LIVE CHILD IN A COFFIN.

Waiting the burial it Cried Out and was Coroner Johnson and a jury investigated a most extraordinary case at Prospect cemetery, Toronto on Saturday. At Fairbank, about seven miles out on the Vaughan plank road, live William Maton, a grocer, and his wife. On Tuesday morning, October 3, Mrs. Maton gave birth to a child, which being supposed to be stillborn was placed in a box after breakfast on that morning and taken to Prospect cemetery for interment. When the clerk of the cemetery came to look at the death certificate he found that it was written out; that is to say, it was not one of the regular printed forms, as is required. He refused to accept the body for burial. In this certificate the child was described as a male. At last the body was accepted at the cemetery and placed in the office until the grave could be dug.

The box had only been a short time here when the clerk heard sounds issuing from the box. He at once rushed out to call a couple of workmen, but they thought he was not serious and would not go at once. While he was talking to them they heard the child cry out, and mmediately they broke open the box and the little one was living and showing considerable strength. Word was at once sent to Dr. P. H. Bryce, who was Mrs. Maton's physician, but that gentleman was down in the city so Dr. Page was prought from Fairbanks. He at once gave the infant proper attention and then removed it to his house where he had it properly treated.

Dr. Page took | boss over every sixty persons, and when the remains to the cemetery again, but of a box is full, the picker calls out and the course superintendent Pinder refused to overseer hands her a ticket for thirty receive the body without the consent of cents. WHAT WAS IT.

Horrible Monster That Attacked Two Women on a Lonely Road. As Mrs. Casper Mann and Mrs. Joseph Grosmick, two well known ladies, says the Toronto World, were returning home in a buggy about sunset, they heard an annatural noise in passing along the road south of the Magnus quarry. The noise was a cross between a bellow and a shriek and excited the curiosity of the hearers, but as they could not locate it, but little attention was paid to it, and they continued on their journey. In approaching a lonely spot on the road where large trees stand on either side and all along is covered with underbrush they heard the awful noise again. This time it appeared to come from the boughs of a large tree just ahead of them. As they approached the PURNACES, Stoves, Tin-ware. Royal Diamond women were horrified to see a horriblewomen were horrified to see a horriblelooking monster descending from the tree coon-fashion. The horse seemed paralyzed with fear, and for a moment refused to answer the frantic effort of the driver to force him ahead. As the animal reached the ground it gave a terrific snort and roar, and started Plates, Camp Requisites, Acme for the buggy. One of the occupants seized the whip and prepared for the attack. Recovering the power of locomotion, the horse started at a brisk rate down the road. Then the race for life began. The strange monster, though peculiarly constructed made excellent time, and in a few minutes had overtaken the buggy and was making frantic efforts to climb up on the box in the rear. The lady with the whip laid on the lash with all her might in the hope of frightening the KITCHEN & SHEA, fearful-looking animal off, but the stings of the whip only seemed to infuriate it and increase its determination to devour everything in sight. As the women were about to give up the fight and surrender themselves to the rapacious brute, the joyful sound of the bark of a friendly dog fell upon their ears and they realized that they were nearing a farm-house. To their gratification two men stepped out on the road a short distance in front of them, and it was but the work of a moment for the women to notify them of their terrible predicament. As the men and dogs approached, the animal seemed to sniff danger, and, with a roar that could be heard for a quarter of a mile, whirled to one side and ambled through the bushes. As it made its way through the brush, its course could be plainly discerned by the waving branches. The men, being unharmed, did not deem it wise to follow the animal, and the dogs showed no disposition to take up the More dead than alive, the women were assisted into the farm-house, where they at the Hotel Pickwick. On June 18, her were given such stimulants as were at hand, and when sufficiently recovered,

In its effort to climb into the buggy, the animal left un-

bed, there being deep cuts and scratches all over the rear of the vehicle. The spot where the animal made its appearance and the country for miles around is lonely and seldom frequented by farmers or others, and is certainly just the place for a wild animal of any kind to seek its lair. Inquiry of scientists and naturalists, fails to throw any light on the existence anywhere of such an animal as this, and it is probable that a searching party will be organized in the hope of capturing it, and thus adding another curiosity to zoology.

