Motion agreed to.

VETERANS' ASSISTANCE COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of Pensions and National Health): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Tolmie) asked a question of the government, as follows:

I should like to inquire of the government when the report of the veterans' assistance commission will be laid on the table?

[Mr. Coldwell.]

This matter was discussed in the house on February 23. It will be seen on page 1181 of the debates that in reply to a question put to me by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) I stated that a number of interim reports, I believe four in number, had been tabled already. Another report had been submitted to me which was at that time and still is the subject of correspondence between the commission and myself. Further on in the debate I stated that I would see that the report was tabled in ample time for the fullest discussion.

LABOUR DISPUTE

HOLMES FOUNDRY COMPANY, SARNIA, ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) to a very grave situation which exists in Sarnia. The Holmes Foundry Company, which is controlled by Port Huron, Michigan interests, is located in Sarnia. It seems that the workers in this foundry have gone on strike demanding what workers in the United States have already received. These men were attacked, the union organizer in particular, by a mob, the attack being carried into the homes of the men. I should like to ask whether the Minister of Labour proposes to make an independent inquiry concerning this matter.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this matter was brought to my attention yesterday by the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Gray). I assured him that if the Department of Labour could be of service in the matter it would be pleased indeed to send a conciliation officer to Sarnia. I believe the matter is now under consideration by the mayor of Sarnia, in so far as it still calls for intervention or conciliation. My latest information, however, is that the dispute as such has been settled. So far as any property damage is concerned, I take it that this will be a matter for the provincial authorities.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is it not a matter which concerns the whole country? It seems to me that this is a matter about which the department might well be asked to do something.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 3, consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Bennett.

Mr. E. J. POOLE (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned yesterday I was endeavouring to point out that both this year and last year this group had at least endeavoured to indicate the direction in which we had to go to bring about economic security and to banish from our midst not so much unemployment as destitution. I have wondered many times whether ministers of the crown have ever taken the trouble or have been sufficiently interested to go to some of the relief camps of western Canada or to the soup kitchens throughout the country to see for themselves the terrible price we are paying because of our apathy in respect to this question.

I believe the first duty of a government is to look after its people, and all other things must take a secondary place. That is the responsibility of the present Liberal government. Both this and the last government failed miserably to bring about a happy life for Canadian people who are unemployed. We speak of everything in terms of dollars and cents. We always measure cost in money, and many statements made in the house have been contradictory. For instance, we have been told that prosperity is returning. I would suggest to the government that the unemployed in Canada are not sharing in that prosperity. If there is any section of Canadian society which has paid the price of the deflationary period through which we have passed, it is the unemployed. To-day I want to make a plea for those whose hopes have been frustrated and who, through the years, have been waiting for a generous government to do something for them. I should like to ask the government to state its long range view on the question. Are we waiting for increasing external trade? Is that the only hope for Canadian youth? Are we waiting until such time as we may have a greater volume of trade before these people can be absorbed into industry and can obtain economic security? If we are, then I say now to the government that for these people there is no hope.

As I said last night, in the last six years we have spent over a billion dollars on relief, and the position of the unemployed in Canada is no better to-day than it was four or five years ago. I see no hope in expanding trade. I do not believe it is natural, even,—and while there have been some expressions in the house regarding increases in prices of farm products and increases in volume of production, we must remember that we are now entering an inflationary period. The demand for Canadian products in the markets of the world does not arise because the people of Europe are consuming more; it is not a natural demand. So far as Canada is concerned, our greatest market is the Canadian market, and if we are to bring economic security to these people, if we are to give them a greater measure of hope and an opportunity for creative life, then I say to the government there is only one way it can be done.

This little group has endeavoured to point out time and time again—and through the years we will still hammer at this one thing, something the government absolutely refuses to touch—that there must be monetary reform. The wage system has broken down. It is unscientific; it is unsound; it does not give the great masses of the people that opportunity and that security which our production and our scientific knowledge have made available to us. After all, what is the purpose of an economic system? How do we measure prosperity? Do we measure it by the increased profits of great industries? I do not think so. The standard of living of the Canadian people should be measured in one way, and in one only, and that is the making of their lives secure to a point commensurate with the ability of the Canadian people to produce goods.

A few days ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) made a statement to the effect that purchasing power comes from production. I challenge that statement. Purchasing power does not come from production. Production is one thing; the monetary system is another. In Canada we have the ability to produce great volumes of wealth. We have the machinery; we are a generation better equipped than any which has preceded us, and still we find unfortunate people passing through the years without a break. I make a plea for the unemployed in Canada: for God's sake let us get down to business! Let us get these people through the present transitional period, through this time of great change, and give them a break. Give them an opportunity to live; give them something—some measure of hope. We must not be content with fooling around, dilly-dallying, doing nothing, waiting for expanding trade, or hoping for something to fall from heaven which will help us out.

I said last night, and I now repeat, that the volume of international trade will be less, not more, in years to come. Every nation is becoming self-sufficient. The foundation and basis of the system under which we are living to-day is the ability of nations to export greater volume of goods. As each nation becomes self-sufficient there will be a lesser demand for Canadian products. In terms of the capitalistic system, under which we live, it will mean that there will be less wages paid. As each nation becomes self-sufficient, irrespective of our great wealth, our natural resources and our production through machine and scientific skill, the lots of the great masses of the people will become more miserable and the debts of nations will rise.

I am sure many hon. members do not understand what it means to go on drifting through the years. Men who are married and with families, but without jobs, know none of the natural pleasures or luxuries of life; in many cases, they have not even the necessities. We have set up a commission; there have been suggestions here and suggestions there, but we have not yet got to the root of this problem, and there has not been a suggestion in this house as to what is the real cause of destitution. Let us at this session do something definite to help the unemployed people of Canada—not with charitable doles, but, until such time as this government has monetary reform thrust upon it, let it be recognized that wages is the only medium whereby these men can receive the necessities of life; so for God's sake let us give them wages. We need roads, we need houses; there is in this country fifty years' work to be done. We have great production and on the other hand great poverty. I ask the government now to get down to the root of this matter, not to leave it until next year or the year afterwards as material for another election promise. Let us construct a better Canada, recognizing that our most valuable asset is the youth of the country, now better equipped than youth has ever been before; let us not be always measuring this problem by considerations of dollars and cents. After all, money is only a ticket; it is an expedient by which we distribute goods and services. We have the goods, the services, the machines, the natural resources. Let us give the young people of Canada happiness, security, a future, and a more creative life than they have known in the last six years.

[Mr. Poole.]

This is the greatest responsibility before the government to-day; in comparison with it all other things fall into insignificance, because by continuing as we are doing we destroy the souls of human beings and condemn them to live without hope, without objective, without a future. That is the penalty we pay for measuring this problem in terms of dollars and cents. The greatest cost of the depression can never be computed in that way; for it is a moral loss, a tragedy of lost hopes and lost opportunities. That is the history of the generation to which I belong. To that generation this government it responsible; to that generation it will have to answer some day. The question cannot be thrust lightly aside; it will remain with us even though the government tries to forget about it. What we sow to-day we shall reap to-morrow. If therefore as Canadians we are interested in building up this country, let us remember that our greatest asset is the youth of Canada, and that we are responsible for giving them opportunities to live creative lives.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I regret that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) is not in his seat this afternoon. I regret also to hear that illness keeps him away, for he is one who commands the respect and admiration of every hon. member of this house and of the country at large. A short time ago I lived around the corner from him in Rosedale. At that time he was not a member of this house, from 1930 to 1935, but I well remember the tribute which he, as a private citizen of this country, paid to my leader, who was then bearing great burdens as the prime minister of this country. The Minister of Finance may not thereby have won applause from his own party or from the political machine of his party, but he won the admiration and respect of all right-thinking citizens, including a great newspaperman, the late Harry Anderson, chief editor of the Toronto Globe. The minister (Mr. Dunning) referred at that time to the absolute necessity of every good citizen coming to the support of the government of the day in the great crisis—the greatest depression the world has even seen—that then confronted the country. I am glad to pay him this tribute as a great Canadian then, and as a patriot. I am thankful that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), who was then shouldering greater burdens than even the late Sir Wilfrid Laurier or Sir John A. Macdonald had to face, has regained his health, and I believe he will rank very high in the history of this country, as he does with all the members of this house.

In this connection I might refer to the remarks of another member of the government, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers), who is either not in his seat this afternoon or has gone out: I would rather have said in his presence what I have to say. I have nothing against him personally. A month ago, and again on Tuesday evening, he alluded to the leader of the opposition, who has been giving the government of the day the best of support, in accordance with a good British principle; because he realizes that, while we are in opposition to hon. gentlemen opposite, they are a government of Canadians and will do what they no doubt believe to be the best not only for their own party but for the general good of the country. I myself am not a very strong or bigoted party man; neither is the leader of the opposition, because he is a great empire statesman on the British model. In this budget the Minister of Finance is simply carrying out, with some reductions, modifications and some extensions and deductions, the great British Empire agreement that was made in 1932, by my hon. leader and but for which the depression and unemployment would have been ten times worse than they are to-day. I was glad to notice that Mr. Joseph Atkinson of the Toronto Star has in an article in the Star by Observer paid tribute to Mr. Bennett. The bouquets which my right hon. leader received from the Minister of Labour are gratefully accepted, both those of a month ago and those on Tuesday evening, and acknowledged on this side. But the minister delivered a moral lecture to the unemployed and to private members and to the opposition, and I may remind him that, although he is a professor, we do not need any lectures from him on unemployment. In the olden days it used to be said that "an apple a day keeps the doctor away." Now, with the Minister of Labour, it seems that a professor a day keeps the bailiff away. Last Tuesday night the Minister of Labour referred to the right hon. leader of the opposition and used the words:

> In spite of flagrant distortion and misunderstanding with regard to the attitude of the Labour department.

There appeared on February 11 of this year in the Toronto Star, a Liberal organ, an idea too great for mere party politics: in a whole double header column "The Observer" pays tribute to the right hon. the leader of the opposition and says he is assured of a distinguished place in Canadian history. I quote:

> No single act in his long and notable political career will be so long and so gratefully remembered by posterity as his proposal in the House of Commons last Monday evening that the dominion government should go into the business of gold mining.

The writer goes on to refer to all he has done in his many years of public service and the principles for which he stood during the five years that he was Prime Minister. He mentions the resources of the country.

> Riches, once remarked the prince of American preachers, are like manure. Heaped in one small spot it is a noisome and unwholesome mass; distributed over the whole field it means fertility and beauty and plenty.

This tribute, paid to my leader by a Liberal paper, is well deserved, because he has in this parliament again proved himself a statesman. He has given the government independent support when he believed it to be justified, and he deserves all credit for the empire trade agreements of 1932, which saved this country from bankruptcy, notwithstanding the opinions of the Minister of Labour, who at that time was not a member of this house. In so doing, the former prime minister and the present Minister of Finance have revived the policies of the late Joseph Chamberlain on tariff reform and preferential trade with the dominions and our best customer the mother land. Our leader started it, and what we have now is a vest pocket edition of it with a few cuts here and there. As Canadians let us not forget the lessons of history. For every dollar we put into the pockets of John Bull he pays us back ten times over. I do not know where our industries and the prairies would be without the British market; it is the most steadfast market we have and not one here to-day and gone to-morrow. As regards the great questions of trade, defence and immigration, let us learn from Australia and New Zealand and keep Canada a white man's country.

Last July, in the great city of Birmingham, which for two generations has led all the cities in the empire as a well-governed city, they celebrated the anniversary of the birth of Joseph Chamberlain. Where is the man anywhere who did for his city what Chamberlain did while mayor of Birmingham? Although he was born in London, he gave away for the benefit of his city the fortune he made. He was without doubt one of the greatest Englishmen, if not the greatest, of the nineteenth century.

Chamberlain's vision was one of the glories of the Victorian and Edwardian eras, both at home and abroad. Britain took thirty years to find out that he was right on the tariff, at great cost to her people and to the working classes, and to the welfare of her dominions. Kipling's tribute to him was written in 1904, two years before his great policy was rejected, in which the poet says:

Thrones, powers, dominions block the view
With episodes and underlings,
The meek historian deems them true,
Nor heeds the song that Clio sings—
The simple, central truth that stings
The mob to boo, the priest to ban.
Once on a time there was a man.

And under that man British statecraft and diplomacy reached their greatest heights of all time. He was too big for the smallness of the House of Commons which under our so-called democracy is fast becoming a mock parliament. If the tariff policy proposed by Chamberlain in 1906 had been adopted I doubt whether there would have been a world war.

And now I wish to say a few words with regard to the policies of the Minister of Labour. About a year ago he delivered a series of lectures in this house, all purely theoretical —because if ever there was a theorist he is one. He is not a practical administrator of public affairs. As I say, about a year ago he delivered certain lectures in which he quoted copiously from the pages of Carlyle. May day was approaching, and if he had handed the unemployed a bound copy of Carlyle it would have been just as effective as anything practical that he did. There were as many out of work. Well, I have a copy of a work dealing with the du Pont dynasty written by John K. Winkler of New York, and reference is made to the head of the commission. This gentleman is the head of the du Pont dynasty in this country—gentlemen who made hundreds of millions of dollars out of the war and got away with it, subject to no regulation. The senate of the United States has been showing what this particular concern has been doing.

I want to say something with regard to the minister's policy, because a year ago I took strong ground against a commission being appointed on behalf of the unemployed. But a commission was appointed, and the large staff whom Mr. Purvis engaged to work on that commission, if they stood two deep, would extend from here to the Chateau Laurier. These are the people who are appointed to work on this useless commission. Mr. Purvis said that he wanted to get the facts. The municipalities already had all the facts; for we know to-day, just as we knew then, how many registered unemployed there are in the various cities of Canada. The city relief departments could all have given him the information he wanted, but he adopted a system of registration of his own for Canada that was not accurate. This commission does not know half the unemployed in the riding I represent. I say that because there are a number of the unemployed who are not on relief. Many of them are near the point of starvation, but these men, good honest industrial workers, are too proud to take relief and consequently are suffering untold hardship.

I have always thought that one of the cardinal principles of Liberalism was the right to deputize, but the minister has denied that right, because a deputation of the corporation from Toronto was refused a hearing by the Minister of Labour. They saw a courtly gentleman, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), who was acting prime minister last fall, and he received quite courteously the mayor and board of control of that city. He listened attentively to them and replied that when the Prime Minister came back he would lay before him the representations that had been submitted by this deputation. But what did the Minister of Labour do, this new disciple of Liberalism? He simply told the mayor and board of control that he would not receive them, advising them instead to go and see Mr. Purvis, the representative in Canada of the du Pont dynasty, president of the Dunlop company, and director of the Bell Telephone company, the Bank of Montreal, the Sun Life, Chemical Industries and General Motors of New York. The deputation was informed that it might be allowed to see this citizen, and this in face of the fact that outside labour had been brought into the country in contravention of the alien labour act. In some of our industries—there was one in my riding—Americans were put to work, having been brought in in violation of that act. What about the right to deputize? I remember the time long ago—it is one of my earliest memories—when as a member of the city council I came down with a deputation as president of the Union of Canadian Municipalities representing the municipalities to interview Sir Wilfrid Laurier. We were received most courteously by Sir Wilfrid. He waited patiently until every member of the delegation was seated before he would allow us to proceed with the business that had brought us to Ottawa, and he gave us a patient hearing.

I asked a question the other day in this house but I got no answer. The Minister of Labour has compelled the municipalities to go hat in hand to this useless national employment commission which came into being on the first of April last—an appropriate day for such an event. But the unemployed got nothing out of it; there were no jobs to be had. This commission has ignored entirely the industrial workers of Canada, constituting fifty per cent of the population. I have here a return laid on the table by the Minister of Labour on February 15, 1937, showing how the municipalities of Quebec have been treated. I am not objecting to any benefits extended to that province, which contributes largely to the revenues of the country, but I find that in Quebec city provision has been made for parks, public baths, fences, public toilets, paving alleys in park, drains, water services and correlated works including material, the total estimated cost of all such construction being $100,000. In Three Rivers provision is made for the court house which is to be enlarged and improved; there are expenditures in L'Islet, Sherbrooke and Wolfe; in Three Rivers there are to be various repairs and additions to St. Maurice river bridges, amounting to $160,000, and many other public works of a similar kind. There is a whole list here amounting to $2,750,000. When you come to Ontario what was done? This is a report tabled by the Minister of Labour on January 15, under the Unemployment Relief and Assistance Act, 1936. I pleaded with the minister last session to amend the act to give direct relief to the municipalities and enable him to enter into relief agreements with them, especially the larger municipalities, such as Toronto, Winnipeg, Montreal, Quebec, Vancouver and Hamilton. How much was the province of Ontario given? Not one red cent. The city of Toronto brought down a $4,000,000 relief works program; the revenue collected from there was $91,000,000, but Toronto never got a cent. When on September 16 last the government made an agreement with Ontario and gave them a large sum of money, how was it spent? On roads in new Ontario, roads in almost every Liberal constituency in that province. I have a list here; it is too long to read, but any hon. member can get this return, No. 115. Many of these roads are purely municipal undertakings, but the province was given all this money over the heads of the municipalities, which got nothing. All Toronto city got was $15,000 for some improvements in the post office, including two revolving doors, and one revolving door in the riding of the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris). Toronto had to contribute $125,000 for the island breakwater. It is the first time since confederation that the city of Toronto has been asked to contribute anything to it, and in my opinion it was very unwise to do so, because it is contrary to the British North America Act. The island is the breakwater for Toronto harbour and in other places the federal government pays all the cost.

I asked the Minister of Labour the question: what grants towards this relief to municipalities were made in Ontario by order in council? There has not been one order in council passed for those works, notwithstanding the money has been appropriated. I asked him in the house last Monday:

> What municipal works in Ontario were so aided, giving the name of the municipality in Ontario in each case.

And his reply was, "Same as No. 1." That refers to an agreement with Ontario tabled January 15. It was not set out at all in that return; not one municipality or town got a dollar. That is the way the minister has treated the municipalities of this province, I very much regret that the municipalities of Ontario have been treated in the manner indicated. The report of the assessment commissioner of Toronto shows how home owners have been reduced under the depression. In 1929 home ownership in Toronto, according to the report of the assessment department, amounted to 63,417 out of 105,112 occupied dwellings, or sixty per cent. In 1936 the number had decreased to 59,093 out of a total of 108,065, less than fifty-five per cent. The assessment reports for 1935-36 indicate the extent to which the depression has made renters out of families which previously held an equity in the premises. The depression has forced two or three families into one house or apartment. This number was 3,407 in 1932 and in 1936 it is reduced to 2,129.

The Minister of Labour and the government have made a further raid on the municipalities. I am sorry the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ilsley) is not here. They passed an act in 1936, chapter 38, amending the Income War Tax Act, adding section 76A, under which the Minister of National Revenue collects income tax for the provincial governments. I thought the government were better politicians than to send out tax collectors and bailiffs to collect a duplicate income tax from the starved municipalities and force them to put it on real estate. The income tax was exclusively a prerogative of the municipalities from 1867 to 1918, when it was taken away by a duplicate income tax by the dominion for war purposes. Now along comes the province and collects an income tax. The Minister of National Revenue has been making speeches in Ontario. If he had told them that he is the man who is collecting duplicate income tax and putting the bailiff in on them, he might have been telling something practical. That statute should be repealed; the municipalities should get their tax back. In the case of Toronto, $2,600,000 has been taken away; they have been given some back but the city is still out $862,000, as a result of the new system and will have to add that loss to real estate.

I should like to find out from the Minister of Labour what plan the government has from now to the first of May to provide useful employment this spring for the great number of unemployed. Nothing is being done. The commission has no suburban policy. Half the people of this country are industrial workers. I have pleaded for them in this house before, asking some measure of protection to save their equity. What has the commission done for these poor workmen? Absolutely nothing. In Toronto and York west, north and east there is a population of workmen who have been driven to the wall by the hard times, many of them on relief, and have lost their equity in that property. A great many are not on relief, because they are too independent, but they have lost their equity in their homes. What has the commission done for these men? Not a thing. In England they have done something, by balanced budgets, by tariffs, by sane and sensible housing and reconstruction policies, a safe suburban policy for the workers; and by state assistance to the industrial worker. They have had to tide them over bad times, as this parliament has the fishermen and the farmers. But this commission of figureheads has done nothing but make reports, and have forgotten all about the suburban and industrial worker. They have a youth committee now, and all they do is travel on the trains. They have made reports, and what are these reports? Mr. Burton of Simpson's wanted to have a regimentation of youth, a regular standing army. The Minister of Labour seems to have a small standing army in his department. In the United States one man, Mr. Hopkins, can handle all that work of relief for a population of 129,000,000, but this country's labour department is the most useless department of the government. It should be called the department of capital, not of labour. It is the most useless organization of any department in the government and I know something about labour conditions.

[Mr. Church.]

I see my hon. friend from Parkdale (Mr. Spence) here. The government have not been altogether kind to him; they have amalgamated his Irish regiment with the Toronto Scottish. He is very popular with the industrial workers in his constituency, and he can see as a military man that an ordinary militia regiment is not to be compared with the Minister of Labour's unemployed commission regiment. Mr. Purvis is not a military man. He was born in England, and a short time before the war started he went to the United States and then went down to South America. After the war he came to Montreal and became a millionaire as the representative of the du Pont and other interests. He has a small standing army of an unemployment commission all making reports. It consists of privates making reports under this act to the lance-corporal, the lance-corporal making reports to the corporal, the corporal to the lieutenant, the lieutenant to the captain, the captain to the major, the major to the colonel, and so on to the major-general, Mr. Purvis—a long retinue making reports before they reach the minister under the act. And while this is going on the industrial workers in my own and many other ridings have been driven out of their homes and have lost their equity, while waiting for this useless commission to do something. Is it any wonder that the right hon. leader of the opposition—notwithstanding the great assistance that he has given this government, supporting things which he deemed it to be the duty of the opposition to support—used the language he did in this house? I am prepared to use language ten times stronger, if necessary, for I know and have seen something about these conditions.

In my riding there are families whose great grandfathers, whose grandfathers and whose fathers owned property. Now many of the sons are industrial workers, many of their children are out of work and some of them are on relief. What has happened? The oldest boys do not like to hang around the house when they are not able to earn anything, so they take to the rods and wander looking for work as far as British Columbia. I saw some of these young fellows last summer; I found nearly sixty-five of them riding the box cars. The train was halted and I got out of my automobile and started talking to some of them. Several were wearing high school sweaters, and I found that I knew half a dozen of them. I asked them where they were going, and they said they were going to the coast, or to new Ontario. When they got up to the mines in Ontario and the west they found the work being done by foreigners, and they could not get jobs. As a result they were locked up, all because of the policy followed by this parliament of divesting itself of responsibility. We might just as well go home and let the house of Purvis and the du Pont dynasty run the affairs of the country. We might as well close up here if we are going to allow Mr. Purvis to lord it over the municipal representatives and members of parliament from the province of Ontario. I know something about the mishandling of this employment question, and when I see these men being driven out of their homes while this parliament does nothing for them I think the time has come to say something in this house, whether the Minister of Labour likes it or not.

Last year I made some constructive suggestions to the minister in this regard. I told him he should do as was done by the government in 1919; he should add a clause in the act by which these agreements could be made directly with the municipalities. The previous minister, a very able man, Hon. Mr. Gordon, who was Minister of Labour and Mines, did ten times the work that is being done by the present minister; he tided us over the worst five years of the depression. You could telephone to him and any municipal officer could get relief at once, but the situation is different to-day. You have to run around after this Purvis commission, this travelling minstrel show which is touring the country. At one time I was in a minstrel show myself; I know something about how such shows are run, and I can tell you that the amateur minstrel show at the old Grand opera house with which I was connected could not be compared with Mr. Purvis and his minstrels, who are travelling from Vancouver to Halifax. In the United States one man can handle all that work, and something has been done over there. It is true that they have made mistakes, but conditions are not the same.

Let me tell my hon. friend that I sat in this house from 1921 to 1930, when the Liberal party was in power. What did they do? Every session a speech from the throne was delivered, but the subject of unemployment was never mentioned during the nine years they were in office. On December 14, 1926, I said:

> I very much regret that in the speech from the throne the government have given no indication that they are going to take any active steps to solve the economic ills of this country. There is the problem, for instance, of unemployment. Unemployment to-day in the larger centres of population is very acute. I might refer to the unemployment in the large manufacturing city from which I come. I know the conditions there, and I know that in the past few days very rapid preparations have been made by the social and charitable institutions and public bodies of various kinds in the city to try and cope with the unemployment situation with which we shall be faced this coming winter. I regret, I say, that the government in the speech from the throne has announced no definite policy for taking care of the economic ills in the larger centres of population in this country.

I asked the then minister of labour, Mr. Heenan, who is now in another house, whether the government had made any plans for providing work for the unemployed, and whether or not the government were prepared to contribute one-third of the cost of relief. Mr. Heenan in reply to me said the government would do nothing, that it would be contrary to the British North America Act, and that this was a matter for the provinces. Then I asked if the government would appoint a royal commission, as was done in 1927, in the United States senate, about a month later on the motion of the late mayor of Detroit, Senator Couzens. When the depression came on they were ready, but the government here said there was no unemployment, and that if there was it was a matter for the provinces. So nothing was done right down to 1930. The government refused to have a count of the unemployed taken, with the result that when the late government came into office they had nothing before them. During the five years hon. gentlemen opposite were in opposition they did not treat the government as the present government is being treated by the right hon. leader of the opposition. Oh, no; they threw cold water on the social legislation and unemployment insurance and put all kinds of stumbling blocks in the way, with the result that we have the present condition of affairs.

The judgments that have been rendered by the privy council after all are only opinions having to do with abstract and not with concrete questions and are only dicta and opinions. Sickness and unemployment insurance was part of the Liberal platform of 1919, but this Liberal government was in power from 1921 to 1930 without making an attempt to bring in that insurance. That scheme has been in operation in England since 1910, and as a result England was better prepared for the depression than any other country. The supreme court divided three to two on the question of unemployment insurance; the two strongest judges said we could grant money under the first part of section 91, having to do with "public debt and property." What is the use of the Minister of Labour talking about the provinces doing it? Nearly all the provinces are bankrupt except Ontario. The three prairie provinces have had to get largely increased subsidies, and last session the government even proposed to give the provinces the right of indirect taxation. Dear knows, if the provinces had that right we would have a duplicate income tax, a duplicate sales tax and another tax on real estate. We may thank the leader of the opposition in this house and the senate for having that bill thrown out. No one knows how far the provinces would have gone in their raids on the municipalities. If they had been allowed to impose an additional indirect tax on real estate, property owners might as well have turned their real estate over to the bailiff right away.

The city of Toronto is one of the most solvent cities in the dominion, regardless of what may be said in this house by the member for Brant (Mr. Wood), Toronto has $30,000,000 set aside as a sinking fund. All the utilities are publicly owned self-sustaining and have a surplus, and in that city there is the lowest net debt that exists in any municipality in the dominion and they get little federal aid and have carried a lot of outside debts for roads. But with these continuous raids on the revenues of the municipalities I fear for the fate of municipal institutions in this country. This year the city of Toronto has had to spend $2,417,000 for the care of indigent patients in hospitals, old age pensions; mother's allowances, children's aid societies, and so on, but Toronto gets no help from this parliament or from the Minister of Labour, who has consistently refused to give any direct aid to the municipalities.

Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that the opposition have moved an amendment? It is our duty as members here to do something for the unemployed, for the municipalities, and for the country. During the election campaign many of the hon. gentlemen opposite were in my riding. What did they say? Most members of the cabinet came there, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie), Mr. Ralston and others. They did not hand out to the unemployed copies of Thomas Carlyle, I will admit, but in October they had this advertisement on the billboards:

Action, Not Promises
End Unemployment
Vote Liberal
Beat Bennett and Bad Times

In black and yellow, at the Dominion bridge on Queen street east, the colours of a well known racing stable in Hamilton, they had a poster which said, "End Unemployment; Vote Liberal, Vote Snelgrove." Well, Mr. Speaker, some of the unemployed are still carrying the black flag. In my judgment the Minister of Labour should have been in the patent medicine business, in view of all the quack remedies and palliatives he and his commission have been handing out, while the unemployed are on relief and starving.

But let me say that it is not only those on relief who are suffering; it is the farmers also. In the olden days in this country the farmer and the industrial worker owned something. A man might own a small mill or a shack, a cow or a horse or a small store. The ownership of property has been destroyed in this country, but in the United States the farmers are again going to own the soil they till. The president of the United States has a policy under which he will spend $500,000,000 to wipe out farm tenancy in the United States. He revolts at the thought of American farmers being reduced to the status of European peasants and demands that those who till the soil shall own it. That is the policy of the government of the United States, and it is being carried out by one man, not by a commission such as the commission of hon. gentlemen opposite.

As I said ten years ago, the main problem of Canada is unemployment. No scheme of pensions or unemployment insurance will take the place of work and wages and the desire of people to work. Employment is the only real agency by which the nation's wealth can be distributed. Without consumption, production is a mere waste, and work and wages for all is the main agency of distribution. This party was the founder of protection, and it should dedicate itself to solving the problem of distributism and of getting people off the dole and back to work. Agriculture has always been traditionally associated with the Conservative party. As a party we stand for the further development and preservation of the home market for agriculture. Our own markets for our own products and our own work for our own workmen is our policy. Agriculture is the oldest of our industries from the point of view of employment. It has been content to choose order instead of anarchy, and industry can be made amenable to similar treatment.

