate the total amount of $3 per day for each day of proper effective service for any enumerator, or $4 for each day of like service for any commissioner.

They were not to be paid a fixed sum per day, but they were to be paid by a schedule of rates, which schedule should in no case allow an enumerator to earn more than $3 per day, or a commissioner more than $4. They were to be allowed $3 for eight hours work if they had done enough work by the schedule of rates to justify their earning $3 per day. The House can understand that if they were simply paid at a fixed rate per day, there would be no inducement to do an effective day's work, but if they were paid by the schedule of rates under which they had to do a certain amount of work to earn $3 a day, that was a stimulus to them to do that amount of work. As a matter of fact, a considerable number of enumerators would have earned by the schedule more than $3 a day, but they were only paid that amount because the Act does not allow us to pay any more. There were other enumerators who by the schedule of rates did not earn as much as $3 per day, and it would not be fair, as between man and man, to pay those who did comparatively little as much as those who did a great deal more work.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the duty of a commissioner ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The duty of a commissioner in each electoral district is to supervise the enumerators, give them their instructions, see that their work is properly done, and send in their report.

Mr. SPROULE. How are they paid ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were paid one cent a name for all the names taken in the county, and they were made an allowance for general expenses besides, which was published in the 'Canada Gazette.'

Mr. INGRAM. When the commissioners in some districts handed in their reports, were they instructed to do some other work ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know of a case in which the commissioner was asked to do work which was not proper work for him to do.

Mr. INGRAM. That is not an answer. Were any commissioners asked to do any other work after they handed in their reports ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think some of the returns were found not to be correct and they were sent back to the commissioner to be corrected.

Mr. INGRAM. That is not the information I want. I can tell the minister that the commissioner for East Elgin, after handing in his report, was instructed to do a considerable lot of work afterwards.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not aware of that.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman bring down the information as to what that additional work was ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the minister point to the regulation under which they were paid by the 'name' ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The original instructions quoted the Act and said they were to be paid by a schedule of rates which was afterwards fixed by Order in Council.

Mr. SPROULE. There is not the slightest doubt in the world but that owing to the instructions sent out, the enumerators were left under the impression that they were to receive $3 per day. That was the natural conclusion to draw from the wording of the instruction. It was long after, that the schedule was fixed, and so the enumerators were deceived.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The instructions told them very distinctly and clearly that they were to be paid at schedule rates, and not $3 a day. That was published for the knowledge of anybody who undertook to do the work.

Mr. HACKETT. I would like to call the attention of the minister to a fact that came under my own observation. In Commissioner Tweedie's district, in the province of Prince Edward Island, the man who was appointed as enumerator was found to be incompetent to do the work.

Mr. BENNETT. They did not dispense with him for that reason ?

Mr. HACKETT. No, he was not dispensed with, but he entered into a bargain with another man to do the work for $20. He farmed out the taking of the census in that division. The name of the man who was appointed is Martin P. Doyle, and he farmed out the work to a man named Broderick, and between the two they took the census.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Which county was that in ?

Mr. HACKETT. Prince county, in Commissioner Tweedie's district, in township No. 1. This man Doyle was actually appointed and sworn in to do the work. I would like to ask the minister if that matter has been brought to his notice, because I state here on my reputation as a member of this House of Commons that it is correct.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I never heard of the case before. No such thing has been brought to my attention, and I do not think it has been brought to the attention of my officers, or I would have heard of it. If it was done, it was done distinctly contrary to the instructions and in violation of the officer's oath of office. I will certainly inquire into the matter.

Mr. HACKETT. There is no opportunity of the enumerator being changed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If an enumerator resigned, we would have to appoint another man to take his place ; but the enumerator had no right whatever to pass his work on to another man without our authority or without our appointing the other man and obtaining from him the oath of office. It would not be at all proper, or allowed for a moment, for an enumerator to pass on his work to another man without the full authority of the department.

Mr. OSLER. The minister did not give any explanation at all in answer to the question I asked as to how the census of last year came to cost twice as much as the census of ten years before. Apparently the little incident which we have just heard may account for it. If throughout the country government heelers, as I believe they are called, had these appointments and farmed out their jobs, that would quite account for a very large amount of the extra $500,000. If that is not the reason for the increase, I think the minister ought to give us some general explanation of why the last census cost over 20 cents a head, whereas the census of 1891 cost about 11 cents.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the hon. member was not in the House when the vote was first called, when I did give a general explanation. I do not know that he would wish me to go over that again ; but if there are any details that he would like to have explained, I shall be only too glad to give them. I may say in a general way that the reasons are these : In the first place, the cost of employment in 1901 was very much greater throughout the country than in 1891, and consequently we had to adopt a higher schedule of rates, which probably involved two-thirds of the increased cost. Next, we had to take the census of the Yukon, Athabasca and Keewatin territories, which were not included in the census of 1891. Thirdly, in the territories which were included in the census of 1891 there were large areas in which there was no population at all, no enumerators appointed, and no expenditure ; but in the census of 1901 every nook and corner of the territories was more or less occupied and enumerators were appointed, and very heavy expenditure was incurred because of the scattered nature of the population. Fourthly, our census enumerators in 1901 had very much more extensive schedules and had to ask a great many more questions, which took a longer time and required them to do fewer households in a day than was the case in 1891. In the census of 1891 the schedules contained 216 questions, while in the schedules of 1901 there were 623 questions, or 407 more, or practically three times as many.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the minister how much per name was paid in 1891, and how much per name in 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891 3 cents per head, and in the last census 5 cents ; in 1891, 3 cents per death, and last year 5 cents ; in 1891, 15 cents for each farm, and in 1901, 25 cents ; in 1891, 20 cents for each manufacturing establishment, and in 1901 30 cents.

Mr. CLARE. When the hon. minister says that it was almost impossible to get enumerators in 1901, let me tell him that he required 37 enumerators to take the census of the south riding of Waterloo in that year, when 15 did the same work in 1891. The cost of taking the census in 1901, was $2,821.44 and in 1891, when there were 14 enumerators and one commissioner, the cost was $1,491.36 or nearly 100 per cent less, and the population, which in 1901 was 25,480, was 25,139 in 1891. Therefore, it took this economical government $1,400 more to take the census of South Waterloo, which has only increased 341 since the previous census.

Mr. GANONG. The youth, innocence, and inexperience of the minister never was better illustrated than it has been to-night. But youth, innocence and inexperience are not the most desirable things in a minister of a business government. He says that the cost of wages had increased and he has got down so low in parish politics that he has to resort to a miserable plea of this kind to account for his extravagance. But if he had come to the county of Charlotte and had given me the opportunity, I would have found him more Grits there than were necessary to take all the census in New Brunswick, and at the same rates as were charged ten years ago, and they would have been better men than those he appointed. And I have no doubt that the same thing can be said about the other counties in this country.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister kindly inform us the rates he is paying now per day to the enumerators or the staff of tabulators here ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We pay different rates according to the work. The ordinary rate is $1.50 per day, with an increase when the work is more important, or where a man has charge of a staff under him.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was paid in 1891 for the staff here ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The same rates.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was paid the commissioners in 1891 and 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The same rates. The commissioners were paid $4 per family in 1901, and this year they are paid 1 cent per individual or name taken.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the chief commissioner in each riding paid ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were paid on the schedule rates, equal to $4 per day for so many days accrued service. In 1891 they were paid $4 per family, and expenses. This year they were paid a cent per name and an allowance for expenses. In some counties they were paid $100, and in some few places more than that.

Mr. BENNETT. What was paid in East Simcoe in 1891 and 1901 to the commissioner ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In East Simcoe the total cost in 1891 was $2,304.48, and this year $4,465.79.

Mr. BENNETT. East Simcoe offers a fair example of the extravagance of this government in the taking of the census. The cost in 1901 was only $2,304 and in 1901 it had swelled to $4,465, and there was but a small increase in the population, and that principally in one or two towns. The reason why the expenses were swelled was because of the political leverage which had to be exercised in that riding. In 1891 there was only one commissioner, but political exigencies compelled the minister to appoint two in 1901, which swelled the expenses very considerably. In the town of Midland in 1891, one man enumerated the whole town, but in 1901, owing to public exigencies, the work was distributed among three, and these three, who were business men, took odd hours of the day to do the work. All over the riding the same sort of thing was done.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I took the plan of appointing an enumerator for each polling subdivision, and roughly speaking there were about twice as many in 1891 as in 1901. The object was to have the census taken more quickly and much more information was required. There were 65 enumerators in East Simcoe last year.

Mr. BENNETT. And in 1891, how many?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Twenty-seven.

Mr. BENNETT. There is a case in point. The population was practically the same and the territory exactly the same. Yet we have 27 enumerators in 1891, and 65 in 1901. I do not know what time the enumerators took up, because they claimed very little of my attention. But, speaking of my own town of Midland, who were these enumerators? One was the express agent, who, when he had nothing to do, went about the census enumeration. And there was a clerk in a grocery store who occupied himself in odd moments in the same way——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What were the names?

Mr. BENNETT. White, Moore and Grice. But the names are immaterial. I am pretty confident that in 1891 one man did the work, and I will be bound to say that he was much better fitted to do it than all these three put together. Yet, for this census three had to be appointed. The hon. minister has given some sort of a solution—that he had an enumerator appointed for each polling subdivision. As a matter of fact, there are the three polling subdivisions, so that worked out fairly.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many polling subdivisions are there in the riding?

Mr. BENNETT. Sixty-five, I should judge. But, first as to the commissioners, the minister must have had representations that party exigencies required the appointment of two. Two were appointed. One was the magistrate, a lawyer by profession, and the other was the township clerk. These gentlemen must have been running into each others territory all the time. In how many other ridings of the province were there two commissioners?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There were two chief commissioners in a number of ridings. I would have to go through the list to learn how many there were in Ontario. But where the circumstances were peculiar it was sometimes deemed advisable to appoint two commissioners, especially was that the case where there was a considerable proportion of people representing the two different languages that are current in this country. If there was a large area, that was another reason. Speaking from memory, I think that in the hon. gentleman's constituency the appointment of two was due to the fact that there is a considerable French population in that riding.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, as to one of these reasons, neither of the commissioners appointed in East Simcoe could speak a word of French. And as to the plea of extended area, I may tell the minister that one of the commissioners unfortunately is a very bad cripple, a man who cannot walk about, but has to be lifted. One can readily understand how he could get over a large area of country. I may explain the circumstances to the minister to refresh his memory. One of these appointees was recommended by the Liberal candidate for the local legislature, and the other by the defeated candidate for the Commons. Both had to be appointed, and the country has to pay for them. If that is a fair sample of the way the census was conducted all over the country, it is clear that the great expense has been due to the fact that so much has had to be done out of consideration for political exigencies.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BENNETT. I have given the facts concerning the two chief commissioners, and they are quite in accordance with what I have said.

Mr. McGOWAN. Will the hon. minister please say how many commissioners there were for Central Wellington?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One.

Mr. McGOWAN. What was his name?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Thomas Harcourt.

Mr. LENNOX. What was the expense of taking the census in South Simcoe in 1891 and 1901?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891 the cost was $1,341.41, and in 1901 it was $2,794.56.

Mr. LENNOX. Can the hon. minister give the reason for that increase? Is it due to increase in the population or to any special circumstance?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not give reasons beyond the general reasons I have given. I have not the details for this particular county.

Mr. LENNOX. If the hon. minister will look up the census of 1891 and compare it with that of 1901, he will find that there has been rather a decrease of population if anything. There is no change of circumstances that would account for this greater expense. While I am speaking, I would like to ask the figures for North Simcoe, as the hon. member for that riding is not here.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The figures for North Simcoe are: 1891, $1,728.62, and 1901, $2,890.05.

Mr. BENNETT. What were the respective figures for West Bruce ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891, $1,359.46, and in 1901, $2,135.36.

Mr. BENNETT. Is there any particular reason for that ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have no details to show the particular reason in this county.

Mr. BENNETT. I can, perhaps, give the minister an explanation with regard to that riding. No doubt, the enumerators had the figures of the preceding census, and when they went around the riding they found that the population had dropped from 22,377 to 17,925, a decrease in that riding in the province of Ontario, where there is so much so-called prosperity, of 4,452. I suppose the enumerators became very zealous and worked over time, probably with the expectation that they would be paid by the day, to find where these 4,452 people had gone.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman will see the fallacy of that when he recollects that the enumerators were paid by the names they got, and if they did not get the names they did not get the money.

Mr. COCHRANE. How then did they get more money than in the previous census?

Mr. SPROULE. Were there two commissioners or one in North Simcoe and East Grey ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In East Grey there was one commissioner.

Mr. LENNOX. How many in North Simcoe ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One.

Mr. LENNOX. What was his name ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Archibald Currie. In East Grey it was R. D. Carruthers.

Mr. BENNETT. In East Simcoe what were the amounts paid to the commissioners, Storey and Tudhope ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Tudhope was paid $264.09, and Mr. Storey $301.80.

Mr. BENNETT. What amounts were allowed them for livery hire, if any ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nothing was given to the commissioners for horse hire.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the population of East Simcoe ?

Mr. BENNETT. 39,257.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the minister say what was the respective cost of taking the census in East Grey in 1891 and 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891 it cost $1,834.77 ; in 1901, $3,593.47.

Mr. McGOWAN. Would the minister kindly tell me the cost in Centre Wellington in the two years ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891 the cost was $1,591.99 ; in 1901 it was $2,681.79.

Mr. COCHRANE. What was the cost in East Northumberland ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891, $1,626.76 ; in 1901, $3,323.30.

Mr. VROOMAN. What was the cost in South Victoria ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891, $1,253.38 ; in 1901, $2,663.10.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman kindly tell us what the population of the whole province of Ontario was in 1891 and 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The total in 1891 was 2,114,321 ; the total in 1901 was 2,182,942.

Mr. TAYLOR. Now, will the hon. gentleman give us the cost for 1891 and 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The total cost in 1891 was $147,142.29 ; in 1901 it was $281,401.18.

Mr. LENNOX. Was there any riding in the Dominion in which it cost less in 1901 than in the previous census ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think there is a riding in which it cost less. The schedule of rates which was paid and the work which was done in every case, I think, were more.

Mr. LENNOX. Will the minister explain what it was that induced him to change the schedule of rates ? Was it a matter of intuition on the part of the minister, or was it after making inquiry, and after having endeavoured to get the work done at the old rates ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We knew that we were asking the enumerators to do a good deal more work ; and we knew also from inquiries that we could not find men to do the work as easily as they were apparently found in 1891. We consequently fixed the rates at what we thought was a fair salary to enable the enumerators to earn $3 a day if they did a fair days' work.

Mr. LENNOX. Would you reckon their labour as skilled or unskilled ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I should call it skilled labour.

Mr. LENNOX. Does the minister understand that skilled labour was paid at a higher rate in 1901 than in 1891, as a rule ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think such labour as this, clerical labour, was paid higher in 1901 than in 1891.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where did the minister find any difficulty in getting men to do the work ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not tell the hon. gentleman off hand where a man refused, but there were a good many instances of that kind, and many representations made of the difficulty of finding men to do the work.

Mr. COCHRANE. I know a gentleman in my riding who came down here for two years waiting for a job. He was perfectly competent and tried to get work on the hon. gentleman's staff and could'nt get it. I cannot see for my part why taking the census in East Northumberland cost in 1901 more than double what it did in 1891. The same class of men was employed, only they were Liberals, and of course their services were skilled. Perhaps some of the Grit heelers that were along with the machine the hon. gentleman wanted to pay as he is now paying Mr. Preston for hugging the machine.

Mr. BOYD. When were the enumerators paid for the county of Lisgar ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The accounts were paid as they came in. I could not give the hon. gentleman the exact time, or even about the time. They were not all paid at once. The accounts of each enumerator come in and are checked over here, and as they are checked, and accepted, and passed by the auditor, they are paid.

Mr. BOYD. Have any been paid during the last month or six weeks ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not remember whether there were any paid in the last month or not. The accounts were in dispute in many counties but I could not say whether there are any in Lisgar. I will look up the facts in the department.

Mr. BOYD. The information I have is that in a number of cases, in fact in all of the cases of disputed accounts in the county of Lisgar, an amicable settlement was made about the time of the late election. I hope the hon. minister will give the information before the item passes, together with the names of the enumerators there whose accounts were paid.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can give the hon. gentleman the names of the enumerators at once, as I have the information under my hand. The dates of their payment I will have to get in the department, and I will be glad to do it if the hon. gentleman wishes it. I may say that the report which he has heard as to there being an amicable settlement in regard to these accounts in Lisgar, and that the enumerators were all paid, is entirely unfounded, and, I think, if the hon. gentleman discusses the question with some of these enumerators, he will find that their accounts were not paid to their satisfaction. I regret to say that there are a great many of these cases all over the country, and I regret to say also that in a few instances we have not yet made a settlement of the accounts.

Mr. BOYD. The hon. minister does not know whether they have been settled in Lisgar to the satisfaction of the enumerators ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can get the dates if the hon. gentleman wants them.

Mr. BOYD. I would like to have them.

Mr. LENNOX. I would like to call the hon. minister's attention to the fact that we have not received that definite information that we are entitled to in regard to the question of increased remuneration for labour. I do not think the hon. minister has given us any basis upon which to judge whether a fair increase in the remuneration of these officers was made or not. If the hon. minister will say that he found that the percentage of wages for skilled or clerical labour had, in his estimation, and according to his investigation, increased 5, 10 or 15 per cent, or whatever percentage the hon. minister found that the remuneration had increased, we will have some reasonable means of ascertaining whether a fair arrangement was made or not. I understand that in the years that are past hon. gentlemen opposite maintained that the great object for a legislator to aim at was to make Canada a cheap country to live in, and that cheap food and cheaply paid labour were the great objects of legislation and of government. According to what we find to-night from the hon. Minister of Agriculture, this has been made a very very dear country to live in. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he found, before he made this regulation, that labour was worth from 10 to 15 per cent, or some definite percentage, more in 1901 than in 1891, so that we can ascertain whether, in the first place, the conclusion he arrived at was correct in regard to what we know to be current in the country, and in the second place, whether the increase which he made was in accordance with that test.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to ask the hon. minister who the enumerators were in the towns of Orillia, Gravenhurst and Penetanguishene ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have the list of enumerators, but I have not attached to it the places in which they made their enumerations.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. minister will allow me to see the list perhaps I can select them.

Mr. LENNOX. In the meantime, will the hon. minister answer, as far as possible, the question I submitted to him ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lennox) asks whether there was a definite ascertainment of particular facts in regard to the increase in the general wages of the country. I may say to the hon. gentleman at once, no. That is a very difficult thing to find out, as a matter of fact. I have examined all the statistical records I can find in the country. I find that until the Labour Bureau was established here there was nothing in Canada from which one could make a definite statement as to the price of labour, but now that the Labour Bureau has been established that will be remedied, and in future the cost of labour will be on record so as to be available for statistical purposes. In the past no such record has been available. However, I formed my judgment on what I believed to be the general consensus of opinion and of knowledge in the country that the remuneration of all classes of skilled and clerical labour was higher than it had been, and also upon the fact that while in 1891 there were a large number of temporarily unemployed and idle people, in 1901 there were comparatively few people who were not busily engaged in one kind of work or another who were not prepared to leave their work for temporary employment, and who could not leave their employment with advantage unless they got a fair remuneration. A number of instances are on record where men who were offered these positions refused to accept them, because they could not take them at the pay which was offered.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it not a fact that the hon. gentleman had thousands of applications more than he had positions for ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it is not a fact.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman say that there have not been more applications than there were positions ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think the hon. gentleman would be correct in saying that there were any more applications than there were positions.

Mr. INGRAM. In 1891 we had, in St. Thomas, four enumerators, and in 1901, we had fourteen, and there were forty ready to take the positions if they could get them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We did not have fifty applications from all parts of the country for positions as enumerators. Recommendations were made to us and the people who made the recommendations, in many instances, had to search out men to do the work.

Mr. LENNOX. As I understand the hon. minister, he says that there are no means of ascertaining whether the increase in the rate of pay was fair or justified, that he was anxious to ascertain it but that he could not do so. Then, I understand that there was no reason for increasing the rate, there being no means of definitely ascertaining that there should be an increase in the rate. Am I right in assuming then that the main reason for increasing the remuneration was by reason of the increased number of questions asked and answered ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That was one of the chief reasons.

Mr. LENNOX. Was that the chief reason ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think I may say it was the chief reason.

Mr. PUTTEE. May I ask the hon. minister if any steps were taken to get information as to what wages are being paid now ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the ordinary schedules there are questions which indicate the pay that the people who are remunerated are receiving. Part of the questions which are asked are in that direction, and these results will be tabulated.

Mr. PUTTEE. Was there any like schedule in 1891, so that you can make a comparison ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BLAIN. Did the minister say that the government first fixed the rates to be paid to the enumerators, and then increased them afterwards ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BLAIN. On what authority does the minister state that some who were offered the positions refused them on account of the lowness of the rate of pay.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Other people took the positions afterwards.

Mr. VROOMAN. The figures given me by the minister with regard to South Victoria have whetted my appetite for further information. In 1891 the cost of taking the census for South Victoria was $1,253, and in 1901 it was $2,663, more than double. That county has a less population now than it had in 1891. I wish to know who was the chief census commissioner there, what was he paid, what is the population now as compared with 1891, and how many enumerators were employed in both periods ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In South Victoria the commissioner was F. C. Taylor. He was paid $299.55 all told. The population in 1891 was 20,455 and in 1901 it was 19,953. There were 17 enumerators in 1891 and 39 enumerators in 1901.

Mr. VROOMAN. Was there anything paid the enumerators for horse hire.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1901 they were allowed $1.50 per ordinary day, and in 1891 they were allowed nothing for horse hire.

Mr. INGRAM. I asked the minister if it was not a fact that hundreds of applications were made for the position of enumerators as well as commissioners, more than there were vacancies to fill.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The applications were not made to Ottawa. They were made to the representatives of the Liberal party in the county and not to me.

Mr. INGRAM. Therefore the minister could not answer the question ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. INGRAM. Then why did he give an answer that was misleading to the House ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I had reports sent to me.

Mr. INGRAM. Can you say now, that there were not more than fifty commissioners in all Canada who applied for positions that had been filled ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There were not fifty applications for enumerators who came to me. I understood there were no doubt a large number of applications in the different counties, and it was reported to me that it was difficult to find men to do the work at the rate of pay.

Mr. INGRAM. The minister stated that one of the chief reasons why they increased the pay of the enumerators and commissioners was on account of the scarcity of men to fill the position. I can tell him that in East Elgin he had more applications for positions than there were vacancies. That was the same, I venture to say, in every constituency in Canada except in perhaps a few sparsely settled districts and probably not in them. There was no reason to increase the pay on that account.

Mr. RICHARDSON. One of the main reasons given by the minister for the enormous cost of the last census was the difficulty of obtaining competent men to act as enumerators. Will the minister tell us what means were taken to obtain applications from capable men to fill these positions ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Our friends in the different counties were asked to make recommendations and those whom they recommended were asked to forward specimens of their handwriting, and so on, in the form of a letter to the department so as to indicate whether the persons recommended were properly qualified by their education to do that work.

Mr. BENNETT. I have had the advantage of seeing the list of enumerators in East Simcoe. I shudder to think what must be the lists sent in by some of them in the line of orthography. I notice the name of one gentleman who, under the wonderful power conferred on the Ontario government of appointing every one who may be useful from a party view to be a justice of the peace, has been appointed to that office. He was one of the enumerators selected by the Minister of Agriculture. He is a gentleman who believes in signing his name to all papers as a justice of the peace and he always spells it 'Justis of Pace.'

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. BENNETT. If the minister had many more enumerators like that he did not put them through a very rigid educational examination. On looking over this list of enumerators for East Simcoe, I see in it the same old gang of political heelers of the Liberal party. It would not be a question of fitness, for that certainly was not the question in the selection of enumerators there, because we find that they were the old time division court clerks, license inspectors, bailiffs, and men of that ilk. These were the enumerators for the riding of East Simcoe. As to their fitness by reason of education, I can only tell the minister that if the men got correct returns in East Simcoe, then I am very much mistaken. What are the facts of this census ? Let us take the province of Ontario. We find that there has been an increase in the province of 53,657. In the cities of Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, London and Brantford there has been an increase of 55,900 odd, so that in the bulk of the province of Ontario the population, instead of increasing, has gone backwards. Can any one believe that in ridings where the population was tumbling from 22,000 to 17,900—and this has gone on throughout the province generally, though I am glad to say not in all the ridings—there would be such a scarcity of men to do the work that the minister had to increase the pay ? As I have pointed out, party exigencies drove him to appoint two commissioners in the riding of East Simcoe, which of course increased the cost accordingly. Then he had to increase the number of enumerators from 27 in 1891 to 65 in 1901. I will refresh the minister's memory as to one of the requirements that were to be exacted from these enumerators. I suppose the minister has not forgotten the famous circular : first, on your oath, do not give anything away ; and next, send to the county secretary the names of all the lads in your division who are approaching 21. I think that is the reason why a good many of these men in East Simcoe were chosen—that they would have an utter disregard of their oath of office, and would do what I know they were doing—going about the riding getting all this information preparatory to the revision of the voters' lists last fall. I can only speak of that one riding, but I have no doubt that if the hon.

gentlemen study the lists in their own ridings, they will find the same thing there—that these men were selected as enumerators because they would be useful from a party point of view, and that is the reason they were not going to do the work at the rate that had been in force in 1891, but demanded a higher rate. That is the reason the minister was moved—and I suspect that the greatest pull came from the province of Ontario—to increase the rate from 3 cents per head to 5 cents. The minister cannot make any reasonable man believe that in those parts of the province of Ontario from which people were fleeing as if from a pestilence, it was difficult to obtain men to do the work. In East Simcoe these little doles which were given out to those men were perfect Godsends to them. A number of them were men who were pursuing their ordinary avocations, and this was money simply thrown to them on the side. It will not do for the minister to try to convince the country that these men were paid these excessive rates to take the census, because there was no complaint that the enumerators were under paid in 1891. It was simply and solely because they were so hungry that they had to be paid an excessive amount, and it was thrown to them as a sop and nothing else. The statement that the cost of labour had increased so much in the province of Ontario will not apply in East Simcoe, because most of these enumerators have no ordinary avocation save being hangers-on to a political party ; and I am bound to say that if other members go through the lists of their own ridings, they will have the same experience there as I have had in East Simcoe. It was the hungry cry of the party followers, driven on by the members behind him, which drove the minister to increase the rates in 1901 over what was paid in 1891.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria). I am sorry to think that there are so many hungry people in Ontario. We have no such class of people in Nova Scotia, and particularly in the island of Cape Breton, where the value of labour has increased 25 to 40 per cent, and in some instances 50 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT. On account of the iron bounties.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria). The best class of people have moved to the Sydneys. Speaking for my own county, I can say that the men who were appointed enumerators there were perfectly qualified in every respect, and their returns, if examined, will show that they were not appointed because they were hungry, but because they were qualified to do the work that was entrusted to them. I think that will be found to be the general experience in the whole island of Cape Breton. We have no hungry people, I am happy to say, in the island of Cape Breton at the present time, but the people are prosperous, and are getting from 25 to 50 per cent better wages than they did in 1891.

Mr. BENNETT. I can only say, in answer to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, that if times are so good in the riding of Victoria, which he represents, it is a wonder that some 1,500 people less are there now than there were 10 years ago.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria). They have moved to the county of Cape Breton.

Mr. BENNETT. To get the benefit of the bounties.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) must remember that there are iron bounties paid in Ontario, and in the town of Midland ; and if these accrue to the benefit of workingmen in the province of Nova Scotia in increased wages, and do not in the province of Ontario, we ought to know the reason why.

Mr. BENNETT. I grant the Finance Minister that they do accrue to the benefit of the country ; but there is this marked distinction between hon. gentlemen on this side of the House and hon. gentlemen on that side, that we on this side, not only when in power, but also when in opposition, have been favourable to iron bounties, while the hon. Minister of Finance and his friends placed themselves on record by a resolution when in opposition that iron bounties were a bane to the country, and voted against the giving of them, but they were very different when they came into power.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, as Mr. Rudyard Kipling says, that is another story. We do not happen to be discussing just now whether iron bounties are wise or unwise. There is the fact, that iron bounties are paid in both Cape Breton and Ontario, and the idea that they are peculiar to Cape Breton is a mistake, that is all.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think that iron bounties exactly account for the increased cost, nor does the reason given by the Minister of Agriculture. His principal reason is that wages have increased between 1891 and 1901. We have some means of making a comparison. I have before me the report of the Ontario Bureau of Industries for the two periods, and I find that the wages of farm labourers in 1891 were $25.81 a month, and in 1901, $26.14, or a difference of 33 cents a month. Surely that cannot account for it. I think the minister will be obliged to look around and find some other reason. He will certainly not find people in Ontario, who have been in the habit of employing men, agree with him that the difference in wages can account for the increase. Take the riding of East Grey. I find that in 1891 it cost $1,324 to take the census, whereas in 1901 it cost $3,500, or more than twice as much, notwitstanding the fact—and I speak from experience because I have been hiring men all along—that the wages paid in 1891 were about the same as were paid in 1901. When these gentlemen were appealing to the people, they said that if they got into office they would make the country a cheap one to live in, but according to the minister it is dearer, because he says that on account of the increased cost of living we have to pay more wages. They also said they were going to exercise stringent economy, and yet they paid double in 1901 for the same work that was done in 1891.

Mr. FRASER. So far as my county is concerned, there has been an increase in that county of over 1,200 during the last ten years. The hon. member who has just spoken must remember that the question of the cost of living is one that must always be considered in connection with the wages paid. Suppose a man gets $2 per day this year where he got $1 per day ten years ago, will it be fair to say that because his living cost him 50 cents per day when he only got a dollar, and $1 per day when he gets $2, that the cost of living has increased ? In the one case he is 50 cents a day better off than the other. Speaking for my own county, except in two districts, I had not an application to appoint a man to take the census. I had to enumerate good men myself and ask them to do the work, except in two districts. My county is divided into two municipalities. In the one, in order that the work might be well done, I asked the warden of one of the districts if he would not be the commissioner for that particular district and he consented, in the other I appointed one of the best men I could find, who never applied at all. It may be different elsewhere, but I do not believe there is a man who took the census in Nova Scotia—I know there was none in the county of Guysborough—who could not make more money at something else during the time he took to do that work. The remuneration after all was not so very great, and I did not think that even in Ontario taking the census would be found such a very lucrative job. It certainly was not considered so in the province of Nova Scotia, and nobody was scrambling for the positions. We had to look for the men to take them. The two commissioners appointed in my county could have made twice as much money at other work during the time they gave to the census.

Mr. MATHESON. In my county I was asked to recommend enumerators and several refused to accept. I had only very few applications. I have in my mind one from a certain gentleman who had taken the census twice before, and who claimed he was about the only man competent to do it. But when I found that he began to spell census with an 's,' I began to doubt his qualifications. It was true that we did not take farm hands in our county to do the work, but men who were skilled in that particular line, and in several cases the men I asked to do it would not accept at all. I had very few apppli-cations for the job, and when I called on some men to perform the work, they said they could earn more money at something else. It was no wind-fall to our people to get such a job, and I am sorry to hear it was such a Godsend to the people in Ontario. In my simplicity, I had the idea that Ontario was rather ahead of us in that respect, and that the people there were not so badly off that they looked upon a week or ten days' work on the census as such a Godsend to them.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman must remember that they had an eighteen-years' hunger on. I would ask why it was deemed necessary in the county of Guysborough, which has only a population of 18,000, to appoint two or three commissioners ?

Mr. FRASER. The county has two distinct municipalities, and there is a shore front of over 200 miles, and it was a saving to the department to have a commissioner in each municipality.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the minister's version ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend from Guysborough recommended the men and I took his recommendation.

Mr. BENNETT. While accepting the statement of the hon. member for Guysborough, it seems rather strange that, if there were no men looking for the position, two gentlemen should have been appointed as chief commissioners for the small number of 18,000 people. There must have been some anxiety for the best positions when two were appointed where one had previously done the work.

Mr. FRASER. There was no such thing. Neither of the men made any application. Had only one commissioner been appointed, he would have had to travel around a shore frontage of some 200 miles, and in appointing two men, travelling expenses were saved, and the government effected an economy of $200.

Mr. INGRAM. How many commissioners were appointed for West Elgin ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There were two in West Elgin.

Mr. INGRAM. So in West Elgin, 25 miles long, the same rule does not apply as in Guysborough. Will the minister tell us if the same explanation would apply to West Elgin ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the first place West Elgin, I believe, is about 40 miles long, and in the second place, it is composed of parts of two municipal counties. The riding is not all in one municipal county, and it was thought better to have one man attend to the part in one county, and another man attend to the other part.

Mr. INGRAM. What does the hon. gentleman mean by a municipal county ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In Ontario there are certain counties for municipal purposes. By the Gerrymander Act the ridings are not always bounded by the same boundaries as the municipalities. The county of Elgin comprises portions of two different county municipalities.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). What was the cost of taking the census in West Elgin in 1891 and 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891 it was $1,644.72 ; in 1901, $3,581.80.

Mr. INGRAM. Please give the figures for East Elgin ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891, $1,715.58 ; in 1901, $3,221.57.

Mr. TAYLOR. Kindly give us the figures for Guysborough.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891, $1,239.77 ; in 1901, $2,391.

Mr. TAYLOR. The county was of the same size, I presume, under the corrupt Conservative government that did the work, and did it just as well, for $1,231, as it has been done last year for $3,301. My hon. friend from Simcoe informed the minister a few moments ago that the population of Ontario during the ten years had increased by 53,000 souls, while the population of four cities that he named had made up that total increase. Now where has the increase taken place ? In all the smaller towns, villages and rural municipalities there is not a man in Ontario to-day who is satisfied with the census. I have before me the census in our town, and I find that in 1891 it was 3,669, and by this census it is 3,526. Here is a certificate from the county clerk taken from the assessment roll that simply gives the heads of families and their children. It takes the same count that the enumerators are supposed to take, and the assessor was doing the work at the same time that the enumerators were. The town clerk says :

Gananoque, October 17, 1901.

The assessment roll for the town of Gananoque for the present year, 1901, shows the population to be 3,718.

(Sgd.) SAMUEL McCALLUM, Town Clerk.

The enumerators of the hon. gentleman give the population as 3,526, or 192 less than the population in our town taken in the same month by the town authorities. I would like to know how the hon. gentleman will account for the great discrepancy there. Besides the four cities the member for Simcoe named show an increased population more than the total increase for Ontario that the hon. gentleman shows by his census. He must know, as everybody in Ontario knows, that the census for Ontario is not correct, because the Ontario Bureau of Statistics show a much larger increase, and my hon. friend here proved by the Ontario Bureau of Statistics, made up by the same gentleman who has been at the head of this census staff, that the wages paid in 1891 were within 23 cents a month as high as those paid in 1901. The minister himself says that the men doing this kind of work must understand clerical work, and he is paying to-day just the same prices that were paid for doing the same clerical work as was done in 1891, $1.50 and $2 a day—that is what they were paid in 1891. Where is the increase ? In the city of Ottawa, where living ought to be dearer, if in any place, he is giving his staff the same pay as was given in 1891, namely, $1.50 and $2 a day. The hon. gentleman has at the head of his staff the same gentleman who took the census during the two last decades, he had the same machinery, but he had to find jobs for his friends. What are the facts to-day? The present census will cost, by the time it is completed, more than double what the last census did, to say nothing about that $6,000 a year rent he is paying for a building that will not hold the staff doing the work. Let anybody go down to that building and say if $6,000 a year rent is not an outrageous price to pay for it, besides spending $10,000 or $12,000 for fitting it up. That is how this economical government are running the affairs of the country, and it is so in every department. This is a plain kind of work that any man ought to be able to do, at least for the same amount of money that it cost ten years ago. The fact is that labour has not increased, as proved by statistics here, and by gentlemen who are employing men. I have some 60 men employed in my factory at Gananoque, doing the same kind of work that they did ten years ago, and they are drawing the same pay now that they did then, and it is the same in every other factory.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Have you not a larger number now ?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I have no more, we have just about the same number that we had ten years ago, but we have another factory. The pay is the same. Every employer of labour knows that there is no such increase in wages. The hon. gentleman admits that he is paying his staff in the city of Ottawa just what the late government paid ten years ago, namely, $1.50 and $2 a day. But how did he obtain his staff ? I am informed that each supporter behind him and each defeated candidate have a right to name one clerk to come down here on the census staff—213 clerks sent down from 213 constituencies in the Dominion of Canada, to fill this building renting at $6,000 a year, and they are crammed in there, tumbling over one another. But there had to be one taken on from each constituency, and I presume that if each supporter and each defeated candidate had the privilege of naming five clerks there would have been five from each constituency taken on, because I understood that more came than the hon. gentleman could find room for. The minister will find that the estimate he made the other day that it would cost $170,000 more to complete the census, will be exceeded, and that it will take a quarter of a million dollars more to complete a work that was done in 1891 for $549,000. The city of Kingston had a census taken, and they claim a large shrinkage. Owen Sound, Toronto, and almost every other place has had a similar experience. In many cases they were so disappointed that they had the census taken over again, and the Minister of Agriculture has heard from them. Ontario does not show anything like the population which is given by the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. OLIVER. The case I have to lay before the minister is the direct opposite of that of these hon. gentlemen. They complain of the minister having spent too much money, but my complaint is that he has been too careful in his expenditure.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is what we expect of hon. gentlemen on that side.

Mr. OLIVER. I am glad I do not disappoint the hon. gentleman. There is in my constituency, and, I think, in adjoining constituencies, very considerable complaint because of failure on the part of the census department to pay accounts for money earned last spring—that is to pay them in full.

Mr. BRODER. And are they not paid yet ?

Mr. OLIVER. They have been partially paid, but the complaint is that the minister has been over particular in checking the accounts and refusing payment, I suppose in order to keep within the mark in expenditure. For the purpose of my present argument, I am not concerned whether the expenditure on this census is greater than on the one preceding it or whether the expense is large or small. I am concerned with getting the people paid who did the work. I would ask the minister what are the prospects of these census accounts in the North-west being paid ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We are dealing with the accounts as rapidly as we get the proper vouchers from the individuals who claim the money. We have had a good deal of difficulty in getting vouchers which were acceptable to the accountant and which could pass according to the rules of the department. I think I may say, in a general way, that that is the reason of many of the delays in regard to accounts from the North-west Territories. I may say also that in the North-west, where distances are great and there is often difficulty in transportation, we have found it hard to get details of the accounts. I think that most of the accounts in the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Oliver's) riding are paid, but that there are still some in other places in dispute between the officials and the department. I can assure the hon. gentleman that we are dealing with these as rapidly as the staff at my disposal will allow. If the enumerators had been able to file the necessary vouchers for expenses, I have no doubt they would have been paid long ago.

Mr. OLIVER. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee in discussing the matter at length, but I would like to bring to the minister's attention the fact that the order requiring vouchers was not issued until after a great part of the work had been done and it had become impossible to get vouchers, and that now the demand for vouchers makes it impossible for the parties to collect their accounts. There should be some other way of arriving at a conclusion than by this demand for vouchers, which it is impossible, at this stage of the game, to obtain.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is entirely in error in saying that instructions as to vouchers were not issued until the work was commenced. This was distinctly made known to the chief commissioner for that district, and if he did not give it to the enumerators, that is not the fault of the department. Mr. Deftal, who is the commissioner for the territories, says he gave it to the commissioner for every riding.

Mr. OLIVER. At what time ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. On the 17th March, two weeks before the enumeration took place.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister, of course, will not expect this item to go through to-night. I think that before it goes through he should bring the list showing the number of commissioners and enumerators. There is also the question of payments in the constituency of Lisgar. My hon. friend (Mr. Boyd) says that a large number of cheques for census work went out into that constituency at the time of the election. We would like to know to whom they went. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) might bring down his cheque book with stubs showing the payments made in February.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I should be glad to give the hon. member the information. While I do not expect this item to pass this evening, it is still early, and we can go on threshing it out, and perhaps some other points may arise on which information will be required that I will have to procure and bring down at a subsequent sitting. I would like hon. gentlemen to ask now for what information they want.

Mr. MONK. I have not been able to be present during the whole discussion. Has the hon. gentleman here a complete list of the employees in Ottawa in the work of the census ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. I have here the paylist. It does not include the name of Mr. Blue, the chief commissioner, or Mr. St. Denis or Mr. Coté, of the Census Department, but it gives the names and salaries of the others connected with the work. I will send the list over to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MONK. I shall be glad to see that list. I would also ask the minister out of what fund the investigation which was made in the province of Quebec, and of which we have heard a great deal, was paid for ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Out of the census vote.

Mr. MONK. In what way was it charged—as an investigation ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, as part of the work connected with the census.

Mr. MONK. I was speaking of the investigation which was made in regard to the census of 1891. What was the total amount?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think I could tell the hon. gentleman off hand what the amount is.

Mr. MONK. We would like to have the amount, and the way it is charged in the account.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will get it for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MONK. While I am on my feet I would like to know the cost of the census taken in 1891 in the county of Jacques Cartier and the cost of the last census.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will give the hon. gentleman that.

Mr. MONK. And who were the commissioners ? Was there only one commissioner, and if so, who was he ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The census of 1891 in Jacques Cartier cost $842.08 and the census of 1901 cost $2,770.58.

Mr. MONK. And the name of the commissioner ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The commissioners were U. H. Dandurand, who received $206.67, and Caron Vallée, who received $201.06.

Mr. MONK. At whose suggestion were they named ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not say off hand, but I will look it up. I think it was at the suggestion of Mr. Decarie.

Mr. MONK. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what authority he had to charge to the cost of the census of 1901 this investigation made as to the census of 1891. I think this is a very important question which I will refer to again when I get the amount. It has always been my impression that the way in which we vote money is extremely vague, and I maintain that a study of the estimates and the voting of the estimates would be much shorter and much less of verbal explanation would be called for, if every item gave distinctly the purpose for which the money was asked. Anybody who takes the trouble to go over the estimates, will, I am sure, come to the conclusion that a great many questions which are asked on this side of the House would not be asked if the object for which the money is to be voted were clearly designated. But, outside of the general consideration, it seems to me a most preposterous act on the part of the government to take this specific vote given by this House, under the supreme authority which we possess, for the census of one decade, to take a sum which must have been very considerable out of that vote, to make an investigation as to the census of the decade previous. I believe there was no authority whatever, and when there has been such a flagrant violation of fact that what has happened in this case has sound principle, I am perfectly convinced that a careful examination of the ends to which the money is put, and under the loose system in which we vote it, will reveal the fact that what has happened in this case has happened in a variety of other cases. I will confine my attention to this particular case, and I say it is an absolute violation of the rules and principles which should govern us and which ought to be taken notice of by every fair and impartial member of this House, because we may be on the other side of the House to-morrow. It is gross violation of principle that a sum voted for such a specific object as this should be devoted to defraying the expenses of the investigation which was made into the census of 1891. I would ask the hon. minister to explain upon what authority he has violated one of the fundamental rules which should govern us in our financial conduct in this House ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is quite a fair question to raise. I felt that the investigation into the accuracy of the census of 1891 was called for, because of the results of the census of 1901 which showed very extraordinary decreases of population in a great many places where the people of the locality were quite satisfied that such decreases could not have occurred. In other cases where the increases were very small indeed the question arose as to how this could be accounted for. It was a question concerning the census of 1901 and when the suggestion was made, and which came naturally to the minds of many people, that the census of 1891 was unduly swelled and that the apparent anomalies which existed between the results of the census of 1891 and the results of the census of 1901 were perfectly explainable if we could show that the census of 1891 was unduly swelled, which I think we could show, and which I think we did show, especialy in the province of Quebec, it would be a sufficient explanation of these apparent anomalies and would be a confirmation of the results of the census of 1901. I therefore considered that the results of the census of 1891 were bound up with the question in such a way that the expenditure for this purpose seemed to be perfectly legitimate out of this vote for taking the census of 1901.

Mr. MONK. I will not deny that the explanation given by the hon. gentleman is a plausible one, but still I maintain that there was no authority given by us to use that money for such a purpose. We will refer to this further when we get the amounts. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he took upon himself, upon his own authority, to make that expenditure and to thus divert money from the use for which it was originally intended. Did he do that of his own volition, or was it done by Order in Council, or how was it done? How were the accounts passed by the Auditor General? Having before him the vote which we had given, how could he possibly pass this amount which was intended for taking the census of 1901, and which was not intended to defray the cost of holding an investigation so as to criticise the census taken ten years before?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There certainly was no Order in Council authorizing it to be done. The decision was arrived at after consultation with my colleagues. I did not assume the responsibility entirely on my own shoulders, although I carried out the intention and desire of my colleagues after consultation with them.

Mr. BRODER. Will the hon. gentleman give the cost of taking the census in the three Bruces in 1891 and 1901?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will give the cost in 1891 first and then the cost in 1901: East Bruce, $1,330.61; North Bruce, $1,594.51; West Bruce, $1,359.46. In 1901 the cost was as follows: East Bruce, $2,667.04; North Bruce, $2,911.34; West Bruce, $2,135.36. The population was as follows: In 1891, East Bruce, 21,355; North Bruce, 20,871; West Bruce, 23,377. In 1901 the population was as follows: East Bruce, 19,313; North Bruce, 21,297; West Bruce, 18,410.

Mr. BRODER. It costs many thousands of dollars more in 1901 with a population 6,000 less.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The information obtained at the last census was three times as much as in the census of 1891.

Mr. FOWLER. What was the cost of the census for King's, N.B., in 1891 and in 1901?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891 it was $1,615.92, and in 1901 it was $2,396.93.

Mr. FOWLER. What was the amount paid to the commissioner in each year?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891 the commissioner received $280.20, and in 1901 the commissioner received $316.63.

Mr. FOWLER. Have you got the list of the enumerators there?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, I will hand you the list for the whole province.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I may state that in my county it did seem difficult for the government to get a commissioner. The first man to whom they offered the job said the government owed him more, and he wanted more. He would not take the job, but he recommended another who did take it.

Mr. BENNETT. What did they owe him more for?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). I really cannot tell that. I wish the minister to tell me what was the cost of taking the census in 1891 and in 1901 in the county of Cardwell.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman confirms my statement that this man would not take the position because he was not paid enough.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). No; it was because he said the government owed him more.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know what the government owed him.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Have you found out since?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. The census taken in Cardwell in 1891 cost $1,102.94, and in 1901 it cost $1,965.93.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would ask the minister the same question with regard to South Grey.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The cost in South Grey in 1891 was $1,647.85, and in 1901 the cost was $2,597.36.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Did the gentleman who refused the commissionership in Cardwell get a better job since?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know who he was or anything else about him.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Well, it was Mr. Stubbs.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Oh, yes, Mr. Stubbs has a position in my department, but I do not know if it is better or not.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cardwell). Well, if he did not refuse it, it must be better.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is in a position which is more continuous and possibly is better.

Mr. SPROULE. I have now a copy of the circular sent to the enumerators. I notice that while first instructions contained the bald statement that the day shall consist of eight hours, and that they shall not be paid higher than $3 a day. It appears that on the 30th of April an Order in Council was passed forming the schedule upon which they should be paid, but that was long after they were appointed and after the census was taken.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It says they shall be paid at schedule rates.

Mr. SPROULE. It says that the day shall be of eight hours of proved effective service, and that the minister shall set forth a table of remuneration which shall not exceed in the aggregate a total of $3 per day for each day of proved effective service for an enumerator; or $4 for a commissioner. That circular was sent out to the census employees. They were furnished with no other schedule, and I claim that they had a right to assume that that was the only binding contract between them and the government, and that they were employed at $3 a day; but after a month, after the work was done, then comes out the other schedule stating that they were only to be paid 5 cents a name. It does seem to me that the government have broken faith with their employees, and have done a great injustice to them; and up to the present several of their enumerators have not been paid, and have refused to take what is offered to them, and I think very properly so.

Mr. BENNETT. When the minister the other day was going into the figures of the census of 1891, I think he referred to the towns of Goderich and Clinton, in one of which it was alleged there were on the list the names of some 37 persons who were not really there in 1891. May I ask the minister what means were adopted for making this comparison ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. A gentleman who was thoroughly acquainted with the places, who had lived there for many years before 1891, was employed to ascertain, of his own personal knowledge and from such information as he could get from the old inhabitants of the place, those who were present in 1891, and he was given a list of the names taken in those municipalities in the census of 1891.

Mr. BENNETT. Did the same gentleman act in both towns ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, Mr. D. F. Macpherson made the investigation in both places.

Mr. BENNETT. My recollection is that these two places were the only ones cited by the minister. Can he explain how it was that it was only in the riding of West Huron that he seized on any towns for the purpose of comparison ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was not only there. We also made inquiry in East Hastings, North Middlesex, Cornwall and South Norfolk. There were five places in Ontario in which investigations were carried on.

Mr. BENNETT. I am speaking from memory, but I think 'Hansard' will bear me out, that only in those two towns of Goderich and Clinton actual names were picked out. Percentages were given for the other places.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot remember in what places names were picked out.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the medium that started the inquiry in these particular ridings ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were chosen simply at random. We wanted to get places scattered over the province, and we employed gentlemen who from their residence in the places and their knowledge of the localities were competent to do the work.

Mr. BENNETT This gentleman, Mr. Macpherson, did not explicitly say that the people were not there in that year. It may have been that they were there part of the year. I think the census of 1891 was taken late in the fall.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it was taken in April.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, it may have been that the people returned there in the fall. Does Mr. Macpherson allege that they were not there in any part of the year at all ? If he has made any statement in writing, will the minister produce that at the next meeting of the committee ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The statement was that they were not there on the date the census was taken, that is, on the 6th of April, and had not been there for years before.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the minister a written report of Mr. Macpherson ? If so, will it be laid on the Table ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have a full copy of the report here, and I will show it to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. OLIVER. I was not able to conclude the remarks I wished to make to the minister. What I wished to say was that even if the Chief Commissioner did issue the instructions, I am satisfied that these instructions did not in all cases reach the enumerators in time, and for that reason and others of a local character, it was not possible for the enumerators in all cases to follow the instructions as to securing vouchers, and I would urge upon the minister the necessity of relaxing in some degree the requirements in order to clear up the accounts. There will have to be some relaxation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would say to the hon. gentleman that in view of just such cases as he mentions, I have given instructions to this effect, that if the enumerators who did not get vouchers would make an affidavit to that effect and supply the details of what they knew they had expended, we would take that and make the payment. But we require something to show us that they were real expenses incurred, and we cannot take a general statement of figures.

Mr. MONK. Will the minister state in two words what was the nature of the investigation which was made in reference to the census of 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The investigation in the province of Quebec was carried on largely in this way. It is a well known fact that every year a parochial census is taken by the Catholic clergy of the province. The figures of that census were taken and compared with the figures of the Dominion census of the same year. The same thing was done for 1891 and 1901, and we found this extraordinary fact, that in 22 counties there was a difference of 44,000 between the parochial census of 1891 and the Dominion census of 1891 an average difference of 2,000 per county in which the parochial census was less than the Dominion census. In these same 22 counties there was a difference in 1901 of only 8,000, or a difference of about 400 per county. We went further than that, and appealed to the registers of the parishes in which the names were entered. We compared these with the schedules in those counties and the lists of the names which were taken in the Dominion census, and we found name after name in the Dominion census which did not appear in the parochial registers. I made personal inquiries from priests, notaries, and old residents in those particular localities, and I got name after name and names of whole families which the people in those localities declared positively were not there in 1891, and had not been there for five or ten years, and in some cases twenty years, and in many cases had never been there at all.

Mr. MONK. Of all this there is an ample report in writing, no doubt ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, the reports were laid on the Table some time ago.

Mr. MONK. Knowing how our clergy take their census, and how their system is necessarily different from that pursued by us, and knowing how their census is limited to those of their own communion, it would not surprise me at all if the results which they arrive at should be different from those we obtain.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Those were taken in purely Catholic counties.

Mr. MONK. If any argument has been drawn from that, which I believe has been, I should say that the findings of our clergy have been put to very base and irregular uses. I would not at all question the findings of my own clergy, but it would not surprise me that they should be widely different from those of our enumerators, who proceed under a totally different set of rules. There is no ground possible for comparison, but I do not want to speak without examining the record. Would my hon. friend bring to our next meeting, not only the vouchers connected with that investigation, but the books in which the entries were made ? That would greatly shorten the work of my hon. friend and mine. Is this list, which my hon. friend has handed me, really a list of the permanent staff of the census employed at Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is a list of the people now engaged in the census work here at Ottawa, with the exception perhaps of one or two employees, permanent in the departments, but who are also engaged in this census work. It is a list of the nominees appointed to do the work of tabulation at Ottawa in connection with the census.

Mr. MONK. Will my hon. friend bring down a complete list of those specially employed at Ottawa on the census of 1901, giving their names and salaries ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will provide a supplementary list, if there are any names not on.

Mr. MONK. Are these officers paid by the day, week or month ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think that everybody on the list is paid by the day. They are paid every day right along, including Sunday.

Mr. MONK. Do they work on Sundays ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. INGRAM. When we had a discussion on the census some time ago, the hon. gentleman argued that the Conservative party in 1891 had stuffed the lists in the province of Quebec, and he gave a number of constituencies, in which a large number of families were enumerated in 1891, who were not there at the time. How can he reconcile that with the statement made frequently throughout the country that the French population of the province of Quebec had been under-enumerated in the census of 1891 by the Conservatives, and that Mr. Cote's circular was sent out for the special purpose of guarding against a similar occurrence ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not aware that the charge has ever been made that people were left out in the province of Quebec from the census taken in 1891.

Mr. INGRAM. Then why was the Cote circular sent out ? The reason given was that the French families in the province of Quebec had not been properly enumerated in 1891. Yet, according to the hon. gentleman's own statement, instead of people being left out of the census then, the census lists in the province of Quebec were stuffed in 1891.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The reason why the Cote circular, as the hon. gentleman describes it, was sent out, was to obtain a correct census in 1901, without any reference whatever to the census of 1891.

Mr. INGRAM. But the hon. gentleman must have heard his colleague's statement that was circulated in the press.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not responsible for his statement.

Mr. INGRAM. The Minister of Public Works was charged with circulating a statement that the French families of the province of Quebec had not been properly enumerated in 1891, that the Conservative party had not done justice to that population, and that was the reason why this circular was issued.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I sent out that circular for the purpose of getting a correct census in 1901. I never understood that there was any accusation that the French Canadians in the province of Quebec had not then been fully enumerated, but what I did understand—and I think that certain words in the first volume of the census of 1891 will bear me out—was that there were French speaking people all over the Dominion who had not been enumerated as such. There were Acadians in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and French Canadian people in Ontario and Manitoba. But there was only one description of them, that of French Canadians. A great many of these people, especially the Acadians, did not return themselves as French Canadians, thinking that 'French Canadian' was a term applied only to the French Canadian habitant of the province of Quebec. There were a large number of people of French origin, and of the Catholic religion, and who are really French nationality, but who were not returned as French Canadians. I think that was the complaint made by certain French Canadian members on the floor of this House after the census of 1891. I was not in the House at the time when the debates took place, but my recollection is that this is what has been explained to me as having occurred.

Mr. INGRAM. Then the Conservative party are not open to the charge of having given credit to Quebec for too large a population in 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am not accusing them of that.

Mr. INGRAM. But, on the other hand, the accusation is that they did stuff the lists in the province of Quebec ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, investigation shows it.

Mr. MONK. I see the point made by my hon. friend. But, the matter will be thoroughly sifted before this matter is passed. We will know if the statement of the Minister of Agriculture is true and if the charge, the violent charge, made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is well founded—that there are a very large number of perjurers among the French population of Quebec. That charge so repeatedly made will have to be sifted to the bottom. I can tell hon. members that the people of the province of Quebec, part of whom I represent here, have keenly felt that charge. We are Conservatives and Liberals in the province of Quebec and we have our political difficulties as other people have. But I should be very sorry to rise in this House and charge that the Liberal enumerators of 1901 were perjurers. And what is still stranger than the fact of such a charge being made concerning the enumerators of 1891 is the fact that it is proven out of the mouth of our Roman Catholic clergy. We will see the bottom of that before this item passes. For my part, I am prepared to suspend judgment until we have before us all the documents we have a right to see. In the meantime, I will examine the documents so far presented.

Mr. BENNETT. Coming to the alleged charges of falsification of the census in Ontario, I am informed that the inquiries were not made at random but specifically in every riding, and that the only county in which the investigator dared to put down anything definite was the county of Huron. In this case, the statement is made by a Mr. Macpherson. This gentleman does not live in Goderich, but, apparently in Clinton, as he writes from Clinton. Who is he, and what is his occupation ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that Mr. Macpherson is a member of the firm of Macpherson, Glasgow & Co., makers of agricultural implements, and lives in the town of Clinton.

Mr. BENNETT. This investigator or inquisitor lives in the village of Clinton, which, I think, is about ten or fifteen miles from Goderich. In 1891 Goderich was returned as having a population of about 4,000. After a lapse of ten years this gentleman goes up there. He does not make a single statement on his own authority, but what he says is 'after making careful inquiries of different old residents.' I suppose he took old people because their memory might be at fault and they might be easily persuaded to agree to what he said. This statement the Minister of Agriculture read out to show that the list for Goderich had been stuffed. The census was taken early in the year 1891. Now, take the first name mentioned as having been improperly included in the census list. This is Elizabeth Tebutt, who was enumerated twice, once in Goderich township and once in Clinton. I know nothing of the case, but I presume this woman was a domestic. She may have been at her home in Goderich township when the enumerator went around, and was probably included in the census again by the enumerator for Clinton where she was working. Now, the town of Goderich is a lake port of importance and a number of vesels run in and out of there. I find the name Worthington given here with the remarks that this party was in Chicago in 1891, and another party was in Buffalo, and so on. These men were probably vessel men, and were properly taken by the enumerator at Goderich. Everybody knows that a man connected with a vessel leaves home in the spring for the fitting-out work that is done on the boat. If the bulk of these cases were inquired into, I have no doubt it would be found that these men lived in Goderich and their occupation was such as to take them away during a part of the year. One is represented here as having been in Winnipeg, one in St. Paul, one in Vancouver, and others in other places. What does that indicate ? It indicates that this very inquisitive gentleman—who, I have no doubt we shall find out later on was well paid for his inquisitiveness—learned the names of people who, at some time of the year were away. He does not say that they were away the whole year. They may have been there in 1891 when the census was taken and been away in the fall. On this list are the names of the enumerators whose work is here impugned. Have they been asked for an explanation ?

Mr. BENNETT.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think so.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the hon. minister think it is British fair-play to lay on the Table a statement opposite which is a name of, no doubt, a respectable man of the county of Huron or the town of Goderich, which statement practically brands that man as a perjurer ? I think my former statement is true, that these inquiries were made all over the province from the members representing the ridings, and that the member of that particular riding seemed to be very busy about this town of Goderich and the town of Clinton where he lives. Go all through the list and you find the same thing. Here are two men who were said to have been employed elsewhere in 1891, and the statement does not say they were not there in the spring of the year when the enumeration was taken.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The statements all have reference to the 6th of April.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister says that, but Mr. Macpherson does not say it. On the face of it, Mr. Macpherson knew nothing about it. He lives ten miles away from this town. Is the minister going to ask the people of this country to be asses enough to believe that a man who lives twelve miles away from a town can go back ten years afterwards and pledge his word that on this particular date, the 6th of April, every one of these men were not in that town I live in a town of 3,000 population, and I would hesitate to allege that on the 1st of April of a particular year men were not in that town who perhaps were there. Here is another statement. There is a Mr. Cook, a Mr. Corbett, a Mr. Woodcock, a Mr. Reid and a Mr. Stiver. I do not know any one of those men. Perhaps you do, Mr. Chairman, as you come from Huron ; and would you be prepared to say that these men were perjurers ? Now this man Macpherson would not venture to say this is true under the solemnity of an oath, and he would not hold himself responsible that there is one statement true on his own knowledge ; he says that the statements are made to him. I think it is preposterous that the minister should place such a document before the House and make wholesale charges based upon it. I am glad to know that having scoured Ontario from one end to the other in a vain attack on the census returns of 1891, he was only able to find in this town of Goderich the particular instances of wrongdoing that he mentions, and which, on their very face, will not carry to any fair minded man an idea that there was anything wrong on the part of these enumerators. Now, here is a test for the minister. He has the criminal law of the province of Ontario behind him, and he has been afraid to prosecute one of these men for perjury. I ask the minister if he has prosecuted one of those men for making false returns ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. BENNETT. Does he propose to prosecute any of those men for fraud ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not proposed to do so.

Mr. BENNETT. I admire the hon. gentleman's discretion. Here on the 17th of February this statement is sent in by Mr. Macpherson, and the minister thinks that between man and man it is fair and honest to these gentlemen to make this slander on them without asking them for an explanation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I want to correct the hon. gentleman in saying that the province of Ontario was carefully scoured to find out those frauds. There was no attempt of the kind in any shape or form.

Mr. INGRAM. In no case ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In no case. There was no inquiry made, and in this very place where an investigation was made there was no preliminary inquiry of any kind. Before the work was commenced we had no idea what the result was going to be. As a matter of fact, there were five places in which this work was conducted, and in two of those places, two townships in one riding, there was evidence that the census was taken correctly in 1891, and in the others there was evidence that it was not.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman give those statements ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I gave them in full to the House not long ago. The places in which the investigation was made were in Huron west, in Goderich and Clinton, in the town of Simcoe, and the village of Port Dover, in the south riding of Norfolk, where also many errors were found. In Cornwall also irregularities were found.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman leave these reports on the Table ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will be glad to do so. I may say that the best evidence that there was no preparation for this investigation is the fact that in one place, at all events, no irregularities were found. If our object had been to discover irregularities before we made our investigation, we would not have chosen that plan, but we would have chosen places where we had found irregularities. We just took the places at random, and made the investigation with the results that have been detailed. I have here four of these, and one where there was nothing wrong found. I will bring the reports down before the next meeting of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. I presume these commissioners were paid out of this appropriation the same as in Quebec ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. I stated a few minutes ago that the hon. gentleman had a staff composed of one clerk from each constituency in the Dominion, and the hon. gentleman stated a few moments ago that there was a supplementary list to be added. I have added up the numbers, and I find there are 205 names on this pay-list. I find also that he has able bodied men and women working at $1.25 per day, judging from this pay-list. I want the hon. gentleman to tell me how much it cost in 1891 and in 1901 to take the census in the city of Ottawa, where you have to pay for clerical work $1.25 a day ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say that as far as the $1.25 a day is concerned, there are a few clerks who are being paid $1.25 a day. This is because there were a few clerks who were not doing their duty properly and they were cut down from $1.50 to $1.25 a day as a warning and told if they did not do better they would be dismissed altogether.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is quite a number of them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman how many there are. The expense in the city of Ottawa in 1891 was $1,564.37, and in 1901, $4,573.96.

Mr. TAYLOR. Three times the amount that it cost in 1891. I have just run up this monthly pay-list, and to the end of March, I find that it takes $10,500 to pay the persons whose names appear here. Then, there is a supplementary list, and there is the commissioner and a large number of the members of the staff who are not on this pay-list at all. There is Mr. Blue, the commissioner, whose name does not appear and that will increase the amount very materially. It is costing $10,500 a month, and from the best information we have it will take two years to complete the work of tabulating the statistics from the 1st of March. To pay this staff it will cost $250,000, to say nothing of the commissioner and the other members of the staff. My hon. friend does not expect to get through in less than two years from March last. The expenditure up to that time is $948,000 to say nothing of the commissioner, or rent, or the other members of the staff. This is the ordinary list of pay clerks who are receiving $1.25, $1.60, $1.75, and up to $2 a day. There is one man drawing $100 a month on the list, and he is the only one that I have noticed receiving that amount. I am prepared to say that before the work is completed $1,250,000 will be nearer the amount expended than the sum stated by the minister.

Mr. INGRAM. What is the latest bulletin that has been issued ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Bulletin No. 7, giving the population by origins and nationalities.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he has not been very extravagant in furnishing us with copies of the bulletins. I would like to know why the distribution office of the House is not supplied with a reasonable number so that copies can be obtained by members.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will be glad to send some copies to members of the House.

Mr. MONK. I think we have advanced a little and that we might now adjourn.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think we have advanced the business very much, but this happens to be as convenient a time as any other to adjourn.

Mr. CLARE. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether he would object to bringing down a detailed statement of a few of the enumerators' accounts ? I would like the hon. gentleman to bring down a statement showing the amounts paid to the enumerators in South Waterloo particularly.

Some resolutions reported.

Bill (No. 126) to incorporate the Bishop of Moosonee.—Mr. Taylor.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 1.10 a.m. Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, April 24, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

BOER IMMIGRATION.

Mr. WILSON asked :

Is the following statement correct which appeared in the 'Mail and Empire' of Saturday, April 19th, 1902 :

Canada wants the Boers.

London, April 18.—The question of what to do with many of the Boer prisoners has been a matter of the most earnest consideration on the part of the government. A good deal of correspondence has taken place on this subject between the Colonial Office and the Canadian government.

Canada wants men, plenty of men ; in the North-west Territories and towards British Columbia there are thousands of square miles that are lying waiting for settlers. The Boers are the sort of settlers that the Canadian government is looking for. The Dominion government proposes to give a full homestead, consisting of 160 acres of land, to each head of a family that will settle down, as well as to each male over twenty-one, to assist them with money—as settlers are at present assisted—and to admit them to the same terms of civil liberty as any settler.

If so, will the government lay the correspondence on the Table of the House ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is no such correspondence.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 40) respecting Pensions to Officers of the North-west Mounted Police.—The Prime Minister.

SUPPLY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. N. BOYD (Macdonald). Mr. Speaker——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Will my hon. friend permit me to say that I am aware of the matter he intends to bring up, and to ask him if it will suit him as well to bring it up to-morrow, as the Minister of Railways wants to make an address which will occupy some time. If the hon. gentleman wishes to proceed, I will not object ; but it would be a matter of convenience if he would let the matter stand until to-morrow.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a pity you left the Chair before we had time to come to an understanding.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I supposed that the hon. member manifested his assent. I had no desire to take any advantage.

Mr. MONK. The situation is this. We were not prepared to go on with the railway estimates immediately, because we thought the motion of my hon. friend from Macdonald was going to be put before the Speaker left the Chair, and consequently two or three of our friends who desire to be here when the railway estimates are proceeded with are not in the Chamber at this moment.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I may say to my hon. friend that the members will not be called on to vote on the estimates for some considerable time, as the Minister of Railways desires to make a somewhat lengthy address, and before we reach a vote, the hon. member will probably have the opportunity to have the gentlemen he refers to present.

Mr. MONK. I think it is important that the gentlemen I refer to should have the opportunity of hearing the statement of the Minister of Railways.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will wait a few minutes if the hon. gentleman wishes to send for them.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. member for Hamilton came to my desk a few minutes ago and said that he did not expect that the railway estimates would come on until after dinner, and for that reason he left and went to his room in the Victoria Chambers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Notice was given last evening that the railway estimates would be taken up to-day.

Mr. INGRAM. But it was understood that the hon. member for Macdonald would bring up his question first.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was asked by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) whether I was prepared to make my statement this afternoon, and I said I was. I have no desire to inconvenience hon. gentlemen opposite. I would only like to make this appeal to them. I have been most anxious to be allowed to make my statement in the afternoon, as I have not been in as good health or strength as would warrant me to speak at any length in the evening.

Mr. MONK. We were under the impression that this motion, which, I understand, it will not take much time to discuss, would be taken up at once. In fact such was considered the understanding, and some of our friends are leaving later on in the day. It will not take up any length of time, and it will be possible then for the hon. minister to make his statement before the evening sitting.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite sure that in order to get through the various subjects, I would like to touch upon, it would be impossible for me to do so in any less time than between now and the dinner recess. I have been consulting the convenience of my hon. friends, from time to time, and yielding to their suggestions for the purpose of securing an afternoon, when I would be in better shape to make my statement to the House.

Mr. MONK. I think, under the circumstances, you had better go on.

Intercolonial Railway, $5,500,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I propose, at this stage, with the consent of the committee, to make a general statement respecting the administration of the Intercolonial Railway. I think it is convenient that I should do so now as that will be very much more advantageous than to have a general discussion as each item comes up. In this way I think we could better dispose of the matter, as a whole, than on the individual items.

I would first call the attention of the committee to the subject of capital expenditure. The capital expenditure for the year, which we have so far asked parliament to authorize, is $1,975,000. There will be some addition to that probably in the supplementary estimates, but the amount will not be considerable. This sum is less by $3,073,000 than the estimates on capital account for last year. The Prince Edward Island Railway requires an expenditure on capital account of $510,000, which is $24,000 above that of last year. The capital expenditure on canals will require $1,275,950, which is $1,230,000 less than last year, but it is liable to be increased by some further sum which we will ask in our supplementaries for the year to come. The total reduction therefore on capital account, as compared with last year, is $4,270,000.

As I am at this moment referring to the subject of capital account, I think it well to take this opportunity to refer to some, at all events, of the criticisms which have been passed upon the expenditure made under capital head upon the Intercolonial Railway during the past five years. The opposition and the opposition press have denounced the government in the most unqualified terms because of what they chose to regard as the enormous expenditures we have made. They have not thought it at all germane to the subject to examine into the different items which constitute the total amount. They have not thought it necessary to ask themselves whether or not the various purposes for which this capital outlay has been asked, were proper and legitimate purposes or not, but have totalled the whole amount and have even exceeded the total amount in their statements. They have stood, as it were, transfixed with horror at the idea that so large a sum should have been expended for such general purposes.

My hon. friend who preceded me in this department (Hon. Mr. Haggart) has, I feel, an exaggerated idea of that expenditure, because I remember having heard him say, with all confidence, not very long since either, that the total expenditure on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway is $23,000,000. I shall ask my hon. friend to avail himself of an early opportunity to enlighten the House as to how he arrives at that conclusion. I am unable to find that any such sum has been authorized by parliament or has been expended on capital account. I venture to say that the amount he mentioned might have been very wisely and advantageously expended, but we have not asked nor have we received any authority to spend any such sum. The total expenditure for the years for which we are responsible, including the outlay for the purchase of the Drummond County line, is $12,486,961 during the past five years, not including the estimates for the years 1902-3, and including the estimates for the present year. A very considerable portion of that amount has already been expended, but the whole of it has not, and I think it only fair that before any hon. member concludes adversely against the wisdom and propriety of this expenditure he should take the trouble to look a little into it and ask himself: Were not the various purposes necessary for which this outlay was made? Were they not proper and legitimate purposes in the interests of the government railway and the country?

What were these purposes? In the first place, one of the classes of expenditure, to which a considerable sum has gone out, is rolling stock. On rolling stock we have expended in the five years down to the end of 1901-2 as follows:

1898	65,560 92
1899	619,999 26
1900	573,618 35
1901	1,563,705 77

We expended on rails and fastenings, $400,000, and for building and renewing and strengthening bridges:

1899	$ 50,889 96
1900	77,091 10
1901	167,705 23

On increased accommodation, which includes various items, we expended:

1897	$ 65,602 95
1898	154,222 19
1899	300,272 63
1900	729,471 14
1901	773,317 33

We expended upon the ferry service at the Strait of Canso, $317,000 in 1901.

Upon station buildings, sidings and miscellaneous, we expended:

1897	$ 68,513 53
1898	32,973 89
1899	110,768 09
1900	416,167 70
1901	427,191 41

These amounts make a total of $6,932,461; or, in round numbers, say seven millions of money actually expended, as will appear by reference to the public accounts. Our expenditure on capital account for 1902 is $4,000,000; our expenditure on the Drummond County Railway is $1,459,000. These items together make up the total I gave you a few moments ago of twelve millions and a half in round figures.

Now, I wish to add, is there any gentleman here, is there any one of the critics of the administration prepared to take the ground that it was not necessary, that it was not proper, that it was not in the interest of the railway and of the Dominion that these several classes of expenditure should have been made? I presume that no one is going to revive the controversy over the Drummond County Railway. Therefore, I pass that item by. I ask hon. members to bear in mind, in this connection, that the business of the Intercolonial Railway has been increasing by leaps and bounds. I ask you to compare the amount of business that is now being transacted over the Intercolonial Railway with that of preceding years, and say whether or not the increase of business was not in itself a loud and imperative call for liberal expenditure upon the government railway in order that we might do that business. I need not go further back than the last year of my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart). The gross earnings of the Intercolonial Railway for that year were $2,957,000. For six years before, during which the mileage of the road was identical with what it was in 1896, the gross earnings upon the Intercolonial Railway were practically stationary. The highest year's earnings during that whole period was $3,012,739—barely over three millions of dollars. In 1897, under similar conditions, the gross earnings amounted to $3,066,000; in 1898, before we had the Drummond County Railway in operation, the gross earnings were $3,117,000. In 1899, they increased to $3,738,000, and in 1900 to $4,552,000. In 1901, the earnings amounted to $4,972,000, or only a little less than five millions of money, as compared with three millions prior to 1896. What does that mean? That means an addition of two-thirds, or about 66 per cent. While I am on the subject of gross earnings, I might mention that, from the end of the last fiscal year down to the present day the earnings have gone on increasing at the rate of about $40,000 a month, and, at this moment, our earnings are nearly, if not quite, half a million dollars more than they were for the like period during the last year. So, our business has presented the most phenomenal results, an increase within the last two years of about 66 per cent, and, if you take in this year, about 75 per cent as compared with the last year of hon. gentlemen opposite, I would ask any hon. gentleman who stops for a moment to consider the question whether these conditions do not of themselves call imperatively for a large expenditure upon capital account? I venture to say that in 1896, and prior to that time, the Intercolonial Railway had no more locomotives than it required to do the business it was doing. I affirm with all confidence that it had not any more cars—if it had as many—than were required to do its business. It had not more facilities of any kind than were needed for traffic, giving receipts of less than $3,000,000. If you are going to do a business on the basis of 75 per cent more—and, as I think, we may look forward to some increases still, say even double—what reason, justice or common sense, is there in the complaint that we are making large expenditures on account of capital in connection with such an institution? Let me read to the committee a statement made by the mechanical superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway when the question was presented to him as to what should be done in order that we might provide for the growing needs of the road. I asked that gentleman to furnish me with a statement of what things were like in 1896, with respect to the condition of the road and its equipment, and what he thought ought to be done. And he proceeded to do so. And, as he is a competent man, a man of large experience in railways, and one whose opinion would naturally guide the head of a department in determining, so far as he could determine it, what the policy of the administration ought to be, I will read his statement to the committee :

To enable you to see things from my standpoint, it will perhaps be best for me to point out the conditions which exist in the mechanical department on a successfully managed modern road, and some of the reasons for its success.

In the locomotive department, we shall find that for main line service the freight engines are heavy, as heavy as the roadbed can bear, that they are kept in good condition by renewals, both the small and old engines being thrown away either because they are expensive to maintain or because they are totally unable to haul trains with the economy required by the diminishing freight rates, which are now, for bulk freight, about one-half of what they were a few years ago ; they do not expect engines to run more than twenty years with any economy, and they are often obliged by keen competition in rates to discard them much sooner than that, and buy still larger engines, which they are enabled to use on account of the ever-increasing capacity of the track on which heavier rails are being constantly laid.

After the locomotive, the most necessary point for consideration is the capacity of the freight car. This is ever-increasing in size, because increase in capacity means a smaller proportion of dead weight to haul in each train. Renewals are constantly made, not only on account of wear and tear, but to enable the capacity to be enlarged to suit modern requirements, and to have them equipped with modern appliances to facilitate business, to quicken transportation, and at the same time protect the lives of train men.

They find that the combined use of heavy engines and large capacity cars, is the foundation of cheap freight transportation, and is absolutely necessary for its accomplishment, and in no other way can the desired end be attained. The combination means reduced expenses on every ton hauled, fewer trains, fewer delays through meeting points for trains, fewer cars to place at sidings, less shunting in yard, and better service to the shipper.

The passenger department on a well managed and popular road is the advertisement on which it relies to attract attention to itself. Its cars are built in compliance with the modern requirements of comfort in travelling and attractive appearance, they are always kept well painted, varnished and clean looking, and furnished with the best known appliances for ensuring speed and safety. We shall find the workshops large, roomy and well built, prosperous looking, equipped with cranes in every direction, and the best known labour-saving devices.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR.

Then he shows the need of having modern machinery supplied.

It is kept well ahead of the actual needs of the roads, large enough to keep engines and cars in good, healthy condition, and rolling stock is being constantly rebuilt. Its capacity for repairs is flexible, because men can be taken off new work to do repairs when they are accumulating too fast. The general policy being to rebuild both engines and cars instead of wasting time and material in patching up stock that is old and worn out, and which, owing to the march of improvements, has become too small and obsolete.

Now, this is the statement of an experienced man as to what a modern railway requires. Let me ask, Mr. Chairman, is there any reason known to any member of this House why, in equipping, building and repairing we should discard modern methods upon a government road ? Is there any reason why a government road should be an exception to all other roads ? Is there any reason why a government road should remain out of date ? Will anybody tell me why a government road should be an out-of-date institution, that it should be, either as to its passenger equipment or its road-bed, a discredit to the country ? Is not the country entitled to respect from an enlightened and proper administration of the Intercolonial Railway, that it should be as good, as complete, as comfortable, as speedy, as convenient and in as good condition as any other railway in Canada ? Do the people of this country approve, or do they not, of having the railway which belongs to them in such a shape that it will reflect no discredit upon either them or the government ? I venture to say that the man who interprets the sentiment of the people of Canada in any other way, misinterprets that sentiment. While it may suit the purposes of the opponents of the government to give currency to a view among the people that there has been wasteful extravagance in the enormous sums of money, as they choose to characterize them, which have been laid out upon the road, I say they are attempting to deceive the people, they are misleading the people in a way which is not worthy of any political party ; and until they can show that in the expenditures we have made upon this railway, on capital or any other account, we have been wasteful, that we have made expenditures without reasonable necessity, they have no case against the administration of the government railway.

Mr. INGRAM. Whose statement is that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That of the mechanical superintendent, Mr. Joughins. Then he passes from what he considers ought to be and are the requirements of a first-class road, an up-to-date road, to what our conditions and circumstances are in that regard.

On taking an inventory of our locomotives, we shall find that the freight engines are altogether too small to haul freight with economy. In writing to the general manager on June 18th, in the fiscal year 1897-8, I said as follows : 'Referring to the new engines which we think of ordering, it seems to me that we ought first to purchase freight engines exclusively, because the grades on our road are so heavy that our present freight engines are totally unable to handle a paying train of freight, and because our passenger service seems to be fairly well provided for at the present time, at least it does not demand such a radical reform as the freight service. If we decide to get freight locomotives, we ought to buy as large as it is possible to use on our road-bed.' And this still appears to me to hold good. . . . . It is well recognized that very much greater economies can be inaugurated and practiced in hauling freight than passenger trains without detriment to the service, that such improvements persistently carried out are one of the essentials necessary to place a road on a paying basis, and to meet the competition of its neighbours.

Our greatest handicap in endeavouring to reach the goal of economy is the size and condition of the 156 engines employed in hauling freight. They are altogether too small, not one could be considered a modern engine for main line service, and most of them were too small even according to progressive railroad ideas the day they were purchased.

Now, this is a statement of the mechanical superintendent. Whether that statement is correct, whether his judgment is sound or not, I venture to appeal to any man filling any responsible position such as that of mechanical superintendent on any of the railways of Canada, or of any other country on the continent, whether the statement he makes in this regard is not supported and sustained by the judgment of every man of experience in the same direction.

In looking at our list of both passenger and freight engines, we see that we have 143 engines with cylinders 17 inches or less in diameter, and only 57 engines with 18 inches, and six with 19 inches, the latter being purchased only within the last four or five years, and then for passenger service.

That is, prior to 1898.

They were all purchased for passenger service.

Those four or five having nineteen inch cylinders.

For many years engines with cylinders even so large as 18 inches have not been economically useful in freight service, and the smaller sizes should have disappeared long ago from our main line. We are now purchasing engines with 21 inch cylinders, and with almost double the power of the largest we hitherto possessed.

The Canada Atlantic, a level road, have not, I believe, bought less than 18-inch engines during the last fifteen or twenty years, the Canadian Pacific not a single one since 1887, while we have bought or rebuilt 33 engines of less than that size during the last ten years.

Perhaps I could show more clearly what I mean when I say that the engines are too small by comparing the weight and power of a modern freight engine with the engines we now possess. The best of our old locomotives weighed about 50 tons, and could haul 550 tons up a 1 per cent grade, and we have only 12 of that capacity, the rest are smaller, some weighing only 30 tons. A modern freight engine, such as we are purchasing, weighs 83 tons, and has a hauling capacity of 1,100 tons up the same grade. On calculating the hauling power of each freight engine which we own and adding them together, we find that it amounts to 56,000 tons up a grade of 1 per cent, and that if we had the same number of modern engines they would haul 166,000 tons up the same grade.

That is three times as much. And, mark you, in the incidental cost of running the trains, taking into account items such as oil and waste, the rate of wages paid, &c., it would cost practically the same to run a train hauling 300, or 400, or 500 tons as it would be to run a train hauling 1,100 or 1,200 tons.

There is not very much to say about freight cars, except that they have not been designed large enough, and that during the last eight or ten years we have purchased from 2,000 to 3,000 cars of 20 tons capacity, which should have been 30 tons. To me it seems incomprehensible why 20-ton cars should have been made up to 1898, when every one else years ago had recognized the value of the larger car, and it is, I believe, needless for me to point out its advantages.

Now, there is his statement. He winds up with this :

It is difficult to speak with certainty of what ought to be done to meet the demands of the passenger traffic. Both in regard to locomotives and cars it is more a question of competition, appearances, speed, comfort and safety than one of reducing expenses per train mile. I feel that you are quite familiar with the facts and requirements in regard to this, and that I need not say very much about it beyond pointing out that our passenger engines are small and that the condition of our trains is anything but a good advertisement for our road. A stranger visiting the provinces for the first time, would conclude from their appearance that the road was very much embarrassed financially, so poor that it could not afford to make a decent appearance, unable even to spend enough to keep them clean, and when we know that they belong to the Canadian government and therefore in some degree represent it before the world, we cannot help feeling ashamed for their appearance ; our cars were built long before comfort was considered a necessity in railway travelling and we have not been renewing our cars at such a rate as to be able to say that we have a respectable and modern equipment.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the date of that report ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This report was written, with the quotations which I have read, in 1899. I have read to you quotations from a report which was made in the fiscal year 1897-98, in regard to the conditions of the locomotives, engines and cars.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) says that this report was made in 1897-8 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, I say that the paper I am reading from is dated May 1st, 1899, and the portion which I have been reading, referring to the condition of the locomotives and train service, is an extract from a report made in the financial year 1897-98.

Mr. INGRAM. And I understood the hon. gentleman to say that during the year 1898 he purchased a large number of 20-ton cars.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, no.

Mr. INGRAM. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, he wrote in 1897-98 that during the previous years there had been 20-ton cars purchased. He wrote that :

> During the last eight or ten years we have purchased from 2,000 to 3,000 cars of 20 tons capacity which should have been of 30 tons.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) be good enough to put that report on the Table of the House so that we will have an opportunity of looking at it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think I can put it on the Table exactly, but if the hon. gentleman would like to look at it I will let him have it in his own hands.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I think it would be better when the hon. gentleman reads a report from a public officer that he should put it on the Table.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These are simply extracts from the report of this officer. I have not the whole of the report. I will let the hon. gentleman have it such as it is. Now, Mr. Chairman, just let me state the condition in an abbreviated form. So far as the equipment of the Intercolonial Railway is concerned, we had not a dining car on it. We had not a real first-class car on it. We had not a first-class sleeping car on the road, as everybody knows. Travelling on the Intercolonial over night, leaving our train and taking a car on the Canadian Pacific Railway or Grand Trunk Railway, the comparison which any person would make was open to comment and the subject of general remark. They had all the modern appliances and equipments; we had none of them. The first dining car that was put on the line was put on in 1898, or early in 1899, and so in regard to up to date coaches and sleeping cars. You have heard that we had no locomotives that were capable of hauling more than 600 tons. I can give the committee a list showing when these locomotives were obtained, when they were purchased, how old they were and what the capacity was for hauling. You have the general statement of Mr. Joughins that these engines would not haul 500 tons and everybody who has gone over the Intercolonial Railway in times past noticed the character of the train service, and even down to this date, has seen more trains of perhaps 180, 200 and 300 tons hauled by locomotives than trains of a larger tonnage. One hundred and eighty, or 200 tons was more than the average of the whole tonnage of some of these trains and yet large locomotives which will cost no more for running, although they cost a little more for fuel, would be able to haul five times that amount of tonnage up our grades without any difficulty whatever, and they are doing it to-day. The only thing that I regret is that we have not been able to get these large locomotives manufactured and put into service fast enough. We have not begun to realize the advantages which will accrue from the equipment of the road with large locomotives, so that we are yet in no position to claim that we are fully and completely equipped.

We are spending, this year, $400,000 on capital account for rails. We must put down heavy rails to bring our road up to date. I think that is too obvious to need any argument to sustain it. We must have heavier trains, heavier locomotives and heavier cars, and the truest economy, as well as the safety and security of the travelling public, requires that we should have these heavy rails and that we should have the bridges strengthened so that these trains may safely pass over our line. We have spent $200,000 within the last three years out of capital for the purpose of strengthening these bridges. I would have been better pleased and the road would have been better served if we had spent double or treble that amount during that time. It would have been better if the government had spent more than that for new rails and more rails, but I think hon. gentlemen would be inclined to assume that if it had been possible for the government to have authorized estimates for a larger sum they would have done so. If they had thought that parliament would have approved of larger estimates they would have so asked, but we must move cautiously and moderately in these things. We cannot do as company roads do, circulate their stock, get $20,000,000 at one time and do the things which are necessary. We must go to work in a more moderate way. The expenditures we have made in these years have been less than we would have liked to have made. The expenditure for sidings and accommodations has been very large and will amount up to this time, to about $2,000,000. Does anybody say that with heavier trains and heavier locomotives we could get along without increased sidings ? I intend to have a memorandum of the exact number, of miles—there were scores of miles—which have been added to the railway in the way of additional sidings during the last two or three years. I will get the information if it can be obtained for me before we get through the discussion on the Intercolonial Railway votes. But, we have spent $2,000,000 for this purpose. Does anybody say that that expenditure was not necessary ? You had better pull up your rails and tear up your road and tell the people that you do not want a railway down there than run it in the two-penny, halfpenny way in which it was going on. If you are going to have a railway that is creditable to Canada you cannot move one peg without doing the whole work. You cannot have locomotives that will economically carry the freight unless you have heavier rails, longer sidings and larger cars. All these things follow in the train, one upon the other, just as naturally as day follows night, and the necessity is just as complete as it would be in any other condition. Now, then, I say that having increased the size of the car and the length of the train, in order that the road may be worked at all, we had to have, as rapidly as we could get them, increased length of sidings from one end to the other of the road.

As to the expenditure at the Straits of Canso, nobody seems to have taken any objection to that. The little freight sheds that we had along the line with their limited accommodation ; the little stations and the little offices which did not suffice ; these had to be increased and multiplied, and during the last five years we have had to spend $1,000,000 in that work. Shall it be said that when people along the whole length of the Intercolonial Railway were crying out for reasonable facilities to enable them to do their business ; shall it be said that we should turn a deaf ear to their appeals because some one on the other side of the House is going to cry out : 'What an enormous expense,' and because some one on the opposite side claiming to represent his party, may say : This is a sinkhole for the money of the country. Sir, I do not think we would be worthy of the positions we occupy as responsible ministers of the Crown if we had yielded timidly to any such outcry as that, and refused to give the people of Canada the accommodation which they demanded on the Intercolonial Railway. My business as the Minister of Railways is to present to my colleagues reasonable demands to meet the needs of the railway. As a matter of fact I have never approached this question in any spirit of extravagance, but on the contrary, I have always been behind the requirements of the road. And when I presented these claims, I must say that they have always been received in a spirit of fairness and consideration by my colleagues. They were not, perhaps, met to the extent which I would have desired, but still they were met to an extent which I could see was as far as the government could reasonably go at the time and under the circumstances. Sir, I am prepared to justify, to justify in the face of the world, what we have done in order to make the Intercolonial Railway a railroad which is creditable to Canada to-day, and which if we have not brought up to an absolute state of perfection at the present time, we hope to attain in the future. I would like to get a candid avowal from the gentlemen on the other side of the House who have gone over that road, as to what they think of the improvements we have made and the increased facilities which we have afforded. They certainly have told me individually that they much appreciate the improvements which have taken place. They have commended in no carping spirit the splendid and convenient service which we have given to the people of the country. Let it be remembered that the Intercolonial Railway is not for the people of the maritime provinces alone ; let it not be forgotten that the commercial people of all Canada, and that the travelling public of all Canada are participants in the comforts and facilities which are afforded on that road. I am satisfied, for my part, that the people of the entire Dominion desired that the Intercolonial Railway should be put in proper shape. Let me ask : What was the condition of the Canadian Pacific Railway before we entered on our era of improvement on the Intercolonial Railway ? Are there not gentlemen here who travelled over the Canadian Pacific Railway before we brought the Intercolonial Railway up to its present standard, and do they not know it to be a fact that the better quality of the service, and the greater comfort and the greater convenience which we inaugurated on the Intercolonial Railway stimulated the other road to our example. I think hon. members on both sides of the House will recognize that there is a place which a government railway can properly fill in every country ; it can be an example and a stimulus to other railway companies throughout the country to attain to the same high standard of service. And, Sir, if a government railroad does no other good than that, it does a very great deal for the benefit of the country.

I do not believe that under all the circumstances, the people of Canada will say that we have expended one dollar more on the Intercolonial Railway than we should have expended. I say that my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) for instance, does not represent the people of Montreal or the people of his own district when he speaks in the contemptuous way he does of the Intercolonial Railway. He does not represent the ideas of the people when he treats the Intercolonial Railway as if it were unworthy of serious consideration. I am quite sure that the people will not approve of what he has said in that regard, for I know that the citizens of Montreal are more than pleased with the results of our bringing the Intercolonial Railway to that city.

Now, Sir, I think I have proven that the expenditure on capital has been necessary and justifiable. But some people have said, as if it deserved serious attention at the hands of parliament: Oh, but you have spent sums on capital account which ought to have been paid out of the earnings of the road. In other words, they declare that we have not adopted a system of book-keeping which would commend itself to an expert chartered accountant. Now that may be all very well; it may be a very nice argument to address to a meeting of shareholders of any incorporated company, if these shareholders were raising the question as to whether the expenditure for the year was an expenditure that ought to be taken from earnings which would reduce the yearly dividends, or whether it ought to be included in bonds, and charged by way of bonded liability upon the undertaking, so that future shareholders would have to bear the charge, and the present shareholders would get a larger rate of interest. The shareholders in these incorporated companies change from year to year; one set of men may be shareholders to-day and a different body of men would be shareholders in the next month, or in the next year, and the question raised by gentlemen on the other side in reference to the charging of the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway would be a profitable one for consideration under such circumstances. But is that the situation with regard to the Intercolonial Railway? I contend that it is not. The Intercolonial Railway belongs to the people of the country, and as such its owners are not in the same position as would be the shareholders in a joint stock corporation. The government lasts for ever; though its personnel may change, yet it is always the government of Canada that is administering the Intercolonial Railway, and the people who own it are Canadians, whether they be the people who are living to-day or the people who will live years hence. It is the country that is concerned; and it is not particularly a question of book-keeping for them. I propose to show, Sir, that even if it were, there is nothing in the argument which hon. gentlemen opposite have advanced upon that point.

My first proposition is this, that if the need of making this expenditure is conceded in order to bring the road up to the condition to which we are bringing it, and in order that it may be still further improved, there is only one way in which it can be done, and that is by borrowing, or, in other words, on capital account—why? Because the earnings of the road do not afford a sufficient margin. Even if they produced each year the largest surplus we ever had, that would only be a mere drop in the bucket for the purpose of reconstituting and reconstructing a great railway. How long would it be before we would put down new rails on the whole road if we had to take the cost of them out of earnings? How long before we could put down new sidings or provide new equipment if we had to wait until we could do so out of earnings? It happens that this road has never been, and perhaps it never may be, a great surplus-paying road. Conditions exist which may for some years to come control the financial results of the undertaking. It would be unfair to hold the Intercolonial to the same strict rule to which you would hold railways which are built for commercial reasons, and in view of commercial considerations exclusively. I wonder to what extent commercial considerations entered into the question of the location of the Intercolonial Railway. If we had been building a road to yield a handsome net return to the government every year from its earnings, who would undertake to build a road by the roundabout route which the Intercolonial Railway has taken? I do not suggest that it should not have taken that route. In the conditions of the country at the time, I think it was important that it should have done so, because the people in that portion of the country would otherwise not have had railway accommodation at all. But do not let it be asserted that because those conditions controlled the location of the route, for that reason the Intercolonial Railway ought to be despised and neglected, and left in the condition of a second or third-class road because, located where it is, it did not promise any large financial results and does not give any such results. I claim, therefore, that the position, so far as the question of improving the road out of capital or out of earnings is concerned, is exactly the same as respects its control by the country, and there is not one dollar of difference either to any individual in Canada or to the Finance Minister of Canada, in the result at the end of the year, whether you improve it out of earnings or out of capital. Would it not be fallacious and absurd for me to come down to parliament and ask for an appropriation of two or three or four millions out of earnings for the purpose of improving the road? If I did so, who would be the first person in the House to condemn such a proposition? My hon. friends opposite; and what would they say? They would charge me with beinig guilty of a shallow pretense; they would charge me with perpetrating a fraud on the parliament of Canada in asking for two or three or four millions out of the earnings of the road when it never had more than $122,000 of net surplus in any year in its whole history. They would say, why do you not honestly and frankly tell the House and the country that you have not the earnings and do not expect them, and that you intend to add to the debt of the country by taking this money out of the treasury, out of which it must necessarily come? That is the attitude these gentlemen would take if the government laid estimates on the Table for an expenditure in that way. So that you can see at once that if the road is to be improved, and improved promptly, and improved by the expenditure of a large amount of money, then of necessity we must borrow the money in order to do it; and when I say that we must borrow the money, I make the statement upon the assumption that there would not necessarily be in the treasury of the country a sufficient amount, after all the other charges for the government service have been disposed of, to meet this charge. If there should be such a surplus then there would be no addition to the debt, and you would be in exactly the same position as if you had voted the money on account of earnings, and had spent it out of such appropriation. I do not think it is humanly possible for any individual to construct any theory or to advance any argument to show, granting my basic proposition, that the expenditure must be made, that one farthing of difference has been made in the financial condition of the country, or that the people have lost one dollar by reason of the particular way in which it has been made, that is to say, by asking an appropriation on capital account.

I hope that my argument upon that point has been made clear. If it has, then there is no substantial ground for criticism as to the expenditure—I do not say as to some of the minute details. I am not going to affirm for a moment that in a large expenditure of millions there may not have been some items in which the expenditure has been larger than it would have been if a closer scrutiny had been kept. I make that statement so as not to appear to make too broad a claim. But in the main, considering these exceptions, I say that assuming that the expenditure was a proper expenditure, it could only be made in this way; and, so far as I can discover, there is no earthly difference between making it in this way and making it in any other way that can be suggested—except this: The ex-Minister of Finance admitted what I am now stating. In the course of the discussions which have taken place on this question, he admitted that, as a matter of finance affecting the people of the country, or the treasury it did not make any difference; but he said the difference comes in when we as a parliament are seeking to compare the character of your administration with the character of your predecessors'. The difference comes in, he said, when you want to put the two administrations side by side; you have expended sums of money out of capital which you might have spent instead out of any little surpluses you may have had, and have therefore been able to show some little better results than you would have been able to do if you had followed the course pursued by your predecessors. Therefore, he said, for the purposes of comparison, the system of making the expenditure on capital account is not as defensible as the other system.

There is enough in that argument to justify one in taking a few moments of the time of the committee in order to examine it. You will observe that the proposition is based on two or three assumptions. You have to assume two or three things before you get the length of admitting that the argument is one of force or one that has any application in the present case. You have to assume two or three very clear and explicit propositions, and I will tell you what they are. To be of any value for purposes of comparison, the first thing is that the conditions under which the comparison is to be made should be, if not absolutely identical, at all events approximately so. Is not that a fair argument to address to the committee? Is it not fair to say that if you are going to make a comparison at all between this government and the last, then, for the purpose of supporting the statement that your expenditure has not been made under the proper heading, we have to show that the conditions of the expenditure during the period of the ex-Minister of Railways and the conditions during my period have been similar. Now, if you admit that, it will lead us into a moment's digression in order to see whether or not you can get the conditions alike by any possible mode of straining or torturing of facts. I say you cannot. My hon. friend was pegging away on the Intercolonial Railway just sufficiently to keep it up so that it could run. No doubt the roadbed was good. There is no better roadbed in the country—solid and all that—very good as far it went. It was good for a locomotive of the size of 30 or 40 tons and to haul 180 or 200 tons, and to haul eight or nine cars at the outside. And if that was all right, my hon. friend was going along well enough. He was considerably out when we come to consider the question of economy, but economy was not sought for by my hon. friend. He took no practical method to secure economy. He was just peddling along in the same old way, and my hon. friend would have been content no doubt to have gone peddling along in the old way for fifty years if his government had only remained in office that long. But the country woke up, the country was aroused, and when I say the country, I mean the whole country. My hon. friend does not think probably that the maritime provinces, or even that portion of the province of Quebec which is traversed by the Intercolonial Railway is the country. But, supposing he is right in that view, I say that Ontario, which sends the largest part of its traffic on the Intercolonial Railway down to the maritime provinces—and everybody knows that Ontario furnishes us down there with almost all that we buy in the way of goods not manufactured in that country—is as deeply interested in the efficiency of the Intercolonial Railway as are the maritime provinces. There can be no doubt about that. And if my hon. friend were in my office and in receipt of the letters from the different manufacturers of Ontario which I daily receive, if he could read and hear their denunciations because we have not cars enough, or because we could not move freight and trains fast enough, and if my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) could see these complaints, they would begin to think that there are other parts of Canada interested in the Intercolonial Railway outside of the maritime provinces and that portion of the province of Quebec which it traverses. Therefore, when I say the country, I mean the country as a whole, because the country as a whole is deeply interested. The conditions which existed when the country woke up and called for improvement on the Intercolonial Railway, were totally different from those which obtained during the years preceding. My hon. friend and his associates and colleagues, who have been attending the Public Accounts Committee, and spending no doubt sleepless nights in trying to figure out how many dollars were spent and how many tons of rails were laid down by the late government out of earnings, may take all the benefit they like out of the comparison. They will find that in no one year, during which my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) administered the Intercolonial Railway, was there more than 3,000 to 5,000 tons of rails, laid down, whereas we have laid down 25,000 to 30,000 tons per year, and ought to lay down 50,000 tons per year, while the present generation or perhaps the children of the present generations are living, if we are ever to get the road properly equipped. I do not think there was any year in which my hon. friend put down as much as 5,000 tons of rails. In some years he put down 1,800 and in some 3,000 and in some 3,500. And there is no sense in making a comparison between an expenditure involving the laying down of 3,000 or 5,000 tons per year out of earnings and that involving the laying down of 25,000 to 30,000 tons per year. Are the conditions alike? Can you put the one expenditure beside the other and draw any just or fair inference or make any just or fair comparison as between the two, in favour of my hon. friend's proposition? I do not think you can.

But steel rails are not the only items. Take all the items right through. Take the item of new locomotives. We had to bestir ourselves, we had to be alive and try and accomplish something in our day. We had to buy 25 to 30 locomotives a year. We have not got them all yet, but are hoping to get them so that we will have them available for service during the year to come.

Mr. MONK. By tender.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, by tender. I am just going to break away for a moment to make an observation for the benefit of my hon. friend.

The PRIME MINISTER. It will be lost on him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I hope not. I know how deeply he felt, how full of regret he was, when he came to be informed that this government had, three or four years ago, gone over to the United States and got locomotives built there for the Intercolonial Railway. The picture which he presented when the enormity of such conduct came to his mind, was one which elicited from me a feeling of profound sympathy. I do not think that if he were the bitterest opponent of mine, I should wish to have him suffer the grief which then appeared to weigh him down, but it did strike me with some surprise that he should have been so grief-stricken for the first time. It did appear rather singular that he had not given some evidence of his extreme regret that such a policy should have been tolerated by the country, when the government which he himself supported did exactly the same thing, and did it under conditions which did not make it necessary, as they did in our case, for his friends to take that course. We have a report from the committee upon railway matters to which I can refer. I recollect my hon. friend complaining about the treatment that men who went before that committee received at its hands. He himself did not favour the committee with his presence, so far as I am aware, and how he came to be so impressed with the impropriety of the conduct of the majority of that committee, I do not know. He is very much concerned about all these matters, he is very anxious that information should be secured, yet my hon. friend was never present at any meeting of that committee which I have attended, and I have been present at all its meetings.

Mr. MONK. You would not let us find out anything there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend was not there to try and find out anything. But he fires off his shots at long range. When he has any to fire he fires them through somebody else. I want to tell my hon. friend what took place in that Railway Committee, and if he had been present I have no doubt that he would have had to be carried out on a stretcher. It appears that there was a circular issued by one of the officials of the Intercolonial Railway stating that the mechanical superintendent of the road had condemned the locomotives which were in use upon the government railway. My hon. friend who was conducting the examination (Mr. Haggart) called a witness all the way from Moncton for the purpose of giving an account of himself and verifying the report in that circular. Of course the inference was that in condemning the locomotives, the mechanical superintendent had condemned those which had been recently purchased by my department in the United States. That is the idea these gentlemen no doubt had in their minds, and which they thought, by bringing the mechanical superintendent of the railway to testify they would be able to establish to the satisfaction of the committee. He came, and my hon. friend questioned him. And what facts did he elicit ? He elicited the fact that this circular was erroneous in that it quoted him as making a statement that he had not made. He had never condemned the locomotives, but had said that they required to be adjusted in some minor particulars in order that they might steam to the best advantage, and he attributed the delay in trains to the fact that they had not been sent to the shops as they ought to have been. He was asked by my hon. friend what locomotives he referred to, and gave the numbers. I think they were 24, 28, 66 and 68. My hon. friend asked where did 24 and 28 come from, and the answer was that they came from the Kingston works. And when were they got. In 1894. So, you see, so far as two of these locomotives were concerned, these hon. gentlemen were not able to show, as they had expected, that they were locomotives which had been improperly bought and which were inefficient in working and unfit for the service. Where did the others come from ? They came from the Cooke Locomotive Works in the United States. And when were they bought ? They were bought in 1893.

Mr. MONK. Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. MONK. Was that not when we had no shops to build them ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will come to that in a moment, but, for the present——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend had better not shout until he is out of the woods——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister has misstated the facts about there being so many locomotives. If he will refresh his memory he will know that there was only one. and that was at a time when there were no locomotives built in Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend stated that afterwards. The fact was that my hon. friend got the locomotive or locomotives—the numbers of which were given as appears in the evidence of the committee—in the United States. Now, my hon. friend can say that it was sufficient justification for him getting locomotives in the United States that he could not get them in Canada. But is he willing to acknowledge that that is a sufficient excuse for me. Has he ever been willing to acknowledge it ? I have not heard a whisper from hon. gentlemen on the other side suggesting any acknowledgment of the fact that if we could not get the locomotives from Kingston we had an excuse for going outside to get them. As ex-Minister of Railways, I supose the hon. gentleman hopes that when a change of government may come, if it ever does come during his lifetime, he may by my successor. So I suppose he is foreshadowing his future action when he says that there is justification for a minister to get locomotives in another country if he cannot buy them in his own.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then I stand on that. But what becomes of the statement of the hon. gentleman alongside of him ? Of what value are his strictures ? What justification for the contemptuous reference he made to my administration within a recent period when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has informed us that two years before he went out of office he went to the United States and bought locomotives there. Will not this same fact justify the purchasing of locomotives outside by this government, and has there not been abundant evidence of that ? Were not the works actually shut up ? And had they not orders on hand from me when we begged and entreated them to fill and to try to keep their staff together for that purpose ? When they closed the establishment, they left those orders unexecuted, and we were obliged to go to the United States or suspend altogether the increase of the equipment of the road. So, I have brought myself within the exception announced by my predecessor in his place in this House. That being the case, let us ask these hon. gentlemen for ever after this to hold their peace.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A dozen.

Mr. MONK. Is it not a fact that, since the government gave orders to the Kingston Locomotive Works without tenders those works have been reopened ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why, the last locomotives got by the late government were got without tender from the Kingston Locomotive Works. But what I am saying is that these hon. gentlemen should hereafter hold their peace as to the whereabouts of purchase of these locomotives. And let their press understand that all this ado that they have been making from one end of Canada to the other about the enormity of the conduct of this government is wholly without reason, because that conduct has been justified and approved by the leading members of their own party. My hon. friend (Mr. Monk) asked me a question a moment ago. I did not choose to stop at the moment to answer it but said that I would refer to it later. I will do so now. He said that the locomotive works of Kingston were closed down and the late gvernment could not get locomotives in Canada later than 1893. His excuse is a futile one. The hon. gentleman's memory is at fault. I have in my possession at the present moment, and I will bring here before this debate is concluded, correspondence between the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) himself and the Kingston Locomotive Works in 1893 in which they begged and entreated him to take locomotives from them and the government declined to do so.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The evidence the hon. gentleman has is that taken before the committee, which is that of a witness who stated that a certain locomotive, bought in 1891 or 1893, I have forgotten which, was from the United States. I asked him whether the locomotive works of Kingston were open at the time and he said he thought not. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) can refer to the sworn evidence.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) is entirely in error. This shows how utterly unreliable his recollection is even in a matter which transpired a few days ago. He was told by Mr. Muhlfield that he did not know anything about it, and, if the evidence has been recorded, a reference to the minutes of the committee will show that that is the case. Now, I will go further and say that when the hon. gentleman tells us that the locomotive works were not in operation at the time and gives that as an excuse for what he did, he is stating what he could not know. Because, it is contrary to the fact. In 1893, the Kingston works were in full operation and turning out locomotives. And in 1892 and also in 1894 they were in full operation and only too anxious to sell locomotives to the government.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman approve of sending out the circular to the superintendents——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. INGRAM. Do hon. gentlemen opposite object to the House gaining information ? Does the hon. minister approve of that circular stating that the Kingston engines were not good engines, that they were faulty and that their construction was wrong ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Ingram) want to know my private opinion as to a subject that is not at all material to this discussion ? How can that possibly affect the question whether the locomotives were properly bought in the United States or not ?

Mr. INGRAM. I want to point out to the hon. gentleman that Mr. Russell, whom he imported from the United States did not know what he was writing about. And I can prove it, too.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When the hon. gentleman asserts that I imported Mr. Russell from the United States he asserts that for which he has no warrant. Mr. Russell is a Canadian, born down in the county of Charlotte, in the province of New Brunswick, and has many relatives and friends there. Mr. Russell commenced to learn railroading on the Intercolonial Railway, and remained in the service until he was grown up, went off to the United States, and rose degree by degree until he got into a high position on railroads in that country. We were only too glad, from all the representations that were made to us with regard to him, from the statements that we received from the men in whose employ he has been, to ask him to return to his own country and give us the benefit of the experience and ability he had acquired. Why does my hon. friend interpolate the remark about importing him from the United States ?

Mr. INGRAM. Because he did not know the difference between construction and adjustment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is it necessary for the hon. gentleman, when asking a question, to put a sting into it, as he did when he referred to Mr. Russell as an importation from the United States ?

Mr. INGRAM. I am a Canadian in the first place, and when any man imported into this country runs down the manufactures of Canada, I am opposed to him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman wants to be set right, I can tell him that there was nothing in the statement he made which could be construed as running down the products of Canada as such.

Mr. INGRAM. I simply said, and I say it again, that Mr. Russell wrote to the different superintendents calling their attention to the unsatisfactory way these engines were performing their duty, and the reason he gave was the construction of the engines. Now, the hon. gentleman's own officer imported here from Moncton the other day, proved it was not the construction that was a fault, but that they required readjustment.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, if the hon. gentleman is anxious that his certificate should be given as respects the character, quality and workmanship of the engines we are getting in Canada, I will be only too glad, and I am sure the officers of the road will be only too glad, to give the highest certificate of their qualities. I have never hesitated to say in this parliament that the locomotives we got from Kingston always gave us great satisfaction, and in saying that, I am expressing the opinion of the officials of the road who are competent to pass an opinion upon that subject. And I have said that we were only too sorry we could not get them all here.

Now I say that for the purpose of comparison it would be utterly absurd to complain of our charging expenditures of this character against capital, when they charged the expenditure of trivial amounts against capital, and where we are absolutely reconstructing the line in many important particulars; so that the force of the argument they resort to does not weigh in the present instance. It is in fact only a mere technical controversy ; the hon. gentlemen are chasing a shadow. The substantial fact is that the country has not suffered in the slightest, to the extent of a farthing, by reason of the way in which these expenditures have been charged. Has the country suffered under this administration as compared with their administration? I say no. To charge us up, as compared with their administration, with the millions we have spent in improving, renovating and recreating the road, would be an outrage upon all fairness, all reason, and all justice; therefore I entirely repudiate the force of the argument, and claim that there is nothing in it, and the country I think will be of that opinion also. Now there is a way in which a comparison can be made between this administration of the railway and their own, in which every element of justice and fair-play will be found, and by which they may obtain every advantage that possibly belongs to them. There are certain classes of expenditure which may properly come out of earnings year by year in order to keep up the standard of the road. Those are classified under a few heads and are very accessible. You can easily get at them, and you can easily see what is the gross amount of those expenditures. Now, take up the expenditures which are made for maintenance of way and works under the late government, and we find they expended in the gross, we will say, a million dollars. Now if I take the expenditures under this administration and show that under the same heads, for the same general purposes, we have expended less than they; or if they can show that they have expended more than we, making allowance and charging up against us what would be a fair proportion for additional mileage, then they have got an argument. But if they cannot do that, they have not got an argument. They cannot show where we have expended less for those purposes, comparatively, than they expended, making allowance for the increased mileage ; then they cannot say that the comparison tells in their favour and does not tell in ours, or they cannot argue that we have taken out of capital money which we ought to have expended upon maintenance, in order to keep up the comparison and to make our position good as compared with theirs. I think I have made my proposition clear, and if so, then I will endeavour to elucidate it by the actual facts.

After all there are these different heads : Ways and works, which include all that is laid upon the track, all that is laid out for improvements upon the stations, and all that is laid out for sidings, repairs to locomotives, and renewals of locomotives, repairs to cars and renewals of cars. These are the three heads under which the various amounts are found which have been laid out upon the road, and the fair comparison can be made from them. We can take these three items, these three general classes of expenditure by the late government, we go into them, we ascertain that they spent so much each year in respect to ways and works, so much in respect to repairs and renewals of locomotives, so much in respect to repairs and renewals of cars, we add these up and get year by year what they have laid out on the road. I do the same with the years of our administration. For the purposes of this comparison I have taken the last year of the late government. It is a fair year. They expended as much that year and rather more than in any previous year. It is a fair year for comparison, as I think my hon. friend will allow. I will take, of our administration, the years 1900 and 1901. I will compare their last year with two years of our administration. The expenditure upon ways and works in 1896 was $774,556—the last year of the administration of the late government. The expenditure for the same purpose during the year 1900 was $962,978. For repairs to locomotives and renewals of locomotives in 1896 the expenditure was $230,000 in round numbers, and in 1900 it was $317,000. In 1896, for repairs to cars and renewals, the expenditure was $290,000, and in 1900 it was $472,500. Now, the total expenditure, therefore, of the late government for these three classes of work was $1,294,372. But we had more mileage than they. We had 15 per cent more mileage, we therefore had the earnings of 15 per cent more railway, and we are entitled to add 15 per cent to their outlay to put them on the same footing with us in 1900. If you will add 15 per cent to $1,294,372, you will find that it amounts to $1,488,000. The gross expenditure by this department on the Intercolonial Railway in 1900, for these three purposes was $1,752,000, or $264,000 more when you add the additional mileage and percentage than was expended by the late government. Now, that $264,000 more was paid for the keeping up, repairing and improving of the road in its various departments out of earnings in 1900, and in the name of common sense is it possible for any hon. gentleman to construct the argument, or to support it, that we have taken money out of capital to do what they did in order to make a comparison with them? Is it not an unmeasured fallacy? Will it hold ground for a moment? These are the facts and hon. gentlemen have the records and they can go through them. I do not deny that my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) can, as he no doubt will, pick out a few of the items which go to constitute these three classes of work, and make a long speech, and to those who are interested in minute details connected with railway expenditures, he can make an interesting speech. He can say, that, whereas the late government in some year, in any year that he chooses to select, spent $75,000 on one item, we have only spent $25,000. He can do that in a hundred instances, or twenty or thirty instances, perhaps, and what is the value of it after it is done?—Because to make a fair comparison, you must take the totals. The totals show that in the year 1900 the expenditure for all these purposes put together, taking the larger with the smaller and the smaller with the larger, by this government was $264,000 more than the expenditure in 1896, and that just so much more money was taken out of the earnings for the betterment, improvement and maintenance of the railway.

Now, I will ask to be allowed to make another comparison. I will give, for the benefit of my hon. friend, the result of the operation of the road in 1901, in which year we had a deficit of $488,000, and I will show what was spent for maintenance, ways and works, repairs to locomotives, renewals of locomotives, repairs to cars and renewals of cars. The late government spent in 1896, as I have already stated, for these purposes, $1,488,000, while we expended in 1901, under the same heads, $2,051,182, or $562,000 more, after adding 15 per cent for the additional mileage. More than half a million of money in excess was laid out on that road in these various departments, under these different heads, for the purposes which I have named, that is to say for betterment and improvement out of earnings. If we had not spent any more on the Intercolonial Railway for maintenance out of earnings than these hon. gentlemen did, making allowance for the additional mileage, we would have had a surplus of $80,000 instead of a deficit of $488,000. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) laughs. I do not know what the laugh is indicative of. I would like to be able to interpret that laugh but he renders me no assistance. Does he laugh because he thinks the comparison of that kind is of no value? Well then, if it is of no value, figures and accounts and statements are of no value. If the hon. gentleman thinks that figures are of no value then let him live up to his statement, because, if he does, he will have to hold his peace instead of offering any criticism upon the administration of the Intercolonial Railway. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) would not like to subscribe to that, because, when he comes to make his speech, he will simply overwhelm us with statements of figures and calculations which will go to show, as he would say, that the comparisons were favourable to the late government and unfavourable to this government, but here are the figures which can be found in the public accounts and in the 'Hansard,' and they can all be criticised. Here are the figures as they are furnished by the department in the ordinary way, and they prove this, that if comparisons are of any value at all, if there is anything in the argument which hon. gentlemen make that we have taken money out of capital and spent it, which we ought to have taken out of earnings as they did, then that fact would appear on the record and would be evidenced by the results for that financial year. But, these things disprove any such inference, and absolutely nullify any such argument.

In connection with the question of capital expenditure, I must crave the indulgence of the committee, if I refer to another matter which I quite overlooked in the course of my digression for the benefit of my hon. friends opposite. I want to make this statement, and it is a somewhat important statement. The hon. gentlemen opposite who have been criticising the method we have pursued in charging expenditures to capital, wish us to understand that they never did such a thing when they were in office, and that therefore they are on strong ground when they now condemn this system. They would wish it to be inferred that their condemnation of the system was the result of their ripe experience in carrying out an entirely different system when they managed the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway. Well, Sir, even that ground, weak as it would be in view of the other arguments I have presented, is not available to my friends opposite. They cannot stand even on that narrow platform, because I will be able to show that they were equal sinners in that respect with us, if sinners we be. I will show that these very gentlemen, time after time, came to parliament and asked parliament to give them money on capital account for exactly the same purposes as we have spent money on capital account, and which they now condemn. Of course the expenditure was not exactly upon the same scale; I do not say that they were called upon to spend as large sums as we have been obliged to expend, but surely when a question of principle is under consideration, the question of the amount does not seriously affect the argument. If they asked for $100,000 on capital account, and if for similar purposes I ask $1,000,000, their position is not one whit stronger so far as the principle is concerned. They claim that in reference to this expenditure on capital, they are contending for a principle upon which they have lived, upon which they died, and to which they say we should adhere. Let us look at the records which are at our disposal. These records will afford some enlightment to the House. I go back to the year 1891, and I find the Minister of Railways in the Conservative government asking parliament for capital expenditure for the construction of a 'Y' at Truro, $1,500. Surely nobody will say that a 'Y' at Truro was the introduction of something that was entirely so exceptional as to call for its payment out of capital account, if there is any reason at all in the argument now advanced by these gentlemen. Surely if they were justified in charging $1,500 for a 'Y' to capital account, the cost of laying rails and of material for the equipment of a whole yard could be properly charged to capital account. Here are the expenditures for 1890-1 on capital account:

Intercolonial Railway.—Statement of capital expenditure.

1890-91.

Construction of a 'Y' at Truro	$ 1,500 00
Increased accommodation, Moncton	10,608 73
Increased accommodation, St. John	4,355 17
Dartmouth branch	413 94
Indiantown branch	402 63
St. Charles branch	12,033 49
Rolling stock	50,083 44
Construction	531 94
Total	$ 79,929 34

It will be noticed that there were even some very small sums charged to capital account. I do not say that these gentlemen opposite were not justified upon the ground which I justify myself in asking for every one of these expenditures on capital. I am not condemning their expenditures. I never have, but I think it is rather more than human patience should be asked to stand to hear these gentlemen opposite venting their indignation and condemning in unmeasured terms my action when they themselves were the originators, and the adopters of exactly the same policy. If I were of opinion that they did wrong, I could not justify myself, but as I am strongly of the opinion that what they did in that respect was right, I think I may refer with some little confidence to their own record as in some degree tending to mitigate the wrath which they now pour out on my conduct, for doing the same thing as they did. In 1891-2, the Conservative government charged the following sums to capital account:

1891-92.

Foot bridge over railway at Truro	$ 5,983 70
Stairs at Halifax station	691 00
Halifax Cotton Factory siding	3,184 09
Increased accommodation at Moncton	710 00
Increased accommodation at New-Glasgow	11,107 91
Increased accommodation at St. John	1,086 65
Extension along front, city St. John	176 15
Additional property accommodation, St. John	79,960 42
Dartmouth branch	796 46
Indiantown branch	642 75
St. Charles branch	45,171 27
Rolling stock	22,026 25
Train Ferry, Strait of Canso	10,297 65
Oxford and New Glasgow Railway	48,745 23
Cape Breton Railway	89,639 31
Total	$320,218 84

These are the items of 1891-2 on capital account expended by the Conservative government, and you would hardly credit it. To sit here patiently listening to the violent condemnation of these gentlemen upon me, you would hardly credit that they spent such sums on capital account. And mark you, that condemnation does not come from the men who simply sat by and zealously supported them in doing this, but it comes from the very men who did it themselves. It would almost try the patience of Job if he had to sit here and listen to such absurdities from these gentlemen opposite. Surely we are endowed with no ordinary quality of patience when we can sit here listening to the denunciations of these gentlemen. Surely we may congratulate ourselves on the patience exhibited by some of us, and by myself particularly. In 1892-3 these gentlemen spent the following sums on capital account:

1892-93.

Increased accommodation at Halifax	$ 56,934 62
Additional sidings at Halifax	4,500 00
Increased accommodation at New Glasgow	5,999 47
Increased accommodation at Moncton	8,590 00
Increased accommodation at St. John	9,512 58
Additional property accommodation at St. John	120,526 49
Extension along the front, City St. John	2,816 63
To pay interest and costs, Gallivan vs. the Queen	476 30
Stations and sidings at Eureka Junction	9,000 00
Siding at Campbellton to Mowatt's wharf	1,914 00
Rolling stock	16,813 06
Construction	125 65
St. Charles branch	1,061 59
Total	$238,260 39

That amounted to $238,000. Of course it does not amount to $2,000,000, but I suppose these gentlemen opposite will not claim that there can be a line drawn between capital expenditure which may be justified, and capital expenditure which may not be justified, and that they are the persons who shall determine where that line shall be drawn.

Surely these gentlemen are not impressed with the idea that what they did must have set the standard of propriety, and that they have figured out that the very expenditure on capital account which they made should be the guide for all future governments as to the limit of the expenditure on capital which future governments should make. In 1893-4 they spent the following sums on capital account:

1893-94.

Increased accommodation at Halifax.	$ 855 41
Increased accommodation at Moncton —machinery..	2,700 00
Extension along the front, City St. John..	30,821 01
Construction..	1,678 19
Rolling stock..	11,251 13
St. Charles branch..	33,349 19

Oxford and New Glasgow Railway..	112,382 75
Cape Breton Railway..	158,770 61
Total..	$437,515 79

In 1894-5 they spent the following sums on capital account:

1894-95.

Increased accommodation at Halifax.	$122,708 28
Increased accommodation at Moncton	7,494 17
Increased accommodation at Ferrona Junction..	1,981 57
Construction..	1,920 18
St. Charles branch..	890 65
Indiantown branch..	1,291 07

Rolling stock	9,984 24
Oxford and New Glasgow and Cape Breton Railways..	62,610 41
Total..	$327,034 51

Now we come to 1895-6, the following sums were expended on capital account:

Increased accommodation at Halifax	$124,910 00
Increased accommodation at Moncton	1,000 00
Increased accommodation at Sydney.	11,374 41
Construction..	1,948 35
St. Charles branch..	1,271 96
Indiantown branch..	1,436 10
Dartmouth branch..	107,402 17
Rolling stock..	10,000 00
Oxford and New Glasgow Railway..	80 40
Total..	$259,423 42

I am assuming that my hon. friend will admit that this was his year; but probably I am assuming too much. Perhaps he will not admit it. In case he will not admit it, I want to read to you a document which my hon. friend presented to me—not personally. He did not hand it over to me, but I received it as a bequest from my hon. friend when I was deputed to occupy the place which he so efficiently and worthily filled. I have a document here which bears my hon. friend's sign manual and endorsation. He said, 'Here it is written on the record which I present to you as the incoming Minister of Railways.' Well, I innocently took it up and adopted it, and I did not expect, I frankly acknowledge to you, in doing that, that among the first persons whom I would find sitting in unhesitating and unqualified condemnation upon my conduct would be my hon. friend who left this as a legacy to me after his departure. You can judge how grave and serious was my hon. friend's conduct when I read to you the items which I propose to read now—the items of my hon. friend's last will and testament; the very estimates which the government of which he was a member prepared, to which they laid on the Table of parliament, which they struggled for many weary months to get the assent of parliament, and failed. If these estimates did not become the law of the land, it was through no fault of theirs. If they had become the law of the land, the expenditure would have gone on, and where would be the critics who are now condemning the expenditures? If all that they have said in reference to our mode of making these expenditures is well founded, what must be the punishment of those who would initiate such outrageous expenditures as these? My hon. friend first proposed to purchase rolling stock on capital account.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). What is the date of that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1897.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Did the hon. gentleman say that it was presented to parliament?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do. Does my hon. friend say it was not?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not know.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, what my hon. friend does not know, would, I think, form a very large volume, indeed. My hon. friend does not know that the government of which he was the Minister of Railways, presented estimates to parliament early in the session of 1896, struggled to get them through, and ultimately failed; and my hon. friend, who undertakes to criticise the different items of our railway expenditure, does not know that in that year he put before his colleagues, got their consent to, and brought down to parliament with their entire approval, the items of expenditure on capital account which I am now about to read to you; and the first item is for rolling stock. Could anybody imagine such a thing as that? This incident is fresh, mind you. It is not as if some years before he left the government he had got new light and changed the error of his ways; it was not as if my hon. friend had struggled with this question in all its length and breadth, and had come to see how monstrous was the course he had been pursuing, and at the last moment had got conversion and had been put in the right way. But in the very act of dissolution, in his last extremity, my hon. friend's last kick was to perpetuate a system which he is now condemning. No wonder my hon. friend would like to take refuge in ignorance, because, while it is not a justification, it is the only excuse my hon. friend can offer. I am not able to yield even to the force of that as an excuse, because I cannot credit the possibility that these items could have been submitted to council, could have passed council, could have been laid on the Table, and yet my hon. friend, as the head of the department, which fathered them, could not have known of their existence. I cannot reconcile these things at all, and I do not think he can when he comes to give them a moment's reflection.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I have not heard any of them yet.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will hear them soon enough. The first is $15,000 for rolling stock. Does that not strike everybody as amazing from the hon. gentleman who said when we got the Drummond County Railway, that rolling stock could only be charged to earnings and must not be paid out of capital account——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Hear, hear, says my hon. friend. Does my hon. friend say that this $15,000 was for rolling stock that was got by reason of an extension of the Intercolonial Railway during the preceding year ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, perhaps.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will my hon. friend enlighten me as to when and where the extension took place for which this rolling stock was asked ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. For the Cape Breton extension.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend makes a positive statement, and I will hold him to it. I ask him to tell me now where and when the extension took place ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Cape Breton extension the year before.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does my hon. friend say that there was an extension of the Intercolonial Railway in Cape Breton in 1896 ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There was shortly before that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How shortly before that, does my hon. friend say ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Go ahead. Do not be sparring for wind.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend declines to answer. I am afraid my hon. friend has got himself into a snarl. My hon. friend may have forgotten for what purpose the particular rolling stock was bought, but he cannot forget, what was the fact, that it was not got for any extension of the Intercolonial Railway. It was got because they wanted that much rolling stock, and the only way they could get it was out of capital, because they could not hope to supply it out of earnings—exactly the same reason that has necessitated the same thing in the present case. Then my hon. friend proposed to expend $30,500 for increased accommodation at Moncton. Mind you, this is all right; I do not complain of any of these items, because there was no other way of doing the work. Then, he proposed to build a coal shed and trestle at Mulgrave at a cost of $500, and he gets the amount out of capital. Look at my hon. friend and say whether you think it possible that a gentleman who has taken the high ground that he has, who has stood so stoutly against this pernicious system which I have pursued, would come to parliament and ask for an appropriation of $500 out of capital account to build a coal shed and trestle at Mulgrave ? No; it must be a different gentleman. Some strange metamorphosis has taken place in my hon. friend since 1896. Then, here are some other items :

Extension to deep water at North Sydney	$ 20,000
Increased accommodation at Halifax	105,000
Increased accommodation, Dartmouth branch	20,000
Provide wells at stations	500
Increased accommodation at Pictou	5,000
Extension of freight shed at Truro	1,000
Increased accommodation at St. Flavien	1,500
To furnish water supply at Grand Narrows	$1,500 00
To provide station and siding at No Man's Brook	2,000 00
Purchasing sluice at Etchemin	1,500 00
Improvements at Little Metis	1,200 00
Improvements at Sussex, Trenton and Orangeville	800 00

I have read you the items of my hon. friend's own proposal. They do not total a million, but they do amount to $211,000, a substantial sum, sufficient at all events to afford very cogent evidence as to what he thought it would have been proper to ask parliament to do and for the government to do. This country cannot afford to listen to the charges, repeated ad nauseam, which these gentlemen are making about the expenditures on capital account, citing their long experience in support of their position, in the face of such statements as those and the facts shown by the public documents.

I am now going, Mr. Chairman, to pass on to a brief reference to the condition of things during the year for which the accounts are before us. The gross earnings were $4,972,235, as compared with our gross earnings in 1896 of $2,957,000. There was therefore an increase of 66 per cent in the gross earnings, as compared with 1896. Our working expenses last year were $5,320,000, showing a net loss of $348,000, to which we must add the rental upon the portion of the Grand Trunk Railway line that we use of $140,000, which makes a total of $488,000. Our gross earnings appear to have been increasing since the end of last year at the rate of about $400,000 per annum.

It is fair that I should give the committee an explanation of why the deficit for the last year was $488,000, when the year before we were able to show a substantial surplus of $120,000, and in making this statement I wish to call attention to the conditions and circumstances which existed last year, and which did not exist the year before or in years previous. In the first place, let me point out that, as compared with the year before, when we had a surplus of $120,000, we spent $300,000 more on maintenance of way and works. We spent $300,000 more under that head. Therefore if we had only expended in 1901 the same amount which we did in 1900, when the mileage was exactly the same, if we had kept the road only up to the same standard, instead of $488,000, our deficit would only have been $188,000. I may say here that when we made our arrangements for a very large portion of the expenditures on improvements, we did not anticipate the conditions which proved to exist, and that outlay was larger than it would otherwise have been. I am not saying that the outlay was not of value or that it does not tell. It does and will tell and was usefully made. I know of no amount that has been expended which was not usefully expended, and which will not save expenditure this year. But on the Intercolonial Railway, as on all railways, you never reach the acme of perfection. If you think that you are going to have the money, you will make this thing a little better or improve that, and you will make this improvement in anticipation of your increased revenue. We did that last year expecting a good year. We did not have a surplus and in that sense did not have a good year, and therefore our expenditure on improvements was not kept so much within our control, or was not curtailed so much, as it would have been had we foreseen the conditions which proved to exist. We expected, in the first place, that we would have had a larger proportion of our large locomotives at work upon our road, and you can haul three times the amount of tonnage by one of these large locomotives than you can with the small ones. In consequence of our disappointment in this respect, the cost of operating the road was increased very materially. We counted upon getting these locomotives, but the locomotive shops did not supply their locomotives as early as promised, and we did not have, by three or four big locomotives, the number that we thought would have been available to us for the year. I think I am entitled therefore to set down a considerable portion of the loss we suffered to that cause.

There were other causes also. Our coal last year cost us much more than the year before. In that respect we are in the same position as many other railways. If any of you have followed the newspaper reports with reference to the net results obtained from the operating of railways in England, you will find that their dividends fell off very considerably. Some of these companies paid no dividends at all this year, and that they attribute almost entirely to the fact that the cost of coal had so materially increased. Some of our local roads here were more favourably situated because they had large contracts which had not run out. Take the Grand Trunk Railway, that company had a contract, which had been running some years, at very low prices for all the coal it required on that portion of its line which practically reaches half way to Toronto, but even that company, enjoying this advantage, called attention in its last report, to the shrinkage in profits owing to its increased expenditure on coal. Our condition, however, is entirely different. We make our contracts from year to year. We have not deemed it desirable or proper that such large contracts should be made for a long term of years. Probably if we were to make contracts with the coal companies for a long term of years, and the time came when the price of coal, under that contract, would be very much below the market rates, we would have more trouble in enforcing our contract and getting our supplies than the whole thing would be worth. We therefore make our contracts from year to year, and last year we had to pay $3.30 per ton from the 1st July down to the end of the fiscal year. We asked for tenders in May, and I think about the 1st of July they came into effect. We therefore had to pay $3.30 per ton for a grade of coal which we got the previous year for $2.20. There is 50 per cent increase on the item of coal alone, or $1.10 per ton on the enormous quantity which we consumed on the Intercolonial Railway. We could not help ourselves, there was no remedy, we could not get the coal anywhere else at a lower price, and we had to pay this figure. When you deduct the difference in the cost, you get a very large sum, and a sum which accounts for part of the deficit of the year. There was a difference of $1.10 a ton on the great bulk of the coal, there was a difference of $1 on a portion, and a difference of 90 cents on another portion—keeping in mind always the quality of the article delivered. On the whole, I have counted the difference as $1 a ton. I had Mr. Pottinger examine the statement carefully and give it to me accurately. And he states that the calculation of $1 a ton of increase is against myself rather than in my favour. There were 280,000 tons of coal which would mean that $280,000 more money was actually paid for the same quantity of coal than we paid the year before. We cannot increase our rates merely because an item of expense like this is increased. We would need a very large margin of profit in order to have as favourable a showing as we would desire to make. We cannot, I say, increase the rates, though, in some cases it would be quite reasonable. I did attempt it in one matter, and what occurred ? There was not a Conservative newspaper in the country that did not announce the fact with large head lines, declaring that I was attempting to impose upon the people.

Mr. FRASER. 'Judas Iscariot.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, they put it as strongly as they knew how. I had made the increase very mildly and in a very small way. And these gentlemen showed their desire to assist me in bringing about better results on the Intercolonial Railway in the manner I have mentioned. And not only that, but in newspaper editorials, and in public harangues, they tried to make the people believe that this was the policy entered upon, the object of which was to impose enormous additional burdens upon the people of the maritime provinces. So, you have $280,000 of this increased expense accounted for. Then, we paid increased wages to all our men—enginemen and firemen, conductors and train hands and all our trackmen. I am willing to submit to the committee the question whether or not I was justified in increasing the wages of the men employed on the Intercolonial Railway, even though it told in further diminishing a net surplus or in further increasing any deficit. We are prepared to take the responsibility of our action in that regard. We are paying our men something less—in some instances, considerably less—than men in the same class of employment are receiving on other railways. They claimed that they were entitled to equal consideration with other men. Our men are reasonable in their views. But we could hardly expect them to be satisfied with the showing that we had not earnings enough to enable us to pay wages that were paid on other railways. We could hardly expect them to yield to the force of such an argument. They naturally replied that the government of the country surely cannot rely upon that as justification for asking men to work for less wages than they could get elsewhere, or for less than men in similar employment are receiving. I believe that there are no considerable number of hon. gentlemen in this House who are not desirous of doing the fullest and amplest justice to the employees on our railways and canals, and giving them the wages to which they are reasonably and fairly entitled. We know, as a matter of fact that, to a certain extent in all sections of the country and to a very considerable extent in some sections, there has been an increase in the cost of living. Labouring men in our towns and cities who used to work for $1 a day without any question, now get $1.25. And in some of our more prosperous cities, where the labour market is greater, the wages are even higher. We now pay our trackmen—and we have hundreds of them—$1.20 a day. They were getting $1.10 a day. I think we could afford to give them that increase. I believe that this country—this is how I feel myself, at all events, let the consequences be what they may—this country can afford to pay its employees reasonably well for their services. On the government railway we can afford to pay wages at least approximating the wages that men are getting on other railways under about the same conditions. And I may be asked to meet the views of the labouring men in the different departments to a greater extent than I have yet been able to yield to them. But the extent to which I have gone, moved by a sense of justice, imposed upon us last year $120,000 of expenditure in excess of the previous year. This is the increase of wages, let the committee note, paid to the same number of employees, for I am not speaking of the increase of wages due to the employment of a larger number of men during that period. But even with the increases that have been made the men are not getting unreasonable wages. I do not think the government could do better than to treat our employees fairly and justly both as to wages and to everything else. While I am dealing with this matter, I may mention a point which will tend to show the spirit with which we seek to meet the needs and the wishes of the employees of the railway. I have already, in effect, organized, as respects a large portion of the staff, a system of schedule employment under which youths come into the service and rise in grade as their merits justify, and as the years go by, with each rise receiving an increase in their pay. That schedule has been thought out very carefully, and I am happy to say that it is giving very general satisfaction among the employees of the road to which it applies. It has created very good feeling. I think it is most desirable, if it can reasonably be accomplished, that a good feeling should be maintained among our employees. And I think, I can say of the employees of the road that those who travel by our trains are unanimous in their expression of satisfaction at the kindness, the attention, the courtesy, with which our train hands treat them. I wish to pay that tribute to our men as a body. I know of no exception. Commendation reaches me on all hands from people who are accustomed to travel on our road. They say that the attention they receive and the courtesy always exhibited by our employees compare favourably with that exhibited on other roads in the country.

Now we have adopted that schedule, and it has gone into operation in shops where we have hundreds of men employed. We are preparing schedules with regard to other classes of men employed, and one object I have in view is to secure permanency in the service. I want to see continuity; I want to see the men have something to look forward to, so that they can realize as years go by that their condition is improving up to a certain point—beyond which of course you cannot increase the wages of your men. We have fixed upon that point, it is satisfactory, and is not beyond what is being paid under the same conditions elsewhere. This has led to a feeling of contentment and satisfaction among the men. The fact that men are going in young and growing up in the service, and are able to see as time goes on, their condition improving, tends to make the service more lasting, and eliminates from it an element which has been very patent in times past, and which I think will not be evident hereafter. I mean that the men hereafter will not have to depend upon political pull in order to get an increase of wages, nor a set-up in the service, or a rise in grade. Each man now knows that he has to advance by regular and fixed progress, and when he goes into the service he knows that he cannot expect to rise over the heads of others, because he may have some friends who have influence with the powers that be. That is not fair, it is not just. I think we have eliminated that element from the service, so that when a young lad goes into the service he will go with the prospect of rising by his own merit, that he cannot hope to get any benefit from the intercession of any friends, and that he need not fear to suffer any detriment from the opposition of his opponents. He stands therefore in a fair position, and I think the service will be advantaged from that system.

