Students, Attention!

Rare Chance to Secure a College Education.

We have made arrangements that enable us to place within the reach of a limited number of deserving students, opportunities for securing, on easy terms, a classical or commercial education. A little work during the vacation season will secure this for the one worthily striving for such a boon, but who may not be in possession of sufficient money to realize his heart's desire. The facilities at our disposal enable us to offer a year's board and tuition at

St. Dunstan's College

to any three young men who will fulfill the necessary, easy conditions required. These may be beginners, or former students of the College who have not been able to complete their course. In addition to this we have at our disposal four scholarships at the

of Charlottetown. A full course in this excellent Commercial College may be won by any four young men or women, in town or country, who will fulfill the easy conditions we require. Whenever anyone satisfies the requirements in either of the cases enumerated he or she will be given a certificate entitling the holder to the educational advantages offered. A rare opportunity is here placed within reach of those desirous of acquiring a good education, and no time should be lost in taking advantage thereof. Only a little work is required in order to secure the coveted boon, and all can easily be accomplished during this summer's vacation, so that the winners may enter either college at the opening of the next academic year.

What Does Not Make a Gentleman.

FROM "A GENTLEMAN."

Chewing is a habit that had better be unlearned as soon as possible. It is happily ceasing to be an American vice, and with it will cease the chronic dyspepsia and many of the stomach and throat diseases which have become almost national. Many a man, come to the years of discretion, bitterly regrets that he ever learned to chew tobacco; but he thought once that it was a manly thing, and he learns when too late that the many things would have been to avoid it. Some of you will perhaps remember a fashion boys had—I don't know whether they have it now—of getting tattooed by some expert who practised the art. What pain we suffered while a small star was picked in blue ink at the junction of the thumb with the hand!—and how proud we were of a blue anchor printed indelibly on our wrist! But a day came when we should have been glad to have blotted out this insignia with thrice the pain. And so the day will come when the inveterate tobacco-chewer will wish with all his heart that he had never been induced to put a piece of tobacco into his mouth.

Going back to the subject of entertainments, let me impress on you that it is your duty when you go into society to think as little of yourselves as possible, and to talk as little of yourselves. If a man can sing or play on any musical instrument or recite, and he is asked to do any of these things, let him not refuse. Young women sometimes say no in society when they mean yes; but young men are not justified in practicing such an affectation. It is not good taste to show that one is anxious to sing or to play or to recite. If you are invited out, do not begin at once by talking about elocution, until somebody is forced to ask you to recite; and do not hum snatches of songs until there is no escape for your friends from the painful duty of asking you to sing. The restless efforts of some amateurs to get a hearing in society always brings to mind a certain theatrical episode. There was a young actress who thought she could sing, and consequently she introduced a vocal solo whenever she could. She was the cast for the principal part in a melodrama full of tragic situations. The manager congratulated himself that here, at least, there was no chance for the tenuous young lady to try her scales. But he was mistaken. The great scene was on. A flash of lightning illumined the stage. The actress was holding a pathetic conversation with her mother as the thunder rolled. The mother suddenly fell with a shriek, struck dead. And then the devoted daughter said, "Aha, mother is dead! Alas, I will now sing the song she loved so much in life!" And the young lady walked to the footlights and warbled "Comrades"

The appended passages are from a most interesting letter written by an American priest working in the Philippines to his sister, an American nun:

I wish you could know how happy this makes me feel. I wish you could know how wonderful—how all-absorbing—this mission field is. I wish you could know how great a grace my call to this mission is; all my life seems to have been a preparation for this great field of work, and my prayer every day is that the Good Master may be pleased to allow me to pass here the rest of life's brief span. I shall be surprised if He does not. The climate is splendid; far better than in New York, and Mindanao is one of the pleasantest parts of the Philippines. It is precisely where Americans like to go. And so it is that when we poor missionaries imagine we are making a sacrifice we get the hundred-fold here.

