BATTLE IN PROGRESS

Bulgarians Besieging Adrianople Appear To Have Met With Several Checks.

London, Nov. 12.-The deadlock in the international political situation brought about by the Balkan war continues. Neither Austria-Hungary nor Servia has given way on a single essential point in regard to the futury tion by the Servians of a port on the Adriatic Sea. Despite this and the further fact that the Russian press is daily intensifying the warlike tone of its support of the Servian cause, some of the European chancellories take more optimistic view of the state of affairs. They assume that yesterday's conferences between the Austrian and Servian statesmen at Budapest have tended to relieve the crisis.

Daneff Explains.

So far as is known, however, Dr. S Daneff, the president of the Bulgarian Chamber of Deputies, simply informed the Emperor Francis Joseph and ministers of the position of the Balkan mations in the matter, and in return had explained to him for the benefit of Servia and Bulgaria, the policy of Austria-Hungary

When Archduke Francis Ferdinand, the Austrian heir to the throne, meets the German Emperor shortly, the plans for this European conference will be drawn up in outline.

This view coincides with that Great Britain as Premier Asquith explained in his speech on Saturday. The authorities at Vienna take pains to point out that the military conferences being held at Budapest just now are not incongruous with Austria's love of peace. They explain that plans and precautionary measures have been considered, but will not be carried out unless Servia should violate Austria's

COL. BECK PREDICTS SPEEDY REVIVAL

Sir George Gibbons Cannot See How Receipts Are To Go Up -Messrs. McClary and Purdom Speak.

A special committee of the board of rade will discuss the proposition submitted by Hon. Adam Beck at the special meeting held Monday evening to electrify the London and Port Stanley Railway at a cost of $890,000, and will report on the advisability of submit-January for approval; and also as to whether or not the board of trade

The special committee will consist of the following: Dr. Harry T. Reason shore, Samuel Stevely, Philip Pocock, George H. Belton, F. C. Mitchell, F. E. Leonard, C. B. Hunt, A. W. White, F. G. The discussion was lengthy, quite to the point at times. The theme to be debated was sufficient to attract a large attendance of the membership of the board, together with practically every member of the city council, Mr. Beck's Report.

Hon. Adam Beck presented his re-port. It would be rather a mistake to say that he discussed the findings of the engineers. The larger portion of his time was spent in explaining and enlarging on the hydro-electric scheme. He also spent much time in painting a picture of his proposition for electric any independent tribunal.

The following official statement was handed out by the C. P. R. in regard to the strike situation locally and in On-securing favorable freight rates, and he said it would be increasingly beneficial if electrified.

Meagre Information. Sir George Gibbons took the ground that no intelligent body of men should be asked to vote on such a large proposition with so little information at Hon. Adam Beck, he stated, had spent four-fifths of his time discussing matters that did not enter into the report at all. The report itself did not state where the freight and other revenue were to be obtained. It was a matter of universal knowledge that the London and Port Stanley at the present moment was a freight-rate corrective. The fact that the M. C. R. had ther profit in this direction could be have new steel bridges, and our roadbed obtained by its electrificaton. It was and making it an electric line would not add anything to that. Sir George objected to haphazard schemes being submitted to the ratepayers. They should be well considered, and well thought out, so that the citizens could vote intelligently. This was not the

THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT'S REVERSE.

The defeat of the Asquith Government, even on a "snap" division, is the more surprising, as it comes on the heels of a series of Government majorities ranging around a hundred. The and the smooth passage of the Home Rule bill through the House of Commons before Christmas seemed as-

The division was an ambuscade, the Unionists taking advantage of the week-end absence of many Government supporters. Only 434 members voted in a House of 670 members. The dispatches do not indicate how many Liberals went into the lobby with the Unionists. The financial clauses, which were under discussion at the time, are ing, but, on the other hand, an even the most contentious in the bill. Some Liberals hold that these provisions are on a third reading.

THE BOARD OF TRADE MEETING.