wheat, oats, hay and potatoes, but failing to make both ends meet at this kind of farming, he turned his attentions to hop culture. After finding out all he could about the raising of hops, both here and in England, he brought a man from Ontario who understood the business. The first year he set out fifty acres of roots, the second year, about fifty acres more, and the third year as many more acres, until last year he had about one hundred and fifty acres under hops. He added forty acres more last fall, 190 acres in all. The roots are set out in hills about six feet apart each way, so that a span of horses can plow between them. Three cedar poles about fifteen or sixteen feet long, pointed, are placed in each hill. He generally plants potatoes close up to the poles, and out of the way of the horses and manures them with superphosphates. Two years ago he raised two thousand barrels of potatoes in that way. The starting of the business cost about ten thousand dollars. It requires about forty hands, male and female, to attend the hop yards during the summer. He has four large buildings about one hundred feet long by thirty-five wide and two stories high, with furnaces for drying the hops, after which they are pressed into bales of about one hundred pounds each, and sent to the market. The picking of the hops, is quite a big affair. This fall Mr. Harris had two hundred and fifty men and women, boys and girls, picking for eight days. The hops are picked into boxes with four compartments, each compartment holding about two and a half bushels. The pickers are paid thirty cents for each compartment. Two men attend fifteen pickers who are mostly girls. The men cut the vines about six inches from the ground and lift the poles out, hops and all, and lay them across the boxes and move the boxes from place to The poor little thing lived until about place in the field. dominion. He endeavors to identify the facturer. That such should be the state of affairs no one denies. But the peculiarity of Mr. Foster's argument is that he claims that the national policy is the proper instrument to bring about this happy result. In Mr. Foster's mind the national policy creates no combines gives both the farmer and the manufacturer a grip on the home market; and enables both to overcome foreign competition. He seems to forget that every member of a community is a consumer and only a few are producers. The protective tariff aids the producer by raising the price of the article produced. What we want is something or some system that will aid the producer, by lowering the cost of the production of the article. Such a system, be it free trade or reciprocity, or what you will, will aid consumer and producer alike. But the tendency of the national policy is the reverse. It benefits the few at the expense of the many. The farmers will do well to reason carefully and intelligently the ideas of Mr. Foster before endorsing them.

THE COMING OF THE PREMIER. It is understood that Sir John Thompson is to make a tour of New Brunswick to hold a series of political meetings, and to boom toryism generally. Sir John has our sympathy. He is working like a Trojan to keep in line the unruly members of Sir John A. McDonald's political family. What with the do-as-I-like of Mr. Foster, the injured dignity of Tupper over the French treaty, the onimous growls of Kennedy F. Burns over the governorship, and the readiness with which the people are at last catching on to the true worth of the national policy, the position of the premier, to say the least, is no sinecure. Judging by a superhere, one would naturally think that New Brunswick was a very hot bed of torvism, and the visit of the premier now must indicate that there has been a very rapid decline of that torvism, and that an this visit there will, doubtless, be a lot of speech making, flags flying and bands will subside, and we venture to say that when it does, a reaction will set in, and toryism will be at a lower ebb than ever. C., of Moncton to the position of county court judge for Westmorland and Kent seems to be received with general favor.

The career of Mr. Wells has been an exceptionally brilliant one. But little over forty years of age, he has for several years been among the leading members of the bar of New Brunswick. He is a native of Westmorland county and was called to the bar in 1878. He has taken an active interest in politics, but has met defeat at the polls several times. His geniality of temper and his ability will render him a popular and able judge. AT THE setting of Northumberland

THE ST. MARYS FIRE.

The Business Portion Entirely Swept

But a short time ago Gibson was almost wiped out of existence by the fire fiend. Ill luck seems to haunt that side of the river for now the village of St. Marys is a heavy sufferer. The fire began on the morning of Tuesday last in a woodshed in the rear of Thomas Biden's dwelling and spread rapidly.

