The Lost Will; OR, LOVE TRIUMPHS AT LAST!

CHAPTER V.

"Very likely," said Chalfont grimly. "Luck hasn't been with you, Norton."

Norton glanced at his thin hands, at his worn and shabby clothes, and said nothing.

"I'm sorry," said Chalfont. "I suppose it's no use making excuses—Hold on!"—as Norton shook his head—"but just let me say this, and I won't utter another word; that I know the men were after me, I know I shouldn't get away without money. It went against the grain to rob you, believe me or not, as you like, for I'd got to like you; and more than that, there was the wife—"

"Don't you utter her name!" cried Norton, shrilly, springing from his chair and extending his claw-like hand, his manner altering with startling suddenness. "You killed her. Don't you speak of her."

Chalfont bowed his head and gripped his hands tightly.

"I'm sorry," he muttered, almost inaudibly. "I'd give a lot—but it's no use. For Heaven's sake, let us come to business. What is it you want? You can have everything for the asking; only say what it is—say what it is."

"I can have it all," said Norton. "Come to think of it, it's mine by rights—all of it, all your money, this house, everything you've got. Why shouldn't I have it?" His voice broke off.

"Why not?" said Mr. Chalfont. "Suppose you take it. It's brought little happiness to me; there's been a curse on it, I suppose. Take it! I can go back—"

"You can't; you'd be lagged," interrupted Norton, quite quietly, as if he were stating a matter of fact. "I've only got to ring that bell, to send for the police—"

"I know, I know," said Chalfont, almost indifferently. "But you don't mean to do it, or you'd have brought the police with you," he added, with naive shrewdness. "You've come to drive a bargain with me. You mean to hold your tongue. Why, Norton, I didn't live with you all that time not to know you. You don't mean to blab on me, you don't mean to give me away. What is it you do mean?"

"Give me a drink," said Norton, pointing to the whisky.

Slowly, methodically, Chalfont filled the glass, and Norton drank the whisky and water as slowly, his eyes still fixed on Chalfont; then he coughed again and, pressing his hand on his chest, said:

"All your money wouldn't do me much good. Bradshaw, I'm booked. See? But I'm not thinking of myself. I'm not alone. I've got a girl—the child my wife died over."

Chalfont started slightly, sank into his chair, and stared at Norton's boots speechlessly; there was a hole in one, and it was like an accusing eye to Chalfont, who studied it.

"A girl!" he said, frowning thoughtfully.

"Yes, a girl," repeated Norton. "A good girl, a beautiful girl, though I say it; and she's gone through it all by my side." He looked round the room. "It's not myself I'm thinking of, but her. You can't give me back the years I've wasted, you can't repay me the misery I've borne; but you can make it right for her."

"Good!" said Chalfont, just as he would have accepted a business proposition. "You want to give you money for her—and yourself. It's easy done." He rose and went to the safe, took up his cheque-book from the drawer, then dropped it and, in its place, came forward to the table with a bundle of notes in his hand.

"There's no lack of money," he said. "Would to God I could square our account with it! Here, take this! Put it away safely. No need to count it; it's all I have now in the house for the moment; you can have more—any amount."

Norton took the notes and looked at them almost dully; he knew it was a large amount; perhaps it was too large for him to realise. Slowly, carefully, he put the notes away in an inner pocket.

"That's good enough, as far as it goes," he said. "But I want something more."

"I suppose so," said Chalfont, with a nod. "You'll bleed me to the end, I've no doubt."

"No," said Norton, thrusting his head forward. "I'm going to bleed you after the end. Do you take me, Bradshaw; do you see what's in my mind? Strange, it didn't come to me till a minute or two ago. I was trying to think what I'd bring out of you, and I couldn't make up my mind; but I've got it now. Bradshaw, I'm booked."

"Not you," said Chalfont. "I can see you've got a cold; but you and I are too tough to be knocked out by a cold. You'll live long enough to harry me into my grave."

Norton shook his head. "I'm booked," he repeated, apathetically, "and I've got to think of Nora. You've got to take care of her when I'm gone, Bradshaw; you've got to make a fine lady of her, as is her right—her right, mind you! For, if you'd left me that money, I should have had a start; I might have been as rich as you are—"

"We'll leave that," broke in Chalfont. "You want me to take care of your daughter. I will do so. You can trust me."

"Not a yard," said Norton, with a harsh chuckle. "I wouldn't trust you with sixpence; but I've got a hold on you. I've written an account of what's happened 'twixt you and me. I'm going to give it to Nora. She'll make all square between us, if you play her false."

Chalfont drew his hand across his brow. "I think I see what you mean," he said. "You are going to place my safety, my life, in your daughter's hands."

"More than that," said Norton, with a kind of uncanny acuteness, an unexpected knowledge of the nature of the man with whom he was dealing.

"I'm going to place your reputation, your character, in her charge. See? You're a proud man, Mr. Chalfont; you've got to the top of the tree; everybody looks up to you and respects you; you'd like to leave a good name behind you, to be spoken of as—the 'great Mr. Chalfont,' him as was so liberal with his money, so good to the poor. Oh, I've read of the piles of money you've given away, and all the nice things they've said about you. You wouldn't like it to be known, after you was dead, that you were just a common thief, a murderer—"

Chalfont stretched out a hand to silence him. "There's no need to shout," he said. "Jack—I mean, there's some one upstairs, almost within hearing. He'll come down, and then—"

He shrugged his shoulders. "Besides, I haven't said I won't do what you ask."

"No; you'll do it right enough," said Norton, wiping his lips with the back of his hand. "This is what you're going to do. You're going to make a will leaving every penny you've got—your houses, your lands, everything—to Nora."

There was an intense silence; with his lips drawn like a trap, Chalfont stared moodily at the hole in Norton's boot. He was thinking of that other will which lay in the safe behind him, awaiting his signature. He was going to deprive Jack, the lad he loved, of all that he had promised him. Was there no way out? For a moment the true nature of the man, which had been hidden away, smothered by prosperity, power, ease and luxury, broke out in him; there was something ominous in the eyes which he raised slowly from Norton's boot to Norton's face; the gleam of murder flamed in them; for a moment only, then he dropped back in his chair. Murder would not help him; Norton's dead body would cry aloud, the truth would be known—known to all the world; and, worst of all, to—Jack.

"You've got me everywhere, Norton," he said. "I shall have to do what you want, whether I like it or not. It's a bargain."

"It's a good bargain for you," said Norton. "It's better than the galls. I might have stripped you of everything, or landed you in quod. I'm leaving you your money—I shan't want much of it. You'll take charge of Nora, treat her as your own while you're alive, and when you're dead it will all come to her."

"That's as you say," said Chalfont. "Then, do it now," said Norton, not with feverish eagerness, but with a kind of confident doggedness; there's paper right afore you; write out the will. It won't take long; it won't need many words."

Chalfont drew his chair to the table. If he had any wild idea of deceiving Norton by an incomplete, invalid document, he thrust it from him. Norton's terms would have to be complied with to the full.

"Oh, it's easy enough," he said. He wrote slowly, steadily; then he read out what he had written:

"I, Jesse B. Chalfont, of Chertson Hall, Surrey, and 209, Copthall Buildings, in the City of London, do hereby will and bequeath everything of which I may be possessed at my death to Nora— How do you spell her name; has she any other?"

"N-o-r-a," spelt Norton, his eyes fixed intently on Chalfont's face, now set with the calmness of a business man occupied in a business transaction. "It was her mother's name; she hadn't any other."

"To Nora Norton, the daughter of my old friend and partner, Edward Norton; and I hereby appoint William Horton, my solicitor, as trustee on her behalf."

His voice ceased, and he looked waltzingly across the table at the worn and haggard face in front of him.

"Is that all? Is it set down straight and fair, so as you can't wriggle out of it?" demanded Norton, in a low voice.

"It is quite legal and valid," replied Chalfont, checking a sigh for he was thinking of that other will which the lawyer had drawn up, thinking of the young man he loved, whom this girl was going to rob. Yes, "rob" was the word; for it had been Chalfont's brain, energy, audacity, which had raised a million from the little bag of gold which he had stolen.

The wretched man before him could never have made the money of which he was now depriving Jack. "Yes, it's all right; it will stand against anything; it is as good as if it was drawn up on parchment by the best lawyer in the land."

"Then sign it and give it to me. Oh, you don't think I'd trust you? Not, mind, that you could go behind me; for Nora's got that packet—that—"

"That will do, said Chalfont sternly. "I have told you that I am acting on the square; and however it may have been in the old days, now my word is as good as my bond, as any one in the City of London will tell you. I'll sign the will now—but it would not be worth the paper it's written on."

"What do you mean?" demanded Norton, suspiciously.

"It wants two witnesses," explained Chalfont.

"Then get 'em," said Norton; "get 'em here, now and at once. I'll go behind the curtain, or step outside. I want to see 'em sign; I want that paper—I mean to have it."

He had raised his voice. Chalfont glanced up at the ceiling. He heard Jack cross the room, descend the stairs, and leave the house by the back door; he had evidently gone for a stroll. Chalfont breathed a sigh of relief.

"Better go outside," he said, and he unlocked the door.

Norton went through the window, and Chalfont rang the bell.

James Rickert, of 40 Pleasant Street,
Writes Letter Which May Be of Great Interest to Skin Sufferers of This City.

Gentlemen—
I am more than grateful since using your wonderful D.D. for Eczema. My little girl was troubled with Weeping Eczema. I used everything but to no use and I thought D. D. would be of no use either. My girl's head became so bad I had to clip her hair off and keep her from school. She got sores all over her body. I used 6 bottles and I am proud to say she is cured. Not a simple or rash and her skin is clear and white and all the itching is gone. I will recommend D. D. to any one I know who is troubled with Eczema. I am ever so happy and thankful for your wonderful cure.

Yours respectfully,
JAMES RICKERT,
40 Pleasant St.,
St. John's, Nfld.

D. D. D., the liquid wash, has become a household word. It has proved itself a remarkable remedy. If you are a sufferer from skin diseases, this remedy will not disappoint you. It has stood the test and to-day is the master preparation for all skin diseases. Sold Everywhere.

A VERY COMFORTABLE DRESS.