Then we are doing something more than that. I am planning a system by which the men, when they get to be advanced in years, and when they become unfit for real useful work, may retire upon a pension. I think we have practically reached an agreement by which we make a substantial contribution towards the fund, and the men make a substantial contribution towards it out of their own wages. They have a right to the tenure of the positions in which they are employed, by reason of their contributions to this fund, and they get the full benefit from them. I believe a fine spirit will be brought into existence amongst the employees when these plans are in full operation, as I hope they will be before long.

I have been passing away from the items of increases in order to mention what has been done in this direction, which I hope may not be without some interest. You see, therefore, that when you add these items together, we expended $300,000 more during this year than we did last year upon maintenance and improvements of the road out of earnings. You see we paid $280,000 more for our coal than we would have paid if the price had been the same as it was the year before. You see we have increased the wages of our men by $120,000, on the same number of men; we had on the whole therefore to provide for $700,000 more than we did the year before. We did that, Sir, as the result of the operation, and we have got a deficit of only $488,000. I am not ashamed of the result of the operation of last year; on the contrary, a proper understanding of what has been achieved justifies me in claiming with some pride that we have come out very well. We have shown an enormous increase in our business, we have shown an enormous increase in our earnings; we have shown a betterment; we have shown an improved condition of the men; we have shown that although our outlay was upwards of $700,000 more than it was the preceding year, we have a deficit of less than $500,000. Taking all these things into account, not considering these other matters at all—because they are not susceptible of being stated in dollars and cents, not considering the economies which must necessarily result in the future from the improvement in our methods and manner of equipment, not taking these things into account at all, but only the mere facts which I have related, the results have followed which I have just described.

I think, therefore, there is reason to look forward to better results during the present year, there is reason to look forward to better results in the future. I am not one of those who think that the Intercolonial Railway has either reached the limit of its progress, or that it has ceased to be an important factor in the business of this country. I have looked forward, and still look forward, to the time when there will be important extensions of the Intercolonial Railway. When we reached Montreal, that was regarded by me as the first step in the onward march of progress; but I do not think it ought to be the policy of the government in the future to stop there, but that when the proper time comes we should carry that road forward to another point westward, and then perhaps still further westward. I have always felt that when the time was ripe, one of the best things that could be done in the interest of this country, would be to extend that road from Montreal to the Georgian bay. I believe that the expenditure of a moderate amount of money upon the acquisition of that road, and upon doubling the track, if necessary, would put the people of this country in a position in which they could control a national route, national in every sense, because every foot of it would be in Canadian territory, national because it would carry those western products in the winter season as well as in the summer season to ports which lie on the Atlantic seaboard. I believe that with a line, double tracked if necessary, running from the ports of Halifax and St. John to Montreal, and thence in the neighbourhood of Ottawa through to the Georgian bay, we would be able to control a very large portion of the traffic of the western country by our own Canadian routes. Would not that be an object well worthy of the consideration of this parliament and of the country ? I am not going to say at this moment that the time is ripe for undertaking such a scheme, that is a matter about which there might well be a difference of opinion. Many persons think it is ripe; however, I do say that we are to keep it in view, and hold it before our minds as one of the things which time will bring to us, and which a sound and progressive policy will demand at our hands, by which we may conduct a great national highway as far west as we possibly can, to the advantage of the business of the country.

Now, Sir, I do not despair at all of the Intercolonial Railway. I denounce this attempt on the part of some to belittle it. I think it is unfair and unjust. I do not think that any man who wants to be fair to the institutions of the country—because it is one of them—or who wants to be fair to that portion of the country that it traverses, should deal with this subject in a sneering and contemptuous way. Why should the Intercolonial Railway be made a question of controversy between the political parties ? It is not a political road. It has not been a political road under the present administration. I say with all confidence that it has not been a political road in the sense in which the term is used. I am not going to make any pretense of saying anything more than I can properly say. I am not going to make any pretense that if we have positions to fill and if we can get good men among our own friends we will not take them from among our own friends, but I am going to say, that, if we have good men on the road and that if we want good men on the road and we cannot get them from among our own friends, we will take them from among our opponents, and we will keep good men even though they may have been our political opponents. I dare say I am not preaching a doctrine that will commend itself to everybody, but it has been my endeavour since I have been in charge of this department to see that the Intercolonial Railway should be raised above the level of a purely political machine. I venture to say with all confidence that it cannot be successfully contradicted that I have done that since I have had the honour of being a member of this government. My hon. friends know, my friends as well as my opponents, being familiar with the facts, what kind of a system it was that formerly obtained. They know that the Intercolonial Railway was available for party purposes in the interest of the friends of the late administration, and that when elections came on it was used to serve party purposes. They know that people in the employ of that railway who happened to be, or who were suspected of being in political sympathy with the Liberal party, were either prevented from having an opportunity of recording their votes, or by some means obstructed in the exercise of their franchise. I know it and I know that political favours were given to persons who were travelling in the interest of the political party which was dominant at that day. There has been a rule adopted which I have rigidly endorsed upon the Intercolonial Railway ; I have said that if elections are going on anywhere on the line of the Intercolonial Railway, if favours are extended to one party they must be extended equally to both. I have never allowed passes to go out. I have absolutely prohibited the system which was in vogue before and which was a discredit to the Intercolonial Railway and to the country. They allowed these passes to be distributed in unlimited quantities, the evidence of which we have had presented to us, and one of the instruments for the dissemination of these passes by the late government was the gentleman whom the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) was anxious to introduce as a witness before the Public Accounts Committee. I have said that we have stopped this system and we have adopted a system of giving excursion rates. There are a great many people who want to vote to whom we give excursion rates, and these rates will be given to one party as well as to another. The fact that not one single whisper was heard from hon. gentlemen opposite after the elections which took place since this administration came into power affords the strongest possible proof of the truthfulness of what I say. There has been in this respect no criticism of the conduct of the Intercolonial Railway, or of its minister, or of its officials in that regard from the other side of the House since the time that I took charge of this railway, and which shows that we have enforced that rule with fairness to both parties. I found that the employees upon the Intercolonial Railway, as a matter of practice, train hands and others, were not allowed a chance to get away to vote under the former system. I ordered a reversal of that policy notwithstanding the fact that some of our friends complained. Not only that, but I gave an order that every facility should be accorded every man in the Intercolonial Railway service to go and vote at the election whether he was a Liberal or a Tory. In that respect I am bound to claim that I am right in making that statement by reason of the fact, to which I referred a moment ago, that there was not a semblance of a complaint made on the other side of the House as to any favoritism shown to one party or the other during the fight of 1900. Every man upon the Intercolonial Railway was left free to exercise his franchise as any man ought to be. I am not claiming any credit for it. I do not think it would be very worthy of any man who is administering a department if he knowingly allowed the contrary to take place. I do not accuse the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) of being a party to knowing that a system of political favouritism was going on. The fact is that every man on the road, Grit or Tory, during the last election had a free chance to cast his vote just as he pleased.

I think I have fairly shown, in view of all the necessities which have arisen that the estimates which we have asked parliament to support in times past in favour of this road have not been unreasonable, that they have been necessary and that they have not been in excess of what the actual necessities of the service require. I claim, that as respects the year just past, we have done, I think, admirably well in view of the fact that under all the adverse circumstances against which we have had to struggle, we kept the amount down to what it was last year; besides saying which we will be able to make some large improvements. I will conclude what I have to say to the committee by giving a statement of how the accounts stand down to the present moment, so that hon. gentlemen may draw their own inferences as to the balance for the year, or the eight months which cover the full period for which we are able to give the committee a satement. The working expenses were $3,837,119 and the gross earnings were $3,700,859, showing that up to the end of February, or for eight months, or two-thirds of the year, we have a deficit of $136,000. Hon. gentlemen might assume that this is rather an unpromising outlook and that we may expect a deficit for the whole year, but let me call attention to the accounts for the same period of last year. I had hoped to have a statement for the same period of several years back, but it is substantially the same so far as the general principle or the inference is concerned which hon. gentlemen might be justified in drawing. Last year the gross earnings were $3,260,000 for identically the same period. Hon. gentlemen will observe that that is $440,000 less than the earnings this year. The working expenses were $3,917,662, or the deficit to the end of February 1901 was $657,000 as against $136,000 this year. With a deficit of $657,000 we picked up last year until we reduced the deficit to $488,000, which would be about $175,000 of an improvement in the year. Well, if we make the same improvement this year—and I am inclined to think that we will make a better showing, but I cannot pledge myself positively to the statement—but if we make an equally good showing we will transfer what is now a deficit of $136,000 into a surplus of $40,000 or $50,000. I think, Sir, I am safe in saying that it will be somewhat better than that.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Chairman; at six o'clock the Minister of Railways finished his speech, which he commenced about three o'clock, in reference to the Intercolonial Railway. I presume that he assigned some reason, in my absence from the Chamber for a few moments, for confining his discussion entirely to the Intercolonial Railway, and at some future time I suppose we will have a discussion upon transportation, and upon the canal system of Canada. Following the example of the minister, I shall confine my observations to a discussion of the Intercolonial Railway and its management from 1897 down to the present. When I left the department, in 1896, I thought I left the Intercolonial Railway in as good a state of efficiency as was possible. I thought the rolling stock was in good order, and that the roadbed was perhaps the best of any railway in Canada. I had the gratification of receiving reports, after I left office, from the managers and chief engineers of that road, telling me of its efficiency, and giving me a creditable account as to the rolling stock and everything appertaining to the railway. The Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) prides himself on comparisons, and he puts himself on a pedestal almost too high for us sublunaries to worship at. His comparison between my management of the Intercolonial Railway and his is nevertheless somewhat ridiculous. To listen to him to-day one would think that no railway manager on the face of the globe could be more efficient than he, and that none could have more neglected the road than I did when I was minister. I left the department when the Intercolonial Railway was comparatively a small road of 700 or 800 miles, but since then, on account of the acquisition of the Drummond County Railway and other extensions, it has been increased in importance. Fortunately we have good memories. We remember the glowing terms in which the minister described to this House the advantages that would be derived from the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. The Minister of Railways, like his right hon. leader, found that the Intercolonial Railway ended in a bog opposite Quebec, and they proposed to make its terminal in the great city of Montreal. But the Minister of Railways is not satisfied even yet. He sees a grand future for government railways in this country. He sees the day not far distant when the Intercolonial will reach out to the Georgian Bay, and when later on we will have a government system of railways extending not only from the Atlantic to the Great Lakes, but on to the Pacific ocean. The Minister of Railways has grand views for the future, but let us examine for a moment his management of the comparatively small line of railway which is at present under his charge. In 1897 the hon. gentleman made this statement to the House :

Again we are told that we are adding to the public debt by this proposal. So we have been reading in the newspapers which are published in the interests of our hon. friends opposite. And so we have heard from my hon. friend the leader of the opposition. They have told us that we are adding $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 to the public debt by this proposal. A little consideration will convince anybody that there is no ground at all for that statement. I entirely and absolutely repudiate the soundness of any such claim. You might just as well charge a merchant who happens to think that it would be an advantage to his business if he were to remove his store from a back street to a front street, with having added $8,000 or $10,000 to his liabilities, because he has agreed to pay an increased rent of $300 or $400 a year. These gentlemen say: You are adding to the public debt. I deny it. You are entering into an arrangement, which, I will show you, as far as our foresight and the judgment and experience of the men who have been operating the Intercolonial and are responsible for it, are able to assure us, will enable us to pay every dollar of rental we have engaged to pay, and have a surplus besides. Is it possible that these gentlemen can say that we cannot increase the business of the Intercolonial by getting into Montreal ? Is it possible for them to make the statement, against the experience of railway operations and of business men the world over, that we cannot hope for an increase in the earnings of this road, and cannot hope to pay any portion of the rental we are incurring by means of the earnings upon this additional mileage, over and above the expenses of working and so extinguish the debt which the hon. gentleman says is being incurred under the proposal of the government ? We shall not add $1 to the public debt, unless we fail, by the operation of the railway under the conditions agreed upon, to pay the rental we have engaged to pay upon acquiring these roads. If we fail in that, then, having engaged to pay this rental for 99 years, we shall certainly be assuming what will be equivalent to an addition to the public debt. No man can say with absolute certainty what will be the result ; we cannot demonstrate it with geometrical positiveness, but we can form a judgment upon it, we can take the experience of business men, we can learn from the experience of other railways, and draw a fair business conclusion. And if the conclusion that we arrive at is that these new roads acquired under the conditions proposed, will enable us to pay the rental, and that conclusion is justified by experience, we are incurring no debt, and the charge made by hon. gentlemen opposite is an assumption, and has no solid ground upon which to rest.

And so on, the hon. gentleman led the House to believe that the country was virtually incurring no fresh debt by purchasing the Drummond County Railway and acquiring the entry into the city of Montreal. The facts are against him, as I will soon show. His purpose was, he said, to put life into the old concern, to make it a going and prosperous business, to show what the energy and ability of a man of business could do in the management of a concern that was put under his control. You would have thought that the hon. gentleman had been a railroad expert from his birth up. He is good at declamation ; he is good at making statements and promises, but none of them ever pan out. Nothing he promises to the people of this country is ever fulfilled. All his promises in reference to the Intercolonial Railway have proved to be nice to the ear, so far as his supporters are concerned, but false when they come to be examined. What was the hon. gentleman's object in bringing the Intercolonial Railway into the city of Montreal ? His object was, as I will show from his speech in the city of St. John, to provide a competitor for the through traffic from the west to the city of St. John and the city of Halifax. That was his reason for asking for these enormous sums—for the purpose, as he alleged, of putting the Intercolonial Railway into good order, and acquiring rolling stock, which to a great extent he finds he cannot use on the road. That was the reason he expended over $1,000,000 at St. John and a large sum at Halifax for increased terminal facilities. Any sane man knew that to enter into competition with the Grand Trunk Railway in carrying through freight to the seaboard, or with the Canadian Pacific Railway, which carried it a much shorter distance to St. John, was altogether out of the question. The hon. gentleman took that upon himself ; he did it off his own bat ; for, according to the evidence of the chief engineer of his department, the chief engineer did not believe that it was possible to accomplish the object. He has shown that we could not accomplish it. Where are the large quantities of grain flowing out of the Intercolonial elevator at St. John ? What has become of the through traffic that was to be carried to that city ? Let us judge of it by the words of his own paper down there to the effect—I will not read the article, because it is too long—that although he has not been able to accomplish his object, he has been able to make an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway by which they maintain their traffic to St. John. What has become of the hon. gentleman's denunciations in which he said that no one but a stupid, a fool or a knave would enter into the arrangement which existed between the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway ? He was bound to put an end to that arrangement. Did he put an end to it ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. He tried it for a year or two. Did you not have to cancel the arrangement you made afterwards with the Grand Trunk Railway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Under that arrangement you had a special rate for carrying freight from Montreal, where it was delivered to the Intercolonial Railway. You had to back out of that as you had to back out of the arrangement you made with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and you are at the present moment in precisely the same position with reference with these two roads that you were in when you took office.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, no.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You are without through traffic ; you have no oceanbound traffic, though it is increasing year by year. If the traffic of the Intercolonial Railway has increased at all, it is on account of the prosperity of the country in which the Intercolonial Railway is located, particularly on account of the development of the mines and mining industries at Sydney and elsewhere. What we told him has turned out to be perfectly true. The idea of a government entering into competition with two lines of railway which had their termini at Point Lévis, and whose interest it was to pick up freight all through Ontario and the west for the purpose of furnishing traffic to the Intercolonial Railway. He was to come to Montreal and cut them out of that business. He expected to get through traffic, but where did he expect it to come from ? From the Canadian Pacific Railway ? He could not get it from them ; they had a road to St. John themselves. From the Grand Trunk Railway ? They had their own road to Portland. Who was to furnish it to him? The Canada Atlantic. They did furnish a few loads of grain which he carried from the Georgian Bay down to St. John at 6 cents a bushel, the greater portion of which was paid to the Canada Atlantic for their part of the traffic. He carried from Montreal to St. John for the purpose of carrying out the promise which he had given to the people of this country, a few loads of through freight. But we are going to have a bridge over the St. Lawrence at Quebec ; we are going to have communication with that great system of railways to be built from Quebec to connect with the Mackenzie and Mann system, and that system will have the outlet the hon. gentleman desires. But this country is furnishing locomotives, is strengthening the road and doing everything else long precedent to anything that may possibly occur to warrant this expenditure.

When the hon. gentleman got the House to sanction the purchase of the Drummond County road, he told us that he would not touch it if it was not up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway. But I find that nearly $200,000 have been spent on it for the purpose of keeping it in repair, and I drew out the statement from the hon. gentleman that before locomotives of this size which he uses on the Intercolonial Railway between Point Lévis and Montreal can be used on the Drummond line, he has to build new bridges on that whole section of railway. And this, notwithstanding the sworn statement of his officers before the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, that the steel bridges, which were newly put down on the Drummond Railway line, were up to all the requirements of the Intercolonial Railway. The minister excused himself by saying that he has changed his mind as to what the requirements of the Intercolonial Railway are, and has decided that that road shall be up to the standard of modern railways, that it shall be equipped with large locomotives and freight cars and heavy rails and bridges which to sustain them. He tells us that the gradients of the road are heavy. But why is it that such expenditure is required ? The only possible excuse is that he wants to use it as a through line, for the local trade could be better served with the locomotives and bridges and the material that were on the Intercolonial Railway when he took office than with the heavy rolling stock he is putting on at present. The hon. gentleman expected to make this road a magnificent through road, and for the purpose of carrying out that scheme of his, in competition with the different railways, and building up an ocean-bound traffic through this country over the Intercolonial Railway, which would take its departure from St. John and Halifax, he entered on this lavish expenditure, but he has found out that he could not do it.

Why did he buy his locomotives before his road was ready for them ? Can any man in his senses explain that ? From 1897 up to the present, he has bought over eighty-five heavy locomotives, as the return shows, and after buying these, he proceeded to make his bridges able to bear them. He puts on rails which can carry these locomotives, and he orders these rails and these locomotives immediately before the election. I heard the hon. gentleman express his surprise at the corruption of his predecessors. We heard him tell us that he did not follow the precedents of his predecessors. That he never gave tickets to parties going to vote or prevent them from going to vote as they chose. Did any of his predecessors ever prevent a man from voting or ever influence him in any manner against voting as he thought proper ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, Sir, no corruption was ever used by the late government for the purpose of influencing the electorate. But we cannot say the same of the hon. gentleman. He let out large contracts immediately before the election. He supplied the capital and everything else necessary for the purpose of starting locomotive works in Kingston and thus getting his candidate elected. He bought 1,250,000 ties for the Intercolonial Railway when there were only 500,000 ever used and the balance is still on hand. He could write notes himself to the contractors to hand to the inspector, instructing the inspector to pass the ties, though they were not up to the standard of inspection. He got the inspector to pass these ties just the same as if they were what the contract called for. There were 800,000 ties more than were required, but he did not care, nor did he care what kind they were. He had them accepted, although not up to the specification at all. According to the return, we find that nearly one-third of them were not up to the specifications, yet they were taken and paid for. Black spruce ties were required under the contract, and white spruce were accepted and paid for, and it is generally reported that the payments are in excess of the quantity delivered. There is one naked and bald fact which stands out clearly. It is this, that these ties were delivered in May last, and have not all been inspected up to the present and counted. That fact stands out boldy and plainly, that ties, which were delivered in May last, have not been inspected and counted up to the present. That was the evidence of Mr. Pottinger on the subject, and this is the gentleman who talks about the corruption of his predecessors, who charges them with having corrupted the electorate, who grows eloquent on the servile crowd that was following his opponents. But besides all that, the hon. gentleman poses as a sage. He not only knows the past and the present, but, like that other great Grecian, he the future knew. While he lived or while I live, he says, there is no prospect of the Conservative party returning to power in this country. That is the hon. gentleman's idea. But I hope that the people of my country have not become so debased, so servile, so debauched, so corrupt, that when they come to understand the position of affairs, when they come to realize how their money has been lavishly and foolishly expended for the purpose of corrupting constituencies, they will not turn the present government out of power. What other reason than corruption could there be for giving a man a price for steel rails over the price he tendered at ? What other purpose could there be for breaking into the time-honoured manner in which contracts were formerly let on the Intercolonial Railway by awarding them as was done in Kingston? Fancy a government assisting a company by advancing it the full extent of money necessary for the purpose of starting and carrying on its business. Sums were advanced on what are called 'progress estimates' on the material to be supplied to the government. Who judges the progress estimates ? A Mr. Davis, who was not then an officer though he may now be on the Intercolonial Railway. We all knew him as an officer of the North Shore Railway some time ago until it entered into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We knew him at a later date in the employ of the city of Montreal for some engineering purposes. But now, with the experience he has gained in these places, and being considered a fit person for the purposes of the Intercolonial Railway, he is sent to pass these locomotives in the city of Kingston, and also the supplies that came with the Intercolonial Railway locomotives.

The hon. gentleman was amusing when he spoke of my criticising his purchase of locomotives in the United States. Perhaps he referred to what my colleague said. I never criticised him for having gone to the United States. My idea is this, we afford a protective duty to encourage manufactures in this country, and having afforded them that protection, we have a perfect right to purchase in the United States if we cannot do as well here. If the hon. gentleman could get better locomotives at that price in the United States, I do not blame him. I do not know that he could have purchased them anywhere else at the time. But as to the charge against me of buying them from the United States, I heard the evidence before the committee the other day, when one witness said that one of these locomotives was purchased in 1893. That may have been before my time. Here is the evidence which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) disputed :

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not dispute the evidence, but the hon. gentleman's statement of it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I will read the evidence as it is printed :

Q. Do you know the Cooke locomotives were purchased in 1893?—A. I am going by the record.

Q. You remember the record?—A. Oh, yes, I remember the record.

Q. Do you remember whether any locomotives were manufactured in Canada during 1893 ?—A. No, I remember they were in 1894.

Q. Do you know whether any locomotives were going——

—I suppose this means locomotive works.

—were going in 1893 ?—A. No, sir, I could not state that.

I was only referring to the evidence given by that party.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not the way the hon. gentleman stated the evidence.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is the way I intended to state it. I understood from the evidence of this witness that there were no locomotive works going in 1893.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He said he did not know.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) read the evidence, I understand that the witness said, not that there were no locomotive works going in 1893, but that he did not know they were going.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When I interrupted the minister, it was in reference to the statement made by this witness when he was examined before the committee. I offered to read his evidence, and that is the evidence he gave. I came to the conclusion which, now that I have read the evidence, I still think was correct, that he was aware of no locomotive works going in 1893.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He was not aware of anything about it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Well, I have read the evidence. It is not a matter of much importance anyway. The hon. Minister of Railways was like a good many others who have a bad case. He did not deal with the principles, but went into details—he has a genius for details. He said that the members of the opposition had circulated it throughout the country, that he had pursued a different principle than that followed by his predecessors, and was charging expenditures to capital that had heretofore been charged to revenue. The whole question was a paltry one, so far as the interests of the country are concerned. The money comes out of the pockets of the people however it may be charged. But, for the purposes of a fair comparison between my record on the Intercolonial Railway and the record of the present minister, I want to see the books kept in the same form as that in which I kept them. It was my intention, when in office, to follow the policy advocated by Alexander Mackenzie in this House. He declared that it was time that the capital account of the Intercolonial Railway should be closed. A road that has been running since 1867 should have no capital account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman did not have much respect for that principle when he was in office.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That was my intention when in office—to abolish altogether all the capital expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway. However, it is a trivial matter whether expenditures are charged to capital or to revenue—the people must pay them in any case. But no fair comparison can be made if a change in the methods of keeping the accounts is made. The minister in his opening statement referred, as I suppose, to some statements made by me about some expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway. He said that it had amounted to the enormous sum of $23,000,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The statement was not mine but his. He stated the other day in the House that the total capital expenditure incurred by this government on the Intercolonial Railway account was $23,000,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman does not remember correctly. If he will refer to 'Hansard' he will find no such statement. What I said was that the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway and Prince Edward Island Railway, and the deficits year after year represented a sum sunk in that institution of nearly $22,000,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman said $23,000,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Here are the actual figures :

Spent on Capital Account—

Rental on Grand Trunk Railway capitalized at 3 per cent——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman laughs at that. Of course, we are not paying $140,000 a year for the Grand Trunk, and if we are, of course, that is not worth counting.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ? Does he think that any sort of calculation can be justified which includes the figures he has already given of the actual rent he paid, and in addition, the sum which that rental represents ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I have taken care of that in my calculation, I deduct the rental paid annually.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have got it in there now, and have read it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I will give it to you : Rental Grand Trunk Railway, capitalized at 3 per cent, $4,666,667 ; subsidy to the Victoria bridge, $500,000 ; Prince Edward Island, $1,359,911.81, for the same time. Add to that the deficits, and you have $1,686,543, making a total of $21,317,445.39. From which is to be deducted the rental paid to the Grand Trunk Railway for the present year, as it is included in the capital expenditure, $140,000. To this is to be added the $213,000 of capital suspense account, which does not appear in the hon. gentleman's statement at all, and which we would have known nothing of but for the Auditor General's account. In looking up the stores account we find the hon. gentleman had covered up $213,000 of a further expenditure in the capital suspense account of the Intercolonial Railway. Adding that, you have $21,400,445.39. Is there a single figure of that which can be attacked ? The only possible difficulty is the capitalizing of the amount given to the Grand Trunk Railway. But we borrow money at 3 per cent. The hon. gentleman may deduct it and say that we pay nothing to the Grand Trunk Railway for the right to enter Montreal. The expenditure is in the neighbourhood of $18,000,000. What have you got for it ? It is going on from year to year. The hon. gentleman says, Oh, let us do it by leaps and bounds ; do not go at a snail's pace in renewing the Intercolonial Railway, as the hon. gentleman did in renewing his rails. We laid more rails in a year when we were renewing them, than the hon. gentleman has ever done since ; we charged the total amount to the revenue of the road, and the hon. gentleman is charging it to capital. Let me give him some more facts with reference to that. The Intercolonial Railway was originally laid with steel rails weighing 56 pounds to a lineal yard of track, or 88 tons of 2,240 pounds to the mile. The fish plates were 19 pounds per pair. Between 1880 and 1896 practically all the main line between St. John and Halifax and Moncton and Chaudière Junction, about 760 miles, was renewed with new steel rails weighing 67 pounds to the yard, or 105 tons to the mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did not the hon. gentleman relay at least 140 miles of the section he has named ? Were not the new steel rails on the main line taken out of capital ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not that I am aware of. Is the hon. gentleman making the mistake that his deputy, Mr. Pottinger, did the other day, thinking the road that was newly built ought not to be charged to capital, the Oxford and New Glasgow road ? Before the hon. gentleman makes a statement, he ought to be informed as to the facts.

Mr. BARKER. May I ask a question of the Minister of Railways and Canals ? Will the Minister of Railways and Canals point out where that 140 miles is charged to capital, a part of the old road ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, the hon. gentleman is making a statement he knows nothing about, there is no such fact. The hon. gentleman will have plenty of time; the estimates will last a week or ten days, and we will have that threshed out with the hon. gentleman. I think he has fallen into the same mistake that Mr. Pottinger did the other day. He was asked, Where were these rails ? And he answered, On the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway—Was not the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway a new road built for the first time when you laid the rails ?—and he had to admit it. Between 1880 and 1896, as I was saying, practically all the main line between St. John and Halifax, and Moncton and Chaudière Junction, about 760 miles, was renewed with new steel rails, weighing 67 pounds to the yard, or 105 tons to the mile ; the angle plates, 36 pounds. The original rails and plates, and fastenings, for the 760 miles weighed 69,160 tons per mile. Although the above figures show a betterment of about 15,000 tons in actual weight of metal in the track, no additional charge was made against capital account, but revenue had to bear the whole cost. The Minister of Railways and Canals now proposes to replace those 67 pound rails with a heavier rail and heavier fastenings, weighing 80 pounds per yard, and the fish plates 110 pounds.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. member be kind enough to state what document he is reading ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is a memorandum which I took myself from conversations and evidence that I secured.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will have no objection to telling me whether Mr. Archibald is the authority for his statement?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I have no objection whatever to tell the Minister of Railways and Canals that I have had frequent conservations with Mr. Archibald in reference to it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I thought likely Mr. Archibald was coaching him.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I will tell him that I have had letters frequently in reference to it, and have consulted Mr. Archibald about it, because I thought Mr. Archibald could give valuable evidence, and that no man I know in America could inform me better upon the subject than Mr. Archibald. I was prevented from furnishing this evidence before the Public Accounts Committee by the Minister of Railways and Canals, who thought that Mr. Archibald knew too much about how things are at present conducted on the Intercolonial Railway. The Minister of Railways and Canals now proposes to replace those 67 pound rails with a heavier rail and fastenings, the rails weighing 80 pounds to the yard and the fish plates 40 pounds. 67 pound rails and fastenings weigh 83,600 tons per mile, the 80 pound rails weigh 99,940 tons. This shows a betterment of about 17,000 tons against only about 15,000 tons between the original 56 and 67 pound rails. Capital instead of revenue has now to meet this charge ; and so it goes on in the estimates. My point is that when we renewed and replaced the old rails on the Intercolonial Railway we charged them to revenue account. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, who is at present renewing the rails, charges them to capital account and when he makes the statement about the snail's pace at which we proceeded with the renewal of rails I will tell him that we laid 80 miles in one year. Could the hon. gentleman show such a result as that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What year was that ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman will wait until afterwards I will show him that I have it in one of his own papers, published either in St. John or Moncton. The hon. gentleman is talking about the amount of the betterment of the road and the necessity of increasing the capital account and he will see in his own paper a statement of the number of miles built each year. I will hand it to the hon. gentleman afterwards.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was no year in which the hon. gentleman laid 80 miles. There is no year in which he laid more than 5 miles. I would not say 5 miles but 5,000 tons.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Fortunately I have the paper here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That does not prove anything.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Here is what the paper says :

> The record of rail renewals for four years previous to 1890 is as follows :—
> 1889—129 miles of 67-lb. rails laid in place of 56-lb. rails.
> 1888—88 miles of 67-lb. rails laid in place of 56-lb. rails.
> 1887—78 miles of 67-lb. rails laid in place of 56-lb. rails.
> 1886—68 miles of 67-lb. rails laid in place of 56-lb. rails.
> Total—363 miles.

How many of these did the hon. gentleman lay ? What does the hon. gentleman think of the progress he is making in the laying of these rails, and how does the statement contrast with his attempt to impose upon the credulity of this House when he spoke of the wonderful celerity with which these rails are being laid ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let me understand the question if the hon. gentleman would be good enough. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the rails which were laid in 1886, 1887, 1888 and 1889 were laid out of earnings ? I would ask the hon. gentleman to tell us if that is what he is referring to ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Certainly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My statement as to the quality of rails laid not exceeding 5,000 tons had reference to the period when the hon. gentleman was managing the Intercolonial Railway, and had reference likewise to the rails which were laid out of earnings. It had no reference to those which were laid out of capital. Does the hon. gentleman say that this number of miles was laid out of earnings ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I made the statement before that all of the miles of rail renewals, excepting on the new portions of the road which were built, the Oxford and New Glasgow branch, and the Cape Breton branch, were charged to revenue. Does the hon. minister deny it ? What the hon. minister was speaking about was this ; he was comparing the velocity with which he was proceeding with the slow pace of his predecessors in doing work on the Intercolonial Railway, and he was saying that only so many miles of rails had been replaced. He wants me to tell him whether some of the 80 miles were laid on the New Glasgow and Cape Breton branches. It is possible they may have been. I do not know. After having heard the remarks of the hon. minister this evening I happened to pick up this paper, or, rather it was sent to me. It is dated March 22nd, and it is the 'Daily Times,' published at Moncton. I do not know whether it is a supporter of the hon. gentleman or a supporter of the Conservative party.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course the hon. gentleman knows——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, I do not know. I do not know anything about the papers down there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What does it say ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It says, in reference to Mr. Pottinger's evidence :

> We have been at some pains to refer to the old reports for six years previous to 1890, and find there is not a record of a dollar of this expenditure having been charged to capital. Mr. Pottinger's own reports show that it all went to working expenses. The record of rail renewals for four years previous to 1890 is as follows :—

That I have already read. Then it continues :

> That there can be no mistake about it, we quote from the general manager's own report of 1886. After describing in detail the large improvements, such as sidings, new stations, four iron bridges, five new water tanks, 159 cars, two locomotives——

That is the authority which I had not the time to look up. I did not look it up because I recollect perfectly that my instructions were that all these amounts should be charged to revenue. What is the record of the expenditures of the hon. gentleman on the Drummond County Railway, and on the Grand Trunk Railway coming into Montreal ? Has he performed the promises he made to this country that the acquisition of that road would pay interest on the investment besides making the Intercolonial Railway a paying concern ? Has it performed the promise that he put in the mouth of the right hon. gentleman his leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when the right hon. gentleman stated in Montreal that the Intercolonial Railway was no longer to be a burden as it had been in the past upon the people of this country ? Has the hon. gentleman fulfilled a single promise he made in reference to it ? Well, the hon. gentleman is going to branch out. He is going to extend the Intercolonial Railway up into the Georgian Bay. He hopes at some future date to reach the North-west. I wonder is it in the syndicate of the hon. gentleman's friends who are trying to negotiate the sale of the Intercolonial Railway, at the present moment in New York city. Is it under the auspices of the Dominion Securities Company ? I suppose the hon. minister has heard of that for the first time. It may be amusing and interesting for the House to know all about this concern. I did not know that the hon. gentleman intended to acquire the Intercolonial Railway. I saw some notices in the papers the other day that the president of the Dominion Securities Company, Dr. Webb, had obtained possession of the Canada Atlantic Railway and also of some railways of a speculative character in the province of Nova Scotia, and that he is also president of the Adriondack Railway.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Not in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross, Victoria, N.S.) is entirely ignorant of anything that has occurred outside of his own little circle in Nova Scotia. I intend before I conclude to produce indubitable evidence, I intend to read the prospectus issued in New York and I intend to read the reports of Dow & Company——

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). These are the prospectuses of railways to be built.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Are you certain of it ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I think you are labouring under an hallucination.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Except the road from Sydney to Louisbourg, all the railways in Nova Scotia are owned by the Dominion government.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I will be obliged, I see, to read this prospectus. I would like to have the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals hear this as it is interesting to him :

Dominion Securities Company.

A corporation organized under the laws of New Jersey in May, 1901.

The object of the company is to acquire properties and securities of railway and other corporations in the Dominion of Canada and elsewhere, constructing and managing the same, &c..

It has acquired the properties and franchises of the Cape Breton Railway Company (Limited) of Nova Scotia, and is now engaged in the construction thereof.

It has acquired other properties and franchises since its organization, which are in the process of development.

The capital stock is $1,500,000, all fully paid and non-assessable. Shares, $100 each.

The company has no funded debt.

On January 15th, 1902, the company paid 2½ per cent semi-annual dividend out of the earnings of the business for the six months preceding.

Officers—President, W. Seward Webb, New York city; vice-president, Henry L. Sprague, New York city; secretary and treasurer, Henry L. Meyer, New York city.

Directors—W. Seward Webb, Samuel R. Callaway, Alfred Schiffer, F. Egerton Webb, Henry L. Sprague, Arthur L. Meyer, Edgar Van Etten, Chas. H. Johnson, of New York city; Thomas Robertson, of Nova Scotia.

Corporate Office—Jersey City, N.J.

New York Office—25 Broad street, New York.

Transfer Agent—Continental Trust Company of New York.

Registrar—Standard Trust Company of New York.

Annual Meeting—First day of June, at Jersey City, New Jersey.

This was also issued by the company :

Dominion Securities Company.

(Capital Stock, $1,500,000.)

W. Seward Webb, president.

Samuel R. Callaway, John J. Astor, Henry L. Sprague, Arthur L. Meyer, Percival L. Clement, Thomas Robertson, M.P.P., Edgar Van Etten, Alfred Schiffer, directors.

Will build 600 to 800 miles railroad in Nova Scotia. Receive cash subsidy from Dominion of Canada and province of Nova Scotia of $6,400 per mile; also land grant equivalent to $1,600 per mile.

Issues $15,000 first mortgage bonds per mile.

Issues $5,000 second mortgage bonds per mile.

Nova Scotia agrees to take and pay for at par 10,000 first mortgage bonds, making actual cash from government of $16,400 per mile, besides the land grant of $1,600. Engineers estimate maximum cost of construction and equipment of $15,000 per mile, leaving to the Dominion Securities Company :

Profit of cash per mile..	$ 1,400
Land grants, per mile..	1,600
5,000 first mortgage, per mile.. ..	5,000
5,000 second mortgage, per mile..	2,500
Say, at 50 per cent.
Or profit of (per mile)..	$10,500

In addition to which the entire common stock of $20,000 per mile. On the above figures of $10,500 profit per mile, the Dominion Securities Company would have a profit on a minimum of 600 miles of road, $6,300,000, besides the common stock of $12,000,000.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria). That, of course, is a prospectus of a road to be built. They commenced that road from Point Tupper to build towards St. Peters in Cape Breton. That is really a prospectus of some American capitalists as to something they are going to do in the future.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The names of the gentlemen attached to this statement are as follows: W. Seward Webb, Samuel R. Callaway, John J. Astor, Henry L. Sprague, Thomas Robertson, M.P.P., Edgar Van Etten, Alfred Schiffer.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria). All good people.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) taken the trouble to ascertain what the operations of the company had been, or whether there is any truth in the statement set forth?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, I know all about it as far as I can possibly be informed. If you will read the letter that Dr. Webb published in the papers a couple of days ago, it will explain the connection with the Dominion Securities Company. I understand that the Dominion Securities Company had communication with Mr. Murray, the premier of Nova Scotia; that they expected to get the Mackenzie & Mann contract, and that they issued the prospectus upon that, hoping to obtain, if not the Intercolonial Railway, at least the Oxford and New Glasgow branch.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). May I interrupt the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Certainly. I do not want to state anything but what is fair.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Does the hon. gentleman say that they made overtures to the premier of Nova Scotia?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I know nothing about it except the circular that is published by this company, which has an excellent standing before the whole world, as great as Bradstreet and others have in this country. Here is another circular issued by that company:

> Dominion Securities Company, opposite Grand Central Station, 51 East 44th street, New York city (organized under the laws of the state of New Jersey), has a charter similar to the Harriman charter, enabling it to deal in stocks, bonds and securities of all kinds, and to loan money on the same, &c.
> The company has acquired the franchises, rights of way, concessions and subsidies which the Dominion of Canada, and also the province of Nova Scotia, grant upon fulfilment of its undertaking to extend the Nova Scotia system of railways, under which it is estimated that 600 to 800 miles of railroad will be built within the next four years.

They made a nice arrangement, they intended to secure this railway bonus and the committee themselves have secured a majority of the stock in the contracting company, the object of which will be seen later:

> The company has now 48 per cent of the capital stock of the Manhattan Contracting Company, 95 per cent of the capital stock of the Cape Breton Extension Company, and also $2,400,000 bonds of said company and assignment of the Nova Scotia government's subsidy for the building of the Cape Breton Railroad, as the first of a series of concessions, franchises, &c., receivable on account of the construction of railroads interlacing the province of Nova Scotia; all subsidies and grants, &c., by enactment of the House of parliament, as fixed under the laws of the government, together with the whole capital stock, bonds and benefits going direct to the Dominion Securities Company.

I want the Minister of Railways to listen to this part of the Subsidy Act in which he gives half of the amount to the different railway companies when the cost is in excess of $15,000 per mile:

> The cash subsidies granted by the Dominion of Canada and the province of Nova Scotia are $6,400 cash per mile. Land grants and other inducements of the governments increase this about $1,600 additional per mile. The government permits and authorizes the issue of bonds upon this railroad construction as follows:
> | | Per mile. |
> |---|---|
> | First mortgage bonds.. .. .. | $15,000 |
> | Second mortgage bonds.... .. .. | 5,000 |
> | Total mortgages.. .. .. | $20,000 |
> Of which the Nova Scotia government agrees to take and pay for at par $10,000 per mile of the above first mortgage bonds.
> In addition, the government agrees to advance one-half of the cost of building the railroad in excess of $15,000 per mile, up to an excess of $6,400 per mile. Thus, for example, upon railroad costing $18,000 per mile, the government will pay an additional $1,500 cash per mile, i.e., one-half of the $3,000 per mile in excess of the $15,000 per mile, cost of construction as well as all of the $6,400 cash per mile, already provided for. The Dominion of Canada and Nova Scotia governments pay a cash subsidy per mile of $6,400.

Why do they state in the prospectus that they have secured arrangements with the Manhattan Construction Company for the purpose of building the road?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Will the hon. ex-Minister of Railways allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). I asked the hon. gentleman a few moments ago whether he had taken the trouble to ascertain whether there was any truth in the matters set forth in that prospectus in regard to the arrangements made with the Nova Scotia government. He replied to me that he had satisfied himself of the truth of the statements set forth in the prospectus.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I read the contract with Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). We are not discussing the Mackenzie & Mann situation at all. We are discussing the prospectus which the hon. gentleman has in his hands at the present time.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman deny that it is true ?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). I deny certainly the statement set forth in that prospectus with regard to the arrangements entered into by the Cape Breton Railway Company and the Nova Scotia government. It is untrue, and every member of the House of Commons is aware that it is untrue.

Mr. MATHESON. It is not true, because the government of Nova Scotia does not guarantee any bonds or give them any land grant.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Here is a circular issued by the persons who are alleged to have purchased $10,000,000 of stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who own the Rutland and the Adirondack Railway, who have at present a contract for building the Cape Breton road, and it is signed by W. Seward Webb, president ; Samuel Gallaway, John Jacob Astor, Henry L. Sprague, Arthur L. Meyer, Percy Clement, Thomas Robertson, Edgar Van Etten, and Alfred Schiffer. We are to understand that these gentlemen stated a falsehood when they issued this prospectus in New York.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to say a word on this subject ? I read that prospectus when it was first published by the Montreal 'Herald' some weeks ago, and I have seen it republished since that time. I do not hesitate to say that the statements in it are absolutely false in the main; and I base my statement on this ground, that they represent in that prospectus that the Dominion government has given them certain subsidies and promised them other subsidies. I say in all confidence that these people have never had, nor has the Cape Breton Railway, from Point Tupper to Port St. Peters, received any subsidy from this government or the definite promise of any such subsidies as they allege. I do not see the relevancy of my hon. friend's introduction of this matter now; but if it has any relevancy, then it is relevant for me to give an unqualified contradiction to the statements made in that prospectus so far as they relate to the Dominion government. It is a most extraordinary production.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I saw the contract which was to be passed by the Nova Scotia Assembly; that was the contract with Mackenzie & Mann. I examined it in every detail. This prospectus does not apply to the Cape Breton extension alone. As I stated before, these gentlemen had assurances from parties in authority in Nova Scotia, and they allege that they had in other places too, that the Mackenzie & Mann contract will be handed over to them. Are not these conditions the main ones that are embodied in the contract with Mackenzie & Mann ? And when this circular was put on the market in New York, it had reference to the Mackenzie & Mann contract which they thought they had secured.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Where is the relevancy of all this ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I want to show the whole connection. I want to show that the hon. gentleman was down in New York in reference to it, and that he had his agents in New York negotiating for the sale of the Intercolonial Railway—Mr. Pugsley and others; it is so reported down there. I would not have brought the matter up were it not alleged that these parties had purchased the Canada Atlantic Railway, which they say is part and parcel of their scheme. Mr. Webb has published the statement in the papers that he has bought the Adirondack Railway, and that its stock has advanced from 40 to 106 or 107, and that the stock of this Dominion Securities Company, which had not an asset in the world except the contracts or agreements which they professed to have made with the Dominion government, and the possibility of arranging this grand scheme with the province of Nova Scotia, has been selling up to 5 or 7 per cent premium. Will the hon. gentleman be quiet until I finish reading this circular ?

The maximum cost of building the railroads according to the best experts and engineers will not exceed, including equipment, $15,000.

Here is a statement made by a company in New York of which these parties are members, all well known and responsible people. They say that in order to obtain a certain sum of money over and above the $15,000 a mile, they have made arrangements with a construction company by which they get half of whatever it is proved the railway costs over the $15,000 a mile; and they will divide that amongst the subscribers.

The maximum cost of building the railroads according to the best experts and engineers will not exceed, including equipment, $15,000, leaving net profits per mile of $8,900 or for minimum of 600 miles, net profits of $5,340,000. In addition to the $1,600 per mile of land grants and a stock issue of $20,000 per mile, amounting on the above minimum of 600 miles to a par of $12,000,000; the cash value of the stocks, of course, depending on the earnings of the road and requiring a period of two or three years after construction for dividends.

I notice that in the agreement it is mentioned the Nova Scotia government are not obliged to pay interest and are not obliged to any forfeiture of the road until the earnings of the road are such that they will be able to pay the interest out of them.

The capital stock of the Dominion Securities Company is $1,500,000. The contractors and officers are as follows :

Mr. Wm. Seward Webb, president; Samuel R. Callaway, John J. Astor, Henry L. Sprague, Arthur L. Meyer, and others.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would like to get that circular after you get through with it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Certainly.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would not like to buy any stock in that company.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Here are a few words of the circular of Theodore S. Meyer & Company, Bankers and Brokers of New York :

The Dominion Securities Company holds control of stocks of various companies which have been consolidated with the St. Lawrence and Adirondack into a trunk line of railroad from the lakes to the Atlantic, together with other franchises of immense value, including an annual subsidy of 5 per cent on the entire capitalization, in perpetuity, as soon as connecting links of road are completed, work upon which will begin as soon as the winter breaks.

Here is a circular issued to his friends and the general public by this same man and calling attention to his stock manipulations and what a good hand he is at that business :

My reason for calling your attention to my new enterprise is the fact that my purchases and stock manipulations of recently acquired railroad properties have proven so successful I desire to extend my field of operations, and want the co-operation of a large clientele.

My first venture was that of the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railroad. This stock I advised purchasing at a round $57 per share. My friends heeded the advice, and to-day the stock is listed on the New York stock exchange, is selling at $135 a share, is considered a gilt-edged security, and pays 5 per cent dividend.

My next venture was in Dominion securities. This company has a subsidy from the Canadian government equal to 5 per cent in perpetuity on its capital stock. . . .

My object in quoting the above is this : The firm of Theodore S. Meyer & Company, of which I am a member, will be able in the near future to give you valuable information relative to a large company which is about to be organized, and we will put you in a position to get you in on the ground floor and make as large, if not larger, profits than my followers made in the St. Lawrence and Adirondack and Dominion Securities deals.

I wonder what that large company is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the broker's name at the bottom ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. D. L. Meyer.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think that is the same Meyer—but it may be a connection of his—as Mr. Seward Webb's. I think the initials are different.

An hon. MEMBER. He is a brother.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. He refers, as directors of the concerns he is interested in, to Mr. William Seward Webb, Chauncey M. Depew and F. G. Smith. He gives the range of prices and everything else and is a broker.

Here is some current gossip of New York—a clipping from Dow, Jones' & Co.'s circular of Wednesday, June 19th, 1901.

Nova Scotia Railways.— Attorney General Longley, acting premier of Nova Scotia, being interviewed in Halifax regarding the story that New York millionaires were about to engage extensively in railway enterprise in that quarter, is quoted as saying :

The names mentioned look really heavier than they are. It is doubtful if John J. Astor is a director, and the connection of the Vanderbilts with the scheme is very faint, even supposing the report to be correct. Dr. W. Seward Webb is a connection of the Vanderbilts by marriage, but is not very much more than a figure head, so far as being a factor in railroad manipulation is concerned. There is a proposal before the government at the present time to build a small railroad in the eastern part of the province, and that is the only one of which the government has cognizance. The proposition before the government is one to build a railroad from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg, with a branch to Sydney. It is from the company known as the Cape Breton Railroad Extension Company, which obtained a charter in 1899, and was composed of the following : Lorenzo Shute, New York ; Joseph Shute, Atlantic City ; John Crump, superintendent of docks, New York, and others. The proposal to build this road is being pushed by Edward Guerin, Montreal, who probably obtained his charter from the above.

Then there is a statement in contradiction to that from Meyer & Co., to Dow & Co.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That will be interesting.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You can have the whole of it. This is only hearsay in New York. The Dominion Securities Co.'s officer made a statement down there that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was dickering with them with reference to the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is absolutely untrue.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps it is entirely untrue. My informant goes so far as to state that he doubts very much the truth of the assertions. He doubts very much the power of Mr. Pugsley who is down there conducting negotiations, to make any conveyance of the kind. He states that the opinion was given by Mr. Blair after visiting New York, that there was such opposition to any proposition of that kind from both Conservatives and Reformers that it would be almost impossible to carry it through. But still Mr. Pugsley is negotiating. However, my informant wrote me to this effect, that it is possible that one of the branches of the Intercolonial Railway not being of any use to that railway, might be signed over to the company when they formed their connection with the Canada Atlantic and secured the southern road—and I notice that they succeeded in accomplishing something in the way of expedition which was never known in the legislation of this country before. They introduced a Bill in the New Brunswick legislature. The same day it was introduced it passed the committee stage, got its second reading in about two hours—in connection with the same firm, which are financing it, and they intend, it is alleged, to build a railway from the state of New York for the purpose of connecting with this line. There is a grand future before it. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals will have to be on the alert if he is going to have the Canada Atlantic Railway part and portion of that grand scheme of his from Lake Superior to Depot Harbour. I am afraid Mr. Meyer has got ahead of him. I am afraid that Mr. Webb and the Dominion Securities have made the purchase, and it surely will not do for the government of Canada—although they did it already—by assisting a competitive line from Point Lévis to Montreal where there were two roads already in existence—to put money into an undertaking for the purpose of destroying capital which is already invested.

I have not gone into details with reference to the Intercolonial Railway. We shall have an opportunity to discuss the various items as they come up, and of getting the fullest information concerning them from the minister. What I have sought to do is to draw the attention of the country to the enormous sums of money that have been expended on that road. What the people of Canada promised the people of the maritime provinces when they came into Confederation was this—to build the Intercolonial Railway and to make it a good, efficient connection between these upper provinces and the maritime provinces. We contributed cheerfully to the building of that road, and what we expected from our officers in administering it was to keep it in a state of efficiency equal to that of any road in America. We thought we did it. We fixed the tolls at rates which would not be remunerative, though a different course could have been adopted had we desired, for I state upon my authority as one who has had control of that road, that by charging the freight rates which are paid by the people in other portions of this Dominion, it would have been as easy to cause that road to contribute a million dollars a year to the revenues of this country as to sink three or four millions a year by the rates which were adopted. But we said: We will not exact the uttermost farthing, and so we gave them the cheapest transportation enjoyed by the people in any part of the Dominion. But we have right to say—and this is what we expected at Confederation—You have the road, now let no expenditure be made upon it beyond what will be covered by the receipts of the road itself. That would be only just and fair to the rest of this Dominion. It may be said that we of the upper provinces are participants in the benefits of the road. It is true that, to a large extent, we are participants, but mainly it is for the benefit of the people of the maritime provinces. And the people of the maritime provinces should not support a minister who makes it his policy to get as much as possible out of the funds of this country for the purpose of expending it in those provinces, buying stations at St. John, building elevators here and there, when any man who knows anything of the commerce of this country knows that not a bushel of grain can be profitably exported by the Intercolonial Railway——

Mr. EMMERSON. Will the hon. gentleman answer a question?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I'll try.

Mr. EMMERSON. Who built the elevator in Halifax—the first one that was built?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In what year was it built?

Mr. EMMERSON. I cannot give the date—it was some years ago.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It was not in my time. The last elevator that I know of was built by the present minister——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In part only.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I thought the old elevator was burned, and this one was to replace it.

Mr. EMMERSON. Who built the first one—under what government was it built?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman can tell me the year, I can give him an answer. I do not know whether it was built between 1874 and 1878, or between 1878 and 1896. I do not know of anybody who would be more likely to build an elevator in that section or who took a greater interest in the people of Nova Scotia than my old friend and leader Sir Charles Tupper. Perhaps he was the minister at the time—I would not doubt it. And I can tell the committee that when I was Minister of Railways—this is a confession—we carried grain from Quebec to Halifax at prices that did not half pay the cost of transport.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. How much did you carry?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Two or three hundred thousand bushels.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Very little, for the elevator was seldom used.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is an unprofitable business. You cannot compete against nature. But, if you wish to make the Intercolonial Railway a live road, and one that will be useful, make it the means of reaching the port that is the nearest to Europe, and so make the road the link in the chain of communication between Canada and Great Britain. Start a fast line of steamers, with Sydney or Louisburg as the port on this side. In choosing your port, pay no attention to local politics or to anything else except the interests of the whole country. So far as I know, the question would be between Louisburg and Sydney. Then, keep your road up to a high state of efficiency, connecting with other railways in Canada and the United States. In this way you will develop the traffic that will be most advantageous in many ways, and you will have a road that will do more for the maritime provinces than all the schemes of through freight and building of elevators and other absurdities that a Minister of Railways is often urged to go into. The people will have this. As I said before, they are not so servile, so corrupt, so debauched that they will support a government in expenditures which are needless. By the course we are now pursuing, we are simply flinging immense sums of money into a sink-hole—these expenditures are of no benefit to the country whatever. This idea of developing the Intercolonial Railway as a heavy freight line, providing heavy locomotives, and then making heavy tracks and strong bridges to bear them, is an absurdity. The road can never have the heavy, long freight trains of a western road, and these new locomotives are not as suitable for traffic upon the road as were those the road already had.

The necessity to put the old road in a good style! He says 83 locomotives of this large size within the last number of years are not sufficient to carry on the increased traffic of the Intercolonial Railway. But they have plenty to spare, they loaned 11 of them the other day to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The excuse was that the mechanical engineer said they were not fit for the use of the Intercolonial Railway. To have a railroad up to the standard you must have locomotives burning a minimum of coal with a maximum of power. You can get a good 500 horse power engine and run it with the same cost as a 150 horse power engine. Where is this traffic for which they want a 500 horse power engine, with a long train of 40 or 50 cars, unless it is from some coal mine to some port near by? There is nothing of the kind required. The Minister of Railways and Canals has made a statement concerning his administration of the Intercolonial Railway, which railroad men, when they read it, from one end of the country to the other will laugh at. It is a perfect farce. Look at the amount expended. What is the necessity of the increased expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway? In every department there is an increase. Let me give a few instances for the Minister of Railways and Canals. Compare the pay-lists and extra wages this year and last year. In 1900 the pay-list and extra wages for the Intercolonial Railway amounted to $2,706,023.71. In 1901 the expenditure on the same account was $3,403,645.92, or an increase of $697,612.21. Can there be a possible justification for that? Now the expenditure in the Moncton office, in 1900, was $132,531.21; in 1901, it was $178,118. Expenditure on offices outside of Moncton. in 1900, $27,949.58; in 1901, $32,656.48. Car shops, Moncton, the expenditure increased from $121,000 in 1900 to $131,000 in 1901. In locomotive shops, the increase is from $145,000 to $163,000.

The hon. gentleman talks about the efficiency of the road, about the esprit de corps that he is building up. He says that no man should be dismissed on account of his political opinions, that a young man can go into the employ of the Intercolonial Railway and work up, and his position cannot be taken from him by any means. He talks about providing a retiring allowance, and everything else. But the Minister of Finance will please look at the enormous increased expenditure in 1900 just before the election. What a commentary it is upon the statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals in reference to his non-interference with political affairs during the election. I listened to him, and thought possibly that I was mistaken in my understanding of what he said. When I heard those words of wisdom and honesty coming from the hon. gentleman I was astonished. I said to myself, is it possible that an hon. gentleman who can speak in this manner has been guilty of such acts as were laid to his charge? One would hardly believe it. It reminds us of Shakspere's saying, 'Methinks she does protest too much.' Whenever you hear the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals speaking on behalf of virtue, begin to suspect him.

I think perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I have said enough at present. I may have an opportunity of referring to this subject again. I want to speak on the trans-Atlantic service and on the question of transportation, and I may have an opportunity of doing so on some of the canal estimates. But as concerning my administration of the Intercolonial Railway, I think it will compare very favourably with the administration of the hon. gentleman. I am confident the country from one end to the other will be able to judge on which side economy was practiced, on which side there was an honest and efficient administration.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I do not wish to engage in the general debate, but while this matter of the Dominion securities circular is fresh in the minds of the House, I would like to say a word. As I heard it read, and as I read it some weeks ago, it relates entirely to railways in Nova Scotia. Whatever may happen with railways in other parts of the Dominion, there are not many railway enterprises projected in Nova Scotia that are not brought to my notice in one form or another by gentlemen who come round looking for my interest in the matter. I am bound to say that I never heard from the Dominion Securities Corporation, or any people in connection with them, regarding this great railway enterprise which appears in this circular. I think the issue of that circular, if it was issued by any respectable broker, is a disreputable transaction, and if Dr. Seward Webb permitted the use of his name in the way it is used there, I certainly think he has not given a very strong reason why we should regard him with favour in any railway enterprise in Canada. Of course his name may be used without his authority.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If the Minister of Finance will read his letter in the paper, he says he is interested in the Dominion Securities Company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But in the letter Dr. Webb published a day or two ago he does not say anything about these huge railway schemes in the province of Nova Scotia. As a matter of fact, the company with which Dr. Webb is connected has a contract for 35 miles of railway from the Strait of Canso to the town of St. Peters. That is the beginning and end of the whole enterprise so far as it relates to the government of Canada. I think I am in a position to say that is the beginning and end of the whole enterprise so far as it relates to the government of Nova Scotia also, though I can only speak from information in that case. But I say the issue of that circular is something which should not come from any broker of good repute. I say there is nothing in the relations between the Dominion government and that company, and I believe I can go further and say that there is nothing in the relations between the Nova Scotia government and that company, which justifies that circular or anything like it. I repeat what I have already said, that the only foundation for the whole transaction is a contract which was made for 35 miles of railway running from the Strait of Canso to the village of St. Peters ; beyond that there is no foundation whatever for the statement.

Mr. MONK. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals said that these facts mentioned by my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) and relating to a circular were false in the main.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have stated the only point in which I believe the statements to be true in relation to railways in Nova Scotia. I believe I know as much about Nova Scotia railway proposals as the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and I said that the only transaction that has occurred between the government of the Dominion and the people who are connected with this circular is a contract for thirty-five miles of railway from the Strait of Canso to the village of St. Peters. There is talk of an extension at some future time to Louisburg or Sydney. But that is still in the air, and the whole matter, so far as any transaction between the government of Canada and the company is concerned, is a contract for that thirty-five miles.

Mr. OSLER. Some of the duplicate circulars that have been referred to have been received by me at my office in Toronto. I have had circulars from Mr. Meyer. I do not know him, and I never heard of him until I received a circular. I have had circulars and letters advising the purchase of Dominion Securities stock. At first the stock was quoted at about 92. These were the ordinary circulars sent out from brokers offices in New York. A later circular quoted the stock as having advanced to 105, and later on a circular was received, not personally by me, but in the course of business by my firm, again advising purchase and stating that the stock had gone to 115 or 120. I do not know anything about this matter except from the circulars I have received. But the impression that these circulars left upon my mind was that the New York speculators, seeing the reckless manner in which bonuses are given by the different provinces of this country, and by the Dominion itself, have concluded that Canada is an easy and profitable mine to work, and that they may be able to float wildcat and visionary schemes. But, evidently, the statements contained in the prospectus that has been read are statements that are believed by men who stand very high in the city of New York.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Will my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) allow me to ask him a question ? I simply want to ask my hon. friend whether he is acquainted with the contract entered into between the Cape Breton Railway Company and the province of Nova Scotia, and whether he is prepared to characterize it as a wildcat and reckless scheme ?

Mr. OSLER. I do not know anything about the matter except what I have learned from the circulars I have seen. These circulars are sent out by reputable houses in New York. The firm of Dow, Jones & Company are to my knowledge a very reputable firm. There can be only one conclusion drawn from this series of circulars, and it is that the Dominion government and the provincial government are looked upon as absolutely soft and ready to be bled, so soft that these people are able to publish the statement that they believe will not go uncontradicted, that they believe will not cause their contracts to be cancelled, saying that the province of Nova Scotia and the Dominion government will grant subsidies which will net them a profit of $6,000,000 over and above the whole cost of the railway. In that circular, which has been issued under the authority of Dr. Webb, Mr. Astor, and other well known men, they say that they have made a contract with the governments here that will net them from $5,000 to $6,000 a mile over and above what the engineers estimate the cost of the railway. The only inference I draw from that is that both the Dominion and local governments ought seriously to look into the policy of granting bonuses to railways that are simply being built for speculative purposes, granting bonuses to railways which are of no general benefit, but which are being used for local purposes, granting bonuses to railways which are absorbed by one or other of the great railway corporations, and the only reason for granting which is to give contractors and promoters a pull enabling them to make money. That is the result of nine-tenths of the bonuses given to local railways in Canada, and I think a good purpose will be served by the reading of the circular, which has been quoted by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), if it will bring the attention of the government of the Dominion and of the various provinces to the absolute waste of money that is being carried on through the bonusing of railways.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I know that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) is the possessor of an idea which is shared by some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, but of which he is the chief father, that it is a waste of money to subsidize any road which is not a branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. OSLER. Excuse me. For five years or more, before I entered this parliament, whenever I spoke in public, or whenever I expressed an opinion I voiced my belief that the time for granting railway bonuses by this government had passed.

An hon. MEMBER. The Canadian Pacific Railway had got all it wanted.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, it had not.

Mr. OSLER. I, for one, will vote against every railway bonus that is submitted, unless it be for a road in a new country, or for a line in a portion of the country which is not already served. I will vote against any bonus to the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other railway company which may be submitted.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is repeating in somewhat different terms an idea which he has advanced on previous occasions, and which idea was that it was time we ceased granting bonuses to railways in the older provinces. Now it happens that the one part of the country in which he makes an exception is the part of the country where the Canadian Pacific Railway is anxious to build branches, so that the hon. gentleman will agree to let the Canadian Pacific Railway get all it wants and deny fair consideration to those older parts of Canada which have as much interest in securing railway connection as any part of the country in which the Canadian Pacific Railway is interested. I therefore say that the position taken by the hon. gentleman on a previous occasion and repeated here to-night is not a sound position. However, what I wish to call the attention of the committee to is that the hon. gentleman, in referring to this circular, said that it was issued under the authority of the Astors, the Webbs and the Vanderbilts.

Mr. OSLER. I beg pardon. I said it was issued under their names.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If I issued a circular and used the names of a lot of people that would not prove that it was issued by their authority.

Mr. OSLER. It has never been denied.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will give the hon. gentleman the denial here. Dr. Webb has within a few days made a statement respecting the Canadian railways with which he is connected. I have sent for Dr. Webb's letter, and what does he say :

> Editor 'Journal,'—My name, and incidently the Vanderbilt interests, has been so frequently of late mentioned in the Canadian press, that I feel it due the people to say that I am connected with only three enterprises in Canada so far as the railroad situation is concerned.
> First. I built, some eight years ago, the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway, and I am president of that corporation to-day.
> Second. At the request of some friends, a year ago I undertook on behalf of the Dominion Securities Company, the construction of the Cape Breton Railway, in Nova Scotia. I did it because I am a strong believer in the future of Canada, and the proposition interested me. The property is owned by the Dominion Securities Company.
> Third. I am interested in the purchase of the Canada Atlantic Railway and its boat line.
> These comprise my interest in Canadian enterprises.

Mr. MONK. He does not deny that he is interested in the Dominion Securities Company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not the question.

Mr. OSLER. The Dominion Securities Company is the only company that I referred to. As far as I have seen, it contains this gentleman's name. I never saw that letter which was read now.

Mr. MONK. It is no denial ; it is an admission.

Mr. OSLER. He admits he is connected with that company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not the point. The point raised by my hon.

friend (Mr. Haggart) was whether this government and the government of Nova Scotia had entered into an arrangement with these gentlemen for the granting of subsidies to many hundreds of miles of railway at a price which would give them millions of profit.

Mr. OSLER. That was not the point you raised. You distinctly stated that the letter you were going to read showed a denial by these gentlemen. So far as you have read, it confirms what I have said.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will come to that later, but I have a pardonable weakness for always dealing with the main question first, and the main question was whether or not this government had some arrangements with this set of people—

Mr. OSLER. I did not say that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member did not, but the member for Lanark read this circular in terms which, if they meant anything at all, conveyed the impression that the government of the Dominion and the government of Nova Scotia had made arrangements with these people for granting enormous subsidies to many hundreds of miles of railways out of which they were going to make immense profits. If that is not what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) meant I do not know what he was driving at. Mr. Seward Webb mentions the three enterprises with which he is connected. One: The St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway; third, the Canada Atlantic Railway, and as to the second he says: I am interested in the Cape Breton railroad. Now, I have stated that that is a railway of thirty-five miles in length, for which a company holds a contract. Therefore Dr. Seward Webb has stated over his own signature that the only connection he has with any railway in Nova Scotia is that known as the Cape Breton Railway, which I stated is thirty-five miles long.

Mr. OSLER. Does Dr. Webb deny that he has connection with the Dominion Securities Company.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Finance quotes that letter in order to show that my statement was incorrect. Well, I said nothing that is not contained in the exact words of that letter. I thought Dr. Webb also stated that he was not connected with the South Shore Railway or the Montreal tunnel.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He says a lot of other things, but I did not read them as they have no bearing on the case.

Mr. MONK. Does he deny that he is interested in the Dominion Securities Company?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is not in question. The point is whether or not this government has made arrangements to allow this set of American capitalists to build railways at rates which would give millions of dollars profit. Dr. Webb said that he has no connection with any railway in Nova Scotia but the Cape Breton Railway, and the railway is only thirty-five miles long.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Dominion Securities Company does not allege anything else. That company issued a circular to which Dr. Webb signs his name as president.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think Dr. Webb's name is mentioned but I do not think he signed it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then it was a circular issued by the Dominion Securities Company alleging that Dr. Webb is the president.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I can tell the Minister of Finance that they endeavoured to secure the building of that particular road and that they failed. When they issued that circular they were so sure of it that they presented it as one of the inducements to take stock in the company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I say they never tried to get it. They never made an application for any such scheme. I take the responsibility of saying that they never made an application to this government in conformity with the terms of that circular.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I am not speaking of this government at all. They wanted to secure the control of the charter for the building of that road in Nova Scotia for which the contract was awarded to MacKenzie & Mann. They were trying to and expected to get the contract. I could give the hon. gentleman a great deal more information on that subject. I know the whole inner circumstances of the case. They did not succeed in getting it from the provincial government, and so they had to abandon that portion of the scheme altogether. Dr. Webb is perfectly right in saying now that the Dominion Securities Company have nothing to do with any undertaking except the three he has mentioned.

Mr. OSLER. I can tell the Minister of Finance that there is but one inference to be drawn from that circular issued by such a man as Dr. Webb and naming such men as his directors. The only inference is that there is a connection between these governments and that company. As a business man I state without hesitation, that if that circular came to my office I would place a great deal of confidence in it, because it is seldom that a circular under such auspices and with such names has not substantial facts at the back of it. If such circulars were issued in New York or any financial centre, and were not immediately repudiated if the statements they contained were not true, the men whose names were attached would at once lose credit and would never again attain to any respectable position. I repeat that the only inference that can be drawn from such a circular as that is that there was a solid foundation for it, and it is quite clear that the president and the directors were led to believe that there was a solid foundation for the statements made as to the contract with the various governments. That was believed in New York to such an extent that the stock of that company, the securities of which consist solely and entirely of the contracts which are stated to have been received from the provincial and the Dominion governments; the stock of that company was quoted some weeks ago at 110 or 120 when I last saw it. It may be down to nothing to-day or it may be 200 for all I know, but the last quotation I saw was 110 or 120. The inference to be drawn from that was that they had substantial grounds for believing that they had, or were going to obtain such contracts. I say that it is a slur upon the legislatures of the various provinces and of this parliament, that men of financial standing in New York or elsewhere could believe that they could make such a bargain with the various governments in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. BARKER. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, there is no gentleman in this House who does not desire that the government railways should be worked at a profit, or at all events without loss; and if any gentleman does wish that these railways should be worked in that way he must also desire that the accounts shall be so kept that it will be possible for us to say whether a surplus when one is claimed has really been earned; or whether when there is a deficit, that that deficit is not less or is not more than is represented.

Now, Sir, if we are to have a reliable statement as to profit or loss in the working of railways, we must have a certain and distinct system of keeping the accounts. The hon. minister seems to think that there is some distinction between a railway owned by shareholders who may be looking for dividends and a railway owned by the government of Canada. I think the people of Canada take a sufficient interest in this question to desire that accounts shall be properly kept so that we shall know positively whether the returns made by the minister are correct or not. I want to do again what I did last year—state in as few words as possible what is the well recognized rule as to charges to capital account and charges to maintainence account on railways. The a b c in this matter—and there is no exception in this respect in any railway company between this and Mexico—is that when capital has once provided a property, whether it be a rail or a locomotive or a coach, the going concern shall maintain that at the expense of its revenue. That is the first principle, and that nobody disputes. If capital has provided, say a 56 pound rail, when that rail comes out, either in a week or a month, if broken, or after 20 years service, the revenue of the concern must replace it. If a company has 200 locomotives, it must maintain those locomotives at the expense of revenue. If locomotives are smashed up or worn out, revenue must replace them. When it has done so, when it has kept every locomotive of the 200 up to a state of efficiency, and the company buys 50 more, it may charge those 50 to capital, but it cannot charge one locomotive to capital so long as the old list is incomplete, and so as to coaches and cars, and indeed everything provided by capital. That is the rule, a throroughly recognized rule, which there is no question about any where, except, apparently, in the mind of the Minister of Railways. I wish to apply that rule to the hon. gentleman's charges on capital account; and having done so, I shall take the liberty of showing what the hon. gentleman's deficit would have been if he had thus applied the ordinary rules of railway companies.

Before doing that I wish to say a few words on the little controversy that arose a few minutes ago between the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) and the Minister of Railways as to the system adopted by the ex-minister of railways and the present minister. I have gone back only as far as the year 1895-6. In that year the hon. Mr. Haggart laid 45 miles of rails of a heavier description than had been on the track before. Every pound of those rails was charged to revenue. In 1896-7, the present Minister of Railways was in office. That hon. gentleman, in his first report, said: 'I have continued the system of renewing the track with heavier rails'; and the hon. gentleman himself charged the whole to revenue. In the year 1897-8 the hon. minister laid 19½ miles of heavier rails, every pound of which was charged to revenue; he was following the example of the hon. Mr. Haggart, and very properly so. I will admit presently that perhaps he was not obliged to charge every pound of the heavier rails to revenue, but certainly he was right so far as he charged to the extent of the weight of the old rails. Now, we come to the year 1898-9, and the minister will recollect that that was the time he was preparing for his first surplus, the surplus just anterior to the general election. The hon. gentleman does not report that he laid one rail in that year. If he had done so, his little surplus would have gone to Halifax. In the next year, 1899-1900, the hon. gentleman set off on his new career. In that year he asked parliament to give him $420,000 for heavier rails, to be charged wholly to capital. By some means the hon. gentleman managed to get that through ; there does not seem to have been any discussion about it ; and for the first time the replacing of rails, which ought to have been charged almost entirely to revenue, was charged entirely to capital. In the last year, the accounts of which are before us this session, the hon. gentleman spent $402,000 upon rails, and charged every dollar of that to capital. I will show in a moment or two just how much of that ought to have gone to revenue. I have calculated it here, and I rather think the hon. gentleman knows it ; at all events, I will give him the figures. Before giving these figures, I may say that the hon. gentleman is asking in his estimates $600,000 for rails and fastenings for the coming year; and in the current year he is expending even a larger sum for the like purpose ; the whole to be charged to capital, and added to the public debt of this Dominion. So something like $2,000,000 for rails will have been charged to capital when nearly two-thirds of that amount ought to have gone to revenue account. I asked Mr. Pottinger what he thought of charging to capital all the cost of replacing rails. The hon. gentleman will recollect Mr. Pottinger's answer : 'Why should I object so long as parliament votes the money ?' The general manager knew perfectly well what the proper system was, but it was a little too much to expect him to want to charge to revenue what parliament was so willing to give on capital account.

At page W-41 of the Auditor General's report, we find the details of the hon. gentleman's capital expenditure for rails. He began with 82 miles laid upon the Cape Breton division. These were old 56 pound rails which were admitted by Mr. Pottinger to be worn out. They had served their day, and the time had come to replace them in the ordinary course. If those 56 pound rails had been replaced by rails of similar weight, nobody for a moment would have supposed they would have been charged otherwise than to revenue, along with the fastenings, and the expense of laying the new rails ; and the hon. gentleman would have credited the revenue with the value of the old scrap rails taken up. That is the ordinary system. Bue he laid 80 pound rails, and charged the whole cost to capital. All he was entitled to charge to capital was the extra 24 pounds of rail laid. If he charges the 80 pounds to capital, he has a great deal more in his capital account than is represented by the weight of rails on the road ; that is, he has the original 56 lbs. and the new 80 lbs., in all, 136 lbs. He charges $350,491 for these rails. It was his duty to charge 56--80ths of that amount to revenue. That would be $245,336. He was entitled to credit to his revenue the old rails taken up, which would have given $108,240, leaving a net charge to revenue of $137,096. In the same way, the fastenings would have cost revenue $17,197 and the stores $7,000. Then the hon. gentleman decided to charge the expense, i.e., the labour of relaying the track to capital. Why, these rails were there some 20 years. We had to replace them by new rails. The expenditure was an ordinary working expense, and yet he charges $200 per mile to capital account, thus adding to the debt of the country and relieving this deficit. That amount alone is $16,400. Adding all these together, we find that on that Cape Breton division he charges $177,692 to capital which should have been charged to working expenses. In other words he improves the appearance of his deficit by that amount.

Take the Moncton and Truro division, where we may make the same calculation, except that he took up 67 pound rails and replaced them by 80-pound rails. His charge against revenue should have been $47,240. On the Campbellton division in the same way he should have charged $33,133 against revenue. And totalling up these three divisions, he should have charged against revenue $258,548, and his charge against capital should have been only $144,000. But he charged $402,000 to capital. If he had added that $258,548 which he should have charged against revenue, to his $488,000 deficit, he would have come so much nearer the mark.

Now take his rolling stock. He reports that he has 228 old locomotives and has added during the year 20, making 248. If the hon. gentleman had kept up his 228 locomotives in a thorough state of efficiency, he would have been entitled to charge the extra twenty to capital, but, let us see exactly how he kept them up. The committee called as a witness the present mechanical superintendent, Mr. Muhlfeld. The report of the hon. gentleman, giving the 248 locomotives, is brought to the first of July last year, and Mr. Muhlfeld entered on his duties the 1st September, just two months later. Here is how this gentleman found these 248 locomotives. He was asked :

Q. What about the locomotives ? I suppose they were in good condition ?—A. Some were and some were not. Some were pretty old.

Q. Some were pretty old.—A. Yes, it is not a matter of age, it is a matter of the time of service they have been in. There are some of the age that they are being condemned.

These are the locomotives which the hon. minister affects to think are in an efficient condition.

Q. How many of them ?—A. I cannot say exactly, I presume 25 or 30 that I know of.

That is the evidence of the mechanical superintendent. He says that 25 or 30 of the locomotives are in a position to be condemned, and yet the minister adds the 20 new ones to capital account, instead of charging them against revenue account as replacing so many of the 25 or 30. Further on this gentleman says something more on that subject :

Q. Would you hang on to a number of old locomotives, you could not work economically, when you could get some revenue out of them, and charge up to capital account those you replaced them by ?—A. No, sir, I would charge them up to revenue.

That is the statement of the hon. gentleman's own officer. It shows that the hon. Minister should have taken those new locomotives to replace condemned ones, which are either old scrap or should be sold to some people who are constructing new railways and would give $1,000 or $2,000 a piece for them. But the 20 new locomotives he has charged to capital account, and I repeat he had no right to so charge them until he had replaced the 25 or 30 condemned ones by 25 or 30 new ones. What is the result of that ? The hon. gentleman paid for his locomotives, which he bought this year, $346,000. Assuming that he could have sold the condemned ones for $46,000, that left a clean $300,000 that he had to charge against his revenue account. Take his admitted deficit of $488,000 and add the $258,000, that he ought to have charged for steel rails and these $300,000 for locomotives, and his deficit would be $1,046,000, and that is what any railway company would have made it.

The hon. gentleman took a lot of pains to show that if he had not spent so much his deficit would have been less. That is hardly controvertible, but I point out that if he charged to revenue what he did spend on revenue account, the deficit would be a great deal more.

Before I leave this question of locomotives I want to point out something else. The hon. gentleman got in all in the year 28 locomotives. He says that 20 were added to his stock. He really added 22, so I suppose there is some clerical error. But he charges 6 to revenue. He went that far but did not go far enough. He should have charged not only the 6 but the other 22 as well. The 6 are numbered small numbers, showing clearly that they replaced old locomotives, thus recognized the principle I am contending for, but he would not go far enough lest it should make his deficit worse.

He knows that he is bound to buy locomotives to replace the old ones that are condemned, or should be condemned, but it is too much for him to charge the whole to revenue, so he quietly charges 20 to capital.

Mr. Muhlfeld was examined about some locomotives leased by the Canadian Pacific Railway. He said that they were very old ones, which could not be used economically, and so they leased them to the Canadian Pacific Railway which could afford to use them. The very fact that the hon. gentleman had, in addition to the 25, 10 or 11 that were so old that he could not use them economically, shows that even the 25 or 30, which Mr. Muhlfeld speaks of, are not all he should have thrust aside and replaced out of revenue account.

The same with his cars. The hon. gentleman saves his expenses on car account as he does on locomotive account at every point. Mr. Muhlfeld is asked about the condition of the rolling stock, and he said it was in a very fair average condition. Well, considering that in the past three years the minister has added 1,861 new cars to his stock, or 27 per cent of the whole, at the expense of capital, I do not suppose that we need be surprised that a new man would think that the rolling stock was in pretty fair average condition. It must have been in a terrible state, if the 27 per cent addition did not bring it up to a pretty fair average.

Let us see what he did to maintain his old stock. At the beginning of the year there were condemned cars, 442 of all kinds. During the year he condemned 145 more, making a total of 587 that were unfit for business. These were not cars which were laid aside for repairs, but condemned absolutely. He says in his report that he rebuilt 223. But still he leaves 364 unfit for service—condemned cars. I do not know that anybody would object very much to the hon. gentleman leaving these 364 cars to be re-built on a future occasion, provided he did not want the cars. But in the year we are dealing with, he buys 1,119 cars, and charges every one of these to capital. His duty, clearly, was to charge 364 of them to revenue account, and then the remainder he could charge to capital. The 346 cars cost him a little over $250,000. That was a charge he made to capital account every dollar of which should have gone to revenue account. If we add this to the other items, we find that the hon. gentleman's real deficit, carrying every charge to revenue that any other railway company would, is $1,296,000. But by his system of accounts he comes out with an apparent deficit of $488,000. No wonder the hon. gentleman wants to draw a distinction between what ordinary shareholders would expect and what the government expects in the administration of a railway. The hon. gentleman may say that this is mere book-keeping. The hon. Minister of Finance last year asked us what it mattered—that if you had a deficit of $1,000,000, it is added to the debt of the country, and if you have a charge of $1,000,000 to capital it is added to the debt of the country. But there is more than that in it. What can be expected of the staff at Moncton if they are told in effect that it matters not how wasteful they are or how little attention they pay to the economical maintenance of the property. The effect of the hon. gentleman's method is to encourage waste and destruction. A mechanical superintendent finds that he has four or five hundred cars which will cost him a good deal to repair and maintain. What does a long-headed mechanical superintendent do when he is operating under methods such as we find here ? He says : Let the cars run for a year or two and the minister will get us others out of capital account, and so we will not have to repair them at all. And the same is true of locomotives. I do not care how honest a man may be, the temptation you put in his way by this method is too strong. He is not going to run up his maintenance account, upon which his very reputation depends, when he has an opportunity to keep that account down by having items charged to capital. With such opportunities offered him, an official will not repair anything if he can avoid it. Laxity and indifference are induced. That is the policy the hon. minister deliberately encourages. The result is shown in the enormous proportion of actual working expenses on this road, as admitted by the hon. minister himself.

The hon. minister spent about three-quarters of an hour before six o'clock referring to various items of expenditure in the old accounts of the ex-Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Haggart). He spoke of new bridges constructed, of extending sidings, and enlarging accommodation at stations. Nobody has ever disputed that all these items might be charged to capital. What we question is the hon. gentleman's charging other items to capital. We question also the hon. minister's methods in dealing with charges properly against capital. I call attention to it because I think it is high time that the estimates of the Minister of Railways were more carefully considered. In 1900 the hon. gentleman took a vote for improvements and increased accommodation at Sydney, $39,000. Did the hon. gentleman limit his expenditure to that? No; he spent $137,324 on that work—$58,000 being for land alone. I am speaking now of real capital expenditure, but I want to show how the hon. minister deals with these things. Having spent $137,324 he transferred $41,324 of that to an entirely different item, a blanket item to which he had no right to charge one cent of this expenditure. He came down the following year and asked for a vote of $57,000 to make up the balance. Now, it would be far better and more business-like if we had given the hon. gentleman power to spend what he pleased, and held him responsible. He gets these estimates, but does not hold himself bound to them—spends what he pleases. The Minister of Finance has taunted us with taking two days for the examination of the Auditor General, and thought it was ridiculous, because the Auditor General knew nothing about the matters we asked about. It is true that we spent an hour and a half on each of two days in an earnest effort to show that the Auditor General did not know anything about these matters. The Minister of Finance seems peculiarly happy over the fact that the Auditor General could not tell us anything. But that was the very thing we were trying to demonstrate. People think when they see the Auditor General's great Blue-book, with the Auditor General's certificate to the accounts, these things must be all right. But the Auditor General freely admitted that he knew nothing about many of these matters, and the hon. Minister of Finance was——

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I think he is hardly right in his representation of what I said. It was not that I objected to the cross-examination, but I did call attention to the fact that the greater part of the time was occupied in asking the Auditor General about matters of which he could not know anything, was not expected to know anything, but the facts concerning which could be ascertained best from the officers in the department.

Mr. BARKER. We asked the Auditor General concerning nothing except items in his report to which he had certified.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But what I said was that the hon. gentleman again and again asked the Auditor General questions which could only be answered by a railway expert.

Mr. BARKER. Our object was to show that the Auditor General who had professed to certify to these expenditures did not know what he was certifying about, and he admitted that himself. I will take another example to show what we object to with regard to the expenditures at stations. Our objection was not with regard to charging to capital account all these expenditures, but to the way in which the expenditure was made. Take, for instance, Westville. The minister obtained authority to expend $8,000 to increase the station accommodation at that place. The minister advertised for tenders for that $8,000 work, and it was pointed out in the committee and proved that he paid $649.99 in advertising. He would not go the $650, but he got within one cent of it.

Mr. MONK. That must have been the Montreal 'Herald.'

Mr. BARKER. Well, he let the contract. The minister knew he had authority to spend only $8,000 at that station, but what did he spend? He spent in the year $15,-719.53, and there is $1,575.26 yet to pay, making a total expenditure of $17,249.-79, upon the authority of this House to spend $8,000. That is the objection we are making. The Auditor General said such expenditure was all wrong, and he would write that that sort of thing must not occur again.

Then I will take another item. The Minister of Railways and Canals got the authority of this House to build three engine houses. He advertised for tenders, and what do you suppose the hon. gentleman spent in advertising for that work? One thousand three hundred and sixty-four dollars and ninety-eight cents. The hon. gentleman wonders that we criticise his accounts; he says we are objecting to them as capital expenditure. We are not objecting to them as capital expenditure, but we object to the methods of the hon. gentleman.

Take another station in which the hon. gentleman has great interest. He happens to represent the city of St. John. The expenditure there was $219,752 in this one year. That is a very small item compared to the expenditures there since the hon. gentleman has become Minister of Railways and Canals. I think in that city something over $1,000,000 has been spent. Now he wants to make a fine station yard at the outskirts of the town. He got 36 acres of marsh land and paid $475 an acre for it, or $17,138 for marsh land upon which to lay sidings. Well, he did more. He charged for the materials for those sidings. He is going to lay 12 miles, and he charged for the rails and other materials for these sidings, $46,620.77. That was in 1900, and to this hour not more than one mile has been laid. That is another thing that we object to. The hon. gentleman says: You are objecting to capital expenditure, you are objecting to the sidings at stations. It is convenient for him to put it that way. I repeat again, it is the method of the hon. gentleman we are objecting to. If he had spent that money properly for needed sidings, nobody would raise any objection. But he charges capital with material which, it is admitted by Mr. Pottinger, is lying along the track at this hour. It is not at St. John at all. He has charged for ties 30 cents apiece that are lying in heaps 100 miles away, he has charged for spikes, and bolts and rails that are not delivered there at all. Yes, he charged in 1900 to capital $46,620.77 on that account.

There is another thing I may as well comment upon, showing the methods of the hon. gentleman. He charges capital account $20 per ton for these rails that have just been taken out of the main line, and into store at only $15. So he makes for his store account 33 per cent profit in that transaction. That is a pretty fair profit, even if you are selling to a stranger. But what is the result of it? He has a store account of three or four million dollars in the course of a year, nearly every item of which is charged out at some profit; thus every year or two there must be a considerable accumulation of profits in that store account and nobody hears what becomes of it. I do not charge the hon. gentleman with pocketing it, but I have no doubt whatever that it goes to the benefit of his working expenses, and that the deficit would otherwise be so much the worse.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all, you are mistaken.

Mr. BARKER. I do not think I am. I asked Mr. Pottinger how much of that went into working expenses, and he did not know. I said: A hundred thousand dollars in the year? No, he would not be sure, but he did not think so much as that. That was the answer Mr. Pottinger made. Well, there is another example of the way in which the hon. gentleman deals. There were the Copper Crown works at Pictou. Those are smelting works started at Pictou that nobody ever expected would amount to anything, they have become a bankrupt concern as I am told. The hon. gentleman has spent $20,000 for sidings at those works at the expense of this country. The ordinary course of a manufacturing concern dealing with a railway company is, when they think the works will pay, to put in the sidings and if they have got traffic they get rebates until the amount is wiped out. But the hon. gentleman was more generous than that. He led them to expect that if they would put in the siding he would pay for it in due time, just as soon as he could get the order of this House. Let us see how this was done. One peculiarity about this business is that there was a Mr. E. N. Macdonald, who was a candidate at the general elections on the ministerial side, was the solicitor for this Copper Crown Works Company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose somebody had to be solicitor for it.

Mr. BARKER. I will read where the coincidence comes in. This is a letter dated at Pictou, December 20, 1899:

Hon. A. G. Blair,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—I learn that the department are preparing estimates for next session, and that the estimated cost of the Copper Crown extension is about $17,500. The extension and the consequent extra work will necessitate a larger yard at Pictou beyond all doubt, and I would like to ask that that vote be made $20,000 for the whole extension to the copper works, and improvements of the public service at Pictou.

But the richest part is still to come, and I call attention to it:

Any possible discussion of the vote would be avoided in that way.

This gentleman wanted to get $20,000, but we were not to have the opportunity of discussing it.

And there are other reasons of an important character why this should be so made, which I could personally explain to you better when I see you.

Mr. BROCK. That is disgraceful.

Mr. BARKER. I think it is a pity we have not Mr. Macdonald here as a member, it would be so pleasant to hear him and the Minister of Railways and Canals go through that little conversation again, tell us what it was which is so interesting, and which he could so much better explain verbally than in writing.

Mr. MONK. Was he defeated?

Mr. BARKER. Undoubtedly he was.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). He will be here at the next election.

Mr. BARKER. But there is another little picture of this Copper Crown Company that I may as well mention. Approaching the period of the general election, Mr. Macdonald became very anxious to get the money. Letter after letter and telegram after telegram were sent. Mr. Pottinger would telegraph the minister, and Mr. Macdonald would write to the minister. There was about $15,000 claimed by the Copper Crown Company, and on the 1st of November, just six days before the polling day, Macdonald's friends got a cheque for $14,500 on account. That is another coincidence. It is all perfectly innocent, of course.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Macdonald did not get a cheque at all.

Mr. BARKER. I just take this as an illustration. Now leaving the capital feature of the question I want to say something about the earnings of which the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) was so proud, and upon which he congratulated the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. The hon. Minister of Finance, in his budget speech, which he intended to be distributed in print all over the Dominion, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, congratulated the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals upon the magnificent results of last year. He told the House and through the House, every public and business man of this country that the hon. gentleman had earned $4,972,235 and he congratulated him upon that, just as he was congratulating everybody else about him ; but the hon. gentleman on the very page, and almost in the very sentence in which he found these figures, would have also found that to earn this $4,972,235 the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals spent $5,460,422. He did not tell that to the public.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was nothing kept back. I stated the deficit. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) is wrong.

Mr. BARKER. That is one of the hon. gentleman's mild weaknesses. He will just tell that which would suit his own purposes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I said that there was a deficit of $488,000.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman just told half the truth.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman has no evidence of that.

Mr. BARKER. I say that not with the idea of casting a personal reflection upon the hon. gentleman. I have taken some little trouble to look up the working expenses of other roads both in Canada and the United States, and at the outset, I may say that the working expenses of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals on the Intercolonial Railway are just 110 per cent of the gross receipts. I think he stands alone in that. He is unique. I think it was the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade), who, the other night, timidly gave us a hint that the rates were low on the Intercolonial Railway and that therefore the hon. minister could not be expected to keep to a low ratio of working expenses.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are just the same as they were in the past.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman last year and the year before claimed that he had made a profit. Did he reduce the rates ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the rates have not been reduced.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman claimed a profit last year and he was as boastful about his service the year before. He claimed a profit of $60,000 last year and of $120,000 the year before. According to my contention he was behind fully half a million dollars on each occasion. I am going to show that under the methods of hon. gentleman it is a wonder he did not have working expenses of 150 per cent instead of 110 per cent. There is no excuse at all for the hon. gentleman. He is getting a very good traffic upon the Intercolonial Railway. It is not at all, as the hon. gentleman perhaps thinks, that this large traffic is due to himself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not claim that.

Mr. BARKER. I am glad he does not. I was afraid he would do so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am too modest for that.

Mr. BARKER. There is no railway in the United States or Canada which has not increased its traffic in proportion to the Intercolonial Railway, but we find that all these railway companies are workink at a lower rate owing to their improved receipts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And they were increasing their traffic during a period when our earnings were absolutely stationary.

Mr. BARKER. They all increased their traffic during the last four or five years owing to the great prosperity of the United States and Canada. The hon. gentleman gets $3,820 per mile. This is the revenue for a road 1,302 miles in length. Let us compare that with some other roads that are not in anything like so good a condition. There is, for instance, the Canada Eastern Railway in the hon. gentleman's own district having a mileage of 136 miles. The gross earnings per mile are $981. It is much more difficult to work a short road of that kind having a small traffic at anything like a low rate.

That company works the road at 91 per cent. It is a high rate. But, if the rate at which the company works that road be applied to the Intercolonial Railway the latter would have given a profit of $447,500 instead of a loss of $488,000. We will take a still smaller road, the Massawippi Valley Railway in the province of Quebec, a very small line. Its earnings per mile are almost up to those of the Intercolonial. That company works its railway at 85 per cent. It is a high rate, but if that ratio of expenses were applied to the Intercolonial Railway it would give a profit of $745,000, instead of a loss of $488,000. I would like to point out some lines which are a little greater in length. There is the Canada Atlantic with a mileage of 458 miles which is worked at 79 per cent, the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway with a mileage of 180 miles which is worked at 60 per cent and the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway which is worked at 76 per cent. All these roads are worked at a disadvantage as compared with the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not so.

Mr. BARKER. I beg your pardon.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg your's.

Mr. BARKER. Some of those I have just mentioned are in a better position than that of the hon. gentleman in one respect. They earn more per train mile. That is the only difference. But, take the Canadian Pacific Railway for example; that company only earns $4,170 per mile as against $3,820 per mile of earnings on the Intercolonial Railway, and it works the road at 60¾ per cent. I have taken one hundred railways in the United States, roads of all classes, long and short, roads that run at high rates and roads that run at low rates, having all classes of traffic, and I find that the highest working expenses of any road amongst the whole one hundred were 78·5 per cent, while the average of the one hundred roads was 65·57 per cent. The Canadian Pacific Railway's working expenses are 60¾ per cent, the Grand Trunk Railway's working expenses are 67 per cent and the government's 110 per cent. But if we cannot have the profits in money, let us see if we cannot have the figures. If the Intercolonial Railway were worked even at the highest ratio of expense, amongst those one hundred railways of the United States it would have shown a profit of $1,029.000. As the hon. minister is working at a loss of $488,000, that makes a difference of $1,517,000 in the comparison of their work. If they worked at the average rate of 65·57, the profit would be $1,690,000, which considering the loss of $488,000, makes a difference of $2,178,000, against the hon. gentleman. And I desire to add that, as I have already shown, $488,000 is by no means the full deficit.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) should regulate the British North America Act before he begins to make that comparison.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It would be very interesting to give us the figures before 1896.

Mr. BARKER. I shall be glad to do so at the proper time. Now, 'station expenses' is a thing that does not vary much from year to year, but the salaries of station masters, agents, clerks, telegraph operators and so on, have been increased by $74,000 over the previous year. The salaries of the general manager, traffic manager, and so on, have increased by $29,000 over the previous year, and in the chief accountant's office there was an increase of $6,500. But there is another account here, the general stores account, which deserves some comment. The minister purchased in the year on this account $3,433,823 as against $1,752,-911 in the preceding year. That is a very important difference. He purchased just about double in the year of the general election what he did in the preceeding year. The minister issued stores during the year to the extent of $1,665,000, so he purchased twice as much as he issued, and he carries over in stock at the end of the year, beyond what he used, to the extent of $1,824,-977 or nearly $900,000 more than he did the preceding year. I just mention these items to give a general idea of the extravagance of the minister in this year and as tending to show why he lost $488,000 in working in 1900 when he claimed a profit of $120,000 in the preceding year.

We have heard a great deal about the purchase of ties. That is a public scandal in the province of New Brunswick. I have given a good deal of attention to it and I intend to deal with it to-night, because I believe it requires the utmost attention of every hon. gentleman in the House. It is one of the most extraordinary stories that has ever been narrated as regards any administration whether by a government or by a private railway company. In 1900 the number of ties actually used was 495,000. Mr. Pottinger told us that the largest number ever used in any year in the history of the road was 650,000. The minister began the year with 127,000 in stock so that if he bought half a million he would have been still on the right side and would have at least 120,000 surplus at the end of the year, after using the 495,000. But I must repeat again, and it cannot be repeated too often, that this was election year. Mr. Pottinger tells us that about September he had a conference with the minister, and decided to ask tenders for 800,000 ties, but he got only about 335,000 under the tenders.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) quite certain about that, because my recollection is that Mr. Pottinger had no conference with me as to the quantity he would purchase, but that he had a conference with me after tenders had been received.

Mr. BARKER. I gave my recollection as to what Mr. Pottinger said, but I will take the ministers explanation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has the hon. gentleman looked up the report of the evidence upon that point.

Mr. BARKER. I have a very distinct recollection of what Mr. Pottinger said, but I will accept the ministers statement and that is enough I suppose.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have a very strong recollection that Mr. Pottinger did not make that statement.

Mr. BARKER. Well, here are the facts. Mr. Pottinger represented that in August or September, 1900, he decided to take tenders for 800,000 ties. He called for tenders and he got a limited number. Having got that smaller number he fixed upon a price and he made arrangements directly with certain people who were willing to furnish ties at the price he fixed. He said that he gave out these contracts and did not limit the number, and that instead of getting 800,000 the result was that he got 1,300,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I doubt if that is exactly correct.

Mr. BARKER. That is the original statement, but I will at once refer to what the papers show.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know the hon. gentleman does not mean to state the facts incorrectly but he is astray. He says that Mr. Pottinger gave out orders without limitation in awarding on tenders and that he got 1,300,000 ties. My recollection is that under the tenders he awarded the contract or notified the parties what he would take from them and that it was much below the quantity which he required. He gave some additional orders following that up, and later, away along in November or December, being still in his opinion short, without any conference whatever with me and on his own judgment as to what it would be well for him to do, he arranged with some parties to furnish a quantity. It was only to two or three parties whose names he mentioned that he gave that carte blanche order. They furnished more than he anticipated or expected they would supply. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. INGRAM. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, perhaps I can set him right by the evidence :

Q. Will you tell me how many ties you purchased during the year ?--A. I have not got the exact number, but it was in the neighbourhood of 1,250,000 or 1,300,000.

Just exactly what my hon. friend stated.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That does not bear on the question.

Mr. BARKER. I think I may accept the minister's statement that he was not consulted. These statements have been brought down. One statement gives all the ties delivered after the 1st of July, 1900, on contracts made previous to November, 1900, and quantities supplied. The quantity contracted for prior to November, was 405,792, according to Mr. Pottinger's report. The quantities delivered from July to October, were : July, 106,579 ; August, 98,741; September, 86,935; October, 176,705; or a total delivered up to October of 468,900 ties. On the same contracts there were delivered afterwards 150,777, making a total delivered under the contracts made prior to November, 619,737. Now, I want to call the hon. minister's attention to this. Under contracts made prior to November, he had delivered 619,737 ties, and he had in store 127,000. That gave him about 750,000 ties. Now, 495,960 were all the hon. gentleman used in that year, so that it is quite clear that under the contracts made before November, the hon. gentleman had nearly 50 per cent more ties than he needed for the whole year. Now, let us see what the hon. gentleman did in November.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What I did ?

Mr. BARKER. I presume the hon. minister is going to take the responsibility of his officers ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not pretend to say that I am not responsible.

Mr. BARKER. I speak in reference to the hon. gentleman's department. His department made contracts after October on which there were 681,489 delivered.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Was it not after November ? Was it not in December ?

Mr. BARKER. The first deliveries ended in October. Mr. Pottinger said he began to get the tenders in about September, and they ran on until November.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The tenders were in before that.

Mr. BARKER. I am only taking Mr. Pottinger's statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Pottinger did not state that.

Mr. BARKER. There is the fact that he had 619,737 on the first contract, 127,000 in store, making 746,737 or 246,000 more than he needed for the whole year; and yet in November he entered into contracts under which there were delivered up to June, 681,489, making a total of 1,301,226. The point is this, that the hon. gentleman knew he did not want those 681,000 when he ordered them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You mean the manager knew ?

Mr. BARKER. I am stating that Mr. Pottinger or the Railway Department had 746,000 ties already purchased and in stock when they entered into contracts under which 681,000 more were delivered during the fiscal year.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is the hon. gentleman right when he says that they entered into contracts for 681,000 more ? Is it not a fact that the general manager gave the general order to go on and get out all the ties they could, thinking he would be short ? What the hon. gentleman is stating, that he made a contract for a specific number, I do not think is quite correct.

Mr. BARKER. The numbers and the contracts do not come out quite the same; but I think I can give the contracts. The contracts in November were for more than a million. They did not deliver anything like the number the contracts called for, fortunately for the country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If there is any point at all in informing the committee, it is just as well that it should be informed correctly. My hon. friend knows that Mr. Pottinger says that he held no conference at all with the minister, and that the minister was not informed of the matter. He says he told those people to go ahead and get out what ties they could, and in doing that he did what every railway company does. Sir Thomas Shaugnessy told me only the other day that his men did it repeatedly.

Mr. MONK. The hon. gentleman is responsible for it all the same.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not shirk the responsibility.

Mr. BARKER. Mr. Pottinger's statement is under two distinct heads. One is : 'Ties delivered after July, 1900, on contracts made previous to November, 1900, and quantities supplied.' The other is : 'Under contracts made after October, 1900, and delivered subsequent to November, 1900.' I will give you the figures. They contracted before November for 405,792 and they delivtered 468,960. After October they contracted for 1,113,449, of which 681,489 were delivered subsequent to November.

Mr. BARKER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We had not any contract at all, and Mr. Pottinger does not say so.

Mr. BARKER. All I can say is that he gives every man's name, the date of the contract, the price and the place of delivery.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Suppose he does. He says the contract consists of a letter, and he said it was in December, if my memory serves me, that he gave the firm of Curran and some one instructions and authority to go ahead and get out all the ties they could. That was not a contract made in October, or a contract for any specific quantity.

Mr. BARKER. All I can tell the hon. gentleman is that the statement is there in writing. Mr. Pottinger in his evidence refers to the different qualities of ties. He said the life of a white spruce tie was about four years, the life of a black spruce tie six years, and the life of a cedar tie from six to ten years. But what I wish to call the attention of the committee particularly to, is the difference between white spruce and black spruce. The white spruce tie is practically worthless. As it only lasts four years, it is hardly worth the expense of putting it into the track and taking it out again. When you add the price to the cost of putting the tie in and taking it out again, the road was better without it. I wish to call attention to that, because there were enormous quantities of spruce ties ordered without specifying whether they were to be black or white spruce, and of course the contractors delivered the white spruce. And I may also say that owing to these enormous orders in that year, the result happened which might have been expected. Up went the prices from 25 per cent to 30 per cent, owing to the enormous demands made by the department when they did not need anything like the quantity they ordered. They have now on hand a supply for two or three years ahead, and are only ordering in consequence a very small quantity, and the prices this year have gone down to the normal figures from 17 cents to 20 cents so far as any purchases have been made.

Mr. BOYD. Was that election year ?

Mr. BARKER. That was election year. Mr. Curran, of whom we heard a good deal in the committee, delivered 185,819 spruce ties. There was no word about white or black, and no body has heard much about black spruce being delivered or found anywhere. He got 25 9-10 cents per tie, which is a high price even for cedar ties. He got a contract for 185,819 spruce, and was given a monopoly over 100 miles of railway to get out the ties, the government undertaking not to buy spruce from any one else in the district. Another contractor delivered 49,201 cedar ties of the same dimension at 24 cents. Mr. Curran got 25 9-10 cents for white spruce, the life of which is only four years, and in the same district the government got 49,201 cedar ties, good for six to ten years, and paid only 24 cents. Mr. Curran, I believe——

Mr. BOYD. He had a pull.

Mr. BARKER. Yes, he had a strong pull. Mr. Curran, I believe, is the treasurer, or something of that kind, of the political district.

Mr. MONK. That was just a coincidence.

Mr. BARKER. Let us see what a good thing this Mr. Curran had. He had a contract for 105,070 Princess pine at 29 and 30 cents; 84,224 cedar at 28 cents; and 185,819 spruce at 25 9-10 cents. Then he had 25,893 hemlock, 3,380 tamarac, and 338 juniper, altogether his contract was for 408,724 ties, or nearly one-third of the whole quantity purchased that year, and he was paid $177,248. Thus Mr. M. Curran got in the election year $25,000 more than the total sum paid for ties on the Intercolonial Railway in the previous year. They did not require one of those spruce ties. They had more ties than they needed of a good class, yet they were so anxious that this Mr. Curran and a few others should get contracts that they purchased an enormous quantity which they did not want and got ties the road would have been better without. One hon. gentleman on the committee suggested to us that the real owner of these Curran ties was a Conservative. He seemed to think that that was an answer to the whole thing, that it was all right because a Conservative owned the ties. It struck me that it was the old question of the intermediary. The contract was given where it would do most good, and Mr. Curran, a friend of the government, got it. A Conservative probably could not have got it in any other way. It went where it would do most good, and among gentlemen no doubt who understood, as another minister has told us on one occasion, that 'business is business.' There is another extraordinary feature about this. In May of last year a complaint was made to the engineer of construction that a great many bad ties had been received. Mr. Pottinger was asked at the Public Accounts Committee about these bad ties, and he knew absolutely nothing about them in April of the following year. He had heard that complaints had been made and that there had been an investigation, but he did not know whether any report had been made. Several meetings later he heard that a report had been made in November last, and that nothing had been done since. That is all Mr. Pottinger could tell us. Well, Mr. McManus was called, but before I refer to his testimony I would like to read the result of the investigation or reinspection of these ties so far as it has gone. A Mr. Williams was detailed by the engineer of construction to inspect these ties which Mr. McManus had passed. On the 4th November, Mr. Williams made a report. I have gone carefully through it, and I find that he inspected 306,000 ties, over about seventy or eighty miles of road, that is, up to November, 1901, he had inspected less than one-quarter of all the ties purchased in 1900-1.

Mr. BRODER. Were they paid for before being inspected?

Mr. BARKER. They were inspected by Mr. McManus at the time of delivery and after his inspection of course they were paid for.

The following summer an investigation was ordered, and Mr. Williams was sent to inspect the work of Mr. McManus, and as so far has reported on 306,000 of the ties with these results:

> The ties are of two classes—a tie eight or nine feet long, six inches thick, and seven inches face. Another class, six inches thick and six inches face. Those would be classed as passable ties under the contract. Of the 6 x 7 there were 55,113 good ties. Of the 6 x 6 there were 54,941 good ties. That made 110,054 out of 306,000.

Let me tell you what the others were:

Ties, 6 in. x 5 in...	41,760
Ties, 6 in x 4 in..	19,605
Under 4-ins face..	4,654

Ties less than six inches thick, and now mark what Mr. Williams means by 'less than six inches thick.' He says that 'under six inches thick,' means any tie under six inches and down to three. Of those there were 103,307. Rotten hearts, 4,954. And there is this note:

> Except in cedar, rotten hearted or hollow headed ties mean bad ties. In cedar only ties with a very bad heart or hollow hearts are shown.

He passed to ones that were not very bad in cedar. Then were fir ties, which everybody agrees should not have been used as ties at all, 21,172 and poplar, 57. Or a total of 195,509 bad ties out of 306,000, and less than one-quarter of the whole inspected.

Mr. BROCK. All paid for.

Mr. BARKER. All paid for. The money all gone out. Then there were switch ties which are very much more costly than the ordinary ones, especially the ties for what are called three throw switches. Out of 59 three throw switches, not one came near the specification. They were utterly useless for switch ties, and Mr. Williams points this out. Of 194 two throw switch ties, only three were up to the standard. That is the result of this inspection up to date. I do not wonder that the inspection has not gone any further.

In connection with this inspection Mr. McManus was brought up and examined. He, it appears, had been sent for by Mr. Burpee, when he got his report in November, from Mr. Williams. Mr. McManus was questioned about the inspection of the ties. When he was brought up in this way he told Mr. Burpee that he had a letter authorizing him to accept certain ties contrary to the instructions given him by the engineer. He brought that letter to Mr. Burpee and left it with him. It was a note in pencil from the Minister of Railways to Mr. McManus, telling him to inspect Culligan's ties in the same way that he had inspected those of a man named Ueltican. I looked into the schedules of the Ueltican contract and found that he had agreed to supply 15,000 ties of spruce and cedar—not a word as to whether it was black or white spruce; and, of course, he delivered white. Now, Culligan made his contract on the 12th of October, 1900—he agreed to deliver from 15,000 to 20,000 black spruce ties. The black spruce were a fairly good tie. But when Mr. McManus came to inspect Culligan's ties Culligan insisted that he was not to give black spruce, and he went out to see the minister. He saw the minister, and the minister, without consulting the department, without a word to the engineer or manager or anybody else, but simply on the statement of the contractor, gave him a note to McManus to inspect Culligan's ties as he had inspected Ueltican's—one being a contract for black spruce, and the other simply for spruce. So, McManus passed the white ties delivered by Culligan as if under the contract. Now, McManus brought this letter to the engineer, and left it with him. I can quite imagine that after that, there would not be much desire to pursue the inquiry further. Burpee, being human like the rest of us, would realize the position. He would see that he was bucking up against the minister. McManus knew the importance of the memorandum, he knew that there was going to be trouble about his work, for it was not merely a matter of Culligan's ties, for he was the inspector in chief of all these ties. McManus knew the importance of this memo. or letter which he left with Burpee, and afterwards went back and got it and kept it. We tried in the committee to get McManus to tell where that letter was. He said he did not know. After a good deal of trouble, we foud that he had put it in a drawer in his boarding house. That was last fall. But, about the time he heard he was to be brought here, he went to his lodging and searched for the letter, knowing that he would need it for his protection when he got here. But the letter was gone, and he could not tell us what had become of it. He said he had not given it to anyone. It seemed quite clear, if we believe his evidence, that the letter was taken without McManus's knowledge—stolen. I confess that at first I did not believe his story about the letter being taken away, and thought he had it somewhere concealed. But, to the astonishment, I think, of the whole committee, when we stopped the examination of McManus, an hon. member of this House, the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) stood up, and opening his coat, produced the letter from his pocket, he walked up to the witness and handed the paper to him and asked: Is that the letter? McManus looked at it and said he thought it was a copy. The letter was handed to the Minister of Finance, who examined it carefully and said he was satisfied that it was the genuine signature of the minister. Then the letter was handed to the Minister of Railways, who gravely examined it and said it was his letter. Then it seemed to be as the expression is 'up to' the hon. member for Westmoreland to explain how he had come by the stolen letter. I had better read from the public accounts proceedings.

Hon. Mr. EMMERSON—I would like to make an explanation. I have been attending the meetings of this committee previous to the Easter holidays, when I was much interested in this question. When I returned to Moncton, I did not want to talk to Mr. McManus, the inspector, with respect to his testimony or anything of that kind or anything he might know with respect to the matter, and I went to his brother and inquired. I asked him if he knew about the paper and he said 'Yes,' and he could get it, and I asked him for it. I saw him afterwards—he had it, and I asked him to give it to me. He said that his brother Charles knew nothing about him having it and he had not consulted him in any way in respect to where it was. I told him that I was anxious to have it, and I brought it here with me. I told the minister about it this morning for the first time.

And the hon. gentleman produced the stolen goods. I think that is the most extraordinary story ever heard from the lips of a member of parliament. I wonder why the hon. member for Westmoreland wanted that letter. It was never mentioned in the committee until the other morning. How had he heard of it? If that were a perfectly innocent and harmless letter what right had he to take the property of the Intercolonial Railway? What had he to do with it, what did he want it for? If he wanted to get it for the minister why did he not give it to the minister when he got it, instead of keeping it for weeks in his pocket. We have heard for some time past that the hon. member for Westmoreland was not on the best of terms, some weeks ago, with the minister. Did he want this letter, so to speak, as a shot in his locker? I leave him to settle that with the Minister of Railways. One would have thought that if he were a friend of the Minister of Railways he would have told him about the letter and not have waited until we had got almost the very words of the letter out of the witness on the stand before he produced it. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can tell us what his motive was, and where he heard of the letter. We had not heard of it. But he seems to have known about it, and he went and got it. He did not go to the man whose it was and who had possession of it, but he went to his brother, and when this brother got the letter and gave it to the hon. gentleman, he told the hon. gentleman that the man to whom the letter was addressed and from whose possession it had been taken knew nothing about his having it. And the hon. gentleman actually accepted that stolen letter and kept it in his pocket. I do not think the minister can be held responsible for that. But it is only another step in the downward path. If that letter had never been written it never could have been stolen, and the hon. gentleman could not have produced a stolen letter before the committee.

Mr. EMMERSON. The trouble with the hon. gentleman is that the letter was delivered.

Mr. BARKER. I read the hon. gentleman's statement as taken down by the shorthand writer, and there is no mistake about it

Mr. EMMERSON. I stand by it.

Mr. BARKER. Very well. When one thinks for a moment of the way the ties were bought, of the reckless extravagance in their purchase, one can no longer be astonished that this road was worked at a loss of 110 per cent. If that is the way the business is conducted, how can the railway possibly be worked at a profit ? The hon. gentleman has been telling us what his stores cost him, that ties were high, that everything was high. But instead of taking an opportunity to cut down the quantities when he found prices were high, he simply revelled in ties, there was a carnival of ties, everybody must have been rushing over the country to get ties for the Minister of Railways and Canals from 6 to 3 inches thick ; anything would do, any scantling was good enough for the Minister of Railways and Canals, spruce was as good as anything else.

Now about the coal. The hon. gentleman had a good deal to say about his coal contract. The average cost of coal used in the four years ending June, 1900, was $458,562. In the last of those four years the quantity was higher than usual, they used $610,867 worth. Now Mr. Pottinger said in his evidence that he thought they had run too closely, and he determined to have 50,000 tons in stock. He thought he ought to have that margin, as they had run too low in the previous year. What did the minister do ? In 1899 he had bought $548,184 worth ; in 1900, which was the high year, he bought $1,385,125 worth. The average cost of coal used was under $500,000 ; the highest cost of the coal used was $610,000. And yet in this election year, with prices high, he spent $1,385,120. Could it be otherwise than that coal should go up ? Let us see what the quantities were. He had in store at the beginning of the year, 15,507 tons. He bought in 1900, 412,446 tons as against 258,425 in the previous year. He bought so much that instead of increasing his stock on hand by 50,000 tons, he had in store at the end of the fiscal year 128,935 tons, or 78,935 tons more than the manager said was necessary.

Mr. EMMERSON. Was not the greater part of that coal purchased some time after the election, during the winter season ?

Mr. BARKER. I am speaking now of what he purchased during the year, the fiscal year.

Mr. EMMERSON. You spoke of the election year, and I ask if the chief part of the coal was not purchased after the 1st of January, 1901 ?

Mr. BARKER. I have no doubt a good deal of it was, especially the 60,000 tons that were purchased in the States.

Mr. EMMERSON. For the reasons stated.

Mr. BARKER. Now, Mr. Pottinger tried to excuse this enormous purchase by saying that they were threatened with a strike : they were afraid of a strike in the coal mines in Nova Scotia, and he produced a bundle of papers to the committee to show that a strike was imminent. Well, he read letter after letter until he came to one from the manager of a coal mine down there who conveyed the information to him, and as he went on reading it turned out that the manager of that mine was telling Mr. Pottinger that they expected some trouble with their men, and there might be an interruption in the delivery of coal for a day or two. Mr. Pottinger having read that far read no further. I think that is about the extent of the threatened strike. But after all, what possible excuse was there for buying this 128,935 tons more than the manager wanted ? Was it because it was convenient to rush off to St. John and give a contract of $46,000 to Thompson & Co. for freight of coal from the United States ? That was a nice little contract by itself. They bought 60,000 tons from the States at high prices. It seems that in the excitement of buying the hon. gentleman in that year wanted to purchase everything that he could lay his hands on, cars, locomotives, an enormous quantity of supplies, enormous quantities of bolsters from Chicago, $67,000 worth, bolsters from Moncton, or neighbourhood—everything on a most gigantic scale, until he ran his purchases up to $3,000,000 odd in that year, double what he had ever purchased before. Yet the hon. gentleman comes here to-night and speaks as if the fact that he bought so much and paid so much for the materials was an excuse for his high expenses. No doubt it had a great deal to do with it, but I do not think it is much of an excuse for the hon. gentleman. An ordinary business man, when he found prices for ties were high, would have curtailed the quantity in every possible way. When he found the price of coal was high he would have done the same thing. But the hon. gentleman does the opposite, he seems to think the way to bring the price of ties and coal down is to order all you can. I do not know whether there is any other explanation of it. But I would like to show how the hon. minister is getting on, as he grows older as Railway Minister. His stocks carried in store at the end of the year 1897-98 were $468,462. That is a pretty good quantity. The next year, 1898-99, the stocks remaining in store amounted to 553,177; in 1900 the stocks carried were $971,054, that is the surplus at the end of the year. This last year, this wonderful purchasing year, the stocks carried were $1,824,977, four times what they were in 1898. That is good administration, that is successful administration. It is very successful for the dealer, the people who want to sell ties and all that sort of thing, and probably for the coal dealers and other merchants down there. But I think that even the people of New Brunswick, notwithstanding the enormous purchases that are made along the line, would prefer to see this railway economically managed and to see its business done in a proper manner. The people down east have just as much interest in the economical management of the road as we, in this part of the country, who have to share in paying the cost. I do not think that there is one man in New Brunswick but would stamp out this thing to-day if he could, and the sooner they stamp out these things, such as the letter to McManus, and these extravagant purchases the better it will be for New Brunswick and this Dominion.

Now, I have only a very few words more. I have a little regard for hon. gentlemen opposite and I am sorry that I have taken so much time. If any hon. gentleman wants to understand and appreciate the extent of purchases let him take the Auditor General's report and give half an hour to wading through that and he will see the most marvellous state of things that has ever existed upon any railway. Just one word as to what has led to this. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals a few years ago made up his mind that he would enter into competition and have a fight with the Canadian Pacific Railway. He was determined to be the railway king. He was going to show all these railway magnates at Montreal a thing or two about the working of railways. He was determined to centre business in St. John. He built an elevator there, enormous expenditures were made for heavy rails, heavy locomotives and a large quantity of cars. Millions upon millions have been spent upon that project and the hon. gentleman was going to fight the Canadian Pacific Railway. Well, Sir, he has practically abandoned the fight. It is very like the King of France who, with 30,000 men, marched up the hill and then marched down again. The hon. gentleman has spent his millions and we are no farther advanced from a railway point of view than we were before. In fact, we are worse off. There is an enormous expenditure of capital which we cannot get back and the expenditure of that money might as well have been distributed over five or ten years instead of taking place in one or two years. What was the hon. gentleman intending to do? He was proposing, while working the Intercolonial Railway at 110 per cent, to enter into a fight with a company that work at 60¾ per cent. He attempted to compete with a company whose line to St. John was 481 miles while his line was 50 per cent longer, or 740 miles, so that the hon. gentleman was going to carry the traffic 259 miles for nothing and fight the Canadian Pacific Railway. That was the contest he entered into. I think it is very fortunate that it is nearly stopped. It is a good thing for the country. I ask again was there anything in all this to justify the congratulations of the hon. Minister of Finance. That hon. gentleman must have known all this. He must have been familiar with all this expenditure every ten days throughout the year, because he gets the returns of the Railway Department and publishes them in his ten day statement; yet, in the face of the knowledge of these enormous expenditures, the hon. gentleman congratulates the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals on what he termed the success of the Intercolonial Railway. I do not know whether it is necessary to say anything more upon that. What can the hon. Minister of Finance possibly condemn if he congratulates anyone upon results of this kind? I am sorry that I have had to occupy so much time. There is a great deal more which I could have said but I have taken so much time to-night that I will not further presume upon the indulgence of the committee. I can only say that I have been very careful in extracting these figures from the various documents and I doubt whether the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals can find one error in them. If there is an error it is a very small one and I shall be the first to acknowledge it if he points it out.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Campbell). Shall this item be adopted?

Mr. BARKER. Is that the first item?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is the vote for the general working expenses of the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is the only item we want to pass to-night.

Mr. INGRAM. I expected to hear the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emerson) defend himself in regard to this letter when he was so brave a short time ago in saying that he was going to defend himself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will hear from him likely later on.

Mr. INGRAM. Now is the time. The hon gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) has been accused of stealing the letter and he has not defended himself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ingram) will allow me, unless he particularly desires to go on, I would ask the committee to allow the chairman to report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 12 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, April 25, 1902.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 118) for the relief of James Brown—Mr. Clarke.

Bill (No. 125) to amend the Act of the Ottawa, Northern and Western Railway Company—Mr. Champagne.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I would like to call attention to returns which I ordered some time ago. One is a return, ordered on the 9th April, showing the timber berths in the Yukon. I would like to have that down Monday or Tuesday, if possible. The other is a return giving the names of parties convicted of arson.

POLICE MAGISTRATES IN THE YUKON.

Resolution respecting the salaries of the police magistrates at Dawson and White Horse read the second time and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 137) to amend chapter 41 of the statute of 1901, respecting the administration of justice in the Yukon territory.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

Resolution respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts and the Territorial Court of the Yukon Territory, read the second time and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 138) to amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

REGISTRAR OF THE EXCHEQUER COURT.

Resolution respecting the registrar of the Exchequer Court, read the second time and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 139) to amend the Exchequer Court Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE—ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER FOR THE YUKON TERRITORY.

House went into committee on the following resolution.

That it is expedient to provide for the appointment of an assistant commissioner of the North-west mounted police for the Yukon territory, at $1,600 per annum.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) the object of the Bill of which this resolution is a preliminary is simply to authorize the government to appoint a second assistant commissioner of the Mounted Police. At present there is a comptroller of the Mounted Police stationed at Ottawa and a commissioner stationed at Regina. The object is to appoint an assistant commissioner stationed at the Yukon. The force in the Yukon is now under Superintendent Wood, a most competent officer. But some difficulty has arisen from the fact that, instead of being able to deal directly with matters concerning the Yukon he has to report to the commissioner at Regina, who has again to report to Ottawa. It would avoid many difficulties and promote the efficiency of the force if Mr. Wood were made an assistant commissioner and clothed with the powers of a commissioner, as is the assistant commissioner at Regina in the absence of the commissioner, and so be able to deal with all matters in the Yukon and report directly to Ottawa. The only increase of expenditure involved would be $200. At present Mr. Wood receives $1,400 a year with, of course, the allowance which is made to the officers in the Yukon. As assistant commissioner he will receive the same as the assistant commissioner at Regina, $1,600.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the strength of the force in the Yukon now ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Three hundred.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not intended to make any additional appointment, but merely to clothe Mr. Wood with the powers of a commissioner ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Of assistant commissioner—that is all.

Resolution reported.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE ACT.

Bill (No. 105) to amend the Bills of Exchange Act, 1890.—Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick read the second time ; considered in committee ; reported, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO EXCHEQUER COURT ACT.

Bill (No. 114) to amend the Exchequer Court Act (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to understand the purport of this. These two sections are not prepared in a way which, I think, is approved by most workers on the subject, that is to say, to re-enact a section with an amendment instead of inserting the necessary words. Without the previous statute before us, we cannot understand it, and would the hon. gentleman say what is the effect of it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Under the Exchequer Court Act, as we have it now, the government has authority to appoint a registrar to the Exchequer Court. He must be a barrister of five years standing, and he shall receive, according to the statute which authorizes his appointment, a salary of $2,000 a year. As I pointed out when I introduced the resolution, the registrar has been in the habit of receiving, under an agreement as he represents, an annual increase of about $50 a year, the original intention being to increase his salary to $2,400. At the present time, as a result of the actual increases given to him, his salary amounts to $2,375. In order to get rid of this obligation to take an annual vote for the sum of $50, we suggest the propriety of fixing the salary at $2,400, which he says was the amount at which it was fixed originally. I agree the drafting might have been a little better.

On section 2,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the minister tell us what the effect of this section is ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. As my hon. friend is aware at the present time there is no appeal from a judgment in the Exchequer Court unless that judgment is a final judgment. Now, you may demur, and if the demurrer is dismissed, there is no appeal, but if the demurrer is maintained there would be an appeal. But there may be cases in which it may be advisable to have the whole matter disposed of on a question of law, and this is to enable us to have an appeal in a case where the demurrer has been dismissed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I recollect now the minister made that explanation.

On section 3, subsection 2,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is no need I suppose of any limitation as to the cases in which service may be made abroad?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Difficulties have arisen in the Justice Department, and we found it necessary in some cases to serve a process on persons living in the United States, and we had no provision to enable us to do it. It was in order to meet that difficulty that this amendment is suggested.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think in the English Judicature Act and in the Acts of the several provinces following it, the right to serve a defendant in a foreign country is somewhat restricted. Does this apply to a foreigner as well as a British subject ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It does not provide, I see, for the service of a writ, but simply the notice. The rules of international courtesy, I think, forbid the service of a writ upon a foreigner residing in a foreign country, only a notice can be served. The Bill seems to have provided for that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I noticed an important decision in one of the papers as to the jurisdiction of this government even to legislate in the direction of making a service over a subject in a foreign country. It is following the line of the navigation laws that we have no jurisdiction over a British subject beyond the marine league. The effect of that would be, I think—I saw it argued in that direction anyway—that even in processes in a foreign country we would not have jurisdiction to legislate in that direction.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This I think would be a matter affecting the procedure of our own courts. We authorize the court to make the service, at least we authorize the service or the process out of the court. But as to whether it would be binding upon a foreigner abroad is another question.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It may be that a foreign court, in dealing with the rights of a citizen of a foreign country, if a case was brought in that foreign court upon a judgment here, would not recognize it.

Different laws prevail in different countries with regard to that subject. But I assume that this particular section has been drawn with care; I have not had time to consider it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It has been drawn by the deputy minister, after consultation with the judge of the Exchequer Court. I think that is a fairly safe guarantee.

Bill reported.

CANADA EVIDENCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 115) further to amend the Canada Evidence Act, 1893 (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). Mr. Chairman, it is intended to limit the number of expert witnesses. The number is limited to five, but if the judge presiding at the trial desires to add to the number, of course, it is optional with him to give permission to counsel to have any number in excess of five that the court may fix. I think it is quite proper that there should be some limitation to the number of expert witnesses that are produced in certain cases in our courts.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What would be the operation of the Bill? Is it confined to the Exchequer Court or to criminal courts?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This would apply to all cases to which the Canada Evidence Act would apply. That would be the Exchequer Court and also the criminal courts. In case of murder by poisoning, for instance, there is often an unlimited number of expert witnesses uselessly brought forward, and in this way the public expenditure is increased. The Chancellor of Ontario and the Chief Justice of Ontario have both agreed in recommending that this Bill should be passed.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—ATLANTIC SHIPPING COMBINE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go again into Committee of Supply.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). Mr. Speaker, I beg to call the attention of the House to the following cable despatch which I see published in the 'Citizen' of to-day:

London, April 25.—The 'Daily Mail' affirms this morning that the agreement of the Atlantic shipping combine contains secret clauses to the effect that the American promoters of the concern intend to ask congress to pass a new shipping bill permitting foreign built vessels to be brought under the American flag. The adhesion of the 'Cunard' line is practically certain, continues the 'Mail,' and the corporation will be formed mainly with American capital. It will take over entirely the British shipping companies. Those companies refusing to join the combine will be compelled to fight for their existence. For the three or four years that the present admiralty contracts still have to run, the paper adds, the vessels will remain under the British flag, at the expiration of this time the whole will pass under the American flag and be owned and run by the above mentioned corporation, which will eventually endeavour to carry its competition to every portion of the globe.

The 'Daily Express' declares that the shipping combine is trying to coerce Canada into accepting its terms and conditions as to emigration rates and traffic and that, if resistance is made, the combine will buy up the Canadian railways and declare a commercial war. It is the intention of the combine, says the 'Daily Express' to demand that the Canadian emigration department in London should cease to give facilities to Elder, Dempster and Company.

This, seems to me, to be striking a vital blow at the shipping interests of Canada, as it strikes a blow at British shipping, it as a matter of course, includes Canadian shipping as well. It strikes a vital blow at those interested in commerce and manufactures and all interested in trade generally. It goes on further and says that they will also include traffic by railways and that if a resistance is made they will buy up the Canadian railways and declare commercial war. This seems to me to be very bold reference or statement and if carried out would interfere very materially not only with the maritime provinces bordering on the Atlantic, but with Canada as a whole. It is declared that the trade of Canada is to be diverted from our Canadian roads across the American boundary to American ports, and in this way our seaports on the Atlantic will be seriously affected. It would not only interfere with our commercial interests but it would interfere with our ship-building interests, and very materially affect the county which I have the honour to represent, having no less than forty new vessels building in the county of Lunenburg this year, and last year we had about a similar number constructed. This referred-to project would place us in the position of having not only the ship-building industry, now a success, hampered, but our general trade greatly crippled. I would ask the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to consider this matter very carefully, to view the situation as it might ultimately exist and place such safeguards around the interests of Canada as to prevent our being interfered with in this way. I only saw this matter mentioned in the referred-to paper a few minutes before the House met this afternoon, and thought it my duty, in the interest of all concerned, more particularly for those interested in commerce and trade, that the matter should be brought to the attention of the House. I would like to have some information in this connection as to the right hon. gentleman's views and the position the right hon. gentleman would take.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) that I do not think there is much danger at the present time. If, as is stated in the paper, congress is to introduce legislation, I am afraid we are powerless to prevent it, and if congress intends to take hold of our railways, I think I can satisfy my hon. friend that there will be no such occurrence as this. We will keep our own railways for ourselves.

Mr. KAULBACH. If any railways in Canada have subsidies from this government, then, the government should exercise careful supervision over these railways, and prevent traffic being diverted across the border into American channels. It would be very easy to deprive us of traffic, were our interests not vigilantly watched. We want to keep Canada for the Canadians, our trade for Canadians, and we want the shipping ports of Canada for our exports and for the trade of Canada generally, and to be maintained and upheld in the interests of Canada as one great and abiding country.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, I will take it into consideration then.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Government railways—Rental, Grand Trunk Railway, $140,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the minister give us any information as to how the Drummond County portion of the road is paying? We were assured most positively that once the traffic got well under way this would be a good paying concern.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think I can give any details, but I can state generally that there is no part of the Intercolonial Railway which has conduced to an increase in the receipts of the road to the same extent as has the recent extension from Lévis to Montreal. I attribute in a very large measure the immense increase in the traffic to our having brought the line to Montreal, and of course, having done so we have to pay this rental.

Mr. SPROULE. Can you give an approximate estimate as to the tonnage of freight carried, and the earnings of that portion of the road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am afraid not. We do not keep our accounts on such a basis that I could give that information, and the hon. gentleman will see that it would be manifestly unfair to give an approximate estimate. I could get the hon. gentleman information as to what amount of business originates upon the Drummond County Railway, or I could get the information as to what freight was carried on that part of the line for its destination, but even then we would be far from being able to form even an approximate idea of the value of that piece of line.

Mr. SPROULE. What I wanted to know was the proportionate earnings of that part of the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not got that.

Mr. BENNETT. When this road was acquired we were told that a large trade was expected to the maritime provinces particularly in grain. How much grain was handled last year through the elevators at St. John and Halifax, and did it come principally from American or from Canadian ports on the upper lakes ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that information was asked for and is published in 'Hansard.' I cannot remember what the details of that statement were, but I will be glad to make a note of it and look it up in 'Hansard.'

Mr. BENNETT. Surely there must have been some such quantity as would create an impression upon the mind of the minister with regard to the grain trade from St. John and Halifax. From what I have heard from time to time there has been practically nothing of account. Yesterday a government supporter tried to throw discredit on the late administration because they built an elevator at Halifax. If that were a fault how much greater was the fault of this government, who when the old elevator was destroyed, erected another one in its place. Cannot the minister give even a approximate estimate of the grain trade at St. John and Halifax ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not even venture to give an approximate statement from memory. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) is in error when he understood that any gentleman on this side of the House condemned the policy of the late government for building an elevator at Halifax. I think what occurred was, that when the present government were condemned for building an elevator in Halifax, it was pointed out that they were simply rebuilding the elevator which had been erected by the previous government, and that if it was a grievious wrong for this government to rebuild, it must have been at least a slight offence for our predecessors to have built in the first place.

Mr. BENNETT. I am surprised that the minister cannot tell us even approximately the quantity of grain handled in his own city of St. John, by an elevator which has been operated by this government. Of course the minister does not live in St. John, and that being so, may be his colleague can give the information. The minister cannot tell the House whether or not a bushel of grain went through that elevator last year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can set my hon. friend's mind at rest upon that question. I can say unhesitatingly that more than a bushel of grain went through.

Mr. BENNETT. The minister has now raised the limit, and let me ask him if 1,000 bushels of grain went through this elevator? The minister should not treat this matter in such a flippant way.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have said that I will get the information and give it to my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, perhaps it might be as well to let the item stand until we get the information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If you think it is really worth while.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the hon. minister if he will bring down a statement of the quantities of grain that passed through the government elevators at St. John and Halifax, and the quantities that passed through the Canadian Pacific Railway elevators at the same time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If I can get the information for my hon. friend, I will do it.

Mr. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmoreland). It was not my intention to offer any observations on the subject now before this committee, nor indeed to take part in any of the proceedings of the House during the present session, in obedience to the command of my physician, who had enjoined upon me the necessity of abstaining as much as possible from any work which would involve any mental strain or excitement. The extraordinary character of the speeches which were delivered here last evening, and the way in which my name was used, constrain me to make a few remarks with respect to the Intercolonial Railway. Representing, as I do, a constituency which is very largely interested in that road, which is, indeed, the head centre of the government railway system, it might perhaps be expected of me that I would make some remarks when such a subject was under discussion.

Before referring to the remarks personal to myself which were made by the hon. gentlemen who have already spoken, I would like to invite the attention of this committee and of the country to the circumstances under which the Intercolonial Railway was constructed. I think that a reference to the 145th section of the British North America Act will convince all hon. members of the committee that the construction and maintenance of that road was one of the essential features of the coming into this confederation of the provinces by the sea. Indeed, that 145th section was the stepping stone upon which the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick entered the threshold of this great Dominion, and therefore the people of those provinces are naturally very much interested not only in the maintenance of that road and its proper management, but they are particularly interested in the road being kept in such a condition that there shall not be any prejudice created in the minds of the people of any other section of Canada against it, or against its maintenance as a government road.

Now, while it is true that in going over the history of the Intercolonial Railway and looking at its balance sheets year by year we do not find any large surpluses on the right side of the account, yet I am prepared to say that the Intercolonial Railway has been one of the most splendid assets that the government of Canada has ever possessed. I do not feel that I can show it in dollars and cents, but I think I can show this committee and the country that the dividends which it has earned have been of incalculable value. I need only refer to the first ten years of the history of this Dominion, before we had an Intercolonial Railway. Take the conditions which then prevailed. Even when the provinces by the sea sent to this parliament representatives of the people, how did they come to the city of Ottawa to attend to their duties? Only through American territory. Many were obliged to go to Portland by steamer and thence to Montreal by the Grand Trunk. Those conditions prevailed not only with respect to the assembling of the parliament of Canada, but in many other ways. When I started out as a young man to obtain a technical education, did I look to the province of Ontario or to the province of Quebec? Were my eyes turned to the great University of McGill or to the University of Toronto? No; and mine is only one of many cases. Where did we receive our technical education? Passing from our higher schools, we were compelled to go to the neighbouring republic, across the waters of the Bay of Fundy, to Massachusetts or to universities in other parts of the American republic. The relationships between the provinces were such that we hardly knew each other. We were rather led to believe that the great province of Quebec was an impassable barrier between us and the province of Ontario. We did not know each other. Those who studied our geographies knew that there was a city of Montreal, it is true, but we were chiefly impressed with the fact that it was near Caughnawaga, that euphonious name rather attracting the attention of the school student of that day. There was not much commercial intercourse or social intercourse between us. We were a separated people. What is true with respect to the educational features, is true with respect to all the conditions of life; and the construction of the Intercolonial Railway changed those conditions. If I may be pardoned for referring to myself, I was compelled to go to an American university; but I can refer with pride to the fact that my son is attending McGill University; and what has brought about these changed conditions ? I think there is no element which has contributed more than the construction of the Intercolonial Railway. We now know each other as we did not know each other previous to that time. With respect to the province of Quebec, there was created in our minds as young students a prejudice against it; but the intercourse, social and otherwise, the interchange of trade, and the communications which have been provided by means of the Intercolonial Railway have removed that prejudice. I remember the time in the maritime provinces when there was a prejudice against the great province of Ontario, when to call a man a Canadian was regarded as applying to him a term of opprobrium. We knew of Toronto, it is true : but studying our geographies, we knew of it as a city that was somewhere near the great Falls of Niagara.

