Ayer's Hair Vigor keeps the hair soft and pliant, imparts to it the lustre and freshness of youth, causes it to grow luxuriantly, eradicates Dandruff, cures all scalp diseases, and is the most cleanly of all hair preparations.

AYER'S Hair Vigor has given me perfect satisfaction. I was nearly bald for six years, during which time I used many hair preparations, but without success. Indeed, what little hair I had, was growing thinner, until I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor. I used two bottles of the Vigor, and my head is now well covered with a new growth of hair.

FASHIONABLE WEDDING.

A ripple of rather more than usual magni-tude, disturbed the placidity of social circles this morning. Said ripple was occasioned by the launch of another joyous bark into the embracing sea of matrimony. The cere-mony took place at the Cathedral at 11 o'clock, the contracting parties to the same, hains, Mr. Rayen G. Taylor of St. John and being Mr. Byron G. Taylor of St. John, and Miss Maggie Murphy, now and henceforth of that city, formerly of Fredericton. The groom is a son of Charles S. Taylor, harbormaster of St. John, and in addition to being one of the best of good fellows socially, i business men in that city. The bride it is needless to inform Frederictonians, is the youngest daughter of the late Dr. Jasper Nugent Murphy, and is equally popular and esteemed for her many virtues in St. John as among her numerous friends in Fredericton.

Of course the Cathedral was crowded to the doors. The rite of union was administered by the Metropolitan, assisted by Rev. Mr. Alexander. Miss Laura Wetmore gracefully In the suppose of the river St. John.

ESTIGITURE L CHAPTER XLVI. REUNITED.

A weary, travel-stained, worn lookin individual slighted one day before the public entrance of Hotel Bristol, Place fendome, Paris, and entering the ele gantly appointed office, walked to the registering clerk, from whom he requived the ever ready pen, and proceeded to en ter his name upon the open book which lay upon the desk before him.

For an instant his pen paused above th line inducated by the attentive clerk, while his quick eye instinctively swept the whole page.

Suddenly his face darkened, his brov contracted, a slight shudder shook his raole frame, as three familiar signature recent arrivals-looked up at him from among the many others written there. He bent his head in thought a moment laid down the pen, and with a deep-draws sigh, half turned away. Then, suddenly, with a reckless glean wheeled about again, and, with a few bold rapid strokes, wrote his own name and address.

Everything that human ingenuity car devise or money procure in this world of mexicausible wealth has been lavished upon the public gardens of Paris, in order to make them attractive and fascinating to the many pleasure seekers who daily and nightly throng their spacious grounds The Chateau des Fleurs, particularly when lighted up at night, is like a fairy sound. Sothing could be more novel or beautiful.

The sters in the cloudless sky above are dim and fustless compared with the thousands of gaslights, which blaze like so many miniature suns among the grass and sparkle like resplendent diamone on the flower pots, or dance like brillian fire-flies among the dark, glossy foliage of the overreaching trees. The scene is one of enchanting loveli ness-of perfect, bewildering beauty. Around the open space used for dance ing there are arranged little gardens brilliant with many-hued flowers, both rich and rare, clusters of shrubbery trimmed to represent fantastic forms and strange devices, trees of loveliest foliage and most graceful shape, in the midst of which are enticing little trelliswork and evergreens and charming alcoves with lattice blinds while winding, smoothly-graveled walks branch forth in every direction, constantly leading the charmed wanderer into ne scenes of beauty and loveliness

Immense crowds of gay pleasureers throng this bewitchingly beautiful place, while many who do not care to join in the amusements, varied and entiting in the amusements, varied and entiting, which are provided for its frequenters come to witness the sport and enjoymen of others, and to gaze upon the wonder which seem more like a fairy tale than a reality belonging to this sublunary sphere Among this latter class there might have been seen. on a certain evening, a company of four distinguished-looking winding paths and avenues, stopping now persons, strolling leisurely along these to look a moment upon the gay and care less dancers, or again to enter and explore some fairy nook or enticing little vineclad arbor, beguiled on and on by the magio scenery and the strains of entrancing music, which rose and fell, and floated all around them upon the soft breath of his life with happiness

Sir Horace was now a pleasing specimer

Peace and contentment sat enthrone upon his placed brow, and it was not difficult to imagine the source from which all Sir Horace's party as they left the hotel this bliss proceeded, as one watched his for the Chateau des Fleurs, and his wound delicate attentions to madam, and the ed heart stood still with a dreadful fear fond gleam in his area.

Not six feet behind them a figure might

The crowd surged and heaved, like a iteral sea in a tempest, for a few mo The avenue on which the disturbance occurred bordered on a steep embank-ment or terrace, some four or five feet above another, and, in the confusion and struggles all about her, Nina by some means became separated from her escort, and also from Sir Horace and madam. Some one trod upon her dress, and tripping, nearly threw her to the ground.

Then she felt that she was being push ed and shoved until she stood upo very verge of the embankment. A step or two more and she must be hurled be ow, and perhaps crushed by others fall ing upon her She saw her danger and grew dizzy and her strength was as nothing against that frightened, surging throng.

She ceased to contend; she knew she could not save herself, and, with a little mothered cry of fear, she shut her eyes, yielded to the mighty power, and felt her feet sliding from beneath her. But at that instant a strong arm was slipped around her waist. She felt her self lifted from the ground and swung lightly one side, then dropped gently on the terrace beneath The next moment a tall form, with his bat drawn closely over his eyes, sprang beside her and hurried her away to some distance from the turbulent scene.

Not a word was spoken during the whole transaction, nor did the strong arm relax its clasp about her wast for some moments after they had stopped to rest.

Nina for the time was so faint from the excitement and fright that she did not realize that she was leaning her whole so opportunely to her rescue. She must have even lost herself entirely for a mo ment, for when she began to realize any thing she found both his arms clasping her, while her head lay pillowed upon the manly breast, and she found herself look ing up into a pair of syes that were trangely familiar, and filled with inex pressible sadness and tenderness. A low cry sprang to her lips. She raised her head and searched the face with an eager, rapid look.

Then her strength forsook her again, and the sweet, white face sank back to

But he had put her away from him, had removed his supporting arms almost be fore she was able to stand, and made her

He had spoken to her like a stranger, and there was no light of gladness or love beaming down upon her from his set, al most stern face.

Instinctively the graceful, chestnut-crowned head was lifted, with an air of hauteur, and the clear tones were strained and unnatural, as she replied: "Thank you! I trust you also are uninjured?"

He bowed an assent, his aching hear crushed back anew into his bosom at her oroud, reserved tones.
Shall I take you back to your friends?

he asked, after a moment.

"If you please," and she shivered from head to foot at the ceremouious question and her proud, sensitive heart was stung

He offered her his arm, which she just lightly pressed with her daintily gloved hand, remembering, with a pang which nearly wrung from her a cry, the last

These Shifting Tops have no rival, as a giance at the cut will show for itself; it is so simple, t requires only one person to take it off or put it on, and when off no one would think a Top had seen on, as no unsightly ends are sticking out. When the Top is on it is as firm as a rock, it can be put on any carriage in use. Persons ordering Buggles or Canopy Top Carriages should see that day have this Rail, as it will be greatly to their interest.

These Tops were awarded a Diploma at the Provincial Exhibition in October, 1880
