Caroline Hunter was a faithful attendant of the church of St. Stephen's, No one spoke to her, or even noticed her. Sunday after Sunday she would return to her seat in the gallery, and humbly gather up and treasure the words of counsel and admonition that fell from the lips of the eloquent preacher, Dr. David Rutherford.

Dr. Rutherford was not only an eloquent, but a godly man. His speech was rough at times, almost fierce, then tender and imploring. His ministry was looked upon as eminently successhigh as eight hundred.

Caroline had wandered through the open doors with the unconscious simplicity of a country girl that first lonely Sunday after her arriva in the city, and the impassioned eloquence of the preacher, the sweet thrilling voice of the high-priced tenor had brought her back, until now it had grown into a necessary habit—the feast of her soul from week to week, the refreshing shower that fell upon her young life, causing it to blossom forth into fragrance and beauty. But Dr. Rutherford was not thinking of the lonely black-robed figure in the back seat of the gallery as he delivered his famous discourses; but rather of that quiet, composed multitude in the cushioned pews, whose faces were ever lifted towards him in unbroken serenity. These faces were familiar to him: men and women's faces-members of his flock; he knew the lives of its brilliant women, its thoughtless young girls, its busy merchants and brokers, all rushing on heedlessly, recklessly, giving no thought toward that higher spiritual life for which his soul yearned, and for which in the flush and ecstacy of youth he had renounced a distinguished

Thus month after month the deep billows beat themselves against this wall of apathy and indifference. When he returned to his place he would bow his head in his hands and cry out in the agony of his spirit—
"How long, O Lord, how long!" and then bowing his head even lower he would groan -"It is retribution!" and as the pleading, thrilling voice of the high-priced tenor rose and fell, it seemed to him in these moments that the waters of Marah were sweeping

The owners of the rustling dresses would whisper one to another-" Isn't it touching to see him pray as he does after the sermon; so effective, so picturesque!" But his two daughters, quiet, sad-faced girls, in deep mourning, would sigh and murmur—"Poor father! He is thinking of brother Edward." There were rumors afloat that shortly after the death of the minister's wife the

Through this gnawing, self-accusing heart-

And then the lad had left, and when he (the father) had held out his arms and said, "My son, return," it was too late.

Cruel! Unjust! He had never forgotten those words. They had sent his lad out into the world without money, without friends, without home—and since then the burden of his cry, the pause in his prayer, the quiver in his voice, as he blessed the kneeling multitude, was ever the muttered "My boy, my boy! come back to me!"

Dr. Rutherford was about to close the little meeting held once a week in the side chapel of the great church. A score or more of earnest workers were gathered together—the cherished lambs of his flock. He knew them—exalous, noble-hearted, self-sacrificing of earnest workers were gathered together—the cherished lambs of his flock. Sunday after Sunday throngs crowded in ties were severed. That was a year ago, to enjoy his eloquence, to smile a little at and she had lived a lonely, busy life and yet contented, coming and going among her pupils, gaining strength and courage from the great prracher's passionate speech—offering her solitude, her tears, her vague aspirations on the altar of her Christ-her pure and beautiful life rising fair and spo

That evening, after taking off her hat and cloak, she knelt for moment by the side of her snowy bed and breathed a prayer that her talent might be revealed to her. As she arose, she looked across at the crowded tenement, at the care less, laughing faces at the windows-the street was so narrow she could see the children in the dim lamplight playing on the floor the fathers with tankards of frothing ale, the mothers talking and laughing loudly. On this beautiful day of early summer had one of them thought of God? What was her talent? Was it to overcome her timidity, to plead with these rough-voiced men, these hard-visaged women? Would they understand her faltering speech if she said out of the fulness of her grateful heart -" Seek God, love Him, serve Him. He is

"Praise Him above, ye heavenly host, Praise Father, Son and Holy Ghost." And then the window opposite suddenly closed, a little black-robed figure slipped away in the darkness, and Caroline Hunter knelt by her bedside, sobbing and trembling, she knew not why. It was the usual prayer-meeting evening. The little chapel was more than ordinarily crowded. The waving of many fans and low whispers betrayed unusual excitement. Vague rumors had been circulated again. Edward Rutherford had returned.