When we took up our history we read of it as a city which in the war of 1812, had a number of its buildings, including the parliament buildings, destroyed. We knew of these things, but there was a separation between the people of the west and the people of the east. These conditions were however changed by the opening up of the Intercolonial Railway. Then began the inrush into the maritime provinces of the commercial travellers from our western cities. Before that road was built, if any young man wanted a suit of clothes and could not get what he desired at home, he would never think of going to Montreal or Toronto, but would run over to Boston. But all that has been changed and the people of eastern Canada have acquired knowledge with respect to the people of Ontario and Quebec which they did not formerly possess. We are to-day one people. We can go to the province of Quebec and give the hand of welcome to our brethren there ; we can go into the great province of Ontario and there meet our fellow-citizens as Canadians all. All these prejudices, which formerly existed, have disappeared, and in their place a national spirit has been engendered, to which I am sure the construction and maintenance of the Intercolonial Railway has contributed more than any other event in our history. It seems to me that we should discuss this question from a national standpoint. The expenditures on that road should be discussed in no carping spirit, and I was surprised to hear hon. members from the west on the opposite side speak in the way they did. I had supposed that they were the only true apostles of imperialism. That they were at least the great federationists of the Dominion. They lay that flattering unction to their souls sometimes in their speeches, but in discussing this great national highway of Canada they did not show the broad national spirit which the subject demands. They did not approach it in a Canadian spirit but rather with a regard for sectionalism. When the ex-minister of railways (Mr. Haggart) and the hon. gentleman who followed him (Mr. Barker) referred to the expenditure, I wondered how the views which they expressed were accepted by their colleagues from the maritime provinces who sit on the other side. If the hon. gentlemen wanted to discredit and depreciate the Intercolonial Railway before the people of Canada, in the interests of some great corporations, if it was their intention to discredit that road and place it in such a position before the minds of the people of Canada that they would be ready to transfer its ownership to some great corporation, they took the very methods that would best tend to the accomplishment of that object. And I am sure that their utterances cannot in any way receive the approval of hon. gentlemen opposite, who represent constituencies in the maritime provinces. I was very much impressed with the speech of the hon. the ex-minister of railways. He travelled all the way from Manhattan Beach to St. Peters' village in Cape Breton. But he in no sense discussed the Intercolonial Railway as a national highway, which should be dear to the hearts of every Canadian,—not merely those who reside in the maritime provinces, but those who reside in the great business centres of Toronto and Montreal and other sections of western Canada. His remarks rather confirmed the rumour that although he had been at one time Minister of Railways, he had never acquired much knowledge about the Intercolonial Railway. There is a rumour, unfounded perhaps, that when he once did travel over the Intercolonial Railway in his official car, he went to Halifax and returned to Moncton, and there took a breathing spell of about an hour, but did not deign to leave his car to visit the works connected with that railway, although he was Minister of Railways at the time. That rumour may or may not be well founded, but I am sure that in so far as the speech of the hon. gentleman is concerned, it rather confirms the rumour that he did not have much knowledge of the conditions which prevail along the line of that road. You would think when he referred to the winter port of New Brunswick, that he was speaking of Newfoundland. He spoke of it as the city of St. John's. He does not even know that it is St. John and not St. John's. His knowledge of that road seems to be very imperfect, and to have placed him before this committee in the position of one who was rather more interested in some prospectuses in New York than in the proper maintenance and advancement of our great national highway. I have said that the Intercolonial Railway is one of the most splendid assets of Canada, and I shall not attempt to elaborate the point. While I could not show that there has been any accumulation of profits in the treasury of the Dominion, yet I think that the building of that road has created a national spirit and a national life which, but for it, we would not have acquired, and which finds vent, not merely on the floor of parliament, but in the press of the country and on public platforms throughout the land. That national spirit is due to the cementing together of the various sections of Canada by this railway intercommunication. It may be that as this is an asset which cannot be estimated in dollars and cents, some people may regard it as of little value, but I do not view it in that light. And while this road has not given us an accumulation of dollars and cents so far, it seems to me that even in that respect it has a bright future. It seems to me that when the fathers of confederation framed the 145th section of the British North America Act, by which they recognized the fact that it was essential for the consolidation of these provinces that there should be an iron band connecting together the three provinces that then constituted Canada, the idea must have been dominant in their minds that in the future, as our Dominion came into its vast western territory, it was quite as essential that that road should travel beyond the lines of the St. Lawrence and go west, and unite whatever then might be the provinces of the Dominion of Canada.

I am sure those great statesmen, the builders of this confederation, had in mind at that time that it was in the interests of the then three provinces to have them united by such a bond, and would be still more in the interests of the Dominion as it became enlarged, as it extended and became the vast domain which it is to-day. And yet hon. members will complain with respect to the expenditure of the $65,000,000, as it is alleged, that went out of the coffers of this country to construct the Intercolonial Railway. We hear nothing from these hon. gentlemen with respect to the canals of the country. We do not hear it in the maritime provinces as a matter of complaint that there have been such large expenditures upon the canals. When a vote is proposed in this House with respect to our canals, you do not find hon. members from the maritime provinces rising in their places to complain. We recognize that the business interests of the Dominion demand that there shall be such means of transportation, we recognize that it is in the interests of not only western Canada but of all Canada that these canals should be maintained. We have invested, as a Dominion, $65,000,000 in the Canadian Pacific Railway, not one rail of which do we owe, not a mile of which do we control—indeed, it controls us rather. I am not complaining with regard to these matters; but when complaints are made with respect to an investment in our great national highway, and when these complaints are repeated year after year, surely I am justified in making reference to these other expenditures concerning which no complaint has been made. We have a Canadian Pacific, which is not a through line on our Canadian land, but which runs in part through a state of the American Union. We have a Canadian Pacific which, while a credit to Canada, is not in all its parts Canadian. When the British government requires to send its marines or its soldiers across the continent, it is obliged to utilize a portion of the Intercolonial Railway, because it is not permissible for it to send them through American territory over the short line of the Canadian Pacific. So I say that, in all fairness, when we discuss the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway we should remember the part it has played as a great public work in Canada, we should view it from a higher standpoint than that which has been assumed, I regret to say, by some hon. gentlemen on the other side. I do not see my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell) rising in his place to discuss the Intercolonial Railway from this point of view. He lives on the line of the Intercolonial Railway and knows something about it. I assume that my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker), who takes such a deep interest in it, has never been over the line of the Intercolonial Railway. I assume that he has never been in the city of Moncton, of which he has heard so much within the last month or so.

Some hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. EMMERSON. If I am wrong in that I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) will correct me. I think that Mr. P. S. Archibald came to him rather. Certainly from the speech the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) has made and the indications he has given before the Public Accounts Committee of his knowledge of the Intercolonial Railway, one would assume that he had never been over the line of Intercolonial Railway, and knew nothing about it. While he is the critic, and while the ex-Minister of Railways assists him in his carpings against the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway, do we hear anything from hon. gentlemen like my hon. friend from Pictou, or my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Fowler), or my hon. friend from Sunbury and Queen's (Mr. Wilmot), or my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Ganong)? They must know a great deal more about the Intercolonial Railway, about its circumstances and its workings than do these other hon. gentlemen. But they have not made these complaints. I assume that they are not in sympathy with these complaints, because they recognize the value of the Intercolonial Railway. They know what it is doing, not merely for the people of the maritime provinces but for the people of all Canada. They recognize that trade and the very heart of trade is centered in that great national highway under government control; and I am sure they would not wish to raise their voices in any attempt to depreciate the Intercolonial Railway as a government road, or tend to cause the people of western Canada to become prejudiced against it or to unite in any way against the maintenance of it as a government road.

Now, I have said that there was a future for the Intercolonial Railway. While the balances have not always been on the right side, yet I take this stand with respect to the matter—that that road was not constructed as a dividend earning work for this Dominion. I hold that no Minister of Railways is called upon to stand up in this parliament and apologise even if the Intercolonial Railway is not a paying concern in dollars and cents. Its earnings are of a different character, its benefits to the people of the Dominion are not to be measured by mere dollars and cents. It was not built as a commercial road, and I hold, before this committee and before the people of Canada, that there should not be any complaint, even though that road may not show a surplus in earnings. In considering the Intercolonial Railway this committee and the people of Canada must reckon on the future of the maritime provinces.

I am not going to speak at any length with respect to the future of those provinces. In the great province of Nova Scotia there are magnificent industries in the island of Cape Breton, which are speaking in thunder tones to the Dominion of Canada, to the continent of America and to the world, of its great natural resources and its illimitable wealth. More than that. I think the province of New Brunswick has features which will make it a great factor in the support of the Intercolonial Railway and the upbuilding of the Dominion. It must not be supposed that because we have not increased in population we are in any sense going behind. You must bear in mind that while our population has decreased there are many reasons for it. You are spending thousands of dollars yearly of the money of this Dominion in your immigration policy. For the last thirty years, thousands upon thousands have been invested across the water in order to induce people to come to this Dominion. Are their eyes ever directed towards the maritime provinces ? Do the immigration agents, do the transportation companies, ever direct those intending immigrants to these maritime provinces, or instruct them concerning their wealth and resources ? Have we ever had on that immigration staff a man from the maritime provinces to direct the people of the old country to those provinces of this Dominion ? We find that while you have spent thousands and thousands of dollars on immigration, the object has been to direct the people who are seeking a home in the western continent, not to the maritime provinces, not to Quebec or Ontario, but to the wheat fields of the great west. I am not complaining of the efforts which have been put forth to build up our western country, which is worthy of all that can be said in its favour. But we should not forget that we have lands in the maritime provinces which will compare with the prairie lands of the west. I do not wish our immigration agents to forget that in our magnificent marshes of the lower provinces, in the counties of Annapolis, of Colchester, of Hants, of Cumberland, of Westmoreland, of Albert, and of numerous other counties in those vast regions of marsh lands, there is land equal if not superior to the very best prairie lands of the west, land that is inexhaustible in its richness, and land which, if it ever did become exhausted, can easily be renewed through inundations caused by cutting the dykes and allowing the muddy waters of the Bay of Fundy to enrich the soil over which they would flow.

I do not wish to assume the role of a prophet, but I venture to say that the Intercolonial Railway will yet prove to be one of the richest dividend bearing concerns in this great Dominion, that it will one day prove the wisdom of its founders, that it will one day justify the Minister of Railways and Canals in his efforts to make this railway worthy of this great Dominion. He found it a tramway and he has left it a railway. He has equipped it in a manner which I need not describe. But there is one thing which has not been mentioned. In mentioning it, I am not speaking upon my own authority, or from any knowledge I possess with respect to it, although I have some such knowledge; but I know the feelings of the business men of Toronto and of Montreal with respect to the establishment of a fast freight service between Montreal and Halifax and Sydney. That is one of the creations of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. I was told not many months ago in the city of Toronto, that it was proving of incalculable benefit to the business interests of the west, and that it was contributing to an increase in the business between the west and the east. This is but one evidence of the value of the efforts which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has been putting forth to make a railway out of what seemed to have been the intention, or the result of an intention, to side-track at least a portion of the Intercolonial Railway.

Now, let me say to the members of this committee who are not familiar with the circumstances of the Intercolonial Railway, that there is a great section of it, that portion between St. John and the Sydneys and Halifax, which I suppose is one of the best paying sections of any road in eastern Canada. I believe that there are corporations which are turning greedy eyes upon that section of the Intercolonial Railway. It is true that perhaps they might not be so desirous of having what is known as the northern division. It has been alleged that the hon. gentleman who held the position of Minister of Railways and Canals in a former government, was to make of that a branch line, and that the line between St. John and the Sydneys and Halifax, should be handed over to some one or other of the corporations, with the view of letting them take advantage of the large expenditure which Canada has made on the Intercolonial Railway. I venture to say that if it is not known in this section of Canada, it is at least believed in the eastern section, that the intention in 1896 was that the Intercolonial Railway should cease to be a government road, at least that portion of it which is so desirable between Halifax and the Sydneys and St. John; the intention was that that portion should cease to be a part of the great government system, and that only that section between Moncton and Lévis should be under the control of the Dominion. It is true that that portion of the road, the northern division, goes through a great stretch of country, but not an unimportant section; it taps a splendid country, splendid in its lumber resources, splendid in its wealth of fisheries; but yet as it travels around the shores of the St. Lawrence it deviates so far from the straight line that its maintenance is rather expensive. But that it is an essential feature for that section of the country, that it is an essential feature for the Dominion, I am prepared to maintain before this committee and the people of this country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is believed to have been the intention of those who were charged with the responsibility of governing this country at that time; and I am led to believe by the tone of the speech of the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) that there still remains in his mind a lingering intention of attaining that object by contributing in some manner towards prejudicing the Intercolonial Railway in the minds of the people, in order that, if ever an opportunity should occur, the idea at which I have hinted might be carried out. I do not think that, in justice to the Dominion as a whole, without regard to any sectionalism, without regard to the people of my own province nor of any other province—I do not think it would be in the interest of any section of Canada that any such arrangements should take place. It would be unfair, unjust, and it would be a breach of the terms of confederation. If the terms of confederation are to be carried out in their entirety, that the Intercolonial Railway shall be extended, it shall crawl further west year after year until possibly it shall extend to the graneries of the west and our seaports shall be the ports whence sail the rich products of the great western country. We hear much from hon. members who represent the western constituencies complaining of the exorbitant freight charges of the railway companies in the west. Complaint after complaint has been made, not merely in this House, but before the committees of this House. If there is to be a remedy applied, one that will be apt and effective, that remedy will be found in the extension of the government system of railways into that western country, so that the government may control freight rates in the west in the same way as it now controls freight rates in the eastern section of Canada.

The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has spoken of the expenditure made in the city of St. John, and he has termed it a sink hole. I think these were elegant words of the hon. gentleman. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) referred to the purchase of some marsh land within the city limits of St. John at the rate of $475 per acre. I want to know how far my hon. friends from the province of New Brunswick, having a knowledge of the completion of the terminal facilities at St. John, are prepared to say 'hear, hear' to the remarks of the hon. member for South Lanark? I take the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Fowler), who is in my eye at the present moment, and I am sure that he would not say 'hear, hear' to any expression of the kind in respect to the expenditure made at the city of St. John. I think the complaint was that there was an expenditure of $225,000 in connection with the wharf and freight shed. Let me tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) that a portion of the money was expended in renewing the building and perfecting the foundations of the station, in the city of St. John built by the hon. gentleman himself when he was in office, and which foundations were so imperfect that if they had not been repaired, and if this money had not been expended, the station-house would have tumbled to the ground. Let me tell him that if he and the hon. member for Hamilton complain of the payment of $475 per acre for marsh lands within the city limits of St. John, near the round house of the railway, if they feel badly, if their feelings are harrowed in respect to that, the only solace I can offer is to refer them to the public accounts of a few years ago when they bought the Harris property in the city of St. John at $1 per foot, and paid $200,000 for 200,000 feet. Then, they did not use it. My hon. friend has complained of the fact that there has been charged to capital account on the Intercolonial Railway a sufficient sum of money for the extension of the yards within the city limits of St. John, near the round house of the terminal facilities there. He has complained that the material, although charged against capital account and although set aside and assigned for this purpose, is not on the ground. Let me remind my hon. friend of one fact that was disclosed before the committee, which he has apparently forgotten, that this has been the system which has prevailed along the line of the Intercolonial Railway since it has been the Intercolonial Railway. Let me remind him of the fact that Mr. Pottinger, in giving his evidence before the Public Accounts Committee, stated that that was the very course followed when the St. Charles branch was built in the province of Quebec. The hon. gentleman did not complain then. He did not tell this committee that that was a custom which had prevailed in the bookkeeping of the Intercolonial Railway as far back as the time of the construction of the St. Charles branch and that it has been continued from that time down to the present, not merely under this government, or under the regime of the Minister of Railway and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair), but under the regime of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart). Yet, he made much ado in respect to the fact. The expenditure, he said, was charged to capital account in the city of St. John, and he complained that it had been done in 1900, and that the material was still unused. I want to remind my hon. friend, if he wants something to weep over, that although the Harris property was purchased years ago for the sum which I have named, it remained idle year after year and year after year, and it was never utilized, except by the boys for playing base ball and cricket and as an athletic ground, for any purpose in connection with the Intercolonial Railway, until the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals attempted to make the port of St. John what it is, and not until he attempted to complete the terminal facilities there was this property utilized.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was altogether unproductive during all these years.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was absolutely unproductive during all that period of years. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) is made to say in his speech before the committee last evening that not a mile of the sidings in the city of St. John had been constructed, and yet he remembers the evidence of Mr. Pottinger wherein he stated that there was a mile and over of the sidings constructed and that several sidings, amounting to about thirteen miles in all, were under construction and were being attended to at this moment. I want also to remind my hon. friend (Mr. Barker), who made a complaint in respect to the purchase of this marsh land at $475 per acre, that the property was owned by the Gilbert family and if he knows anything about the politics of that country he will know that these gentlemen were Conservatives.

Mr. BARKER. Does that make any difference ?

Mr. EMMERSON. My hon. friend (Mr. Barker) thinks it does make a difference sometimes.

Mr. BARKER. I think it does not.

Mr. EMMERSON. It sometimes acts as a boomerang, as my hon. friend has found out before the Public Accounts Committee on occasions. Had the hon. gentleman taken the pains to learn the fact, he would have known that when it was sought to purchase that property by the Athletic Association of St. John, they could not purchase it for less than $1,250 per acre ? Yet, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was enabled to purchase it at $475 per acre.

And now, Mr. Chairman, there has been considerable reference made to the production of a letter before the Public Accounts Committee. I believe that last evening when I happened to be out of the chamber for a moment, a very courteous remark was made by the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Ingram) with respect to myself, and at that moment, if I am informed correctly, some hon. member from one of the Ontario constituencies interjected the remark : That is a specimen of New Brunswick politics. I want to tell my hon. friends the Tory members from the province of Ontario, that if I wish for and need to take lessons in political morals or political ethics I will not go to them. I did produce a letter, and I have recited to the committee and it is part of the records of this House, the circumstances under which I secured that letter. I did not go to any spittoon and pick out the pieces and have them pasted together as was done by the Tory party some years ago in the province of Ontario in connection with a letter of the Hon. Edward Blake. I am quite sure that if any reflections are to be indulged in in connection with the production of the letter, the reflections should be upon the hon. member from Hamilton (Mr. Barker). I have told that when I went to Moncton I learned with respect to this letter ; I secured the letter in the way which I have detailed, and I produced the letter before the committee, and that is what troubles the hon. member from Hamilton. That is the difficulty with him. I think, Sir, that the scene in the Public Accounts Committee when my hon. friend was examining the witness in respect to the letter—at which time my courtesy forbade me from interfering in his examination—I think, Sir, that that scene should have been the subject of the photographers art. The picture of my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) would have been a study, and as for my hon., my restless friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) why, if I could describe him as he appeared to be at that moment this committee would revel in the description. I might perhaps indulge in a simile and say, that he looked very much like a hen that had been disturbed off her nest. Here was a witness who had stated that he had received a letter from the Minister of Railways and Canals, and he thought that the words of that letter were to tell him to accept certain railway ties, and the hon. member from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) was pressing the witness with the question: Yes, the letter told you to take or accept these ties. The witness not having in mind clearly the exact terms of the letter did not know exactly, but he thought that was it. My hon. friends opposite in their anticipation, expecting to go before the country with a grievance, knowing that they had utterly failed in their exploring expedition before the Public Accounts Committee, knowing that they had utterly failed in respect to finding anything that would in any way besmirch the Minister of Railways and Canals, thought to themselves: Oh, here is something we can appeal to the country upon; the Minister of Railways and Canals has written this letter and it is not forthcoming. But unfortunately for them I had taken the precaution to secure that letter.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, unfortunately for them that letter was produced, and that is what bothers them, and, Sir, the country will thank me for having that letter and for having placed it before the committee.

My hon. friend (Mr. Barker) has been kind enough to make a personal reference to myself in connection with the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair). He said—I do not quote his exact words—that it was rumoured that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) and the member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) were not on the best of terms. Let me tell my hon. friend (Mr. Barker) that I have been a close and intimate friend of the Minister of Railways and Canals for a quarter of a century, and let me tell him that from the beginning of our acquaintanceship down to the present moment, our personal relations have not in any sense been strained in the slightest. Let me tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) that we have been in close communion—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. EMMERSON. Do my hon. friends opposite think that is strange. I do not belong to any nest of traitors. I have never been associated in any system of brigandage, political or otherwise. I have never gone into a constituency and had an ex-colleague of mine, a gentleman who was my premier come into the county and canvass against me and refer to me in terms that were certainly anything but complimentary. I have never been placed in any such position. I can say that as regards the Minister of Railways and Canals and myself, in so far as our personal relations are concerned they have always been of the most amicable and friendly character, even during this session from the very commencement of it down to the present day. But let me say this: I have not always agreed with the Minister of Railways and Canals with respect to the management of the Intercolonial Railway. I have not hesitated to tell the hon. minister in private, and I am not ashamed to say it before this committee and before the country, that in respect to the management of the Intercolonial Railway I have not been in accord with him. These gentlemen opposite call it a political road, and well may they call it that; but, it is not a political road in the interests of the Liberal party. The complaint that has been made—and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals knows it—is, that the management of the Intercolonial Railway during the past six years in so far as its details and its officials are concerned, has been identical with that which prevailed prior to 1896. And while the Minister of Railways and Canals has stated before this House that he has given the utmost freedom to the employees of that road in respect to their voting. I want to tell him that his officers, and that his bosses, and that his foremen have not been so generous. I want to tell the minister that in many instances there have been good Liberal votes sacrificed, not in the interest of that fairness of which he has been an apostle, but of which his officials and his foremen have not always been apostles by any means. I have not seen eye to eye with the minister. I have felt on occasions that there had been men placed in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway who should not be there, and I have so told the minister. I have felt that these men were there to the exclusion of many competent men in our ranks, and of our own country, but, Sir, that has in no sense interfered with the relationship between the minister and myself. I hold these views, and I am an apostle of the idea that the minister should be surrounded by men who are in sympathy, by men who are not seeking to make the Liberal party dissatisfied with the management of the Intercolonial Railway, by men who are not seeking to create dissensions in the ranks of the Liberal party. I have been an apostle of the idea that the minister should be surrounded by men who are in sympathy not only with him but with the government which he represents. I tell the hon. minister that while it may be true—and it is preached on the other side of the House to-day, though it was not preached a few years ago—that there should be a generous treatment of the employees of the road, while they should be given the greatest latitude possible, while their manhood should not be stunted or suppressed in any way, yet I feel that they should not take advantage of that generosity. While they are not called upon to refrain from casting their votes in favour of the Conservative party, if they so wish, they should not be placed in a position where they can coerce a Liberal voter in the exercise of his franchise.

With regard to the personal reference made to myself in that connection by my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker), I want to tell him that that is the sum total of my complaint. The insinuation which my hon. friend threw out in his speech last night must have been, I am sure, from my observation of the hon. gentleman, unintentional; but if he harboured any suspicion that I could in any way be identified with those who belonged to the nest of traitors, or could in any way strike below the belt, I want him to disabuse his mind of any such idea. I produced the letter, because it came honourably into my hands, it came honourably into the hands of the gentleman who gave it to me, and I gave it honourably into the hands of the committee. The country has the benefit of it—that is what my hon. friend complains of—and the country having the benefit of it, the whole evidence is there, and the hon. Minister of Railways is exonerated freely and fully in respect to the matter.

Mr. BARKER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ? Did he get that letter for the purpose of producing it to the committee

Mr. EMMERSON. I want to say to my hon. friend that that was my intention.

Mr. BARKER. I am sure the Minister of Railways will be grateful.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will tell the hon. gentleman that that was my intention in the event of the inquiry being pursued, and in the event of the matter arising. The inquiry was pursued, the question did arise, and I carried out my intention and produced the letter. I had heard rumours that possibly the letter might not be wanted. There were a great many rumours. A friend of mine, who was a political opponent at the last election, it is true, and who held a seat in this House in the last parliament, made two or three visits to the city of Ottawa, and I understood that he took my hon. friend from Hamilton under his tutelage, and attempted to pump into my hon. friend—I hope the term will not be considered inelegant—his ideas with respect to the Intercolonial Railway ; and I daresay that my hon. friend had intimated to him by that gentleman the fact that there was a rumour with respect to this very letter.

Mr. BARKER. No.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then, if my hon. friend had not, I can only say it was public humour in the city of Moncton. I heard it as a rumour in the city of Moncton that there was such a letter, and hence I sought to get it; but I understood that after his visits, the gentleman to whom I have referred went away in a very much disgusted state with respect to the inquiry. I do not know who expressed the most disgust, my hon. friend from Hamilton or the gentleman to whom I refer. It is rumoured—if we want to indulge in rumours—that before they bade each other good-bye, they exchanged compliments of a not very complimentary character. But whatever may have transpired, I shall not place upon 'Hansard' the rumours I heard, though I have no doubt they would be quite as interesting as the prospectus which was placed on 'Hansard' as a matter of record last evening. While an attempt is being made to draw a herring across the trail with respect to this letter, I wonder if my attitude with respect to it was any less dignified than was the attitude of the hon. ex-Minister of Railways with respect to Mr. P. S. Archibald. Mr. Archibald, it will be remembered, is the hero of the shingle story, which I think is a part of the record of this House; certainly it was placed on the Table of the House. The story is that once there was a very interesting episode in the history of the Intercolonial Railway; that it was on the eve of the general election of 1896; that railway passes, which were made up in book form, were sent out by emissaries to various stations along the line of the Intercolonial Railway, from Lévis to the Sydneys, and distributed free gratis, so that all who ran might read, and they could travel by the Intercolonial Railway without charge; that the telegrams kept coming in, 'Send me twenty-five thousand more shingles,' and so on; that although the supply had been very generous in the first instance, it had run out, and more and more came the cry of the horse-leech for these passes. Mr. Archibald was dismissed from the Intercolonial Railway, and I have no doubt that that gentleman is not very amiably disposed towards the hon. Minister of Railways. I did not think he would be a witness before the Public Accounts Committee of this House, because I remember an occasion in the legislature of New Brunswick, when there was a committee investigating a matter which had originated in the brain of Mr. P. S. Archibald, after his dismissal from the Intercolonial Railway, and when that gentleman, at the expense of the country, was brought to Fredericton, and was kept there week after week on the expectation that he would give his evidence as the originator of the story; but just before it was necessary to call him, he disappeared into thin air, and the people of Fredericton have not laid eyes on him to this day. It occurred to me, therefore, that possibly that gentleman might have found his way to Ottawa thinking there would not be any inquiry into thet subject of ties or any necessity for producing that letter. Therefore I did not rush to the committee at once and announce the letter. I produced it in all good time, unfortunately for the member for Hamilton. The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has made reference to a gentleman holding a very responsible position, a gentleman well and favorably known throughout the province of New Brunswick, one of the ablest lawyers, as I believe, in this Dominion, a gentleman who holds the position of Attorney General of the province of New Brunswick, the Hon. William Pugsley. The member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) made reference on a former occasion to the Hon. Mr. Pugsley in terms that were at least intended to be slighting, and for which he was afterwards called upon to make amends and I believe did apologize. On this occasion he could not pass by a discussion of the Intercolonial Railway and its administration by the Minister of Railways without indulging in a reflection upon the Hon. Mr. Pugsley. He told us that Mr. Pugsley had been recently in New York in company with the Minister of Railways.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I did not say that he was in New York with the Minister of Railways, but I said he was in New York negotiating the sale of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. EMMERSON. I will read what Mr. Pugsley stated himself, in reply to the statement of the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), last evening. I have here a telegram from Mr. Pugsley, dated St. John, N.B., April 25, and addressed to the Hon. A. G. Blair, Minister of Railways :

I see by parliamentary report in this morning's paper that Hon. Mr. Haggart stated that Mr. Meyer, of New York, had informed him I had been in New York negotiating for sale of Intercolonial Railway. The story is a fabrication from beginning to end. I never either wrote or spoke to Mr. Meyer or any one else on the subject of the sale of the Intercolonial Railway or authorized any one else to do so, I have not been in New York for many months and have no acquaintances whatever with Mr. Meyer.

WILLIAM PUGSLEY.

I read that telegram in connection with what the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) said on the floor of this House last evening. This is what the hon. gentleman said :

I want to show the whole connection. I want to show that the hon. gentleman was down in New York in reference to it, and that he had his agents in New York negotiating for the sale of the Intercolonial Railway—Mr. Pugsley and others ; it is so reported down there. I would not have brought the matter up were it not alleged that these parties had purchased the Canada Atlantic Railway, which they say is part and parcel of their scheme. Mr. Webb has published the statement in the papers that he has bought the Adirondack Railway, and that its stock has advanced from 40 to 106 or 107, and that the stock of this Dominion Securities Company, which has not an asset in the world except the contracts or agreements which they professed to have made with the Dominion government, and the possibility of arranging this grand scheme with the province of Nova Scotia, has been selling up to 5 or 7 per cent premium. Will the hon. gentleman be quiet until I finish reading this circular ?

The telegram which I have here is certainly a complete refutation of either any statement contained in the extract I have read, on any insinuation thrown out against Mr. Pugsley or any other gentleman connected with the transaction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was not any transaction.

Mr. EMMERSON. I assume that my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) will be prepared now, as he was on a former occasion, to withdraw his statement and apologize not only to the committee, but to Mr. Pugsley.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. member for South Lanark will be able to read his authority upon which he makes his statement afterwards.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will he kindly do it afterwards?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I will.

Mr. EMMERSON. I must apologize for taking up so much of the time of the committee, but I am sure that I am entitled to the indulgence of hon. members, because I have not trespassed, either this session or last, at any great length upon the time of parliament, either in the House or in committee.

But I want to invite the attention of the committee for a moment to the evident desire and attempt of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), to show that all these tie transactions and coal purchases were made during the election of 1900. Of course he could not bring any evidence to show that there was any wrong-doing or to show even suspicious circumstances, but he evidently desired to have it go to the country that these purchases were made in contemplation of and in connection with the Dominion elections. Innuendos and insinuations were the weapons which my hon. friend used. Having no evidence of any fact, he had to resort to these miserable tactics. He made a reference to Mr. Curran, but, as was shown before the committee, Mr. Curran is the foreman of the Sumner Company, which is presided over by one of the leading lights of the Conservative party in New Brunswick, and which carries on a very large business, not only at Moncton, but at Bathurst, and Mr. Curran is the general manager of that concern at the town of Bathurst, in the county of Gloucester. My hon. friend threw out the suggestion that Mr. Curran was in some way connected with the government, as the treasurer of the Liberal organization in that section of the province, but I am sure that my hon. friend has no facts upon which to base even a suspicion of that kind. I am sure that he has not been well advised, that he has not been well coached, and there seems to have been a failure of connection with respect to that information in the same way that there was with respect to a great deal of the information that came from Sackville to my hon. friend from Hamilton. If my hon. friend will refer to the evidence before the committee, he will find that the contract with Mr. Curran was not entered into until some months after the elections took place. He will find that there was no business transaction between Mr. Curran and the Intercolonial Railway until about January, 1901, and then that it was based upon a tender which Mr. Curran had put in for the supply of ties. And yet my hon. friend will have the country believe that this was an election transaction, and that there must be something wrong connected with it because it took place during the election year. My hon. friend has no evidence other than his suspicions, and I do not think, however, much he might wish to mislead the committee that this kind of evidence would enable him to do so. But I am sure he would not desire to mislead the committee——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He would like us not to buy anything for a year before an election.

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, let the railway stop for a year whenever an election is to come on. What I have just said was true also with regard to the coal transaction. I am sure the evidence with respect to the purchase of coal was clear, convincing. The purchase was made at a time when a strike was believed to be imminent in the collieries in Nova Scotia. I know that it was a matter of common knowledge at that time that such a strike was feared to be pending. It was referred to in the press day after day. Notice was given by the men to the managers; there were disputes, there were threatenings. As Mr. Pottinger stated, there was, at that time, a great lessening of the supply of coal below what it was usual for the Intercolonial Railway to carry. Had there been such a strike, had it been impossible to acquire from the collieries of Nova Scotia the necessary coal, and had the railway been obliged to stop its traffic for want of coal, what a cry would have been raised from one end of the country to the other, as to the incompetency and incapacity of the Minister of Railways. I do think my hon. friend has strained the point, that he has endeavoured to mislead when he says this coal was purchased during an election year. Why, the coal was not even purchased during an election year, but during the year succeeding the general election of 1900.

Now, I do think the discussion with respect to the Intercolonial Railway should be based upon the value of the Intercolonial Railway to the country, its condition in relation to the work it is doing, and keeping in mind the work it has done for this Dominion. I trust this spirit will prevail. I trust there will be no attempt on the part of those in the west to create a prejudice against the maritime provinces or to seek to give the impression that this road is simply in the interest of those provinces. My hon. friend from Hamilton is a business man, he knows that it is not——

An hon. MEMBER. He is a lawyer.

Mr. EMMERSON. Then I hope that as a lawyer, he will appreciate all the more what I am saying, for some lawyers are very good business men. I think the hon. gentleman must appreciate, as he certainly should appreciate, the fact that the Intercolonial Railway is an essential feature of this confederation, as it was stated to be by the British North America Act, and that it is to-day more than ever an essential feature; that, as such, it should be treated in a broad, magnanimous spirit, and that the Minister of Railways, when he asks the support of the House and the country for that road, should be met in a spirit that means the upbuilding of Canada, a spirit that is not merely carping and captious, that does not savour of the littleness that should characterize only parish politics. I have endeavoured to view the Intercolonial Railway from that standpoint, and I leave it to the committee further to discuss the question.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Turgeon) will allow me I would like to say a word in reference to Mr. Pugsley, and to give the authority for the statement I made with reference to him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. May I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart), before he goes into that, has he the same authority for coupling my name with the question of negotiations for the sale of the Intercolonial Railway ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The same authority—the same authority which said, as I stated last night, that when the hon. minister went to New York and heard about the matter, he said there was no probability of being able to carry out the deal. My authority is information given by an officer of the Dominion Securities Company. It says :

From the information which I obtained from an officer of the concern it appears that the Dominion Securities Company, was originally formed as a blind pool by Messrs. Seward Webb, Callaway and Van Etten. At that time Mr Callaway was president of the New York Central, while Mr. Van Etten occupied a somewhat similar position on the Boston and Albany. In the early part of last year the company was organized under the laws of New Jersey. Mr. Webb was attracted to Nova Scotia by the development going on at Sydney, C.B., and, having become acquainted with certain friends of the Minister of Railways at Ottawa, was assured by them that there was nothing to hinder him from getting possession of the Intercolonial Railway. Negotiations were carried on between Mr. Webb and his friends on the one hand and Hon. William Pugsley on the other. In the end, however, the Minister of Railways himself visited New York and made it plain to Mr. Webb and his friends that it was clean out of the question for them to acquire the Intercolonial at any rate, under existing conditions.

I mentioned to the credit of the minister last night that that was my information on the subject.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not happen to be in at the moment when the hon. gentleman read that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The letter goes on—it is a long letter, treating of the correspondence with Mr. Murray and negotiations with reference to building the road and trying to get over the Mackenzie & Mann contract—but this is entirely pertinent to this question:

As said above they have no intention of building to St. John. They are out to acquire, if possible, the South Shore contract promised to Mr. William Mackenzie, which, together with their contract in Cape Breton, would afford them, they imagine, the means of getting the control of the Intercolonial Railway.

This, of course, is hearsay.

My impression is they have been seriously mislead by Mr. Pugsley and are buoyed up by expectations not likely to be realized, so far, at least, as the acquisition of the Intercolonial Railway is concerned.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the name of the writer?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is an interview with an officer of the Dominion Securities Company.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have the promise of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) that he would give the name of his informant.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No such promise was given. I stated that the information from which I spoke was an interview with an officer of the Dominion Securities Company, and that that was the information given by the Dominion Securities Company. If there is any denial of the facts I will accept it as such, and assume that there was no such communication.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So far as I am concerned, I have already denied it, and, if necessary, I would again give emphasis to that denial. There is not a single solitary word of truth in the whole story. I do not say that no such thing as a suggestion of the control by private parties of the Intercolonial Railway has never been made. During the time I have been in the department, I have had people ask me, I have even had people write to me, to know why the government would not transfer or lease the Intercolonial Railway. But, as for having had any specific proposition, or as to having ever negotiated or been cognizant of any negotiation looking towards any such result, either from or by Mr. Pugsley or any other living person, nothing of the kind has ever occurred. The idea seems so absurd and preposterous that it scarcely calls for contradiction. Now the hon. gentleman has a letter there on the strength of which he has sought to impeach the character, or to reflect upon the character, of persons who have been named. The hon. gentleman, when asked if he would state his authority, says: I will be able to state my authority after the member for Westmoreland sits down. I asked him: Well, will my hon. friend do so? And he did not say he would not. Later on he got up and said that he wished for an opportunity, if the hon. member was through, of stating the authority upon which he made these statements in the House. I ask the hon. gentleman now to say whether he can withhold the name of this correspondent after he has given such an assurance?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name, name.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend has given his authority in the plainest possible way.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We did not hear it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Dominion Securities Company itself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, his statement is taken from an interview with an officer of the Dominion Securities Company itself, with regard to the business of that company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Who made the statement to him?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not at all necessary for my hon. friend to give the name of the particular officer. As long as it was an officer entitled to speak for that company, he has discharged his duty to the House in every way by stating that the information came to him from the Dominion Securities Company itself. I do not see the relevancy of asking the name of the particular officer. Reference has been made to the company. If the company sees fit to deny that any properly authorized officer has made a statement of that kind, that is another thing. My hon. friend has referred the Minister of Railways and Canals to the very company which has been named in the discussion carried on now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. The hon. gentleman may be under the impression that it was not necessary that this name should be given; but he cannot say it is not necessary in view of what has occurred. I again ask him whether he will supplement the assurance he has already given that he would furnish to us, who are interested in this matter, and to the committee, the authority upon which he made this statement. It is not sufficient to say that somebody was informed by an officer of the Dominion Securities Company. That proves nothing, that affords no chance for pursuing the inquiry. He ought to state who his informant is if he wishes to supplement the promise he has given.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I gave the statement for what it is worth, from information I received upon the subject. I stated that I heard from New York that Mr. Pugsley had been negotiating——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But who did the hon. gentleman hear it from ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is not necessary to say. The statement may be entirely untrue, there may not be a word of truth in it whatever. I give it for what it is worth. If Mr. Pugsley denies it, I accept his statement at once. It has been current rumour on the streets of New York; it was mentioned in Mr. Doull's remarks that there were negotiations for the purpose of building a railroad from the Georgian Bay, or from the great lakes, down to the Atlantic. There was talk of that in New York. I had information on that subject again and again. I heard that Mr. Pugsley had been negotiating. There may be no truth whatever in it.

The PRIME MINISTER. Why did you mention it then ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I obtained my information from a gentleman in whom I have perfect reliance.

The PRIME MINISTER. Name, name.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I believe his word thoroughly. I will write to the gentleman and find out whether he will give me authority to make use of his name. It was information that I obtained privately. But the fact is one which can be very easily verified. Was Mr. Webb negotiating with Mr. Pugsley in reference to the acquisition of running rights on the Intercolonial Railway, or the acquisition of the Intercolonial Railway ? It is denied by Mr. Pugsley, who says that he has not been in New York for a couple of months. It is with reference to a transaction which took place more than a couple of months ago, it is with reference to transactions when the circular of the Dominion Securities Company was issued. Surely they would not make a statement of that kind in New York——

The PRIME MINISTER. Who ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Dominion Securities Company.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is no authority. The hon. gentleman knows very well that corporations have no souls to damn or to save. Therefore it is no use to give the name of the corporation. Who is the man belonging to the corporation who made that statement ? There is no use telling us that the corporation has done this or done that, but if an officer of the corporation has done it, let us have his name.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In reference to whom ? Does the hon. gentleman say in reference to Mr. Pugsley ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly, Mr. Pugsley or anybody else. Mr. Pugsley denies the statement, and he has a right to the name of the author of the statement.

Mr. EMMERSON. I ask the hon. gentleman if his informant is Mr. Powell, the late member for Westmoreland ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I never had a conversation with Mr. Powell on the subject. My information came from New York from parties entirely indifferent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only other available source of information to the hon. gentleman is Mr. Archibald. Will he say whether it was Mr. Archibald ? Now, I would say this in all fairness : The hon. gentleman thought enough of the statement which he received to credit it. If he did not credit it, if he did not think the statement was worthy of credit, he ought not to have taken the responsibility of putting it before this whole country, of making a matter of record of the imputation which it contains. He ought to have ascertained upon what basis these things were being done. While I cannot say, and do not pretend to answer for the thousands of people that are in Canada as to what they may think or do, I do not think the hon. gentleman ought to couple my name as a minister in any transaction of that kind, and seek to create the impression that I was a party to or cognizant of any such transaction as he has described, without he is very sure there is a foundation upon which the statement has been built. I say it is due from the hon. gentleman to this House and to the presons who are concerned, since he has given publicity to these reports, that he should state the authority upon which he has given them. If he refuses to do it, he will not be doing what is just and fair by the members of this House, or by the persons involved.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In speaking upon the subject I mentioned no letter, no information that I had received further than this, that it was rumoured in New York city that negotiations were going on for the purpose of selling the Intercolonial Railway. The hon. minister in his speech today said I had no authority to say so, and Mr. Pugsley, after reading my remarks in the 'Hansard,' gave an explicit denial to the rumour. For the purpose of justifying the statement that I made yesterday, I said I made it pro tanto, for as much as it was worth, and I read an extract from a letter I had received. The hon. gentleman says it is no justification at all unless I give the man's name. All I have to say is that, on the authority of statements that were made to me, I firmly believed, when I made the statement, that such negotiations were going on. I was attacked by the hon. member for Westmoreland on the strength of the statement that Mr. Pugsley entirely denied it. Then, the justification for the statement I made was a private letter to myself, which I have not the authority to use, but I shall ask the party's permission. There are other matters contained in the letter which I would not like to make public, but I shall ask the party's permission to make use of this particular portion of the letter, and if I get authority I will read it to the House. If I do not get authority I will say so candidly and withdraw the statement.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax. The right hon. leader of the House is very much more sensitive over matters of this kind than I have seen him on previous occasions. I recall the occasion in this House, not many years ago, when the right hon. gentleman brought a telegram down from across the Atlantic denying that Mr. Hamilton-Smythe was an authorized agent of the Rothschilds. But, before that telegram was read to the House, it was rumoured the right hon. gentleman sent his secretary around to the Liberal press of this country for the purpose of making it public. I was present when the right hon. gentleman said, in answer to a question by Sir Charles Tupper who was then leading the opposition, that he would bring down to this House the telegram to which that was an answer, and I was also present on the following day when the right hon. gentleman came down to this House and said he would not bring it down because it was a private telegram. He produced in the House and distributed through the press a telegram for the purpose of discrediting Mr. Hamilton Smythe who had come forward with a better contract in respect to the Yukon railway than that which the government were attempting to put through the House. That was a public telegram, it was read to the House, it was sent to the press of the country, but the telegram which the right hon. gentleman sent across the Atlantic and which had produced that one, was, according to the right hon. gentleman, a private telegram. The Prime Minister, I think is not perfectly logical or perfectly consistent. He is very much more sensitive now than he was then. An hon. gentleman made certain statements in this debate. He said that there were rumours in New York which should be brought to the attention of the government. He was challenged for his authority and he said that he would give his authority. He read a statement which he says had been communicated to him in an interview with an officer of the Dominion Securities Company. The right hon. leader of the House says that corporations cannot act except by agents. I never understood that it was absolutely necessary in order to bind a corporation that you should have the name of the agent. Has the right hon. gentleman always been provided with the names of agents when he has been dealing with corporations in this House ? I do not think so. It is perfectly patent that although Mr. Pugsley denies that he ever had any negotiations with any officer of the Dominion Securities Company, that he can make all the denial in this case that he could make if the name were given to him and if Mr. Pugsley wishes to make a denial, then, it is a question of veracity between the informant of my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) and Mr. Pugsley.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. How are we to judge of that veracity if we have not his name ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) say that if we had the name we could judge ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We could inquire.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How shall we come to a definite conclusion ? By moving a resolution in this House stating which of these gentlemen is telling the truth ? The matter could not be definitely settled even if the name were given. The matter could not be definitely settled without a judicial inquiry of some kind I suppose. I am not aware that this House has any machinery at its disposal at the present time, as a House, for the purpose of making that inquiry. I submit therefore that my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) has in this case discharged every duty which he owes to the House and to the hon. member for Westmoreland who has read a telegram from Mr. Pugsley.

Mr. FRASER. I think this is a matter of more importance than one of merely passing moment. Any one of us may some day be in the same position. I do not think that any hon. member should make statements about another hon. member in the House, upon mere New York street rumour or upon a rumour that is obtained upon the curbstone, or in any offices of the brokers in New York, or in any office in New York. I think that the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) made a mistake, and I think there is no hon. gentleman in the House who feels it more than he does. The case mentioned by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) was a different case altogether. The position there was of a telegram sent. Nobody has asked the hon. member for South Lanark to produce the letter he wrote to this man asking him for this information. All that this committee has anything to do with is with the letter that he received and upon which letter he made the statement. Nobody cares about any other statements that may be contained in the letter which he received. Evidently the hon. gentleman wrote about a great many things. We have nothing to do with that letter and we have nothing to do with anything except the direct statement that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) and Mr. Pugsley were concerned in discussing this matter in some way. Mr. Pugsley could not speak except with the authority of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. Mr. Pugsley had no power to go to Mr. Meyer and discuss this matter with him. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was mentioned as going to New York in regard to this matter, and he was quoted as saying that he did not see his way clear to make this arrangement. That is a statement of the most damaging kind. It is a damaging statement to say that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals would ever think of discussing the question of the transferrence of the Intercolonial Railway. Does the hon. member for South Lanark, or does the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) think it fair, upon a New York rumour, upon a letter from a man whose name will not be given, to say that the Minister of Railways and Canals and Mr. Pugsley are talking about handing over this heritage of Canada to a lot of Yankee speculators ? This is not a trifling matter. It is not a trifling matter to say : We think the Minister of Railways and Canals should be looked after, that he is quietly going to work to hand over the Intercolonial Railway. The people in the maritime provinces believe that the Intercolonial Railway will not only become an admirable asset but a valuable road, and we must still have our own road in our own interest as well as in the interests of the people of Canada. I think the name should be given for these two reasons : The name should be given, in the first place, so that we may know the man who made this lying statement, and in the second place, the name should be given so that no member of this House may lightly charge a member on the other side and when challenged attempt to back it up by saying that it was rumoured in New York. Surely that is anything but fair. I think the hon. gentleman should rise in his place now and manfully say : Well, I heard it from so and so. The minister says it is not so, Mr. Pugsley says it is not so, I take it back and the man who signed this paper was wrong. He might have heard this, but I apologize to the House for making such a statement as I did upon evidence of such a character.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I desire to dispute the position which the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) occupies. Where is the charge against any member of the government, or any member of this House ? I made the statement that Mr. Pugsley was negotiating on authority which I thought to be correct, in reference to the Intercolonial Railway. I made no charge against any member of this House or in connection with it, and the statement completely exonerated the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to the extent that I said that when he heard it he put his foot upon the whole transaction I am told. What does the member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) mean ? What right has he to propose to teach lessons in honour and propriety ? Where is the lesson he can teach in reference to these things. What have I been guilty of ? I know my position in this House as well as any other man. Why is there all this absurd talk because at the most, I accused Mr. Pugsley of negotiating the sale of the Intercolonial Railway. I made no connection between Mr. Pugsley and any member of this House or any minister. Why am I taunted and questioned and taught lessons of propriety ; especially lessons from the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade).

Some hon. MEMBERS. Guysborough.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I beg pardon of the hon. gentleman from Annapolis (Mr. Wade), I mean the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). Look at the absurd position you want to put a member of the House in. You are asking a member of this House when he makes a statement with reference to a person outside of this House, to give proof and to furnish authority. The member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) has brought Mr. Pugsley's denial here. I accept his denial. I furnished the information to this House in reference to Mr. Pugsley, and I gave the statement on which I furnished that information. I will accept his denial fully, and I will ask the House to accept it fully, if I do not get authority to read these portions of the letter in justification of my course in reference to Mr. Pugsley. I am the judge of my own honour in reference to that gentleman. I know what is right and what ought to be done in the matter, and I will not receive lessons from the Minister of Railways or from any one else.

Mr. FRASER. I did not try to teach the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), although he has shown now that he needs teaching. I thought before he did not. I thought he had honour enough, that he should do what was expected from him under the circumstances. I am satisfied now to leave it to the judgment of the House that no teaching and no training would improve him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been trying to divert the attention of this committee from the main point, and substantially the only point under discussion. My hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) assured this House that he would give authority for his statement. What did that language of his mean ? Did it mean that he would ask the person who gave him this information, and whose letter he has in his hand, whether that person will consent ? Is that carrying out the promise which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) made to this House ? Why, Sir, if this question were free from political bias and if we were elsewhere than in this House of Commons, there would be no hesitation on the part of anybody in declaring that if the hon. gentleman were as good as his promise he should give the name and his authority.

Mr. EDWARDS. Let him give his authority now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) says he made no charges. Well, there is a very convenient way, which the hon. gentleman often avails himself of, of doing what for his purpose is very much safer than making charges, and which at the same time accomplishes the end he would have in view by making charges. He has availed himself of that method which is a frequent and common method with the hon. gentleman, and some others on that side of the House—not all I am happy to say, but some few. I think I can show the committee that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has adopted that expedient in this instance. He tells us that he makes no charge, but is not an insinuation just about as nasty a thing as a charge, and is it not harder to refute ? If I were to use the expression which would properly characterize the conduct of the hon gentleman (Mr. Haggart), he would consider it offensive, and I do not wish to use an offensive expression. I tell the hon. gentleman, that if he did not make a charge he did this : Referring to me he says : The Minister of Railways is going to extend the Intercolonial Railway to the Georgian Bay; the Minister of Railways hopes at some future date to reach the North-west; I wonder is it the syndicate of the friends of the Minister of Railways who are trying to negotiate the sale of the Intercolonial Railway at the present moment—not three months ago, not two months ago, not four months ago as the member for Lanark discovers now; but at the present moment. The hon. member for Lanark did this. He said : That the Minister of Railways and his friends were trying to negotiate the sale of the Intercolonial Railway at the present time in New York; and he exclaimed : Is it under the auspices of the Dominion Securities Company that this extension of the Intercolonial Railway is going to be made to the west ? Does my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) think that was a commendable and worthy insinuation for him to make against a minister of the Crown ; that that minister was connected with a syndicate that had his friendship and with which he was allied—if not actually allied, yet in a sense allied ? Did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) intend to convey that impression, or if not, why did he use the language ? If he did intend to convey the impression, why did he not take the responsibility upon himself as a member which he ought to take ? If he is not obliged to assume the responsibility, then, Sir, there is no responsibility attaching to the language which a member of this House may use at any time in this House as respects any other member. The hon. gentleman may, and can refuse to accept responsibility. But he is not the custodian of his own honour to such an extent as that he can fly against the judgment of the members of this House if they choose to sit in judgment on his conduct. If an appeal is made to the judgment, and arbitrament of this House, the hon. gentleman has got to submit himself, and in the last resort the members of this House are entitled to judge what the honour of the House will require at his hands. Let the leader of the opposition keep patient—

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman refer to me ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I thought the hon. gentleman wanted to rise.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not aware that I was interrupting the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) was not interrupting me a bit, but he seemed uneasy, and I thought possibly he might interrupt.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend is entirely mistaken.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman from Lanark (Mr. Haggart) tells us that he makes no charge. He tells us that he does not make anything which resembles or is intended to be a charge, or an insinuation, or a reflection on anybody, but the hon. gentleman's words do not bear out that statement. He was reading these prospectuses and he went on to speak about what is taking place between this syndicate and others, and I rose in my place and I said :

Where is the relevancy of all this.

I could not for the life of me see why a member of this House who knew as much as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) ought to know, and who is as responsible as he is actually, and as he ought to hold himself before the House—I could not see why he should incumber 'Hansard' with reading over all this absurd and ridiculous prospectus—fraudulent if you like to call it so, and you would be justified in so describing it—I could not see why he should drag this in; I could not see why he should drag in the government; drag in the Minister of Railways; drag in Mr. Pugsley and endeavour to create the impression that there was something that had not been probed, and which if it were probed, would reflect upon the minister. So I asked the hon. gentleman :

Where is the relevancy of all this.

And what did the hon. gentleman reply ? He said :

I want to show the whole connection—

The House will remember what the hon. gentleman said a few moments ago, and here is the record which corresponds exactly with my recollection of what the hon. gentleman did say. He replied :

I want to show that the hon. gentleman (that is the Minister of Railways) has been down in New York in reference to this negotiation, and that he had his agents in New York.

Mark the words :

That he had his agents in New York negotiating for the sale of the Intercolonial Railway —Mr. Pugsley and others it is so reported were down there.

Now, what is all that intended to convey to any mind of ordinary intelligence which can understand the meaning of plain words ? What it is intended to convey ? Is it not, that I was engaged in what I would consider a most reprehensible, a most unworthy and a most improper act holding the position which I do—to be privately associated with a syndicate, and having agents employed with a view to effecting a sale of the Intercolonial Railway. The thing has only one redeeming feature, that is, that it is so utterly and ridiculously silly that I should scarcely feel justified in referring to it, only that in coming to that conclusion I should undoubtedly have to assign to my hon. friend a range of intellect which I have not any desire or thought of doing. What does my hon. friend mean by it ? The meaning is too clear to need any explanation or interpretation, it speaks for itself—it means to cast a reproach on me as the minister of the department. My hon. friend having undertaken to do that in these explicit terms, I say that, if he acts in a manner becoming to a member of this parliament, in addition to the fact that he has promised to give his authority, it is his bounden duty to give that authority here and now, or to withdraw the statements which he has made and apologize for the imputations which he has cast.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman's tender heart is touched almost to sadness—the cries of the baby in the gallery show that he has already produced results.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 109) incorporating the Molson's Bank Pension Fund.—Mr. Osler.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Rental to Grand Trunk Railway, $140,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When the House adjourned at six o'clock, I was about to say a few words but the remarks of the Minister of Railways and Canals had produced such a marked effect on his audience that I was unable to proceed. The hon. gentleman had been so extremely plaintive in the language he used, expressive of his desire to have the name of the particular person associated with this company, that the results absolutely prevented me saying a word at the time. As the hon. gentleman seems to be sensitive on this subject, I would like to point out one or two facts which it would be well for him to bear in memory. I dare say he recollects the statement of his leader in this House on one occasion that no man would be dismissed for political partisanship without being afforded an opportunity to make out his case by an investigation. The hon. gentleman does not seem to be disturbed in his mind that that promise has not been carried out. Would it not be well for that sensitive spirit of his to consider that feature of the case which has been going on for the last four or five years ? Let him explain to the House why that particular circumstance does not trouble his mind to the same extent as the failure of my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) to give the name of a certain officer of this company. I think the hon. gentleman has been in this House when charges of the grossest possible fraud have been made during the present session against people who did work for this country in 1891, without any opportunity whatever having been afforded to those men to meet these charges, without their being even acquainted with those charges when made in the House first by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) and afterwards by the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher). Is my hon. friend troubled with that feature of the case ? He no doubt appreciates the conduct of his colleagues in that respect, and regards it as perfectly fair and perfectly praiseworthy.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know to what the hon. gentleman alludes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is a matter as to which apparently the hon. gentleman has not been taken into the confidence of his colleagues.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That may be.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, I think it would have been as well for the hon. gentleman, before taking the course he has done to-day, to have ascertained something of what has taken place in connection with these matters.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a very red herring the hon. gentleman is drawing.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman is the one who has been drawing the red herring across the trail. Would it not be well for him, instead of talking about the name of an official of this company, to explain to this House how it is that this railway, which was going to produce such magnificent results under his management, has been costing 110 per cent of the receipts in railway expenses, whereas every other railway in Canada and the United States has been paying a handsome dividend during the last two or three years in a period of great prosperity. I would like to know how it is that the hon. gentleman has so much to say about this particular feature and nothing about that. I would also point out to my hon. friend that we have had officials dismissed over and over again, on charges of political partisanship, and when we have asked in this House for the grounds of their dismissal we have been told that the charges have been substantiated in such a way that the particular department concerned was perfectly satisfied, and took the whole responsibility, while the men who were so dismissed did not, in some instances at least, even know the names of the persons who made the charges against them, and, notwithstanding the promise of the leader of the House, were not given the slightest opportunity for any investigation. My hon. friend himself has not always been so careful of these matters as he would have us believe. And I recollect, on one occasion some three or four years ago, when the hon. minister's own estimates were under discussion, we had to sit in this House a very long time indeed because he was not willing to fulfill the promise he had made to give certain information. The hon. gentleman could have saved this House a great deal of trouble on that occasion if he had been as scrupulous and sensitive on this subject as he seems to be to-night.

I do not wish to detain the House at any length with regard to this matter. My hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has told the House the source of his information. True, he has not given the name of the particular officer, but only the name of the company from which that information was received. But it is just as competent for Mr. Pugsley, the only gentleman who is concerned, to make, as I understand he has, a denial without the name of the particular officer being given, as if the name of every official of that company were given as the source of this information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would not mind saying, whether, in his opinion as a member of this House, the hon. member for South Lanark has fulfilled the promise he made, that he would give the authority upon which he made the statement.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend from South Lanark, in my opinion, has fulfilled every promise he has made to the House. I do not understand that he gave exactly a promise in the way the hon. gentleman puts it. But whether that be so or not, it is a matter for the hon. member for South Lanark to decide, and in any opinion he has done everything necessary.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member for South Lanark may with reason ask to be saved from his friends. Of all that has been said on this subject, that which is most condemnatory of his course in what has fallen from the hon. the leader of the opposition. While undertaking to defend the hon. member for South Lanark, he has hardly devoted one minute to the subject of discussion, but spent his time talking about his friend, Mr. Hamilton Smith, and the dismissals of officials and things of that sort, which have no connection whatever with the question under discussion. When so able and astute an advocate has to take that course, it is evident that he sees no case in favour of his hon. friend from South Lanark. He would not have spent his time on these irrelevant matters if he had any defence to make of the conduct of his hon. friend. The statement is made that this concerns only Mr. Pugsley, but my hon. colleague the Minister of Railways read the statement made by the hon. member for South Lanark, in which that hon. gentleman distinctly stated that the Minister of Railways had been in New York and that he had his agent in New York for the purpose of negotiating the transaction referred to. That is the point of the whole matter, and if that statement went further than the hon. member for Lanark intended it should—which might happen to any member when addressing the House—if he found that he made a direct statement affecting the Minister of Railways and not merely Mr. Pugsley, he should have admitted that he had gone too far and had made a mistake.

Mr. BENNETT. The point seems to be narrowed down to this, whether the Minister of Railways should apologize to Mr. Pugsley or not. As I understand the discussion, the statement was made absolutely by my hon. friend from South Lanark that he was not conversant with the fact as to whether Mr. Pugsley was down there or not, as the accredited statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals. The Minister of Railways and Canals may well say save me from my friends—at least from one of them, who is Mr. Pugsley. It is well known that Mr. Pugsley's services are sought as an intermediary when any person has a claim—I would not say shady—but a claim that cannot be passed by the minister. That is a notorious fact. It is a notorious fact that if there is a claim to be pressed against the Department of Railways, not only in New Brunswick, but in the other provinces as well, the parties who are disappointed in pressing their claims seek recourse from Mr. Pugsley. Is it not an odd thing that when a man has a claim, which is honest and straightforward, he cannot go to the department with a counsel from his own province or city, but is advised that if there is any one who can steer his claim through the department it is Mr. Pugsley. Will the Minister of Railways deny that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Undoubtedly, in the most unqualified way.

Mr. BENNETT. I will prove it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is hanging a wholesale statement upon the flimsiest possible material. As far as my recollection serves me, I know of but one instance in which Mr. Pugsley was ever engaged in connection with a claim with which I or my department had any concern, and that was two years ago—only one single solitary claim. And when he makes the statement he does in this broadcast way, I would ask him to state the facts upon which he bases such a charge against Mr. Pugsley, and such an insinuation against the department.

Mr. BENNETT. The statement I have to make is this : that some three or four years ago there were some lands to be expropriated in Point Lévis, opposite the city of Quebec——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the only instance I know of.

Mr. BENNETT. It is the only one made public at present. There was a claim before the department. A tried official of the hon. gentleman's department went to Quebec to bring about the purchase of a very considerable portion of land. He asked for prices and got them. He came then to the present Minister of Justice, and that gentleman assured him that the price of 90 cents per foot was ample for the property. He reported to the minister that this was a fair price, and the minister consequently initialled the document and agreed to allow that. But in the month of November, 1898, the parties concerned got information that they had better not accept that price and the matter dragged on. Year followed year, and finally, three years after, the parties concerned—or one of them at least—not being satisfied with the price offered by the minister, and which was said by the Minister of Justice and the late Mr. Dobell, who was then a member of the cabinet, to be a fair one, was advised—I do not suppose he came to that decision by intuition—to go to New Brunswick and hunt up a solicitor. He had had a solicitor employed, a member of this House, whose name I need not mention now because it is not pertinent to the issue. But there was a member of this House who laid down the principle last year that he had a perfect right to take advantage of his position, as member, to go into the department and press claims on behalf of clients. There never was a time in the history of the country when that practice obtained to the extent it does to-day. It is notorious, particularly in Ontario, that such is the practice to-day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is notorious ?

Mr. BENNETT. The practice of members of parliament presenting claims in the departments for a fee, and that practice was defended in this House last year by an hon. gentleman sitting on that side, and he was not at all rebuked by the ministry. Now, what happened ? These landowners in the city of Point Lévis, unable to get the price they wanted, had evidently been advised by somebody that they could get it, if, after they had availed themselves of the services of a member of this House, they would go further down to New Brunswick. They did so, and secured the services of Mr. Pugsley. Here is the proof of what I say :

Fredericton, N.B., March 1, 1901.

Hon. A. G. Blair,
Minister of Railways and Canals,
Ottawa.

(Re Couture property, Lévis.)

My Dear Blair,—Mr. Charles Archer, of Montreal, has sent me copies of solemn declaration of L. M. Carriére, M.P., &c.

After carefully reading the declaration, it seems to me that a very strong case is made for a valuation of at least $2.50 a foot. If the matter could be settled immediately, I can, I feel sure, induce Mr. Archer to get his clients to accept $2.25. I will esteem it a great favour if you will kindly take the matter up, and settle upon this basis.

Yours sincerly,
WM. PUGSLEY.

Now, I think I can well use the words of the Minister of Finance, and apply them to the Minister of Railways, for that hon. gentleman must surely desire to be saved from his friends. It must be notorious—it certainly had become known to these parties in Quebec—that if they wished to get their full claim, if they wished to collect this amount—nearly three times as much as the minister had offered them—they must not rely even upon a member of this House, but the proper step was to secure the services of Mr. Pugsley. I do not know whether Mr. Pugsley was in New York or not, but I do know that the hon. member for South Lanark made the statement that he had been informed that Mr. Pugsley was in New York endeavouring to carry on these negotiations. That hon. gentleman has made this statement and has said that he must ask the consent of the gentleman who gave him the information before he divulges his name. He has read from a document, and the House is bound in honour to assume that it is a document received by him, and not a fictitious one. And, having read from that document, I say the hon. gentleman has done what he promised the House he would do. It will remain to be seen whether he gets authority to give the name of the writer of that letter. But, unfortunately for the Minister of Railways and Canals, Mr. Pugsley's relations with him were so notorious in the province of Quebec, at least with some people, that in pressing their claims they dispensed even with the mediation of a member of this House, they dropped even their own counsel and went away to St. John to secure the services of Mr. Pugsley.

Mr. EMMERSON. It seems to me we are entirely begging the question, putting up these men of straw only——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) would allow me, I would like to make a statement, before he goes on with his remarks, in answer to the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett). It is notable that the hon. gentleman, with all his astuteness was unable to discover anything that he could say in justification of the course taken by the hon. member for South Lanark, and his attitude before the committee, so he has been obliged to go back to the record of 'Hansard' of four years ago to discover something that might possibly help to divert the attention of members on this side from the main question. But no effort on his part, or on that of any other hon. gentleman will succeed in that. We will come back—it may be with some loss of time, but we cannot help that—to the question before us, and will stick to it until we get it set right. Before I resume my seat, let me say to my hon. friend that he knows that Mr. Pugsley does not represent me in any particular. Mr. Pugsley is a gentleman of the legal profession of very high standing in the country. He had business relations in the city of Montreal, I know, and was there at stated periods in connection with the company with which he was associated. I do not know, but I presume that Mr. Archer, who is a resident of Montreal, and not of Quebec, as the hon. gentleman stated, would be very likely to come into contact with so prominent a lawyer as Mr. Pugsley.

Mr. BENNETT. If the hon. minister will allow me, I will tell him that Mr. Archer is the law partner of the member of the House who had the claim in hand before it was handed over to Mr. Pugsley.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not care about that. I am telling the hon. gentleman that Mr. Archer is not a resident of Quebec but of Montreal, and he would naturally make Mr. Pugsley's acquaintance, and would learn of his ability as a lawyer just as he would that of any other gentleman whose services he might desire to avail himself of. My hon. friend has not seen fit to follow up the subject, to state, as the record has shown, that, while Mr. Pugsley and other gentleman who were associated with him pressed the matter in that way upon the attention of the department, the pressure and the argument advanced were of no avail—the claim put forward was not entertained, and the amount he demanded was not paid, nor was there any larger amount offered claimants than was fully justified by the valuations made of the property. I ask my hon. friend, therefore, to endeavour, if he wishes to continue this diversion, to find something with bottom to it; something that has not been answered and disposed of already.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. minister should start by at least getting his facts right. This was not in 'Hansard' of four years ago, but last year. And I am not, nor is any hon. gentleman who has not the departmental records in his hand, in the position to know what disposition was made of this case. Perhaps when the estimates come down we shall learn what disposition was made of it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not recall whether it was last year or an earlier session. My own impression was that it was two years ago. But the hon. gentleman spoke of four years ago, and I supposed that was the time of the 'Hansard' from which he was reading. I can only say that I entirely refused to entertain the demands made. I told the gentleman that unless he chose to accept the valuation we were prepared to offer, which our valuators sustained, he might take it to the Exchequer Court. And I believe it is in the Exchequer Court, unless there has been a recent decision in the matter.

Mr. BENNETT. I am pleased to know that the minister resisted the pressure put upon him in that case. He will remember that he was pressed very hard, not only by Mr. Pugsley, but by the Prime Minister himself, to pay the claim. He will see on reference to 'Hansard' that the Minister of Justice wrote a letter asking for the payment of the claim at the advanced rate, and based that on the ground that the Prime Minister thought it was fair.

Mr. EMMERSON. I was remarking that I did not see the object of putting up these men of straw to have them knocked down. And I think the hon. member for East Simcoe will see the point of that remark, as he has been called upon to take back the statement he made as inaccurate. The point I wished to draw attention to is this—this afternoon I read a telegram from Mr. Pugsley repudiating in their entirety the statements made by the hon. member for South Lanark last night, and I suggested to the hon. member for South Lanark that it was desirable that he should at least withdraw his remarks in connection therewith. And the hon. gentleman stated that, as soon as I was through speaking he would give his authority for the statement he had made. I think this committee is entitled to that statement to the fulfilment of the pledge that the hon. member for South Lanark gave to the committee.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he will state what the authority was upon which he relied? Do I understand him to confirm what has been said by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), that his authority is one of the officials of the Dominion Securities Company? Does that correctly define the person whom he puts forward as authority for these statements?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The leader of the opposition was referring to the letter which I read. This was an interview with an officer of the Dominion Securities Company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was not a communication to you made by that officer?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No. The communication to me was that a party who communicated with the Dominion Securities Company got this information from an officer. I thought I had ended the controversy. This question between Mr. Pugsley and myself——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a question between the hon. member and myself.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not at all—the hon. member will stick to that. If the hon. member will read the 'Hansard' he will find that last night I withdrew any charge against the minister, and why does he repeat it again and again?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not understand you so.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Read my remarks which are in the 'Hansard.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then do you do so now?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do now, and I did then. I stated that the information I had got enabled me to withdraw any imputation upon the minister—because he went down to New York and stated it would be impossible to carry on such a transaction. I read that from the document, I stated it last night. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) says he has a telegram in which Mr. Pugsley denies it altogether. I have to accept the denial at present. My information on the subject is what I read to the House. I stated to the House that I was going to ask authority to give the name of the party, and to read the whole letter, which contains a good deal more, and to put it on the Table of the House.

Intercolonial Railway, $5,500,000.

Mr. FOWLER. I listened with considerable pleasure to the burst of oratorical fireworks we heard this afternoon from the hon. member from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson). I regretted at the time that the members of this committee did not seem to appreciate that class of oratory the way they should, because shortly after he begun, the benches began to empty. That was rather regrettable.

Mr. EMMERSON. That doesn't hurt me.

Mr. FOWLER. I quite understand why it does not make the hon. gentleman feel badly because he is used to it; that is the usual result when he begins to fire off his big oratorical guns. The hon. gentleman drew a picture, a scene which he said would be worthy of the highest art of the photographer. He referred to the expression upon the countenance of the member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) when this famous letter was produced by the member for Westmoreland. Sir, I have in my mind a scene which I think would be still more worthy the art of the photographer. Some months ago, and up to the beginning of this session of parliament, we heard in New Brunswick very strong rumours of the belligerent attitude which the hon. member for Westmoreland had assumed towards the Minister of Railways and Canals. The member for Westmoreland is a gentleman of a somewhat impulsive nature, and when he feels that he has a grievance he does not make any bones, as we say, in giving utterance to his feelings; and he gave very strong utterance to his feelings in his native county and throughout the province. It was a matter notorious and patent to everybody that very strained relations existed between the member for Westmoreland and the Minister of Railways and Canals. The member for Westmoreland came to this parliament with the same feeling of rancour, the same feeling of resentment in his heart towards the Minister of Railways and Canals concerning his management of the Intercolonial Railway. But, Sir, after he arrived here a change came over the spirit of his dreams, and he became disarmed; and the scene I would like to see properly portrayed was the scene when the two met and a reconciliation took place.

An hon. MEMBER. Who says there was one?

Mr. FOWLER. Those who have heard the hon. member speak in this House can imagine the pathos in his tones as, with tears streaming from his eyes, he embraced the Minister of Railways and Canals and said to him: 'I have been deceived, I have been tricked, I have been cajoled by you, I have been induced to give up the position of premier of the province of New Brunswick by means of a glittering promise you made to me if I would take part in federal politics, and when I gave up the position I held in my native province, and came into the federal arena, I found you did not, or could not, deliver the goods, and naturally I was cross and angry with you. But I have in my mind the memory of those twenty-five years of close intimacy and companionship—which the hon. gentleman told us about this afternoon—and for the sake of the memory of those years of friendship I am prepared to forgive you. And the minister, not to be outdone in generosity by the member for Westmoreland, said: 'Henry, I am willing to be forgiven.'

Now, Sir, the member for Westmoreland, in his peroration, grew very eloquent on the subject of broad statesmanship and he said to hon. members on this side of the House: 'You must give up this petty parish politics, you must be broad in your statesmanship, you must view this Intercolonial Railway in a broad and statesmanlike manner. Very good advice, excellent precepts, and I would that the example of the member for Westmoreland accorded better with his precepts. What he said to this House and country—and judging from the loud tones in which he spoke, if the windows had been open it would not have been necessary for the members of the press to have recorded his speech, because the country would have heard it—he said he was prepared to tell this House and the country that he was not altogether in accord with the policy of the minister in the management of his department. Sir, we expected him to give the reasons why he was not in accord, we expected to hear a discussion of the railway policy of the minister; we expected to be told on what particular he disagreed with him. What did we hear? Was it something on broad lines of statesmanship in which he disagreed with the minister? No, Sir, it was solely and entirely because, as he said, the minister had not introduced enough politics into the management of the Intercolonial Railway. And this is the sort of statesmanship we get from the hon. member for Westmoreland, the man who occupied the proud position of premier of the province of New Brunswick. We should expect something wider, something broader from the hon. gentleman than that sort of doctrine. I failed to understand what fault he could find with the minister on that ground. I thought that in no department of the public service had so many men been displaced for political reasons as on the Intercolonial Railway, I won't except even the Post Office Department, and that was bad enough, in all conscience. The hon. gentleman had denounced what he termed the hydra-headed mismanagement of the Intercolonial Railway—those were the very words he is said to have used in characterizing the management of the Intercolonial Railway by the Minister of Railways and Canals. And the only fault that he now tells the House he has to find, is because the minister has not dismissed enough officials, that they are allowed to vote as they please And the minister, as I understand, though I was not in the House at the time, stood up in his place and said that there was no coercion used towards the employees of the Intercolonial Railway. Sir, along the line of the Intercolonial Railway people will laugh at that statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals when they read it. The Intercolonial Railway runs through the county which I have the honour to represent in this House, for a distance of sixty miles, and upon nearly every official of that road coercion was brought in the last election; not satisfied with that, they even resort to it in connection with municipal and local politics, and in the very last election run in the county of King's a few weeks ago, that same coercion was brought to bear upon employees of the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. By whom?

Mr. FOWLER. By those in authority who are over them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name, name.

Mr. FOWLER. Perhaps if some of you knew your own names it would be better. Some of you can scarcely tell your own names. Names—an hon. gentleman says. I give the name and what would happen?

Mr. HYMAN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) a question. He has said that pressure was brought and I submit that he should state on which side the pressure was brought.

Mr. FOWLER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hyman) is so dense, so obtuse, so ignorant, as not to understand on which side the pressure was brought I will tell him. It was on the side of the party which he supports.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name, name.

Mr. FOWLER. I give the name and what would happen? The man coerced would lose his position that very moment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name, name.

Mr. FOWLER. And a place might be made for some hungry Grit heeler so that the hon. member for Westmoreland could fill it with some hungry heeler in his constituency. That is why the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Heyd) is so anxious for the name.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) permit me to ask him a question ? If the hon. gentleman is seriously of the opinion that the employees, or officers, of the Intercolonial Railway were warranted, or authorized or permitted, so far as the minister in the department is concerned, to exercise any undue, or improper pressure, or any coercion upon the employees of the road in the matter of the exercise of their franchise, I ask my hon. friend why it is he thinks that they are in any danger of being dismissed for doing what they were allowed to do.

Mr. FOWLER. I would just say this to the hon. minister ; I have known him a long time and I know him to be too astute a man to place himself in such a position. The hon. minister will take very good care that his hands were very clean, but a wink is sometimes as good as a nod and those under his authority would understand that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Let me ask my hon. friend another question. Does he not know that there was no wink or nod about it ? Does he not know that a general order went out under my own hand throughout the whole Intercolonial Railway to the effect that no officer employed on the road was warranted in exercising any pressure in any shape or form, that every man must be left entirely free to vote as he pleased—given an opportunity to vote and be afforded facilities for going to the polls on both sides of politics and if there was any violation or infringement of the order they were called upon to notify the department of it.

Mr. FOWLER. It is all very easy to issue these general orders, but there is not a man in this House, certainly there is not a man on the other side of the House, so absolutely simple as cannot understand how these orders can be evaded. I do not give hon. gentlemen opposite credit for any great astuteness. To get away from this matter—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes, yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, we will discuss it just as long as you like. The longer we discuss it the worse it is for yourselves. I do not consider that this sort of thing is very high statesmanship, and that is why I was so much surprised——

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think it would be well, as far as possible, to confine the discussion to the question under consideration. The question under consideration is the propriety of granting $140,000 to the Grand Trunk Railway as rent for the use of their railway, and I would like the committee to confine itself to that question.

Mr. FOWLER. I was referring to some remarks made by the hon. member for Westmoreland. I have not deviated nearly as far from the question as did the hon. member for Westmoreland. He gave us a history of his early life and of his early struggles. He told us how it was necessary for him to look to Boston for his education rather than McGill and all that sort of thing. He was allowed to make this very great deviation without question on the part of the Chair, and yet I am to be strictly held to order when I simply refer to some matters in connection with the railway and not in connection with the different universities.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) will allow me to make one remark. I will appeal to the Chairman whether it would not be fair to all members of the House to allow the discussion to continue in the same general way in which it has been carried on up to the present time. I think there should perhaps be some limitation, but I think, since the discussion of a general character has been commenced and has continued down to the present time, if you, Mr. Chairman, would so rule, it would meet the wishes of the committee as a whole that the hon. gentleman be allowed to continue the general discussion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The subject that was under the consideration of the committee up to this afternoon was the Intercolonial Railway itself, a much wider question than the subject under consideration now. Would it not be better for the committee——

Mr. FOWLER. On what item ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Item 268. Would it not be better to allow item 269 to pass and then the next item would be the Intercolonial Railway ?

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has to bring down certain information which he has not brought down yet.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Well, if it is the desire of the committee the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) may proceed.

Mr. FOWLER. I rose before the item which was under discussion by the hon. member for Westmoreland was carried. I rose several times to speak while that little side discussion was going on, but I was so unfortunate as not to be able to get the Chairman's eye. It seems to me that the hon. member for Westmoreland, in his desire to show to the committee and the country that there had been brought about, between himself and the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, a reconciliation, should have made some defence of the railway policy of the hon. minister when that item was under discussion. It seems to me that he should have endeavoured to have made some reply to the most convincing speech that was made by the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) in connection with the mismanagement of the Intercolonial Railway, a speech the most argumentative, the most logical, of any speech that I ever remember listening to since I have been a member of this House, a speech which was most convincing in its arguments and a speech which showed that there had been the grossest mismanagement on the part of the hon. minister in connection with his department. Yet, the hon. member for Westmoreland, who comes from the railway centre of New Brunswick, was unable—we must presume he was unable, because he did not avail himself of the opportunity—to reply to a single one of the charges that were made against the management of the Intercolonial Railway. There was the question of the tie scandal; he might have shown, if he could, the necessity of purchasing 1,300,000 ties when the department required only 300,000 or 400,000, he might have shown why it was that they purchased ties whose life is only three or four years when they might have had the other kind. He knew that it was impossible to defend such a scandalous thing as that. But, the hon. gentleman had to make a defence in his own behalf in connection with the tie scandal. He had to defend his conduct, or to attempt to defend it, in obtaining possession of this celebrated letter which was written in pencil by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to the tie inspector. He found it necessary to make some defence as to that. The hon. gentleman is a lawyer, but I do not think, were he defending a man who was charged with being the receiver of stolen goods, and he made such a lame defence as he did in this case, that he could expect any common sense, intelligent jury to acquit the man. He admits the whole thing. What a spectacle have we in this House of Commons? An hon. gentleman who is the representative of one of the largest constituencies in the Dominion of Canada and one of the most intelligent constituencies gets up in his place in the House of Commons, in the parliament of Canada, and admits that he is a receiver of stolen goods—admits more, admits that he is an accessory before the fact of the theft of these goods that this man McManus was acting under his direction, and acting at his request when he went to his brother's desk and abstracted this letter. What defence can there be for that? Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House may say—oh, he was his brother and therefore it is no harm. Does it make it any less a theft because one brother takes from the property of the other? Has the hon. gentleman never heard of one brother murdering another brother; of a son murdering a father? Why, to-day there is in one of the jails of this province a man charged with the murder of his father. It is a crime just as much as though it was the murder of a stranger; aye, the relationship makes the offence the greater. And here is the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson), who admits that by his direction this man stole this letter, and that he took the letter from this man knowing it to have been stolen. That is the whole case in a nutshell. And how does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) defend himself? He says: I did not find the letter in a spittoon and piece it together. That is the only defence he can offer to the House and to the country for his conduct. Why, Mr. Chairman, as a matter of law, and he is lawyer enough to know it, whatever the moral offence may be, he could not be tried and convicted for finding the letter in a spittoon and piecing it together, but he could for the other offence.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Emmerson) made an attempt to justify the purchase of these ties by saying they were not all purchased before the elections. What a defence that is. If they were not purchased before the election, how easy a matter it is to make a promise previous to the election and to carry it out after the election, and that is just what was done in this case.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has the hon. gentleman any evidence to adduce to show that a promise was made before the elections and carried out afterwards?

Mr. FOWLER. I did not make the statement. I simply said that it was a very easy matter to make a bargain before the election and carry it out afterwards. Some of the back benchers on the other side are making so much noise that the minister does not hear correctly what I say. I notice that when things are getting a little too hot for them over there, they always take that way of trying to drown the voice of the speaker; particularly some of these gentlemen from the woolly west.

Now, Sir, the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) appealed to me to know whether I favoured expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway. In answer to that appeal I say, that I do favour proper expenditure upon the Intercolonial Railway. And let me say, that so far as this question of the sale of the Intercolonial Railway is concerned, I would at once acquit the Minister of Railways from having the remotest idea of ever making such a sale, or of even bargaining for such a sale, or having anything to do with negotiations in connection with it. I acquit him because the Minister of Railways is a New Brunswicker, and he knows very well the feeling of the people of New Brunswick on that matter. He knows that the building of the Intercolonial Railway was a part of the confederation compact and that the people of New Brunswick would never consent to the Intercolonial Railway being handed over to any private corporation. We are in favour of any proper and reasonable expenditure upon that road, and I want to say in justice to the Minister of Railways, that along some lines he has made a very proper expenditure upon the Intercolonial Railway, and he has improved that railway to a considerable extent. But I do not go the length of the hon. member for Westmoreland, who said that the minister found it a tramway and made it a great railway; nor do I go the length of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who told us they found the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway in a ploughed field. I should think that the hon. gentleman who represents Lévis would not thank the Minister of Trade and Commerce for having spoken in such a way of the town of Lévis.

Mr. BENNETT. It was the Prime Minister who said that.

Mr. FOWLER. The Prime Minister, was it! I say that the Intercolonial Railway has always been kept up to a high degree of efficiency, and that the minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) is deserving of the credit that he has not allowed it to run down, and that he has in many ways kept pace with the improvements of the times, because, as we know all railways have improved in their rolling stock and every thing else. But I do say, Mr. Chairman, that many of the expenditures made by the minister on that railway have been wasteful and extravagant, and that the people have not got from that expenditure the good which they ought to have got. Take for instance this large purchase of twenty or more acres of marsh land some two miles out of the city of St. John, at $475 an acre.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not two miles.

Mr. FOWLER. It is more than a mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not a mile from the station.

Mr. FOWLER. Oh, yes, further than that. The roundhouse is well on to a mile out, and this is a long way from the roundhouse.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. FOWLER. If the hon. gentleman ever walked it he would know it is a great deal longer than he thinks. But suppose it is a mile outside.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not a mile.

Mr. EMMERSON. It is within the city limits.

Mr. FOWLER. That may be true, but the city limits extend a long way out; they extend beyond the hotel known as the 'One Mile House,' and this land is beyond that. I had occasion to walk this, and I know what the distance is. However that may be, this land was part of a property some of which was expropriated by the Horticultural Society.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When?

Mr. FOWLER. Some years ago, but land has not increased in value to an appreciable extent since that time.

Mr. EMMERSON. It was worth a dollar a foot then.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOWLER. Let them go on, they do not worry me at all. A part of the property lying nearer to the city than this was expropriated by the Horticultural Society, and a very much less price was paid for it than the government paid for this land. Instead of $475 an acre being paid, something over $200 an acre was paid, and some of the land, not the marsh land, I think, was sold for $55 an acre. At all events, the price paid by the government is at least double what it should be. Of course, there is some middleman who does not appear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no middleman.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. minister should not get so restless. He is so stirred up by this matter that he feels that everything that is said is a direct reflection on him whether there is an attempt to connect it with him or not. I do not say that the minister knew anything about the middleman, but I have not the slightest doubt in my mind that there was a middleman who had a considerable rake off.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fowler) that there was not any middleman.

Mr. FOWLER. I put it to the hon. minister—why could there not be a middleman without the minister knowing it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was no margin for any middleman business in it.

Mr. FOWLER. This land was only farming land, and would not be built upon in the next fifty years, even if the city of St. John should have the growth we all expect. The best marsh lands in the county of Westmoreland can be bought for $100 an acre—better land than that. There is a man, another Gilbert, who has a farm of 200 acres, in the neighbourhood of this land, which yields about 200 tons of hay, and which he rents for $1,000 a year. How much interest would $1,000 a year be on 200 acres at $475 an acre? It would not be 1 per cent.

Mr. EMMERSON. Would my hon. friend pardon me? I wish to correct him, and to say that there are marsh lands in the county of Westmoreland, remote from any town or city, which are selling at from $160 to $200 an acre, and large bodies of them too.

Mr. FOWLER. My hon. friend knows that it is very rare that marsh lands run up to $150 an acre. The general price for the best marsh lands is $100, and they are not remote either. I am surprised at my hon. friend making such a statement. Some little individual piece of marsh land may sell at $150, but the English marsh land will not average more than $100 an acre. I say that expenditure is extravagant, and there are lots of expenditure along the same line. Wherever the hon. minister has improved the conditions of the road, and done it at a reasonable cost, I would be the first to give him his due meed of credit; but we have a right to condemn this wasteful and extravagant expenditure. We are anxious that the road should be maintained in a proper state of efficiency. I am glad that the minister extended the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal, and I trust that he will go on and extend it further. I am in favour of making the Intercolonial Railway a great trunk line. In saying this I am stating my individual view; I do not know to what extent it may accord with the views of gentlemen on this side of the House, but I say I am in favour of a proper and due extension of the Intercolonial Railway. Now, Sir, I do not propose to take up any more time of this committee at present. If there were anything more in the speech of my hon. friend from Westmoreland which required a reply, I should impose on the committee at further length, but I think I have amply replied to the few matters he brought forward.

Mr. INGRAM. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of care and attention to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) as well to those of the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Haggart) and the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker). I did on two or three occasions interrupt the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and I cannot complain of the courtesy he extended to me in replying to any questions which I may have asked him. But, Sir, after hearing the discussion of these three gentlemen in regard to the Intercolonial Railway, I heard a very serious charge made against the hon. memeber for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson), that hon. gentleman being in the House at the time, and I took the liberty of rising before the House closed last night and asking why the hon. member for Westmoreland did not rise in his place and defend himself against the serious charge of stealing a letter.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, I am using the language which was used by an hon. member who addressed this House yesterday. For charging that serious crime the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), who made the remark, and I was taunted to-day by the hon. member for Westmoreland to the effect that he did not have to go to the province of Ontario to learn either morals or anything else in connection with politics, and he did not see any reason why the hon. member for East Simcoe or the hon. member for West Elgin, as he termed me, should have anything to say about the matter.

Mr. EMMERSON. I beg pardon, I mean East Elgin.

Mr. INGRAM. Unfortunately for the hon. gentleman, he referred to an incident which must bring a blush to the face of every Liberal in the Dominion of Canada——

Mr. BENNETT. They have no blushes.

Mr. INGRAM. An incident which occurred in the province of Ontario some years ago; an incident that brought about one of the most disgraceful acts that were ever committed by the Liberal party in the province of Ontario.

Mr. EMMERSON. That was not the letter which was issued to the people of Haldimand, I believe, during a certain election?

Mr. BENNETT. Come again.

Mr. INGRAM. I will see you before I get through, and go you one better. My hon. friend referred to the incident known as the 'speak now' and 'spittoon' incident, which led to the defeat of one of the most honourable men who ever conducted public affairs in the Dominion of Canada. I refer to the late Hon. John Sanfield Macdonald, who was sent to his grave by the false charges preferred against him by the Liberals of the province of Ontario. I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to place their fingers on one corrupt or dishonourable act committed by John Sanfield Macdonald or his government; but it was by such disgraceful tactics that he was driven from power, and it is a lamentable thing for the people of the province of Ontario. With regard to the hon. gentleman's reference to myself, I have conducted five elections in the county of Elgin. I have had the honour of representing both ends of that county, and during those five elections but one protest was filed against me; and after four days of fishing by my opponents, they succeeded in finding three paltry cases which caused me to be unseated. I want to compare that record with an incident that occurred in the county of Elgin, one of the most disgraceful that any Liberal candidate has ever been guilty of. I have the proof here over the signature of the Liberal candidate in West Elgin, and for the information of my hon. friend, who has not been very long in this House, and perhaps is not very well posted in the history of his party in the province of Ontario, I will read the document, which contains one of the most damnable catalogues of infamy in the history of Canada. This document is signed by Donald McNish, having been prepared by his own solicitor, and is addressed to Messrs. Crothers & Price, barristers, of St. Thomas, who were acting for his opponent, and on this his election was voided, and it took only a few minutes for the court to void it. What does he say ? He says :

St. Thomas, June 26, 1899.

Messrs. Crothers & Price, Barristers, &c.,
St. Thomas, Ontario.

Dear Sirs,—We beg to advise you that Mr. Macnish has discussed at length with his solicitors the charges contained in the petition which has been filed against his return as member of the legislative assembly of Ontario for West Elgin, and that they have to a considerable extent investigated the charges contained therein and other matters which have come to their knowledge in connection with the election. And the subscribers hereto make the following statements and admissions respecting the same :

1. That a large number of persons were specially sent into the constituency by men working on behalf of the Liberal party for the express purpose of taking part on Mr. Macnish's behalf in the election held January 12, 1899, and we believe that fraudulent and corrupt means were used by some of such persons to secure his election.

2. That several of the said persons illegally and without authority acted as deputy returning officers at the said election, and in at least three cases so acted in the names of reputable local men, having, under assumed names, been introduced to the returning officer by local agents of Mr. Macnish.

3. That in many of the polling subdivisions of the riding there were grave irregularities connected with the return of the ballot boxes and their contents, the voting, and the counting of the ballots thereat.

4. That there were large numbers of persons brought into the riding for the express purpose of personating legitimate voters, and assisted by some of Mr. Macnish's local supporters such persons did personate qualified votes in voting for Mr. Macnish.

5. That the declared number of votes for Mr. Macnish largely exceeded the number of bona fide votes cast for him.

6. That a large number of votes cast for Mr. Macdiarmid were in some nefarious and corrupt manner manipulated, whereby the result of the election was rendered doubtful and that in this connction the voting at Shedden and Middlemarch and in several divisions in St. Thomas, where said strangers so acted as deputy returning officers, merits special mention.

7. That there are good reasons to believe that there are many specific and well authenticated cases where agents of Mr. Macnish concealed at their homes some of those strangers, who there paid large sums of money to electors to induce them to vote for him.

8. That Mr. Macnish will forthwith deliver to the Speaker of the legislative assembly his resignation as a member thereof for the said electoral district.

(Sgd.) DONALD MACNISH.

Witness :
(Sgd.) A. B. AYLESWORTH.

Mr. INGRAM.

This is signed by Donald Macnish. I just point this out to show my hon. friend that when he casts reflections on the Conservative party in Ontario, he had better study up the history of his own party in that province, and then I am sure that he will refrain from making any more charges of the kind.

With respect to the letter itself, my hon. friend made a statement before the committee that during the Easter recess, he went to Moncton and that he did not want to meet Mr. Charles McManus because he did not wish to have any conversation with him respecting the fraudulent inspection of ties.

Mr. EMMERSON. I said that I did not want to have any conversation with Mr. McManus with respect to any evidence he might be called on to make before the committee.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman did not wish to meet Mr. McManus.

Mr. EMMERSON. With respect to any evidence he might be called on to give before the committee. He had already been summoned, and I knew that fact as a member of the committee.

Mr. INGRAM. And the hon. gentleman said:

I would like to make an explanation. I had been attending the meetings of this committee previous to the Easter holidays, when I was much interested in this question. When I returned to Moncton, I did not want to talk to Mr. McManus, the inspector,—

Why did the hon. gentleman not want to talk to him? Was there anything disgraceful in talking to a man who, as he told the committee, belonged to a respectable and honourable family ?

Mr. EMMERSON. Surely my hon. friend will accept the statement that I made. What I said was that I did not wish to have any conversation with Mr. McManus with respect to any evidence he might be called on to make before the committee, knowing as I did, that he had been summoned before that committee.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman tell me when he procured the letter ?

Mr. EMMERSON. I stated before the committee that I procured the letter during my sojourn at home, during the Easter holidays, and brought it to Ottawa when I returned to my parliamentary duties.

Mr. INGRAM. And that is strictly correct, I presume. That is the statement which the hon. gentleman made. Here is some of the evidence to which I wish to refer. On the 30th March last the hon. gentleman said:

I would like to ask——

He broke in on the question asked. He did not pause, he did not hesitate to break in when he thought he could make a point.

—I would like to ask if Mr. McManus is a man of good repute in that section of the country ? —A. I have never heard anything against him at all.

Q. You know the family with which he is connected ?—A. I do.

Q. One of the oldest Westmoreland families, of the highest respectability and highest character as a family ?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it fair to ask you this, I think, or do you not know that Mr. McManus absolutely and entirely repudiates the passing of anything like poplar ties or anything of that kind or fir ties? —A. That was what I was told by Mr. Russell, of Moncton, who has questioned him.

Will the hon. gentleman tell this House how he knew that Mr. McManus had repudiated the idea of inspecting fir or poplar ties?

Mr. EMMERSON. I will tell my hon. friend. That incident occurred on the 13th March, before Mr. McManus had been summoned as a witness. It was a matter of general repute that he had repudiated the passing of these ties. That was reported generally as the statement which he had made to the engineer of maintenance.

Mr. INGRAM. And the hon. gentleman was present. That was the statement the hon. gentleman made on the 30th March. He was particularly eager to break in with a question to show that McManus belonged to a highly respectable family. What occurred later on? The hon. gentleman was present with this letter in his pocket, which exonerated McManus. Did he rush up and interrupt the gentleman who was trying to find out whether McManus did have this letter in his possession ? He did not. That hon. gentleman had been questioning over half an hour, and the hon. gentleman sat in his place with the letter in his pocket, and did not get up and try to defend McManus by producing the letter.

Mr. EMMERSON. That was very cruel on my part.

Mr. INGRAM. What did he do ? He took the Minister of Railways aside and consulted him about the letter. Then he waited half an hour or so until Mr. Barker proved that McManus had been given this letter by the Minister of Railways. Why was it necessary to give this letter to McManus, in compliance with which McManus passed a large number of ties which he should not have passed. When McManus was desirous of doing his duty and refused to accept white spruce, when black spruce was named in the tender, what did this gentleman, who was trying to sell ties to the government say? Let me read what occurred :

Q. How many ties had you rejected of Mr. Ultican ?—A. I hadn't inspected any of them before that.

Q. You had not inspected them at all ?—A. Which.

Q. Mr. Culligan's ties.—A. He took me out to show me the ties, do you see, and I saw that they were white spruce ties, the big run of them, and I said to Mr. Culligan : Your ties are white spruce, and he says: 'Yes, what of it,' and I pulled out this memorandum and showed it to him, that I was to take black spruce, he wanted to see the words, and he came and looked over my shoulder and looked at it and said: 'How the hell did that come there, I never agreed to give black spruce, there is none grows here.' I says. 'I don't know,' and he says: 'Its all right, I'll see Pottinger about it.' That's all the conversation we had.

Q. You were not going to take the ties on account of their being white spruce?—A. I was going to refuse them.

Q. He managed to get them taken afterwards? —A. Yes.

I want to show that when McManus was desirous of doing his duty by not accepting the white spruce, he afterwards got a letter direct from the minister, telling him to accept these ties.

Mr. EMMERSON. No.

Mr. INGRAM. Oh, then, I will have to read it.

Mr. EMMERSON. Read the language in the letter.

Mr. INGRAM. Here is the famous letter, and what does it say ?

Mr. McManus will please inspect Mr. Culligan's ties the same as Mr. Ultican's.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Oh, oh.

Mr. INGRAM. My hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. Johnston) who does not appear to know much about the matter interrupts as usual. What did the tender call for in Ultican's contract ? It called for spruce ties, not for black spruce, and this letter was an instruction to this man to accept white spruce ties. Now, the government railways of this country have managers; they have chief engineers, and this Mr. McManus was acting under the engineer. If the minister had acted in the proper way, he would have instructed the engineer of the railway to tell Mr. McManus that he might inspect these ties the same as the others. No, he comes down from his lofty position as Minister of Railways and tells this gentleman receiving $2 a day, how he should do his work. This whole letter business from beginning to end is a fraud on the face of it. It is disgraceful, and dishonourable to say the least of it. And I will go further and say that my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) must surely have some other object than that which he stated in the House for procuring the letter in the way he did and presenting it to the Committee on Public Accounts as he did.

Mr. EMMERSON. I regret that the hon. gentleman does not feel that he can accept my statements.

Mr. INGRAM. I am simply going by the evidence, and I prefer doing that in this case. I represent, it is true, a constituency in the province of Ontario. But I wish to point out in my eastern province friends that if they wish the government railways of this country to be a success, if they wish them to be popular throughout the Dominion, they should do what they can to have those railways conducted in an economical and efficient way. Coming from the province of Ontario as I do—the province that pays the greatest proportion of the taxes of this Dominion—is it not my right and duty as a public man to see that the government railways are conducted in as economical a manner as possible? I challenge any hon gentleman to put his finger on a single syllable used by any gentleman on the Conservative side against the Intercolonial Railway. No hon. gentleman on this side condemns the Intercolonial Railway because it is a government road. What we do, and what we have a right to do, is to condemn unwise and extravagant expenditures on that railway. Do we want more proof than the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) yesterday? Since I first had a seat in this House, I have never heard a better statement in connection with the railway than the one made by that hon. gentleman last night. Let it be not forgotten that it is the statement of a gentleman who at one time was general manager of a railway in this country. No more capable man to discuss the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway could be brought forward in this House than the hon. member for Hamilton. And I am sure no hon. gentleman can say that my hon friend from Hamilton used language that could possibly have been offensive to hon. gentlemen opposite or to any other. We simply desire to discuss this matter fairly, to give our views frankly, hoping that by so doing we shall assist in making the road a success. And I will go further and say that if justification were needed for the complaints made by hon. members on this side concerning the management of the Intercolonial Railway, it is be found in the statement of the Minister of Railways yesterday. What do we find in that document which the hon. gentleman himself read in this House? This is a document dated at Moncton, May 1st, 1899, addressed to the Minister of Railways and Canals and signed by D. Pottinger, general manager. And on the last page of this document, I find the following:

> It is difficult to speak with certainty of what ought to be done to meet the demands of the passenger traffic. Both with regard to the locomotives and cars, it is more a question of competition, appearances, speed, comfort and safety, than one of reducing expenses per train mile. I feel that you are quite familiar with the facts, and requirements in regard to this and that I need not say very much about it beyond pointing out that our passenger engines are small and that the condition of our tracks is anything but a good advertisement for our road. A stranger visiting the provinces for the first time would conclude from their appearance that the road was very much embarrassed financially, so poor that it could not afford to make a decent appearance, unable even to spend enough to keep them clean, and when we know that they belong to the Canadian government and therefore in some degree represent it before the world, we cannot help feeling ashamed for their appearance. Our cars are built long before comfort was considered a necessity in railway travelling and we have not been renewing our cars at such a rate as to be able to say that we have a respectable and modern equipment.

Mr. EMMERSON. Will the hon. gentleman give the date of that letter?

Mr. INGRAM. May, 1899. Now, I wish to be perfectly clear—I am not trying to make a point against the government with respect to this, but making a statement as a member of this House who, I hope, seeks to offer something that will assist in making that road what it ought to be. And I say that if that road at any time, whether under a Conservative government or under this government, was in the condition here described, it is a disgrace to the Dominion. And, so far as I am concerned, if it is necessary to vote money for the purpose of making that road what it ought to be, and fit to compete with any line of railway in this country, I am prepared to vote what I believe is a sufficient sum to put it in that condition. At the same time, I wish to say as strongly as I can that I entirely disapprove of the methods followed in the management of that railway.

My hon. friend (Mr. Barker) referred to the case of coal purchases as an instance. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson) did not complain of any of the expenditures on the Intercolonial Railway. But I challenge him or any hon. gentleman in this House who knows anything about railroading to stand up in this House and discuss these expenditures. One who would not find fault in such a case as this is no true friend of the Intercolonial Railway. It has been admitted in this House that, on the 30th of June, 1900, there were fifteen thousands tons of coal in possession of the road. It has been proven in evidence that there was a feeling of unrest among the coal mines of Nova Scotia even from January or February. These being the circumstances, I charge the management of that railway with being negligent in their duty in not preparing themselves for that threatened strike. In the latter part of December, the railway management found themselves with only six days' supply of coal on hand, and this in the face of a threatened strike of the miners. Is there any railway in this country properly managed who would allow themselves to get so low in coal in the face of this danger of a cessation of supplies? No, not one railway company in this country would do anything of the kind. What do we find further? We find an agreement drawn up by the different coal companies in the province along the line of this railway, and we find the coal companies shrewd and sharp enough to have inserted in their agreement with the government a clause that in case of a strike they should not be bound to furnish the required amount of coal under the contract. Now that is a fact. Do we find the government protecting themselves? Not at all. What ought the government to have done in a case of that kind? In preparing their contracts with the coal companies, when the coal companies demanded a clause of this kind, the government should have said: Here you are demanding a certain thing to protect yourselves; now, we ask that certain protection should be given to us. And what would that be? That a clause should be inserted that in case of a strike by the miners, and in case they could not furnish the required amount of coal to the railway, in case of the government being compelled to buy their coal elsewhere and get a large supply on hand—in that case the government would not be bound to buy the supply agreed upon between the parties. That would have been a proper course to take, that would have been a protection to the government. The government had on hand over $500,000 worth of coal on the 30th of June, 1901. Why were they compelled to have so much on hand? Because, in addition to having a large supply of American coal on hand, they were compelled by their agreement with the coal companies to take the amount which the agreement mentioned. So I say they were remiss in their management of the coal contract with the companies. Every man knows that if you have a large supply of coal on a railway, that coal naturally becomes slack when it is exposed to the weather; when it is exposed to the rain and the sunshine it does not have the same heating properties as it would have when taken fresh from the mine. So I say in this instance the government lost a large amount of money in buying coal when the price was something like 50 per cent more than it had been the previous year. The coal they were required to buy during the time of this strike, rose in price, some of it as high as $5.12 a ton, an enormous price to pay for coal, a much larger price than is paid by any railway in this country.

Then we find the same bad management with respect to ties. The manager, under his sworn statement before that committee, says he was the gentleman who prepared the estimates, and he knew that it would only be necessary to have 300,000 or 400,000 ties supplied during that year. What do we find him doing? We find him taking no less than 1,300,000 ties. The question was asked: Do these ties lose in life by lying long unused?—No, he did not think so. Why, Sir, he was so inexperienced in regard to ties that he could not form an estimate of the probable lifetime of ties of any diameter. That man could not say whether or not ties lose in value when lying around year after year without being used. Every man knows well, who has any railway experience at all, that the sooner you place ties in the railway, the longer they will last. Now I think that is ample with respect to coal and ties.

Now, with respect to engines. I undertook yesterday to interrupt the Minister of Railways and Canals when speaking of engines. I am one of those who believe in Canadian industries. I have had some experience on railways in this country and in the United States; I have been employed on something like seven or eight railways in Canada and the United States, and I know something both of handling engines and of their construction; and I want to criticise Mr. Russell for his course in respect to those engines. Notwithstanding the statement made by the Minister of Railways and Canals that Mr. Russell had been a Canadian, and had been employed on the Intercolonial Railway years ago, I want to point out that he wrote a circular which could be taken advantage of by every manufacturer of engines in the United States—to the effect that these Kingston engines were not up to the mark, and that the Cooke engine was not up to the mark. To allow that to be sent around to the different superintendents and to be reproduced in the public press of this country, I say was a very improper step on the part of Mr. Russell. Why do I say so? Especially in view of this fact, that Mr. Muhlfeld is a practical man, and Mr. Muhlfeld told him in conversation that the construction of these engines was not to blame, that if he had an opportunity of readjusting them he would be able to ascertain whether it was the fault of the engineers who were running the engines, whether it was the fault of the coal, or whether it was the fault of the construction of the engines. Why was not Mr. Russell content with that? Why did he not instruct this gentleman to take these engines in and perform that readjustment, and try to give them a proper test? He did nothing of the kind, but he issued this circular, and that is what I condemn him for. I know that these Kingston engines have performed their duties as well and better than a great many engines used on the railways in this country. I have no interest whatever in the manufacture of these engines at Kingston, I know that that industry has been used for the purpose of promoting the interest of the Liberal party in this country; therefore I cannot be charged as a Conservative with any desire to show undue favour to that industry. Therefore I am the more free to say that I consider these Kingston engines are good engines, and I trust that more of them may be employed on that railway.

Now with respect to the rolling stock. Why, Sir, we have it in evidence that hundreds and hundreds of cars on that railway are lying idle; we have it in evidence by this mechanical superintendent that he does not know the condition of a great deal of the rolling stock. Yet the government is expending large sums of money in purchasing new rolling stock to be used on that railway. Now, would it not be in the interest of economy for the officers of that railway to inspect the rolling stock thoroughly, and when they found some requiring repairs, to make the repairs so that it might be put in service again, thus saving a large sum of money. I can quite understand the indifference of the general manager on that point. What did Mr. Pottinger care about charging up new material to capital account? If the government and parliament were satisfied, what had he to do with it? Why, Sir, if the general manager could get all the money he wants, is he going to exercise economy? Certainly not. So I say that, instead of buying any more stock, a large amount of that on hand could have been saved by economy and proper management.

Now a good deal has been said about capital account, as respects earnings, and charging up to maintenance, and so forth. I have always understood that in conducting a railway in this country, or any other country, it was the duty of the management first, to conduct their railway as economically as possible; secondly, to keep their expenditure well within their earnings; and thirdly, at the end of the year, to take their expenditure and subtract it from their earnings and show, if possible, a surplus to the stockholders of the company.

I always understood that was the proper method of conducting a railway in this country, but since I have been in this House I have found that a different method is pursued. A method is pursued whereby they can buy stock for the railway, and when it gets worn out they can simply throw it to one side, get fresh stock, charge it to capital account and never charge it to maintenance at all. Now, hon. gentlemen have given the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals a certificate of character inasmuch as that hon. gentleman had conducted this railway in a non-partisan spirit. This is a question in regard to which I can fairly take credit to myself, because, when my own friends were in office, I did then, as I do now—I opposed the political influence that was being used on that railway in one way or the other, and from the information which I have from a very reliable source, I believe this same political influence is still in existence in the management of that railway. I want to say that we have in the general manager a gentleman, who, though, to my mind, may have very poor judgment in some cases, has very good judgment in others, but, I do say in that gentleman's behalf, that if he were not interfered with, if he were allowed to manage that railway without any interference from political parties, I believe he would be in a position to show a better record in the administration of the railway. But, as I said before, it is owing to political interference from time to time which is the curse of the management of that railway, and the chief reason why the people have to pay large sums of money that it is now actually termed the sink hole of the government in this country.

Now, there is another question with the respect to the extension of sidings. Mr. Pottinger gave evidence under oath in regard to the Copper Crown Company's siding. I want to draw the attention of the hon. member for Westmoreland to the fact that he had better carefully re-read the evidence in connection with the Copper Crown question, and if there are any hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who will read that evidence very carefully, they will come to the conclusion that there was something materially wrong in connection with this transaction. It is all very well to say that it is a small case, that as it involves an expenditure of only $20,000, it is not worth bothering about, but it is the little things on a railway, when added together at the end of the year, which amount to large sums, and before the hon. minister undertakes to expend sums of money from $20,000 and upwards, the general manager should so guide these expenditures that no advantage will be taken, that a hundred cents' worth of material and labour will be furnished for every hundred cents of expenditure. What do we find that the general manager says? Upon going to interview the Copper Crown Company for the purpose of finding out what the output of the company was, he found that the company had exaggerated the output of their mine. That he stated in his evidence. Now, I would like hon. gentlemen in this House to compare this statement with what I am going to say. Where any company or individual want a siding run into their works, the company or individual construct a siding, pay for it and afterwards, if the railway company have secured freight, and they have continued to secure freight they give the company, or the individual, a rebate on that freight to compensate for the expenditure made on this siding. That would have been a wise course to have taken in this case, but what do we find to be the fact? After the company had exaggerated the amount of material taken out of their mine, the general manager goes away, notwithstanding that fact, and authorizes an expenditure of $20,000 on this siding over which to-day there is not a pound of freight passing, over which only 4,000 tons of freight have passed, and for which something like $3,000 has been paid. And it is a question whether there will ever be a pound of freight passing over that line again. If he had taken the proper course he would have said to this company: Construct your siding, we will haul your freight, and when you have earned sufficient in rebate on your freight you will get your money back. That would have been a guarantee to the people of Canada that they would not lose anything by the transaction, but there is something like $17,000 to date of a loss on the transaction, and there is yet due to Mr. Macdonald $500 for legal expenses in connection with the transaction. This is one instance of the way in which this railway is conducted.

Again, we have a principle in this House and one which not only applies to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, but to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and to every department of this government, and it is this: Who has the better right to pass these estimates? Whose duty is it, as representatives in this House, to pass these estimates? Is it not as much our duty to assist in passing these estimates and to criticise them as it is the duty of hon. gentlemen opposite? Is it not in the interest of the people that we should discuss these estimates? In an honest discussion of these estimates there should be a method pursued by this government and that method should be that where any public work is to be constructed, I care not whether it is a canal, a railway, a public building, or whatever it is upon which public money is to be expended in this country, the department that wishes to expend this money on such a project, should first have their engineer, or other officer, whose duty it is, give a proper estimate of the cost of the work. Then, once the government agree on a policy in connection with it, and once they agree to perform that work, it is their duty to come down to this House and, supposing a work is to cost $1,000,000 and that the government feel that they cannot expend $1,000,000 this year, let them come down with $200,000 in their estimates for this purpose. Let them say: This $200,000 is to be expended on a certain work; we expect, according to the estimate, that the work will cost $1,000,000, each year following we hope to expend $200,000 until the expiration of five years, when we will have spent $1,000,000 on this work, and this amount, we expect, will complete it. What is the system that is pursued to-day by the government? They first come down to the House, and for instance, taking the case of the Sydney Railway extension, they ask for $8,000 to finish this work. Does the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals confine the expenditure to that? Not at all. What does he do? He first expends $649 in advertising a work which cost $8,000.

Then he goes on, irrespective of parliament, and he expends nearly $17,000 on a work for which he was only authorized to spend $8,000. Is that the proper duty of government? Is that the way in which the money of the people should be expended? Certainly not. But it is only one example of the conduct of the Minister of Railways, and of other ministers. We have had a unfortunate spectacle not long ago, of a minister taking some $13,000 out of an expenditure that had been voted in 1901, and applying it to a work that had been begun in 1891. Is not that a disgraceful way to conduct the affairs of the country? It is simply a farce for the representatives of the people to come to this parliament, and pretend to pass estimates when we have ministers of the Crown expending the money in whatever way they please and without any reference to what parliament decreed. No language is too strong to condemn such conduct. So long as I occupy a seat in this House, I shall to the best of my ability protest against such misappropriation of the money votes given by this House. My hon. friend beside me points out that it was sworn to that no less than $1,364.94 was paid for advertising in connection with three roundhouses, and when the general manager of the Intercolonial Railway was asked, why it was necessary to expend such a large sum for such a purpose, what was the answer of this brilliant manager of this government railway? He told us: People are so busy now and the contractors have so much other work that we cannot secure their services without incurring this large expenditure for advertising. That is something like what we were told the other night, that the government could not get people to accept positions in connection with the census. Well, I congratulate the government. It is the first government that ever had the pleasure of not being able to find people to fill positions. I could speak, Sir, about the Curran railway tie monopoly, and about several other matters, and if I should speak of them, I could speak by the book, because the sworn evidence is before me. I want to know, are the people of Canada going to stand this kind of thing from any government? I want to know if they will allow ministers to do these things. When Mr. McManus, inspector of ties, was changed from his position as tie inspector to be assistant inspector of lumber, a question was asked of Mr. Russell, the manager of the Intercolonial Railway, as to the reason of that change, and the Minister of Railways thought it his duty to get up and object. In no business concern in the world would a question of that kind be objected to by the man who conducted the business. It is the most absurd thing I ever heard of. Had such an objection come from the member for Westmoreland or from others on that side, it would not be so strange, because they believed it their duty so far as they can to burk any inquiry that may damage the government, but when the objection comes from the Minister of Railways, who is responsible for the Intercolonial Railway, it is all the stranger still. I hope at a later period, and before these estimates are passed, to discuss other questions about the expenditure of public money. I trust that I shall do so without offending my opponents, and that whatever I say may add something to help to make the government railway what it ought to be—a paying concern to the people of this country.

Mr. TURGEON. I rise not to commend the action of the Minister of Railways though I would be pleased to do that; but to commend the action of the railway administration at Moncton, which is well known the Dominion over, never wittingly to have sinned for the love of the Liberal party. I speak with some reluctance, because it was not my intention to take part in the debate, but if I did not refute some of the statements made by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) it might have gone to the province of New Brunswick that the member for Gloucester, from whose district largely these ties were supplied, felt that something had been done that ought not to have been done. I believe I am in a better position than perhaps other hon. gentlemen in this House to give a statement in relation to this matter. In a previous debate I dealt somewhat extensively with the general administration of the Intercolonial Railway, and I shall content myself now by referring to some matters of more local import. I expected that the hon. member for King's (Mr. Fowler) would have delivered an oration which would have gone to the province of New Brunswick as a great condemnation of the administration of the Intercolonial Railway, but the hon. gentleman's speech was short and ineffective. Far be it from me to impute a motive to any member on either side of this House, but sometimes I am amazed at the extraordinary memory of some gentlemen opposite, in its pliability to the requirements or the needs of whatever case they are trying to make out. When the inspector of ties was before the committee, he swore that he inspected ties for Mr. Curran and for Mr. Culligan, and for other parties during many years past. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker), who was the chief cross-examiner before the Public Accounts Committee, got up in his place and left it to be inferred by the House and by the country that the contract to Mr. Curran had been awarded before the election, and in order to serve the purposes of the election. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) made this statement in view of the sworn evidence of Mr. Pottinger, general manager, that the contract given to Frank Curran for ties was given in December, 1900, or in the early days of January, 1901, several months after the election, and therefore could not have been given for the purpose of influencing the electorate at that time. The general manager himself explained in his evidence, the first day he came before the Public Accounts Committee, that he had advertised for ties for the following year, just as he had done every year since the inception of the road. It is always in the fall of the year, in September, October, and sometimes in November, that ties are asked for by tenders for the next year. He stated that he required at least 600,000 ties for the following summer, and he made an appeal for tenders to the amount of 800,000, as the supplies of previous years had invariably run short of meeting the requirements of the road. And I am hear to say that in the years 1898 and 1899, Mr. Pottinger sometimes sent emissaries to me from Moncton, begging me to try to secure immediately in the district to which I belong ties of which the railway was short. On some occasions I was not able to do it, and they had to get the ties from the upper end of the province of Quebec in order to supply the foremen and the trackmen in the province of New Brunswick and the province of Nova Scotia what they required. Therefore, I say that when the general manager asked for 800,000 ties and in answer to that requisition obtained only 335,000, he was more than justified in taking the course he did. He was not influenced by any political or personal consideration, for I know that Mr. Pottinger has no personal interest in Mr. Curran, but he was bound to secure all the ties he would require for the following year ; and after having given that contract for 185,000 ties or thereabout, to Frank Curran, he was still short of the requirement. It has been stated in this evidence that he only gave that contract after having received in reply to his request tenders for only 350,000 ; and I ask every member of this House who has been in any way connected with railroads, if, after failing to get during the winter the supply of ties required for the following summer, he was not obliged to remain without them until the next winter. Therefore, the contract was given for no political consideration, but as a matter of necessity for the requirements of the road.

Then, again, comes the fact that after having given that contract to Frank Curran, the department had not yet contracted for the full quantities required for the next summer, and knowing by past experience that every summer he had been put to inconvience because of the scarcity of ties and knowing also that the best quality of lumber for ties is getting scarcer and scarcer every year in our district, he said to those contractors, 'bring me all you can.' Is it to be supposed that for political considerations the general manager bought a number of ties and left them over for another year ? The road is bound to run for another year, and what is bought in one year will not have to be bought the next year. No doubt the reason why the general manager succeeded in getting a larger quantity of ties than he expected was that many men on the north shore, in the counties of Restigouche and Gloucester, and I may say Northumberland as well, were induced to go into the tie business, which would enable them to stay at home during the winter instead of going into the lumber camps.

Then this stock of ties would be as valuable to the road the next year as it would have been this year. I even go further, and speak not from my own authority, but from the authority of men who have had twenty or twenty-five years of experience on railroads in our district—not on the government railroad, but on railroads of private corporations. I speak especially from the authority of the trackmaster of the Caraquet Railway, which runs through the same district. He claims that if he had the means to do so, he would get all his ties a year in advance, because when a tie has been dried for a year it is more valuable and will last longer in the ground than a tie which is cut fresh from the wood.

Again the statement is made that the ties were no good. I know that complaints were made against the inspector. I know nothing personally of the action of the inspector. Although belonging to that district, I never had the pleasure of meeting the inspector from the time the contract was signed until I returned home last summer after my parliamentary duties had ended in June. It was while parliament was in session that I heard the complaint made against the inspector of receiving ties which were not according to the specifications. I might also add that while in this House last spring I received letters from some of my friends complaining of the difficulty they had to get their ties accepted by Inspector McManus, claiming that he was too strict, and that he should not have rejected their ties.

My own personal investigation has shown me that these men had a certain quantity of ties which were certainly not acceptable, and which Mr. McManus refused to accept. Regarding the letter of the minister about which so much has been said, in our locality the inspector has stated that there are two or three kinds of spruce, but that the best kind, which is black spruce, does not grow there. We only see it once in a while, and the spruce which he called white spruce is the ordinary spruce of the country. It is a quality of wood which is certainly even better than cedar for ties. Men of experience know that the white spruce will hold nails for the first five years better than cedar, and therefore is as valuable as cedar itself, which is considered a first class quality of wood for the purpose. I may say also that the supply of cedar is becoming exhausted in that district, so that it is a matter of necessity for the management of the road to accept the spruce which grows in that country. If the black spruce grew there, it is certainly to some extent superior to the white, but it is only a portion of the black spruce, at the butt of the tree, which can be used for ties. Some times out of one tree you will only get one first class tie, because ten or twelve feet from the root the wood has no more value for this purpose than the white spruce. When, therefore, the hon. minister, at the request of the contractor, whose political feelings cannot be appealed to for he is a well reputed Conservative, who worked for the Conservative party even after he got this letter from the minister, accepted white spruce, he did what any business man would have done. No other spruce could be found in that locality, and it was in that locality the minister had to get his supply. That letter therefore, instead of reflecting on the conduct of the minister, shows that he had a practical knowledge of the locality and of the quality of wood required and which could be had there.

In answer to complaints a second inspection was ordered, and according to hon. gentlemen opposite that made a bad showing. Well, I claim that the ties which were supplied by these contractors and received by the inspector were fully equal in quality to those that were always received on the Intercolonial Railway during the administration of the late government. It has been shown also by the evidence of Mr. Pottinger and the inspector of ties that section foremen or trackmasters or roadmasters are often employed as inspectors themselves or as assisting the inspector, and it is well known that sectionmen, as a rule, are fully competent to judge the quality of ties which they are handling. In our district we have seven or eight section foremen. The county of Gloucester is an extensive county, and we have seven or eight sections running through it, and every one of the foremen employed—and who have been employed on the road fifteen or twenty years in most cases—declared over their own signature, and are ready to declare the same under oath if the opposition members want to call them as witnesses, that the ties received are just as good as those which had been received in previous years ever since they have been employed on the railway, and are even perhaps superior, if any discrimination is to be made. I now hold their signed statement in my hand. But these hon. gentlemen do not want to call these men. They only want the evidence of Mr. P. S. Archibald, and failing to get him they want none at all. We can conclude therefore that they must have a motive in refusing every other evidence except that of Mr. Archibald, who they called an engineer of the road. But Mr. Archibald has not been on the road during the last five years and as the reasons which brought about his dismissal have been referred to at length, I need not discuss them now. The inspector has declared himself that, according to his judgment, he was not accustomed to follow strictly the specifications but used his discretion in that respect, and he is a competent man who has been engaged in the lumber and tie business all his life. It is admitted by members on the other side, and it has been proved, as well, that Mr. Chas. McManus is an honest man and that his family is one of the most honoured and respectable and well known perhaps in Nova Scotia as well as in New Brunswick.

I do not think I need extend my remarks any further. All I intended was to substantiate the evidence of Mr. Pottinger and also the evidence of the inspector, as far as I could from my personal knowledge, and especially commend to this House the sound judgment of the present Minister of Railways when, travelling over the road and inspecting its work, in company with the officials, he took the action he did in the interests of the road and acting on the advice of most competent men.

Mr. TAYLOR. As the minister is not here, I think it would be well to let the item stand over. There has been no proper explanation given.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Which item is it ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The item of $140,000 for rental of the Grand Trunk.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I thought it had been pretty well threshed out, but if hon. gentlemen opposite wish the item to stand, I will not object.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose, if there is anything we wish to say further about it, the hon. minister will have no objection to having it understood that we shall be free to say it on another item.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will agree, then, that the item is carried with the understanding that the subject may be referred to on another item.

Railways and Canals—chargeable to collection of revenue—Prince Edward Island Railway, $275,000.

Mr. WILSON. What is the explanation of this ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I thought we had gone over the whole railway service so thoroughly that it would not be deemed necessary to give any explanation of these items. If, however, any hon. gentleman desires it, we will suspend the vote on this department, in the absence of the Minister of Railways and Canals, who has been obliged to leave, and take up the estimates of the Minister of Justice.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think, perhaps, that would be better. Last night, we did not go on quite as long as we might have done. And my hon. friend from South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) and my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) have been obliged to take the train.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All the railway experts have left us, so we will proceed with the estimates of the Minister of Justice.

Administration of Justice—Yukon territory—additional salary of judge, $1,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). This item appears here rather out of its order. If hon. gentlemen will look at page 26, they will see provision made for salary of judge in the Territorial Court, $4,000. This vote of $1,000 is intended to supplement the other, so as to pay a salary to the Yukon Territory judges of $5,000 each.

Mr. WILSON. What are the names of the judges ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Messrs. Craig and Dugas.

Salary of additional judge, $5,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). These two judges form a sort of additional court, now, do they not ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. With the third judge it is proposed to appoint, they will. We are taking authority this session to appoint an additional judge. It is proposed that these three judges shall sit as a Court of Appeal from the judgment of a trial judge instead of carrying appeals to British Columbia. And, when the amount involved exceeds $2,000 there will be an appeal from the Territorial Court to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Yukon Territory—Living allowances of judges, $6,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is the same amount as was voted last year ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is really an additional salary ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes. It is given in order to make the position of a judge in the Yukon the same as would be the position of a Superior Court judge in one of the older provinces. The theory is that they have to spend so much more for their maintenance, that a salary of $5,000 in that country would not put a judge there in the same position at all as a judge in any other part of Canada with that salary. I took the precaution to get figures to show what the cost of living out there is. I have been told, for instance, that a house of a very modest character cannot be had in that country for less than $150 a month, that a house servant cannot be engaged for less than $100 a month; that the amount of fuel required is at least 30 cords of wood a year at $16 a cord, $480——

Mr. TAYLOR. And the government gave all its wood away.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Anyhow, we do not expect the judges to be obliged to go out and chop their own wood. Water there costs $20 a month, $240 a year. And so on. In view of these figures the allowance is not at all exorbitant. The item of house rent and service takes up the whole allowance.

Mr. WILSON. Is this $6,000 for the three judges ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, for two only.

Mr. WILSON. But you are going to appoint a third, you are making no provision for him.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, in the supplementary estimates. I may add that we propose in the supplementary estimates to provide a living allowance of $5,000 for each judge. I take this opportunity to let that fact be known that I may not be said to have taken the House by surprise when the item comes down.

Mr. WILSON. And there are travelling expenses also.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The vote of $1,500 for travelling expenses is merely tentative. It covers only travelling within the territory. The item was voted last year, but we have not been called upon to spend any of the money. But it may be found necessary for the convenience of suitors to sit at White Horse or Tagish, and this is to provide for such cases should they arise.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any particular object in dividing it up in this way, calling part salary and part living allowances ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have thought we should consider the propriety of giving the judges a round sum as a salary. But there is this objection, which I speak of not from personal experience, but from information I have received, that the country is not one in which a man can be expected to live for more than five or six years and be able to perform his duties. If we fixed the salary at $10,000 or $8,000, and then found it necessary to move a judge say, to the North-west and make an exchange, the question would arise whether, having appointed him at a fixed salary, we had any right to reduce it. It is suggested to me also by the Minister of Finance that the cost of living there may decrease, as we hope it will, and then we can decrease the living allowance, though we could hardly, in that case, decrease a salary.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is also an advantage in respect to superannuation, from the country's standpoint.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, I had not thought of that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like, when the hon. gentleman does bring down his proposal with respect to $5,000 for living allowance, that he would furnish us with some data, because it seems to me a pretty large allowance in view of what the judges get in other parts of Canada. For instance, a great many items are comprised in this living allowance, and must necessarily be, in the salary which the judge of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia receives, $4,000 a year, or the judges of other provinces, with salaries somewhat higher in some cases. I do not know that what you would call a living allowance in this case, would amount to in the salary of a judge in the other provinces. But whatever it may be, it seems to me that the cost of living in the Yukon must be very excessive indeed if a sum of $5,000 is a fair allowance. I am not disposed to be too particular about it, because it is right that the judges there should be adequately paid, but it seems to me, taking all things into consideration, it is a large allowance for that purpose.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. When it was suggested that the living allowance of the judges should be increased from $3,000 to $5,000, I asked the commissioner of the Yukon Territory, who is here, to give me some figures which would enable me to justify this increase to the House, and he gave me the figures I gave a moment ago. For instance, he says that a very modest house there will cost $1,800 a year, one servant, $1,200, and other figures that I mentioned a moment ago. In addition, he says, speaking generally, that the cost of living in the Yukon Territory is at least four times greater than in eastern Canada. For instance, meat costs 75 cents a pound, potatoes 18 to 25 cents a pound; during the month of August last, potatoes sold as high as 30 cents a pound; apples and perishable goods of all kinds, 25 to 50 cents a pound. I have no reason to doubt the accuracy of his statement, and in view if it, $5,000 is really not an exorbitant amount for living allowance.

Salary of sheriff of Territorial Court, in addition to such fees of office as may be allowed by the Governor in Council, $3,000.

Mr. BENNETT. I would ask, when did Sheriff Eilbeck return to the Yukon, and if he had leave of absence last winter, and for how long ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think he had leave for three or four months, the first leave of absence, I understand, he had since being in that country.

Mr. TAYLOR. What salary does he get ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The present salary is $3,000, and he has been receiving at the same time one-half the fees coming to his office. I think myself that it is a mistake to give any share of the fees to a public officer. I think it is better to pay them a fitting salary, and oblige them to render an account of the fees they receive in connection with their office. The fees paid out there were sufficient to enable the sheriff this year to have a salary of $5,000 or $6,000. When the supplementary estimates are brought down there will be a provision fixing the salary of the sheriff at $4,000 a year, and hereafter he will have no share of the fees.

Mr. TAYLOR. I saw in the Auditor General's report that Sheriff Eilbeck received a commission of 3 per cent on $53,669, and 2 per cent on $57,065, making $2,751 for commissions he made in selling government lands out there, besides $4,800. Then he spent four months of his time electioneering for hon. gentlemen opposite in West Durham. The figures I have given are found in the Auditor General's report, page L—46.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That was not in connection with his office as sheriff. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. Sheriff Eilbeck may have received that sum in some other capacity, but it was not in connection with his office as sheriff. But whatever his fees may have been in the past, I do not think he will be in receipt of any more. With respect to the statement that he was electioneering in West Durham, I made inquiry as to that—of course I accept the statement of the hon. gentleman—but my information is that he was not in West Durham, although I believe he lived somewhere in that locality. But I could get no information to the effect that he had been electioneering in that place.

Mr. TAYLOR. I can furnish the information. I was up there, and I know something about it. I think that probably these commissions he got in selling this land he distributed, or a portion of them, in West Durham.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not think that is likely.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is the information I got.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think the hon. gentleman's information must be wrong, because I do not think this gentleman would improperly use such money.

Mr. TAYLOR. I know the gentleman very well, and I think he must have been supplied from other sources.

Mr. BENNETT. I think that is quite right, because in the part of the riding that Sheriff Eilbeck was operating in, and he was canvassing closely, the election went very badly for the government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think perhaps a very critical person might object to his salary going on while he was electioneering in West Durham, though I would not be inclined to say much about that. But does not the Minister of Justice think it is rather rubbing it in to ask us to pay for his living allowance while canvassing in West Durham ?

Mr. WILSON. When his salary is raised to $4,000, will he have to furnish his own living allowance ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He gets $1,800 in addition for living allowance.

Salary of clerk of Territorial Court in addition to such fees of office as may be allowed by the Governor in Council, $3,000.

Mr. TAYLOR.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. His salary also will be $4,000 a year, with a living allowance of $1,800. Under the present arrangement he makes considerably more than that, and we do not see why he should be in receipt of the emoluments of his office in addition to his salary.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is far better to give him a fixed salary. What does the judiciary of the Yukon consist of ? There are three judges and two police magistrates.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There are two judges in the High Court and two police magistrates, and the intention is to have three judges and confer upon these three judges the jurisdiction which these police magistrates have now, in the expectation that we will be able to dispense with one of the police magistrates.

Mr. FOWLER. Where are these police magistrates located ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. One is at White Horse and one at Dawson.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). These police magistrates are barristers, are they not ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, Mr. Taylor, from Ontario somewhere, is a barrister. He is at White Horse. The other police magistrate is Mr. Macaulay, formerly of Belleville. He is at Dawson.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are they allowed to practice as barristers ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, the one at White Horse, I fancy, is not very much occupied with business. There is not a great deal of business to be done there, but at Dawson the police magistrate has a very great deal to do.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the police magistrate at White Horse practice his profession?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, as far as I can gather from the return there does not appear to be very much to do either for the police magistrate or for the bar. However, it is necessary to have a man there.

To supplement the salary of the surgeon of the North-west Mounted Police at Dawson, on account of his attendance upon long term prisoners, confined at the police guard-room, $400.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that $400 in addition to his salary as surgeon of the police ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He receives as surgeon of the police a salary, and in addition to that he attends to the prisoners who are confined in the jail at Dawson. For the services he renders at the jail he receives $400.

Mr. WILSON. How much is his salary ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think that the salary of a surgeon of police in the territories, speaking from memory, varies from $800 to $1,000. And then there are certain allowances in addition, but I am not prepared to say whether, in the Yukon, there is any additional salary or not. That is the salary in the territories.

Maintenance of prisoners, $40,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the hon. minister any statement as to the number of prisoners there ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And the expense of keeping them last year ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We spent last year $22,812, and the daily average of prisoners was 45. The arrangement is to pay $2 per day to the North-west Mounted Police. We account to them at the rate of $2 a day for each prisoner maintained by them, and of the amount of $22,812 there was $20,000 paid for the Dawson jail, and $1,900 at White Horse. Up to the present time this year the expenditure has been in the vicinity of $19,000.

Transport of prisoners, $5,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What does that mean ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We have not received from the mounted police the account, but I inquired at the mounted police office here to-day, and I was told that there will be about $3,000 due up to the present time for the services which have been rendered in that connection.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where do they transport them to and from ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. From wherever they may happen to be arrested, from different portions of the territory. Some are brought to Dawson, some to White Horse, and a few to Tagish. They are chiefly brought to Dawson.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where are those prisoners convicted and sentenced to penitentiary sent ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We keep them in Dawson as far as possible. There are two convicts in Dawson who are hardened criminals and we thought that perhaps it would be better, as they are life prisoners, that we should move them to the penitentiary in British Columbia, as it would not be safe to keep them in Dawson. My hon. friend must bear in mind that there is a very considerable inconvenience caused by the movement of prisoners by reason of the fact that it is necessary to pass through American territory, and whenever we want to move a prisoner to British Columbia we are obliged to go through the formality of applying to the home authorities, and of having them apply to the Secretary of State at Washington, for the purpose of obtaining permission to take the prisoners through American territory. There are two whom we intend to move, and we have permission to do that.

Witness and jury fees in criminal trials, $15,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We spent $12,000 last year. It appears very large, but my hon. friend will remember that we pay $5 a day to a witness and $5 a day to a juryman. There were last year over eighty criminal trials in the territory, which resulted in this large expenditure.

Mr. WILSON. It appears that in almost every estimate you are asking considerably more than you spent last year ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, we are taking the same amount that we had last year, but we had more than we actually expended. I am speaking about what we have expended up to the present time.

Mr. WILSON. In some of these estimates you are asking nearly double the amount ?

Mr. BENNETT. How often are trials by jury held in the year ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I really cannot answer that question. My information is that courts are sitting almost continuously.

Mr. FRASER. All the time ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. An Order in Council has been passed enabling the commissioner of the Yukon Territory to fix the sittings of the court. Up to the present time the sittings have been regulated largely by the judges themselves. I really cannot say how many sittings they have in a year, but I know they profess to be very busy, and, judging from the returns, they must have a good deal to do.

Law books, &c., and freight thereon for the use of the bench and bar, and stationery and freight thereon for Territorial Court, $2,500.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is somewhat misleading. As a matter of fact, we have paid so far this year $1,817.04 in connection with that item—stationery, $1,318.06; freight on stationery, $345 and freight on some law books, $153.10, making in all, $1,817.04.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there a law library for the use of the court provided by the government ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, we have provided a law library for the use of the court, and that includes, also, barristers in that portion of the country.

Miscellaneous expenses, including fees and expenses of Crown prosecutor, salaries and living allowances of stenographers for territorial and police courts, and other officials or employees connected with the administration of justice, coroner's inquests, &c., &c., $30,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Who is the Crown prosecutor and what is he paid ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Mr. Wade is the Crown prosecutor. He is now on leave of absence and he has been replaced by Mr. Congdon, formerly a barrister of Nova Scotia. He is paid by fees which last year amounted to $7,768.91, but that included the services he rendered in connection with the celebrated O'Brien case which occupied thirty days in the trial.

Mr. FOWLER. Is he paid any living allowance.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No. Of course he has a large practice in addition to this.

Mr. TAYLOR. He is doing well.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there not a barrister who holds the position of legal adviser to the Yukon council or something like that.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think there is one, but the Minister of the Interior has the appointment of that officer. I really do not know who he is, or if there is one at present.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What I am considering is, why the legal adviser to the Yukon council should not attend to the duties of Crown prosecutor and save the country $7,000 a year. I do not know how much of his time would be occupied in advising the council of the Yukon, but I should not suppose there can be legal questions continually arising sufficient to take the time of a capable man. The minister might very well consider as to whether the legal adviser must not perform those other duties.

Mr. FOWLER. As the minister expressed the opinion that payment by fees is not a very good principle, it might be a good idea to pay the Crown prosecutor by salary.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not think that you can apply that rule to the Crown prosecutor. He ought to be one of the leaders of the Bar in any part of the country where he performs his duty, and if he is to be of any use at all he ought to be in active practice. In my own province the Crown prosecutor is paid by fees, except in the city of Montreal.

Mr. FOWLER. He could be allowed to practice outside, and receive a salary at the same time.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. When I speak of fees, I mean that he gets a per diem allowance. He is paid by the Crown and I presume he considers the Crown as an ordinary client. His services are permanently retained by the Crown in all criminal matters.

Mr. FOWLER. By whom are these fees taxed ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They are taxed by the Department of Justice, here the same as the fees of any other counsel who have a claim against us.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It occurred to me that a gentleman capable of filling the position of legal adviser to the council of the Yukon ought to be capable of conducting these prosecutions, and I would think he would have sufficient time at his disposal to do so. I know that the late Sir John Thompson when he was Attorney General of Nova Scotia performed the duties of legal adviser such as are incident to the filling of that position, and he conducted all criminal prosecutions at Halifax as well. Of course at the same time he was engaged in an extensive legal practice outside. If there is no objection on the ground of public policy—and none occurs to me at this moment—I would be inclined to think that the legal adviser might very well do this work which Mr. Wade is paid for doing. I think the minister should look into that.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That seems to be a very reasonable suggestion, and if my hon. friend will renew the question when the supplementary estimates come down, I will in the meantime make inquiries as to whether there is a legal adviser at the present time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think there is. If I remember aright Mr. Congdon went from the Bar of Nova Scotia to fill that office.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. And he was replaced by Mr. Frank Newlands from the North-west Territories, formerly of Halifax.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, Mr. Newlands also came from Halifax many years ago. Mr. Congdon, I believe, resigned to enter into partnership with Mr. Wade, and I think Mr. Newlands took his place. I would suggest that Mr. Newlands might have sufficient time at his disposal to discharge the duties of Crown prosecutor along with his other duties.

Mr. BENNETT. What leave of absence did Mr. Wade get, and is he paid anything during his absence ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He has four months leave of absence which I understand is the first leave he got since he has been in the Yukon. Mr. Congdon, his business partner acts as Crown prosecutor in his absence.

Mr. FOWLER. What are the fees paid per day.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In connection with the O'Brien case which was a very serious case, Mr. Wade was allowed $100 a day.

Mr. LANCASTER. What are the duties of the legal adviser.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I really do not know what he does. He is under the Department of the Interior, and we have no control over him.

Mr. LANCASTER. Do I understand the minister to say that he knows nothing about this legal adviser.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I know nothing about it. He is controlled by the Department of the Interior, but of course the Crown prosecutor comes under the Department of Justice. I believe the legal adviser is a semi-judicial officer who is a member of the council and acts as legal adviser, and I would suppose performs to some extent the duties of the Attorney General of a province.

Mr. FOWLER. How many stenographers are there, and what are their salaries ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Two ; and their salaries, under the new Order in Council, will be $2,000 a year, which will be in lieu of all fees and other emoluments. I may say that last year the stenographers fees amounted to $5,833.86 ; but that is going to stop.

Mr. FOWLER. What is the living allowance ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. $1,800 a year.