2525—This model will make an ideal play or school dress for warm weather. The bloomers are comfortable and may take the place of petticoats. The sleeve portions of the dress are cut in one with the back and front. Ging ham, galatee, percale, chambray, seersucker, voile, repp and poplin could be used. The bloomers may be of the same material or of sat-en, linen, repp, or any other serviceable fabric.

The Pattern is cut in 5 sizes: 4, 6, 8, 10 and 12 years. Size 10 requires 3 yards of 36-inch material for the dress, and 1 1/2 yard for the bloomers. A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents in silver or stamps.

A SMART DRESS FOR HOME WEAR.

2374—This model is nice for ging-ham, linen, seersucker, percale, galathea, serge and silk. The sleeve has a short seam at the back below the elbow, which may be finished for a closing with buttons and button-holes.

The Pattern is cut in 7 sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46 inches bust measure. Size 38 requires 6 1/2 yards of 36-inch material. The skirt measures about 2 1/2 yards at the foot.

A pattern of this illustration mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents in silver or stamps.

Wear Review.

Hard days are everywhere with the Teutonic Allies. In Palestine the Turks are still but crushed; in Macedonia the Entente forces are harrying their foes and threatening their similar disaster; in France the British and French troops slowly but surely are cutting their way into the vitals of the German defensive positions, the collapse of which will result in important changes all along the western battle front, and in Eastern Siberia the Japanese have had additional rides forward in the process of reclaiming territory from the Russians. In all the theatres of the war the Entente Allies have the initiative in their hands and are pressing their advantage vigorously. The German and their allies nowhere are able to do more than stand on the defensive and in Palestine and Macedonia their efforts in this respect have proved sorry ones. From north of Jerusalem to the Sea of Galilee, the territory lying between the River Jordan and the Mediterranean Sea, the Ottoman forces have been completely annihilated. Added to the heavy casualties suffered by the Turks, hundreds of them were made prisoners and many more are wandering bewildered without leaders in the deserts, eventually to be brought in to swell the greater total. At last accounts more than 25,000 of the Sultan's soldiers and 400 guns and large quantities of war stores were in British hands. To add to the demoralization of the Turkish morale, Allied aviators are carrying out successful bombing raids against Constantinople. Over a front of 80 miles in Southern Serbia, from Monastir to Lake Dorian, the Entente troops are vigorously attacking the Bulgarian and German lines, ready in the swift drive at the camp a great spearhead has been pushed by the Serbians across the Isvar, Philip Rost, severing communications with the Bulgarian army north-east of Monastir and that in the Lake Dorian region. Unofficial reports have taken between 5,000 and 10,000 prisoners and 120 guns. In the region between Monastir and the Vardar the enemy troops are in full retreat before the Italians, French and Serbians, while west of Dorian the British are steadily hammering their way forward, driving the enemy northwards towards the Bulgarian frontier. In the rest of the entire enemy line from Dorian to a point west of the Vardar has been evacuated. This force of the enemy with the railroad to the north severed, seemingly is in danger of an enveloping movement unless it turns sharply eastward and presses into Bulgaria through the mountains. So spectacular but of vital importance has been the operation of the Serbians and British from the south of St. Quentin to Cambrai. Both the French General Debeny and Field Marshal Haig have won highly essential ground in the manoeuvres which have as their objectives the obliteration of the Hindenburg line, the capture of St. Quentin and the turning point of the German line at Laon.

Allied Advance Continues on All Fronts.

Allenby in Palestine Annihilates Turkish Forces, Taking 25,000 Prisoners and 260 Guns. Great News From Macedonia. Obliterating The Hindenburg Line.

WAR REVIEW.
 Hard days are everywhere upon the Tonic Alltes. In Palestine the Turks are still but crushed; in Macedonia the Entente forces are harrying their foes and threatening them with similar disaster; in France the British and French troops slowly but surely are cutting their way into the vitals of the German defensive positions, the collapse of which would result in important changes all along the western battle front, and in Eastern Siberia the Japanese have made additional strides forward in the process of reclaiming that territory for the Russians. In all the theatres of the war the Entente Allies have the initiative in their hands and are pressing their advantage rigorously. The Germans and their allies nowhere are able to stand more than on the defensive and in Palestine and Macedonia their efforts in this respect have proved sorry ones. From north of Jerusalem to the Sea of Galilee, in the territory lying between the River Jordan and the Mediterranean Sea, the Ottoman forces have been caught by the swift drive of the British General Allenby's armies and virtually annihilated. Added to the heavy casualties suffered by the Turks, hundreds of them were made prisoners and many more are wandering bewildered without leaders in the hills, eventually to be brought in to swell the greater total. At last accounts more than 25,000 of the Sultan's soldiers and 260 guns and large quantities of war stores were in British hands. To add to the demoralization of the Turkish morale, Allied aviators carried out successful bombing raids against Constantinople. Over a front of 81 miles in Southern Serbia, from Monastir to Lake Dorian, the Entente troops are vigorously assailing the Bulgarians and Germans. Already in the swift drive at the centre a great spearhead has been pushed by the Serbians across the Istibd-Philip Road, severing communications between the Bulgarian army north-east of Monastir and that in the Lake Dorian region. Unofficial reports are to the effect that the Serbians have taken between 9,000 and 10,000 prisoners and 120 guns. In the region between Monastir and the Vardar the enemy troops are in full retreat before the Italians, French and Serbians while west of Dorian the British are steadily hammering their way forward, driving the enemy northward towards the Bulgarian frontier. Already the entire enemy line from Doiran to a point west of the Vardar has been evacuated. This force of the enemy with the railroad to the north severed, seemingly is in danger of an enveloping movement unless it turns sharply seaward and presses into Bulgaria through the mountains. Not so spectacular but of vital importance has been the operation of the French and British from the south of St. Quentin to Cambrai. Both the French General Debeny and Field Marshal Haig have won highly essential ground in the manoeuvres which have as their objectives the obliteration of the Hindenburg line, the capture of St. Quentin and the turning point of the German line at Laon.

FRENCH MAKE NOTABLE PROGRESS.

PARIS, Sept. 23.
 French troops yesterday and last night made notable progress in their drive for the encirclement of St. Quentin. They pushed in far on the south and captured the village and fort of Ventenill, close to the Oise, nine miles south of St. Quentin, to-day's war office announcement shows.

CAPTURE GERMAN STRONGHOLD.

LONDON, Sept. 23. (Official.)
 On the Asiago plateau on the Italian mountain front, French troops in a local attack have destroyed and damaged the Austrian defensive systems east of Mont Sisonal, says the war office official announcement today. The French captured 100 prisoners and five machine guns.

SHIPBUILDING.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.
 Deliveries of completed vessels from the shipyards in the United States in July and August, the Shipping Board reports to-day show were more than enough to offset the submarine losses of America since the beginning of the war. Ships sunk aggregate 541,925 dead weight tons, while new ones put in service in the two months aggregated 610,779 dead weight tons. The total of Allied and neutral losses during the war have amounted to 21,404,318 dead weight tons, while the new Allied and neutral construction had totalled 14,247,327 tons. With the tonnage of enemy ships received by the Allies added to this total the net loss during the entire war period is shown to be 3,362,088 dead weight tons.

SUB. BELIEVED DAMAGED.

AN ATLANTIC PORT, Sept. 23.
 A large German submarine which was lying in wait for trans-Atlantic vessels, 500 miles off the American coast, is believed to have been put out of commission and perhaps sunk by the United States Shipping Board steamship Nansemond. The encounter, according to the Nansemond's master, Capt. Wm. MacLeod, began at 12.45 p.m., Sept. 19, and lasted 45 minutes; 24 shots were fired by the steamer, the third of which a six inch explosive shell fired at a three mile range was followed by the eruption from the submarine of a cloud of black smoke mingled with splinters. Immediately after this shot the submarine which previously had shown only her periscope bobbed to the surface awash, and made slowly off. Capt. MacLeod and his men are of the opinion that they scored a damaging hit.

AUSTRIAN OFFICIAL.

VIENNA via London, Sept. 22.
 The official statement issued at the war office to-day reads: On Dossio Al-to our storming troops made a surprise attack on a trench section defended by the Czecho-Slovak Legionnaires yesterday. The greater part of the garrison suffered the fate they deserved. On the Albanian coast further Italian attacks were repulsed.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS!

AMSTERDAM, Sept. 22.
 A draft of a constitution for a League of Nations worked out in detail by Mathias Erzberger, a clerical member of the German Reichstag is published in the Voessische Zeitung of Berlin. It is taken from a book entitled "The League of Nations the way to peace," which Erzberger will publish soon. The first section of the constitution dealing with the organization of such a league says any sovereign state can enter the league which shall be considered to have been formed when the following powers are among those who have announced adherence: Germany, Great Britain, France, the United States and Russia. The Hague would be the seat of the League and there the International Bureau would conduct its business. Each state with the approval of its parliament would appoint one delegate. The International Bureau would be controlled by a permanent administrative council, consisting of the representatives of the federated powers with the Dutch Foreign Minister as Chairman. Dealing with the fundamental laws the second section says the League shall guarantee the territorial possessions of each federated state as well as an undisturbed possession of colonies. Each state would be independent in the conduct of international and foreign affairs within the limits of the League. Constitutional states whose governments with the assent of their parliaments declare their permanent neutralization would be recognized by all members of the League as permanently neutral and would enjoy the League's protection. All available means would be used against any federal state outside of the League which attacks a federal state or takes up arms without having applied to the arbitration court or awaited its judgment, or which takes up arms instead of accepting its judgment. Members of the League would mutually undertake to cut down and steadily reduce their land, naval and aerial forces according to a fixed standard to be agreed on. They would further undertake not to use their forces for any other objects than the maintenance of international order, defence of their territory against and for joint execution of the League's mandates. Figures showing the annual expenditure for armament, the number of troops under arms, war materials in land and the number of warships in commission would be communicated annually to the Hague Bureau which would publish them. Transparency provides for economic equality and for the principle of the open door. All members of the League granting each other most favored nation treatment. For the first decade after the foundation of the League each state surplus of raw materials would be divided among the other federal states according to the standard to be agreed on. This would be irrespective of the imports of the year; the output and the special needs of individual states due to the war. Members of the League would recognize freedom of the seas. Straits, canals and connecting seas, both banks of which are not in possession of the same federal state would be internationalized and their fortification retained, guarded by a command consisting of contingents from all the federated states and commanded in rotation every three years by a delegate of states.