By the minister's side sat a young man, pale, grave and stern. Many recognized him. Where had he been all these years? What a change from the laughing careless lad! But Dr. Rutherford! How radiant his face, how vibrating his tone as he led in prayer! What a depth of passionate mean - "Seek God, love Him, serve Him. He is joy and rest and peace." Would they not mock her simple words? No, no; she possessed no gift. "Sing! Caroline Hunter, you can sing." She started and hid her spoken. Yes, she could sing, but she had spoken. Yes, she could sing, but she had not lifted her voice in song since her father's death. Could that be her talent, her little gift to be used for her Master—the voice her father had loved and trained, the voice will never be great Caroline," he had said, "but it will reach human hearts, and that is better."

"Yes, I will sing to-night," she said simply; "I will sing for God."

And then she took her hymn book and sat near the open window, where she appeared in the semi-darkness, with her pure face and earnest eyes like some painting of Cecelia.

"What can I do? What shall I do?" repeated Caroline Huntier, as she wended her way to the crowded street on the East Side, where she had her home. "Alas, I have no gift, no talent!"

What was she? Only a poor little music teacher, earning her daily bread among the rich. Her story was a simple one. When her father, a man of more than ordinary talent, was stricken with paralysis, it followed as a matter of course, that Caroline with her sweet fresh voice, whose sweetness and freshness were so well known that it had become common property in the village, should take the burden of the common support upon her shoulders, by teaching music and singing in her native village and the neighboring town.

The earnest, conscientious teacher, with her firm yet gentle manner, had a number of regular pupils at the great fashionable hotel during the season, and when a year ago the great blow came and her beloved father was laid away, what more natural than that, in her first terrible loneliness, she should listen to one of fire patrons and decide to follow her pupils to the city, where at least a living was secured and old ties were severed. SLAUGHTERERS ACCUSED OF SELLING THE FLESH OF DISEASED ANIMALS.

Chicago, Ill., June 12.—Mrs. Angelica McIonis, of No. 1,972 Thirty-eighth street, declares in Justice Wallace's court that she could prove that Charles Beagle and Richard Martin conducted a slaughter house in Ancher avenue, near Thirtieth street, where they buy sick and disabled horses, kill them and sell the meat. The defendants were not ready for trial when arraigned, and she will have a chance to tell her story to Justice Wallace in a week. She also charges them with larceny, declaring that on May 13 her horse, valued at $75, was stolen. She sent Joseph Rasbuch to the slaughter house to inform them that they must not buy her horse if offered to them. When Rasbuch arrived there, she says, he discovered that the horse had already been received there, and all that remained of him was his legs and hide. Both Beagle and Martin deny they ever sold any horse meat, and say that other slaughterers throughout the city have sold and are selling lots of horse flesh, in many cases not telling their customers what it is. —According to the returns which the fire insurance companies in Canada have made to the government, the year 1894, like its two immediate predecessors, was one of heavy losses. There are thirty-four companies doing business in the Dominion, of which six are Canadian, twenty-one British and eight American. The losses paid during the year aggregated $4,561,149. But when this is contrasted with the premiums received it will be observed that the business was highly profitable. The premiums aggregated $6,711,369, or $2,120,220 more than the losses. Thus the companies had 33 per cent. of their receipts to pay cost of management and interest on investments. Since confederation the fire insurance companies have received in premiums the enormous sum of $112,024,075, and paid out in losses $77,804,225, leaving a favorable balance of $34,218,853. -According to the returns which the fire