Mr. FOWLER. Do they do duty in the police court ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The two stenographers are supposed to be sufficient to perform all the duties in both the high court and the police court.

Penitentiaries—general, $6,290.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the meaning of the increase ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The increase is $2,730. It is made up by an additional inspector at $2,600, a statutory increase of $30 to the stenographer, and $100 increase to the office contingencies.

Kingston penitentiary, $187,500.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are they manufacturing binder twine at Kingston Penitentiary now ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, not now. We got face to face with a difficulty which has to be dealt with. I am glad my attention has been called to that, because I wish to refer to it. Last year this House passed the following resolution :

That so long as the government continues to manufacture twine, the same shall be offered for sale directly to farmers up to July the 1st of each year at cost of material and manufacture, calculating wages on the basis of fair wages for free labour ; and that the twine unsold and on hand on July 1st of each year be sold by tender to the highest bidder, after advertisement.

We consider now that we are bound by this resolution of the House, and the result has been as follows. The annual output of the penitentiary was 500 tons. Acting on this resolution, the farmers were called on to come and purchase binder twine. As a result, up to the 1st of July we had applications from 850 farmers. Of these 220 were from Prince Edward Island, 17 from New Brunswick, 130 from Quebec, 85 from Manitoba, 24 from the North-west Territories, 1 from British Columbia, and 359 from Ontario. The average of these orders was 120 pounds, and the total amount purchased was 45 tons ; so that on the 1st of July we found ourselves in possession of something over 300 tons of binder twine out of the total production of 500 tons. We had to keep it until the 1st of July for the farmers, and then we sold it at public auction. We called for tenders, and there were three tenders put in, and the binder twine was awarded to a man named Henderson Black, of St. John's in the province of Quebec. Of course, we sold the twine at a sacrifice, because at that time the farmers had all made their purchases, and the people in the trade had obtained their stock. It is absolutely impossible for us to do business there if we are going to conform to this resolution, and the loss on the business of last year is in the vicinity of $10,000. We are in the hands of the House if the House maintains this resolution ; but while I am at the head of the department, I will not take the responsibility of carrying on business on any such conditions.

Mr. BLAIN. Will the minister explain what kind of twine they have been manufacturing there—the different qualities ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I understand that the quality was the very best. After the 1st of July we had 586,973 pounds of mixed grades, and 60,000 pounds of sisal. That was disposed of, as I said a moment ago, to Mr. Henderson Black.

Mr. BLAIN. Might I ask the hon. minister to give to the committee a statement of the quantities of the different kinds that were manufactured there last year ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I cannot give it off hand.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to read this letter to the House. It is somewhat startling, after the statement of the minister. It appears that they have been making a kind of binder twine which the farmers do not want and are therefore unable to sell it. I wrote a letter to the warden of the penitentiary and here is his reply dated 17th June last :

Your esteemed favour of 15th instant, came to hand this morning and I have sent Mr. Hare samples as requested. I also mail you to-day, under particular cover, half a dozen of the samples and some circulars. You will notice that our 'pure manilla' and 'standard' stocks are exhausted and consequently I am not sending you the samples of these brands.

Therefore on the 17th June every particle of pure manilla which was manufactured was exhausted, and every particle of the standard, so that it is hardly fair to say that the farmers did not take advantage of their opportunities. But if the penitentiary is going to manufacture a kind of twine which is not used, it must expect to have it left on hand.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend has the advantage of me in this, that he speaks as an expert. I would ask him to tell us what kind of twine we ought to manufacture in order to get a market, and comply with the terms of this resolution. In past years we had no difficulty whatever in selling our twine.

Mr. BLAIN. The hon. gentleman said last year and there was nothing new in the resolution moved, because they had been operating that very system of selling twine in the past to the farmers.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I would like the hon. gentleman to quote me the statement I made and I am prepared to repeat it now.

Mr. BLAIN. I will get it before the discussion is through. But I would repeat that if the minister expects a market for his twine, he must manufacture the kind that the farmers require. It is well known that the kind of twine more used than any other, particularly in the province of Ontario, is pure manilla twine. But the minister has not been giving attention to the demands of the farmers. He has been manufactuing a kind of twine which the farmers do not require. The kind of twine which the farmers do require was all sold on the 17th June under the new resolution. The minister asks if I will be good enough to state the kind of twine that the penitentiary ought to manufacture. That is an easy statement for any man to make.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If he is capable of doing it.

Mr. BLAIN. All I have to say is that if the minister is going to conduct the business he ought to know or find some man who does. He complains that there is a stagnation in the business, because the farmers do not take advantage of the terms offered in the resolution. But it is the duty of the government to find out the kind of twine the farmers want, and to make that kind of twine. What the farmers want is pure manilla twine and the second grade, which is a mixed manilla and sisal twine, and the total quantity of the two kinds mentioned which the hon. gentleman manufactured last year was sold out before the 17th June. I know that orders were in from my county that could not be filled, and therefore it is hardly fair to say that the farmers will not take advantage of the twine manufactured.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I believe in the old adage that a cobbler should stick to his last. I am not a manufacturer of binder twine, but there are men at the head of the penitentiary, not chosen by myself but appointed previous to 1896, to carry on the business, and they have carried it on up to the present, and I did not think I could do better than allow them to carry it on as they understand it. I made no statement as to what occurred as the result of that resolution other than to quote the statement of the inspector, Mr. Stewart, who inaugurated the business, which will be found on page 9 of the report of the penitentiary, and which is confirmed by the warden of the penitentiary, to be found on page 30 of the same report. I accept the responsibility of what these men do, as I do not believe I can do better than follow their advice.

Mr. BLAIN. Do they advise the hon. gentleman to make a poorer grade of twine than the farmers want to purchase.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I deny that statement, and I deny it on the authority of men, who are not there by my choice but by that of hon. gentlemen opposite. I take the responsibility for what they have done, and it is for the House to choose between the statement of my hon. friend and that of competent officials.

Mr. BLAIN. I do not wish to make a statement.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. But you did make it.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not make it. I did not say that the twine manufactured is an inferior grade or that it is not properly made, or that the material used is not up to the standard claimed, but what I do say is that if the minister will continue to make a grade of twine which is not in demand in this country, he cannot expect the farmers to buy it, and I repeat that twine which he manufactured last year of pure manilla and the second grade twine was all purchased, under the resolution passed by this House the 17th June last.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The statement I made was this. The practice previous to the introduction of this resolution was to dispose of the twine to the farmers as they applied for it, but that did not prevent our disposal of the twine by tender previous to the 1st July. We disposed of it to the farmers as they came, and disposed of the balance to the traders.

Mr. BLAIN. So far as the clause in the resolution is concerned, providing that the twine should be sold after 1st July by public tender, I had no connection with the resolution which was proposed by an hon. member on that side.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I hope my hon. friend does not imagine that I hold him responsible for everything said in connection with binder twine.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the minister inferred that the resolution of last year was moved by a member of the opposition.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, it was passed with one dissenting voice, and was suggested by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). All I said was that it was a resolution which had been passed by the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. I took it as a resolution approved by the government and introduced by the hon. member for Alberta. The hon. gentleman said that Mr. Stewart was the gentleman who had inaugurated the system. He had nothing to do with the inauguration of the system of manufacturing binder twine at Kingston. He was Sir John Thompson's secretary up to the time Sir John Thompson left the government, and was then appointed as inspector of the penitentiary, but the penitentiary had been manufacturing binder twine for a year or two before his appointment.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. For what Mr. Stewart has done in connection with binder twine I accept all responsibility and consider him a very competent man.

Mr. TAYLOR. He was not the man who inaugurated the manufacture.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think he was. It began in January, 1894.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Stewart was not inspector at that time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, the present warden, Mr. Platt, the gentleman who wrote that letter was not appointed by friends of hon. gentlemen on this side, but by the hon. minister himself? He is the head of the institution.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not mean to give the impression that anybody is responsible for what is done except myself. I did not wish to shirk the responsibility and put it upon an official. As long as an official is with me I am responsible for what he does.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the hon. gentleman says that the man who directs this industry was appointed by hon. gentlemen on this side. Now, Mr. Platt was appointed by himself.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. But Mr. Connor was not.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the gentleman who wrote that letter on June last was appointed by the hon. minister, and the manufacture of binder twine is carried on in an institution of which he is the head. Now, with reference to the price, the price obtained in July last was as good as any obtained for the last two or three years.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am told not.

Mr. TAYLOR. In one or two years, perhaps it was sold at a less price than that named by my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman has told us that only three tenders were received. Who were they from and what were they? I never saw a notice of the twine on hand being sold by tender last July. Was it publicly advertised or were only a few friends of the government asked to put in bids?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It was advertised in the Toronto 'Globe,' the Hamilton 'Times,' the London 'Advertiser,' the Montreal 'Herald,' the Montreal 'La Patrie,' the Winnipeg 'Free Press,' the London 'Record,' the Brandon 'Sun,' and the Windsor 'Record.' In addition, the two dealers who had purchased the previous article and other dealers were asked to put in tenders.

Mr. BENNETT. What Toronto papers were there?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The Toronto 'Globe' is the only one I see mentioned in this list. Tenders were received from Henderson Black, the Hobbs Hardware Company, the Ontario Binder Twine Company and S. S. Dickinson. The question is whether we should continue this industry, and I do not see any reason why we should not, particularly in view of the large amount of plant we have on hand. I do not see why we should not keep that plant running and why we should not change the product we put on the market so as to make it more attractive. With that in view, I am ready to take the advice of anybody who is competent to express an opinion on the matter. I have absolute confidence in the two men who have charge of the administration of this industry. At the same time the industry has not been as profitable as it ought to have been—I have to admit that. There is no reason why we should not change and make it profitable. I do not pretend to know anything about the manufacture of binder twine. Why should I? But I have two experts to advise me. Mr. Platt, I do not consider an expert on this subject. But Mr. Connor is an expert. He was put there to carry on this business, and gets a large salary for doing so. Mr. Stewart who has been in the service from the inception of this industry is also there to advise me. I will take their advice. But I will likewise take the advice of any others who are competent to speak upon the subject. My desire is to carry on this industry profitably for the benefit of the country, not for the benefit of the farmer only, but for the benefit of the country as a whole.

Mr. WILSON. Is the plant now running?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. At the present time it would not be profitable to carry on the business, because the price of manilla has gone so high.

Mr. WILSON. But the hon. minister is paying help ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. None except Mr. Connor.

Mr. WILSON. He is keeping the expensive men ?

Mr. FRASER. I gave the minister advice last year, and I wish to repeat it now—and that is to sell out everything you have got in this line, if you cannot get better than scrap-iron prices for it, and get out of the business. This is not a business for the government to go into, I have said before, and I say now, it was started as a sort of bait to catch the farmers, to convince them that we were going to give them assistance. The farmers can look after themselves better than we can look after them, and the manufacturers of binder twine will attend to that business. Let us not be hedging and trying to make ourselves and others believe that we are generously trying to help the farmers. Sell out the whole thing and give Mr. Connor something else to do.

Mr. LANCASTER. In view of the great stress laid this afternoon on the fact that the Intercolonial Railway was such a good means of holding up the other railways, I should think that it would have occurred to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fraser) that this manufacture of binder twine would help us to keep down the prices charged by manufacturers, and I should have thought that that would appeal to so good a free trader as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. FRASER. There is this difference—there is no other line where the Intercolonial Railway is. Besides, this railway is the bond which unites the provinces, and the construction of it was the reason why we became part of the Dominion. But in the manufacture of binder twine there is competition. There is no duty. The business is open to those who care to engage in it.

Mr. BOYD. Has the hon. minister any suggestion from his officials in regard to the future manufacture and disposal of binder twine ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The suggestion is that we should continue. It is true that we produce but 500 tons of binder twine a year, while the quantity sold in Canada in 1901 was 5,837 tons. Therefore, the quantity we produce is——

Mr. TAYLOR. A drop in the bucket.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Just about a drop in the bucket. But we must look at it in this way also—by this industry we give employment to from forty to fifty-five inmates of the prison. If we can carry on this business so as not to lose anything and give this employment, and also, to some extent control the market —I cannot say that it affects the prices much, but has something to do with it—it is a good thing. If, with the plant we have and with the experience we have gained we can carry on this business, we ought to do it. We have forty odd thousand dollars invested there.

Mr. FRASER. And you lost ten thousand last year ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. For one reason or another the business has not been profitable from the beginning. But it seems to me we ought to be able to do something with it. If we cannot make binder twine we ought to be able to make rope. But, in the first place, we must get rid of this resolution and have a free hand to manage this business as we understand it, having of course, the responsibility of coming here and explaining what we are doing in that industry. But, so long as you tie us down by the terms of this resolution we cannot carry on that business profitably. I prefer to have a free hand, subject to the duty of coming here and rendering an account of my stewardship.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I know a little about binder twine and a good deal about cordage. The same rule applies to both. If you want a first-class binder twine, you must make it of pure manilla. The second-class is a mixture with sisal, and the third is almost altogether sisal. The farmers will buy the best quality of binder twine just as the fisherman will buy the best quality of rope. The mistake that has been made should be avoided in the future, and nothing but the best quality of twine should be made. That will be sold readily.

Mr. BLAIN. Can the minister tell us what the twine cost last year ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I cannot tell what the cost of manufacturing it was. If my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) will look at the report of the Minister of Justice, page 32, he will find a statement prepared by the warden of the Kingston penitentiary—the binder twine account. I can give no further information than is contained in that account.

Mr. BLAIN. When the minister makes a statement that he sold twine and lost a great deal of money, he should be able to tell the committee the cost of the article he was selling.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I ask the hon. gentleman to take page 32, he will there find that the hemp purchased cost $34,830.81, that is the total amount of hemp purchased. The oil purchased cost $1,022. Advertising, bags, paper and things of that kind have got to be charged up against the twine. In addition, the labour has got to be charged up. If the hon. gentleman will look at that page of the account he will find all the information I can possibly give him.

Mr. BLAIN. How does the resolution tie him down, and why does he ask for the resolution to be discontinued ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It ties us down in this respect, that the proper time to dispose of binder twine in the market to the traders and the farmers, is previous to the 1st of July, that is the time the trader puts in his stock. And as the farmer wants his binder twine from July onward, if you keep the twine in your possession until July, and then advertise for tenders. you would put it in the market at the time the traders are stocked.

Mr. HOLMES. There is another difficulty in connection with the sale of binder twine to the farmers that has not been mentioned. If I remember rightly, the resolution last year was a sort of a compromise, and if you sell twine to the farmers and thus prevent a combination among the manufacturers, I think you will find as a result that you will have to sell binder twine to the manufacturers, for this reason, that the farmer is required to pay cash to the government for twine, while he can buy it from all the dealers, or from their agents, and pay for it in the fall. Consequently he will not buy it, as a rule, from the government.

Mr. BLAIN. I think there is something in that. But the farmers in the main are paying cash for their binder twine at this moment in the province of Ontario. I made the statement that the minister made, saying that the resolution did not change very much the former practice of the government I now refer to. I wish to read his remarks on page 569 of the 'Hansard' of last year :

> I will now proceed to deal with the motion, and in speaking to that motion I will state immediately that we have no quarrel with that portion of it, and we cannot have a quarrel, because, since August, 1899, we have been doing what that motion says we ought to do.

I would like to ask the minister how the resolutions has affected him this year, when he made a statement last year that they were doing the very same thing and had been since 1899 ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I repeat the statement I made, that it hampers us in this respect, that we are obliged to keep twine on hand up to the 1st of July so as to dispose of it to the farmer. The twine remains in our possession until the 1st of July, and if we put it on the market then we have practically no purchasers for it, and that is what I meant to say last year.

Mr. BLAIN. According to this letter, pure manilla twine, and the second grade was all sold on the 17th day of June, and sold at the price set down by the minister himself, therefore there could be no loss upon that porton of the manufacture. Would the minister now state how much the twine cost that was sold after the 1st of July, and let us find out how much the government really did lose ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I can not tell what that portion of the twine, that is to say, the 300 tons sold out to the 1st of June—I cannot tell what that portion cost, it is absolutely impossible. All I can say is that according to the accounts furnished by those who were in charge of that branch of the industry, there was a loss of over $10,000 on that portion.

Mr. BLAIN. If the minister is selling this twine at a loss, it is the fault of his department—I do not wish to charge it to the minister personally. But this penitentiary having been manufacturing twine for so many years, it would be their duty to watch the market, and if they had manufactured the proper kind of twine last year, made of pure manilla, or second grade twine, they could have sold every dollar's worth of it, because many orders came in that the penitentiary was unable to fill. I have a statement here which, however, I will not read, and which perhaps I had better turn over to the hon. minister. I have no hesitation in saying that if the government manufacture the proper kind of twine and in the proper way, they would have no trouble whatever in finding an output for the small amount they manufacture. I have here the answer to my question this session, where I am told that Henderson and Black bought twine at $4.80 per hundred weight for sisal, and $1.10 per 100 weight for mixed twine. I wish to make the statement that if that is a correct answer to my question, it is utterly impossible for this government to lose any such an amount of money as the minister has stated.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Of course the hon. gentleman knows something about binder twine, and in that respect he has an advantage over myself. Would he be good enough to tell us, now or later on, the quality of the twine, or the character of the twine, that we ought to manufacture, so as to obtain a ready sale.

Mr. BLAIN. I read the letter saying that their pure manilla and standard stocks were exhausted on the 17th day of June. I was asking for samples of pure manilla to be sent to our own county. In response to my letter, I got a statement from one of your own officers that they were sold out of pure manilla and standard twine. That will answer the minister's question. I state again that pure manilla twine is the kind which ought to be manufactured in the Kingston penitentiary. If the department will manufacture that kind of twine, according to their own evidence in this letter, they would have no trouble in selling it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is, we ought to manufacture pure manilla and standard in order to have a market in this country ?

Mr. BLAIN. That is my opinion.

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister asked for a free discussion as to how to conduct this business. My suggestion would be to go back to first principles. This industry was started by the present Justice Ouimet, who was then Minister of Public Works. He purchased and put in the plant, and started that industry long before Mr. Stewart's time. The policy he adopted was the policy any other manufacturing concern would adopt. If this government want to go into manufacturing they must conduct their business the same as any other business man, they must put an agent on the road and sell it to the retail dealers. That is the way it was done before.

Mr. SCOTT. Did they lose money by it ?

Mr. TAYLOR. They did not lose money by it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We have not been paid yet for the product of 1895.

Mr. TAYLOR. I discussed that a long time ago with the hon. gentleman, and he answered the question by saying that these accounts had all been secured. He has security from Mr. Connor which is good for a portion of it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It will be secured now.

Mr. DAVIS. What about Rogers in Manitoba ?

Mr. TAYLOR. Rogers paid for his. The only man who is behind is Connor and the government have had some dealings with Connor in twine since.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. TAYLOR. The government sold to merchants all over the country, but because the whole of the twine was not paid for on the first of July, when the Auditor General's report was brought down, these customers were shown as owing at that time. But, these accounts were all paid. The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) as a manufacturer, has to sell his goods on credit, to the retail merchants of this country, and he gives thirty days, or four months as the case may be. That is what every manufacturer does, and if this government will start this industry and conduct it on business principles, manufacture the twine, put an agent on the road and sell to the trade generally they will control the market against the monopoly. Merchants will buy twine and sell at a small advance, and whether they want to sell for cash or credit, the farmers are in a position to buy from them. There are just two ways of doing it. The hon. gentleman for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) suggested to the government that they should smash up and sell for scrap iron $40,000 worth of machinery for the manufacture of binder twine and cordage. He says we do not require to have this industry in the country now because we get twine free from the United States. It is duty free but we cannot manufacture in Canada and send the twine to the United States free of duty.

Mr. FRASER. What is the duty ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The customs regulations of the United States are such that manilla brought into this country, manufactured and sent back there has to pay duty. Twine made of manilla or partly manilla in Canada cannot go back to the United States free.

Mr. DAVIS. How does that affect the consumers here ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister of Justice gave the figures of the consumption in Canada last year. How much of it was made in the country ? Why can we not manufacture binder twine in this country instead of bringing it from the United States ? The government can start that machinery running and make a success of it because the country requires manilla and standard twines. If you look at the Auditor General's report, page M-50, you will find that the sales were as follows :

Pure manilla (Maple Leaf) 66,088 pounds, average price, 11½ cents to 12 cents per pound.

Sisal, 13,051½ pounds, average price, 9 cents per pound.

Mixed manilla (Monarch), 4,360 pounds, average price, 8½ cents per pound.

Standard, 26,430 pounds, average price, 7½ cents per pound.

Beaver, 71,515½ pounds, average price, 9 cents per pound.

New Zealand (Red Tape), 60 pounds, average price 8 cents.

These are the prices the government asked the farmers to pay and they are high prices. If you will turn to the statement of raw material in the Auditor General's report you will find that they did not buy a pound of pure manilla. They bought New Zealand fibre, something that they ought not to have bought at all because it will only make third or fourth rate binder twine. They bought of New Zealand fibre 90,306 pounds, sisal 439,985 pounds, and manilla fibre 135,540 pounds. But, the great bulk of the raw material was New Zealand fibre which we purchased to make twine out of. So that, they made a very inferior article. Whether this was due to the fact of manilla being too dear or not I do not know, but, I maintain that the government can manufacture binder twine the same as any other manufacturing industry in the country would do. Or, if they do not wish to do that, let them rent the machinery to some person who will carry on the industry and the convict labour with it. Let them rent this industry to somebody who will start the machinery humming and make money out of it. In this way the government will be able to control the American ring and Canadian combination. These people have kept the price of binder twine up ever since this government took control of the industry, This government cancelled the policy of the late government in regard to the binder twine industry. The late government had engaged a man to go out as a travelling agent and sell the output of the industry for five years. Since hon. gentlemen opposite have come into power they have cancelled the appointment of the travelling agent and they have sold to the Hobbs Hardware Company, and to some others of their friends without asking for tenders at all, simply sending a letter out to one of two of their friends. Moreover, they sold the twine at a loss. I do not think the government were justified in selling it at 4 or 5 cents a pound to this firm in St. John. If they could not get a satisfactory price they should have held it over until next season and got 10, 12 or 15 cents a pound for it as I presume the farmers would be willing to pay this in view of the fact that the American and Canadian combinations have joined hands for the purpose of squeezing them. If the hon. minister asks his hon. friend the member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) to introduce a resolution similar to that which he moved last year, I am satisfied that all hands will vote for it. Let the hon. minister either establish this industry on a business footing, or let him rent the machinery, together with the convict labour, to a private individual.

Mr. COCHRANE. I think it would be very unfortunate to have that industry closed up. It may not pay but I think there are two sides to this question. If it does not pay as a financial concern from a government point of view, perhaps it will pay from the point of view of the farmers interests. Perhaps I do not make myself quite clear. If by running it as a government institution we lose a little money perhaps this would be more than compensated for by the saving which it would enable the farmers to make in the purchase of their binder twine. It may be that the officials in control of this industry are in need of ideas and do not keep pace with the times, and perhaps, though the person in control may be a skilled artisan, his ideas are not up to date. I do not agree with the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). I generally agree with him. But, we have now free coal oil and we have one of the biggest combinations that exists in Canada, I fancy.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) means free wire, not free coal oil.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well it is nearly free anyway, and we have combinations that are running that institution and controlling it in their own interest. I think we might talk about this matter as a business proposition that is going to benefit the great bulk of the farmers in Canada. I do not think that because we are from Ontario we should monopolize all the opinions in reference to binder twine. There is the great North-west, and the maritime provinces which require a large amount of binder twine and for that reason I feel concern for the interests of the farmers throughout the Dominion of Canada generally. If that institution has the effect of preventing a combination in binder twine, we will reap beneficial results from it just as we reap beneficial results from our canal system which keeps down the transportation rates. I agree that it would be well now to start that machinery to produce a certain amount of binder twine. Now that the transaction has passed, I would respectfully ask the Minister of Justice if he does not think that it would have been better to have kept that twine, and not to have sold it at all.

Mr. BOYD. We instructed him to do so.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, to that extent the resolution was a mistake. We could have held that twine just as well as anybody else, and if the public knew it was there, there would be no attempt to start a combination against the farmers this coming harvest. It appears to me that although the government may not run this industry as a paying concern, yet it is useful to the country in as much as it tends to regulate the price of binder twine to the farmers of the country.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe with the member for Guysborough, that it would be better for the country if the government went out of the business of binder twine making. I do not think that it is the function of government to enter into that business at all. However, if we are going to manufacture binder twine then the government should not be hedged around with such a resolution as that but should be allowed to have a free hand to dispose of the twine in the best interests of the people. My hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) no doubt knows a good deal about binder twine, but when he says that the government should manufacture only two kinds, I would ask him is he not aware of the fact that other manufacturers are making several kinds of twine and disposing of it successfully.

Mr. BOYD. Since the inauguration of this industry in the Kingston penitentiary I have been watching its career with some interest. I was in this House when it was established and I favoured it then. Sir John Thompson took a very deep interest in this question at the time. His expectation was that it would have the effect of controlling the price of binder twine to some extent. I am free to confess that under the Conservative regime the disposal of the twine was not as successful as we had hoped, but there was the excuse for that that it was our first attempt in undertaking a new industry, and we had to do it in face of the most bitter opposition from the other manufacturers of binder twine. I do not hesitate to say that such opposition still exists. Let me point out that an increased charge for binder twine is a far greater tax on the farmers than the duty on agricultural implements, because a farmer will use every year from 500 to 1,000 pounds, and a difference of four or five cents a pound in the price—and they seem to charge whatever price for it that they can get from the farmers—means yearly a tax of $40 or $50 on each farmer which is rather a serious matter. The minister stated that something like 850 pounds had been bought in Manitoba previous to July. There was nearly a car load of this twine sold in Carberry last year, and I used 1,000 pounds myself. I think the grade was inferior to that mentioned by the hon. member for Peel, but nevertheless it gave satisfaction. This was the first year the penitentiary managed the business under the new system, and in many cases the farmers knew nothing about the sale of the twine until near the expiry of the time allowed. We may imagine that information given in this House spreads rapidly, but frequently it does not. From listening to the minister to-night I would judge that officials in the penitentiary are like other officials ; they do not like innovations. They do not like people from the outside to tell them how they should do their business and I expect that the officials in charge of the manufacture of this twine are like all others in that respect. They do not care to be dictated to, and they have no doubt very little confidence in the members of this House who might be considered by others as experts in the binder twine business. In all probability the minister may ascertain later on that something of that spirit of personal pride accounts for the failure of the twine industry at the penitentiary. If the minister of Justice, active and energetic as he is, had himself been in charge of the binder twine, there would be a different story to tell. Now, as to what the member for Guysborough said. It is all very well for a gentleman like him to treat this question lightly but if he represented a constituency as we from the west do, where this is a very important question, he would possibly be one of the loudest in support of this industry which he wishes to have wiped out. I would remind the hon. gentleman that there are certain government enterprises in the east which do not pay their way, but nevertheless we in the west have to grin and bear it. I think that possibly this item had better stand until the minister comes down at some future day with a proposal. He is young and energetic and if he will only take the interest in the matter that the late Sir John Thompson did, he will make a success of the business. There is no reason why the convicts should be idle. They might as well be employed at that work as anything else, and I have learned from some of the officials that the manufacture of the binder twine is a most desirable employment for them, and especially for the long term prisoners. At all events it would be very unfortunate if we should act on the hasty and ill considered suggestion of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser).

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The fixed opinion of the officials is that we should continue to manufacture this binder twine. They believe that by making certain reductions in salaries and so forth, we will be able to carry it on without any great loss if not at a profit. We have always to bear in mind the very serious question of finding employment for the convicts, and it was in order to meet that difficulty that this business was inaugurated. If I take what has been said to-night and especially the opinion of the experts who have spoken, the conclusion I am driven to is that the officials more immediately in charge of the binder twine industry have not kept up to date, and are not equal to the position they occupy ; and I am going to say here now, that while I give my loyal assistance to any man so long as he is with me, no man is going to remain long with me who is not equal to the position he occupies. With respect to the system of disposing of the twine, my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) said a moment ago that there ought to be agents on the road. Let us deal with our experience. That system was inaugurated, and what was the result ? In 1895 over $30,000 worth of twine was sold by an agent and delivered. Previous to the month of November he was actually paid for the greater part of it. When the change of government took place in 1896 we had not received a dollar of the money that had been paid to the agent. Up to within a few days ago there was over $9,000 still due on the twine sold by that agent at that time. I am not making this statement for the purpose of recrimination at all. The product of the year 1895-6 had not been disposed of when the change of government took place in July, 1896, because of the difficulty in connection with the agent. There is our experience which I am stating simply to show the difficulties attendant on the management of this industry. After that I conceive that it was justifiable on the part of the government to endeavour to dispose of this twine by public auction. The result has not been satisfactory in the highest degree ; but at all events, we have been paid for our output ; we have got our money in exchange for our twine, which has been disposed of at a fairly reasonable price. I do not think there is much to be said as to the disposal of the twine. Any complaint that I have heard has brought me to the conclusion that the reason we have not been able to dispose of this twine up to the present time is, in the first place, that we have not manufactured the particular quality which appeals to the farmer, and, secondly, that we have been hampered by this resolution of the House. What ought we to do? We ought to take account of what has been said to-night, make inquiries of those familiar with the situation, make the kind of twine that is suitable to the market, and then dispose of it in the right way. The question is, ought we to sell it through an agent or by public auction? Our experience with an agent has not been satisfactory.

Mr. TAYLOR. You did not do it right.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is not stated that we did not, but that those who went before us did not. I have asked for advice on this question from men who are perfectly competent, and they advised me to put one or two agents on the road, and not deal with them as we did before, but authorize them to simply take orders and then execute these orders at the penitentiary. We may possibly in that way improve on the system that has existed hitherto and get a better price for our twine after we have improved the quality of the twine itself.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will admit that one year the late government sold through an agent, and allowed the agent to collect. But surely the government can carry on the business on the lines followed by every manufacturer in this country. He puts an agent on the road who takes an order from a retail man. That order is submitted; the manufacturer looks at the commercial agency report to see if the man has a good standing, and if he has, he will fill the order and send the twine to him, and the agent is paid either by per diem allowance or by commission. I find that my hon. friend has been dealing with Connor all along.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. For all cash.

Mr. TAYLOR. He purchased $3,592 worth from the government last year. Every business man in this country who manufactures goods either sells them by circular or puts men on the road to dispose of them. I do not fancy it will be necessary for the government to put a man on the road to sell. They have twine for sale and the merchants of the country will know their prices and order it, and either pay cash or buy it on four months time. Surely the government can do business on these lines. They can control the market and manufacture in Canada what the hon. member for Guysborough wants manufactured in the United States.

Mr. FRASER. I want it manufactured wherever it can be done the cheapest and best.

Mr. LENNOX. I hope the hon. member for Leeds is reasonably satisfied now. I think that when a member sits down in deference to the minister he should have the right to resume his remarks when the minister is done. I do not like to be obliged to jump up half a dozen times to talk when anybody else is talking. I have not much to say on this question, but I think the difficulty that has been so fairly and candidly suggested by the hon. minister is one which the members of the House consulting together can overcome. I am inclined to think that the conditions under which this binder twine was sold had a good deal to do with the fact that a ready sale was obtained last year. I am particularly anxious to speak on this subject to-night, because I want to congratulate the hon. minister on the frank way in which he meets the case, and I wish I could always compliment the ministry in the same way. In this connection I hope this business will not be handed over to another member of the government. I think it is a very good sign when we find an hon. minister coming forward and admitting that there is something he does not know. I think that when the hon. minister, who has recently come to this department, takes the committee into his confidence and asks us to advise him as to the best means of disposing of the twine, he has taken a very good departure. I have also much pleasure in noting the fact that the minister does not endeavour to make political capital out of this matter, that he does not try to make out that the fault is all on the part of the members on this side. I do not know that he could very well take that position in any case. My hon. friend from Peel has pointed out the position of the matter when it was discussed last year, and I do not know that I can add to what he has said.

The resolution which was moved by the hon. member for Alberta last year was as follows:

> That so long as the government continues to manufacture twine, the same shall be offered for sale directly to the farmers up to July the 1st of each year at cost of material and manufacture, calculating wages on the basis of fair wages for free labour; and that the twine unsold and on hand on July 1st of each year be sold by tender to the highest bidder after advertisement.

Speaking on that resolution the hon. gentleman said:

> That is entirely in line with the policy pursued by the government during the past year, except that it carries it a little further and makes it more definite.

He thus claimed, as my hon. friend from

Peel has said, that the policy of the government was not departed from by virtue of what was done last year, in anything essential, but that this resolution secured an additional advantage to the farmers. I do not agree to the suggestion that we should go back to the state of things which we had a year ago. I am strongly of the opinion that whether all we should have accomplished has been accomplished or not, the movement inaugurated a year ago was in the right direction, and I am entirely of the opinion that we should have even more stringent regulations regarding giving the first chance to the farmers to buy this twine. As to giving up the industry, the argument of the hon. member for Guysborough, if he put it as an argument in that regard, is one most easily answered, and I do not think that I will weary the committee with answering it, because I think it has already been answered by almost every member of the committee in his own mind, and could be effectually disposed of in words if necessary. I do not agree with the hon. member for Guysborough, nor have I yet had any occasion so far in the session to agree with him, but would be happy to do so if he would give me any reasonable opportunity. But I am very happy in this instance—and I believe it is the first opportunity I have yet had—to be able to refer to a minister of the Crown as having met this side of the House from the point of view that we are representatives of the people, anxious to do our duty and assist the government in bringing about what is most advantageous in the best interests of the country.

Mr. STEWART. Representing, as I do, one of the greatest wheat producing electoral districts in the Dominion, one which produced a crop of 12,000,000 bushels of wheat last year, and in which therefore this binder twine question is of considerable importance, I wish to express my entire dissent from the view that the manufacture of binder twine in the Kingston penitentiary should be closed. If the idea should prevail that it does not pay to manufacture it in the penitentiary in the east, let that industry be moved to the penitentiary at Winnipeg, where it would be in close proximity to the wheat fields where most of its product is used. In 1900 binder twine was quoted very high in the west. In the towns of southern Manitoba, it was quoted in the spring of that year as high as 18 cents a pound. A number of our farmers refused to give orders at that price, and communicated with Mr. Platt, the manager of the Kingston penitentiary works, and got quotations from him. They were not able to get the first quality of twine but used the second which proved very satisfactory. It costs us a shade over ten cents, when the regular dealers were quoting the first quality at 15 cents and the second at 14 cents. We claim that the introduction of the penitentiary twine reduced the price 2 cents.

That was one reason why I would not like to see that industry closed. It has been said that in the east only pure manilla would obtain a sale, but we have always been told that there is no such thing as standard pure manilla twine, and that it is all mixed, that a certain percentage of cheaper material No. 1 is composed of a percentage of filling, and that there is a little more filling in the second quality. My advice is that there should not be more than two standards made—a finer twine for the new binders and a coarser for the old, because when a binder is getting old it will probably do better work with the coarser twine.

Mr. McGOWAN. I agree with my hon. friend from Lisgar that they made too many grades in the penitentiary last year. If there were but two or three grades at the most, that would be much more advantageous to the farmers.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. What grades does my hon. friend suggest ?

Mr. McGOWAN. I think the best would be manilla twine, as every farmer knows what manilla twine is. I agree in the opinion expressed that it would be a mistake to close up the concern at Kingston, because these large factories are liable to get into the hands of a combine, which would be a lamentable affair for the farmers. Even if the penitentiary industry does not pay, it would still be an advantage to the country to keep it up. As to the mode of selling the twine, I have no doubt that the Minister of Justice will find some trouble in that regard. Some of our farmers in my constituency complain of the great expense of sending the twine by express. Many who ordered twine from the penitentiary have had to pay very large express charges, and some did not get the twine they ordered, but perhaps that was their own fault in possibly not having ordered it soon enough. One of the farmers in my county was very wrothy about this. He said that he had ordered a certain amount of first quality manilla twine, and got word back that his order was put in and would be filled as soon as he sent word to have the twine forwarded. He sent the money down and they sent him an inferior brand of twine, and he said he would not order from Kingston again. Our farmers complain very much about the heavy express charges. Perhaps if the hon. minister would have stations in certain parts of the country, to which he could send carloads of twine, he would thereby get rid of this difficulty. He could choose points in all the different provinces to which carloads could be sent, and to which the farmers could drive for what they wanted. That would be different from appointing a number of agents to travel about.

Mr. TAYLOR. Let him put it in the hands of the retail merchants.

Mr. McGOWAN. I do not know that that would do. But if he would send it to the county town or some such places, he would better suit the convenience of the farmers. And even if it had to be sold at the end of the season, it would sell much more easily than in Kingston. I am glad the hon. minister is open to suggestions, and I hope that these I have offered will be of use.

Mr. McCREARY. I am glad to hear the hon. member (Mr. McGowan) speak on this subject. The question of binder twine is one of the most important that we have in the west. The hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Stewart) has told us that he represents a county whose product of wheat last year amounted to 12,000,000 bushels. My county adjoins his on one side. Though it did not raise 12,000,000 bushels it raised almost as much. This will give some idea of how important this question of binder twine is to us. The Minister of Justice should take into consideration the question whether it is well to have all the binder twine manufactured at Kingston. In the Stony Mountain penitentiary, which is in my county, there are, I think, about 120 prisoners, and these prisoners hardly know what to do with their time. I understand that sometimes they are engaged in making roads, but there is not enough work for them. I do not see why the raw material should not to be sent to Stony Mountain as well as to Kingston and the twine that is required on the prairies of Manitoba and the North-west manufactured at Stony Mountain. But, until that is done, I do not see why the twine could not be sent up in car lots, not through agents, but sent to different points, such as Brandon, Portage la Prairie, Prince Albert, Edmonton, and other points throughout the west, where the farmers can buy it and pay spot cash. If the farmers could get binder twine at 9 cents or 10 cents, instead of paying 18 cents, it would be a great help. The present Minister of Justice, who is an energetic and progressive man, should look into this question. I hope he will do something this year to bring the twine to the west and put it into the hands of farmers at the most advantageous prices.

Mr. DAVIS. Following out the suggestion of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary), I would point out that there are jails at Regina, Prince Albert and Edmonton. Why not send the twine out to the jailers, who are officers of the hon. minister's department, and let them dispose of it. I am sure they would be willing to take the responsibility and do the work. The farmers would be able to get the binder twine and get it at a reduced price. At present this manufacture of binder twine is of very little use to us. The farmers came to me last year and wished me to get twine for them. But the freight is high; it was out of the question to get it by express, and nobody cared to take the responsibility of ordering a carload. But I am sure that the burser or jailer in these different institutions in the west would be willing to take charge of consignments and sell them for spot cash to the farmers.

Mr. BLAIN. As I was the mover of the original motion of last year, there may be some responsibility attaching to my suggestion to change the system of selling the twine. I wish to draw the committee's attention to the fact that the original motion I moved contained no clause to the effect that the binder twine on hand after the 1st of July should be sold to the highest bidder. That is the portion of the resolution as carried that I objected to. The resolution as I moved it, was as follows :

That in the opinion of this House it is expedient that all binder twine now held by the government, together with all twine that may hereafter be manufactured by them, shall be sold direct to the farmer at a price to cover the actual cost of raw material and manufacture only, with one cent per pound added, and that no twine manufactured or paid for out of the Dominion treasury shall be sold or disposed of in any other way.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) added the provision about selling the twine on hand after the first of July. I venture to say that if that clause had not been added to the motion, all the twine would have been sold last year to the farmers, for, at the close of the season there was a great scarcity of twine both in Ontario and in the west. I venture to say, also, that, with the omission of that clause the motion as I presented it covers the best system for the sale of the small quantity of binder twine—for it is a small quantity in comparison to the quantity consumed throughout the country—that the government manufactures. As to what the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McGowan) has said, I think the government system of filling orders is as up-to-date as that of any manufacturing establishment in Canada. The farmer sends in his order at any time after the beginning of the year. He can order a small quantity if he chooses. His order is booked. He can send his money down as the season approaches and the twine is sent direct to his address. The reason why some farmers did not get their twine exactly at the time they wanted it and why it was sent forward by express was that, instead of sending their money a month or two weeks before they wanted the twine, they waited until the eleventh hour. I am sure that the reason why it was sent forward by express was that the managers of the institution knew that it was needed in the wheat fields at the time. I think the government should continue the manufacture of binder twine as they are now manufacturing it, but that they should change to the extent of manufacturing what is understood as pure manilla only.

This they should sell direct to the farmers as they are now doing, omitting that clause of the resolution which was added, for the reason that the harvest in the wheat fields in the west, about which we hear so much, does not come on until our harvest in Ontario is about finished. If there is any twine in the Kingston establishment that the farmers in Ontario do not buy before the 1st of July, it can be sent to the west and there find a ready market, at prices that will pay the government well. I hope the hon. minister will continue this industry. I do not wish to unreasonably criticise the government with respect to the manufacture of binder twine. It need not be manufactured at a loss; the government can make money, even though manufacturing the small quantity that the capacity of the works will permit. If they continue the manufacture of the proper twine and put it on the market in the early season they will have no trouble in selling every pound they are able to manufacture.

Mr. CLARE. I believe that one reason why the twine was not disposed of is likely to have been that it was offered to the farmers at too high a price. I would like to know whether the spirit of the resolution passed by the House last year was carried out. I know that the farmers of this country are reading people; I know that they want to get a bargain when they can, and I know that they have the money to pay for it. They certainly would have bought the twine manufactured by the government at Kingston if they could have got it at a lower price than other manufacturers were selling it for. We are told that the binder twine was put in at cost, but it may have been that the raw stock that the government used was bought at too high a price. I believe that last year the government could have sold all their twine if they had put it in at cost to the farmers.

Mr. SCOTT. The only thing that seems to be lacking in the way of a suggestion for the solution of this problem is to turn the other way around the resolution proposed by my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) last year, and pass not only a resolution but a law declaring that the farmers shall buy the twine manufactured in Kingston penitentiary. By this means the problem would be solved and the department relieved of all difficulty in the way of disposing of the product. But speaking seriously, I wish to join in the expression of opinion of a number of my hon. friends from the west. Last year when the matter was discussed, I stated that, under present conditions, the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west Territories were not in a position to reap as much advantage as the farmers of Ontario, who were near the point of manufacture. As a matter of fact, while the business of wheat-growing in the west is a great one, it is yet in some degree a lottery. There is no guarantee of the extent of a wheat crop until a short time before harvest. It is, therefore, impossible for a wheat-grower in Manitoba or the territories to place an absolute order for his binder twine until late in July, too late to admit of his sending on order and having it filled all the way from Kingston by ordinary freight transportation. I suggested then to the government that it would be a good policy to ship a few carloads of twine to centres in Manitoba and the territories. There might be some risk, doubtless there would be some risk of the shipments remaining unsold, but not more than is incurred by holding all the output at Kingston, and I am confident that a considerable quantity could thus be disposed of to the advantage of the business from the departmental point of view and of the western wheat-growers.

Mr. McCREARY. I would like to ask the minister whether binder twine could not be manufactured in the Stony Mountain penitentiary in Manitoba? No doubt carload rates on raw material would be almost as cheap to Winnipeg as to Kingston. I think if the minister will look into this question he will find that the prisoners in the Stony Mountain penitentiary could manufacture just as cheaply as they do at Kingston, and I do not see why the binder twine required for the western prairies should not be manufactured on the ground.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I will be quite willing to consider that suggestion. But my hon. friend must bear in mind that this industry is already established at Kingston. We have there the advantage of a larger population to draw from to get the labour we require, and we have also a certain number of men who are fairly well trained.

Mr. McCREARY. I don't think you have as large a purchasing population.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think we can do better work where the men are already trained, and where we have a larger population to draw from to find workmen. There have been many suggestions made to-night as to the disposition of the twine. The discussion has been pretty full, and I will endeavour to get the warden and superintendent of the Kingston penitentiary down here and have a consultation with them early next week, along with the inspector, and see what can be done towards starting the industry again, because we have a provision for the raw material that we may require.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It would be as well to let the item stand.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I suggest that we let the item go through, with the understanding that on supplementaries we will have the matter up again, and I will then be able to make a statement as to the results of my conference with the officials. I will say to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) that there is very little prospect of being able to establish a binder twine industry at Stony Mountain this year.

Mr. BLAIN. Can the officials appear before some special committee ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They are at the disposal of any committee you choose to select, and at any time. I would suggest Wednesday.

Mr. McCREARY. If the minister cannot promise to start the manufacture of binder twine at Stony Mountain this year, will he promise that next year machinery will be installed and raw material shipped there? Perhaps he can also promise to-night that a large quantity of the binder twine manufactured at Kingston will be shipped in car lots to various points in the west so that the farmers can get it at actual cost.

St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, $118,600.

Dorchester penitentiary, $55,900.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The increase with respect to St. Vincent de Paul is caused by the fact that we have increased the reservation by 208 acres which will cost us $10,620. The penitentiary reserve contained 170 acres. To this was added the Gagnon farm, 38 acres, purchased from John Loftus, in March this year, at $75 per acre, making $2,850. This is especially valuable, because of a quantity of building sand it contains. It is proposed to add three parcels aggregating 145 arpents (122½ acres) making about 350 acres in the reserve. Of this, 300 will be available for farming purposes. The farm will be worked by convict labour. For some years farm products to the value of $3,500 a year, have been purchased for consumption in the penitentiary.

A vote is asked to pay for these parcels :

1. Maxime Archambault, about fifty arpents at $89 per arpent, $4,450.

This land adjoins the penitentiary quarry farm. The soil is of excellent quality throughout, thoroughly cultivated, clean and well kept. Stone of like quality and dimension to that in the penitentiary quarries underlies eight or ten acres close to the quarries. The possession of this addition to the quarry will ensure an ample supply of exceptionally fine building stone for future requirements.

2. Hector Lussier, about forty-five arpents at $76 per arpent, $3,420.

This land lies east of the St. François road between the railway station grounds and the road of the quarries. Soil rich and deep. It is conveniently situated near the penitentiary and in full view of the guards on the towers.

3. Joliceour, about 50 arpents at $55 per arpent, $2,750.

Four acres of south end is rocky, next is a strip of three acres of sandy loam. The balance is clay. The soil is good, but its cultivation has been neglected.

At Dorchester the increase is caused by the fact that we are making provisions for the salary of a chief keeper, $800, for an instructor, $700, and for a fireman, $500. Under the new schedule which was adopted in 1895, provision is made for the appointment of these gentlemen, and of course we all understand that when the statute provides for the appointment of officials it is pretty hard to prevent them from being appointed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is that supposed to be necessary ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, it appears so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I mean under the statute.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, it is justifiable at all events.

Manitoba penitentiary, $51,600.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is a decrease of $7,600. That is because last year we took a vote of $8,000 with which we intended to purchase a piece of land, but after the vote was taken we found that the property was not suitable and we allowed vote to lapse.

Mr. BLAIN. How many inmates are there ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. On the 30th June last year, there were 117 prisoners. The average number of prisoners at Stony Mountain is from 100 to 120.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it a fact, as stated by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary), that these men have nothing to do ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Perhaps they are not kept very busy, but as far as possible they are kept employed doing work on the farm, and in connection with the building, and also in the making of roads. That is the only occupation we can get for them. As hon. gentlemen know, one of the great unsolved problems of our penitentiary system to-day is to find profitable employment for the inmates of the penitentiaries, and if we are deprived of the benefit of the binder twine industry at Kingston we are going to be embarrassed to know what to do with the convicts.

Mr. McCREARY. Before this item passes I would like to say a word. I will not object to the passage of this item but when the supplementary estimates come down I will ask to have $5,000 or $10,000 put in to buy more ground in connection with Stony Mountain penitentiary. If we could get a binder twine plant put in, or have some other line of business established, the prisoners would have something to do, but as it is at present they have nothing to do. That penitentiary is situated on the wide prairie. There are practically no roads to construct. They will not allow the prisoners to go outside the penitentiary grounds. If they could make a road to Winnipeg or Stonewall, or some other point, then, I could understand the question. But there are, within a certain prescribed limit, 120 people for whom there is nothing to do. I submit to the hon. minister that if he will take this question up he will find that there is something that might be done with these people. They could either be employed in manufacturing binder twine or making a road to Winnipeg, a distance of 16 miles. I think the hon. minister ought to put into the estimates for this penitentiary a sum to be expended in buying more land. Land can be bought, not for $55 an acre, the price that the minister quoted as being charged in Ontario, but for $7 or $8 per acre—land which will yield 30 or 40 bushels of wheat to the acre. These prisoners might better be employed cultivating that land and producing some revenue than being allowed to remain idle. I think the hon. minister should look into the question and suggest something that will improve the condition of this penitentiary.

Mr. BLAIN. What are the prisoners doing now ?

Mr. McCREARY. I do not know that they are doing anything except building a wall 5 feet through and 14 feet high all around the penitentiary. That has been going on for five or six years. What it is going to be used for I do not know. They have been building that wall for the last five or six years and it is going on now—just putting in time.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The suggestion as to the purchase of more land is one that we are willing to agree to at once if we can get desirable land in a proper location and at a proper price. If we can do that and get the land on business principles we are prepared to do it. In respect to making a road to Winnipeg, of course, that is not possible. A prisoner cannot be taken beyond the prison reserve because if he is he is at large. This is a question of the number of guards to be employed. We have been overburdened with guards there in proportion to population because we have no wall to keep the convicts confined, and if we were to send them out to build roads to Winnipeg I am afraid we would have to consider the propriety of increasing our allowance for guards in that district.

British Columbia penitentiary, $52,800.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is an increase for that also.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We have a considerable amount of work going on at the British Columbia penitentiary. There is a very considerable amount required for the purchase of materials for a new wing. We are endeavouring to have a new wing which will contain 100 additional cells. There is also a considerable increase in the cost of the maintenance of convicts on account of the increased prices of all that is required there compared with former years.

Prince Albert jail, $8,200.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is an increase of $2,200 principally for lands, buildings and water surface.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In connection with Prince Albert jail the reserve only contains 16 acres and that cost $50 per acre. The intention is to add 20 acres to the reserve, and we will purchase these 20 acres for $25 per acre. The land belongs to the Presbyterian Church.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have not delayed the passing of these items although I think there are some hon. gentlemen who are not here to-night who may have a few words to say upon some of them. I take it for granted that anything can be said on the supplementary estimates.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The whole question is at large.

Expenses of litigated matters which may be paid for services in connection with the litigation conducted within the Department of Justice, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $15,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much was the expenditure last year ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. $7,461.75.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is really for the work that is done in the Department of Justice outside of the duties of the officers ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice what arrangement he has for doing this work. Does the hon. minister have an agent in every county in Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No.

Mr. LANCASTER. Has he agents that are appointed ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, we have agents that are appointed in any place where we have business to be done. We appoint an agent in the locality for the purpose of doing the business required.

Mr. LANCASTER. Are these agents authorized to hold themselves out to the public as such ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No. Of course, they are authorized to do the business of the department.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have a letter here which I have no objection to show the hon. minister if he requires to see it in which a solicitor in St. Catharines states as an advertisement at the heading—that he is the :

Agent for the Minister of Justice for the county of Lincoln.

I would like to know if that is done with the approval of the department? Those of the legal profession in St. Catharines do not think that it is right according to the ethics of the profession.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I never heard of that. I suppose it is a matter of taste which should be dealt with by the Barristers' Society, as to the question of advertising. I am afraid that the profession has departed from the old rules.

Mr. LANCASTER. I should think that now that the minister knows about it, he would be able to deal with the matter. It must be done for some purpose, and if the minister knows that it is done and does not take means to stop it, the inference is that he approves of it. I call his attention to it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have seen cards issued by different firms in which they say they are solicitors for such and such a bank, and I apprehend that no great distinction can be drawn between a case of that sort and the case mentioned by the hon. gentleman. I suppose a gentleman may think it is rather to his credit to say that he has been appointed solicitor for the Department of Justice. It does not go beyond that. He does not say that he is appointed special solicitor for the purpose of doing business with the government; he does business for the government. I cannot see that there is much distinction between one man mentioning that he is solicitor for the Department of Justice, and another man saying that he is solicitor for a bank or for some great corporation. I do not want the name, but might I ask, is this gentleman as a matter of fact a solicitor for the Department of Justice?

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not know. I was going to ask the Minister of Justice if he has a newly-appointed agent for the county of Lincoln.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I cannot remember.

Mr. LANCASTER. I do not object to the minister seeing the name privately, and I will hand it over to him.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not remember the name now that I have seen it, but I am quite willing to inquire.

Mr. LANCASTER. And let us know later on.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to point out that the gentleman who does that sort of thing is in a different position from a solicitor for a bank. He holds himself out as representing the Crown by delegation of the Minister of Justice, and when a man assumes to represent the Crown, he is in a different position entirely in any county in Ontario, from a man representing a private corporation such as a bank. I thought it was my duty to draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that that sort of thing was going on with the view of seeing whether the minister will permit it or not.

Consolidation of the statutes, $20,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Have the commissioners been appointed?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, but they will be between this and the end of the session.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the minister any expectation as to when the consolidation will be completed?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My intention is to appoint a greater number of commissioners than we have had heretofore, both with the intention of getting the work done expeditiously and of endeavouring to cut down the expense. I have been looking over the accounts in connection with the last revision of the statutes, and I find that the great bulk of the expenditure was caused by work being given outside, such as translation; and special parts of the statutes were given to special persons, who were charged with their preparation. My idea is to make the commission a little more numerous than the last one, and to endeavour to have the work done entirely by the commissioners. I hope the work will be done within two years.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 12.55 a.m. Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 28, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 140) to incorporate the Bishop of the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church for North America and Aleutian Islands and each of the parishes and missions of the said church in Manitoba and the North-west Territories.—Mr. Oliver.

PACKING AND SALE OF COMMODITIES.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 141) to amend the Act respecting the packing and sale of certain staple commodities. He said: The only alterations proposed by this Bill are the addition of the word 'dealer,' and certain amendments dealing with the penalties to be inflicted in case of infractions of the law.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 142) to further amend the General Inspection Act. He said: The amendment consists in the addition of the word 'binder twine' to the list of articles covered by the law.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

On the motion being called.

Introduction of Bill intituled: 'An Act to amend the Chinese Immigration Act, 1900.'

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) with the consent of the House, I will substitute for this Bill a resolution. The Bill is intended to deal with the disposition of funds collected under the Chinese Immigration Act. I will drop this notice and give notice of a motion.

GRAIN INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. N. BOYD (Macdonald). Before the Orders of the day are called, I desire to ask the government if we are to have the amendments to the Grain Act that were promised early in the session, and, if so, when? I understand we are approaching the close of the session, and as this is a very important matter to the people of Manitoba and the North-west, I trust that the government will take us into their confidence and let us know when we are to expect this measure, so that we may be prepared to discuss it intelligently.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). We expect that this Bill will be introduced within a day or two.

TORONTO AND NIAGARA FALLS COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 100) to incorporate the Toronto and Niagara Power Company.—Mr. Campbell.

On section 11,

Mr. CLARKE. I gave notice of an amendment to clause 11, the purport of which is to make it clear that this company, when incorporated, shall not be permitted to discriminate against individuals or municipalities in supplying power for any purpose, whether for lighting, heating or for motive purposes. The clause reads now:

> The company may supply hydraulic, electric or other power. . . . . at such rates and upon such conditions as are agreed upon, and the company may contract with any company or person having erected or having power to erect.

I propose to amend the clause as follows:

> The company shall supply hydraulic, electric or other power by means of cables, machinery or other forces, to all persons, corporations and municipalities desiring the same along the line of its works, or within a reasonable distance thereof; and at such rates and upon such conditions as may be agreed upon; and if unable to agree, upon such terms as may be ordered by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council of Canada.

The object, Mr. Chairman, of the amendment is this: It may be merely a coincidence, but the gentlemen who are now applying for incorporation and asking for this Act from parliament are those who practically control the Toronto Railway Company and the Toronto Electric Light Companies. The franchise of the Toronto Railway Company has some years yet to run; it will be a most valuable franchise when it falls back again into the possession of the city. If this company is permitted to discriminate in the sale of power, it may render valueless a franchise that otherwise would be of very great value. There is nothing to prevent this company, after it has obtained incorporation, from using the power that it may become possessed of at Niagara Falls, only in its own interests, or in the promotion of those industries, the Electric Light Companies and the Toronto Railway Company, with which it is now specially identified. The feeling in favour of municipalities operating their franchises, such as tramways and lighting, is growing stronger every day. This company is being given very large powers in this Bill, and I think it is not at all unreasonable to make a reasonable provision that if in future, in five years, or three years, or ten years from now, the municipalities along the line of the company's works between Niagara Falls and Toronto should desire to operate a municipal electric light, or to operate their tramways, there should be no discrimination as to the rates at which the power should be supplied by this company. I think that these provisions are so reasonable and so just that the promoters of the Bill cannot offer any serious objection to them. I hope the committee and the promoter of the Bill will agree with me, and allow clause 11 to be amended in the direction I have indicated. It has been suggested that possibly the company might not have enough power to supply all the demands that may be made upon it by the municipalities or by individuals. It is proposed to obviate a difficulty of that kind, if it should arise, by section 11a of which I have given notice, that is, that the Railway Committee, upon application, shall adjudicate between the parties.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This Bill has received very careful attention from the committee, and when these amendments were proposed it was not thought in the interest of the public that they should be adopted. For my part, I cannot see any necessity for changing the word 'may' into 'shall.' We have never done it in any Bills that we have passed through the House. This company is investing a large amount of money in an enterprise that is in the public interest, and like every other company, they have asked the right to supply municipalities, corporations and individuals along their line with hydraulic, and electric power, and so on. It is, of course, their business, and their interest to supply these companies, that is what they are investing their money for, and they hope to make a profit out of it. But when you come on and say that they shall supply—make it compulsory, why, it is going a great length indeed; it is something that I am sure the committee will not insist on, because the company may not be able to supply all the power that is required. The amendment proposes that they shall supply 'to all persons, corporations and municipalities desiring the same along the line of its works or within a reasonable distance thereof.' A far-reaching clause indeed, and I do not think it would be fair at all to put such a clause as that in the Bill. This is not the first instance in which we have had legislation of this kind. Last year this House chartered the St. Lawrence Power Company, assented to on the 23rd of May, of last year, identically the same Act asking for the same power. We did not then find the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) insisting in putting in the word 'shall' instead of the word 'may.' Again, we have had the Ottawa & Hull Power Company, a company seeking the same powers that this company is doing, asking the same privileges, and there was no question then that the word 'may' should be struck out and the word 'shall' be inserted. Then we have had the Ontario and Niagara Falls Power Company, identically the same as this, with the same powers and privileges, authorized by this parliament only two years ago, and in all that Bill there is no such stringent provision—absurd provision to my mind, I may say—as is proposed now by the member for West Toronto.

Mr. COWAN. And it gets its power from the same source.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then we have the Hamilton and Lake Erie Power Company also granted a charter by this House, and we have the Continental Light and Heat Company. All these charters have been granted by this parliament on precisely the same conditions as this company, asking the same privileges for generating heat, light and electricity by hydraulic power, and furnishing it to municipalities and corporations along the line. Parliament has never insisted on those companies being forced to do so, compelled, whether they can or not. The committee can readily see that if that word 'shall' goes in there instead of 'may,' and if, for any cause, they are unable to furnish the power that might be demanded of them, they would be put in a very disastrous position. The men at the head of this company are men of standing, men of ability, their financial strength is undoubted, they are going on in a regular way, and propose to enter into this as a business venture, and will, I have no doubt, supply all the corporations, municipalities and persons along the line as far as they are able to do it. I, for one, must protest against the amendment that is proposed by the member for Toronto.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland). I am inclined to agree altogether with the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell). In the first place, we have incorporated a large number of companies giving practically the same power that is given to this company. If it is desirable to have legislation along the lines suggested by the hon. member for West Toronto, then, it should be incorporated in a general Act and all companies should come under this general Act the same as railway companies do. Imagine picking out the Canadian Pacific Railway and saying that that road should be subject to a certain regulations to be fixed by the city of Toronto and at the same time exempting all other companies. It seems to me that if there is anything in the suggestions made by the hon. member for West Toronto they should be introduced into a general Act and made applicable to all companies similarly situated. The city of Toronto was represented by its solicitor before the committee when this Bill was considered and he appeared to agree with the changes and amendments made. Other representatives from the city of Toronto were also present at the committee and there was not any prolonged discussion of the matter. There are no extraordinary privileges being granted to this company; they are simply asking for the usual Act of incorporation to enable them to do business. The hon. gentleman gives notice of an amendment proposing to strike out of clause 13 the words 'unnecessary damage.' Perhaps the committee have gone further on this occasion than is customary in other incorporations of this kind, because, when this point was brought to the attention of the committee, they did strike out the word 'unnecessary.' So, the Bill has been amended so far as this point is concerned. I submit that the amendments of which the hon. member for West Toronto has given notice should be incorporated in general legislation and not applied to this Bill, thus placing other companies that have already been incorporated in a better position than this company which is composed of most substantial men and men who are probably more likely than any other to carry out what is desirable in bringing electrical power to Niagara Falls and distributing it through that section of Ontario. I do not know what view I might take upon the merits of these suggestions if they came before the House in a proper way, but, I think it would be most unfair that they should be specially directed against this company, preventing them from going on with their business and leaving the work which they propose to do in the hands of others who are now incorprated. I think that we should not direct this special legislation against this company while not applying it to all other companies.

Mr. PRINGLE. Mr. Chairman, being a member of the Private Bills Committee, I took some interest in this Bill while it was under discussion. As stated by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Sutherland), the matter was very fully gone into in the committee. Mr. Fullerton, the very able counsel for the city of Toronto, raised a number of points and some of these points were met by the committee. I was under the impression that the Bill as passed was perfectly satisfactory to the representatives of the city of Toronto. I quite agree with the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries that if any restrictions are placed on commercial corporations such as this they should be placed by a general Act. We find that some years ago, in the state of New York, a charter was given to a large corporation for the development of power on the American side. In examining that charter I find that there are no restrictions of the sort which it is sought to impose here. It is optional with them to supply power and not imperative as is desired by the hon. mover of this amendment (Mr. Clarke). It seems to me that in regard to an enterprise of this sort, it is open to the keenest possible competition, because, there is not only the competition so far as Niagara is concerned, but there is also the competition from other plants and I therefore think that the duty of supplying electricity should not be made imperative as desired by the mover of the amendment. We find that the Ontario and Niagara Falls Power Company have also got large powers, and unquestionably there will be keen competition in so far as these two companies are concerned. Last year I took some interest in the incorporation of the St. Lawrence Power Company. I am aware that that company has developed a very fine power and now they are looking for consumers of that power and I am satisfied that competition will regulate matters of this sort. I find that we have precedent for the Bill which is now before the committee. Almost similar provisions are in the Bills of the Bay of Quinté Railway Company, the British American Pulp and Paper Company, the Canadian Power Company and the Welland Canal Power and Supply Company, and dozens of others that have been passed within the last four or five years by this parliament. For these reasons I think the clause settled on by the Private Bills Committee should stand and that this amendment should not carry.

Mr. OSLER. It is always difficult to frame an amendment to such a Bill as this is, but I think the argument which has been introduced here particularly against this amendment that because other Bills have been passed containing similar provisions this amendment should not be adopted is entirely fallacious. I noticed that the chief argument was that because Bills of this character have been passed before, we should not adopt this amendment, but if a wrong has been done in the past, if provisions have been adopted that do not properly protect the public, I think this wrong should not be perpetuated. I believe that all these power companies, from Niagara Falls particularly, will be amalgamated into one company and I venture to make the assertion that in ten years all of these companies will be under one control. That control will have a franchise that this House will recognize and will be worth an enormous sum of money. We are proposing to grant to this company all the powers of expropriation that a railway company has. For that reason I contend that this company should be under control as completely as any railway company is under control, and while I am not able to agree to some of the amendments which have been suggested to the charter, because it is difficult to say just now wherein the danger lies with a company of this character or with several companies together and combining to control the whole of the electrical power from Niagara, I think the suggestion thrown out by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) is a very good one that such clauses should be embodied in a general Bill. I would suggest that in all these cases that the provisions of this charter should be subject to whatever Acts may be passed by this parliament hereafter. If that clause is put in I think it would safeguard sufficiently all the powers that may be dangerous which are granted in this Bill. I think that clause should be accepted by the promoters of this Bill, and it is one which is entirely on the lines suggested by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) is perhaps not aware that the Railway Act does apply to this company so far as expropriation powers are concerned, and that the clause was most carefully considered by the committee.

Mr. OSLER. Would it do any harm to put in this simple clause stating that this charter shall be subject to all Acts that may be passed by this House referring to electrical companies of this kind ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There can be no doubt that it is.

Mr. OSLER. We have too many disputes with companies on that very point. In the committee this year we have not had very many disputes, but it is stated that certain companies are under the control of the government and the companies themselves say they are not under the control of the government. Let us make this quite clear. If it is in the clause already, why not insert this and make it without any doubt.

Mr. PRINGLE. I cannot see the necessity for adding that clause. Parliament is supreme in these matters, and it can at any time pass a general Bill which will govern matters of this sort. The clause proposed might be a serious handicap to the people who are endeavouring to develop the power at Niagara. It is very uncertain whether it is possible to profitably transmit power for a long distance, and anything which might hinder the company in its financing would possibly destroy the franchise which they will obtain under this Bill. I know nothing whatever about this company, but it may be that they would require to issue bonds, and I do not think we should put in the Bill anything which would prevent them carrying on their operations. We all know that parliament is supreme and can at any time pass a general Bill, if it is thought that injustice is being done.

Mr. COWAN. As chairman of the Private Bills Committee it is only fair to the House that I should state what took place in that committee. We had probably the largest meeting of the committee which took place this session, when we considered this Bill. Thirty or forty members must have been present. Mr. Fullerton, the solicitor of the city of Toronto, was in attendance. We brought Mr. Fullerton up to the table and told him that the committee was quite willing to extend to him all the privileges of a member, and that if at any time he took objection to a clause, either on behalf of the city of Toronto or any other municipality, the committee would deem it a favour if he drew attention to it. Mr. Fullerton took a seat at the table and several times he made suggestions, very many of which, if not all, were adopted by the committee. Mr. Brock, the member for Centre Toronto, was also present. As we know, Mr. Brock is largely interested in the financial affairs of Toronto, and his business interests are identified with the prosperity and progress of that city. The committee considered this Bill for upwards of two hours, and the following sections were amended : 5, 8, 12, 13, 21. An absolutely new section was inserted, and section 20 with four sub-clauses was stricken out. Mr. Fullerton raised the point concerning the right to supply every municipality, but when his attention was drawn to the fact that section 90 of the Railway Act was incorporated in the Bill, it apparently satisfied his objection. Section 90 of the Railway Act reads :

> When any company has power by any Act of the parliament of Canada to construct and maintain lines of telegraph or telephone, or lines for the conveyance of light, heat, power, or electricity, such company may with the consent of the municipal council or other authority having jurisdiction over any highway, square or other public place, enter thereon.

While this company has power to expropriate, they have not the power, without the consent of the municipality, to use these streets or public places, and Mr. Fullerton, as counsel for the city of Toronto, did not deny this. The committee thought the entire matter rested in the hands of the city of Toronto. When this company goes to erect poles or wires across the streets of Toronto, it can only do so with the consent of the municipal council of that city, or of other municipalities in which it operates. Surely the city of Toronto, with its solicitor, and able representatives like the gentlemen who have spoken to-day, ought to be able to look after this Bill. If the municipal council of Toronto have not sufficient ability to guard the interests of the city and to make a contract that light, heat and power shall be supplied at the current rates, the committee thought that they were not called upon to interfere. I rose for the purpose of stating that this Bill was considered with great care; that no less than nine amendments were made; one new clause inserted, and one clause with four subsections absolutely stricken out. Whenever a suggestion was made that suggestion was adopted with the unanimous consent of the committee; at no time was there a motion made that did not meet with the approval of the committee, and the committee at no time was divided.

Mr. MONK. I do not think that because this Bill was not amended in the committee in the sense in which it was desired to amend it now, that we should be estopped from amending it, if it is thought just to do so. It happened that my hon. friend (Mr. Cowan) was not present once when a Bill was considered in committee, and the House came to his relief on that occasion.

Mr. COWAN. Not at all.

Mr. MONK. I believe it did.

Mr. COWAN. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. MONK. I think that was the case in connection with the Red Deer Valley Bill.

Mr. COWAN. The motion before the House was to refer it back for further consideration. I never asked to have amended in this House something that had been passed after due deliberation in the committee.

Mr. MONK. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he was absent from the committee when the Red Deer Bill was considered.

Mr. COWAN. Certainly.

Mr. MONK. And he wanted the Bill referred back.

Mr. COWAN. Not because I was absent, but because of a technicality the opponents of the Bill had taken advantage of, and that had never previously been taken in the Railway Committee.

Mr. MONK. There is no question but that my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) has the right to propose any amendment in the House which he deems advisable. I quite agree with the Minister of Marine that it would be desirable to have a general law applicable to companies of this kind, but as I understand, the promoters of this company at present control the Toronto Street Railway as well as the lighting of that city. As was pointed out by my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) the franchise of one of these companies is going to expire within a few years, and it is evident that in this particular case should the city desire to retake control of the franchise it will be quite possible for this company to hold up the city in respect to the power. This is, therefore, a very special case. As coming from the city of Montreal, I may say that we have seen such things happen there. It will be desirable to provide if it is possible to do so by this amendment, that in case of difficulties of that kind arising it would be possible for the city of Toronto to obtain that power upon the payment of what might be considered legitimate compensation to be fixed by an independent authority. It seems to me that if it is possible to provide for this contingency, as it may present itself very shortly, it would be desirable to do so.

Mr. FRASER. If that was the point, there might be something in it, although even then it should be done by a general law. The city of Toronto has power already to acquire the company. It has power to do that, whether the company want to or not.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. FRASER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. If 'shall' was inserted in the place of 'may' that might be the case, but there is not a man along the whole line of this company that can compel them to supply him.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the hon. gentleman read section 11a.

Mr. MONK.

Mr. FRASER. What has that got to do with it? 11a will be read in the light of section 11. It says:

> The Railway Committee shall, upon application of the company or any person, corporation or municipality, have power to make an order, in lieu of an agreement under clause 11, which shall be binding on the parties.

Until we have a general law covering all such cases, I do not think we should commence with one particular company.

Mr. CLARKE. Where are you going to commence?

Mr. FRASER. Commence by bringing in a general law. Why did the hon. gentleman not introduce a Bill in that direction at the beginning of this session? I regret that these amendments were not moved in the committee; but at any rate I shall have to vote against compelling the company to do what is proposed, whether it wants to or not.

Mr. CLARKE. I have been listening now for four or five years to the argument which is made use of at times and abandoned at times, when it suits the particular exigencies of the case, that because a Bill has happened to pass through a Standing Committee of this House, therefore it ought not to be amended in this House.

Mr. FRASER. No, by no means. We can change the whole Bill here if we want to; but what I said was that after a large committee had gone carefully into a Bill, they had a better opportunity of arriving at a correct decision than we have now.

Mr. WADE. If the hon. member for West Toronto considers the matter a little more carefully, I think he will see that this amendment is not advisable. I had occasion last year to make inquiries from the very best authorities with regard to the transmission of electricity over long distances, and I learned from those parties that it is an open question to-day whether it is possible to tap a long distance line very frequently along its route. It has not been demonstrated that it can be done successfully; but the amendment lays on the company the absolute burden of tapping their line from the time they start at Niagara Falls until they reach the city of Toronto. That is absolute and binding. Section 11a, if the interpretation placed upon it by the hon. member for West Toronto is correct, is in conflict with section 11. It seems to me we should have some very good reason before making such a departure as is proposed in the case of this company. We have been granting similar powers to other companies all along. It may be suggested that we were unwise in doing so; but if we were, and if a departure is now made, it should be in the form of a general law. If the city of Toronto is going to fall heir to its rights in the street railway in a few years, is there any reason why we should lay this burden on these people ? There is no monopoly in electricity, because there will always be the check involved in the cost of producing it by steam. Besides, the city has the right to harness the power, and bring it in for itself if it likes. If the Bill is amended as the hon. member for West Toronto proposes, you will not find a capitalist to put a dollar into the enterprise, because it will be at the mercy of every person and municipality along the line.

Mr. CLARKE. I cannot undertake to express an opinion as to the soundness of the views of the two hon. gentlemen who have last spoken, not being a lawyer ; but the simple object of these amendments is that this company, which now practically owns the street railway and the electric lighting of the city of Toronto, ought to be compelled, before the powers asked for in this Bill are granted, to supply power to every municipality along its line that may apply for it and may be willing to pay for it, provided the company has the power to dispose of.

Mr. WADE. What objection would there be to these different municipalities through which this line passes before they give their consent to the erection of poles, saying : 'We will only allow you to do this on condition that you supply us with electricity at certain prices '?

Mr. CLARKE. I am advised that the municipalities have not that power. This company being incorporated as a company to construct works for the general advantage of Canada, is given a very great privilege.

Mr. FRASER. How does the hon. gentleman think the company could enter a municipality without its consent ?

Mr. CLARKE. The municipality, as I am advised—I speak, of course, as a layman—cannot declare that this company or any similar company must not enter within the limits of the municipality until it agrees to supply power to the municipality on reasonable terms. If the hon. gentlemen opposite, who are objecting to these amendments, will provide in this Bill that this company cannot enter into the city of Toronto or exercise the powers asked for under this Bill without the consent of the municipality, we shall be prepared to withdraw all these amendments. The gentlemen who are applying for this Act of incorporation control the Toronto Street Railway and the Electric Light Companies, and if this provision is not inserted in the Bill, they can sell to themselves all the power available at Niagara Falls.

There is nothing to prevent them from thus possessing themselves of all the power that will be available when these works are constructed. The hon. gentleman asks me why the city does not supply its own power. It endeavoured to obtain authority from the legislature of Ontario to generate power at the Falls and bring it across for municipal purposes, but was refused that right ; and now we have half a dozen private individuals, however worthy they may be, coming to this parliament and asking for authority to construct these works and be given practically a monopoly of all the power generated at the Falls, which they may sell to whom and at what price they please. Is that a reasonable proposition in view of the value of the franchise we are giving them under this Bill ? The hon. gentleman says that Bills giving similar franchises have passed this House time and again.

Mr. PRINGLE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to put a question to him ? The question I wish to put is : How this section 90 of the Railway Act, as amended in 1889, affects this question ? The amendment is as follows :

> When any company has power by any Act of parliament to construct and maintain lines of telegraph or telephone or lines for the conveyance of light, heat, power or electricity, such company may with the consent of the municipal council or other authority having jurisdiction over any highway, square or other public place, enter thereon, &c.

The reason I put my question is this: We had this matter up in committee and it was there threshed out. The hon. gentleman was not present. The effect of this amendment of section 90 of the Railway Act was there thoroughly threshed out. I rather gather, from what the hon. gentleman says, that the section of the Act does not mean what it purports. Well, I understand that it means just what it expresses. All companies have to obtain the consent of a municipality before passing through it. And I want to ask, what is the effect on this question of section 90 of the Railway Act, as amended in 1899 ?

Mr. CLARKE. I did not know that the hon. gentleman was going to make a speech when he asked permission to put a question. Well, I am not qualified to answer what the force and meaning of section 90 of the Consolidated Railway Act really are. But these amendments were prepared by the counsel of the city of Toronto, who considers them essential to protect the interests of the city, and therefore asks that they be incorporated in this Bill before it becomes law. It is surely not unreasonable to ask that a great municipality like the city of Toronto, which contains more than one-tenth the population of the whole province, shall be protected in its rights when a company is seeking incorporation giving it such great power ? There is no desire on the part of the city of Toronto to prevent the incorporation of this company. But what we do desire is that if the company is given power to erect works in order to bring electric energy from Niagara Falls to Toronto, it shall not be allowed to discriminate after it has done so, against any individual or corporation, even the corporation of the city of Toronto. What objection can there be to a provision of that kind, especially when, in case of disagreement or dispute, the Governor in Council is authorized to adjudicate between the parties ? It may be only a coincidence, but it is a fact that the people seeking incorporation control a lot of railway companies, whose franchises are becoming more and more valuable. They control the franchises of the Toronto Railway Company and the suburban roads running out of Toronto, connected with the Toronto Railway Company, and the franchises of the electric light companies, and when these franchises fall in——

An hon. MEMBER. When will that be ?

Mr. CLARKE. It does not make a particle of difference, so far as the principle is concerned. Is it not reasonable to ask this House to provide that when they do fall in, should the municipality decide to operate these franchises itself, it shall be enabled to do so ? That is the effect of the amendment the committee are asked to agree to. It has been said several times that I was not present at the meeting of the committee at which this Bill was considered. Well, I am not a member of that committee, but I had another committee meeting to attend to, or I would have been there. I do not know what was done at the committee meeting, but, of course, accept unreservedly the statement of hon. gentlemen who were present ; but I say that these amendments were prepared by the counsel of the city of Toronto, and handed to me before he left Ottawa. If it be said that this company and all other similar companies will come under the operation of a general Act, when it is passed, that need not have a deterent effect on those who propose to put their capital into this scheme. What I assume to provide against, is discrimination, and I contend that there ought to be a clause in this Bill providing that this company shall come under the operation of any general law that may be passed in the future, dealing with this and other companies of a similar nature. Surely it is not unreasonable that we should have a provision of this kind in the Bill ? It would be a great injustice if parliament were to pass a Bill, under the operation of which this company might hold up any municipality, by having a monopoly of electrical energy, and prevent the people getting the greatest amount of benefit out of any franchise which they desire to dispose of or to operate. There is no desire to prevent the incorporation of this company, but there is no reason why the rights of municipalities should not be protected. I hope, therefore, that the committee will agree to the amendment suggested.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. CLARKE.

Mr. CLARKE. I beg to move that the following clause be added :

11a. The Railway Committee shall upon application of the company, or of any person, corporation or municipality have power to make an order in lieu of an agreement, under clause 11 hereof, which shall be binding upon the parties, and may determine to whom and at what prices and within what distance such power shall be supplied under the provisions of clauses 11, 12 and 13 of this Act.

Bill reported.

Mr. CAMPBELL moved third reading of the Bill.

Mr. CLARKE. Notwithstanding the adverse decision of the committee, I desire to take the sense of the House on this measure, and I beg, therefore, to move that the Bill be not now read the third time, but be referred to the Committee of the Whole for further consideration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is the amendment in order without notice being given ?

The SPEAKER. The amendment is in order. It is that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for further consideration. Besides I think that notices have been given of the amendments.

QUESTIONS.

CADETS, ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE, AND THE CORONATION.

Mr. PORTER—by Mr. Roche (Marquette)—asked :

1. Has any application been made by the commandant of the Royal Military College, Kingston, for leave to have a detachment of the cadets of the college accompany other detachments to the Coronation ?

2. Is it the intention of the government to send a detachment of cadets from the Royal Military College, Kingston, to attend the Coronation ?

3. If any application has been made, as in question one, has any, and if so, what, reply has been given there to ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden).

1. No.
2. No.

SOCKS FOR SOUTH AFRICAN CONSTABULARY.

Mr. HENDERSON—by Mr. Lancaster—asked :

1. Were tenders invited for the supply of socks required for the third contingent of constabulary sent to South Africa ?

2. If so, to whom was the contract awarded, and at what price per dozen pairs ?

3. If no tenders were invited, from whom were such goods purchased, and at what price ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). This is purely an Imperial matter, the contract is for the Imperial government.

TOLLS ON BRITISH YUKON RAILWAY.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Are the by-laws respecting the tolls and charges to be fixed, regulated and charged by the British Yukon Railway Company, mentioned in the Order in Council published in the 'Canada Gazette' on the 1st day of March, 1902, still in force ?

2. Has any one, or more, and if so, which, of the said by-laws, or the approval thereof by the Governor in Council, been rescinded ?

3. With regard to the condition of the said Order in Council :—'That by-laws Nos. 4 and 5 be approved, subject to the express understanding and condition that no tolls deemed excessive by the Governor in Council will be charged for transport over the railway between Skagway and White Pass ; and that, if such excessive tolls are charged, the Governor in Council may rescind any Order in Council approving the tolls fixed by the said by-laws, or may reduce such tolls,' is the government aware that since the date of the said Order in Council, a charge of $31 per ton—taking class 10 as a basis—is made for hauling a ton 21 miles, from Skagway to the Summit, while from the Summit to White Pass, 90 miles, the charge is $14 per ton, making a total charge of $45 per ton for 110 miles ?

4. If such a charge is made, does the government consider the toll excessive, within the intention of the said Order in Council ?

5. Has the government rescinded the said Order in Council in whole or in part, or reduced the tolls thereby approved ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) :

1. Yes.

2. Not any one or more of the said by-laws or the approval of the Governor in Council have been rescinded.

3. The government is not aware that since the date of the said Order in Council a charge of $31 per ton is made for hauling twenty-one miles from Skagway to the Summit while from the Summit to White Pass, ninety miles, the charge is $14 per ton.

4. The government is not aware that such charge is made, and has therefore had no reason to consider the question.

5. No, it has not.

GARDEN PRODUCE—A REMODELLING OF THE TARIFF.

Mr. J. E. EMILE LEONARD (Laval). (Translation.) moved :

That it is greatly in the interest of the market gardeners and the farmers, that the duties on our Canadian garden products be so adjusted as to guarantee the Canadian farmer an effective protection against foreign competition.

In moving this resolution, which is the first one I have the honour to submit to this House, allow me, Mr. Speaker, to define my policy on all matters pertaining to agriculture, which is the corner stone of the prosperity of our country. I am in favour of protecting the Canadian farmer, and that by any means and at any cost ; and to this end, both sides of the House should join hands, and, in discussing this national question, they should meet on neutral ground, when all party divisions being cast aside, we could all direct our common efforts to improving the condition of the farming community. For my part, I have no hesitation in saying that I would be ready to support and co-operate with any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, and even with out and out Liberals. I have the honour to represent in this House the county of Laval, which is rightly called the garden of Montreal, and in that county, as in most agricultural counties in Canada, garden produce is an important feature of the farming business, and I believe that the government ought, without further delay, to readjust the duties imposed upon market produce imported into this country, so as to satisfy the demands of the gardeners. Several important delegations have waited upon the government with a view to asking for a more efficacious protection in favour of their products, and, since then, our farmers have been anxiously awaiting the changes, the need of which is so keenly felt and which should be granted by any government who strives to protect and encourage the tillers of the soil. What do our market gardeners require at the hands of the government ? What they are asking for, Sir, is but fair and reasonable ; like all workingmen, they want to be well paid for their work, or in other words, they want to be protected from the encroachments of foreigners. Now, Sir, a very simple way of reaching that object would be to change our small ad valorem duty into a specific duty, and that is the only way in which we can give them fair protection. Market gardening is developing very rapidly in this country, and in my county, and in the neighbouring county as well, there are nearly 200 market gardeners, who employ on an average four or five hands each, some of them even employing as many as thirty hands, in the raising of vegetables for the Montreal market. Those gardeners rank in the census as farmers. Out of that number about 125 grow vegetables in hot-beds, and the number of those hot-beds is very near 20,000, of a total value of $150,000, and the capital invested in that business, such as horses, teams and implements or tools, must reach a still higher figure. The implements used by gardeners, the teams, the clothes, and indeed everything that they require, is highly protected by duties to which they do not object, provided that their products receive the same protection. At the present moment, market gardeners in Canada are only protected by a duty ad valorem, based on the cost prices in the Southern States, where those vegetables are raised in open ground at very low cost, at a season of the year when, in Canada, the snow still covers the ground.

I have now on my desk a petition signed by a large number of gardeners of West Lambton, asking for a readjusting of customs duties. That petition has been submitted to the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), but so far it has remained unanswered. This petition reads as follows :—

We, the undersigned, farmers and gardeners of the electoral division of West Lambton, beg to call respectfully your attention to the following articles of the American tariff as compared with the Canadian tariff.

Then they go on to say that a duty of 25 cents per bushel is levied on potatoes, whereas, under the Canadian tariff, they pay only 15 cents per bushel. Cabbages must pay a duty of 3 cents each, under the American tariff, whereas the Canadian tariff only imposes a duty ad valorem of 25 per cent. Onions pay a duty of 40 cents per bushel under the American tariff, whereas the Canadian tariff imposes a duty ad valorem of 25 per cent.

They further state that, as to those three articles, the Canadian producer finds it well-nigh impossible to compete on the American market, on account of the difference in tariff rates ; whilst the American producer can easily come in here to compete with the Canadian producer on his own market. As a consequence, the American producer, having the advantage of a milder climate, in the south of the United States. can put his products much earlier on the market, and at the very moment when the Canadian producer could hope to reap the benefit of his early production, he finds his own market flooded with foreign products, which, as is well known, cannot compare in quality with those raised here, but only serve the purpose of lowering prices, to the great detriment of the Canadian producer.

A remodelling of the tariff would, in our opinion, remedy that evil. Such a readjustment should have for its object the raising of our tariff so as to enhance the price of American vegetables to the Canadian consumer, and enable our farmers to secure a sufficient price for their vegetables grown during the winter season.

This petition is backed by a resolution passed by the Association of market gardeners of Ontario, who also ask the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) to amend the tariff and to impose the following duties :—

Asparagus, 3 cents per lb.
Cabbages, 3 cents each.
Cauliflowers, 3 cents each.
Celery, 25 cents per doz.
Beans, 50 cents per bushel.
Green Cucumbers, 20 cents per doz.
Onions, 40 cents per bushel of 56 lb.
Beans, 50 cents per bushel.
Tomatoes, 5 cents per lb.
Water melons, 5 cents each.
Musk melons (cantaloupe), 3 cents each.
Spinach, 25 cents per bushel.
Other vegetables, not elsewhere enumerated, including green corn, 25 per cent.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to speak at greater length on this question, the more so as the hon. Minister of Customs is perfectly acquainted with the matter, from the great number of petitions bearing on this special subject which have been presented to him within the last two years. The only serious objection that can be raised is that the consumer will have to pay a little more for early vegetables. Well, even this objection falls to the ground if we take into consideration the fact that those who can afford to eat green vegetables in the winter, when there is a great scarcity of them, have certainly the means to pay a little more without inconvenience. Moreover, what has taken place in the case of manufactured products will also happen in the case of farm produce ; and the impetus thus given to market gardening will give rise to local competition, and in the end the consumer will not have to pay any more than he does at present, and we shall have promoted and encouraged an industry which may well be truly called national.

I agree that it is somewhat late, at this stage of the session, to present this resolution. But I could not do it sooner, having had to wait for some of the papers asked for, and which the minister has just brought down. At any rate, this question is essentially a Canadian question, and this House, irrespective of party affiliations, ought forthwith to take into consideration the grievances complained of by Canadian market gardeners. Those complaints do not come from any single province, but they come from every province, and, as a matter of fact, the department of the Minister of Customs is flooded with similar requests coming from all parts of the Dominion.

It is not sufficient for the government to encourage railways, and to protect commerce and manufactures, because, if the wants of the farming community are not attended to, and farmers are unable to get a living, it is to no purpose that we are passing legislation here to encourage railways, manufacturers or immigration, agriculture being the very corner stone of our national prosperity.

Before voting appropriations for immigration, before throwing away our money, and launching upon extravagant schemes, as the present government are doing, we ought to consider if it is not possible for us to remedy the existing evil. What I have just called your attention to is one of those evils which we ought to be able to eradicate. If that evil exists among the farming community it is only for want of adequate protection. I have spoken at greater length than I intended because the question is a very important one, as it affects a large number of our fellow-countrymen. I think all the honourable gentlemen representing agricultural counties ought to participate in this debate and support my demands.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). (Translation.) Would the hon. deputy, before resuming his seat, be kind enough to tell me upon what particular articles he desires to have higher duties imposed than those now in force ?

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I have pointed them out a little while ago, namely, asparagus, 3 cents a pound ; cabbages, 3 cents each ; cauliflowers, 3 cents each ; celery, 25 cents a dozen ; green pease, 50 cents a bushel ; green cucumbers, 50 cents per dozen ; onions, 40 cents per bushel of 56 pounds ; potatoes, 25 cents per bushel ; melons, 3 cents each ; spinach, 25 cents per bushel ; other vegetables, not elsewhere enumerated, including green corn, 25 per cent. Such are the demands embodied in the petition of the market gardeners.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). (Translation.) One word only. We should bear in mind that the present tariff is the same as was in force in former years. Then it should not be forgotten that the articles on which they want us to impose higher duties are the very same which we cannot produce all the year round. There is a considerable trade in garden produce, especially in Montreal. The city of Montreal is the great distributing point for the products mentioned by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Leonard.) I entertain considerable doubts as to the increase of duties on those products imported from abroad being likely to result in something practical, if you take into consideration the fact that our farmers cannot supply that foreign market, because they do not produce those vegetables all the year round. Many articles, amongst those just mentioned by the hon. gentleman, are imported from the United States, to which country a little later in the year many similar products of our own are exported. If we raised the duties on those products as asked for by the hon. gentleman we should incur the risk of retaliation on the part of the United States as to products coming from Canada. We carry on, for instance, a considerable trade in melons with our neighbours, and our duty on that article is 25 per cent, whereas it is on the free list in the United States. What would my hon. friend say if the American government should decide to impose on that article a similar duty to ours ?

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). (Translation.) That would make no difference.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman says that it woud make no difference. But I think it would make a good deal of difference. If it was the same for the United States, why should it not be the same for us ?

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) They don't grow melons in the United States.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) I may tell the hon. gentleman that I have eaten some excellent melons in the United States.

Mr. MONK. (Translation.) They had, no doubt, been grown here.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) Of course, they are not so palatable as those grown by some constituents of my hon. friend. At any rate, it is of public notoriety that the greatest number of the articles, upon which we are asked to increase the duty, are not produced in the winter months. We should thereby be increasing the prices of those products to the great mass of consumers without our market gardeners being benefited thereby.

That question was much debated during the last election in the county of Laval, and that is no doubt, one of the grounds on which my hon. friend (Mr. Leonard) has thought it fit to-day to address the House, in discharge of the mandate received at the hands of those who are anxious to have the duties increased.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) My hon. friend wants us to raise the duties upon lettuce, cucumbers, tomatoes, asparagus, celery, beets, onions, &c. It is well known that in the winter months we do not grow cabbages nor cucumbers. We are also aware that it is extremely difficult to raise tomatoes in the winter season. We had to pay, last winter, 50 cents a pound for tomatoes of Canadian growth, whilst American tomatoes were being sold on the Montreal market at 20 cents a pound.

I am no free trader, but it is necessary to use common sense in our transactions in this world, and I declare here and now that I object to paying 50 cents a pound for Canadian tomatoes, when I can have American tomatoes for 20 cents. It is really going too far. This shows conclusively that tomatoes cannot be grown here with advantage in the winter months. So with asparagus and cucumbers. We do not produce asparagus nor celery in the winter season. There is not to be found one single gardener in the whole island of Montreal, or around Ottawa or Toronto, who can grow lettuce as good as that imported from the United States in the winter.

It is idle to appeal to prejudices. There are enough people buying tomatoes and lettuce, for let it be known that I am speaking the plain unvarnished truth. Cauliflowers are not grown in the winter months in Canada. I agree that during a certain season of the year they can be kept, perhaps during two or three months. The cauliflowers we buy in the winter are imported from the United States.

In short, I believe that what the hon. gentleman is aiming at is to make political capital with the electors and to catch popular favour rather than appealing to their reason. Let my hon. friend allow me, in all due deference, to call his attention to the fact that, in the province of Quebec, as elsewhere, farmers have a great deal of common sense. Go through the county of Laval and ask the market gardeners if they can produce cucumbers, celery, tomatoes and cauliflowers in the winter months, and they will tell you that they cannot do so.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) How then does the hon. minister account for the uneasiness which prevails among market gardeners ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) It is very easy to create ill-feeling among people who think they do not sell their products high enough ; but that grievance can easily be remedied. The market gardeners around Montreal receive just as much protection as any other class of the community does, and I may further say that those gardeners are the most prosperous people in the country. Should I be disposed, nevertheless, to add something to their happiness, would that be conducive to the happiness of other classes of the community much more numerous than the market gardeners are. To my mind, the consumers of Montreal should not be forced to pay extravagant prices for these products.

The consumers would be forced either to deprive themselves of vegetables or to pay exorbitant prices for them. Should we impose additional duties, consumers would have to pay 25 or 30 per cent more, nor could we hope thereby to increase the production of those articles which cannot be grown to advantage in this country the whole year round. There are seasons when we must import vegetables from the United States, because they can there be grown more easily and much more cheaply.

As I have stated before, the Canadian tariff is the same as the American tariff.

Mr. TALBOT. (Translation.) With the exception of potatoes, which pay 10 cents more in the United States.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Mr. Tarte). (Translation.) I say that our tariff is about the same. Now, by increasing our tariff all we would gain would be to see our products shut out from the United States.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) There is this great difference, that the climate of the United States is favourable to the production of vegetables, whereas the Canadian climate is not so advantageous. And that is why our farmers ought to receive more protection than is given to the farmers in the United States.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) My hon. friend knows very well that, even if additional duties were imposed on peas, tomatoes, cucumbers and other vegetables, that would neither improve the climate nor enable us to grow those vegetables to advantage during the winter months. The increase in the duties asked for by my hon. friend would only result in forcing the consumer to pay more for those products, without improving the condition of the Canadian producer. To my mind, such a proposition is preposterous.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) is not very familiar with the subject, but that does not surprise me, because it is not in his department. I am sorry that he should look upon this matter as a purely electoral matter. I am afraid that the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) looks upon it in the same light, from the words which fell from his lips while the hon. Minister of Public Works was answering my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Léonard). It is not a mere electoral matter. It is a serious question. Although a local question, it interests deeply all the gardeners who live in the vicinity of large cities, not around Montreal only, but in the vicinity of Toronto and all of the great cities of this Dominion, and if that statement is well founded, I do not think a matter which interests such a large class of people should be treated in the light manner in which it has been treated by the hon. Minister of Public Works. Of course, it is not in his department, but it is surprising that the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) should not be here and say a few words upon this matter and be able to give us the views of the government. This motion has been on the Order paper since the first day of the session. It has been the first order on the paper for ten days, and under these circumstances, as this is the last day, if I understand it aright, reserved for motions of this sort, I submit that it was the duty of the hon. Minister of Agriculture to be here in his seat and tell us what the position of the government is upon the question.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sure my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) will be sorry to know that if the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) is not in his seat to-day it is because he is unwell and cannot attend.

Mr. MONK. I am sorry to hear that the hon. Minister of Agriculture is unwell, but in his absence, I presume, that some members of the government will be able to give to the question a little more consideration than it has been possible for the hon. Minister of Public Works to do. This is not a new matter, before this parliament, or before the government. It has been pending for two years. It is a matter affecting not only interests of the market gardeners of my own province, represented here by the hon. member for Laval, and by myself, but of the gardeners of the province of Ontario, for, Sir, it is not very long ago that the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell) who, at that time, seemed to be extremely zealous in the interests of the gardeners of West York, came down and met me here in Ottawa. I came with a delegation of the Association of Market Gardeners of the province of Quebec and with the delegates of the Association of Market Gardeners of West York, the delegates of the Association of the province of Quebec waited upon the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding), the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), and I think the Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson), and there exposed what was considered to be a real grievance. This was just before the election in West York, and although no positive assurance was given us by the government, we went away having been assured by the three members of the government present that our requests and petitions would receive the earnest consideration of the government. Now, it seems to me, that that earnest consideration is not manifested by the few remarks which the hon. Minister of Public Works has made. It is impossible, I deem it, Sir, that the requests and the claims we made could have been as carefully investigated as we were promised, if, as I take it, the answer of the government is contained in what was said here by the hon. Minister of Public Works. Not only was this important step taken by the market gardeners of both provinces, but both provinces were absolutely in accord, not only as to the necessity for a change in the tariff, as a matter of justice, but even, what is more remarkable, both the association of the province of Ontario and the association of the province of Quebec, without having conferred previously, came to precisely the same conclusions as to the alterations to be made. This, it seems to me, is an indication that there is something more in what we are doing now than a mere election clamour. There is a grievance, and it is the duty of this government to remedy that grievance. Take the city of Montreal—I have no doubt the hon. member for West York will continue to support us in the demand we are making and will give us a similar explanation as to the condition of things in his own neighbourhood—in the neighbourhood of the city of Montreal we have over 200 gardeners. This will be news, I am sure, to the hon. Minister of Public Works, and to some other members of this House. We have over 200 gardeners who each employ 4 or 5 people.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to tell me how many of these gardeners are carrying on winter culture ?

Mr. MONK. Winter culture ? Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) tell me if he means the early culture that takes place in the beginning of spring when the snow is still on the ground ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. MONK. Because, if he does it affects these two hundred men. As to those who have hot houses or conservatories around Montreal, I could not speak, but there is a large number. Mr. Legare, in my own county, I should say, has one mile nearly of conservatories and he burns 1,200 tons of coal in carrying on winter culture.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What kind of products is Mr. Legare selling in the winter months ?

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend will see in a moment how entirely erroneous his statement is in regard to winter culture, because there is not a single vegetable, except asparagus, on which we are asking for no protection, that we cannot produce and that is the reason why we want some change in the tariff.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would like to know what products these gentlemen put on the market in the winter months. Take Mr. Legare, for instance; he does not produce beans and peas in the winter.

Mr. MONK. He produces them all.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is wrongly informed.

Mr. MONK. They are all produced, but they are not produced to any considerable extent, because they cannot compete with the American producer. We are not Negroes or Chinese, and we do not live in South Carolina. If we were, and if we lived in South Carolina, we could compete, but we cannot do it under existing conditions. I say that these two hundred men in the vicinity of Montreal employ from four to five persons each. That is the average number of men which they employ. Some of them employ twenty-five and even thirty men. These two hundred people, with the others I have mentioned, cultivate vegetables purely and simply—exclusively vegetables for the Montreal market. They are not farmers in the ordinary sense of the word; they are market gardeners, and it is they and others in a like position whose interests we are defending here. The hon. Minister of Public Works spoke about winter culture. That, of course, is an interesting question, because there is a beginning of winter culture which would be greatly increased if we could only obtain what we are asking. The hon. Minister of Public Works, himself, eloquently, at a banquet at Montreal not very long ago, a very important banquet, the banquet of the Board of Trade at which the hon. Minister of Finance was present, and eloquent as the hon. Minister of Finance is, to my mind, the hon. Minister of Public Works was far more eloquent upon that occasion—advocated reciprocity of tariffs with the Americans and the adoption of a higher tariff to protect us. That is all that we have asked. We do not ask for anything more than that. We ask to be placed, as respects American garden produce, not on the higher plane, but on the same plane as the Americans.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Are we not on the same plane now ?

Mr. MONK. No, that is where the hon. gentleman makes a mistake and that is why I say this subject has not been investigated, because, if it had been my hon. friend would not have committed himself to such a heresy as that. The Americans have heavier duties against us than we have against them, and what the market gardeners of Canada ask for is similarity of tariffs with the Americans. I have not the privilege of being a market gardener myself, but I am speaking from information furnished to my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Leonard) and to myself by the market gardeners who live in the vicinity of Montreal, and I may say that a more competent and capable body of market gardeners you cannot find in the whole Dominion of Canada. There are about one hundred and twenty-five of these market gardeners who cultivate in the very early spring which begins in the month of March, and they use about 20,000 glass coverings which cost all told about $150,000. Even under the unfavourable tariff at present they have $150,000 invested in the vicinity of Montreal in this one particular item of their trade, and excluding of course such articles as implements, carriages, horses, and other things which they require in the pursuit of their industry. If these were included the capital invested in the business would be found to be a large sum indeed. The implements—l'outillage as they are called in French—have a 35 per cent protection, and the carriages, carts, and vehicles, are also amply protected. The very clothes that these market gardeners wear are protected. They do not object to that; they accept the principle of protection but they ask that they shall have protection themselves, just as well as the manufacturers, the farmers, and the fruit-growers. As regards the products of the farmers we have specific duties; on hay, $4 a ton; on meat, 2 and 3 cents a pound; on eggs, 3 cents a dozen; butter, 4 cents a pound; cheese, 3 cents a pound; grain, 10 and 15 cents a bushel; honey, 20 cents a gallon. Again the fruit-growers have specific duties on their products, and let me say that it is only by specific duties that we can be protected in respect to garden produce. The fruit-growers have a protection of: 40 cents a bushel on apples; peaches, 1 cent a pound; grapes, 2 cents a pound; strawberries and raspberries, 2 cents a pound. The market gardeners are protected merely by a small ad valorem duty of 25 per cent upon the immense importation of vegetables that come here in the early spring and which are produced in the fields of South Carolina by negro labour, and in the fields of California by Chinese labour. Every one who has knowledge of the trade knows, that the valuation of these vegetables is on the basis of the value at the place of production which is extremely low, and which is made as low as possible when they are entered up at customs. These vegetables are sold on the Montreal market at a very high price, and a very large profit goes for the benefit of some people in the States, and perhaps a few dealers in the city of Montreal. I am afraid that personally the Minister of Public Works does not know much more about market gardening than I do, but there is this difference that he has not been to the sources of information as I have been. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) spoke about celery, and I may tell him that celery is kept in Montreal the whole year round.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not produced.

Mr. MONK. It is not produced the whole year round, but it is kept in storage and it is ready for our markets on the 1st of April. Canadian cabbages are placed upon the market about the 15th of June, and they are easily kept in good condition during the whole winter until the 15th of May. The Canadian market gardeners meet the competition of the American cabbages from the 1st of April until the month of July. I am informed that cucumbers may be cultivated in the vicinity of Montreal during the entire winter.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They have never been to very large extent.

Mr. MONK. They never can be unless you give protection.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid that protection will not change the course of the sun.

Mr. FRASER. Perhaps we could get the sun to change.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) says that we must get the sun to change and I hear my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Talbot) sneer.

Mr. TALBOT. Where did the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) get the sneer from?

Mr. MONK. I got it from the other side of the House, and I thought I got it from you.

Mr. TALBOT. You are mistaken.

Mr. MONK. The market gardeners of the vicinity of Montreal contend that they can cultivate cucumbers for the Montreal market very early in the spring.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I make bold to say that there is not a Canadian cucumber in the Montreal market before June or July.

Mr. MONK. Give them protection and you will have them.

Mr. FRASER. How would any amount of protection do that unless you have hot houses?

Mr. MONK. We have. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) think that we live in Montreal as he does in Guysborough. If my hon. friend will come down with me and spend a Sunday in Montreal I will show him one of the most extensive hot houses in Canada, which it will take him two hours to go through.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Has the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) any suspicion that the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) is a hot house plant.

Mr. FRASER. We live as God gives us opportunity.

Mr. MONK. My hon. friend is a free trader, and I refer him to the able speech made in Montreal some time ago by the Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I said nothing that was not common sense.

Mr. MONK. I stated that the protection of our clients, if I may use that expression——

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. The hon. Prime Minister laughs at that expression, but I think he will admit that to a certain extent the constituents of members of this House are their clients in the broader sense of the word.

The PRIME MINISTER. Do not explain. I think it is quite natural.

Mr. MONK. They state that cucumbers can be cultivated here during the whole year if properly protected. Cucumbers arrive in our markets from the States about the 10th of June.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have them now. We buy them every day.

Mr. MONK. If my hon. friend will allow me, I say they appear in great quantities about that time, though there is no doubt that some people get them before, and what comes is the surplus from the markets of New York and Boston. What cannot be sold there is sent here in large quantities, and is entered at a very low valuation, and is sold for what it will bring. The same thing happens with peas, beans, tomatoes, cauliflower, lettuce, onions, radishes, parsley and watercress. My hon. friend asked what vegetables could be cultivated here by our own market gardeners. They can cultivate lettuce, radishes, parsley, watercress and mushrooms, a very great industry in France, as it might be in this country if properly protected.

Mr. FRASER. We have it. We have all the mushrooms we want in Nova Scotia.

Mr. MONK. We have not enough in Montreal. We want more and we want to be able to say that we are eating Canadian vegetables. All these vegetables can be cultivated all the year round in Canada in large quantities. That is what my information is, and it is a matter for verification. My hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works, who seemed at the time the delegation came here to take a lively interest in this matter, asked if, as a matter of fact, some of the vegetables mentioned were cultivated. Let me tell him that cucumbers, tomatoes and cauliflowers are cultivated all the year round by many persons in the district of Montreal. My hon. friend shakes his head, but that information, though second hand, is very good.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would be much interested to learn that cauliflowers and cucumbers are produced in Montreal during the winter months.

Mr. MONK. That is a matter I would be very glad if my hon. friend would investigate, and I will give him every opportunity to investigate it in my own county next winter if he will do me the honour of coming down there. Of course, our pretention is, as the House will readily imagine, that the cultivation would greatly increase if it were better protected. Now, my hon. friend made a mistake when he said a moment ago that we have the same tariff as the Americans. That is not so; but that is what we are asking, and what we claim this government should give us. Our climatic conditions are not as favourable as those of the United States, and therefore we think we are entitled at least to the same protection that they have, if not more. A few years ago, under the Dingley tariff, I think it was, the Canadian market gardeners sold very large quantities of cabbages to the Americans. The same remark applies to onions and potatoes, of which we sold car load after car load. But under their present tariff, with 3 cents a head on cabbages, 40 cents a bushel on onions, and 25 cents a bushel on potatoes, we are not selling them any more, and there is no fear of retaliation, because retaliation is not possible, except in melons, as my hon. friend suggested. But the Americans will not retaliate in melons, because in the state of New York and in the New England states they have no melons, or scarcely any; they have no good melons; and therefore they open their gates to the entry of Canadian melons, and we send them very large quantities, and they have a special value. Now, I will not weary the House by reading the petition made by the market gardeners. That petition, though adressed to the government in French, was brought here, I believe, by the representatives from both the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario, and this is what was asked simultaneously by the market gardeners of both provinces, who agree absolutely to a cent as to the rate they ask, without having had any previous consultation: Cucumbers, 25 cents a dozen; lettuce, 25 cents a dozen; celery, 25 cents a dozen; cauliflower, 25 cents a dozen; green peas, beans and spinach, 50 cents a bushel; tomatoes, 5 cents a pound; onions and potatoes, 25 cents a bushel; cabbages, 3 cents a head; radishes, 10 cents a pound; parsley and watercress, 25 cents a pound. This petition I will leave with the reporter of 'Hansard,' in order that he may have it textually placed on the official report.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that if he wants the matter to be inserted in the debates, he will have to read it to the House.

Mr. MONK. Then I will give it up, rather than take up the time of the House. The reason I wish that their petition be entered is that they gave one of their reasons, their faith in the present government.

The American tariff is not yet put on the same line as that mentioned in the petition. I believe that vegetables in general are subjected, as the hon. minister has said, to a duty of 25 per cent ad valorem, but beans have a special duty, under article 241 of the American tariff, of 45 cents per bushel of 60 pounds.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We do not import them in the summer months.

Mr. MONK. No, this duty would be specially useful to us in the spring, perhaps in three or four months of the year, and why should we not have a sliding scale of duties in order to protect our market gardeners and thus develop that most useful industry, which is not only profitable to the large class engaged in it, but is a course of instruction for our farmers around our cities. Under article 242 of the American tariff, cabbages are charged a duty of 3 cents per head. Article 249 imposes 40 cents per bushel on onions; article 250 charges 40 cents per bushel on green pease; article 253 fixes the duty on potatoes at 25 cents per bushel, and under article 247 fresh tomatoes are charged 25 per cent. In his organ in the city of Montreal, the Minister of Public Works has argued that the time of production of the American vegetables is different from ours, and he asks why should we deprive the consumers in our cities of those vegetables at a time when the Canadian market gardener is not in a position to compete. That contention, however, is not correct. Take, for instance, lettuce, we produce very large quantities all the year round in Montreal. Go into any of the green grocers' stores, and you will find Canadian lettuce side by side with the American all the year round. The date when American lettuce competes is from December until May. The contention of my hon. friend was that lettuce is produced in Canada about the middle of April, and that the American competition was in October and May. But that statement is not correct, according to our information which, I believe, is more reliable. In rhubarb there is no competition. In cabbages, the Canadian vegetable is produced from the 15th June until the 15th May following, and the American competition is from April to July. My hon. friend must see at once that we suffer from that competition. Some people contend that the cabbage is not produced until the middle of July in Canada, but that is erroneous. We compete with the American cabbage from the 15th June onward.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We could not get fresh cabbages in Canada at the time when we import the American ?

Mr. MONK. They are fresh enough for our people. Our Canadian cucumbers are on the market from the 10th June, and the American competition is from May until July. Peas and beans are produced in Canada, in the ordinary course, on the 1st July, and the American competition is from May until the end of July. So that if you take these vegetables one by one, you will find that in all of them we have to meet American competition. Of course, I am not speaking of our vegetables, which are produced in the field, without any extraordinary effort, and which perhaps come up at dates that may not coincide with the American seasons exactly. But if we had the protection against American vegetables, which the Americans have against ours, we would produce these vegetables the whole year round and that industry, which at present is not very considerable in the vicinity of Montreal, would be increased tenfold within five years. And these vegetables which come from the United States are sold in Montreal at exorbitant prices, although they cost scarcely anything in their own country, and although they are admitted here at very low valuation and pay but 25 per cent ad valorem duty and no specific duty. Still they are sold during the winter and early spring at the same prices as our market gardeners would ask were they protected as the Americans are. Under the circumstances, it is only fair that we should give our people the same protection against the Americans as they give their people against us. We are not asking for anything more. Everything we work with is protected. There are duties of from 30 per cent to 35 per cent upon our tools, vehicles, horses, and the clothes we wear, and yet our produce is only protected to the extent of 25 per cent ad valorem against American vegetables, which are entered at extremely low figures—figures very often absurdly small. I see no reason why we should not be protected against the American negro and the Chinamen of California. Let me give two or three figures to show the increase of importations from the United States. At the port of Montreal in 1900 we brought in from the United States, 1,667 bushels of potatoes. In the following year, 1901, we imported 6,498 bushels. Of fresh tomatoes, we imported into Montreal from the United States in 1900, 6,548 bushels, and in 1901, 9,764. And this applies to Toronto in the same way. We are here pleading the cause of the constituents of my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Campbell) and I hope he will join us. In Toronto the quantity of fresh tomatoes imported from the United States in 1900 was 2,937 bushels, and in 1901 it was 6,066 bushels. I will not take up the time of the House in quoting all the figures I have here, but these that I have quoted are enough, I think, to show that this is a case which commends itself to the attention of the government; and we are very anxious to know if the government will entertain our claim and remedy our grievance.

Mr. O. TALBOT (Bellechasse.) (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the position taken by my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Léonard), on that question of the protection to be accorded to market gardeners in the vicinity of Montreal and of the larger cities of the province of Ontario. And, when I say that, I am surprised, it is because I do not see what advantage my hon. friend can expect to accrue from it, at least in favour of the working classes. My hon. friend is no doubt logical in the stand he has taken, because, during the last election in Laval, he has clearly given some pledges to the market gardeners of his county. But, even supposing that the government would increase the duty on the articles already enumerated, how does he make it out that the working classes would be benefited thereby ? What he asks for would only result in preventing those early products, coming in from the south of the United States. As we all know, the working classes do not consume those products in the winter, the prices being too high. The working classes will only buy them when they are put on the market at reasonable prices, and when his resources allow him to make that expenditure. What is my hon. friend asking for, by his motion ? He is asking for protection in favour of the market gardeners of Montreal and Toronto. As the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) remarked a moment ago, we have to contend in this country with climateric conditions well nigh insurmountable. On the other hand, there is no winter in the southern States. In my opinion, it would be idle to attempt remedying that state of things by readjusting the tariff. If, for instance, the United States produce water melons in large quantities, and can export them to this country by car-load lots, I do not see how my hon. friend can remedy the evil without shutting out their water melons from our markets. We are asked to protect the melons of Canadian growth. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has stated that in the United States melons are not so good as our Canadian melons. I do not agree with him on that point ; but why should we be asked to increase the duties, for closing our doors to products which are scarcely grown at all in the United States ?

Now, if we look at the tariff, what do we find ? We find that on the staple articles of market gardening the tariff of both countries is absolutely similar. Thus, cucumbers pay 25 per cent under the tariff of both countries. There is, however, an exception in favour of cabbages which are charged a duty of 3 cents per head in the United States, whereas the rate in this country is 25 per cent ad valorem. My hon. friend from Laval knowns very well that, were cabbages charged 3 cents each in this country, that would be a prohibitive tariff. The consumers, in the district of Quebec, get their cabbages from Montreal, and we pay for them 3 or 4 cents per head. As I said were they charged a duty of 3 cents, the price would become so exorbitant as to be almost prohibitive. Take tomatoes : under the United States tariff, they pay a duty of 25 per cent per bushel. In Canada, the duty is 20 per cent. The difference is very slight. Lettuce is 25 per cent. The rate is the same in Canada. Asparagus, 25 per cent ; same rate in Canada. Take radishes, the tariff is 25 per cent in both countries.

So with cauliflowers, celery, beets, artichokes, carrots, leeks, parsley, turnips and parsnips. And those are the staple articles which are consumed by the working classes.

Now, let me ask my hon. friend from Laval : when do workingmen in Montreal eat cucumbers when they sell at 25 cents ? Most assuredly, they never eat any in the winter season nor in the early spring.

The government is asked to impose a protective tariff on those early vegetables which are only bought by people in easy circumstances. If such a demand were granted, what would happen ? Simply, that rich people would be deterred from buying by those prohibitive prices.

What do we see just now ? Is it not a fact that American market gardeners stop exporting their produce as soon as our farmers can supply the local market ? Thus, lettuce is put on our market by the end of April, cabbages by the end of July ; cucumbers, towards the end of July ; tomatoes, from the middle to the end of July. Asparagus, at the end of May or the beginning of June. Celery, in August. So with beets and carrots. Onions are offered for sale in September and October. And we export those products not only to the United States but even to Europe.

Leeks are offered for sale in September and October. Radishes, in June. Cauliflowers, parsley, mushrooms, turnips, potatoes, beans, parsnips, in July. Those are the different dates on which those products are put on the Canadian market by our own producers.

We are being told that we need protection. But if there is one class more than another which deserves to be protected, it is surely that of the consumers which for the most part, consists in workingmen.

I am strongly opposed to any protection which would, only result beneficially to a certain class of people, and detrimentally to many others, not to say to almost all classes of the community. As to protecting articles which we cannot grow in this country, that is out of the question. During the winter, we cannot import vegetables in large quantities from abroad because the freight rates—I mean the railway rates—are too high, and because also the risks are too considerable. It is only in the spring of the year, when cold storage cars are available, that we begin to import those vegetables. Now, no sooner do our own products reach the local markets, when imports come to an end, because they can no longer stand local competition. As to fruit-growing, take the peaches which we cultivate in this country, you will find that they pay in the United States, a duty of 25 cents per bushel. In Canada, the duty is one cent a pound, including package. Strawberries and raspberries, blackberries, currants, in fact all the small fruits grown by our farmers, are charged a cent per quart, whilst under the Canadian tariff they are charged two cents a pound, including package. So, as will be seen, as to those products, although they are not necessaries of life—are none the less palatable and of great value to the workingmen, the Canadian tariff is higher than the American tariff. The government is asked to impose duties well nigh prohibitive on articles which we do not produce in this country, or which we do not produce all the year round, with a view to protecting a few market gardeners in the vicinity of Montreal and Toronto. Such a policy would only result in enhancing the prices, to the great detriment of consumers at large, and to the benefit of a few individuals.

To sum up, let me say that it is perfectly useless for my hon. friend from Laval—except in so far as he may wish to redeem his pledges to the Laval electors during the last electoral campaign—to come and ask the government to increase the duties on articles which are not articles of household necessity, with no other result than that of saddling the working classes with new burdens. Although I represent here an agricultural district, I am opposed to the increase of duties on the articles which he has mentioned.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL (West York). I regret very much that I was not able to follow the remarks of the hon. gentleman for Laval (Mr. Leonard) in introducing this motion, owing to not understanding the language in which he addressed the House. However, I think it is only right that I should say a few words on this question. In the first place, I regret very much that the hon. member has seen fit to bring forward this motion at this particular time. He put this notice on the Order paper, I believe, in the first days of the session. This was before the House and the government had come to a decision as to what should be done with the tariff. Then was an opportune time to have discussed this question ; we could have discussed it then with a good deal of profit, not only to ourselves, but also, I hope, to the market gardeners. But, though this order has been called day after day, and week after week for over two months, the hon. gentleman has allowed it to remain. He has been like the dog in the manger that could not eat the hay himself and would not let any other creature eat it—for nobody else could proceed with a motion of this kind while the hon. gentleman had this order upon the paper. And, after allowing it to stand all this time, he now, near the close of the session, when the government have decided, and the House also have decided by a large majority, that there is to be no change in the tariff this session, the hon. gentleman brings forward this resolution. What possible good can he achieve by having the matter discussed at this time ? What can be the hon. gentleman's object ? Is it to make political capital out of the question? It would seem so. Certainly no other object is to be attained by discussing it now. But if the hon. gentleman thinks he will make political capital out of the question, I think he will find himself very much mistaken. If the market gardeners of this country are suffering under any grievance, to whom do they owe it, and who is responsible for it ? Why, the party which the hon. gentleman for Laval supports. For, in 1894, when the tariff was revised by the administration that preceded this one, the duty on market garden stuff was very largely reduced. There were no objections then by the hon. member who has brought forward this motion or any of his friends. They accepted the reduction that was made without raising any protest at all. This continued from 1894 until 1896, when there was a change of government and the Liberal party came into power. They left the duty as it was before. No protest had been entered by the hon. gentlemen who are now so solicitious for the welfare of the market gardeners—they had raised no voice of protest against the action taken by their friends in reducing the tariff. It was quite natural, therefore, that this government, on coming into power shold leave the duty as they found it. During the last few years, there has been some agitation on the part of the market gardeners claiming that they were not sufficiently protected. Last year I had the honour to be asked by the Market Gardeners Association of West York to come down with them early in the season to interview the government here. This was a long time before the election in West York took place, in fact, it was before there was a vacancy in West York at all. Therefore, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) was altogether astray when he said that this was immediately before the election in West York. However, as I say, the Market Gardener's Association asked me to come down with them and lay their case before the government of the day. I thought it was my duty to comply with their request. They are a very large body of people. Immediately surrounding the city of Toronto there are 2,000 or 2,500 men, women and children who get their livelihood altogether from the raising of vegetables for the market.

Around the city of Montreal and all the great cities of this vast Dominion you find market gardeners a hardy, industrious and saving people, who are well to do, and working hard, men, women and children. They are cultivating a small quantity of land. A farmer works two or three hundred acres of land, a market gardener works probably four or five acres, and he employs on those four or five acres more people than would be employed perhaps on two hundred acres in the country. Therefore, if the raising of vegetables in this country can be encouraged, with a due regard to the interests of the consumers, I think that it is a question that should receive the careful attention of the government. The government have to look at this question from two sides: They not only, as this resolution states, have to look at it from the standpoint of the market gardener and the farmer, they must also look at it from the standpoint of the consumer. So that while perhaps we are a little prejudiced, and while we may be a little partial in our views, looking at it from the interest of one class alone, I can readily see that the government must view the question from the standpoint of the consumer as well as of the producer.

As I say, there are around the city of Toronto between 2,000 and 2,500 people engaged in this industry. It is certainly hard for these people to find, after they have raised their vegetables and got them ready for market, that across from Buffalo and from the other ports of the United States, there are large quantities of vegetables thrown on the market of the city of Toronto, thus depressing the price and taking the ground away from these people. They are satisfied with the prices they obtain, but they find that when their vegetables are ready for the market, a large quantity of foreign vegetables are thrown in and the market is flooded with them. Now, our gardeners say that these goods are brought in at a great undervaluation. I have known it to be the case that these goods are often brought in in carload lots, and as the duty is an ad valorem one, they are invoiced as damaged goods. The appraiser of course goes to look at the car, he takes the invoice and sees it is a very small, miserable price, and he goes and opens the car. He perhaps may not have any intimate knowledge of the particular kind of products, but he sees that these are, especially on the top, damaged vegetables, and he passes them along; and so these goods are entered, I am told, very much below their actual value, and consequently the duty imposed upon them is almost nil. You can readily see by the statement that was made before the House by the Minister of Customs a short time ago that the amount of duty collected in Montreal last year was a little over $9,000 on all the vegetables imported from the United States. Now, I say, that to my mind is a hardship, and I believe it would be wise for the government carefully to consider this question. I would like to see them increase the duty a little. I dont think we need go very far, because if the effect of the increase in that duty is to advance the price of these vegetables in the early spring, it is only the well-to-do people who consume them. If you pay a cent, or two cents, more for your cabbages to get them in April or May, it is only the wealthy classes that use those goods at that season, it is not the poor people that consume them. Then when our own vegetables come into the market our people will be able to supply the market of Canada with all the goods the consumers require, and there is sufficient competition among the market gardeners in Canada themselves to keep the prices right.

As I said before, I do not think this is an opportune time to discuss this question. I think the mover of the resolution, if he had been sincere and had the interests of the market gardeners at heart, would not have brought forward this motion to-day. No possible good can be achieved by discussing it now, it is not the right time. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and myself, who introduced the deputation from Montreal and Toronto last year, took a very opportune time to approach the government. We made a very strong case, and I was in hopes that some result would follow from it. But I do not despair. The government, as everybody knows, are going to send a representation to the colonial conference in England, when the premiers of all the provinces of this Dominion will meet there and adjudicate upon the tariff, in reference not only to the colonies, but to the mother country as well. So it is quite in order for the government to say this session, we will make no changes in the tariff this year, we will see what is the outcome of this colonial conference, and then we will be able to decide how far we shall go, and what we shall do another year. So I think the government's position is a strong one this year, and recognizing that, I would have been glad had there been no discussion on this question at all until after the conference is held; and then, by bringing this matter before the government in a proper way and discussing it fully, I am in hopes that some result will flow from it. But the moment you throw this question into the political arena, whenever a member gets up and tries to make political capital out of it for his party or for his friends, he has damaged the cause he has at heart, and he is doing harm to those he is trying to support. So I think that the market gardeners of this country will not thank the hon. member (Mr. Leonard) for bringing forward this motion to-day. I believe that it is greatly in the interests of the people of this country that we should increase the population as rapidly as we can, and wherever we can, and I think that might be done by some simple modification of the tariff, either by the reduction of the duty on the raw material, or by a slight increase of the duties on manufactured goods; we can thereby build up the great institutions of this country and develop our resources. I say that is the wisest thing for us to do. In this particular case I believe that a very slight increase of the duty on some things would not entail increased prices to the consumer, except it might be early in the spring when only those who are well able to pay the price of those goods would purchase them, and the competition between the market gardeners and dealers in our own country will regulate the price.

I am in hopes that when the proper time comes we will be able to discuss this matter free from politics altogether. It is not a question that should enter into the political arena. I say again that I regret for my part that the matter has been evidently brought forward, not for the purpose of doing any good to the market gardeners, but for the evident purpose of manufacturing a little political clap-trap to the advantage of the hon. member who has brought it forward.

The hon. gentleman will make nothing out of it, because the market gardeners know that for the eighteen long years during which our Conservative friends ruled the destinies of this country there was no help then for the market gardeners. They appealed in vain ; in other words, they asked for bread and they got a stone. That is the way they were treated by our Conservative friends. I have confidence in this government, I believe that this government will see that their rights and privileges are maintained. I repeat, that I have confidence in this government knowing the ability and statesmanlike character of the hon. gentlemen who comprise it, and I believe that when the proper time comes that all interests, all classes, all creeds and all parties will be properly protected.

Hon. WM. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Mr. Speaker, I hope that when a colonial conference takes place in London it will have questions of greater importance to discuss than the question of the market gardeners in and around Montreal. If the representatives of Canada descend to the consideration of questions of that character they will be open to censure when they return to this country. The last speaker has referred to the desirability of increasing the population of this country. As to that I think we all agree, but we want the people of all the provinces of the Dominion to be allowed to eat fruit and to buy it when they find it is not produced in this country. We know that in the spring of the year and in the early part of the summer, if we are to have fruit at all, we have to depend upon the United States for it, but once our own fruit is brought into the market, there is no competition. The people buy our own fruit at the proper time and no other. We, in Nova Scotia, have first to buy American strawberries, then we have to buy Ontario strawberries until our own are ready, and when our own strawberries are ready we would not look at either of these. Now, speaking about the quality of the cabbages that come from the United States, I would say that it is only their surplus, after their own market is well supplied, and of a very inferior quality, that we receive. As to the value it will be based on what the cabbage would bring in the United States at the time it would be exported, so that, I think it would be only right to collect duty on the value of the cabbage in the United States at the time it is exported. But, we must not forget that there are other people in this world besides the market gardeners in and around Montreal, and that we have to protect also the interests of those people who must be permitted to buy fruit even from the United States when it cannot be produced in their own country. We have, in Nova Scotia, perhaps the best quality of fruit in its proper time that there is in—the world—I was going to say.

Mr. FRASER. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). Whenever it is fit for market we use it and use it alone and we only use other fruit when we cannot get our own. Therefore, let us be true to ourselves and consider that we have other interests to protect besides the interests of the market gardeners in and around Montreal.

Mr. R. BLAIN (Peel). Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a very few words upon this important resolution now before the House. I am a little surprised that we find representatives on the other side of the House who would oppose this simple, yet important resolution. Let me read it :

> That it is greatly in the interest of the market gardeners and the farmers that the duties on our Canadian garden products be so adjusted as to guarantee the Canadian farmer an effective protection against foreign competition.

We have had to-night another illustration of the difference of opinion which exists upon the other side of the House. From the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Hon. Mr. Ross, Victoria), I would judge that he is an ardent free trader. However, he ventured to remark that the vegetables that come into Canada now are simply the surplus. He made the statement that after their own people are supplied the trade in the United States send their surplus to the Canadian market. That, I think, is a strong reason why the Canadian farmer and market gardener should be protected from the surplus production of the American farmer and market gardener. Just let me quote from page 142 of the Trade and Navigation Returns for the year 1901. Under the item of vegetables, including potatoes, tomatoes, and other vegetables imported into Canada, I find that we imported last year $445,385 worth of vegetables, coming from the United States and competing with the products of the Canadian farmer and market gardener. I wish to say that in my opinion the resolution is making a very simple and reasonable demand upon this government.

It is asking not that the government shall obtain for the market gardeners and farmers of this country the market of the United States, which they cannot obtain, but it is asking that this government shall so arrange the tariff that the market gardeners and farmers of Canada shall have their own market for their own supply. I think that is a reasonable demand. It was said by the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), I think, if I caught what he said correctly, that it was impossible for the Canadian gardener to produce these vegetables in time for the Canadian market. What I have to say is that if the government will so arrange the tariff that the market gardeners and farmers in Canada will understand that they are securely protected from foreign competition, then I have faith in believing that the Canadian market gardeners and farmers will so equip their plants that they will be able to produce all the vegetables that the Canadian people want throughout the whole season. Between the city of Toronto and the city of Hamilton, as an illustration of the conditions that we have in Ontario, I may say that there is a large quantity of land which is suitable for the growth of this kind of product. In Ontario it is well known that we cannot produce grain now in competition with the western country, and it is well known, further, that the population of the central counties of Ontario is fast decreasing. Why is it decreasing ? For the reason that the people are going to the west and notwithstanding what has been said in this House they are still going to the United States from the province of Ontario. If that condition of things exists, as it does exist in Ontario, then, it is the duty of this government to so arrange the tariff that every article that can be produced on the farm, whether a small or large farm, shall receive the protection that it deserves, so that the producers who pay the taxes in Canada shall have at least the market of the five and a half millions of people that we have here to-day. It has been said during this debate that our climatic conditions are such that we cannot produce these particular products of the farm and the market garden early enough in the year for consumption in the large cities. I wish to say, that if the government will arrange and increase the tariff so that the market gardeners will understand that the higher tariff would be permanent—and it will be permanent so far as the Conservative party in Canada is concerned—then we will be able as Canadians, in and around the great cities of Montreal, Hamilton, Toronto and others, to produce every dollar's worth of these products that the people want, and we will give them a better article than they get now, and we will give them that article as early in the season as it is required. I was surprised at the wonderful statement made by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Campbell). The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Léonard) is in this House for the first time ; a young man who won a county for the Conservative party against great odds, and it was unkindly at least to find this old parliamentarian (Mr. Campbell) who has held a seat so long in this House, rebuke that young Canadian member ; still more strange was it that he rebuked him for trying to advance the interests of a class of our population to whom the member for West York (Mr. Campbell) made great promises during the election campaign. I had the honour of listening to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) on the hustings.

Mr. COWAN. They say you elected him in West York.

Mr. BLAIN. If I did you ought not complain. I have no quarrel with the electors of West York for what they have done, but I would remind the hon. member and his friends, that there is another time coming soon. The hon. member (Mr. Campbell) went up and down the county specially pleading from every platform, that he had come to this government as a delegate to lay the case of the market gardeners of Canada before the government, and he promised these 2,500 people, many of whom are market gardeners of West York, that if they helped to elect him he would stand up in parliament to advocate an increase of duties on their products. Well, the electors of West York have long memories, and when the proper time comes they will not forget the strange manner in which their representative failed to redeem his promise to-day. What does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) say ? He tells us that this wicked member from Laval stood in the way of his purpose, because he put a resolution on the Order paper which prevented the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) from advocating in this House what he promised the people he would advocate. Does any one suppose that the electors of West York will be deceived by such a plea as that ? Do you think they will take any stock in an excuse of that kind, coming as it does from a member who is so well versed by experience in parliamentary procedure. Do you think they will accept that explanation from the hon. gentleman who promised from every platform in the county that he would support just such a motion as this, and whose promise was published in the 'Globe' newspaper, and endorsed by his friends in that campaign. These gentlemen went from one end of the county to the other urging the electors to support the hon. gentleman (Mr. Campbell) on the ground that he could get very much more from the government than could a member who sat in opposition. But, mark the contrast to-day between the conduct of the hon. gentleman who represents Laval (Mr. Leonard) and the conduct of the hon. gentleman who represents West York (Mr. Campbell). We see the Conservative member for Laval standing on the floor of this House to advocate a higher protection in the interest of the farmers and market gardeners of Canada, and we see the Liberal member for West York combatting that principle, although he made solemn promises to his electors that he would take a different course. Mark the member on the Conservative side of the House redeeming his promise to his electors, and mark the conduct of the member for West York who also made these binding promises to his constituents, and who at the very first opportunity calls on the House to vote down the resolution of the hon. member for Laval because he says forsooth that it is inopportune. He declares : Wait until you see us nxet year ; and see what we will do for the market gardeners then.

For myself, Sir, I am strongly in favour of this resolution. I believe it is the duty of this government to so alter the tariff that the market gardeners and the farmers of this Dominion may have a profitable return from the results of their labour. I am glad, Sir, that the principle set forth in this resolution suits every part of the Dominion. I was delighted to find representatives from the great province of Quebec advocating in this matter exactly what is required by the farmers and market gardeners of the great province of Ontario. In every province in this Dominion, from the far east to the far west, we find that the people are in accord with the resolution moved by the hon. member (Mr. Leonard). I trust that every hon. gentleman on either side of the House, especially those who represent the farming districts, will give their support to this resolution. I trust that on this important question they will take one part of the advice of the member for West York and let politics go. I trust the government will see their way clear to so arrange the tariff that we will not allow one dollar's worth of these products to come in from the United States. I say that, not in any spirit of retaliation, because I do not believe in retaliation ; but I do believe that the adoption of the principle of this resolution is a sound policy for Canada and is a policy in the best interests of our own people.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I do not rise for the purpose of engaging in the general discussion, but merely to repeat, if it be necessary, what was stated early in this session ; that the view of the government—I say this particularly in answer to my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) who is anxious there should be a definite statement on this question—the view of the government is that no tariff changes of this character shall be made during this present session. I thought that understanding was clear and distinct enough to have removed it from any possibility of doubt. But, if it is necessary to repeat that statement I say now : That it is not the policy of this government to make any tariff changes this session other than those trifling ones as to which notice has already been given. As to what may happen at a future stage, it will be time enough to consider when we reach that stage. There is one thing however I would remind my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) of, and that is, that in this particular matter we happen to have precisely the same rate of duty that we had under the so called national policy. Sometimes hon. gentlemen opposite like to allege that our present tariff is simply the national policy over again, although at other times they tell a different story. But whatever may be said as to the tariff generally, there is no room to doubt that on this particular class of goods the duties are as they were under the national policy. Where the duties were not excessive it was not deemed wise to reduce them, and the duty on this class of goods was 25 per cent. It was not thought to be a very excessive duty, and it was not deemed necessary to reduce it. That does not necessarily prove that it was a good duty, of course ; but it does prove that so far as that item is concerned there is nothing to complain of as between the two political parties ; it happens to be one on which both agree. However, I only rose to say that the policy of the government is not to make any change in the duties this session, and that being the case, I move that the debate be now adjourned.

House divided on motion for adjournment of debate.

COLONIAL APPEALS TO THE IMPERIAL PRIVY COUNCIL.

Mr. R. LEMIEUX (Gaspé) (translation) asked for :

Copies of the correspondence exchanged between the Imperial authorities and the Canadian government, in reference to the colonial conference respecting colonial appeals to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. Speaker, the motion which I have the honour to submit to the consideration of this House requires very little explanation. I shall therefore confine myself to offering a few brief remarks called for by the importance of the matter. I am asking for copies of the correspondence exchanged between the imperial authorities and the government of Canada, in connection with the colonial conference, which was called together and sat in London, last summer, in order to modify the composition of the judicial committee of the Privy Council. I think it is desirable that this official correspondence should be brought down, so that there may be no missing link in the chain of evidence as to such attempts as have been made in high places to impose upon us imperialism under one of its forms. That is a chapter that will later on make interesting reading in the history of this country. Of course, that pet scheme of the Colonial Secretary could not fail to arouse the attention of the members of the legal profession, in the province of Quebec and elsewhere. I may say here and now, that the course of action of the present government, under the circumstances, was one that ought to commend itself to the approbation of the people of this country. It is only fair to state that the reply sent by the federal government to the invitation extended to them by Mr. Chamberlain embodied a flat refusal on their part to endorse the pet scheme of the Colonial Secretary.

Allow me, Sir, to read an extract from the Order in Council recommending that the hon. David Mills be deputed to attend the colonial conference in London :

The committee of the Privy Council have had under consideration a despatch hereto annexed, dated the 15th February, 1901, from the Right Honourable Mr. Chamberlain, Secretary of State for the Colonies, referring to a contemplated measure 'to provide for strengthening the representation of the self-governing colonies on the Judical Committee of the Privy Council by the creation of four additional law Lords with seats in the House of Lords as well as on the Judicial Committee,' and requesting the appointment by Your Excellency's government of a delegate qualified by his legal knowledge to represent it at a proposed conference with the Lord Chancellor and the Law Officers of the Crown, having for its object the solution of a question vitally affecting the common interest of the empire.

The committee recommend that Your Excellency's government do co-operate with His Majesty's government by deputing the Honourable David Mills, the Minister of Justice, to attend such conference, and represent Your Excellency's government thereat.

The committee would at the same time observe that Your Excellency's government is not dissatisfied with the manner in which the board of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is at present constituted, and is now advised that they do not see any advantage to be gained by the creation of four additional law Lords, to be chosen from the self-governing colonies with seats in the House of Lords as well as on the Judicial Committee.

As will be seen from the above, Sir, it was on good grounds that I stated that the reply sent by the present government, embodied a flat refusal to acquiesce in the contemplated measure, and the government deserve great credit for having taken such a decided stand on that question, and one which tallies with the feelings of the people of this country.

Now, when taking such a stand in their dealings with the imperial authorities, have they not given their traducers a most unequivocal answer ? Moreover, the appointment of the hon. Mr. Mills was a guarantee that the constitution of the country was not to be interfered with. The former Minister of Justice is a thorough Canadian, in the truest acceptation of the word, and we knew that he would vigorously oppose any scheme affecting the relations of Canada with the empire. As upon many other occasions, so upon this occasion, this great experience coupled with his thorough knowledge of the constitutional law did prove of the greatest value and assistance to this country ; and Canadians owe him a debt of gratitude, for the efficient manner in which he has discharged his duties.