One half of Mr. Beck's speech at the Board of Trade was an attempt to score debating points against Colonel Hobbs and Mr. T. H. Smallman. the realm of hydro-electric, eloquent but irrelevant. In the other fourth, Mr. Beck applied himself to his text, but he merely reviewed the engineers report, which his hearers could read for themselves. He added nothing to it, and threw no light on the process by which "experts" estimated that the annual receipts of an electrified London and Port Stanley Railway would leap from $141,264 to $261,500 in a

Some points, however, did emerge clearly from the discussion:

1 Under the leasehold system. which Mr. Beck painted in the darkest colors, very great advantages have siders that production has not adaccrued to the city, without the financial risks involved in the scheme of and distributors have secured the services of two trunk lines-the Pere Marquette and the Michigan Centralin addition to the old-established sys-The Pere Marquette and the Michigan Central handle a large volume of traffic in and out of London. and bring the city into direct touch with districts not served by other Poads.

2. The London and Port Stanley Railway, under lease, is today, and has been for many years, a leverage upon traffic charges. Upon freight from Europe, particularly, it has enjoyed the same rate as lake ports, such as Toronto and Hamilton.

3. There is no assurance that under electrification the advantages of connection with the Michigan Central and Pere Marquette will be retained. All or a great part of the traffic developed by these lines may be sacrificed.

4. It is likely that the L. and P. S. R., as a municipal undertaking would lose all the coal traffic which was about five-sevenths of the whole tonnage carried over the road last year.

The members of the Board of Trade, in view of these facts and possibilities prudently referred the question to a committee charged with the duty of gathering more definite information than was conveyed in the engineers' report and in Mr. Beck's rhetorical exuberance. One question was unasked at the meeting and unanswered: why was a report, dated July 5, 1912, calling for an expenditure of $900,000, withheld until the second week in November? Why is the city council given only two weeks in which to decide whether to They might do some mischief elsesubmit the bylaw to the ratepayers? Why are the ratepayers given only seven weeks in which to weigh so important a project? The suppression of the report for months was not fair treatment of citizens. It was a trick to hurrah the thing through before there was time for deliberation and investigation. Mr. Beck was visibly nettled because it was not hurrahed through the Board of Trade at one

THE CAUSES OF HIGH PRICES. Professor J. A. Hobson, writing in factors entering into the universal rise

He does not agree with the popular theory that the rise is caused mainly by the increase in the production of gold. Even the immense amounts added each year to the gold supply make only in value a small fraction of one per cent. of the aggregate business transactions of the year. Professor Hobson argues also against the theory that the new gold increasing bank reserves causes larger loans hence cheaper money and higher prices Loan money is not cheaper; interest rates have risen along with the rise of commodity prices. It is possible that Professor Hobson makes too little account of the gold increase, though he admits that it tends slightly to enhance the cost of living and by enlarging bank reserves to lower interest rates and thus indirectly make money so plentiful as to boost prices. But why has interest risen? It is that in South America, Canada, Africa the purpose. spirits of the Liberal party had revived and Asia development calls for more since the reassembling of Parliament, and more capital. Gold reserves help Rowell's rejection of the proposal that more important by far, thinks Professor Hobson, capital is subscribed on credit. Formerly land and some few forms of personal property were alone available as effective pledges; but now nesses take a financial form that makes credit. There is thus on the part of the banks a greater freedom of loan-

Professor Hobson emphasizes the final consideration that at present a disproportionate and growing amount of the newly-created capital and labor of the world is sunk in the road-making and other developmental processes in new or backward countries. Few are better qualified than he to explain the complex problem of prices against which the masses beat more and more from day to day. THERE'S MONE! IN HUMOR

(By Special Arrangement With the Winnipeg Telegram.]

There is more money in humor than n anything else on the literary market. The only humorist that I know of in English history who died in son why he found it hard to make ends meet was owing to the fact that he minted his humor in the form of verse. But even so, if he had not been by tuberculosis, I believe that he would have amassed a fortune. Consider, however, those lucky mortals ndowed with the gift of humor, who gave it to the public in the form of prose. Think of the tremendous sucess of Sir Walter Scott, George Eliot, Charles Dickens, to speak of the regular great novelists whose prime asset was humor; then think of later humorists, such as Artemus Ward, Mark Twain, Rudyard Kipling, Jerome K. Jerome, Bill Nye, O. Henry, to say nothing of numerous other story vriters who have become famous chiefly because they amused the public. Writers like Dunne, creator of "Dooley," and Butler, author of "Pigs Is Pigs," have been able to make a great deal of money in a very short time from a very small output of ma-

When the guests arrive, they will have much fun guessing what each other represents. For instance, Little Miss Muffet carries a bowl containing "curds and whey," and a big toy spider dangles from her belt. Jack and Jill are inseparable, carrying a bright tin pail. The old woman who ived in a shoe could carry a slipper filled to overflowing with doll-babies, and so on.