A year ago the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Deslauriers) moved a resolution in connection with the condition of industrial workers in Canada. The minister said he would study the situation, and that is all that has been done. It seems that the more he studies, the more he forgets to deal fairly with the municipalities. The heavy sales tax and the income tax over-government and over-taxation—duplicate taxation—are artificial burdens upon business and bring about additional unemployment. What we need is a proper reconstruction and housing policy and the complete reform of our parliamentary, constitutional and legal procedure and machinery. Not all the hungry are on relief. I had a letter from a man living in East York at Milliken's, who is not on relief but who is existing he says on little food, on bread and water. He has a little farm but he cannot make a living off it. If I had the time I should like to read what he has to say. Men like him are just as worthy of assistance as are the farmers in Saskatchewan, for whom $10,000,000 has been voted. I am not opposing that, I pity their plight, but I think the other provinces should receive similar treatment.

I should like to read a statement with reference to the children's bureau of the Department of Labour in the United States. This reads:

> The sufferings of the unemployed during these last six years of widespread unemployment and want constitute the most tragic chapter in the history of the nation. But not all the hungry children are in the families of the jobless. Not all the men and women who need a helping hand are on relief.
> The millions of Americans who still have jobs have been compelled to tighten their belts while witnessing the sufferings of their loved ones has been disclosed in startling fashion by the children's bureau of the department of labour.
> In a study of conditions among "typical" workers' families in several representative cities, investigators of the bureau discovered that not a single family had a dollar except the meagre wages of a bread winner between them and destitution. Savings and insurance funds are gone, and over three-fourths of the families are in debt for food, rent and medical care.
> Very few of the families are able to provide essential diets, and many of them are surviving on bread, beans and potatoes.
> Home life has been broken up. Relatives and friends are crowded into cramped quarters, not because misery loves company, but because many families had been evicted for non-payment of rent and lost their furniture.
> Last winter 66 per cent of the families were unable to buy coal and 60 per cent owned only the "ragged clothes upon their backs."
> Children had been compelled to quit school and their parents were unable to go to church because of their nakedness.
> This, remember, is the fate of Americans who are still drawing pay cheques, or what passes for them, in this land of abundance.

Child labour and sweatshop conditions are being tolerated in this country. The Department of Labour does nothing about it. Companies are bringing in alien labour. I have referred to one company in Toronto in which Mr. Purvis, the president of this commission, is interested. This company brought in a few American workers to take jobs which could have been handled by Canadians. This government has done nothing for the youth of the land.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but he has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. NORMAN JAQUES (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, if I may I would like to read a telegram which I received this morning from Leduc, Alberta. It reads:

> Due to the fact that the importation of vegetable oils to be used as shortening in the place of butter and lard is seriously damaging the markets for these products in Canada we respectfully urge you to support the national Dairy Council in its application for a special duty on such oils.

It is said that unemployment is the greatest problem we have to face in Canada. I believe that to be true. It has been said in this house that the only way to preserve our democracy is to put everyone to work. I do not believe that is so; in fact I believe the very reverse to be true. What are the facts? Everybody has been put to work in Russia, in Germany and in Italy, and in every one of these countries democracy has ceased to exist. Everybody has not been put to work in the British Empire or in the United States, and in these countries democracy still exists. I think we must accept the idea of permanent unemployment and must make provision for it.

I do not wish to take up any time in discussing ways and means of curing or providing for unemployment, but I should like to suggest one very simple and obvious thing to do, and that is to lower the age at which old age pensions are paid. What is the sense of making men of seventy work when there are hundreds of thousands of young men idle? I do not know to what age this limit should be reduced, but to start with I would suggest sixty years. I know I shall be told that this is not a wise thing to do, and I shall be asked, where is the money to come from? That is the invariable question. If I may make a further suggestion it would be this. I would say to those who control the finances of the country: "Gentlemen, we have received a mandate from the people of Canada to end poverty and unemployment. We believe that it is mainly a question of finance. You claim a monopoly of the knowledge of money, and certainly you enjoy a monopoly of creating it. We are going to give you the job of financing the provision for unemployment which, by your very policies, you have mainly brought about. We will give you reasonable time to do this, and meantime we will sharpen your wits. We propose to license financial institutions, all branches and branch managers, accepting at first a nominal licence fee. But if at the end of, say, a year you have not arrived at a solution we shall multiply that fee one thousand times, and will use the money to take care of the unemployed."

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) told us of the increased business prosperity of Canada, which I believe to be more apparent than real, and claimed the credit was due to the tariff policies of the government. I do not agree with him. I believe any improvement in business there may be is due to a policy of easy money, behind a smoke screen of trade agreements. Since I have been in Canada I have heard questions of tariff and free trade debated, and all I want to say is that if you quote the opinions of fifty of the most eminent business men who are in favour of free trade I will quote the words of fifty equally eminent men who are in favour of protection. I have the advantage over some members of having lived part of my life in a totally free trade country, and another part in protected Canada. When I lived in England, which of course was then under free trade, I enjoyed financial independence; and certainly for people in that position free trade is a fine thing. One's money goes a long way. But there is another side to the picture: there is the horrible and disgusting poverty behind the scenes; and whatever hon. members opposite may say about free trade, this much is certain, that during a policy of free trade the slums of England, Scotland and Wales were developed. I do not say the free trade policy was the only cause of slums, but certainly it did not prevent them. When as a young man I came to Canada I soon learned that my money did not go so far as it did in England. I found that a shilling was equal to about seventy-five cents. In spite of that fact, I do not think anyone will question that at the beginning of the century the masses of the people were better off in protected Canada than they were in free trade England. I believe there is no doubt about that, and the fact that Canada attracted hundreds of thousands of British people is proof of it.

However, I would hesitate to say the same thing to-day. I believe that particularly at the present time as a place in which to live, England is more attractive than Canada.

Mr. SPENCE: But they have not free trade now.

Mr. JAQUES: That is true. The fact that England has adopted a policy of protection may or may not be the cause of it.

May I say a few words about inflation? Whenever any monetary reform is suggested, at once we are told about inflation. That is the bogey to frighten the naughty children. But we never hear anything about the evils of deflation. I believe the obvious reason is that those who enjoy financial independence, those who have good salaries and who control finance, do very well during times of deflation. Their money goes farther, and prices are lower, but at the expense of those who produce the wealth of Canada. I represent thousands of people who in the last seven years, through a policy of deflation, have been utterly ruined. The work of a lifetime has been swept away, and from a position of economic independence, hundreds of thousands of people in western Canada have been brought to ruin simply because deflation has made it impossible except at a loss to produce the wealth of the country. What we need is a system which will avoid the evils of inflation and those of deflation, but certainly that is not possible under a system of orthodox finance.

Then we have the good old velocity of circulation. Of course, that is a smoke screen to hide a shortage of money. When we say there is a shortage of money we are told that there is enough of it, but that it does not circulate quickly enough. May I be permitted to read the definition of velocity of circulation as stated by Professor D. B. Copland, doctor of science, and an eminent economist:

> A given unit of money will circulate many times in a unit of time. It will make many payments because it has what economists call velocity of circulation.

May I illustrate the point with a story? It seems that two Irishmen, Pat and Mike, invested in a keg of beer which they were going to retail at the local race meet. As they had only ten cents left after buying the beer they found they had to carry it to the track. It was a hot day with a bright sun overhead. Pat, who had the ten cents, said to Mike, "Sell me a drink of beer," and paid over to Mike the ten cents for the drink. Of course that made Mike thirsty, and he said to Pat, "Sell me a glass of beer," and passed the ten cents back to Pat. And since it was a hot day, it was not long before the ten cents had passed a good many times and the keg was empty. I think hon. members will agree with me that, given two Irishmen and a keg of beer and a hot day, you would have a very satisfactory and satisfying velocity of circulation. That is a perfectly good illustration of the velocity of circulation theory, but what I should like to be told is this: How does ten cents recoup Pat and Mike for their beer, and how does it replace the beer? It will replace ten cents' worth of beer and no more.

We are also given the illustration of the baker who takes in, say fifty dollars; he runs across to the butcher and spends the fifty dollars. The butcher, we are told, goes to the hardware merchant and spends the fifty dollars there; the hardware merchant goes to the grocer, and so on, so that according to this argument the same fifty dollars will do hundreds of dollars' worth of business. But it will do nothing of the sort. One dollar will liquidate one dollar's worth of debt and no more. And it is easy to see the reason. The money issues from a bank as a debt through production, and it is paid out in wages and salaries to the public. There is no other source of purchasing power than wages, salaries and dividends. The public take their wages and salaries and dividends to the local storekeeper or to the theatre and buy what they need with it. As soon as it crosses the counter it is on its way back to where it started from, and a cancellation results. So, as Major Douglas says, it is a complete fallacy to suppose that one dollar of purchasing power can liquidate more than one dollar's worth of debts.

There is another subject about which I have heard a great deal in this house, and that is the subject of thrift, hard work, "tightening your belt" and working harder. But it seems to me that we have forgotten the meaning of the word "thrift." Thrift, I think, means to thrive. If we travel about Canada we see little evidence of any real thrift. I have travelled a great deal this last year, and, looking out of the windows, what have I seen? Thousands of miles of forest destroyed by the axe or by fire, hundreds of thousands of acres of wind-blown and weed-infested land, thousands of buildings rotting from lack of paint, idle plants, idle machinery, and idle men. Yet we pride ourselves on being a thrifty people! As a matter of fact we are not thrifty; we are thriftless. Thrift in the modern sense means saving money. I suggest that that is not thrift; it is avarice, and I believe that avarice, or the hoarding of money, has caused more human misery than all the forces of nature combined. A man saves money, that is he refrains from consuming, and to that extent goods cannot be sold. We are told, of course, that to-day money which is saved is invested, so that if one person does not spend it somebody else will. That is not quite true. When money is invested it is paid out in wages and salaries in respect of a fresh cycle of production, and on its way to the consumer's pockets again it lays a fresh trail of costs. The same lot of money cannot liquidate two lots of costs; in other words, you have two lots of goods and only one lot of money.

Of course saving is the only individual remedy for financial insecurity, but at the same time it is, I believe, a social evil of the worst kind. It is all right for the individual to save for a rainy day, but when the individual saves for a rainy day and numbers of individuals do likewise they are bringing about a continuous wet spell for increasing numbers of people. The same reasoning applies to insurance of all kinds. I am perfectly well aware that the only security which the individual can command is his insurance. At the same time he does so to a very large extent at the expense of the community. And so with unemployment insurance: that, it seems to me, if it were adopted would lead to an increase of unemployment; it would represent poverty, and surely we do not want to represent poverty, we want to abolish it.

And what is the workman to save? I am not speaking of men who are lucky enough to have so much money that they simply cannot spend it; of course they must save and invest it. Neither do I advocate taking that excess money from those people. There is no need of that; we are glad that there are at least some people who have enough. But consider the average wage earner, receiving about seventy dollars per month, who is told that he should put aside part of his wages to insure himself against unemployment or against old age. What I want to know is, what is he going to save? From a national standpoint there is no need to save money, considering money to-day—in spite of the denials—as simply figures in a book. As there is no need to save that, is he to save his food and his clothes? When he is in the heyday of his strength is he to save for his old age, his overalls, some clothes and some food which will either be mouldy or rotten when he needs them? Where is the point in saving? How can he save without bringing about a shortage of purchasing power?

Consider a community on an island. We will say that they have been shipwrecked. For a considerable time those people will be put to it to supply themselves with the necessities of life. It will take the efforts of all to keep themselves alive. But if they have any intelligence, sooner or later somebody will say, for instance, "If we had a boat and a net one of us could catch all the fish that we need and the rest of us could devote ourselves to something else." That would be a case of real saving. In order to build the boat and make the net, the community would have to put aside some other work until the boat was built; but when the boat was finished, of course, they would have the advantage of it and more time to devote to other things. But meantime they must save on their production in order to build the boat. That was true so long as the world was in an age of real scarcity. But suppose we want to build a boat to-day: where is the point in saving money for it? If we do we are going to cause a certain amount of unemployment in the meantime, because goods to that extent cannot be sold. And what do we need to save labour for when there is labour and machinery to spare? There is no need to lay anyone off to build the boat because there are hundreds of thousands, not to say millions, of men looking for the job. We could build hundreds of boats, we could make practically everything we need without saving a cent. I suggest that the mere fact of saving is one of the causes of unemployment and poverty. I do not mean to suggest that we should prohibit or attempt to prohibit saving and insurance, but I do suggest that care must be taken to see that those who must save and want to save can do so without penalizing the rest of the community.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) spoke some days ago he quoted certain well-known lines of Shakespeare. I will read only three:

> Neither a borrower nor a lender be;
> For loan oft loses both itself and friend,
> And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.

And the right hon. gentleman spoke these words of his own:

> I say to those who hesitate to realize the stature to which Canada has thus far advanced, and what is expected of her as a nation, they will do well to heed and to apply to our country the words of profound wisdom addressed by Polonius to his son Laertes, as Laertes set out upon his own.

[Mr. Jaques.]

Having been the victim of borrowing for purposes of production, I know full well the truth that borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry. People are encouraged to borrow money when money is plentiful; in fact, that is the only time they can borrow; and if they are enterprising they want of course to branch out and enlarge their operations. Things look good, times are promising, money is easy and they borrow. But when they come to pay back they find that money has become tight, scarce, and their prices have fallen, so that they cannot pay and their security is lost. That has been the story of the farming people whom I represent here.

The blame for the poverty in the west is put entirely on one thing, the drought. That is not true of my riding. The riding which I represent has never suffered from drought; the farmers have had fairly good crops right along. But they have had to market their crops at about twenty-five per cent of what it cost to produce them. I myself have delivered perfectly good barley at seven cents a bushel, and it cost me six cents to thresh it. That is why the farmers of northern Alberta and northern Saskatchewan are in the condition they are in to-day. The policy of deflation, sound money, has made it impossible for them to pay their debts; and then, to add insult to injury, they are called dishonest. If we are to bring about and maintain any kind of permanent prosperity, one of the most obvious things to do is this. When people borrow money the money must be available with which to pay back. And I would add, in closing, words of even more profound wisdom than Shakespeare's—the love of money is the root of all evil.

Mr. A. J. LAPOINTE (Matapedia-Matane): In rising to take part in this debate, I wish at the outset to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) on his budget. I shall not attempt to discuss it in detail. I shall leave that task to hon. members who are better informed and more experienced than I am.

I wish also to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and all the members of his government on the unceasing and strenuous efforts they have made to improve the situation of the country. Their efforts have not been in vain, for, ever since the Liberal party came into power, a new confidence has arisen among the people of Canada and conditions have improved to a remarkable extent. Our trade has increased, our industrial production has expanded as a result of the opening of new markets, and our railway traffic has felt the initial effects of the policies now in force. But in spite of these general improvements it must be admitted that we are still far from the prosperity at which we all aim. Indeed our agricultural and labouring classes, for whom the depression has been most severe, are still suffering keenly.

The wages paid to certain classes of workers, especially in the rural districts, are entirely out of proportion to the cost of living. For instance I cannot conceive of a family with eight children living on an income of $1.50 a day. It is hardly enough to provide decent food; what then is left for clothing, shelter, taxes, and other necessities? Real prosperity cannot be expected so long as the purchasing power of the masses is not increased, and it cannot increase so long as our working classes are not paid better wages. I do not pretend to be an economist, but I believe I have acquired during my lifetime a certain experience that has been denied to some. I have known the poverty of the masses through having shared it myself, and if I feel so deeply for our humble workers who put in many hours of arduous toil for a wage of $1.50 it is because of the understanding I have of their lamentable situation. How often have I been profoundly moved at the sad stories of poor workingmen who complained to me of their sufferings and hardships, and whose complaints I found to be fully justified. Our labouring classes have long been demanding reasonable wages, wages which would allow them to improve their situation and to look to the future with greater hope, but they are tired of waiting for reforms that are essential but are so long in coming. In an age when colossal fortunes are being built up so rapidly, it is only right that our poor workingmen should be paid wages sufficient to provide their families with at least a minimum of the comforts of life.

One of the most pressing duties of any government anxious to maintain our internal peace is to take drastic measures to end such shocking abuses as those which have been revealed in the past few years. In passing I wish to congratulate once more the Prime Minister upon having ordered the investigation, which has been conducted with such firmness, of the textile industry. The present century has been called a century of progress, but to me it seems a century of slavery and crying social injustice such as the world has perhaps never seen before. At the rate we are now going, if governments do not bring about extensive reforms to end the present abuses the most frightful disaster will inevitably overtake us.

I wish to take the opportunity of my participation in this debate to call the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) to the lamentable situation in which a large number of farmers and agricultural workers in my constituency find themselves as a result of the bad weather conditions of last summer, followed by early frosts which prevented their crops from ripening. In some parishes at least seventy-five per cent of our farmers will not have any seed this spring, and unless something is done to assist them a large number will be ruined.

I shall now conclude my remarks in the French language, and I trust that the right hon. leader of the opposition will not consider that as a concession.

(Translation): Mr. Speaker, I now wish to revert to a subject which I mentioned during the last session and which is most important for the future welfare of eastern Quebec. I am referring to the development of natural resources in the hinterland of Gaspé peninsula, which offer great posibilities. I am absolutely convinced that if we were to study thoroughly this plan and give it due consideration, we would find in it a solution to our unemployment problem in a good many counties.

Gaspé peninsula, known to thousands of Canadian and American tourists who visit it each year is a really delightful country, covers all that part of the province of Quebec which is bounded on the north and northeast by the St. Lawrence gulf, on the south by Chaleur bay, and on the west by the Matapedia valley. It includes the large constituencies of Gaspé, Bonaventure, and Matapedia-Matane. From Pointe à Père to the mouth of the Metis river it is 190 miles long; its width is about 85 miles, and its area, more than 12,000 miles.

In so far as its climate is concerned, one must not base his opinion on the remarks I made a few moments ago, for the weather last year, was quite exceptional. Gaspé's climate cold as it may be reputed to be, has a favouring influence on plant life. In winter it is dry and healthy, and in summer, sufficiently favourable to ensure the ripening of the crops. Excessive heat is unknown in that district. Gaspé's climate might be compared to that of Sault Ste Marie, in Ontario, or that of Edmonton, in Alberta.

The south shore of the peninsula is served by three railway sections which are now part of the Canadian National Railways and which are as follows: from Mont Joli to Matapedia, the old Intercolonial; from Matapedia to New-Carlisle, the Quebec Western; and from New Carlisle to Gaspé, the Quebec Oriental and Atlantic.

The north shore has no railways, except its western end which is served for a distance of 36 miles, namely from Mont Joli to Matane, by the Canada & Gulf Terminal Railway. As to the hinterland, there are no transportation facilities. It remained in a wild state just as it was when Jacques Cartier discovered Canada, 400 years ago. However, it is not for lack of natural wealth, and it is this natural wealth which I would now like to dwell upon.

The lofty Shickshocks range, with peaks reaching up to 4,000 feet, runs across the peninsula on the greatest part of its length. On this high Shickshocks range, at about two thirds of its width from Chaleur bay, there are two plateaus spreading one towards the north, the other towards the south. The headwaters which are draining that part of the country bear the following names: Nouvelle, Cascapedia, Bonaventure, Pabos, St. John and York.

It is estimated that 85 to 90 per cent of the district is wooded country. These forests of the Gaspé peninsula might contain approximately 40 million cords of soft wood, balsam and spruce, or 20 billion feet b.m. of lumber, and about one billion feet of hard wood and pine. These forests constitute the greatest timber wealth of eastern Quebec, but they have now attained their full growth, and moreover they are now subject to attacks from pests and other foes of the tree. Therefore, if they are not developed in the very near future, it will be an incalculable loss for our province and the country at large.

Forest fires also caused considerable damage in the Gaspé peninsula. It is worth noting that most of the big fires which broke out did most damage in the centre part of the peninsula where development after a fire was practically impossible, which meant a total loss. Since 1916, it is estimated that about 5,000,000 cords of pulwood were thus destroyed. If you only value a cord at $5, you will realize what enormous amount that represents. If you add the loss brought about by pests which are causing considerable damage, as well as the rapidly increasing depreciation of the trees after they are fully grown, you will realize what immense wealth we are thus wasting through our inaction. I maintain that our governments have no right to forsake and waste such plentiful resources which Providence has placed at our disposal, particularly at a time when thousands of unemployed are damanding work.

Having considered Gaspé's timber resources I shall now turn to its mineral possibilities. Around 1854, Sir William Logan was sent there in quest of coal. It was in the course of that survey that oil was spotted out, first around Gaspé, from the York river district down near cape St. Pierre. According to more recent surveys, the oil fields would seem to spread from Gaspé bay to the Matapedia valley. As regards mineral ores, they have been found in large quantities all over the peninsula. Gold and silver bearing ores were found along the York river, at Marsouins, Cross Point, but they did not carry their search any further. During the last few years, the investigations have rather had to do with lead and zinc along Berry brook, a tributary to the Cascapedia. Numerous veins with a satisfactory content were found since 1909. They found in Deslandes and Lesseps townships chrome iron pyrites bearing some splendid iron. Although the investigations were not carried on very far, asbestos was found at St. Moise, at Matapedia, and also in the townships of Blanchet, Courcelette and Weir. Almost everywhere there is plenty of granite for building purposes. Some blocks have been known to measure 8 feet in diameter and to reach up to 350 feet in length. Moreover, there is marble, limestone and sandstone of the best quality. Notwithstanding the investigations that were carried on more for examination than development purposes, geologists are in agreement as to the zinc, lead and copper resources of the Gaspé peninsula. One of them, Alcock, noted some copper bearing fields in Tessier and St. Denis townships, in Matane county and in the York river district. Others suggested in their reports to undertake more extensive surveys and prospection on a large scale in those districts.

It will thus be seen that Gaspé's resources are real. But we lack the necessary means for their development. At the present time, prospection and development cannot be actively carried on, owing to the many difficulties to be overcome in reaching the centre of the peninsula. There are no transportation facilities and prospectors must carry on their backs their equipment and food over narrow trails that are blocked up most of the time. If communications were easier, it would be possible to undertake more exhaustive investigations, to work the mines already discovered and to find new ones. The results that have been achieved so far, were obtained with the greatest difficulty. The gold mines of Ontario and northern Quebec offered no greater opportunities than those of the Gaspé district, but transportation facilities made their development possible.

So, Gaspé peninsula where, so far, only incomplete investigations have been made, where only a bird's eye view, as it were, has been taken, shows every indication of a mineral wealth which only awaits human intervention to reveal itself and become a valuable economic asset for Canada as a whole. Gaspé peninsula could become the most important mining centre of eastern Quebec, which would increase our national welfare.

Besides the wealth which I have just mentioned, the Gaspé district has great possibilities from the standpoint of agriculture and colonization. According to the geologist Alcock, the Gaspé district has a most fertile soil. It would appear that the peninsula has enough land for 40 or 60 new parishes. It would be the most suitable place for carrying into effect a comprehensive colonization scheme, which would relieve our population in our older parishes and afford room for our farmers' sons, who would find there the necessary land and the proper conditions for the development of their energy and ability.

The Gaspé district has many other resources, but let me mention only its long famed fisheries, its splendid rivers, its wonderful seaports through which the goods produced inland could be shipped. It is one of those few regions which lack almost nothing and are practically self-sufficient.

Since we still have acute unemployment, since all those remedies which have been used so far have proved to be mere palliatives, and have not given the expected results, since this unemployment calamity threatens more and more to disorganize our economic system, why not consider a scheme for the development of our resources on a large scale? How many countries would like to own the wonderful heritage with which Providence has blessed us, in order to make it productive.

Industry will never be able to absorb all our working men. Yet, it is imperative that we should give up that baneful policy of relief, initiated by the former government, which has spoiled our people in teaching them to rely upon the nation for their upkeep.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, work is what we need. Work for our honest unemployed who are courageous and find it humiliating to appeal unceasingly for help. Work for our young people who are losing their spirit through idleness. At a time when there is so much unrest, when so many false prophets are propagating their nefarious doctrines throughout the world, we must necessarily draw our young people from the harmful environment in which they now live. Otherwise, we would be turning this rising generation into a communistic and revolutionary class. To all those who are courageous and proud, to all those who are industrious and wish to get on in the world, we should hold out new prospects. To all these people, the great Gaspé district opens a wide field of activity, provided the governments will make it accessible for them.

And here is what I suggest: a five-year plan through which the federal and provincial governments would each spend, in cooperation, $500,000 a year, first to provide transportation facilities consisting at first in a highway along the centre of the whole peninsula, its starting points being, from the St. Lawrence river, Matane, and from the Matapédia valley either Sayabec, Val-Brillant, Amqui or Lac au Saumon. Then, mineral prospection on a large scale, the opening up of regions suitable for settlement and the development of accessible forests, and after that, the building of a railroad which would then be, I am quite sure, considered as absolutely necessary.

Mr. Speaker, in the past, the province of Quebec has not been pampered like some other provinces as regards railways. To-day, she would need hundreds of millions to make up for the lost time. And in order to see whether our claim is justified, it is only necessary to look over our railway maps and to compare them to those of other provinces. Eastern Quebec was never treated fairly in that respect, and Gaspé has been especially overlooked. That district has been lamentably disregarded by all the successive governments in this country.

That is the reason why, in spite of the countless wealth which is to be found in Gaspé, that region, which is as vast as some kingdoms, has not developed at the same rate as the rest of the country. At various times, its people have been compelled to go into exile, because they could not make a living or find enough room on that land which, however, they loved so much.

Will our governments decide at last to hear the claims of Gaspé, that land full of promise which for so many years has been overlooked and forgotten? I am confident that the present government which, I know, is quite favourably disposed, will give its best attention to the suggestions I have just made and find it possible to carry out the plan which I have just outlined in this house. Then our old land of Gaspé will awake from her slumber of the past four centuries. And for our younger generation, dispirited by those six years of depression, this will mean the dawn of a new and better day, and for our thousands of unemployed, who live in poverty, it will bring the prospect of more prosperous times to which they have been looking forward for so long.

Mr. E. E. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible for me to review in detail in forty minutes the many important questions raised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) in his budget speech. Therefore, I shall endeavour to confine myself to those problems which pertain particularly to western Canada. The minister expressed hopes for a bright fiscal year in 1937-38. If things are to improve as he thinks they are, why did he not endeavour to give some encouragement to the consumers of Canada by reducing some of the forms of taxation? I refer particularly to the sales tax which, as the minister stated, represents about thirty per cent of the total income of the government. A one per cent reduction would have meant $15,000,000 which the consumer would not have to pay, and a two per cent reduction would have meant something worth while to the consumer.

The minister stated that the financial picture was much better and he was particularly pleased to announce that the wheat board had repaid all government and bank advances and other obligations and were returning $8,000,000 to the dominion treasury. I am sure it will be interesting for the farmers of western Canada to note that, as $3,000,000 of it will be used to return the five per cent cut to the civil servants.

I should like to draw the attention of this house to the importance of the agricultural industry. Unless the farmers of Canada, and the farmers of western Canada in particular, are prosperous, Canada cannot be prosperous. The three prairie provinces have produced as much as one billion dollars worth of new wealth in a year. The average annual production of new wealth during the past ten years has been $700,000,000. Hon. members can readily appreciate what that means to industry in eastern Canada and to the railways through the carriage of freight.

In the few remarks I have to make I intend to deal more particularly with wheat. Our difficulties of marketing this and other grains began in 1929-30. Because of the depression, the wheat importing countries of the world took less wheat and we in Canada found ourselves in difficulties. Some of the leading wheat companies, particularly the pool, found themselves in difficulty in 1930. I shall not review all that the previous government did in dealing with this problem, nor do I think it is necessary for me to cover all that occurred prior to the passing of the wheat board act in 1935 because I think all this is well within the memory of nearly every hon. member. Suffice it to say that Mr. McFarland was in charge from 1930 to 1935 when the wheat board act came into force. During that period he not only handled the surplus which he took over in 1930, but he added considerably to that surplus because of the stabilization operations which he conducted. The government was asked to allow him to conduct these operations by boards of trade, municipal organizations, banks, wheat pools, the grain exchange and other organizations in western Canada. I shall state only this fact, that Mr. McIvor appearing before the committee investigating the Canadian Wheat Board Act, passed in 1935, gave evidence, in answer to a question I put to him, to the effect that the McFarland operations had meant at least 15 cents a bushel on all the wheat which had been grown in a four-year period in western Canada, over and above what the farmer would have received if he had not carried on those operations.

In the month of October, 1935, there was a change of government, and a change in the wheat board. Mr. Murray was put in charge, as chairman. I make this statement: From the first day he took over he pursued a fire sale policy with respect to the surplus and the selling of wheat. We knew Mr. Murray quite well; we know that he was the man who had informed Mr. Ralston, when Mr. Ralston made the charges. It was he who supplied Mr. Ralston with the information he used, and in making the charges Mr. Ralston often used the expresion "if I am correctly informed" or "if information given me is correct," and we knew from where that information came.

I shall deal with three things that Mr. Murray did when he first took over, and as matters went along, to show conclusively that he pursued a fire sale policy. He took office on December 5, and the first sale is recorded on December 9. One of the first things he did in taking office was to make an agreement with the members of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, or a committee of it. The agreement is to be found at page 259 of the evidence taken last year. I would ask hon. members to pay attention to the second paragraph of the agreement, which reads as follows:—

> No. 2. The board are willing to agree to the second suggestion made by the exporters committee; namely, that the board will make wheat available to exporters in sufficient quantity to cover their overnight acceptances during the first ten minutes after the opening of the market, at not more than ¼ cent over the previous day's close.