-THE dominion parliament has decided to attempt no further legislation in the direction of prohibition until the question of the rights and powers of both our local and federal parliaments to deal with the matter is determined by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The appeal which is to decide this question will be argued in a few weeks. Sir Oliver Mowat and J. J. Macbar, are to conduct the case for the provinces, contending that the provincial legislatures have the power to prohibit, while Hon-Edward Blake and E. L. Newcomb, Deputy Minister of Justice, will represent the dominion side of the case, claiming in behalf of Laren, Q.C., one of the leaders of the Ontario minion side of the case, claiming in behalf of the dominion government that the federal parliament alone has this power of prohibit ing the liquor traffic. It will thus be seen that each side is represented by the ablest counsel that could be obtained in the dominion. As a constitutional authority Sir Olive Mowat is generally regarded as second to no man in Canada. During his long term of office as premier of Ontario he has had occasion to carry a good many cases to the Privy Council, and in most of them he has succeeded in maintaining the rights of the province for which he contended. Pitted against him in this case is Hon. Edward Blake, of whose great ability nothing need be said. The decision, which is now sought from the highest court in the empire for the trial of colonial cases, will settle for all time the question whether we shall look to our provincial or federal parliaments for a prohibitory liquor

Mr. Laurier, leader of the opposition, may move a vote of censure upon the government at the close of the session, which ment at the close of the session, which would place the French supporters of the government in such a position that they might as well resign at once and retire from the day, while many other attractions, which space will not admit us to announce in this issue, are being arranged.

All the conditions have thus far been most favorable, and with fine weather during the The annual meeting of Bridgetown School Section, No. 29, was held at the schoolhouse in said section on Monday the 24th day of June, A. D. 1895, at 7 o'clock p.m., according to notice given and as required by law. Present: Dr. L. G. DeBlois, G. H. Dixon, J. G. H. Parker, E. C. Young, A. Morse, R. Shipley, E. A. Craig, W. A. Craig, R. E. FitzRandolph, W. J. Hoyt, E. M. Eaton, and it means $10,000,000 to the people of the prairie province, or $50 per head of the entire population. We in this province think it an unusually good year for fruit when the entire fruit crop of the province yields $500,000, or about $1.00 per head of our population. With such a magnificent crop as that growing "while they wait" it is little wonder that the politicians of Manitola are experiencing some difficulty in getitoba are experiencing some difficulty in getting the people to enthuse over the school

Supreme Court.

Wednesday morning, George Burrill was tried for an indecent assault on May Collins, found guilty, and sentenced to undergo two months imprisonment in the county gool. The grand jury indicted Parker for an attempt to procure an abortion on the girl, Grace Fagan, by soliciting Dr. Andrews to perform a criminal operation, but found no bill against either Parker or Dr. Miller for erforming the operation itself.

The trial of Parker aroused a deep interest The trial of Parker aroused a deep interest throughout the whole community. In this very court-house, two years before, the charge against Mrs. Cameron of administering poison to her husband had been investigated and found by the grand jury to be groundless; one year ago Rachael Jackson, a poor colored woman, had been indicted for poisoning a mother in law who had become burdensome, and likewise Rachael's trial had resulted in an acquittal by the petit jury; and now on Thursday last the spacious court house was closely packed with men from the most remote sections of the country, eager house was closely packed with men from the most remote sections of the country, eager to watch closely the course of justice on the trial of a man charged with an attempt to perpetrate a crime as diabolical in its nature at least, as those charged against either Mrs. Cameron or Mrs. Jackson. The success of the case for the crown depended on the certainty with which Dr. Andrews could identify the prisoner as the man who came to his office last March to solicit medical aid for Grace Fagan. The only other evidence against him was the testimony of Miss Fagan, who swore to some admissions alleged by her to have been made by Parker in her presence concerning his visit to Dr. Andrews. Miss Fagan is nineteen years of age this month, of Socich extraction, having been brought to this province about ten years ago, to his office last March to solicit medical aid for Grace Fagan. The only other evidence against him was the testimony of Miss Fagan, who swore to some admissions alleged by her to have been made by Parker in herpresence concerning his visit to Dr. Andrews. Miss Fagan is nineteen years of age this month, of Scotch extraction, having been brought to this province about ten years ago, and has been knocking round from pillar to post ever since. Her cross-examination by the skillful senior counsel for the defence, Mr. Roscoe, elicited from her own lips a sketch of a most licentious and shameless carcer. Nature has endowed her with a pretty face, and when at times some more merciless question than the rest drove the red blood to her cheeks she looked the picture of injured innocence and indignation; but as she freely and easily told of her vile degradation and womanly dishonor one could scarcely feel the necessity of importing to our fair Nova Scotia such a class of people, bearing, as did this girl, the pestilential seeds, not of a deadly disease, but of the follest immorality lurking in their depraved and dissolute natures.