At one time it was thought that every building in the place would be swept away, but by the strenuous exertions of the firemen from Fredericton assisted by large numbers of citizens, and the people of Gibson as well, and those of St. Marys working like Trojans the fire was at last got under control but not until some twenty three buildings were completely destroyed. The whole block on the upper side of the ferry road out to the main road has been burned completely down and of the lower side of the ferry road only Winslow Tiley's store remains standing on the corner, and burned remains. Biden's bakery was the first to go, then S. Dayton's house and shop, and in three hours from the start of the fire, the street was in ruins, the flames had gone up the main road, burning everything to Alfred Haines's residence, and down Jefferey street its way. Considerable furniture and other effects were saved, but a number lost all they had. Mr. Dayton's family lost even their clothes. The St. Marys firemen did well with their hand engine, and a detachment from the Fredericton brigade, in charge of chief engineer Lipsett with the steamer "Alexandra" went promptly over to the assistance of the afflicted village and did excellent work. It was ten o'clock before the "Alexandria" was called off. It required strong efforts to save Walter Mc-Farlane's hame factory, E. Vanwat's store and residence, the soap factory, S. He leaves a widow Rev. Wm. Jeffrey's residence and barns, and three daughters, one of whom is married there. The remains will be brought to Fredericton Junction for burial, and will probably arrive there on Monday. The cause of Mr. Moore's death was Bright's disease, from which he had suffered for some time.

The Kingsclear Fair. The Kingsclear agricultural society held their annual fair at the agricultural hall at Kingsclear on Wednesday the 18th. The weather was all that could be desired. The attendance, though not quite up to former years, was very good, a large number from both sides of the river and from this city being present. The exhibits were good both in quality and quantity, especially in roots, horticulture, dairy produce and domestic and fancy work, etc. The show of live stock was somewhat ahead of previous years, a number of the animals shown having been prize winners at the recent pro vincial exhibition. The judges got through with their work about four o'clock and the prizes were awarded in the main building. The judges in the different departments were as follows: Flowers and fancy work, Robert Gray, Mrs. Hubbard, and Mrs Lepage; horticulture and dairy produce, Edward Dunphy, Jas Merithew and Geo W Currie; domestic manufacture, W T Whitehead, Mrs J McKeen and Miss Annie Gilman; grain and pulse, W Guiou, J Hawkins, Alex McGibbon; horses, Thos H Colter, A Morithew Wm Colter; roots, etc., W H Merithew, Wm Colter; roots, etc., WH McKnight, Jas Tennant, W Shaw; cattle and sheep, W W Hubbard, John McKeen. J W Jewett. The principal exhibitor were Sloat Bros, John A Campbell, Mrs Straton, John W Camber, Gordon Currie, Straton, John W Camber, Gordon Currie, R Murray, A T Macpherson, Percy Powys,

Wm Leek, Joseph McKay, John C Murray,
W K Allen, John McIntosh, Allen McKay, Havelock Wheeler, Wm Graham, A E Cliff, Brunswick Fox, Judson Dunphy, Joseph

POETRY.

WHY SHOULD WE WEEP FOR THOSE WHO DIE?

Why should we weap for those who die? They fall, their dust returns to dust; Their souls shall live eternally Within the mansions of the just.

They die to live, they sink to rise, They leave this wretched mortal shore; But brighter suns and bluer skys Shall smile on them for evermore.

Why should we sorrow for the dead? Our life on earth is but a span; They tread the path that all must tread,

They die the common death of man. The noblest songster of the dale Must cease when winter's frown's appear

The reddest rose is wan and pale When autumn tints the changing year. The fairest flower on earth must fade, The brightest hopes on earth must die; Why should we mourn that man was made

To droop on earth, but dwell on high. The soul, the eternal soul, must reign In worlds devoid of pain and strife; Then why should mortal man complain Of death which leads to happier life? -[Alfred Tennyson.