I am in excellent health and in more than excellent spirits, and the idea of going back never enters my mind. We have care of countless multitudes of people, people whom one cannot help loving. Their common custom is to come out of the houses, or hasten towards the priest on the street or road to kiss his hands. Poor, simple, docile, helpless, countless souls! Commonly as many as 20,000 to 25,000 souls are in charge of one native priest! Bishop Rooker has 150 parishes without pastors. Bishop Hendrick about 60, Bishop Doherty has no priest to send to places where Episcopalians imitate Holy Mass, say the Rosary, wear cassocks, etc., etc.

In your America case and abundance you cannot realize what we experience in mission life. I believe a great part of our terrible difficulties here will be settled only by religious communities being established among us. The radical change following the destruction of the Catholic power of Spain has left us resourceless—few and poor Catholic schools, scarcely any religious—almost no nuns—no mission funds and a dastardly Aglipayan propaganda. Communities of nuns would help greatly to solve the question of schools and of religious instruction.

We shall have a council soon, and that will do much to simplify matters. The council will be probably followed by the formation of five new dioceses. Mindanao will most likely be one of these. It is a real mission land!

I have passed through a part of the Moro country. Within four miles of Otagayao are 4,000 non-Christian Montenos, or Mountain Visayans.

But the great part of the Northern, or populated portion of the province of Misamis, of which Cagayan is the capital, is now apostate; town after town all gone from the Church, as well as churches, rectories, land, etc. A lot of soundrels dressed as priests, supported by a few worse and more dangerous lot of political ex-insurrecto villains, have the audacity to imitate Holy Mass, and pretend to administer the sacraments; while a real priest or two go round rigged up as Bishops. We have been in an only a few months, and we know how hard will be the task to bring the people back to the faith.

So you now know the situation. The fact of an American priest being with the Spaniards helps greatly. It is amazing to see how every American, soldier or civilian, stands up for the Catholic Church. Military officers are among our best and most devoted friends. I send my best regards to all the kind friends who are helping to procure us assistance. I understand the state of the Mindanao mission, formerly entrusted to the Spanish Government, now completely paralyzed for want of means. I am becoming an adept in getting the Chinese ship owners to give me half rates in order to save a few pesos.

The success of the missionaries is wonderful. I met Father—lately—founded 80 settlements of converts, baptized personally 50,000 persons, including 2,000 Moros. On one occasion he poured the waters of baptism on 232 persons. Often he had 100 to baptize. He used to go with bands of music and a troop of the older Christians to invite the wild mountain people to the Christian settlements.

May God bless you, dear, and He will bless you doubly if you work for the Filipino mission.

Really, they should both read "The Reliquary" and develop a sense of humor. But never write anything like this in the future.

Profr's heart good to know that scribe writers and editors were still deceiving themselves and the public with the hoax which his fertile fancy invented long ago?

It may be no harm to call attention to another blunder in the above New York Evening Post paragraph. Lally-Tollendal was not even born in 1749 when he is said to have conducted this ill-fated expedition to India. The Critic's writer and the Post's editor confound the son with the father. It was Thomas Arthur Lally, Baron de Tollendal, who had charge of that expedition and not his son Lally-Tollendal who was not born till 1751. The Critic's writer seems to have copied blindly Father Prout's joke except in one instance. Prout does not assign the authorship of the poem to Lally-Tollendal. He says that one of Boanmanoi's retainers must have been the writer of the lines. Mr. Hall, as it were, goes Father Prout one better here.—Sacred Heart Review.

Over in London Father Bernard Vaughan's crusade against the indignities of the "smart set" has won him praise in the most unexpected quarters, and the press has been using terms about the learned Jesuit that are rarely bestowed on Catholic priests. The "Daily News" now joins the other papers in likening him to Savonarola, and the "Daily Chronicle" says, what is more: "Roman Catholicism has rendered an inestimable service to Christian civilization in its attitude towards marriage, and Father Vaughan's eloquent protest against the habit of regarding lightly the most sacred of all human ties is in harmony with the best traditions of his Church."

The Socialist citizens of Paris were greatly shocked the other day to see workmen putting up an altar in the Musee Clouy. How could the State, after the separation law, pay for the erection of an altar? They discovered that the altar was not to be used for religious services, but only as an exhibit of rare seventeenth century carving. The altar has a history. It was carved out of white marble by some of the best artists to settle in Martinique, and was then erected as the high altar in the Cathedral of St. Pierre. It was all that remained standing of the cathedral after the eruption three years ago.