The defence was an alibi but the weakness in the rest drove the source of the congregation, who swore to some admissions alleged by her to have been ununing for the past week, and the outlook for its success looks brighter from day took of its success looks brighter from day took of the collect. The work-room is 30x55 f

Like the drama in fiction, this realistic scene ended in a halo of romance, when, the next morning after the trial closed, Miss Fagan and Stanley Vidito, one of the principal witnesses for the crown in the case against Miller, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony, by the Rev. R. S. Whidden, at the Revere House, in the presence of Miss Stirling and her counsel, J. J. Ritchie, Q. C. of Annapolis Royal. The happy couple left in the afternoon of the same day for the United States.

Dominion Day Celebration

As the day approaches for celebrating the opening of the Bridgetown Driving Park, which occurs on Monday next, there is a growing interest manifesting itself among the turfmen from all parts of the county as well as abroad, and should the day prove an auspicious one for the occasion, there will be as large a number present as was ever witnessed on any previous important event, as advices received by the secretary, F. R. Fay, Esq., report that hundreds of people will take advantage of the special trains from Kentville and Yarmouth, not only to witness the sharp contest on the race-course, but also to take in the other attractions of the day.

the Privy Council. The dominion parliament in deciding to follow Ontario's example is pursuing a course of which moderate men everywhere must approve. Indeed, in view of the present condition of things, Mr. Flint's resolution declaring it expedient to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors, would seem to have been moved more for the sake of the political effect such a resolution might have, rather than on account of any material benefit it would do the temperance cause.

—It is now said that there is every prospect of remedial legislation being introduced into the dominion parliament this session. The French cabinet ministers, backed by their compartriots in both Houses, are reported to be insisting upon having the matter dealt with, and the question settled once for all, during the present session, and because of the prospect of the present session, and because of the prospect of the control of the grounds on Graville street, where may be obtained cooling temperance beverages, while inside the grounds sonther table will contain a variety of useful and fancy articles. oughly qualified to fill the important position.

The defence was an alibi but the weakness of the case for the crown contributed more to the verdict than the strength of the defence. The charge of the judge was very clear and full and decidedly against the prisoner; but after a deliberation of not more than fifteen or twenty minutes the jury brought in a verdict of "ont guilty," and thus closed, in the early twilight of Thursday evening the June term of the Supreme Court, a session that will be remembered by some until memory shall have passed into oblivion.