ARCHBISHOP IRELAND VERY ILL.

ST. PAUL, Minn., Sept. 23.
 Archbishop John Ireland, of the Roman Catholic diocese of St. Paul, who is seriously ill of heart disease and stomach trouble, became unconscious late this afternoon. It was announced at five o'clock that he was very low.

CONSTANTINOPLE AGAIN BOMBED.

LONDON, Sept. 23.
 Constantinople was bombed by the British royal air force Friday and Saturday of last week according to an official communication issued by the admiralty to-night the statement says. The Greeks co-operated in the bombing of Constantinople on Sept. 20 and 21 and dropped thousands of leaflets into Stamboul. A balloon shot down in the European operations in flames set fire to three hangers which were burned out.

When canning corn do not cut the grains too close to the cob, but after the corn is off the cob scrape the cob with the back of the knife. By this means you get all the grain, but none of the hard cob with the corn.

TUESDAY, Sept. 24th, 1918.

History Repeats Itself.

The following editorial reprinted from The Telegram of date December 1st, 1911, is very applicable to present day conditions, and only needs the substitution of the names of the men in power at the moment to make it an indictment of the National Government for the unsatisfactory and altogether disgraceful state of the Northern Coastal Mail Service as existent. Now, as then, the "Ring" is in control, and there is, as thirty-seven years ago, no opposition in the People's House to keep the combine in check. Hitting palms have been no less increased in the year of grace 1918 than in that of 1881, and the gleam of hope which was then perceptible for Newfoundland and her hardy fishermen, must again come from the still faithful few who eventually will take up the burdens and responsibilities of a New Party, which will purge the body politic of the prevailing evil and give to this Dominion that clean, honest, stable Government which she has lacked since the memorable year of 1909. Sustained by the people the new party will enter upon their task with minds determined and hearts strengthened by the knowledge that the people are behind them. Follows the article:

"We are not surprised to hear complaints from the Northward, nor do we wonder that the Government are losing the little regard once entertained for them by 'the people' in that direction. The important Northern districts have been grossly neglected, and at this very moment we can cast to mind not a few instances in which the most urgent claims of Green Bay have failed to meet with anything better than 'insolent indifference' at the hands of the Government. Several communications have been received by us from various parts of the Bay all expressive of great dissatisfaction with the policy of the Mining-Railway Administration. We have on more than one occasion referred to these complaints, not in a spirit of fault-finding—as the Newfoundland clique would try to make it appear—but with a desire to emphasize the necessity for remedial measures. So far, however, our united efforts have proved ineffectual, and the Executive seem determined to fill up the measure of their political iniquity. They care not what inconvenience the people may suffer so long as their own interests are safe. The country and all that's in it may go up or down or anywhere else provided they can—like the holders of Prince Edward Island Bank Notes—regard their stocks as perfectly safe. It is very evident then that no redress need be expected by our Northern friends until after the next general election. The Government are determined to carry out their schemes with a high hand and there is no opposition in the People's House to keep 'the Ring' in check. The 'hitting palms' of the Liberal renegades have been greased, and at present the only perceptible gleam of hope for Newfoundland and her hardy fishermen comes from the ranks of the patriotic few known as 'the NEW PARTY.' But the people will sustain THEM."

Defying the Regulations.

Last night about 9:30 o'clock, a large auto car came down Gower Street at a fairly good clip, and turned up Victoria Street without giving any warning by horn. At the same time another car coming west turned up Flavin Street, also without any warning foot of the horn. Both cars were carrying proper head and tail lights, but their drivers must have been too much occupied otherwise to pay any attention to either the regulations providing for sounding their horns when passing crossings or making turns, or the safety of foot passengers. Owners and drivers of cars must remember that the pedestrian has a few rights left yet. The Motor Association will have a lot of work if drivers persist in ignoring the ordinary amenities of traffic, and making themselves and their cars a nuisance as well as a menace. This sort of thing must stop right now. Our suggest that it would be a good thing if the authorities restricted the sale of gasoline to all motor cars, allowing them sufficient only for ordinary use. There is too much joy riding done about town, and it's time to call a halt. Another matter is the increasing number of chauffeurs who do considerable reckless driving to the imminent peril of wayfarers on the streets. These juveniles should not be permitted to drive a car at all, excepting under the supervision of an expert chauffeur. There are other aspects of this matter which we will discuss later.

New College Hostel.

The Telegram reporter had the pleasure of being shown throughout the new hostel of Bishop Field College on Cavendish Square, yesterday afternoon by Rev. Mr. Pike, the new Warden of the hostel. This building was formerly the C. of E. Orphanage, and is large, commodious and well-lighted. In the basement, there is a large wash and change room, where wash basins and shower baths are conveniently placed. Here, also, are kept lockers, one for each boarder, where articles, such as brush and comb, etc., may be kept. The boys may also change from school to sport clothing in this room, without going into the dormitories. On the basement floor, are also the box-rooms, where the trunks are kept, the furnace room, and other store rooms. On the first floor are situated the Junior and Senior Prep. rooms, the dining room and kitchen. The Housemaster's office, the Matron's room, and the linen room. On the second floor are dormitories and masters' rooms, bath and washing rooms, and also, segregated from the boys' quarters the servants' rooms, and Chapel, where services are held. On the third floor are more dormitories, bath rooms, masters' bedrooms, studies, and bath rooms and lavatories. The whole building has been done over from top to bottom, and it has been entirely renovated. Only an Old Fellidan could realize the vast improvements offered over the old quarters on Bond Street. The boarders will parade to school every day, but will return singly. The location is ideal, and a better could not possibly be found.

Babeldom on the Streets.

It is becoming more and more evident every Saturday night that some system for the pedestrians is badly needed in St. John's. When, on the last night of the week, housekeepers and casuals, the scene beggars description, and more often passage. The people wander up and down the streets, running into each other, going in and out, to avoid collision with other parcel-laden people until the street resembles what the streets of Bagdad looked like to the simple Arab. To obviate this the Inspector General might devise some plan whereby orders would be enforced, if people are directed to keep either to the right or left, and the policemen told to enforce the order, it is not hard to imagine the good result.

Thirty-Seven Years Ago.

Many of our readers will remember the "Hope" disaster which occurred in Trinity Bay, late in November, 1881, consequently the accompanying item from the Evening Telegram of December 1st of that year should be of interest.

TERRIBLE DISASTER IN TRINITY BAY.
The schooner "Hope" capsized and six of her crew drowned.
News of a terrible disaster has just reached us from Trinity. It seems that on Tuesday evening last while the schooner "Hope", belonging to Old Perlican, was proceeding from the latter place to Random for a cargo of railway sleepers, she experienced a very severe breeze; but as the craft was almost new and well supplied with everything, no alarm was felt by those on board until they arrived within a short distance of Hickman's Harbor, when a furious squall broke upon the vessel and before the crew had time to shorten sail, she capsized and all hands were thrown into the water. One of the crew, a young man named Samuel Strong, succeeded in holding on to the hull until rescued; all the rest, viz. Henry Strong, James Strong, Nehemiah Strong, James Charley, Elias Charley and John Collins, were drowned, nor does it appear that their bodies have yet been recovered. Doubtless the poor fellows clung to spars and rigging until torpidity set in by reason of the cold, and then releasing their hold disappeared beneath the angry waves that rolled around the unfortunate schooner. Yesterday (Wednesday) morning the "Hope" was observed by persons residing near the scene of the disaster and was towed into Hickman's Harbor, where she is no doubt regarded with melancholy interest by the people of that place.

With The Gun.

Three men from the Topsail Road, who have upwards of three hundred snares set for rabbits in the vicinity of Cochrans Pond, have accounted for one hundred pairs since Friday last, and about fifty partridge. Altogether they netted the handsome sum of $125.00.
Mr. Neil LeMessurier, who was partridge shooting in the same vicinity, bagged 30 brace on Friday and Saturday.
Four city sportsmen who have pitched their camp at Tickle Bay, Barrons, are reported for big bags.

No Press Message

Once more we have to announce to our readers that we are obliged to go to press minus the daily cable message. That there is something radically wrong with the present Cable Company service thrust upon us by the Government is obvious, and this paper now enters a formal protest against the withholding of the daily message from the press and keeping it back until other business is transacted. In ordinary times this would be bad enough, but under present conditions it is an injustice and an outrage. So far the evening papers of this city have been very patient, but the limit of their endurance has now been reached.

Along the Waterfront.

The S. S. Portia left Fortune at 10:30 last evening, going west.
The waterfront presented a very busy scene this morning and was a hive of industry.

The Sarah Bell, Caplin Cove, C.B. Chas. Cull, master, got in last night with a cargo of fish for Bowring Bros. She will take general cargo.
The Mollie Shelbourne, Geo. Whiteley, owner; R. Williams, captain, arrived here from Bonne Esperance, Labrador, a few days ago with a cargo of fish for Baine Johnston & Co. She brought 1600 qts.
The Notice, Belleoram, M. Harris, master, got in Saturday with a cargo of salt fish for Harvey & Co., which she is now discharging.
Large quantities of fish were brought into town by horse from nearby settlements yesterday and today.

As Done in Seattle.

The Americans are leaving no stone unturned in their efforts to win the war, and the papers contain many letters from people telling of what has been done and what should be done. A sample is given in a letter in the Seattle Star in a reply to an advertisement for professional men in the shipyards from a prominent lawyer who under his own signature writes:
"It is a splendid idea and ought to be enlarged upon. Over six months ago I went to one of the war committees and suggested that there are 750 lawyers in Seattle who would be willing to go to work and devote a large share of their time gratuitously to the committee in war work. To show you what can be done. Last May I went out on the docks and among the ships and did some light work until I rubbed the stiff edges off, and now I am able to take a truck and hold my own with the average. I feel a hundred per cent better, and I have been able to take care of my law work, too. This is vacation time, and the lawyers can spend their vacation in the yards or on the docks, and, if they do, let me tell you that many of them will not return to their offices until this war is over. Loading around a law office these times makes a man almost feel himself a slacker. I know that I cannot do it and be just to my two sons on the front line in France. Law is a great profession in ordinary times but during the times of war it sets a man thinking."
Ole Hanson, the Mayor of the City of Seattle, performs his patriotic duties to his country after City Hall hours by working four hours every evening in the Ames' Shipyards as a greeter. He asks no favor and turns his pay over to the Red Cross.—Acadian Recorder.