Moreover, from that pet scheme of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, no advantage was likely to accrue to Canada in her relations with the empire. No advantage is to be gained by the contemplated change in the composition of the judicial committee of the Privy Council and by the creation of additional judges to be chosen from the ranks of judges or lawyers in the self-governing colonies. And no wonder that this imperialistic scheme was denounced by the most eminent members of the Canadian bar. I happen to have before me clippings from newspapers containing the views expressed by members of the legal profession in the province of Quebec, by English-speaking and French-speaking lawyers as well. Let me quote from a letter published in the Montreal 'Gazette' of the 10th July last, in which the writer, who is an English lawyer of Montreal, adduces overwhelming evidence, in my opinion, against the contentions of those who support Mr. Chamberlain's scheme :

> Admitting then, that the Privy Council is, and has been, quite satisfactory and free from this reproach, the only grounds in favour of the proposal which have been urged are :
> First—That the creation of an imperial court, on which permanent representatives from the colonies and India would sit, in London, would have the effect of stimulating the imperial political idea and of emphasizing and crystallizing the unity of the British empire ;
>
> Second—That the local knowledge of judges from different quarters of the empire would be of assistance to the Judicial Committee, in arriving at proper conclusions.
>
> With reference to the first point, the very reverse would seem to me to be the case.
>
> Apart from the hopelessness of using the composition of a court of justice as a warming-pan for imperialism, it seems to me there is great danger of imperilling the very object which it is designed to promote.
> If, for instance, Australians objected to having their cases decided by a board of judges from South Africa, India, Canada, Hong Kong, Ceylon and Newfoundland, or if Canadians were similarly dissatisfied because of the British members of the court were outnumbered by the other colonial dignitaries, of whom they had little acquaintance, and in whom they had, naturally, little or no confidence, the result would be that, in a short time, the court would lose its prestige, and would be avoided by suitors.
> In the long run, the value of the court must depend upon confidence which suitors have in its members and in their decisions, and if there are no appeals to the Privy Council, the court itself will become valueless, and the idea it was intended to embody, namely, imperial unity, receive a decided blow. I believe such would be the result.

And further he goes on to say :

> Another question which arises is the following :
>
> Of what value would the judgment of Canadian lawyers be upon Indian appeals, where the customs, laws and procedure are completely foreign to anything that we have ever known ?
> Undoubtedly a position on the Judicial Committee is one to which Canadians ought not to be forbidden to aspire ; but if in the future we produce jurists of sufficient eminence to warrant their being selected for that honour, there is nothing to prevent His Majesty from creating such persons members of his Privy Council.
> It is the permanent appointment of colonial judges that is objectionable, and I venture to say that the opinion of nine-tenths of the profession in Canada is that such appointments would weaken and seriously damage the court, which, on all hands, is now regarded as satisfactory.
> The attendance of colonial judges occasionally, in the last two or three years, has not, in my opinion, tended to increase the efficiency of the court.

The PRIME MINISTER (The Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). (Translation). Would the hon. gentleman give us the name of the lawyer who signed that letter ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. (Translation). The writer is Mr. R. D. McGibbon. In addition to the above, I could give the views expressed by the hon. Mr. Béique, by the hon. member from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) and by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) and many others as well. As a matter of fact, that scheme was endorsed by but an insignificant minority of the Bar.

As I said before, the changes suggested by Mr. Chamberlain in the composition of the judicial committee of the Privy Council are utterly at variance with the views of the people of this country, and I daresay that, had Canada acquiesced in the contemplated measure, she would take a step back to past ages. The pact which binds us to the mother country ought to be scrupulously respected and adhered to by both parties, and I may say that when the government declined to co-operate with Mr. Chamberlain and to approve of his scheme, they did the right thing and their action, I daresay, will be endorsed by all those who believe in the future of this country of ours.

When I am on my feet, Sir, allow me to say further in connection with this matter of the Privy Council, that the right of appeal ought to be restricted, rather than enlarged. I think we, in Canada, ought to take a leaf from the history of Australia, as to those appeals to the Privy Council. In the Commonwealth of Australia, as we all know, no appeals to the Privy Council are allowed except in constitutional matters. It is a matter of public notoriety that in Canada, our appeals are the ruination of poor litigants. None but powerful corporations can avail themselves of the right of appeal by going from the lower courts to the courts of last resort, as is generally the case, when they go to law against private individuals in reduced circumstances. Last year, Sir, Alexander Lacoste, chief justice of the province of Quebec, speaking at the annual banquet of the Montreal Bar Association, did not hesitate to say that the number of appeals ought to be restricted. So far as the Privy Council is concerned, we are told that it is the inherent right of every British subject to go to the foot of the Throne ; but it should be borne in mind that the Privy Council is by no manner of means the only tribunal of justice entrusted with the administration of justice, in the name of royalty. To hold the contrary doctrine would be an egregious mistake. Justice, Sir, no matter where it is administered, no matter before which tribunal it is appealed to, always is and under any circumstances, an emanation of sovereignty. Whether you appeal to the Court of Appeals, or whether you appeal to the Superior Court, the judges that sit on those tribunals do administer justice, in the name of the King, as truly and as efficiently as the Lords of the Privy Council do. And in so saying, I do not think I am saying anything in the least derogatory to the members of that high tribunal.

Before resuming my seat, I wish to say once more that the composition of the Privy Council should not be changed, but what is more desirable is that the right of appeal to that tribunal should be curtailed. I cannot help reminding the House of the disastrous effect of a judgment just rendered by that tribunal. I say without any hesitation that the judgment in the case of Roy vs. the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is an unqualified outrage against our civil code, and that our whole jurisprudence has been upset and replaced by English common law. Although the Privy Council, as a rule, has respected our constitution in those cases in which the provinces were opposing encroachments upon the rights of the Dominion government, and dispute the fact that we owe that tribunal a debt of gratitude on that score, it is none the less true that for many years to come, the remembrance of that judgment, which has provoked a debate in this House at an earlier stage of this session, will rankle in the breasts of the judiciary, of the Bar and of those who are amenable to the courts of justice in the province of Quebec.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I fully concur in the remarks just fallen from the lips of my hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux). In my opinion, the dividing line between the legislative power and the judiciary power is confused and involved enough, without there being any need of making it still more intricate. The legislative power and the judiciary power go hand in hand, and cannot exist one without the other. It cannot be held that the legislative power is supreme, when the judiciary power is not. From that co-relation between the legislative power and the judiciary power, we are enabled to form a correct estimate of the question submitted by the imperial authorities to the government of Canada. What the imperial authorities were aiming at, was judicial federation, and from judicial federation was bound to flow legislation federation. Therefore, it was a question of imperial federation which we cannot too strongly oppose.

I equally concur in the remarks fallen from my hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux), with regard to the jurisdiction of the Privy Council as to litigations between private individuals. Every time the judicial committee was called upon to render judgment upon the construction to be put on the British North American Act of 1867, or in cases relating to merchant shipping, the decisions were always received with the greatest respect, but why so ? Because it was then acting within its own sphere of action. But whenever the Privy Council was called upon to give a decision on litigation between private individuals, as to certain points of law, such, for instance, as that of party wall, public opinion has always questioned the soundness of the views of the law Lords, on the ground that such a question was not one of the subjects that they could properly deal with and decide.

As to the question of appeals to the Privy Council, my views coincide with the views of Bentham. That celebrated jurist, replying to this question : 'In which cases is an appeal allowable ?' Answers without any hesitation that never should it be allowed. Why appeals should not be allowed is easily understood. Justice like men, is liable to error, even in clear cases. As to doubtful cases, it is in the interest of the litigants that they should be settled with as little delay as possible.

I hope the government will not recede from the position they have taken and that they will avail themselves of such opportunities as may offer to secure changes in the composition of the judiciary committee of the Privy Council.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Hon. Mr. Carroll)—(Translation). There can be no objection to the paper asked for by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux), being brought down, and I would not have risen to take part in this debate, but for certain remarks fallen from the lips of the hon. gentleman. There is a prevailing feeling in the province of Quebec, that the judgment rendered by the Privy Council in the case of Roy vs. the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, strikes at the very root of the Civil Code of the province.

I am quite free to say that as a matter of fact, the jurisprudence that had obtained so far under the civil code of the province has been changed by that judgment. But I also hold that the Privy Council did not override the law, and to prove my contention, it will suffice to quote from the very judgment of the Privy Council :—

The argument appears to be founded on the suggestion that Quebec has a civil law of its own and that in that province all corporations like all other persons are responsible for causing damage to their neighbours by a fault that is to say, any objectionable wrong whether imprudence or want of skill, and another article of the code provides that civil corporations constituting by the fact of their incorporation, ideal or artificial persons are as such governed by the laws affecting individuals saving the privileges they enjoy and the disabilities they are subjected to.

If the immunity claimed for the appellants were simply claimed upon the ground that they were a corporation without reference to what they are authorized to do in that capacity, the argument would be well founded, but the fallacy of the suggestion lies in supposing that that immunity is claimed because they are a corporation. If it were so there would be no difference between the law of England and the law as so expounded in the province of Quebec, but the ground upon which the immunity of a railway company for injury caused by the normal use of their line is based is that the legislature which is supreme has authorized the particular thing so done in the place and by the means contemplated by the legislature, and that cannot constitute an actionable wrong in England any more than it can constitute a fault by the Quebec Code. The principle has been lucidly expounded by Lord Hatherley in the case of Geddis vs Proprietors of Bann Reservoir, L.R. Appeal Cases, Vol., 3, page 433, thus :

And further :—

Much was argued by the learned counsel for the respondent as to the peculiar jurisprudence of Quebec, but in truth there is no such difference between the law of England and the law of Quebec in this respect as he seemd to suppose. The law of England equally with the law of the province in question affirms the axiom : Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedes, but the previous state of the law whether in Quebec or France or England cannot render inoperative the positive enactment of a statute and the whole case turns not upon what was the common law of either country but what is the true construction of plain words authorizing the doing of the very thing complained of.

The legislature is supreme and if it has enacted that a thing is lawful such a thing cannot be a fault or an actionable wrong. The thing to be done is a privilege as well as a right and duty and it seems to their Lordships it comes within the expressed language of the Code (Art. 356.)

As will be seen from the above, the Privy Council holds that the doing by a company of the thing it is authorized to do in the place and by the means contemplated by the legislature, cannot constitute an actionable wrong, according to the construction put upon sections 1053 and 386 of the Civil Code. Such is the decision of the Privy Council and it cannot be said that the law Lords have wrongly interpreted those articles.

We are told that the Privy Council has set aside the law of the province of Quebec. I think there is a mistaken notion prevailing in that respect, in the province of Quebec, which requires to be corrected.

It must be borne in mind that our jurisprudence originates from the French law. A statute was passed under Louis Philippe in 1845, under which proprietors were forbidden to put up any building within sixty feet from the railway line. Under that statute, the responsibility of railway companies has been restricted. Of course, our jurisprudence was overridden by the Privy Council, but I hold that the principles of our civil law have not been set aside by the Privy Council, to adopt the English common law.

As to the question of appeals, I may say that I was rather taken by surprise, and that I am not ready to discuss it now. But I should like my hon. friend to tell me one thing : If the right of appeal were done away with, does he think that those who are amenable to the tribunals would be satisfied with such a state of things ? Certainly not, and I do not think my hon. friend will gainsay it. If you look around you, and take a survey of what is transpiring and what is being said, you cannot fail to come to the conclusion that under the conditions which prevail in the community, the right of appeal is still of great value and assistance and that it is better not to do away with it now.

Motion agreed to.

THE TRANSPORTATION PROBLEM.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan) moved for :

Return showing the amount of money spent on the St. Lawrence river from Montreal to Quebec, with the object of making Montreal a National port.

He said: The subject brought up in this motion is one that has been discussed in this House at great length on several former occasions. The transportation problem, is, in my opinion, the greatest we have before us to-day. It is the great national problem of this country, and will have to be dealt with in the near future, if we are ever to attain the position to which our natural resources and position entitle us. I have no desire to discuss the question from the standpoint of a province or a territory, but from a national standpoint and on broad lines. Regarding the amount of money spent, for the details of which I am now moving, on the route between Montreal and Quebec, I may say, from what I have been able to gather—and I have given the matter a great deal of study—it appears to me that Montreal is not likely to ever become the great national port of this country.

An hon. MEMBER. How do you know?

Mr. DAVIS. Because there is not sufficient water in the channel between those two cities to float the class of ships now being built. Another reason that it can be used only during five or six months in the year, and hon. members who are acquainted with the growth and development of the west, must know that it is impossible for us to depend on a port which can only be kept open during that period.

We had a great deal of discussion the other day about the Intercolonial Railway, and I wish to begin my remarks with a consideration of the role which that road may be made to play in working out the transportation problem. According to the figures in the blue-book, it has not been financially a paying concern, but in order to ascertain its real value as an asset, we must not confine ourselves to one point of view. The question to my mind is this: Does it pay the people? Is it a great advantage to the people of the lower provinces? The matter of a deficit of a few hundred thousand dallars here or there does not amount to very much provided the people of that end of the country are being benefited, provided that railway gives them cheap rates and transportation. Another feature we must not lose sight of is the fact that the Intercolonial Railway belongs to the people. True, it has cost us somethink like $60,000,000, but we own the road, and I believe that the time will come when it will be a valuable asset. I believe that it will become in the near future the starting point of a great national railway. It has occurred to me that if the government were to extend the Intercolonial Railway over some of the proposed lines we see outlined on the map, across through the province of Quebec by James Bay, and extend it out to Port Simpson on the Pacific coast, we would then have the shortest transcontinental route on this continent, and one which would belong to the people. True, we have paid something like $60,000,000 for the road, but we have likewise paid something like $234,000,000 in money and lands to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which we do not own, over which we have no control, and the road-bed and equipment of which are exempt from taxation for all time to come. So that, comparing the cost of the two and bearing in mind the fact that we own the Intercolonial Railway, the expenditure on that road, no matter what people may say, may be considered a good investment for the country. Looking over the report of the Canadian Pacific Railway, I find that they have still on hand 16,000,000 acres of land out of the grant given them on their main line and branches. Estimating that at $4 an acre, at which price they could sell it at once and get their money, that amounts to something like $64,000,000 that we have given them. Then, take the town sites which they own in Vancouver and other places, and which they have also received as free gifts, their value would amount to something like $20,000,000 more. And besides there is the cash bonuses and other moneys paid them, amounting to something like $35,000,000. To all this we must add a certain mileage of completed road, handed over to that company, worth $65,000,000. Then take the lands which they have sold and of which they have realized a sum of about $48,000,000. Adding all these together you will find that in all we have paid out $232,000,000 of our wealth for the building of that road, and we do not own one mile of it. And yet some hon. gentlemen will still carp because we have put $60,000,000 into the Intercolonial Railway, which we own ourselves and which will become a valuable asset later on. I believe that the government made a mistake in not having bought the control of the Canada Atlantic some time ago. The Intercolonial Railway should have been extended from Montreal to Depot Harbour, on the great lakes, so as to give an outlet by the government road from the great lakes to the seaboard. I believe also that we should continue the Intercolonial Railway through the province of Quebec, direct from the city of Quebec, the whole way to the Pacific coast, and we would then have a through rail route to the heart of the North-west Territories, and touching an ocean port at both sides of the continent, one open the year round, and the other of which could be kept open from nine to ten months in the year, or go further down to an ocean port that could be kept open the entire year. You could then have a system of transportation over which you could carry the products of the west to the sea, and which could be open every month in the year. That would be a main artery, under the exclusive control of the people of this country. The 10 per cent clause then in the Canadian Pacific Railway agreement would evaporate into thin air. It would melt away like snow in the spring, because if you had a competing road owned by the government, the Canadian Pacific Railway, in order to hold their share of the trade, would have to reduce their freight rates to such an extent that the 10 per cent clause would be utterly ineffective. The government could then grant charters to any company to build branches to its main line as feeders of that road. These branches would be good paying institutions, and by this means the people of the west would be able to market their produce twelve months in the year.

I wish now to deal with the port of Montreal. With the modern progress we are making, with the enlarged vessels we are building, it will be found impossible to utilize that port as a national port. It will be impossible to get the larger ships into it, and we will find that we have spent a lot of money on it which might have been much better spent elsewhere. Montreal will always be a port of some importance, but not a great national port. The government should decide at once on some port as the national port of this country, and the government railways and its branches should touch that port. Then we should proceed to erect facilities there for handling the produce of the west and avoid the delays now experienced at Montreal and the head of Lake Superior. I have heard this question discussed in this House on other occasions, but I am sorry to say that nearly every one who has given his views on the question has had a port of his own to advocate. But we cannot all have ocean ports or lake ports at our own doors, and we ought to look at this matter from a national standpoint, with a sole eye to the development of the whole country from one end to the other. Unfortunately the larger part of the agricultural lands are situated about 2,000 miles away from the Atlantic seaboard, and the great problem we have to solve is, how we are going to get the produce of the prairies to an ocean port as cheaply as the produce of the western states is carried to the American sea coast, and thus give our people a chance of earning fair remuneration for their labour. From my standpoint, what we require is a through road from Quebec right through to the heart of the territories and thence on to the Pacific coast.

Now, as I have said before in this House, we have only 400,000 people on those plains, and last year, these people produced over 100,000,000 bushels of grain and also an enormous quantity of cattle, dairy products and other commodities. And I venture to say that if you were to put a fair valuation on that grain and those cattle and dairy products, and divide the total by the number of people in Manitoba and the North-west, you would get a result showing an average of production higher than that of any state in the Union or any province in this Dominion. The total value of these products represents an enormous sum of money. That money is not spent in the west, but comes down here to be spent in commodities that are needed for consumption by the people there. It is time that the business men of these older provinces, particularly those of the large cities and great manufacturing centres, should wake up to the fact that there is a long stretch of rocky land between North Bay and the head of Lake Superior, and that if we do not get better communication with the west than we have at the present time, that is, if we do not get better freight rates on our products from the North-west, the people that are now going into that country, at something like sixty or seventy thousand a year—and I believe it will be one hundred thousand this year—most of them coming from the United States, and not being accustomed to labour under these disadvantages of high freight rates on their freight products, will be sure to turn their eyes to the United States for an outlet for their products and a place for purchasing goods of all kinds. Now, this country east and west should stand together. The interests of the east, generally speaking, are those of manufacturing, while ours are almost entirely agricultural. Both interests should work together trying to solve this problem, that the trade of the North-west may be kept for this country.

Now, what position have the people of the North-west been in this year? We have already discussed in this House the shortage of cars and the grain blockade, and I think hon. members are seized of the facts in connection with those matters. Last year we did not have half enough rolling stock to move the crop that was grown in the North-west. The consequence was that the farmers lost something like six cents a bushel on a large portion of their crop. And I will explain why. The grain buyers in the west in ordinary seasons begin about the middle of November to pay less for wheat than in the early part of the season, because they must count upon it being stored at the head of the lakes during winter, on account of the closing of navigation. Last year they knew that the grain could not be moved before the close of navigation, and so they started early in October to buy on the basis of winter storage at the head of the lakes. If a farmer happened to get a car, load it and send it down to the head of Lake Superior in time for export, he was paid on the basis of six cents a bushel higher than the dealer was giving him. The farmer, therefore, naturally came to the conclusion that the dealers were robbing him to that extent. But I suppose that the dealer was hardly to blame, for he was merely protecting himself against the danger of not being able to get the grain out that season. That having been the position of affairs last year, I submit that it is pretty nearly time that something should be done to remedy the evil. Next year, we are to have the Canada Northern Railway Company, and that will be an assistance, but we can hardly expect that it will remedy the difficulty. We have not sufficient elevator accommodation at the head of the lakes. The Canadian Pacific can store there about 5,000,000 bushels. But that can be filled up in about a week and then there is congestion. I do not know what the Canada Northern will provide, but I feel certain that it will not be sufficient to meet the requirements. Next year, should we have a large crop, with the larger acreage sown and with part of last year's crop still in the country, there will be a still worse state of affairs than there was last season. The government should take this subject into consideration, and take means to provide railways for the transport of the produce of that country. We are bringing people in there at the rate of from 60,000 to 100,000 a year. These people, as I have said, are coming from places where they have had low freight rates and can get all that their stuff is worth. We are inducing them to go in where there is no railway communication on the promise that railways will be built. And I may say here that those people are not going to stay for twenty years without railway accommodation as some of the earlier settlers have done. If we do not do something soon to provide railways, you will find those people going out of the country just as quickly as they are coming in now. We are spending a great deal of money to bring those people in, and it is to the interest of the whole Dominion that they should be induced to stay. But if we do not do something to give them railway facilities, you will have a large stream of them going out. There is a marked difference between the policy of the United States in opening up their new country and the policy of this Dominion. The territory opened by the United States was not nearly so good as ours—there was no comparison between their lands and the lands we have in the North-west Territories, for we have not only a fertile soil, but we have timber and many other things that they had not. Still, they managed to fill up their country, and they did it by building railways and then asking the people to come in and settle. But we have adopted the policy of asking the people to come in and of building the railways afterwards. Many people went in twenty years ago expecting that railways would be built out to them, and the railways are not there yet. This I say is the problem the government has to deal with.

I have already said that we have laboured under very heavy freight rates in the west. If we are to have the people prosperous and contented we must afford them the means of taking their produce out of the country as cheaply as it could be done on the other side of the line. But what is the present state of affairs ? We have one line of railway running from Lake Winnipeg to Lake Superior, the Canadian Pacific Railway. That was built in the early days and the freight rates upon it are under the 10 per cent clause, so that we have very little control over them. The Canadian Pacific Railway people charge 8 5-10 cents per bushel to carry our wheat 448 miles. I do not believe in dealing to any large extent in figures in addressing the House, but I have a few figures here that, I think, are very instructive. I find that wheat is carried from Chicago to New York via Buffalo for 4½ cents per bushel. Wheat is taken from Chicago to Montreal over the Canada Atlantic Railway, a distance of 904 miles for 4½ cents a bushel against 8 5-10 cents in the North-west for hauling it 448 miles. That state of affairs simply cannot continue. When we get in a large population—and we are going to have a large population in the near future—as the Yankees say, 'something is going to drop.' The people are not going to pay rates of that kind very much longer. We are told that our system of canals will relieve the situation. We have spent very large sums of money on our canals. But it seems to me they have outlived their usefulness. I have already made that statement in this House, and I make it again. To depend for the removal of our immense crop on canals that are frozen up for six months in the year is quite out of the question. It will not be many years before we shall be producing four hundred million bushels of grain. After it is stored in elevators along the road, the charges for insurance and interest on the money mean 6 cents a bushel and I say that 6 cents a bushel on that amount of grain would pay the interest on the bonds that built the railways that would take that grain out the whole twelve months of the year, or pretty near. We have got to have some system for taking it out. We have spent a lot of money on canals, and I find from a report that I have here that the trade in the canals is decreasing. I see there is $22,536.12 of a decrease in the revenue from the canals last year. Now with all that money spent on the canals, we ought to do better than that. But the trouble is that the railroad traffic is making such strides that the canals will soon be a thing of the past. The statement has been made in this House that the canals are a sort of safety valve against high rates, that they serve to regulate freight rates on the railways. After we have given $240,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway, when we have subsidized hundreds of other railways in this country with vast sums of money and public land, it seems to me it would be a mournful thing if we have got to spend another hundred millions on canals for the purpose of regulating the railways. I think the people of this country should be in a position to regulate the railways without spending any more money on canals. The canals will always be serviceable for local traffic. Here you have canals in Ontario, and I suppose you have some in the province of Quebec, and these canals will be very serviceable for local traffic running up and down. But to talk about taking the produce of the west down through the canals which are frozen six months in the year, is simply ridiculous. They have another project now on hand; some one is promoting the Georgian Bay canal which is estimated to cost something like $90,000,000. When you get that canal built you will find that it will be practically useless, for you will find that the railway people have made such strides that they will be able to carry the produce of the west so much cheaper and so much quicker, and that they will be able to take goods from the east up to the west so much quicker and cheaper, that there will be no use for the canal. It is a serious thing to spend $90,000,000 on another canal. I have heard about another scheme for building a canal down the French river. It would be better to leave that money in the Dominion treasury than to throw it away on canals at the present time.

Some people talk of another scheme which might not be a bad one. I have never advocated the government ownership of railways, because people tell you that the Intercolonial Railway cannot be managed properly on account of it being a political road. Well, if we had all the railroads in this country managed by a political head, I do not know that we should be much better off. But I think the means of transportation might well be put under a commission the same as any other business, and they could be run without the element of politics entering into the management. I want to say that the time may come before long when the people of this country will be obliged to acquire all these railroads in self-defence. Judging from what we see in the papers, great trusts and combinations are being formed to acquire control of our railroads, and how do we know that in the course of ten years, perhaps five years, some of those immense trusts may come in and buy up all the stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway and other railroads and amalgamate them so that we would have only one road. Therefore, I say the time may come when we shall be obliged in our own defence to acquire these roads and run them as government roads. Now, when we are building any more roads, it would not be a bad idea, if we have to grant subsidies to them, to have some kind of an agreement that in case of the government taking over the roads, that amount would be deducted from the purchase price of the road. We would know then that if we ever had to take over those roads we would get our money back. Up to the present time all the money and land we have given are gone, we can get no return from them. We do not even get decent freight rates. That is a proposition for the government to consider, that in future, in giving subsidies, they might make a condition that if such time ever came when we took over the roads, we should deduct the subsidy from the price we paid for them.

I consider this is a vital question to the people of the west, and that is one of the reasons that I have brought it forward at the present time. I felt it would not be right for us to go home from this session without trying to impress upon the government the necessity of speedy action, of building or assisting to build more roads in that western country, to provide better facilities for getting our stuff out to the lakes. I see that the Canadian Pacific Railway people intend to issue more stock, and it has been provided that a certain amount of that money shall be spent in purchasing rolling stock. That is a step in the right direction, because there is not enough rolling stock at present. They had last year something like 7,000 box cars for the purpose of moving grain. They used 4,000 of those cars for taking goods from the east to the west, and only 3,000 for the purpose of moving out the wheat. That proves that the money we received from the produce we sold from that country comes down here and is turned into manufactured goods which are sent back to the west. Probably more value is sent back west than is sent east, because, while they only use 3,000 cars for bringing out our wheat, they use 4,000 cars for carrying the merchandise back into that country that is bought with the money we realize for our wheat.

We have had another grievance this last year, and that is one which I hope a railroad commission, when it is appointed, will remedy. We have not been treated very well in the kind of cars the Canadian Pacific Railway gives us. I speak from knowledge, because I have been shipping grain this year myself, and I know that a lot of the cars that were used were in such condition that they were not fit to haul grain at all. There was hardly a car that I sent out on which I did not have to spend $1.50 or $2 in repairs before it would hold the grain. Now that is a matter the railroad commission would be able to deal with. I don't think it is fair that we should be treated so. I am paying high freight rates, and when they furnish cars they should be in a condition to hold the grain we put into them; if not, the company itself should be compelled to repair the cars at the point where the grain is loaded into them. The railroad commission might also remedy a lot of other things, although the Minister of Railways and Canals does not seem to think it would be as beneficial to us as some of us anticipate. I don't expect a railroad commission is going to cut the freight rates down so low that we are going to get our stuff out or in for nothing, but I do expect that a railroad commission will see that the people in the western country are treated as well as the people in the eastern country. I have pointed out before in this House that as soon as we get west of Lake Superior we pay just double what you pay east of Lake Superior. Take the tariffs of the great railroads, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, and you will see that we are paying in local rates and in through rates just double what the people in the east are paying. The 10 per cent in the original charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway does not extend to branch lines, and there at least the government have control over that company, and that control should be exercised in such a manner that the people got fair and decent treatment on those lines.

When we have paid for these roads and made a present of them to the railway companies I hold that we should get fair and reasonable freight rates, because that is what we expect. We expect that a railway commission will deal with that phase of the question and that they will take up and go into this question of discrimination and see that we are not paying any more for the transportation of our grain, our animals and our other produce than any other persons are called upon to pay. Why should we pay more for the transportation of our produce than the people down here are called upon to pay ? I do not see why we should be called upon to pay more, because it is a well known fact that we furnish a greatest portion of the freight traffic that the Canadian Pacific Railway have and they cannot say that it is on account of us not furnishing them with trade. We are paying double what we should pay for hauling our products and this is a question that a railway commission should be called upon to regulate.

Mr. MONK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I do not wish in any way to prevent the hon. member (Mr. Davis) from arguing his motion, but it seems to me that he is going beyond his motion. As this is the last day for motions I venture to raise that point. My hon. friend's motion is for :

Return showing the amount of money spent on the St. Lawrence River from Montreal to Quebec, with the object of making Montreal a national port.

The hon. gentleman has no right, upon that motion, to discuss freight rates of railways in the west.

Mr. DAVIS. I think that under this resolution, which is a resolution dealing with the transportation problem, I should be permitted to discuss these questions. I have been speaking of railways in the west right along. I have been alluding to the fact that the harbour of Montreal will never make a national harbour. I have been alluding to the fact that there has been a lot of money spent on that harbour and on the canals. I do not think that I have been outside of the question before the House. However, I will submit to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would caution hon. members. I would ask those who are discussing these matters to keep as near to the resolution as possible. I would say that there is a great deal of time lost in this House by wandering too far afield, and therefore I ask hon. members to discuss the question that is before them as closely as they can.

Mr. DAVIS. My hon. friend the leader pro tem of the opposition (Mr. Monk), I see, does not care to hear about the grievances of the people of the west. I have no doubt they do not interest him to the same extent that they interest myself and other hon. gentlemen in this House.

Mr. MONK. I do not think my hon. friend has a right to say that.

Mr. DAVIS. And if he takes exception to that I think it is well the western farmers should know it.

Mr. MONK. I take a great interest in these grievances but they have a place in the discussions of this House.

Mr. DAVIS. I think their place is here and now and whenever we can get an opportunity of speaking of them. I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman for keeping me closely to the question as he thinks I have been wandering far afield. I was going to mention, in connection with this phase of the question, the large amount of money that has been spent on the harbour of Montreal and the large amount of money that has been spent in deepening the channel between Montreal and Quebec for the purpose of allowing larger ships to come up, and I suppose that as the harbour of Quebec is connected with this part of the resolution, my hon. friend will not object if I proceed to discuss it. Therefore, I intend to say a few words in connection with the harbour of Quebec. I had the pleasure of visiting the city of Quebec something like a year ago and it appeared to me from what I saw that the harbour of Quebec is a much superior harbour to that of Montreal for the reasons that there is a greater depth of water, that it is closer to the ocean, that the tide keeps the ice from freezing to any great extent, so that, with proper facilities for ice breaking, it should be possible to keep the harbour of Quebec open for ten months in the year. If we could not do that you could easily go a little farther down and get a harbour which would be kept open for ten months in the year. The great and important need in the west is of some means, railroad, or railroads, that will take our produce out of the country during twelve months in the year, so that, as soon as navigation closes on the great lakes, we can run our stuff out by rail. We might just as well store our wheat at the head of Lake Superior as bring it down and store it at Montreal. We want to market our wheat at the proper time, so that we can get our money out of it and so that we can take advantage of a rise in the market when a rise takes place. At the present time, not only the farmers, but the grain buyers, are unable to get the grain out of the country and to take advantage of any rise in price. For instance, if grain went up in the fall 25 cents a bushel it would be of no advantage to the grain buyers, or the producers, because they could not get the grain out. They would have to sit and look at it and wait until the price went down again. We want facilities whereby we can send the grain out of the country during twelve months in the year. Now, there are three propositions before the country which it might be well to consider. As far as extending the Intercolonial Railway to the Pacific coast is concerned, I do not expect that my advice will be accepted in that respect. But, we have other schemes before the House. We have one scheme which has been submitted to the House and to which a charter has been granted—the Canadian Northern Railway. A charter has been granted to the promoters of this enterprise for the purpose of enabling them to continue the road through the centre of the territories and on to Port Simpson, with a branch running down through the Yellow Head pass. Then a charter has been granted to them under which they can extend their line through the territories and along near the edge of James' bay. It is a small matter to build a railway to James' bay and to a navigable port on that body of water. A great many people in the west believe that the Hudson's bay route is feasible and that some day in the near future it will be possible to send the produce of the west out in that way. If it should become an established fact that we can navigate Hudson's bay we will be able to utilize that railway, ship our produce over that branch to James' bay and send it out in that way. Then, in addition to these lines the charter provides for a branch to Port Arthur, another to Montreal, one to this city, and one to Quebec.

We have another scheme which involves a still shorter route—the trans-Canada railway, running from the city of Quebec straight to James' bay and right along the northern portion of the North-west Territories to Port Simpson on the Pacific coast. I desire to say a word or two in connection with this route. It has been said that this trans-Canada route is useless for the reason that, as it is said, while it is hundreds and hundreds of miles shorter than the Canadian Pacific Railway, the character of the country is such that there would be no local traffic and that you would have 2,500 miles of railway running from Quebec to Port Simpson on the Pacific coast without any local traffic whatever. I do not think that that statement is correct. I believe that the greater portion of the road running through the northern part of Quebec will pass through good agricultural lands. There are great resources in timber and minerals all through that portion of Quebec and when the road reaches the vicinity of James' bay it will pass through good farming land. I can tell hon. gentlemen that after the road passes the narrows of Lake Winnipeg and gets up into the northern country it will pass through just as good agricultural land as there is to be found in the province of Ontario. In the Peace river valley and all through the Smoky river region there will be found a magnificent farming country, and when that road is built and the country is by this means opened up there will be found room for millions of people, and the result will be that this will be the shortest and most direct trans-continental route on this continent. That is a question that the government might take up. Here, then, are three alternatives ; you could extend the Intercolonial Railway to the Pacific coast, and I would prefer that because it would be a government road. The money expended in the extension of that road will be well spent because it will belong to us, the existence of the road will be a safeguard against monopoly and excessive freight rates and against those large American syndicates coming in here and getting control of our railways. We will thus have a main artery owned and controlled by the government. Then, again, you have the Mackenzie & Mann proposition and then you have this trans-Canada railway. The government of Canada will have to take up one of these three schemes in the near future.

We want a policy that will develop that country. We are getting the people in now, but if we are going to retain them we must have some way of opening up the land for settlement and affording the producers a cheap means of getting their products to markets from the west. It is time that some definite scheme of transportation were inaugurated by the government. We should determine on what should be the national port, and we should spend money prudently on it, but we should not rashly decide on a port which in a few years hence we may discover will be of no use because it has not sufficient water. The government has a splendid opportunity now to open up the large tracts of land in the Saskatchewan and Assiniboia valleys as well as in other parts of that vast country. I have been told that it is the duty of the provinces to subsidize railways, but taking into consideration that 80,000,000 acres of our land were taken from us for the purpose of building railways, wisely or otherwise, it surely rests upon this federal government to do that work. At all events we have no province there now, and I do not think we will have one in the very near future.

If the government handles this question, and deals with it energetically they will find that they will have a hundred fold return in the increased population of the west, the increased consequent prosperity of the east; the increased value of Dominion lands, and the increased capital which will be invested in the country. Why, Sir, as I have already said, we have enough land out there to pay the whole national debt of Canada. This is a great national question. Some gentlemen may think that the members from the North-west take up too much time in discussing their affairs But if the Ontario members or the members from the lower provinces laboured under the difficulties we experienced last year in the matter of the transportation of our wheat, they would be sure to make a greater noise than we do. We are sent here to let the people of Canada and the government know the wants of the North-west, and so far as I am concerned I will not be silent on that question. If this question is dealt with intelligently now it will be only a few years until this country will increase in population as rapidly as the United States ever did, and then Canada will become to a far greater extent than to-day, the grandest colony in the British empire.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). There is of course no objection to bringing down the statement that my hon. friend (Mr. Davis) has asked for. I may tell him at once, however, that there has been no public money spent in the harbour of Montreal; not one single dollar. That statement will I suppose set at rest the mind of my hon. friend (Mr. Davis) who is so much down on us every session of this House. I repeat: There has not been a single dollar of public money spent in the port of Montreal. There is in Montreal a body politic called the harbour commissioners who have borrowed money on which they have faithfully paid every cent of interest that was due. As to the deepening and widening of the St. Lawrence between Quebec and Montreal there has been spent, in round numbers, $5,000,000 on that work—$3.000,000 before 1888 and about $2,000,000 since. This a very small amount of money after all compared to what we have spent for the North-west in the past. It has been expended on a distance of 55 miles of the St. Lawrence river. When the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal, about 30 years ago, undertook to deepen the St. Lawrence there were only about 11 feet of water in Lake St. Peter as compared with 27½ feet now. Within two years there will be over 30 feet of water between the sea and the city of Montreal at the lowest possible state of the water, which is in the months of October and November. During the other months there will of course be more water.

Mr. BELL. How much over 30 feet?

Mr. DAVIS.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the months of May, June, July and August, there will be between 33 feet and 35 feet; let us say 33 feet—in the month of the lowest water there will be at least 30 feet. Thanks to the generosity of parliament, I might add, thanks to the intelligence of parliament is represented by both sides of the House, my department is now completing the great undertaking of widening and deepening the St. Lawrence between not only Quebec and Montreal, but between Montreal and the Gulf to a depth of at least 30 feet, and to a width of 450 feet in the straight parts of the dredged channel and to 500 feet, 600 feet and even 800 feet in the curves. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) was good enough to pay us a visit to the St. Lawrence river below Montreal a few days ago for which I am very thankful indeed. Like a good business man he came down to see what is going on so that he may contribute his share to the national work. I do not think that it is necessary to be a prophet to say now, that when the supplementary estimates come down the country will be happy to see in them the amount necessary to buoy and light the St. Lawrence in a proper way from the Strait of Belle Isle to the city of Montreal. My hon. friend (Mr. Davis) has never spared us during the last five or six sessions. He has invited us to close our canals; he has invited us to be good enough not to deepen our waterways any further. I do not see what our friends of the North-west have to gain by asking the rest of the country to do everything for them and at the same time to deny us the right to do what we wish to do for the benefit of all Canada. I believe I give expression to the feelings on both sides of the House when I say that we have a great deal too much of that kind of talk here.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, I know I am expressing the feelings of both sides of the House in making this statement. What is the use of saying that the waterways are of no value to this country? My hon. friend (Mr. Davis) has not studied the question at all I am sorry to say. He has just stated a minute ago, that a bushel of grain can be taken from Chicago to New York for 4½ cents. Does he really mean that? Why, to-day the rate on grain from Buffalo to New York is 11 cents per 100 pounds. What does the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) mean in view of that fact?

Mr. DAVIS. I took it from the report of the Minister of Railways last year. Something may have happened in the meantime, but that is the average.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend (Mr. Davis) is speaking from a local standpoint only. Now, here are the facts. For some months in the year a bushel of grain can be taken from Chicago to New York for five or six cents; but those are only the summer months. My hon. friend ignores this fact altogether. The waterways are the only cause of cheap rates. The rates he has quoted are the Buffalo rates. A bushel of grain is loaded on a steamer at Duluth or Chicago or Milwaukee and taken to Buffalo for about one and a quarter cents, the same rate, I may say in passing, at which a bushel of grain is taken to our Canadian ports on the Georgian Bay. During the summer months, while the Erie canal is open that bushel of grain is taken from Buffalo to New York for about three cents. As soon as the waterways are closed up go the rates. My hon. friend wants us to have no more waterways. If we had only railways from one end of the country to the other we would simply have to close our shop. My hon. friend invites us to build another transcontinental railway without any delay whatever. Let us have no more waterways, he would say, and let the poor little village of Montreal be consigned to obscurity. We have in Montreal only a little population of about 400,000, about the same as that of the whole North-west combined. Last year the trade of Montreal represented only the very negligible quantity of $133,000,000. Let us shut the port of Montreal for the benefit of my hon. friend, and let us build another transcontinental railway without any delay. My hon. friend should not speak in that way. I can assure our hon. friends from the North-west that we entertain the best feelings towards them, but they must not ask us to give up everything. We won't do it; it is no use.

Mr. DAVIS. You don't now.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Our friends in the North-west have been treated in the most kind way. The Canadian Pacific Railway has been built with the money of Canada, and I make bold to say—and a railway commission will establish the fact—that the rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the North-west are lower than the rates of any of the American railways which parallel it. If my hon. friend inquires he will find that seventy per cent of the American farmers have built granaries for themselves at their own cost, while the Canadian farmers in the North-west do not build any granaries. Our farmers in Quebec do not ask us to build granaries for them, but they build their own granaries. Our friends in the North-west do not build granaries, but want every facility to be provided for them. The Canadian Pacific Railway was not able last year to accomodate them any more than the American railways were able to accommodate the western states. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Northern, which I am glad to say is about completed, will in a year or two be in a better condition. But when my hon. friend asks us to believe that if we build another railway for their benefit all their grain will be carried on railways he is not speaking by the book. There are about eight or ten weeks in the fall during which the crops are moved. How are they moved? They are moved to the ports on the great lakes. Our Canadian crops are moved to Fort William and Port Arthur, which are our natural ports on Lake Superior, and from there they are carried in Canadian and American bottoms to the seaboard. No railway can compete with waterways for such a long distance; it is out of the question. I am not adverse to giving to the North-west every possible accommodation, but our friends must not ask us, I say again, to give up everything for them. The port of Montreal is one of our national ports, as New York is one of the national ports of the United States of America. Quebec is also one of our national ports; Three Rivers will be one; St. John is one; Halifax is one. Sydney will also be a great port. At the very moment when my hon. friend is asking us not to do any more to deepen the St. Lawrence, our magnificient highway, the Grand Trunk Railway Company are asking us to give them the right and privilege of settling down in the port of Montreal. I had the pleasure of reading yesterday a statement that their able manager was asking us permission to build on the Windmill Basin a large elevator of 1,000,000 bushels capacity as the beginning and also a large warehouse. In other words the Grand Trunk Railway Company are prepared to spend a large amount of money, amounting to probably a million dollars, in that small inferior port of Montreal. What does this mean? It means that the Grand Trunk Railway Company will develop their trade through Canadian channels and Canadian waterways, that the Grand Trunk Railway will carry to the port of Montreal grain that will be carried from the west to a Canadian port on the lakes. I do not know what that port will be. The Grand Trunk Railway has several ports at its disposal. Midland, Meaford, Collingwood, Owen Sound, are all Grand Trunk ports. We are developing all these ports to make them reservoirs of trade for the St. Lawrence route. Sir, this country will not develop if we do not stand together, and I blame our friends from the North-west because they are threatening to look to the other side of the line. I do not say at all that all the members from the North-west have done so. Several members of parliament have represented to me that my hon. friend should not have spoken as he has done. We are friends of the North-west, while the Americans are not. What is the use of turning our eyes to the Americans?

Mr. DAVIS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I do not threaten. I only made the statement that we are getting immigration to the extent of 100,000 a year from the United States, and that if this kept up, these people, not having the means of marketing their produce, would naturally look to the other side of the boundary instead of coming here, and it would be well for us to take that into consideration and provide means to hold the trade.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am very glad to accept that explanation. I accept it cheerfully, but it reminds me of what is going on in the North-west. We are spending about a half million dollars for immigration to that country. The older provinces are paying a large share of that money every year. But our eastern provinces have also magnificent lands. In the province of Quebec there are magnificent lands. My hon. friends complain that they have not sufficient railway facilities in the west. But I know of splendid districts in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario which have no railways and which do not turn their eyes to the United States of America for relief. Let us have a little patience. Our friends were blessed last year with a splendid crop. Providence was kind to them —too kind I am afraid. They had too much of a good thing, and we could not carry the whole of their trade as quickly as they desired.

We have spent, not $240,000,000 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, but $100,000,000, which is a large sum of money. I do not hesitate to say—I may be wrong in my view —that I view with some apprehension that large immigration from the United States to this country. I may be altogether wrong. I know that my views are not shared by everybody, but I am such a strong Canadian, from my feet to my head, that I would rather not dispose too quickly of our national heritage to foreigners, and would rather develop the country on safe lines than go too fast. My hon. friend says that those Americans, if we do not treat them better than we do our own citizens, will look to their own mother land. Then let us not go too fast, for we must not develop only one part of the country. Let us develop the country gradually as a whole. I cannot forget that there are maritime provinces, that we have a fast line in view, which will be a great benefit to this country ; that we have our canals to provide for and our other water-ways and the French river scheme and that all these undertakings are destined not only to feed our summer ports but our winter ports also. The port of Montreal, which is so heavily condemned by my hon. friend, is the largest commercial port in this country. We shall not close it, and my hon. friend will send his grain down there. Why? Because that is the cheapest route. I say without hesitation that when our canals are completely equipped, when the port of Montreal is completely equipped, it will be cheaper to send a bushel of grain from Fort William, Milwaukee or Chicago by the St. Lawrence route than any other. Will my hon. friend allow me to tell him that at this very moment grain is taken from Chicago to the city of Quebec for 5½ cents per bushel.

Mr. DAVIS. What is the distance ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About 1,100 miles. From Fort William to the port of Montreal by that French river scheme, which my hon. friend condemns so much, the distance will be 890 miles. From Fort William to New York there are 1,192 miles. From New York to Liverpool the distance is 3,105 miles. From Montreal to Liverpool 2,773. In round numbers we would have an advantage of over 600 miles in favour of the St. Lawrence route. From Fort William to Fort Colborne, let us take the canals, the distance is 737 miles; from Fort Colborne to Montreal it is 320 miles, making a total 1,058 miles. From Fort William to Buffalo there are 750 miles, and from Buffalo to New York, 500 miles, making in all 1,250 miles. The distance is in our favour. Let us equip the St. Lawrence route and make it what it should be, because we have the distance with us. My hon. friend says that the St. Lawrence route is closed six months in the year. In that he is wrong. It is not closed more than five months in the year. The port of Buffalo is closed just as soon as Montreal. And how many bushels of grain were shipped to Buffalo last year ? Over 200,000,000. So that my hon. friend must agree that for a port which closes so early, it is doing quite a little business.

My hon. friend has said that there are not sufficient elevator facilities at Fort William and Port Arthur. That is true, but he cannot ignore the fact that about a week ago the Canadian Pacific Railway gave a contract for an elevator of about 5,000,000 bushels capacity. The Canadian Northern have also a very large elevating capacity. In Montreal the Harbour Commissioners are building a large elevator which will be completed for the opening of the next season, and the Grand Trunk Railway will no doubt build a large elevator also. The Canadian Pacific Railway have already two elevators, and I have no doubt that when the eastern portion of the harbour is completed, they will have another elevator or two there. There will then be sufficient elevating capacity in the port of Montreal.

My hon. friends must not make up their minds that the country will build railways to allow them to ship their grain and other products to American ports. As long as I am here I will do what I can to prevent anything of that kind, if they have such an idea in their minds, and I believe that the country will be behind me and the government.

I firmly believe that the port of St. John is the one which is the best suited for our winter port. It is to-day a successful winter port. The Canadian Pacific Railway are taking a large quantity of traffic to it, not only from our own North-west but from the American North-west, as well. They have their connections not only with our Canadian North-west but with the American west. They are feeding the port of St. John in the winter months with American and Canadian grain.

When we are better equipped, when that French river scheme which my hon. friend so much condemns has been carried through, I do not believe that 1,000,000 bushels of Canadian grain will go to American ports.

My hon. friend has reproached us for not having purchased the Canada Atlantic. I think it would have been the utmost piece of foolishness to have done so. We have perhaps given too many subsidies to that railway. At the time we thought we were doing right, and I hope that we have not made a sad mistake. Still I am not sure. Only the future can tell. But if we had bought that road, we have been obliged to equip a fleet on the lakes. Mr. Booth has been able to feed his road and keep it in good fighting condition without losing too much money, because he is a trader and has a fleet on the lakes, which takes American products and American grain to a Canadian port, and because he is a large lumber merchant who has large mills and is carrying on important operations at Burlington also. Mr. Booth has been able to keep his road open and in working order because he has a large American trade. Mr. Booth has been able to keep his road open and in working order because he has been able to get American trade. Canadian trade would never have kept his road open—everybody who knows anything about railways knows that. Had he depended upon Canadian trade his road would have been starved, and he would have lost, I suppose, a million dollars a year. Now, is the Canadian government to engage in the grain trade and in lumbering operations? Mr. Booth's road is not running to the port of Montreal. To reach that port, it would be necessary for the road to spend a few million dollars. The government has not been ready to do that. The road that has no western connections in the winter months has to be handled with a great deal of care by this government. We are invited to extend the Intercolonial Railway to North Bay. But what good would that do us? Where are our western connections? Why, what is the use of talking that way? If the proposal is made to extend the Intercolonial Railway to the coast, let us discuss it. But we have to consider several railways that have facilities in Canadian ports. The Grand Trunk Railway is carrying on a large business at Midland, and Midland is the most important port for the Grand Trunk Railway on the lakes. But the Grand Trunk Railway for the winter months is not a Canadian railway, unfortunately, but is located at Portland for the winter, as Mr. Booth's system is located at Boston and Portland during that season. I am not going to spend much money to carry Canadian trade to American ports, if I can help myself. It seems to me we can do better than that. And the sooner our hon. friends who differ with us understand that there are people who will resist and resist firmly, the better for us all. This country must stand upon its own bottom. Let us have our own tariff, whether high or low—let us have our tariff to suit ourselves. Let us have Canadian bottoms on the lakes and on the high seas. What do we see to-day? We see an amalgamation of the biggest navigation companies on the high seas. And by whom was that amalgamation carried out? By American capitalists, who own the American railways and who also control the American bottoms on the lakes. It is not hard to see what will be the result to us of that amalgamation, if we do not stand up like men. Controlling, as I have said, the ships on the seas, the American railways and the carriers on the lakes they will simply make the rates to suit themselves. If we allow them too much latitude, if we have not enough confidence in ourselves to equip this country on independent lines and on national lines, I feel, Sir, that before we are much older, we shall have very grave results to face. I hope I am wrong in my views, but I firmly believe I am speaking gospel truth in saying this.

This is the reason why our North-west friends must not ask us to spend every dollar of our money in their territory. We will give them as much as we can, but we have something else to take care of. The older provinces also have their interests to be considered. When the Americans have control of the rates, they will squeeze my hon. friend (Mr. Davis) to the best of their ability, there is no doubt about that; and I believe the day is not far distant, when our railway companies will have to face that amalgamation and equip themselves on the seas as the American railways are equipping themselves on the seas—unless we make up our minds not to be a nation, unless we make up our minds not to be anything. It makes me tired and sick when I see the readiness of some of our friends in disposing of our national assets—our waterways, railways, everything, in favour of foreigners. Let us not be too——

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman is misquoting me, I did not make any such statement. A moment ago he said that the American companies were getting control of our roads and that we should protect ourselves against that movement. That is exactly what I say. I said it might be necessary to build competing roads.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was not alluding to my hon. friend (Mr. Davis), but was speaking in a very general way. Now, I have not much more to say except this—the work of deepening and widening the St. Lawrence will be completed within the next two years. I hope the government will be supported by both sides of the House in what I may call the national policy we are carrying out to-day. We are equipping our ports and harbours in the maritime provinces. We have spent large sums of money on the Intercolonial Railway. I hope and trust the expenditure of this money will have satisfactory results. We are spending money in equipping some of our harbours on the lakes. But not so much as I would like to see. If I had my way, as I have said before, and I may say it again, I would spend more money within the next two or three years to meet the situation we have to face in the United States. However, we are moving as quickly as the public opinion of the whole country will allow us to go. Port Colborne is being equipped. My hon. friend (Mr. Davis) does not believe in the canals. If the hon. gentleman will consider the question he will realize why it is that we have not handled as much trade by the canals as we should have done. We have not a shadow of equipment at Port Colborne. My hon. friend knows that the size of the ships navigating the great lakes is increasing all the time. Buffalo, on one side of Lake Erie, is magnificently equipped. I was there the other day and saw something of what they have. They have five miles of breakwater and they are rebuilding the structure in concrete. The Federal government is spending millions. All the American ports are being splendidly equipped, and Buffalo is their gateway. The biggest ships on the lakes go there. In Buffalo they have fifty-five elevators. In Port Colborne we have not a single elevator. How could we handle grain there in opposition to Buffalo ?

Now we had no equipment in the port of Montreal, and how could we handle grain coming through our canals ? But that trouble will be remedied. This government has grappled with that question, and I am glad to say that we have received assistance from many hon. gentlemen opposite. When the canals are equipped, as they will be presently, when Port Colborne is equipped, as it is being equipped now, when the St. Lawrence is deepened, and widened, and buoyed and lighted, we will have western trade coming through our Canadian channels. There is no doubt as to that.

My hon. friend said a good word for Quebec. Poor old Quebec ! fine old Quebec ! I have spent there the best years of my life. I am glad to see Quebec coming to the front and getting a share of the trade, because Montreal is not able to handle all the trade, there will be too much. Three Rivers also will be equipped, and there is no doubt a large trade will be handled there also, indeed a large trade is now being handled there. Quebec will receive a large trade through waterways and through railways. My hon. friend must know that the Canadian Pacific Railway has reached Quebec, the Grand Trunk Railway has reached Quebec, the Intercolonial Railway has reached Quebec; still, last year Quebec only handled $10,000,000 worth of trade, while Montreal handled $133,000,000 worth. In Montreal we are not jealous of anybody, we know that last year we were not able to handle the trade, and that is the reason why so much of it has gone to other ports. For myself I am prepared to ask parliament to equip Quebec without any more delay. The equipment of Quebec will be necessary, especially when the fast line is established, and I hope it will be very soon. Quebec will then be more important than it has ever been yet. The port of St. John will also develop, and I hope that old historic city of Halifax will develop. Let us stand by our harbours, whether they are down on the sea, or on the lakes, or on the St. Lawrence. Let us stand by this country, I cannot say it too loudly, let us be Canadians. Let us not turn our eyes towards the United States. They are friends of ours, no doubt, if they could capture all our trade they would do it. But I firmly believe that the best thing for us to do is to be friends to ourselves, whether in tariff matters or in the development of our national railways and waterways. In conclusion let me tell my hon. friend that the people of the North-west will find that even we in Montreal are friends to them, though they have treated us harshly at times, and we will continue to be friends to them if they do not too often turn Turk on us.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to take exception to some remarks made by the Minister of Public Works. I think he has gone a little far afield in trying to impute motives to me when there was no need of it. He said, or insinuated that the people of the North-west Territories wanted the people of the east to build railroads for them. I do not know that I ever heard any person in the North-west Territories asking the people in the east, or asking the government, to spend any money in building railroads for us. We are only asking what any other citizen has a right to ask, that is, proper facilities to handle our products, and that is not only putting money into our pockets, but into the pockets of every citizen of this country. He says the little village of Montreal, with 400,000 inhabitants, has as much population as the whole of the North-west Territories. I want to draw the hon. minister's attention to the fact that the people of the North-west Territories are paying millions of dollars to the city of Montreal, year by year, to help increase its population. Commercial travellers from the great centre of Montreal are swarming all over the North-west Territories, in season and out of season, like flies round a honey pot. That is where Montreal is getting its money. If it had'nt been for Montreal's trade with the North-west, there would not be 400,000 people in the city of Montreal. I have nothing against the city of Montreal, the city of Montreal is all right. I said that the city of Montreal would always have a good trade. There is a certain class of ships that will always go to the port of Montreal. But we must look to the future, and I will tell him that I do not think that the canal system will be sufficient to remove all the crop that we will grow in that country in the next few years.

The hon. gentleman spoke about the amount of money that is being spent in the west. Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that if any hon. gentleman will look at the estimates for the North-west Territories for the last two or three years, he will find nothing to blow about as far as money spent in the west is concerned. I had the honour of receiving about $12 in my constituency last year. I am not complaining about that. We don't want that kind of improvement particularly, but what we do want is increased transportation facilities so that we can handle our crops. We are not looking to these little two-penny half-penny grants for building wharfs and all that sort of thing. If there are wharfs all along the St. Lawrence, if there are wharfs hanging on every tree between Montreal and Quebec, I am not objecting to it. If there is an ocean port in front of every man's door between Montreal and Quebec, I am not objecting to it. I am only bringing out the needs and requirements of the people of the North-west Territories. The hon. gentleman took me to task for complaining about the freight paid on wheat between these different ports. I find in the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals for this year that the average freight rate last year on grain between Chicago and Buffalo was two and a fifth cents. I find in going over another statement of the freight on grain for the last year between Buffalo and New York, that the highest rate was three cents, and the lowest rate a cent and a quarter, an average of one and one eighth cents. That bears out the statement I made, and shows that the Minister of Public Works is not correct. I said that the canals are not keeping up with the times. I find in the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals a statement giving the tonnage of wheat, food and breadstuffs carried over the canals and over the railroads between Buffalo and New York. I find that in 1894 they carried 1,400,129 tons on canals and that during the same year they carried 5,681,185 tons on railways. I will come down to the last year, and I find that in 1900 they carried 472,857 tons on canals as against 6,525,862 on railways, which goes to show that in every year from 1894 to the present time there has been a gradually decreasing haul on the canals in the United States as compared with the haul on railways. Now, I made a statement and it cannot be contradicted, and I have the statement here taken from the hon. minister's report that there has been a decline in the trade on our canals ever since 1897. The figures are all against canals and all in favour of railways in this century, and I think it is going to go on in that direction. My hon. friend says that he wants to be patriotic. I am as patriotic as any man in this country. I have said nothing in this debate that is not patriotic. What I say is that we should have more transportation facilities and that we want a railway and an ocean port. My hon. friend goes on to say that Montreal handled so many million bushels of grain last year and that Quebec handled so many bushels, but he did not tell us how many million bushels of grain went to American ports. My object is to have all that grain handled at an ocean port in this country, and by building or extending our railways in a proper manner ship this grain, which is going to Buffalo and other American ports, through our own country and through Canadian ports.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) how many millions of bushels of wheat were received at Buffalo from Canadian ports ?

Mr. DAVIS. I have not the figures.

Mr. BENNETT. I will tell the hon. gentleman there were about 3,000,000 bushels only.

Mr. DAVIS. We have heard a great deal of complaint in this House about the trade going from Canadian channels to American ports. Another statement which the hon. Minister of Public Works made was that he wanted Canadian bottoms. Certainly we do. I believe that we should have Canadian boats to carry Canadian grain. I believe it was necessary to suspend the coasting regulations three years ago when American vessels were allowed to come in and carry Canadian grain from one Canadian port to another. That is not a desirable thing, but we had not sufficient Canadian bottoms to handle the trade on that occasion and that privilege was given. I may say that the Canadian west has passed its experimental stage now, and that business men might take up the question of providing sufficient tonnage and perhaps get the assistance of the government to do so.

Mr. OSLER. Might I suggest to my hon. friend that there has not been a time when there has not been a sufficient number of Canadian boats to carry grain from the west to the east.

Mr. DAVIS. I remember the debate that took place in this House after the government suspended the coasting regulations in order to relieve the congestion at the head of the lakes two or three years ago. If there had been a sufficient number of Canadian boats to carry the grain out it would not have been necessary to suspend the regulations.

Mr. OSLER. There was a sufficient number of Canadian bottoms to carry every bushel of grain out and the government were wrong in suspending the coasting laws.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) must not forget one thing. He forgets that half of those ships were engaged in other trade, and were not available for the grain trade. It is all very well to say in vague terms that there are enough Canadian bottoms. There are not enough. Far from it, because half of them are engaged in other trade.

Mr. OSLER. I might tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) that at the end of last season's navigation, with the greatest crop that was ever produced in the North-west, there were three boats left at Fort William for the winter, because there was no grain for them to carry out. There were Canadian bottoms to carry out every bushel of grain that was available. Canadian enterprise is building Canadian boats as fast as the demands of the grain trade require. I speak of knowledge, because I have been interested in Canadian boats on the northern lakes for many years, and I can say that the boat business has been quite up to the grain business, and that the firms which are interested in boats are not only keeping up with the demand, but are building in advance of the demand and that within the last week contracts have been let for boats carrying half a million bushels. There has not been a shortage in this matter.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to remind him that when this government allowed American bottoms to navigate in Canadian waters it was to carry American grain to a Canadian port. Mr. Booth is the gentleman who applied for that privilege. He asked permission to use American bottoms to carry American grain and perhaps along with it Canadian grain.

Mr. OSLER. Canadian grain ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, and why ? Because he could not find enough Canadian bottoms.

Mr. OSLER. These American bottoms were employed by Mr. Booth to carry American grain to his own port, and then by his own railway to an American port. That is not to a Canadian port.

Mr. DAVIS. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) has just placed in my hands a report of the Winnipeg Board of Trade which deals with the question that the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) spoke about a moment ago, and which I wish to read to the House :

> The tonnage of the Canadian lake vessels is not keeping pace with the annually increasing tonnage handled at Fort William, and it behooves Canadians to move in this matter with despatch, or an unduly increased percentage of Manitoba grain will seek the Atlantic seaboard via Buffalo and American lines. It is doubtful whether, if all the grain offered to the Canadian Pacific Railway last fall had been taken to Fort William, there would have been Canadian vessels to have taken it across the lakes, even when excluding the quantity actually taken to Buffalo in American bottoms. Late in the fall Buffalo was blocked, and owing to the coasting laws, American vessels were not allowed to carry grain from Fort William to another Canadian port. Either the Canadian fleet will have to be largely augmented or the coasting regulations suspended, for Manitoba grain cannot be held back at Fort William or Port Arthur, because the Canadian vessel tonnage is inadequate to handle it.

Mr. OSLER. I think the Winnipeg Board of Trade are like a great many other western institutions; they anticipate events that do not occur. They anticipate that there will not be a sufficiency of vessels to take out the grain. I made the statement that there were three vessels that were obliged to winter at Fort William because there was not enough Manitoba wheat at Fort William ready for them to take out on their last trip, and in consequence they had to winter there for want of the cargo which they expected. There was no grain available for them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Would American boats have loaded themselves with Canadian grain for American ports ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. All this discussion is out of order; let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) proceed.

Mr. DAVIS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) tells us that there was not sufficient grain with which to load these vessels. One of the reasons why there was not sufficient grain was that the Canadian Pacific Railway could not take the grain to the elevators. We had the grain in the west and if it had been brought down to Fort William these boats would not have been tied up. In reference to what the hon. gentleman said about the Winnipeg Board of Trade my hon. friend (Mr. McCreary) informs me that 7,000,000 bushels of grain went via Duluth through American territory because the Canadian Pacific Railway could not bring it to a Canadian port, which is a lamentable thing. That is what the Winnipeg Board of Trade wants to prevent, and I venture to say there is no body of men in the Dominion that knows as much about the question as the Winnipeg Board of Trade.

There is not a body in Canada that knows more about grain than does the Winnipeg Board of Trade, and I would further point out to my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) that his partner Mr. Nanton is president of that board of trade, and Mr. Nanton is a business man and he knows what he is talking about. The Minister of Public Works said that something might happen that would enable the American railroads to squeeze us. Well, the position I took was that it might be necessary for the people of this country from a national standpoint, to build the Intercolonial Railway to Fort Simpson on the Pacific coast as a main artery controlled by the Canadian government, in view of the fact that some day the Americans may control the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway and other Canadian roads. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Tarte) accused me of making the sweeping statement that our canal system was no good. I did not say that. I said that the canal system would always be valuable for local traffic, but that this was a railway age, and as the canal system was inadequate to serve the transportation purposes of the great North-west it would be necessary to secure transportation by railways. The Minister of Public Works told us that we spent $100,000,000 on the Canadian Pacific Railway. I wonder how he arrived at that figure. The report of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shows that they still have 16,000,000 acres of land which is worth at least $4 an acre, and that represents $64,000,000. I was under the impression that we gave them $25,000,000 in hard cash, together with a completed portion of the road which cost the government $65,000,000, and that they got another 16,000,000 acres of land which would represent a further sum of $48,000,000. If the Minister of Public Works figures it out, he will find that the people of Canada gave the Canadian Pacific Railway $240,000,000 in lands and money, which is more than the whole system is valued at to-day. I complain that in view of all this we still have to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway exorbitant freight rates to carry our products. The Minister of Public Works told us that grain was carried 1,100 miles for 5½ cents, and in view of the fact that we have to pay 8½ cents for carrying it 448 miles, is not that a grievance that we suffer? He told us that the people of the North-west Territories were having $500.000 a year spent on immigration for their benefit. I believe that money is well spent but I never heard before that it was not spent in the interest of all Canada. Our immigration agents do not alone represent Manitoba and the North-west, but they represent the older provinces as well. Anyway, every dollar spent in Manitoba and the North-west Territories is a benefit to the whole Dominion. We are a producing people and we manufacture nothing. The money that we get for our products comes to the east and helps to build up the eastern cities. We are proud of that, and what I said was that it was necessary to take other steps to bring the west and the east closer together, so that our trade might increase and so that a friendly feeling might exist. When I said that I spoke from a national standpoint. I repeat that the only solution to the difficulty is for the government to build one great national artery, or if they want to keep to the old policy of assisting companies, let them assist a company to build a great highway from the west to Quebec or some port that will be kept opened ten months in the year, so that we may have the advantage of a fair market price for our wheat and not be compelled to store it all winter. Suppose we raise 400,000,000 bushels of wheat in the west and have to store it during the winter months, then when that vast quantity would be put on the market in the spring of the year down would go the price, and the farmers would lose not six cents per bushel but perhaps twenty-five cents per bushel. We do not want anything unreasonable in the North-west, we point out here what is required, and when we do that we are only doing our duty to our constituents. We don't want any one to build granaries for us ; we want liberty to build our own granaries though, and we do not want legislation that gives a monopoly to the elevator combine. Give us the reasonable facilities which we want, and you will hear little more about complaints from the west.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS—WAGES OF TRACKMEN AND OTHER LABOURERS.

Mr. HANCE J. LOGAN (Cumberland) moved :

That considering the general prosperity of Canada, the minimum wage to be paid trackmen and other labourers on the government system of railways should be at least one dollar and a half per day.

He said : Mr. Speaker, we have heard a great deal to-night with reference to the west and I have a grievance to discuss in reference to the east. It is not the great transportation question it is true ; but still it is a question which concerns the working men on the government railways who have wives and families to support on small wages, and it is a question just as important to them as is the question we have been discussing to the farmers in the North-west Territories. I regret very much that the Minister of Railways and Canals is obliged to be absent this evening because I would have liked to address a few remarks particularly to him. I wish to speak Sir, on behalf of two classes of public employees who seem to have been neglected in the general increase of salaries which the minister has made on the government railways. I refer to the trackmen and to the freight handlers. In reference to the Intercolonial Railway trackmen I may say that they feel under an obligation to the minister (Hon. Mr. Blair) for having increased their wages by five cents per day.

But I wish to point out that during the past three or four years—years of increased prosperity, and therefore increased prices for the necessaries of life—whereas the Intercolonial Railway trackmen have had their wages raised only 5 cents per day, the necessaries of life have cost from 15 to 20 per cent more than previously. I also wish to point out the increased service of the road and the increased responsibilities in connection with it. Up to the year 1896, the Intercolonial was looked upon as a byway. A man who will stand up in this House and say that the Intercolonial Railway was fitted in 1896 to be a national highway does not voice the sentiments of the maritime provinces. We had in those days slow trains, light trains and light engines, and therefore the work of the trackmen was not as responsible as it is at the present time. To-day we have some of the fastest trains that run on the continent of America ; we have engines of 80 or 90 tons hauling freight trains ; these things greatly increase the responsibilities of the men who have the care of the track. And yet, in this year of prosperity, when we boast of our national surplus, when we talk of the sun of prosperity shining all over Canada, we ask men to work on the government system of railways and keep their wives and children for $1.20 a day. All I have to say is that the man who can possibly make ends meet with such a small wage, when the necessaries of life are so high in price, must be a born economist. Some may think this is a small matter ; but I think any matter that affects the labouring men of our country is an important matter. If we make our labouring men happy and contented, we have a greater country than we had before. I am not bringing this motion up without having repeatedly brought the subject to the attention of the Railway Department, and general manager, and the minister himself. I have been told by the minister and by the management of the Intercoloning Railway that owing to the deficit on the railway, they cannot afford to raise the wages at the present time. Mr. Speaker, I say that no deficit can be so great as to justify a government in keeping down the wages of its employees to a mean, miserable pittance. We may have had a deficit last year, but we are not going to have one this coming year. Even if we have a deficit, that applies to the railways alone. We have a great surplus of millions of dollars in the treasury of Canada, and yet in this year of surpluses we refuse to increase the wages of the workingmen. The hon. minister deserves the greatest amount of credit for having raised the wages of many of the employees of the Intercolonial Railway. I refer particularly to the trainmen, the conductors, the brakemen, the drivers, the firemen, the telegraphers, and the station agents all along the line. The wages of these men have been increased by the present Minister of Railways ; and why is it that the wages of the trackmen, who have to work 10 hours a day, who have serious responsibilities, who are skilled workmen—because a man has to be a skilled workman to be able to look after any system of railways—are kept down to the pittance of $1.20 a day ? We send our immigration agents all over the world to bring men into Canada. It is a poor advertisement for Canada to have it go to the world that the government of this country pays its workingmen only $1.20 a day. Besides, these trackmen have devoted their lives to this work. I know men in my own constituency who have worked on the railway for 20 years or more as trackmen ; and if they left their job to-morrow, although they are skilled men in keeping up and maintaining a railway, they would be unfitted to earn a livelihood at any other kind of work. In reference to the freight handlers, I may say that these men are compelled by the force of circumstances and the class of work they have to do, to be men of education, men who can read and write well, and who are trustworthy and honest; and yet these men, who have serious responsibilities, who handle hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of freight, are compelled to work for $1.20 a day. Last year there was a strike of the trackmen of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and what was the answer of the company to the men who demanded higher wages ? There answer was, 'You cannot expect us, a soulless corporation, to give you more than the government of Canada pays to its men on the Intercolonial Railway.' It was that argument that killed the strike at that time, and the men were forced to go back to work. Within the last few weeks these men have been again negotiating with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the company have agreed to increase their wages to $1.25 a day as the minimum rate and to pay more in towns and cities where the cost of living is high. They also agreed to leave the question of the wages of the trackmen to arbitration, in case the trackmen would not accept $1.25 per day. It seems to me that this country cannot afford to continue the present condition of affairs any longer. I am in close contact with these men. I know many of them in my own constituency. I know their circumstances, and I cannot understand how under the sun a man can keep his family, with six, seven, eight or nine children in some cases, on $1.20 a day. My hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Gallery) says that the city of Montreal pays $1.50 a day for labourers on the public streets. In the town of Amherst we have to pay the men who work on the streets much higher wages than are paid on the government railway. It has a deteriorating effect on the workingmen of the country who know that the government does not pay its workingmen sufficient wages. Therefore, without taking up the time of the House at this late hour, I desire to call the attention of the government to this condition of affairs, on behalf of these workingmen, some of whom are among the very best citizens of the country, in the hope that they will immediately take this matter into their consideration, and increase the wages of the trackmen and the freight handlers to a sum that will enable them to keep their wives and children in greater comfort than they can do on their present rate of wages.

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (King's, P.E.I.). Mr. Speaker, I just rise to endorse and support and emphasize what the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) has said. In his motion he takes in the government railways of Canada, but he confined his remarks to the Intercolonial Railway. That was probably a mistake. I think that the government, in taking this matter into consideration, should certainly consider it as comprehensably as the motion on the Order paper, which says the government railways, and consequently includes the Prince Edward Island railway. As a matter of fact, I know that young men who go on the railways and get positions as trackmen, by being saving and sober men, are simply able to support themselves. After some time perhaps they get married, but they are not able to support their families on the wages they receive ; and after they have acquired experience and become more valuable, they are obliged to leave the railway service, and take up some other occupation in order to make a living.

I do not think that such a condition of things ought to be allowed to continue in this country. As my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) has pointed out, the railway trackmen are above the ordinary labourer. Their work requires more intelligence, and in addition they have to be out in all kinds of weather and at all hours, which entails additional expenditure on clothing, etc. They have to provide themselves with suitable clothing to meet the conditions under which they labour or their health will be impaired, and I know of cases of men whose wages did not permit them to clothe themselves suitably to meet all kind of weather and support their families, in consequence of which their health suffered and they were obliged to quit work. Of recent years the cost of living in Canada has increased. It costs more to support a family now than it did in former years. Clothing is dearer, rents are higher, and because of the great progress of the country a higher standard of living is necessary. In consequence of all these reasons and others which could be adduced, the wages paid the trackmen are not sufficient to enable them to support their families. The pay of all other men on the government railways has been increased fairly well, but the trackmen are kept just where they were several years ago. I earnestly hope that the government or the Minister of Railways will take up this matter and deal fairly and generously with these men, and I am sure that such a step would commend itself to the House and country.

Mr. DAN. GALLERY (Montreal, St. Anne's). While I am in entire sympathy with the remarks of the hon. gentlemen who have so well pleaded the cause of the trackmen, I regret that they should have confined themselves to that particular class of labour and other labour on the government railway. There are men employed on our canals whose claims deserve equal attention, and when the government is considering the justice of raising wages on the Intercolonial Railway, I would ask that the claims of these men employed on the canals should also be given some consideration. It seems to me that the minimum rate mentioned in this resolution should be made to apply generally, and if the government will go beyond the resolution when considering the question, and do justice to the conditions and claims of all classes of day labour in its employ, it will take a course that will gain for it the support of all the friends of labour in this country.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). I wish to say a few words to express my sympathy with this resolution. It is one which I thoroughly endorse. I notice that it is directed particularly to the Minister of Railways and Canals, who is not in his place tonight, but I hope that its approval by this House will have the effect of causing him to put it into effect without delay. I would myself have preferred a resolution in more general terms; I would have preferred that the minimum of $1.50 per day should have been made applicable to all classes of labour in the service of the government and not merely to those in its railway service, and in urging that this minimum be fixed, I do not think it is necessary to make any special argument with regard to special training or skill or anything of the kind. It should only be necessary to mention that the work is required to be done and that men have to be employed to do it. I do not think it is right that this government should hire men at any rate of wages which prevents their entering married life. The government should pay wages sufficient to enable every one employed by it to support a family and not a wage that compels him to remain single. We have on the Intercolonial Railway about 700 trackmen employed, and the fact that they are not paid a sufficient wage has had a considerably wider effect than many people in the east may suppose. There are now about 12,000 trackmen employed on all the railways, exclusive of the government road, and I believe that the wages of these men have been kept down during the past few years just because of the low price paid by the government. Other railway companies have pointed to the fact that the people's own employees were getting even less than these companies were paying. This argument was specially used in their strike last year. At present the question of wages on the Canadian Pacific Railway, affecting 6,000 or 8,000 men, is a matter for arbitration, and I believe that if the Minister of Railways would act on this resolution at once and grant the increase asked for, that would have an immediate effect on all other railway companies. I would rather this resolution were drawn in broader terms, because I notice there is a Bill before the House affecting the wages in the Post Office Department. Should that Bill become law the lowest rate paid in that department would be $1.25 per day, and I am totally opposed to this government admitting at all that any man, who is required to give his whole time to the government service, should receive as low as $1.25 per day, because under that rate no man is in a position to support a family.

Mr. H. R. EMMERSON (Westmoreland). I would like to ask the attention of the House for a few moments while I make reference to the position of the railway freight checkers and freight handlers. I fully endorse what has been said with respect to the sectionmen on the track of our government railways, but the freight handlers and freight checkers are obliged to work usually from thirteen to fifteen hours per day, and receive only $1.20, though their work is of a nature that requires some considerable education. I believe that there is a condition inserted in government contracts for public works, which requires the contractor not to pay a less wage than $1.25 per day, and it seems very inconsistent that this government, which insists on such a condition, should pay its own labourers only $1.20 per day.

Mr. TAYLOR. In these growing times?

Mr. EMMERSON. Yes, in these progressive, prosperous days. I am sure that the Railway Department is entitled to great credit for what it has already done in this direction. Only a few years ago, previous to 1896, 90 cents and 99 cents per day were paid. The Minister of Railways increased their wages gradually, until now they have reached $1.20, and certainly the time has come when we should pay them a larger per diem allowance. In the railway department at Moncton, there have been a great many increases within the last few years. In the railway offices the wages of the clerks have been very properly increased. They were formerly living upon the most meagre allowance, starvation salaries, but gradually these have been increased. In the workshops at Moncton a system had grown up which worked great inequality in wages paid the mechanics. It was suggested that a commission should be appointed to classify the work, and that a certain wage should be fixed for each particular class of work. It seems to me that that would have been a proper course to pursue, but the Minister of Railways took a different course and instructed his officials to make schedules. Under the old system three or four men would be working at the same bench, each of whom would require the same skill and qualifications. One man, probably, would be getting 15 cents an hour, another 19 cents, another 22 cents—all the result of accident. This was the outcome of the so-called system which has prevailed upon the Intercolonial Railway since it was a railway. The man who was receiving a relatively high wage received it simply because he happened to be more fortunate than his neighbour. Perhaps he had a little more influence, and had been able to secure attention to his claim, while his neighbour had not been so fortunate. There has been a readjustment, and these inequalities have been measurably removed. The men who are working at the same class of work get now the same wage—at least, to a degree that condition exists. It seems to me that a more perfect system could have been inaugurated by a more perfect classification of the work, and scheduling it as to the wages paid, so that there would be no possibility of any political or other influence being exercised in favour of this man or that man, but every one employed on the road would be classified, and would receive the wage belonging to his classification. I heartily endorse what has been stated by the mover and seconder of this resolution, and would urge that this matter should receive the urgent and prompt attention of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. DONALD A. MACKINNON (East Queen's). I have listened carefully to the speeches made by those who support this resolution, but I must say that I do not agree with them. It seems to me that a matter like this should be left with the Minister of Railways and his department. The work of the Intercolonial may sometimes call for the services of some labouring men who are not worth $1.50 a day.

Mr. LOGAN. Then, they should not be there.

Mr. MACKINNON. They may be required for purposes which should not be paid for at that rate. It depends on the labour, and it depends on the man. Some men are young, some are old; some are able to earn $1.50 a day and some are not. To my mind this is not a matter for parliament to regulate. The effect of passing this resolution would be to give both those who are worthy and those who are not worthy this wage of $1.50 a day. To say that they should not be employed unless they can earn that amount would be to exclude from the service of the railway this class of labour.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). But this applies to the trackmen.

Mr. MACKINNON. I contend that it is a wrong principle to pass a resolution of this kind, and it seems to me to yield too much to pressure from outside. It would not be fair to those whom we charge with the duty of managing this road. Here is a department in charge of the Minister of Railways, who is fit to direct that department; and he has under him managers who are fit for the work they have to do. To take the matter of wages out of their hands, as you will do if you pass this resolution, is to do something unworthy of parliament.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). This only fixes a minimum.

Mr. MACKINNON. Fixing a minimum or maximum is no part of the duty of parliament. That should be left to the officers of the road. Parliament must not forget other labourers not in government employ who have to contribute towards increased wages. I have every confidence that this question will be fairly dealt with by the Minister of Railways.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman a question. He talks of a certain class of labour on the road. But this resolution has reference to the trackman. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he knows what the duties of a trackman are ? If he does he must know that these duties are very onerous and exacting. If a man is not fit for such duties he could not be employed as trackman.

Mr. MACKINNON. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Johnston, Cape Breton) will read the whole resolution, he will see that it refers not only to trackmen but to 'other labourers' as well.

Mr. ARTHUR S. KENDALL (Cape Breton). I lay it down as a general proposition that no business should exist in this country unless it can stand on its own bottom. I know that many hon. members of this House will dissent from that proposition. But I make this second proposition, which I do not think many will dissent from when they go before the electors—that no business should exist in any civilized country unless it is able to pay its employees sufficient remuneration to keep them and their families according to the requirements of civilization. I believe that the people of Canada will support that proposition, particularly with relation to the government, and will hold that the government should not engage in any business, unless it can provide for its employees a sufficient wage to maintain them and their families according to the requirements of civilization. I think the country will believe this also—that where the country itself is a great employer of labour, the government that acts on behalf of the country will be expected to be a model employer. Hon. members may recollect that last session I asked the government, during the recess then to follow, to collect information from other countries—New Zealand, Switzerland, Great Britain and others—with regard to the working out of measures which had for their object the betterment of the conditions of labour, particularly along four lines : (1.) A standard minimum wage; (2.) shorter hours of labour; (3.) compensation for injuries and death; (4.) old age pensions We have had mention here of the late Henry A. Harper, who was employd in the Labour Department. Before his untimely death, he collected a large amount of information on these subjects, which has been put in my hand. I am glad to see that my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) has dealt with one of these questions, and has brought this resolution before this House. I have given notice of another motion, which, if time permits, I shall refer to later on. Coming back to the question immediately before us—in many of the towns on the Intercolonial Railway, Montreal, Quebec, Moncton, St. John, Amherst, Halifax, New Glasgow, Sydney and others, every one knows that the miserable wage of $1.20 or $1.25 a day must keep the men employed on the road and their families almost in a state of beggary. I say again that the people of this country do not wish the government to engage in a business in which they cannot provide for their employees and their families at least sufficient shelter, clothing, food and fuel. Not very long ago, I pointed out where the government railway of this country was losing a huge sum of money every year, which money it might save by getting its coal at fair prices instead of at exorbitant prices as it is doing to-day. I heartily endorse the motion of the hon. member for Cumberland, and I believe the people of Canada, when the question is properly put before them, will endorse it also.

Mr. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure). The grievance complained of by our friends in Nova Scotia exists on the Intercolonial Railway in the province of Quebec, and I have had occasion many times to bring the matter to the attention of the Railway Department but, like my hon. colleague without success. The principle which has been enunciated here this evening that the fixing of the wages of these men should be left to the officials of the railway, is a wrong one. This parliament fixes the wages and salaries of all its employees in the Dominion of Canada, and I fail to see why the same generosity should not be extended to the poor men. We have been told that the salaries and wages of all the officials of the Intercolonial Railway have been increased. The country will be surprised to learn that the workmen, the trackmen, the labouring men, have been omitted from the benefits which have been extended to the other employees of that road. We all know the difficulties and hardships to which the trackmen are exposed, especially in this country where the winters are so long, and where they have to work for ten or twelve hours in a day, sometimes fourteen hours. If there is any class of men who should be well paid it is those who are charged with supervising the line and keeping the track in order. We travel over Canadian railways every day without realizing to how great an extent our safety, and our lives even, and the lives of those who are dear to us, are dependent upon the vigilance of the men who are looking after the track. I hope the Minister of Railways and Canals will extend the generosity of the government and of the country to the poorer classes of our employees. We are now in a growing and prosperous time, Canada is boasting of its surplus, and while we, the representatives of the people, are dispensing millions and millions of public money, let it not be said that we ask the poor man in our service to bring up a family of six, seven, eight, nine, ten children, as is often the case in the province of Quebec, upon the miserable pittance $1.20 a day.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I think while the House is in this generous mood we should extend our sympathies to another class of employees who are at least as much entitled to the consideration of the government as those already mentioned, I refer to the stampers, sorters and letter carriers employed in the Post Office Department. There are many of them in the city of Montreal, and they receive a very inadequate salary, much less than $1.50 a day. Stampers and sorters are just as much entitled to consideration as the humblest employees of the Intercolonial Railway and some of them are obliged to support families on a salary of less than $400. I therefore move to amend the resolution by adding after the word 'railway' in the motion :

As well as all men employed on the public canals of Canada, and all stampers and sorters, as well as letter carriers in the public service of Canada.

This is to meet the case mentioned by my hon. friend from Montreal. Many of those employees on the canals are found in my division, and they are as much entitled to receive $1.50 a day as those already mentioned.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure).

Mr. FLINT. I would suggest that the amendment should include employees on all the public works of Canada, in that shape I would vote for it.

Mr. MONK. I did not think that was necessary, because I had confidence that the Minister of Public Works would do justice to his own employees.

Mr. J. B. MORIN (Dorchester). I wish to say a word in regard to the salary of the public employees. I have read the list of the employees of the government and have noticed the salaries they are getting, and I do not know whether I am mistaken or whether they are mistaken themselves, but I have failed to hear of any case where they found fault for receiving too much. At the same time I have heard a great many complain that they were not receiving enough. This much I do know, that the salaries of public employees are not equitably divided. I know men who are working in the city of Ottawa here for $1.50 or $1.60 a day, strong, able and healthy men. I know other men who are getting $1,800 a year, $2,000, $2,600 and $2,800. I have felt disposed to ask some of those men whether, if they were dismissed from the public service, they would be compelled to beg their living, because some of them are hardly able to walk. If you look up their ages in the Civil Service List you will find that some of them are 73 years old. Some of these men get $2,800 a year for working four or five hours a day. That I know to be a fact. I quite agree with what has been said with respect to the wages of men employed on the government railways. A man working on the railway does the hardest kind of work ; he is exposed to heat and cold, to snow and rain. And yet these men are only paid $1.15, $1.20 or $1.25 a day. In many cases they have to beg their way into the service on the railway, and unless they have friends of influence they cannot even get appointed. Now, why should some men work ten and twelve hours a day for $1.15 or $1.25, while other men who can hardly walk get $2,800 a year ? But feeble as they are, they manage to get to their offices, because they have been coming for the last forty years. For my part I desire to see employees of the government treated more equally.

Mr. GALLERY. I have been informed that in some departments there are ladies employed getting $1,500 and $2,000 a year. It seems to me very strange that they should be getting such high salaries, when poor labouring men are only getting from one dollar to one dollar and twenty-five cents a day. In the city of Montreal, for instance, men employed in scraping the streets get $1.50 a day. Men who are employed on the canals in all sorts of weather, rain or shine, are deserving at least of $1.50 a day; if not they should not be there at all. I would remind the House that these men who work in the canals are only employed seven months in the year, so that hon. gentlemen will see that the wages on which they have to support their families for the whole year is very small indeed. I hope the minister will increase the wages of the canal employees at once.

Mr. D. FARQUHARSON (West Queen's, P.E.I.) This is a question in which I take a good deal of interest. A good many men employed on the government railway in Prince Edward Island are not, in my opinion, sufficiently paid. It is a big question, however. The civil service list is an immense list to rearrange and readjust as it should be, and in my opinion it would be a big contract to undertake. The hon. gentleman who just resumed his seat and the previous speaker as well, in my opinion, touched a chord with which I sympathise deeply and that is that while some are getting too much others are getting too little. The remedy is perhaps far to seek. From what I have observed since I came to Ottawa and from what I had previously known, I would have thought that there would be many offices where there were too many men employed. I am satisfied that as a rule a great many men are receiving high salaries who do not do very much for them. But we must not complain too much. We find the world over that the men who work the least are paid the most. While that is the rule, I think the discrepancy is too great in this country as it is in any other country. Why should one man sit behind a counter in an office and get $2,000 or $3,000 a year while another man gets $300 or $400 a year under almost similar conditions ? I do not think that is right. I am perhaps too democratic in this respect, but my sympathies run in that direction. Let there be a commission appointed to investigate and make such a rearrangement as will give every man what he deserves, I sympathise with the poor man. He gets too little return for his labour. He has to pay out all he earns to support his family, with nothing for the future, and this is the man whose family is often large. I think we should look into this question, and endeavour to do what is fair to the men employed in this government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have been very nearly six years in the Department of Public Works, I am paying salaries that seem to be high, and I am paying salaries that are not always high. Now, I am free to say that perhaps we do not pay enough to our employees. It is a peculiar statement, but any business man who handles large business will agree with me that you cannot pay too much to a good employee. If you give $2,000 or $3,000 to a man who has only moderate ability and give $10,000, or $15,000 to a man who has superior ability, the man whom you pay $10,000, or $15,000 will be cheaper than the man to whom you pay $2,000 or $3,000. Look at the large corporations, look at the great railway corporations; I venture to say that in the Canadian Pacific Railway offices in Montreal there are about ten employees who get over $20,000 a year each. These are very large salaries; still, the men who are at the head of the Canadian Pacific Railway and at the head of the Grand Trunk Railway are men who earn them. They would not pay these high salaries unless they were earned. I believe it would pay this country better if we would make up our minds to get the best possible labour that money can secure. I do not hesitate to say that here. I have increased the salaries in my department. I feel that I am employing a number of men, who, if they were outside of the Public Works, if they had not started life in the public service, would be able to earn $10,000 and perhaps $15,000 in a large city. Take Montreal or Toronto; it is easy to see architects in Montreal who earn $10,000 or $15,000, and engineers who earn $10,000 or $15,000 a year. These men are in the public service to-day and they are very able employees indeed. We cannot all earn the same salaries as we cannot all of us be members of parliament. It is out of the question to believe that every person can earn the same salary. Our hon. friends who have stated that employees are not paid enough who get $1.50 a day must not forget one thing; I believe I am not wrong in saying that the ordinary labouring man in Montreal or Toronto does not earn, averaging the year, more than $400. The man who gets into the public service is, as a rule, sure of being employed every day of the year and I can assure my hon. friends that ministers of the Crown have no trouble at all in finding people at the rate of salaries paid now. I have no trouble whatever. The trouble is that I cannot employ all the men who are anxious to sacrifice themselves on the altar of their country at these low salaries. They are employed every day. Railway employees, I fully grant, have perhaps harder labour, but all the same, they are very glad to work at such employment. I am receiving letters every day in the week by dozens and hundreds from people who are anxious to go into the public service even on a railway and at the low salaries that are paid now. At the same time I grant that some of the salaries are not high enough, but I take this opportunity of saying that if we have good employees we should not hesitate to pay them. We are not paying enough to-day to some of our high officials.

Hon. WM. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) The reason the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is troubled with too many applications is because he is generous to his workmen. He pays them according to their value and therefore he gets the best class of people to work for him. My idea is that you will only get labour out of a man according to the wages you pay him, and that if you increase the wages of a man you will get more work than you would get out of a man you employed at a low rate of wages. I think also that if the wages of the men on the Intercolonial Railway were raised to a proper amount you might perhaps reduce the number of men that would be employed, and you would find that four men properly paid would do the work that six men are employed now to do. I think that people should be paid according to their value and that it would also be desirable that none should be employed on public works except men who are qualified to do the best work at a fair rate of wages.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to say, in regard to the observations of the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) that while it is quite true that you may be able to get men at small wages; still, you must bear in mind that there are men in the country who, being under the necessity of supporting their families, will accept a wage which they think inadequate, and therefore, it is not perhaps quite fair to put it in the light in which the hon. Minister of Public Works is inclined to put it. I do not know that the resolution is very happily worded. It says :

> That considering the general prosperity of Canada the minimum wage to be paid trackmen and other labourers on the government system of railways should be at least $1.50 per day.

I would certainly think that whether Canada was prosperous or not the labouring man was entitled to have a fair living wage. There is no doubt that the cost of living has advanced very largely during the past five or six years. That is a circumstance which ought fairly be taken into consideration in dealing with the wages of workmen not only on the Intercolonial Railway, but in all the departments of the public service, including the Post Office Department and Public Works Department. It is true that the men who work on the Intercolonial Railway, the trackmen particularly, have a very responsible position indeed, and lead a very arduous life. That is a consideration which demands the attention of the House, or rather the attention of the Department of Railways and Canals in dealing with so important a subject. It seems a little strange that my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan) did not have something of this kind in his mind when he was so ready in the past to vote for transactions such as the acquisition of the Drummond County Railway and the bargain that was made with the Grand Trunk Railway. We know that a very large price—very much more than the cost of that railway—was paid for it, and that a bargain which I think was not very much in the interest of the country was made with the Grand Trunk Railway. Now, we have a deficit on the Intercolonial Railway; possibly to some extent as the result of that. The deficit on that railway it is true may not be due wholly to these circumstances, and it is without doubt due to the fact that the Intercolonial Railway is not administered on the same business principles which characterize the administration of railways owned by great corporations in this country and in the United States. If supplies for the Intercolonial Railway were purchased in the same way as they are made by other railway corporations there would be no deficit on the Intercolonial Railway, and these labourers might be paid the wage which is demanded by this resolution without a single dollar of additional burden on the taxpayers of this country. It would, therefore, be well for my hon. friend from Cumberland and for other gentleman like him who profess to be so solicitous on this subject, to take matters of that kind into consideration so that we may not have this very large deficit on the Intercolonial Railway to be put forward—as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Logan) states it is—by the Minister of Railways as a ground for refusing to these men the wage which hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House think is fairly their due. Another consideration which might well attract the attention of the House, is the absence from this debate of the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) as well as the absence of the Minister of Labour (Hon. Mr. Mulock). Where is the Minister of Labour to-night, who is so solicitous about fixing a fair wage in contracts made with the government of this country ? Why has not my hon. friend (Mr. Logan) employed the services of the Minister of Labour to induce the Minister of Railways to do justice to these labourers ?

Mr. LOGAN. I know that the leader of the opposition would not make these remarks if he knew that the Minister of Labour has been quite ill and has been confined to his house for the past week.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I regret very much the illness of the minister, which I was not aware of, but my hon. friend (Mr. Logan) had ample opportunity this session to bring up this matter when the Minister of Labour was able to be present and in the House.

Mr. LOGAN. I never had an opportunity of bringing it up when the Minister of Labour was in the House. I never had an opportunity until this time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That seems to indicate that the Minister of Labour has not been in the House very often during this session, because this motion has been standing on the Order Paper for the last five or six weeks. Whether or not that be the case, why has not the hon. gentleman sought the intervention of the Minister of Labour in this connection. That hon. minister prides himself very much it is said; takes very much credit to himself, I know, for the fact that he has established a fair rate of wages in respect to contracts which are granted by the government. Why have not the services of that hon. gentleman been employed with the Minister of Railways? This government takes so much pains with contracts of this kind, that it publishes its announcements in respect to them in the 'Labour Gazette,' yet it is not able to deal effectively, according to my hon. friend from Cumberland, with a subject which has so much importance for a great many people in this country as that which he has brought to the attention of the House to-night. The principle of the resolution which my hon. friend (Mr. Logan) has moved is a commendable one. I do not know myself as to the exact figure, but I do believe that having regard to the increased cost of living in this country, it is only right and proper that the wages of these men should be taken into consideration and such an increase made as the existing conditions demand.

Mr. ALEX. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). I have a few observations to offer on the resolution introduced by my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Logan). Let me say that it meets with my entire approval. In my constituency there are quite a number of men who are employed on the Intercolonial Railway, and my colleague (Mr. Kendall) and I have brought this matter to the attention of the Railway Department with a view of having their wages increased. The freight handlers and the trackmen particularly are in my judgment receiving insufficient pay. I endorse all that has been said to that effect. Let me say in reply to the leader of the opposition, that while the state of affairs at present on the Intercolonial Railway is not satisfactory to myself or to many hon. members of this House, yet the existing state of affairs on the Intercolonial Railway is very much better than that which prevailed when the Conservatives were managing that railway. I remember very well that when the Intercolonial Railway was being constructed in Cape Breton under the late government, the men were very glad to get 95 cents per day, and the then government never made any effort to secure for them an increase in that miserable rate of pay. While the pay these men receive at the present time is not sufficient to enable them to live as they ought to live, yet we have the consolation to know that it is better than the pay they received when the late government was in power. I shall not discuss to-night with the leader of the opposition the question of the deficits on the Intercolonial Railway. He need not be reminded; the House need not be reminded, and the country need not be reminded, that we had more deficits on the Intercolonial Railway previous to 1896 than since that time. We have had fewer deficits since 1896 than we had before, notwithstanding the fact that wages on the Intercolonial Railway are now much higher than they were before. I rose simply for the purpose of giving my approval to the resolution of my hon. friend (Mr. Logan), which I hope the government will entertain.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has alluded to the fact that the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Postmaster General are not present on this occasion. It is very much to be regretted, I agree with him; but my hon. friend will agree with me also that members of parliament are sometimes absent from parliament for other duties, or for other reasons, good or bad. If the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Postmaster General are not here, they cannot be accused of being absent from any neglect of their duties. They have not been dining or banqueting at other cities. It so happens that they are absent for very cogent reasons which we all deplore. It is well known that the Minister of Railways and Canals has not been in good health this session, and the Postmaster General is laid up with a severe attack which I am sorry to say may prevent his attendance at the House for some time to come. But I hope to relieve the apprehension of the leader of the opposition in regard to this matter. The Postmaster General did not expect that the subject of the wages paid to the packers and sorters would come up for discussion to-day, for the reason that he has a Bill on the Order paper on that very subject to which the amendment of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) would be more germane than it is to this motion. As to the salaries of the men who are the subject of the present motion, the trackmen on the Intercolonial Railway, I am happy to say to my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, and happy also to inform my hon. friend (Mr. Logan) who has moved the motion, that this very question is at this moment engaging the attention of the government. Less than ten days ago a delegation of the Association of Trackmen on the Intercolonial Railway had an interview with the government in which they asked not for such a substantial increase in their wages as the motion proposes, but that the government would hear them and discuss with them the question of an increase in their wages. They made a very fair suggestion, but upon it being represented to them that at this time the minister was too busy to give the matter the attention which it deserved, but that he would discuss it with them after the session, they have agreed to defer it until then, when an interview will take place between them and the Department of Railways and Canals on the subject. Under such circumstances, I think my hon. friend will agree with me that his motion might very well be withdrawn, because he will be glad to know, I am sure, that the step which has been taken is satisfactory to the trackmen themselves. With regard to the salaries paid to the men employed on the Intercolonial Railway, I am sure that my hon. friend the mover of this motion and all those who have supported it will admit that the present government have not done badly at all with their employees. All the salaries have been increased since 1896. Even the trackmen, who form the subject of this motion, received an increase two or three years ago. They receive now $1.20 a day. It is not a very large wage, I admit, and there seems to be a general consensus of opinion that it should be increased. The discussion that has taken place here will no doubt serve a good purpose when the time comes for the discussion of the matter between the men and the Minister of Railways and Canals. The minister will be very much assisted by the discussion that has taken place to-day and the general expression of opinion that has been conveyed from all sides of the House that the men who give their time and services to the country ought to receive adequate compensation. My hon. friend who has moved this motion has sought to make a comparison between the salaries paid on the Canadian Pacific Railway and those paid on the Intercolonial Railway. He has stated, and stated truly, that the wages paid on the Canadian Pacific Railway are somewhat higher than the present wages paid on the Intercolonial Railway. I do not know, however, that this is an argument, and I do not chose to discuss the subject on that basis at all. It is very difficult if not impossible, to lay down a uniform rate of wages to be paid to trackmen. It must depend very largely on the locality. There are sections of the country where $1.20 represents much more than it does in cities like Montreal and Ottawa. The men understand that themselves, and are prepared to discuss this view with the government in the conference that is to take place between them, and the administration a few days hence. I hope therefore upon the assurance I have given that the matter will be considered and adjusted, that my hon. friend from Cumberland will agree to withdraw his motion, and I hope my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier will do the same with his amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. As the Premier states that he is at the present time in negotiation with the Trackmen's Association, of course I do not desire to do anything that is going to injure the chances of the men to have this matter thoroughly discussed, and their wages increased all along the line if possible. I trust the negotiations which are going on at the present time between the Trackmen's Association and the government will lead to the conclusion that the Intercolonial Railway trackmen should be paid the rate of wages which I have suggested in this motion. The rate of $1.50 a day is not proposed as a hard and fast wage to be paid all over the system of railways; but it is proposed as the minimum wage to be paid to workingmen. I base my case on the simple ground that any man who is fit to be a trackman of the Intercolonial Railway or fit to be a handler of freight, or to be entrusted with hundreds of thousands of dollars of the property of Canada, who is not worth $1.50 a day, should not be on the Intercolonial Railway or any other railway in Canada. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island has said that there are men who are worth one dollar per day while others are worth $1.50, but the question I am discussing now is the fixing of a minimum rate, and I am afraid that my hon. friend does not quite understand the responsibilities of the trackmen upon great systems of railways. Before a man can be a trackman, he must , in the first place, go on the road as a sort of apprentice.

An hon. MEMBER. I wish they were paid $5 instead.

Mr. LOGAN. As I have already stated, I brought this matter, during four or five years, before the railway department and before the general manager, and as a last resort, I have brought it up in this House. A man has to be an apprentice for several months, and then, if found competent by the trackmaster, he is given a permanent position on the Intercolonial Railway and takes all the responsibility of the work. He has to keep that road in good condition, and is liable to be called out at any time, at any hour of the night or day, even on Sundays. He must be there on all occasions to protect the track and has to work nine and ten and sometimes twelve hours a day. The greater the storms in winter and the hotter the sun in summer, the harder he has to work, and yet we only pay him the miserable sum of $1.20 per day. The hon. leader of the opposition has tried to draw a red herring across the track by seeking to cast reflections on the Minister of Labour and the work of the Labour Department. But that hon. gentleman dare not stand up here and move that the Labour Bureau, established by the Postmaster General be abolished. He knows just as well as I do, that the establishment of that department was a step in the right direction. He knows well that the Minister of Labour has done more for the labouring men of Canada than all the Cabinet Ministers of the Conservative administration were able to do from 1867 down to the advent of the present government. He is perfectly well aware that in the old days, when government work was done down in Nova Scotia, navvies and dagoes were brought in to work for a pittance of from 60 to 75 cents per day, and our own labouring men had to walk the streets or accept the miserable wages in competition with foreigners. But to-day these workingmen have to be paid the current wages of the locality, and consequently the workingmen men of Canada are given the preference, and these workingmen appreciate what has been done for them by this government. Instead of hon. gentlemen carping and complaining, it seems to me that they ought to support the Minister of Railways in doing more for labouring men than was done for them in the past, by increasing their wages and enabling them to have more home comforts than they formerly enjoyed. I regret that the minister is not here, but I know that his ill health prevents him from attending our evening sessions, but I trust that the negotiations betwen the trackmen and the Minister of Railways and the First Minister and other members of the government will result in an increase of their wages. The hon. Minister of Public Works deserves great credit for the manner in which he treats the labouring men who are working under him. I have no fault to find with him, and I believe that when the trackmen's case is placed before the Minister of Railways by the Trackmen's Association, and he is fully seized of the labours and responsibilities of these men, both of which are increased in these days by the faster and heavier trains employed, he will, with that sense of fairness he has shown the other employees on the Intercolonial, increase their wages by fixing a minimum of at least $1.50 per day.

If I can have the consent of the seconder of my motion, I would be disposed to accept the assurances of the First Minister that the case of these men, whose claims I am urging, will receive very consideration.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). If the mover of this resolution will get no more satisfaction out of it for the class of men whose claims he is advocating than the letter carriers obtained out of the promise of the First Minister in their case, I am afraid that he will find that he has taken up the time of this House in vain. A year ago, when I had the pleasure of attending a deputation of the letter carriers who waited on the government, we were told by the ministers then present that their grievances would be considered and justice done to them, but from that day to this nothing has been accomplished, and I am very much afraid that the same result will follow this resolution which the First Minister has asked to be withdrawn.

Mr. MONK. I regret very much that it is impossible for me to withdraw the amendment. I think that this is the right time to take the sense of the House upon this important question. I quite agree with the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan) that the pay of $1.50 a day is quite inadequate, and even if he were disposed to withdraw his resolution, I certainly do not feel warranted in withdrawing the amendment. Whatever doubt there may exist, as the hon. member for Prince Edward Island has said, as to whether some men may be really worth more than $1 a day or not, there can be no doubt that the men employed on the Lachine canal are worth more than that sum, and as regards the employees of the post office in the cities of Montreal and Toronto, and in every city where there is a street delivery, the wages paid the letter carriers are a subject of scandal throughout the country. If I were to consent to the withdrawal of the amendment, which brings those two classes under the consideration of the House, I would be doing something which it would be very difficult to explain. We are not enacting a law, we are merely expressing an opinion, and if the government are going to consider the question of wages on the Intercolonial Railway, and if the Postmaster General has a Bill dealing with the question of the letter carriers, stampers, and sorters in Montreal and Toronto, it is well that the House should be now given the opportunity of expressing its views as to the course of conduct which we think ought to guide the government in the consideration of these questions.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I entirely dissent from the view expressed by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that this is the proper moment in which to deal with the question. The resolution and the amendment before the House present two classes of workingmen as deserving of special consideration—those employed on the government railways and those employed in the post office. The First Minister has called attention to the fact that the claims of both these classes are engaging the attention of the government, and that one of them is to be dealt with by a Bill which will be laid before the House by the Postmaster General. Therefore the House will still have ample opportunity of dealing with the claims of the letter carriers in a most effective way when the Bill is submitted to us. There is therefore no need for the House to pass an opinion with regard to the wages of the post office officials. As to the other class, the First Minister has said that an arrangement has been made for a conference to be held at the close of the session between the representatives of these men and the Minister of Railways. My sympathies go out entirely to the workingmen, after the statements that have been made to-night. I do not say that it would be wise to lay down a universal rule. The resolution does not confine itself to the trackmen, but goes further and says that all other labourers shall receive not less than $1.50 a day.

That is open to some discussion. As a general rule, I would say that able-bodied men doing any intelligent work in Canada should be able to earn $1.50 a day. But let us not conceal from ourselves the fact that many workingmen receive less in private life. I know that there are among our government officials persons who are earning less money, and nobody seems particularly concerned about them. Some are messengers, whose work requires that they shall be very intelligent men, do not receive $1.50 a day. When you consider that the labourer who receives $1.50 a day only works for a portion of his time, you see that he is not so well paid on the whole as others who may get a less rate per day, but who have the advantage of steady employment, as is the case with the men employed in the government service. I am resisting this motion, not for any lack of sympathy for the men concerned, because my sympathies go out entirely to them. I have no doubt that the discussion this evening will have the useful purpose of assisting the ministers concerned in fixing a rate of wages which will be more satisfactory than that of the past. But I believe it is not wise that the House should commit itself in this hasty way in these matters, when they are engaging the attention of the ministers who have the management of these particular branches of the public service. I think we would be unwise to proceed to a division on this motion. I move that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. HUGHES (King's). In view of the statement made by the Prime Minister, I am willing, as seconder of the motion, that it should be withdrawn.

House divided on amendment (Hon. Mr. Fielding).

SETTLEMENT OF RAILWAY LABOUR DISPUTES.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 146) for the settlement of railway labour disputes. He said: The object of this Bill is to prevent lockouts and strikes upon railways by providing a more satisfactory way than those violent measures afford for the settlement of such disputes, and of differences as from time to time arise between railway companies and their employees. Although this is hardly the occasion for any lengthened observations, still as the measure is somewhat novel, perhaps a few words now would not be out of place. I would say that the proposition is in fact one for compulsory arbitration between railway companies and their employees in regard to the various subjects of controversy that from time to time arise between those parties. The measure is confined entirely to the railway world, it does not deal with any other than railway industries, and therefore it is not a precedent for the treatment of disputes between other classes. Railway companies, it is to be remembered, occupy a unique position. Whilst strikes and lockouts upon railways affect the companies and their employees, there is a third interest to be considered, the public interest, perhaps the greatest of all, and that paramount interest appears to give jurisdiction on this occasion for the House to adopt what is apparently an extreme means in order to ward off the evil consequences flowing from railway strikes and lockouts. It is unnecessary to point out what those consequences are, they are apparent to all. When a strike takes place upon a railway the road falls into disrepair, the traffic is less safe, the travelling public and the train hands alike suffer and run greater risks. Delays in transportation of goods are more frequent, and at times the strike culminates in a cessation of the operations of the railway.

Railways are the creatures of parliament, they are created in the public interest, and for that reason they are given rights paramount to those of the individual. They are created to serve the public, in the first place, and it is the duty of the people's representatives to see that the object of parliament in granting charters is not defeated, either by the company or by their employees. Last winter there was a wheat blockade in the North-west Territories. We are told that, partial as was the interruption of the railway on that occasion, it caused a very considerable public loss. What would have been the consequences to Canada, if the Canadian Pacific Railway, instead of a partial failure of service on that occasion, had been unable to turn a wheel for a week? It would have wrought, doubtless, widespread disaster to our country, yet such a contingency is always possible so long as there is no satisfactory tribunal for promoting friendly relations between companies and their men, and settling the labour disputes that are always arising between railway companies and their employees. Sooner or later strikes and lockouts lead to arbitration. Why not sooner rather than later? This measure proposes to substitute the provisions of this Bill, when it becomes an Act, for the present procedure of a strike or a lockout. The measure provides for the establishment of a tribunal equipped with ample powers for the settlement of all these questions. It is proposed to apply its provisions not merely to railways operating under Dominion, but also to those operating under provincial charters, and it will also be made applicable to the Intercolonial Railway and to any railways owned by provinces, with the consent of the governments of those provinces. It will apply to a railway operated by steam, electricity or any other motor power. The range of subjects that may be referred is only limited by the variety of the subjects of dispute arising between railway companies and their employees. The measure declares that strikes and lockouts shall be illegal, and it provides penalties for the contravention of these provisions. For the settlement of disputes there will be provincial boards of arbitration to deal with these questions if they are of a provincial character, but if they are more far-reaching than provincial, then, they will be dealt with by a Dominion board. The different provincial boards will be equipped with a clerk, who will be the medium of communication between the parties to the controversy and the board, and who will perform the clerical duties proper to his position. Each provincial board will be composed of three arbitrators, one to be chosen by the railway companies of the province, or operating within the province, according to a scale of voting that is provided in the Act, another to be chosen by the men, and the third arbitrator to be chosen by these two, or failing their making a choice, then by the Governor in Council. For the purposes of this measure the North-west Territories are deemed to be a part of the province of Manitoba, and there being seven provinces, there will be seven local boards. The railway companies will elect one arbitrator to each of these seven boards, the employees will elect another arbitrator to each provincial board, and these two will elect a third, or in default the Governor in Council will appoint the third arbitrator. Thus you will have seven arbitrators representiag the railway companies, seven employees' arbitrators, and seven arbitrators appointed by the government. In the event of the subject of dispute being more than a local one, it will be dealt with by the Dominion board. The Dominion board will consist of five members, two to be chosen out of the seven elected by the railway companies, two out of the seven elected by the employees, and the fifth to be chosen by the four, or failing their making a choice, then, by the Governor in Council. It will be the duty of this board, in the first instance, to be conciliatory and to endeavour to arrange a settlement of all matters in dispute. Failing in their efforts in that direction, the board is clothed with ample powers to proceed as arbitrators and to determine the questions referred to it and make an award. The award of the chairman and one other member of the board, being a provincial board, will be the award of the board. The award of the chairman and two other members, in the case of the Dominion board, will be the award of the board. The award of the board will be current for such time, not exceeding a year, as the award states, with a provision, however, that either party to the dispute may terminate it within a lesser period, but nevertheless, the award, when made, will continue in effect until another award has been made to take its place. It will not be permitted to any of the parties to the dispute to appear by counsel or professional gentlemen before the arbitrators unless by consent of both parties and of the arbitrators themselves. The award itself will not be cognizable in any court, and it shall not be removable to a court by certorari or in any other way for the purpose of amendment or of being quashed. In reference to the mode of election of provincial boards, the following is the proposal: There will be, at Ottawa, an officer, to be called the registrar, whose duty it will be from time to time to prepare the election registers. The duration of a provincial board will be three years, the elections being triennial, unless a vacancy shall occur, in which case there is provision for a by-election. A voters' list will be made up for the railways, and another for the employees, each railway operating within the province, being given as many votes in the election of its arbitrator as it has employees within the province. In regard to the employees, each employee in the province will have one vote. There will be two distant registers, the railways voting as one class and electing their representative on the board, and the men voting as one class and electing their representative on the board. They will vote by voting papers to be transmitted to the registrar, and these papers will be opened on a day named. There is provision for nomination and the usual machinery for the holding of such an election. In the event of a railway company, or other party, refusing to abide by the award, the measure provides penalties, and the last clause declares that these provisions shall apply to the government of Canada in respect to the Intercolonial Railway and to consenting provincial governments in respect to any railways which they may own and operate, and that the award shall be binding on the respective governments.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that the railway company shall have as many votes as they have employees. How will they vote ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is as between the different railway companies, giving them their relative voting power.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, just so. It may appear to be an inartistic method, but if any hon. gentleman can advise any better method, it will be welcome. I may say that it is not the intention of the government to pass this measure this session. It is presented to parliament and to the country now in order that it may receive consideration at the hands of the public, of the railway companies, and of their employees during the recess, and the government will welcome any suggestions calculated to perfect the measure, so that it may more effectually accomplish the object in view, namely, the peaceful settlement of labour disputes without any interruption to the operation of these railways and in a measure satisfactory to the great interests involved—to the interests of the railway companies and of the men.

Mr. A. W. PUTTEE (Winnipeg). As regards the scope of the Bill, do I understand that it will apply to all railways chartered by this parliament; to all railways of a local character; and to electric street railways of a municipal character ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. It will apply to all railways in Canada whether incorporated by the Dominion parliament, or by provincial legislatures, or otherwise; including the Dominion government railways and also including any railways owned by provincial governments, should such provincial governments give their consent. It is not felt that we would have the right to make a mandatory order against a provincial government without its consent. The Bill will include tramways, electric railways, and so on.

Mr. W. F. MACLEAN (East York). I would suggest that the Bill include telegraph companies as well. I throw out that suggestion to the minister.

Mr. INGRAM. Is there any legislation in any country in the world similar to this ?

Hon. Mr. ROSS. There is a compulsory arbitration Act in force in New Zealand, and it was adopted by the Commonwealth of Australia.

Mr. INGRAM. I know of the Australian legislation, but is this law similar to that ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Ross) refers to the legislation recently passed by the legislature of New South Wales. That was a law dealing with labour questions between man and man, and I believe the last clause of that measure makes it to some extent applicable to government railways. But it is to be borne in mind that both in New Zealand and Australia the railways are owned by the governments, so that the legislation there is scarcely a precedent for us here. I am not aware of any legislation of this precise nature, although there are features of this measure borrowed from the New Zealand measure, and some parts of the machinery are taken from legislation in our own country.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it the intention to have a sufficient number of copies of this Bill printed, so as to enable it to be distributed amongst the various bodies interested?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understand that the printing is controlled by the Printing Committee, but the government would be only too pleased to see a sufficient number of copies printed to meet all possible requirements. I should have added, that this measure will be in charge of the Minister of Labour, and the Bill gives him power to make rules for the better carrying out of the object in view.

Mr. PUTTEE. If I understood the minister aright, there would be only one board in each province which would deal with matters in every city of that province that has an electric street railway. That I presume will take that class of industry altogether out of the operation of the Conciliation Act. I may say that I consider this Bill to be a very important measure indeed. It seems to me that this is perhaps the most serious attempt along this line of industrial legislation that has ever been introduced into this parliament. I think we can congratulate ourselves, as well as the Minister of Labour, that all interests likely to be affected by this legislation are now in a position to fairly consider the measure; and that there is no antagonism at present between the parties in this country who will come under the scope of this Act. We may congratulate ourselves that there is also in Canada a decided leaning towards the progress of conciliation and arbitration, and that seeing that the Bill is not going to be pressed this session, we may in the meantime have the Bill fully considered by those parties who are interested. In 1900, when the Conciliation Act was introduced, I then was bold enough to say that I did not agree to the principle of voluntary conciliation; that I did not think we were justified in going to the trouble of passing a voluntary Conciliation Act of that kind. I went on record as being absolutely in favour of giving the principle of compulsory arbitration a trial. Since that time I have freely acknowledged that there has been some good accomplished by the Conciliation Act, and for my part, I have always been ready to assist it. I am pleased to say that the Conciliation Act has done some good, but at the same time I have not in any way revised my opinion that is is the most ineffective method we could take to deal with the very numerous cases of labour disturbances of one kind or another, that are bound to occur in this country as well as in other countries. I believe that a proper understanding and a proper application of the principle of compulsory arbitration, will affect a greater number of these cases than can any other system. The weakness of our present Act was apparent last year, when two of the greatest disturbances we have had in the country occurred; one on the Canadian Pacific Railway, extending from coast to coast, and the other in the mines of the mountain country of British Columbia. As a matter of fact, strikes are by no means always traceable to the employees, although that phase of the question is not given much attention. There is more than a suspicion that strikes are some times brought about on account of the needs or interests of the stock market for instance, and this has been charged to be the case in reference to some of the disturbances that have occurred in British Columbia. Our present Conciliation Act cannot even get started to investigate such matters. If I understand aright the proposition that has been put forward this afternoon, as far as the transportation companies are concerned they will mechanically come under the operation of this Bill should it ever become law. The minister has said that it involves the policy of compulsory arbitration. I did not expect that it went so far as that. I gladly welcome that however, but at the same time that very principle raises the question immediately, of the amount of caution that must be given to the consideration of this law. There must be nothing added to arbitration that will strengthen the fears of those who think that arbitration is only an extension of the method of going forward in the direction of striking a dead level in the matter of men's employment; or, that the law can be used in any way as an utter bar to progress along the lines that organized labour seeks to adhere to. The organization of labour is not now simply based on restlessness. Organization is now gone into on a business basis. Men give up their time and their money to it. They hire others from their own ranks to give their whole time and attention to the advancement of their interests and they expect to reap the benefit of that. They expect through their organization, through everything they can command to coordinate their interests, that they are going to get what every business man expects to get from his business—a return for the effort put forth; and in no way must the impression go out that the operation of this measure is going to bar the legitimate progress which the labour organization seeks for. As a matter of fact, it need not; but at the same time the opponents of the method now adopted by organized labour may seek to spread the impresion that it aims only to maintain the dead level. If this Bill should finally become law, its scope will be wider than I had dared to expect the Minister of Labour would put before parliament, because I was told two years ago that these matters were beyond the jurisdiction of this parliament; but if it shall extend to street railways, the scope of the measure will be sufficiently wide to enable us to see how this principle does operate; and I, for one, hope it will be found so satisfactory that we may then feel warranted in extending the operation of the principle to other industries.

Mr. RALPH SMITH (Vancouver). Mr. Speaker, it is impossible for the members of this House to form anything like an intelligent view of the proposition before them, not having seen the Bill. The only acquaintance we have with the principle at all is obtained from the explanation that has been given by the minister this afternoon. If I understand him aright, the great principle of the Bill is to make strikes impossible on railways. That principle of compulsory arbitration is an experiment in this country, one which has never yet been introduced in any degree in the Dominion of Canada—in fact, I may say on the American continent; but the principle of compulsory arbitration for the settlement of labour disputes is a very common principle in New Zealand and other of the Australian colonies, and a very successful principle at that. I think the minister has acted wisely in not seeking to apply such an important experiment to all the industries of the country. I am not certain that even the organized labour men of the country would support the general principle of a national compulsory arbitration. But I think he has acted very wisely in seeking to apply the principle to the operations of railways. A labour dispute on a railway is not like a labour dispute in any other business. We may have, for instance, a strike in a factory, the evils of which are practically confined to the people who live and work in that factory. We may have a strike in a coal mine or in any other kind of mine, the evils of which would be practically confined to the operations of that mine. But in the case of a labour dispute in connection with a railway, we are reminded that the most important factor affected by the outcome of the trouble is the great travelling public. Therefore the minister has acted wisely, when introducing experimental legislation of this kind, in attaching it to that industry which stands not only in greater need, but in absolute need of compulsory arbitration. If the public are to be safeguarded in travelling upon railways, it must be made impossible to have labour disputes on railways. The safety of the public is dependent on a good understanding being maintained between employers and employees on railways, and the only good reason that can be given for the application of the principle of compulsion in the settlement of disputes between the two parties is that there is a greater party than either which is seriously affected by the operation of a strike. And, Sir, all legislation practically, I may be permitted to say, rests on the principle of compulsion. In almost every instance its purpose is to protect the great public against the peculiar and special interests of private individuals or corporations; and I know no case in which the principle of compulsory arbitration can be applied so successfully as in the operation of railways. I think the minister has acted wisely, too, in permitting this Bill to be printed and circulated through the country for the consideration of the people affected by it. I do not think it would be a proper thing to apply an experiment of this kind without affording the parties affected by it an opportunity of looking into the matter and expressing their opinions upon it. In fact, I think that would be a good rule to follow in connection with all measures of vast importance—that they should be submitted for the consideration especially of the parties whose interests are likely to be affected by them. That is particularly desirable in a case of this kind, so that the men on the railways and the companies will have an opportunity of looking into this measure fully, and the members of this House will know by next session exactly what the interested parties think of it, and will then be in a far better position to deal with it. I believe that if this Bill is circulated throughout the country, it will be demonstrated that the employees on railways almost to a man will endorse the principle of compulsory arbitration. In my experience, in nine cases out of ten, the labour men all over the country are willing to submit their grievances to arbitration. As a matter of fact, the most important incorporated unions on the American continent have provisions in their constitutions seeking to bring about the settlement of disputes by arbitration. The whole difficulty about voluntary arbitration in the past has been the objections which corporations have had to the principle. I contend that this is where the government ought to step in, in the interest of the public. It must be admitted by the members of this House that a serious strike on any railway endangers the life of the great public. We must remember this, too, that a strike in a mine may stop the operation of the mine ; but the only people affected by it are the people directly employed. But a railway must operate. If the employees refuse to work, or if the employers refuse to concede what they think is their proper claim, the railway must operate all the same ; and there is where the necessity exists for provisions whereby serious troubles on railways may be averted. I think the minister has introduced a principle which will be endorsed by the labour men all over this country, and I hope he will take every means of circulating this Bill among the interested parties.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it intended that this Bill shall be brought to a second reading so that there may be a discussion on it, or is it intended simply to print it ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It will be printed of course, and the government will endeavour to give an opportunity for discussion on the second reading ; but it is not intended to press it this session.

Mr. SPROULE. It is intended that a discussion shall take place on the second reading this session

The PRIME MINISTER. I cannot say that the second reading will be taken this sesion.

Mr. SPROULE. I mean, will there de a discusion on it without carrying the second reading ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is not intended to carry the second reading. We want to have an early prorogration, but if we have the time we will discuss this measure on the second reading.

Mr. CLARKE. It is not intended that we should hear any more about it this session.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps we may, but I cannot say positively.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

YUKON—ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

The resolution respecting the appointment of an assistant commissioner of the North-west Mounted Police for the Yukon Territory, at $1,600 per annum, (the Prime Minister) read the second time, and agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 147) to amend the North-west Mounted Police Act of 1894.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

IMMIGRATION ACT.

Bill (No. 112) to amend the Immigration Act read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The transportation companies have called attention to the fact that there are cases in which it is necessary to land immigrants for medical treatment, and they fear that the clause of this Bill will prevent this being done. I propose therefore to add the following words :

Such prohibition may be absolute or may be accompanied by permission to land for medical treatment, but only for a determined period as may be provided by the order or proclamation.

The effect of this amendment would be that while we take power to prevent landing of immigrants by order absolutely, we may also permit their landing for the purposes of medical treatment. It might be desirable to remove the immigrants from the ship for medical treatment.

Mr. WILSON. I do not know whether the hon. minister has had any communication with the American authorities or not with reference to their mode of treating those people. I understand that when a sick immigrant lands at an American port he may be taken to the hospital or any other place. If it then be found that he cannot be treated successfully, he is taken back to the steamer and the steamship company is obliged to take care of him.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This does not relieve the steamship companies.

Mr. WILSON. I think the most feasible plan would be to enter into an arrangement with the United States, under which the American officials could examine all parties going to their ports and we would examine all coming to ours, and those not fit to land should not be allowed to land. In that way we would get rid of undesirable immigrants, such as we have in this country now, and get rid of them at very little cost. The United States are spending on our frontier at least $100,000 per year to keep undesirable immigrants out, and I do not see why we should not enter into an arrangement with them. We do not want undesirable immigrants any more than they do, although we appear to have been anxious rather for numbers than for the best kind. We want immigrants who will make good citizens, but unfortunately we are losing a very large number of our own people who are going to the United States and elsewhere and we are getting in their place most undesirable people from the older countries—people not allowed to enter the United States. And once these people are in, we have no means of getting rid of them.

Mr. McCREARY. When the hon. member for Lennox tries to convey the impression that we are getting a lot of undesirable immigrants, such as would not be allowed to enter the United States, he will find, if he will take the trouble to look into the United States reports, that such is not the case. We get no immigrants who would not be allowed to enter the United States. The class of immigrants with which the United States have trouble is not the Austrians, Germans, Russians or Swedes, but those who come from the towns and cities of Italy and who flock to the cities of the United States. You never see those people go on to the agricultural lands either of Canada or the United States. They go into the manufacturing centres.

They go to the manufacturing states of the Union. That class of immigration is what has given trouble in the United States, but we have not been bothered with it. Now, while I say that, I will admit that a very small percentage of Galicians, Austrians, Poles and Germans have had some diseases, but it is a very small percentage. Still, I think that the minister, when drafting this measure, might as well have gone a little further; he might as well have gone as far, almost, as the United States has gone, by providing that not only can an immigrant be stopped at the port of entry, but that he can be deported within a year after arrival if he develops, for instance, insanity and it could be proven that he was insane before he came here. We have had four or five cases of that kind that have been brought to my notice. Fortunately, we were able to get the railway companies to take them out without compulsion. But we had to send a man to the sea-board with the insane, and that cost us some money at least. Then, convicts—we get a small percentage of these. I think that eight or ten came before the police court in Winnipeg who had served terms in the countries from which they came. I think that five of them came from Denmark. Then, there may be contagious diseases that will not develop at the port of entry—say small-pox that may have been contracted before reaching Canada, but that may not develop until the immigrants have gone far on their way. We know that in 1883 a large number of immigrants, three or four hundred of them, who came from Europe destined to the United States, and reached Winnipeg before the disease developed, cost for quarantine about $14,000. In 1898 a large number came here who must have had small-pox, but the disease was not sufficiently developed to be detected at the port of entry. It is a question whether the municipality that had to undergo the expense ought not to be remunerated for its outlay. Then, I see no provision in the Bill to compel the railway companies to carry back these immigrants. Most of the immigrants at present coming in come a long distance west, and the government should not be put to the expense of removing these undesirable immigrants. The law of the state of Minnesota and of other states of the Union provides that the railway companies that brought them to the state is to carry them out, and that law, if I am not mistaken, was made a federal law within the last two years. I believe that this measure, when put upon the statute-book, will have a desirable effect, but, in my opinion, it does not go far enough to touch the root of the difficulty.

Mr. MACLEAN. I have a letter dealing with the general immigration policy of the government, which I would like to read. It is from the Toronto Trades and Labour Council, and is as follows :—

W. F. Maclean, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa.

(Re Immigration Policy.)

Dear Sir,—I have been instructed by this council to call your attention to the sum of $445,000, which has been placed in the estimates for this year for the assistance of immigration.

A memorial was sent in to you some time ago by this council, pointing out the reasons why we objected unanimously and most strenuously to the expenditure of public money for this purpose. The members of this council wish me to express their regret that so far their communication has received no consideration in this matter.

The reports show that there has been expended for the assistance of immigration during the last ten years $2,400,173. Must not the effect of this policy be to intensify the competition on to which labour is at present subject?

Is there any other class in the community which is treated in this way ?

The excuse has been made that assistance is given only to those who intend to settle on the land ; but how can that make the slightest difference? The intention of the government will no more determine the ultimate destination of the settlers, than it will affect the flow of the tides. To say that labour in the rural districts will not compete with the wage earner is just as foolish as to say that water will not find its level. All the facts of the case are against such a contention During the last hundred years the movement on this continent from the rural district to the cities has been so marked that whereas the civic population a century ago was only three per cent of the whole, at the present time it is upwards of thirty per cent.

While the general population on this continent has doubled every twenty-five years, the civic population has doubled every ten years. How, therefore, can any government say that the immigration will not drift into the cities, as it has been doing all along ? Suppose the assistance was confined to those who will take up agricultural land would that be the slightest justification for this policy ? When we ask the question, who is it bears the burden of taxation ? Is it the man who works all day, or is it some other man who collects his thousands of dollars yearly from ground rents or who draws his immense dividends from some coal mines ? There can be no question as to the correct answer. Industry and industry alone must bear the burden all the time. Then when we ask the further question, who reaps the benefit from this policy, what must be the answer ? Increased population does not increase the price of goods, nor does it increase the rate of wages ; but it does increase the price of land. Already the price of land in Winnipeg, which had almost no value thirty years ago, is now a thousand dollars per foot frontage on the best sites. In this city the best lots have increased fifty-fold in seventy years. Are we not fully warranted in stating that the immigration policy taxes industry to enable the land owner to subject the toilers to still greater exactions ?

Has the government ever used one dollar of taxes to enable the workingmen to buy their goods cheaper, or to reduce the exactions of the land owners? Never, but while it places a tariff to shield the employers from foreign competition and whilst it brings increased rents to the land owners, to the working classes there is not merely unrestricted competition, but that competition intensified by assisted immigration.

The effect of this policy must be to keep wages down to the lowest figures.

We regret that we are thus compelled to draw your attention to this disregard of our request, so reasonable and so just.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

D. W. KENNEDY,
Secretary,
59 Edward Street.

I only received this letter to-day. While it is not quite germane to the particular branch of the question now before the House, it does deal with the government's general immigration policy, and I trust the minister will give some consideration to this statement made by the Trades and Labour Council of the city of Toronto.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not wish to speak again on the general question, but to say a word about the document that has just been read. The inconsistency of the statement made is shown by the reference to the values of land in the city of Winnipeg thirty years ago. There happened to be no city of Winnipeg thirty years ago. I believe it was incorporated in 1874. Before that time, it was only an Indian settlement, and its lands had no value at all. This letter involves a contention that I have often discussed with the labour unions. They wish us to believe that in bringing immigrants and settling them on the land, developing the prairie country and raising forty, fifty or sixty million of bushels of wheat a year, we do not increase the price of labour. I think that is one of the most ridiculous things that could be stated before this House. For instance, take the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1890 and 1891, how much of their rolling stock was standing idle in their round-houses? In some seasons practically 50 per cent of that rolling stock is idle, and, of course, the crews of the engines are thrown out of work. In seasons when there is a large crop, not only are none of these men idle, but a large number of extra men are employed. We need only look at the facts to see at once the fallacy of this argument.

Mr. OLIVER. I am glad to see this Bill introduced, very glad to support its provisions, and only sorry that it does not go a great deal further. When we say that we are dealing with the question of increasing our population, we are not dealing with the whole question, for there is not merely the question of increase, but the question of improvement before us. When we deal with the immigration question without considering it from the standpoint of the possibility and necessity of efforts being made to improve the population as we increase it, we are not dealing with the subject as its importance requires. It seems to me strange that it should be required, at this date, to provide checks on the entrance of diseased immigrants to our country. If such checks have not existed in the past, they certainly cannot be provided too soon, nor can they be made too complete.

But from my standpoint the diseases existing amongst immigrants are but a trifling consideration in comparison with the general character of the immigrants. I cannot understand the frame of mind which looks carelessly upon the introduction into the very life of our country of a population without regard to whether such population will raise or lower the general standard of our people. Let the people who come in be the healthiest in the world, if their disposition, and ambition, and inclination are not such as will help us to realize our ideals, then their presence is objectionable and a detriment to us. I am not claiming that we are the best people in the world ; that our civilization is the highest form of civilization ; but I do claim that our present civilization suits us, and it is that which we have set ourselves to improve. Our social system, our political system, our religious system are those which we have inherited and under which we are trying to improve ourselves. Then if it is worth while to organize all these systems for the purpose of improving ourselves in this country, it is surely worth while to take means that our efforts shall not be to a certain extent rendered useless by the introduction of an element into our population which will have a contrary effect. It is not necessary to say that such people are not as good as we are. Possibly a Chinaman is a better man than an Englishman, let the Englishman answer for that himself; a Japanese may be a better man or a Russian may be a better man than the Englishman ; I say nothing about that, he may be a much better man, but he is not one of us, and inasmuch as he is not one of us he is not helping us to develop along those lines that Providence has chosen for us, or that we have chosen for ourselves. His presence is a hindrance and not a help.

This country is of immense extent, it is of equally immense possibilities. The population of Canada at the present time occupies but a very small part of our total area, and turns to account but a very small part of our total resources. We have five millions of people in a country capable of supporting easily fifty millions. It does not need any demonstration on my part to show that if the increase of population which will necessarily take place in the development of those resources, is of a character and constitution essentially different from our own, not only will they build up a different civilization whenever they establish themselves, but they will infallibly control our civilization in this part of the country. One to ten, the odds are too many. The western prairies are the seat and cradle of the future population of this Dominion. They are the seat of power and control, and as that population is, so will this Dominion be. If you will fill those prairies with people of different ideas, different aspirations and different views from our own, you are simply placing yourselves under a yoke, you are swerving your country from that destiny which your fathers intended it, and which you fondly hoped you were achieving. It is I say, under the present circumstances of this Dominion, a matter of the highest necessity that the population we introduce into this country should be like minded with ourselves, so far as that is possible, if we are to achieve greatness as we understand greatness, if we are to achieve civilization as we understand civilization, if we are to achieve liberty in government as we understand liberty in government.

Some years ago we believed, or some of us believed, that those vast areas of fertile country in the west must for ever remain unpeopled, or become inhabited with such people as we could gather from any corner of the world. But nobody thinks that today. At present people are thronging into those territories by thousands, people equal to ourselves in intelligence, in energy, in ambition, in civilization, like-minded with ourselves in almost every particular. There is no danger that these prairies will not be occupied by people such as we will be proud to work with in building up our civilization. There is, however, one danger, and only one, and that is that they may be occupied by other and inferior people who will keep out those whom we desire to help us in establishing and improving our institutions. I say that every undesirable settler who enters the North-west, who is, we will say, inferior to ourselves in his knowledge of government, in his ideas of liberty, is a detriment to this country, inasmuch as to a certain extent he displaces another man whose ideas are similar to our own.

I believe in immigration, and in a vigorous immigration policy. But I also believe that when we are spending money to bring immigrants into our country the first consideration should be the intellectual as well as the physical quality of those immigrants. I would like to say that our immigration policy as directed to the United States has been a pronounced success, and I am glad to believe that it will continue to be so. I am sorry to say that as directed to the British islands, to the mother country, or to the mother countries, if you like, it has not been a pronounced success. I think I am safe in saying that up to date it has been a dismal failure. I have heard it said that we need not look to the British islands for immigrants to people our country ; that the supply was practically exhausted. If that is the case, it is a melancholy condition. It is a marvellous thing if those two islands, which have carried liberty and civilization, and conquest, if you like, around the world, are as to population in a state of decadence, and that we cannot look for any further immigration from that quarter. But, if we look at the records, we find that people are still flowing out of those apparently, except Canada. I am given to understand that a new system is being adopted in regard to immigration from the British isles. I am not familiar with the details of that system, but I will say that there is no possibility of adopting any system which could be less effective than that which has prevailed during the past years. I am satisfied that any system that is adopted will be an improvement. Now, I would like to say that in my estimation, if we, as Canadians, wish to get the fullest benefit from the settlement of the North-west Territories, it is necessary that that settlement should be, as much as possible of people not only much like ourselves, but altogether like ourselves, not only in ideas of civilization, but also in political traditions; in other words, that we should draw upon the British islands as much as possible for our immigration for that country and that every effort should be made to attract immigration from the British isles.

Let me say further that it appears to me to have been a mistake in the past to have spent so much money as we have in paying bonuses to steamship companies for the conveyance of immigrants and for this reason: We made the steamship companies, by that means our immigration agencies, and it did not make any difference to the steamship companies what the character of the immigrant was, who he was, or where he was from, so long as they got the bonus. It seems to me, from my point of view, that this is a most undesirable system and a most undesirable expenditure, and I would ask that it be not continued. Understand me, I do not object to large expenditures for immigration, but I want these expenditures to be made with a view of securing the better people and not the worse. To depend on the steamship company is to put a premium upon the worse rather than upon the better.

I would like to say still further and to urge upon the House at large, upon hon. members who come from all parts of this Dominion, that the immigrant who is of the most benefit to this country in every way is the man of our own blood, namely, the native-born Canadian, who, finding it necessary to shift his ground, must go either to the United States or to the Canadian North-west.

Mr. McCREARY. What about New Ontario?

Mr OLIVER. Well, those who represent New Ontario can talk for New Ontario. I say that in my estimation it is a mistake, and the worst kind of mistake to consider that it is not a question of interest to this country or to this parliament whether our people go to the North-west Territories or not. I have heard it said here, and in the country that we want our people to stay at home. Of course we want our people to stay at home, but unless we nail them down they will not stay at home if the conditions are not suitable. It is because of the disposition and the determination to better themselves that they are so valuable as settlers wherever they may go, and they make such a success. I cannot look upon the matter quietly when I see from the census returns that we have 1,000,000 native-born Canadians in the United States, while we have in Manitoba and the North-west Territories considerably less than half a million of people of all nationalities. There must necessarily be in the United States four native-born Canadians for every one that is in the North-west Territories. I put it to this House and to the government that this country has made a more substantial loss in all that constitutes value by the transference of the energy and wealth of our people to the United States rather than to the North-west Territories than it has from any other cause. There is no other cause that has tended so much to the comparatively slow progress of this Dominion as the fact that our life blood has been drained across the line. While we have been trying to develop our own country with other people, the United States has been developed, to a large extent, by our people. It is a matter of the utmost interest to every man in every province of this Dominion that the people of Canada should be retained in Canada, and if they cannot be retained in one part they should be retained in another, if possible. That there should be no lack of effort put forth to secure the settlement of our own surplus population where we have surplus land to dispose of amply sufficient for all of them.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to say a few words in reference to this matter. I do not know whether any provision has been made by the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) in this Bill, or whether provision is contained in the statute already in existence, to compel railway and steamship companies to bear all the expense attendant upon the return of undesirable immigrants brought by them to the country. My attention has been drawn to chapter 65 of the Revised Statutes of 1886, which deals with immigration and immigrants. Subsection 2 of section 17 provides for a bond to be entered into by the steamship companies for the return of lunatics, or for the indemnifying of a province or municipality in case a lunatic is permitted to remain in the country. Section 18 makes provision as follows:

> The proper immigration agent may, with the consent of the Minister of Agriculture, make arrangements with the master, owner or charterer of the vessel carrying the lunatic, idiotic, deaf and dumb, blind or infirm person with respect to whom a bond has been given, or money paid in lieu thereof, or with the master, owner or charterer of any other vessel, for the re-conveyance of such person to the port from which he was carried to Canada.