A few days later, however, certain suspicious circumstances the death accidental permitted the body to be partment started an investigation. The body was exhumed and a postmortem held, the result being that Hendershott and Welter for the men were arraigned at the March assizes, and, after a remarkable trial, lasting eight days, the jury found them both guilty and Chief Justice Mcredith passed the death sentence, the first after his elevation to the Bench. It was shown at the trial that the elder Hendershott planned the conspiracy to kill the deceased and hen induced Welter to commit the deed. The latter was engaged to marry Hendershott's daughter, and expected to receive a share of the victim's insurance money as his reward. It subsequently transpired that Welter had made a confession of his guilt just before the trial ended in hope of saving his own neck. He was reported to have confessed that Hendershott, himself and deceased, visited the woods at nine o'clock on the morning of the tragedy, the plot to kill young Hendershott having been arranged some time before. The latter was bending down at a pool of water getting a drink, when Welter struck him with the broad side of an arc, felling him to the ground. The deceased started to run, when Hendershott caught his nephew by the wrists and held him while Welter showered blow after blow upon his defenceless head with the sharp side of the axe until he fell bleeding and dead at their feet. They then cut down a tree, intending it to fall on their victim's head and crush it in to a shapeless mass, but the tree did not alight upon him as calculated, and the head under a knot of the tree and left the woods. Moncton, June 22.—The academy of science in Paris, France, has elected Professor Simon Newcomb, a native of Wallace, N. S., but now of Washington, its foreign associate in place of the late Profesor Helmheltz. Professor Newcomb is a son of the late John Newcomb, who taught school at Wallace for many years. John Newcomb married a sister of Rev. John Prince, retired Methodist minister, now living in Moncton, and a daughter of Thos. Prince, one of the pioneer traders of Moncton. Simon was born at Wallace and when still in his teens commenced the study of medicine with a country doctor who practiced between Moncton and Salisbury. The life of a country doctor was too slow for Simon, however, and he removed to Maryland, where he taught school. It was there that the young man, who has since become eminent in the world of science, addressed a letter to Prof. Henry, of the Smithsonian institute. Prof. Henry saw that his correspondent was a person of more than ordinary intelligence, and requested a personal interview, which resulted in Simon Newcomb entering upon the course of study which has made his name famous throughout the world. He has many relatives in this part of New Brunswick, who are pleased to hear of his success. Brunswick, who are pleased to hear of his

Mr. EDITOR,—It may be a matter of surprise to some of the readers of your invaluable paper that some efforts in the line of temperance reform are not being made by the Prohibition Convention, and so I beg to say that Mr. Whidden, the president, and myself have been doing all that lay in our power to arrange for a public meeting of the Convention to get the work in shape; but many of those on whom we ought to be able to rely for assistance have excused themselves one way and another so that all our attempts have been unsuccessful so far, and serves one way and another so that all our attempts have been unsuccessful so far, and we have decided to wait now until the busy season for the farmers is past, when we hope to be able to prosecute the work with renewed vigor. Thanking you, sir, for inserting this short letter of explanation, I am Young truly Yours truly, FRANK L. MILNER, Secretary.

Death of a Young Clergyman. The death occurred at Shelburne, Saturday morning, of Rev. William Thomson. Only three Sundays ago the deceased was ordained deacon, by Bishop Courtney, at St. Luke's cathedral, Halifax. At the time of his death he was on his way to Churchover in which place he was to be stationed. Scar-let fever was the cause of his death. Mr. Thomson was only in his 25th year.

Bright Crop Prospects in the Canadian West.

Winnipeg, Man., June 10.—Crop reports have been received from nearly every station on the Canadian Pacific Main and branch lines, from Red Deed to the Rocky Mountains. The story they tell will be gratification to all. The verdict is unanimous that the crops were never so far advanced at this date in any previous year, and the prospects for an abundant harvest prevail throughout the whole of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, where cereals are grown. The frosts of last month, according to the testimony of farmers, and they should be the best judges, have been a benefit, having strengthened the roots of the wheat and made them stool out better than if there had been no check to the early vegetation.

—Girls, all of you, everywhere, this is a word to you; be womanly. Be true to yourself, and be guided by the promptings of those who have been through it all and know by experience the best line of conduct to pursue. You may lose the companionship of some whom you think very gay and jolly, but their evanescent friendship will be replaced by sincere respect and commendation.

-A simple way to remove grease spots from wall paper, caused by the head resting against the wall, is to hold a piece of clean blotting paper over the spot and press a noderately-warm flat iron over it. Repeat the operation until the grease is out.