Police Court.

Wm. H. Trask, charged with murder, was remanded until October 1st.
The three girls who were arrested at half-past two this morning, were arraigned before court. Two of them were sentenced to 14 days' imprisonment, while the third was let go on suspended sentence.
Two of the above, charged with the larceny of 2 buckets, were discharged on this count.
A laborer, who applied for safe keeping, was discharged.
Supreme Court.—The fall session of the Supreme Court which promises to be a busy one, opens on Tuesday next, Oct. 1st.
DIED.
This morning James H. Motty, aged 39 years; funeral on Wednesday, at 2:30 p.m., from 290 LeMarchant Road.
Accidentally killed by motor car, last evening, George Henry Neil, aged 60 years, leaving a wife, six daughters and one son to mourn the loss of a kind husband and loving father. "Gone but not forgotten."—Halifax papers.

Belgium Not Approached.

London, Sept. 19 (By the Associated Press).—The Belgian foreign minister, in discussing Germany's "peace approach" to Belgium, declares that the conditions cannot be taken as a basis for any serious discussion. From the details furnished by the foreign minister, it appears that Belgium received no formal proposition directly from the German Government, but that communication came by an indirect channel. These details showed that it was Germany's intention to demand that Belgium bind herself to effect a solution of the language question in conformity with the German imperial policy, which Belgium would regard as an abdication of the right inherent in her sovereignty to solve internal problems in accordance with the freely expressed will of the Belgian people. Germany would insist upon binding the fate of Belgium with the minister, impose on the Belgian government an act of submission.
Don't Want Trade Serious
Germany would insist on the maintenance after the war of the commercial treaties previously in force. This following up the destruction of Belgian industry by the invader, says the minister, would insure Germany's economic grip on the country. Moreover, he adds, the pawn theory is not abandoned. Germany would insist upon binding the fate of Belgium with the minister, impose on the Belgian government an act of submission.
Hans Must Repair Damage
Finally, the obligation resting on Germany to repair the damage unjustly inflicted on its victim, was not even alluded to. Germany, the minister points out, would thus be enriched by the pillage of Belgium, whose ruin would be complete.
These indirect approaches made no reference to the eventual suspension of hostilities between Belgium and Germany, nor to the evacuation of Belgian territory.

Conditions Unacceptable.

"The conditions thus set forth overshadow and render sterile all declarations which appear to recognize the independence of Belgium. They cannot be taken as a basis for any serious discussion. The Belgian government formulated its programme in its note to the Pope on December 24th last, and published in January, as all the allied governments know, is firmly resolved to maintain it undiminished.

Last Week's Official Review.
The Governor, St. John's:
London, Sept. 21.—After five days of almost perpetual storm of rain, the week's war in the air culminated in remarkable fighting on the British Western front and over Germany itself. Notwithstanding unfavorable air conditions from Tuesday to Thursday night, the British airmen seized every opportunity to press home the advantages gained during the recent operations. In the intervals of fine weather many photographs were taken and they dropped more than twenty tons of bombs on the enemy's organizations behind the lines. On September 18th improved weather produced most marked aerial developments, and large numbers of enemy machines were encountered on the German side of the line. Considering their recent heavy losses, enemy squadrons worked in large formations with bitter combats. In two days of fighting 32 British machines are reported missing, but 72 German machines were destroyed, 27 downed, and one kite balloon downed afire, making a total bag of 100 enemy aircraft in 48 hours. While these heavy battles were proceeding, British bombing squadrons were very active, dropping more than 70 tons of bombs on military objectives behind the enemy lines. On the 16th British reconnaissance machines established a record by bringing back a larger number of aerial photographs than ever before. The R.A.F. Independent Force, operating in concert with the French and American attack on St. Mihiel salient, easily surpassed their own records both in the number of objectives and the weight of bombs dropped. Problems never before has there been such formidable and persistent air assault than the Rhine provinces suffered from British airmen during the week. Between the 13th and 16th, 33 separate raids were made. Twelve of these for the vital railway junction at Metzabon, four at Metzabon, four against Courcelles Junction, seven against the railways at Arnville, Orange, Saarbrücken, Kaiserslautern and Mainz, while heavy attacks also were made on enemy aerodromes at Able, Boulay, Frescaty and Hagenu. Such repeated attacks on the same places are necessary as against the perpetually renewed German repairs and machine production. In addition destructive raids were also made on chemical and aeroplane factories at Mannheim. Damier works at Stuttgart, and dock sidings at Karlsruhe. Fifty-nine tons of bombs were dropped during five days, which equals more than half the total weight of bombs dropped during the whole preceding month. The material results are clearly shown in photographic and other records, as a result of the large number of direct hits obtained and the Austrian peace note has been satisfactorily dealt with by Balfour, Wilson and Clemenceau. It is as yet unknown how deeply the German Government is implicated in the issue of the note, but it is certain they know the gist if not the verbatim of it. The German offer of peace to Belgium, as outlined in the press, is wholly unacceptable. Such stipulations and gains as suggested would be unwarranted interference in the internal affairs of another Sovereign State, and though the Germans themselves established the principle of reparation demanding three hundred millions compensation for the Germans injured by the Russians in the war, Germany now herself refuses any reparation for the ruin wrought by the Germans in Belgium.
On the 19th our Third and Fourth squadrons attacked on a front of about 14 miles between Holgon and Gonservy, and advanced about two miles to close touch with the Hindenburg line and at several points passing the original line held on March 21st. Over 8,000 to 10,000 prisoners were taken. The French 10th Army made substantial advance along practical the whole front between the line of the Ailette, capturing points of tactical importance, 4,000 prisoners and the important position of Moy St. Georges. The Americans achieved most striking success in the St. Mihiel salient, capturing 15,000 prisoners and more than 300 guns. The Germans, generally speaking, did not use the old fighting qualities, as shown by the large number of prisoners and the comparatively small Allied losses. The Germans had constructed a line across the salient to which they have now retired, but it is not proved to be very strong. But it is impossible to allow the Allies to advance further here, owing to the fact thus involved to Metz and the consequent line communication of Metz and Montmédy. The issue of the St. Mihiel salient is an one of the greatest importance and one conclusively to Germany and

Last Week's Official Review.

Governor, St. John's.

London, Sept. 21.—After five days of almost perpetual storms of rain, the week's war in the air culminated in a remarkable fighting on the British eastern front and over Germany itself. Notwithstanding unfavorable conditions from Tuesday to Thursday night, the British airmen seized every opportunity to press home the advantages gained during the recent operations. In the intervals of fine weather many photographs were taken and they dropped more than twenty tons of bombs on the enemy's communications behind the lines. On September 15th improved weather produced most marked aerial developments, and large numbers of enemy aeroplanes were encountered on the eastern side of the line. Considering the recent heavy losses, enemy aeroplanes worked in large formations in bitter combats. In two days' fighting 22 British machines are reported missing, but 72 German machines were destroyed, 27 downed, and one kite balloon downed after making a total bag of 100 enemy aircraft in 48 hours. While these heavy battles were proceeding, British bombing squadrons were very active, dropping more than 70 tons of bombs on military objectives behind the enemy lines. On the 15th British reconnaissance machines established a record by bringing back a large number of aerial photographs than ever was previously recorded in a single day's work. The R.A.F. Independent Force, acting in concert with the French and American attack on St. Mihiel salient, easily surpassed their own records in the number of objectives and weight of bombs dropped. Problems never before has there been such formidable and persistent air action than the Rhine provinces suffered from British airmen during the week. Between the 15th and 16th, 34 aerial raids were made. Twelve of them for the vital railway junction at triangle at Metzablon, four at Courcelles junction, seven at the railways at Arnval, Orange, Saarbrücken, Kaiserslautern and Mainz, while heavy attacks also were made on enemy aerodromes at Boulay, Frescaty and Hagenua. Such repeated attacks on the same places are necessary as against the perpetually renewed German repairs and machine production. In addition destructive raids were also made on chemical and seroplane factories at Mannheim. Bomber works at Stuttgart and dock sidings at Karlsruhe. Sixteen tons of bombs were dropped during five days, which equals more than half the total weight of bombs dropped during the whole preceding month. The material results are clearly shown in photographic and other records, as a result of the large number of direct hits obtained and all objectives reached. The British airmen continue to do successful work in conjunction with the Allied offensive in the Balkans and in Italy. Besides maintaining all the usual pace, they attacked vigorously the naval and military works at Bruges, Ostend, St. Aubin, Mariator, Zevcoote, etc. Over one of these places on the 16th no fewer than eleven enemy machines were destroyed and seven more were downed, with only two British machines falling to return.

The Austrian peace note has been satisfactorily dealt with by Balfour, Wilson and Clemenceau. It is as yet unknown how deeply the German Government is implicated in the issue of the note, but it is certain they know the gist if not the verbatim of it. The German offer of peace to Belgium, as stated in the press, is wholly unacceptable. Such stipulations and promises as suggested would be ungranted interference in the internal affairs of another Sovereign State, although the Germans themselves established the principle of reparation by demanding three hundred millions compensation for the Germans injured by the Russians in the war, Germany now herself refuses any reparation for the ruin wrought by the Germans in Belgium.

On the 19th our Third and Fourth Divisions attacked on a front of about 14 miles and advanced about two miles close touch with the Hindenburg line and at several points passing the original line held on March 21st. Some 8,000 to 10,000 prisoners were taken. The French 10th Army made substantial advance along practical the whole front between the line of the Ailette, capturing points of tactical importance, 4,000 prisoners and the important position of Moy. The Americans achieved most striking success in the St. Mihiel salient, capturing 15,000 prisoners and more than 200 guns. The Germans, generally speaking, did not meet the old fighting qualities, as shown by the large number of prisoners and the comparatively small Allied losses. The Germans had constructed a line across the salient, to which they have now retired, but it is not considered to be very strong. But the Germans cannot allow the Allies to advance further here, owing to the fact thus involved to Metz and the important side line communication of Metz, Metz and Montmedy. The capture of the St. Mihiel salient is an event of the greatest importance and one of the most important to Germany and all the world that the American Army is as highly trained fighting machine as the German, French or British. Now that the ground between the Meuse and the Moselle has been captured, the Allies are enabled at any time to mount an attack in this direction, threatening the whole German line.