One game you could have would be to seat all the guests in a circle, and, beginning at the lert of the hostess, have each one recite a nonsense rhyme without laughing. The player who cannot get through without giggling is bliged to leave the circle. Prepare beforehand, slips of paper with the first line of a Mother Goose rhyme on each. Each person takes one, and is called upon to write an original poem using the first line as a basis. The slips are then collected, and the efforts ead aloud.

Some music, and the refreshments should fill up the rest of the time very nicely. Slices of cold roast fowl, potato salad, cake and jelly, and coffee, would make nice "eatings." And if you wish to give "favors" have a huge Jack Horner pie in the centre of the table, with ribbon ends projecting. At a signal from the hostess all pull at once, and find a little trinket at the opposite end of the ribbon. The more ridiculous and unsuited these are, the better fun, of course.

The electrification of the London and Port Stanley would destroy the usefulness of both lines, and would mean a great financial loss not only to the city, but to those who had invested their money in the traction company. Hon. Adam Beck, in commencing the discussion, stated that he had opposed a long lease of the London and Port Stanley when he was mayor, because he thought that at some time or other the city would electrify the line, and operate it as a municipal enter-prise. He considered his duty finished when he had submitted a report showing that electrification was not only a feasible scheme, but a profitable one as Alleged by One Trustee That well. He was glad of the opportunity of explaining the situation to the members of the board, and he would leave them to judge whether or not it was a proper question to be submitted the ratepayers for their approval or to otherwise, if they so desired. The Radial Outlook, According to Hon. Adam Beck, the London and Port Stanley would play an important part in securing radial railways. It was undoubtedly true that London had lost a large number of radials because of the agreement between the city and the London Street Railway Company. It was impossible for them to obtain an entrance into the city. If the London and Port Stanley were electrified, terminal facilities would be furnished to all. The city could build lines into the centre of the switching line connecting all steam roads of the city would have to be built about the city, in order to give the proper treatment. There were three outstanding features from which the electrification of the London and Port Stanley should be considered. In the first place it would give the benefit of water communication. At a recent investigation in Western Canada, the railways Informed the Dominion Railway Commission that the reason that freight rates were lower in the east than they were in the west was because of the fact that they had to compete with water rates in the east. It would be difficult to find in all India, he writes, a more remarkable personality than Jakobi, or to discover in any part of the world a man who has led such an amazing life.

Born at Constantinpole, he was at the early age of 12 sold as a slave at the market there and became the property of a rich pasha. "Etta's Father."

Though the hut was a crude thing, a triumph of essentials over luxuries, Helen had never before halled four walls and a roof with such hearifelt, if silent, thanksgiving. She sank exhausted on a rough bench, and watched the matter-of-fact Engadiners unpacking the stores and firebusinesslike air supplied the tonic she needed. Though the howling storm seemed to threaten the tiny refuge with destruction, these two men set to work, coolly and methodically, to prepare a meal. Barth arranged the contents of Karl's bulky package on a small table, and the porter busied himself with lighting a fire in a Swiss stove that stood in the centre of the outer room. An inner apartment loomed black and uninviting through an open doorway. Helen discovered later that some scanty accommodation was providence.

If she washes herself smoothly, the next twelve hours will be wet. If she licks against the grain, it will be wet. When she lies with her back to the fire, there will surely be a squall. When her tall is up and her coat rises, look out for wind."

Helen discovered later that some scanty accommodation was provided there for those who meant to sleep in the hut in readiness for an early ascent, while it supplied a separate room in the event of women taking part in an expedition.

Bower offered her a quantity of brandy and water. She declined it, declaring that she needed only time to regain her breath.