The wording suggests that they accepted the suggestion made by the committee of the grain exchange, and the basis of the agreement was production of offers and acceptances.

I wish further to draw this to the attention of the house. At page 508 of Hansard for this session hon. members will see that the agreement was made without the knowledge of the government, and that the agreement which was cancelled ten days later was cancelled without the knowledge of the government. That was the reply to the question I had asked.

Following the agreement being made, sales were made on the 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th and so on. On December 13 he sold 22,025,000 bushels of wheat, 8,500,000 or more of which was delivered under the terms of the agreement. That was the morning that word was received in Winnipeg that the Argentine market had increased 19 cents, and Liverpool was up 7. It is interesting to note that that agreement was cancelled, however, on the 20th, and the sales following the cancellation of the agreement dropped from millions to thousands. On December 23, there were 333,000 bushels of wheat sold; on December 24, 371,000; and on February 28 it dropped to 51,000. I claim that that is evidence that he was playing into the hands of the members of the exchange.

Owing to that sale on December 13, the leader of the opposition made a charge on the floor of the House of Commons after the house met last year. On February 13 I made a statement that when the committee was investigating we would demand the production of these offers and acceptances as proof of sale. I may say we never received them before the committee. If hon. members will look at page 307 of the evidence they will find that in reply to my question the chairman stated that those documents had never been in the hands of the government or the wheat board, and that Mr. Murray also stated he was unable to produce them. In their place they produced an auditors' report, which is a most interesting document. It was tabled before the committee, is dated March 6, and states the cause of the delay was that they had to communicate with the principals of certain companies in the old country in order to get the offers and acceptances, and documents necessary to offer as proof of sale. That is two and a half months after.

There is a second matter I should like to draw to the attention of the house, and it is this: On December 12, a day or two after he took over, he dispatched Mr. Cecil Lamont to the old country. Mr. Lamont had a letter of some importance to British millers and importers, to one or two parts of which I shall refer. The letter is to be found at page 145 of the evidence. As it is long I shall not attempt to read it all, but one paragraph states he may inform the British millers that the fixed minimum price paid producers by the board does not necessarily bear any relation to the board's selling price. Another paragraph states that he may inform the British millers what the board considers a fair value or premium for Canadian wheat as compared with other wheats, and that the board does not agree that the premium at which our wheat had been held in the past two years was a fair premium. I say that shows clearly they were anxious to sell our wheat at almost any price.

That letter, which I call the Lamont letter, cost the farmers of western Canada at least $20,000,000. Here is my reason for making the statement: I have myself, personally—not second hand—been in conversation with representatives of British millers. In conversation with a representative of a subsidiary company of Joseph Ranke and Company within the last three months I asked about the Lamont letter. The person to whom I spoke knew it almost word for word. I asked him what he considered it meant. He said they interpreted it as an invitation to bid for the wheat at anything less than the fixed minimum price. I asked him how much he considered it had lowered the purchase price, and he replied that it was at least ten cents, and possibly nearer fifteen cents. He indicated to me that they had purchased the wheat at from ten to fifteen cents a bushel less, from the date they saw that letter until July 31 last year. That is a serious matter, and I give the circumstances from first-hand information.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Second-hand.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): It is second-hand to you, but it came first-hand to me. May I say here and now that if hon. members review the evidence they will find that last year there was produced before the committee a statement from a certain Rotterdam firm as to the low price at which the Canadian government was selling its wheat. The Australian government had protested. There were many evidences that the board was underselling the market.

A committee was set up last year, and may I point out an interesting fact in connection with its work. When the committee met and organized on March 24 they sent for Mr. Murray, but Mr. Murray wrote a letter, dated March 26, to the secretary of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, a copy of which I have in my hand. In that letter he states:

The Canadian wheat board will continue, as far as they are able to do so, cooperating with the trade in spreading as well as other marketing operations. . . . The next spread will be July-October, and we wish to suggest to the trade that they should consider if it is desirable for them to continue depending blindly on the board for all or any particular part of this spread.

That was a nice invitation to the members of the grain exchange, just before he departed for Ottawa to appear before the committee. In my opinion it was an absolutely improper statement on his part. In effect he was saying to the trade, "You need not worry; we are going to take care of you. It does not matter about the investigation or anything else."

The report of the committee which investigated this subject last year is an interesting document. It recites, first, that a full examination of Mr. Murray was conducted, and that in selling wheat he was complying with the policy the government had in view when it set up the wheat board. The second paragraph is as follows:

While there was a short interest in the Winnipeg wheat market in December of 1935, no evidence was produced that would warrant the conclusion that speculative short interests were protected by the board in that month. As the committee finds it impracticable to obtain conclusive evidence on this point, we recommend that this matter be referred for further investigation to the Royal Commission, the appointment of which is recommended in this report.

There is the reason for the Turgeon commission, the commission which has been inquiring for several months into the grain trade, yet I have not seen in the published reports of the evidence they have been taking any reference to this important matter, the first thing they were asked to consider. It is not necessary for me to say anything about the cost of the inquiry. Mr. Ralston, who from his seat on the opposition benches repeatedly rose to oppose the passing of this act,—than whom no man was more bitter in opposition to it—is to-day employed at the handsome figure of $200 per day and $20 expenses to make these inquiries. It will cost this country more to pay his salary for one month than the farmers of Saskatchewan will pay in income tax in a year.

Mr. Murray's report of his operations to January 1 of this year is very interesting, not for what it contains but for what it omits. He first refers to the dismissal of the old board and of the advisory committee, but he does not in that report tell the public that upon the dismissal of the advisory committee its place was taken by a committee of four members of this cabinet. On the third page he asserts that there will be no fire sale policy pursued by the board. The fact that they sold in one day 22,000,000 bushels of wheat, and the further fact that in about ten days they sold over 40,000,000 bushels of wheat, gives some evidence of fire sale methods. In two months, December, 1935 and July, 1936, they sold 113,000,000 bushels. I wish to draw attention to the fact that in July of last year the board sold in the neighbourhood of 63,000,000 bushels of wheat, when there was every evidence that there would be a very substantial increase in price and practically a crop failure all over the western states and the southern part of the prairie provinces. I hold in my hand a copy of a daily report issued by the crop reporters who go through the west during the growing season and report on the crop situation. Here are some extracts:

July 1—Hot, dry weather over western Canada will make a general and serious reduction in the crop in the prairie provinces.

July 3—For the third time in the last six years, drought is destroying the spring wheat crops in the United States.

July 4—The increased alarm in the United States over the drought situation has a deep interest in western Canada.

July 6—A week-end of unrelenting dry heat in western Canada and the spring grain areas of the United States saw wheat prices on the Winnipeg grain exchange pushed forward to the five cent limit.

July 8—Tom Moody, North Dakota, W.P.A. administrator, stood to-day in the tower of the state capital at Bismark and said that the drought was worse than the one in 1934, and was causing more damage than anything in the memory of the oldest pioneer.

It goes on through the whole month.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Would the hon. member read to the house the report that Mr. McFarland gave out in the middle of June, when he said the crop would amount to over 400,000,000 bushels?

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): When I went home from this parliament last year a splendid crop was growing on my own farm, but it did not amount to anything. When the hot weather struck it in the early part of July, it practically petered out. We know that there was a splendid prospect in June.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Could the hon. member give us Mr. McFarland's prophecy along with the others?

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Yes, and there were a lot of others who made prophecies of a good crop. In 1935 we had a splendid crop of grain almost until the binder was ready to go into the field, and then rust took it. From that it will be seen how soon a crop in western Canada can peter out.

July 9—Western Canadian farmers should rise up and arrange an injunction against the Canadian wheat board and prevent the board selling any more wheat under $1.25 a bushel, as a result of present crop prospects.

Each day there is a similar report.

July 18—All the information that is obtainable at this trading centre suggests that the government board will sell its last bushel of carry-over at the market. . . . But, in the very midst of the scorching heat wave, with every surface indication of a reduced crop in Canada and utter destruction over a wide area in the central States, the Winnipeg market declined four cents! Why? Government wheat board selling.

Later, this report states that during the month the wheat board had thrown into the Winnipeg pit 60,000,000 bushels of wheat.

But even the market itself, under that flood of wheat, did its level best to show that throwing that immense bushelage into speculators' hands between July 1 and July 31, 1936, was not a sales policy at all, but was a crime against the producers.

Four of the large firms in the Winnipeg exchange participated, no doubt more than they should have, in the profits that were made through the government board selling as they did. In face of the evidence that there would be a poor crop that action, I say, was a crime against the producer, and I think an investigation should be held into the operations of those firms. I was in Winnipeg in November, and talking with different members of the exchange I was informed that indications of an increase in price were so apparent in July that three or four of the large firms were allowed to buy their wheat without hedging, and that one firm in particular operated and had a twenty cent profit before it started to hedge its wheat. I was informed that James Richardson and company in January had practically 75 per cent of the wheat west of the lakes. Mr. Murray has stated in the report I have here that he set out to sell before the end of the year all the wheat remaining from the 1935 crop. He accomplished that purpose, and it will be noted that he states, on page 5 of the report, that they took a final loss of $11,858,000. Therefore the wheat on which they made this splendid profit lately, as a result of which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) states $8,000,000 was returned to the treasury, must have been wheat accumulated by Mr. McFarland and not sold before that date.

As regards the 1936 crop, the government's failure to continue the fixed price unless the wheat depreciated below ninety cents really meant the repeal of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, and to substantiate that statement I need only refer the house to the fact that the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell)—I am sorry he is not in his place and I trust that he is in better health—in the town of Cupar, and in the presence of three or four hundred farmers, stated that the order in council P.C. 2202 really meant the repeal of that act, and he declared that he was very much disappointed at that action. I have the order in council here and I will read the last paragraph, which is interesting:

The minister therefore recommends that the recommendation of the Canadian Wheat Board be not approved unconditionally but that approval be given only in the event of the closing market price for wheat dropping below ninety cents per bushel.

The wheat board must have made some recommendations, because according to that paragraph of the order in council their recommendation was not to be approved except in the event stated. As I say, that really meant the repeal of the act and it cost the farmers a great deal. I calculate that on the 1935 crop, 150,000,000 bushels and more, they lost ten cents a bushel. At any rate, Mr. Murray says they lost $11,000,000. On the 1936 crop the farmers, not having an opportunity to market through the board, lost twenty cents a bushel, or $25,000,000; and as regards the McFarland wheat, while there was a profit on the late sales the early sales showed a loss of ten cents a bushel, which meant another $20,000,000.

And what about barley and coarse grain? What happened in connection with durum wheat last year was a crime against the producers, because, not being able to put the wheat through the board, they sold it at from eight to ten cents under the price of No. 1 northern in Fort William, and in December it was twenty-five cents a bushel over No. 1 northern. There is a serious loss there. The racket put over in western Canada this year in the marketing of barley is one the whole story of which will never be told. Unquestionably it is the greatest racket ever put over the farmer. There were 20,000,000 bushels of barley, a great deal of it malting barley, that went on the market and the farmer lost at least twenty cents a bushel. The barley was cornered by certain interests in Winnipeg and the price advanced, but the farmer did not get the benefit of it because he had sold it. I have figured a loss to the farmer of between fifty and sixty million dollars altogether in the operations of the board, and its failure to operate for 1936 crop.

The Turgeon commission has been sitting, and there are one or two interesting things I want to refer to in this regard. Let me quote from a report that appeared in a Winnipeg newspaper on January 20:

Turgeon probe hears report of barley mark[illegible] "corner."

Counsel bares alleged "squeeze" of "short interests" during December.

Reports of a "squeeze" of "short interests" in barley on the Winnipeg grain exchange in December last were bared to the Turgeon royal grain commission to-day by M. M. Porter, K.C., Calgary, counsel for the Alberta wheat pool. Examining Henry Gauer, vice-president of the Winnipeg grain exchange, Mr. Porter said he understood the barley market had been cornered in Winnipeg. . . .

The December barley future on the Winnipeg grain exchange advanced 29 cents in December. . . . Mr. Porter said he understood the "squeeze" resulted from the barley market being cornered and the shorts being forced to make a settlement. "Wasn't one of your subsidiaries interested because of its 'long' position in the barley market?" Mr. Porter asked Mr. Gauer, western manager for James Richardson and Sons, Limited. Mr. Gauer said a subsidiary might have been interested through owning barley.

He said that possibly the subsidiaries had barley and figured in the corner. The fact that there was a corner in barley is, I submit, a major offence, and it is so regarded in the laws of Canada. It is therefore something that should be investigated. Any government or parliament that would permit such an operation as was carried on last fall in connection with the marketing of barley and durum wheat should be censured, and an inquiry should be started. There should be a thorough investigation to find out where the money went and also to look into the operations of four firms in particular in the Winnipeg grain exchange.

The order in council to which I have referred meant, as I say, the repeal of the act, and against this action on the part of the government many meetings in protest were held throughout western Canada. The farmers and the different municipal organizations met and passed resolutions censuring the government for not continuing the board. To these resolutions the government evidently paid no attention but took the advice of their chief commissioner. I say, therefore, that the welfare of the farmers of western Canada has never been more completely disregarded; never have they been so betrayed or exploited, never have they been so double-crossed and sacrificed as during the last four or five months through the action of the present government in not allowing the wheat board to function so as to try to obtain a fair price for the producer, but turning the flow of grain into the grain exchange. And this is the government whose leader, when he went west in the campaign of 1935, made the statement that his party had been responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board Act. It was he who made that statement in Brandon, and the next day all the western newspapers, the Leader-Post in particular, came out with large headlines to the effect that the Liberals had been responsible for the act. The claim was made that it was the Liberals who were responsible for the clause giving the board the power to take the farmers' wheat at a fixed minimum price. In fact, the right hon. gentleman claimed credit for practically the whole of the act. I submit that no greater misrepresentation of facts was ever indulged in by any public man in Canada, and in my opinion it was most unfortunate that even the farmers fell for it.

As I said a moment ago, there was widespread protest against the failure of the government to carry on the board. I have here several resolutions passed at the meetings I have referred to. Several meetings were held and the resolutions—a whole stack of them—would take you a day to read. There was one passed recently in the city of Moose Jaw. I read the headline:

Unanimous request for grain board. Want minimum price to cover cost of production.

This resolution was passed at a meeting of the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities, and the report is to the effect that when the resolution was proposed at least half of the six hundred delegates present rose to their feet wishing to second it. Here is another headline:

Anger voiced as Gardiner not present.

This meeting was held in Saskatoon and I understand that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) was in that city that day. The hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Young) called at the meeting, but he would not stay because he had to meet the minister. Here is another headline:

Gardiner plea on wheat said to be evasion.

The Minister of Agriculture spoke to the young Liberals in the city of Regina the following night, and then we find him speaking in the city of Winnipeg to the junior members of the board of trade. I have it on good authority—because I was talking with a man who sat within ten feet of him—that the minister, speaking to these young men, a number of them members of the Winnipeg grain exchange, made the statement that to all intents and purposes we now have an open market. Within the last three or four weeks the minister declared that the wheat had been going on the market in greater volume than previously and, oddly enough in view of the pessimistic statements made, someone had been found to take the hedges. I understand that Mr. Richardson and others were permitted by the bankers to carry their wheat without hedging, the market had been so good. He congratulated the grain exchange for the successful way they had carried on the business of marketing western wheat from the beginning of the season.

Now the gem of all these resolutions, and we have many of them, comes from the constituency of Prince Albert. I have here a few that have been tabled, resolutions and protests sent to the Prime Minister. I understand that he has received many hundreds of these, and I think no better evidence could be produced to show that the farmers of western Canada lack confidence in this government and its leader than to have the Prime Minister stand up himself and read from the hundred or more resolutions that he has received from farmers of western Canada in meetings of that sort. I have here one passed at Watrous by the Watrous business men at a meeting on September 18, going on record as demanding that the federal government implement the following, and then they set out that they want the wheat board to continue, a minimum price set, and so on.

Then we have one from Shellbrook, dated September 9, 1936, which reads:

> Therefore we the farmers of the Shellbrook district, which includes Holbein, Sturgeon Valley, Foxdale, Brightholm and Cameo, wish to express our resentment and to register our bitter protest against the actions of the government in failing to comply with our request. . . .

They go on to say that they want a wheat board and a fixed minimum price of $1.15 per bushel. Then the second paragraph says:

> Whereas our representative at Ottawa, the Hon. Mackenzie King, is not in sympathy with nor interested in the welfare of the western farmer; therefore be it resolved that we the farmers of Holbein, Sturgeon Valley, Brightholm, Foxdale and Cameo assembled at Shellbrook call on him to resign as our representative.
> And further that in future elections we elect a western man to represent us.

Mr. BOTHWELL: If I may ask the hon. member a question, did he ever attend any of those protest meetings that were held in western Canada?

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Not one, and I had invitations to hundreds.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Has the hon. member knowledge of the manner in which those resolutions were prepared, and does he know that the resolutions were brought to these meetings already typewritten and with the mover and seconder's name set out?

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): I have not attended one. I had invitations to attend hundreds and I kept away for the reason that I knew someone would say I had agitated, and there is not one word that can be found which I suggested.

Mr. GARDINER: I would like to ask the hon. gentleman why he objects to my objecting to attend one of those meetings when he objected to attending any of them.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle: That is easily answered. The hon. gentleman is a minister of the crown, a member of the wheat committee which advises the government; he is the man responsible for the order in council. I have no responsibility at all and it was right that I should not attend because I have no authority, but if the Minister of Agriculture had attended he could have assured the farmers of his policy and given them some encouragement.

As I say, there are many other resolutions, I have not time to read them, but to all these resolutions received by the Prime Minister there was one answer, written by his secretary, the last clause of which is:

> Mr. King has noted the representations contained in your communication, and has instructed me to bring them to the attention of the Honourable W. D. Euler, Minister of Trade and Commerce.

That is about as far as they ever got.

Now my time is short. I say that as the commission which is now investigating evidently will not report before this session concludes, probably not before next session, the government in face of these resolutions demanding that they take action before the 1937 crop is seeded, should declare their policy with respect to the Canadian Wheat Board Act. The farmer means to stick by that act. No matter what the Turgeon committee reports, that act is here to stay. The farmers of western Canada will not long stand this sculduggery which took place last fall with respect to the marketing of their wheat and barley and coarse grain.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): When the matter is in committee I may have an opportunity to say a little more on this subject.

Mr. HYNDMAN: Mr. Speaker, it is getting close to six o'clock and I expect to take the full forty minutes. Will you call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. A. B. HYNDMAN (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, before continuing the debate on the budget I should like to express my appreciation to you and to the acting leader of the government (Mr. Lapointe) for permitting me to call it six o'clock when the preceding speaker had concluded. I still consider myself one of the junior members of the house, and I venture to say that some of the older members, from their own experience, realize that it is rather difficult for a new member to make his first speech here. I should like also to express my regrets at the illness of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning). During the past year the hon. gentleman became a resident of my riding, and I can assure the house that we in Carleton county deem it a distinct honour to have such an outstanding Canadian in our midst.

When the budget was delivered in this house I think every hon. member was ready and willing to congratulate the minister on the manner in which he presented it. A statement was made in the very first paragraph, however, with which I can hardly agree. The minister said that if he could not bring brevity, at least he could bring good cheer. As far as financial conditions and trade are concerned perhaps he did bring us some measure of good cheer, but that was not the case in regard to the vital interests of this country.

On this occasion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to address the house on behalf of three groups in this country; that is, the farmers, the unemployed and the taxpayers. After listening very attentively to the budget, and having read it very carefully; having read also the splendid speech delivered a short time ago by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), I have been unable to find anything promising any advantage to the farmers of eastern Canada. When I speak of eastern Canada I mean the farmers from the great lakes down to the maritimes, and in particular the farmers of Carleton county. Right here I should like to state that last summer the farmers of my county had a very, very favourable year. They had good crops; there was no drought, and no difficulties at all as far as the farming situation was concerned. Fortunately the price of barley was high, but that was not due to this government; we must thank providence for that, in a way. That was not the result of the trade agreement between this country and the United States, but it was wholly due to the failure of the corn crop across the border. If the price of barley had not been high last summer the farmers in my own county at least would have suffered very materially.

I should have liked also to direct the attention of the Minister of Finance, if he had been here, to the fact that on the day he delivered his budget he could have stepped out of his back door and looked into the faces of 215 families who are on relief. He could have seen also a township belonging to my county which is on the point of bankruptcy.

This evening, Mr. Speaker, I want to divorce myself from any party. For the next forty minutes I am not a Tory, a Liberal, a member of the C.C.F. or of the Social Credit group.

An hon. MEMBER: And then you will go back?

Mr. HYNDMAN: I may go back afterwards, but I want to speak about the people among whom I have lived and practised my profession for the past eighteen years. I do not think anyone in this house knows better than I the conditions under which those people live. I should like to make it clear that any figures I quote have been secured from either the bureau of statistics, the Labour Gazette or Hansard, so I assume that they are accurate. First I should like to say a word as to the importance of agriculture. No doubt hon. members have read the last annual statement made by the president of the Imperial Bank of Canada, in which he said that the dollar value of primary production of Canada for 1936 was approximately as follows:

Forestry, $250,000,000.
Fisheries, $40,000,000.
Trapping, $8,500,000.
Mining, $370,000,000.
Electric power, $175,000,000.

Those items total $1,643,500,000 and these figures, especially with regard to agriculture, are by no means complete. I should like to point out also that the value in dollars of the agricultural production of Canada in 1936 was far higher than the value of any other production. Therefore I am speaking of an important industry. According to the census of 1931 there were 1,128,154 farmers in Canada, and of these 651,648 were farm owners. The total government revenue from income tax last year amounted to $82,710,000, but the amount paid by farmers was only $46,609.35. In other words, more than a million persons employed in agriculture were able to pay only some $46,000 in income tax.

Last year in this house I brought up the question of the revenue derived from different types of farms, and I may say that this revenue has not increased very much during the past year. I am going to be very brief. One farmer with a 200 acre farm, valued at $9,000, with a herd of 30 cows and shipping milk to the dairy, received an income of $2,151.50, with expenses of $1,640, leaving a net total of $511.50 with which to keep himself and his family. The price of cheese advanced slightly last year, as was prophesied by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning). This having happened, the government cut off the bonus on cheese. Another farmer, shipping his milk to a cheese factory, received $710 from a herd of fourteen cattle. His expenses were $506, which left him $204 for the year. I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Matapedia (Mr. Lapointe) say a word this afternoon for the farmers of eastern Canada. This summer the United Farmers of Ontario held a meeting, and I should like to quote a report of the remarks of the president and past president, as follows:

"Prospects, therefore, are that in many sections of Ontario the farmer's net proceeds on the year's operations will be far from satisfactory," was Mr. Nicholson's conclusion.

"We are pleased to note during the past year, activities on the part of a number of countries leading toward an increase in international trade," he went on. "This is a step in the right direction, but increased trade alone will not solve the problem of the farmer."

The past president, Mr. Amos, is reported as follows:

How can any industry like ours be prosperous and carry on under a debt load up to the total value of the whole agrarian assets of the farmer, whose buildings are deteriorating, his fences falling down and his machinery in disrepair? How can he carry on under these conditions, and how can the morale of the farmer grow in strength? I am sorry to say I cannot see much light ahead.

I feel also that we are not paying enough attention to our home markets. I realize the importance of external markets, but we should not neglect our home markets. I should like to give some figures showing the percentage of consumption in the Canadian market of different commodities. These figures, taken from the Canada Year Book, for 1933-34, are as follows:

	Per cent
Cattle and beef	97·3
Hogs and pork	95·4
Sheep and lambs	99·4
Butter	98·9
Poultry	98·3
Eggs	99·8
Potatoes	96·9
Barley	88·2

I think these figures show the importance of our home market. The prices received by the farmer of eastern Canada have not increased materially in the past year. In 1935 he received for beef cattle only five cents a pound; in 1936 he received 4½ cents a pound, and at the present time he is receiving six cents a pound. These are the prices paid for choice beef. The prices received for pork were eight cents in 1935, eight cents in 1936 and eight cents in 1937. I shall refer again to pork later on. Lamb, seven cents in 1935, ten cents in 1936 and nine cents at the present time, mutton, four cents in 1935, five cents in 1936 and four cents in 1937. Veal, five cents in 1935, five cents in 1936 and seven cents in 1937. For cheese he received 9½ cents per pound in 1936 while last year the price had risen to 13 cents per pound. For cream shipped to the dairies he is receiving forty cents per gallon.

Last fall the price of pork kept dropping until it reached a level of 7½ cents per pound. The lowest point was reached just at tax time. Why? I submit that this drop in price can be laid at the doors of the Canadian packers. The packers of this country control the price of farm products. The packers knew that the farmers had their hogs ready for market, that they must dispose of them or they would go overweight, and the price was forced down to 7½ cents per pound at which the farmer was forced to sell in order to pay his taxes. After the farmer had sold his pork at that figure, up went the price. The packers of this country have a monopoly of the products of the farm. Forty per cent of the products of the packers are made from vegetable oils, which provide unfair competition to the farmers of this country.

This afternoon the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) gave a very outstanding address on behalf of the farmers of western Canada. I hardly think I need say anything on behalf of the farmers of that part of the country. Federal governments—I am referring both to the present and the previous administration—have not helped the eastern farmer to the extent they have the western farmer. Outside of the small bonus on cheese granted by the previous administration, farmers of eastern Canada have received very little assistance. The western wheat grower has received large sums from previous federal governments, and it is proposed to spend a large amount this year for their benefit. Last year $25,181,697.87 was spent on agriculture, of which $17,247,449.38 was spent in western Canada. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) threw some light upon the money being spent in Saskatchewan, and he is reported on pages 774, 775 and 780 of Hansard of February 11, 1937, as follows:

This brings me down to the period from 1931 to 1936. During the first year, 1931, the government, in its best judgment, and I think the government had the support of all sides of the house in so doing, paid a bonus of five cents a bushel on the wheat grown in the northern part of the three western provinces. That bonus amounted ultimately to somewhere between $12,000,000 and $13,000,000.

And again:

But eventually the notes taken from the farmers were cancelled and the dominion of Canada to-day is carrying the entire cost of the $10,000,000 that was spent in the south-western part of Saskatchewan—

And then he continues on another page:

That, added to the other total of $8,715,000 which I mentioned a few moments ago, gives a total of $58,715,000 which has been advanced by the people of Canada towards the maintenance of people in the area of which I have spoken.

And again:

We believe the time has arrived when the Dominion of Canada, looking back at an expenditure of $50,000,000, should at least be prepared to face an expenditure of at least $10,000,000 over a period in order to avoid similar expenditures in the future.

One would almost think it was a game of poker. They had put the $50,000,000 into the pot, and had lost it, and now they are going to spend another $10,000,000 to get the $50,000,000 back. I believe that too much money has been spent in the west. In the past it has been favoured. Years ago they clamoured for railways and were successful in having two railways pass through the western provinces. Branch lines were built all through the country. Elevators were built at Nelson in connection with which millions of dollars were spent. Then the elevator service was changed to Churchill. More money was spent, and railroads were built to connect with those elevators. Now they come here asking for more money.

In the past we heard of the golden west, and I think that is coming true. If we keep on pouring gold into the western provinces we will surely have a golden west. May I add that I have every sympathy with the farmers of western Canada—

An hon. MEMBER: You said it that time.

Mr. HYNDMAN: May I say to the group who come from western Canada that last summer when the appeal from the west reached my county we sent ten carloads of fruits, vegetables, clothing and one thing and another to the western provinces. I divided the potatoes and other vegetables raised in my own little garden, at home, put them into cars, and sent them out to the west. But I feel they have been getting too much help, and the eastern part of Canada is unable to stand it.

What must be done?—that is a fair question. What will have to be done for the farmers? I maintain Canada will never be prosperous again until the farmer is in a more prosperous condition. He certainly must get some relief from taxation; there is no question about that. He must receive a higher price for his products. He must have a market for his products, both abroad and at home. He must have cheaper rates of interest, and I am going to repeat what I said last year: I feel the time is coming when there will have to be a moratorium on farm mortgages. At the present time farmers cannot possibly pay off their mortgages at the rates of interest they are paying. They will have to have a breathing space to let them get on their feet. The group to my left will certainly be agreeable to that. So much for the farmers.

Now I come to the other groups I want to talk about, namely, the taxpayers and the unemployed. I believe we have never had any government in the history of Canada which has thrown out so much camouflage and so many smoke screens. We hear what the government has done; but what did they really do? That is the question we must ask ourselves. In connection with the railway question, so far as I can figure out, all they did was to fire the three trustees. They fired Mr. Fullerton, and if they will give me the same pension or retiring allowance they gave him, and permit me to go on with my practice, they can fire me any time. Then they appointed seven directors to carry on the same work.

We have heard a great deal about the Bank of Canada, and how it was going to be controlled by the government. I want to tell you that the man who is controlling the Bank of Canada to-day is none other than Graham Towers. He is the final resort; he is the head man in the bank, and I think that fact was demonstrated not so long ago when an hon. member on this side of the house questioned one of the ministers about contracts in connection with the new bank building to be built on Sparks street. The Minister of Public Works said the matter was not under his control, but that it was totally in the hands of the manager of the Bank of Canada.