OTTAWA, July 14, 1906.

On Friday, July 13, the Governor-General appeared in the Senate Chamber and prorogued Parliament with the usual ceremony. Thursday was the day set for the closing but the Government measure for the repeal of the Act providing pensions for retired Ministers did not reach the Senate in time to allow the three readings to be taken with the usual interval. It was only by a suspension of the rules that Parliament was able to close before Saturday. When the House opened Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated that all the Government bills were ready. Yet the House had been in session for four months before this pension repeal bill was submitted.

A SAMPLE DISPUTE.

The history of the measure illustrates the condition of the Cabinet. Mr Aylesworth in his by-election campaign had promised repeal. When Sir Wilfrid Laurier came to speak of the measure, he stated that the measure, was right in principle but was too hastily prepared and should be modified. Mr Fielding, when he introduced the repeal measure, defended the principles of pensions for Ministers, who, in his opinion, deserved them more than judges, but stated that public opinion was not yet educated to this measure and that the Cabinet was not in a position this year to amend this act. Later Sir Wilfrid Laurier again expressed the view that pensions to men who had served their country in public life was no less fitting and proper than pensions to judges. In the Senate the Secretary of State strongly expressed the same opinion. On the other hand Mr Aylesworth declared that he was opposed on principle to pensioning retired Ministers declaring that they stood on a different footing from judges. It will be seen that the Minister's were hopelessly divided and unable to keep their differences from the House.

SENATE SMASHES THE LORD'S DAY BILL

The Lord's Day Bill has undergone still further mutilation. In the Senate over twenty amendments were made, every one of them weakening the Act, either by allowing additional exemption from the clauses prohibiting Sunday work, Sunday trade or Sunday amusement, or by clauses and conditions interfering with the enforcement of the Act. The Provincial vote was enlarged in three ways. First the Piche amendment was made more sweeping, allowing municipal charters as well as Provincial laws to prevail over the Dominion Act. Second, the Provincial authority was extended so as to permit amusements to be controlled by local legislation. Third and most important of all, a clause was introduced providing that no prosecution under the Act may take place without the consent of the Attorney-General of the Province. This last change means that even a class of offences punishable by a one dollar fine, cannot be punished unless the persons interesting themselves in the enforcement of the law care to go to the trouble and expense of obtaining permission from the Attorney-General whose office may be hundred of miles away. Mr Borden observed that this provision alone destroyed the whole law and that seems to be the general opinion.

AYLESWORTH SUPPORTS THE SENATE

It has been shown already that Mr Aylesworth was changed in nine days from a strong defender of the Federal power in this matter to an ardent and life-long Provincial Rights. The public opinion of the Champ de Mars meeting in Montreal made this change. His conversion proceeded until when the Senate amendments came back to the House he accepted ten of them on the instant, these ten including all that were intended to destroy the central power.

The Government railroad bill, which went to the Senate with a clause proposed by Mr Lancaster and adopted by the House, that in thickly populated localities trains should slow up at level crossing to ten miles an hour, came back with that clause struck out. Mr Aylesworth cheerfully accepted this amendment and succeeded in carrying it through the House by a straight party vote, except that one Liberal voted.

SCANDALS EXPOSED.

But this Session will be remembered for other things more than for any legislation accomplished. It was a year of exposure. More scandals have been brought to light during this Session than in any other since the union of the Provinces. From early in March until July opposition Members have steadily and persistently presented enquiry into the expenditure of public money, the management of the public domain and into charges of plunder and graft in public business. No session of Canadian Parliamentary history has seen more faithful work done in committees of investigation. The enquiries have been pressed in the face of many difficulties. Documents have been delayed or withheld. Witnesses have refused to answer questions and have been supported in their refusal by Ministers and Government majorities. Investigation into several transactions has been burked, sometimes indirectly and two or three times by a direct vote of the House, where a party majority refused to allow the enquiry. Nevertheless the record is long and ghastly.

THE DISGRACEFUL RECORD.