In Northern Russia there was skirmishing to the west of the Murman railway, resulting in our favor. In the Archangel region the Bolsheviks have fallen back on the Onega-Oberlenskaya Road, so that we have secured this line of communication. The Czech-Slovak forces in European Russia, have been hard pressed. In the last week or ten days the Bolsheviks, helped by a large number of German troops, have driven them out from Volsk, Simbirsk and Kazan. The fall of the latter was entirely due to want of ammunition. The Czechs, indeed, are very outworn, lacking in munitions, equipment and stores, and are most urgently requiring the prompt help of the Allies, especially as the Germans are reported to be concentrated considerably in the Charok-Bielgora area, probably aiming at intercepting Alexieff's forces from the Czechs at Samara. But it is to be noted that though hard pressed, the Czechs are keeping the enemy busy in Russia, thus having an important effect on the situation in the Western front. The German offer to withdraw the troops in Northern Russia if we will do the same is apparently due to her difficulty in getting the Finns to fight, and also her desire to avoid further involvements, considering her situation on the Western front. Nevertheless she continues preparing, and we must be forearmed against serious attack on the coast railway.

The French and Serbian attack in the Balkans was completely successful. More than 50 guns were captured, and all points of tactical importance were secured along the front, where the Allied line was previously dominated by the Bulgarian positions. A British detachment was sent to Baku on an urgent appeal of the inhabitants, with a view to stiffening their defense against the Turks and Germans and saving the Caspian shipping and Baku oil. It was known that the expedition was a hazardous one since the Armenian National Council made peace with the Turks, but it was hoped that the Armenian population of 80,000 would offer stout resistance to their persecutors, and if so the strategic gain, it was held, would justify the risk. The Bolsheviks were overthrown and a new one set up, which begged for British assistance. But the number of troops sent was limited by the difficult communications. To secure this small force, including some ten thousand Russians and Armenians on the spot, it was obvious that loyal co-operation was necessary, but the Centro-Caspian Government appeared to think no further effort was necessary after the arrival of the British detachment, and the Armenian troops proved quite unreliable in action. On the 26th of August a determined Turkish attack was beaten off by the North Staffords and Worcesters, and a second attack on another sector was also repulsed. By the end of August it was recognized that the co-operation of the local Government was insufficient to justify the sacrifice of our small detachment at Baku, in the face of superior enemy numbers and communications, and orders were issued to evacuate the British troops. The same day the Turks again attacked, and our allies again failed to cooperate, so that the Royal Warwickshire had to cover the retreat of the Armenians and Russians, and it is feared lost heavily. On the 2nd of Sept. the Russian General Biekarakov occupied Petrovsk and promised to send reinforcements to Baku. At first a small detachment actually arrived on the 9th of September. Promises of reinforcements and complete enemy inactivity tended to improve the morale of the Allies, but meanwhile the Armenians were negotiating to hand over the town to the enemy. Our Fleet thereupon trapped its guns on the Armenian quarter. On the 14th the Turks made a determined attack, and after a battle of sixteen hours, chiefly borne by the British and other troops, they evacuated Baku. The Russians by now disintegrated, the feeble and untrustworthy behaviour of the Armenians, and contemplated depositing the Government to assume control in conjunction with the British. As General Dumasville reports the evacuation force of Russians probably helped him with the necessary shipping, realizing that further resistance was useless. In Trans-Caspian the Bolshevik advance has come to a standstill owing to the resistance of the British troops.

Recent events in Russia reveal the Bolshevik tyranny as a desperate mania, threatening the stability of the entire world's civilization, almost as obviously as the German ambitions, unless promptly and definitely crushed by the Allied forces of democracy throughout the world.

Canon Smart

At the General Synod of the Anglican Church in Canada.

An incident of the Anglican General Synod which may become historic in the Church in British North America, was the visit of Rev. Canon Smart, of the diocese of Newfoundland. Canon Smart came as a delegate of the Church in the Dominion of Newfoundland. It was the first time in the history of the Anglican Church that an official delegate from that island Dominion had visited the General Synod of Canada. Canon Smart is the Rector of Heart's Content, Newfoundland. He said that, although he had not a Newfoundland by birth, he had only been outside of that island once in thirty years. He had never been in Canada until last week. He expressed the hope that he would go down to history as the only Newfoundland delegate ever sent to the General Synod. "It is not that I am ambitious for special distinction," said Canon Smart, "but I hope the next clergyman who comes to the General Synod of Canada, will come with his Bishop as part of the great Canadian Church. Whenever Newfoundland does come into ecclesiastical federation with this great country, I hope the Canadian Church will remember that Newfoundland has much to give as well as receive." He spoke of the things already given the Anglican Church. The hymn, "We Love the Place, O God," was written by a Newfoundland Rector, Rev. Wm. Bullock, when he opened his new church at Trinity Bay, many years ago. Notable men in the Church born in Newfoundland were Archbishop Bond, Bishop Pinkham, of Calgary, and the Rev. John Antle. Speaking in reply, Bishop Pinkham said he hoped the time was not far distant when all Churchmen in British North America would be united in one great Federation. Rev. Dr. Tucker expressed the same sentiment. "No portion of the world is more tolerant of self-government than we Canadians," he said. "We will not lift a finger to force the Newfoundland Church to federate with us, but we will welcome them when they come. Archbishop Matheson closed with a message to the Church in Newfoundland. The Primate said: "The door is open, and when in the providence of God you choose to come in, we will receive you with open arms.—Canadian Churchman.

Nfld. Salmon.

Hard salted salmon from Newfoundland appears to be taking the attention of merchants in New York to a greater extent than in former years. The supply from the Pacific Coast may not be as large this season as it was, but there is reason to believe that the demand for this salt fish will be greater in the coming winter. Newfoundland supplies a good percentage of cured fish to the American market. Certainly, an increased supply of hard salted salmon from this source will find a market here in times like these.—N. Y. The Roadmakers

A Story of the Garrison of Kut. (From the London Daily Telegraph.)

(Over half the garrison of Kut, including at least two-thirds of the British rank and file, have died in captivity.)

The Jews they toiled for Pharaoh
 And groaned beneath his rod,
 For Pharaoh's hand was heavy,
 Till the people called on God,
 And God showed signs and wonders
 To set his chosen free—
 And broke the rod of Pharaoh,
 And smote the land of Pharaoh,
 And slew with plagues his first born
 His armies in the sea.

You were five to one, but fled from us
 On many a stricken field,
 We fought you all the sweltering Seasons through;
 And when you hemmed us in at last
 And we were forced to yield,
 We struck out fast to hunger, not to you.

You lied to us with courteous speech,
 And we believed you then,
 To learn, to soon, your honor's little worth;
 To-day but few are left alive to tell the tale to men,
 But our blood cries out against you
 From the earth.

Famished and spent, across the water,
 Headlike you drove us on,
 And clubbed to death the stragglers
 By the way;
 Our sick men in the lezar-huis you left
 To die alone,
 And you robbed the very dying as they lay.

Naked and starved, we built your roads
 And trenched through your hills,
 And you flogged us when we faintest
 At our work;
 Fevered, beneath the sun we toiled,
 Wracked by the winter hills,
 Till death released us, kinder than the Turk.

The wastes through which you herded us,
 The barren ways we came,
 Where the weak fell out to die beside
 The track—
 The remnants of your armies shall be Hunted through the same
 With the sword of our avengers at their back.

And the tunnels that we drove for you,
 The roads that we have made,
 Shall be highways for the armies of your foe.

We shall mock you from our graves,
 That in what we did as slaves
 We helped, we too, to work your overthrow.

Heartbroken and forsaken
 Our Calvary we trod,
 Yet with our faith unshaken
 We turned from you to God;
 And God has greatly taught us
 To count our losses gain,
 Since we who fought for England,
 Here, too, took thought for England.

In bondage wrought for England—
 And have not died in vain.

That Letter to our Soldier.

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

It seems almost incredible, doesn't it, that anyone who is a soldier boy at the front would need to be reminded to write to him often?

One would think that, leaving the question of duty entirely aside, such writing would be a relief, a natural outlet, or the flood of tears which the departure of brother or son or lover or husband has stemmed up inside of one.

And yet people do need such reminders.

He Didn't Get a Single Letter.

For instance, one of the most pathetic stories of the war (to me) was the tale of a youngster who, when a big mail came in and everyone had two or three letters from home, received nothing but a printed Christmas card (it was two months after Christmas). The description of the way the lad hurried off, while the other men were reading their letters, to hide the tears that the sharpness of his disappointment brought to his eyes, brought the tears to my own eyes. And the further tale of the kind hearted fraud that the other boys played on him by re-addressing to him a little gift which one of the girls from his own town had sent another man from that same town, dried my tears with pride in our boys who, through the horrors of war, can still preserve such tenderness and sympathy.

How Can They Write Other Than Cheerfully!

Then again, one would think that people would need no urging to write cheerfully. And yet we hear tales of people at home who pour out their woes and worries to the boys at the front. Inconceivable, again, isn't it? Surely no mother or wife would want the boy who is carrying a heavy pack on his back, to carry a few pounds more for her. And yet is it not just as bad to add to the burden which they have to carry in their hearts?

In one of the recent magazines was a letter from a son who had just volunteered for an especially dangerous service. It was a very wonderful letter.

If you haven't read it, I hope you will come across it. One paragraph fits in with my subject. "In the hardest hours here I've seen your brave smile in my memory and, only God knows how I've thanked you for writing only words of cheer. Some of the boys all but go to pieces when they have letters from home, but I have had a hearty laugh over every letter of yours. My pal says sometimes he will hunt you up and see if you look as happy as you write."

The Two Kinds of Mothers. What a contrast between the mothers whose sons "all but go to pieces" when they read their letters and the mothers whose sons can say "God knows how I've thanked you for writing only words of cheer."