In my opinion nothing has been done for the unemployed, and certainly nothing has been done for the taxpayers. True enough, a commission has been appointed, but I need not discuss it at length because the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) did so this afternoon.

May I now make some observations concerning the tax situation in the country? Figures secured from the bureau of statistics show that in March, 1935, the dominion government owed $2,846,110,958; the provinces owed $999,440,241; the municipalities owed $1,469,142,077, making a total grand debt of $5,314,693,276. Then, we had an indirect debt, in addition to that, of $6,786,869,473. Therefore on dominion debt alone we pay an annual interest charge of $127,075,580. On our provincial and municipal debt we pay $130,000,000, making a grand total of annual interest payments which we as citizens of Canada have to pay of $357,075,580. Taking our population at eleven million, it would work out that each citizen of Canada owes $616.98 at the present time, and that each citizen owes an annual interest charge of $32.04.

I know that these charges will not affect the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) or the leader of this group (Mr. Bennett), but I should like to know how it would affect the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Grant) who has a family of fifteen. At that rate he would owe the country $9,254.70. The Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Michaud) with a family of eleven would owe $6,786.78. The leader of the Social Credit group (Mr. Blackmore) would owe $6,786.71. I maintain that this will never be paid, even though we have an increase this year of $200 in our indemnity.

I believe the country is overtaxed, and we will never be able to pay the total amount of our taxation. The sooner we forget about it the better. In 1935 the dominion government failed to balance its budget by $113,986,617; the nine provinces failed to balance their budgets by $63,000,000, and four thousand municipalities failed to balance their budgets by $20,500,000, making a grand total deficit in 1935 of $197,486,617. Under those conditions how are we going to be prosperous; how are we going to get along? It has been stated that one day's work in three is taken to pay taxes.

This afternoon we heard that the Prime Minister of this country quoted Shakespeare. I wish to recall a passage from Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice which deals with the Jew after the trial. When the judge had ordered him to turn over all his property, Shylock said:

> You take my house, when you do take the prop
> That doth sustain my house; you take my life
> When you do take the means whereby I live.

In the present condition of this country that applies to the home owner. You are taking his home by taxing him so hard that he cannot pay the taxes; and I contend you are taking the lives of over a million people in this country when you fail to provide them with work by which they can earn a living.

There is something to which I should like to draw the attention of all parties, especially the government side and the party to which I belong. This is not intended as a post-mortem, but in the 1930 election the Conservatives received 1,909,955 votes, and the Liberals received 1,714,860 votes.

An hon. MEMBER: Too many.

Mr. HYNDMAN: All other parties received 274,180 votes. But look at the picture of the last election. In 1935 the Conservatives received 1,311,392 votes, the Liberals received 1,955,594 votes, and—let the two major parties take especial note of this—all other parties received 1,139,618 votes,—a tremendous increase during the five years between 1930 and 1935. Another fact to which I direct the government's attention is that the communist vote of 5,685 in 1930 had increased to 31,151, in 1935.

I would also point out that at the present time—I care not for the figures of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers), because he is camouflaging the thing—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HYNDMAN: —there are a million people in Canada unemployed. I should like to know how the minister got his record. I know that so far as my country is concerned, all that was done was to write to the township clerk and ask how many were unemployed. In my little township we have none on relief, but there are a good many unemployed. It is not a fair registration. There are men in this country who are too proud to go on relief, yet they are unemployed. It has been estimated that if the destitute people in this country were to join hands the line would reach from here to Winnipeg. I should like to see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) looking out of the window on his way home and confronted with this line of unemployed, and required to shake hands with them all. I do not understand how the government can expect to increase the purchasing power of the people at the present level of wages paid to the working classes in this country. According to the Labour Gazette, August, 1936, employees of construction and trade contractors and sub-contractors, numbering 37,561, received an average wage yearly of $745; employees in cities, towns, villages and municipalities, numbering 49,946, had an average wage of $385; employees of harbour commissions, numbering 1,137 received an average wage of $882. And so on down the list. The weekly cost of a family budget for a family of five, including food, laundry, fuel, light and rent, averaged $16.99, or a total of $883.48 a year. So if we deduct the amount of the average budget from the highest wage there remains a balance of less than nothing; in fact, the wage worker is in the hole to the extent of $1.48.

President Roosevelt gave the proper definition or test of prosperity. These are his words:

> The test of our prosperity is not whether we add more to the abundance of those who have much; it is whether we provide enough for those who have too little.

That certainly covers the question. It may be asked, how is the President of the United States going to alter conditions? He has advocated an expenditure of $5,011,000,000 on a six-year construction plan.

> Feb. 3—President Roosevelt transmitted to the United States Congress to-day a national resources committee report recommending a six-year $5,011,000,000 federal construction program.

While I am dealing with this question I should like to report the opinion of the Duke of Windsor, while Prince of Wales:

> The depression and economic disturbance have been largely caused by maladjustment of distribution. The potential output is far greater than ever before. If all employable labour were employed for a reasonable number of hours per week, the world would have at its disposal a volume of commodities and services which would enable the entire population to live on a higher level of comfort and well-being than has ever been contemplated in the rosiest dreams of the social reformer. Our urgent task is to bring consumption and production into a proper real relationship—not a simple, but a quite possible task.

The Minister of Labour states that he is trying to relieve unemployment, but so far as I can figure out, the only thing that he has done is to appoint a commission to look after it. Not so long ago I was honoured with the privilege of presenting certificates to ten pupils of the graduating class of a continuation school in my county. I never felt so sorry in my life as when I gave those students their certificates. They had those certificates, but what were they going to do? So far as I could see, they had an absolutely blank future ahead of them in this country. We have here a house of commons, but I think the name should be changed to C.C.C.—the chamber of commissions and committees. We have a commission for nearly everything, and the expense is simply preposterous. The cost of the employment commission has been mentioned by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and this afternoon by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church). I will not further refer to it, but I will point out that the appointment, as announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) of a royal commission to investigate the whole taxation system of Canada will increase to five the number of commissions now inquiring into different matters in the dominion. The others are: the commission investigating Canadian penitentiaries, the textile commission, the royal commission investigating the grain business, and the royal commission investigating the extent of illegal lobster and smelt fishing in the maritimes. Commissions! We have nothing but commissions. Now we have this wheat inquiry. An agriculture committee was appointed last year and continued its sittings this session. I attended a few times, but I got sick and tired of listening to discussions about wheat. They talked of nothing but wheat. I went home and looked in the dictionary to see if there were such words as oats, barley, pork, beef, eggs or mutton, and I found there were. Yet this committee talks about wheat and nothing else. Then there was the committee that was appointed to inquire into the prices of farm implements. They have been meeting and paying large fees to their lawyers, but as far as I can see they are getting nowhere. Then we have the wheat inquiry, which was mentioned this afternoon.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time is up.

Mr. A. A. BROWN (Hamilton East): As representative of Hamilton East, possibly one of the largest industrial constituencies in the dominion, I feel it my duty to take part in this debate on the problem of unemployment. Hamilton, which is a city of diversified industries, is extremely sensitive to the fluctuations of the tariff, and these fluctuations invariably affect the employment situation. The industries in Hamilton have a capitalization of some $260,000,000 and employ about 30,000 hands, paying out in wages some $40,000,000. There is no doubt that the present government was elected to power by the Canadian people for the purpose of solving the unemployment problem, which, as various members have shown, is still with us on at least as large a scale as prior to the election of the present government, if not larger. The government has been in power about sixteen months, and apparently all that it has done towards solving this vital problem is to have appointed a commission, which gathered together considerable data; enacted the home improvement legislation, on the strength of which building is going on to some small extent; and negotiated several treaties, or rather, I should say, burdened the country with several treaties which have adversely affected employment in Canada.

It is strange that a government that was elected by such a huge majority for the major purpose of solving the unemployment problem should take pride, not in any efforts made towards its solution, but in the efforts it has made in the direction of international trade, regardless of the effect on employment in Canada. Judging by the remarks made on the government side, they take great pride in the achievement of the Canada-United States trade agreement. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) stated this treaty resulted in a total trade of some $787,000,000 in the year ended January 1, 1936, as compared with $683,000,000 in the year 1935, or an increase of $104,000,000. Excluding commercial gold from the figures for the two years, he states that the trade increase was just over twenty-two per cent; and, calculated on the same basis, exports to the United States were greater by twenty-six per cent, while imports from that country were higher by eighteen per cent.

This does not tell the true story by any means, because the greater proportion of Canada's exports consisted of whisky, nickel and other products, some of which were not affected by the treaty, but which the United States needed because of economic conditions. While our farmers have obtained some immediate benefit from this agreement, past experience shows that this prosperity will be outweighed by corresponding hardships when economic and political changes take place in the United States, as they undoubtedly will. The greater proportion of the United States exports to Canada were manufactured goods, many of which could have been made here, thus absorbing many of our unemployed. Shortly after the treaty was signed, an American concern offered metal-ware for sale in Canada at a price which Canadian firms could not meet. A conservative estimate would show, I believe, that this treaty has put five Americans to work for one Canadian, and has helped in this way to solve the United States unemployment problem instead of Canada's.

The next major achievement of the present government was the alleged Japanese trade settlement. When the former government was in power Japan made certain demands which practically meant throwing open the Canadian market to the cheap-labour goods of that country. There is no question that Japan, with its low scale of wages and its lower standard of living, can undersell Canadian products under ordinary conditions. During the last few years Japan has invaded the Indian field in cotton goods and undersold the products of the factories of India, and it has brought about the closing of many factories in the United States. At the present time, along with these adverse conditions, the Japanese government is subsidizing shipping and the export trade on a scale never before attempted in any country, with the possible exception of Germany; and with the credits obtained from these exports she is importing nickel, aluminum and other commodities which are of vital importance to her. It is quite true that the statistics for the past year do not show the extent of Japanese inroads into the Canadian market, but since the Japanese trade settlement Japanese factories have been circularizing the wholesalers, jobbers and retailers of Canada, offering goods at prices as low as or lower than those at which our industries can obtain the raw material. For example, a firm in Tokyo has offered pruning shears, in any number, at a price at which the manufacturers of Canada could not even purchase the raw material.

There is one store in Hamilton which for four years refused to buy Japanese goods, but last year in order to meet competition they were compelled to buy them. As one walks through the various stores in any city in the dominion he will notice for sale lighters, electric light bulbs, penknives, and socks, at the most ridiculous prices. Last fall a Japanese firm was taking orders in Ontario for screen wire at a price 20 per cent cheaper than that at which other firms were offering the same goods. I was informed not very long ago of a case in Toronto where a knitted suit came from Japan, the quality of which was so good that the store could afford to unravel the suit and make money on the wool material. Judging from the sale of these articles at prices at which they could not be manufactured in Canada, I do not think the most ardent supporter of the government could find much in this treaty to help Canada's unemployment problem.

The next alleged outstanding achievement of the present government is the new Canada-United Kingdom treaty. The first such treaty was ably negotiated by the present leader of the opposition some years ago, and from it Canada derived exceptional benefits, because it guarded Canadian markets and Canadian workmen. The new treaty is substantially the same as the old, with the exception that the negotiators failed to protect Canadian markets and Canadian workmen. I have here an article written by Douglas Hallam, secretary of the Primary Textile Institute, which states:

> Headlines in the press say that in England "textile zones are related," and a press cable says that industrialists at Manchester, Leeds and Bradford find that the textile market in Canada has been substantially enlarged. The textile manufacturers in Great Britain are related because there will be more workers employed there in making textiles for sale in Canada, but the reverse side of this is that fewer Canadian workers will be employed making textiles for the home market than at present.

Twice before in my lifetime I have seen the wool cloth industry in Canada practically wiped out by imports from Great Britain driving down production of Canadian wool cloth to 20 per cent of the market. Last year Canadian mills had 60 per cent of the wool market and the British mills 40 per cent. Now the main wool cloth item has been slashed in the present budget by cutting 18 per cent off the ad valorem duty and 29 per cent off the specific duty. There are some fifty cloth mills in Canada to-day. The British cloth mills shipped in 15,334,000 square yards of wool cloth in 1936 over the old rates, what will they ship in over the new rates? The net profits of the woollen industry in Canada for the last five years were:

1931	1·9 per cent loss
1932	·9 per cent
1933	4·7 per cent
1934	4·7 per cent

Socks and stockings are produced in ninety-four mills in Canada and the production is about 5,500,000 dozen pairs per annum. Imports have run under 100,000 dozen pairs. Now the British preferential rates on socks and stockings, which were 27 per cent and 67 cents a dozen, have been slashed, where they are wholly or in part of wool, to 18 per cent and 27 cents a dozen, and where made from other fibres than wool to 18 per cent without any specific duty. The situation is such that every dozen pair brought in from Great Britain will take away the work of making a dozen pair from a Canadian textile worker. In 1929, when the duties on hosiery from Great Britain were, on the whole, giving more protection than the duties in the present budget, some 550,000 dozen pairs valued at $3,300,000 entered Canada from Great Britain.

Specific duties have been slashed off carpets coming from Great Britain and British India. This opens the door to severe competition by low paid workers in British India with Canadian workers in carpet factories who are paid the highest hourly rates of any textile workers in Canada.

There never was a specific duty on knit goods such as sweaters, jerseys, underwear and so on coming into Canada from Great Britain, but even the old duty rate of 22½ per cent has been slashed to 18 per cent. There are some 131 mills in Canada producing these knit goods, and it is expected their production will be reduced by increased imports. The net profits made by fifty-three of these mills during the last five years are as follows:

1931	1·8 per cent loss
1932	·9 per cent loss
1933	2·3 per cent
1934	2·5 per cent
1935	2·9 per cent

Duties on artificial silk fabrics which were slashed in the 1935 budget are again slashed in the present budget, the new rate being 24¾ per cent; and this in spite of the fact that the British government bonuses exports of artificial silk fabrics to Canada to the extent of about 12 cents per pound. Duty rates on silk fabrics from England were also cut to 20¼ per cent under the British preferential.

While all specific duties on cotton goods from Great Britain were wiped out in the 1935 budget, there are further cuts and concessions to Great Britain in the present budget and two or three tariff concessions to the United States. In 1936 Great Britain shipped into Canada 5,130,000 pounds of cotton yarn and 73,725,000 square yards of cotton cloth. It is apparent that under the new duties imports will increase.

To sum up, it may be said that taken as a whole the textile schedule in the Canadian tariff as set out in the present budget provides even less protection to the textile industry in Canada from their main competitor, Great Britain, than the schedule in the Dunning budget of May, 1930, and that in view of these reductions it will be of great interest to those paying taxes for unemployment relief to follow the employment figures in the textile industry during the next two or three years. It is not generally realized how the textile industry maintained and increased employment in Canada during the depression. The figures of direct employment in the primary textile industry are as follows:

1933	53,753
1934	59,038

This employment is widespread throughout the maritimes, Quebec and Ontario as the majority of the five hundred textile mills in Canada are mainly located in the smaller centres of population. And in conclusion, everybody seems to forget that already more than one-third of Canada's total purchases from Great Britain are textile fibres and their products. In the fiscal year 1936 the textile imports from Great Britain amounted to $40,594,719 out of total imports of $117,874,822.

My object in dwelling on the results of these three treaties, Mr. Speaker, is to show that in its desire for international trade the government has neglected or ignored the question of employment at home. It is quite true that Canada cannot live unto itself, but I believe that in making any treaty with any country the first consideration should be how it will affect employment at home.

During the course of his speech the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) regretted that the government had not been able to do more in solving the unemployment problem. I would suggest that the minister take a leaf out of the book of the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and call together the leaders of industry, inquire as to their needs and, if possible, grant their requirements if they will agree to bring up their staffs to full capacity. If this were done and the further condition imposed that employees should be paid fair living wages, I think we would go a long way towards solving the unemployment problem in this country. This could be placed under the jurisdiction of the tariff board, and in order that the employees might obtain fair treatment, arrangements could be made under which any employee could make application to the board under a pseudonym, and have his complaint dealt with in summary fashion. In this way the government, if it was sincerely anxious to end unemployment, could provide that working men would obtain fair living wages, without any worry as to whether a particular matter was within the jurisdiction of the provincial or the federal government. The leader of the Conservative party gave a great example of that when he raised tariffs after obtaining an agreement from the manufacturers that they would not take advantage of the tariff increases to raise prices.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind the country that it is only a few days since parliament voted millions of dollars for the defence of this country. I suggest that we should be prepared for the trade war, which no doubt will reach its peak within the next year or so, with nations such as Japan and Germany, whose industries are subsidized to such an extent that their goods can be sold in Canada below cost, in order to obtain credits so that they may keep up in the armament race that is going on throughout the world.

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): Mr. Speaker, to one who has occupied a seat in this house for something less than two full sessions, the budget address presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) in the first session of this parliament was very thought-provoking. When one considers the situation which was then brought to the attention of the house in a very lucid manner one realizes that our national position presents problems not only for the older generation in Canada, but for the younger people of the country as well. May I say to you, sir, and to the house that I have had some considerable experience with youth organizations of this province, and I believe it is only necessary that the youth of our country understand the problems with which we are faced to have them assume their full share of the responsibility and discharge their duties resulting therefrom. To-day in Canada youth stands ready to bear its share of the burden; it only needs the leadership of governments and men of more mature years, in order to indicate the trail that it must follow.

May I say also that one cannot sit in this house and listen to the national inventory being given by the Minister of Finance year by year without coming to the inevitable and inescapable conclusion that the best brains and the utmost energy of our people from one end of this country to the other must be applied if the problems with which we are faced are to be solved within a reasonable length of time.

The budget speech this year, Mr. Speaker, continued to paint the national financial and economic picture, and it brought to our attention in a very emphatic manner the exact situation with respect to the affairs of the country. According to the statement of the minister the unmatured funded debt of the country, together with treasury bills outstanding, amounted to about three and a half billion dollars. I wonder if we fully realize what that means. I wonder if we realize that if we are to continue to fulfil our sacred obligation to pay the debts that some time, somewhere, and by some means, that debt must be discharged by the people of this land. That is a thing which I sometimes believe is not brought before the people forcefully or clearly enough. According to the statement of the minister it will take at least two years for us to reach the point where, in our national bookkeeping system, we actually will have as much income as we are spending year by year.

Taking that as a basis, Mr. Speaker, perhaps it is not unreasonable to assume that even in times of fairly reasonable prosperity in this land, governments may regard as satisfactory a surplus of $50,000,000 a year in the national budget. Beginning with the year 1940, it will take seventy years with annual surpluses of $50,000,000 to wipe out the national debt which has been incurred. It will be said that the interest will be reduced in the meantime and that the acceleration in reduction of principal will be more rapid, but I believe that any decrease in the interest payments brought about by the progressive decrease in our national debt will be more than offset by other contingencies which will inevitably arise during such a long period in the nation's life. Even at the end of that seventy years we would still have the liabilities with respect to our guarantees to railway companies and otherwise. I do not make any pretense at prediction; I only draw this to the attention of the house to show in a clear way the actual financial position of this dominion. The magnitude of the task is one of which I believe we all, especially the newer generation, should be fully seized. We should be prepared to do our share in wiping out within a reasonable time the deficit which this country has incurred in the years gone by and still continues to pile up.

I do not think any hon. member of this house can suggest that since I have taken my seat as the representative for the county of Peel I have attempted to indulge in careless, useless or obstructive criticism of governmental action. My personal views on matters of that kind will not permit me to indulge in that sort of thing. While it is necessary to be stern and severe sometimes in one's criticism in order to salvage for the erection of a new structure, at the same time I think we should realize that all through the dominion, especially among the younger generation, there is a feeling that this business of obstructive criticism must cease if democracy is to survive in this country of ours.

I should like to make just one minor observation with regard to this. It was my misfortune, or perhaps my good fortune, not to be a member of the last parliament, but after reading the pages of Hansard it seems to me to be fairly clear that some of those who now sit in the seats of the mighty—I congratulate them upon their success—did not follow too religiously the policy I have laid down as being the one desirable to follow in circumstances of this kind. Perhaps it is not too much to expect that the sobering effect of office and of being on the treasury benches will be such that we shall never have a repetition of that sort of thing in any parliament of Canada. Perhaps the results of the 1935 election may be taken in some way as an endorsation of that type of conduct in public life. However, I am not convinced that the people of Canada as a whole desire that our parliamentary institutions should be carried on in that fashion.

I desire to go a step further and refer to the riding which I have the honour of representing in this house. As most hon. members know, the county of Peel is predominantly agricultural, but with a substantial industrial development in Brampton, Port Credit and elsewhere. Therefore the new agreement entered into between the Dominion of Canada and the United Kingdom has a special significance and interest for the people of this constituency. Perhaps I might be pardoned for taking great pride in the work of the last administration in opening up markets for and expanding the trade of the agricultural people of Canada. I believe the farmers of Ontario, and of the Dominion of Canada, thoroughly appreciate the work done by the last administration in providing a market for their agricultural products in the United Kingdom. Even though the results of the last election might indicate otherwise, I believe this is true. When Mr. Rhodes, the Minister of Finance in the previous administration, brought down his budget on March 22, 1935, he stated that the export trade from Canada to the United Kingdom had increased by 52 per cent since 1932. As every one recognized, that increase was attributable to the agreements entered into by our party. I shall be brief, but the particulars of these matters are so important as to warrant repetition. The Canada Year Book shows clearly that in 1935 agricultural and vegetable products to a total value of $127,500,000 were exported to the United Kingdom. This was an increase over the exportations for 1932, before the agreements were entered into, of $29,000,000. This was the increase in the amount which went into the pockets of the agricultural population of this Canada of ours. The year book goes on further with the story. In 1935 the exports from Canada to the United Kingdom of animals and animal products totalled $54,500,000, an advance of $22,000,000 over the 1932 figures.

I am sorry the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) is not in his seat this evening. He has been called away on urgent national business, but I want to congratulate him upon having retained for the farmers of this country the sheltered markets which the Conservative party originally got for them. I was always puzzled by the attitude which he and his party took during the last term of parliament. I could not understand why one with the wisdom of the Prime Minister, and I say that advisedly, could oppose in any way agreements which meant so much to the farmers of the Dominion of Canada. Yet he did. I congratulate him now, however, upon having done nothing to interfere with the great work started by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), who sits in the house this evening. Great men can change their minds and I congratulate the Prime Minister for having changed his when he realized his error. He is a greater man for having done so.

I should like to say a word or two with respect to farmers' export markets. I think the suggestion I have to make in this regard may be of much importance to the government in power. It is one thing to obtain markets for our farmers but it is another thing for the farmers to be able to retain the advantages they have been so given. I suggest that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), who has shown an interest in the farmers, see to it that no stone is left unturned to provide from time to time those facilities, that encouragement and the necessary technical assistance which will enable them to maintain that position in world markets which has been obtained for them.

I trust they may be able to hold that position and steadily improve and utilize it, as do the farmers of New Zealand and Denmark, who hold such a high place in world markets to-day.

Leadership in matters of this kind cannot always come from individual farmers, but reasonable leadership should come from the dominion government. They should make sure that we take up our quotas in the various importing countries so that the farmer may reap for decades to come some real benefit from the agreements.

In the county of Peel we realize the importance of what I have been saying with respect to the encouragement of farmers to make the best of their position in outside markets. Possibly no place in the whole of Canada has a higher quality or a higher testing whole milk trade then the county of Peel, which supplies a large proportion of the whole milk consumed in the large metropolitan area of Toronto. The producers in my constituency have found that to maintain the whole milk market against all competitors in this large metropolitan area they must have clean and sanitary stables, and must follow various other regulations. Quality counts in the sale of agricultural as well as other products.

While we talk about the opening of our markets for our farm products, let us not disregard that greatest, safest and most convenient market which the farmer can have, the home market in Canada. I was surprised, as I am sure most hon. members must have been, to read the statistics showing the great percentage of our agricultural products actually consumed by our own people. I shall not attempt to give the list on an occasion of this kind, but on a great range of agricultural products not more than three per cent of the entire Canadian production is exported, the remainder being consumed at home. In the light of these figures it would seem that the purchasing power of Canada's urban districts is a most important thing for the farmer and must always be a major factor in farm success. Rural people realize more and more the great value of the working man and his family in the suburban and urban centres having a full pay envelope to make purchases of the products of the farmers of Canada. That is a most important factor.

And so I say to the house that while there has been a confusion of figures with respect to our progress so far as the relief of unemployment is concerned, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) having given certain sets of figures and other hon. members other sets, yet through all the maze of differentiation in actual figures it must fairly be conceded that no real or appreciable progress has been made in the relief of this gigantic cancer which is eating into the vitals of our country's constitution. May I say, too, that it is rather a pity and a shame, because last year as I looked into the countenance of the Minister of Labour I could read there high hopes for the success of the great National Employment Commission. I myself was willing to give that commission a trial. But, Mr. Speaker, may I say to you that if a ten per cent betterment is all the commission has accomplished after a year's operations, then we ought to do away with it or get a new one to take its place or, better still, let the Minister of Labour do a real job himself.

There is nothing quite so revolting to me, Mr. Speaker, as to hear great sections of our community, from one end of the country to the other, shouting that we have prosperity back again. No person wants more than I do to see prosperity, but I do say that it is not proper to shout prosperity until almost half a million people in Canada are in a position to sustain themselves by gainful employment. That is the real test of prosperity.

Then there are by the scores of thousands, many of them good friends of mine in my own constituency, who are drawing wages that are less by a long way than the wages considered essential for their reasonable livelihood. So I say that the farmer's best insurance policy for the maintenance of good markets for his products is that the industrial workers of our great cities and towns in the dominion shall have full pay envelopes, so that they may purchase the products of our farms as they require them.

In the town of Brampton, from which I hail, and of which perhaps hon. members may have heard before in the house, there is an uneasiness felt with respect to the provisions of the United Kingdom agreement which lower the tariff on certain goods, and especially is there uneasiness felt with respect to the textile trade. I do not want severely to castigate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) with respect to this, but wish only to say that we have none of the large textile factories in our county. I believe we have none of those against which the minister may have directed his action in lowering duties. However, we have several small factories which are dependent upon a reasonable tariff shelter so that they can market their products at home. I will place on Hansard an illustration of what I mean. I have in mind the manufacture of woollen socks. Formerly there was a 30 per cent duty on socks, and a further duty of 75 cents per dozen pairs coming into this country from the United Kingdom. Now the rate is reduced to 20 per cent ad valorem and 30 cents per dozen pairs. In the n.o.p. item the original tariff rate was 30 per cent ad valorem, plus a specific duty of 75 cents, and the present reduced rates stand at 20 per cent with the specific duty entirely removed. One of the manufacturers has told me that the profit is very often not as much as the actual sheltering margin included in the specific duty.

In the Brampton Knitting Mills there are about 70 employees. Not long ago the mill owner told me it was expected that with the increase of business he would soon have about 30 more employees to hire. It is now problematical if this will be done. In view of the changes in the items under the agreement I can only hope that, in the light of the competition of the British spinner with his greater production, his greater manufacturing facilities and his lower wage scale, the harm done to our textile firms will be less severe than we anticipate. I am hopeful of this because I am anxious that the labouring class in my constituency shall not find themselves severely dealt with by virtue of any change in tariff arrangements.

We heard some most interesting observations in the presentation of the budget with respect to the inroads being made by vegetable oils coming into Canada, and their effect in competition with the butter fat trade. Perhaps I may be pardoned for saying that the county of Peel is a heavy producer of butter fat. I am sorry the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Davidson) is not in his seat, because as one of the most prominent Jersey breeders in the dominion, he would be able to vouch for the truth of my statement that there is owned and stabled in the county of Peel the famous cow known as Brampton Basilua, the champion butter-fat producing cow in the entire world for all breeds of cattle. I had the honour and privilege—

Mr. STREIGHT: You have the bull there.

Mr. GRAYDON: We may have a little bull sometimes in Peel, but we have nothing like the bull that is in York West. Turning to the serious side again I was saying that I had the privilege and honour of attending some three or four weeks ago a banquet at the Royal York hotel when three members of the firm of B. H. Bull and Sons, the continent's largest Jersey herdsmen, whose farms are in my county, were banqueted by the Jersey Cattle Breeders' Association of Canada; and I had the unique experience, in common with many others of the five or six hundred people who were there, of seeing Brampton Basilua climbing into an elevator in the Royal York hotel, coming through the spacious carpeted halls, and taking her position as a lady should, right at the head of the table in that great banquet hall in the largest hotel in the city. May I say further that I paid special attention to the lady, as I always do to ladies—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAYDON: I am glad that I am not alone in the house in that respect—and I noticed that not once did she in front of her admirers raise her powder puff to her nose or put any rouge on her lips. In view of the interest taken by our people in the county of Peel in butter fat production, I may perhaps be pardoned for having taken up some time in discussing the matter, and suggesting that the government follow the lead of the great republic to the south and guard the butter fat producers of Canada in the same manner as the American government is taking measures to protect the industry in that country.

I have tried to appreciate the manifold problems which face the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) in attempting to balance his budget and make an efficient job of financing this country, but I would urge that, with the picture he has painted of improved revenues and returning prosperity, which to a large extent is probably a reflection of world conditions, the one cent tax on sugar which has been in force since 1933 should be removed once and for all. I realize that in 1933, due to the emergency created by world conditions, the government of the time, finding that it was almost impossible to raise enough money through the ordinary channels, resorted to an emergency tax of two cents per pound on sugar. The other day I was looking through Hansard and, noticing the remarks made with respect to that tax by many hon. members who now sit on the government side of the house, I felt sure they could not but agree with me in the statement that, while this tax was reduced in 1934 to one cent per pound, it is now time that the housewives of this country should receive from the government a really practical piece of encouragement and that this particular burden should be removed from shoulders which under present conditions are sometimes least able to bear it.