Among the deals and scandals exposed or partially revealed during the past session are the following:

- The Saskatchewan Valley Land Deal. The Atlantic Trading Company contract and the group of scandals connected with it. The Bronson and Ray concession and ex-Speaker Belcourt's connection with it. The Gelinus exposure and the consequent refund. The scandal of the ice-breaker "Montcalm's" silver plate with the overcharges and refunds consequent on exposure. The thin red line election frauds. MR EMMERSON'S INTERCOLONIAL MANAGEMENT.

Mr Emmerson states that the Intercolonial will this year show a surplus over running expenses of $100,000. He made the announcement to the House this week with self applause. He spoke of it as a marked change from last year, which it undoubtedly is, and as "a flattering financial result," which it certainly is not. One would "suppose," from Mr Emmerson's glee that this is the first surplus the Intercolonial ever saw. Yet there were seven surpluses in the twelve previous years, two of them in 1884.

The fact is that Mr Emmerson has no profit but a heavy deficit. He figures out a profit by persistently refusing, as Mr Blair did before him, to charge to running expenses the sums necessary to replace rails as they wear out, and to keep good his rolling stock. These expenditures, charged in other railways to working expenses, and so charged on the I. C. R. before Mr Blair took office, amounted last year to about $500,000, so that Mr Emmerson is really $400,000 behind. But even on his own showing he has done nothing wonderful. Since Mr Blair took office the sum of $25,000,000 has been spent on the capital account of the Intercolonial.

The road has been extended to Montreal and to Fredericton. It is 300 miles longer than ten years ago and has cost one third more. These additions were made on the plea that they would increase the earnings. It requires $720,000 a year to pay the interest on this additional outlay. The country was told that more than that much net earnings would follow. Yet we have a beggarly $100,000 surplus, while the net earning of all other trunk railroads have increased by leaps and bounds. To accomplish even this Mr Emmerson has added both to the passenger and freight rates.

13 YEARS RECORD

Following is a statement of gross earnings, profit and loss and miles operated during the last fourteen years:

Table with 5 columns: Fiscal Year, Miles, Gross earnings, Profit, Loss. Data for years 1893-1906.

MR EMMERSON THE WORST EVER.

It will be seen that Mr Emmerson, who took office two and a half year's ago, has the worst record of any Minister of Railways down to this time. He has spent a great deal of money on capital account. The general railway situation has improved. He has increased the rates and fares and yet comes out worse in the end than his predecessors. Mr Emmerson is an improvement on nobody but himself, and his only cause for gratification is that he has been able to do a great deal worse.

During the period contained in the above table Mr Haggart held office four years, Mr Blair seven, and Mr Emmerson two and a half. Mr Haggart's total deficits were $55,187, his surpluses $29,384 making a net loss of $25,803. If he had charged his rail and car accounts to capital as Mr Emmerson did, he could have declared a balance of nearly a million in favor of the road.

LAND DEAL DEFERENCE SWRPT AWAY.

When the Moncton land deal was under discussion Mr Emmerson defended the payment of $3,180 to Matthew Lodge for land that cost $5,375 including expenses a few weeks before. The Minister stated that the $8,505 rake-off, on a $5,375 transaction, was nobody's business so long as the government got the land at a reasonable price. To prove that a price more than twice as large, and in some cases more than three times as large as the owners were willing to accept, was reasonable Mr Emmerson stated that he paid only a $1,000 an acre, whereas the late government paid $1,000 for 55,100 or a little over half an acre for adjoining land purchased in 1884. Here are Mr Emmerson's words: "But in 1884 the Intercolonial railway purchased right off this block of land, right adjacent to the property we purchased here in 1904, half an acre from Mr Milner. And how much did the Intercolonial railway pay for that? One thousand dollars for one half acre."

And again Mr Emmerson says: "We were able to purchase it at $1,000 an acre when the administration of the Intercolonial railway in 1884, at a time when my honorable friend, the mover of this resolution would have every confidence in the then administration of the Intercolonial railway bought 55 100 of an acre and paid $1,000."