It doesn't seem as if any mother or sister or wife or sweetheart could hesitate as to which sort she wished to be classed with.

This is to certify that I have used MINARD'S LINIMENT in my family for years, and consider it the best liniment on the market. I have found it excellent for horse flesh.

Household Notes

When weighing molasses for cooking purposes, if the scale is well floured first, the molasses will run off quite smoothly without leaving any stickiness behind.

A square of asbestos paper should be taken along on a camping trip—it may be made into a cone to hold the potatoes, etc., which are to be roasted in the ashes.

Be careful about the vessels in which food is cooked, and the refrigerator and pantry where it is kept. If these be not immaculate, the food will not taste its best.

Nut bread will be enjoyed in the children's lunch basket. Make a plain cup cake, omitting the eggs; stir in finely chopped nuts, either black or English walnuts, and bake.

In making cookies, try forming the dough into a long roll about one inch in diameter and cut in one-inch slices with a sharp knife. Flatten each slice slightly with the hand as you place them in the pan to bake.

Napoleon, of the great renown, was fond of sounding phrases: He cried, "The pyramids look down," in Egypt, hot as blazes. He liked to hit a haughty pose, and try to look as stately as some huge Alp, whose loads of snow has advertised it greatly. As great a general as he now deals the iron rations, in charge of France's destiny, and that of allied nations. Great Foch, who bears the biggest load that ever mortal carried, who chased the Teutons down the road, all rattled, beaten, harried! He is so busy with the Teut, the flood of vandals damming, he has no time to elocute or do some epigramming. He hasn't time for gems of thought, like that old sport, Rienz; he's out to see some Prussians shot, to keep the Hunns in a frenzy. Of high remarks he's not the fount, like orator and writer; "Realities are all that count," observes that grand old fighter. The fight is hard, the way is rough, the foes are stubborn stayers; "we came, we saw, we conquered" stuff will do for grand stand players. Reverses of the foeman mount, our own are growing fewer; "Realities are all that count," Foch tells the interviewer. He is so busy canning kings and squelching tyrant nations, he has no time to think up things for schoolboy declamations.

Just Folks

Edgar August

THE TWO FATES.

Along life's highway walked a manly youth. Seeking, as young men do, the flower of truth. Straight ran the path for many a day. Each day began and ended with a smile. Then suddenly gray clouds lowered overhead. The laughter stopped, the fields seemed brown and dead. The air grew chill, the passerby looked strange. As though some grief had worked a sudden change. And then the roadway forked; no longer straight. Life's path had led him to the realms of fate.

Then something whispered: "Come this way to life! I shall not test your honour nor demand cruel service for your native land. I shall not bid you toll when you would play. Rack you with pain nor starve you through the day. And send you out to die while others live." Long years of life I guarantee to give. But knew this, also: If my gift you claim, You shall be friendless and the prey of shame.

"What, if I follow you, shall be my fate? He asked the sentry at the other gate. "This way lies death—do oft by many a man's side." This way trod those whom mortals loudly cheered. I cannot offer life by months and some quickly fall who choose to tread my ways. I shall demand stern service, long eyes that are blinded and a body scarred. And even life itself, but in return I give what only men of courage earn.

"Who walks my way, shall keep his head erect. Shall meet with men and own his self-respect. Shall keep his friends shall speak his name With honest love and pride; eternal fame Shall keep his memory green, and it shall stand For one who answered duty's grim command. Choose now, young man, with whom you wish to tread— The shameful living, or the honored dead." The young man answered with unfaltering breath: "I choose to serve! There are worse fates than death."

Milady's Boudoir

ILL OF THE HANDS.

Misshaped red, scrawny, fat, awkward nervous, ill colored, periphrizing of chapped hands are ill which the hand is heir to and not only the cause of old looking hands, but often the means of desecrating ones charm. To correct any of these shortcomings one must study the hands and find out where the trouble lies. If they are prematurely aged, neglect is most likely the cause. Some claim old looking hands as an inheritance. I do not believe this. We inherit certain tendencies rather than any unchangeable physical appearance, and most likely one has inherited one's mother's tendencies to neglect one's hands. No doubt the hands have been kept clean and nails properly attended to, but still, I think, premature ageing is the result of neglect. The hands are hungry. This may sound queer to some, but to illustrate: Miss a meal or two and become quite hungry, then scrutinize the face closely in the mirror and you will find that hunger has cut deep lines about the lips, eyes and cheeks, where before the fast nothing but beauty and youth were reflected. This is exactly what happens to the hands that are not properly fed. They should be well fed, so that the tissues worn out by constant use and exposure are quickly replenished. Hands suffer much from worry, and for want of rest, and sleep. You may not believe it, but it is true. When you are travelling on the cars watch the hands of your companions, as they move them. You will find most of them sifting, restless, ever moving. These are worrying hands and are thin and shapeless, the veins very prominent and the flesh ill colored. The quiet hand is fair to look upon, the veins are covered with firm flesh and the skin is free from wrinkles. Worry makes the hand old, while serenity makes it slim and youthful.

Amiens Cathedral Has Escaped Ruin.

"Amiens, like Chateau Thierry, isn't wiped out," writes the special correspondent of the New York Sun, "although many of the stores in the main business section have been smashed. The luckiest thing of all is that the Cathedral escaped almost unscathed, although it was hit four times. One shell badly smashed the organ, another wrecked a group of saints near the altar and the others also caused some damage, but the altar itself was not touched, and most of the fine windows were unbroken. All of the precious vessels, ornaments and paintings were removed in the early days of the German menace and are safe, but it is a shock to see the vaulted interior of this sacred place coated deeply with dust and to see the fragments of the roof lying around outside. It is a miraculous thing that, although the gray stone walls were wrecked in many places by shell fragments, the magnificent base relief at the main portal, facing Place Notre Dame, was not touched—it represents Judgment Day. The fact that much of the fine stone carving of the cathedral had been swathed and protected by sandbags may explain in part its gratifying state of preservation. "Montdidier is a ghastly contrast. Its gray buildings, ranged terraced along the shelving valley of the little River Don, are shattered and roofless. They look like staring eye-sockets of a human skull, and one instinctively expects to see bats flitting about. Paris swells are standing, but parts only. The streets are piled with debris. There is a church in Montdidier—or there was one—the Church of St. Peter. The church is half ruined, and beneath every altar in its deep cellar the Boche had established a telephone station. The tombs in the cemetery were smashed by shells and in some the coffins are exposed. The angels which supported the columns of the doorway of the Hotel de Ville are wingless now and legless, typical of the torture which has been inflicted on what was once a pretty town with thousands of homes."—Canadian Churchman.

Longing for Peace.

Everybody interested in what has been called the "psychology of the Kaiser" should study the address which the all-Highest has just delivered to the workmen at Krupp's.
For perversions of fact, for naive avowals beneath the mask of concealment, for grotesque invocations of right and impudent attempts to justify wrong, it has never been equaled since the imperial megalomaniac of Europe first opened his peace drive. Dip into it anywhere and you will realize how sickled o'er with the pale cast of thought the German outlook has become in these past few weeks.

When the Kaiser drew his sword against civilization there was no talk about readiness to "offer the hand of peace," no whining about "the horrors of war," no disquisitions concerning responsibility for the onslaught. What the world witnessed was the Prussian avalanche, pouring its armed host into Belgium and France, bent on crushing everything in its way and so certain of speedy victory that the invaders sang as they marched. Since then something has happened. To-day the German war-lord sees this wave of invasion which he sent forth being slowly but surely thrust back over the road by which it came. Then he had only Europeans for antagonists; now he faces the total man-power and wealth of the United States and knows that their unrelaxing grip, in a programme of "force without stint," will be upon him until a decision is reached. It is the problem of a continually increasing factor arrayed against a continually decreasing factor, with a solution so inevitable that it must already enter into the fabric of his dreams and even sit at his table like Banquo's ghost. "Gentlemen, rise; his highness is not well."

No wonder that the utterances of his highness lack their early note of expectancy, of assurance, of elation, and that in place of them we get faintly veiled excuses which amount to self-accusations. No wonder that people up to sticking point he must explain, deny, prostrate and falsify.
"How did such a thing happen?" It was not Germany which began the war, but the lazy nations of Europe who, falling behind the Fatherland in "industry, science and art," in "popular education and social legislation," grew envious of her and plotted her destruction. "Why has the war gone on so long?"—an adroit disguise for the question, "Why after four years of fighting is Germany farther from victory than ever and now plainly on the way to defeat?" It is all because the human motives of the Kaiser failed of appreciation and because his peace proposals have been received "with jeers, mockery and contempt."
The lying pretext is advanced that the allies aim at "the negation of the German people's right to exist." Caught on premises not his own, the imperial burglar protests that he is waging there "a war of national defence" and holds up his hands in horror to high heaven.

Observe how unctuously allusions to the moral order of the world roll from the Kaiser's tongue and with what inverted logic his appeal for justification goes out to the "eternal verities." Speaking for the country which chanted Lissauer's "Hymn of Hate," he has the effrontery to charge that it was the allies who "introduced terrible hatred into this war." He is only more audacious in presenting Germany as the champion of faith against unbelief, of optimism against doubt—the same Germany which Schoepensauer filled with pessimists,
"by and by" created materialists by the million. What does he mean by telling us that "in this world good clashes with evil" other than that the Teutonic "Gott mit Uns" is behind Germany's campaign against freedom? And what shall be said of a casuist who declares in effect that the men who violated the neutrality of Belgium, executed Edith Cavell, fired on hospital ships, bombed defenceless cities and sank the Lusitania were asserting "the Yes of Heaven against the No of Hell?" It is such a man, representing such a nation, who now, under the blows of Foch, Haig and Pershing, burns anew with the passion for humanity and would fain take the world into his fraternal embrace. And when such a man under such auspicious voices a German "peace drive" we may accept the light it throws on the situation without cessating to "fear the Greeks and the gifts they bring."—Boston Herald.

"Baby" That Sunk a U-boat.

This is the thrilling story of the "Baby" that sunk a U-boat. The story is quite authentic and told by the Times Naval Correspondent. It is one of several remarkable stories showing the way in which U-boats go down and do not come up again, thanks to our "Q" boats.