One of the major influences which prompted me to enter public life—whether the decision was fortunate or unfortunate for myself or for my constituents I am not prepared to say—was the social legislation which was promoted and brought to the house by the Prime Minister of the day. I do not think that this house should be allowed to forget the situation which existed at that time. I desire to make this personal statement, that I was "sold on the idea," if I may use common parlance, that something should be done with respect to reforming our capitalistic system. I had hoped after coming to the house that the unemployment insurance legislation, the eight-hour day law and the minimum wage legislation would have been upheld by the courts of our land, but the reverse has unfortunately been the case. As I have already urged upon the Minister of Labour upon another occasion this session, I again urge in all seriousness that the working people of this country are anxious that something should be done along the lines of that legislation and that steps should be taken speedily to see to it that the provinces in cooperation with the dominion become a unit in this matter, so that we may have uniform social legislation covering these important reforms from one end of Canada to the other. I appeal to the government to take this into serious consideration, as one of the most important issues before the country. I also suggest that they should press forward in the long and hard fight which is ahead to rid this country of unemployment, and that they should bend every effort to an early amendment of the British North America Act. It may be because I am inexperienced in public life, but I have never been able to see why a man-made piece of legislation should be allowed to stand in the way of and offer almost insuperable difficulties to the solution of some of the most pressing problems which this country is called upon to face. If the government will see to it that these suggestions are acted upon, we may yet be able to usher in a new day for the workingman and his family, and consequent upon that a new era of happiness and prosperity for that other great primary producer, the Canadian farmer.

For the reasons I have given, and others, it is my intention to support the amendment which has been moved by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. R. J. DEACHMAN (Huron North): Permit me, Mr. Speaker, a few words on the amendment, leaving the main motion for some time in the happy future. Occasionally I read detective stories and usually enjoy them amazingly; I find them an immense relief after listening to the protectionist speeches of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) and the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thompson). I have noticed that quite frequently in these stories a man returns to the scene of his crime, and I think that perhaps, psychologically speaking—if I may borrow a term which hitherto has been a favourite expression of our friends of the Social Credit party—the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) in his address did exactly the same thing. Unemployment gave him his greatest victory, unemployment led to his defeat, and I think it must have been for him a supreme pleasure that he was able to return to this house and review the army of the unemployed which he and his party did so much to create.

I wish to congratulate the right hon. gentleman for another reason. He had an opportunity this year of visiting different countries in the empire, and—most amazingly—he returned to this house and delivered a speech which lasted for three hours and never once mentioned the balance of trade. Perhaps if he went around the world again, but in the opposite direction, he might become a free trader when he returned and we might welcome him into the Liberal party as a brand snatched from the burning. But there is something tragic in Toryism. No matter how much it tries to escape, it is always between the pit and the pendulum; it is always afraid to move forward for fear it will slip, and afraid to move back because of the ghosts of the past.

The leader of the opposition used these words:

> I can see no method by which we can maintain the integrity of Canada if we neglect to realize that export trade is challenged or will be challenged more in the next few years than ever before, because we shall have to meet an ever-increasing competition of wages and standards of living which do not prevail, and I trust never will prevail, in this country.

Well, we have always had competition; competition has been the life of trade, and Canada's competition has never come from countries of low wages, but from countries of high wages. Our greatest imports of manufactured goods do not come from Japan nor from Italy nor Belgium but from Great Britain, the country of highest wages on the continent of Europe, for many years a free trade country; our imports of manufactured goods from the United States are very large and the United States is one of the high wage countries of the world. If we turn to the countries of low wages what do we find? In the calendar year 1936 we imported from Belgium, a low wage country, goods to the value of $6,000,000—I am leaving out the odd thousand—and we sold to Belgium goods to the value of $23,000,000. Apparently the high wages paid in Canada did not prevent us exporting to Belgium. At the same time we sold to Italy, a country of low wages, $4,000,000 and imported from Italy, $1,000,000. And what about Japan, a country about which there has been so much controversy of late? We imported $4,000,000 of goods from Japan and exported $19,000,000 worth. With Japan's low wages, they gave us almost $5 of a market for every dollar that we gave them. And trade is improving because in 1932, when my right hon. friend was in the heyday of power, our exports to these three countries were $30,000,000 whereas they are now $47,000,000, an evidence of the fact that we are capable of selling to low wage countries because of our superior efficiency and because in some cases we produce different things. We are, therefore, able to sell in low wage countries just as well as we can in countries paying high wages.

But this is not a new doctrine from my right hon. friend, for I find him saying the same thing in 1934. Speaking in the house on January 30, 1934, he said:

> Along with other countries, Canada has become a great industrial country. All countries are endeavouring to utilize their raw materials and develop them into finished products. Where a market existed thirty years ago, there is none to-day;—

He was still a pessimist in 1934.

> —where one existed ten years ago, there is none to-day. We are endeavouring to supply our own wants and other countries are doing the same.

Now what was the situation in 1934? My hon. friend said that where a market existed thirty years ago—that is to say in 1904—there was no market at the time he spoke; yet in 1904 Canada exported $211,000,000 and in 1934 we were exporting $480,000,000. At the bottom of the depression our market was more than twice as great, despite his statement that there was no market at that time. But I ask this question: What would he have said if we could have told him then that just three years from that date the export trade of Canada would be double what it was in 1934? And we are still going forward, and the prospect now is that we shall pass the high mark of the last boom within the next few years. Courage, brother; forward! There are great things ahead for Canada. It is not the time for pessimism; it is the time for hope.

But to return to unemployment. I give to my right hon. friend, as I think everyone does, full credit for his efforts to cure unemployment. But with his policies he could not have cured it if he had had the power to pull the stars from their courses. He promised at that time to cure unemployment and I am very glad that he lived to move in this House of Commons a resolution in which he asked others to cure it. He promised to perish in the attempt if he did not cure it.

Mr. BENNETT: And he did.

Mr. DEACHMAN: As he made his speech the other day I could not help realizing that though he had failed to carry out that promise it was no ghost that spoke to us on that occasion. He did not perish unless a return to this house, surrounded by a rather diminished band of sometimes mute and somewhat inglorious Miltons, constitutes the act of perishing. But I could not find fault with the man who, having tried honestly and failed in strenuous times, admitted his failure. My right hon. friend has admitted that he failed and I am glad of that. I am glad, too, that the Minister of Labour the other night admitted that he had not succeeded as well as he would like to have succeeded; for the simple fact is that when a man confronts the difficulties of a problem and sees what it involves and admits them, then we have more hope for him in the future and there is more prospect of his succeeding in accomplishing his task. It is after all only natural that we have dreams of being able to do things that are difficult of achievement, and sometimes we do not succeed.

> I wonder if ever a song was sung
> But the singer's heart sang sweeter;
> I wonder if ever a rhyme was rung
> But the thought surpassed the metre;
> I wonder if ever a sculptor wrought
> Till the cold stone echoed his inmost thought;
> Or if ever a painter with light and shade
> The dream of his inmost soul portrayed.

But the question is not who is to blame for unemployment; the question is, What is the remedy for unemployment? The employment commission has its functions and it has succeeded in doing some good work. But after all it is a mopping up operation. Its task is not exactly a searching examination of the problem of unemployment; it is not one of getting down to the bottom and effecting a cure, but rather of trying to remove the debris in an effort to save something from the wreck and put the unemployed to work. If we are to get at the source of the trouble we must find out the cause, and our approach must be a fundamental one. And what is the cause? I submit that there is one cause and a primary cause, and that is the condition of agriculture as we find it in Canada to-day. And what is the cause of that? Well, it rests largely on this—that beginning with the depression, and for some years prior thereto, the price of manufactured products was high while the price of farm products was relatively low. There was a spread between these two, and that spread rendered it practically impossible for the farmer to attain a decent standard of living and become a factor in the buying power of the nation. In the year which has just closed, according to the records of the bureau of statistics, 46 per cent of the people of Canada were rural, including some in the rural villages. But with a total national income of over $4,500,000,000 in Canada the revenue of the farmer was $747,000,000. In other words, 46 per cent of the population received one-fifth of the revenue. Is it not well that we should try to get at the bottom of that situation? Our great basic industry cannot live when it employs about 46 per cent of the population and gets one-fifth of the revenue, while 54 per cent of the population get four-fifths of the revenue. There is a fundamental problem, and a problem that the House of Commons ought to face, and face seriously, if it is going to be solved.

Now the result has been that the people have deserted the farms of Ontario. In my own county of Huron between 1901 and 1931 there has been a decline in the agricultural population of 13,000 and in the urban population a decline of 3,000. There is a county certainly among the best in the province of Ontario, yet such is the situation that the men are deserting the farms and moving to the cities. Are your cities prosperous? Look at the relief rolls and see if they are. They are not, and the reason they are not prosperous is the shortage of purchasing power in the country and in the hands of the workers. After all, you must face this fact, that in the cities the cost of production is high, rents are high, land values are high, cost of construction is high, overhead is high, wages are nominally high. If these people were back in the small towns their nominal wage might be lower but their real wage would be higher. I ask the house to consider some attempt to equalize conditions between the towns and the cities, so that we may begin to get rid of unemployment by developing the industry of the towns, and drawing to a certain extent from the surplus which exists in the cities. To my hon. friends who are members for city constituencies I say that it would not necessarily follow that this would result in injury to the cities; far from it. Under the present conditions their burden of taxation is excessively high because of the relief problem, but if the industries moved back to the towns, where costs of production are lower, the result would be to lower the cost of goods; therefore goods could be sold at lower prices to consumers, the market would expand instead of contracting as is taking place under present conditions. I trust that some of my friends here have read—I know some of them must have done so—of the very capable work done by the Brookings Institution of Washington some two or three years ago. With ample funds at their disposal and ample time they analyzed the whole situation as far as the economic life of America is concerned. They studied every form of change in the industrial system which might possibly be considered and then published their work in four volumes. The essence of the story is that the cause of the present unemployment was the failure of prices to fall following the introduction of technical and mechanical improvements in the means of production. That is, prices still remained high. I shall give one illustration; you could apply it to anything you liked. In the old days at home there was a man making shoes in a little village near where I was born. That man is now keeping a shoe store in an adjacent town. Many a time when I was a boy I watched him making shoes, and talking to that man last summer I asked him: How is it that after all the changes which have taken place, with all the fine machinery with which the shoe factories are equipped to-day, with all the improved methods of distribution, when I come to buy a pair of shoes from you to-day they cost more than they did in my boyhood when a man working at the bench made them? If industry is not capable of lowering the price of commodities, then industry has failed in its task. If we can do our work just as efficiently and cheaply by hand labour we might as well go back to hand labour. It is along these lines that the remedy will be found for the problem which confronts us. And while I may laugh at the efforts of the Conservatives to solve this problem, as occasionally I do, because it was somewhat amusing to see them fail after their gorgeous promises, in serious reality we have to try to solve the problem by moving along the lines I have suggested or along some other lines.

I have placed this matter before the house dogmatically, perhaps didactically, because that is the shortest and easiest form of presentation. Do not accept my word for it, but I plead with hon. members; there are these problems which must be solved, and if in the House of Commons we face them instead of trying to scrap with one another there is hope that we may achieve some progress.

I am sorry that the Minister of Finance is not in his seat to-night. But here is one thing that I wish to put before the house; we have heard, and I think all hon. members on both sides of the house are agreed that a policy of easy money is an acceptable policy at the present time. But I point out a difficulty that confronts us when we accept the policy of easy money. When money is cheap the tendency is towards more rapid mechanization, because it makes the investment of money in improvements and machinery and equipment cheaper. That is obvious to any man who has had anything to do with industry. In fact, in our larger business organizations they consider carefully the cost of capital, and, dependent upon the cost of money, they determine whether they will advance still further in mechanical improvements which will reduce labour costs but increase capital and carrying charges. If interest rates are low and we intensify the speed of mechanization, and if at the same time our tariffs and other obstructions in the way of exchange of commodities are continued, what follows? We throw men out of employment, but the cost of commodities does not fall, so the difficulty is intensified by the very remedy which is adopted. These problems should receive the very careful consideration of the house. I wish the Minister of Labour all speed in his task, for the problem before him is the gravest and most profound that we face in Canada to-day, but I believe that the genius of men who have learned how to whisper around the world and turn a music box into an instrument of art which breathes forth the sweetest sounds, will not fail to find a solution of this problem. If we work with a will and with the penetrating power of thought nothing can stop us.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I have often listened to the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) and talked to him on one or two occasions, and I came to the conclusion that he was quite impossible, that he would never change. But now I am convinced that if he carries on with the intellectual honesty that he has shown to-night he will soon find it very difficult to sit in the ranks of the Liberal party.

Mr. DEACHMAN: It is the only hope.

Mr. MacINNIS: I can understand his bitterness, being an exponent of free trade and having to support a party of high tariffs. However, while there is life there is hope.

Last Thursday we listened to a very excellent survey of the financial position of the government of Canada. I am sure that all hon. members will agree that it was a pleasure to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) give his budget speech. It was a piece of work well done, and it is always a pleasure either to look at or listen to something well done. Then on Tuesday last we listened to the criticism of the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). As one who was in the house during the last parliament and who heard the criticisms offered by the then opposition, it seemed to me that the criticism of the present leader of the opposition was quite justified. In my opinion his speech also was very excellent, and his criticism worthy and deserved.

The government was criticized for many things, but mainly for its failure to deal with the pressing problem of unemployment. During the time I have sat in this house I have listened to quite a number of speeches from both sides as to who was responsible for the depression. Now the arguments continue as to who is responsible for our so-called prosperity, such as it is. I think the exercise of a small amount of intellectual honesty would be in order in our debates. I have said more than once in this house that neither the Liberal party when it was in office nor the Conservative party when it held office was responsible for the economic conditions that prevailed in this country, in common with nearly all other countries; in fact, I can say in common with all other countries. If our policies improved conditions here, and conditions in other countries also improved, then to be logical we could say that our policies must have been responsible for the improvement that took place elsewhere.

The depression that overtook the world in the fall of 1929 began, as far as Canada was concerned, when the Liberal party was in office. It continued, increasing in severity, during about half the time the Conservative party was in power. Gradual improvement began in the spring of 1933, and that improvement has continued up to the present time. It seems to me, from examining the charts of the progress made in any one of the years since 1933 that it has been almost identical with the progress made in any other of those years. The progress from 1933 to 1934, from 1934 to 1935, or from 1935 to 1936 was just as great as the progress from 1936 to 1937. So what nonsense it is to say that this policy or that was responsible for such progress as there has been.

The gradual improvement, as I have said already, began in the spring of 1933 and has continued until the present time. It may continue for some time yet. That time may be long or short, but as surely as we had the last depression we will have another one unless steps are taken very quickly to change the present anti-social character of our production and distribution. The hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) put his finger on the weak point in our social structure, the difference between agricultural incomes and incomes in the cities. There is no mystery about it. The farmer is unprotected; that is, he is selling in a world market, and he is unorganized. When the price of the commodity he is selling goes down, does he restrict his production? No, he increases it, and still further lowers the price of his commodity. When the market begins to decline in the industrial world the manufacturer restricts his production and keeps up the price of his commodity. The farmer will continue to be in that defenceless position until he has the sense to organize in order to protect himself. Booms and depressions are the inevitable consequence of capitalist production. We are either slowly getting out of a depression or quickly sliding into one; that has been the situation ever since the beginning of the capitalist system, and the time between the period of depression and the period of prosperity is continually becoming shorter.

Now let us see how the depression began to be broken up, or how prosperity began to return. I said that the movement started in the spring of 1933. The first break in the depression, as far as the North American continent was concerned, began with President Roosevelt's first term of office, in the spring of 1933, when he began to pour huge amounts of government credit into various works and projects. Almost every country followed suit, in varying degrees. If you will look at the graphs and charts showing Canada's emergence from the depression, you will see that it, too, began at that time. A phenomenon common to all depressions is that in a period of stagnation stores of supplies become consumed, and again a demand for goods is created. This is occurring at the present time, but the recovery in trade to-day is due largely to government credit and to the increasing expenditure for armaments. That without the slightest doubt accounts for a great deal of Canada's foreign trade. It does not require a great deal of understanding of economics to be able to perceive this fact, but in case some hon. members do not want to take my word for it I should like to quote an authority who I think is beyond question. Sir George Paish, speaking I believe, to the New York section of the American Manufacturers' Association or the American Chamber of Commerce, I am not sure which, as reported in the New York Times of February 7, made this statement:

> "The creation of huge amounts of government credits by many nations since 1931 has prevented a complete breakdown of credit and the banking system and led to a general recovery in trade," he said. "The improved trade was due, however, in no small measure to increased expenditure for armaments."

That is a very poor basis on which to build enduring prosperity, and I am afraid it will not be enduring.

There are many points in the budget speech with which I should like to deal, but as unemployment is still the most pressing problem facing this country, and as the amendment deals specifically with unemployment, I shall confine myself largely to that subject. I have already said that unemployment is the most pressing problem facing the people of Canada, but to say that unemployment is the problem is not putting the matter quite correctly. What concerns us, or what should concern us, is the effect of unemployment, calculated in terms of human values. We have not got down to that yet. The previous government undoubtedly was elected on its promise to end unemployment. It failed to do so. It failed to deal effectively with the problem created by unemployment, and for this it was severely criticized by members of the party now in power. I have said before, and I wish to say again, that this government should be in a better position to deal with unemployment than the last government was because it has the experience of the last government, as well as that of every other government in the world to draw upon, and surely it should be able to make use of that experience. I think it is correct to say that the failure of the Conservative government to deal with this matter is why the present government is in office to-day.

During the last few years we have heard a great deal about promises, but I would point out that this government has also made promises. I have in my hand a report which appeared in the Vancouver Sun of an address made in Vancouver by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) on August 29, 1935. Ten points of Liberal policy are enunciated in this report, number six of which reads:

> The immediate abolition of the relief camps, and handling of the unemployment problem on a national basis, utilizing in adequately paid work of social value to the nation, those now unemployed.

I maintain that the government has not kept that promise. I have before me a copy of the agreement entered into between the government of British Columbia and the government of the Dominion of Canada, under the terms of the Unemployment Relief and Assistance Act. I am not going to read all of this agreement, but I should like to quote subsection B of section 1 which refers to the wages to be paid to men placed on farms. The agreement reads:

> The total of all amounts paid by the province to all individuals placed and maintained in employment on farms as aforesaid, who at the time of placement are over sixteen years of age, unemployed and without means of support, not in excess of a rate equal, at the end of the aforesaid period to $7.50 per individual.

I understand that these men would be entitled to this $7.50 only if they stayed a full six months. Then they are allowed the magnificent sum of $3 with which to buy winter clothing. How much clothing can a man buy for farm wear in the winter time for $3? How would any hon. member here like to go out and work on a farm in weather such as we have in British Columbia—I admit it is not as cold as in some of the other provinces—in an outfit that could be bought for $3? I am told that sufficient clothing for this sort of work would cost at least $22. This is not putting the unemployed to work at adequate wages.

Speaking the other evening, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) referred to the unemployment camps as being blind alleys. Surely if those camps could be referred to in such terms, this sort of employment is equally blind alley employment. Not only that, but the farmer is to be paid nearly the same amount for keeping the man on the farm. This is not what was promised to the unemployed before the election of 1935. I have in my hand a page from the Vancouver Province of August 1, 1935, containing a report of an address by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie). What did he promise the unemployed? The report reads:

> Mr. Mackenzie made a frank announcement of his own and his party's intentions if they were placed in power.

There are various things the minister promised the unemployed. The first item he mentioned was the early construction of the First Narrows bridge and the completion of the Canadian National hotel. I suppose the unemployed were to occupy that hotel when completed. He promised the completion of the Pacific Great Eastern railway to the Peace River or the construction of a highway to that district. He promised the creation of a national park at Garibaldi mountain and the building of the necessary highways. He promised the abolition of the relief camps and the establishment of construction camps to employ men at forty cents per hour for a five day week. He then went on to give his views on finance, which I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) might find interesting, if not useful. The report continues:

> Referring to the relief problem, Mr. Mackenzie recommended the establishment of construction camps where men would be given work at $2 a day for a five day week. Under this system, relief costs, including supervision of work and tools, would be increased by $7,500,000 annually and workers would receive a monthly return, after board and other fees had been deducted, of $30.25.

His statements were cheered lustily by the gathering, but I imagine that all they have up to date is a memory of those cheers. In 1935 the unemployed were not promised farm work at twenty-five cents per day in British Columbia or on the prairies, plus fifty cents per month for winter clothing; they were promised at least $30 per month after board and other charges had been deducted. I remember the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie) moving a vote of want of confidence in the last government in the 1935 session for not having dealt with the question of unemployment. The unemployment situation may be slightly improved now, but the figures in the January issue of the Labour Gazette show higher figures for unemployment and relief in November, 1936, than for November, 1935 or 1934.

The living conditions of large numbers of employed and unemployed are deplorable. In the Montreal Daily Star of March 2 appears a report of a study made of social conditions in that city by various welfare associations. This report is a damning indictment of social conditions in this country. I should like to read briefly from it:

> Unemployment has ravaged the health and shattered the social standards of thousands in Montreal during the past few years, it is shown in a survey completed by the Family Welfare Association yesterday. A study made of all the families helped by the association in January indicates the following:
> In every 100 families of unemployed there are:
> Thirty cases of more or less permanently disabling illness;
> Seven families where lack of clothing prevents the children from going to school;
> Nine where overcrowding is serious enough to cause immorality or serious family difficulty;
> Twenty-three showing completely lost or badly impaired moral standards;
> Fourteen where the children are running wild;

They tell us that socialism would break up the home. The report continues:

> Nineteen cases of malnutrition reported by medical authorities. Surveys made by the Catholic Welfare Bureau and the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies at the same time show similar conditions found by these organizations.

Then the report continues:

> Unemployment relief is supposed to cover rent, fuel, food, clothing, light and medical care. But the social workers have found that many of the families have practically nothing left in their homes that is usable. During the years on relief the families in many cases have completely worn out all their bedding, their furniture and their cooking utensils.

And we are looking for foreign markets! I think we could get a "foreign" market in Montreal.

Another incident reported recently: showed how life on the relief rolls has caused people to change their ways of thinking. The families of a young girl and of a young man had both been on relief for the past five years. The boy twenty-one and the girl twenty hardly knew of another way of living. Since they were in love they decided to get married. Now on the relief rolls there will appear one more husband and wife and two less dependent children. Social workers report that in many families men have given up looking for work and have obviously lost all confidence in themselves and in their ability to work. The development of neurosis appears often. It is found in many cases that even the younger members of a family have lost the ambition to get a steady job and to hold it.

I can truly say that unemployment and its effects are the great problem facing the people of Canada. That problem has not been solved, and it has not even been attacked in the proper way. Again:

In 66 of the 591 unemployed families studied by the association the strain of worry has precipitated situations that in January were threatening to cause the break-up of the home. In 51 others the father actually deserted, leaving his wife and children ineligible for relief. In the one month there were 84 cases of juvenile delinquency, where the children were either involved with the juvenile court or were suffering from deterioration of character and habits which presented serious immediate problems.

Although during January the Family Welfare Association assisted 1,169 families, of these unemployment was a major problem in 591.

Now we will see how unemployment affected these 591:

Among the 591 families the following figures were reported: In 524 the head of the family was unemployed; 201 other adults were unemployed; there were 178 cases of serious and more or less permanent illness—

178 cases out of 591—

—in 40 cases children could not attend school on account of lack of clothing; 47 families were suffering from bad housing conditions; 59 families were seriously overcrowded; 139 families showed a loss of standards; 115 cases of malnutrition had been bad enough to be reported by the medical authorities; 29 cases of mental disease had been reported by the medical authorities.

These conditions prevailed also in the cases reported by the Catholic Welfare Bureau and also by the Jewish Federation. The French-speaking Canadian Federation reported that 3,000 children had dropped out of Catholic schools in the city since the month of September, because they had not enough clothing to attend the classes.

Can anyone tell me that we are dealing with the problem of unemployment? We have not even begun to study it as yet. While I have been reading about conditions in the city of Montreal, I believe we can assume that conditions in that city are not materially different from those existing in any other part of the dominion. Some provinces and municipalities undoubtedly have better relief allowances, and no doubt some have even less adequate provision. But it is not only the unemployed who find themselves in poor circumstances. Many of the employed are receiving less pay than if they were on relief. That is not only my statement, because I can substantiate it by referring to no less an authority than Mr. Arthur B. Purvis, president and managing director of Canadian Industries Limited, and now head of the National Employment Commission of Canada. Speaking to the Canadian Club in Montreal on January 12 he is reported in the Montreal Daily Herald as follows:

The unskilled and semi-skilled worker, representing some 50 per cent of those on relief, can, under prevailing wage rates frequently do better financially on relief than if he is at work.

This startling statement was incorporated in the address of Arthur B. Purvis, president and managing director of Canadian Industries Limited and head of the National Employment Commission to-day when he gave a detailed resumé of the progress made by that group before the Canadian Club luncheon.

Reduction of the relief rolls, he continued, is commensurate "neither with the improvement in business nor in the employment indices, and relief costs are even less favourable in comparison."

From a Vancouver paper I find that the relief officer in Vancouver makes a similar statement. I read:

Mr. W. R. Bone, city relief officer, supporting appeal of Vancouver Welfare Federation for $350,000, an increase of $30,000 over estimates of 1935, to meet increasing needs of distressed families: "It has been unofficially estimated that a proportion of our citizens equal in number to those in receipt of relief, are maintaining themselves and their dependents on incomes no greater, and in some cases less, than the relief allowances to which their family units would be entitled."

Mr. Purvis referred to the other accomplishments of the National Employment Commission. He said that a questionnaire for registration in connection with relief had been developed. If the answering of questions in questionnaires could have brought relief to the unemployed, they would have been on easy street long ago. I am told that the applicant for relief in the city of Vancouver has to answer four different sets of questions, the questions in all cases being the same. I suppose the purpose is to see if his condition is as he states it to be. I presume the same is true in every other city. The unemployed have been questioned to death. They have almost been turned inside out in order, I suppose, to find out the reasons for unemployment or the causes of it. Something much more substantial and more tangible than questionnaires will be necessary to overcome the problem. What is needed, in order that the people may have a picture of conditions under which the masses are living, is not a questionnaire; what we need is a commission which will investigate the conditions of the people in the country and in the cities, to find out what they have, what they have not, and how they live. Until we find that out we can never have a true picture of how the great mass of the people live. Mr. Purvis referred also to the recommendations made to the government, chief among them being the one which resulted in the home improvement plan which was embodied in a bill that came before this house a few days ago. I am not going to quarrel with the home improvement plan as a palliative. It is nothing more. For, after all, what does it amount to? What is the principle on which it is based? Is it not merely the principle of instalment buying applied to the building and repairing of homes? I have heard statements on a number of occasions in this house and in other places that instalment buying was one of the causes of the depression. I do not know whether that is true, but I am convinced that had it not been for the extent to which instalment buying developed in the boom years of 1927 to 1929 the depression would have come much sooner, though possibly its effect would not have been so great. Through the home improvement plan more money may be put into circulation this year or so long as it remains in operation, but as the loans are paid less money will be available for other purposes, and so we cancel next year and the year after what we have accomplished this year. We are not going to create prosperity by borrowing, no matter for what purposes.

Mr. BLACKMORE: And then paying interest.

Mr. MacINNIS: In conclusion, I wish to repeat that unemployment is not a cause; it is an effect. It is the inevitable consequence of the system of profit production. In his budget speech the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) made this statement:

> Profits are the mainspring of economic activity in the system under which we operate.

Then why complain about the logical consequences of a system which we voluntarily accept? The main concern of the owners of industry under a profit system is not the production of goods and services to meet the needs of the people; it is the creation of profits. To this end all else is sacrificed. Wages are driven down, machines, as the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) said a few moments ago, are installed, displacing workers; the workers are speeded up; the consequent flow of profits into the hands of a few makes impossible a general distribution of the products of industry to the people who need them. A few have far more purchasing power than they can spend in consumers' goods or than they can invest in productive industry, while the masses lack sufficient purchasing power to keep body and soul together. Those are the inevitable results of the system under which we live. Industry stagnates, workers become unemployed, until during a period of time goods are consumed and the glut in the market disappears. It may happen that in the attempt to find markets abroad the nations of the world begin, as they are doing now, to prepare for war, and then the workers may begin to work again, only to meet the same conditions in a very few years. This has been the story of capitalism and it will continue to be so as long as the production and distribution of the necessities of life are in the hands of gamblers and speculators on the stock exchanges and markets of the world, as they are to-day.

On motion of Mr. Stirling the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Lapointe (Quebec East) the house adjourned at 10.37 p.m.

Friday, March 5, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 45, for the relief of Yetta Ginsburg.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 46, for the relief of Marguerite Emily Coombe Low.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 47, for the relief of Mary May Rowell Thom.—Mr. Reid (for Mr. Factor).

Bill No. 48, for the relief of Eva Josephine Millicent Good Ross.—Mr. Jacobs.