Within a remarkably short space of time Karl had concocted two cups of steaming coffee. Helen was then all aglow. Her strength was restored. The boisterous wind had crimsoned her cheeks beneath the tan. She had never looked such a picture of radiant womanhood as after this tussle with the storm. Mr. McKellar in opening stated that some would wonder why he had chosen this subject, but said he thought the graves of the early Christian martyrs were as important as the tombs of those famous in battle, as found in Great Britain and France. He gave a very extensive description of the interior, which covered 615 acres of ground, and if in a straight line would extend 40 miles, and were in the nature of shelves about four deep, in which the dead were placed, and then sealed up, and on the front the dead person's name was placed. War Correspondent John Banister Writes For Advertiser From War-King on Field in Motor-People Suffer From Bullets

INOTE .- John Banister is today one of the leading war correspondents on the firing line in the Balkans. He won his spurs in the Japanese-Russian war and in the Portuguese revolution in 1910. The old war correspondent travelled with the headquarters of the army and wrote long essays, which were printed sometime. The new twentieth century war correspondent gets to the front by hook or crook, writes his story on horseback or in an army wagon, and hurries with it to the distant mall station regardless of hardships, lack of sleep or hunger. Such a correspondent is John Banister. It is barely three weeks since the Montenegrins opened the Balkan war at Podgoritza, but today The Advertiser, thousands of miles away, prints his story direct from the first battlefield.]

I saw him probing the wound of a man of 60, who sat stripped to the waist, supported by two other old men, upon a plain deal table in a room The bullet was found and extracted and the wound hastily dressed. The

The contrast between his modern skill and the eighteenth century conditions in which he worked was gruesome. There were no wagons for the wounded. The worst cases came on stretchers, generally borne by Albanians in queer black and white costumes with woolen scarfs tied over their faces, as though they suffered from permanent toothache. I saw 300 Turkish prisoners lined up before the military headquarters and then marched off to prison, with a piece of bread each. Every man over 18 and under 65 is in the firing line except those needed for administration in the town. Women bring up ammunition, fodder and food in trains of bullock wagons. There are hundred of women under arms. I travelled part of the way with the wife of a Servian colonel, whose husband and son, a boy of 16, are at the front, with the army. She had a gun, and was going to join them.

There are no newspapers printed now. Women gather at the barracks to hear the names of the known dead and wounded. So many men of the same names are fighting that dreadful perplexity is inevitable.

Hallfax, N. S., Nov. 11 .- The Government steamer Minto arrived in Halifax today, after a four-months' trip to Hudson Bay for the purpose of continuing the survey of the approaches to Port Nelson. By keeping well ployees, and union label trades deto the southward in Hudson Straits very little ice was met there, so that as a result of these precautions the voyage to Nelson was completed in the very good time of twelve days. She had chilblains and when the skin broke some poison got into the wound and made a terrible place. It was painful, much swollen, and made her almost unable to move about. Dr. C. R. Charteris, of Chatham, president of the Ontario Library Association, spoke on "Permanency of the Village and Rural Libraries." "Some years ago, even the possibility of a library in a little village was a matter of conjecture," said Dr. Char-"Many scoffed at the idea and prophesied that it would prove an ideal place for loungers. This opposition was finally overcome by the persistence of parties interested, and the opinion of the scoffers changed with the establishment of the institutions.

The Rural Library.
"By the interest taken in the rural library depends its permanency," continued the speaker. "The officials and trustees must not be mere ornaments to the institution, but its strongest advocates. The librarian should be courteeus, sympathetic, and be able to advise borrowers intelligently on the best books to read. The librarians should carry the interests of the library into the district where he or she lives, and not vice-versa." Dr. Charteris stated that he would rather be a library trustee than mayor of London. He had been a trustee for 18 years and in all that time had been absent from only three meetings.

Nature Books. Prof. John Dearness, vice-principal of the Normal School, gave an edifying address on "The Importance of Nature Books to a Library." Mr. Dearness divided nature study books into five main classes, viz.: Essays and treatises, art books, nature fiction, pedagogic books, and specialized books. He mentioned typical books as illustrations for each class. Mr. Dearness stated that Long and other well-known writers of nature study stories were unduly criticised. These authors really tried to interpret the lives of animals in the light their human sympathies, and their works were exceedingly interesting.