Further on in his speech Mr Emmerson made the comparison again saying "judged by what transpired in 1884, when half an acre was purchased by the Intercolonial for $1,000 we in 1904 made a good bargain when we bought the whole acre at the rate of $1,000 per acre, not at the rate of $2,000 a half acre." (Hansard revised 1906, pages 5832-5834)

In the same debate Mr Fielding, unfortunately accepting Mr Emmerson's statement, declared that the late government paid at the rate of $2,000 an acre. "Under these circumstances," he said, "the Minister buys land for half the price that the Conservative government paid for it twenty years ago."

TWELVE TIMES THE TRUE FIGURE.

It is a pity to disturb this tradition but Mr Emmerson's statement was altogether untrue. The deed was given at the date he mentioned, April 15, 1884, by the persons he named and for the prices which he stated, but the quantity of land is twelve times as large. The deed is on record and speaks for itself. It gives the directions and distances. The lot extends 936 feet on one side, and according to the deed itself "contains in all six 55 100 acres (6 55) more or less."

Therefore the late government paid $168 an acre instead of $2,000 an acre for the land adjoining that which Mr Emmerson has bought at $1,000 an acre from the middleman who got it at $300 and $500. Mr Emmerson has misled his colleague and misled the House. Whether he has been misled himself remains for him to explain. But the facts make the case still stronger against him.

Farm Laborers' Exclusion.

To assist in harvesting the unprecedented wheat crop of Manitoba and the Canadian Northwest, latest advances show that at least Thirty Thousand Farm Laborers will be required, and to assist in supplying the demand the Canadian Pacific Railway has arranged to run the usual Farm Laborers' Excursions from Eastern Canada, the first of which will be the excursion from the Maritime Provinces, Tuesday August 7th. One way second class tickets to Winnipeg will be issued from all coupon tickets stations—the rate from stations in New Brunswick on the Canadian Pacific Railway will be $14.00 going and $18.00 returning from stations on the I. C. R. in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, also from stations on the D. A. E. $13.50 going and $18.50 returning. From stations on the P. E. I. R. $13.50 going — $19.50 returning. Tickets will be issued female as male laborers, but will not be issued at half rate to children. With each ticket purchaser will be given a Farm Laborers' verification coupon. At Winnipeg the trains carrying farm laborers will be met by farmers and by representatives of the Government. Laborers will engage at Winnipeg, and on presentation of extension coupon signed by a farmer stating that the holder has been engaged to work for him as a farm laborer. Agent will issue free ticket from Winnipeg to C. P. R. station nearest the point where laborer has engaged to work, and on arrival at such station laborer must deposit the Farm Laborers' Verification Certificate with the C. P. R. agent. If anyone has made prior arrangement to work with friends or with some farmer with whom they have worked previously, they will be issued free ticket as above, and may check their baggage through from starting point to C. P. R. station nearest the point of work, provided such point is not beyond Moosejaw, Yorkton or Estown, as free tickets will not be issued nor baggage checked to points beyond these stations. After laborers has worked for at least thirty days, and that certificate signed by the farmer with whom he had worked, such certificate surrendered to the ticket agent will be honored for a ticket to return to starting point on payment of the return rates shown above. One hundred and fifty pounds of baggage (wearing apparel only) will be allowed on each ticket, and each piece of baggage checked should bear the name of the owner and show their permanent address. It will be readily understood that some difficulty will be experienced in handling some thousands of laborers to one station and some delay may occur on the delivery of baggage. Therefore when possible baggage should be carried in hand grips and these the passengers should take in the cars, they should not be checked. It is expected that special passenger trains for the accommodation of laborers will be run on the main line, (particulars to be announced later). All further information will be supplied on application to Mr W B Howard, Act D P A., C. P. R. St. John, N. B., and intending excursionists should communicate with him or notify nearest ticket agent at once.

In introducing the Indian budget in the British House of Commons, on Friday last, Indian Secretary Morley sounded a warning note on the necessity of excluding India from the field of party politics. The most engrossing of Great Britain's foreign relations, he declared was Asiatic, those involving this country with China, Japan and Russia, which was a great Asiatic as well as a European power. Any false step in India would land Great Britain in confusion infinitely more dire and disastrous than had the false step in South Africa. India's case, in a free controversy can be put in a nutshell, he declared. Her prosperity and comfort, the growth of her trade and commerce, the solvency of India, hang upon her trade and commerce. The British Kingdom when taken by twenty-five per cent of exports. Thus when the people of Great Britain asked India for preferential duties they were asking her to discriminate against three-fourths of her customers.