NATURAL PRODUCTS MARKETING ACT

JUDGMENT AGAINST CHAIRMAN OF BRITISH COLUMBIA COAST VEGETABLE MARKETING BOARD FOR RETURN OF LEVIES COLLECTED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to either the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) or the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), and I am basing it upon a telegram which has reached me in connection with a very serious matter affecting the chairman of the vegetable marketing board in the province of British Columbia. Before I ask my question I will read the telegram.

Leslie Gilmore, chairman of the coast vegetable marketing board, is being sold out by the sheriff to-morrow, Thursday, on account of judgment against him in respect of claim for return of levies collected under Dominion Marketing Act. Surely dominion government will not permit such a thing to happen. Respectfully suggest immediate action be taken . . . to protect this man who acted in all good faith under a statute enacted by dominion government.

My question is: is it the intention of the government to take immediate action to prevent Mr. Gilmore, chairman of the marketing board, from losing all he possesses and being thrown out on the street; or in the event of this happening will the government protect Mr. Gilmore by indemnifying him?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Some questions have been submitted to the Department of Justice with regard to the operations of the marketing act in British Columbia, as a result of the recent decision of the privy council. There are a few actions already before the courts. One judgment has been delivered against the gentleman mentioned in the telegram which has just been read, making him responsible for his actions when acting for the marketing board. Upon communicating with the provincial authorities I have been given to understand that this judgment is being appealed, and we hope all the other lawsuits will be suspended until there is a final judgment on this action. Meanwhile I am informed by the attorney general of British Columbia that he is taking all possible steps to prevent any difficulty and to protect the individuals involved.

SOCKEYE SALMON TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I wish to ask the leader of the government a question based on an answer to a question which I got the day before yesterday. I asked if the Fraser river treaty had been ratified; if so, whether it was subject to any reservations; if there were reservations, what were they, and would we be given an opportunity to consider them in this house. The answer was that it was considered that they were of such a character as to constitute only clarification or interpretation, and therefore would not be submitted to the house. I submit that the change is a very material one, equivalent practically to changing the treaty by order in council. Since the matter is of great importance to British Columbia, I ask the government whether they will not afford an opportunity to debate it in the house. I for one at least would like to protest if the treaty is to be made law without an opportunity of debating such a material change.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Before the minister replies I would like to say that I have given some attention to the answer made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in connection with the approval of the treaty by the senate of the United States, and I should like to join with what has been said by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill); for I regard the government's course as establishing a precedent of very doubtful validity. I trust no action will be taken until the house has had opportunity at least to express itself; for the treaty that we approved is not the treaty that will go into effect if the reservations made by the senate of the United States are to be regarded as part of it. I make this observation in order that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), who obviously will not answer the question to-day, may have that view before him when he considers what has been said by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Yes full consideration will be given to the representations of both the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and the right hon. leader of the opposition. Meanwhile we shall consider this as a notice of motion.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Thursday, March 4, consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Bennett.

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): I am sure I voice the feeling of every hon. member of this house when I express the hope that the measures which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) will take in this early stage of his indisposition will enable him to return quickly, in health and vigour, to the discharge of his onerous duties.

Everyone who read the statement of the Minister of Finance will I think be gratified by the improvement in the trade figures of Canada and the increase of the revenue; will be gratified to realize that Canada in her trading adventure with other nations of the world still retains her forefront position, and will hope that the improvement which has started will continue. We are all gratified also, I imagine, to see that the minister has adopted the better precedent in the form in which he has presented to the people the national balance sheet. It is now a plain and intelligible document. It does not very much resemble the documents which were presented by ministers of finance when the Liberal party was previously in power; for now we do not have to take what was virtually a sham surplus, reduce it almost to the vanishing point by the deduction of certain special expenditures, and then turn it into a deficit by applying the deficits of the Canadian National Railways. Now we have exhibited to us the extent of Canada's commitments, the amount of her trade, where her revenues come from, and what they amount to. In all it is an understandable document which should be of great value to the people of Canada. I wonder whether it will have some effect in tending to diminish the number of applications, requisitions and even demands which are made by people in Canada on whatever government is in the saddle at the time. The dominion government is asked to provide money for this, to give grants for that, quite irrespective of the fact that the revenue which the dominion government is called upon to administer comes from the pockets of the taxpayer. Frequently it looks as if the people who make these demands are of the opinion that there is some hidden source of wealth into which the minister of finance can put his hand other than that which they themselves have to contribute. If this method of presentation will accomplish anything to help Canadian citizens to realize that their problem must be looked upon from a national point of view and no longer a parochial or even provincial point of view, great good will ensue.

[Mr. E. Lapointe.]

The minister did not devote very much time to what is an undoubted fact, that the turning point in the improvement of Canadian trade dates back to the Ottawa agreements of 1932. It is a self-evident fact, a fact which every Canadian citizen acknowledges whose mind is not rancid with partisanship. But it is unfortunate that there were so many who in those days of abuse occupied their time in abusing the agreements in public and blessing them in private. The government of the United Kingdom saw fit to change its fiscal policy. That was the opportunity that the self-governing dominions had been seeking for many years, and due to the foresight of one man an invitation was issued to the self-governing dominions to send their delegations to this city in 1932 to discuss the possibility of arriving at trade agreements. The difficulties were great. Some of them were surmounted by little more than the presentation of the facts on both sides of the question. Others were more obstinate, and the fact that that work was brought to a successful termination is due to two things; one, the spirit which animated the delegates from all the participating nations, a spirit which was responsible for the determination that agreement should be reached; two, the ability and the patient genius exhibited by my right hon. leader (Mr. Bennett). Outside Canada that fact is recognized; inside Canada it is not so often recognized by those who take part in partisan speeches on this question. But there is no doubt that the Ottawa agreement was the turning point in Canada's fight with the adversity of depression.

The other agreement which was arrived at last year was undoubtedly arrived at by this government, but the fact is that the spade work had been entirely done when the government came into office. A year and a half previously the president of the United States had received power from congress which enabled him to reduce the tariff of the United States in order to obtain trade agreements with other countries. As soon as that had happened the technical men on both sides were able to prepare both facts and figures, and that work was accomplished in the summer of 1935. A draft of the agreement was presented, which was not in the opinion of the late administration one which Canada could properly accept. Negotiations were in process when the election came, and this government hurried to Washington, signed the agreement and accepted the terms offered by the United States; and it is perfectly right that it should cherish this child as if it were its own even though it does rather resemble a foundling.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) in presenting his budget warns us of two or three dangers which encompass us. He points out the seriousness of the financial position of certain of the provinces. He draws our attention to the fact that once more the get-rich-quick spirit is abroad, and I notice in yesterday's press that the president of the Montreal stock exchange is of the same opinion. He also draws our attention with emphasis to the fact that the position with regard to the relief of unemployment is a disheartening one. The relief figures are not responding in the same proportion as the figures of Canada's increase in trade. Whilst the Minister of Finance is disheartened, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) is encouraged though not satisfied. I do not know to what extent the Minister of Labour's view that it is an encouraging situation will be borne out throughout this country, but he will no doubt on a future occasion enlarge on the brief statement which he made the other night in reply to my right hon. leader, and explain to us in more detail the measures which he has employed, with the assistance of the employment commission, to bring about an amelioration of the situation.

The minister does, however, find encouragement in the fact that we no longer have relief camps. He tells us it was the determination of the government that these camps should be closed. He tells us that he had a strong opinion based upon his knowledge of conditions in these relief camps, and his knowledge of the sense of frustration and despair which was developed by them, that the best way to deal with the relief camps was to close them as quickly as possible. That presentation is well known to have been this government's policy, and so a committee of investigation was set up which investigated the camps; and it is not surprising that the report of that committee bore out the opinion of the minister and advised that the camps should be closed. He does not refer to the fact that nine months before that committee reported another committee had reported. I want to draw the attention of hon. members to a few phrases from these two reports to show that, at least in the opinion of the men on these committees who investigated the conditions in the camps, their feeling was not as bad as the minister's.

The one that I have in my hand is the report of the committee set up by the previous administration under Mr. Justice W. A. Macdonald supported by Mr. C. T. McHattie and the Rev. E. D. Braden, who were instructed to inquire into conditions obtaining in all camps and any complaints which had been made with respect to the administration and management of the camps established by the Department of National Defence in British Columbia. They proceeded to visit the camps, and listened to all who had evidence to give pro and con, and any complaints which anyone desired to make before them. I want to refer, because of what I am going to say later, to one or two remarks which are made in the report. On page 8 the committee men report:

> Questions were continually submitted at the public sittings, as to the existence of any militarization in these camps. We feel no hesitation in reporting that it did not, and does not, exist in the slightest degree.

They inquired into food, sleeping accommodation, cleanliness, sanitation and so on, and commenced the summation of the report as follows:

> The object of the establishment of relief camps is clearly indicated in the manual of policy and instructions available in every camp as follows:
> As a measure designed to care for single, homeless men without present employment and in need of relief the Department of National Defence has been entrusted with the organization and execution of a series of projects on works to the general advantage of Canada which otherwise could not be undertaken at this time. We find that these camps have reasonably fulfilled the object of their establishment and afforded the intended relief. It is well known that they were expected to be only of a temporary nature. The reason for their continuance is the prolonged depression, and we hope that this cause will soon disappear.

The report then goes on to refer to various items of complaint and the committee men make their comments thereon. It will be seen from that report, therefore, that in their opinion at least, there was no truth in the allegation that there was militarization of the camps. The camps, of course, had been instituted as a temporary measure, and the committee men deal with the complaints that were so made.

Then I come to the report of the committee which this government set up and to which the Minister of Labour referred. The report is dated January 31, 1936, and after dealing with the visit which was paid to the United States camps, where it was found that the situation was so entirely different as to be of little value to a consideration of our problem—it having been found that the camps there were fully military in type—they go on to make the comment which the minister quoted about the desirability of closing the camps and they make the remark en passant that no police authority is vested in the camp administration. I can well imagine the storm of abuse which would have fallen upon the late administration and the minister in charge of this particular piece of work at anything in the nature of a police organization being connected with the camps. I will read a paragraph which goes to show that there had been a certain amount of misapprehension on the part of the public with regard to the remuneration received by those who were in the camps.

A strong body of public opinion exists that is opposed to the principle of the allowance of twenty cents per day for work performed over a nominal period of eight hours. It might be emphasized that the fact is lost sight of that in addition to food, shelter, clothing and medical attention, tobacco is provided along with canteen supplies at a cost below that paid by the general public outside the camp, and recreation facilities varying in degree according to the size and location of the camp.

The report says that an adequate supply of warm and serviceable clothing is supplied; it deals with the fact that recreation and education were provided for those in the camps; it remarks that the meals served in the relief camps were plain but wholesome and clean; it deals with the facilities providing for the washing of clothes, with the provision of medical services and so on, and states that a canteen existed in every camp. Then I want to read the last paragraph but one:

The Department of National Defence has built up an organization that has been fair to the men under its charge, and efficient in the administration of the various activities in the management of the camps. The work is being carried on in addition to the ordinary departmental duties, assisted by a small civilian staff, reflecting a decided saving to the exchequer. It should be pointed out that the staff officials of the Department of National Defence, are by training eminently suited to the task of organization work of this character, and in this regard have rendered a distinct service during a most trying time. To brand the camps as military establishments is unfair.

I want the hon. members to remember that phrase.

In our inspection not the slightest trace of the general conception of military discipline was in evidence. In fact, the officers of the Department of National Defence have leaned backward in this regard. Not one man was seen in military uniform. Those in the service whose duties carried them into the camp wore civilian clothes. As far as we could observe, the administration is of a non-political character, a factor of vital importance in an undertaking requiring the utmost discretion if serious trouble is to be avoided. In this connection, if it is thought desirable that some change should be made, consideration might be given to the suggestion that the services of those branches of the Department of National Defence peculiarly suited to camp activities be retained.

It will be noticed, Mr. Speaker, that the reports of both these committees of investigation went to show that the camps, as such, were well conducted and carrying out the purpose for which they were established. The minister, however, considers that the policy was all wrong, that they were established as the result of a counsel of despair. I maintain that there was no counsel of despair at all connected with the policy with regard to the camps. Rather it was one step in the long chain of policies built up by agreement between the dominion and provincial governments, which resulted in the dominion government taking over a certain share of the responsibility in order to assist the provinces, whose duty it is to look after unemployment.

I suppose we all remember the abuse, the vilification, the innuendoes and the whisperings that went on with regard to these camps. It was not confined to the members of this house in this house; it was carried on throughout the country and was taken up by supporters of the then opposition. I am not going to fill the pages of Hansard with a large number of quotations of that description, but I do want to put on record two utterances which are attributed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), both taken from the Ottawa Citizen. The first is dated September 22, 1935, and is the report of a speech delivered by the right hon. gentleman in Prince Albert. I quote:

Organization of relief camps under the Department of National Defence was a great mistake, Mr. King said. They were military camps and could be nothing else while they were under military control.

"Has a government that would do a thing like that the least appreciation of the psychology of the whole situation?" asked Mr. King. "I say it has not."

Young men who were unemployed would have to be cared for but they should be paid wages and made to feel they were part of society, not outcasts to be thrust into internment camps. They should be employed on socially useful works in which they could take pride and organized under the labour or some other department.

The other extract I wish to read is from the Ottawa Citizen of October 14, 1935, referring to a speech delivered by the right hon. gentleman in this city:

"At this time it is a necessity as well as an opportunity to have a strong, united government. We have had a 'one man' government during the past five years, but no one man or no one government can cope with the problems facing us to-day! In eight out of nine provinces we have Liberal governments whose leaders have pledged themselves to the support of the federal government. Our present social problems cannot be adequately solved without all these provinces coming together in unity of cause."

At this juncture in Mr. King's address, someone in the audience shouted: "What about the relief camps?" The Liberal chieftain replied:

"Yes, my friend, I will tell you about the relief camps. When the Liberal party comes back into power the unfortunates in these camps will be made to feel that they are human beings like everyone else, not lost souls placed out of the way in remote places! An agency such as the Department of National Defence, a department established solely for the administration of military affairs and warfare, will not be placed in charge of these men!"

I quite agree that the Prime Minister has kept his word. But he reiterated that the camps were militaristic; he referred to those in the camps as unfortunates, and he called them internment camps.

Why was this work given to the Department of National Defence? It was done for this one reason, that under the Department of National Defence there existed throughout Canada an organization in skeleton form which could be expanded to take care of this emergency work. Without thought a man might say these camps should be under the Department of Labour. Why place them under a department which did not have the necessary organization? Why create an organization to do work which was looked upon as temporary, which was never considered as anything else, and which could be carried on quite well by a department which already had the organization established? It will be remembered that Canada is divided into some nine military districts. In each district there is an officer commanding who has under him an engineer officer, a medical officer, a commissariat officer and a transport officer, and in their turn they have under them staffs which could be and were expanded to take care of the work of looking after these camps.

I have the very greatest admiration for the work done by Major General McNaughton and subsequently by Major General Ashton and the officers under their charge, for the way they adapted themselves to the changed requirements and carried on this most difficult piece of work in the face of the vilification that was going on almost daily inside this house and out of it, in the press of the country and in correspondence between individuals. The work was carried on at a time when these men, like all other servants of the state, were foregoing a portion of their remuneration as their gesture towards assisting the government in that difficult time. It was carried on by day and far into the night, and was a most difficult type of work to do. I do not think sufficient tribute has been paid to those responsible for doing it. It was not their policy, but that of the government.

May I refer, too, to the technical staff which it was necessary hurriedly to get together to look after the superintendence of the work and the camps. The Department of National Defence was successful in collecting a band of technical men, engineering men, superintendents, foremen; people, then out of work, who were connected with construction, which was then in the doldrums, and others. They took over the technical work in connection with the camps and carried it out with most commendable efficiency. In some cases they did it in the face of abusive opposition from those in the camps who did not want to conform to the arrangements made therein, and also in the face of the general criticisms so often directed against them by a public which did not always understand. It is most satisfactory to know that at a time of need it was possible for the department to collect a body of men who were experienced, and capable of doing the work. It must be remembered that in the course of time, while the camps were open, very large sums of money passed through the hands of those in charge. There was a commissariat and there were necessary petty cash expenditures. I believe it is a notable point that the total defalcations from beginning to end amounted to only a small fraction of one per cent. I am only too glad to have had this opportunity of paying tribute to the work which was accomplished in connection with the camps.

But the minister considers that the whole idea of the camps were a counsel of despair. I maintain it was nothing of the sort. I shall run over briefly the steps which preceded the setting up of the camps under the dominion government. It will be remembered that in 1930 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King)—and he was prime minister then—was not of the opinion that an emergent situation existed. He regarded the relief of unemployment as a matter to which the provinces should attend, a view with which in general this party was in entire accord. But that there was an emergent situation then was becoming more and more evident to the people of Canada. It was then, too, that he pronounced that strange partisan political doctrine, to which he referred again in one of the extracts to which I have referred, a doctrine which startled the people of Canada and filled at least some of his supporters with consternation. He referred to it only the other day when he stated his views with regard to a national government.

However, whatever the Prime Minister's political views were on that occasion, he did not come forward to assist the provinces to carry on this particular form of relief. When parliament assembled in the fall of 1930, immediately after the election, it was asked to vote the sum of $20,000,000 for the relief of unemployment, and particularly for construction work, to assist in the distribution of natural products, and to aid the provinces in carrying on their construction work. The $20,000,000 having proved to be insufficient, in the following year parliament was asked to empower the governor in council to expend such moneys as in its discretion might be deemed expedient for the relief of distress, for providing employment and for maintaining peace, order and good government.

From then on, annually—for these were annual measures—parliament was asked to vote certain sums of money for this purpose. Just prior to the passing of the 1932 measure, at a provincial conference it was decided the provinces were unable to extend public works, but they asked the dominion government to continue to contribute to direct relief, and in that the dominoin government acquiesced. In the following year, just prior to the 1933 act, the provincial conference requested governments to revert to the public works program, and the agreements were again arrived at as to terms. Again the dominion government acquiesced. Towards the end of 1932 it became evident in western Canada that the provincial governments were no longer able to cope with the burden of transient unemployed, the birds of passage who were here to-day and gone to-morrow. In order to give assistance to the provincial governments, and in order to lift that burden off their shoulders, by agreement the dominion government took over the entire responsibility for the transient unemployed in need of relief.

Once the federal government had set its hand to the task, what possible way, may I ask, would there have been to do the work, other than by camps? It was imagined that this would be a temporary measure. It was desirable that certain work should be carried out by the men in the camps, work which would be of general benefit to Canada but which would not otherwise at that time have been carried out. That was the policy the government adopted. May I remind hon. members first of all that it was commonly stated no work was accomplished as a result of what the Prime Minister chooses to describe as internment camps. Yet in the time elapsed up to September 30, 1935, I find from the last report available to me, and which was tabled at the last session, that 142,690 were taken into the camps, and that 31,502 definitely left the camps to take up employment. Besides there were a considerable number concerning whom there was not definite proof that they had gone to do any certain work. It is well known, however, that they left the camps for the purpose of taking work; that they did take work, and so reestablished themselves.

The Prime Minister may go on saying that these camps accomplished nothing, and that they were mere internment camps, but may I place on record some of the work successfully undertaken. It will be remembered that in some parts of Canada there were disturbances. Those disturbances were at their worst in British Columbia. Ever since the days of railway construction the seasonally unemployed have flocked to British Columbia to spend winters in the milder climate. Into British Columbia the transients flocked, and it was there that the subversive elements got in their evil work and fostered disturbances which only to a limited extent spread from British Columbia, through literature, into other camps of Canada.

Here is a list of the works accomplished by the camps. There was the restoration work at the citadels of Halifax and Quebec. There were six airdromes and forty-two emergency landing fields. No doubt these will be found of considerable value to the Minsiter of Transport, as it would appear that we are about to embark upon an airways system. Then, there were municipal airports at Saint John, New Brunswick; Cooking Lake, Alberta; Cranbrook, British Columbia; Ladder Lake, Saskatchewan.

Mr. ISNOR: May I ask the hon. member a question? Would he estimate the value of the work done at Halifax?

Mr. BENNETT: How could he do that?

Mr. STIRLING: The hon. member asks me if I can estimate the value of the work done, but it would be quite impossible for me to do that from memory. It can be ascertained by referring to the records. Air stations were developed at Dartmouth, Ottawa, Trenton and Lac du Bonnet. Forestry operations were carried on at Colter's Siding, New Brunswick; at Valcartier, Quebec; Petawawa, Ontario; Duck Mountain, Manitoba, and Kenanaskis, Alberta. Another operation was the clearing of the foreshores at Lac Seul to assist in regulating the flow of the Winnipeg and English rivers. This work was carried on in cooperation with the Ontario government, and was necessary for hydro-electric power development. Highway construction work was carried out in conjunction with the various provincial governments. Development of training areas took place at Valcartier, Petawawa, Shilo and Dundurn. There was also building construction at Kingston, Barriefield, St. John's, Winnipeg, Esquimalt and Long Branch. Rifle ranges were erected at Winterburn, Sarcee, North Vancouver and Cranbrook.

It will be seen that a considerable amount of work was accomplished by the men in these camps. From my constant contact with many of them I know that the majority of the men desired to work in return for that which the taxpayers of Canada were providing for them. When the time came to close the camps there were scores and scores of these men who sufficiently appreciated the treatment they had received to regret deeply the closing of the camps. The minister looked upon the setting up of these camps as the product of a counsel of despair. He has told us that they are closed as far as the dominion government is concerned, but he knows quite well—we shall perhaps have information in detail at a later date—that camps are being conducted in British Columbia for exactly the purpose that the minister condemns.

The minister referred shortly to the methods undertaken by his department, with the assistance of the employment commission, to take care of the men who left the camps. He referred to the farm placement scheme, and to the fact that 46,000 men had found employment on Canadian farms. He referred to the rehabilitation scheme which was largely the child of the employment commission. He referred also to the camps opened by the transportation companies. I was interested in just what results were obtained from this particular measure. I applied for particulars to the department, and certain information was furnished me by the director of labour transference. Unfortunately this information is not intelligible to me. I asked the department for information as to the number of men employed in these railway camps, the period of employment, the cost incurred, and what share of the cost was borne by the dominion government and the transportation companies. I also asked the amount of remuneration received by the man, what deductions were made and what hours were worked. Here is what I got:

Number of men transferred from camps to railway work	9,224
Total number of men employed by the railways, drawn when no further men available in camps	7,107
Number of men employed and paid directly by railways in servicing extra gangs	2,432

It is not clear to me whether all the 18,763 men would come under the agreement, and I shall be interested at a later date in having the minister explain in greater detail the meaning of these figures. I asked for the cost of these operations and what portion fell on the dominion government and on the transportation companies. So far as I can ascertain from these figures, the total amount expended by the government and the railroads was $5,591,199.18. As the total amount expended by the railways amounted to $2,956,267, it would seem that the amount expended by the dominion government, that is by the taxpayers, would be $2,634,932.18. Whether this amount applies only to the 9,224 men who left the camps when they were closed, or to the total of 18,763 men, I do not know. In any event, it is a considerable sum of money to expend to provide relief work for six months for men who will have to have some provision made for them when the work was finished. The information given in connection with remuneration is as follows:—

> The total number of men who completed 1,248 hours or worked until the gangs were broken up was 7,773. The deductions for board and medical services were the same as those of other extra gangs in the district and varied to some degree in different parts of Canada. The maximum charge for board was $6 per week, including bedding and blankets.

If my arithmetic is correct, the result is that at the end of six months the maximum amount which a man would receive, after paying for board and lodging, would be $156. It is hardly reasonable to expect that during the six months a man would spend nothing for tobacco, clothing and incidentals. A total of 7,773 men received this maximum amount of $156, and how much that would be reduced by the time they left camp, I do not know. Nor do I know how they got away from camp to where they desired to reside, or whether they had homes to go to. The fact remains that the whole idea was built on the theory that if we could put these men to work for a number of months they would have in their pockets a certain sum of money which they could use to take care of themselves for a time after the camps closed. Whether or not that actually happened, I am not aware, and I shall look forward to receiving further details when the minister places his estimates before the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I do not anticipate that I shall take up much of the time of the house with what I have to say. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) in his budget speech referred several times to the financial position and operations of the wheat board, and it is to this subject that I wish to confine my remarks.

The institution of the Canadian wheat board was the result of a long-continued desire on the part of the western farmer. For years he has wanted some adequate plan of cooperative marketing of his wheat. For years he had been working to that end, until, in 1935, the wheat board was brought into existence by the government then in power. This action was hailed by the farmers of western Canada as a good thing. It was not, perhaps, all that they desired, but generally speaking it was received as a step—and a long step—in the right direction. Eventually the price of wheat was pegged at 87½ cents. This was another step in the right direction. Western farmers would have liked the pegged price to be a dollar, but that was not thought advisable.

If any government should have brought in such legislation as the act of 1935 with respect to the wheat board, it might have been expected that a Liberal government would do it, but instead it was left to a Conservative government. And what do we find? That when a Liberal administration comes into office it causes the function of that wheat board to cease. I may be challenged regarding that statement, but I claim that the action of the present government last fall in issuing instructions, by order in council, for the wheat board to refuse to take wheat until the price dropped to ninety cents, virtually meant the repeal of that act, and I contend that such action is beyond the scope of an order in council. I am not a legal expert, and if there is to be any legal discussion I shall be willing to leave it to hon. members who belong to the legal profession, but I believe the fact is as I have stated, and in support of my views I will read from the act itself. Section 7, clause (e), dealing with the powers of the board respecting the marketing of wheat, reads:

> To pay to producers delivering wheat at the time of delivery or at any time thereafter as may be agreed upon such fixed price per bushel, according to grade or quality or place of delivery, as may be determined by the board with the approval of the governor in council; and to issue to such producers when such wheat is purchased certificates indicating the number of bushels purchased, the grade, quality and the price, which certificates shall entitle producers named therein to share in the equitable distribution of the surplus, if any, of the operations of the board during the crop year, it being the true intent and meaning of this section that each producer shall receive for the same grade and quality of wheat the same price on the Fort William basis. Such certificate shall not be transferable, and a statement to that effect shall be printed on the face thereof;

The duty of the board as outlined here is to receive wheat, not to refuse it, and the action of the government is tantamount to the repeal of the act and a refusal to accept wheat from the western farmers. This, I claim, results in a direct loss of millions of dollars to the farmers of western Canada. Many of the farmers were not in a position to hold their wheat until better prices were to be had. As a matter of fact many farmers in the west are almost in a state of bankruptcy. When the fall of the year comes and they harvest their crops they have to pay their living expenses for the year, their grocery bills, their hospital and doctor's bills; their taxes must be met; the machine companies demand a share of the cut, and the mortgage concerns always demand their pound of flesh. The price of wheat on August 27 last—I believe that was the date that the government's action was made known to the public—

An hon. MEMBER: The twenty-eighth.

Mr. HANSELL: Well, on August 27 wheat stood at 98⅜ cents; that was the Winnipeg price. A few days afterwards the market took a slight fall and wheat dropped nearly five cents. Then it rose more or less steadily until it reached its high point about the second week of February this year. I wish to put on Hansard a table of the weekly prices of wheat from August 22, 1936, to the end of February of this year. It is a table of the closing prices on the Winnipeg grain exchange—not Fort William or Regina or Calgary or Vancouver—and is, I believe, authoritative, because I personally made application for it to the dominion bureau of statistics. If this table of prices is reviewed it will be seen that the farmers who had to sell their wheat at the beginning of the crop year lost millions upon millions of dollars. To my mind that is a very serious thing.

I wish to refer for a short time to the protests that were sent to the government because of its action. I was particularly interested in the references to this matter which were made yesterday by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley), because of an interruption by the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell). The hon. member for Qu'Appelle was asked if he had ever attended any of these protest meetings. He replied that he had not and had an adequate reason for not attending. But I did attend some of these meetings; by virtue of the fact that I was the person who, I suppose, stands between the organizations and the government, I was called in to several meetings held in my constituency. I wish here to refer to a remark that was made by the hon. member for Swift Current, and to protest against it. It was while the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was dealing with these resolutions that had been sent to the government. I quote from Hansard, page 1489:

Mr. Bothwell: If I may ask the hon. member a question, did he ever attend any of those protest meetings that were held in western Canada?

Mr. Perley (Qu'Appelle): Not one, and I had invitations to hundreds.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Hundreds?

Mr. HANSELL: That is what he said.

Mr. Bothwell: Has the hon. member knowledge of the manner in which those resolutions were prepared, and does he know that the resolutions were brought to these meetings already typewritten, and with the mover and seconder's names set out?

I protest that, Mr. Speaker; I protest it on the ground that it is not according to fact. I will admit that stereotyped resolutions emanating from some source or other were sent to the farmers of western Canada, asking them to send in resolutions of that type, but in all the meetings I attended I did not notice particularly that the resolutions submitted all came from the same source, as the hon. member for Swift Current would have us believe. I say they did not.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): What is the hon. gentleman's authority for denying the statement of the hon. member for Swift Current with regard to the meetings of which he was speaking?

Mr. HANSELL: I did not understand that the remark here was relevant to the meetings he attended.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): I am referring to the meetings of which the hon. member for Swift Current was speaking yesterday, the meetings in western Canada, particularly Saskatchewan—the meetings which were under discussion by the two hon. members yesterday. What is the authority of my hon. friend who is now speaking for taking exception to the statement made by the hon. member for Swift Current?