"When the summons came from the German submarine to surrender, enforced with a few shells—one of which carried away the ship's galley —the boats were lowered and pulled off, leaving on board only a woman who, with a baby in her arms, ran screaming up and down the deck.

"To the inquiries of the Germans the answer was given that the captain having been killed, his wife had gone mad and would not leave the ship," whereupon the U-boat dived alongside the stricken vessel. As she approached, the mad woman, rushing up to the side of the vessel, hurled her baby into the open hatch of the submarine's conning tower, and threw herself overboard on the opposite side.

"Whether the Germans were more shocked than astonished does not matter, for before they had time to think, the "baby" had blown out the bottom of their craft, and in due course the "woman" appeared at Buckingham Palace to receive the V.C. as a reward for his skillfully-planned and well-executed feat.

"Here is the case of a retired Admiral, commanding one of the boats as a captain, R.N.R., who placed a haystack on board his vessel, an ancient-looking craft, and was in due course summoned to surrender by a U-boat, and ordered to prepare to sink his ship.

"This was complied with, to all appearance, and boats slung out, etc., when, to the utter astonishment of the submarine commander, he received a broadside from out of the haystack, and found that he had, indeed, caught a Tartar.

"Then, again, there is the story of the "Q" boat which in the guise of a battered and sea-worn tramp under Dutch colours, was crossing the North Sea, limping along at an easy rate, when a submarine ordered the crew to abandon ship.

"So sure was the German of his prey that the bombs with which he intended to sink the stranger were brought on deck and placed around the base of the conning tower.

"The commander of the tramp resorted to some skilful manoeuvring, which, while it seemed to denote the helpless movement of a panic-stricken skipper, brought the submarine within range of the concealed armament.

"So placed, it required only a shell or two, well directed, to touch off the bombs round the conning tower, and blow the U-boat out of the water."

Nova Scotia Steamship, Ltd.

A notable addition to the water transportation lines operating between New York and Newfoundland, lately established through the agency of the Federal Line, Inc., of New York, is that of the Nova Scotia Steamships, Ltd., whose service is now in operation. This new line, which has already aided materially in the movement of freight and passengers between the two points, is running on a weekly service in which two steamers are engaged for the present.

The steamers at making stops under schedule at New York, Boston, Yarmmouth, N.S., Halifax, N. S., and St.
John's, N.F., affording a weekly freight and fortnightly passenger service, and it is probable that in the near future other smaller steamers will be added to the fleet. Bookings for freights may be made at either terminals.

The new line is equipped to handle such freight as may originate at any of the intermediate points by special arrangement, while through cargoes can be accommodated at either New York or St. John's.

Freight and passenger rates will be furnished at the New York office of the line through the managing agents, the Federal Line, Inc., 73 Broad Street.

Nfld. Scotch Cured Herring.

An increasing demand for New foundland Scotch cured herring has been noted since last reports, and as a result of the movement of stocks intermediate hands the market has naturally become firmer. While there are no advances in the quotations of importers or wholesalers, jobbers are reported to be demanding high prices for their limited stocks. The trade which during the early weeks of August declined to interest itself in this grade more than to the extent of their immediate requirements, is now purchasing liberally in many cases—and at the full market quoti-tions. Fall herring is practically out of first hands, but what remains is commanding up to $26 and 27 per barrel for good quality, and there is a good demand for winter and spring herring at prices ranging from $22 and $27 in some cases. The supply of this herring in all hands is comparatively light, and there is not likely to be further heavy receipts. Supplies in St. John's are likewise reported to be scarce, as is the case in the outports.
The prospect is that there will be only a quantity sufficient to supply the trade during the fall and winter months.—N. Y. Fishing Gazette, Sept. ember 14.

The capture of Kfar Saba has brought

The proper care of wet shoes

The high cost of shoes makes it imperative to use every means to make them last as long as possible. Moisture is their worst enemy. It dries and cracks the leather, ruins their shape and shortens their life of wear.

You can save yourself many a dollar by using "Fitall" Shoe Trees in your shoes. They not only immediately restore them to their original shape, but make your shoes wear longer and give you infinitely greater comfort.

Kaiser Indicted By Commandments.

New York.—"I had rather go before God, the Judge to-night in the person of any other son of humanity since time first began than in the person of that criminal of all criminals the German Emperor."

In those terms the Rev. Dr. S. Edward Young concluded an indictment of Kaiser Wilhelm in the Bedford Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Young began his indictment by saying: "Some fools strewed violets on Nero's grave. The same variety of mortal will begin to condone Kaiser Wilhelm, whose star is fast declining and whose soul is so much blacker than Nero's, as his light was larger. Wilhelm stands indicted by the Ten Commandments.

"By the first since he made himself a god, exercising the divine right of the Hohenzollerns. By the second, because he set up the idol of Prussian militarism and would force the hard-tested people of the Allies in Europe. Therefore, it would seem that the old-fashioned letter of commiseration would be abandoned and that a letter of praise and tender reflection would be more appropriate to the spirit of the day. At best, such letters re-open old wounds and bring to busy minds an ever-recurring sense of loss. There is no time for lament in this hour of approaching victory, and each hero who goes over the sea to oppose the British foe would prefer that in his family there be a minimum of mourning and a maximum of war effort. In England at the present moment many of the announcements in the 'Killed in Action' columns in the press bear the earnest request—'Friends, please no letters.'—The Chronicle.

"By the fifth in that he has bereaved more fathers and mothers than any other individual that ever lived. By the sixth, by what countless skeleton fingers point to him as the arch murderer of history. By the seventh was ever woman's chastity so violated as by his minions? By the eighth there testify stolen Belgium and Luxembourg and Poland, and feloniously taken parts of France and Russia.

"By the ninth in which stolen covenants between the nations has not the Kaiser lied. By the tenth, covetousness in his master passion. By that new commandment that ye love one another.

"This monster of frightfulness has breathed hate and inspired hate and begotten hate and would freeze the blood of all his subjects into one colossal clot of cruelty and blanch the remainder of mankind with stupefying fear."

Taking No Chances.

A potential German naval base in the Virgin Islands has been seized by the U. S. Alien Property Custodian and will be used for the needs of the American Navy and Customs Department. The base consists of land, buildings, docks, warehouses, large water tanks, cisterns, lighters, loading paraphernalia and coaling facilities, formerly owned by the Hamburg-American Line. In announcing seizure of the marine plant, which is at St. Thomas, Alien Property Custodian Palmer said that the fact that Germany considered it admitted of possibilities as a naval base "was shown by the fact that their principal building commanding the harbor is of reinforced concrete and the plaza in front of it is said to have an eight foot foundation of concrete, fit for gun emplacements." One of the reasons for the purchase of the Danish West Indies by the United States was the fact that St. Thomas offered a natural base for the defence of the Panama Canal, and it is the intention of the government to fortify the harbor and establish a naval station there.

Fritzie's Slimness

Attempts on the part of German prisoners to escape from the camp at Catterick, in Yorkshire, G.B., have been keeping the authorities very much on the alert lately. A few days ago two men were recaptured after a week's freedom. They were actually discovered in an aeroplane about to fly away. Their names are Walter Kloesberg and Max Marzinko. Although the surrounding country was thoroughly searched for a week nothing was seen of the men until an air mechanic spotted them sitting in an aeroplane in the ground of an aerodrome. The fugitives were fully equipped, even to goggles, as officers of the R.A.F., and at first they so imposed on an air mechanic that a machine was being prepared for them to make a flight, when one of the men made a remark in a foreign accent, and aroused suspicion. The mechanic detained them, and found that he had secured the missing prisoners. The prisoners stated that they were both tired of hanging about and feeding on potatoes and turnips. One of the men said they had spent the whole of the week-end in a coga field not far from the camp, and that they had hidden in a secluded spot in the field.

DECLINE IN PRICE.—Rabbits sold at 90 cents a brace to-day, a fall in price of 10 cents since the opening of the season.

Eggs are cheaper than meat, even at their highest, and there are many ways of serving them to take the place of meat, which ways will be found in any good cook book.

MINARD'S LINIMENT USED BY PHYSICIANS.

Bann Letters of Condolence.

By Richard Fletcher.

Can it be true that another honored form will be thrown on the dust heap of usage and that the letter of condolence will be eliminated in case the death of a loved one was hallowed by the glory of dying in battle? Are the proud and sad survivors of a military and naval hero to be spared the messages of sympathy in this new era, when we understand one another so well, that such communications are unnecessary? Perhaps, at last, mankind is realizing the true meaning of death and that much of the grief and the misery thereof, is without justification. Surely the mind radiant with philosophy will not deplore the sacrifice of life on the altar of freedom. Americans in their acceptance of this solemn duty, have shown fortitude and courage the British have shown the hard-tested people of the Allies in Europe. Therefore, it would seem that the old-fashioned letter of commiseration would be abandoned and that a letter of praise and tender reflection would be more appropriate to the spirit of the day. At best, such letters re-open old wounds and bring to busy minds an ever-recurring sense of loss. There is no time for lament in this hour of approaching victory, and each hero who goes over the sea to oppose the British foe would prefer that in his family there be a minimum of mourning and a maximum of war effort. In England at the present moment many of the announcements in the 'Killed in Action' columns in the press bear the earnest request—'Friends, please no letters.'—The Chronicle.

Burred to Death by Bolsheviki.

London, Sept. 19.—The former Russian empress and three princesses and two grand-duchesses, whose names are not reported, were burned to death about a month after the Russian emperor was shot, according to a story reaching London. The source of the story is given consideration in some quarters and an investigation has been started. After the former empress was killed the women were taken to an isolated village, according to the present report, made prisoners in a residence, and were there only a few days when a crowd of Bolsheviki attacked the house. The women barricaded the doors and the house was set on fire. All the persons in the house perished.

There have been various reports as to the fate of the former Russian empress and her daughters. A London newspaper on Sept. 12, reported that she and her four daughters had been murdered by the Bolsheviki. The report was denied a few days later by the Bolsheviki foreign minister.

Wilhelm and Nero.