Section 23 deals with pauper immigration:

> The Governor General may, by proclamation, whenever he deems it necessary, prohibit the landing of pauper or destitute immigrants in all ports or any port in Canada, until such sums of money as are found necessary are provided and paid into the hands of one of the Canadian immigration agents, that the master of the vessel carrying such immigrants, for their temporary support and transport to their place of destination.

And so on. I believe a proclamation was issued a year or two ago against the admission into Canada of pauper immigrants. It would seem to me, from what I have seen in the papers since, that the proclamation is practically a dead letter, and that Canada is still being made a dumping ground for a very undesirable class of immigrants.

I noticed in the Montreal 'Herald,' just about a year ago, an article referring to the arrival of a very large number of destitue Italians at Montreal. The Montreal 'Herald' is not a paper that would knowingly or wilfully make a statement derogatory to the government. The 'Herald,' of the 6th of April, 1901, had an article entitled: 'Influx of Italians to Montreal.' 'About 2,000 now here.' 'Many of them penniless and unable to find work.' It seems to me that if the provisions of the proclamation issued by the government had been enforced, it would have been impossible for these people to have been permitted to have come into Montreal, and to be a tax upon the good people of that city and other parts of the Dominion. I am not opposed, Mr. Chairman, to any able-bodied immigrant coming to Canada. I rather think that we ought to endeavour to promote a vigorous immigration policy, but of course limiting the immigrants to the right class—of good character and not destitute. So far, the policy inaugurated by hon. gentlemen opposite has not been as successful as we would like to see it in that respect. It is a lamentable fact, a fact which has been substantiated in this House, that a large number of diseased immigrants have been brought into Canada, are now in Canada, and are being maintained at the expense of the Canadian people. The hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson), in the recent debate on immigration, read copious extracts from a statement sent to him by one of the officials of the United States government, stationed in Canada for the purpose of examining immigrants who arrive here destined for the United States, and of determining whether they shall be permitted to enter that country or not. It seems to me a most deplorable condition of things that we should have a staff of thirty-five or forty United States officials stationed in Canada, sorting out and examining the immigrants who land at Canadian ports en route to the United States, and determining who shall be given certificates to enable them to enter the United States, and who shall not. That is a condition of things that should be put a stop to. It can be stopped in two ways; either by having a more careful examination of emigrants before they leave the ports in Europe whence they sail, or, having our own agents take charge of them when they land here, and preventing those who are undesirable in any way from staying in this country. The clauses of the Immigration Act which I read, seem to me to give the government power to prohibit the introduction of diseased pauper immigrants into Canada. But in the Bill which the hon. minister (Mr. Sifton) has introduced, I do not find that any provision has been made to compel the railway companies and the steamship companies to assume the expense which the people of Canada are put to in order to deport these undesirable immigrants to the country whence they came. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) read from a circular which has been sent to every member of the House—a protest from the Toronto Trades and Labour Council against indiscriminate immigration. That is not the first document of the kind which has been submitted to members of parliament during the present session. There was a document issued at the beginning of the session, away back in the middle of February, and which I believe was sent to every member of this House. That document declares very strongly against indiscriminate immigration. It says:

> The council—Toronto Trades and Labour Council—does not raise the slightest objection, or refuse the fullest welcome to suitable immigrants who come of their own accord, but they do most emphatically object to the taxation of labour in order to flood the labour market against the wage earner, and to favour the protected capitalists. While the tariff even favours the employer 50 per cent, the immigration policy cuts down the wage of labour, we know not how much per cent.

If that statement is true with regard to healthy immigrants, it has much more force in the case of undesirable immigrants; diseased immigrants who are permitted to come to Canada—immigrants who are not able to earn their own living and who become a tax on the people of this country. The Montreal 'Star,' on the 22nd of March, had a number of sketches of the types of immigrants who have been landing in Canada during the past two or three months. It had also what purports to be an interview with this very same Mr. Watchorn, the special United States immigration inspector in Canada, and the statement that this gentleman makes shows that a not very desirable class of immigrants is coming into Canada. This article is headed: 'Menace to the health of Montreal.' 'How the city is being made a dumping ground for immigrants rejected by the United States inspector.' 'Disease and dirt being scattered broadcast amongst them.' 'How the American inspectors carry on their work.' The introductory paragraphs of this article are as follows:

> Ninety-eight per cent of the European immigrants who are prohibited from entering the United States by the American officials in Montreal and at other points of entry along the border, are suffering from infectious diseases which are the direct result of filth and lack of sanitary methods. Such is the startling statement made by Mr. Robert Watchorn, the special immigration inspector, who has charge of all the immigrant inspectors from Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, to Montreal, including Port Huron, Detroit, Niagara Falls, Black Rock, Buffalo and Vanceboro, Maine.

How long has the work being going on ?

Officially, since the first of last September.

And what has been the result since the first of September ?

That about 500 persons have been rejected as unfit, either physically, mentally, morally or financially, to enter the United States.

And these were all rejected right here in Montreal ?

Yes, in Montreal.

To say nothing of the other points of entry where no doubt similar rejections were made ?

Exactly.

What would be the percentage of refusals at Detroit, the Soo, Port Huron, Niagara Falls, Black Rock, St. John and Vanceboro ?

I should say that all these points combined would have about as many as Montreal.

That would be one thousand, and these figures would corroborate the statement made by Mr. Watchorn in a letter to the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) in which he stated that since the inspection commenced in September last, 1,000 diseased immigrants, disqualified immigrants, whose destination was the United States, were prohibited from entering that country, and many of them unhappily and unfortunately have been permitted to remain in Canada. So far as I understand this Bill, the minister has not made any provision for the deportation of these people, many of whom are still in the country; nor is there any provision to compel the railway and steamship companies to bear all the expense in connection with their deportation.

My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) referred to the decreasing number of immigrants of British origin, who are coming into Canada. From the reports which I have seen in the papers during the last three or four weeks, I am led to believe there will be a larger number of British immigrants coming into Canada during the present season, than for many years past, and I am glad to see that statement made. The hon. member for Alberta said that it was alleged that the stream of immigration from the British Isles has fallen off. That is not the case. If the official statistics of the United States can be relied upon, during the past ten years over three-quarters of a million of immigrants of British birth left the old country and have found a home in the United States. During the past thirty years more than three millions of our kith and kin have left the United Kingdom and have gone to the United States. Greater efforts it seems to me, should be made, and I hope they will be more successful, to induce a larger number of Irish, English and Scotch to make their homes in Canada, and to try to turn the tide of immigration from the United States towards Canada. I believe that in proportion to the total number of immigrants coming into this country, we are receiving too large a percentage of foreign-born. In 1891, of our total immigration we received 70 per cent of British origin and about 30 per cent of foreign origin, whereas in the last five years the tables have been turned, the proportion being about 30 per cent British and 70 per cent foreign. That, in my humble judgment, is not a satisfactory state of affairs, and proper steps should be taken to induce a larger percentage of people to come from the old land and settle here and help to build up this country. To show that this undesirable class of immigrants is still trying to find its way through Canada to the United States, and is still being turned back at the frontier, I will read a clipping which I have taken from the Toronto 'Evening Star' of March 22nd. The Toronto 'Evening Star' is a very able and enterprising journal, and is not by any means hostile to the government of the day. That journal has a despatch from its Montreal correspondent, dated March 22nd, headed : 'Turned back from border—United States will not admit a woman and her children whose eyes are sore ;' showing how closely United States immigration agents are watching immigrants, as people who have sore eyes are intercepted at the border and sent back. This is the despatch :

Montreal, March 22.—Mr. Joseph Francis, immigration inspector of the United States government at Niagara, formerly chairman of the United States Immigration Board in this city, was here this week with a family of rejected immigrants, who attempted to get through to Philadelphia by way of Niagara Falls.

The family in question—a woman and four children—arrived in St. John, N.B., suffering from trachoma, a peculiar and highly infectious form of eye disease, which leads to blindness. Their destination was Philadelphia, but being unable to pass the medical inspector there, she came up to Montreal, and being refused here, she went on to Toronto, representing that she was going to join a cousin there, the cousin in that case representing the relationship of a compatriot, and not of blood. On the second day after her arrival she secured a ticket for Philadelphia and went on by way of Niagara Falls. There she came under the inspection of Mr. Francis, who passed her on to a medical practitioner, who pronounced her to be in an advanced stage of trachoma, and likely to be blind within a year. One of her eyes is permanently closed, and when moving she stoops and leans forward in the manner common to the partially blind. The children have all been smitten with the disease, but if properly attended to they may be cured.

This woman, according to this statement, came to New Brunswick as an immigrant, intending to go to the United States. The official in New Brunswick who examined her refused to give her the necessary certificate to enable her to pass into that country. Notwithstanding that, she came on to Montreal and from Montreal to Toronto, and at Toronto purchased a ticket in the hope of being able to evade the authorities and pass into the United States by way of Niagara Falls. The vigilance of the officers at Niagara Falls prevented her accomplishing her purpose, and she was turned back; and that woman, unless some provision is made by either the United Sates authorities or the Canadian authorities for paying her passage back and the passage of her family, not having herself the means of returning to her native country, will be obliged to remain in Canada, and, unfortunately for herself and her children, will become a burden on the people of this country. This condition of things, in my opinion, calls for the most drastic remedy. The most perfect provision should be made to stop for all time diseased and pauper immigrants coming into this country. I am not sure whether the Bill of the hon. minister makes the necessary provision, because I see nothing in the Bill which enables the government to collect from the steamship companies the cost of deporting these people and the moneys it will expend in providing inspectors to do this work. In that respect we might take a leaf out of the book of the United States government. I believe that they collect a tax from the steamship companies, which has been found amply sufficient to cover the cost of a thorough inspection of all immigrants who go into that country without the people of the United States having to bear a single dollar of the expense of that service. The time has come when a similar provision should be adopted here; and if this Bill is wanting in any of its provisions, the minister should amend it so as to make it as clear and explicit as it can be made. The trades and labour organizations of the Dominion, as the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean) has pointed out, are objecting strenuously to the expenditures made by this government on account of immigration. In one paragraph of their circular, they say:

> For many years enormous sums, at times exceeding $400,000 in a single year, have been expended for the purpose of aiding the importation of cheap labour into this country.

Further they say:

> Agents have been sent to the poorest countries in the world to flood our labour market with a host of men, women and children, anxious to secure work and glad to accept work at almost any price. And these emigrants are induced to come here even at times when thousands of labourers are tramping the streets in idleness, vainly looking for employment.

I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior to say whether he himself examines the literature which is distributed by immigration agents throughout the United Kingdom and Europe before it is issued by the department, or whether he keeps any file or record of that literature; because it is stated from time to time by the representatives of the trades organizations that the most glaring misstatements are made by immigration agents appointed by the government, and that as a result of the distribution of these misstatements many people are induced to come to Canada, who, when they come, find that things are not as rosy as they were painted, and that they are unable to get on as well as they expected, or to find employment as readily as they were told they could. If that is the case, when these people come they get dissatisfied, and are liable to make statements which do damage to the country. I would like to ask the minister if he himself assumes the responsibility for the literature distributed by the immigration agents throughout the old country, because if the allegations made by the trade organizations are correct, many of these statements are entirely unwarranted and misleading.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The House spent a whole day a short time ago in discussing the question of immigration, and most of the remarks which have been made by hon. gentlemen who have spoken this afternoon will be found answered or dealt with in the discussion which took place on that occasion. That may be said, almost without qualification, of the remarks which have been made by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat. The points he brought up were practically all answered in the discussion which took place here on a former occasion, and I would only be unnecessarily detaining the House by going over the same ground again. He will find that I dealt fully with the allegations regarding the wholesale dumping of diseased immigrants at our ocean ports, and showed conclusively that these allegations were wholly unfounded. There has been nothing of the kind to such an extent as even to justify any reference to it in this House. What has occurred has been of a most trifling character, such as is bound to occur under any administration.

Just a word with regard to the position of affairs at the ocean ports. The hon. member for Lennox urges that we should make some arrangement with the United States. There is no necessity for any arrangement, so far as the examination of immigrants is concerned. We are quite competent to attend to that without any arrangement. We have consented to the American officers making examinations at our ports of immigrants in transit to the United States, but as these are practically all examined by our officers, the examination is to all intents and purposes complete.

Mr. CLARKE. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to draw his attention to a statement in the Toronto 'Star' which would seem to show that the immigrants mentioned in that statement, and their families, were permitted to leave New Brunswick and find their way to Ontario. The examination could not have been very rigid or that could not have happened.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot say anything in regard to a special case reported in a newspaper. In the first place, I do not know that the facts are as stated, and in the second place, the case was never brought to my attention. But at present, at Quebec, St. John and Halifax, we have a very complete and thorough system of examinations, and this Bill is brought in for the purpose of remedying a defect in the law. I am advised by the law officers of the government that we have not the power to prevent people of the particular class referred to in this Bill from landing, or to compel them to leave Canada once they have landed. If the hon. member for Toronto would refer to my remarks in the debate on immigration, he will find that I showed by the figures I gave, that there were no people of this class now in Canada, with the exception of four or five who were at St. John, waiting an opportunity to get away, and who in all probability have gone. The government desires simply to be in a position to enforce that which every one admits we ought to enforce. The only point made against the Bill is that suggested by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary). He says that we should take power to deport immigrants from inland portions of the country. We have not yet seen the necessity of doing this, because cases of no importance or difficulty have yet arisen. There can be no special objection to our taking such power, but it has not been thought necessary because no difficulty has arisen.

As regards the literature circulated in the United States and other foreign countries, it is wholly impossible for me to examine all the immigration literature prepared for the department. The superintendent, Mr. Pedley, is directly responsible for the preparation of all literature issued from Canada and sent to the United States. The literature circulated in Great Britain and on the continent has heretofore been almost entirely prepared by or through our office in London, but that system is now changed, and it is our intention that it shall be prepared here, and the superintendent of immigration will examine all the literature himself and be directly responsible to me. I do not believe that there is any substantial ground for the statement that any of our immigration literature has the effect of leading people to suppose that they can get employment readily in Canada. I am aware that some gentlemen connected with the trades and labour councils of different places are in the habit of making broad statements of that kind. But I have not been able to get any evidence from these gentlemen to indicate that they have any ground for making such statement. Under any system whatever of immigration, encouraged and stimulated by advertising and employment of agents, there will always be numbers of people admitted who will not be perhaps the most desirable class, and a certain number will perhaps not belong to the class the agent thought they did belong to. And a certain number will come in who, perhaps, will not follow the occupation which it was anticipated they would. No department that has ever existed could carry out a system of encouraging immigration without having these results follow to some extent. As to the statement that there is any encouragement, directly or avowedly given to persons to come in for the purpose of finding employment, that is entirely incorrect. I have discussed that question at different times in the House. Cases have been cited of persons who have alleged that they were encouraged to come in under these circumstances. I have always replied that the instructions to the officers of the department were most explicit, definite and positive, and that in every possible way we have tried to prevent any one being encouraged to come to Canada, except those who were desirous of following agricultural pursuits. These things cannot be carried out with absolute perfection, but that is the purpose of the department. Clear instructions are given to that effect, and everything done that is possible to carry out the policy I have indicated. Now, as to the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Toronto, that we should levy a poll-tax upon steamship companies to pay expenses in connection with this work, I may say that I consider that suggestion wholly impracticable at the present time. If any attempt were made in that direction, we should put the steamship companies who are carrying a portion of the immigrants to Canada out of the business, and, instead of getting 11,000 or 12,000 British immigrants, as we get at the present time, we should get few or none. We have to adapt ourselves to the circumstances as they exist. The circumstances of the United States are wholly different from our own. In the United States they do not wish immigration, they would prefer it if nobody came from outside to settle in that country. Their population is felt to be large enough. The natural increase of their 75,000,000 of people will soon render the position in the United States difficult for the statesmen of that country to handle it. Anything that they can do to discourage immigration they do—in fact, they do some things that they themselves would hardly approve of on principle to discourage the bringing the people from outside. We are in a wholly different position and are seeking immigration. Of course, we do not wish those of an undesirable class; but, in seeking to make distinctions, we must not adopt a policy that would close up entirely the source of supply. Speaking of the question of the nationality of our immigrants, I do not admit that my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is correct when he says that the policy, so far as the United Kingdom is concerned, could not have been a greater failure than it has been. I explained in Committee of Supply, when the estimates were under discussion, my reasons for believing that the practice of the department in Great Britain had not been, perhaps, as successful as it might have been, and pointed out that improvements might be made by changing some of the methods that have been followed. I also explained the changes which had been made with a view to improvement. But because I took steps to effect improvement, I do not admit that that shows that the work had been an absolute failure. Far from it. For instance, during the last calendar year, when something like 49,000 to 50,000 immigrants were received in Canada, about 18,000 came from the United States, practically all British-born, and between 11,000 and 12,000 from the British Islands. So, while the statement of the hon. member for Toronto is technically correct, that nearly 70 per cent of the total immigration was foreign-born, yet, it must be remembered that, for the purpose of making that calculation intelligible, it must be considered that the people from the United States are foreign-born, whereas, they are not so. Not only are they of Anglo-Saxon blood——

Mr. CLARKE. We had to accept the figures given by the department.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman knows what the figures mean.

Mr. CLARKE. We could hardly be expected to go behind the figures given in the report.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The figures show that about 18,000 came from the United States, and something over 11,000 from Great Britain and Ireland. So, out of 50,000, about 30,000 were practically persons of British blood. I have simply pointed out this fact for the purpose of correcting what otherwise might be an erroneous statement.

Now, just a word about the position taken by the Trades and Labour Council of Toronto, and one or two other labour bodies. I think I received a copy of the communication read by my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Maclean), at any rate I received a communication the same in substance. We might as well have a clear understanding upon this question, and I might as well say now that I wholly and entirely disagree with the sentiments and ideas expressed in that document. In my judgment there is no class of people, at the present time that are profiting more largely by the money being expended for immigration than the mechanics and labouring men of the province of Ontario. If my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean) will go from town to town in his own province and ascertain from the men who are carrying on operations in the various factories and are giving employment to people in the manufacturing towns, where the orders are coming from that are keeping these factories busy, he will find that the orders that they are depending upon most largely are those from Manitoba and the North-west Territories. That is the country to which they are looking almost exclusively for the increase in volume of their business and the widening of its scope. The hon. gentleman will find this to be the case in almost every line of ordinary manufacture, and it is the mechanics and operators who work in these factories who are benefited most largely at the present time, and who will most largely benefit in the future, from our immigration policy and from the placing on the lands of Manitoba and the North-west Territories of a producing population. I am not going into a lengthy discussion of immigration at the present time. As I say, that was fully discussed the other day, when the immigration question was up before the House, and we shall have the subject of the Committee of Supply before the session is over, when, if hon. gentlemen desire it, it can be discussed still further.

Mr. WILSON. Did the hon. gentleman deal with Mr. Watchorn's statement ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, fully.

Mr. WILSON. I was not well that evening and could not be here——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman will read the 'Hansard' report of my remarks, he will see that I dealt with it and answered it fully. I also answered the statement that a large number of diseased foreigners were in the hospitals in Montreal, and I showed by the statements made by the superintendents in charge of these institutions that there was no foundation for the statements that were made, and that no facts existed that could have afforded any excuse for it.

Now I do not know that there is anything further, except the one point referred to by my hon. friend from West Toronto when he quoted the article from the Montreal 'Herald.' I am not able quite to understand what point the hon. gentleman desired to make against the government or its policy——

Mr. CLARKE. The article was a pretty lengthy one, and I did not wish to take up the time of the committee by reading the whole of it. But I will get it again and read it in full, that it may be on record.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. But what does the hon. gentleman suggest ?

Mr. CLARKE. The article is to the effect that there are large numbers of destitute immigrants coming out to Canada who become a burden upon the philanthropic people of the Dominion, and that these immigrants have been induced to come here by misrepresentation, misrepresentations so great, if I recollect the article correctly, that the Italian consul had cabled to the home authorities with respect to it. In order to be absolutely correct, however, I will get the statement of the 'Herald' and read it. They were an undesirable——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They were Italians, were they ?

Mr. CLARKE. I do not say that the Italians are an undesirable class, but that these people were undesirable coming out in the condition of destitution they did. And, it would appear, they came out because of misrepresentations made to induce them to come out.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There could not be a better illustration of the totally foundationless nature of the attacks made upon the department than the statement that has just been made. We do not carry on any work in Italy. No Italians have been induced by the Immigration department, by any representations, direct or indirect, to come to Canada. We have never had an agent in Italy, and, since I have had charge of the department at any rate, have not printed a word in Italian to induce any Italians to come here. If Italians have come here, they have come without inducement or effort on the part of the government or the department. But I wish to get the hon. gentleman to make himself clear about one point. It is easy enough for the hon. gentleman to say that some people have come who are not desirable people, who have made trouble in Canada, and who have become a charge upon the community. Does the hon. gentleman desire that the government of this country should be charged by statute, that they should be given the power of deciding whether people are desirable or not, and to keep out whoever they like ?

Mr. CLARKE. I understand that the object of the Bill which the hon. gentleman has presented to the House, and that we are now discussing, is to give the government greater powers of determining who they shall admit and who they shall not admit into Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. 'Persons who are suffering from any dangerous or infectious disease or malady.' Not paupers, not criminals, not lunatics, not persons suffering from any disease. Would the hon. gentleman say that we ought to pass a law that will give us power to discriminate, as against people not embraced in those classes, to say who we think it is desirable to admit into this country ?

Mr. CLARKE. There has not been a word said on this side of the House that would justify the hon. gentleman in making such a suggestion. We desire, as he desires, I presume, to see eligible immigrants coming into Canada; we do not desire to see diseased immigrants coming in here. We do not desire to see this country receiving immigrants who are not thought worthy of being admitted into or of becoming citizens of the United States ; and we object strenuously to a condition of things under which forty-four United States officials are stationed in Canada to select the immigrants that may go into that country, to determine which of them shall be admitted into the States and which shall not. We object to those who are not admitted to the United States, who are not thought fit to become citizens of that country, through disease or other cause—we object to them being left in Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman continues, by implication, to misrepresent the facts of the case.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not mean to do so.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is an entire misrepresentation in the statement which the hon. gentleman makes. The hon. gentleman says he objects to the fact that there are forty-four officials of the United States determining what emigrants are going to be allowed to remain in Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. No, but what are to be allowed to go into the States.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Then the hon. gentleman will have to correct himself.

Mr. CLARKE. I am in the judgment of the committee. Perhaps the hon. gentleman did not hear me, or I did not make myself clear. I say it is a disgraceful condition of affairs that forty-four United States officials shall be permitted to examine immigrants who are coming into Canada and whose destination is the United States, to determine which of them shall be permitted to enter the United States and which shall not.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Then I may say to the hon. gentleman that I do not see any particular scandal or disgrace in it at all. But the fact is that the United States officials decide who are to go into the United States, and our officials decide who are to come into Canada. The United States officials are permitted to decide who are going into the United States. If there was a movement of immigration from the United States ports into Canada there would be no objection whatever on the part of the United States government to our placing officials at ports in their territories for the purpose of examining immigrants coming into Canada—there would be no objection whatever on the part of any government on ordinarily friendly terms with us to such a course being taken. But the hon. gentleman, in his first remarks, as I understood him, said that these United States officials decided who should come into Canada. That is a point which I wish to make clear. Whether the hon. gentleman intended to make it or not, I want to make it clear that such is not the fact, that our own officials decide, after inspection, upon the immigrants that are admitted, and they alone are responsible if any persons are permitted to get past the line and come into Canada and remain, who ought not to be allowed to come in and remain here. He stated the law was objectionable, that the law was defective, because it did not give us sufficient power. But the hon. gentleman has not yet put himself clearly upon record as to what he means by attacking the position of the government, in quoting this article from the Montreal 'Herald.' What I say is that parliament has never clothed the government with power to say that any persons should not come into this country who are in possession of all their faculities, who are not diseased, who are not criminal, and who do not come within the class of paupers, who do not come within any of the classes specified in this Act. They have provided that we might exclude paupers, criminals, persons of unsound mind; and now we ask to be permitted to exclude other persons who have any dangerous or infectious disease. But parliament has never clothed the government with the power of saying to a man at our boundary line, who is sound in wind and limb, perfect physically and morally—parliament has never authorized the government to prevent such persons from crossing the boundary line. The hon. gentleman would like to get away from the point, but he has got to do one thing or the other.

Mr. CLARKE. I am going to read this whole article.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman reads an article for the purpose of creating an impression. I want him to understand that the law must be either one way or the other. If Italians come to our boundary line, and if they are going to be excluded, they must be excluded by force of law, there must be some law authorizing it to be done. I say the law does not authorize it to be done, this government has no right to do it, and the hon. gentleman has no right to attempt to create prejudice against the government because these people came in. The hon. gentleman is trying to create a prejudice against the government because these Italians came in, because it was stated in the press that they were persons who were unable to take care of themselves, and would be a charge upon the community, or something to that effect. But I say that people will come to Canada, and some of them may be unable to take care of themselves. It would be impossible for any government under any system which parliament would sanction to prevent that occurring from time to time. So far, however, as relates to Italians being induced to come to Canada by any representations of the government, that has not taken place since I have been in office. We have carried on no work whatever in Italy, so far as I know we published no immigration literature in the Italian language, nor attempted to get the Italian people to come here. I do not know that it is necessary for me to make any further remarks on that point. As I said, the whole question was thoroughly threshed out on the immigration estimates in supply, and nearly every point that has been raised now was discussed then.

Mr. CLARKE. In order that there may be no misunderstanding at all as to what the article contains, I will read it so that it may be put upon the 'Hansard':

Influx of Italians to Montreal.

About 2,000 now here. Many of them penniless and unable to find work.

Many of our citizens more especially those whose business calls them to the vicinity of the depots, must have noticed the long strings of Italians carrying every variety of satchel, plodding along the streets. In fact they have become so common a sight that it is not surprising to learn that over two thousand of them have reached the city or that for a large proportion of them work has to be found to prevent their becoming a charge upon the municipality.

Many of these of course, have friends in this country, who can take care of them upon arrival. But there are also many who have neither connections nor the proper amount of money to keep them while searching for work, and who have been induced to come out here by the emigration agencies who hold out to them all kinds of specious promises for work upon arrival and represent Canada as a land of promise. It is to this class that the acting Italian Consul-General, Mr. Jerome Internoscia, alludes in his cable to the Italian government, asking them to take steps to check the flood of penniless Italian emigrants to this country and to permit none to embark who are not equipped with sufficient funds to maintain themselves for at least a month after their arrival.

Those who have already arrived can be taken care of. The labour agencies have taken them in charge and promised to look after them. The acting consul-general states that the two thousand who have already arrived have been housed and are safe from any immediate necessity. But he fears a further inundation. And hence he has officially reported to the Italian government asking for their assistance in seeing that none but desirable emigrants be permitted to leave that country for Canada.

Now, Sir, there is the statement. If anything I have said is not justified in the opinion of the committee, after I have read this article, I am willing to abide by the judgment of the committee. But the hon. gentleman admitted a few minutes ago that the government had not spent a dollar in distributing literature in the Italian language in Italy, that they had not spent any money in inducing Italian immigrants to come to Canada. Yet if this article can be relied upon the consul of the Italian government stationed at Montreal states that a large number of destitute Italian immigrants have been brought out here under specious promises, or under misrepresentations which the authorities have not carried out. If these people were in the condition they were alleged to be in, and if the proclamation which was issued to prevent pauper immigrants from coming into Canada had been enforced, how came it that they were permitted to land in Canada ? The hon. Minister of the Interior says that he made a full statement in answer to the statement made by Mr. Watchorn, the special officer of the United States sent to Canada to look after immigration coming by way of this country. I did not happen to be in the House at the time, and of course, I must accept the hon. minister's statement, but I want to draw the attention of the committee to the fact that under his own signature, Mr. Watchorn makes a statement, and the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) saw him sign that statement, that since September last, 1,000 undesirable, objectionable, diseased immigrants were prohibited from entering the United States who were booked through Canada for that country.

Now, in an interview with the Montreal 'Star,' Mr. Watchorn said that the district of Montreal contained about half the people, numbering 500, who were rejected. The statement made by the official agent of the United States seems to be corroborated by the statement which he gave to my hon. friend. I do not know what I have said this afternoon, during the course of this debate, that induced the hon. minister to say that I was trying to back out of an untenable position. I am not backing out of anything and I do not propose to back out, because I believe that every statement I have made this afternoon is justifiable ; but if any hon. gentleman on either side of the House can demonstrate to me that I have made an unjustifiable statement, or a statement that is not correct, I will be very glad to retract it. My desire is not to embarrass the government, but to point out to them that greater precautions should be exercised in preventing undesirable immigrants from coming into Canada, and I have pointed to the fact that the vice-consul of Italy in Montreal had to cable to his own government regarding the inadvisability of sending more people of this class to Canada; and to the further fact that the United States authorities had to appoint a corps of officers to prevent undesirable immigrants from finding their way to the United States by way of Canada. I drew the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) to this matter at an early period in the session. I asked the hon. gentleman if the statements contained in the report of the United States commissioner of immigration were correct or not, and 'Hansard' records the answer which was given. I have no desire to embarrass the government at all ; but, as the working people of the city which I have the honour to represent are objecting to this immigration, to the class of immigrants that are coming in, and to the large amounts the government are spending on immigration, it is my duty to draw the attention of the committee and of the government to it, and to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior to make an improvement in the system of inspection in regard to immigrants coming into Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is not necessary for me to repeat what I have already said, but I wish to make the statement again that whether it be stated in the Montreal 'Herald' or not, these Italians were not brought to Canada by the government, or by the authority of the government. Let that be clearly and definitely understood. I do not care what the vice-consul for Italy may have done. What I say is that this government did not bring these people out. In the next place, I wish to be understood as making a clear and explicit denial of the correctness of the statement made by Mr. Watchorn. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) will turn up the remarks that were made by me when the immigration estimates were before the Committee of Supply, he will see that I made a clear and explicit statement on that point.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As I understood the point made by my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) it was that whether these immigrants were induced to come by the government or not, they were practically paupers, and they were allowed to land.

Mr. CLARKE. Hear, hear. That is the point exactly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is the whole gravamen of the charge made by my hon. friend, and the hon. Minister of the Interior has not dealt with it at all.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. member (Mr. Clarke) would state that he understood that a number of Italians had been allowed to come in and would ask me as to whether that was the fact or not, I would have to tell the hon. gentleman that I did not know, that I would have to look into it, because as it had never been brought to my attention, I would not be able to say. The hon. gentleman will understand that it is absolutely impossible for any minister to read all the newspapers in the country and every article which they contain, and to know whether such a case as this happened or not. There may be no truth in that statement. I have seen statements in the papers which were wholly manufactured, that were without foundation in fact, or that were exaggerated. If the matter had been called to my attention, I would at once have had an investigation made in order to see if a remedy could not be applied. As to the future, though I cannot agree with every criticism that is addressed to the department over which I preside, I think hon. members will do me the justice to acknowledge that when suggestions have been made out of which I could derive any benefit in the administration of the department, I have never hesitated to adopt these suggestions, and it was because of the fact that I have been very much impressed with the necessity of a stricter enforcement of the exclusion clauses and a stricter exercise of the powers of exclusion in certain cases that this Bill has been brought before the House. I purpose taking the greatest possible care and it shall be my endeavour to protect the country from the effects of undesirable immigration in the sense in which I have expressed it under the provisions of this Bill, and also under the provisions of the statute as it stands at the present time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought the hon. Minister of the Interior did not appreciate the point that my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) was making and therefore I made the suggestion to him. I did not suggest that my hon. friend expected the hon. minister, on the spur of the moment, to be able to tell him all the facts, but I quite conceive that it was within his duty, as these statements had been made publicly in the newspapers and had been brought to his attention of his constituents, and also because the statements had been made in a newspaper very friendly to the government, to bring this matter to the attention of the committee, and to ask that it should be looked into at the hon. minister's earliest convenience?

Mr. CLARKE. The statement has been made by the hon. minister that so far as the government of Canada are concerned, they had no agents in Italy. These immigrants must have been brought out here by some person—by a steamship company.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They may have come across on——

Mr. CLARKE. They did not swim across. They must have been brought across on board of a steamer, and the steamship company would get the usual bonus for bringing immigrants over, I presume.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. CLARKE. Have they got nothing?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When I say no, the hon. gentleman will understand that I do not know just exactly when this particular circumstance occurred. I remember it, but I do not particularly remember the people to whom the hon. gentleman is referring. But I think I am safe in saying we have not paid any bonuses upon any considerable number of Italians at all; in fact, I do not know that we have paid bonuses for any Italians. I doubt that we have. I would not like to make a positive statement, but if any Italians have been paid for, there certainly was no considerable number of them. They most likely have been included with other immigrants. They must have come around by Germany and been included with other immigrants.

Mr. CLARKE. Were the Italians excluded from the benefits of this bonus?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember that they were distinctly excluded. I remember a question incidentally asked when the matter of paying bonuses for Italian immigrants came up, and without expressing any opinion as to the desirability of bringing in Italian immigrants, I said: We will not extend our work to that country or pay any bonus.

Mr. CLARKE. Two years ago I drew the attention of the House to a statement made by the Vienna correspondent of the London 'Times' and reproduced in the Edinburgh 'Scotsman,' that a large number of immigrants from Roumania were about to start for Canada. I drew the attention of the hon. minister to this statement, and I was informed that the government had no knowledge of this intended emigration. Within two months afterwards these people arrived in Canada. The department did not seem to be apprised of their coming. I want to point out that, in face of the proclamation issued against pauper immigrants, so lax is the administration of the department that according to the statements from which I have quoted, these immigrants who were in destitute circumstances, were induced by steamship companies to come here, and there was practically no inspection, and no barrier to their entering the Dominion. That proves that the department has not that control over immigrants which, in my judgment, is necessary in the public interest.

Mr. WILSON. A year ago a number of immigrants came to Quebec and they were not allowed to land, but the steamer brought them to Montreal and they were permitted to land there on the special order of Mr. Pedley.

Mr. CLARKE. The same lot?

Mr. WILSON. I dare say it was the same lot. He got from a society in Montreal some guarantee that they would look after them, and so they were allowed to land under the special permission of the superintendent of immigration. These are the things we complain of, and these are the things that should be stopped.

Mr. OSLER. It would appear that our laws for prohibiting paupers and diseased immigrants from entering Canada, are not as strict as are the laws in force in the United States. It is clear that the United States officers reject very great numbers that we accept. I contend that the immigrant who is not good enough for the United States is not good enough for Canada ; I do not care how he comes here. I contend that the evidence is plain, that we have not a proper supervision over immigrants. The very fact that the Americans have 44 officials in Canada inspecting immigrants whose destination is the United States, is of itself sufficient to show that the Canadian inspection is very lax. The minister (Hon. Mr. Sifton) stated in reply to my colleague (Mr. Clarke) : That if he charged $1 a head poll tax the steamship companies would at once take their immigrants to the United States. That is a very nice admission coming from the Minister of Immigration. It shows that it is not the money that Canada spends, that brings these immigrants to Canada, but that it is the steamship companies who are bringing them here for the sake of the passage money. If one dollar poll tax is going to exclude immigrants, I wonder what is the use of our expending large sums of money on immigration. Let us rather, at once pay subsidies to the steamship companies to bring in whom they like. If we assume that these 2,000 destitute Italians came in here without the bounty, they are at all events included in the number of immigrants that the minister takes credit for having brought here on account of the money expended. The impression left on my mind by this debate is, that the regulations for the inspection of immigrants coming into Canada are decidedly loose, and that people are being admitted here who are excluded from the United States ; people who tend to deteriorate the quality of our population. There was recently a very strong expression of opinion in this House against permitting scrub horses to be imported into the west to deteriorate the stock in that country. Shall we be less particular as to the kind of men we bring into this country to mix with our population, than we are as to the kind of animals we allow to be imported ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I made no statement which would lead the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) to infer that the steamship companies exclusively brought immigrants to Canada.

Mr. OSLER. The minister said that if we imposed a poll tax of one dollar a head the steamship companies would take the immigrants to the United States.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I stated that if we put a poll tax against these steamship agents, that would prevent them bringing these immigrants to Canada. That does not imply that the steamship companies alone are bringing immigrants to Canada. We pay a bonus to the steamship agents for the purpose of putting Canada in the same position as countries which are competing with us, and if we excited the hostility of the steamship companies, the agents of these companies would endeavour to neutralize the efforts of our own officers, and the result might be that we would get no immigrants. That is not saying that the expenditure of our own money is having no effect. It is simply saying that if we make the steamship agents hostile, they would devote themselves to counteracting the efforts of the officers whom we are employing. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) says that an immigrant who is not fit to go to the United States is not fit to come into Canada, and he appeared to be under the impression that he was expressing a very lofty sentiment. Well, I express the sentiment, that the government of Canada is at least just as competent through its officers to decide who is to come into Canada, as the officers of the United States government are competent to decide for them. I am not in favour of leaving it to the officers of the United States government to decide who is to come into Canada. If that be the policy which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) advocates, I dissent from it, and I cannot hold out any hope that I am likely to adopt his view. The actual fact is that the whole thing is a tempest in a tea pot. There is actually nothing in it ; it amounts to nothing. If the hon. gentleman will read the remarks I made, he will see that practically the whole thing reduced itself to something like 33 or 34 people out of almost a year's work, and that there was the merest trifle of difference between the work of the American officers and our officers. There were some 23 or 24 people who were permitted to go into the North-west simply because the United States officers rejected them upon grounds which one of our inspectors did not consider sufficient, namely, because there was some trifling disease amongst the children. Outside of that, to all intents and purposes the result of the examination has been the same.

Mr. SPROULE. If the minister would do what the country requires that he should do, he would take power similar to that which is in the United States law to send back unsuitable immigrants. He tells us that the number of unsuitable immigrants rejected by the United States was insignificant, but that is not the information which the United States officers say that there were over 1,000 rejected, part of one year, but the minister says there were but an insignificant few. We have, however, very good reason to believe that the statements made in the public press and by the United States immigration officials are correct.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I decline entirely to be judged in this House by a statement published in the Montreal 'Star' by an American immigration officer. There is a committee of this House which has jurisdiction to inquire into all matters relating to immigration. The question of immigration was before that committee for a long time this session, and if hon. gentlemen opposite desire to investigate the facts and have evidence produced on which a minister would be quite willing to be judged and which would be satisfactory to the House, they had the opportunity of doing it. But I refuse to be judged by that statement, especially when it is shown to be entirely false by the investigation which has taken place since. I also refuse to be judged by newspaper statements which hon. gentlemen opposite produce and for the accuracy of which they decline to vouch.

Mr. WILSON. Will the hon. gentleman allow us to have an investigation and to have witnesses summoned before the Committee on Agriculture to prove the statements we make in this House ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is not necessary for the hon. gentleman to ask me that question. I have never sought to prevent any witnesses being called. I have never, directly or indirectly, in any shape or way, interfered or sought to interfere with the calling of any witness whom any member of the opposition desired to call before the Committee on Agriculture. I have never attended a meeting of the committee or had anything to do with it further than to tell the officers of the department to go there when summoned and do everything they could to give the committee the information it desired.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the hon. minister does not understand the question of my hon. friend from Lennox. What he desired to ask was : as Mr. Watchorn's statement has been made since the investigation before the Committee on Agriculture was closed, would the hon. gentleman see that no objection was made to investigating that statement if it was desired ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman wishes to know if the friends of the government would object to the reopening of the investigation. We have not the slightest objection in the world.

Mr. SPROULE. What does the hon. gentleman say he declines to be held responsible for ? It is a matter of indifference to the people of this country whether he declines to be held responsible or not—the people of this country will hold him responsible. It is not a matter that is optional with him; it is a matter that is optional with them. He says he declines to be judged by a newspaper statement. This is not a newspaper statement, but the statement of an official of the American government, which we believe to be reliable. But the hon. Minister of the Interior, who is charged with the responsibility of preventing undesirable people coming and settling in the country, allows them to come in, and then says, I decline to be held responsible for it. I think the people of the country will form their own opinion with regard to that, regardless of the hon. gentleman's wishes in the matter. The hon. gentleman says we are quite as capable of judging from the evidence as the Americans. We are, but if we never act upon that judgment, what good is it ? And that is the position of the hon. gentleman; he has never acted on that judgment. He has sent his agents scouring around the world to get immigrants, whether they are suitable or unsuitable. Last year he spent $444,000 on immigration, and got 49,000 immigrants. Can he tell us how many of these immigrants were such as the people of the United States considered it necessary to send from their country ? Not by any means. We are quite satisfied that there are some thousands of them, because we have had information that the people of Montreal last year had to support these people for months in order to keep them from starvation. Then, other immigrants have come in who have been diseased. The minister says he had not the power to keep them out. He is taking the power now. He says the number is infinitesimal. Then, why does he require an Act to get the power ? I have always thought that although we require immigrants, the number we bring in is not a matter of so much importance as to know that those that do come are suitable to the country. That, I think, is the first requirement. It is not a fact, so far as the information disclosed enables us to judge, that the number brought in by the present government are all suitable. A large number are not suitable, because of diseases and weaknesses incident to human nature. I think that in future the great source from which we will draw our immigrants will be the overflow of population from the United States. They will be very suitable settlers for this country, and whether we send agents or not, they will come in in thousands to buy lands. This migration started many years ago under the late government, and it has been going on with increasing force ever since, and will continue whether we spend large sums to promote it or not. We have often heard of what the present government have done for the country, how many immigrants they have brought in. They have not by any means brought in as many proportionate to the expenditure as their predecessors did. If they had done so last year, instead of bringing in 49,000 they would have brought over 61,000; or if they had only spent proportionately as much money for the number they brought in as their predecessors spent, instead of spending $444,000, they would only have spent $360,000. So that there is nothing to boast of in their immigration policy, but there is much to be condemned. I believe the steamship companies are paid their bonuses every time, regardless of the class of people they bring to the country. We cannot awake too soon to the situation, when we see the number of people our American friends are sending back. Instead of the number being infinitesimal, as the minister says, I am inclined to think the people of the country will regard it as a very much more serious matter; and they will hold him responsible for doing less than his duty when he has not taken steps sooner to keep that undesirable class out of the country.

Mr. CLARKE. I want to draw attention to a statement made in the letter signed by Robert Watchorn, special immigrant inspector, which has been sent to my hon. friend from Lennox. I think the hon. gentleman ought to be thankful to the opposition for drawing his attention to what they believe to be weak points in our immigration policy. I want to draw the attention of the minister and the committee to a specific statement regarding our statistics of immigration. Mr. Watchorn, the United States officer, writes as follows to the hon. member for Lennox :

> You will observe on page 34 of the Commissioner General's report that the increase of immigration from Canada to the United States from 1896 to 1900 has been very heavy and is in fact very much in excess of what these figures indicate. I think your official reports will bear out the statement that for the year ending June 30th, 1901, approximately 50,000 alien immigrants arrived at Canadian seaports, 24,000 of them destined for the United States, which leaves the inference to be drawn that 26,000 remained in Canada, but these figures are totally misleading.

This is a statement made by Mr. Robert Watchorn, the special immigration inspector for the United States. He declares that these figures are totally misleading and gives as his reasons :

> Because of the 26,000 credited to Canada for the time specified, no less than 300 per month were given certificates of admission to the United States in Montreal alone, within less than 30 days of their arrival at the Canadian port.

Yet we are told that we are getting these immigrants in by the ten thousand.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. How does that effect the point under discussion ?

Mr. CLARKE. We are bonusing the steamship companies and employing immigration agents to bring these foreigners to Canada, and the hon gentleman points with pride and satisfaction to the increased number coming here ; but if this statement be correct these people only come to Canada because of the great facilities provided to bring them here, and then leave for the United States. They only stay long enough in Canada to get certificates from the American officials which will enable them to go to the United States. Is not that statement worth looking into in order to ascertain whether it is well founded or not? And the hon. minister ought to consider himself indebted to the opposition for drawing his attention to it. The statements I have quoted are very frequently to be found in the newspapers. I am not responsible for them, but would be derelict in my duty if I did not draw the attention of the minister to such statements when they are brought under my notice. I would ask his attention to the statement I have just read, which was evidently made in good faith, and would urge him to investigate and give us the result of his inquiry before the session closes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The trouble with my hon. friend is that he finds a statement somewhere and then draws an inference which it does not justify. He has found the statement made by a United States officer, in which that officer starts out by saying that the official reports of his own department are wholly misleading and incorrect.

Mr. CLARKE. Of the hon. gentleman's department.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, he starts out by saying that the official reports of his own department is wholly incorrect.

Mr. CLARKE. No, he is referring to the hon. gentleman's department. He addressed this letter to the hon. member for Lennox (Mr. Wilson) and in it he says : 'I have your official reports.' I take that to mean the hon. minister's reports. And he proceeds to say that the reports will bear out the statement which I have just read.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I thought from what the hon. gentleman said that he was referring to the reports of the United States Department. But the inference which the hon. gentleman draws is that we are paying bonuses to steamship companies for immigrants who come to Montreal and then immediately go to the United States. It does not require any investigation to show that that statement is altogether inaccurate. I know it to be utterly unfounded. There is no part of our work which is more carefully supervised than that which relates to the payment of bonuses of that nature. No bonus is paid except to those who take up land and become permanent settlers.

Mr. CLARKE. Does the hon. gentleman say that no investigation is required into the statement made by this American officer?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I say that there is no investigation required into the inference which the hon. gentleman attempts to draw, namely, that we are paying bonuses to persons who land at Montreal and then go to the United States.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it not a fact that the United States officer has declared that from the Montreal district alone they issue 300 certificates per month to people who have come to Canada, and who, within thirty days after their arrival, get these certificates and go to the United States.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We do not pay any bonuses to these people, and we cannot prevent people who land in Montreal or any other Canadian port from going into the United States if they choose.

Mr. CLARKE. But while our returns show that 26,000 aliens came to Canada, the American officer says that such return is entirely misleading, because within thirty days they go to the United States.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister has pointed out that the policy of the United States is to restrict immigration, and therefore they do not grant bonuses to bring immigrants to their shores. We have the opposite policy and do grant bonuses. What system is there by which we know that these men for whom we pay bonuses do not afterwards, almost immediately, go to the United States—say within three months or six months of a year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No bonuses are paid except on the report of an officer in the North-west that the person has become an actual settler. In the case of bonuses upon persons who come from the continent of Europe these bonuses are now paid to what is called the North Atlantic Transportation Company, who are the booking agents. We have a special arrangement with them under which we require that the persons who come through their agency shall each have a certain amount of money, and shall pass the inspection of the department at the port of entry. When these persons become settlers and are so reported upon by the officers of the department in the west, the names are sent on to the department here, the list is checked by the officers and sent on to the office in London and is checked over there. When it is found correct, a cheque for the amount due is sent to the company.

Mr. SPROULE. How long must these immigrants be in the country before the steamship companies are entitled to the bonus ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no fixed period. But when we get the report from the officer that the person has actually become a settler, we pay the bonus.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it only from the west you get information with regard to immigrants brought in for whom you pay a bonus ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If they settle on land anywhere in the Dominion we take means to get a report from some officer of the department.

Mr. SPROULE. But suppose they settle in Ontario, or become labourers in Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If they become labourers in Ontario, we do not pay any bonus.

Mr. SPROULE. But if they settled on land in Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Then, we would take means to get a report upon them.

Mr. SPROULE. Who do you ask for a report in the case of their settling in Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We would have to get a report. As a matter of fact, the only place where any of the people have gone upon whom we have paid bonuses, except in the west, is in the northern part of Ontario, along the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in the Rainy River district. We do occasionally get a report and pay a bonus upon these.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that quite a number went into the Lake St. John district and the Mattawa district. From whom does the department get information in cases of settlers in those districts ? Has it special agents whose duty it is to collect that information ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If necessary we would send an officer out there. In most cases, the people go out in charge of an officer, and we would have somebody there to correspond with and from whom to get a report.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose the steamship company asked a bonus on 4,000 people settled in Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They would have to send in the names of every person, and every person would have to be located. We do not pay a bonus on a man unless we locate him.

Mr. SPROULE. You have agents hunting up these people all the time ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They have to be located. Of course we cannot put a ball and chain upon them, but we must know who and where they are.

Mr. SPROULE. How much does the department pay per capita for immigrants from the United States ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not recollect at the moment. But my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson) has investigated this matter pretty fully, and I have no doubt he could tell.

Mr. WILSON. Three dollars a head.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, I believe we pay $3 for each adult, and so much for each member of the family.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I move that this be amended by inserting after the word 'Act' in the fifteenth line the following :

Or any Order in Council or proclamation lawfully issued thereunder ; or any person landed for medical treatment who remains in Canada in contravention of such order or proclamation.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask just one question. Is it the intention of the minister to make the steamship companies pay the expense of bringing these immigrants back to the ship's side ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, they do that now.

Mr. CLARKE. No expense to the country ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Bill as amended reported, and amendments read, and concurred in.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

GAME PRESERVATION ACT.

Bill (No. 117) further to amend the unorganized territories Game Preservation Act. (the Minister of the Interior) read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are there any other buffalo in the North-west than wood buffalo ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The only buffalo there are known as wood buffalo.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENTS.

Bill (No. 120) to amend the Dominion Lands Act (the Minister of the Interior) read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I explained when this Bill was introduced that its purpose was to make the sales and homestead entries subject to the right of the territorial government to open a road across the lands. At the present time the territorial government is called upon to open a considerable number of new roads, and in some places, owing to the fact that the road allowances cut across ravines it is very expensive to build a road. In many cases they find it necessary to open new roads in lieu of the road allowances. The purpose of the Bill is to make entries and sales subject to the right of the territorial government to have a right of way free of charge over those lands. The territorial government find it a considerable burden to have to settle for right of way for every road that they desire to open up. It is no hardship at all to require persons who buy or enter for homesteads to take them subject to this right. The Bill provides that the amount so taken shall not be more than five per cent of the total. Hon. members will find that the Bill is so drawn that in the eighth line of the first section the words 'heretofore or' would make the land entered for homesteads heretofore subject to this right. That however is not my intention. I do not desire to interfere with any rights now vested, or to interfere with lands for which the homestead entries have already been granted. I move therefore that the words 'heretofore or' in the eighth line be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The law clerk has suggested two or three verbal changes, in accordance with which I move that in line thirteen, before the word 'surveyed' the word 'so' be inserted. It will read then : 'Provided that the aggregate area of the highways to be so surveyed.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose the provision has been submitted to the government of the North-west Territories ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is done at their request.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The last two lines provide that no such highway shall be of greater width than sixty-six feet. It occurred to me that there might be a possible construction of that which would be awkward. There is no intention to prevent the highway from being wider than sixty-six feet. The intention is, I suppose, that the land may be taken without compensation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The intention is of course that the land taken shall be only sixty-six feet in width. I thought possibly another construction might be put upon it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That might be possible.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It might be expedient in some cases to have the highway wider than sixty-six feet.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would not have any material effect any way.

2. Section 1 of this Act shall not apply to any grant as to which there is now in existence any contract, agreement or undertaking to or with which a reservation and exception would be repugnant or inconsistent, nor to any grant containing an express declaration that it is exempt from the provisions of the said section.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I move that this section be amended by inserting after the word 'which' in the third line, the word 'such' and after the word 'exception' in the third line, the words 'as aforesaid.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not quite understand the force of this section :

Section 1, of this Act shall not apply to any grant as to which there is now in existence any contract, agreement or undertaking.

Perhaps I do not correctly understand the scope of the legislation, but I think the provision contained here relates to contracts, agreements, and so forth, in the future and not to anything now in existence.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This clause is only put in as a matter of caution. It was suggested by the Department of Justice that there might be lands in respect to which contracts had been made and in which third parties were interested in some way. This provides for a contingency which is not likely to arise.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think this section was put in because you have the word 'heretofore' in the first section. If you strike that word out this does not seem to me to have much relevancy.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What the hon. gentleman means is that this applies to nothing except subsequent contracts, because there could not be any contracts, agreements or undertakings now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, and it is unnecessary if you strike the word 'heretofore' out of the first section.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will reserve that matter, and take it up again so as to be sure. It sometimes happens that in dealing with legislation in respect to land, there may be something in the mind of the law clerk when he is drafting the Bill that I may forget when we come to deal with the Bill in the House. At the present moment I think the hon. gentleman's suggestion is right, but I do not like to strike out the section without being sure.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The last part of the section is necessary, but I should think not the first part.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We will let that section stand and come back to it.

On section 3,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The latter portion of the clause is only intended to cover a case in which the declaration is omitted. If a patent should be issued without the express statement that it is subject to this right it would make no difference. The provision in the first part of the section is of course practically directory to the officers of the department, and in pursuance of that it will be the duty of the officers of the department to see that this provision shall be put in every patent. But, suppose it should not be put in the patent, as might happen by mistake, it would not be desirable that this omission should relieve the grant referred to from being subject to this reservation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course the hon. gentleman is responsible for this legislation and I am not, and I do not want to intrude my own ideas on him, but I would think it would be very much simpler to say that the section shall apply unless it is otherwise provided on the face of the grant. When you say that there shall be a declaration upon the face of every grant that section 1 applies to it, and when you also say that it shall make not the slightest difference if the declaration is not there it seems to me likely to result in rather a confused condition of affairs.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A great deal of legislation in respect to Dominion lands is of a character that is directory to the officers of the department, and I think that it is desirable that this clause should be included in the Bill, so as to make it obligatory upon the officers of the department to see that the patent shall contain that declaration. It seems to me, at the same time, however, that if through the neglect or omission of an officer of the department, it would not be desirable to relieve the land from this reservation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman is satisfied with it I will make no objection.

On section 4,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There have been two or three words left out in the printing of the original draft. I beg to move :

That the section be amended by inserting the word 'of' immediately after the words 'section 1' in the thirtieth line and by inserting the words 'as the case may be' after the word 'territories' in the thirty-fifth line—

So that it will read :

The Lieut.-Governor in Council of the province of Manitoba, or of the North-west Territories, as the case may be, may order the survey and location upon and across any lands comprised in a grant which is subject to the provisions of the said section 1, of any public highway as aforesaid ; and upon its survey and location pursuant to such order, such highway may be opened and used as a public highway, and shall, as well as the land comprised therein, be vested in, and subject to the direction, management and control of, the government of the province or the territories as the case may be.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is a section which deals with the title of the highway after it is expropriated. Would it not be better to say that the title is vested in His Majesty ? If you want to bring an action alleging title it would be a little awkward to have to allege that it was in the government of the province, because that is an expression that is perhaps not technically used in the case of alleging title. I merely suggest that after the words 'vested in' you insert the words 'His Majesty', then will follow the other words :

And subject to the direction, management and control of the government of the province or of the territories.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Both expressions are indifferently used in legislation referring to this subject. The words 'government of the province' are defined by the Interpretation Act to mean the representative of the Crown acting in the interests of the province or of the territory.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, if you like.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I move that the committee rise and report progress. I want to look carefully into section 2.

Progress reported.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACTS.

Bill (No. 121) further to amend the Acts respecting the North-west Territories (the Minister of the Interior) read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). There has been a question as to whether the legislature of the territories can enact laws with regard to the road allowances which we have handed over to them. Sometimes when they want to open a road they can make a bargain with a farmer to go through his land provided they give him a portion of the old road allowance in return for what he cedes. This is to allow the North-west Territories legislature to transfer the old road allowance.

Bill reported, read a third time, and passed.

ROCKY MOUNTAINS PARK ACT.

Bill (No. 133) to amend the Rocky Mountains Park Act—1887, (the Minister of the Interior), read a second time ; and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This section gives authority to the Minister of the Interior to make regulations with regard to the disposal of timber. It is not desirable to dispose of any timber, and I move that this section be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MONK. There is to be no expropriation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No.

Mr. SPROULE. What will be the area of the park as extended ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. 4,900 square miles.

Mr. SPROULE. That will be a good sized park. It will be an immense reservoir for game keepers and government employees of all kinds.

Bill reported, read a third time, and passed.

REPRESENTATION OF THE YUKON.

Bill (No. 134) respecting the representation of the Yukon Territory in the House of Commons (the Minister of the Interior) read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Does my hon. friend want the different sections to be read ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have not yet had an opportunity of looking over the Bill.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We might go through the sections. I may say that the principle of the Bill is that there shall be one member. I am going to move a section providing the time when the election shall be held. The qualifications and the other provisions are the same as those in the North-west Territories Representation Act. We might go through the different sections without formally reading them, and then let the Bill stand so as to give the hon. gentleman an opportunity of looking over it, and take it up again.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That will be perfectly satisfactory.

On section 7,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I desire to add a section, between section 6 and section 7, as follows :

The first election of a member to represent the Yukon Territory in the House of Commons shall be held on or before the 1st day of January, 1903.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 8,

Mr. SPROULE. I think there is a provision here which does not reflect great credit upon the two clergymen whom we have in this House. In subsection 'd' you mention, among those who may not be elected, 'ministers, priests or ecclesiastics of any religious faith or worship.' Has the experience of the hon. minister with reference to those clergymen who have been elected to this House from that western country not been such as to inspire confidence in that class as members ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is only for returning officers. The hon. gentleman surely did not think we were prohibiting clergymen from beeing elected to the House.

Mr. SPROULE. That was my impression. I do not see any more reason why they should not be returning officers.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The idea is that they do not desire to be appointed to that office, and it would not be a proper thing to compel them to accept it if they did not wish it.

Mr. SPROULE. Has the hon. minister consulted them ? How does he know whether they desire it or not ? Why not leave it an open question, and if they do not desire it, they will not be appointed ?

Progress reported.

CIVIL SERVICE RETIREMENT ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 124) to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act of 1898, (the Minister of Finance) read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The object of this Bill is, as I mentioned when I moved it, to enable the government, in case of the death of an officer in the civil service, and there being a small sum of money payable to him under the Civil Service Retirement Act, to pay the money to such member of the family or person concerned as the Governor in Council may determine, instead of obliging the parties to take out letters of administration. Often the sums of money involved are so small that the expense of administration is out of all proportion.

Mr. MONK. Why not make it payable to the legal representatives ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. For the reason which I have just given which, I suppose my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) did not hear—to save the expense of letters of administration. We have similar provisions in another portion of the Act; when an officer retires and is unable for any cause to manage his own affairs, the government may pay the money to some person on his behalf.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems like a very desirable provision in one aspect.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think it can hardly be questioned.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It has occurred to me whether, if an individual happened to die indebted, the person who received the money ought not to be required to account to the administrators. That might complicate the matter, and, on the whole, perhaps this is desirable.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have had similar provision in the case of other persons. For instance, if an hon. member of this House dies during the session, instead of having the money payable to him as member of the House pass through the general estate, we generally provide that it shall be paid to such member of the family as the Treasury Board may indicate, giving the money to the family instead of the creditors, who, whatever their claims may be, have no such claim as the members of the family.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the particular sum of money is not something to which the party is entitled by virtue of the statute, no question will arise. That is the case in the instance the hon. minister has just mentioned. I am not familiar with the statute, and am not aware of the rights of the party under it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Parliament creates that right and can administer it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, parliament can administer it, and parliament can also get things very much mixed up. However, I have no objection to the measure.

Bill reported; read the third time, and passed.

YUKON TERRITORY ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 113) further to amend the Yukon Territory Act and the Acts in amendment thereof (the Minister of Justice), read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 2,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This would dispense with one police magistrate ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). Yes. By the first clause we give to the judges the jurisdiction of the police magistrate, and so we can dispense with one police magistrate.

On section 4, subsection 2,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This gives an appeal to the Supreme Court ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. At present, there is an appeal from the finding of the Gold Commissioner to the two judges of the Yukon Territory. But there is no appeal from that court in these important matters, and it was found extremely important that there should be an appeal to the Supreme Court in mining cases as in ordinary civil cases.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Territorial Court in banc is the Court of Appeal from the Gold Commissioner, and this provides that there shall be an appeal from that court to the Supreme Court of Canada ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—DELAY IN PAYMENT OF WORKMEN.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). Before you leave the Chair, I wish to bring a matter to the attention of the Minister of Public Works, and I am sorry the Minister of Labour is not present to hear what I have to say. A letter has just been placed in my hands, dated Ottawa, April 29th :

> Dear Sir,—For God's sake ask the Minister of Public Works when the labourers will be paid. We have not been paid for the month of March yet.

He goes on to say that they are obliged to pay 60 per cent interest on their money, and last year they were four months without being paid. This is a state of affairs which I am sure the Minister of Labour would not permit if he was acquainted with it. In most all the manufacturing establishments of this country they pay their labourers weekly, and I do not know why the government, who pay monthly, should not pay promptly, and not allow the poor labouring men, probably working at $1.20 a day, to run two or three months behind when they have to pay 5 per cent a month on money to pay their rent with.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). I think there is only one branch in the Department of Public Works where the men have not been paid promptly, and that is the Rideau Hall branch. The Minister of Public Works is not all powerful in that branch of his department. I think I am right in saying that is the only branch where the employees have not been paid up to date. There are only six or seven of those employees, and if they are too much dissatisfied with the delay and think they can do better elsewhere, there would be no trouble at all in replacing them. I have old employees who have been ten or fifteen years there, and they are very glad indeed to remain. This 60 per cent interest is on the exaggerated lines the hon. gentleman has been indulging in ever since I have had the pleasure of his acquaintance.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It is not generous, to say the least, towards those employees for the Minister of Public Works to say that he could replace them at any time. There is no doubt they are in need of money badly, otherwise they would not write as they have. I presume the party who writes the letter is afraid to sign his name for fear of just such consequences as the minister has mentioned. I think the minister should not forget that people receiving a small salary are often in an embarrassed situation, and it is important that they should be paid as promptly as possible.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. People who write anonymous letters are not generally to be trusted. I have found that out every day, as hon. gentlemen have found it out. Employees in the public service who write in that way should be summarily dismissed. If they complained to me I would be very glad to hear them and do what I can for them. I am always easy of access.

Mr. SPROULE. Does not the hon. gentleman admit himself that these men have not been paid for a long time ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I admit that the seven or eight employees at Rideau Hall have not been paid, on account of circumstances that the hon. gentleman understands very well. We cannot exceed the expenditure voted for this year.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you spent all the money ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When we discuss the Rideau Hall items, I will be glad to make a full statement of the case, and to prove that in the past a good deal more money was spent than was voted. We are always afraid to ask for more than the amount necessary. This is a great public establishment, the expenditure on which it is difficult to control.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I think the rule as to anonymous letters suffers an exception in this case, because these parties are probably afraid to reveal their name. But in this case the fact alleged in the anonymous letter is admitted. I have not heard the Minister of Public Works explain why these men have not been paid. Has the credit for that particular object been exhausted ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It has been exhausted on account of circumstances that the hon. gentleman knows very well. When their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of York visited Ottawa we were obliged to spend at Rideau Hall a great deal more money than we had taken an appropriation for.

Mr. MONK. I do not think the hon. gentleman is right in taking that position. Surely if workmen have not been paid, and complain through us to this House, we are not only justified but in duty bound to bring their complaint to the notice of the House. In regard to the particular items mentioned by the minister, it seems to me we have voted every cent of the money required for the expenditure occasioned by the visit of their Royal Highnesses.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will now make a statement which I promise absolutely to keep good, and that is that when we fall short in an appropriation, I will dismiss every man employed in that branch.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think the minister need fly into a rage because this subject is mentioned to him in a very calm way. If any one desired to criticise the hon. gentleman it would be very easy to do so. I do not suppose these workmen ought particularly to stand the brunt of the expense of the visit of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York to this country. It would have been a very simple thing for the hon. gentleman to come down to the House nearly three months ago, and to have asked for an appropriation to meet that expense and to avoid any difficulty of this kind. It may be that the hon. gentleman in the press of his very numerous engagements, overlooked it. We would be willing to extend to him every consideration, but to become enraged because these men are anxious to get their pay seems to be a very petty piece of business on the part of the hon. gentleman, and one which I would hardly expect from a man of his calibre on most occasions. I trust that the hon. gentleman will see that these men are paid.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Department of Railways and Canals, including G. A. Bell at $950, and S. R. Loftus at $950, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $43,100.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the explanation of the increase ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This item is $1,000 larger than the appropriation last year, due to statutory increases with the exception of two special increases of $50 each.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This item refers to the salaries of the staff of the department here in Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, the inside service.

Mr. MONK. What is the object of the provision 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act'?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are giving two allowances of $50 extra to two of the clerks in the department beyond the statutory increase of $50. Of course, we cannot do that without making an exception and withdrawing it from the operation of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. MONK. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, who has a department where there are many positions offering, to the fact that a considerable number of those who have returned from South Africa are disabled and many of them without positions. I have one at present in my mind who belongs to my own county, who, as a commercial traveller was doing very well, who went to South Africa and lost a leg and who, since his return, of course, is incapacitated for his usual occupation. He, as well as many others, who have returned under analagous circumstances, is rather disinclined to apply for any position to the government. However, I think he did so on one occasion and was informed that not having conformed to the law as respects examination he could not receive a position. I would recommend to the government if possible to entertain any applications coming from disabled soldiers. I think they are entitled to a great deal of consideration and when they do make application I think the fact that they have been through active service and been disabled should entitle them to the particular consideration of the government, as respects the disposition of the law requiring an examination for entrance to the civil service. I think if we had some assurance from the government that the cases of these returned soldiers would receive special attention, probably several of them who are unwilling to undergo the humiliation of a refusal would be tempted to make application. Every day the government is in a position to place civil servants and I think the cases of those who have been disabled in active service in South Africa, and there are quite a few in the country, deserve special consideration from the government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There have been two or three instances in which it has been possible for me to consider the circumstances to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Monk) alludes in connection with the railway service. I am not aware of any applications having been made to the department here, but if such applications were made and the applicants had not passed the examination, of course, there would be a difficulty about entertaining the applications favourably. The Auditor General would require that they should pass the examination. We might have a vacancy which would be available but we could not put a man in unless he had passed the examination required by law.

Intercolonial Railway—Steel rails and fastenings, $600,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This item, Mr. Chairman, is to enable us to continue the laying of heavy rails. During the last fiscal year we laid 24½ miles and out of the appropriation for the current year we have laid between 62 and 63 miles.

Mr. BARKER. I desire to ask the hon. minister whether there is included in this item anything for the cost of the rails and the cost of fastenings. I would like also to know how many tons of rails the hon. minister estimates for, and at what price per ton ? I would like to know in the first place if there is anything included for the cost of rails and fastenings.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The rails and fastenings are both included and we provide for 25,000 tons.

Mr. OSLER. At what price ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estimated price of the rails is $28, and the fastenings $50.

Mr. OSLER. Have these rails been bought under the Clergue contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The rails we have so far during the current year were not obtained under the Clergue contract.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the weight of the rail.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. 80 pounds. We expect to get 10,000 tons from Mr. Clergue.

Mr. OSLER. Last year it was intimated that Mr. Clergue would supply these rails whether he manufactured them or not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The government did not get the rails from Mr. Clergue in any way. We called for tenders from the English suppliers and their agents and we received the rails from them.

Mr. OSLER. None of the rails under the Clergue contract have yet been supplied.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. OSLER. What steps has the minister taken to fix the price of the rails if he purchases them through Mr. Clergue under the terms of the contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As specified in the contract we will pay the ruling price in the English market. We have not yet settled on the price for the next year. I judge it will be some where in the neighbourhood of the price I have mentioned. The rail supply of the United States is entirely under the control of a trust or combine and they have fixed the price at $28. The English market may show a more favourable figure, but at all events we have the markets of the world opened to us.

Mr. OSLER. Mr. Clergue is the only one you can buy from, and how are you to arrive at the English price.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The iron founders and rail producers have publications which announce, if not daily at all events weekly, what the market price is. If the hon. gentleman goes to the library and looks at the English hardware journals he will find the quotations from week to week.

Mr. OSLER. Surely the minister does not assume that anybody who is buying rails would take the quotations in any of the trade journals as the price he would pay for them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not see why not.

Mr. OSLER. Because these are only nominal quotations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I mean the record of the actual sales.

Mr. OSLER. Oh, no. No one who is buying rails would take these quotations without testing the market to see whether he could not purchase for less. I venture to say that in nine cases out of ten, unless on a rising market, these nominal quotations would not give you an accurate idea of the price. No one would think of buying on these quotations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman seems to forget that there are records of actual sales which take place from day to day. Of course it would be very proper to verify these by asking for quotations. I suppose the price will remain somewhat stationary because it has been maintained uniform for some months by the rail combine in the United States.

Mr. OSLER. That is quite true. The rail market undoubtedly is very strong and it may be within a month or two rails will jump a dollar or two dollars a ton. What I want to know is how the minister proposes to arrive at the price with Mr. Clergue. Mr. Clergue may come to the minister at a date when these rails are at the highest price and ask to have the price fixed. Unless there is an agreement by both parties as to the date the minister is at a great disadvantage. The chances are that between now and the first of July there may be a spurt in the price of rails for a week or two, if some one gives a large order for immediate delivery. As I pointed out last year, the weakness of the contract is that Mr. Clergue might come to the minister at a date when the price is high and ask to have a price fixed. The minister should agree with Mr. Clergue as to the date on which the price shall be fixed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In a contract covering a term of years we could scarcely agree as to a date, and we might stand a chance of losing rather than gaining by doing so. What I have in my mind to do is this: almost immediately after the vote is passed and parliament has prorogued, we will ascertain what the price is on the English market and then call on Mr. Clergue to renew the contract or to enter into an arrangement for the year to come, because we require to have the rails delivered very promptly. I want to lay as many as we can this year. It will therefore be necessary for us to have an early arrangement with Mr. Clergue. We have to take our chance as to whether the price will be in our favour or not.

Mr. OSLER. The minister proposes to fix the price as soon as this vote is passed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As soon as possible after the close of the session.

Mr. OSLER. You are going to accept the delivery of the rails from Mr. Clergue as soon as he is able to deliver them?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. OSLER. Are you going to fix the price before you take the delivery of any rails at all?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly, before we take any on account of the coming year.

Mr. MONK. In respect to that Clergue contract, I would like to ask the minister if he considers that it is still in force?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. MONK. My recollection of it is a little dim since last year, but I think Mr. Clergue was to have begun the execution of the contract this year, and he has failed to do so. Did he ever sign a contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. MONK. And he has failed to carry it out. I would like to know how the government stands in respect to Mr. Clergue? Is the contract still in force? Has Mr. Clergue been put in default of furnishing the rails which he should have furnished and which he failed to furnish? Has the government taken any steps to free itself from the contract, which I think was open to considerable doubt as to the time the price of the rails was to be fixed? Also while on my feet, who furnished the rails which were supplied to the Intercolonial Railway last year, and at what price?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As to the first question, the contract between us and Mr. Clergue has not been cancelled. Mr. Clergue encountered difficulties in establishing his plant, which prevented him from delivering last fall the proportion of the rails which the contract called for, and it may be said in a sense therefore that he was in default. But as the contract was entered into for the purpose of encouraging the establishing of a steel rail plant in Canada, I for one, would not think I was called upon to treat the contract in the severe and rigid way in which we would need to treat it if we declared the whole agreement at an end.

Mr. MONK. I do not advocate that. I merely wanted to know if some changes had been made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No changes have been made. The agreement has been executed, and is in existence just as it was presented to parliament last year. We did stipulate with Mr. Clergue that he should consent, without abrogating the contract, to our securing elsewhere the quantity of rails we required to lay in before winter closed in upon us. He agreed to that. He promises to furnish 10,000 tons this year within the time they are required, and he has already commenced to turn rails out at his mill. Last year we got 15,000 elsewhere. From Charles Campbell & Company, through James Watson & Company, of Glasgow, we got 7,000 tons at $25.79, delivered at Mulgrave or Pictou as we required, and 3,000 tons delivered at Montreal at $24.90, and 2,000 tons delivered at Pictou at $25.70. From the Barrow Hematite Steel Company we got 3,000 tons at $25.65.

Mr. MONK. Were these rails furnished by Mr. Clergue under his contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, he had nothing to do with them.

Mr. OSLER. The rails the minister bought last year cost the country about $25.50, or $25.75. If I recollect rightly, the minister was to pay Mr. Clergue $32.60 for the rails he was to buy last year, so that the country made, on the rails purchased last year, as we contended, about $7 a ton. Is Mr. Clergue still to furnish 25,000 tons a year for 5 years, or do the rails purchased elsewhere last year come off the total quantity of 125,000 tons provided for in the contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is my understanding.

Mr. OSLER. It should not be the understanding of the minister. It should be the knowledge of the minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what I say. The 15,000 tons were obtained elsewhere with his consent.

Mr. OSLER. That reduced Mr. Clergue's contract from 125,000 tons to 110,000 tons. There are 10,000 tons of rails which Mr. Clergue should have delivered last year, which were not delivered, and which are to be delivered this year. Is Mr. Clergue to receive $32.60 a ton for these ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should say so under that contract.

Mr. OSLER. It would be a good thing for the country if Mr. Clergue defaulted some more.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman does not attach any importance to the establishment of the industry.

Mr. OSLER. Does the price of $32.60 hold for the first 25,000 tons Mr. Clergue delivers ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It holds for the 10,000 tons only. That is my view.

Mr. OSLER. Is it Mr. Clergue's view ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not asked him. I have no doubt about it.

Mr. HEYD. Is there a supposed uniformity in all these steel rails made by the different makers, so that when a price is quoted, it is understood to be for the same quality of goods ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, yes; we have a specification to which we require the rails to conform. The margin of difference in the price arises partly from the difference in freight to the places where the rails are delivered. I want to say to the hon. member who has just spoken that it is very difficult for the government to judge what it would be possible for them to do to meet the views of our hon. friends opposite in respect to the encouragement of Canadian industry. We are charged with perpetrating a very great wrong if we go to a foreign country to buy an article, when we can buy it very much cheaper there than at home; and if we buy an article at home, we are told that we could have got it very much cheaper abroad. This makes it a little difficult for us to pursue a course which will commend itself to all our hon. friends opposite.

Mr. OSLER. I wish at once to make it plain that there is not one member on this side who would criticise the government for any possible agreement it might make, which would in any way encourage the manufacture of steel rails or any other commodity in Canada, but we are fairly entitled to criticise the contract which the hon. minister entered into last year. We contended last year that it was a most ridiculous and injudicious one. The hon. minister himself did not know whether he had signed it or not. In fact he said the contract had not been signed, and it turned out to have been signed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was the other way.

Mr. OSLER. That is immaterial. He had forgotten whether he had signed it or not, although it was a contract involving millions of dollars.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I thought I had signed it, and it turned out that I had not.

Mr. OSLER. It is quite immaterial.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of course, quite immaterial.

Mr. OSLER. It was a contract for 125,000 tons, and the minister forgot whether he had signed it or not. We contended that it could not be fulfilled. Up to the last moment the minister contended that it could, and would be fulfilled.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. OSLER. Up to the last moment he expressed the greatest confidence that Mr. Clergue would be able to deliver the rails. He was to begin by the 1st of August.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend is mistaken.

Mr. OSLER. While we are glad to encourage the manufacture of steel rails and to help on Mr. Clergue or any company that will come to Canada to prosecute that industry, we would like to know how the contract has worked out. 15,000 tons of rails were purchased by the government, but not delivered by Mr. Clergue. That made a saving of $7 per ton. The hon. minister is asked whether that 15,000 tons is to be deducted from the gross amount of Mr. Clergue's contract, and he is uncertain about it. He is asked whether the first delivery of 25,000 tons shall be at the rate of $32.60 per ton, and he says he thinks so, but is apparently uncertain. He has not even referred the matter to the Legal Department to find out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is desirous, no doubt, of stating the facts most accurately, but he has not succeeded in doing so, for he says that the contract was entered into last year, and that we have in consequence made a loss.

Mr. OSLER. A profit.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A profit to the extent of 15,000 tons. He needs to be reminded that the contract was not made last year but two years ago, and made at a time when Mr. Clergue was prepared to undertake to establish a steel rail industry in Canada, but in order to secure the necessary capital for the purpose he required some evidence to show that there would be, at all events, a substantial quantity of rails actually guaranteed, as it were, or for which a market would be available. We may have been wrong as to the desirability of establishing a manufacture of rails in Canada, but if we were it was an error in judgment and an error on the right side; and it was an error which, notwithstanding the extreme condemnation our proposition received from the other side, met with very general acceptance in the country. The prices that were fixed in that contract were the prices current at the time.

Mr. TAYLOR. When was it made ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The agreement was entered into, and the Order in Council authorizing the execution of the contract made in the month of August 1900.

Mr. TAYLOR. Just before the elections.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend has elections on his mind and cannot shake them off. I do not see any reason why because an election is pending, the whole business of the country should be suspended. But my suspicious friends opposite connect the idea of an election with every transaction, even when that transaction takes place a year before or a year after. The hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) has been busy trying to prove that although certain things took place two or three months after the election, they took place in view of that election. Well, we are conscious of absolute rectitude and can afford to treat with a great deal of indifference the criticisms of my hon. friends. We were serving the interests of the public, and I believe it will be found to have worked out to the advantage of the Dominion. The establishment of these mills at Sault Ste. Marie will be recognized as one of the best things which the government has been instrumental in securing. When my hon. friend talks about a difference of $7, I hope he will realize that it is very well to talk of what the prices were a year or two years after the arrangement was made, when we know that these things are liable to variation. My hon. friend will not be vocal in praising my first purchase of rails. I made a purchase of 20,000 tons. It is true they were purchased in the United States. We could make a better arrangement in the United States than in England, as we ascertained when we called for tenders. We bought the rails at a price, to be delivered some months afterwards, and when the time for delivery came, we could have made $5 or $6 a ton, the price having gone up. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not seem to realize that a government, like a private individual, must take these risks. The rails must be bought in quantities before they can be used, and one must take the chances of what the market will be at the time of delivery.

Mr. OSLER. My recollection is that, last year we showed that the price was $25 a ton at the time——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am sure you did not.

Mr. OSLER. We will look at the record in 'Hansard.'

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman gave some figures about prices after the arrangement was made.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) last session dealt with the prices at the time of the contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman will look at the prices at the time when the Order in Council was passed, he will see that he is mistaken. The arrangement made with Mr. Clergue was committed to the form of an Order in Council, and, when that was passed, Mr. Clergue was advised of the fact. The contract was not signed—it was not even drawn up—for some time afterwards. But that did not make any difference for we were bound, and so was Mr. Clergue, and we did not think it necessary to rush the preparation of the papers.

Mr. OSLER. I think we can prove pretty conclusively that the price of rails was $25 a ton at that time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think the hon. gentleman will not be able to confirm that concerning the time when the negotiations took place and the arrangement was made. That was early in July, I think.

Mr. OSLER. To avoid possible future claims from Mr. Clergue, I think it would be well for the minister to have an interpretation of the contract now. For, unless he knows more about it than he did last year, there is a very good chance of his ideas being wrong. The contract, as I recollect it, might be fairly construed, as a contract for 125,000 tons. I think that the minister should see to it that there is no uncertainty about this matter. I do not find the statement in 'Hansard' with respect to prices that I expected to find.

Mr. MACLEAN. The case as I recollect it, was something like this: In 1900 the government made some secret arrangement with Mr. Clergue. The arrangement was based upon protectionist principle, but it was made at a time when they were appealing to the people as a free trade government. We on this side who are protectionists do not object to a protectionist measure on the part of the government, but we do object to their unbusinesslike way of carrying it out. The hon. minister cannot give an explanation now, that makes the matter clear. He will not justify this contract on the ground of encouraging a home industry but has got it all muddled up. He cannot give a clear-cut interpretation of what the arrangement really is. According to my recollection, we were promised last year that we were to get a new rail made of nickle steel. I would like to know if the rails that are being delivered are of this superior character?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am sorry that I am not endowed with the capacity for elucidation possessed by my hon. friend (Mr. Maclean). But I fear that the committee will have to take me as I am. I can assure the hon. gentleman that there was no secrecy about the arrangement. I think we were all rather proud of it. I know I felt that it was not by any means an arrangement that required to be apologized for. I took occasion to speak of it upon the platform, and I understood that some of my colleagues did so also. And we did not put it upon protectionist ground either. This is not a question of protection at all.

Mr. BARKER. The Minister of Customs (Hon. Mr. Paterson) defended it on that ground.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) mentioned it in the campaign, I do not know on what grounds he commended it. But the bargain was a very good one, because we bought at the price which was ruling when we made the agreement, though the price did subsequently fall. When my hon. friend speaks of $25 a ton he speaks of what took place months after the arrangement was made. But we could not go back on the arrangement because of the fall in the market. As an honourable man, my hon. friend would not have done so had he been at the head of the department. Mr. Clergue had made it a condition of getting the rail mill in operation, and my hon. friend would be one of the last men in parliament who would go back on a fair, clear understanding. Yet the hon. gentleman criticises us because we did not do a thing which he himself would regard as dishonourable. I think that is carrying a political critical view of things rather far.

Mr. OSLER. I do not think any member on this side of the House for a moment suggests that the government should go back on their bargain with Mr. Clergue. We are criticising the minister for the bargain he made, and that is our right to do. It is not fair that the Minister of Railways and Canals should put into our mouths statements that we want to repudiate a bargain that the country made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If that is the case, why does he quote prices that did not rule until long after the bargain was made? He goes back to the time when we made the arrangement with Mr. Clergue. I recollect that the Order in Council did not pass until some time after this arrangement was made, but the arrangement existed all the same. Why does the hon. gentleman quote prices that ruled subsequently?

Mr. OSLER. My recollection is that there was a combination of the American manufacturers, and a nominal rise in prices to $31 and $32 a ton. At the time that the minister made his bargain the Canadian Pacific Railway and other railway companies bought rails at $25 a ton

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mackenzie & Mann told me they paid as high prices as we paid.

Mr. OSLER. I am not talking about Mackenzie & Mann. The minister at the time taunted me in the House with making a statement without a knowledge of the facts. I gave the facts, and the figures, and the dates, at the time that contract was made, running over nearly a month.

Mr. HEYD. Did not the minister also state that contract was brought before the House, that one of the reasons why the government made it was to induce the Clergue industry to start a steel rail plant in this country? And would they have started that steel rail plant had not this contract been given?

Mr. MACLEAN. It is a fact that the Order in Council was a secret order made in August, 1900, and the existence of that Order in Council was not made public until the discussion in this House last year. The minister stated that the reason he made this contract was that he wished to encourage home industries, but at the time he did not take the public into his confidence, and when he went to the country he said that he was not doing anything at the time. It was only brought out twelve or fourteen months after he made this contract, as he said, with that public object in view.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman is altogether mistaken. In speaking at Sault Ste. Marie during that campaign, I myself, stated publicly that we had come to an agreement with Mr. Clergue. I made the same statement in the city of Montreal on two or three occasions. The fact was made known during the campaign itself.

Mr. MONK. I am disposed to let by-gones be by-gones with regard to that contract. But I think it was demonstrated at the time that we were paying $32.60 a ton, a great deal more than we should have paid, even conceding the point, which I am disposed to concede, that we should encourage home industries, and that, other things being equal, we should pay dearer at home for rails rather than go abroad for them. But the point I was trying to elucidate was this: What steps did we take when we found out that Mr. Clergue could not carry out his contract? Did we consult the Department of Justice to find out whether we could get out of that part of the contract by which we were bound to pay $32.60 for those rails—an exorbitant price when you consider that both the province of Ontario and the Dominion of Canada were paying a bounty to Mr. Clergue? Now, the minister demonstrated the fact that we were offering to pay too high a price upon the purchase of rails last year. We have not bought from Mr. Clergue, and we have realized an economy of over $100,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We would have realized an economy by not buying anything from him.

Mr. MONK. As Mr. Clergue was in default in fulfilling the terms of our contract with him, it seems to me we were free to discuss the question of price with him again; yet at this moment the Minister of Railways and Canals comes back and asks us for $600,000, the most of it for new rails; and as I understand the contract, Mr. Clergue can come to us to-morrow and tender the rails we require at that exorbitant price of $32.60. That is the position as I understand it. It is regrettable that the Minister of Railways and Canals did not avail himself of Mr. Clergue's inability last year to supply us with rails, to discuss a new conditions of the contract, and to make new terms which would be less onerous to this country.

Mr. BARKER. It seems to me one of the plainest business propositions that when Mr. Clergue agreed to supply last year 25,000 tons at a particular price and failed to deliver them, we are not bound to take any of that quantity this year. Surely any business man knows that. He agreed to deliver 25,000 tons at a certain price last year, and another 25,000 tons this year at the market price of this year. The government had to buy 15,000 tons elsewhere last year, and now the hon. gentleman says that Mr. Clergue will be allowed to deliver 10,000 tons this year at the price of last year's contract, which is away above the present price. The minister entered into that contract and agreed to give $32.60, although the market price at the time he made the contract was $25.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg your pardon.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) stated it in this House, and quoted prices that he obtained from the Canadian Pacific Railway at the very time when the Minister of Railways and Canals made that contract for $32.60 a ton. What was the answer of the Minister of Railways and Canals? Why, this was done to encourage manufactures in Canada. The government was to give $7 a ton more than the market price at that time. The hon. gentleman forgot, as I pointed out to him last year, that in addition to the $32.60 per ton, the country was giving a bonus of between $6 and $7 on the manufacture of the steel in this country. According to that, Mr. Clergue was to get $32.60 from the Minister of Railways and Canals and between $6 and $7 as a bonus from the Dominion and the province of Ontario. That was the position. We were to give about $39 a ton for these rails when they could have been bought for $25. All these facts I think are clearly found in the 'Hansard.' The Minister of Railways and Canals had a different statement to make to us every time this question was up. Now what was the original story? I recollect it as well as if it was yesterday. The hon. gentleman began his negotiations first when this House was sitting. His excuse for not laying the negotiations before the House was that it was towards the end of the session, the House was busy, and he did not wish to lay them before the House. At that time the price at which Mr. Clergue offered to supply these rails was $32 per ton, but, after the House prorogued, Mr. Clergue and the hon. minister met, and although he admitted that there had been no change in the market price of rails, the hon. minister increased the price to $32.60 per ton.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was for delivering them down on the road.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman was asked if there had been any change in the market price of rails between the time he received the offer from Mr. Clergue during the sittings of the House and after the meeting with Mr. Clergue in June and he said that he had allowed him 60 cents per ton extra because Mr. Clergue thought he ought to have it. That is what the hon. minister said. In that way the hon. minister in a moment agreed to give $15,000 more for the 25,000 tons of rails than Mr. Clergue had offered to supply them for. Then, later than August, very close to the end of parliament —I think it was as late as October—an Order in Council was passed authorizing a contract for 25,000 tons at $32.60 a ton and for 100,000 tons more, at the market price, for the following four years. The hon. gentleman had agreed to pay the very large price of $32.60 per ton for 25,000 tons and Mr. Clergue was not able to deliver one ton. It is quite true that the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dyment), who intervened in the debate last year, stood up in the House and told us that he had just been up at the Soo and that everything was in readiness to deliver the rails and that delivery would begin in August. We have heard to-day that you are not a bit further advanced. The hon. gentleman had to buy 15,000 tons and he was able to get them at $26 a ton instead of being obliged to pay $32.60. He seems to think that he is to dole out the money of this country at will. The gentleman who failed to comply with his contract and who has not delivered one ton of the 25,000 tons is to be treated as if he had complied with his contract, and he is to get $32.60 a ton now when the hon. gentleman admits that he is able to buy rails at between $25 and $26 a ton. I wonder if the hon. gentleman thinks, that, in his own behalf, he would pay, or that on behalf of any other person, he would be justified in paying out money in this way. What does the hon. gentleman say? He wants a vote from this House for 25,000 tons of rails. He says he is going to pay $32.60 per ton for 10,000 and $28 per ton for the remainder. That would amount to $746,000 for rails alone, and the same item of the estimates includes fastenings at $50 a ton. How is the hon. gentleman going to pay for these 25,000 tons of rails which come to $746,000, besides a lot of fastenings when he is only asking for $600,000. That shows that these estimates are perfect nonsense. Where is the reason in submitting such an estimate as that to anyone who understands business and who knows what he is talking about? The hon. gentleman stands up and tells us that he proposes to buy 25,000 tons of rails this year, that he is going to pay $32.60 per ton for 10,000 and $28 per ton for 15,000 tons and he only asks $600,000 to pay for them. How he is going to pay for these rails out of this $600,000 and pay for the fastenings as well, is something that I think requires a little more explanation.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I was unfortunately not in the House when the discussion upon this subject opened. As to what is the proper price to be paid for rails during the current year, that is a subject on which I do not care to offer any opinion, not having been present when the discussion began, but I dissent entirely from the statement of the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) as to the arrangement which was made last year. It was not such an arrangement as the hon. gentleman described.

Mr. BARKER. I am speaking from the debate.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Like the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) I have to confess that my recollection of this matter is a little dim, because I have not had occasion of late to deal with the subject. My recollection is that at an early stage of the season—I forget at what particular date—Mr. Clergue discussed with the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), on behalf of the government, the question of assisting the starting of this Canadian enterprise by giving an order for rails. It was discussed with various members of the government, but chiefly with the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals as his department was more particularly concerned, and it was agreed that an order should be given to Mr. Clergue for a quantity of rails at the then market price, whatever that market price was. My hon. friend (Mr. Barker) shakes his head, but I want to insist in this respect that my recollection is right. It was agreed that the rails should be taken at the market price when the arrangement was made and Mr. Clergue was so informed and it was so understood. But, it so happened that that was not expressed in a report of the hon. minister until a little later, and that the report of the minister was not expressed in an Order in Council until a little later. Hon. gentlemen make their comparisons as to the price of rails at the date of the passing of the Order in Council, and say that the price was too high, because, in the meantime rails had dropped in price. But it is necessary to remember that the price agreed upon, or the price at which the rails were contracted for, was the price of the market at the time the arrangement was made. It was a fair price, and the fact that rails subsequently dropped in price is something that might occur in any transaction.

Mr. BARKER. There was no drop between June when the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals made a contract at $32.60 and the time at which the Order in Council was passed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My impression is that the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken on that point. What the government meant to do and what it understood it was doing was to give Mr. Clergue the benefit of an order at the market price at the time, which was a fixed price—of course you could ascertain the existing market price—and to bargain that for a period in the future he should have further orders at the market price prevailing at the time of manufacture. As to the bounty my hon. friend mixes that up very unfairly with the arrangement. The bounty has nothing to do with it. If Mr. Clergue makes steel ingots he will get any bounty that is given by the government for the manufacture of steel ingots. He gets the bounty whether he makes rails or not. If the hon. Minister of Railways were buying steel rails he would have no difficulty in buying them from Mr. Clergue or anybody else at the market price and the bounty would have nothing to do with it whatever. So far as the hon. gentleman imports the bounty into the matter, it is unfair because it has nothing to do with it.

Mr. BARKER. What I contend is that the bounty satisfies all questions that have been raised as to encouraging manufacture in this country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No.

Mr. BARKER. Yes, the bounty satisfies that portion of it and after giving the bounty we are entitled to buy the rails at the market price.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have been granting a bounty on iron and steel for a number of years but we have not had a rail manufactured in Canada up to the present time, unless Mr. Clergue is now turning them out. Therefore, as the bounty on iron and steel has not created the industry of manufacturing steel rails, something more is necessary. We have been paying an iron and steel bounty for the last ten or fifteen years and we have not yet had a rail made in Canada. It is an advanced process of manufacture. Therefore, the object of this government in making the contract was not merely to continue something that had already existed under the bounty, but to create another stage of manufacture, to carry the process further, and to bring about the manufacture of steel rails. I think that was a fair statement. My hon. friend will see that when he says the bounty was enough to create the industry of rail manufacturing, experience has shown that he is mistaken.

Mr. BARKER. Does the Minister of Finance pretend that the Minister of Railways and Canals has the right to increase the price of rails in order to encourage their manufacture. Is that within the functions of the minister.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I contend that the minister had no right to do so and did not do so. Mr. Clergue was the only intending manufacturer of steel rails in Canada, and we agreed with Mr. Clergue, irrespective of the bounty, to buy a quantity of rails at the market price at the time the arrangement was made. That was the basis of the contract, and that is what the Minister of Railways and Canals says he intended to do, and that is what he did do. The fact that the rails afterwards dropped in price proves nothing. In all commercial transactions the man who buys takes the risk of the price dropping, and if it does drop he may be sorry he bought so much, but that is a risk common to every one.

Mr. OSLER. From 'Hansard,' Vol. 2, 1901, page 3,572, I find the following :

Mr. OSLER. The last time this item was discussed, the Minister of Railways laid what we all supposed was the contract on the Table. He defended that contract from one end of it to the other as a contract in the interests of the country. He said the price was good and favourable, that it was the lowest price at which the rails could be purchased. He stated that the general opinion was that rails were not on a falling market, but on a rising market. Now, as it happens, at that time there had been a large sale of English rails, English manufacturers had not been able to overtake the demand, and consequently they were not selling further rails. In the States production had overtaken the demand, consequently the rails were steadily falling. In the States rails had fallen within two months from $35 to $26 a ton, at the date on which the minister made this contract, he paid $7 a ton more than the price for which he could have got rails. Now, as Liberal-Conservatives and as protectionists, there is no reasonable limit to which we on this side of the House would not go to establish and protect a steel industry in this country. The difference between the two parties is that the Liberal-Conservatives would have made this contract openly, and adopted it as part of their policy. The government made this contract secretly, they covered up their contract and did not want the country to know it. There is the clearly defined difference between the two parties. Now let me show you that our contention was right as to the prices, and that the minister made his contract in a falling market. The price of manufactured pig iron in Canada during July, and up to the 28th of August, delivered at the Hamilton furnace, was $23 a ton; from the 28th of August to the 20th of September, it was $20 a ton ; from the 20th of September onwards to October, and to the end of the year, it was $18 a ton ; and to-day it is about $17 a ton. So there is a difference as between $23 and $17 a ton for the raw material. The price of rails in England kept up for some time, but no English rails were sold on this continent because American rails were bought, the price being so much lower.

There is my direct statement as to the price of these rails on a certain date.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When was that.

Mr. OSLER. The date on which the contract was made. There was a discussion on this subject later on and from the 'Hansard' of May 15th page 5,235, I quote the following :

Mr. OSLER. That is quite natural. You could not make a contract to-day for rails for present delivery.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. For delivery in the autumn, in this season.

Mr. OSLER. Certainly, no one will make a contract now, or in the beginning of June, for rails to be supplied in July, August or September. But when we were discussing the matter the contract could have been made for much less.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am glad to get that acknowledgment from the hon. gentleman, because not only he, but a dozen members on the other side pointed to the present price and said we were paying $7 more than we should.

Mr. OSLER. But the minister will find that all the statements were regarding a contract made in October, the prices were then stated on this side of the House, and it was shown that he made the contract for $7 a ton more than rails could be bought for then. You cannot go into the market to-day and buy rails for delivery a month or two months hence; it would be an absurdity.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I ask the hon. gentleman to turn up what he himself said on that subject in this House, and he will find that the criticism he made upon this transaction was to the effect that you could buy rails in the United States to-day for $26 per ton.

Mr. OSLER. At the time the contract was made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At the time the hon. gentleman made the statement he said the price was $26 a ton. He is not willing to go back to a date at the time when this arrangement was made with Mr. Clergue in the month of August. He has to come down to the month of November before he will find the price quoted in the United States below the price I have named. He will find, if he chooses to look at the published reports in the trade papers, what steel rails were quoted for at those dates. To-day, he has to pay $28 a ton, and I do not believe he could get delivery in any part of this season. I do not care what portion of the season he chooses. Up to the close of navigation he cannot get a contract for delivery at the works of any of the companies at less than $28 a ton. I do not think he can get it at $28 a ton, because an offer made to the Grand Trunk Railway Company for 50,000 tons at $28 a ton ten days ago was withdrawn because the price is going up.

Mr. OSLER. Two days before I made the statement in this House I had seen a contract made by the Canadian Pacific Railway at $25 a ton for steel rails delivered in Montreal this year.

I distinctly stated, and I state again, that at the time the minister made that contract he made it at $7 a ton more than the price of rails in the United States.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) is entirely mistaken. If he means to refer to the date the contract was drawn and sent forward for execution it might be the case, or even when the Order in Council was passed, but my recollection entirely agrees with the Minister of Finance. That the agreement in effect was made anterior to the drawing up of the Order in Council, and even somewhat anterior to the sending of the report to council.

Mr. OSLER. When was the agreement made.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it was made in June, but at all events when my recollection was fresh on the matter I stated to the House when the agreement was made. My hon. friend confirms the very fact which I am trying to impress upon the committee when he reads the statement that there was a variation in the price of rails which were $35 a ton and in two months fell to $26. I say that the price was not $35 at the time this arrangement was entered into with Mr. Clergue, but I do say that the sterling price in the English market was over six pounds and under six pounds ten shillings. I brought it into parliament last year but of course hon. gentlemen would not look at it. They were bound to condemn whatever the effects might be, it was their business to do so I suppose; probably it is a legitimate part of the game. If hon. gentlemen opposite can succeed in convincing people that there was something crooked in the transaction they are entitled to it. I read from the 'Trade Review' and the journal quotations as to the sale of rails on the English market which the hon. gentleman admits himself stood firm for a long time, and that these prices were not lower at the time this arrangement was made than the prices we paid. If the hon. gentleman cares to look up 'Hansard' he will find that.

Mr. OSLER. The price of rails on the English market was seven or eight dollars a ton more than in the United States.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the English market we agreed to be bound by all through as the fairest market.

Mr. OSLER. My goodness; why in the world should the minister bind himself by a market that was $7 a ton higher than the United States market. He might as well say that he would be bound by the price in the Chinese market. I made the statement here and I was not contradicted by the minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not contradicting the hon. gentleman now, but I say that the hon. gentleman is taking the wrong date.

Mr. OSLER. I am taking absolutely the date that the contract was made and that is a fact to my own knowledge. I am taking the date on which the minister said the contract was made, and I have quoted statements which were made in this House, and not denied by the minister or any one else.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not deny them now.

Mr. BARKER. Will the minister state why he wants to pay this year $32.60 per ton for 10,000 tons, which Mr. Clergue is obliged to deliver at the market price in England to-day ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say that the government had decided to pay any such price. I have stated what I thought would be fair and reasonable, and I still think so, seeing the object we had in view in starting the industry. But whatever price will be paid is a matter that will have to be considered and decided in council.

Mr. OSLER. Well, that is accepting the statement I made that the minister does not know anything about it, and that the matter is still under discussion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If it gives the hon. gentleman any comfort at all, I will make him a present of it.

Mr. OSLER. That is just what we want to get—that the matter is still to be decided in council, and that Mr. Clergue will get the best end of the stick, as he has done so far.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose I might treat that contract as absolutely thrown over, and say to Mr. Clergue that he could do as he liked ; but that is something which I cannot do, which I have no power to do as one individual member of the cabinet; and the matter will no doubt be disposed of by the government at the proper time when the question arises. It has not arisen yet.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman is aware that this one item makes a difference of $70,000; so that I think it demands a little attention from the minister and the government. I still call the minister's attention to the fact that he is buying for this year 25,000 tons of rails, which, according to his estimate, will cost $746,000. He is also asking for a large number of fastenings which will cost $50 a ton, and he is only asking $660,000 for both. I ask him how many tons of rails and how many tons of fastenings he is getting ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estimate is 25,000 tons of rails at $28 a ton, and 4,020 tons of fastenings, at $50 a ton, and the cost of relaying the rails.

Mr. BARKER. That is labour. This item is for steel rails and fastenings, and I want to know what they are going to cost.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The statement is $901,000.

Mr. BARKER. That includes maintenance items, whereas this is a capital expenditure. How much under capital does he propose to pay for steel rails and fastenings ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say the estimate is $901,000 for the rails and fastenings, and we credit the old rails at $15 a ton and the fastenings at $20 a ton, amounting to $361,075. Take that from $901,000 and you get the $600,000.

Mr. BARKER. That brings up the question we discussed the other day, and I propose to move that this capital expenditure be brought down to a proper footing. I have contended in this House that the ordinary rule as to charges for capital should govern the book-keeping of the hon. gentleman. The rule is that he can charge to capital account only the increased weight of the rails he lays on the track. The hon. gentleman is laying, I understand, an 80-pound rail, and taking up a 67-pound rail. If so, he is entitled to charge to capital account only 13 pounds of steel. The rest is a maintenance item.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose the hon. gentleman hardly expects to invite a repetition of the discussion we had on this question. The hon. gentleman who was Minister of Railways preceding myself admits that it is simply rubbish to talk about capital in connection with this matter. You have to put down rails, you will not have the earnings to do it out of, and how does it become any more capital charged in this way than it would if charged in any other way, when it has to be paid either out of the surplus income of the year or out of bonds if there is not a surplus ? How are we to get the appropriation ? We have to put down the rails. I would not mislead parliament by saying that we are going to have surplus enough to meet that out of the earnings. If I do not ask it out of capital, how am I going to get it ? It simply means that you cannot do what is necessary to be done on the Intercolonial Railway at all unless you do it in this way.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. minister says that the hon. ex-Minister of Railways said it was all nonsense. I say he never said anything of the kind. He agrees entirely with the contention I make, that the only charge to capital that the hon. gentleman can rightly make is the increased weight of the rail he puts on the track. The hon. gentleman asks what difference does it make ? The difference is that when he makes the proper charge for revenue, we know whether he is operating the road at a profit or not. We want to know that the hon. gentleman keeps his account correctly, that is all. The hon. gentleman has actually been charging to capital account the labour of replacing the rails on the track. Surely that must stop if we are ever to know whether the hon. gentleman is working the road at a profit or not. He has told us that he is charging some amount, $50,000 for labour in this item. Last year he charged $200 a mile for the labour of putting down new rails in the place of old. But that is a maintenance charge, just as much a working expense as the wages of conductors and foremen. He asked what difference it makes, as he has not the revenue. Well, he had not the revenue to pay the $488,000 last year which he was short. What did he do ? He had to admit it was a deficit and added it to the debt of the country. He can do the same with this item and show us what the deficit really is.

I move that item No. 122 'steel rails and fastenings, $600,000' be reduced to $200,000. That is more than the amount which he is entitled to charge against capital. The balance of the $600,000 he can charge against maintenance, after deducting the value of the old rails taken up.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not underestimate the importance of having a true line of division between revenue and capital account, but I venture to say the public at large will not attach the same importance to it as my hon. friend does. The public will take the rather practical view of the matter that the expenses of the railway whether we call them capital or income account, have to be met by a general charge on the public treasury, and whether you charge the item in one or another column is not a matter of very great importance, so far as the public is concerned. They have a habit of dealing with what Mr. Mantilini calls 'the demnition total.' And if the money is faithfully expended if there be no charge of malfeasance and the works are useful, the public at large are not deeply concerned as to whether a particular item is charged to capital or income.

Mr. BARKER. Why not be correct if it makes no difference ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It would be quite impossible, in the case of a railway under the circumstances of the Intercolonial Railway to carry out in every respect the views my hon. friend has expressed. As a matter of book-keeping it is desirable that there should be a broad distinction between revenue and capital, and I suppose that in the case of private companies it is essential the line of distinction should be clearly drawn. No doubt a company would every year lay aside a certain portion of its earnings in order to create a fund for the purpose of maintaining the road, and then, when it became necessary to renew the rails or do anything of that nature, there would be a fund available, which could be drawn on without touching the capital. But there is no such condition on the Intercolonial Railway. Without attempting to find fault with the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, as a matter of fact, when the present Minister of Railways took office, the railway was in a somewhat run down condition. At all events it was not up to date. It was not up to the conditions of a modern railway. It was just about then that the conditions of railroads on the continent of America began to experience a very material change. It was discovered that it was necessary to have better roadbeds, heavier rails and better grades and curvatures, larger engines—entirely different conditions from those which formerly prevailed. The Minister of Railways had to do one of two things. Either let the railway go down and fall back in the race, or meet these new conditions by providing the money. Since there was no fund available, my hon. friend had to draw his provision from capital or not at all. I do not see any means of getting over that. Is my hon. friend to be told that the large expenditures rendered necessary in order to improve the road and buy new engines and all that were to be paid out of the earnings ? My hon. friend knows that that is impossible. There is no other fund created, no reserve fund on which he could draw, and he had to get this money and charge it up to capital or go without it.

Mr. OSLER. It is rather surprising to hear the Minister of Finance tell us that it is quite immaterial whether you charge expenditure against revenue or against capital.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman might as well be accurate, I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. OSLER. I think that what the Minister of Finance said was that the money had to be provided, and it made no difference whether you charged it to capital or revenue. Let us see where the difference is. I say it is vital. This is a public work belonging to the people, and the Minister of Railways is just as much bound to show to the public exactly what it costs to operate and own that railway as are the directorate of any private company to show their shareholders the exact profit or losses. If we were to accept the theory of the Minister of Finance, we could make that railway show a profit of a million or two million dollars, by simply charging sufficient expenditure against capital account to produce that result. That would not make any difference to the treasury in the end, but the country is entitled to know exactly what really is the result of operating the road. I quite agree that when there is a very rapid increase of business, which causes additional expenditure, you must charge a portion of the expenditure to capital, but it is absolutely fallacious to cook the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway and make it appear that road is being operated at a profit, when instead it is being operated at an enormous loss.

The accounts last year showed that the loss on the Intercolonial Railway was about half a million dollars, whereas, if the accounts had been kept properly they would have shown a loss of twice, or, perhaps, three times that amount. I say that, in the interest of the country the accounts should be kept properly, so that the people may know exactly what it costs to own and run the railway. Let us not make the mistake of believing we are operating the road on a paying basis when, as a matter of fact, we are adding to the debt of the country by millions of dollars. Operating it for the benefit of the country we may operate it indirectly at a profit, but we ought to know what it costs us in the ordinary railway sense to own and operate the road. I am surprised that anybody, above all the hon. Minister of Finance, should advocate any other course.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I presume that my hon. friend, as a public man, has been watching for many years the manner in which the Intercolonial Railway has been managed in this regard. I presume that when his friends were in power, he saw that appropriations were being asked for on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway, year after year, for the same class of expenditures as we are asking for to-day.

Mr. BARKER. Not for steel rails.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot see that there is so great a difference in this respect between steel rails and rolling stock that one rule should be applied to one and a different rule to the other. My hon. friends never thought that the books were being kept wrong by their friends. They have only discovered that the books are wrong with the change of government, and now what they approved of for many a year they condemn. One cannot resist the conclusion that, with hon. gentlemen opposite, it makes a great difference whose animal is being gored. What was right for them is wrong for me. I would like to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) how an expenditure of say $4,000,000 required in the interests of the railway should be secured? Would he be prepared to justify me in making an appropriation of $4,000,000 more on revenue account? We have obtained a grant of $5,000,000 for operating expenses. If I came to parliament and asked for $9,000,000 for operating expenses, would the hon. gentleman approve it? If I told him I was going to buy locomotives and cars and put down more rails, would he regard that as a justification? By no means. He would condemn it in unmeasured terms and would say that we had no business to ask for money for these purposes under the head of operating expenses. And I quite agree with him. As we have not the money on hand, where is it to come from? It can only be by an appropriation on capital account. The other night the hon. ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) not seeing where his argument was landing him, told us with the utmost seriousness that the capital expenditure by this government on the Intercolonial Railway was $22,000,000. In this he was actually giving a complete answer to my hon. friend's arguments, though without intending it. What was his (Hon. Mr. Haggart's) contention? He said that we had spent $22,000,000 on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway. On a previous occasion he had said that we had spent $23,000,000 in this way. And how did he make it out? Why, by adding the deficits to the expenditure on capital account making the whole expenditure up to about $21,200,000.

Mr. BARKER. He added the deficits to the government's capital expenditure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He called it capital expenditure in effect. He did not say that it was technically capital expenditure, of course. The effect of his argument was to support the point I have been making and to answer the speeches of my hon. friends.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. minister asks how he could get this appropriation except by the way he suggests. I think I can show him with the utmost ease. If he will turn to item 268, which was passed at his instance the other night, he will find that he has taken an estimate for his working expenses, including maintenance, for the coming year of $5,500,000. But the hon. gentleman does not put all these expenses in here. He can just as easily make that $6,000,000 as make it $5,500,000. As the Finance Minister practically admits, the hon. gentleman is charging to capital, items that are really maintenance charges. The Finance Minister says that it does not really make any difference and that it would be inconvenient to charge them. Let the hon. Minister of Railways put the whole truth into these items, and then we shall understand what he is doing and know what his deficit really is. He has been saying for the last four or five years that his deficits are so much or so little. But he has never shown the public the whole truth. Last year, he did not show half his deficit. As the hon. member for West Toronto has said, under the system now pursued, the hon. minister can make his deficit as much or as little as he likes, or he can create a surplus if he likes. Surely, the public do not want accounts kept in that way. Unless we have the accounts kept properly, we shall never know whether this or any minister is earning a profit or making a loss. That is the object of keeping the accounts properly. The hon. gentleman cannot be even compared with himself, that is, one year of his working cannot be compared with another, because he charges to capital what he pleases during one year, and arbitrarily charges as he wills in another year. The hon. gentleman says: What about the rolling stock? I admitted the other day that the moment the hon. gentleman added one car or one locomotive to the original stock he could charge that to capital. Nobody says anything to the contrary. He has got to maintain his original stock out of maintenance, and everything he adds to his original stock he is entitled to charge to capital. He can charge as much as he likes to capital, providing he is adding to his stock and adding to the line. When I asked the question of Mr. Pottinger the other day as to the propriety of charging the whole of this to capital, his answer was a very simple one: Why should I object as long as parliament grants the money?

Mr. OSLER. When these gentlemen get into a corner and are hard pressed for an answer their argument invariably is, well, your party did the same thing before we came into power. Now, I for one have not got the sins of the Conservative party before 1896 on my shoulders, and I think there are many new members in this House in the same position. I for one, in my innocence and in my foolishness, thought that in many ways the present government were going to be an improvement on the Conservative government. I find that I was entirely mistaken. I must say at once that I do not propose to accept that answer to any argument that I make. It is the school boy reply, You're another, that should not be used in this House.

Mr. SPROULE. The general public is interested in knowing what the Intercolonial Railway has cost. We have had a good deal of controversy over it during the last few years. Hon. gentlemen opposite have contended that there was a surplus when in reality there was none. I think there ought to be some system followed by both sides under which the people of the country would know the exact state of the case. The present government contended that the system followed by their predecessors was wrong, and now we find them going still further in the same direction. We should endeavour to discover some system by which the people will understand whether the Intercolonial is a paying scheme or not.

Item voted; nays, 21; yeas, 56.

To increase accommodation at Sydney, $77,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The appropriation which we are asking for under this head is to enable us to establish car and machine shops, store buildings, to put in machinery and tools for boilers, to arrange for water service, and to provide for an addition to the track yard. Sydney is becoming a very important point, and is really the center and headquarters of the service in Cape Breton. We require to be able to repair our plant whenever that becomes necessary, and we require to have a proper equipment and buildings for headquarters. The business is growing very rapidly at that point. The operations which are being carried on by the Nova Scotia Steel Company, and which I understand are going to be enlarged, render it necessary that we should make provision for a considerable extension of our business.

Mr. BARKER. Has the hon. gentleman estimates in his department showing the works proposed to be executed, and detailing the cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. So that they will be available when we want to see what the expenditure is?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BARKER. Has the hon. gentleman ever estimated what the whole cost of the works at Sydney has been, and what is further contemplated?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can furnish information as to what has been expended, but not what will be.

Mr. BARKER. We spent last year $139,000 at this point. When are we going to be done with Sydney?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The very moment that the necessity for the expenditure is at an end. We must furnish this accommodation. We have cut down our demands to the lowest possible figure. I would not take the responsibility of saying that we can dispense with any of this vote. We have gone into it with our engineering staff as carefully as we could.

Mr. BARKER. When the hon. gentleman is entering upon a large work of this kind does he not get an estimate at the beginning, showing what is intended to be done? The hon. gentleman surely does not go on year after year spending hundreds of thousands of dollars without knowing what the end is likely to be. Has the hon. gentleman ever got an estimate from his engineers of what the whole yard and the works will cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We know what the plan which we are proposing to adopt must necessarily cost, but we do not feel called upon to embark upon that in all its details at the start. We proceed gradually in order that we will not be making unreasonable demands upon parliament, but the necessity of the work is such that it must be done.

Mr. BARKER. Are we nearly through with it yet ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have made pretty fair progress.

Mr. BARKER. Why should not the hon. gentleman be able to tell us how near we are to the end ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think I will be able to give the hon. gentleman a very fair estimate as to the progress of the work. I think we are very nearly reaching the end of this particular work at Sydney.

Mr. BARKER. I have no objection to the item passing if the hon. gentleman says he will furnish the information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. I think it would be necessary to have from the hon. minister an estimate of what the cost will be and whether, if he finds himself short, he will make up the shortage by drawing upon any other item instead of confining himself to this item. This has been done in the past, and I think it is time it should be stopped. There is an item for increased accommodation at Sydney and another for additional sidings along the line. The hon. gentleman has taken money from the second head and applied it to the first head, and he should not have done so. The hon. gentleman has no more right to expend money in that way than any private member of this House has the right to take money for public purposes for which it has not been voted. When the hon. gentleman asks for an amount with which he proposes to undertake a new work, he should be prepared to bring down an estimate of the cost of that work, so that every hon. gentleman would know exactly what we are going into, and then, each year, if the government are not prepared to pay the full amount, to have the work completed and ask for a portion of the amount, we should know what the balance is that they expect will be necessary in order to complete the work.

Mr. BARKER. In confirmation of what the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Ingram) has said, I would say that in 1900-01, the hon. gentleman spent $41,000 at Sydney which was voted for improvements along the line.

Mr. PUTTEE. This is a considerable item, and I imagine that a number of contracts will come under it. Therefore, I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to the shortcomings of his department in the matter of contracts containing the fair-wage clause. The Department of Labour issued their annual report some time ago, and I find an account of the contracts given out by the various departments. For instance, there is a list of :

> Contracts entered into by the Department of Public Works during the year ending June 30, 1901, containing fair wages schedules and above cited conditions for the protection of labour.

There is a page and a half of contracts given out containing fair-wage schedules, but I find upon turning over to the list of the contracts entered into by the Department of Railways and Canals that while there is an extensive list of contracts containing the 'above cited fair-wages and other conditions for protection of labour,' there are no schedules to go with these contracts. To find out to what extent such contracts had been awarded, I moved for a return which was brought down to this House, dated March 11, this year. A number of questions was put to find out if possible on what conditions these contracts were let, and I find these answers :

> The number of contracts in which the schedule of wages was prepared by the fair wages officers : None.
> The number of contracts in which the schedule of wages was prepared by the contractors and accepted by the department : None.
> The number of contracts which were unaccompanied by schedules of wages : All.

I am not satisfied that the Department of Public Works should have all the credit for the enforcement of this fair-wage resolution that was passed by this House two years ago. As a matter of fact, nearly all the contracts now given out by the Department of Public Works contain not only that clause, but the schedule of wages current in the district in which the work is being carried on. I believe that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) could tell us that the Department of Labour looked after this matter. They have officers appointed and paid to prepare these schedules, who speak both English and French, so that they can handle all kinds of contracts in any district in the country. I think that if the Department of Railways and Canals will hand the matter over, as it should be, and as the Department of Public Works has done, to the Department of Labour, it will cause no more trouble in the department, and it will be satisfactory to all interests. In the Department of Marine and Fisheries, where they have different kinds of work to give out, there are no schedules, but there is this clause :

> If this condition——

That is the payment of wages current in the district.

> ——is violated, the said party of the second part may cancel the contract and refuse to accept any work done thereunder.

In the Department of Railways and Canals there are no schedules or conditions whatever. In view of the fact that this matter has been passed upon by this parliament and that the fair-wage condition has been carried out successfully in the Department of Public Works, it seems to me only reasonable that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals shall, as far as possible, have a fair-wage schedule put in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must confess that I was under the impression that the general clause covered the ground pretty well. If there had been any complaints that proper wages were not being paid we would have been in the position, under the general clause, to have called the contractor to account, and I think we would have been able to ensure the employees proper consideration at the hands of the contractors. But, since my hon. friend (Mr. Puttee) and others have been pressing on me the desirability, the justice and fairness of having schedules included in the contracts, I am not unwilling to give the matter my very best consideration as to the contracts which will be entered into in the future, in order to see what we can do towards meeting the wishes of these hon. gentlemen.

Original construction, $2,000.

Mr. INGRAM. What is that for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is an item that has appeared, I might almost say, from time immemorial. It has reference to the claims that are still arising in respect to the first work that was done on the Intercolonial Railway. Every year the same amount is asked for, and it has been asked for during all these years. We have to have a general vote to cover it. Last year the amount we had to pay out was $1,728.52. We have expended during the year in which we now are, $758 on that account. These claims are constantly coming up, the result sometimes of litigation and sometimes of settlement in other ways.

Strengthening bridges, $175,000.

Mr. BARKER. Will the minister explain what this is for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The extreme pressure under which the bridge companies were working last year made it impossible for them to supply what we required within the fiscal year, and so $75,000 of this has to be revoted. We started out with the idea that by spending $100,000 a year, we would in five or six years sufficiently strengthen our bridges to bear the heavy locomotives.

Mr. BARKER. Is this taking the place of old work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. The bridges that were built on the Intercolonial Railway were nearly all built after one pattern, and if they were not called upon to carry heavier trains than prior to 1898 they would last for many years to come. We have been obliged to increase their carrying capacity, and what we do is to take one span out and add it to the existing span of another bridge, then replacing the one which we have removed by a new span.

Mr. BARKER. None of the old structures have been taken away ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. MONK. Is the work progressing from Montreal to Halifax or from Halifax to Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No regular system of that kind has been adopted. There is always some little difference in the condition of the bridges and we have been working on those which most needed prompt attention.

Mr. MONK. Is there an estimate of what the total cost of this work will be ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have only expended $225,000 out of the $600,000 which it was originally estimated we would require.

Mr. MONK. Is this work done by contract and tender ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Invariably.

Mr. MONK. Who are the principal contractors?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Hamilton Bridge Company; the Canadian Bridge Company; the Montreal Bridge Company; the bridge companies who do that kind of work are invited to tender.

Increased accommodation at Lévis, $22,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Does any of this money go for the land which has been the subject of an action in the Exchequer Court ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is nothing in this vote to pay for land. I believe that litigation is still pending.

Mr. OSLER. What is this money for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To grade the yard; to complete the track laying; to provide for a water service; to build a concrete walk; for sidewalks alongside of the tracks; for a wooden covering.

Mr. OSLER. I was in Quebec a few months ago, and from the Quebec side I saw a balloon like structure of wood, something like what would be erected in a mushroom town. It appeared to be a regular fire trap. Surely the minister is not putting up a wooden structure at Lévis. I am not finding fault with the expenditure, but it did seem to me to be a most unsuitable structure, judging by the appearance from the other side of the river.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) is speaking of the station that is in course of erection at Lévis. The description he has given would not suggest it to my mind.

Mr. OSLER. I asked what it was and they told me that it was the Intercolonial Railway station.

Mr. MONK. Will the minister furnish us at a later stage with similar information with regard to Lévis that he promised with regard to Sydney as to the total cost, and so on ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Additional sidings along the line, $50,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the intention of the minister to make any improvement in the sidings at Apohaqui ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not made any provision for Apohaqui.

Mr. FOWLER. The necessary improvement there would only cost a very small sum, and it is greatly required in consequence of the amount of business done there. The siding should be extended. It is now only possible to load four cars at a time. To give an idea of the extent of business done there, I may say that this year between the 1st of January and the 1st of July there will be shipped about five million feet of lumber besides a very large quantity of tan bark and cord wood. I think some little improvement was about to be made this spring to the through siding, but the other requires to be lengthened and graded. I will furnish the minister with a plan which I have had prepared showing the improvements that are necessary.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We might possibly be able to do something in connection with that in the supplementary estimates, but it is a long and tedious job to get these items extended. We have to spread them over years, and we take first those for which there is the most urgent need. I will note what the hon. gentleman has said, and will see what can be done.

Mr. FOWLER. The minister will see from the number of cars of lumber shipped this year the amount of business, and it will not diminish in the near future. For the want of this improvement shippers are caused a great deal of inconvenience and expense.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know that the trouble is serious.

Mr. BARKER. I suppose the minister will give us a list of these sidings. If he will lay it on the Table with the other papers, we will not delay the item.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will do so.

To exchange drawbars of freight cars, $15,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have no alternative but to put air brakes to freight cars and to change the couplers of passenger cars and the drawbars.

Mr. INGRAM. Are these the master car builders' drawbars ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are.

New machinery for locomotive and car shops, $10,000.

Mr. INGRAM. We would like a little explanation of that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Hon. members can understand that in having to handle heavier cars and locomotives we require heavier machinery, and we are endeavouring to supply that need as rapidly as we can.

Mr. INGRAM. What class of machinery?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the ordinary machinery required for handling our locomotives and cars in the workshop.

Mr. INGRAM. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give us a statement showing the kind of machinery.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will try to do so.

To equip 10 passenger cars with Pintsch gas apparatus, $8,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are equipping all our cars with that.

Mr. MONK. Will it require a vote every year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not. I think we ought to be able to complete all of them by next year.

New superstructure for six spans Mirimichi bridge, $51,000.

Mr. BARKER. I make the same objection to the whole of this charge being made to capital that I did with regard to steel rails. This is for substituting a new superstructure for an old one, and the amount should be less by a proper charge to maintenance as regards the old superstructure.

Mr. MONK. Is there any estimated charge to maintenance, as in the case of other railways ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are transferring this bridge to the Island Railway. So far as weight goes it is a first class bridge.

Mr. BARKER. Are you crediting this account with the full amount you are charging the Prince Edward Island Railway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. There will be no profit between the two.

Mr. BARKER. What about the cost of replacing the new bridge ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are valuing the old bridge at $32,000, as a bridge for the Prince Edward Island Railway.

Mr. BARKER. What about the old bridge on Prince Edward Island ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no old bridge. This is entirely new.

Rolling stock, Intercolonial Railway, $500,000.

Mr. INGRAM. The present system is entirely wrong. Just fancy this new master mechanic being engaged here for some months and not knowing the condition of the rolling stock of the road. Why should it not be the duty of the master mechanic to see that the hundreds of cars which are laying by, some of which require very little repairs, are repaired instead of buying new cars ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The cars that are worth repairing are repaired.

Mr. INGRAM. Not according to the evidence.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The repairs may possibly be deferred owing to pressure of work. I do not know that the hon. gentleman is in any position to condemn the mechanical superintendent. It would be an injustice to any officer to set him aside in that off-hand way as incompetent. This mechanical superintendent was formerly in the service of the Grand Trunk Railway as assistant to the chief mechanical superintendent and is a very bright man, and I shall be disappointed if he does not turn out exceedingly capable. But I would not expect him to be able in a few months to do work which, under ordinary conditions, would require a great deal longer. I ask the hon. gentleman to suspend judgment. No political aim can be served by his laying the weight of his condemnation on this young man who has done remarkably well up to the present. I found him very reliable as far as I could judge. One of the first things I asked him to do was to make up a schedule and prepare a scheme governing the wages and employees and the grading of employees in the shops. It was a new thing, but this gentleman applied himself to it at once with energy, and worked out a scheme that seems to have met with very general approval. I was well pleased with the work this young man has done. I endeavoured to get his predecessor interested in the work, but he did not seem able to take it up. This young man, however, took it up and dealt with it very satisfactorily.

Mr. INGRAM. I have not made any remarks for the purpose of belittling the mechanical superintendent. My sole object was to improve the working of the Intercolonial Railway. So far as this young man is concerned, I believe he is a practical man, but I am taking the statement he made at the committee. When asked whether he had examined all the cars, he said no, but he looked at some.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How was it physically possible?

Mr. INGRAM. He said why it was he had not the other cars examined. It was because he was not directly concerned in them, but was more concerned in anything he undertook since engaged by the government. Just as that young man said, these cars are automatically reported to the department, and those not requiring large repairs would naturally be repaired at the shops, but I understand in this instance there was a large number that require very little repair. Why should not the government repair these old cars and charge them to maintenance instead of buying new ones ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We require additional cars as well.

Mr. INGRAM. You are having cars lying around now, which the government is getting no service out of. It is for these reasons that the Intercolonial Railway is not economically managed. The hon. gentleman asked to-night how we would save expenditure ? In the first place, you should not buy three times more ties than are necessary, nor, should you have cars lying by idle when a little repairing would make them fit for use. Unless you can economically conduct your road, you are not going to make any money out of it. There is a large number of cars lying to one side, which could be used with very little repairs, according to the evidence of this young man, and why they should not be used is more than I can understand.

Mr. BARKER. In addition to the cars which have been referred to, which are capable of repair, there are 364 condemned cars. Those cars ought to be replaced out of capital. They are never going into service again, and it is absurd to go on pretending to work them. They are set down in the hon. gentleman's stock list as 364 condemned cars and remaining condemned to 1st July, 1901. The hon. gentleman should replace those cars out of his revenue account. He must keep up his stock. Instead of charging the whole of this $500,000 to capital account, he ought to charge 364 cars to maintenance and the excess go to capital. Mr. Muhlfeld, the new mechanical superintendent, told me that from 25 to 30 locomotives were so worn that they could not be used economically. They should also be replaced before the hon. gentleman charges another locomotive to capital.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think my hon. friend must be referring to a number of cars which we got a great many years ago and which have been condemned for years, and have not been replaced in the ordinary way at all. They were coal dumping cars of an old pattern—short boxes with small hoppers—which have gone out of use.

Mr. BARKER. Mr. Muhlfeld says that there are 25 or 30 locomotives on the line which are so old that they cannot be used economically. These should be sold to some contractors for $1,000 a piece and the money credited to revenue, and they should be replaced at the charge of revenue. No auditor of an ordinary railway company would allow him to charge one locomotive to capital until he had done that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We turn out of our shops or are buying on maintenance from six to nine of these big locomotives a year, so we are doing more in the way of getting new locomotives on maintenance account then was formerly done.

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman is buying twenty-six on capital account.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But the others were played out years ago.

Mr. BARKER. What difference does that make ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman say that it is fair that I should take the accumulation of cars and locomotives that were out of date before I came into the department and replace them on maintenance accunt, and so swell the maintenance account away beyond the appropriation of the year ?

Mr. BARKER. The hon. gentleman made the same defence last year. When I was referring to his condemned cars, the hon. gentleman asked me if I had taken the trouble to look at the state of the rolling stock account when he took the line over. I said that I had and gave him the figures for every year, and showed him that he had more than doubled the number of condemned cars. He had at the beginning of last year, and during the year, over 500 condemned cars, and although he replaced some he still left 364 on the condemned list.

Mr. BARKER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. With the enormous growth of the business and with the limited capacity of our shops, it is impossible to keep up. I am in hopes that we are approaching the time when, with these appropriations we shall be able to get this work off our hands as the demands arrive.

Mr. EMMERSON. The hon. minister has said that the former mechanical superintendent did not seem to be able to prepare a schedule of wages as it has been prepared by the gentleman who now fills that position. I would like to know if the former mechanical superintendent ever received instructions to prepare a schedule covering the whole number of men employed in the shops.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had a good many conversations with the former mechanical superintendent, and had not a word of complaint to make. I did not think he took hold of the idea with the same promptness that the present man has done. That is all I said.

Mr. MONK. What proportion of this sum is for cars, for locomotives and for passenger coaches ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is all for locomotives—twenty-five at $20,000 a piece.

Mr. MONK. And all to be built at the Kingston Locomotive Works, none in the United States ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. I want to assure my hon. friend that there has not been a single locomotive ordered or purchased or built in the United States for us when the Kingston Locomotive Works have been in such a state of operation as to be able to undertake to carry out our contracts.

Mr. MONK. So far as I am concerned, that assurance is perfectly useless, for I maintain that years ago we should have placed ourselves in the same position as every other great railway in this country and had our locomotives built here. So, the hon. minister need not give me that assurance with the idea that it will produce any change of conviction in my mind. I say we should have had our locomotives built here ever since we had the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How would the hon. gentleman propose to do that ?

Mr. MONK. Like the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk—build locomotives. Why not ? There is no reason.

Mr. EMMERSON. When the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie was Minister of Railways and Public Works he established at Moncton machinery for the construction of engines and locomotives. But, as soon as the change of government took place these works were practically dismantled, and they ceased to do any such work. That was a complaint for years against the government of the day after 1878. Mr. Mackenzie started out with the idea that the Intercolonial Railway would build its own locomotives. He did build excellent locomotives, and they stand there today, monuments to his good judgment, and to the good work that was done at Moncton. I think that recently there has been an attempt to renew these works.

Mr. MONK. It is high time that this kind of argument, this tu quoque argument, should cease. It is getting a little old. What have we to do with what was done by Alexander Mackenzie and by those who immediately succeeded him? Nothing whatever. But we have a right to ask the government to adopt the same policy in one department as in another. The Minister of Public Works requires dredges and many other things to carry on the deepening of the St. Lawrence, and he establishes works at Sorel in order to have these things constructed in our own country. Our contention is that the same thing should be done in the case of the Department of Railways and Canals. But the answer that is given us is that Mr. Mackenzie established locomotive works and that those who came in after him, some of whom I have never seen or known, destroyed his work. That is a strange argument in the mouth of hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Emmerson.)

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I confess that my hon. friend (Mr. Monk) surprises me, and I am unable to understand precisely the object of his remarks ? A moment ago, when I made the statement I did, the hon. gentleman in a sort of contemptuous way, said I need not press any such argument upon him because it made no impression upon his mind. Of course, I must submit in all humility, but I can only conclude that the hon. gentleman's mind is not open to access by reason or common sense. Does the hon. gentleman think that, coming into the department in the latter part of the year 1896, and requiring locomotives and which could not be built at Moncton, I was not compelled as a matter of duty to go out of the country to buy those locomotives when I could not get them here ? Apparently, the hon. gentleman thinks that I ought to be able to improvise by a breath a complete equipment of shops and everything ready to turn out locomotives.

Mr. MONK. When did the hon. gentleman begin ordering those locomotives in the States ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The first locomotive we ordered was in 1897. I could not get any appropriation until the end of the session of 1897. Would it be reasonable for me, or could I justify myself in advising my colleagues and parliament to spend enough money at Moncton to manufacture engines and turn them out in the time we required them. All we needed to do was to keep renewing and repairing, which would not require works of anything like the same magnitude as to turn out 100 locomotives in three or four years. Our works are large enough to turn out seven, or eight or ten locomotives a year.

Mr. INGRAM. They must be very small shops.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A locomotive a week is a pretty good production. I do not know whether the Kingston works were ever able to turn out more than one locomotive a week. But one thing is clear, it was utterly impossible for me to get locomotives except by going to the United States for them.

Mr. INGRAM. Did the hon. gentleman buy any during the last fiscal year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, except what we got from the Kingston works.

Mr. MONK. Have there been any cars purchased in the States during the last year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. None. A statement was made by the ex-minister of railways (Hon. Mr. Haggart)—I am sorry he is not here—that only one locomotive was bought by him. He was referring to an incident that occurred before the Public Accounts Committee about locomotives being condemned by this circular that was issued, when it came out that some of those locomotives were made in the United States in the year 1893. The hon. gentleman denied it and said there was only one, and it was got from the Cooke Locomotive Works. The reason, he said, why he did not get any from Kingston was that the Kingston works were shut down. I said that when this item was up I would furnish some evidence to show that the hon. gentleman was mistaken. I have before me a certificate from Mr. Birkett, the secretary treasurer of the Canadian Locomotive and Engine Company, and he certifies that the above statement is correct, and that the works at Kingston were going continuously from 1888 until the liquidators closed them in September, 1900. He says there was a large amount of jobbing done, besides making locomotives, and several marine engines were made. He commences his statement with 1888, and gives the output of the locomotive works from that year down to 1895. I need not particularize every year. The point I want to make is that the locomotive works were in actual operation at Kingston at the very period the hon. gentleman went to the Cooke concern to procure locomotives.

Mr. BARKER. As the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) is not present, would the minister read the number of locomotives purchased in each year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In 1888 they turned out 16; in 1899, 10; 1890, 28; 1891, 12; 1892, 26; 1893, 2; 1894, 11; 1895, 3; 1896, 3; 1897, 4; 1898, 4; 1899, 5; and under the reorganized management in 1900, 36.

Mr. BARKER. In 1893 there were only 2?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Only 2 turned out. The hon. gentleman went to the United States for locomotives and declined to take those he could have got from the Kingston works. I have a letter or two here which perhaps may throw a little light on that subject. Mr. Lee, who is the mechanical man in charge of the Kingston works, wrote as early as April 15, 1893, to the department stating that he had received the specifications of the two locomotives that were required, and he says that he will 'mail an offer for those two locomotives on the 17th of April if possible, on the 18th of April, at the latest.' Then I have a copy of the specifications. On the 9th of May, 1893, I see Mr. Pottinger wrote to this effect:

> I have your letter dated May 6, with reference to the locomotives. The matter has not yet been settled. It is now being considered by the department at Ottawa.

So they were able to furnish locomotives. Mr. Lee writes again to know whether they would take the two locomotives, and he is advised that the department has not yet settled the matter. Apparently when it was settled, it was against giving the order. I have a letter dated in August, written by Mr. Birkett, secretary treasurer, to the late Minister of Railways and Canals, in which he complains about the delay. He says he would like to have an opportunity of building those, and 'owing to the depression in the United States a number of men have returned out of work, and we could offer them work on a government contract,' and so on. They came from Cooke's. I have here also a memorandum which shows that instead of there being only one such purchase made, there was quite a number. The Kingston works commenced operation I think in 1875, perhaps in 1873; I see where they furnished locomotives in 1875 to the government. I find a statement of the number of locomotives purchased from the time the Kingston works commenced operations down to the advent of the present government, and the total number bought in the United States was 91. The Grant Locomotive Works of Paterson, New Jersey, furnished 15, the Manchester Locomotive Works 29, the Portland Locomotive Works 11, the Danforth Locomotive Works 4, the Hinckley Locomotive Works 9, the Rhode Island Locomotive Works 5, the Cooke's Locomotive Works of Paterson, New Jersey, 2. They were the two that were got in 1893, and the Dubs Locomotive Works furnished 15. Two of the Grant, six of the Manchester, and one of the Danforth engines were furnished before 1875.

Mr. INGRAM. Does that include the eight locomotives you got from the Manchester and Richmond locomotive works?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think the Richmond locomotive works were established at the time these were got.

Mr. INGRAM. Does that include the locomotives which you got last year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No it does not include what we got. This is up to the time that we came in. It does not include what we got since we came in.

Mr. MONK. How many locomotives have been purchased by this government since 1896?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not like to say off hand. As soon as the Kingston locomotive works were got in operation, under the reorganization, we gave them an order for twenty locomotives, and we have given them two orders of twenty-five each, which would be seventy, speaking from memory. I would not want to be exactly precise about that. I think likely we must have got thirty-five or forty, perhaps, in the United States.

Mr. MONK. It seems to me that this might have been foreseen and it seems to me a very poor answer to give when a wrong is pointed out or a fault indicated to say that the same thing was necessary under the previous administration. I was given to understand before I came into this parliament that the previous administration had been a very bad one. If that is to be the rule and at a certain time we come into power we can always point to something these hon. gentlemen have done as an excuse for what we do ourselves, and it would be a very easy way to get out of many difficulties. It seems to me that since we have been purchasing seventy-five or more locomotives in the United States not counting what we have purchased here since 1896, it would be well worth while to consider whether it would not be better to place this railway on the same footing as other great roads in Canada are, on the same footing for instance as the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. If it be true, as I have no doubt it is, as the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr.

Emmerson) has stated, that Mr. Mackenzie had established locomotive works at Moncton, surely it cannot be very hard, with the extensive works I have seen there when I passed, to carry on locomotive works, and it would be much more satisfactory to do the work ourselves. It must be more profitable since this is the system resorted to by the other railways in this country.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Canadian Pacific Railway are buying sixty or eighty locomotives today.