Mr. HANSELL: My authority is my personal knowledge of the meetings I personally attended.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Ah, that is a different thing entirely. Everyone knows that the resolutions were prepared and brought in.

An hon. MEMBER: Let the hon. member make his speech.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Any hon. member may ask questions, but only with the permission of the member who has the floor.

Mr. HANSELL: I am quite able to take care of myself along this line. The discussion that took place yesterday afternoon and to which I refer was brought up by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. He referred to the many resolutions that came from western Canada to the present government, and in reference to those resolutions the hon. member for Swift Current made the statement which I have already quoted and which I will read again:

Has the hon. member knowledge of the manner in which those resolutions were prepared, and does he know that the resolutions were brought to these meetings already typewritten and with the mover and seconder's names set out?

I say that that is not altogether according to fact.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): He was referring to Saskatchewan.

Mr. HANSELL: At the meetings I attended that was not so. I have copies of resolutions sent to the Prime Minister's office. I have looked them over and I declare that there are not two alike. The statement made here to which I have referred—and this is another reason why I protest—could have no other meaning than that the farmers and business men of western Canada were stampeded into doing something which it was beyond their intelligence to do for themselves, and I protest that. The farmers of this country are too often held up to ridicule. You cannot go to a moving picture show and see the character of the farmer depicted without discovering that he portrays the part of some hayseed hillbilly ignoramus from the backwoods somewhere. I claim that the farmers of western Canada are as well-informed as any one body of men you can find in Canada to-day. They are wise and trusted men and I protest against any attempt to make a clown of the man who has been most instrumental in building up the Dominion of Canada. But let us suppose, for the sake of argument, that these stereotyped resolutions were sent out, and let us suppose further that they were adopted by these various farm organizations: does that render the resolutions any less important? Of course not. Then why bring in such a thing as this?

I might say that these resolutions and protests did not all come from the farmers of western Canada; some of them came from various boards of trade, others from municipal councils, others from business men, and of course the majority from farm organizations. Between five and six hundred resolutions were received by the Department of Trade and Commerce. That does not mean to say there were only between five and six hundred protests. There were between five and six hundred resolutions, petitions, telegrams and protests from between five and six hundred different people or organizations, representing in the aggregate thousands upon thousands of farmers in western Canada, and I say that, with all these resolutions, the Department of Trade and Commerce cannot produce one that was of the nature of an approval or commendation of the action that was taken.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that when it comes to the marketing of wheat, at least, the western farmer should be given some consideration. Some notice should be taken of his desires.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. HANSELL: I am glad to hear the "hear, hear," but that does not give the farmer very much, does it?

Now, with regard to the amendment that has been proposed, I wish to say just one word. The amendment reads:

> That all the words after the word "that" in the said motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor:
> "This house regrets that the government has failed to take effective measures to deal with the problem of unemployment."

I am not going to speak now of unemployment and I am not going to speak particularly on the effective measures; I can well leave that to some of my colleagues. But I am interested in the phrase, "has failed to take effective measures." That is subject to wide interpretation. Our claim in this corner is that measures could have been taken whereby the government could have adjusted the economic system so as to issue debt free money for public works or other purposes in order to solve the problem of unemployment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member referred to some figures that he desired to put on Hansard. I am not quite clear what they are.

[Mr. Hansell.]

Mr. HANSELL: It is a table of the closing prices of wheat on the Winnipeg grain exchange from August 22, 1936 to February 27, 1937, a weekly price.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: That can be done only with the unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member had better read it.

Mr. HANSELL: The figures are as follows:

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): It is my intention at this time to deal not with the main motion, but rather with the amendment moved by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). The amendment was presented in what was to me one of the most brilliant, capable and effective speeches it has been my pleasure to listen to in this house, in which he demonstrated that the principal object that this parliament should have before it is the solution of the unemployment problem. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers), replying to the leader of the opposition, said something about the leader of the opposition having said during the election campaign of 1930 that he would end unemployment. Well, I remember that during the last election campaign every billboard in my riding had plastered all over it, "Action, not promises." "End unemployment." "Vote Liberal." Yet I believe every hon. member will admit that unemployment is no nearer ended to-day than it was when the present government came into power.

I want to refer to two outstanding statements made by the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. MacNeil). On page 1430 of Hansard he is reported as saying:

> I was present in the house when, last session, the minister dealt with the problem of the young men then in relief camps across the dominion. He announced that on July 1, 1936, it would be possible to close the relief camps, and that he had a solution in view. He proposed to solve the unemployment problem of these young men with the plans he was then about to table.

Then a little later on the hon. member for Vancouver North made this powerful and telling indictment of the government:

> The relief camps are not closed; many of the camps in British Columbia have been reopened. In the constituency I represent the camps which were operating prior to July 1, 1936, are again operating under practically the same conditions, and the men are engaged in exactly the same work as before.

When the hon. member for Vancouver North made these statements the Minister of Labour was in his seat, and he did not challenge either one of them. My own observation, travelling around the country, is that the camps are still in operation. They are in operation in northern Ontario, and if they are not any worse than they were under the previous government they are not any better. My own personal mail daily is cluttered up with letters from single young men and married men in Toronto begging that I do something to help them obtain employment. I see no difference during the last sixteen months. To-morrow morning when I get home I shall be met by many married men and young men out of work beseeching me to do something to help them to save their homes, or provide employment for them.

A little later on the Minister of Labour himself replied to the leader of the opposition. I wish to quote two or three lines from what he said, because he lost complete control of himself—and he usually has control; he lost his usual courtesy—and usually he shows courtesy—when he said this to the leader of the opposition, as reported at page 1424 of Hansard:

> Was this amendment introduced, sir, because the leader of the opposition had some constructive suggestion to offer after five years of extravagant futility. . . .

Now, sir, "extravagant futility" and "compelling reason" and a lot of the other phrases which we have been hearing in this house during the last sixteen months are phrases used in the classrooms of universities or schools, but they add nothing whatever to debate and do not clear up anything. If the minister had considered for a moment what the leader of the opposition did during those strenuous days of the depression, which continued to get worse and worse from 1930 to 1933, I think in his usual generous spirit, instead of using, in reference to the leader of the opposition, such a phrase as "extravagant futility" he would have said "outstanding achievement." Considering what the late administration had to contend with, their achievements were outstanding. I do not intend to labour that point, but before I go on to try to present something constructive for the minister to consider by way of providing employment I should like, without commenting on each item, to record a few of the achievements that the Minister of Labour should have given the late government credit for.

First, the present government is asking this house to endorse practically the same trade agreement, barring slight changes in tariff schedules, that the previous government succeeded in negotiating with Great Britain. Surely that indicates that the negotiation of that treaty was an outstanding achievement. Second, in introducing his budget in 1936 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) said the physical volume of business in Canada rose from the low of 69 in 1933 to 102·4 in 1935. That was an increase of over fifty per cent over the low point, and surely that was a worth while achievement. Third, during the term of office of the previous government, from 1930 to 1935, according to "Industrial Expansion," some 272 new factories or businesses were started in this country. In those factories, together with all the other industrial plants of the country, directly or indirectly, from 350,000 to 400,000 men were given employment, making new lines of goods for Canadians which, prior to the last government taking office, were made outside this country. Anyone who knows anything about business and employment will admit that to be an outstanding achievement. Fourth, construction rose from 9·2, the low of 1933, to 19·7 in 1935, or an increase of 100 per cent. Fifth, when the previous government came into power it had to contend with an adverse trade balance of $103,000,000.

Mr. GOLDING: For how many years did they have that adverse balance of trade?

Mr. MacNICOL: That is immaterial; when they came into power they had to meet a deficit in trade of $103,000,000, which was the legacy left by the previous government. When they went out of office, however, they left the incoming government a favourable trade balance, not including the export of gold, amounting to $134,000,000 for the period of eleven months. In the republic to the south between six and seven thousand banks closed their doors while the previous government was in office, but not a single Canadian bank failed during that time. Could any reasonable man say that was not an outstanding tribute to the financial policy of the late government? Then there is the new gold policy, with which the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) had more to do than any other man in Canada and, with the exception of the President of the United States, perhaps more than any other man in the world, by having the world economic conference adopt a gold policy that placed at the disposal of the present government, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. McGeer) said last session, many hundreds of millions of dollars of new money which was created as a result of the actions of the previous government.

Then I come to industry, with which I have been associated for many years. I observe that employment from the low of 83·4 in 1933 increased to 106·1 in October of 1935, when the previous government went out of office. I should like to refer also to the social legislation, all of which has been jettisoned by the opposition of the present government, which exerted itself to create objections to that program. I say now that if the minimum wage act and the measure providing for a forty-eight hour week, which we in this country were in duty bound to adopt as a result of the draft conventions we entered into, had gone into effect, many thousands of men would have been given work.

I think that is sufficient on that part of the question. I am very glad to see the Minister of Labour in his seat again, because I am one of those who think a great deal of him; I believe he is sincere and honest, and that he tries to do his best. I should like to be able to induce the hon. gentleman to withdraw the expression he used, "extravagant futility," concerning the previous government. It certainly should not have been made in this house, and it certainly was not fair to the right hon. leader of the opposition.

There are just one or two other matters along that line to which I should like to refer. The present government surely cannot claim credit for the increased employment in the forests of British Columbia and other provinces. Any man who wants to be fair will admit at once that it was the trade agreements with the United Kingdom and the rest of the empire that increased our exports of lumber to New Zealand, Australia and Great Britain, and that these agreements were directly responsible for placing twenty-two thousand men at work in the forests of British Columbia. Then there is the copper industry. In 1933 the price of copper had dropped to 7 cents a pound, but under the administration of the previous government the price rose to 10 and 11 cents, and to-day I believe it is between 12 and 15 cents. That is some achievement. Let us look at nickel and steel. Could anyone claim that the expansion in the nickel industry of Canada has been the result of the action of any governmental activity? I think everyone in this house knows that the expansion in the nickel business, and in the plants manufacturing various kinds of machinery for the nickel industry, of which I know several, has been a direct result of the war scare in Europe. That expansion will fall flat when the war scare is over, or the war itself if it does come; or, if it does not come—as I hope it will not—it will fall flat anyway, as it did after the great war.

Then there is the question of steel, and I know something about the steel industry. At the moment that industry is flourishing in Canada, partly because of the protection given by the previous government on steel plate, but more than anything else because Great Britain cannot produce enough steel for her rearmament program. To-day Great Britain is ordering steel manufactures from Canada; I know of many manufactures of steel that have been so ordered. In addition I know of several plants that are manufacturing munitions for the old country. When the war scare passes, all these plants will stop making munitions and the men will be thrown out of work.

I have now concluded that part of my remarks, Mr. Speaker, and following the suggestion of the minister that instead of spending our time criticizing the activities of the government we should suggest something constructive I am going to bring to his notice some methods by which employment might be provided in Canada.

During the recess I travelled about twelve thousand miles through many states of the republic to the south in order to make a personal inquiry into just why the people of the United States were so overwhelmingly behind their government. One did not have to travel very far to ascertain the reason. Everywhere men were working; they had been put to work by the government of that country. I am one of those who believe—and I wish I could persuade the minister to believe it also—that the time has come for the minister and the government to realize that unemployment is not just a passing phase. In this I may be partly adopting the argument advanced last session by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. In the United States they have arrived at the conclusion that it is not a passing phase, and in that country they have made preparations to take care of millions of men, not only for the present but as time goes on, if the necessity continues. Certainly if war broke out to-morrow in which Canada became engaged, or from which she could not free herself, this or any government would find all the money required to carry it out. And what for—to send young Canadians. What for?—to be shot. I say to the minister and the government that it would be better if they were to consider that they are now waging war against unemployment, and in my view whatever money is required should be obtained for that purpose.

In the course of my surveys I first looked into what are known as the CCC camps, which I believe have been mentioned before in the house. I am a confirmed believer in the fruitfulness and efficacy of CCC camps. The government takes young men, whose parents are on relief, and looks after them. At one time there were 600,000 of these young men in the camps. No doubt a much greater number have been taken care of during the time the CCC camps have been in operation. First they send the young men to military concentration camps, where they are inoculated, cleaned up, and taught civility and discipline. After fifteen days of that they are sent to construction camps of one kind and another. I went to about a dozen of those camps. May I say that they are quite different from the camps in Canada, as described by the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. MacNeil). I have not been in any of the camps in Canada since the late government left office, but listening to the observations of the hon. member for Vancouver North I would conclude that in the camps there has been no improvement over anything provided by the previous government.

In the camps of the United States young men work during the days at useful employment. The work they do adds to the national wealth and does not cost the country anything, although they receive $30 a month, $25 of which is taken from them and sent to their parents or guardians. In other words, they are allowed $5 a month. Then, there are contests in the camps to see which young man can send the most home to his parents of the $5 he receives. I thought that was a very creditable contest to have in any camp. Through it they were taught thrift and shown how to save their money. In the evening they are taught all sorts of necessary knowledge.

To close this part of my observations in connection with the CCC camps may I say that on visiting Washington I found, upon talking with the heads of the departments, that approximately sixty per cent of all the young men called to the CCC camps, because of the reputations they have established for themselves, have been recalled into industry. I believe that is a creditable feature of the camps. May I suggest to the minister that a similar system might well be adopted in Canada, because our streets are cluttered up with young men who are not in camps and who have nothing to do. The young men in the CCC camps do all sorts of useful work, but on this occasion I shall not take time to give details, because there are other matters to which I should like to refer. May I state briefly, however, that the work they were doing could be classed as useful work, and will not cost the country anything.

I made many other surveys, because upon discussing matters in Washington with the heads of departments I found they were carrying on their activities along many lines. Following these discussions I set out to visit the different kinds of activity and, in this connection, may I deal first with their treatment of education. In the United States they have the same problem as we have in Canada but, owing to our population, of course our problem is small in comparison with the one they face. No doubt in Canada there are hundreds, perhaps thousands of school houses throughout the country which are a disgrace. They are old and possibly some are disease ridden. Probably not all, but certainly many of them are fire traps. What do they do in the United States in this regard? They have adopted the policy of assisting education whereby they lend money to boards on long-term low-interest notes. In addition the federal government makes free grants of certain sums of money to any board which will take advantage of the opportunity. The result has been that in the last three years about 40,000 new class rooms have been built in the United States, and $500,000,000 has been spent in that connection, thereby giving employment to a hundred and one different kinds of tradesmen. Then, behind the tradesmen are the employees in the factories who are given work in making the necessary equipment.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Did the individual states controlling education show any objection to interference by the federal government?

Mr. MacNICOL: No; on the contrary, they assist. Then, although I must hurry along may I make one or two observations about what I found in connection with the installation of pure water systems. From 1,500 to 2,000 towns and cities have been assisted in obtaining pure water, and the results have been very satisfactory. Any hon. member interested in seeing a magnificent system of water purification would be well repaid if he were to inspect the system in Birmingham, Alabama. Under ordinary circumstances neither the city nor the state alone could have done the work, but with the assistance of the United States government it was done. In the whole of the water purification projects $200,000,000 have been spent.

Then, $350,000,000 have been spent in sewage disposal projects. I made a careful survey of the greatest sewage project in the world, namely that of the city of Chicago, where they have built three immense purification plants and have built a tunnel from 24 to 36 feet in diameter under the city. This tunnel is from six to eight miles long, and is placed 60 feet underground. The project provided a great number of men with work.

As another project, outside many cities and bordering canals and rivers dumps of one kind and another have been cleaned out. The best work I saw was done along the Illinois river. They are beautifying that old sewer-ridden river, and eliminating the dumps along its banks. The dumps are being changed into parks and parkettes, a procedure greatly appreciated by the people.

Next I should like to speak about hospitalization. In the United States about $130,000,000 has been spent in this connection, and about 40,000 beds have been added. Any person would be prepared to do a great deal to help those afflicted with the disease. The finest hospital, for tuberculosis, was at Secaucus, New Jersey, and the next in importance was the naval hospital in Philadelphia.

Business men have arrived at the conclusion that playgrounds are necessary, and people in the United States may be proud of the playgrounds in that country. The United States is spending $13,000,000 in the promotion of playground sport and in that way are helping to maintain the health of their citizens. The best example of this work was in Kansas City.

Then, hurrying along, may I say that I learned of about 50 slum clearance projects which are being carried on adjacent to 35 cities, and that 25,000 model homes have been erected. By these works they are providing employment and at the same time giving health, education and hospitalization to their people. I shall not take time to mention the great numbers of bridges and tunnels which have been built, but will be content by saying that in 1934 employment was provided for 700,000 men at one time. When we consider the great numbers who are behind those men, doing the work in factories, we may add at least another 500,000 to 700,000 more. That is handling relief in a big way, and I would urge upon the minister that he begin, as soon as he can, to do it, because he is sitting on a volcano, he is in the path of a cyclone, he is facing a great disaster, unless the Canadian people can be put to work. They are not being put to work by the measures offered by the present government, as was admitted when the minister spoke. A paltry few thousand of the 400,000 unemployed have found work. A considerable number have been taken on in steel plants, in the gold fields and in the nickel business, industries which are dependent on the present war scare in Europe.

May I touch upon one of the great projects which has been undertaken, namely that in the Tennessee valley. I made careful inquiry there, and in view of the recent floods in the Ohio valley, which caused damage to the extent of $500,000,000, I am glad I made the inquiries. If $500,000,000 had been spent to save the Ohio valley as has been spent in the Tennessee valley, much would have been added to the national wealth, and that $500,000,000 would not have been lost to the country. In the Tennessee valley there are seven large dams—Norris, Guntersville, Wheeler, Wilson, Pickwick, Chickamaga and Fowler—ranging in height from 72 feet to 300 feet and in length from 1,265 feet to 7,715 feet. The horse-power production ranges from a low of 66,000 to 261,000. The immense reservoirs give absolute control of the flow of water. During the recent catastrophe extending over the states of Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio, Indiana and southern Illinois, they demonstrated this absolute control.

I should like to refer to what the minister can do in the province of Ontario as a start, and then carry it on into the other provinces. Almost daily in the press we read news of floods. Here are some of the headlines:

Fifth flood this winter halts Fergus business.
Waterloo county hit and some residents forced from home.
Port Hope facing acute situation from flood waters. Grand river rises.

The towns of Hanover, Kitchener, Galt, Walkerton and many other places are in constant danger from floods. The business section of Port Hope was nearly wiped out last spring; it faced another flood this winter, and there are possibilities that it may be repeated this coming spring.

We read that the Grand river submerges roads adjacent to Galt and causes considerable destruction to adjoining farms.

In order to get a clear insight into this matter of flood control I visited the one place where they are proposing what I consider a perfect flood control plan. I refer to the state of Wisconsin. In that state is lake Winnebago, into which flow the Fox and Wolf rivers, as well as many other smaller streams. The Fox river then continues into Green bay. There are some very important municipalities in this district, such as Fond du Lac, Oshkosh and Menasha. I gave particular attention to the proposed flood control work in the vicinity of Fond du Lac, because it approximates the conditions here in Ontario. I obtained some figures from the engineers. The area to be served is 210 square miles. Bad floods occurred in 1905, 1912, 1915 and 1924. The 1924 flood cost the city $700,000. The amount of rainfall at that time was suffisient to cover the whole area 2·75 inches deep. The flow of water amounted to 1,342,000,000 cubic feet, which was sufficient to cover the 6·7 square mile area of Fond du Lac to a depth of seven feet. That is just about the depth to which it was covered at the last flood. The rainfall was equivalent to a flow of thirty cubic feet per second per square mile. The total cost of erecting the five dams necessary to provide this control and prevent a recurrence of these floods is $300,000. Five hundred and seventy men would be employed for four months.

I endeavoured to make a comparison between what had been estimated at Fond du Lac and what should be done at four or five centres in Ontario. The government engineers in Wisconsin told me that these floods are bound to recur with greater frequency and greater volume because of the deforestation of the countryside. Unless measures are taken to prevent them, there will be considerable damage to the cities and the surrounding countryside. The Moira river flows through Belleville. Its watershed is 1,038 square miles. Applying the Fond du Lac basis of figuring to this river, we find that the flood volume of flow would be 6,650,000,000 cubic feet. During the last flood damage to a total of $300,000 was incurred in the city of Belleville. It would cost $1,500,000 to build the necessary storage dams, which would provide work for four months for 2,800 men.

Coming to the Ganaraska river, which flows through Port Hope, we find that the area concerned is 90 square miles. The volume of flood water would amount to 575,000,000 cubic feet. It would cost $130,000 to provide the necessary works, which would give employment to 250 men for four months. When one looks at the little bridge on the main street of Port Hope and observes that this tremendous flow of water must pass under it, he will realize what is bound to happen. Most of the business houses on the main street of Port Hope south of the St. Lawrence hotel were flooded out. This is the type of work which should be carried on. It provides a maximum of employment and is much better than the pork-barrel stuff. Many small public buildings are being erected, but this type of work is governed largely by patronage.

I come next to the Grand river, flowing through Galt. The area of the watershed north of Galt is 1,360 square miles, and the flood volume of water 8,700,000,000 cubic feet. The cost of the necessary works would be $2,000,000, and employment would be provided for four months for 3,700 men. The Thames at London serves an area of 1,100 square miles. The flood flow would be seven billion cubic feet and the cost of the necessary works would be $1,600,000 to provide work for four months for 3,000 men. The Saugeen river at Port Elgin has a watershed of 1,565 square miles. The flood flow here is ten billion cubic feet. The cost of the necessary works would be $2,250,000 but employment would be provided for 4,000 men for four months.

Works of this kind would add millions to the national wealth of this country. I can see the minister presenting a proposition to the city of Belleville whereby this government would agree to advance $1,500,000 for the erection of necessary control works, the money to be returned on a thirty-year basis and paying such low rates of interest as the government could obtain. What a boon such a proposition would be to Belleville. They would know they would be saved from further disaster, and employment would be given to 2,800 of their unemployed for four months. These things are being done in the United States; why should we not do them?

I am sure the minister has the best of intentions but perhaps he has not sufficient background to permit him to grasp matters of this kind. I have no doubt that in time he will gather sufficient information and equip himself to accomplish these things, but I suggest to him that these are matters for engineers and business men. The minister should surround himself with a few township reeves and county engineers and men of that calibre, instead of those who know little or nothing about giving employment to unemployed men. I feel that the government is faced with a golden opportunity. As the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard said last year, the time has come when the government must provide the money with which to go on with the necessary work. Millions would be added to the national wealth by what would be saved through the avoidance of disasters, and in the meantime perhaps a hundred thousand Canadians could be put to work.

I will conclude with this thought. If Canada to-morrow had to enter a war—which God forbid; I am one who believes that he who wants war should be the first to be put in the front line, so that he may get all that is coming to him before the real, honest, wholesouled men who are gathered from all over the country have to go—this government would quickly find a hundred million dollars; it would find five hundred million dollars if it had to. Let the minister put into action those fine principles which he has long taught to classes in the old university at Kingston. He has the opportunity; let him take hold of it and provide employment for the hundreds of thousands who are out of work in this country—I believe the minister admitted that they number around 400,000. There is nothing surer than that if something is not done for these men they will make their voices heard in no uncertain way, perhaps sooner than the government anticipates.

Mr. J. A. GLEN (Marquette): I should like for a short time to address the house on the amendment. I realize that in this discussion a good deal of latitude has been allowed, but I intend to stick as rigidly as I can to the text. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) moved:

> That all the words after the word "that" in the said motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor:
> "This house regrets that the government has failed to take effective measures to deal with the problem of unemployment."

Most hon. members who have spoken have dealt with the budget rather than with the amendment. It is true that some hon. members opposite have made some reference to the amendment and have offered certain suggestions, but I think I am safe in saying that the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) who has just sat down has contributed more in the way of suggestions touching the amendment than any other speaker of his party.

[Mr. MacNicol.]

When at the end of the leader of the opposition's speech of three hours I heard the amendment moved, I was astonished, but I assumed that he felt there was nothing else he wished to amend except unemployment, because the government had done so well with all the other measures brought down in the budget. The amendment moved by the leader of the opposition appears to have been an afterthought, because I found on looking up Hansard that his speech covered forty-nine pages, or about ninety-eight columns, and that only five pages or at most eight and three quarter columns were devoted to the subject of the amendment. Of those five pages, the first column was occupied with a recital of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said in 1935; one column gave figures of unemployment during and after 1931; five and a half columns were devoted to the names and salaries of employees of the National Employment Commission, and the remaining one and a half columns were devoted to the merits of his case. When the right hon. gentleman sat down, just on the stroke of six o'clock, I was astounded at the figures as presented by him. I thought that here was an instance where bureaucracy had gone mad, that this commission had engaged such a tremendous number of employees that I expected the newspapers next day to carry headlines something like this: "Tremendous reduction in unemployment in Canada owing to the vast number of employees taken on by the National Employment Commission." It was rather a shock to me, and I wondered what the truth of the matter might be. When, during the evening, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) gave some particulars with regard to the employment of these persons, it seemed to me remarkable that the leader of the opposition, a distinguished lawyer, accustomed to the analyzing of evidence, should go so far astray as to impute to the National Employment Commission responsibility for engaging all the employees that he named. If the Minister of Labour had done nothing more than make that explanation he would, I think, have demonstrated the futility of the amendment.

I do not like to use the tu quoque argument and to say, because we are accused of a certain thing, "you yourselves did the same thing," but the leader of the opposition invited that retort, because he said that he followed the example of the opposition of the day when he was leader of the government, when the opposition moved an amendment similar in form to the one he has now moved.

I heard my genial friend the hon. member for Davenport speaking this afternoon of "extravagant futility" as being merely academic words, words used only by a college professor, but I would ask him, for he as well as any man knows the value of words, was there ever any more extravagant futility than the efforts made by the government of which he was a supporter from 1930 to 1935? When he takes this critical position with regard to all these projects, one wonders if the lessons of years have not even yet penetrated the Tory mind. For five years, animated by intentions the credit for which we are always ready to give them, the Tory government spent money for the relief of unemployment but missed entirely the essentials of the problem. To-day we find the same kind of arguments being used by the Tory protectionists, that only by providing public works and creating work through employment upon public undertakings can a solution be found. They have absolutely missed the essence of unemployment. It is extraordinary that the hon. member for Davenport should admit, as he did to-day, that unemployment is not a passing phase. Some of us would like to believe that it is, but a great many of us believe that the effects of unemployment can be considerably minimized by a proper direction of legislative policy.

The hon. member also spoke of the large sums expended in the United States, but it is conceded that they are not thereby curing unemployment. The last figures I saw showed that about 11,000,000 of their people were out of work. Will the hon. member assert that the president believes his administration is abolishing unemployment by these methods? Although great amounts have been spent, there is no apparent diminution in the numbers of unemployed.

Our Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) says frankly that the results of the efforts of the employment commission are not at this moment entirely satisfactory. No one is satisfied. But I think he has the right to take the position that this is not a mere passing phase; it is something that must necessarily involve a long period of education. I would recall to the house that during the five years the leader of the opposition was in power his government were asked to form a commission to deal with the question of unemployment, and it was stated at that time that such a commission would be appointed as soon as the Liberals regained power. They have done what they promised to do, and we are now invited to pass judgment upon what they have done.

There is no one in this house who is not willing and anxious to give the very best that is in him to cure the disease of the body economic to-day. I know that every member, whatever his party, is anxious to find a solution of it; but I wish to point out, and particularly to the members of the Conservative party, that the policies of hon. gentlemen opposite are bound to create unemployment. To-day in the old land there is a good deal of employment. But how is it created? By something which I hope is only temporary, namely, the building up of armaments. In Germany to-day there is very little unemployment, and for the same reason, the building up of armaments; and in the United States there is also a large measure of employment created by the same agency. I am submitting that the results of that policy, as exemplified in Canada, are such that we have to address ourselves to solving the problem, and I say further that no commission dealing only with the question of unemployment can possibly solve it unless they go further and deal with the causes of it.

I happened to notice in the Family Herald and Weekly Star of March 3, 1937, the comparative income taxes paid in Canada. The agrarians, representing 31·7 per cent of the population, paid in income tax $56,427; the merchants, $4,354,099; the manufacturers, $15,192,403; the financial people, $10,718,946. Here we see that the agrarians, 31·7 per cent of the population, pay $56,000 odd while the financial men pay $10,718,946. That is a disparity that is prevalent throughout the prairie part of the country, and I believe that to a large extent it is prevalent also in the maritimes. When the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) speaks of the integrity of Canada he must realize, as every one of us does, that if any member of the body is maimed the health of the whole body is impaired to that extent, and with conditions as they are in the maritimes and in the prairies, what is the reason for the present situation in this growing period of prosperity which is indicated in the budget speech? I say you cannot and will not cure unemployment simply by building public undertakings; that is only a palliative which must pass. You have to go further, and when this National Employment Commission is functioning—and it should have the right to function for some considerable time—it should deal with the disparities that prevail in the far eastern parts of the maritimes and in the middle west part of the prairies, which as we see it are not getting their share of the prosperity of Canada.

When the leader of the opposition was discussing the question of unemployment, I thought it would be interesting to find out what results might have accrued from service performed by the employment commission in relation to the strikes that have taken place in Canada in the last few years, including the time since this government have been in office. I got some figures from the Department of Labour showing the number of strikes and lockouts involving disorders, that have occurred from 1930 to 1936. Those in which riots or arrests and prosecutions occurred were reported; minor disturbances, with pickets and so on, were not included. I find that in 1930 there were five strikes and lockouts; in 1931, fifteen; in 1932, nineteen; in 1933, twenty-three; in 1934, thirty-eight; in 1935 the number began to decrease, there being only eighteen; and in 1936 there were thirteen.