CONTINUED. "That would ease us of a difficulty. In that case, we should put you into an Italian mad-house as Anita's daughter. 1 think so-I'm not sure: on the whole it is safer, perhaps, to keep you here, and if anything should happen to you-as it may do-a few of these paving stones will loosen and come up, and the soil I fancy is soft enough beneath." He laughed. Her hands fell rigidly against the sides of the skirt of the shabby gown; she looked, with a strange ex-

"I may mean that. We shall see. Once, Nessa, I had a dog that had served me faithfully, and that was fond of me, and that I was fond of. It grew old; it was of no more use, so I kindly shot it. An easy death—quickly over. Once upon a time I had another dog, who took a fancy to a friend of mine, and disobeyed my whistle, and was to be found, two or three times a day, on my friend's doorstep. I took that dog and I chained him up. Once a day I used to take him bones and meat and water; I put them down just within his sight, just beyond reach of his chain. Poor Carlo! He died, tooat last. He took a long time about it. He understood, I hope, that he was paying the penalty of his own indifference. That's a fable, Nessa; reflect on it. Good-

CHAPTER IX.

"Why, Linden, where are you off to "I am going abroad, Dick. I can't stop while I talk to you. Sit down there, if you like, I must put these things into this portmanteau.'

"Paris?" queried Dick, laconically. "No. Italy."

"What on earth are you going to do "Well I can't explain. My first object is to see Captain Beamish." "I say, Linden, have you-have you seen this morning's Times?"

"Yes. Mrs. Beamish is dead-that is what you mean, I suppose," said Beamish in a low unnaturally steady tone. "It must have been sudden?"

"No. I met old Mabin in town just now, and he says she had been ill for some months. It was consumption." "Poor soul!" "You should have said that sooner, Dick. Don't pity her now. I was glad to know that her troubles here were over." "Had she troubles? She was fond of that husband of hers, I suppose, or why else should she have married him? Some shady tales are afloat about him." "And the shadiest tales are not generally known. It was he who robbed me of those diamonds that I lost in Paris." "He!"

with me as far as Charing Cross, Dick."

"Yes. It's a long story; I haven't time to tell it. Here's my hansom. Drive "What did you mean by what you said just now?" began Dick, as the hansom rattled on its way. "Beamish had a hand in that theft?"

"Yes. He, I believe, planned it. He forced his wife to write me a letter, begging me to come to her; and I foolishly fell into the trap he had laid for me. The impudent daring of the fellow surpasses belief; I got a note from him a day later from Berlin, saying that he had discovered that his wife was corresponding with me, Lipson. and that on that account, he had been compelled to leave Paris, and that if I continued this correspondence I must be prepared to stand the consequences. His cleverness overshot the mark, howeverfor that note of his convinced me that he was the author of the deep laid plot by which I had been robbed." "And all this time you have said nothing about this!"

"She was living." "But what of that?" "She must have written the letter-in obedience, no doubt, to her husband's commands, perhaps his threats-but at all events, she wrote it. I could not bring disgrace upon the woman I loved."

"And now?" "Now I am going to confront Beamish with my accusation. Possibly those stones | trouble?—that is what I have come toor at all events the finest of them, have night to ask you. When I asked you not as yet been parted with; if not I mean to unearth them." "You've a hard task. Not a very hopeful one."

"You have let too long a time elapse." "That, too, I know. Still I am going to do the best I can."

"Look here, Linden, I've nothing to keep me in town-I shall come with you." "Have I time to run to my rooms for a few things?" "That you haven't." "All right. Never mind. I've money with me. I'll come."

Late one sunny afternoon the two friends arrived at the little Italian town between the hills, and made the necssary inquiries, and were pointed out the house which they sought. "Captain Beamish is still there, I suppose?" asked Linden, in Italian, of the handsome lad who was giving him the desired direction.

"Has not the signor heard?"

"Heard what?" "The English signor was found yesterday-drowned-washed ashore just there beneath that wall. Some say it was grief -grief, the signor will understand, for his young wife who died about a week

"Captain Beamish is dead?" exclaimed Linden incredulously. "Dead many hours when he was washed ashore—so the doctors said." "Who is living up there now?" pointing to the house half hidden behind the grey olive-clad wall.

Englsh signor's was staying there; but he ish divided the money which the sale of has gone. They say that old Anita has the diamonds had brought them; they and went slowly up the hill. "No; foul play, more likely. Ah! search it, Dick." "You scarcely expect to find anything

"Not the diamonds: but I may find and even that is worth searching for." For an hour they wandered about the great rooms, some of which were empty, and then went out in the open air. Dick paused outside the door leading into the grounds, and stood there holding a cigar this confession—before he died." between the fingers of his left hand.