Awakened by smoke pouring into their rooms, the family of James White, Moncton, were forced to flee in their night clothes from their burning home early Saturday morning. The fire occurred about two o'clock and originated in an ash barrel which stood in the rear of the building and when discovered the flames had made great headway in that vicinity. James White owner of the house, is an I. C. R. trainman, and was away on a regular trip, but his three children, two daughters and son and housekeeper were in the house at the time. The oldest daughter was aroused from sleep by the smoke and by some one pounding on the door of the house. Jumping from bed she roused the other members of the family. The flames had made such headway that it was impossible for them to dress and they made their escape in their night clothing. The house was fully gutted and the loss will be several hundred dollars.

The tea party held at St. Peter's on Monday of this week, by the Head of St. Peter's Bay Dairying Company, was quite successful. The weather was beautiful and the gathering was on fine high grounds overlooking the village and the Bay. The very best of order prevailed and everything was conducted in a most creditable manner. A song sum was selected which is to be applied to the improvement of the Company's apparatus, and the general advancement of the concern. Those charged with carrying out the management of the tea party are deserving of praise and may well congratulate themselves on the success which attended their efforts.

Matters political in Russia seem to be as far from a satisfactory solution at the present moment as they have ever been. By order of the Emperor parliament, but recently elected, has been dissolved, and premier Goremykin has been relieved of office. M. Stolypin has been appointed to the premiership and the Emperor's ukaz provides that the new parliament shall convene on March 5th, 1907. These proceedings bring the anarchy and the peoples' representatives face to face in the most acute sense, and the danger of revolution in Russia is now as great as ever it has been. The parliament just dissolved was overwhelmingly representative of the democratic elements in the country, while the Government represented the autocratic views. The consequence was friction and deadlock from the start. The summary dismissal of the parliament and the other arbitrary proceedings now pushed forward by the Czar are with a view of obtaining, if possible, a parliament more subservient to the views of the autocracy. The people and the peoples' representatives are up in arms, and the wildest excitement prevails; but the Emperor and his advisers anticipated such trouble and have made preparations for it. It is impossible to see how matters will work out.

Does Your Food Digest Well?

When the food is imperfectly digested the full benefit is not derived from it by the body and the purpose of eating is defeated.

It is constantly effecting cures of dyspepsia because it acts in a natural yet effective way upon all the organs involved in the process of digestion.

Hoarseness.

Helen Decker, Jordan Ferry, N.S., writes: A few months ago I had a severe cold in my throat and chest and became quite hoarse.

A Novel Summer Colony.

Through the efforts of the Grand Trunk Railway System in making known the attractions that are to be found in the Algonquin National Park of Ontario, thousands of applications have been received at their several City Ticket Offices throughout the continent for literature and particulars of this, comparatively speaking, new territory and the attractive Trunk issue and which have been the greatest factor in bringing tourists to Canada seem to have sounded a new note in travel, holding the attention of the large number of tourists who annually make their peregrinations to the cooler climates.

The novel innovation at the Park will include a large Marquee to be used as dining room and seating from fifty to seventy-five people, augmented with a series of tents for sleeping accommodation.

Common Sense.

Of all the gifts this side of heaven That ever were to mortal given, The best was to the worst to mths, The truest, sweetest source of bliss— Stands the pure charm of common sense.

To earn our right to "daily bread," To not regret when time is fled, To wisely speak and act and think, To keep life's boat from ruin's brink, To balance every hour's expense— We need the aid of common sense.

Sometimes, no doubt, we need to view The lightning bolts some genius throw; But now we need, well mixed and stirred, With silent thought or spoken word— A sort of human fool's defense— The wholesome aid of common sense.

Some things, perhaps, must still be taught, Where mighty minds their power is wrought; But how to guard the priceless wealth Of peace and love, of youthful health, And how to keep our own few pence, Is taught alone by common sense.

We pray for faith, and light, and peace, For sin's remove, and love's increase, For strength to meet the tempter's power, For dying grace for dying hour— But now, right in the present tense, O, give us, Lord! good common sense.