Mr. MONK. They have locomotive works at Montreal and they are constructing locomotives year after year and so are the Grand Trunk Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And so do we.

Mr. MONK. You are constructing locomotives ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, from start to finish.

Mr. MONK. Where ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At Moncton—since we came in.

Mr. MONK. How long has this been carried on ?

Mr. EMMERSON. In 1896 they resumed the construction of locomotives. The works have been enlarged and I quite agree with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that the works might be still further enlarged in that direction. They have been greatly enlarged and they are doing more construction work there now. But, it must be remembered that with the extension of the Intercolonial Railway the repairs are greater than they were and they want more room. The original works, as established by Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Brydges, in their day, must necessarily be more crowded to-day than they were then. There would necessarily require to be some extension of the works if the government enter into the construction of locomotives to a greater extent than at present. I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman has stated. I think it would be well for the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to inquire into the matter as to whether the construction works should not be enlarged at that point. I do not speak from a sectional standpoint merely because Moncton is situated in the constituency I have the honour to represent, but it seems to me that in view of the character of the locomotives constructed in former years at Moncton, of their excellence and durability, it would be well that the works should be enlarged and that this work should be extended.

Mr. MONK. I understood from the hon. member for Westmoreland that we did not construct locomotives and I understood the same thing from the hon. minister. I thought the works which had been erected for that purpose at Moncton had been demolished. That was the expression used by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. EMMERSON. Dismantled, or dismembered.

Mr. MONK. How many locomotives were turned out at Moncton last year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not like to commit myself as to how many were turned out last year, but I will ascertain the number. Four or five were turned out last year or the year before.

Mr. MONK. Were the works dismembered ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, they were not dismembered in the sense that they could not be used at all. We had to repair our locomotives but the works were not equipped for anything more than the necessary repairs to the locomotives as they came in. That would be my judgment about it.

Mr. BARKER. I think that all you did in 1901 was to repair locomotives.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps that may be all we did in 1901. I do not want to be positive. But, I have a very distinct recollection of being told that we had turned out four or five engines in one year. Perhaps it was in the year before last. But, I will get that information. My hon. friend will see that in view of the urgent necessity there was of meeting the demands upon us, we were asking parliament for very large sums of money and we could not ask for an unlimited vote, we could not give priority to the enlargement of the locomotive works for the making of locomotives when we could get these elsewhere and use the money that parliament would be willing to vote for the necessary purposes of handling the traffic. We could buy locomotives, but if we had put the money into the form of more buildings, machinery and plant and left these necessary services unprovided for, hon. gentlemen would have had good reason to censure me if I had advised that course and my colleagues if they had adopted it.

Mr. MONK. I do not want to prolong the discussion, but I must confess that I am very much impressed with the idea that our expenditures upon this road in 1900, would have been much wiser if we had installed proper locomotive shops at Moncton or elsewhere. The minister must not forget that in 1900 we bought 1,300,000 ties, when the most we ever used in a year on that railway was 500,000; that we purchased 1,300,000 tons of coal, when the most we ever used in a year was 500,000 tons; and that the purchases of stores in that year were enormous. Out of that immense amount of money which seemed to have been expended uselessly, we might have equipped proper locomotive works in Moncton, where we could have built those engines ourselves, instead of even depending on Kingston, and especially saving us from going to the United States. In spite of what the minister said the other day ; that I do not represent public opinion in the province of Quebec or in the city of Montreal, I can assure him that it is the sincere belief of the people of my province and of the city of Montreal that the expenditure on this railway is not directed as it should be.

Mr. BENNETT. This vote is intended for 25 locomotives at an average price of $20,000 each ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. How is this price arrived at ? Were specifications prepared in the department and submitted to other locomotive concerns ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are getting these locomotives made on what may be called the standard specification for that weight of engines. They are practically the same class as are being made in the United States. We asked the prices from different manufacturing companies—and that was before the trust was organized too—and after getting prices we offered the Kingston works a contract for the number of locomotives we required. Our information led us to agree upon the price of $20,270 each.

Mr. MONK. The minister forgets that that famous telegram was the only negotiation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What famous telegram ?

Mr. MONK. The telegram that was sent to Kingston ordering these locomotives.

Mr. BARKER. The minister paid $20,000 to the Kingston works, when they only paid $15,000 for the standard locomotives bought in the States.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman entirely ignores the fact that when the $15,000 was paid the price of locomotives was down to the lowest possible notch.

Mr. BARKER. For ten locomotives that the minister bought at Kingston he paid $19,000, when he only paid $15,000 in the States.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are buying them in Canada, and we are adding the duty less $500. That is what we are doing for the purpose of assisting Canadian industries. We are giving the Kingston people the benefit of the duty.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Are we not to consider that the manufacturer has to pay duty on some of the materials which enter into the construction of the locomotives? Would it be fair and reasonable, even from a moderate revenue tariff point of view, to tax the manufacturer for the material he uses, and then to bring in the manufactured article free of duty ? Might not even men who believe in a low tariff admit that the manufacturer is entitled to that degree of protection which he would have in another line of manufacture ?

Mr. BARKER. You added 33 per cent.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We added the duty less $500. Hon. gentlemen opposite must not blow hot and cold on this question. They say we ought to build these locomotives in Canada, and when we do they tell us that we are doing too much for the home industry.

Mr. MONK. Who says that ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barker) who has given so much attention to this railway question, says we are paying the home industry too much for the locomotives. Not only that, but in the Committee on Public Accounts the ex-Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Haggart) attacked us because we made advances to the builders of these locomotives to encourage them to go on with this work. Take the rail contract. There again we were trying to do something to encourage home industry, and hon. gentlemen opposite attacked us and said we were doing too much. If we get our locomotives made at home these gentlemen attack us, and if we bring them from the United States they attack us as well. They are very hard to please.

Mr. BARKER. We want you to buy them in Canada, but we want you to pay reasonable prices for them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is it not reasonable to say that the government should pay the same price that would be paid by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canada Atlantic Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, when they bring locomotives into Canada ? Is not that fair ? We do better than that. We take $500 off the duty and we agree to that price.

Mr. BENNETT. To how many firms in the United States were these specifications sent ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We called for prices and we did not find much difference in the prices. We took the lowest price as the basis upon which we would negotiate with the Kingston firm. It will stand investigation gentlemen; we will be very happy to have it investigated; it is a fair business transaction, and you can look into it.

Mr. BENNETT. I was not reflecting upon the minister, I simply want information as to how the price was arrived at. Personally speaking, I should prefer to see every locomotive manufactured in Canada.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no great difference between the locomotives we get in the States and the locomotives we get in Kingston.

Mr. BENNETT. I presume that every hon. gentleman would prefer to see the locomotives used in Canada manufactured in Canada, but while there is a protective tariff the government assume that is sufficiently high to protect the industry. I submit that the government when buying locomotives as everything else should go to the open market, and have competition, and if the Canadian manufacturer is not prepared to produce the article as cheaply as another does, the country should get the benefit of the lowest price.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. With the duty added.

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, even conceding the addition of the duty.

Mr. MONK. My recollection is that there was a telegram sent to the Kingston people on the eve of an election in Kingston and that telegram was read in the House, and will be found somewhere in 'Hansard.' There was an order for so many locomotives at such a price, and there were no specifications or tenders or anything of the kind. My desire is that we should encourage home industries. We all desire that. But I do not say that from what experience we have had I believe it would be better for the government to construct its own locomotives so as to be independent of outsiders.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I hope my hon. friend will give me his assistance, then, to get the necessary appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. MONK. Well, I do it with the greatest diffidence, for my hon. friend is a very expensive Minister of Railways.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I suppose we ought to have a rail mill, and make our own steel rails too?

Mr. MONK. The hon. Minister of Finance may find this very amusing, more amusing that I do.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is not even amusing.

Mr. TALBOT. Does the hon. member for Jacques Cartier endorse the position the hon. member for Hamilton is now taking, that we should give locomotive works in Canada, whether at Kingston or anywhere else, a premium of $4,000 each for locomotives, and will he blame the Minister of Railways for buying locomotives in the United States at $15,000 when locomotives of the same power might be produced in Canada for $19,000 ?

Mr. MONK. I think I have made my position clear, and I do not think I can make it clearer. I think we should encourage home manufactures after having obtained tenders, and doing it in a different manner from what was done in the case of the Kingston Locomotive Works. But I prefer the system adopted in the Department of Public Works; when you find that you require to incur a considerable expenditure for dredges or for locomotives, it is better for a government to be independent of manufacturers and to manufacture for itself. Of course, nobody would go the length of pretending that we should manufacture our own rails. It may be a joke of the Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Why not ?

Mr. MONK. Let us be satisfied with getting good locomotive works in the beginning.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If I am not mistaken, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company wanted to get the locomotives at the prices at which we were getting them, which I think would be a very good criterion of their value. The bargain was that the manufacturers should get the benefit of the duty less $500. The Canadian Pacific Railway or any other company that brought in locomotives would of course have to pay the duty, while the government could bring them in free, and the Minister of Railways would get his locomotives cheaper if he got them in the States ; but that is the understanding we had with a view to encouraging the industry in this country. Then, there is a very large amount of duty which the locomotive manufacturer pays into the public treasury on his raw material, which the locomotive manufacturer in the United States does not have to pay; and it would not be fair to ask a Canadian manufacturer who has to pay a heavy duty on his raw material to compete in the open market with the United States manufacturer who has no duty on his raw material to pay. I think the hon. member will admit that it is a very good bargain. The hon. member for Hamilton suggests that the hon. Minister of Railways should replace all these worn-out engines with new ones of the kind he is buying. I would like to ask him if he thinks it would be fair for the purposes of comparison, or for the purpose of keeping proper accounts of capital and maintenance, that a 30-ton or 40-ton locomotive should be replaced by an 80-ton one.

Mr. BARKER. The practice of all railway companies is to replace one locomotive with another. They do not go into the fine points of putting the cost of one against the cost of another. When a business is improving so as to require larger locomotives they are very glad to have the opportunity of putting them in. If the hon. minister came here and said that he would even charge to revenue the old locomotive at its original value, putting the extra cost of the new, larger one, to capital account, nobody would probably find much fault with him. What we are finding fault with is that he is turning it all over to capital. I may say that the practice of the railway companies is also to set a new car against an old one, and I may add that the Grand Trunk Railway Company at their last meeting proposed to close their capital account altogether.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is inconceivable that a company which is replacing a worn-out locomotive with a new one of about three times its tonnage and costing double the price, charges the one against the other, and I will take the trouble to inquire immediately of the two railway companies to ascertain what is their usage in that regard. I am glad my hon. friend the Minister of Customs has made the reference he has, because it recalls to my mind a rather cogent fact. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, knowing that the Kingston works were manufacturing locomotives for us, and ascertaining what price we were paying for them, offered us $3,000 in advance on the price we were paying if we would allow them to have a portion of those locomotives; but of course we could not spare them, and did not let them have them. But that is some evidence that we did not pay an exorbitant price.

Mr. INGRAM. The Canadian Pacific Railway have been very short both of engines and cars, and have tried everywhere imaginable to secure them; so that they might perhaps be willing to pay extravagant prices in order to get them. I have not heard the hon. minister say what he proposes to do with the old engines.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not doing anything with the old engines that are not worth being repaired. If a demand arises for them, we will sell them at a fair price if we can.

Mr. INGRAM. Does he intend to sell them as scrap ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do put a certain quantity into scrap every year.

Mr. INGRAM. No other railway in Canada finds it profitable to break their old engines into scrap, for the reason that they have not the cheap labour which is employed for that purpose in the United States. If the hon. gentleman will sell them, such as they are, that would be the better way of getting rid of them.

New superstructure for Restigouche bridge, $102,000.

New superstructure for North-west Miramichi bridge, $123,000

Mr. BARKER. What is being done with the old bridges ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One is going to Prince Edward Island. It is required across the river, where there was no bridge before, in connection with a new railway, the Hillsborough and Murray Harbour Railway.

Mr. MONK. Does the contract provide that the old superstructure will go with the new work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are not contracting for the superstructure but for the substructure.

Improvement at Point Tupper, $30,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to provide a freight yard.

Mr. MONK. Will the hon. gentleman let us know how much has been spent altogether for improvements at Point Tupper and bring down a statement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

To provide yard for freight business, Riviére du Loup, $25,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for yard room and track. The yards are altogether too restricted. A portion of this is for land. We have not got the land yet, but it is estimated that $15,000 will be sufficient to buy the land and grade it and put it in shape and $10,000 will put down the tracks.

To provide addition to erecting shop at Moncton, $15,000.

To provide freight car repair shop at Moncton, $25,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We propose to put up an entirely new building 100 by 50 and about 50 feet high.

Mr. MONK. Are you going to build engines there ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I hope so.

To provide engine house, machine shop, car shop, store office, &c., Riviere du Loup, $50,000.

Mr. BENNETT. How many private cars are now owned by the country, as compared with the time the present government took office ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In consequence of the visit of the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall we bought one more, and there is one which was purchased by the traffic superintendent at a very small figure from the Grand Trunk Railway. He paid $4,000.

Mr. BENNETT. What unfortunate minister uses that one ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How can a minister be unfortunate ?

Mr. FOWLER. Is it the intention of the minister to rebuild the engine house at Sussex to replace the one that was burned down a year and a half ago ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not that in contemplation at the moment. It is not one of the urgent things. I suppose the hon. gentleman refers to a place into which to run the engines, not repair shops ?

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. minister knows that what is known as the Sussex train runs between Sussex and St. John, and the engine running it is kept at Sussex. The engine house was burned down and has never been replaced. There is a sort of shed there which is a disgraceful looking structure.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am glad the hon. gentleman has mentioned it and I will look into the matter.

Mr. FOWLER. The hon. minister, might at the same time, consider the building of a new station at Sussex. This is one of the most important stations on the line of the Intercolonial Railway and among those yeilding the highest revenue.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not catch the reply of the minister as to how many of these so-called government cars there are.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not state that because the question was not asked. I was asked how many more there were now than in 1896.

Mr. BENNETT. I also asked the other question, but, perhaps, the minister did not hear. I will ask it now. How many of these cars are there ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I could not say off-hand, I would have to count them up. There are four, I know.

Mr. BENNETT. That is besides the Governor General's car ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, that is the Governor General's own ; he pays rent for it.

Mr. MONK. As to this expenditure at Rivière du Loup of $50,000. Is this for the erection of a new building ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, entirely new. My hon. friend may not be aware that this is not only a divisional point, but it is the point where we do our repairing for the upper end of the line. We are erecting a new round-house or engine-house. It must be new, because the locomotives are large, and we cannot house them or repair them or do anything with them in the old shops. We also propose to erect a machine shop and to make it large enough so that we may have store accommodation and office.

Mr. MONK. What is the amount of the contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No contract is let yet. We have not yet got the appropriation. I understand my hon. friend to ask if it will be by tender, and I tell him it will.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the hon. minister erected the station at Passekeag ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I don't think it is completed yet.

Mr. FOWLER. Has it been begun ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It ought to have been begun before this.

Mr. FOWLER. It ought to have been begun two years ago. Tenders were called for two years ago.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not over two years ago, I think.

Mr. FOWLER. Six months before the election.

Canals—chargeable to Railways and Canals capital—Prince Edward Island Railway—Murray Harbour branch and Hillsborough bridge, $500,000.

Mr. MONK. It would be better to leave that until some other time.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would like to make a few remarks on this subject——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will reserve the item, so that the hon. gentleman will have another opportunity to speak upon it.

Resolutions reported.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved that to-morrow the House go into Committee of the Whole on the following resolution :

That it is expedient to provide that, after July 1st, 1902, one-half of the net proceeds of all taxes paid by Chinese immigrants shall, at the end of every fiscal year, be paid to the province wherein they were collected.

Motion agreed to.

DOMINION LANDS ACT—AMENDMENT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 120) to amend the Dominion Lands Act.—The Minister of the Interior.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). This Bill was adopted yesterday with the exception of section 2. Upon examining that section I have decided to ask the committee to make it read as follows :

Section 1 of this Act shall not apply to any contract, agreement, undertaking for sale, or grant, containing an express declaration that it is exempt from this section.

This will have the effect of enabling the government, if it is thought desirable in any special case, to withdraw any particular sale from the effect of this section.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill as amended reported, read the third time, and passed.

YUKON TERRITORY ACT—AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 119) further to amend the Yukon Territory Act (the Minister of the Interior), read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. SPROULE. What are these sections of the old Act which we have repealed ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is just a re-enactment of the old section, with the exception that we provide for five members instead of two.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. minister tell us approximately what the population of that district is now ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. According to the census, it is about 21,000.

On section 2,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What change in the law is effected by this ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. One change is this, that in case of an ordinance being passed by the local council which conflicts with an order affecting the same subject passed by the Governor in Council, the latter shall prevail. The second change is to give the local council control of the traffic in intoxicating liquors, the section relating to the manufacture of liquors remaining as it is in the old Act.

On section 3,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What change is effected by this ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There has been a misunderstanding between my hon. friend the Minister of Justice and myself as to some changes which are to be made in this section. I have the amendments ready, but I wish to furnish my hon. friend the leader of the opposition with a copy of them before moving them. I will, therefore, move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the committee rises, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior as to the legislative powers which the Governor in Council now has with regard to the Yukon Territory. My attention has been directed to the Order in Council which was made with regard to what is known as the Treadgold concession, the provisions of which seem to have a very wide scope indeed. If the Governor in Council possesses power to legislate for the territory in that way, I do not see exactly where they are to stop; and it struck me that it might be expedient for the government to consider whether some amendment should not be made whereby powers of so sweeping a character should be exercised not by the Governor in Council, but by parliament. It is not desirable that I should go into the details with regard to that particular matter at the present time. Possibly I may have some observations to make at a later date; but as my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior is considering the amendments to this Bill, I mention it now. The Order in Council may not be founded on the Yukon Territory Act; possibly it is founded on the Dominion Lands Act.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Partially both.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps it would not incommode my hon. friend if he can do so, to state now the statutory enactments upon which that particular concession is founded.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The provision in the Dominion Lands Act which authorizes the Governor in Council to regulate the carrying on of mining on Dominion lands, and section 2 of the Act entitled an Act to amend the Yukon Territory Act which was passed in 1899, 62 and 63 Victoria.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is the section which we are now amending ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes. My hon. friend will see that that gives very wide powers. What I want to call my hon. friend's attention to, in regard to his other observation, is this, that in passing this legislation the House practically followed the old North-west Territories Act and gave the same powers to the Governor in Council as were given to them with regard to the North-west Territories before they received a constitutional form of government. No doubt the power of the Governor in Council under the legislation as it now stands is very wide. The question as to whether that should be curtailed by giving exclusive power to the Commissioner in Council was considered, but it was thought that for a time at least it might be left in the shape in which it is in the clause we are now passing, that is to say, that in case of any conflict between the Governor in Council and the local council, the decision of the Governor in Council shall prevail. There has not been any conflict, so far as I am aware, and I do not think that there is any matter which has been dealt with by an ordinance of the Governor in Council except one. I think that under the late Minister of Justice an Order in Council was passed relating to the legal profession. The reason why I ask that this matter be laid over is because there is a portion of the old clause which, under the amendment, will be required to be left in. This amendment was not in contemplation at the time the Bill was drawn and that portion of the clause was left out. I will send my hon. friend a copy of the amendment before it is put in.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Orders in Council dealing with the disposal of very large interests in the Yukon apparently need not be laid before parliament or have the sanction of parliament in any way. That is correct, I think. What I would suggest is that the conferring of rights of so great a scope, and possibly of such large value, as those contained in this Treadgold concession, might be limited in some way. I appreciate the fact that it is necessary to give the Governor in Council certain powers with regard to unorganized territories, but I have not been able to persuade myself that it is necessary to give such wide powers as are required for the disposal of concessions of that kind. That is a matter to which I would like my hon. friend to give his attention, and when the Bill comes up again we may discuss it with the view to an amendment of that character.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the subject is a very fair one for discussion, and I do not think that the government desires any greater powers than are necessary for the administration of the territories. Of course, powers are necessary for the administration of a territory such as the Yukon, which would not be required in any other part of Canada. If my hon. friend desires to make any suggestion of a definite character regarding the limitations which should be put on the power of the government, I would be quite willing to give them the fullest consideration.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY—THE CORONATION CONTINGENT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go again into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. GUSS PORTER (West Hastings). I desire, Mr. Speaker, to call the attention of the House, and especially the attention of the Minister of Militia and Defence, to a certain matter, resulting from certain questions put by me to the House a few days ago, and which has come to me with some degree of surprise, and I may say has caused an important branch of the military service of this country a considerable amount of disapproval and disappointment. On the 9th of April, a resolution was moved by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) to the effect that in the opinion of this House, the military force to be sent from Canada to the approaching Coronation ceremonies should be composed in its entirety of officers and men who have seen active service on the Canadian contingents in South Africa. In speaking to that resolution, the hon. the Minister of Militia is reported as having used the following language :

> All I can say now to my hon. friend and to the House is that I propose to recommend to the government that we should send a contingent composed of 580 men, representative of all the different branches of the Canadian militia ; that the different corps in the various districts of Canada should be fairly represented numerically ; that the selection should be made with reference to the numbers enrolled in the militia in each district ; and that we will endeavour to have it truly representative of the force of this Dominion which will show to the people of England and to the people of the empire as clearly as possible the kind of militia force we have in this country.

If reference be made to the regulations and orders of the militia of Canada, the table of precedence will be found in section 7 of subsection 17 :

> The following is the order of precedence of the several corps of the militia of the Dominion of Canada. The corps of each arm taking precedence according to the date of formation. 1st, the gentlemen cadets of the Royal Military College.

Now, we have the statement of the hon. minister that each and every branch of the militia of Canada should be represented upon the contingent sent home to attend the Coronation festivities. We have then the fact that the gentlemen cadets of the Royal Military College are a branch of the militia force of this Dominion, and rank first, according to the regulations and orders of the militia department. In addition we know that during the visit lately made by His Royal Highness, the Duke of Cornwall and York, His Royal Highness took advantage of the opportunity to visit the Royal Military College, and expressed himself as being very highly pleased with his visit. In fact he used even stronger language to show his appreciation of the work done by those cadets. I am instructed further, that in June last the hon. minister himself paid a visit to the college at Kingston, and during the course of his inspection promised the cadets that he would use every possible endeavour to see that this branch of our Canadian military forces would be represented at the Coronation proceedings. He further expressed the hope that the conduct of the cadets would fully warrant him in making such a recommendation. I am not at all surprised that the minister should have made that pledge, but am disappointed that he should have, despite his promise, adopted the course which he has within the last few days. These young men who are attending the college are sons of some of the very best families in this Dominion. They are young men who have placed their services at the disposal of their country, and who are obliged, in the course of their studies, to undergo considerable hardship. They have to spend a number of years of the very best of their lives in qualifying themselves to render greater service to their country.

Not only is that the fact, but they are obliged to spend considerable sums of money in order to so qualify themselves. These young men have not only done this, but those who have passed through the college have brought glory to the name of this country. It is only a few days ago that the First Minister spoke of the brave acts of one of the cadets of the Royal Military College, and could hardly find language strong enough to express his admiration —an admiration which is felt by all the people of Canada—for the bravery displayed by Lieut. Bruce Carruthers of the Royal Military College. While Bruce Carruthers stands out as a shining example, he is no exception to the young men who pass through that college. So, if there is any part of the militia of this country that should be recognized by parliament and the people it is that made up of the gentlemen cadets of the Royal Military College. In view of the facts that are so well known, I was surprised at the answer I received to a question I put in the House only nineteen days after the minister had made the statement which I have refered to. The question will be found reported in 'Hansard' of the 28th April. It is as follows :

> Is it the intention of the government to send a detachment of cadets from the Royal Military College to attend the Coronation ?

The answer to that question is simply 'No.' And so we have this state of affairs : First, there is the statement made by the minister pledging himself that each and every branch of the militia force of the Dominon should be represented on the contingent to be sent to the Coronation; secondly, we have the statement made by the minister to the cadets of the Royal Military College that he would use every possible endeavour to have this branch of the militia force represented on that occasion, and that he hoped they would so acquit themselves from that time until the time came to send them to the Coronation, that he would feel warranted in doing so. I have letters from a gentleman high in military circles who says that, when recently in England he learned that the present Prince of Wales had expressed the hope that there would be a detachment from the Royal Military College to attend the Coronation proceedings. In view of the promise made by the minister, these young men have been striving to the best of their ability, they have been putting forward extraordinary efforts to qualify themselves the better for a representation on the Coronation contingent. And now they are told by the minister on the floor of this House that he does not intend to send any squad or detachment from the college to accompany the Coronation contingent. It is needless to say that these young men are disappointed. I think the country also will be disappointed. I would like to know from the minister whether the government have changed their minds as to sending a squad or detachment from the Royal Military College to the Coronation. Or is it posible that these young men, even in the face of the promise given them, have not acquitted themselves in such a manner as to justify the minister in giving them representation upon this contingent? If that is so, I would like the hon. minister to point out on the floor of this House in what way they have been deficient or lacking in their efforts properly to represent their country.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Hon. F. W. Borden). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Porter) has not been a member of the House long enough, I suppose, to become aware of the custom of the House to give notice to the minister immediately concerned of intention to bring up a matter of this kind. If my hon. friend had done so, I would, perhaps, have been better prepared to meet his statements than I am. However, I may say that this complaint is quite wide of the mark when it is based upon the assumption that there was ever any intention expressed or understood, or any promise whatever given, that a representation as such should be sent from the Royal Military College. I do not understand what the hon. gentleman means by a reference to a promise made by me or by the government to send such a representation. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the Duke of Cornwall and York, now the Prince of Wales, when visiting the Royal Military College, had expressed some hope that the college would be represented at the Coronation of the King. That is the first intimation I have had of any such statement being made. But my hon. friend need not worry. There is no doubt whatever that there will be, among the officers, and probably among the men, who will go over to take part in the Coronation proceedings, gentlemen who have graduated at the Royal Military College. The hon. gentleman refers to the cadets of the college as being part of the active militia. Technically they are, but practically, until they have received their diplomas, they are not members of the active militia in the ordinary sense of the word. When the question was raised, I think by the fathers of some of the young men in the college, I discussed the matter with the General Officer Commanding, and he advised me very strongly against sending these young gentlemen over on this errand. I will not go into details with reference to the matter, but it will be readily understood that if they were to go, they must go as ordinary privates of the militia, and it seemed to me undesirable that this should be. They are very young men, and their studies are not yet completed. Besides, if we accepted cadets of the Royal Military College, there are cadets of other schools of Canada whom we would be obilged to accept. We thought it would be impossible to accept these cadets without accepting representatives from the cadets in different parts of Canada. It did not seem to the general, and I approved of his decision, that this was what was understood as a representation of the militia of Canada. I have only to say, in conclusion, that I think I have as high an opinion of the merits of the cadets of the Royal Military College and of the importance of that institution itself as the hon. gentleman can possibly have. I think the government have shown, by the consideration which we have given to the college since we came to power, that we have the interests of the college at heart. When it is known that when this government came in there was a list of less than 30 students at the Royal Military College, with an annual graduating class of seven or eight, and that now we have 80 or 90, or more, on the list of the college, with an annual graduating class of over 30, I think the House and the public will take very litle stock in any cheap attempt which the hon. gentleman may make here to endeavour to show that this government are not looking properly after the interests of the college. After careful consideration, we thought it was in the best interest of these young gentlemen that they should not take part in this demonstration. In conclusion, I repeat what I have already said, that there is no doubt whatever that among the officers and men of the contingent there will be found graduates of the Royal Military College who have distinguished themselves, not only at the college, but on the field of battle in South Africa, and in militia service generally throughout the Dominion.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). There is one matter the Minister of Militia and Defence referred to which ought not to be allowed to pass without reference, and that is his statement that the number of graduates attending the Royal Military College when the present government came in has greatly increased. It might appear at first blush that there was something in the contention the hon. gentleman wishes to suggest by that comparison of figures. But I venture to say that any one who reflects upon the position of affairs to-day as compared with what obtained when the hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, will see at once that the comparison is not at all favourable to the minister; and in fact we would expect a much larger increase under the conditions which exist in Canada to-day. When we bear in mind the dominant military spirit that has been aroused by the recent contest in which Britain has been engaged, a contest which has been echoed throughout every part of the British empire, the feeling of unity and the desire to maintain the integrity of the empire being now everywhere prevalent, it is not at all surprising to find that there are a larger number of young men now attending the Royal Military College than in 1896. The imperial feeling and the feeling that animates almost all classes of Canadians to-day is that Canada, as an important part of the British empire, has reached a period when, by reason of its resources, and by reason of its increasing wealth, it should be able and willing to defend itself and to aid materially in the defence of the British empire when occasion arises; and this fact is quite sufficient of itself to account for the difference in numbers at present as contrasted with four or five years ago.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The increase in numbers had taken place prior to the commencement of the Boer war. The college was up to its maximum before there was any prospect of a war in South Africa.

Mr. LENNOX. I accept the hon. gentleman's statement, although he does not give us any figures as regards the two periods. But the minister must not forget that when the war was declared between Britain and South Africa the defence of the British empire had already been engaging attention in this country. As far back as 1894 there was a military spirit aroused in Canada in reference to the defence of the empire, which was expressed in this House, and which received a ready response among all classes of our people. So that prior, at all events, to 1896 we see that a spirit had arisen in this country which would account for the difference in numbers, and that spirit has been developing ever since. Now, we have reached the time when Canadians recognize that, having been under the wing of the British empire for so long and receiving protection for which we gave nothing in return, it is their duty, and it will be their pleasure in future, though perhaps not engaging in the European wars of Britain, to adopt some means of affording a reasonable measure of assistance to Britain whenever occasion arises, both for the defence of the empire as a whole, and for the defence of Canada in particular.

EXCLUSION OF CANADIAN BEEF FROM IMPERIAL CONTRACTS.

Mr. N. BOYD (Macdonald). Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire briefly to bring to the attention of the House and of the country a matter of great importance to the majority of the people of this country, and at the close of my remarks I shall move a resolution bearing upon that subject. I refer to the fact that by an order of the War Office passed apparently in 1901, Canadian cattle cannot participate in the contracts for the supply of beef to the imperial troops of the United Kingdom. As I say, that was done by an order of the War Office, because there has been no legislation passed as was the case in regard to the embargo, or the statute, that compels the slaughter of cattle immediately upon their arrival in Great Britain. First I will read to you a letter dated Liverpool, January 4th, 1902:

Mr. D. A. Campbell, Montreal.

Dear Sir,—In respect to your inquiry regarding the closing out of Canadian cattle and beef from government contracts, we beg to hand you a letter and form of contract received from the War Office. You will note they state no special order was made on the subject. As regards the number of Canadian cattle that was used to fill these contracts it is impossible to give the exact figures as no record was kept, but we would say that about 40 per cent of the North-west cattle were used by the government contractors and the restriction has had a serious effect on the prices of Canadian cattle.

Yours truly,

BAKER & WILLIAMSON.

I may say that these gentlemen are large live stock dealers in Liverpool. This is the reply:

War Office, Pall Mall, S.W.,
December 28, 1901.

Gentlemen,—I am directed by the Secretary of State for War to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated the 21st inst., relative to the supply of meat under army contracts and to forward for your information a form of tender for meat. I am to add that there is no separate order on the subject of the supply of home bred beef only.

I am, gentlemen,
Your obedient servant,
W. P. PURY.
Assistant Director of Army Contracts.

Now, I have here the form of tender previous to the date I have mentioned, that is the 1st of June last, calling for the supply of beef from the 1st of December, 1900, to the 31st May, 1901. Clause 1 reads as follows :

The meat shall be well fed, good, sound, sweet and wholesome. The beef shall be ox, not under two nor more than eight years old, or heifer or cow, not under two nor more than four years old ; the mutton, wether or ewe, Carcasses of sheep weighing less than 50 pounds will not be received.

That is the form of tender previous to this restriction being embodied. Then, this is the form of tender calling for the supply of meat from the 1st of June, 1901, to the 30th November, 1901. These tenders had to be in on the 24th April, 1901. The form of tender having been redrawn, and in the amended form the first clause reads :

The meat shall be well fed, good, sound, sweet and wholesome. The beef shall be home bred ox, not under two nor more than eight years old, or home bred heifer and cow, not under two nor more than eight years old ; the mutton, wether or ewe. Carcasses of sheep weighing less than 50 pounds will not be rereceived.

We now pass to the form of tender from the 1st December, 1901, to the 31st May, 1902, which is as follows :

The meat shall be well fed, good, sound, sweet and wholesome. The beef shall be home bred ox, not under two, nor more than eight years old, or home bred heifer and cow, not under two nor more than four years old ; the mutton, wether or ewe. Carcasses of sheep weighing less than 50 pounds will not be received.

Subject to clause 19 as to issue of preserved meat, and to clause 9 as to hospital requirements, the demand will be for the supply of home bred beef five days each week, and mutton (which may be frozen) two days.

Then there is a clause added to this form of tender.

Clause 23. Each quarter or other portion of beef supplied under this contract must have a label attached to it guaranteeing that it is the produce of a home bred animal in accordance with clause 1 of the specification. The labels will be provided by the contractor and should be drawn up in accordance with the pro forms as follows :—

The beef to which this label is attached is guaranteed to be the produce of a beast reared in the United Kingdom.

Now, notwithstanding the fact that this very important industry, as I have said, has, by this Act of the Imperial War Office, been debarred from participating in this trade, it seems strange that our government should not be aware of it. It seems that even as late as the 31st of January the government, presided over by our practical farmer here, was not aware of the great injustice that was being done our people in that respect. I say it is strange that such should be the case, but it is a fact, nevertheless. The hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) and the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Robinson), whose speeches I heard during the debate on the budget, told us that all we had to do was to go to the free trade market of England with our stock and there place it. I would like these hon. gentlemen, and I am glad they are both here, to think about this. Not alone was protection adopted at the time the embargo was placed against our cattle, as I shall take occasion later on to prove, but, in a matter which the Imperial War Office and the imperial government have control of, it is total exclusion. Coming back to the point at which I referred to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, mentioning the date of the 31st January, I would say that this matter was agitating the minds of the people of Manitoba, and that it was made the subject of a resolution which was brought up in the form of a petition to be presented to this House asking whether this could be so or how it possibly could be true after all that had taken place between the imperial government and our own government. I, for my part believe that if the attention of the War Office had been called to this matter a remedy would have been provided. On the 30th of January the following telegram was sent to the hon. Minister of Agriculture :

Winnipeg, Jan. 30.

Please wire why Canadian cattle not accepted by imperial authorities for army contracts, quoting authority under which exclusion is enforced.

(Sgd.) CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

To that the hon. minister replied :

Ottawa, 31st January.

To the Clerk of the House, Winnipeg.

Regarding your question, why Canadian cattle not accepted for army contracts, I am not aware of any such exclusion.

(Sgd.) SYDNEY FISHER.

It seems strange that such an important industry as this should have such an embargo placed upon it and the Minister of Agriculture should not be aware of it. I was told by Mr. Wylie, a large cattle raiser and trader of Maple Creek, that this embargo made a difference of at least $5 a head because he said the contractors to whom they were selling took advantage of it and said : We regret that we are not able to supply this Canadian beef to the contractors ; otherwise we would be able to give you a better price than we are giving. I do not wish to occupy very much time. I have briefly stated the facts and I regret that the hon. member for Montreal, St. Lawrence, (Mr. Bickerdike) is not here, because I expected his support in regard to the matter with which I am now dealing.

That hon. gentleman (Mr. Bickerdike) feels very keenly upon this subject, but owing to the serious accident which befell him, he has not been able to attend constantly in the House. However, the last time he was here I told him that I would take an opportunity of discussing the question on going into Supply, and that I would refer to what took place between us. I cannot understand how the government can justify their action in allowing this very important matter affecting Canadian interests to pass without notice. I understand that the Minister of Agriculture has been in England since this exclusion took place, and as Mr. Wylie told me many of the cattle commissioners were surprised that he did not go to interview them, and that he did not exercise his influence with the imperial authorities to have this exclusion removed. A deputation waited on the Minister of Agriculture in Aberdeen with reference to the embargo on Canadian cattle, and he told them that if this embargo were not incorporated in an Act of the imperial parliament it might be dealt with. Well, Sir, this exclusion of Canadian beef from Imperial contracts is not incorporated in an Act of Parliament, and why did our government not deal with it? Indeed, one would think, in view of the action of the imperial authorities in this matter, that they place very little value on the preference which Canada has seen fit to give them. It will be noticed that the exclusion does not apply to mutton, and so Australia is not affected, and Canada is practically the only colony whose interests are militated against by this order of the imperial authorities. It is a very serious matter, and I think that the House will agree with me that the government is deserving of censure for not having acted more promptly and with more effect in regard to the protection of this important industry. I therefore beg to move, seconded by Mr. Halliday:

That all the words after 'that' in the main motion be struck out and the following substituted.

It appears from the form of tender and contract called for by the British government for the supply of beef to the British troops in Great Britain and Ireland; contractors are not allowed to supply Canadian beef for that purpose. That although this exclusion has prevailed since the month of June, 1901; this House regrets that no steps have been taken by this present government to redress this grievance by making timely representations to the British government with a view of securing the protection of the interests of the farmers and cattle dealers of Canada.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyd) has moved what is practically a motion of want of confidence in the government, on going into Supply. I regret that he has taken this step and I think perhaps that if he had considered the matter a little more carefully he would not have gone to the extreme of making this motion. He wishes to censure the government and myself particularly, because, as he says, we did not take time by the forelock, and when I was in England last spring especially, see that this action was not taken by the imperial government. The action of which he complained was taken, as I understand it, in the month of June last, actually, I believe, when I was in England. I must confess that I was not aware of it then, nor had I any means of being aware of it for some time afterwards. It would no doubt be better that we should have the contracts of the War Office and of the navy sent to us in the regular form. That has not been done as a matter of practice in the past. This form of contract in question was issued without any notice to us, or as far as I know, to anybody else, and it did not come under my attention until the early part of this year. It was known to a certain gentleman who is interested in the cattle trade, and who, I presume, obtained the information from his friends in England who are interested in the supplying of this beef to the British army. The moment that information came under our notice representations were made by Lord Strathcona to the War Office, pointing out that this was detrimental to the Canadian trade; that it was unfair, and that he hoped steps would be taken to remove that restriction in the form of the contract. It will be a perfectly fair and frank statement of the course of events when I say, that since Lord Strathcona made that representation to the War Office no reply has been received by my department. If Lord Strathcona had received a reply I think it would have been forwarded immediately to me, but of course I cannot say that he has not received a reply within the last week or ten days. At any rate, no reply to his communication has been received by my department or by the government here. I appreciate fully that this action on the part of the War Office may have some detrimental effect upon the Canadian cattle trade in England. I believe that it will cut out to a certain extent our cattle from the market of the dealers who are filling these contracts. But I find it rather a peculiar circumstance that since this form of contract has been adopted there have been contracts made by the War Office for the supply of meat to South Africa, in which they have allowed colonial cattle to be received. I may tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyd) that in consequence of representations which my department has made to the War Office, forms of contract both for the army and navy have been sent to Canada quite recently, and these forms of contract are for the supply of meat by Canadian contractors whose names have been put on the contract list in Great Britain. The War Office and the navy have lately sent these forms of contract to people in Canada to be filled up by Canadian contractors for the supply of Canadian meat.

Mr. MONK. Has the minister any of these forms ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not them under my hand at the present moment.

Mr. MONK. I suppose they will be laid on the Table ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. The forms of contract were not sent in very great numbers, but I think they have been forwarded to the people whose names had been submitted, and who asked to have an opportunity of tendering for such contracts.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the minister lay on the Table of the House the communication of Lord Strathcona to the imperial authorities, to which he has referred.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. I have that particular communication here. I have not got the communications which have passed between my own department and the War Office in regard to contracts being let to Canadian firms. But I can assure the House and the hon. gentleman that while I have not particularly noticed the form of the contract in Great Britain which was a form for British contractors, I have been and my department has been for some time back exerting all our influence and all our efforts to secure from the War Office, and also from the navy, contracts for contractors in Canada to supply what was wanted for these services; and the War Office and the navy have both exhibited a certain amount of readiness to yield to these representations and to allow Canadian contractors to take part in the supply of these requirements. This indicates that while under the particular forms of contracts which have been quoted this afternoon as being entered into by British dealers and British butchers, they have required home-bred cattle to be used, they have not hesitated at all to take the meat from Canadian-bred cattle when it has been supplied or contracted for by Canadian contractors. I believe most sincerely that, on the representations that have already been made and the representations that are being made to-day in London, this disability also will disappear. I trust that it will do so, not that I fear any very great hurt to our cattle trade in England, but because I feel, as I think every Canadian feels, that our cattle in England are just as worthy to supply the meat for fulfilling these contracts as any home-bred cattle are, and that we should not suffer on the English market from any greater disabilities than we do now.

The hon. gentleman has referred to the question of the embargo. In regard to that, I have only to say that over and over again, not only to our own representations, but also to the representations of certain classes and associations in England, the Minister of Agriculture in England has declared that he cannot and will not remove that embargo. It was only lately, as I dare say, the hon. gentleman and others have noticed, that the Butchers' Association of London have made representations, in consequence of the scarcity of meat in England, that the embargo on Canadian cattle should be removed; but they received just the same reply from the Minister of Agriculture in England that the associated interests in Edinburgh did last year. The injustice, as I think I may fairly describe it, which Canadian cattle are suffering from in the English market through the embargo is one on which I think everybody in this House and this country is thoroughly agreed; and nobody is more desirous than myself to try to persuade the English Department of Agriculture, or the English government, or the English parliament, to raise that embargo; but the way in which our representations have been received by the Minister of Agriculture in England, and the way in which he has replied, has led me to believe that at the present time there is really no hope of securing a change in that respect. While thus quoting the Minister of Agriculture in England, I must also confess that Mr. Chamberlain, the Colonial Secretary, dealt with me in the same way in regard to this matter when I was in England last year, and he gave me to understand that the dictum of the Minister of Agriculture must be considered as final. Under these circumstances, I do not consider that it would to-day be worth our while or in anyway necessary to discuss the question of the embargo.

I do not know that I can add much more; but I am afraid I must ask the House to vote down the motion which the hon. gentleman has placed in your hands, Mr. Speaker. I do not consider that any fair or just cause has been made out to show that my department or the government have in any way failed in their duty; but they have taken the necessary precautions to try to remove any difficulty that may have occurred, and are ready at all times to work to the best of their ability in the interest of our Canadian farmers.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's speech is largely apologetic. He speaks just like a school boy who has done wrong and knows it, and expects to be whipped. The hon. minister has first called the attention of the House to the fact that this is a vote of want of confidence, and he complains of that. Well, in the first place, my hon. friend could not well bring it up in any other form at the present stage of the session. He has been endeavouring for a length of time to get it before the House, but unsuccessfully. In the second place, I do not know whether the hon. minister should complain, because my hon. friend proposes to express the regret of the House that he had not availed himself of an earlier opportunity to make some effort to prevent this embargo being placed on Canadian cattle. It is quite plain that the hon. minister either gave the matter no attention or that there was culpable negligence or carelessness in his department. If he had been giving any attention to it, it would scarcely have escaped his notice that for over a year this position of things had existed. He above all others was interested in ascertaining in every possible way where the Canadian farmer could get an advantage in the British market. During a large portion of last summer the Minister of Agriculture was in England along with the Dairy Commissioner. They went all over that country, made speeches, had reporters along with them, and had their speeches liberally reported; and the minister conducted himself in a most generous way towards the British people. I noticed in a report of one of his speeches that he told the British people how generously Canada had acted towards them—how we had reduced the duties on their imports, gracefully and deliberately, without desiring or asking any return. He was extremely generous about what we had done for England, but at the same time he was extremely neglectful of the opportunity which was presented to him of getting anything for the Canadian farmer in return. It was a generosity on his part which the Canadian farmer scarcely expected. But this matter was drawn to his attention on the 1st of December, 1901, and although it had been in existence for over a year it was unknown either to him or his department. He could not have been keeping himself very closely in touch with what was taking place on the market which above all others is of great value to the Canadian farmer.

The very fact that he did not know justifies us in expressing regret that he was not more alive to the needs of the situation and looking more closely after the interests of the Canadian farmers, which he, above all others, ought to have at heart. On the 31st December, 1901, or on the 30th January, 1902. the hon. gentleman wired the secretary of Agriculture in Manitoba that he knew nothing about the matter. It is somewhat strange that the people in Manitoba and British Columbia and the territories should know all about it and that the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa, who is supposed to be always in touch with the British people, should know nothing. Does this not show that he is not sufficiently alive to the situation ? Does it not show a carelessness in the management of his department not at all compatible with the responsibilities of his position ?

He says that some contracts have been sent lately to Canadians to supply beef to the imperial army. But he did not tell us when representations were made to the High Commissioner to have the embargo raised. Had the hon. minister been as anxious to benefit the Canadian farmer, as he ought to be, he would have done as Sir Charles Tupper did, when High Commissioner. He would have availed himself of the earliest opportunity, and both by wire and otherwise put in play every influence to get the advantage desired for the Canadian farmer. Sir Charles Tupper did not wait for letters to pass to and fro between the Department of Agriculture in this country and the Department of Agriculture in England, but he used the cable, and used it extensively. He did not allow an hour to be wasted before endeavouring to get the embargo raised, and succeeded in having it raised at a very early date. But all the present Minister of Agriculture has done has been to make some representations to the High Commissioner in London, and we are not informed whether these were made one, two or three months ago, but he tells us he has no information about the matter to-day. He has been content to rest on his oars, apparently indifferent as to whether the High Commissioner sends him a reply in six months or not. I think, therefore, that this House should express regret that the hon. minister did not take action earlier or was not more alive to the situation in the interests of our Canadian farmers than he has shown himself to be.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). If the hon. gentleman had drawn this motion on broader lines, and with the idea of getting rid of the grievance complained of, I would be most happy to support him. I consider this a pressing matter, and drew the attention of the House to it at the very beginning of the session, when I moved for the correspondence relating to the embargo on Canadian cattle. I regret that my hon. friend should have made his motion with the sole object of casting blame on the Minister of Agriculture, when the Minister of Agriculture is really not the guilty party. It is the British government and parliament who are to blame. And had the hon. gentleman simply asked this parliament to protest against the glaring injustice inflicted by the British government and parliament on the Canadian people by this embargo on Canadian cattle, I would have been glad to vote for his motion. The hon. gentleman has told us that the British Minister of Agriculture, the Rt. Hon. Mr. Hanbury, declared last year that were it not for the statute, the general question of the embargo on Canadian cattle might be dealt with. But my hon. friend has evidently forgotten what Mr. Hanbury did say. If he will refer to the Montreal 'Star,' of the 26th October last, and the Montreal 'Herald' of the 30th October last, he will find that what Mr. Hanbury did say was that so long as he would be Minister of Agriculture, not only would the statute remain as it was, but he would never ask the British parliament to remedy the injustice. Therefore if we are to blame anybody, we should blame the British government. I believe that this parliament should express its opinion, not in any spirit of anger, but in a dignified, temperate manner, on the injustice perpetrated, and ask the British goverment and parliament to remedy that injustice. In my opinion, we should urge upon the British government and parliament the propriety and the justice of abrogating or amending that statute. But so far as Canada is concerned, if anybody is open to blame, it is our High Commissioner in London. I do not say that he is, but I say that when we pay $10,000 a year to a High Commissioner to represent us in London, and when we maintain a staff of officials in London, to keep us in touch with the British government, and report upon any matter of importance, it is their duty to inform immediately the Canadian government of anything that may transpire. Surely the High Commissioner should be made aware of what is done against Canadian interests before any minister in Canada. I should suppose that the reason we employ the High Commissioner is that he may keep us informed of any advantage we may obtain in Great Britain, and of any disadvantage we may have to contend against. But I am afraid that he is so busy complying with the wishes of Mr. Chamberlain, that he has no time to look after the interests of Canadians. I am afraid that Lord Strathcona, with all due respect for his devotion to Canada, is so busy supplying live stock to the British army that he has no time to look after the interests of our cattle raisers who want to supply it with dead meat beef. I think it only right that I should correct the mistake of my hon. friend in quoting the words of Mr. Hanbury.

Mr. BOYD. What I said was that in discussing this matter in Scotland, before a deputation of farmers, Mr. Hanbury said that there was a statute passed as late as 1896, and for that reason he could not consider their representations. The words my hon. friend has quoted, Mr. Hanbury used later on.

Mr. BOURASSA. But if my hon. friend wants us to be really aware of the position in England, he should not lay the whole blame on the Minister of Agriculture here, but let us understand that not only is the Minister of Agriculture in England prevented by statute from acting, but he has stated most positively that he would not act so long as he continued to be Minister of Agriculture. As far as the Minister of Agriculture here is concerned, I am glad to say that I was present in England at the time he was making all the efforts he could in our behalf, and I know that he did not neglect anything possible to bring about a change in the feelings of the British people. In saying this, I am not moved by any purpose of flattering the Minister of Agriculture or the government in general. I think that the position I occupy in this House will free me from any imputation of that kind. When I give credit to the government, it is simply because I believe it is due, and when I blame the government it is equally because, in my opinion, they are deserving of blame.

Mr. BOYD. You don't blame them very often.

Mr. BOURASSA. There is one point on which I differ with the Minister of Agriculture and it is this. I do not agree that because Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Hanbury have said that they will not correct the wrong, we should therefore submit. I believe that this parliament ought to give expression to its views and transmit those views to the British government and parliament. The hon. gentleman has just admitted that this is an injustice. He has said that at the present moment there is no reason for keeping this exclusion Act in force against Canadian cattle. Therefore, I say that no session of this parliament should pass without a direct expression of opinion being given by a unanimous voice of this House protesting against the injustice, so long as it is not corrected. Those who have the right to complain of this injustice are the representatives of the Canadian people, and they should protest. I regret that the hon. gentleman has not brought forward his motion in this broad spirit, and I hope that the session will not pass without a motion directed by this spirit being proposed, a motion designed to convey the protest of the representatives of the Canadian people but without the intention of making political capital for one side or the other.

Mr. WM. J. ROCHE (Marquette). The subject which has been brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) is one of very great importance, I think we will all agree, to the people of Canada as a whole, but more particularly to our ranchers and farmers. The South African war is the opening up of a new market, we might say, causing an increased demand for many of the products of our farmers, especially for our hay, our flour, and our meats. But we can only look upon it as a temporary market. And, as we raise so much more of articles of this character than we require for home consumption and must find an export market, it behooves us to have every possible restriction or embargo that might tend to hamper this trade removed, whether it refers to the army in South Africa or in the British Isles. So far as the slaughtering of our cattle at the port of entry into Great Britain is concerned, that embargo has existed for a number of years past. The Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) has told us that he has given up all idea of having that embargo removed through representations to the British authorities, that, in fact, he has practically ceased all efforts in that direction. But if the hon. minister has not been any more prompt in his efforts to have that embargo removed than he has been in the matter of having the clause in the contract prohibiting the use of outside beef in the army contracts, I do not wonder that he despairs of having the embargo removed in the near future. Whatever show of colour there may have been at the time the embargo was placed upon our cattle, on the ground of disease—and I believe that there may have been some cases of disease among American cattle—there has been no reason for it in the way of an ascertained case of pleuro pneumonia amongst our Canadian cattle since that embargo was adopted. So, we are driven to the conclusion that the embargo is intended simply as a measure of protection to the cattle raisers of Great Britain. And this clause of the contracts for army beef is simply designed for the same purpose. It seems a rather peculiar condition of affairs that, while Canada has granted a preference in trade matters to Great Britain, allowing the products of her manufacturers to come into this country at 33⅓ per cent below our usual tariff, and, while our boys have been in South Africa fighting the battles of the empire, where they are privileged to eat Canadian beef, the remainder of the British soldiers in England are prevented from eating Canadian beef. Actually our beef is prohibited and not a pound can be supplied for the use of the imperial troops on account of this clause in the contract. It may be that the home government is taking the Minister of Agriculture at his word. As the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said when the hon. minister was in England, he advised the statesmen of Great Britain that we did not desire any return for the preference we granted to Great Britain in our markets. This measure not merely does not grant us a preference so far as our beef is concerned—I am not aware that any has been asked—but places a prohibition upon Canadian beef, shuts it out from competition with the old country beef. Some may think that this is no very great loss to the cattle raisers of Canada. But we have heard an hon. gentleman who is engaged in the trade declare here to-day that at least forty per cent of our North-west cattle were used in connection with the supplying of beef to the army, and also that this clause means that a loss of at least $5 a head on these cattle shipped from Canada has been incurred. The loss, therefore, is a very serious one. But, even if there were no financial loss at all, from a sentimental standpoint the condition is most undesirable. Our government has allowed sentiment to move us in changing our commercial arrangements with the mother land. The sentiment of imperialism now prevails, and the tendency in business, as in other matters, is to draw the empire together. To have this additional embargo placed upon Canadian beef at this time is most unwise. It may be a business move on the part of Great Britain, but it seems rather strange for a free trade government to adopt a course not of protection but of what is worse, prohibition. It seems also that Canadians might well take a lesson from this example, that Canadian statesmen should learn to look after the interests of Canada. I am quite in accord with the Prime Minister in the declaration he made not very long ago that John Bull will respect us all the more, the more we take care of our own interests. Now, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) says he cannot support this resolution because it condems this government. The hon. member is always ready to give advice to this government, he is always ready to be the adviser of the British government, to be even the censor of that government and to condemn it strongly ; but when it comes to condemning his own leader, of course he will not do that.

Mr. BOURASSA. If the hon. gentleman will allow me I would like to say that I have voted more often against my party than he has voted against his.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). That shows that the hon. gentleman's party is more frequently wrong than my party is. Besides, I do not pose as an independent member of the House or as the leader of a third or fourth party. The hon. member (Mr. Bourassa) says he cannot condemn this government, because they have exercised due diligence in the matter, and that it is the fault of the British government. But, considering that these tenders had to be put in in April of last year and that a whole year has gone by, it seems clear that the Minister of Agriculture has not exercised the diligence he should have shown. And, when the matter was brought to his attention last January by the clerk of the legislative assembly in Manitoba, the hon. minister admitted that he knew nothing about it whatever. One would imagine that in such a case as this a clause referring to a matter under his own department, a matter so important as the supply of the army rations, the hon. Minister of Agriculture would be the first man in Canada to be seized of the facts and the man who would take the first and promptest measure. But the records show that, as I say, he knew nothing about the matter until his attention was called to it last January by the clerk of the legislative assembly of Manitoba. Therefore, we have a right to condemn the hon. gentleman for not being as diligent as he should have been, and for not taking steps for doing away with this clause in the contract. A series of resolutions were passed by the legislature of Manitoba last February, just prior to the prorogation of the legislature, urging upon the Dominion government the necessity of petitioning the imperial authorities in favour of allowing our cattle to be placed on the same footing as the cattle of Great Britain in relation to these contracts. Those resolutions were passed unanimously. They were moved by a man who is a large exporter of cattle. Evidently, the people of the North-west look upon this as a most important matter and one that, unless a change is made, will have a serious detrimental effect upon the interests of our people. Therefore, I view this differently from the hon. member for Labelle, and think that the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Macdonald is worthy of the support of every Conservative member of the House and of every independent member as well.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I feel disposed to adopt a middle course in this matter, because it seems to me that both the British government and our own government are to blame. I do not believe that the home government will vary from the course that is indicated to us by Mr. Hanbury's speech. And why should they? There is no doubt that if they admit our own beef on the same footing as the home-bred beef, they will do a certain amount of injury to the stock-raisers of the British Isles, their own constituents; and I doubt very much if any pressure we can bring to bear upon them would lead them to remove that impediment to our trade. Where I find the action of the home government at fault is in the fact that we ourselves having given them a considerable preference in our market, and having, as indicated by my hon. friends from the west, made considerable sacrifices, particularly of late years, in defence of the flag, it seems to me that under these circumstances we would be entitled to more consideration. But as to our being successful in any representations we may make, I doubt very much. The language of Mr. Hanbury, as quoted by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), is much more positive than is generally used by British statesmen, and I think we may regard it as a certainty that our efforts for a long time to come in that direction will be fruitless.

But I wish particularly to point out that our own government has in that respect a duty to perform, and that the Minister of Agriculture has totally failed to perform that duty. I believe that when the House is in session it is the prerogative of the House to express its opinion on matters of this kind; and during the recess, it belongs to the department interested to make proper representations to the home government in trade matters of this magnitude which concern the welfare of our agriculture. It is the duty of the Minister of Agriculture at any time, and at very short notice, to make proper representations to foreign authorities, and to the home government particularly, when that is necessary for the preservation of our interests. The question which arises in my mind is, What has the Minister of Agriculture done under the present circumstances? He has had three or four days' notice at least of this motion, and what has he brought down to the House to show that he has used diligence? A motion such as that made by my hon. friend (Mr. Boyd) places upon the Minister of Agriculture the obligation of showing that he has used diligence in the premises.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I never had any notice of a motion. The hon. gentleman said he was going to make some remarks about this matter, but until he moved this motion this afternoon we never knew anything about it.

Mr. MONK. I am informed that the hon. minister had notice. He had not the text of that motion in his hand, but he had sufficient notice to have led him to bring down the scanty papers which he has in connection with this matter, and if there are further papers which justify or excuse him—because after all it is only an excuse that he has pleaded here—why have we not those papers before us? There is not one line, there is no despatch, there is no letter, there is nothing from the Minister of Agriculture to show that he has done anything in this matter. Here is his own telegram of the 31st of January last, and what does he say in that telegram? He says that he knew nothing about this prohibition. This is his telegram to the Clerk of the House at Winnipeg:

> Re your question why Canadian cattle not accepted for army contracts, I am not aware of any such exclusion.

He knew nothing of it on the 31st of January. What has he done since? Well, we have a letter addressed to the Minister of Agriculture by Lord Strathcona not in answer to any communication of the minister. This is the letter which, on the 18th of February, Lord Strathcona addressed to the Minister of Agriculture:

> Dear Mr. Fisher,—I think you may be interested in the inclosed copy of a letter I recently addressed to Mr. Chamberlain with regard to contracts for fresh beef for supply of military forces stationed in the United Kingdom. A copy of the letter from Mr. Wylie, which is referred to, is inclosed, as well as copies of the forms of contract which have given rise to the correspondence.

No communication from the Minister of Agriculture excited the interest of our commissioner in England; it was correspondence, a copy of which is here found, from one of the cattle ranchers, if I am not mistaken; a private individual interested in the cattle trade took up this question and brought it to the notice of Lord Strathcona. Lord Strathcona having communicated with the War Office, he was not sure, was not certain, but he imagined that possibly the Minister of Agriculture might take some interest in this matter, and sent him over this correspondence. Therefore, though I agree with the hon. member for Labelle in thinking that the British government is at fault, if we are to take the view expressed by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), still it seems to me it is impossible not to arrive at the conclusion that the Minister of Agriculture has not moved one step in this matter, or at least, he has not seen fit to lay before the House proof of any diligence whatever. What we have from him is the proof that he knew nothing about the matter, and a letter from our commissioner in London inviting his attention to the matter, and to the correspondence which he, upon his own responsibility, had had with the War Office. With what result? None whatever. That restriction pointed out by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) still exists, and in my opinion will continue to exist. The Minister of Agriculture will not deny that it exists, and we are precluded from supplying beef to the British army. Out cattle are excluded to-day as they were a month ago. There is no change, the Minister of Agriculture knows it. It may be true that for supplying the army in the field in South Africa, as competition has been invited from all quarters, as there are contracts with the Americans, so there may be contracts with the people of this country for furnishing these war supplies. But will the minister state here on his responsibility that the restriction complained of by the hon. member for Macdonald has been removed, and that that form of contract is to-day changed? If he will make that statement he will enlighten the House on the point that we are discussing.

Under these circumstances it seems to me that there is ground for the claim that these things have occurred, and that they have been brought to the notice of the minister, although that should have been unnecessary. That should have been unnecessary. That hon. gentleman was travelling in England last year and surely this was the matter which might have caught his attention without his attention having been specially called to it.

Mr. SAM HUGHES (North Victoria). He was treading on air.

Mr. MONK. I do not say that, but I do say that he, having been in England, when this important matter was brought to his attention he failed to use diligence. Under these circumstances it is our duty to say that he has been lacking. Now, I am not going to take up any further time upon this question, but it is a matter which invites the attention and consideration of all the members of this House. When year after year, we have given a preference to the home government, in our markets, a preference which I, for one, and I believe some hon. members on this side of the House, claim has been a disastrous one to our own industries in many respects, we find here, as I have found on more than one occasion, that our own interests on the other side have not been guarded as they should have been. I will not carry this discussion any further.

Mr. W. ROCHE (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking any of those hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the other side of the House what reason was given by the British government for the exclusion of Canadian cattle. They have not been pleased to enlighten us on this subject.

Mr. MONK. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche, Halifax) does not ask me to enlighten him on that subject. I suppose, however, that there are two reasons, one perhaps resulting from this embargo on our cattle and another probably from the praiseworthy desire to encourage their own stock raisers. I do not blame them.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). Did they keep out Canadian cattle because they were diseased or for any reason of that kind.

Mr. BENNETT. I think it was deceased cattle they wanted.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Mr. Speaker, I just wish to say that the correspondence which has been referred to by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) has completely met the argument of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) that it was the High Commissioner in London who was in a sense responsible for the injury done to Canada in the contracts, or the tenders for food supplies for the British army. I cannot see how the hon. member for Labelle can possibly drag the name of the High Commissioner into this question. The High Commissioner, I can assure him, has been most energetic in looking after Canadian interests. The High Commissoner, without the authority of the Canadian government endeavoured to have the embargo on Canadian cattle removed, and I am satisfied by the correspondence which has been produced here that he is still active in looking after Canada's interest.

Mr. BOURASSA. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) not know that the letter just read by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is dated the 18th of November ? How is it that the High Commissioner, who is looking after our business, did not know between the 30th June, 1901, and the 18th November, 1902, that the War Office was putting a condition into its contracts which would do harm to Canada ? Is he not there to look after our business ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). No, he is not there to look after contracts of that kind, or to conduct such business ; he is only there to carry out the instructions of the Canadian government. It is the duty of the hon. Minister of Agriculture here and his agents to see that the interests of Canada are properly guarded in all these respects. I merely rose to point out the fact that the High Commissioner seems to be the only person in London who has taken an active part in looking after Canada's interests in this matter.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Boyd).

Amendment (Mr. Boyd) negatived.

EMBARGO ON CANADIAN CATTLE.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). I beg to give notice, Mr. Speaker, that when the House is again moved into Committee of Supply, I shall move the following amendment :

That this House protests against the maintenance of the provisions of the Diseases of Animals Act, G.B., against Canadian cattle, and hopes that the Prime Minister will take advantage of the proposed imperial conference in London, to press upon the British government the necessity of amending the said Act in order to free Canadian cattle from the operations of the said Act.

THE FISHERY AWARD—STATEMENT BY THE PREMIER OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. SAMUEL BARKER (Hamilton). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House and of the government to the budget speech delivered on the 10th of this month by the Prime Minister of Prince Edward Island, in which he spoke of certain negotiations now pending between the government of that province and the government of this Dominion with regard to claims by that province upon what is known as the fishery award. I propose to read a portion of the speech of the premier of Prince Edward Island in which that reference is made. He was speaking of the taxation of his province, and he said :

> We had in mind a plan of taxation which would practically remodel the whole existing system, but when we set about making up our estimates for the year, we found that the deficit woul be so small that it would be absurd to change the existing system of taxation in order to meet it. But not only that, I believe before the year 1902 closes, we will receive from Ottawa a sum which will be sufficient to carry on the affairs of this province without any additional taxation. We thought it would be absurd to go to the expense and annoyance of putting extra taxes on the people, entailing a large expenditure in connection therewith, when we felt confident from advices from Ottawa that in a very short time our claims for our share of the Fishery Award would be recognized and paid. I am well aware that this has been flaunted, this little flag of truce has been held before the face of the electors of the province for a great number of years—that is true, but every thing has its day. We all know the story of the importunate widow.'

Then the Prime Minister of Prince Edward Island goes on to refer to certain claims heretofore made by the province upon this government, and which claims were successfully made. I will not allude to these, as they are past transactions. The Prime Minister of Prince Edward Island continues, in his speech :

> Thus was our persistence rewarded and so will it be with our Fishery Award. $4,000,000 of hard earned money was paid by the American government to the British government and by them paid to the Canadian government ; money earned by the sweat of the brow, by the toiling on the rowlocks of the boats of our island fishermen ; and by the terms of union and by the evidence given before the Halifax commission, we are entitled to our share of that money. It has been claimed for years and now I am happy to say our hope is near fruition. Messrs. Farquharson and Mackinnon, who represent West and East Queen's in the House of Commons, have been pressing this claim, and I have communications not only from Mr. Mackinnon but also from the Department of Marine at Ottawa, which indicate that our claim has been so far admitted that the federal government is willing that it should be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada for decision as to whether or not we are entitled to the amount. As to the result, any lawyer who has studied the question, the statute, and the evidence taken before the commission will admit that we as well as Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, are entitled to the $4,000,000 ; and if it should have been ours in 1878, we are now clearly entitled also to the interest that the Dominion government has been putting into its coffers for all these years down to date. They have been collecting interest on our $1,000,000 at 3 per cent, $30,000 per annum and have been paying back in fisheries bounties to this province the sum of $13,000. We will be entitled to receive at least $30,000 yearly interest, per annum, since confederation, in addition to our $1,000,000, and, Mr. Speaker, I feel all the more confident that our claim will be acknowledged since I find that the great province of Quebec, the pivotal province of the Dominion, has taken the initiative and is now claiming her share of the award.

Now, Sir, in the King's speech at the opening of the session, we were told that this government had been negotiating with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company about a matter between the people of the Northwest and that company, and that the government had agreed to refer that matter to the Supreme Court. That was thought of sufficient importance to be communicated to this House in the speech from the Throne ; but although important negotiations affecting nearly $7,000,000—$4,000,000 of principal and about $2,800,000 interest—although these negotiations have been pending with certain provinces, not one word has been communicated to parliament on this subject, and that, mark you, although the negotiations seem to have progressed so far that members of this House who are in communication with the government, have been able to inform the premier of Prince Edward Island that this claim is so far admitted that the question will be submitted to the courts. Further than that, the government of Prince Edward Island seem to have had communications officially with the Minister of Marine upon this subject, and all this has been going on without the slightest word to this House. I do not know that I need make any extended remarks upon that question. It does seem to me a most extraordinary thing, that while this House is sitting and when we are only two weeks from the end of this session, we have not heard a word on this subject from any of the ministers. I cannot believe that this statement of the premier of Prince Edward Island is wholly without foundation. So certain is he of what he speaks, that he actually puts off the raising of necessary taxation in his province, because he believes that during this year and before another session this money will be paid, and it will not be necessary to raise that taxation, but that the province will be able to pay its debts out of the money that is to be handed over by the Dominion government. I am not going to discuss the question as to whether the provinces are entitled to any portion of this award. I think it will be found that the people of this Dominion are not disposed to concede that this is not an asset of the Dominion at large. Whatever may be the case upon that point, what I contend for is this: That no such negotiations should have been carried on without our having knowledge of them in this House. I think, Sir, we are entitled to at least that much consideration. It is not merely that the province of Prince Edward Island is being led to expect the payment of this money, but probably Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are expecting it as well. I suppose these are all importunate widows as the premier of Prince Edward Island calls them. We, therefore, have four importunate widows appealing to the government for this $4,000,000 principal and a quarter million dollars interest. Perhaps it would be good advice for me to tender the Prime Minister to beware of the widows. However, that may be, if the right hon. gentleman's government is negotiating with them he should let us know it. I hope that the First Minister will be able to assure the House, that notwithstanding the positive language used by the premier of Prince Edward Island there is really no foundation for these expectations of his.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have no fault to find with the spirit of the remarks of my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker), and in view of the speech which has been delivered by the Prime Minister of Prince Edward Island, perhaps it would not be amiss if I should take this opportunity of altogether reassuring my hon. friend from Hamilton on the fears which he entertains that we may succumb to the blandishments of these several widows of whom he has spoken. I hope our virtue will be equal to the occasion, and that he will have nothing to fear upon that score. There has been loose talk, as my hon. friend knows for several years in the maritime provinces, and even in the province of Quebec: That the award which we obtained under the Washington treaty (which was not $4,000,000, but $4,500,000) should be distributed amongst the provinces. My hon. friend is aware that for a great many years past—almost since the time we received that award—we have been distributing, practically the interest on it in the shape of bounty to the fishermen; and whether the fishermen receive it from us or from the interested governments in the provinces in which they live, I do not know it would make very much difference. But there is another question which has occasioned a good deal of correspondence with, and remonstrances from the maritime provinces—indeed from all the provinces connected with fishery questions—and that is the foreshore question. A judgment was given three years ago by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which, unfortunately has left in doubt a good many questions with regard to the ownership of the foreshore. We have received communications from the several governments upon this point, and we have agreed to have a conference upon the whole subject. As to the distribution of the money which we have received under the fisheries award, though I am aware that claims have been made to us by several provinces, no decision has been arrived at. In fact, the subject has not been considered at all; and I may supplement what I say now by stating that at an early day the whole correspondence will be brought down, and then my hon. friend will know what action has been taken.

INQUIRY FOR PAPERS.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I ask the right hon. gentleman whether certain resolutions and memorials from boards of trade, which were to be brought down in answer to a question by my hon. friend from Toronto, have been brought down.

The PRIME MINISTER. They will all be brought down at an early day. They are being prepared.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Prince Edward Island Railway—Murray Harbour Branch and Hillsboro' Bridge, $500,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This vote is to continue the undertaking for the current year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount required to finish the bridge and this branch, and what has been expended already?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There has been expended from the 30th of June to the 31st of December, on the bridge and the railway, $215,210. The branch, including the rolling stock, will cost in the neighbourhood of $2,620,000. The bridge itself will cost $1,100,000.

Mr. INGRAM. How long is the bridge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Between three-quarters of a mile and a mile, I think.

Mr. INGRAM. How many abutments are under it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think 13 or 14.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the amount required for rolling stock?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $200,000.

Mr. HACKETT. Does not the local government pay a part of the expense of building this bridge?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. HACKETT. Is there not $10,000 deducted every year from the subsidy to the island ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. We have a contract with the island.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the length of this branch ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the line is continued all the way to Murray Harbour, with a loop, as is under consideration, there will be about 55 miles altogether. If we stop at the Murray river, as to which no definite decision has yet been arrived at, it will be shorter.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is the work being done by contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the object of the bridge ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The railway is constructed from the main line at Charlottetown across the Hillsboro river and thence down to Murray Harbour.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I have no objection whatever to make to the expenditure of $10,650 for improvements along the Prince Edward Island Railway, but I think the amount might well have been larger. I am in receipt of communications from different sources on the island, which point out a great many improvements that might be made, and for which I see no provision in the estimates. On the line between Cape Traverse and Emerald, there is not a booking station in that whole length. The people of Kinkora, where there is quite a large settlement, have been asking for freight accommodation for some years, but so far have failed to obtain any satisfaction. In February last a large and influential meeting was held at Kinkora, and the following resolution unanimously adopted :

Moved by Rev. J. J. Macdonald, and seconded by Mr. John P. Smith :

Whereas up to the present, Kinkora has had insufficient railway station accommodations ; and whereas a cheese factory has been recently established, an agricultural implement factory is in operation, several merchants do a large import and export trade and the traffic on the railway here has about trebled itself within the last three years.

And whereas a greater volume of business is transacted at Kinkora than at many localities along the main line where booking stations are now established.

And whereas there is every indication that in the near future there will be a large increase in the import and export trade of the community.

And whereas the government outlay necessary to establish proper station facilities will be more than compensated for by the consequent increased traffic.

And whereas great inconvenience and loss have been sustained for want of a proper station and for lack of telegraphic communication with business centres.

Be it therefore resolved that for the benefit of the railway itself, as well as for the interests of the community, this meeting recommends and urges the immediate erection by the government, of a suitable booking station at Kinkora crossing.

Further resolved, that a petition praying for such railway facilities and for the appropriation necessary for that purpose, be circulated and presented to the government without delay, so that action may be taken thereon during the present session of the federal parliament.

These resolutions were passed at a large representative meeting and a petition forwarded to the government asking that the required improvements be made.

During the past season two merchants alone at Kinkora paid out $500 freight on their shipments, which of course is but a fraction of the general business done both in exports and imports. The train on this section leaves Cape Traverse about six o'clock in the morning, and the people exporting freight have to be out along the line about seven o'clock, in order to get it shipped, and as most of the shipping is done in the summer and the train has to wait for the boat, there is often no end of delay. The train frequently gets into Kinkora about two o'clock in the morning, so that the people there have to wait up to receive their goods and the mail carrier has to sit up all night to receive the mail. And as the trains are not always on time, people have been known to wait hours in order to catch the train going out or coming back. There is only one train a day for passengers and freight. Besides the station for payment of freight is at Emerald, and goods are often held over until the merchant can go up to Emerald and pay his freight there. There is a large amount of business done in this section. As shown by the report, business has trebled there in the past three years. The business of the Prince Edward Island Railway during the past three years has increased—thus keeping pace with the general prosperity of the Dominion—some $50,000 over previous years, and there is every reason why the people of this vicinity should not be given railway accommodation at that point. I may also say that the people of Kensington, a village which has grown considerably during the past few years, require increased freight accommodation. There is a large cheese and butter export from that section, and the superintendent of the company requires increased accommodation for the freight, and is anxious that the yard around the station should be put in proper repair. There are also several other stations along the line which are asking for improved accommodation. I am personally acquainted with the condition of affairs in Kinkora and Kensington, and I know that repairs and improvements are very much needed in these places. It seems to me that the hon. minister might well put in something more than $10,650 for improvements on the Prince Edward Island Railway, especially when the amount is charged to capital account. I would ask him to take this matter into consideration and not let another season pass without having this crying need of the people of Kinkora and Kensington for freight accommodation and booking stations supplied. I do not think it would cost over $3,000 or $4,000 to do the whole thing, and I have no doubt that the business of the railway would benefit.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am quite ready to acknowledge that there is much in what the hon. gentleman has said with respect to the necessity of making improvements, at the earliest possible moment, along the line. It is not very long since I paid a personal visit to the island and traversed it on the railway, and I am free to acknowledge that there is quite a lot that should be done in order to give the people the facilities they need. I have not been allowed to lose sight of the importance of the question, because a number of members of parliament, among them my hon. friend from East Queen's (Mr. Mackinnon) and my hon. friend from West Queen's (Mr. Farquharson) and of King's (Mr. Hughes) have been urging upon me the importance of providing these improvements without delay. The necessity of having booking stations at Alberton, Fredericton and Kincora have been strongly impressed upon me, and I shall be very glad to give all this matter the eraliest possible attention.

Mr. LEFURGEY. I would ask the hon. minister to take the Kinkora station especially into his consideration at an early day, because the people there have been asking for this accommodation for some years. The hon. members for West Prince and West Queen's understand the situation as well as I do, and we have talked it over on several occasions. I have also discussed it with the superintendent of the railway, who was strongly of the opinion that this improvement is needed at that point.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 101) to incorporate the Nepigon Railway Company.—Mr. Campbell.

ORTHODOX RUSSO-GREEK CATHOLIC CHURCH.

On the Order being called for:

Second reading of Bill (No. 140) to incorporate the Bishop of the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church for North America and Aleutian Islands, and each of the parishes and missions of the said church in Manitoba and the North-west Territories.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). I would ask my hon. friend to allow this Bill to stand until Friday.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). May I ask the hon. member (Mr. LaRivière) why he wishes the Bill to stand?

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I may say that the Bill is not yet printed in French.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. The Bill is printed in French.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. member (Mr. Oliver) move the second reading?

Mr. OLIVER. Unless the hon. member (Mr. LaRivière) gives good reason for postponement. The Bill has already been postponed a number of times. If the hon. gentleman has any reason to give, I shall be glad to hear it. But a mere request for postponement is hardly sufficient.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I have some reasons which are personal. I hope my hon. friend will not insist upon going on with the Bill. I do not intend to offer any opposition to the Bill unless I have good grounds for it. If he will not object to the postponement, I will be prepared to tell him my reasons when the Bill comes up on Friday.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland). We entertain the hope that we are geting near the close of the session. This is only the second reading of this Bill, and it will have to be referred to the committee. Would it not suit the hon. gentleman (Mr. LaRivière) better to discuss it before the committee? If there is delay, the consideration of the Bill may take so long that it may be difficult to get it through.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) seems to forget that in giving the Bill its second reading, we are affirming the principle of the measure.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Oliver) move the second reading?

Mr. OLIVER. I wish to accommodate the hon. gentleman, and if he says it is a personal matter, and if he says he has good reason, I will agree to the postponement if he will concede——

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

Order allowed to stand.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Post office—Outside service—Salaries and allowances, $1,302,580.

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here. Will the hon. Postmaster General please explain ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are a very large number of changes.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that the letter carriers and mail delivery men have been pressing for an increase of salary, and I saw by a circular issued by them that something equivalent to a promise had been made by the minister that he would increase their salaries.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose the hon. gentleman refers to the mail carriers. What is contemplated appears in the Bill before the House, which will be moved to a second reading at an early date. The hon. gentleman refers to an alleged promise of mine. I made no promise except to give the matter consideration, and that I have done.

Mr. CLARKE. In the Bill which the hon. gentleman has before the House I understand that the letter carriers are allowed to reach a salary of $600 in four years and a half instead of, as formerly, in nine years. But I understand that men who were appointed previous to 1896 are not receiving any consideration at the hands of the hon. gentleman in the Bill before the House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Perhaps it would be more satisfactory if we discussed the Bill when it is up for its second reading. I will take the Bill up to-morrow if the hon. gentleman likes.

Mr. CLARKE. Is the minister making any provision for the appointment of an additional number of letter carriers in Toronto, and if so, how many ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no provision here for an increase in the number of letter carriers in Toronto, for the reason that certain changes are being made now in the Toronto service, and it is premature, therefore, to anticipate any necessity for an increased staff of letter carriers. At present the collection of letters is made by the staff, and it is intended to have that done by contract. There is a considerable number of men specially engaged in the collection of letters, and they will be relieved from that work and available to be transferred to the regular staff of letter carriers. Then we are erecting a station in the west end, at the corner of Queen and Abel streets, which I hope will be completed in the month of July. When it is completed it will simplify and expedite the work to be done in the west end. At present mail matter for the west end arriving in Toronto has to be taken from the railway station to the city post office, there to be handled. By the methods now in view the mail matter will be taken from the railway station to this depot, and the carriers will have much shorter routes; they will start from this depot instead of, at present, as many of them do, from the central post office, or other places not so convenient. That will also have its effect. But until the system is in full operation it is not possible to say definitely whether any increase will be required in the numerical strength.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the automobiles now in use be taken over by the contractors, or be left in the hands of the department ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They are on trial yet, and the trial, on the whole, is not satisfactory. One of the large machines answers fairly well. I do not want to say anything against the city, but I think the automobiles would be more satisfactory if the conditions were more favourable for their use. We hope there may be some change, and we are still hanging on to them.

Mr. SPROULE. Were they purchased by the Post Office Department ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They were purchased, like all public property, by the Public Works Department. They are charged to public works, like public buildings.

Mr. SPROULE. That would be another item fairly chargeable to the Post Office Department that is not found in the accounts.

Mr. McCREARY. Before this item passes, I would like to ask the Postmaster General when he is likely to visit the west. We have had a good many ministers visiting there, but we have never had the Postmaster General visiting Winnipeg, and the cities of the west. It may be news to most hon. gentlemen here that the city of Winnipeg to-day is the third highest in post office receipts of any city in Canada. Last year $116,000 were received in revenue from the Winnipeg post office, and it is expected this year that the revenue will be $150,000 or $200,000; in fact, we will come very close to Toronto in a year or two. I want to suggest that the post office should be increased in size. The ground floor is very small, and when I came down this session I proposed to one or two of the ministers that a certain property could be bought at that time for about $750 to $800 per foot. They laughed at the idea of buying property for $800 a foot. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that that property has since been sold for $850 per foot to an American firm, who expect to build a block upon it, and to make money out of their investment. So the government was not very businesslike in that matter. Now, we are growing, our post office is growing and going to grow, and we want the ministers to grow up with it, and to realize what is going on. Our post office is a backwoods post office, the city of Winnipeg has to-day practically a backwoods post office. I have stood at the general wicket, and seen ten or fifteen people, on the average, waiting for one hour to get their mail, people who have no private boxes. The boxes are always taken up very quickly, and people have to wait at the general inquiry wicket; as I have said, I have seen ten or fifteen at a time waiting for an hour to get their mail. That is a condition of affairs that should not prevail in an up-to-date city. With regard to the distribution of the mail, why should we not have some such arrangement as Toronto, that the mail should be taken from the depot in an electric railway and distributed throughout the city by automobiles? It may surprise you to know that though, a few years ago, we were a muddy city, now we are building ten miles of streets per year, asphalted, at the expense of the city, the property is owned by the city. We are not doing that by contract, but by day labour. It is one of the most modern municipalities in Canada. Why will not the Postmaster General come up and see us, and see if he cannot increase the efficiency of the post office in the city of Winnipeg, see if he cannot give us some better facilities for getting our mail. A letter comes in there now and it is probably four or five hours before a business man receives it. That should not be permitted, it is not permitted in eastern cities. I cordially invite the Postmaster General to pay us a visit, and give us the benefit of his long experience, and try to help us out.

Mr. MONK. I would like the Postmaster General not to confine his visits to the west but come to the east also.

Mr. MORIN. I say, stay where you are.

Mr. MONK. If the hon. Postmaster General will come to Montreal he will find, that, having regard to the proportionate population, we have, probably, there, the most unsuitable post office that there is in the Dominion.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. If, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary) says, there is not sufficient accommodation in Winnipeg, it will be found that having regard to population the accommodation in Montreal is still more insufficient, and I believe, as we contribute such a large amount to the public revenue, we are entitled, in this respect, to some consideration. Those who are familiar with the conditions in Montreal know that the accommodation of the Dominion government in that city is altogether inadequate.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONK. The Dominion government are obliged to pay a very considerable sum in rent in order to procure insufficient accommodation. I have in past years, urged, and I urge again on the attention of the government the fact that they would really economise considerably if they gave to the post office the dimensions that the post office should have, in view of the large population there is in Montreal, and by enlarging the building they could give the public the accommodation they are clearly entitled to above the post office—accommodation for the different departments of the public service that at present are obliged to pay a considerable amount of rental, representing certainly more than the capital which would be sufficient to place the post office on a decent footing.

Mr. FARQUHARSON. While the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) is on the eastern tack, I would invite him to come down to Charlottetown. Charlottetown is the capital of the province and in that city the post office is altogether inadequate to the wants of the people. It is small and it is dark. The hon. minister kindly consented to send an engineer down there, I understand; in fact, he has so informed me, and I hope we will hear something about it later. I hope the hon. minister will place an amount in the estimates about to be submitted for this purpose. However, I will say that we have been kindly treated, and I have to thank the hon. minister for any favours which we have received in regard to the post office. In fact, I think, we may have in some places too many post offices in Prince Edward Island. In our province it is very difficult to get suitable men to keep the post offices, because the remuneration is very small. I do not know whether there is any provision made for an increase in the remuneration or not. I believe that if it is not increased in the near future there will be many men who will give up their post offices, and the department will have to give them in charge of people who are not fit for the offices or who are located at inconvenient places. In Charlottetown we have no delivery system. That was suggested to me when I heard the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke). I do not know that we are asking for that, but if we do not get it, I think we should have an equivalent, a good post office in Charlottetown. Then again I would say a word in reference to the mail carriers in the country. I find that some of these men carry the mails for a mere nothing. As it is a matter of tender largely, I would say that it is their own fault, but I can assure the committee that there is no extravagance in connection with the mail service so far as Prince Edward Island is concerned. In reference to the officials in the post office and in other offices in the civil service, and I refer more particularly now to the post office, I wish to say one word. I spoke here the other evening, and I now repeat what I then said, that I do not think it is fair that there should be the large discrepancy which does exist between the remuneration paid to different officials doing the same work. I have in my mind several good men that are in offices side by side with men who are no better than they are and not as good in some cases, because they entered the service at a different time, and under different conditions; yet, some of these men draw $350 to $500 only a year, and the other $800 or $1,000, or $1,200, though doing the same work. I know all about this. There is something wrong which should be remedied. The law may be against the men who come in latterly. This is a condition which prevails under the laws and regulations as at present existing. Why should an official be the victim of some law that is perhaps an improper law? I consider that the law in these matters must be changed to meet the circumstances. You cannot get good men to go in under certain conditions at a salary of $400 or $500 a year. We have one young man in the post office at Charlottetown who, I think, will be six years in the service in July. He is competent to perform the work of the post office. He gets, I think, $510, and there are others in the service geting $1,200. He is a better man than some others. I am not saying anything against the others, because they are very good men. I say this with all respect to the government and to the hon. Postmaster General, and I hope that there will be a redress of wrongs. I want to serve every one alike. I do not want to over pay a man, I do not want to under pay a man, but I want to see men paid in proportion to the work they perform. I would say: Get good men, and when you get them pay them fairly and see that they do their work. If the hon. Postmaster General does this, I believe that the people will stand by him. I consider that the law, as at present constituted, must be changed in order that these men shall receive justice at the hands of the government.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved:

That the item be amended by adding, after the word 'allowances' the following words: 'including J. W. Bain, post office inspector of the first-class in Montreal at $2,200, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.'

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is Mr. Bain? Is he a new appointee?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Bain is a former member of this House, and was appointed by the late government. He is a worthy officer and deserving of this.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this an additional employee beyond the number contemplated in the estimates?

Mr. FARQUHARSON.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. The item was included but these words are necessary in compliance with the ruling of the Auditor General.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister told us that the automobiles were not proving satisfactory, but he did not tell us how many were purchased, and what they cost.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have had them for about three years now. My recollection is that there were six quadrocycles which are used for the collection of mail matter, and which I think cost about $600 each. There are I think two four-wheeled vehicles for carrying light loads between the post office and branches. There is also a large wagon capable of carrying probably a ton and a half which is in operation between the post office and the Union station. Of course I am only speaking from memory, as the contract was made by the Public Works Department. I think the assistant postmaster for Toronto told me that these other machines cost in the neighbourhood of $1,500 each.

Mr. SPROULE. On what principle do you charge those to the Public Works Department?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is a mixing up of the departments in the public service. There is not the clear accounting between the departments that I think there ought to be. For instance, the Post Office Department renders a great many services that it gets no credit for, and perhaps in turn it may be a charge on other departments. The enormous amount of franking that goes on is not remunerative. During the recess, the different departments send an immense quantity of free mail matter, and the local governments have certain franking privileges as well. The Post Office Department is put to a large expense in connection with the savings banks which it carries on for the Finance Department, and which of course is not properly a matter of mail service, although it may very fittingly be done by the Post Office Department. There is no revenue from this, and the larger the savings the more it costs the Post Office Department to manage that service.

Mr. SPROULE. What difference does the Postmaster General make between paying contractors for carrying the mails all over the country, and this automobile service that he charges to the Public Works Department?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose the theory is that the Post Office Department does not own any property, and that the Public Works Department is supposed to own the buildings and everything else. The view of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is perhaps more accurate, and if there was a strict accounting, everything used by the Post Office Department should be charged against it and every service that is rendered by it to the other departments should be credited to it. However, that is not the way it has been done in the past. I do not know whether the country is prepared yet to do away with the franking and other abuses; I consider them abuses to a certain extent. My hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Monk) has referred to the post office building in that city; my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. McCreary) has alluded to the Winnipeg building, and my hon. friend from Charlottetown (Mr. Farquharson) draws the attention of the House to the inadequacy of the post office building at Charlottetown. I believe that all these objections are perhaps well taken, and it is gratifying in a sense to find that the increased volume of business under the policy of the administration is causing these public buildings to be inadequate for the demands upon them. I suppose that as fast as the circumstances of the country will admit, the Minister of Public Works will endeavour to enlarge these buildings so that they will meet the increased demands upon them. In all cases these buildings were in existence when we took office. They have not been made smaller, but the business has outgrown the facilities afforded by them. My hon. friend (Mr. Farquharson) refers to inadequate salaries being paid, and he cites a case in Charlottetown where one clerk is receiving $500 a year and another clerk is receiving $1,200. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman desires me to accept as a standard every abuse that may be in the public service. It is perhaps a difficult thing to explain why one man doing the same kind of work as another, is paid a large salary and the other a much smaller one; but it happens that in our service men are promoted from the third to the second-class, and from the second-class to the first-class in process of time, without due regard at times to their efficiency or to the value of the service they render. That is to be found in all branches of the service. When I took office, I may say by way of illustration, I found a clerk who was reported to me as engaged in doing nothing more than copying letters in a letter press, and I think the salary he received for that valuable service was $1,400 a year. That was an abuse of course, and yet if I employed a boy to do the work at $300 a year he would have complained that his mate was being paid four times as much. However, I would not think that that abuse should form a guide for our conduct. Abuses seem to be inseparable from the public service and in giving this illustration I am not reflecting on any person or on any government.

It often happens that men grow old in the service and yet are not retired, though they are more or less unable to perform work, and light work is given to them. It is a very pardonable weakness of human nature if we are kindly disposed towards those who have grown old and infirm ; but all the same, in view of a debate which took place in this House a short time ago, I am afraid that parliament would not approve of an increase of the salary list of the Charlottetown post office just now. I think the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Porter) pointed out that the amount being paid by way of salaries in the Charlottetown post office was very greatly out of proportion to what was being paid in other parts of the Dominion.

Mr. McCREARY. Before this item passes, I would like to get a promise from the minister that he will give us an electric service in Winnipeg from the station to the post office the same as there is in Ottawa, a city which contributes less revenue to the Post Office Department than the city of Winnipeg, also that he will provide automobiles to collect the mail matter throughout the city.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman knows that I could not promise anything involving public expenditure without obtaining the permission of the government and the assent of His Excellency, because that would involve a vote ; but I will promise this, which is all he can expect from me, that I will give the matter my best consideration. As to putting the mails on a tramway between the station and the post office, I will promise to give that consideration too ; and if it is reported to be a better plan than the one that exists now, and we can make fair terms for the service, we will adopt the improvement. We are always ready to adopt an improvement if we can make proper terms. As to adopting automobiles in Winnipeg, I would not care to promise it at present, because we are testing them. They have only gone through one winter, and the test up to date is not satisfactory.

Mr. SPROULE. It is said that they are most of the time in the blacksmith's shop being repaired.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is very much that way.

Mr. KEMP. I think I might come to the rescue of the Postmaster General at this stage. He has been requested by hon. members to visit Winnipeg, Montreal and Charlottetown, in order that he may see for himself the very poor facilities which are provided in the post offices of these cities. In Toronto we enjoy the distinction, I may say the honour, of having the Postmaster General with us all the time, and I must take issue with my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) when he says that Montreal has the most unsuitable post office in proportion to population in the Dominion. I venture to say that we have in Toronto the most unsuitable post office in the Dominion in proportion to the amount of business done. Perhaps when only half the business was done that we are now doing, it might have been considered satisfactory; but at present it is most unsatisfactory. The Postmaster General informed us to-night, as I think he has done on previous occasions, that it was the intention to build branch post offices—one at the corner of Queen and Abell streets, and perhaps others at other points. But it would be a great credit to the country and the city to have a fine post office building, and I hope the government are not shirking the responsibility they should assume in the way of erecting a respectable post office building in the city of Toronto, a city which I understand pays the largest revenue to the Post Office Department of any city in the Dominion. If the system is carried out of having these branch post offices, I suppose the mail will have to be assorted at the Union Station.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On the train.

Mr. KEMP. I do not understand the system sufficiently to discuss that feature; but I hope that we shall not be side-tracked in Toronto in the ambition to have a fine public building in the shape of a post office, such as the Dominion will have good reason to be proud of.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General whether the postmaster for Holstein in the south riding of Grey has been dismissed, and if so, for what reason?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot say from memory, but I will make inquiries and tell the hon. gentleman tomorrow.

Mr. BLAIN. I wish to say a word or two about the small salaries paid the country postmasters throughout the province of Ontario. There is a very universal complaint on this subject among the postmasters and farmers in the rural districts of the western part of the province. As the hon. Postmaster General will understand, a different condition of things prevails among the farmers now from what there was several years ago. The farmers are now engaged in supplying the larger cities with dairy produce, such as butter, milk and cream, and they require a better postal service than they did many years ago when they were engaged in growing grain. The country postmasters are really very poorly paid. In many instances in the county which I have the honour to represent the patrons of country post offices are compelled to contribute money privately in order to get a proper service. It is all very well for the hon. minister to talk about the large and increasing revenue, and I am very glad he has the privilege of talking that way; and it is all very well for the city members to ask for larger post office buildings. I am not complaining of that; but I say that in my humble opinion there is no class of employees of the Post Office Department of Canada who are so poorly paid as the postmasters in the rural districts. If ever there was an opportunity for the Postmaster General to comply with the demands of the country people in that respect, surely it is now, when the revenue is so large; because there will come a time, I have no doubt, when the revenue will not be so large. I am sure that I speak the sentiments of the members on both sides of the House when I say that in this prosperous time some special provision should be made for paying country postmasters a sufficient salary for the work they are called on to perform.

Mr. HENDERSON. I listened to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) when he was speaking for better postal facilities in the city of Winnipeg. I was rather surprised to hear that hon. gentleman ask for such an expenditure as would be necessary to provide the accommodation he desires, when we remember that the Postmaster General is extremely anxious to make his department self-sustaining, and also that our friend from the North-west is always prepared to talk free trade and to deprive the country of that revenue from customs imports which is necessary to supplement the postal revenue and to provide the accommodation he desires. The hon. gentlemen who do not want to contribute to the revenue of the country should not be so exacting upon the Postmaster General or any other minister for increased expenditure. While on my feet I desire to ask a question of the Postmaster General in reference to a matter which came up the other evening in connection with the Customs Department; that is, how postmasters provide their sureties. I understand that the plan adopted by the Postmaster General is to have the government bond all the postmasters and the other officers of the department, instead of paying a guarantee company a certain sum of money or compelling the postmasters to pay a certain sum for their guarantee. I am under the impression that this is a wise movement. I understand that the postmasters are now guaranteed for about two-thirds of what they were guaranteed before by the Guarantee Company, and I am under the impression still that that could be even cut in two and yet leave a sufficient sum to meet all the default cases likely to occur in the Post Office Department. I would like the Postmaster General to go a little further along this line, and he would then be assisting men, who are underpaid, by enabling them to contribute less for their guarantee. I understand that that has been the practice for one or two years, and I hope that it will be extended.

There is another matter I would ask the hon. gentleman about. I am told that a letter posted at Toronto Junction, which is a separate post office, requires only a cent stamp to carry it to Toronto, but to carry a letter from the city of Toronto to Toronto Junction requires 2 cents. It seems to me that that is an anomaly.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The condition to which the hon. gentleman refers did exist with regard to the mail service between a number of the villages around Toronto and Toronto itself, but I put an end to it when it was brought to my attention some two or three years ago.

Mr. HENDERSON. I thought that if it extended to villages around Toronto, say five miles out, there was no reason why it should not extend 35 miles out, and include the village I am living in. I am glad to hear that we are all put on the same footing. I would like to hear from the hon. gentleman what he proposes to do with reference to guarantees.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When I took office I found that the only system in vogue was a separate guarantee bond for each official. These bonds lasted a year, and it was quite a task to keep track of them, and also to get the bonds taken out in the first instance. I got parliament to authorize the establishment of an assessment system in the service itself, but did not transfer to that system all the insurance of every officer, but only a portion. By degrees, however, the system has been extended, and by the 30th June next we will cease taking the bonds of any guarantee company at all. As regards the postmasters, where the revenue of the office is $200 or less, it is optional with them to furnish a private bond or to subscribe to the assessment system, in which latter case they will have to pay 40 cents per $100 or 80 cents for the $200. We may practically consider that the whole service is now under the system with the exception of postmasters, the revenue of whose offices is $200 and under, and it is optional with them to join the system or not.

Mr. HENDERSON. Then, the government practically bond their officers without reference to any guarantee company.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At the end of the fiscal year the majority of the officers will be furnishing insurance on the assessment system. Some of the higher officers, who have to furnish a larger amount of security, are partly insured in the assessment system and partly in the guarantee company.

Mr. CLARKE. I understood the Postmaster General to say, in reply to the question as to whether he has made provision for the employment of a larger number of letter carriers, that he is going to ask for tenders for the collection of street letter boxes, and that the men who are now engaged in that work will be available to act as letter carriers. There will probably be eight or ten of these men available for that purpose, but so far as I can gather, that number is entirely inadequate. If the hon. gentleman will examine internally the Toronto post office, he will find that it is the biggest sweating shop in Canada.

The hon. member for Selkirk said that merchants from Winnipeg have to wait from four to five hours after the mails are received in the general post office, before they are delivered by the carriers. Well, it is a fact that merchants in Toronto send their messengers to the side door of the post office to get their mails rather than wait until the over-burdened letter carrier is able to reach them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What do you think should be the load of a letter carrier ?

Mr. CLARKE. That would depend upon the size of the man, and I do not know what the weight should be, but the letter carriers are pretty heavily laden down, especially on the first delivery. As a matter of fact, they cannot complete their delivery in the time they were able to do it formerly. Merchants are compelled to have the letters brought by special messengers of their own rather than wait until the letter carrier reaches them. In some instances, the first delivery does not reach them until nine or ten o'clock. It is false economy not to employ a sufficient number of men to do the work promptly. It seems to me that if the hon. minister has the time to spare he should look into the situation, so far as the distribution is concerned in the city of Toronto.

I do not want to worry the hon. gentleman but would like to know what has become of the branch post offices. They appear to have dropped out of existence. We require pretty sharp eyes to find them out. We had several of them, and I believe the deputy postmasters received salaries equivalent to $500 or $600 a year, but their services have been dispensed with and others appointed on salaries from $100 to $200 a year. And instead of being in commodious, suitable places, these branch offices have been transferred, in many instances, to small places you can hardly find. Why was the change made? Was it to effect a saving in the salaries? Was any complaint made as to the inefficiency of the men in this branch of the service ? Were they not discharging their duties satisfactorily? Or was the sole idea of dispensing with the services of these men and appointing others the saving of three or four hundred dollars a year in each case? The complaint, as the Postmaster General knows, was very general with respect to the change of these branch post offices in Toronto. Complaints were made by friends of the hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as by those who are not so friendly, against the dismissal of these men, and the removal of their offices from their various locations.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As to the last inquiry, of what had become of the branch post offices? I would say that the branch post offices were found to be largely engaged in so-called work which was not only useless, but was really an obstruction to the public service. Though the system of collection and delivery by special messengers existed in the city, yet some twenty or thirty branch post offices had been established to which people could go and post their letters, the branch postmaster taking possession of them, stamping them and tying them in bundles to be taken to the city post office, where the parcels had to be untied, and the letters re-stamped. This meant a wholly unnecessary handling of the letters. Experience has shown that the more hands letters pass through, the less security there is, as a rule. A recognized part of good management of a postal system is to have letters pass through as few hands as possible. It was considered in the public interest, as being more expeditious, not to have the letters pass into the hands of the branch postmasters but to have them taken from the ordinary receptacles by the collector and carried at once to the central office. With this change, the work of handling the letters was taken from the branch postmasters. The remaining portion of the work is of a comparatively trifling character. These should not be called branch post offices, because they are not such in the ordinary sense; the term is a misleading one. They sell postage stamps—which are to be found on sale in hundreds of places throughout the city—they receive registered letters and issue postal notes and money orders. That is about the extent of the work in these institutions.

Mr. CLARKE. I tried to follow the hon. Postmaster General closely. If I understand him, the letters instead of being posted in the branch post offices are posted in the pillars outside. But the letters have still to be collected from these receptacles as they were before, and there are as many collectors as there were before. I take it that the only difference in the work done by the branch postmasters is that they do not have to stamp the letters and send them to the general office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That was nine-tenths of their work—the handling of the letters. The public would hand letters to them, and the branch postmasters would act as postmasters and make up a mail on the central office. That was a wholly unnecessary procedure. We have many letter boxes in Toronto and the letters dropped into them are simply taken by the collectors to the general office where they are stamped, and this one handling is sufficient.

Mr. CLARKE. All these branch post offices were supplied with letter boxes. Parties going in to buy stamps handed their letters to postmasters or dropped them into the boxes. Now, I understand, they must go outside to drop the letter in the pillar outside the branch post office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The ordinary boxes on the highway. My hon. friend knows that when they were dropped in the branch post office they were practically in the custody of the branch postmaster and were handled by him. That is not the case now—he cannot touch them. The letters go direct from the letter boxes through the bag of the collector, to the post office. They are not handled by the branch postmaster, and that unnecessary handling is dispensed with.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there an additional collection made from the pillars or large receptacles outside the branch post offices now as compared with the number of collections made before the branch post offices were dispensed with?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot tell whether there has been an increase in the frequency of the collections. The practical working of the post office in Toronto is left in the hands of the staff there, and I do not think the hon. gentleman can expect me to tell him how many times a day these boxes are visited. I believe the boxes are visited frequently—I think more frequently than before. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but I am sure he will not contradict what I say.

Mr. CLARKE. As the Postmaster General said he did not know anything about it, I thought that perhaps——

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am sure there has been no reduction in the frequency of collections.

Mr. TAYLOR. In the amount that the Postmaster General has asked the House to vote, has he made provision for the re-opening of the post office at Marble Rock, a post office established some thirty years ago.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Where is it?

Mr. TAYLOR. Seven miles from Gananoque. A petition was presented to the Postmaster General not very long since, signed by over a hundred persons who received or would receive their mail at that office.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will make a note of the inquiry and will be able to give my hon. friend the answer to-morrow.

Mr. TAYLOR. Very well. I desire also to call the attention of the Postmaster General to what I consider an abuse of the postal service—the post office practically doing an express office business. Large departmental stores, as I understand, get the voters' lists of the various municipalities throughout the province, and to the names upon these lists they send catalogues. In response to a letter they will send a full set of samples of dry goods or to other articles, which they can send for a few cents. People make their selection, send their money and get the goods back by mail. This is a great injury to the country storekeeper, and, as I say amounts to the post office doing an express office business. A large portion of the mail now is made up of dry goods and other merchandise. The mails should be exclusively for mail matter and the post offices should not be the means of carrying on a retail and wholesale dry goods business.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is a very proper subject for consideration. But perhaps my hon. friend would not find public opinion at his back if he proposed to restrict the mails entirely to correspondence. That is not the practice either in the United Kingdom or in the United States. I do not know when the parcel system was inaugurated in Canada, but it was many years ago, and no change has been made in any respect since the present government took office. The abuse my hon. friend refers to has existed for many years. I do not remember having heard him take this point earlier. I doubt very much if public opinion would support us in refusing to allow small parcels to be sent through the mails. That would be a very sweeping change. A person can send a small parcel through the post office for a couple of cents, which he would have to pay 25 cents to send by an express company.

Mr. MORIN. Referring to the question of wages brought up a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Farquharson), I would suggest to the Postmaster General a change in the basis of paying for carrying the mails. At present in many country districts the mail is carried on horseback or with a vehicle, and I think the hon. gentleman would do well to pay so much per mile instead of as at present, paying a fixed price. Sometimes the mail carriage is given out by tender and sometimes it is not. When it is not given out by tender, of course the friends of the government get it, and when it is given by tender they have some other way of getting it. I remember the Postmaster General said five years ago in this House that all mail should be carried by public tender, he said he was going to do so, but he has not fulfilled his promise. He still keeps up the system of giving that work to the friends of the government. I know one of his friends who is carrying the mail a distance of 26 miles, and it takes the whole day to make the trip back and forth, on a very bad road, and that man only gets $270 a year. He gets a starving price, a bankrupt price to carry that mail. I say, give him a little more, and let the man live. I know another place where the mail carrier carries the mail 6 miles. He leaves home in the morning about 9 o'clock and comes back in the afternoon at 5 o'clock. He has a horse and wagon, and that man gets $90 a year. How can a man live at such a price, maintain his horse, and keep up his wagon or sleigh for $90 a year ? At another place a man carries the mail 13 miles, or 26 miles the round trip. He leaves home in the morning at about 7 o'clock and gets back at 8 or 9 in the evening, by very rough roads. The Postmaster General should establish a price of so much per mile, as he gives railway companies so much per pound.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am afraid that mileage system would hardly work. The law says that we shall give out the contracts, and award them to the lowest tenderer. When men tender I cannot go and increase the tender price for them. If I did so, I think my hon. friend would very likely take exception to it. As to adopting the mileage system, it is to be borne in mind that many mail carriers do the business of carrying parcels and passengers as well as the mails. There are other districts, perhaps, which do not afford any such advantages.

Mr. MORIN. That is all right, but I would advise the hon. gentleman to do as he has been doing. The law says that he shall do one thing, and he does another, and so he could in reference to these mail carriers.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the Postmaster General whether the Morris street branch at Halifax has been closed, and if so, for what reason ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am informed it has been discontinued as a branch office, and will be opened out shortly as a sub-office.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the distinction between a branch office and a sub-office ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Under the old system a branch office was, or might be, an independent post office. Mail matter was posted there and handled by the postmaster, and if people in the vicinity chose to go there they could get their letters. We have discontinued generally throughout Canada the system of branch offices, and are applying the free delivery system.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the public at these sub-offices be enabled to transact business in the same way as at the post office ? For example, can they get money orders ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, they can buy postage stamps, money orders and postal notes, and deliver registered letters and get receipts for them, and do savings bank business.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). At how early a date is it expected that office will be opened ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At once, you may look for it daily.

Mr. CLARKE. Can the Postmaster General inform me what salaries were paid to branch postmasters prior to the 31st of December last, and what salaries are paid now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not had the fixing of salaries before the 1st of January. There was an arbitrary sum being paid, that was not based upon any rule that I could discover. I suppose it was dependent on the amount of influence the postmasters had. As to the present system, a general scale of remuneration has been adopted, and a printed tariff; and keepers of branch post offices were furnished with a copy of the terms upon which they could continue as keepers of the sub-offices. In most cases they have elected to continue on as keepers of the sub-offices.

Mr. CLARKE. What salaries were paid to keepers of these branch offices prior to the change referred to; what was the smallest salary paid under the old method ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As I have said, there was no fixed salary. They were paid varying sums. The hon. gentleman will find in the report of the Postmaster General, that in the city of Toronto, sums were paid varying from $200 to $800 or $900. They are now paid according to a regular scale applicable to all.

Mr. CLARKE. Would it be possible to get the information from the hon. Postmaster General now. Could he say how much he is paying now ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is a minimum allowance, by way of gratuity, for postmasters of $60. A postmaster is also paid one per cent upon the postage stamp sales, he is also paid a commission upon the sales of money orders and postal notes and a commission of one-quarter per cent on the receipt of deposits.

Mr. CLARKE. His salary, or gratuity, is $60 a year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He receives a gratuity of from $60 to $100. One hundred dollars is the maximum of the allowance which covers any special inconvenience he may be put to. He also receives a commission on certain classes of business.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the person who has charge of the branch office to pay the rent of the building and give attendance, to issue money orders, registered letters and receive deposits for this amount ? Is he called upon to provide a suitable place and to pay the rent for which he receives $100 remuneration and a commission amounting to $50 or $100 ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We do not employ persons who are not engaged in business as the keepers of sub offices. The sub offices are placed, as a rule, in charge of druggists and stationers. This does not involve an increased size of building, extra equipment, or staff. The amount of business done at a sub office is comparatively trifling and the keeper probably makes no addition to his expenses.

Mr. PUTTEE. We, in the city of Winnipeg, for a couple of years have had these sub post offices. I remember that at the time the Board of Trade of Winnipeg and I first applied to the hon. Postmaster General for branch post offices such as they had in the city of Toronto, the hon. Postmaster General pointed out the serious drawbacks he had found in the department when operating these branch offices. He established five or six sub offices which have proved of great benefit. The public appreciate them very much. As far as we are concerned, as the city extends, we shall apply for more sub post offices. The people who keep these sub offices get very little for it. They admit that. I am doubtful if it actually pays the expenses but I notice that these offices are always given to tradesmen, that there is keen competition for them and I am also aware of the fact that they hang on to them so closely that it is hard even to change a location. I have been impressed with the idea that the system of sub post offices is the best system to operate. I would like to ask the hon. minister, in cities where there is a letter carrier service, is there any basis of apportioning the number of carriers according to the population. Is there any approximate relation between the population and the number of carriers that a city is allowed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, the number of carriers is increased from time to time in accordance with the local demands. The officers in a city report that they require additional assistance and that becomes the foundation for increases. The volume of business would not be the only basis because it is sometimes more difficult to serve one city than another. One city may extend over a greater area than another, or one city may be more difficult to serve. Take the city of Quebec, for instance. Therefore, the volume of business, although it has a material influence, is not the only determining factor.

Mr. PUTTEE. Having reference to the complaint of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) that there were not enough letter carriers in Toronto, which is probably correct, I want to state that I have looked through the civil service list and I have found that Toronto has 140 carriers and that in Winnipeg, according to the Civil Service list, there are only eighteen. Our population at the last census, and the actual population is greater than the census population, was over 44,000, which would give us one carrier to every 2,400 of the population. Upon that same basis Toronto would have a population of over 300,000. Whatever may be the position of affairs in Toronto we are exactly in the position that has been brought to the attention of the hon. Postmaster General by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) that we cannot get any of the public services in the west to extend as rapidly as business and population increase. I have had great trouble and the postmaster in Winnipeg has had trouble to impress upon the post office department that there is need of a steady increase of the staff there. Two years ago when this matter was brought before the post office authorities it was not nearly so pressing as it is now. It was almost impossible then to conceive that the business which is being done to-day could be done without more accommodation and without an increase in the staff. I imagine that the business has increased more than fifty per cent. We have still only eighteen letter carriers. As a matter of fact there are some temporary men, as I presume there are in Toronto, but our city covers a large amount of ground, it is not an easy city for a letter carrier service and yet we have that limited number of carriers.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand from the Postmaster General whether the system which he intended to adopt in Toronto of having district post offices was a system which would be adopted generally in places where the business has increased. Is it intended to have a similar system in Montreal to that which it is proposed to establish in Toronto; for instance, the system of having a post office in the west end at the corner of Queen and Abel streets, because of the inadequacy of the present post office? Then, before he answers that question, I would like to ask him another. He said that he intends to sort letters for the western post office on the trains. Does he intend to divide the city up into districts numbered 1, 2 and 3, or A, B and C, and is it possible to have a staff of clerks on the trains coming in from all directions to handle the mail matter intended for district offices. Is this to be a general policy or is it to be a policy just for Toronto? Is it intended to extend this policy and have other district post offices? Is it the policy of the hon. gentleman to have more than one, or two or three post offices in large centres?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As far as Toronto is concerned it is found that the post office now is not central. It is too far to the east. My hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) is familiar with the locality. It has been found that there is a loss of time in the transfer of the mails from the station to the eastern part of the city in which the post office is situated; that is of those mails which are intended for the west. In like manner there is an unnecessary delay in transferring the mail matter from the west end to the station if it it has to go around by the post office. By cutting off the Toronto post office from the route to be taken the mail matter which will come in by rail will arrive at station C in the west end much more quickly and we will be able to close the outgoing mails from the west much later. That office has been decided upon as the outcome of the situation there. It is in contemplation as well to have at least one more in the northerly part and perhaps one or two coming around towards the east, but we cannot do it all at once. This one office will be equipped and I hope in working order towards the middle of July and my hope is that next year I will be permitted by parliament to make provision for another station at the next most convenient place in Toronto. As to Montreal, simultaneously with the arrangements being made for the establishment of a west end office in Toronto it was decided to inaugurate the system in Montreal by having a similar station in that city. The Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is in charge of the matter and I think has been negotiating for the selection of a suitable place as a site for it. I do not know whether there will be provision made in the estimates but that will appear when they come down. But Montreal is as much in need of a station as is Toronto, and I hope it will have one in the near future. The hon. gentleman asked me what the system of sorting it. The heaviest mails come in from the east arriving by the morning trains, and in order to enable these letters to go out on the first delivery in the morning, officers are sent down the night before by the night train to meet the upcoming train and to sort the letters for the letter carriers. That enables the letters to go out on the first delivery instead of on the second delivery as formerly. That is not yet necessary on the westerly trains, but should it be necessary that system will be adopted also.

Mr. KEMP. I do not think that it is the practice in the United States to have so many different post offices in cities of the population of Montreal and Toronto. I presume that the Postmaster General has given this matter a great deal of consideration, and I will have to bow to his decision, but it strikes me at first glance that the better system would be to have one central post office. If the Toronto post office is not now in the centre of the city according as the population has grown of late years, would it not be better to sell that property and build a large post office that would be a credit to the country, near the present centre of population, rather than to have so many small post offices scattered in different places. Has the Postmaster General considered the question of this American advertising matter which comes through the post office at very low rates. I see the letter carriers bags overburdened with this useless matter, and I would like to know if it is carried at a less rate of postage in the United States than would be charged in Canada ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The newspaper rate in the United States is 100 per cent higher than in Canada.

Mr. KEMP. These are not newspapers, but large cards printed on one side with the address on the other.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These would probably pass in the United States as post cards, which have the same rate here as in the United States, and according to the international arrangement, mail matter posted in the United States and directed to Canada must be delivered for the rate prevailing in the country of origin.

Mr. KEMP. What is the policy of the government as to branch post offices ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These are the outgrowth of necessity, and when the conditions demand it an additional station is erected. The letter carriers for the districts assemble at these stations, and a great deal of time is saved by them in not having to go to the central post office and return to their beats. I think my hon. friend will see the wisdom of that feature.

Mr. BELL. Experiments have been made in the United States in regard to rural delivery. Has the Postmaster General considered the application of that system to Canada ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I sent Mr. George Ross, assistant postmaster at Toronto, to the United States to study the system, and he was of opinion that it was not adaptable to Canada, which is a country of vast distances and rather sparse settlement. I do not think that the taxpayers of Canada would for a moment consent to the great expense which would be involved. Moreover, there is a very divided opinion as to its benefits in the rural districts of the United States, the contention being that the post office is used by farmers and others for the purchase of goods from larger cities, and the local merchants are not patronized as they were before. The system is not at all popular in some districts in the United States.

Mr. MONK. I am afraid I will have to withdraw my invitation to the Postmaster General to come to Montreal, because I notice that in Toronto, where he lives, the same abuses exist as in Montreal; but in Winnipeg, where the Postmaster General has not been, the conditions seem to be better. Perhaps living is more expensive in Winnipeg, but at all events the letter carriers are comparatively adequately paid.

Mr. PUTTEE. We are not satisfied.

Mr. MONK. It shows how these western people are difficult to satisfy. The smallness of the salaries paid to the letter carriers in Montreal and Toronto is a very real grievance.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) So it is everywhere.

Mr. MONK. Surely not where the hon. gentleman lives; living must be very cheap down there.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I live in Halifax.

Mr. MONK. I find that in Winnipeg the majority of the letter carriers get a salary of $720 a year. The salaries of the letter carriers in Montreal are much too low. There is no sense in it at all; they are almost as bad as the salaries of our judges. In Montreal, I say, the delivery is not satisfactory, because I think the letter carriers are very badly organized, very poorly paid. The delivery is not what it should be in a large city. I have been in other cities where you could drop a letter in the box, and tell to the hour almost when it would reach its destination. It is not so in Montreal by any means. You find letter carriers in Montreal getting $365, $390, $358, $367, $382, $308.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no officer getting $308.

Mr. MONK. Here it is in the public accounts.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not for a year's work.

Mr. MONK. Yes, to be exact, $308.71 for a year's work. The man's name is Pacific, and the hon. Postmaster General must admit that he has to be very pacific indeed to live on that.

Mr. McEWEN. Is that the highest ?

Mr. MONK. No, there are some who receive $600—why ? Does the one who gets $308 not deliver as much as the others ? I say the salary is inadequate and the system is bad. It is a cause of complaint in Montreal among a large class. I do not say that the Postmaster General should come there, because his residence in Toronto does not seem to have improved matters; but he should send down some one who can give us a remedy.

Mr. BLAIN. Before the item is adopted, I would like the minister to make some statement in reference to the salaries paid to country postmasters, and as to whether the government are prepared to make any proposition to the House for paying them better ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The salaries paid to the country postmasters are in accordance with a scale adopted by my predecessors in office. They maintained that scale for eighteen years, with the approval of the country, and I suppose also of my hon. friends who are now in opposition; and they have not yet explained to this House any changed circumstances which would call for a reduction of those rates.

Mr. WILSON. The growing times.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I may say that there are a great many small post offices where the postmasters receive the whole revenue and more too. Post offices are found dotted all over the country—almost too close to each other, as my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I. stated a little while ago. Does my hon. friend from Peel (Mr. Blain) propose that a person who keeps a post office the gross revenue of which is only $10 or $15 a year, shall be paid more than $15 ? In many cases the postmaster himself is the chief gainer, because he has the mails brought to his house instead of having to go for them to a post office a mile or so away. If the public insists on post offices being so close together, there must be small salaries paid. In reality, these are only nominal allowances, the offices themselves doing a merely nominal business.

Mr. BLAIN. Would the hon. minister state about what the average pay of a country postmaster is in the western part of Ontario ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The pay is based on the revenue of the office. Up to a revenue of $800 the postmaster receives 40 per cent of the gross receipts. He also gets some small commissions on money orders, postal notes and savings bank business; but these make a rather trifling amount. When the revenue is in excess of $800 and up to $10,000, he gets 25 per cent on the excess ; and if it is over $10,000 he is paid 15 per cent on the excess.

Mr. BLAIN. Is it not a fact that there are a large number of postmasters in country districts who get salaries ranging from $10 to $25 a year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are hundreds, perhaps thousands of small offices which have been opened perhaps for the convenience of half a dozen people, the postmaster being the chief beneficiary. These offices are only doing a nominal post office business, perhaps averaging only a letter a day, and the postmasters are paid a nominal fee. That has been the invariable practice in Canada, and I presume it will continue for all time. I do not know what my hon. friend's idea would be for paying postmasters. You could not, I suppose, offer a man a lower salary then say $100 a year. At that rate you would pay $1,000 postmasters $100,000, while the revenue from their offices would perhaps be only $10,000. I do not think the country would justify our opening those offices on such conditions.

Mr. BLAIN. I am sure that the Postmaster General's statement will not be satisfactory to the farming community of the province of Ontario. It is all very well for the minister to say that he found a certain state of things existing when he came into office. I would remind him that he has been making many changes, some of which have been approved of by the people of Canada; but many of his changes have been in the direction of benefiting the cities almost exclusively. Who gets the greatest benefit of the reduction of the postage from 3 cents to 2 cents ? Is it not the banking institutions, the large loan companies, the merchants and manufacturers of this country ? These are the people who have been getting the chief advantage of the changes which the hon. minister has made. If it is true, as I think it is, that in some parts of Ontario there are too many post offices, that is a matter that ought to concern the hon. minister himself, and he should give it some consideration. If there are too many, he should reduce the number and equip the offices, and pay the postmasters proper salaries. The farmers in Ontario are now engaged in a different kind of work from what they were engaged in twenty years ago. They are supplying butter and small produce to the larger cities, and for that reason require to go to the post office every day for their mail matter. Therefore, the minister should seriously consider the advisability of re-adjusting the condition of things in the country districts, so that the farmers may have a better service, and not be called upon to contribute a special amount to the country postmasters, as they are in many parts of Ontario at present. No doubt the hon. minister has been considering this question, but what I complain about is his want of action in giving the farmers better mail service in the province of Ontario.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend complains that we are doing more for the cities and less for the rural districts, but he will only have to wait a few minutes to hear a different story from the representatives of the cities. He suggests that there should be a reduction in the number of post offices and larger salaries paid the postmasters remaining. Would the hon. gentleman like me to give any attention to the county of Peel and reduce the number of post offices there ? Would it be far more satisfactory to the farmers of Peel to drive a longer distance for their mails than they do now and pay higher salaries to the postmasters. It may be that in the hon. gentleman's county the farmers are so philanthropic that they believe that the offices exist for the benefit of the postmasters. Elsewhere, however, the idea prevails that these offices exist for the general public. Surely the hon. gentleman is not serious when he proposes a reduction in the number of post offices. He may rest easy, however, in his mind as regards the county of Peel, for I do not purpose to close any of the post offices there or elsewhere. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that I do not believe he could get any of the people to consent to the closing up of one office out of a thousand in the whole Dominion, however, unnecessary these offices might be. Once post offices are established and the people have become accustomed to them, they insist on their being kept open. I have had not only to open up new offices but to carry on those which were established by the late government, even in places where perhaps they were not actually required. There has been no such serious change in the mode of carrying on business to-day as calls for a greater increase in the number of post offices in close proximity than existed five years ago in the rural districts. I am quite as familiar with the methods of doing business in the rural districts as my hon. friend, and with the conditions in Ontario, and I think that the farmers are in favour of a multiplicity of small offices. When a man, for his own sake, or that of his neighbours allows his farm house on the road side to be used as a post office, he does not, as a rule, expect any substantial remuneration, although quite willing to take it should it come his way.

Mr. BLAIN. Let me remind the hon. minister that he has already given some consideration to the county of Peel by cutting off the heads of some of the postmasters in that county.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I did not close the offices.

Mr. BLAIN. No, but the hon. gentleman cut some of their heads off, without any complaint being made against the postmasters at all. He need not therefore expect to create any apprehension by saying that he might bring further consideration to the county of Peel. No doubt he will do that in any case, in the general conduct of his business. I am quite sure that the hon. gentleman did not wish to misquote me. I did not say that the post offices should be reduced in Ontario.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You argued that way.

Mr. BLAIN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. What I did say is that the question should get the consideration of the minister, and if he found that there were too many post offices in the province of Ontario, it would be his duty to reduce the number.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am quite satisfied that there are too many, and I am perfectly satisfied that if I took the hon. gentleman's own riding I would find too many there. Would he wish me to close any of the post offices in that county because I thought there were too many.

Mr. BLAIN. I might tell the hon. minister that he could begin with his own county. I had a drive through his county a short time ago, and the gentleman who accompanied me pointed out where the hon. minister had opened up several post offices in North York, for some very peculiar reasons which I will not weary the House with at present. When the hon. gentleman says I am not in earnest, I wish to correct him. I am in earnest, and I might remind him that many of his own supporters in the county of Peel have written me complaining of the condition of things, complaining that the minister gives special consideration to the large manufacturing establishments and the large financial and banking institutions, but does not give the same consideration to the farmers by furnishing them with a proper postal service in the province of Ontario. Let the hon. gentleman come to the county of Peel if he wishes, and make such arrangements as will bring about a better system of postal service for the people of that county, and I will be very glad to give him what assistance I can. But I would like him to see that there are no postmasters who work twelve months in the year and only get from $10 to $14 for their services.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman complains that the reduction in postage favours certain classes and not others. He has argued that that reduction inures only to the benefit of the large banking establishments and manufacturers, but that the farmers get no advantage.

Mr. BLAIN. I did not make any such statement.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Then what is the hon. gentleman complaining about ? If he thinks that the whole advantage derived from the reduction of postage rates accrues to the inhabitants of large cities, he is mistaken. Only one-third of the postal revenue is derived from the cities. Two-thirds is derived outside the cities, so that two-thirds of the advantage accrues to the rural districts. Every one who sends a letter, be he a farmer or a millionaire, has a corresponding advantage. If my hon. friend means to say that he represents a constituency, the farmers in which never write letters, he would be correct in saying that they get no advantage from the reduction of postage. But if, like other farmers, they make a reasonable use of the mails, they get the same relative advantage as other Canadian citizens.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.). I think the county of Peel has been pretty well aired between the Postmaster General and its representative, and it is time that we should be allowed a few minutes for the other counties. The complaint is general that the amount received by the postmasters throughout the Dominion is very small, but there is no use to expect any increase while there is such a large deficit in the postal revenue.

I look to the time when there will be a surplus, and then we will make a general raid on the Postmaster General for the increase of the salaries of the postmasters throughout the Dominion. In Nova Scotia, before confederation, when I represented my county for eight years, the direct salaries paid to postmasters were much better than they are now. Postmasters were paid salaries according to the services performed, but now they are paid a certain percentage. I do not think any person wants to reduce the number of post offices in his own county, but the desire would be to increase them in several instances. So far, in all my appeals to the Postmaster General, I find that we cannot make any impression upon him. He is very pleasant when in the House, but when you want a particular favour from him for your own county, he is pretty rigid. In fact, there is no elasticity in him at all. I hope that after this he will be a little more elastic and that we shall be able to get our daily mail between Baddeck and Englishtown for which I have been pleading all this time.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I hope the Postmaster General will take the cue from the hon. members who have spoken of reducing the post offices. You may do it in some of the counties where the people do not read and write, but I hope you will not attempt to reduce the number of post offices in my county. Most of the farmers in that county take a daily paper, and I am sure you will be doing them an injustice if you do not make it convenient for them to get that paper. As to the farmers contributing toward the expense of the post office, I think the farmers already contribute their share. They help to keep up the merchants, the bankers and others who are benefited by cheap postage. Now as to the centralizing of post offices in large cities, I know that St. Martins le Grand in Old London is the head post office, and the only large post office in that city of over four millions of people, but I have never heard of any suggestion of a change because the city has grown west. It seems to me it would be folly to tear down the post offices in Toronto and Montreal because they are not in the present centres of those cities. I do not think it would be wise for the government to spend more money building more post offices when those now in existence will do, even though they are not in the centre of the city. I think that it would be much to the public advantage to have a system of free delivery in cities of from ten to twelve thousand inhabitants. Much time is wasted by people trudging to the post office, it may be miles, two or three times a day to look into their boxes and see if there is anything for them. It is time that in these large towns postal matter should be delivered two or three times a day. I am pleased to see the reduction in postage. But there is one point worthy of consideration. I was in the little post office in my neighbourhood a few nights ago, and I saw the postmaster putting circulars into almost every box. He handed one to me. These were circulars from the United States that had come in a large bundle, each circular bearing a one cent stamp. Our government got no revenue from that. I asked the postmaster if he had sent the names of parties in that neighbourhood to the firm, and he said he thought they had secured a copy of the voters' list. We are carrying free a large amount of mail matter for the purpose of advertising quack medicines from other places, and I think it is time we had a change. The Postmaster General talks a great deal about plans that existed eighteen years ago. He talks back to hon. gentlemen on this side because he found such and such a system in existence when he took office. But you know we have had a growing time since then, and people have to pay a good deal more for everything they get. I do not know but that the Postmaster General should have a little of that growing time for the villages. The postmasters in towns and cities are well paid, and do little work. It would be a good thing if we could get some of this money from the cities and towns and give it to the rural districts.

Mr. HENDERSON. As to the view taken by the Postmaster General of the statement made by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) I do not for one moment understand the hon. member for Peel as agitating for a reduction in the number of post offices in that county. I understand the remark to have a more general application, perhaps to the whole province. There may be some counties which have too many post offices while some may have too few. For example, the county of North York, the constituency represented by the Postmaster General, has secured recently a number of new post offices. But if the matter were equalized, probably Peel would have got one post office while North York might have got two. I take it that the remarks of the hon. member for Peel were intended to have general application, and not by any means—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose they were to apply to every place but Peel.

Mr. HENDERSON. They were to have a general application. As to my own county, the Postmaster General since he came into office has been very generous. We have had only one post office closed. And I may tell the Postmaster General now, that I think it was a mistake to close that post office, for the simple reason that it was on a mail route, the carrier passed it every day in the year, and could just as well supply that office as not. The only difference, I suppose, would be that the postmaster would be paid at the rate of about $10 a year for keeping the post office open. I am one who favours the extension of the postal system in the rural districts, and have advocated that time and again. I believe the reduction of postage from 3 cents to 2 cents is of far greater benefit to the large centres of population than it is to the rural districts, and that the rural districts, the farmers especially, have to make up the deficiency in the revenue of the postal system. For I do not expect ever to see the revenue of the Post Office Department meet the expenditure. I tell the Postmaster General plainly that I do not hope to see it. I think it would be a mistake to try to attain such an end. There is no more reason why the Postal Department should be made self-sustaining than there is why the Intercolonial Railway, which cost us $13,000,000 in five years more than the revenues accruing from it should be self-sustaining. There is no more reason why the post office should be self-sustaining than there is why the Department of Public Works should be self-sustaining. Who would think of making the St. Lawrence route pay ? We do not expect to get enough out of the canals to pay the interest on the expenditure we have made on that route. Why should we expect the Post Office Department, which interests every man, woman and child in the country, to be self-sustaining ? Why not give that department a more extended operation and bring it within the reach of every person, even if it costs more money, and let the deficit be charged to the general revenue of the country the same as the deficiency in other departments is made a general charge ? I believe the Postmaster General would find that system approved of by the country even if it did cause a larger deficit.

I find that in 1891 the number of post offices was 8,061, and in 1896 there were 9,103, an average yearly increase of 208 offices. The hon. gentleman was making some comparisons with his predecessors, and I desire to make this comparison with his predecessors, who established on an average 208 new post offices a year during the period of five years before going out of power. Now what did the hon. gentleman do ? He came into power and attempted to do what no Postmaster General in this country has done since Confederation, because every year since Confederation we have had a deficit in the Post Office Department, and I do not look for anything else, in the near future at any rate. The hon. gentleman, in his efforts to make revenue and expenditure meet, commenced the system of curtailing the number of offices he was opening up, and in some cases struck off offices that he found in existence, notwithstanding the great development we hear of, especially in new Ontario, where so many offices will be required. The hon. gentleman found 9,103 offices in existence when he came into power in 1896, and on the 1st of July, 1901, he has only 9,834 offices, or a yearly increase of 146, instead of 208 under his predecessor. I tell the hon. gentleman plainly that if he is going to make revenue meet expenditure simply by curtailing the service, I do not think he will meet with the approval of the people. What the people want is a better service, a more extended service, even if it costs more money. The revenue from the Post Office Department increased $630,000 under the old 3 cent rate, between 1891 and 1896. From 1896 to 1901 the revenue increased $625,000. The increase during the last five years was not as large by $5,000 as it was in the previous five years. Of course that may be owing to a reduction in the rate of postage. The deficit in the Post Office Department, I say, must be made up from the general revenues of the country. The farmers are called upon to contribute through customs duties and otherwise to make up that deficit, and they do not derive the same benefit pro rata from the reduced postage that the people do in large centres of population. Therefore, I say they ought to have a better postal accommodation accorded to them. Where there were two mails a week, they should have three where they have three mails a week give them a daily mail. Where new post offices are required by the new conditions of things mentioned by the hon. member for Peel, on account of the changed occupation of the people from being simply growers of grain to producers of small commodities that require to be sent daily to market, where the farmers want to be in daily touch with the great centres through their newspapers and letters —I say this new condition of things requires in many rural districts that there should be more post offices. I was very anxious a year ago to have a post office opened in my county, because the hon. gentleman had closed one, and I thought it was only fair that he should open another in a section of the country where the people largely grow small fruits, and they pleaded that as a reason why they should have better postal accommodation. I hope the hon. gentleman will reconsider that application; and do something for the rural section generally in order to compensate them for what they are contributing to pay postage for these business centres. I would be the last to complain about an increased deficit if it was caused by an increase in the number of post offices. There is another point mentioned by the hon. member for Leeds. I would like to ask the minister if he has ever made a calculation whether the government is losing money by carrying small packages of dry goods from large mercantile establishments in the cities. Take a parcel weighing four pounds, for instance, at one cent per four ounces, the postage would be 16 cents. Such a parcel sent from Toronto to Vancouver would cost 16 cents.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The rate on general merchandise is one cent an ounce. But there are plenty of other articles carried at the rate the hon. gentleman quotes.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was going to ask the hon. gentleman if he has ever made a calculation as to whether the department does not pay the railway more for carrying that parcel than he receives in stamps ? I am under the impression that the department is losing money, and if that is the case there would be no hardship whatever in doubling the rate on such parcels.

Mr. McLENNAN. I hope the Postmaster General will not apply the suggestion of the hon. member for Peel so far as the county of Inverness is concerned. It is a large farming county, and I am afraid the people of that county are not so altruistic as the people of the county of Peel are represented to be, who are willing to walk two or three miles to post a letter in order that one of their number may be adequately paid for keeping a post office. I would also remind the Postmaster General that the county of Inverness has special claims upon his attention; and I desire to tell him that, like my hon. friend from Victoria, I propose laying siege to him before the session is over in order to get more post offices. In answer to a question I asked in the House last year, he gave the very gratifying answer that $5,000 a year was saved in the postal service of Inverness since 1896, as compared with a like previous period. With that satisfactory record I hope the hon. gentleman will give the people of that county better postal accommodation.

Mr. TAYLOR. I see that a number of postmasters, besides being paid a salary, are allowed a rent allowance. Now what must be the revenue of the post office in that case ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Eight hundred dollars.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is no rent allowance allowed to any postmaster unless the revenue amount to $800 ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is the rule, I understand. I am not aware of any exception.

Mr. TAYLOR. Does that apply to branch post offices in the city ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman is asking me about a rent allowance made to postmasters. These sub-offices are not post offices in the full sense of the word.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are post offices that are given a rental allowance and as I am informed by the Postmaster General the revenue must amount to $800 a year before a rental allowance is made. I think that rule is not strictly adhered to in every particular.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think I have varied from it. If there are any exceptions they have been made before I took office. If my hon. friend will call my attention to any particular cases I will look into them.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Postmaster General made the statement a few minutes ago that the revenue from the cities amounted to only one-third of the gross revenue of the post office department and that the other two-thirds was derived from the towns, villages and rural constituencies. The argument of the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Blain) is that the reduced postage is not a benefit to the farmer. That is his argument and that is my argument, and the hon. Postmaster General corroborates that by saying that one-third of the revenue comes from the cities and two-thirds from the towns, villages and rural municipalities. Therefore, it would be fair to assume that one-third comes from the towns and villages and one-third from the rural population. If the post office was a self-sustaining institution, then, the rural municipalities would benefit pro rata with the merchants, manufacturers and bankers, but when it has a deficit of half a million, or a million, as it probably will have this year, who pays the taxation ? If the cities pay one-third of the revenue, if the towns and villages pay one-third and the rural municipalities pay one-third, the farmers pay three-fourths of the taxation and therefore they have to pay three-fourths of the deficit that will occur in the administration of the Post Office Department. The farmers, no matter whether they write a few letters or not and receive the slight abatement from the reduction of postage, have to pay more in proportion to make up the abatement they receive than the manufacturers and merchants of the country, so that while the post office is a losing concern, the farmers are the parties who are paying the largest proportion to make up that revenue.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would draw the attention of the committee to the fact that the hon. Postmaster General represents a little bit of a county and that in his riding he has thirty-nine post offices, whereas the great county of Peel, represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Blain) has only thirty-eight.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yet he wants to close them up.

Mr. BLAIN. No, he does not.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). He wants to close up unnecessary post offices in ridings like North York.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The riding of North York is a gerrymandered riding representing pieces of different counties and so inaccessible that it is necessary to supply a large amount of accommodaton.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I should say that as the hon. Postmaster General gets returned regularly it is a gerrymandered riding. I find that in the county of Inverness there 155 post offices. I wonder if that is a gerrymandered riding.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What is the length of the riding ?

Mr. McLENNAN. It is 140 miles long and 50 miles wide.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That is a small riding. I have the honour of representing a riding much larger in every way yet we have only one-third of the post offices and a people much more given to reading. What I rose to ask the hon. Postmaster General about is the matter to which I drew his attention a few days ago. It is the removal of a post office from the centre of populaion to one side of a settlement.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What is the name of it ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Head Lake.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The papers have been forwarded to the inspector but his report has not been received.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General to say whether he has ever made any calculation in regard to the cost of sending parcel letters long distances to ascertain whether the government really loses money or gains money in carrying mail matter of this kind, practically merchandise, because I do not think there would be any hardship if the government were actually losing money in the rate being doubled so as to compensate the department for the outlay.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At the present time statistics on this point are being gathered throughout the whole of the Dominion. It will be some time in June before the weighing is completed, but we are studying that question now. The parcel post rates are unsatisfactory in many respects. Some of the rates are arbitrarily fixed by Act of parliament, other rates are fixed by the Postmaster General and in short, the rates are to-day in an unsatisfactory condition.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the item is adopted I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General about the dismissal of two postmasters in my county. Mr. David Mitchell, of Jeddore, and Mr. Robert Kaulbach, of Middle Musquodoboit. Can he tell me if they were dismissed and if so for what reason ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will give the hon. gentleman the information to-morrow.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General, if, in this vote, provision has been made to give statutory increases to the third-class clerks and letter carriers who have not reached the maximum sum in their different classes.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The supplementaries will deal with that branch of the expenditure.