"Linden, can vou give me a light?'

ar away to the land of sunset. "Poor fellow!" murmured the younger man to himself, "his thoughts are all he has. I'll leave him with them for a bit. Now, I wonder if this heaven forsaken ught to be a box of matches somewhere:

The yellow light died out of the sunset sky; the shades of the olived-crowned wall grew fainter and fainter on the grassy path: darkness enveloped the old garden; but still Linden and his thoughts were left alone together.

At last he missed Dick, rose, and looked aguely round for him, then went towards "Dick!" he cried, but no answer came He was not impatient. Leaning his shoulder against the stone framework of the open door, he waited. "Linden, for heaven's sake, come here!

The voice startled him from his reverie. He turned to see his friend's white face close beside him. "What is it?"

Dick. "She's dead, I think, but I'm not good enough for Dick." "What are you talking about?" cried Linden roughly. "Don't joke upon such "Joke! Look at me. Do I look like a man who is joking?" Don't waste moments; they're precious. Come!"

managed to carry her up here. I fancied she was breathing, and then I fancied not. See-she is here." With a great cry Linden fell on his knees before the prostrate figure on the ground. A candle was glaring on the table; its light fell on the white thin worn face—a face which was beautiful still, though its youthful roundness was gone forever. Without a word, without another sound Linden lifted the fair head agrinst his arm and sought for a flask of brandy which he had with him on his journey. Dick brought a cup, and still in silence the two men succeeded in pouring a little of the spirit between the cold pale lips. "She lives," said Dick at last speaking very quietly. "Hush! don't give me hope," was the almost harsh reply. A few minutes interval, then a little nore brandy was administered. And then at last the feeble pulse beat more surely; the girl with a long shiver moved slightly and opened her eyes. "Dick, go and find a doctor," said Linden quietly. As Dick departed he drew the girl a little closer within his arms. He looked down at her with a tender reverent glance.

"I am here, Nessa; you are safe; you are with me," he said gently. The sunken eyes had no gladness in them. They looked at him, but that was "Dearest, do you know me?" "Yes." she faintly murmured. "All is well, Nessa. You have been cruelly used, but all is well. You are safe with me. Tell me, dear one, that you are glad to see me." "I am tired-so tired," was the murmured answer; and the weary eyelids Three months later, one golden summer evening, a bright haired woman was standing upright before the great oriel window of the drawing room at Mount

She was shading her eyes with her hand, and watching the sun go down, and looking with a happy smile at the path of gold upon the water. Someone came softly across the room

"Nessa," he said. "Hugh!" She turned a soft loving glance upon him, and he took her in his arms and kissed her.

"I didn't hear you come," said she selfreproachfully; and yet I was thinking about you.' "Was it the thought of me that brought that happy smile to your lips, Nessa?"

"Yes," she answered simply. "I am glad I have the power to make you happy. Nessa, when are you going to give me the right to guard you from two months ago you said 'wait'-when I asked you a month ago I got the same reply. I have waited long enough, dearest;

I want you to be mine-mine to love and honor and cherish—mine till death parts us. When will you give yourself to me?" "Whenever you will take me, Hugh, "My darling!" During the next few minutes neither spoke again. Linden's arm was about of their marriage in St. John at her the fairest woman in the world." "I may grow to look less old again, byand-by, Hugh; I hope I shall; happiness works wonders, and I am not really old." "Old!—just a girl in her teens."

Their visit stirred up the wrath of the anti-Blair or tory party, and after consulting some of their oracles and observing the position of the moon, they came to the conclusion that October 10th, would be the day that they could get in power in our council. The liberal ticket had been formed, being John Leonard and S. C. Perry. J. H. Pearson, the standard bearer and expounder of tory laws and all dark tory deeds, put a candidate in the field, in the person of David Hamilon, so the story goes, and in his mind he saw his candidate leading the poll. The observing liberal party saw a brake in the Ocr. 13.—Henry A. Stoddard, of Calais, tory ranks, for the most intelligent tory in whom they had always relied as the dren while teething.