To keep from useless jar and strife, And bless the changing path of life, To make each fountainer purer still, To take from loss its fatal chill, And bring thy own sweet recompense, We bow to thee, bless'd common sense. —Sacred Heart Review.

The Uses of Adversity.

(From the Messenger.)

"I will walk to the edge of the Moor with you," he said cheerily, as they turned away from the tar.

"I have not long since parted with Miss Rylands; she has been to North Drayton this afternoon, and then very gently he told him of her anxiety about him, and pointed out that he owed it to her, and to her mother, not to expose himself to danger from the wet and cold, especially at that time of the year.

"It does not make the slightest difference," he said, "and the house seems to stifle me."

"It makes a difference to their happiness," he said, "for they know if you get chilled or fatigued you leave yourself an easy prey to your malady."

"Well, let it take its course," he said grimly, "I am prepared for the end."

"I don't think you are," said the priest; "the end should not be met with stoicism, but with true courage; the courage with which a man bows to the will of God, his Maker, and waits with humble confidence for the lifting of the dark veil which hides the city of eternity."

"So you believe, Father; but I like my own view best; death is the sleep that knows no waking and fears no dreams; it is the necessary sequence to life, for man grows weary after a while."

"Rest after toyle, Ports after stormy seas; Base after stormy seas; Base after stormy seas, Death after life, Doth greatly please," he quoted softly.

"Yes, but not 'death after life' as you imagine it," said the priest quickly, "but as I expect it; I have staked my all on my hopes of future

"Blessed Damocel" who watches for our coming, as she leans over the golden rail, radiant with the glory of her Father's house; some loved one who will wander with us through the flowery meadows in the unadorned happiness of a perfect love."

"Dream your dreams, Father; they at least are full of beauty," said Mr. Rylands.

"Your dreamless sleep," he went on, "may be as Hamlet suggests, 'a consummation devoutly to be wished,' but it is a poor goal for man's aspirations; something that lies within the grasp at any time, and therefore of little worth; and all his aims and ideals, his toil and stress, lose point and purpose if you accord him no higher destiny than the beasts of the field. Look into your own soul and you will find there open revolt at such a suggestion, no matter what your reason may uphold."

"I should find still greater revolt at the suggestion of the Christian Hell; a God creating in love and condemning to eternal chastisement," said Mr. Rylands.

"Monstrous! God did not create us for Hell, but for Heaven; a child of God has no concern with Hell."

"Very comfortable theology that, Father," answered Mr. Rylands with a sneer.

"All theology is comfortable," said the priest simply, "necessarily so, for it treats of the God of all comfort; it is this comfort that I wish to bring home to your heart now, if you would but let me."

They had come to the edge of the Moor, over above Leasroft, and they stopped and faced each other in the moonlight. Mr. Rylands's face wore a more natural expression, but there was no softening of the hard glitter of his dark eyes.

"Good-night, Father, and thank you for your company," he said as they shook hands, and it seemed to the priest that his manner showed resentment; "he hates me now" was the thought as he turned away, and "I know the reason why." He walked on a little way, then he flung himself face downward among the heather—his soul full of grief and horror. He had had a revelation that night, he could not mistake the meaning of the scene he had witnessed by the tar; Mr. Rylands meant suicide, he could see the dire purpose in his eyes; he had only defeated it for the time being; he could not change it; the man's mind was made up to destroy the life that had become burdensome to him, and the grace of God could not reach him, for he was a murderer in his heart.