Mr. CLARKE. There is no provision in this vote ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There may be some small increases, but the report was not ready when these estimates were prepared, and the increases were not dealt with when the main estimates were sent over to council. But, these estimates contain increases in all cases in which the salaries are under $800. They are provided for in these estimates.

Mr. AVERY. Is it the intention of the hon. Postmaster General to raise the salaries of the postmasters in the rural districts where they are so poorly paid ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Avery) has missed a most valuable and instructive debate on that question. We have had it before the committee for some time and I would say that there is no policy in that direction at the present time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The complaint of these men is that the quantity of work under the new postal rate has increased, while their salaries have been diminished.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There has been no diminution.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The postmasters in my own county have told me the reverse. They say their salaries are paid to a certain extent by commission.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When the rate of postage was reduced, instructions were given that whatever salaries they were receiving before the reduction they should continue to receive.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then some of them who have spoken to me on the subject cannot understand it that way, because they tell me they get less than before, and have more work to do. I particularly wish to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General that in Halifax, one letter carrier has a salary of $336.77 a year; another, $375; another, $373; another, $331.96; and another $375. Is this salary which is set out in the public accounts the total amount they receive for the year? At what rate of pay do they enter the service?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. A letter carrier is entitled by law to receive the minimum of $360 a year on entering the service. The policy is to appoint letter carriers who have passed the examination but where there are none such, temporary letter carriers may be put on.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the yearly increase?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At present it is $30, and if a man enters the service at $360, it would take him eight years to attain the maximum, but under the Bill which I have submitted to parliament, a letter carrier on entering the service will remain for six months probationary at a salary of $1.25 a day, or $390 a year. At the end of six months he will be confirmed in his position if he is deserving and get $1.50 per day, or $460 a year; after two years he will get $1.75 a day, or about $540 a year, and at the end of the fourth year he will get $2 a day.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). In confirmation of what the hon. leader of the opposition has said, I desire to state that in my own constituency I have almost positive knowledge that the salaries paid to postmasters some years ago were a little in excess of the salaries they receive to-day. For what reason the salaries have been reduced I am at a loss to know.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is quite an error.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). I am delighted to hear that, but I think I can produce evidence to show that what I state is the fact, and if I do produce such evidence I shall expect to know from the Postmaster General the reason for the reduction.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Of course, salaries are sometimes reduced for different causes. If my hon. friend can produce a single instance where a postmaster's salary was reduced simply because of the reduction in the rates, the department will feel bound to recoup the amount. When the reduced postage Bill was going through, I stated that the government did not intend to reduce the salaries should the revenues decrease. I only know of one instance where a reduction took place contrary to that rule, and in that case the amount that was reduced was repaid.

Mr. HENDERSON. I quite well remember the statement made by the Postmaster General with regard to the salaries of country postmasters. But I desire to call his attention to the fact that the rule which he announces has not been adhered to. I can give him the name of the post office in the village of Acton in which I live as an example of that. I cannot suppose for one moment that the revenue of that post office has been reduced because that village has about 300 more people than it had in 1891; the surrounding country is equally well populated, and the manufacturing industries are as extensive now as they were then. I do not think the revenue from that post office has been reduced, but the salary of the postmaster has been reduced.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We will look into it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Thank you. If the Postmaster General will look into that one and find that I am correct, I will give him the name of another postmaster similarly situated, because I think the hon. gentleman intends to do what is fair with these postmasters.

Mr. CLARKE. Are the commissions paid now, the same as before?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). It has been well said that the country does not expect the post office to be a revenue producing department. It is, of all the departments of government, the one which comes nearest to the people. Those of us who represent outlying regions far removed from large cities—I may say that my own county of Bonaventure is 180 miles long—those of us who represent such constituencies know how much our electors appreciate the post office, and they certainly have reason to thank the present Postmaster General for the great improvements which he has made in the postal service. The Post Office Department is to a great extent an educational agency in so far as it contributes to the diffusion of literature and newspapers amongst the people. Though newspapers may in some cases be looked upon with no very great favour, yet we know how glad we are to see a newspaper when we are far removed from the centres of population. The Post Office Department has done very satisfactory work under the present minister, but I would like the hon. gentleman to consider whether it is not possible to have newspapers more cheaply distributed through the mails in the rural districts. The newspaper proprietors are at present weighed down by a very heavy postage tax, and I would ask the Postmaster General to give this subject his consideration during the recess, and to endeavour if possible to reduce the postage rate on newspapers. We all know that almost the only means of communication which the people who live far from large centres have with the outside world is through the newspapers. They are a great educational agency and their diffusion should be encouraged by all means possible; and the Post Office Department can do more towards that work than probably any other department of the government.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I would like to say a word about the mail service between the Magdalen Islands and the mainland. As you are well aware, comunication is closed there from the beginning of December till about the 15th of April. This year navigation was opened on the 7th of April, but that is quite unusual. Every year I am asked by my electors to obtain for them an extra mail between Pictou and the Magdalen Islands during the early part of April. The people of the Magdalen Islands, 5,000 or 6,000 in number, would like the Postmaster General to send one of the government steamers with the mails, because the merchants and the canners there are very anxious to begin their business early. This year I called the attention of the hon. Postmaster General to this matter, and he promised that he would consider it very seriously; and I hope that next year we shall have a steamer to take the mails to the Magdalen Islands in the early part of April. As I see the hon. Minister of Public Works in his seat, I may say that we have a cable system connecting the Magdalen Islands with the mainland at Meat Cove in Cape Breton. This is the only means of communication the people of the Magdalen Islands have during the winter, and it has been suggested that while navigation is closed the government should give them a telegraph mail rate, of say 10 cents and postage for 25 words between Magdalen Island and Meat Cove or North Sydney, to which place correspondents would post their matter. This cable does not pay, and it is not supposed to be a paying institution. It is used only for government business, and the ordinary rate is quite high. So I think it would be a good thing if the hon. Minister of Public Works, who is so progressive, would think of my poor electors, who cannot communicate during the winter months with their relatives on the mainland, and grant them a special telegraph mail rate.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Postmaster General, in answer to my inquiry a few moments ago as to where the rental allowances began, told me that the amount of revenue must be $800. If he will turn to his report in reference to Ontario, he will find that at the post office of Emsdale the receipts are $456, and the postmaster gets a salary of $295, and an allowance of $40 for fuel and rent. Then, at the very next post office, Enterprise, the receipts are $475, and the postmaster gets a salary of $210, and no allowance for fuel or rent, so that I fancy there is a political friend of the minister in that post office of the village of Newboro, the receipts are $654, and there is a salary of $330, a forward allowance of $30, and an allowance for fuel and rent of $40. In neither of these cases has the sum of $800 been reached. I find the same thing all through, in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick as well as in Ontario.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will say to the hon. gentleman that never once have I authorized a departure from the rule that has been laid down; and if my hon. friend now desires it, I will instruct the department to go through the list and in every case apply the rule. Many cases of this kind I found in existence and left there; but these are not advantages to our friends; they are advantages which our predecessors granted, and therefore it is reasonable to suppose they were not made to benefit the Liberal party. My hon. friend knows about Newboro. I know nothing about that, but I will look into it, and I will apply the rule generally if my hon. friend desires.

Mr. TAYLOR. I can assure the hon. gentleman that he will not apply it to Newboro, because the postmaster there is the secretary of the Reform Association.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How long has he been postmaster there?

Mr. TAYLOR. I have been member for the county for 20 years, and he was postmaster when I was first elected, and he is yet.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This allowance was made before I was Postmaster General.

Mr. TAYLOR. Although he was a most active partisan against me in every election, while the Conservative government was in power, and I could have had him displaced as an offensive partisan, yet I never interfered with him, because he was within his right. But the hon. gentleman has dismissed many postmasters in my county.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the hon. Postmaster General if Mr. LeSueur is still in the service?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He has been recommended for superannuation. The recommendation went to council some time ago.

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the hon. Postmaster General what age Mr. LeSueur has arrived at, and the reason for his superannuation?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He has arrived at the age of 60 years, and the reason for his superannuation is enfeebled health. He applied for supperannuation some two or three years ago, and I asked him to remain in the service, if possible, for a couple of years. He repeated his request, and finally last fall I yielded to it. He told me he was in reduced health, that he was suffering, I think, from disease of the heart, and required rest. I acceded to his request and made the recommendation.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand that Mr. LeSueur is still in the service ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is not in harness but has been recommended for superannuation.

Mr. BENNETT. What would be the amount of his superannuation allowance, and the salary of his successor ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He has been over forty years in the service and would be entitled to 70 per cent of his salary. Of course, the appointment of a successor could not go through until Mr. LeSueur is superannuated, but his successor will be Mr. William Smith, who has been recommended at the initial salary of $1,800, which is that of a chief clerk. Mr. LeSueur was appointed in February, 1856, and has therefore now been in office 46 years.

Mr. BENNETT. Was Mr. Smith a senior in the office, and in what grade ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He is a first-class clerk, and entered the service in 1878. He was appointed in 1876, but I am told that he was only appointed to the Ottawa inside service about 1883 or 1884.

Mr. BENNETT. He has every qualification I assume ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I recommended him because of his fitness.

Mr. BENNETT. Is he the gentleman who distinguished himself in the preparation of a book commonly known as the private letters of Sir Adolphe Caron ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Never heard of the book.

Mr. BENNETT. The Postmaster General's memory is singularly at fault. He must remember with what a flourish of trumpets he published at one time a blue-book consisting of private letters, which had been laid aside by Sir Adolphe Caron when he went out of office, and which comprised correspondence of a very private character. Might I ask the Postmaster General if he now remembers the book to which I refer?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I never heard of any book of the name mentioned by the hon. gentleman. I remember an official book published as an appendix to the Postmaster General's report, containing very useful information of a public character, which the public had a right to. Mr. Smith rendered useful assistance, as did other clerks, in the details of that work.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Smith was credited with having been the chief compiler of that book. In what year did Mr. Smith come to Ottawa ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am told in 1883.

Mr. BENNETT. Was he the senior in the office or were there other clerks, his seniors, available for the position ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Smith was recommended because of his special fitness. In the opinion of myself and the deputy, there was nobody in the department as well qualified. At present he is in Newfoundland, where he has been some months putting the postal service of that country into a satisfactory condition. As soon as he is relieved from that work and his appointment goes through Council here, he will be put in Mr. LeSueur's place.

Mr. COCHRANE. I wonder whether he is preparing another work down there.

Mr. KENDALL. I would like to endorse the remarks of my hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux). I happen to be somewhat acquainted with the Magdalen Islands, having lived among the people a certain time, and taken a considerable interest in them. these islands have been inhabited since about 140 years, and at present the population is about 6,000. During four months of the year these people are cut off from communication with the mainland. There is a telegraph system connecting with the island, which is owned by the government, but the rates are very high, and it seems to me that it would be only reasonable for the government to allow the people to send their messages at much lower rates than are charged at present. The government has to keep a full staff in constant employment, and it would not add materially to the expense of operating the line if messages were transmitted at lower rates.

Mr. LEMIEUX. It would bring revenue.

Mr. KENDALL. And no doubt it would add to the revenue. Another point I would like to make, is that the present steamship service from Pictou to the Magdalen Islands might be made much more valuable, if for a certain length of time the steamship was sent from North Sydney instead of from Prince Edward Island, particularly during the later part of March and April. I wish to endorse the remarks made by my hon. friend from Gaspé. If members of the cabinet could only visit the islands and see the conditions under which those people live, they would appreciate to some extent the difficulties from which they suffer, and I am sure would make provision as far as possible for better service.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to ask the hon. minister if the law does not require a person asking superannuation to make application in writing and have it accompanied by a certificate from two medical doctors that he is unable to perform his duties. Did Mr. LeSueur make an application in writing, and accompany it by the necessary medical certificate ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He made an application in writing, but when an officer is over sixty years of age, he may be retired for other reasons than ill health, and no medical certificate is required. I have given the reasons why he wants to be retired and he has made application in writing.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). In connection with the Magdalen Islands, I would ask the hon. minister to remember that those people are deprived during four months of the year of newspapers and letters. The splendid postal service which we enjoy is of no avail to them whatever during that period. There is a cable telegraph service, but the rates are almost prohibitive. The people of the islands have to endure great hardships. They have no railway facilities and are deprived of most of the benefits enjoyed by citizens in other parts of Canada, and surely it is not much to ask that they be given the privilege of using the cable at the lowest possible rate. If the Minister of Public Works will give the matter his attention, he will admit at once that what my hon. friend from Gaspé has asked for is most reasonable and should be granted, and it would tend to increase the revenue from that cable, which to-day is only a few hundred dollars. The cable is very seldom used because the rates are too high, but the government have to employ a staff to work the cable, and might as well reduce the rates and give the people the advantage. If the hon. minister will just consider that during four months of the year these people are without a newspaper or a letter, and are unable to use the government cable, which stretches across sixty miles of water, because of the high rates charged, several cents a word, he will see the justice of conceding to this request and enabling the poor fisherman to make some use of this means of communication with the world outside. At present the rate is prohibitive except to commercial people.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is not the first time that my hon. friend from Gaspé has called my attention to the peculiar and difficult position of the people in the Magdalen Islands. The great trouble is that our telegraph system is not completed. It is true we have a cable, but on the main land we have no lines. We have only a small piece of cable which has no connection with the outside world, except through the Western Union Telegraph Company and other companies. I have just now under consideration, and, I may add, under discussion with my colleagues, a plan to complete our telegraph system. It would not cost very much money for us to become master of the situation. We could connect our telegraph system with the cables at Canso and also with our present system on the North Shore. We have just completed that system to Belle Isle, our terminal point being St. Paul's Bay in the county of Charlevoix. For a small amount of money we could take the system up to Quebec, if we could not make satisfactory arrangements with the Great North-western Telegraph Company. I am very glad that the attention of the House has been called to the difficulties of the situation in the Magdalen Islands. While I am on my feet, I would like to ask the name of the postmaster in the riding of my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) who is secretary of the Liberal Association ? And when I learn his name, I shall be glad to suggest that he be dismissed because he has not been successful in defeating my hon. friend.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would like to direct the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that there are a great many people living away in the northern part of the Canadian North-west who receive a mail, some of them only once a year and many of them twice a year. The way these gentlemen keep up with the times is this—they take their daily papers, lay out their year's or half year's supply in order, and then read one paper each day. These are very intelligent and altogether a very fine class of people, who live in that remote region, and I would urge that they be considered. And I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) whether, after those cables and telegraph lines that he speaks of are constructed, they will be controlled by the Department of Public Works or by the Post Office Department ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That grave question will, no doubt, engage the attention of the best minds of the land.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that probably it will be arranged in this way—the cables and telegraphs will be in charge of the Minister of Public Works, while the Postmaster General will have charge of the Marconi system.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Marconi system is not bad, but, so far, we have not been able to establish it in such a satisfactory manner that we can quite understand one another across the floor of this House.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to inform the Postmaster General that the name of the postmaster at Newboro, to whom I referred, is Mr. Lewis. He is the postmaster there and the secretary of the Reform Association. Prior to the last election but one, there were appeals put in to strike names off the voters' list. I appeared to defend the parties who were appealed against. And when we came before the judge, I raised the point that the notice had to be sent by registered letter, and I wanted the registration receipts produced. The postmaster was called, and swore that the letters were registered. When asked where the receipts were, he said they were at the post office. The judge asked him to bring them. He went away, and, in about half an hour returned with a bundle of receipts. I asked the question: Have you changed the date of your post office stamp, written out the receipts and stamped them? And he had to admit that he had done so. That is the kind of postmaster they have at Newboro.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not responsible.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Is the hon. gentleman going to dismiss this man?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would like to have some information on the subject.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman will inquire of Judge Macdonald, of Brockville, he can get full particulars.

Mr. AVERY. I understood that the hon. gentleman was going to have this man dismissed because he had not succeeded in defeating the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor)?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I should attempt to interfere in Ontario, they would say it was a case of French domination.

Mr. CLARKE. The question of superannuation has been raised. Has Mr. David Matheson, who was one of the chief officials of the savings branch, been superannuated? And if so, what was his age when superannuated, and what allowance is he to receive?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is at least two or three years since Mr. Matheson was superannuated. He is an old officer of the department. He broke down in the service. As in the case of Mr. LeSueur, I did not accept his resignation at first, but gave him leave of absence—I think for six months—I hoped that he would recruit. He came back and resumed his duties, but the anxieties of so important an office bore too heavily upon him, and, he felt would shorten his days. He came to me and said that he must be superannuated so that he could live a quiet life. I do not remember his age, but I am pretty sure it exceeded sixty years. He was in the department for many years, having come in, I think, under Sir Oliver Mowatt before confederation.

Mr. BENNETT. I find, by the report that Mr. Matheson was born in 1840.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). He was an excellent officer and had only one fault—he was a Liberal.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the minister a list of superannuations that he intends to make in the Toronto post office on the 1st of July?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no such list.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the carriage of the mails between the post office and railway station at Barrie, the courier service I referred to, now done by tender or by appointed officials?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think it is done by tender.

Mr. BENNETT. I am informed that instead of being done as formerly by contract, there is now an appointed official for that purpose. My information is of such a nature that I think it is correct.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think the hon. gentleman has been misinformed.

Mr. BENNETT. Have any statutory additions been made in his department this year in the chief offices here?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These estimates provide for increases in all cases where the salaries are less than $800 a year. As to cases of salaries exceeding $800, all that we propose to recommend will appear in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BENNETT. Then everybody with a salary of less than $800 is to be advanced?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Only those who are deserving.

Mr. BENNETT. How many cases are there which he considers deserving?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not exercise any judgment upon that point at all. When the fiscal year is closed the superior officers will make their reports and the increases will depend on those reports.

Mr. BENNETT. How many clerks in the department will come under that system?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Every clerk in the service will come under that system, that is, his increase will depend upon the recommendation of the proper officers. There are nearly 2,000 of a staff, and many of them are at a maximum. All who are not at a maximum will be considered.

Mr. BLAIN. Are all mail carrying contracts let by tender now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Not all, but as a rule they are. There are some exceptions for small distances, but as a rule we try to live up to that system.

Mr. BLAIN. Do country postmasters receiving these small salaries give bonds to the department for the fulfilment of their duty, and what kind of bonds are given?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The lowest amount exacted is $200. A postmaster such as the hon. gentleman refers to would give security to the extent of $200.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did Mr. Matheson put in a written application ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. And furnished medical certificates ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mail service, $2,344,700.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the minister explain with reference to the matter of parcels, what arrangement he has made with railway companies for transmission from one part of Canada to another ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The railways are paid in some instances per track mile, in other cases per train mile, and there is a different rate according to whether it is a postal car or a baggage car service, and in accordance with the frequency of the service. Where there is an insignificant amount of mail matter there is a reduction in the rates. The rate varies from one cent to eight cents a mile per car mile. I do not remember the smallest rate per lineal mile, but, I think in the case between Ottawa and Smith's Falls we pay about $320 a year per mile of railway. There are cases on the Grand Trunk Railway where we pay $160 a mile.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Could the hon. gentleman say how the revenue derived from parcels of merchandise compares with the amount paid to railway companies or other common carriers for the transmission ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You mean the gross amount the department derives from the total amount of parcels.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I mean, is that particular class of business paying, and if not, what is the loss ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As I said some time ago, weights are now being taken throughout Canada, and I am told by the accountant, will not be completed until the month of June. We are ascertaining the exact weight of parcel post matter being carried, and that will form a basis upon which to make a calculation. We are ascertaining the exact weights of mails of all classes, that is, of letters, newspapers and other things. These data may enable us to form some estimate as to whether we are carrying merchandise parcels at a loss or a profit.

Mr. KEMP. Speaking of the $320 per mile per annum between Ottawa and Smith's Falls—presuming that is the approximate amount—you are paying exactly the same amount as between Ottawa and Vancouver. That kind of matter has increased very rapidly in the last few years, until it is said the post office has come into competition with other carriers or express companies. Is it not fair to assume that in a country like this, so long and narrow, this system will have to be changed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. What does my hon. friend suggest ?

Mr. KEMP. I was going to say that in a country like Great Britain where the population is dense, whether the distance is short or long, it does not make so much difference. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether that feature has been considered, and if it has been considered, even before the report to which he refers is complete, had he anything in his mind as to how it might be remedied ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am quite cognizant of the fact that our distances are vast but I would like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kemp) to give me a suggestion. I have had a great many questions put to me but I would like to put some questions to other people. What would my hon. friend propose ? My mind is in a receptive condition. Has he a policy to propose, because if he has, I shall welcome it. I would be thankful for it.

Mr. KEMP. I quite appreciate the position of the hon. Postmaster General in regard to this question. If I were in his position and had to deal with the finances of the country I might put such questions as he does, but, I never expect to be in that position. I cannot formulate a policy for the hon. gentleman this evening. I do not feel called upon to do it. I have thought of it the same as he has. I think he will have to solve that problem, because I think the problem will have to be solved. I dare say there may be shipped out of certain places in this country daily a carload of parcel post merchandise. If the government is paying too much for the delivery of parcel post merchandise at great distances from the centres from which it is shipped, is it fair that that should continue ? It is a fair thing to deliver letters and postal cards but when you are coming into competition with freight carriers and express companies it seems to me that some readjustment should take place. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he knows whether merchandise is carried in the United States at as low a rate as it is carried here. If it is marked 'sample post' it is carried at the rate of one cent for four ounces, while if it is merchandise it costs a cent an ounce. A large amount is carried at the rate of a cent for four ounces.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think the post office gets the profitable end of the traffic. I fancy that if merchants can despatch their parcels more cheaply for a short distance by express they will do so and give us the non-paying business. That is one of the questions that is causing this inquiry to be made. In answer to the question of my hon. friend I would say that the best rate given to the public in the United States is two ounces to be carried for one cent. In Canada we have a lower rate than that, carrying four ounces for one cent. The Bill which I have before parliament purposes to deal with that subject.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would like to suggest to the hon. Postmaster General that he should instruct his officers at Toronto to weigh during one week all the parcels that come from the two large departmental stores, that of the Simpson Company and that of the T. Eaton Company, and then count up the revenue that he receives for carrying these parcels, because I am informed that there is practically a carload going out daily from these two stores and being distributed all over the country from Halifax to Vancouver.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We are having a more extended investigation than for a week.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well then, take it for a month ; instruct your officers to weigh the whole output of the goods coming from these stores and which ought to go by express.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I do not wish to interfere with the hon. Postmaster General's desire to get a revenue out of that class of service, but I wish to say that there are a great many people who live in the North-west Territories, as the hon. gentleman for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) knows, as well as in Ontario, long distances from the railway stations, and it is a very great convenience for these people who cannot go to town more than once or twice a year to be able to send for samples and get parcels back by mail. As long as the rate is not too low this traffic should not be interfered with. I know that the hon. member for Selkirk will agree with me when I say that it is a great benefit to the people living in remote parts of the North-west Territories to receive mail matter in that way.

Mr. McCREARY. It is a question to consider as to how far this privilege should be curtailed. I have been on the Gilbert Plains and I am familiar with the custom there. The Timothy Eaton catalogue comes once a year and the people order their goods from that catalogue. They tell me they can order goods at from 25 to 50 per cent less than the price at which they could buy them in Dauphin. Consequently, they get the balance of the people in Canada to pay the postage on their goods from Timothy Eaton's store to Gilbert Plains and if they get these goods so much cheaper I do not know that there is any great wrong in that. I think the poor pioneer on the prairies ought to make a little out of the people of Canada in a legitimate way as long as he can. If the pioneer who is carving out a home for himself on these plains and prairies can get his goods a little cheaper in that way and if the people have to pay for it through the postal system I do not think he should be prevented from doing so. It will work out the other way when he comes to ship his hogs and wheat down to the seaports in the east. In regard to the postal department the hon. Postmaster General seems to have adopted a picayune policy. He is a little bit niggardly. In my opinion, at the present time, the department should not be considered only from a revenue point of view. It should be considered from a public point of view and it should be made easy for people to get their mail. In regard to the eastern provinces very few farmers occupy more than 50 or 100 acres of land and they get their mail along the old and regular lines. In the North-west, where the people have 320 acre farms, they live a mile or two apart and they have great difficulty in getting their mail. One of the greatest drawbacks to immigration in that western country is the want of post offices. I know people in the Swan river district and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hughes) knows this to be a fact, who have been there for a year or more and who are from thirty-five to fifty miles distant from a post office. I know a gentleman named Mr. Richard Lyons, who lives thirty-five miles from Swan river. That man came from the north of Ireland, he lived in that district for nearly two years and he told me that he thought he would go back to Ireland because he could not get his mail.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Was he 'agin' the government ?

Mr. McCREARY. No, he was a good Orange Conservative. He said : If I cannot get my mail oftener than once in six months it is pretty nearly time to move away from this country. There are other places where they feel this same drawback, and I do think that in our western countries the hon. Postmaster General should exercise more generosity than he does in the east. I believe that if the postal service runs behind there it should be charged up to immigration or provided for in some other way so that the people would have a sufficient number of post offices. I hope the hon. Postmaster General will look into this question.

Mr. BENNETT. I would like to call the hon. minister's attention to the fact that I see that at page 145 of the civil service list the name of Thomas Robinson Garrett as a third-class clerk in the Toronto district, being among the railway mail clerks. He was apparently born on the 15th September, 1845. May I ask the hon. minister if the date is correct as to his age ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not know what his age is, but I assume the record is correct.

Mr. BENNETT. Assuming that the date is correct, the hon. Postmaster General has informed us that on account of age and infirmity he retired Mr. LeSueur and Mr. Matheson, whose superannuation allowance will amount to about $2,000 a year each. The Postmaster General retires a gentleman who is 61 years old, and he appoints another who is 55 years. The life of a railway mail clerk, under ordinary circumstances, is not very long, because of his arduous work, and does the Postmaster General think that it is in the interest of the country to appoint a mail clerk at such an age ? Where does Mr. Garrett come from ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. He comes from East Northumberland. He was appointed in 1900, and is therefore not entitled to superannuation.

Mr. BENNETT. Is it the policy of the government to appoint men at such an age.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. BENNETT. The point arises, that if a man has a retiring allowance it is easier to dispense with his services, because it may be a case of hardship to throw him out on the street if he has no superannuation. Have any other appointments been made of men 55 years of age.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot recall the ages of all these we have appointed, but I can say that in the Bill which I have submitted I ask parliament to fix the age limit at 30 years.

Mr. BENNETT. The Postmaster General is not alone in inconsistency, because a few years ago the government introduced the Bill to retire judges when they reached 70 years, and a judge was recently appointed at the age of 71 years. Is George G. Anderson now a permanent railway mail clerk?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will give the information to-morrow.

Mr. CLARKE. On a former occasion the Postmaster General promised that he would consider the question of reducing the postage rate on drop letters in cities. Has the hon. gentleman given that matter consideration ? It is a fact which must be well known to the Postmaster General and his officers that a large number of local letters are distributed by leading concerns in cities by messengers employed for that purpose at a lower rate than the 2 cents that the post office charges. That would seem to prove that the drop letter rate is altogether too high.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The 2 cent letter rate is only in force in cities where free delivery exists, and elsewhere people have to walk to the post office to get their letters. To charge a 1-cent rate would be giving an unfair advantage to people who live in cities.

Mr. CLARKE. In what respect ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They would be getting their letters at a less rate than would be charged our friend the farmer who has to walk to the post office. I do not think that the people who live outside of the cities would be very anxious to adopt the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman. The free delivery is very expensive, and those who get the benefit of it might be expected to pay the extra expense, either in the way of an extra rate or by contribution of a bulk sum.

Mr. CLARKE. The Postmaster General forgets that postal cards and circulars now require only a 1-cent postage, and are delivered in cities just as letters and newspapers are. My contention is that a 2-cent rate is too much for this service, and that is proven by the fact that large legal and mercantile firms can employ messengers to distribute their letters and circulars at a less rate than 2 cents each. In view of that fact, it is not an unreasonable request to ask the minister to take this matter into consideration.

Mr. McCREARY. The hon. member for West Toronto has raised a very important question with reference to the postage on newspapers. What revenue does the Postmaster General get to-day from postage on newspapers, and what does their circulation cost him ? We get some newspapers in the western countries that are all right, but we also get a lot of terrible Tory sheets that are not worth paying for. They have a bad effect on our western people and some limit should be put upon their circulation by an increased postage rate.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the Postmaster General made any change in the carrying of the mails from Round Hill, King's county, N.B., to Armstrong Corner, Queen's county ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The officers will make a note of the question, and I will give the information to-morrow.

Mr. BENNETT. As to the rent paid to the postmaster at Midland, I wish to state that it is not at all adequate for the accommodation afforded. My recollection is that the rent is only $70 a year, and it is only fair that that rent should be increased. The post office is in a building erected by the postmaster and has an equipment for the service equal to that of many of the public buildings that are owned by the government and which have cost the country a very large sum. I think there is a space for the general public who come to transact post office business about 40 feet by 20 feet. These facts should be taken into consideration in the rental paid.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This report shows that it is $160.

Mr. BENNETT. I am pleased to see that that is the amount. I understood that it was much less than that. However, even at $160, when we consider the cost of maintaining other places where there are caretakers, and having regard to the expense for fuel, lighting and rental, I am pleased to see that the Postmaster General is prepared to advance it still further.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is a matter which I want the Postmaster General to be prepared to deal with at some time before his estimates are disposed of. It is a matter that was brought to the attention of the House, I think, two years ago. That is, the refusal of the government to grant petitions of right to a number of persons who claim that their contracts were cancelled without authority in law by the Postmaster General. They have been applying for petitions of right for two years or more, and I understood from the Postmaster General two years ago that there was to be a report made in writing by him to the Minister of Justice, and that was to be laid on the Table of the House, or the House was to be informed in regard to it. Up to the present time the House has not been informed in regard to it, and I understand that these people have not been able to get the slightest satisfaction except such as may be derived from a letter from the Department of Justice stating that as the matter had been discussed by the late Minister of Justice with the Postmaster General, the present Minister of Justice was not prepared to open it up again. I am prepared to say that there is a perfectly fair and arguable case for submission to the courts on the facts in my possession, and it seems to me a most unfair and tyrannical thing that this matter should be postponed from time to time, and that these people should not be allowed to assert their rights, if they have any, in the courts. The refusal to grant a petition of right simply amounts to this, that the Postmaster General constitutes himself the judge as to whether these people have any arguable case or not. These people have been advised by counsel of high standing that they have a proper case against the government for argument and decision in the courts; and under these circumstances what possible reason can there be for refusing them a petition of right? I was very much surprised indeed at the action of my hon. friend the Postmaster General in regard to the matter. If he has made a mistake in cancelling these contracts, when he had not the legal right to do so, surely, if he is a fair-minded man, he would be the very first person who would be anxious that they should have redress in the courts. I do not think that is a proposition which my hon. friend would controvert. If he has not made a mistake, if he is right in the position he has assumed, what possible risk can there be to the government or detriment to the public interest in allowing the men to go into court and obtain the satisfaction of finding out that they are wrong? In doing so they would subject themselves to the costs which every man has to pay who takes into court a claim that is unfounded. I hope the Postmaster General will be prepared to deal with this matter, which I will discuss at greater length, going into the merits, if necessary, when the supplementary estimates come before us. At present, I cannot possibly see why claims, having a prima facie standing at least, should be kept so long out of court, and why these men should be so long debarred from having their rights adjudicated upon by an independent tribunal.

Mr. GERMAN. I do not often agree with the leader of the opposition, but in this proposition I certainly do agree with him absolutely. The theory that the King can do no wrong is in this democratic country absolutely exploded. The Crown, as represented by the government of the country, can do wrong just as any private individual can do wrong, and there should be no petition of right at all. An individual having a claim against the government should have a right to bring an action in court against the government just the same as he would against a private individual. If he fails in his action, he is mulcted in his costs; if the government succeed, they get their costs; and there is no reason on earth that I can see why an individual should not have the same right against the government that he has against anybody else. I would like to hear some reasonable argument against that proposition. I am prepared to support the proposition laid down by the leader of the opposition now or at any other time. There should not be, and will not be within a very few years, the problem of a petition of right in this country.

Mr. McCREARY. Do the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) endorse the statements made by the hon. member for Welland?

Mr. CLARKE. Certainly. Surely every hon. member of this House will endorse the position he takes, that if a man has a just claim he ought to be heard.

Some resolutions reported.

MESSAGE FROM THE GOVERNOR GENERAL—FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) delivered a message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the message as follows:

MINTO.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, further supplementary estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1902, and in accordance with the provisions of 'The British North America Act, 1867,' the Governor General recommends these estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,
Ottawa, 30th April, 1902.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the message of His Excellency together with the estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, May 1, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 148) respecting the Montreal Bridge Company.—Mr. Bickerdike.

LAND TITLES ACT, 1894.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 149) to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894. He said: This Bill deals with the registration of properties in the North-west Territories, and is intended to remove certain small technical difficulties in the working of the Act. The first clause is to make clear the meaning of section 87. There has already been one amendment but there appears to be a difference of opinion between some members of the legal profession and the judiciary in regard to the effect of the clause. It appears to have the effect as drafted, of preventing the owner himself with dealing with property which he has authorized an attorney to deal with, while the power of attorney is still registered. This will make it clear that the owner can deal with the property as well as the person appointed by power of attorney. Clause 2 is to save the owner of land unnecessary expense in obtaining a certificate of title in lieu of one which has been destroyed. It does away with the necessity of advertising.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER.

QUESTION.

MONTREAL HARBOUR BOARD — APPOINTMENT OF MR. W. E. DORAN.

Mr. MONK asked:

1. Is the government aware that there is and has been for some time past a vacancy on the Montreal Harbour Board?
2. What is the reason of the delay in making the board complete by filling said vacancy?
3. Has the position been offered to any one?
4. When will said nomination be made?

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The government is aware that there was a vacancy, but that vacancy exists no longer. It has been filled by the appointment of Mr. W. E. Doran.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER moved:

That, commencing with Monday next, and until the end of the session, the House shall meet on that day, and on each subsequent sitting day, at eleven (11) o'clock in the morning; that, in addition to the usual intermission at six (6) o'clock, p.m., there shall be also an intermission every day from one (1) to three (3) o'clock, p.m., and that government Orders shall have precedence at all such sittings. Members having still the right to ask questions on Mondays, Wednesdays and Thursdays.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know whether the right hon. gentleman has come to any conclusion about the Bill which was introduced by the hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal, (Mr. Roddick), I know that Dr. Roddick is very anxious to have this Bill discussed in this House, and if possible to have it go to the Senate. If this motion carries I do not see that there will be any opportunity to do that. There is another matter; what time will this leave for private Bills?

The PRIME MINISTER. It was my intention to leave Monday for private Bills, and I suppose we can understand it in that way, that on Monday we shall have private Bills, then questions, and then government orders.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose that if the House understands the motion in that way, it will not be necessary to modify it. There is another matter which I should like to mention to the right hon. gentleman, and that is that I do not think there has been any meeting of the Committee on Public Accounts during the present week, owing to the absence of the chairman. While the engagements of the chairman elsewhere are no doubt entitled to great respect, it would be a simple matter, if he is obliged to leave Ottawa on any other business, to arrange with some other member to act in his absence.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland). I may say that the chairman before leaving spoke to me, saying that he had consulted some of the leading members of the Public Accounts Committee, and they had told him that they did not wish a meeting of the committee this week, but that if they did, they would notify us. So that it is not on account of his absence that there has been no meeting.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. He is entirely mistaken.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am only stating what the chairman told me. He mentioned especially that he had asked the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Barker) if he wanted a meeting of the committee this week, and that hon. gentleman had told him that he did not, but that if he should want a meeting, he would notify us.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I can only say that when I was asked what meetings we would want this week, the memorandum I sent back stated that we would want a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee. I do not know whether the chairman received that message. I do not think you can arrange such matters by negotiation without consulting every member of the Committee on Public Accounts. I know that one member spoke to me on the subject who did very much desire to have a meeting. When the chairman of the Public Accounts Committee feels compelled to leave Ottawa for the space of a week or thereabouts, an arrangement should be made for some member to act in his place. I had this same complaint to make last session, and what I said then, I repeat now, that there is no excuse for meetings of a committee being put off on account of the absence of the chairman. I do not object to the chairman going away if he has business to take him away, but I do object to his paralyzing by his absence the meetings of the committee by neglecting the very simple precaution of having some one act as chairman in his absence. I am not finding fault with the chairman so much as with the system, and I will continue to find fault with it so long as it continues.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I fear that I may be somewhat to blame in this matter. I quite agree with the leader of the opposition, that there is no reason whatever why there should not be meetings of the committee in the absence of the chairman; and in this case there must have been some misunderstanding between some of the members of the committee and the clerk, because when the chairman left he mentioned to me personally that an intimation would be made to the clerk if any of the members wanted a meeting, and he asked me if I would be kind enough to attend to it for him, and see that a meeting was called. The naming of a chairman to preside at the meetings is a matter simply in the hands of the committee; that has often occurred. In this case if there has not been a meeting, it is certainly because of some misunderstanding, and is not the fault of the chairman. If any member intimates to the clerk of the committee that he wants a meeting, the committee will be called at once.

Mr. C. F. McISAAC (Antigonish). The chairman of the Public Accounts Committee requested me to state on his behalf, in case this question was brought up in the House, that before he left he had gone to the hon. member for Hamilton and told him that he would be absent for a few days, but that if he wished a meeting to be called this week, a meeting would be called, and another member would be appointed to act as chairman in his place; but the hon. member for Hamilton expressly told him that he did not wish a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee to be called this week; and that is why a meeting has not been called.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). If this motion passes, it will be impossible for the committee to meet unless it has permission to meet during the sittings of the House. I think the motion should be followed by another to allow all committees to meet during the sittings of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will attend to that to-morrow.

Mr. U. WILSON (Lennox). I wish to call attention to the fact that it has been arranged that the binder twine men shall come before the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization on Wednesday to give evidence, and unless it has permission to meet during the sittings of the House, it will be unable to hold a meeting.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). I have been waiting a whole week to finish up a little matter before the Public Accounts Committee. I am informed that the chairman is away in western Ontario stumping in the interest of the party of which he is an ardent supporter, and consequently we can have no meeting this week. It is very unfortunate that the chairman did not stay here and attend to his duties.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). It is not fair to the chairman to have it put in that way, that no meeting of the committee could be held because of the absence of the chairman. If members are obliged to leave, the work of the House must go on. The hon. member for Guysborough distinctly told me before he left that he understood that there was no desire on the part of hon. members opposite to have a meeting this week.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What the Minister of Finance says simply shows the truth of the observation I made, that some one should be designated to act in the absence of the chairman to whom the members of the committee could go. My hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Kemp) was probably away when the chairman left. While certain members of this side of the House might say they did not desire a meeting, some others might desire a meeting. Would it not be a simple matter to arrange that if the chairman is absent, a deputy chairman shall be appointed to act in his place? It is not likely both will be away, and if they should be, we can have a third one. Let us have, in matters of this kind, the simplest and most elementary business methods, such as are employed in all corporations throughout the country, and avoid little disputes and differences that would disgrace the proceedings of any business corporation. I dislike to have to speak about this thing so often, and I trust that the Minister of Finance, or whoever is responsible, will see that we need not have occasion to make similar complaints again.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There would have been no difficulty if the hon. member for Toronto had been good enough to intimate his wish to have a meeting of the committee. There would have been means for calling it together, as there is no lack of machinery.

Mr. BROCK. The chairman had left the city.

Mr. W. SCOTT (West Assiniboia). I do not wish to offer opposition to the motion of the Prime Minister, but I think this is a proper time to draw the attention of the House to the almost absolute lack of opportunity for dealing with legislation introduced by private members. I have a Bill standing in my name on public orders, which it is quite evident I shall not be able to proceed with. For reasons beyond my control, it was impossible for me to be present at the beginning of the session, but I took the very earliest opportunity, after my arrival, to introduce a Bill for the purpose of remedying what is a very serious grievance in the territories. The object of the Bill is to compel railway companies to construct proper fire guards and thus prevent the starting of prairie fires, which every year do a great amount of damage. I do not believe that I missed any occasion when there seemed to be reasonable hope that the Bill would be reached, but so far it has not been reached, and cannot now be reached. Were there any reason to hope that a delay of the present motion would result in my Bill being reached, I would be disposed to ask that the motion be not passed now, but even were we to set two months with a private members' day each week, the Bill would not likely be reached. It seems to me that those who control the business of this House show considerable lack of interest in the legislation proposed by private members. On government days the sessions of the House last as late as 1.30 a.m., and on the average last to midnight or 12.30 o'clock, but on private members' days, the House is usually adjourned at an early hour. On the last private members' day the House sat until 1 a.m., and as regards that day there is no complaint, but on the previous private members' day it adjourned at 11 p.m., 9,45 p.m., 9.25 and 10.55. I am a very young member of this House and hesitate to offer suggestions as to the conduct of members, but it does seem to me that some amendments of the rule would be advantageous to the conduct of business in the public interest. I think that public Bills and orders should be put on an equal footing with notices of motion. For instance on one private members day, notices of motion might have precedence, and on the next public Bills and orders. At present experience shows that it is impossible for public Bills and orders to be reached. To show that the grievance I complain of is not an insignificant one, I might mention a few of the prairie fires started from railway trains during last year——

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not permitted, on a motion such as that before the House, to discuss a Bill which is on the Order paper.

Mr. SCOTT. I have no intention of discussing the Bill, but may I not be allowed to state some reasons why the motion before the House should or should not pass.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman may refer to the fact that he has a very important Bill on the Order paper, but he should not proceed to discuss the merits of the Bill itself.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is quite competent for hon. members to ventilate any grievance on the motion to go into supply, and I think my hon. friend would do better to wait for that motion.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not intend speaking on the Bill which stands in my name on the Order paper, but am simply endeavouring to urge some reasons which may appeal to hon. members as reasons why this House should, or perhaps should not, be held in session two or three weeks longer and this particular motion should or perhaps should not be adopted at present.

Mr. SPEAKER. The suggestion made by the hon. the Minister of the Interior is the one which the hon. gentleman should accept under the circumstances. It would be much more regular for him to deal with the grievance he complains of when the motion is made to go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me that the hon. gentleman is also perfectly in order in showing the grounds why the motion before the House should not pass, until the government has made provision for the discussion of a particular measure.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). In the earlier days of this session, we had several private members' days when the House had adjourned in the afternoon because we had nothing to do. It seems to me that a great deal of time has been taken up with private members' days when the legislation proposed by the private members was not ready. Now other members than the gentlemen who have proposed these measures have their rights. If we keep the House sitting until October, somebody will be late with a Bill and will want more time. There are members who are anxious to get home, and there is no reason why we should be delayed all summer because some members have not their Bills before the House.

Mr. WM. ROCHE (Marquette). The First Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has not given the leader of the opposition an answer as to the disposition he proposed to make of the Bill introduced by the hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Roddick). That is a very important measure, and one that has been before the House for three successive sessions. It went through Committee of the Whole three or four weeks ago, and it was at the Prime Minister's own suggestion that it was laid over, with the express stipulation that it would be proceeded with this session. I know that the hon. member who introduced the Bill is very anxious to have it proceeded with. It affects the medical profession throughout the whole country, and also the public generally, and it would be too bad to have it laid over. If he cannot extend the same courtesy to the hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal, as he did to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster), with his Cattle Guard Bill, it would probably be better to have another private members' day.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think the House will be disposed to have another private members' day merely for one Bill. I informed the hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal, that I would endeavour to give him a day for the discusison of his Bill. I cannot say anything more at the present time. I will investigate further, and, if the business of the House permits, I will see to it that a day is allowed when this Bill can be taken up.

Mr. SPROULE. Let the government take the Bill up and put it through.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not intend to take the Bill up and make it a government measure, but I am not averse to giving a day for the consideration of it. I cannot say, however, at the present time, whether that can be done. I think I am voicing the opinion of hon. members on both sides when I say that we should have prorogation at an early day. I think the members from Ontario particularly are interested in an early prorogation, and, perhaps, I am consulting their wishes better by insisting on this motion. I shall consult with my hon. friend (Mr. Roddick), and if the business of the House permits it, I shall endeavour to meet his wishes and the wishes of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) as well.

PROPOSED NEW LOAN.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House to-morrow go into committee to consider the following resolution :

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that in addition to the sums now remaining unborrowed and negotiable of the loans authorized by parliament by any Act heretofore passed, the Governor in Council be authorized to raise by way of loan :—

(a.) Such sum or sums of money, not to exceed in the whole, the sum of fifteen million dollars, as may be required for the purpose of paying the floating indebtedness of Canada, and of meeting any expenditure authorized by the parliament of Canada ;—and

(b.) Such sum or sums of money as may be required from time to time, over and above any available sinking funds, to pay and discharge the funded debt of Canada, or any portion thereof, as the same matures and becomes payable, either in England or in Canada ;

Such sums to be raised in accordance with and under the provisions of that portion of chapter 29 of the Revised Statutes of Canada relating to the public debt and the raising of loans authorized by parliament, and the sums so raised to form part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada ; the rate of interest to be paid on any such loans not to exceed three and one-half per cent per annum.

He said : His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the terms of the resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the House.

Motion agreed to.

CLAIM OF J. & C. NOBLE.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). In connection with a certain amount placed in the estimates to pay what is known as the claim of J. & C. Noble—page 9 of the supplementary estimates—I would ask the government if they will be pleased to lay on the Table of the House all the papers in connection with the submission to the court, the evidence and all the documents. It will be too late now to move for the papers, and if they are laid on the Table, it may perhaps expedite the discussion of the items.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Yes.

IMMIGRATION ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 112) to amend the Immigration Act.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). When the House was in committee on this Bill reference was made to statements emanating from the United States immigration service as well as to satements made by the chief officer of that service in the Dominion of Canada. Some very emphatic contradictions were given to the statements which that officer made as to the character of the immigration that is coming into Canada. The United States officer is, apparently, prepared to stand by his statements. It is a matter of vital public interest that our people should know exactly what kind of immigrants are being sent over to this country by the agents employed in Great Britain and on the continent of Europe, or are being brought here by the steamship companies whose vessels reach our ports. I will take the liberty of reading a letter which the United States special immigration inspector, at Montreal, Mr. Watchorn, has sent to my hon. friend from Lennox (Mr. Wilson). It is dated, as hon. members will observe, just two days ago :

United States Immigrant Service.
Office of Special Immigrant Inspector.
Port of Montreal, Canada,
233 St. Antoine Street,
April 29, 1902.

Uriah Wilson, Esq.,
Member of Parliament,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—I desire to thank you for six copies of 'House of Commons Debates,' containing your speech on immigration, delivered on the 17th instant. I note that the editions are still marked 'unrevised,' and I would like to state, that if the revised edition contains any material alterations, I should be very pleased to receive the revised edition of this debate.

I have noted with considerable surprise, and not a little amusement, the statements made by the hon. Minister for the Interior, and I venture to suggest that the investigation he made at the hospitals here, was not likely to afford him the information he thought to obtain, because the people diseased as immigrants usually are, are almost invariably enumerated amongst 'outdoor patients,' so that the mere fact that they were not to be found stretched out on hospital cots, &c., is not a serious answer to the statement that they are here in large numbers, and are afflicted as stated to you, when you were here.

During the month ending to-morrow, the rejections at this office alone, for favus and trachoma, will not fall short of sixty persons. At the very moment I am writing to you, there are more than one hundred Greeks, Syrians, and Italians, at this office, seeking permits to enter the United States. Every one of them was refused passage to the United States, by bona fide lines sailing to United States ports from Europe, and the line that carried them to Canada, refused to sell them tickets, until they had changed their destinations from United States points to points in Canada.

I mention this, in order that you may observe how creditable a thing the hon. minister has done, in introducing the measure alluded to in his speech, contained in the above mentioned debate, and how important a thing it is, that it should be passed as speedily as is consistent with the usages of your honourable parliament.

If I am not asking too much, I would esteem it a favour if you send me a draft of the bill in question, in order that I may observe whether it is calculated to accomplish all that is desirable in this connection.

Thanking you again for the copies of Debates, and for your letter, I am,

Very sincerely yours,
ROBERT WATCHORN,
Special Immigrant Inspector.

I think the attention of the minister should be directed to the specific statements that this gentleman makes as to the people who are being brought here by the steamship lines, to whom bonuses are paid by the government, people who, this gentleman says, would positively not be admitted into the United States. Certainly, if these statements are correct, they are not desirable immigrants. This gentleman says :

At the very moment I am writing to you, there are more than 100 Greeks, Syrians and Italians at this office, seeking permits to enter the United States. Every one of them was refused passage to the United States by bona fide lines sailing to United States ports from Europe, and the lines that carried them to Canada refused to sell them tickets until they had changed their destinations from United States points to points in Canada.

The letter is not written, as is evident, in any unfriendly or hostile spirit. The gentleman who writes the letter approves and endorses the action of the minister in preparing this Bill and he urges its speedy passage. But surely the passage of this Bill is not sufficient. There must be more definite instructions given to the immigration agents of Canada on the continent of Europe and in the old land ; there must be a stricter supervision exercised over the immigrants before they go on ship board on the other side of the Atlantic so that this country may not continue to be, as has been asserted again and again, a dumping ground, or a place from which immigrants who could not go from European points direct into the United States may scheme to obtain entrance into that country. That condition of things will no be a benefit to Canada if it is permitted to continue. I direct the attention of the House and of the minister to this letter in order that he may be apprised of the statements which are being made by officers who have been sent here by the United States government, who have endeavoured so far as possible to implement the inspection which is made by our own officers, and to prevent undesirable immigrants going into the United States through the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the place as well as the date of that letter ?

Mr. CLARKE. The heading of the letter is 'United States Immigration Service, Office of the Special Immigrant Inspector, port of Montreal, Canada, 233 St. Antoine Street, April 29, 1902.' This is addressed to Uriah Wilson, member of parliament, Ottawa, Ontario. I direct the attention of the minister to these statements in order that he may take whatever steps are necessary to put a stop to this class of immigrants being brought here by steamship companies and left in the country until such times as they may be able, if possible, to get through Canada into the United States.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). When the statements were published that the result of our present system was to leave in Canada a considerable number of persons who started from their place of abode with the intention of going to the United States, and were rejected by the United States inspectors, by reason of disease or otherwise, I did cause an inquiry to be made ; and the result of the inquiry was that out of 25,000 persons who had passed through Canada in a year, there were, of those who had been rejected by the United States commissioner, some 39 people in Canada. Of these 39 people 21 or 23, I am not sure which number, consisted of Germans who had been rejected on account of some trifling complaint in the children of the family. Our medical inspectors, after examining them, permitted them to go to the North-west, being satisfied that these complaints were not of a serious character, and that there was no just reason to compel them to be sent back. That leaves altogether, according to that inquiry, the difference between 39 and 21, or 18 persons. That is the result of the inquiry made by the officers of my department. When the statement was made that there was a large number of persons in the hospitals of Montreal who had been rejected by the immigration commissioners, I caused an inquiry to be made there, and I read the result of the inquiry to the House a few days ago, which showed that according to these reports from the superintendents of the hospitals, there was no foundation for the statement that had been made. I should be surprised to learn that when an inquiry of that kind had been officially made of the superintendents of hospitals in the city of Montreal, these gentlemen would deliberately send misleading reports to the Department of the Interior, leaving out a class of patients which they would know if the facts were as stated in this letter, were the very class of patients in regard to whom the inquiry was made. I say I should be surprised to learn that gentlemen occupying the position of medical superintendents of these hospitals would have made such misleading reports. It is, I venture to say, improbable, although not impossible. Now the fact that I have brought this Bill before the House is, I think, sufficient guarantee that the government realize the importance of the subject, and that we propose, as I said before, to take every possible care and precaution for the purpose of carrying into effect the views the hon. gentleman has expressed as being desirable to carry into effect in the general interest of the country. As to the statement made by Mr. Watchorn, the United States inspector, having heard the statement only now, I cannot say further than this, that recognizing that it is essential that the statement which he has made should be thoroughly, exactly and strictly inquired into, I shall take immediate steps to have that done, and I shall apprise the House of the result in the fullest possible way.

Mr. CLARKE. I would ask the minister, when he is giving us the report as to the accuracy or inaccuracy of these statements, to bring down a copy of the instructions he issued to his officials to make the inquiry from the superintendents of the hospitals in Montreal as to the serious allegations that were made.

Mr. SPROULE. In discussing this subject the other day I made reference to the fact that a good many of these immigrants were affected with dangerous or contagious diseases injurious to the human family. The minister rather denied my statement, and said there were, it is true, a few instances of such people coming in where they might have trifling ailments, but they were comparatively few in number. What I had reference to at the time was a kind of sore eyes, what medical men call granular opthalmia. I was credibly informed that a large number of them were affected by it. I have in my hand at the present time the 'Canadian Journal of Medicine and Surgery,' printed in Toronto, the number for November, 1901, and I see there an article by Dr. W. Gordon M. Byers, assistant oculist and aurist of the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal. Speaking of this ailment, he says :

> Two summers ago there came to our clinic at the Royal Victoria Hospital, a young girl from Glengarry county, Ontario, affected with the most intense condition of granular lids I have ever seen in Canada. The conjunctures were covered with heaped masses of succulent granulations, and the cornese showed a condition of highly vascularized pannus.

Then he says later :

> A year later, while away on my holidays, I was asked to see a young boy in the county of Leeds, Ontario, for a chronic disease of the eyes. The appearance was at once suggestive, and on everting the lids I found them covered with typical trachoma folliciles. Here too, in spite of the fact that the parents had put themselves to pains, they had been unable to ascertain the real nature of the condition of their boy's eyes, and at no time had they been advised to adopt even the most elementary precautions against the spread of the disease.

Since these patients came under my notice I have thought not a little of the trachoma problem as it touches our country, and I am persuaded through information and investigation that there is a fairly large number of unrecognized and untreated cases of granular ophthalmia scattered here and there throughout the Dominion. Thus, for instance, I have been informed by medical friends that the disease is comparatively common in certain districts of Manitoba, and even at our hospital the territory from which our trachomatous patients were drawn was extremely broad, our clinics having been visited by patients from the counties of Glengarry (two centres), Stormont, Dundas, Leeds (two centres), Renfrew, Lennox, and Carleton in Ontario; and Brome (two centres), St. Hyacinthe, Missisquoi, Huntingdon and Ottawa in Quebec.

To those acquainted with granular opthalmia, the years of distressing annoyance to be passed by those affected, and the debarment from ordinary work, let alone the higher pursuits and pleasures of life, it must be a matter of apprehension that cases such as I have spoken of should exist unrecognized and unisolated to act as centres of infection throughout the country.

Then he goes on to say:

It still remains for me, however, to speak of one strong prophylactic measure. There is no doubt whatever that the number of our trachomatous patients is being yearly added to by immigrants to this country. Fifteen per cent of the cases of granular opthalmia at the Royal Victoria Hospital Out-Patient Clinic, during the past six years, was of foreign extraction, and among our patients with this condition were Russian and German Jews, and a resident each from England, Ireland, China, Italy and Syria. And I scarcely think that the above percentage properly represents the facts, as the people most likely to suffer from this trouble are settling largely in our western districts. As an example of what I say, I may mention that I had it on good authority that the cases of sore eyes among the Doukhobors were probably trachomatous in nature.

A trachomatous patient is a highly undesirable, for the most part a useless, and a dangerous citizen, and I see no reason why these individuals—or others for that matter suffering from certain diseases different from that under discussion—should be admitted to our country where only strong, active people are needed, no matter how slow the tide of emigration may be.

It was in reference to such patients that I spoke and when our attention was drawn to the fact by the American agent that large numbers of these immigrants had been refused admission to the United States, that they were in Canada only waiting an opportunity to cross the line and that our government made no effort either to prevent them coming, or to send them back, I thought it was proper to call the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior to it and to draw the attention of the country to it as well.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to say that so far as the statement of the American inspector is concerned possibly the communication to the hon. minister's officers in Montreal and the hospital authorities might have been so worded as not to include out door patients and a misapprehension might have occurred in that way. This gentleman seems to speak from actual knowledge and I should hardly suppose that he would make any misrepresentation of the facts and I am sure the hospital authorities would not misrepresent the facts at all. I quite agree with the hon. minister that this is a matter for investigation. I think the facts must present themselves to him in a somewhat more serious light now than they did the other day when he spoke upon this subject. This inspector says that during the month of April alone sixty persons were rejected by him in Montreal. That would amount to a very considerable number in the course of a year. I think, as he is speaking from a knowledge of the facts which took place in his own office, his statements may be a little more accurate than the reports made to the hon. gentleman in respect to the persons who still remain in Canada and who have been rejected by the United States officers. Assuming that sixty persons were rejected in Montreal by the American authorities would it not be difficult some months afterwards to trace these people and find out how many of them were in Canada? I have no doubt the reports which the hon. minister has received are perfectly bona fide, but it would seem to me that the statement of a man who has had actual experience of these facts every day in his office might be relied upon a little more closely than investigations made afterwards in regard to the number of these persons who still remain in Canada.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will agree with me that the only kind of a report that could settle the question at issue and give the House that satisfactory information which it ought to have is a report which will set out the names of the persons that are alleged by this gentleman to have been rejected and the grounds upon which they were rejected, with an exact statement as to what the facts are in each case. Then we could look at the report and ascertain what the facts are. So far as the remarks of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) are concerned, I desire to say that the class of diseases which is referred to in the communication which he has read is a class of diseases with which we have not hitherto had, legally, power to deal, and it is that class of diseases with which we desire to deal under the Act which I have before the House at the present time.

Bill reported; read the third time, and passed.

CHINESE CAPITATION TAX.

House in committee on the following proposed resolution :

That it is expedient to provide that, after July 1st, 1902, one-half of the net proceeds of all taxes paid by Chinese immigrants shall, at the end of every fiscal year, be paid to the province wherein they were collected.—Minister of Trade and Commerce.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) The object of this resolution is simply to deal with the percentage at present paid by the Dominion to the various provinces. At present the provinces receive one-fourth of the capitation tax. We have been very strongly urged by hon. gentlemen from British Columbia and the government have thought fit to consent to their request to make this percentage one-half instead of one-quarter. That is the sole object of the resolution.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the percentage fixed on any particular basis ? What are the grounds for fixing the percentage ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Members from British Columbia have complained that their province is put to certain extraordinary expenditures more or less on account of Chinese immigration. It is a matter which has been more or less a burning question for a good while between these gentlemen and the various governments, ourselves and our predecessors. When we increase the capitation tax to $100 a very strong request is made to us, that, at least, if we would not increase the capitation tax to $500 we would give British Columbia and the other provinces a little larger slice of the capitation tax and after very fully considering the matter we have agreed to do it. I do not know that there is anything else to be said in regard to the matter.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there any legislation to be introduced this session respecting this Chinese question ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. No.

Mr. BOYD. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) what the intention of the government is in regard to those immigrants who come into other provinces ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. All fare alike.

Mr. BOYD. These Chinamen land in British Columbia and they are to be found in almost every town and village in Manitoba and the North-west Territories taking the places that might be filled by our own people. I wish to know if we are to receive a share of this benefit that is being extended to British Columbia, or is it just the port where these immigrants land that is to receive the benefit.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The tax on those who land in British Columbia will be divided equally between the province and the Dominion. The tax on those who come to the other provinces will likewise be divided, but the number is comparatively speaking very small.

Mr. BOYD. But what is the intention of the government regarding those who afterwards flow into the other provinces ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We cannot trace them after they once land.

Mr. BOYD. It is the place where they land that receives the benefit ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes.

Mr. BOYD. The government should take the suggestion I made into consideration, because these people are to be found in every village and town in Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That brings up the question of what the pecuniary loss to the province is, upon which this Bill is based.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The vast majority of these Chinamen are residents in British Columbia. There are no doubt a few scattered here and there throughout the various provinces, but I should say that probably nineteen-twentieths of them are in British Columbia. The number elsewhere would be almost infinitesimal by comparison.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—INCREASED CAPITAL.

Bill (No. 116) to amend the provision with respect to tolls of chapter 1 of the statutes of 1881 respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway (the Minister of Justice), read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman has already stated that a measure in these terms has been submitted to the committee.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). By agreement.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it a usual provision to insert, that the new stock shall not be sold at less than par ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The company agrees to it. It is done in order that we may have the full benefit by way of expenditure of the total amount of authorized capital.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it a new principle in legislation ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is not a new principle in legislation, but it is confirming an agreement entered into practically between the company and the government.

Mr. CLARKE. Was that agreement made contingent on their being permitted to issue the stock ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is made contingent on the Order in Council authorizing the issue.

Mr. CLARKE. I presume that principle can be applied to other legislation ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is a matter for the House to determine.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understood from the government that an Order in Council had been passed by which the cost of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway was to be submitted to the courts for determination. Has the minister got the Order in Council ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, I will hand it to the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is a different submission from what the minister stated when the Bill was introduced. This is as to the effect or interpretation of section 20 of the company's charter of incorporation, as found in 44 Victoria, chapter 1, schedule A. The statement was made to the House that the actual cost of the construction of the road was to be determined by this submission in order to find out whether the 10 per cent earnings of the road had been effected or not upon the actual cost of construction. I see now that what is submitted to the courts is only an interpretation of the clause.

Bill reported ; read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 114) to amend the Exchequer Court Act (the Minister of Justice).

PETITION OF RIGHT ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 135) to amend the Petition of Right Act (the Minister of Justice), read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. CLARKE.

On section 1,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the Minister of Justice to state on what principle the Crown proceeds in withholding or granting fiats for petitions of right. I have had my attention directed to a large number of petitions which were submitted for fiats about two years ago. They relate to contracts between the Crown and persons who carried the mails. The Crown undertook to cancel the contracts under some supposed power contained in the contracts. Counsel have advised the persons interested that the Crown had no right under the circumstances to cancel those contracts, and that they have good cause for claiming such damages against the Crown as would arise by reason of its having broken the contracts. These matters have been standing about two years. I brought them to the attention of the Postmaster General last evening, but, as the Minister of Justice as well as the Postmaster General is concerned in matters of this kind, I would like to ask him for more information on the subject. I have looked into the cases somewhat hurriedly; but it seemed to me that there was a fair case for the consideration of the courts in respect to a large number of claims, I think thirty or forty—at all events, over twenty; and these people have been held up, so far as any proceedings are concerned, for nearly three years. It appears to me that where there is an arguable case, there should be no difficulty placed in its way, and I think the House might very well hear from the Minister of Justice at the present time what the policy of the Crown is in regard to the matter. I have looked into the rule in England, and I do not see anything that would justify the government in keeping these people at bay so long. It seems to me that if there is any tendency at all in this matter, it is to allow the subject the freest possible right to proceed against the Crown. The Postmaster General may think that these claims are groundless, and that he was perfectly justified in cancelling the contracts; but the real point for the consideration of the House and the country is not what the Postmaster General thinks about it, but what the courts will think about it when these claims are put before them. It amounts to a denial of justice to these people—because their claims cannot be regarded as frivolous—that they should be held up in this way for a period of nearly three years.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My attention has not been directed, so far as I can recollect, to the cases which the hon. leader of the opposition refers to, and therefore, I would not like to say anything at the present time in reference to them. If they have been before the department for three years, they have probably been disposed of by my predecessor. But the hon. leader of the opposition, I presume, not only wants to know what the reasons may be which necessitated the long delay of the government in granting fiats in the cases mentioned, but a statement of the principles which the present Minister of Justice intends to apply in all cases where applications are made for fiats for petitions of right. My hon. friend will understand immediately that that is a question of policy, and therefore, I should not like to state what my personal views are on the subject until such time as I have an opportunity to have those views confirmed by the government. I should not like to say that I would grant a fiat if an arguable case were submitted, if that were my view, because before I state my view, I should like to put it in writing and have the government approve of it, and then place it before the House not merely as my personal view, but the view of the government. I will therefore ask the committee to rise, and when I bring down a statement with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway matter, I will also make a statement on the point to which my hon. friend has referred; because I quite understand that it is important that the House should have some authoritative statement of the views of the government on that subject.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think what the hon. gentleman has just said is perfectly fair and correct. The rule, so far as I have been able to gather it in placing petitions of right before the provincial government and before this government, is this, that when the claim on its face is not frivolous, or when a prima facie claim has been made out, or when there is nothing improper in the claim, the Minister of Justice recommends that a fiat do issue and that a petition be lodged in the court. I think that is the proper rule, which has always been followed in England. My learned and hon. friend the Minister of Justice knows that is the view laid down in Clode on petitions of right. I do not agree with the minister when he says that he does not give his own advice to the House, but would rather submit his views to the government to see whether the views of his colleagues coincide with his own. It seems to me in a matter of this kind that his colleagues should be to a great extent swayed by the Minister of Justice, because after all the thing to be decided is not a question of policy. The question to be decided is not a question of policy. The question is not whether, in the interest of such and such a party, it would be right to grant or refuse the petition, but, whether or not, the petition bears on its face, that stamp of bona fides, which should recommend it to the Minister of Justice as the legal adviser of the government. I have every confidence in the judgment of my hon. friend, and I know that if it were left to him alone, whenever I or anybody else had a bona fide claim before the government, the petition would be granted, but if my hon. friend submits the question to the administration it will be hard for him to get a unanimous opinion. If this is the rule which is to be followed, in many instances those members of the cabinet who do not belong to the legal fraternity and cannot see with the same pair of eyes as my hon. friend, would likely set up some other reasons than reasons of law against the granting of the petition. I submit that when he comes down again with this Bill, he should give his own views, as Minister of Justice, as to the course he will follow, and the rule he will carry out when petitions of right are lodged with the government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I recollect hearing a very eminent authority in the British House of Commons, say, on a question somewhat analagous to this, that the government could have no opinion except the opinion of the law officers of the Crown. My hon. friend holds a position which corresponds with that of the law officers of the Crown in England, and, as has been well pointed out by my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Casgrain), this is not so much a question of policy, in the ordinary acceptation of the term, as a question of what is right, from the standpoint of justice, with regard to these petitions. I entirely concur in the view that in respect of matters of this kind the government should adopt the opinion of the Minister of Justice, and, I should also like to point out that, the provision in this Bill making it necessary, when security for costs is ordered, that somebody should give security, goes in the direction of granting the fiat with more liberality than in the past. The only reason why so called frivolous petitions were not allowed in the past was that it was not in the public interest to allow a claim to go to litigation for which there was no foundation and public moneys should not be wasted in contesting such claims; but, by the very proper Bill introduced by the Minister of Justice, providing that in certain cases, where it seems expedient to the Governor in Council, security for costs should be given, the fiat should be issued, as a matter of course, on that condition being complied with.

I have no objection to passing the Bill, as I think it is a proper one, but it is understood we are to have a statement from the Minister of Justice on the subject later in the session.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My view, of course, is that of the government, and my hon. friend has correctly expressed my own view with respect to this question, when he says that this Bill was not introduced merely for the purpose of adding something to the legislation already in existence. The object I have in view is to widen the gate, so far as I can, consistent with my duty to the Crown.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When the Bill was first introduced, the argument advanced was that it would assimilate the law in Canada to the law in England, where the fiat issues as a matter of right. I understood the Minister of Justice, when introducing this Bill, to say that the fiat would, upon some fixed principle, issue as a matter of right. I think that that is the correct principle. It should not be left to the Governor in Council or the Minister of Justice to say whether a fiat should issue or not, but there should be some fixed rule or principle on which it would issue as a matter of course. In England it is issued almost always as a matter of course, and when the law was made in Canada the same as that in England, that was done on the understanding that unless there was something very objectionable in the petition for a fiat, the fiat should issue as a matter of course. I understood from the remarks of the Minister of Justice, when he introduced this Bill, that it was intended to facilitate the granting of fiats. Why should not a man have an action against the Crown just the same as against an individual ? It may be necessary for him to furnish security for costs in the interests of the community, which he might not be required to do in a case against an individual, but, upon his so doing, I contend that the fiat should issue as a matter of course, upon a praecipe being filed, just as in the case of an ordinary writ.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE IN THE YUKON.

Bill (No. 137) to amend chapter 41 of the statutes of 1901, respecting the Administration of Justice in the Yukon Territory, (the Minister of Justice), read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). The intention is to appoint a third judge of the High Court who shall perform the duties of the magistrate at Dawson. The living allowance now of a police magistrate is $3,000 a year. The intention, as my hon. friend will remember from the amounts in the estimates, is to increase the salary to $4,000 and reduce the living allowance to $1,800.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

JUDGES OF PROVINCIAL COURTS.

Bill (No. 138) to amend the Act respecting the judges of Provincial Courts (the Minister of Justice) was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. CLARKE. What salaries are these judges receiving now ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). There are only two of them now, and they receive $5,000 each. The intention is to add a third at a salary of $5,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN. May I ask why this section only applies to judges of the County Courts ? Does not my hon. friend think that some amendment should be made to the law which would apply also to the judges of the Superior Courts ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If my hon. friend will look at the law respecting provincial judges he will find that the judges of the High Court or of the Superior Court, as we in Quebec call it, are entitled, if they become incapacitated after their appointment, to retire at any time upon an allowance equal to two-thirds of the salary, and, at the end of fifteen years they are entitled absolutely to retire on that allowance, whether they are able to perform their duties or not. But the position with respect to County Court judges in Ontario—and elsewhere where they have County Court judges —is such that if a judge has served less than ten years and becomes unable to perform his duties he is obliged to retire and get absolutely nothing. It is to meet one case—it is unnecessary to mention names—that exists in the province of Ontario that this Bill is introduced, a case of special hardship. We think it unfair, that if a judge has served this country during a certain number of years and becomes incapacitated through illness before he has served ten years, he should receive nothing.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I was not explicit enough in the question I put. I should have made myself clearer. The purport of my question is really this : My hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) knows that there have been and are still some judges who have rendered good service to the country and who have reached an age when they should be able to retire, not merely with a pension but with an allowance equal to the salary they are now receiving. I need not mention names, but my hon. friend, I am sure, knows as well as I do that there are judges of the highest courts of this Dominion and also judges of the Superior Courts of the different provinces who, after serving their country for many years have arrived at an age when it is impossible for them to give the time and assiduity to the fulfilment of their duties which they would wish to give. These gentlemen would willingly retire if it were possible for them to do so. But, because of the smallness of the salary they have received for a number of years—I am not at all in sympathy with those who think salaries of the judges are sufficient—they are not able to retire, but go on in the performance of duties more onerous than those which men in other positions generally undertake at the ages to which they have arrived. I would ask the hon. minister if he does not think that at this stage it would be good policy and further the administration of justice to amend the statute so as to provide that when judges have arrived at an age at which men in other professions generally retire, they would be able to retire with a full pension equal to the salary they are now receiving. I am sure my hon. friend is in sympathy with the opinion I have now expressed. I hope that if he is not able at this moment to do what I recommend, in a short time he will be able to see his way to carry out this policy.

Mr. WADE. I concur in the remarks which have fallen from the lips of the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain). I know that what he says with regard to the position of a number of Superior Court judges is absolutely correct, and what he says applies more to our province than to Ontario, because our Superior Court judges receive only $4,000 a year, while a Superior Court judge in Ontario receives $5,000 from the Dominion and $1,000 a year from the province, a total of $6,000 a year. Now when a judge is in receipt of only $4,000 a year, it is impossible for him to retire under the present provision of the statute. I think the salaries of the judges are too small. Certainly, in the province of Nova Scotia they are much too small. The duties of judges in Nova Scotia are the same and the amount of work is the same as that coming before judges in Ontario. These judges have the disposal of matters of life, liberty and property, and I do not think their salaries should be as low as they are. A judge may become incapacitated, yet he is not in a position to take advantage of the Act as it stands because of the shortness of his term of service. I hope the government will take into consideration this proposed change and will place the judges in a position of absolute independence so that they may know that after they have served a certain time, if they are compelled to retire, they will have a proper retiring allowance, and I think that amount should be equal to their salary.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The hon. gentlemen who have preceded me are in the happy position of being private members and so are free to speak their minds. If I were a private member I would like to say that I am in favour, and always have been in favour, of giving proper consideration to the judges of the land. I think the salaries ought to be increased; I think also that when a judge has served his country for a period of years—say twenty or twenty-five years—and if he has reached an advanced age as some of our judges have, he should be allowed to retire on full pay. I would have absolutely no sympathy with those who think that our judges now are paid, beyond the value of the services they render. I think the judiciary of this country are entitled to every possible consideration at our hands, and we ought to promote in every way their interests, and especially to provide for their declining years. I know that it is a maxim of the Bar that we live well and die poor. That is a principle with us. Probably there are a good many in this House who are not in sympathy with what I have said; but as I said a moment ago, when speaking as a private member, one can speak more freely his own mind.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think my hon. friend is the second member of the government who has said what he would do if he were a private member. It might be interesting to consider what would happen if all the members of the government were private members. Apparently some very notable reforms would take place in the affairs of this country if that happy consummation could some day be achieved. There is a great deal in what has been said—I am speaking entirely as a private member in this regard—there is a great deal in what has been said in regard to the salaries of the judges. They are very inadequate, because they were fixed years ago at a time when the cost of living was very much less than it is now. In addition to that general increased cost of living, there is a necessity for the judge to keep up a certain appearance, he has to do entertaining, and all these things make the cost of living for a judge very great. I know the judges in our own province have found the salary which is provided for them very inadequate indeed. I should be glad to know that this matter will engage the attention of my hon. friend.

Mr. COCHRANE. Not being a lawyer, I do not understand this question perhaps as well as the hon. gentlemen who have been speaking. But there is one thing to which I wish to draw the attention of the Hon. Minister of Justice, and which I think is very pertinent in discussing this question. I would like to ask him—I know he has not been very long in his position—if he has any trouble to find gentlemen in the profession who are willing to take a position of judge when it is offered to them? I have every respect for the judges, but I do not understand why, if they are such a long-suffering community, there are so many in the legal profession who are willing to take a judgeship and to go through all the sufferings and to perform the onerous duties which that position entails upon them—and even to live on starvation allowance. Now, I want to see the judges properly paid, but I do not believe in holding out inducements to them or encouraging them to live extravagantly, to live beyond their means, and then, after a few years, to retire them on an allowance sufficient to keep them in extravagance all their days. I am satisfied in my own mind that there are a great many gentlemen on the bench who receive a great deal more money than they could earn in the practice of their profession.

Although they should be enabled to live respectably and all that sort of thing, there should be no encouragement held out to a judge or any other person to live extravagantly. They should be taught to use economy and save up money for their declining years, the same as I have to do, as well as the people of this country generally.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My experience has been of very short duration, but during the few months that I have been at the head of the Department of Justice, I can say for the information of my hon. friend that I have already found considerable difficulty in finding men to take some positions of judges. The fact is that during my short career as Minister of Justice I have been face to face with that difficulty twice. I have found it impossible, for instance, to get a judge from the High Court to take a position in the province of Ontario on the Court of Appeals. I could give other cases, but it is not necessary to do so at the present time. I simply mention this fact as an answer to the criticism of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. Cochrane). There are dozens of lawyers in this country who in one year make four times the salary of the judges; I could mention dozens of them.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I am not quite sure that I understand this section. Does it mean that from the passing of this Act every county court judge may retire at any time and receive a pension ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If a county court judge retires before he has served ten years because of physical infirmity, illness of any kind, he is entitled to a pension. But if a judge is retired for cause, he does not receive a pension.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the statement of the Minister of Justice that some lawyers earn four times as much in one year as judges are paid, is an evidence that the judges are not sufficiently paid; it may be an evidence that the lawyers are paid too high.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Look at the salaries of some bank cashiers and presidents of railway companies.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister remarked that he was unable to get a judge to take some position. I may remind him, that is possibly owing to the fact that he was making his selection from amongst Reform lawyers. When the Reform party are in power the Reform lawyers have a cinch on the situation, and can make a great deal more money by remaining off the bench and working through party affiliations.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. If the hon. gentleman was acquainted with the extravagant administration of the Department of Justice previous to 1896, he would not make that remark.

Mr. CLARKE. Do I understand that this is a reintroduction of the superannuation system and its application to the judges?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It provides that the judges of county courts who have not served ten years on the bench and who become physically incapable of performing their duties may receive a pension.

Mr. CLARKE. It is optional ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, if they become physically incapacitated they may receive a pension; otherwise, if this Bill is not passed, and they have not served ten years, they will not receive anything.

Mr. CLARKE. Why not apply this principle to men in other situations in the public service who get much smaller salaries, and who have less opportunity to put by anything from their meagre incomes ? Why not provide that men getting $600, $800, $1,000, $1,200, and who are compelled to retire on account of physical disability before having served ten years, should likewise receive some consideration ? Surely if judges who receive $4,000, $5,000, $6,000 a year should be looked after, and I think they should, it is equally incumbent on the government, on the same principle of justice, to look after those in receipt of much smaller salaries who spend their lives in the public service, or who have to retire incapacitated before they have served ten or twelve years. If this superannuation system is to be applied to judges, and I think it should, I submit respectfully that it ought to apply to other departments of the public service.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not want it understood that I am opposing the Bill from any remarks I have made. I think the principle is sound.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Although I represent a rural constituency, I am not at all afraid to advocate an increase of salary for the judges. I live in the city of Montreal, where I practice, and I may say that out of twenty or twenty-five bank cashiers, all but two or three receive greater salaries than our judges. The judges in the city of Montreal receive $5,000 a year, and I know at least ten or twelve cashiers, some of them in small banks, who get from $10,000 to $15,000 a year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. A cashier has to work.

Mr. LEMIEUX. I think a judge is as much entitled to a good salary as a bank cashier. I have known a chief justice, I will not mention his name, who to my knowledge refused to accept invitations because his salary would not enable him to reciprocate. That is the position in which some of our judges are in Montreal.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Mr. Chairman, I cannot allow some of the remarks that have been made to pass without a protest on my part. I am not speaking because I think I will ever be a judge. The time seems to be pretty far off if I were ever likely to be called to such an exalted honour. I am speaking because I think that some information should be given to the House on this question at this time. This is a question which has been brought up several times. It was brought up by me two years ago and again last year, and it seemed then to be the sense and the opinion of this House that the judges of this country were not paid high enough salaries. I do not mean to say that is always the case in respect to judges living in rural towns, for instance, as in the province of Quebec, who get the same salaries as the judges living in cities. In the city of Montreal the judges receive $5,000 a year. I would ask any hon. gentleman who knows anything about the cost of living in Montreal if it is possible for a man to occupy the position of a judge and maintain his position on such a salary. He has naturally, from the position which he occupies to reciprocate many kindnesses, to appear in society, to live up to the position he occupies, and I would ask hon. gentlemen if it is possible for him to do so on a salary of $5,000 a year? Being a citizen of Montreal, living in that city, I venture to say that it is absolutely impossible for a judge to live upon that salary if he wants, as we say in French, to do honour to the position which he occupies. When these salaries were fixed a few years ago the cost of living was not anything like it is to-day. The cost of living has increased by at least 30 per cent since these salaries were fixed by statute 15 or 20 years ago. At that time it was not thought that the salaries were too high; it was thought that the judges were simply getting what they were entitled to. Let me call the attention of the committee to the fact that judges, unlike the managers of large railways companies, or of banks, as my hon. friend for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) said a moment ago, are not only dealing with the fortunes of the people but they are also dealing with the life and liberty of the subject in this country. The duties which they are called upon to fulfil are the most difficult, the most onerous and the most responsible duties that any man could fulfil, and this has been recognized all over the world. I will not mention the salaries paid to judges in England, which run from $25,000 to $35,000 and $45,000 a year, but take the salaries paid to judges in the British colonies, in Australia, in New Zealand and in the Cape of Good Hope, I venture to say there is not one colony where the judges are paid such low salaries as they are paid in Canada. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that it is becoming a danger to the public at large to have the salaries of judges fixed at the amount at which they are fixed to-day. I shall not call the attention of the committee to any particular incident, but let me just suppose this case for example; let me suppose the case of a man who, from misfortune, or for some other reason, is in debt. Suppose he is a judge upon the bench, suppose he has a case before him, which happens every day in the city of Montreal, involving $50,000 or $100,000 or $200,000 or $500,000; then, you see the danger there is that this man, being a poor man, being in debt, should be called upon to deal with such large interests. It is not only in the interest of the judges themselves, but it is in the interest of the public as well that proper salaries should be paid. It is not because I think I will curry any favour with them that I am constantly advocating an increase in their salaries, but it is because I think it is in the interest of the administration of justice in this country, and in the interest of litigants that the paltry sum which the judges are receiving should be increased, and that decent salaries should be paid them.

Mr. BENNETT. I think that in the province of Ontario the complaint is not that the Superior Court judges are paid too much, but rather that there are too many judges in the country tumbling one over the other. When hon. gentlemen now on the government side of the House were in opposition, there was one plea they always put forward and that was the plea of economy, and if there was any one question on which the government of that day were attacked it was the question of judges and their salaries. The records of this House will show that when these hon. gentlemen were on the left of the Speaker they assailed from time to time the appointment of county court judges as being unnecessary and superfluous in the province of Ontario. What does the record show? Here we find, in the province of Ontario, that there are 45 senior county court judges and 23 junior county court judges, making in all 68 county court judges in that province. I say it is simply a burlesque and travesty that in the province of Ontario there are county court judges who are simply sitting around and waiting for something to do. We remember the abuse that was heaped upon the Conservative administration in times past, but, hon. gentlemen opposite have gone on doing the thing which they condemned. Take, for instance, the county of Ontario. In the county of Ontario a little time ago there was a vacancy in the junior judgeship. The government, in obedience to the demands of party friends, appointed a junior judge in that county. What do the records show there? I will not state from memory the exact number of cases that were dealt with in that county, but I am bound to say that there were less than six cases tried in the county of Ontario in one year by the two judges.

Mr. CLARKE. What are the salaries which they receive ?

Mr. BENNETT. I suppose they get the regular salaries—the senior judge, $2,600, and the junior judge, $2,000. The country is not paying enough salary to the Superior Court judges of the province of Ontario. I will not make any invidious distinctions. There are some gentlemen who occupy places on the Superior Court bench of Ontario, the value of whose services is placed at $7,000, while it is a well known fact that these gentlemen, if they were active in their profession, would earn from $15,000 to $20,000 a year. At the same time, let me tell the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) that there are gentlemen not only in the county courts, but on the Superior Court bench as well, who, I fear would fall very far short of the salaries which they are receiving if they were standing shoulder to shoulder in the ranks and practicing their profession. Therefore, in Ontario, I think any lawyer who is not afraid to speak out his mind, and I am speaking out my mind, knowing that election protests are far ahead—of course saying that in a jocular way—will agree with me that we should endeavour to have fewer Superior Court judges and that we should increase the salary of these judges to $10,000 a year. Then, you will bring the best men in the profession to the bench. Take Mr. Aylesworth, of Toronto, for instance; he is a gentleman who would not look at a position worth $7,000 a year. I assume that Mr. Aylesworth makes three times that, and probably more. This business of the county court judges is simply a farce. They are falling over one another in the province of Ontario, and yet they are paid the salaries which I have mentioned. I know one gentleman who is receiving annually $2,600 as county court judge. In addition he will have the fees commuted to him from the Surrogate Court, the fees from arbitrations, revision of the voter's lists and other matters. That gentleman's salary will run up to $3,500 a year, and I will be bound to say that in days past, when he was practicing at the bar, he never saw $1,500 a year, and would not have seen it had he continued to practice at the bar. Some means should be taken by the government, in so far as county court judges are concerned, to see that there shall be fewer county court judges and fewer Superior Court judges, particularly in the province of Ontario. I do not speak for any other province because I know nothing about other provinces, but in Ontario let us have fewer county court judges, let us have fewer Superior Court judges, and let the Superior Court judges be paid salaries that will be commensurate with the abilities they so fittingly bring to the positions which they occupy. The Minister of Justice could have told the House that had one of the judges of the other courts gone to the Court of Appeal, he would have forfeited $1,000 a year. These judges, who are only human like other men, weigh up the dollars and cents, and so prefer to stay where they are. Once again, let me place myself upon record as a lawyer in saying : We should have fewer judges in the province of Ontario, and the Superior Court judges should be paid a higher salary. Start at the root of the matter, and that is the county court judgeship business.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY (North Simcoe). Inasmuch as I entirely dissent from almost all my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) has said, I think it my duty to say a word or two on this question. I do agree that the Superior Court judges of Ontario are not paid as they should be paid, and I believe their salaries should be greatly increased. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) that the number of Superior Court judges in that province should be decreased. I believe that if there was a lesser number of judges they could not discharge their duties properly. They now work harder than most men do at the bar ; they get behind their work, and it would be impossible for fewer judges to do the work. To talk of reducing the number is entirely out of the question. The salaries paid to our judges are so meagre that I agree with the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) that it is dangerous to the public at large to allow the remuneration of judges to remain at so low a figure. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to say that if some of the judges were practicing at the bar they would not earn a sum equal to their present salaries, but it is a fact that we have on the bench of this country, men who did not become eminent as members of the bar, but when in some cases make better judges than those who before their elevation to the bench had a very large practice.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McCARTHY. If a judge occupies the position with dignity and gives perhaps better satisfaction as a judge than his brother judge who was eminent at the bar, surely that man is entitled to receive at least equal compensation to him who was the more eminent practitioner if he discharges his judicial functions equally well. Comparisons between men on the bench and men at the bar are not always a fair test of the standing on the bench. This is true as regards the judiciary in all British countries. The smallness of the salaries paid to our judges is a grievance recognized by the members of the Bar throughout Canada, and the sooner it is remedied the better for the country. In England, eminent members of the legal profession are able to go on the bench without making such a pecuniary sacrifice, because the salaries paid are so large that a man can maintain his rank and dignity in the eyes of the public. I agree with the statement that certain members of the Bar in Ontario are earning three times the salary which is paid to a judge. That is an anomaly which should not be allowed to exist in any country. I trust that the government, and especially the Minister of Justice, will take this matter in hand, and that before long Canadian judges will receive such a salary as will enabe them to maintain the dignity of their position. What the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) said regarding our county court judges is to some extent correct. There are some county court judges who have pretty nearly nothing to do, but there are others who are overworked. To adjust this state of affairs is a task of considerable difficulty, because we are bound by county boundaries, we are bound by appointments which were made years ago and which have been repeated, and the present occupants of the office have certain vested rights which I do not suppose that even my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) would argue should be interfered with. Might I throw out the suggestion, that the junior judge could be taken from a county where there is not much work, and when a vacancy occurs in a county where there is a great deal of work transferred there, and no new appointment made in the county which he left. In this way no injury would be done to the individual and there would be a saving to the country.

Mr. J. H. LEGRIS (Maskinongé). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, were we to take any stock in the predictions made by some hon. gentlemen who have just addressed the House, we would be led to believe that the country is threatened with unheard of disasters if the salaries of judges are not increased. The hon. member from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) and my hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) have assumed the role of prophets, but they are by no means the only ones who have taken that position, as several other gentlemen who belong, I think, to the legal profession, have spoken to the same effect. I do not wish to impute any motives to the hon. gentlemen and to insinuate that some of them are expectant judges——

Mr. T. C. CASGRAIN (Montmorency). (Translation.) Let the hon. gentleman allow me to tell him that even were I offered a judgeship now, I would decline the offer on the very ground I have mentioned.

Mr. J. H. LEGRIS. (Translation.) No fear of that. My hon. friend says what the fox did of the grapes.

Mr. CASGRAIN. (Translation.) That's too old.

Mr. LEGRIS (Translation.) Let him possess his soul in patience ; maybe the time will come when the grapes will be ripe enough ; for instance, when his party climbs into power again ; but, of course, that is a very remote contingency.

There is a very important consideration that was lost sight of by those who are in favour of increasing the salaries of judges, and it is that they are paid a retiring allowance when they retire from the bench. However, I agree that the salaries of judges are below the emoluments derived by leading members in the practice of the legal profession ; but those lawyers are an exception to the rule, and besides, the question of income should not be the sole test of efficiency or fitness for a seat on the bench. So long as the leading members in the practice of their profession, and so long as even members of this House, as is often the case, will be ready to give up their positions in order to accept judgeships, there is no reason to take alarm if their salaries are not increased.

Some hon. gentlemen have contrasted the salaries of judges and the salaries given to bank cashiers ; but there is no comparison at all between those positions. I admit that we have bank officers, bank presidents and bank cashiers, and others who are paid much higher salaries than even the highest salary that is paid to judges of the land. But one must not jump to the conclusion that, because higher salaries are given in commercial life and monetary institutions, the salaries of judges must be increased.

So long as leading men at the bar, who are most renowned for their accomplishments and their integrity, men who are successful in the practice of their profession, and who, therefore, are fit to discharge the duties of the judiciary will be ready to accept judgeships ; so long, I say, as there will be such a keen competition as is now the case, among those who wish to rise to the bench, and who are all well qualified for the position, I think there is no reason of taking alarm and to fear disasters for the country and for those who are amenable to the tribunals of justice, if the salaries of judges are not increased.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) alluded to the judges who live in the rural districts of the province of Quebec, and he said that these judges are sufficiently paid. Perhaps they are, but there are not any of them left so far as I know.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What does my hon. friend mean ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Because they are all living in the cities ; in violation of the law.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Those who live in the cities live there because they choose to do so.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They ought not to be allowed.

SUPPLY—THE SEARCH FOR THE NORTH POLE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire to bring to the attention of the House a matter, the importance of which I deem will warrant its consideration for a short time. I had intended originally to bring it in the form of a motion, and, had I done so, I should have asked the hon. member for Toronto West (Mr. Clarke) to second the motion. I presume, however, that it will answer just as good a purpose to discuss the question without putting into your hands a motion in relation to it. The question I desire to bring to the attention to the House is in regard to the advisability on the part of the government of rendering aid to a Canadian expedition for the purpose of discovering or seeking to discover the north pole.

The question may perhaps be raised as to the advisability of making the expenditure which would be necessary for this purpose. I shall endeavour to show that such an appropriation would serve the public interest and would be worth to the country more than the sum of money required. We are, of course, making large expenditures; the country is bearing a considerable burden; but, in a growing and young country like Canada, it is necessary to make appropriations which perhaps the future will derive the benefit from, and will be called upon to liquidate; and the question is whether the expenditure which I shall urge on the government on this occasion is an expenditure of that character or not. We have recently awakened to the possibility of having an active and aggressive national life in Canada. We no longer feel like apologizing for being Canadians. We no longer have that sense of provincialism, possibly I might say of inferiority, that was once entertained by citizens of this country. We have found, in bringing back the sheaves of achievement from South Africa, which have cost us some blood and tears, that we have gained an enviable position in the world, a position which has drawn the attention of the world to Canada, a position which is worth infinitely more in the results which it will bring in the present and the future than all the sacrifice in money and life that has been given to purchase it. Now, Sir, it is probable that the expenditure which I shall urge upon the government on this occasion is one which will bring to Canada a large meed of reputation throughout the world, and will give to ourselves the idea that we are progressive, that we have capabilities, that we may aspire to be a nation. The proposition to send a Canadian expedition to the north pole is not a visionary one. The discovery of the north pole in our case would not be a fruitless one. Aside entirely from the reputation that would accrue to this country from the settlement of a geographical problem which has engaged the attention of maritime nations for generations, we would establish our right to all the territories and islands and seas that might lie between our present northern boundary and the north pole itself—all that vast region between the 141st parallel of longitude on the west, and Baffin's Bay and Grant land on the east. And these possessions may be of value. They may contain enormous mineral wealth. Our impression as to the worthlessness of these arctic lands is perhaps an erroneous impression. The temperature of all this great region to the north of latitude 75 is not much, if any lower than that of Dawson.

This prize has been sought for by many notable and daring men—by Scoresby in 1806, by Parry in 1827, by Sir George Nares in 1876, by De Long in 1879, by Greeley in 1882, by Nansen in 1895, and by the Duke d'Abruzzi in 1899-1900; and there are at this moment two polar expeditions in progress—that of Peary, who will attempt to reach the pole from Greenland, by means of sledge journeys over the ice, and that of Baldwin, who, following the theories of Captain Bernier, of Canada, will attempt to reach it by Franz Joseph Land. It may be that these two American expeditions will forestall us in the discovery of the pole; but even if they did, the credit that would accrue to us from an expedition would be quite sufficient to compensate us for its cost.

I think it may be asserted without any question that Canada is peculiarly well fitted for this work. We have hardy and daring seamen in our maritime provinces; we are constantly exploring the wilds; we have exploring expeditions in progress every year—Tyrrell in the North-west, Low in Labrador, Bell and others to the north-east and east of James Bay, and other Canadian explorers; and the accomplishments of these men warrant me in saying that we have an aptitude for this kind of work—hardihood, courage and aggressiveness—that specially fits us for undertaking it. The whole history of Canada back to the time the first French colonists landed in this country is a history of adventure and daring. While the English colonists explored the country only as far west as the Alleghany Mountains, the French colonists penetrated into the far interior, to the valley of the Mississippi, and up the Ottawa river to the great lakes. La Salla explored the great west almost to the mouth of the Mississippi. Duquesne founded a post on the site of the great industrial centre of Pittsburgh and Alleghany city, near which subsequently a British army under Braddock was overwhelmed and annihilated. These explorers established posts at Detroit, Mackinaw, St. Louis, and other points in the west. These daring hardy men led the van in the march of the empire and were perfectly well aware of the great value of the possessions they had secured by their explorations, but the supine, effete dynasty in power at Versailles had not the courage, the grasp or the prescience to avail themselves of these explorations, and so Canada fell into the hands of Britain, and we are to-day in the position to utilize in the same race these admirable qualities which marked the early explorers of the North-west.

We want, I imagine, to add to the exploits of the past. We want to do something to keep up the prestige of the past, and we can do this, in my opinion, with as little expense, and as easily by reaching the North Pole in advance of all other maritime nations as in any other way. The accumulations of knowledge and experience with regard to Arctic voyages and conditions will place whoever commands a Canadian polar expedition to-day in a position far more favourable than that in which any previous navigator has been placed.

We have various theories with regard to the Arctic basin. We have the old and exploded theory of an open Polar Sea and various other theories. We have discovered various facts which have an important bearing on explorations, and one of the most important is the ice drift first discovered by Gustave Lambert in 1866. Careful investigations have shown that there is a regular movement of ice from that portion of the Arctic Sea, situated next to Behering Straits, and extending across to the east coast of Greenland, so that a vessel, packed in that ice will drift across the Arctic Ocean. It was in consequence of that theory that DeLong placed the 'Jeannette' in the ice drift, and later on wreckage from the vessel was found thousands of miles away on the coast of Greenland. In persuit of this theory the 'Fram,' under command of Captain Nansen, entered in the ice near the north-east coast of Siberia nearly north of the mouth of the Lena river and drifted on to within 285 miles of the pole. This knowledge of the ice drift was taken advantage of by DeLong and Nansen, and we now have experience and knowledge more full and complete and more likely to lead to a successful result than has ever been possessed by any Arctic navigator at any previous time. This experiment of Nansen's enabled him to reach latitude 86·13, within 227 miles of the pole. Following him, the Duke d'Abbrezzi approached the pole 20 miles nearer, or within 207 miles. This theory of the ice drift simply amounts to this, that an explorer, by his knowledge of the direction of the currents, can place his vessel in the drift and trust himself to nature and nature's God to drift towards his destination. There has been a theory propounded regarding the possibility of reaching the pole by means of vessels similar to the one now used in the Baltic, which are able to crush ice of the thickness of 14 feet. This is, however, probably an impracticable method. The information I have sought to place before the House with regard to the knowledge now in the possession of those who have given attention to the matter, will warrant our coming to the conclusion that it is worthy of our consideration at least as to whether we shall avail ourselves of the services of some one thoroughly competent to pursue and profit by the investigations, and invest a little money in the hope of placing Canada at the head of all maritime powers in the search for the North Pole.

I wish now to state that we have among Canadian navigators a nautical man, whose experience, whose courage, whose length of service in seafaring life, and whose knowledge of all the conditions pertaining to Arctic exploration, probably render him better fitted than any other man in this country, and as well fitted as any in the world, to take command of an expedition and attempt to reach the North Pole. I refer to Captain Bernier, who belongs to the race of La Salle, which has penetrated to the heart of the continent, and who has the courage to undertake to penetrate to the North Pole, and will do it if the government will afford him the means. Captain Bernier is 50 years old. If the government had done their duty and sent him at the time they should have, he would have started on his trip at 48 years of age. He was in command of a vessel at the age of 17. He has commanded 46 ships. He has crossed the Atlantic 174 times. He has never lost a vessel except in one instance, when he ran the 'Quorm' ashore to save her from going to the bottom, she having sprung a leak, and the investigation of the underwriters exonerated him from all blame, as also did the owners of the vessel. He was for twenty years with W. H. Ross & Company as captain, overlooker, and repairer, filling these various capacities in the service, in all quarters of the world. He was eight years with P. Baldwin, ship builder at Quebec. In the summer he took the vessels across to their destination, which were constructed, and in the winter he acted as superintendent of the ship yard and superintended the construction of twelve ships. He was with the Richielieu Company two years, and adjusted the compasses on all their vessels, eleven in number. He sailed on the government steamer 'Eureka' with the Minister of Public Works, on a tour around the gulf and the coast, and no doubt the hon. minister will give a good testimonial as to his capacity and qualifications.

His theory of reaching the North Pole, which is to place his vessel in the ice north of Behring Straits and drift to its destination, has been endorsed by Lord Minto and Lord Strathcona, and I consider the endorsation of Lord Strathcona as one of particular significance, because Lord Strathcona spent many years of his life in the far north and is thoroughly conversant with the conditions of the Arctic regions—probably better fitted than any man who represents Canada to give an intelligent opinion as to the probability of Captain Bernier succeeding in the expedition he proposes to take. The Captain's theory has been endorsed by the Colonial Institute. His theory was accepted and endorsed by the Institute and Sir Clemens Markham, on January 16th, 1901. It was endorsed also by the Royal Society, by resolution of 23rd May, 1901. The Canadian Institute of Toronto endorsed it in 1901, and it also received the endorsation of the Ontario Surveyors Association. Captain Bernier has addressed members of this House in Room 16 on two occasions—once in the year 1900, at a meeting of which the Minister of Finance was chairman. I believe that Capt. Bernier then succeeded in convincing every one who listened to him of the feasibility of his plan for reaching the North Pole. He again addressed the members of this House on March 23rd, 1901, at a meeting of which my hon. friend from Russell (Mr. Edwards) was chairman, and again enlisted the sympathy and commanded the confidence of the great majority of those who listened to him. He has a certificate of competency from the American Consul Henry at Quebec, and he has a great number of testimonials that universally and emphatically assert that he is a sea-faring man possessing the qualifications, the capabilities and the knowledge that peculiarly fit him for the position he seeks with regard to this matter. He has I believe, the endorsation of one hundred and thirteen members of this House, who have signed a petition to the government asking that the necessary appropriation shall be made to enable him to carry into effect the plans that he has promulgated and laid before us.

Now, with regard to the plans for this expedition, I think it is as well to enter into these in some detail. Captain Bernier proposes to build a vessel of wood. A vessel of wood is much better adapted to the purposes of Arctic navigation and navigation among ice floes than is a vessel of steel. The vessel will be built upon the west coast as it will enter upon its service by passing through Behring Straits. It will be of the same plan as the 'Fram,' which was commanded by Nansen, but ten tons heavier—being three hundred tons net measurement. She will be of the same general plan as the 'Gauss,' now being constructed at Kiel, for the German expedition to the south pole. It will be built with the utmost strength in order to resist the 'ice nips' as they are called—that is, when a vessel is caught between fields of ice which either crush her like an egg shell or lift her out of water. The vessel will have a system of water-tight compartments, six in number, which, no previous Arctic vessel has had, and which will add enormously to her strength and power of resistance. She will be 120 feet keel, 35 feet beam, and 18 feet deep, and will have a flush deck, which is a new and desirable feature, in the opinion of the captain. The vessel will have a draught of 14 feet; she will have three masts and will be top sail schooner rigged. She will have triple expansion engines, a 10-foot wheel, two boilers, each 10 feet of diameter and 8 feet long, and will be of 200 horse power, and able to steam at full steaming capacity on three tons of hard coal for every twenty-four hours. She will have a spare rudder and a spare wheel and will be fitted with a diving apparatus, which, no other Arctic vessel has had. The captain himself is a practical diver, and can examine his vessel if she has received an injury or spring a leak, and can ship a new rudder or put in a new wheel. The vessel will carry 300 tons of anthracite—not bituminous—coal. It is found that bituminous coal will not do for Arctic navigation; the cold converts it into slack, and so its steaming qualities are greatly reduced. Anthracite will remain intact and perfectly good for steaming purposes for the period he would require to use steam. She will have—and here is a new feature—two wind-mills for the purpose of pumping the vessel and running the dynamos, and she will have electric light and electric heating apparatus. The old fashion was to illuminate the vessel by means of lamps. One lamp would consume in an hour as much air as a person would consume in three hours. The result was that Arctic vessels were invariably dark, damp and uncomfortable. The plan of Captain Bernier would light the vessel without the consumption of air, and enable him to keep the vessel dry, getting rid of this feature of dampness and securing cheer and comfort in place of the conditions that have hitherto existed in Arctic vessels in the six months darkness of a polar winter. This feature alone, as compared with the old condition of things, might give an advantage that would just measure the distance between success and failure. The vessel will carry a complete Dr. Dawsing's electrical apparatus, including an X-ray apparatus which will be most useful in cases of rheumatism swelling and other ailments. The expedition will carry—and this perhaps, is the strongest feature that could be named as tending to ensure success—a wireless telegraph apparatus. The captain will communicate with Dawson regularly, and, if conditions are favourable, he will be able to communicate with Hamervest in Norway. He will also be able to communicate with sledge parties that leave the ship, and would be constantly in communication with the base of supplies and headquarters. These sledge parties equipped with wireless telegraph apparatus would have an enormous advantage as compared with the conditions that existed under the old system. Under the old conditions, when a sledge party was sent out, the ship might be moved with the field of ice in which she was imprisoned, or the parties might lose their course owing to the storms, and, when they returned, perhaps might not find the ship in the position in which they left it, and might search for it for days before they found it. With the wireless telegraph apparatus, these parties will know the position of the ship at any moment, and the vessel will know where the sledge parties are, and can be kept informed as to their operations and their needs. The vessel will carry a water distilling and filtering apparatus. Hitherto vessels engaged in Arctic exploration have depended for their water upon melted snow, which is often impregnated with salt. Often the crews are compelled to use water with a solution of five per cent of salt. But with an apparatus I have mentioned there will be a means of distilling and filtering the water, which is a matter of the utmost importance—it is a guarantee against scurvy and various kinds of sickness, Captain Bernier will take 100 tons of provisions, sufficient for six years. There will be fresh vegetables and fresh meat in fifty pound cans or boxes, square in shape to facilitate packing; kiln dried flour, kiln dried oatmeal, beans biscuits containing 10 per cent of albumen, coffee, tea, cocoa—an abundance of healthful, wholesome provisions of all kinds. With such an outfit of provisions, that scourge of Arctic expeditions, scurvy will be entirely avoided.

Captain Bernier's crew will be so organized as to combine efficiency and economy. The crew will consist of fifteen men. There will be the commander himself, without pay. There will be two officers, captains of experience, who can take the wheel, go to the mast-head and look-out, or perform any duty regarding the navigation or care of the ship in case of the captain being incapacitated. There will be a first mate who will be what is termed an ice master, a man who is thoroughly conversant with everything pertaining to the dangers of ice and of being caught between ice floes. There will be two engineers; one will be a machinist who can do any work in connection with the machinery or apparatus, the telegraph apparatus or fixtures; while the other will be an electrician and wireless telegraph operator. Two men will be surveyors and astronomers who will also serve on sledge journeys or in almost any other capacity on the vessel. There will be one doctor who will be a botanist and seaman. There will be one naturalist, who will be a botanist, photographer and artist and assistant to the surveyors and electrician, and who also will go on sledge journeys. There will be one cook, who, in addition to being a cook and steward will be an able seaman. There will be one seaman who will be a whaler and sealer and stoker, and who will combine the qualifications of all three and be able to serve in almost any capacity. There will be a carpenter who will be also an able seaman, and one stoker who will also be an able seaman. These will be his crew of 15, men combining the qualifications and different kinds of capacities that, if confined in each case to one man, would require a crew of 50 or 60 men, an efficient crew, and yet a compact crew of small number. In addition to these 15 men, the vessel will carry 30 sledge dogs.

Now, the government can fit out this expedition with all the instruments that are necessary by merely lending them to it, and they can be returned when the vessel completes its voyage. Captain Bernier will obtain letters from the Russian government to the Siberian officials and to the tribes on the Siberian coast. Had the DeLong party been armed with letters of that kind none of the members of the expedition would probably have been lost. As it was they landed upon an inhospitable coast, they had no credentials to present to the Russian officials, and all the crew were lost except two or three men, who could not obtain assistance to get back to those they had left to rescue them until it was too late. Letters such as the captain proposes to obtain will command the services of the officials wherever he can find them, and will command the services of the native tribes upon the coast as well.

The captain proposes—there is a map upon the Table which hon. gentlemen can examine—the captain proposes to enter Behring Straits and to sail nearly due north until he reaches the ice pack, and he will enter the ice pack between longitude 170 and 175 west, as the openings may dictate to be the proper thing to do. When he enters this ice pack—at a point where his experience and investigations tell him he will probably be able to drift to within 100 or 150 miles of the pole—when he enters this ice pack his vessel will simply be committed to nature to carry it on its course. While in the ice pack drifting towards the pole, and past the pole towards the eastern coast of Greenland, Captain Bernier proposes to send out sledge parties on each side of the vessel for 50 miles and to survey a strip 100 miles in width, to take soundings, and obtain all the information it is possible to obtain by these investigations. When arriving at the point where he is nearest to the pole, he will then organize sledge parties for approach to the pole; and he will rely, as he has relied before in these lateral investigations perhaps 50 miles each way—he will rely upon dogs, and upon a new feature never before introduced in Arctic sledge explorations, that is, an automobile motor run by a petroleum engine weighing 100 pounds, the sledge weighing 100 pounds; and where the ice is favourable, he will make progress with this motor at three times, perhaps, the rate of speed that dogs would enable him to do. He will have the frames of boats with a canvas covering to launch when he reaches the openings in the ice. Nansen made the mistake, in his expedition, of leaving his boats covered and the covering exposed to the weather, and to the hard usage which rendered the boats useless. Captain Bernier will have the coverings of these boats carefully folded and ready for use, and the frames ready to be covered any moment when he reaches a place where a boat is needed. He will take fur clothing for all the members of the party. The mistake made by Nansen, and to which the failure to reach the pole was largely due, was that they discarded fur clothing and attempted to make the journey with warm woollen clothing, which they found entirely unsuited for the purpose. Captain Bernier will be enabled to profit by all the mistakes that Nansen made, and enabled to profit by all the experience that Nansen acquired, and will enter upon that race for the pole under circumstances much more favourable than any explorer has enjoyed before.

He will have in this sledge journey regular communication by wireless telegraphy with his vessel. Every half mile, or mile, a hole will be bored in the ice and a hollow tube inserted which will serve as a landmark, and when it is necessary to return there is a line of landmarks one mile apart, and every one of them a storehouse of supplies. He has the advantage of availing himself of an instrument which is being perfected, an instrument which I believe has not yet received a name, an instrument which may be termed the guide for the wandering and the lost, an instrument that can be adjusted with another instrument that is adjusted with it. Two parties separated from each other, carrying each of them one of these instruments, though they may be lost in a blinding snow storm, with their points of compass lost, and themselves lost hopelessly, can yet travel towards each other by the use of these instruments; or they can be gauged with an instrument on board the vessel; and this little monitor carried by a member of the sledge party, will direct him with as unerring accuracy to the vessel as a needle will direct to the pole. Now, this itself is a matter of great importance indeed, and with all these up-to-date appliances, with all the resources of modern science up to the very day that he starts, at his comamnd, I believe, Mr. Speaker, that Captain Bernier, in his race for the pole, has the conditions all in his favour.

What will be the expense? The captain has secured contributions to the extent of $20,000. He cannot tell, perhaps no one can exactly, what he will require, but the probability is that the government would require to supplement that subscription by a sum of at least $100,000. Now, it may be said: Why should this money be appropriated? Here are two polar expeditions under way now; perhaps one of these will get to the pole first, and Captain Bernier will be cut out. Well, sir, even if another expedition did reach the pole before Captain Bernier got there, if he succeeded in reaching the pole on the first attempt made, if the first Canadian polar expedition was successful, the credit that would be due to Captain Bernier, the credit that would come to the country from that achievement, would be vastly more valuable than the amount of money required to fit out that expedition. But suppose he got there first, and I believe that will be the case. I do not believe that Peary will get to the pole by a journey from Greenland over the ice; I doubt whether Baldwin will get to the pole from Franz Josef land. Captain Bernier will go to the place where the currents will set him towards his destination, he will plant his vessel in the ice where the currents, the existence of which he knows perfectly well, will carry him to the place he wants to reach and then bring him out. He has been investigating this matter for 23 years. His knowledge with regard to this matter has been availed of by Nansen, by Baldwin, and by other explorers, and it is time now, Mr. Speaker, that Canada should have the credit of an achievement that will result largely from the investigations and the knowledge possessed by one or our own sons. If he gets there first, this country will be glad, you will be glad, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad, the premier will be glad, every citizen of Canada will be proud over this achievement of Captain Bernier.

It would have the effect, Mr. Speaker, of a first-class advertisement, one of the finest that could be obtained. It would bring us probably into better odour in Great Britain, it would make us better known there. I suppose at this moment that one half of her population would be just as ready to believe that Canadians wear snow shoes all the year, except during an occasional thaw in July and August, and live on blubber and bear meat, as they are to believe that we have 500,000 spuare miles of the finest wheat land in the world, ready to occupy, that we raise the finest grapes, the finest peaches and the finest apples in the world, and have room for 100,000,000 people to be supported from the products of our own soil. We want to draw their attention to this country, we want to draw their attention a little more fixedly to this Dominion. We would like the United States people to have their attention directed to this country with a more sincere desire to obtain an intelligent knowledge as to the conditions that exist to-day, as to the physical features of the country and various other things and by means of expeditions and expenditures of this kind that we might enter into we would certainly bring Canada into prominent notice more readily and at less expense than in any other way. We would like to have the attention of the world in general and the world at large, not that we are self conceited, not that we desire to indulge in any vain boasting, but we want the attention of the world in order that Canada may be understood and justly appreciated. We want the attention of the world directed to this country which is now swelling with aspirations of national life, which is now deciding upon the course which will lay the foundations of a national future and which must win that position and win it by earning it. We have, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset, asserted ourselves. We have taught the world something and we have done something more important than that; we have taught ourselves something. We have taught ourselves what our resources are, what our capabilities are, and this polar expedition would be a nationalizing factor in our experience. It would be an expedition undertaken and joined in by both races and it would be an advertisement to the world and more than this it would be an incentive to aspiration, to great achievements, to high resolves, to self-reliance and to development in national character that would be worth infinitely more than it will cost. I urge, Mr. Speaker, upon the government the advisability of giving the money to place this expedition on foot, to draw the attention of the world to the fact that Canada has sent a polar expedition with the good hope that in due time Canada's effort will be crowned by success and that Capt. Bernier will reach the pole.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I desire to offer my congratulations to the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) on the very elaborate and convincing presentation of the case which he made this afternoon on behalf of Captain Bernier. I join most cordially with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) in urging the claims of that hardy mariner upon the government. Twelve months ago, when the estimates of the Marine Department were under consideration, I took the liberty to draw the attention of the government to Captain Bernier's project, and I then urged that it was worthy of their serious consideration. I expressed the hope that the government would be able to see its way to make some appropriation to aid Captain Bernier in the construction of a vessel and the furnishing of its equipment for the expedition to the North Pole. Since then I have had no reason to change my mind. I have been more convinced than ever after listening to the speech of the hon. member for North Norfolk. I believe that the great bulk of the people of Canada would most cordially sustain the action of the government if it decided to make a substantial grant, say $100,000, to aid Captain Bernier in what I conceive to be little short of a national enterprise. Captain Bernier it seems to me has special claims upon us and upon the government. He has acted most unselfishly in this matter; he has given years of his time, and he has spent considerable of his money in elaborating every detail of the expedition which he proposes to take charge of. He has prepared plans and has submitted them to the most eminent scientific authorities; he has had consultations with the most prominent Arctic explorers, and so correct has he been in his calculations that I think I am right in saying that they have received the approbation and endorsation of the foremost scientific and geological societies of the world. Captain Bernier comes from a family of mariners; his ancestors before him were mariners; he is a mariner himself. Since he was 17 years of age he has had command of ships; he thoroughly understands his business; he is actuated by the highest of motives, and if it is possible for any man to succeed in this arduous undertaking, that man is Captain Bernier. He has patriotism; he has capacity; he has knowledge; he has intense zeal. These are qualifications which make for success. As the hon. member for North Norfolk pointed out: If the first Canadian expedition to the Arctic regions should prove successful; if the men who compose that expedition should succeed in reaching the goal that has been vainly striven for by many daring adventurers in the past; great honour will be reflected upon Canada. From the time the expedition leaves our shores intense interest will be taken in its progress and its welfare by the people of Canada as well as by those of the civilized world. And if it should turn out that Captain Bernier—taking the precautions he has taken; providing for every possible contingency—should succeed in the accomplishment of his great mission, Canada will be placed in a higher position in the estimation of the world than Canada now occupies. Speaking as the representative of an Ontario constituency; speaking as one of the representatives of the city of Toronto, I believe I am reflecting the public opinion of the great majority of that city when I say: That they would desire most cordially to co-operate with the government in giving the necessary aid to Captain Bernier to enable him to equip his expedition. Every Canadian worthy of the name would rejoice if in the course of two or three years Captain Bernier should return to us safe and sound having accomplished his great object. I cordially support the proposition of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and I hope that it will receive the most favourable consideration of the right hon. the Prime Minister.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). It is impossible not to be deeply interested in Captain Bernier, because of his personality, and because of the political considerations connected with his mission as well. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) has said, Captain Bernier has remarkable qualifications for undertaking an expedition of the kind spoken of by the hon. member for North Norfolk. The subject of polar exploration has been so long before the people of Canada and of the civilized world, that such a mission as this requires very little commendation from the lay members of society. Polar exploration in the past has been largely confined to men of scientific attainments, and with strictly scientific objects in view. Should Captain Bernier succeed in obtaining the endorsement of the government and parliament of Canada, he will probably be the first Arctic explorer whose reputation has been established chiefly as a navigator. Hitherto the scientist has taken advantage of the knowledge and skill of the navigator, and the scientist penetrated as far as possible in the Northern Polar seas. But the expedition of Captain Bernier will be in charge primarily of a navigator, and any one who has studied this most interesting subject cannot but think, that under the guidance of a great navigator and a thorough sailor, as Captain Bernier is, aided by scientific men, there is a chance of accomplishing something that has not been accomplished in the past. It is certain that Captain Bernier has the advantage of the experience of the past, and from the addresses which he has delivered as well as the criticisms which have been made upon his plan, it can easily be seen that he contemplates a thoroughly careful attempt—not to discover the North Pole, as some people imagine the object of the expedition to be—but a thoroughly careful attempt to circumnavigate the polar sea, and to report the conditions in these regions and what they indicate as to the nature of the scientific deductions that may be made from them. It will be recollected by hon. gentlemen who have read Captain Bernier's brochure, that he contemplates a different course from any taken in the past. His idea is to enter the polar sea at the Behring Straits, and taking advantage of the drift and passing as near as possible to the pole, when reaching the point nearest the pole, he expects to make expeditions, aided by the most scientific assistance, to endeavour to reach the pole, and then continue his drift until he enters again the Atlantic ocean on the eastern seaboard of Greenland. I happen to have in my hand an address delivered before the Geographical Society of Philadelphia, by Commander Melville, describing the drift of the 'Jeannette.' He says :

> I believe that the proper place to put a ship in the ice will be through Behring Strait. We should keep along the east edge of the pack in about longitude 165° W., attaining the highest possible latitude, and westerly longitude, culminating together. Then we should push the ship into the pack as far as possible to the northward and westward, and await the fulfilment of the prophecy of one of the jolly whalemen I met at San Francisco. He said : 'Melville, push her into the ice at about the point I have mentioned, and you will either go to the pole or to hell, and I believe the chances are about even.'

I do not adopt the language of the whale man but no doubt it comes within the measure of truth. I trust that if Captain Bernier takes this course his chances will be on the side of coming out on the Atlantic ocean. Of course the idea conveyed by this very strong language is that the expedition is one of great danger and difficulty, and these add to the interest and importance of the expedition. It is of course a cheap criticism to make on effort of this kind to say that they are visionary, that they are the results of enthusiastic fads and so on. Perhaps it is not the duty of any lay member of this House to understand all the reasons why the scientific mind of the present age is so deeply interested in this matter. There can be no doubt that scientific inquiries which have evaded the clear apprehension of even the most intelligent laymen, have resulted in the greatest possible benefit to humanity. In addition to these arguments in favour of a generous support to Captain Bernier, there is the argument that the project is a patriotic one.

There can be no doubt, from a fair understanding of our position as the controller of the northern half of this North American continent, that the jurisdiction of Canada extends to the pole. At any rate, if we are the first to circumnavigate the sea and establish the British flag on any point of land discovered there prior discovery and prior occupation will give Great Britain through Canada absolute jurisdiction for all time forward over those regions. From a patriotic standpoint, therefore, there is much to be said for the project. The amount the gallant captain asks for may appear large, but in proportion to the expenditure which is incurred in the solution of other questions it is relatively small. We find all the great nations of the world to-day striving to be foremost in scientific discovery, particularly in the arctic and antarctic regions, and I think it is a worthy ambition for the government and the people of Canada to take a prominent part in such enterprises, particularly in those regions which presumably are or ought to be under our own jurisdiction. I therefore support the idea of favourable and careful consideration being given to Captain Bernier and his plans by the administration of the day. No doubt there are questions of detail and other questions which the administration may desire to discuss with him, but I believe the general idea of a handsome support to this enterprising French Canadian will be approved of by the people of Canada, and I believe that the result will be, if he comes safely through the ordeal, not only to place him at the head of all polar explorers, but to enhance the reputation of the Dominion of Canada as a country devoted not only to utilitarian purposes and the increase of its wealth, but to the higher purposes of scientific discovery and investigation.

Mr. W. C. EDWARDS (Russell). Mr. Speaker, I cannot add much on this subject to what has been said by the hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, further than to concur most heartily in what they have said, and to urge upon the government a compliance with the demand of Captain Bernier to provide him with a sufficient sum to carry out the object he has in view. It may be said, that from the successful carrying out of his project nothing of intrinsic value to Canada will accrue. But from the patriotic standpoint there is certainly this to be said, that it has been the aim of many of the important nations of the world to achieve this object. Every effort has thus far failed, but from the failure of previous efforts a great deal has been learnt, and my firm conviction if that it is possible to succeed in this project, Captain Bernier is the man to do it. Some may say that it would have been more desirable if some highly scientific man were engaged in the project. Well, Mr. Speaker, from my knowledge of the man, if for the carrying out of this project you offered me all the scientists of the world on the one hand, and offered me Captain Bernier as against them, I would take Captain Bernier. So far as the necessary accomplishment is concerned, the characteristics of the Canadian voyageur are the most necesssary elements for the success of such an undertaking. If scientific research is necessary Captain Bernier can have scientific men to accompany him. If he succeeds, and I firmly believe he will succeed, it will certainly be a great accomplishment for Canada, in view of the fact that so many nations have failed in their attempts. As to the intrinsic value of such an expedition to Canada, it is impossible for us to speak. There may be properties in that northern country which it may prove highly desireable to take possession of in the name of Canada or of Great Britain. It is impossible to tell what minerals may be discovered, although Captain Bernier is not going for that purpose. But, taking it all in all, I believe that aid given to Captain Bernier will prove a good investment for Canada, particularly if he succeeds. I have paid great attention to the two lectures which he delivered here ; I have observed closely his plan, and I believe it is a feasible one. I do not believe there is any great danger or great difficulty surrounding it. I believe there are no difficulties that a man of the perseverance, determination and accomplishments of Captain Bernier will not overtake. I believe he will succeed, and it will be a proud day for Canada if he does succeed. I sincerely trust the government will entertain most favourably his demand.

Mr. M. K. RICHARDSON (South Grey). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with much interest to the presentation of this case to the House by the several speakers who have addressed it, and I have no doubt that the encomiums that have been bestowed upon Captain Bernier are well deserved. But it does not necessarily follow, because we recognize his courage, daring, skill and general fitness for an enterprise of this kind, that we should give encouragement to an enterprise fraught with so much danger and having so little practical utility in view. When we look at the history of polar enterprise in the past we must concede that it has been one long sad story of disaster, suffering and loss. Nothing so far has been attained. The loss of Franklin and his crew, the voyage of Captain McClintock in search of Franklin, the expeditions of Scoresby, Kane, Greely and others down to Nansen and the ill-fated Andrée, fill out a long story of disaster and intense suffering. What is gained by it all ? What is proposed to be gained for Canada by this enterprise ? Nothing more than empty fame ; and I hold that at this period of our country's history this is not something that we should strive very hard to attain to. We have much more practical things to give our attention to. It has been urged that it might add largely to the territory of Canada; but I hold that additional territory is not one of the pressing wants of Canada. We have now more territory than we know anything about. We have large regions practically unexplored and as yet untrodden by the white man. If our attention is given to utilizing what we have without aiming beyond that it will result in greater benefit to the people of Canada. There are immense fields of enterprise opening up in this country in all directions—enterprises that are full of promise and practical utility for this new country, and that offer rewards far more certain than polar expeditions.

What advantage would accrue to this country, even supposing the North Pole were discovered ? Would it bring us more immigration ? Would it attract more capital ? Would it open up new avenues for trade and commerce ? Is there anything practical to be got out of it—anything except empty fame ? I am not denying that some practical results from a scientific point of view might be attained, but we have not reached that period of our history when we can afford so much attention to questions of this nature. There are many other practical questions with which we have to deal. It is said that the discovery of the North Pole would be a great advertisement for this country. Well, we unfortunately have too much advertisement of that character—too much advertisement of Canada as Our Lady of The Snows. What we require to do is rather to dispel the ignorance which exists regarding Canada's present territory and her climate, resources and productions. In doing this, we would be doing something which would produce practical results. I need not mention the hundreds of openings there are for practical enterprise in this country —openings in all directions. Everywhere appeals are made for government assistance to legitimate enterprises. I quite admit that to men who have a surplus of wealth, the project of Captain Bernier is an interesting one, and by all means let them expend some of their surplus wealth upon it. In older countries, such as Great Britain and other European countries, which have exhausted at home all the new avenues for enterprise, this scheme may be a legitimate one on which to spend government moneys. But in Canada I think there are far more practical objects demanding our attention and lying right within our reach. Appeals are made to this government again and again for assistance, which the government does not feel warranted in granting, extensive as are our resources. I did not intend to say but a few words on this subject, and I would only add that we should not forget that in contributing out of the national exchequer to a scheme of this kind, we are voting the money of the poor as well as the rich, the money of the toiler as well as the money of the man of affluence. I do not see how we can well defend an expenditure of this kind, which can only result, at the best, in our acquiring a little empty fame, and which is far more likely to have the same fate that other similar enterprises have suffered, and furnish another sad story of a nation's folly.

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Gaspé). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I fully concur in the remarks fallen from the lips of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) this afternoon. For many years back, Captain Bernier has shown that he has the skill, the technical knowledge, the pluck and the perseverance which fit him for such an arduous enterprise as that of the search for the North Pole ; and to my mind, that should induce the government to receive favourably his demand. The hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House (Mr. Richardson) told us that this enterprise had very little practical utility in view, and that he failed to see what advantage would accrue to the country, even supposing the North Pole was discovered by Captain Bernier. Let the hon. gentleman allow me to tell him that but a few years ago the men who ventured to approve of the exploring expedition sent by the government to the Yukon were looked upon as visionaries. And who would now maintain that the country has not greatly benefited by those explorations of the Yukon ?

It is said that if the enterprise undertaken by Captain Bernier were brought to a successful issue, it would be a great advertisement for this country, and that if a son of Canada were to plant the flag of his country at the North Pole, it would be a proud day for Canada. But aside altogether from the reputation that would accrue to Canada from this polar expedition, it must not be forgotten that this enterprise has a scientific object in view, which will be appreciated by all scientists and navigators. Moreover, the discovery of the North Pole in our case would not be a fruitless one, as it would enable us to establish our right to the unknown territories of the Arctic regions.

Captain Bernier was heard before several learned societies, the members of which are by no means visionaries, as my hon. friend (Mr. Richardson) would have it, but practical men. Captain Bernier delivered addresses before the Royal Society of Canada, the Colonial Institute in London, the Geographical Society of Quebec and several other learned bodies, both in the United States and in Great Britain. The captain's theory has received the endorsation of all those learned societies, after they had fully considered its merits.

It often happens that the government encourages the projects of foreign scientists. Not long ago Signor Marconi's system of wireless telegraphy was adopted by the government, and we shall soon be called upon to vote for that purpose a sum of $70,000. Is there a gentleman here who would venture to predict that Captain Bernier's expedition will be a barren thing for Canada, and that no tangible advantages will accrue to the country from it ?

On these several grounds, Sir, I think it my duty as a Canadian and as a representative from the province of Quebec, to endorse the demand made by Captain Bernier, and to express the hope that it will receive the favourable consideration of the government.

Hon. WM. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) Canada has acquired some fame by sending her men to South Africa. She can add to that fame by assisting Captain Bernier's expedition to the north pole. Great Britain has spent a great deal of treasure and a great deal of blood in acquiring territory, and if we wish to be conspicuous in history, we must follow her example. I suppose that, even when we do discover the north pole, the market gardeners about Montreal will hardly go there to grow fruit for sale. But, if you consider everything, I think it will be manifest that the discovery of the pole will be a valuable asset for the Dominion of Canada. It will elevate the history of the country and give us prominence in every country in the world. Our children's children will look back with admiration upon the history of the brave man who discovered the north pole and added this territory to the Dominion. Captain Bernier has my entire sympathy in the enterprise he is undertaking, and I hope that the government will treat him in a generous broad-minded manner.

Mr. ROBERT HOLMES (West Huron). The speakers who have preceded me, and have favoured this request, seem to assume that Captain Bernier is going to be successful in his search for the pole, I think. I have read nearly all the records of polar exploration, and I am not satisfied in my own mind that Captain Bernier—and I will admit all that has been said concerning his bravery and ability—will come nearer to a solution of the problem than those who have preceded him have done. The argument put forth that it will be an excellent advertisement for Canada, is, to my mind, an exceedingly specious one. It is an advertisement that will cost the country altogether too much, in my opinion. I fail to see any good that will be accomplished by another polar expedition. And I do not think the people of this country would justify the government in the expenditure of anything like $50,000, or more for an expedition of that nature. We are told often in this House, and especially by hon. gentlemen on the other side, that the government is spending money too freely. The idea prevails, however, apparently, that the government has money to burn. It seems to me if they are disposed to use a free hand in the disposition of the revenues of the country, we can find a great deal more worthy objects and objects that will do a great deal more permanent good to the country than the discovery of the north pole. There are various ways in which the money could be utilized either for colonization purposes or otherwise. But I think that Canada is too new a country and has too limited resources to justify the government in contributing any sum towards this expedition.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I have no desire to detain the House by repeating the many arguments that have been advanced by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in support of the expedition of Captain Bernier in search of the north pole. The hon. gentleman has placed the question so fully and completely before the House that nothing be need said along that line. Captain Bernier's energy and the zeal he has displayed in this matter, not only in Canada, but also in his visits to the old country during the past two or three years, to say nothing of the many years previous when the people of Canada were not taking notice of him, must have commended him to every true Canadian. To my mind, if the north pole is to be discovered—and I am one of those who believe that it will be dicovered—Captain Bernier is the kind of man who will discover it. I have given very considerable attention to the plans along whose lines Captain Bernier proposes to move in this expedition, and I think those plans will commend themselves to every man who informs himself upon the subject. Briefly, Captain Bernier is going to follow natural law. He is not going in opposition to nature, as he himself explains. Many of the explorers in the past who have attempted to find the north pole have failed because they went towards it from the wrong direction. But Captain Bernier, takes advantage of the discoveries with regard to the currents and the movements of the ice floes and of all the experience and the observations of others who have sailed in these northern seas, and I think he has a plan by which he will discover the pole, if it is ever going to be discovered. Now, some may think that the north pole will never be found. I understand that one man came within 230 miles of the pole, and another within 219 miles of it. If one navigator can come within 219 miles of the pole, why cannot another reach the pole itself? One thing is as reasonable as the other. Captain Bernier is of the opinion that Dr. Nansen went too far before putting his boat in the ice. The result was that he passed within 230 miles of the pole. Had he entered the ice 230 miles nearer, he might have floated over the pole and to-day have had the glory of being the man who discovered the north pole. Now, are there any advantages to be gained by this expedition? I hold that, even if it is an absolute failure there will be great advantages accruing to Canada from it. As an immigration advertisement nothing in the world that we can do with the same amount of money would bring Canada so prominently and favourably before the world as this expedition of Captain Bernier to the pole. It will be commented on by every newspaper throughout the world, and attention will be called to Canada on every side. This will be a better way of spending money than some of the plans adopted by the Minister of the Interior at the present time. If there are any hon. gentlemen in the House who think we ought not to spend any sum for the purpose of assisting Captain Bernier I would suggest to them that, instead of spending $400,000 on immigration, by spending $300,000 on immigration and $100,000 to aid Captain Bernier, we should bring more immigrants to the country than if we spent $400,000 on our ordinary immigration service. What will the thing cost? If we do give Captain Bernier's expedition $100,000—and I am not aware that he asks even that much—that sum will simply amount to two cents per head of the population of this country. Where is the man, woman or child who would grudge that money in order that a Canadian may have the glory of being first to place the British flag at the pole. I am sure there is not one. We would all be proud as Canadians if one of our fellow countrymen could accomplish this great feat. In any case, we are not sending this money out of the country, I understand that the expedition will be fitted out here and every dollar spent in Canada. So, we are not losing the money, but are simply transferring it from one hand to another. We hear a great deal about the Alaskan boundary and the trouble we have in settling the disputes between ourselves and the United States. Suppose that Captain Bernier fails to get sufficient assistance to enable him to undertake this expedition. If he goes to Washington—he is too patriotic to do so, but he would be justified, if he were turned down by this government, in seeking to secure assistance from some other country—if he goes to Washington, there is not the slightest doubt that, within twenty-four hours he will have all the money he wants. And the next thing we know we shall have another Alaska boundary question away near the north pole, with commissions sitting at Washington to settle question of our northern boundary. Is it not better to spend $100,000 and settle that question for ever ? The hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Richardson) recommends various things that we might undertake instead of spending the money on this expedition. But I want to tell the hon. gentleman that there is only one pole, and if we lose the opportunity now of sending Captain Bernier we may lose the opportunity for ever.

My own impression is that if Captain Bernier reaches the pole—there is only one North Pole, for we care nothing about the south, we have no possessions there—if Captain Bernier succeeds in reaching that pole and has the pleasure of wiring to us over the Marconi system the particular day on which he has discovered the pole, I doubt very much if there will be another expedition going out there for years to come, because the ambition of every one is to be the first to find the pole. Now, I make this statement to show the government where I stand. I am not ashamed to say that I am prepared to stand by the government in any reasonable expenditure which they may make in assisting Captain Bernier. I know perfectly well that my constituents will support me. I do not believe in parish politics, I believe in taking a wide view of all these matters; and I am convinced that those who live after us will remember with pride that the parliament of Canada assisted Captan Bernier in being the first man to place the British flag upon the North Pole.

Mr. W. F. McCREARY (Selkirk.) I am sometimes surprised at the consistency or inconsistency of some hon. gentlemen opposite. They complain a great deal of the expenditure this government makes year after year, and decry the large increase in the expenditure, and yet here they come now asking us to spend $80,000 or $100,000 on an object purely visionary or sensational. I think some of the older countries, such as Russia, France, Sweden, England and the United States, might possibly be justified in going into a little experiment of this sort; but for a new country like Canada to spend $100,000 of the people's money on such a visionary project as the discovery of the North Pole would be abject foolishness. I have no doubt that the hon. gentlemen who have just spoken on the other side would be glad if they could get the leader of the government to commit himself to such a project so that they could ridicule him afterwards on every platform in the country. That is exactly what they want, and I know it. A few years ago this country discovered what is known as Manitoba and the North-west Territories. That country they are trying to develop, that country they are not able to develop because they do not devote sufficient money to develop it properly. A few nights ago in this House grievous complaints were made by members from the territories that only a paltry sum of $357,000 was given them to govern 160,000 to 200,000 people. We have the same cry in Manitoba, the very same cry, that we cannot get sufficient money properly to run our government. Later on this country made another discovery, the Yukon territory. Now, I think we have done about enough discovery for some time to come. The North Pole will keep, it is in cold storage, and let it remain there awhile. I believe that if that pole was discovered it would prove to be one of the greatest curses to the premier of Canada. He would not know what to do with it, there is no doubt about it. There is a country around the North Pole, and the first thing we would see would be a big map of the country in the railway committee room here, with railways wanted by some great corporation. I have no doubt the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) would want a cinch on the water power to be developed, and some other hon. gentleman would want to run railways to Spitzbergen and Greenland. I think the premier of Canada should take hard facts into consideration, and leave these chimerical schemes entirely for the future, until we become a big nation, until we have a surplus of funds on hand to undertake such a project. In the meantime, let us try to develop the countries that we have already discovered within the last 25 years, and which need more funds.

Mr. C. MARCIL (Bonaventure). If this scheme involved the expenditure of any considerable amount I would certainly hesitate before asking the government to undertake it. But we are told that all Captain Bernier expects from this government is $60,000, or one cent per head for every man, woman and child in this country. When we remember that some patent medicine companies expend three times that amount in one year to advertise their goods, I believe that if we looked on the expedition to the North Pole merely as an advertising scheme the money would be very well invested indeed. But, Mr. Speaker, there is a broader question than the mere question of advertising this country. Canada has contributed her share in the past towards making the history of this continent; Canada, I hope, has not arrived at that position where, for a paltry sum like the one now involved, she will stop in her course of progress, of discovery, of scientific research, deterred by so small an amount as the one in question. We have had to-night testimony in favour of Captain Bernier from disinterested members on both sides of the House, from all parts of the Dominion. As a member from the province of Quebec, I am pleased and grateful for the tribute which has been paid to the valour and devotion of Captain Bernier. I believe Captain Bernier will reach the North Pole if that pole can be reached by the means which we have now at our disposal. He is a self-made man. At 17 years of age he commanded a ship sailing from ocean to ocean. He has since given his country a record of which he and his people have reason to be proud. His project has been submitted to and approved by learned societies, not only in Canada, but in Great Britain. The Society for the Advancement of Science, the Geographical Society, the Colonial Institute, and other learned bodies in Canada have approved of his idea. The list of subscriptions which has been shown us is headed by Lord Strathcona, one of the greatest of all our great Canadians, by Lord Minto, and by almost every distinguished man in this country. I believe that the government should give this matter full consideration, and not turn Captain Bernier away from this House as, in years past, discoverers of his stamp and value have been turned away in other countries. The course of Captain Bernier during the last two or three years, running from Ottawa to London, from Toronto to Quebec, from Montreal to other cities of the Dominion, reminds me of the efforts of Christopher Columbus some 400 years ago when he was asking Spain and the countries of southern Europe for assistance to enable him to discover a new world. Men were found by hundreds who failed to realize the value of his undertaking, but Providence inspired a woman, who will remain famous for all time, with the idea of contributing towards the discovery of this new world. What the intrinsic value of this discovery may be none of us are at present able to say; but there is not a Canadian who would not be proud to tell his children in years to come that Canada contributed its quota to one of the greatest scientific discoveries in the world's history.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). I assume that I am a fairly practical man. I do not want to throw away my own money or the money of the country. But I think a country is not worth being called a country, a nation is not worth being called a nation, that is not able and willing to expend a little of its money in adventures. This is an adventure that, if successful, will bring, perhaps, not much practical result for the country, but will bring it a good deal of glory. The hon. member from Winnipeg (Mr. McCreary) thinks that Canada has done enough in discovering Manitoba, the North-west Territories and the Yukon .