The late King Oscar, of Sweden, about the time of the coronation of the Kaiser, spoke of the German Emperor as another Nero. This seemed a harsh judgment at the time, but the developments of the past five years have shown that the shrewd old King was wiser than his generation. The Roman Emperor has come down through the ages as the very same of bestiality and wickedness, largely probably because of his connection with the first persecution of Christians. Ernest Renan claims that Nero was not the maddest or most wicked but the vainest and most ridiculous sovereign whom ever the hazard of events has put into the foreground of history. He was a small poet, a poor actor and an amateur artist in all he undertook, and if all these attributes do not neatly fit the Kaiser, then there is no resemblance in the world. Renan says further concerning Nero:

In Nero there was something at once terrifying and grotesque, grandiose and absurd. . . . The fantasies of all centuries . . . were jostled chaotically together in his brain, the feeble brain of a mediocre but self-sufficient artist, to whom chance had granted the power to realize all his wildest dreams. Imagine a man with almost as much intelligence as one of the heroes of M. Victor Hugo, a Shrove Tuesday, merry Andrew, a mixture of lunatic, jockey and actor, invested with universal power, and charged with the task of governing the world.

He had not the black wickedness of Domitian, love of evil for the sake of evil; nor was he an extravagant prodigal of Caligula's type; he was a conscientious romanticist, an Emperor of the opera, a melodramatic trembling for the applause of the gallery and making the gallery tremble. . . . The despote of the East, terrible and grave, had not these debauches of perverse aestheticism. . . . It was not enough for him to drive chariots in the circus, to bowl himself hoarse in public, to tour the provinces as a singer.

The repeated declarations of the Kaiser concerning his alleged direct and intimate partnership with Divinity, his boasts to his people that he would crush every form of opposition to his will, his wild tirades on the subject of Divine Right, his sermons uttered in direct words of Deity, and the noise, glitter, pomp and peacockism of his ostentatious journeys to the East and elsewhere all show the parallelism in character and ideas of the old Pagan Roman and the 'Most Christian' Kaiser of to-day. Surely the time has passed for madmen to be permitted to sit on thrones and direct the destiny of nations.—Acadian Recorder.

"They Want To Go Back."

No matter whether their armies are advancing or retreating, no matter whether ground is being yielded or gained, no matter whether prisoners are being taken or lost, it is at the same to the German War Office: they always announce a victory for German arms and declare whatever they have done is exactly what they wanted to do. They are never surprised and never disappointed, always perfectly satisfied. The Kaiser's government has an official "decorator," as Mrs. Partington would say, whose business it is to paint the situation in such a manner as to allay public apprehension and to prepare the public minds for possible changes of position. This official camoufleur is Captain Von Salzman and in general he does his work well, but his latest effort is a most lugubrious one. Very naively he declares that "it does not lie in our hands to finish the war" and that after all, the Hindenburg Line is the best place for the German army to be, for it is the natural defensive position for the Continental German Empire." He adds that "Germany is fighting a defensive war, any public apprehension and to prepare the public minds for possible changes of position. The Generosity of the Poor.
 Evening Telegram.
 Dear Sir,—I have been rather interested in the correspondence between Mrs. Julia Salter Earle and Mary Whelan.
 Reading the different letters, the following statements appear to stand before others.
 First. Mrs. Earle in her first communication states the girl is 10 or 11 years. In her second letter she admits that the girl gave her age as 13 years. Mrs. Whelan states she is between 15 and 16 years. Now it really does not matter whether she is 10 or 13 years—her age has no bearing on the case. But as a simple statement of fact, which is the more likely to be correct, Mrs. Whelan who mothered the girl for two years, and probably knows all about her antecedents, Mrs. Earle who contradicts herself who probably never heard of the girl until last week?
 Second. Mrs. Whelan states the girl went to school the first day after the holidays and that she intends to send her there.
 Third. Any sensible man or woman would appear unreasonable for Mrs. Whelan to suggest to the girl that it would be better for her to work a couple of weeks and then to go to school for the winter. Inferentially, did it not indicate her intention of sending her to school for the winter at least, and that she intended feeding and clothing her?
 Fourth. About the girl herself. Is it to be believed in implicitly? Mrs. Whelan states she ran away from the orphanage on two occasions. Does not this in itself speak volumes. If her nature could not be so good, the kind, gentle treatment of the good Nuns, I fear she must be a strong, wayward girl.
 Fifth. Mrs. Earle inquires into the character of the girl. Mrs. Whelan states she herself gives the girl to this day, for Mrs. Whelan states she goes back to her on three different occasions.
 Sixth. Editor, I have a great regard for the working man. I go in and out amongst them a lot and I can safely say that for single-minded charity and generosity there are none to equal that of the poor towards one another. It is an old saying, "there are some so generous as the poor," and I know it for a fact. I have seen exemplified scores of times. Mrs. Whelan, true to the traditions of her class, takes the girl to her own home and keeps her for two years. I think she has done nothing out of the ordinary. Mrs. Earle equally kind and generous does all that is in her power to do, but she writes a letter of self-glorification to the paper telling us of her good deeds.
 Yours truly,
 ANTI-SENTIMENTALIST.

Two Things Wanted.
 The first is a decent Government, who will not only do their duty to the State but will also help out their fellowman. The other thing wanted—and very much wanted—is a living wage for that body of servants who are doing the public work of the country.
 A casual glance will show the most observant just what the state of things is as regards the civil servant in St. John's.
 To ask the mechanic, the laborer, the clerk, the artisan what his wage is to-day, and what he is still further asking for, and mark you, sir, will then question the average civil servant, and ask him what he gets for his work he is giving to all our people at large.
 It is not a crying shame when on comparing the wages of the civil servant with that of any other paid citizen, we find that the Government pays only half of what every other out-employer of labor pays.
 Now, in the name of common justice, what is the civil servant living on what? How is he doing it? It is quite a problem, as I proved in my lecture of yesterday, and yet a magnificent argument is expected the official "get along" and to say nothing of it.
 Again, this waiting the arrival of Mr. Lloyd in the hope that he will raise the salaries of the half-starved civil employees. What nonsense. What a farce. What a travesty of human right and justice.
 What does this missing Premier do? He grows rich and prominent and is assured of his thousands a year, and the knowledge that a body of men look eagerly to his coming is going to accelerate (one step) the Doctor.
 Now, I ask, and I speak for a large number of underpaid, struggling officials, why doesn't the Acting Premier do something now? Can't he make a list of those who are not getting their share of the work and perhaps then he will see what can be done.

Fatal Motor Accident.

Mr. Neil Struck by Big Car and Almost Instantly Killed---The Driver Arrested, But Released Under Bonds.

As a result of being struck by a motor car, Geo. H. Neil, aged 69 years, of Burke's Square, was almost instantly killed at 6.10 last evening. The car was driven by W. H. Trask, who was later arrested by Supt. Grimes, charged with murder, but who was subsequently released on bail, furnishing his personal bond for $10,000, with E. J. Horwood and E. Templeman giving surety in $5,000 each. Deceased, who was a laborer at Job Bros., was returning from work to his home in company with two other workmen. The three turned up Adelaide Street, and kept on the western side of the street rails. Trask's car came around the curve from Water St., the three men seeing it coming. Endeavoring to get out of the way, only two of them succeeded, by moving to the sidewalk, the other moving towards the centre of the street. In trying to avoid him, Trask knocked the unfortunate man down, one of the fore wheels passing over his body. The car, which was practically stopped when the accident occurred, was brought to a standstill, before the hinder wheels touched the stricken man. Considerable trouble was experienced in extricating him, and it was found that he was unconscious. Placing him in Trask's car, he was taken to Dr. Burden's surgery, accompanied by Constables Kelly and Dempsey. The medical man, pronouncing the injuries to be probably fatal, ordered the patient to hospital where, upon arrival, it was found that death had occurred in the interim. Up to last midnight no post mortem had been held, but it is presumed that death resulted from fracture of the spine, as the car was an exceptionally heavy one. A widow and six daughters living in the city, and one son now in Canada, survive the deceased. Mr. Neil was born at Bryant's Cove, H. Grace District, and has been residing in St. John's for some years. To the stricken relatives the sincere sympathy of the community will be expressed in which the Telegram joins.

Wedding Bells.
 ANTHONY-SQUIBB.
 A very interesting wedding took place at Channel this afternoon, when Miss Lily Dorothy, daughter of Mr. T. M. Anthony, Manager of the Empire Stores, was led to the altar by Mr. John R. Squibb, police constable at Harbor Breton. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. H. J. Read, Rector of Channel Parish, in St. James' Church. The bride who was given away by her father, looked particularly charming, being gowned in a costume of white paillette. The bridesmaids were the Misses Trisie and Mabel Anthony, sisters of the bride, both of whom looked charming in pepper and salt silk. The groom was supported by Mr. Max Parsons, of the Bank of Nova Scotia, and Corp. Wallis Crane, of "Ours." Miss Irene Crane presided at the organ and dispensed music appropriate to the occasion. After the ceremony the invited guests, attended a reception at the home of Mrs. B. Billard, where the customary refreshments were served. The presents were numerous and valuable testifying to the esteem in which the contracting parties were held. Following a short honeymoon, which will be spent amidst the beauties of nature in the Codroy Valley, the happy couple will leave for Harbor Breton by the s.s. Portia. The Telegram joins with the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Squibb in wishing them a long and pleasant voyage over life's sea.

Teamsters Want Increase.

Lester's carmen in the coal delivery business are looking for an increase of $1.80 a week, which will bring their wages up to $15.00 a week of sixty hours. As a result of their demand, Mr. Lester has intimated that if the increase is given, the men will be unable to cart quarter tons of coal, unless the coal-dealers further increase the cartage. If this is done, those who can only purchase quarter tons will probably have to pay from 80 cents to $1.00 a ton.

What About These Coal Shares?
 The opportunity is a good one. $25,000.00 worth of stock has been placed on the market, and to the purchaser of each one of these shares three extra shares are given free of cost.
 This makes the purchaser of each one dollar share the owner of four fully paid up shares in the company. The company also guarantees that none of the above shares will be subject to any further call.
 The opportunity to invest is open to everybody. Get busy before it is too late; no bonus shares will be given after the present allotment is disposed of.
 You can't lose. Invest to-day. For every single dollar you invest in this proposition you get four 1 dollar shares in return.