"Not that, not that, dear Lord," he prayed, in a perfect agony of grief; "not that awful thing, that will put him outside the scope of Thy mercy, beyond the saving laver of Thy Precious Blood." What could he do to hinder it? Mr. Rylands knew that he had divined his purpose; he hated him for this and would in future avoid him; he was powerless then, in the face of a great evil. He thought with fierce self-contempt of the poor use he had made of his past opportunities with the man, and especially in the hour just passed; why had he not been able to convert him to God, and convince him of the truth. He thought of his feeble, halting speech, his tepid argument; was that all he could do after all his long years of study; his fine training? Was that all for the burning torrent of eloquence he had imagined he could pour forth when he was fighting for a soul against the powers of evil? What was it that had chilled and repressed him? It was the man's utter indifference; he had felt as if he had put on the gloves to box with a jelly fish; Mr. Rylands did not care whether there was a God or not, and any knowledge of Him he considered both superfluous and undesirable. What could he do? He had come to consider himself in some way responsible for the man, as if God had given him over to his care. Then God was with him, and His power could accomplish his salvation; and he could pray; and from that heathery shrine the ardent and compelling prayer of a pure heart went up to God's throne, and he cried to Heaven in vehement protest against the ruin of a soul. God would teach him how to prevent it, how to save this man, and he vowed he would give his life, if God would, for so great a cause. As he lay there absorbed in prayer the rain began to fall softly; billows of white mist loomed up ghostly in the moonlight; the wind shifted, and the stillness was broken by its eerie s'ghe, as it came over the Moor. The stars went out one by one before advancing battalions of dark clouds, the white mist turned to blackness, as the moon hid herself, to appear no more that night. Father de Winton saw none of these things; like St. Patrick on his mountain he would not depart until he had satisfied himself that God had heard his prayer. This is the prayer of faith, and God rewards it at last with the comfort of an inward assurance that all will be well. It was long before he felt this comforting conviction, but it came at last, and he rose up calm and tranquil, wondering in an amused way how he was going to find his way home in the darkness. It was late when he reached the presbytery, and his housekeeper was looking up anxiously for him as he opened the gate.

"Happen you've had a sick call, Father?" she said as he entered, "an' an' urgent one surely!"

"It was an urgent call, Betty," he answered cheerily, as he passed into his room.

VII. A few days passed, gray, dreary days of misty rain, and wandering winds that moaned dully round Kitty's tower, and sighed cheerily through the old Manor.

Mr. Rylands had suffered from the effects of his excitement and fatigue that night on the Moor, and he had spent the days, for the most part, lying limp and passive on a cane lounge by his study fire, in an apathy of mind and body.

It was Sunday morning. He had had a good night's sleep, and he felt stronger and better. Kitty had been out for a walk, and when she came in about mid-day he joined her in the drawing-room, and asked her to sing to him; he threw himself down on a couch where he could see her as she sat at the piano, thinking bitterly that it would probably be the last time he would feast his eyes on her beautiful face, which always, to him, seemed more beautiful when she was singing; more soulful and refined. As his bodily strength had revived, the fierce pain at his heart had returned, and he felt sick with misery; he was determined to end it all, as soon as opportunity allowed. Kitty sang several songs, and played for him, music that he liked best; soft preludes and dreamy sonatas; by Chopin and Bach and Beethoven and other composers he loved. He lay very still, and once or twice she glanced over toward him to see if he had fallen asleep, but he was gazing abstractedly before him with that strange look in his eyes to which he had grown accustomed, and which always filled her with a vague pain. If he would only speak a little to her and tell her what was in his mind; what he thought of his failing health, of the danger that threatened him, she felt that it would be a relief; but he always avoided the subject, or dismissed it with some half-jesting remark, as if it were something that was not to be taken seriously. How did he feel about it, she wondered to herself, as she played a weird melody by Greig, which seemed to speak out the disquiet of her heart; did he know he might leave them soon, and go out into the cold and darkness beyond the reach of their love and their care? Ah, but that could not be; he would get better soon; she would not give way to idle fears and nervous fancies. She rose and went to his side, sitting down on a low seat close by the couch. He took her hand and stroked it gently.

"You have had a walk this morning?" he asked, trying to speak lightly.

"Yes," she said, "and this afternoon I am going to church."

"To church?" he said with a short laugh; "what is taking you there?"

"I have been thinking lately that I should like to go, that is all," then, after a pause, she said gently, "Daddy, dear, supposing some day I should like to become a Christian, should you have any objections?" He rose abruptly and straightened himself, a look of anger flashed into his eyes, but it died out immediately, leaving them as before, full of hopeless sadness.

"No," he said shortly, "you can please yourself; then he added rather dryly, "you seem to be getting ideas these days, Kitty; how long is it since you took to serious thinking?"

"Since I first came here, I believe," she answered, "I never had time before; I am just beginning to make acquaintance with myself."