I submit that if the commission has done nothing else to justify its existence, the figures I have quoted show that there has been less disorder in Canada since the Liberals took office and since this national commission has begun to operate; and I suggest that instead of doing that commission the disservice which the leader of the opposition did in his budget speech, we should all cooperate and give it every assistance. The commission should be given the confidence of parliament to go forward in a work which everyone is satisfied cannot be done in a day or a year. But apparently there is to be no cooperation from the leader of the opposition. I submit further that we have to dig and delve much deeper than the commission's functions at present allow.

The leader of the opposition said that one way of getting money was to soak the rich. I do not believe that any of us in this house is anxious to soak the rich, but some of us are really anxious to relieve the poor, and in this regard I would give a warning to the house. We in the west are sometimes met with cries of dissension and secession. Well, Abraham Lincoln once said that the union could not live half slave and half free, and I will go so far as to say that you cannot maintain this nation if you speak of it in terms of east and west. The unity of Canada depends upon that unity among us that is necessary for the survival of all. Those of us in the west who do know the circumstances believe that the agriculturists have not received their share of the plums that are given out in Canada, and when we hear the leader of the opposition making the protectionist argument again and referring to the woollen mills that may be affected by the budget, I must say that for my part it leaves me absolutely cold, because I realize that there are men in the west who are not only willing but are working and receive no pay. Moreover, I know that for a number of years past these industries have been receiving much more than they are entitled to in the way of protection. When they speak of the lack of employment, I answer that there is no unemployment on the farms of the west, nor I assume, is there any in the fisheries of the maritimes. Unfortunately, however, their returns do not make the work of these people worth while.

My plea to-day is this—and I will deal with the point further when we come to the main motion that in the endeavour to preserve the unity of Canada there must be some degree of regard for all parties. Surely the time has come, after the experience of high protectionist doctrines in the years from 1930 to 1935, when Canada should begin to try the effect of a policy of lower tariffs, and I believe that the Liberal party, following the present trend noticeable in the budgets of last year and this, is moving along lines that we in the west can support. We would like to hurry them along faster, but nevertheless we are satisfied that their direction is right. Only by dealing with the fundamentals of the economics of this country can unemployment be cured. There is only one way to cure unemployment, and that is by increasing work, and the only way you can increase work is by developing trade between nations.

I submit that the amendment proposed has no bearing on the budget speech. It was indeed a work of supererogation, and despite what was said by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey) that every man in this house could support it, I am satisfied that the large majority realize that the amendment is offered as a slight embarrassment to the government and was not intended as seriously as it was offered. For the reasons I have given I intend to vote against it.

Mr. O. B. ELLIOTT (Kindersley): In speaking to the amendment, of which much has been said, good, bad and indifferent, I wish to show a relationship between taxation and the question of unemployment. I congratulate the long suffering taxpayer, the general public, upon standing up like soldiers and being gradually annihilated as home and property owners for the sake of balancing the budget. The picture painted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) was beautifully decorative. It is like the Sunday attire of the populace attending divine service on Sunday morning, which does not in any way resemble their attire on the remaining six days of the week. The hungry of the city of Ottawa are now roaming the streets daily, begging for meals, even to the steps of the parliament buildings and sometimes into the rooms of the members—and perhaps that is the proper place to beg as long as it is necessary. The picture should show the thousands of homes annually confiscated for taxes, the exceedingly low wages paid to teachers, farm employees, labourers, intellectuals and almost every type of wage earner, with the exception of speculators in stocks and possibly on the grain exchange, and members of commissions investigating the causes of distress who sit amid comfortable and cheerful accommodations ascertaining the reasons for and the remedy to alleviate the starvation conditions of the debt-burdened people.

And we are going to attempt to balance the budget in 1939. That is if the people have any more homes to lose, if they can stand another year of an already too long life of sacrifice. What manner of imposition is this, that our people must be sacrificed on the altar of sound money and sacred finance to satisfy the golden calf that has such an insatiable appetite? Is there such urgent haste that the burden could not be spread over a few more years, and in the interim the unbearable load of taxation be reduced to permit the recuperation of the agriculturist and home owner? I was hoping that the sales tax at least would be eliminated and that taxation on property would be equitably divided between realty and liquid assets.

As an example of the present methods of taxation, the bureau of statistics shows that the national wealth of Canada in 1929 was 31,275 million dollars and that in 1935 it had shrunk to 25,768 million dollars. Ontario led the provinces with 10,655 million dollars in 1929, which dropped to 8,795 million dollars in 1935. It is calculated that of Ontario's wealth approximately five billion dollars is centered in the city of Toronto, on account of the location there of so many large banks and financial and manufacturing companies, departmental and chain stores, and rich individuals. The assessment of Toronto in 1936 was $974,277,339, of which $856,444,371 or 88 per cent is other than realty. These figures mean that realty representing 17 per cent of the wealth of Toronto pays nearly all the taxes, while the other 83 per cent is not bearing its fair share of the tax burden.

Assessment inequalities in the western provinces are even more glaring. Winnipeg reports that 93 per cent of the revenue is procured from levies on real property. We also have an increasing burden of prices for many of the necessaries of life. This morning I went to a clothing store in Ottawa and they advised me that the price of men's clothes has been increased 20 per cent. Just recently woollen goods have increased 30 per cent. In a list just received from Toronto I am advised that butts of pork, for instance, between 1935 and 1937 have increased in price from 12½ to 20 cents a pound, beef from 15 to 21 cents, sugar from 3½ to 5½ cents, potatoes from $1.50 to $2 a bag, slaked lime for building from $8 to $17 a ton. All down the list it shows a general increase in prices.

At first view it looks as though the wealthy could pay taxes perhaps easier than anyone else; just turn the money over to Canada Limited, that is all there is to it. But is that so? Perhaps the wealthy can turn the money over, but what would be turned over in reality? Canada Limited cannot consume the money, and does not keep it, but gives it to someone. Money, the wealth turned over to Canada Limited, is a rain check on the product of labour; that is, it is a ticket we all accept because it can get someone to do something for us. Two people are involved here; first, the fellow who holds the ticket, and second the fellow somewhere who is going to have the honour of working out that ticket. Taxes are paid for by the sweat of the brow of every man who labours, because they are a burden on production and can be paid only by production. If excessive—I repeat that, if excessive, they are reflected in idle factories, farms and homes sold for taxes, and hence in the hordes of the hungry tramping the streets seeking jobs and begging. Our workers may never see a tax bill, but they pay in deductions from wages, in the increased cost of what they buy, and in the cessation of employment. There is not an unemployed man or a struggling farmer whose interest in this subject is not direct and vital.

Business men do not pay taxes, and the wealthy do not pay taxes. What have the wealthy to pay taxes with? Money, real estate, stock certificates—which only tell him he has a part ownership in a fleet of steamships or a group of factories—or bonds, notes and such like which state they will pay him some money at a future date.

It seems quite clear that the sales tax must be paid by the consumer. What happens? All consumers, whether idle rich or useful people, give some coin when they go to the store for their food, clothing, supplies and so on. The storekeeper gives it to the state and the state pays it out for state expenses consisting of some useful services and much nonsense. Whoever receives it spends it for some part of what has been produced by those usefully engaged, thus taking from such citizens a part of that which is theirs. We are not fooled by bank accounts, tax receipts, wages and money; they are useful tools, but those who work feed those who do not work. To continue this obnoxious and unpopular sales tax, which is much in excess of eight per cent when it reaches the consumer, is carrying the joke too far. To extract taxes from people in the lower wage scales, as the sales tax does, is most unfair, and I protest most emphatically. When I compare the amount of sales tax, approximately $115,500,000, with the amount of the income tax, about $102,000,000, it makes me wonder why we continue to produce goods to make millionaires who then leave the country for lands of perpetual sunshine and low income taxes. We have impoverished the whole dominion to pay interest amounting to $137,405,000 to those who have command of the financial wealth of the country, and not satisfied with this tribute to wealth, during the past five years we have paid $14,556,000 as the cost of loan flotations.

The only manner in which we will regain permanent prosperity and build up a line of defence against panic and unemployment is by diverting more of these huge profits back into the building up of a national system of community industries. The real remedial policy is to give effect to the proposition that the government will have no trouble getting its money so long as the communities and the workers of the nation are prospering and making money. The warning of the minister to speculative interests is timely, but it will be unavailing. When we entrust the control and direction of legal tender and credit to individuals and corporations, values are carried up by prosperity, publicity and plenty of available credit and money. Then there is a selling out at top prices, followed by the vanishing of credit and money. There is a crash in prices and values, a panic, and unemployment, resulting in political upheaval. Then there is a buying back at bottom values and a gradual restoration of available money and credit until the time is propitious for another sale at top prices, which is followed by another cycle of panic, crashing values, distress and unemployment.

This has been the history of America for over a century. While things are on the upgrade the share of profits taken by the government may be ample, but when panic comes we pass into an era of tax sales. This is a true recital of our troubles, and this is why the control and direction of legal tender, currency and credit is the most vital factor in proper administration. The corner stone is to safeguard against any contraction of credit and legal tender. Generally speaking an asset which has no loan value has only a bankruptcy sale value. Therefore the basic financial safeguard is for the government to make legal tender or credit available to all loan demands having constructive purposes and reasonable security for repayment by instalments. This, together with a moderate handling charge, would bring in sufficient revenue to retire the whole debt of the government and the Canadian National Railways. In the Ottawa Citizen of this morning there is an item which to me conveys an exact picture of the present situation. It reads:

> Employment conditions are reported to be better in the United Kingdom than in Canada. British industrial activity is, of course, very largely due to huge expenditures on armament. Under the British defence plan, the equivalent of about five million dollars a day is being spent in the United Kingdom. According to the government's own estimated figures, this expenditure is to be kept up during the next five years at the rate of five million dollars a day on every day of the week except Sunday.
> Under this policy of sound money for armaments, British industries have moved out of depression into prosperity. Much of Canada's recovery is similarly due to expenditure on armaments everywhere among the competing nations. The governor of the Bank of Canada, Graham F. Towers, perhaps had this aspect of Canadian recovery in mind when he said at the recent annual meeting of the central bank:
> "The banker is traditionally a pessimist so that it may not be thought surprising if I express the belief that the permanency of the recovery is open to question, in view of the unsettled state of world affairs."
> Such recovery based on preparations for war is very much open to question. The nations are being led back to prosperity along the path of suicide.

Mr. ISNOR: Before the hon. member takes his seat I should like to ask him whether the increases he quoted with regard to clothing had to do with retail prices or costs.

Mr. ELLIOTT (Kindersley): Retail prices.

Mr. ISNOR: In all cases?

Mr. ELLIOTT (Kindersley): I visited a clothing store this morning and the manager told me that the general increase on men's clothing had been twenty per cent.

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member was quoting retail prices in all cases?

Mr. ELLIOTT (Kindersley): Yes.

Mr. H. W. WINKLER (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to give a few of what I consider the most important reasons why I am going to support the government and vote against the amendment. I believe the return of prosperity to this country has resulted in large measure from our trade relations with other countries, and further I believe the government has concluded with our best customer, Great Britain, a trade treaty that will facilitate the flow of trade in both directions. I consider it most important that trade should flow in both directions. It is conceded that if we are to sell abroad we must buy abroad, though this may not apply in all particulars to all commodities. In the case of nickel, for instance, we know that nowadays there is such a demand for that commodity that nations will take it at whatever price they have to pay, but with regard to raw materials generally we know that this dominion, producing such commodities in large amounts, must sell them in world markets, and the trade treaty that has been negotiated with Great Britain will increase our ability to sell abroad. As I have said, in return for selling we must buy and, as the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) pointed out this is perhaps one of the most important reasons for supporting the government at this time.

Rather than deal with the whole range of raw materials, the products of the forest, the sea, the mine and the farm, I shall content myself with discussing the products of the farm and in particular our most important commodity in the world market to-day, wheat.

With the consent of the house I should like to place on Hansard figures of wheat production and consumption in Canada for the years 1921-22 to 1935-36, inclusive, as supplied by the dominion bureau of statistics.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: If the hon. member wishes to place it on Hansard, he should read it.

Mr. WINKLER: I shall be glad to do so. The table is as follows:

Year	Production	Consumption
1921-22..	300,858,100	98,946,776
1922-23..	399,786,400	127,792,104
1923-24..	474,199,000	114,138,862
1924-25..	262,097,000	85,658,533
1925-26..	411,375,700	77,799,751
1926-27..	407,136,000	101,640,595
1927-28..	479,665,000	117,388,239
1928-29..	566,726,000	133,750,545
1929-30..	304,520,000	112,927,391
1930-31..	420,672,000	139,238,283
1931-32..	321,325,000	116,745,926
1932-33..	443,061,000	99,034,296
1933-34..	281,892,000	105,275,197
1934-35..	275,849,000	101,711,679
1935-36..	277,339,000	117,043,073

According to my own figures the average production in that fifteen year period amounted to 378,558,680 bushels and the average consumption was 109,940,750. Subtracting the consumption from the production we arrive at an average exportable surplus in that period of 268,617,930 bushels. May I mention in passing that we would require a population in the neighbourhood of 38,000,000, rather than 11,000,000, to consume all the wheat we produce. If we had a population of 38,000,000, our railway problem would probably be solved. Unfortunately this is not the case, and it is scarcely likely that many of us will live to an age when we will see so great a population in Canada. There is no doubt, however, that some time in the not too distant future it will reach that point.

With an exportable yearly surplus of over 268,000,000 bushels in the fifteen year period, it is reasonable to expect that there will be about the same production in Canada for many years to come. That in itself presents a problem. I believe it is of the utmost importance that we should have been able to conclude a trade treaty with the mother country, with its possibilities of greater trade, we taking her goods in exchange for the commodities we may sell her. Undoubtedly the trade agreement will open wider markets.

May I add a word about secondary industry? Many hon. members from the east have suggested that in many instances secondary industry has been neglected or ignored, for the benefit of the west. It seems to me that when the economic history of Canada is written much will be said as to our industry being top-heavy and archaic. May I illustrate how an industry can thrive? In my constituency a new industry has grown up as the result of the ingenuity of a young mechanic. Most agricultural implement companies manufacture what is commonly known as a grain crusher or grinder. By a very simple invention the young man in question is able to produce in a rural community, where power costs are high but where overhead and labour are comparatively low, an article that he is able to put on the market to compete with implements of a similar kind produced by some of the large implement companies. I believe the heavy industries in the east must bear in mind that if sufficient ingenuity is brought into play they need not suffer as much as they would if, for instance, they had imposed upon them conditions such as those which obtained in the drought areas of western Canada.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. OSCAR L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse) moved the second reading of Bill No. 20, to amend the Railway Act.

He said: I do not think it is necessary for me to take up much of the time of the house in explaining this bill. The bill itself is very simple. It proposes to amend one section of the Railway Act to provide that claims against the railways for damages caused by snow fences shall be taken before the board of railway commissioners instead of going through the ordinary courts. Section 203 of the act reads:

> Every railway company may, on and after the first day of November, in each year, enter into and upon any lands of His Majesty or of any person lying along the route or line of the railway, and erect and maintain snow fences thereon, subject to the payment of such land damages, if any actually suffered, as are thereafter established, in the manner provided by law with respect to such railway.
> 2. Every snow fence so erected shall be removed on or before the first day of April then next following.

Up to the present time all disputes between the railway companies and individuals with respect to damages caused by snow fences have had to be taken before the ordinary courts. This generally involves considerable expense and delay, and it was thought better to have these cases come before the board of railway commissioners. There are no costs before this board, while the costs in the courts are sometimes quite heavy. Furthermore, cases brought before the railway board are generally decided more speedily. The board of railway commissioners might be termed a poor man's court, whereas the ordinary courts are sometimes luxuries which the ordinary farmer, especially in these years of depression, cannot afford.

Very often the claims agent of a railway company scares a farmer by mentioning the possible costs involved in an action. The claims agent may suggest a sum to a farmer in settlement and then intimate that if it is not accepted the farmer may sue; but the railway will take the case to the court of appeals, then to the supreme court and even to the privy council in England.

Mr. FINN: You would have to get a fiat; you cannot sue the crown without a fiat.

Mr. BOULANGER: I think you can sue the Canadian National Railways, and certainly you can sue the Canadian Pacific Railway Company without first obtaining a fiat from the governor in council. In most cases the amount involved is not large enough to warrant going to the court of appeal, but the farmer may not know this. Quite often the farmer is scared at the possible costs if he takes his claim to court, and for this reason he sometimes settles for almost nothing. I do not blame the claims agents of the railways for doing this. Their business is to settle claims for as little as possible, but at the same time I feel the farmer should be given a chance.

At the present time most farmers have no money to go to court. Going to court is a very expensive business, especially in my province. I think it would be doing a great service for the farmers of this country if these cases were adjudicated by the board of railway commissioners instead of being sent through the ordinary channels of court litigation.

It would be quite easy for the railway board to decide these cases as there is very seldom any question of law involved. Speaking for the only province in which I have practised law, I can say that in Quebec the courts cannot award damages which have not yet been incurred. In other words, the courts can award only damages which have actually been incurred. They cannot award a farmer future damages from snow fences; he must wait until they have actually occurred. This means that the farmer must sue at least every two years as damage actions are barred after two years in the province of Quebec. It would be possible for the board of railway commissioners to fix annual damages in connection with the erection of snow fences, and thus obviate the necessity of going to court at frequent intervals.

The damages suffered by farmers located alongside railway lines have increased in recent years. In past years the railways employed ploughs and a different type of snow fence from that in use to-day. The old fence used to be a big, clumsy sawhorse affair which was erected in November, and which was soon covered with snow. It was only about seven or eight feet high and there was not a great deal of snow accumulated against the fence. But a different type of fence has come into use during the past few years. Posts from twelve to fifteen feet high are placed in the ground in the fall. Along these posts is strung a fence of slats, held together by wires. As soon as these slats are covered with snow they are pulled up on the posts to the top of the snow, and this process is repeated until the snow has reached the top of the posts. This means that more snow is accumulated and greater damage is done.

I do not think it is necessary for me to give details how this damage occurs. Accumulations of fifteen or twenty feet of snow are not unusual in my section of the country, and this means that the farmer cannot use his land in the spring. This is especially true in my own parish where the railway lines run through many vegetable gardens, strawberry patches and potato fields. These are rendered almost unusable by the accumulation of snow. That snow takes a long time to melt. Sometimes at the beginning of June there is still snow on the ground where these accumulations have gathered during the winter. That prevents the farmer from using some of the most valuable land on his farm for the cultivation of vegetables or strawberries or potatoes. Every farmer knows, of course, that these things have to be planted early in the spring, and at the latest, by the middle of May. If the ground is covered with snow and ice, or with cold water, or if it is soggy, it cannot be used; and if it is not cultivatable until June the farmer loses almost half of his crop. Potatoes planted in June do not produce as large a revenue as when they are planted in due season; everyone knows that.

For these reasons, for the purpose of providing a quick and inexpensive way of settling farmers' claims against railways due to the use of snow fences, I have presented this bill to amend the Railway Act, and I submit it to the kind consideration of the house.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the amending of the Railway Act is considered quite a serious matter. At the present time I have, I believe, some thirty submissions by railway organizations, each of them calling for an amendment to this act. I have pointed out to those organizations that, while some of the amendments they propose are non-contentious, they must await a general revision of the act. I believe that the last amendment was undertaken in 1917 and finished in 1919—nearly twenty years ago—and I think the act is due shortly for further revision.

There is another side to this particular bill, and that is that it changes the nature of the duties of the board of railway commissioners. Under the Railway Act provision is made for settlement by a method of arbitration for claims in respect of snow fences; that is, if the parties cannot agree, the local judge is brought in as arbitrator. One appeal is allowed, namely to the judge of the superior court, unless the claim is for more than $5,000. In my opinion that is a fairly simple procedure.

This bill proposes a reference to the board of railway commissioners instead of to the local judge. This would mean, I assume, either that the litigants would have to travel to Ottawa to appear before the board, or a section of the board would have to travel to the locality to hear the case. It hardly seems to me that this would be cheaper than to resort to arbitration. A note from the chairman of the board of railway commissioners states that the board has always resisted any attempt to make it a court for the settlement of claims. He points out that the board is not constituted for work of that kind. He also mentions that in 1917, when the act was last revised, an attempt was made to impose upon it duties of this kind, and that the board resisted strongly and successfully having such work assigned to it.

I regret to have to oppose this bill. It could be sent to committee for further discussion, but as I should have to oppose it there, I think the proper time for me to voice my opposition is at the moment, and I therefore ask the house to reject this bill.

Mr. R. E. FINN (Halifax): I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) who has been looking after fences in the province of Quebec. I listened also to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe), and in my opinion his answer is not satisfactory. The board of railway commissioners may not be what all of us may think they should be, but nevertheless they are in office. It may be argued that to assign them somewhat trivial duties would not be advisable, and it is clear that this does not appeal to the Minister of Transport. There are many difficulties in reference to the railway situation in Canada. In the past some measure of fairness was meted out to the various provinces, but that principle seems to have gone into oblivion; it has receded into the dark ages. We in the maritime provinces, and particularly in the province from which I come, felt when we signed the pact of confederation that we were doing something against our will. Perhaps I should speak only for myself; other members from the maritimes are here and can speak for themselves. I am neither a leader nor a follower; I am one who loves to live and learn. I say to the Minister of Transport that, in my thought, his answer to the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) was not satisfactory, and this bill should be adopted. I regret very much that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) is not here on this occasion.

When it comes to a question of damages, with all the intricacies involved in pursuing a claim, where is the farmer at? He is out in the cold icy snow of which the hon. member has just spoken. Is it to be supposed that the railway commission will be a saviour of all souls, bringing to this young Canada of ours the ideal of universal justice? I do not think the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) believes that. I see him there, his brow contracted, his hand over his face.

Mr. BENNETT: Why pick on me?

Mr. FINN: I believe he is sunk, not in iniquity, but in meditation on ideals which will make Canada a great nation.

I hope that the Minister of Transport will not impress his own views on all those around him, because if he does he will be in a whirlpool deep enough to drown him and them. What I have said comes from my heart. I love the right. Perhaps I should not be on this side of the house because I oppose the minister. I recall very well an hon. gentleman who sat on this side in 1923 and who crossed the floor and took the seat which the hon. leader of the reconstruction party occupies to-day. It was said that the ex-prime minister was dogmatic, that he was a dictator. In some respects I do not agree with that. At any rate, I say to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) that if he is going to bring anything into this house and try to push it through he will make an awful mistake, because it cannot be done.

Mr. MALCOLM McLEAN (Melfort): As seconder of the motion, I do not think I need add much to what has already been said with regard to this bill. There are one or two arguments I should like to make but at the moment I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS ACT

Mr. OSCAR L. BOULANGER (Bellechasse) moved the second reading of Bill No. 21, to amend the Government Railways Act.

He said: I considered it necessary to amend not only the general Railway Act but also the Government Railways Act, because in the section of country from which I come, which is traversed by the old Intercolonial Railway, formerly owned by the government, we are not quite sure whether the dominion Railway Act or the Government Railways Act applies.

There is still some doubt in the minds of men better trained in the law than I am and for that reason I have proposed the amendment not only of the Railway Act but also of the Government Railways Act so as to cover the ground completely, leaving no loopholes. I am interested in having claims against the old Intercolonial Railway settled to the advantage of my constituents. I hope, if it is not hoping too much, that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) will change his attitude. What I am asking is very little; it would add hardly anything to the duties of the board of railway commissioners, and would do the farmers a great deal of good. We have always claimed that our party stands for the poor people.

Mr. BENNETT: Not now.

Mr. BOULANGER: I am trying to give the government a chance to prove this by fighting the fight of the poor farmer against the big railway companies. The board of railway commissioners travels throughout the country at the present time, and these amendments would not necessitate their travelling any more. There is therefore no argument from that standpoint. They have to travel all over Canada to hear cases that come within their jurisdiction, and if we gave them jurisdiction to try these small damage actions it would not oblige them to do any more travelling nor would it give them any more work to do than they are doing to-day, while it would help the farmers and give them a chance to have claims settled against the railways in an equitable and inexpensive way. In spite of what the minister has said, I submit that these bills will serve a good purpose and should be passed.

On motion of Mr. McLean (Melfort) the debate was adjourned.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Bennett.

Hon. J. E. LAWSON (York South): I trust that the other members of this house who have spoken in this debate in support of the government will not consider me invidious if I select for some attention, two of the speeches delivered, one, that of the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) and the other, that of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers). The speech of the former was indeed entertaining and euphonious, and that of the latter a beautiful example of sophistry, yet naive. The hon. member for Huron North started off by telling us that he was a great reader of fiction, particularly of detective stories. I had always suspected that, sir, because in every campaign when I came across that consumer pamphlet of the Liberal party, of which the hon. gentleman is alleged to be the putative father, I thought he must have dwelt in the realm of fiction.

After listening to the Minister of Labour I came to the conclusion that he had probably been infected by the hon. member for Huron North and had also become a great reader of fiction. I shall return to the minister in a moment, however. The member for Huron North, referring to the speech of the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Bennett) and his amendment said of him:

> He did not perish unless a return to this house, surrounded by a rather diminished band of sometimes mute and somewhat inglorious Miltons, constitutes the act of perishing.

I admit that on many occasions those of us who sit in the Conservative group are mute; it gives us some time for thought; and as we do not have to stand in the glaring light of a self-appointed protector of the consumers of this country we have some little time for reflection. And our time for thought and reflection has thoroughly satisfied us that, at least so far as we are concerned, we cannot accept the proposal of the hon. gentleman from Huron North as a solution of the unemployment problem. In a word or two the hon. gentleman says that what we need in order to solve the problem is a reduction in the cost of manufactured or industrial commodities, and he goes on to propose that industry should be moved out to the small towns in order that cheaper production may be attained. Well, for many years prior to 1932 it has been contended by free traders that the secret of prosperity was low commodity prices. But from my reading, and as a result of our experiences in the depression years 1930 to 1932 or 1933, I think that by 1933 most of the economists even were in agreement that low prices were not a solution of the problem; that in fact what was needed was higher prices and not lower prices. Possibly, however, the Minister of Labour might desire to relegate the economists to the realm of fiction.

The hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) told of having propounded a question to a shoe merchant in a town in his riding, which the poor unfortunate shoe merchant, apparently being one of those mute and somewhat inglorious Miltons, was not able to answer. But we are not all shoe merchants. However, the hon. gentleman used the illustration that the shoe merchant in this town was a man who many years ago had been the shoemaker who made the shoes with his hands and sold them himself. And my hon. friend from Huron North cannot understand why, now that we have modern machinery to make shoes, he still has to pay the same price or a higher price for shoes than when the shoemaker made them by hand. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman will accompany me for a few minutes in the sphere of realism instead of the realm of fiction I shall make one or two suggestions for his consideration.

When the shoe merchant was a shoemaker we had an entirely different standard of living. In that day even the shoemaker's children went to school in their bare feet, in order to save shoes and stockings, as did most of the other children.

Mr. FINN: Where?

Mr. LAWSON: In the small towns and in that constituency.

Mr. FINN: Not in Halifax. Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. gentleman to name the constituency or constituencies in Canada where these conditions exist.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. LAWSON: I think I had better choose another occasion, having regard to all the circumstances, to deal with my hon. friend's question. In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, if you will be good enough to take care of the hon. member I shall try to take care of myself.

Mr. FINN: The hon. gentleman is attempting to give a second edition of his story to the public, and I ask that he retract those last words of his, because he is out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. No hon. member has the right to interrupt another member when he is speaking.

Mr. LAWSON: I was in the course of outlining some factors which enter into the cost of shoes to-day. I named one. Secondly, in the days when the shoe merchant of to-day was the shoemaker of yesterday, the shoemaker's wife probably got one new dress a year. To-day the shoe merchant's wife probably gets three or four or five or six new dresses a year. In the days when the shoe merchant was a shoemaker there were no radios, and the shoemaker probably would never have purchased one if there were, whereas to-day they are owned as a necessity, not a luxury, by all workers in the shoe factories that make the shoes which are sold by the shoe merchant. In fact, the shoe merchant of to-day probably never dreamed in the days when he was a shoemaker of owning even a horse and buggy, much less the automobile in which to-day he travels, nor did he dream of having even a second-hand Ford such as is possessed by a great majority of the workers in the shoe factories of this country to-day. What does that mean? It simply means that you cannot compare the standard of living of thirty or forty years ago with the standard of living to-day. If the hon. member for Huron North had wanted to put a reasonable proposition to the shoe merchant he might have asked him why it is that a shoe made to-day in a Canadian factory by Canadian workmen with this modern machinery is sold for less money than a shoe made by hand to-day as a custom made shoe. Subject to adjustments which undoubtedly should be made in certain industries, never let us forget that we cannot lower costs without lowering wages, and you cannot lower wages without creating more unemployment.

That in turn gives me a thought that I should like to suggest to the Minister of Labour and to this house for consideration. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) had something to say on this score during the last election campaign. In speaking at Vancouver on September 30, 1935, according to the reports in the newspapers, the right hon. gentleman set out ten points of the policy of the Liberal party. It will be noted that when the leader of the Conservative party sets out a policy he is always confronted with it as a promise, and then accused of breaking his promises. Let me suggest one point to the Minister of Labour; No. 5 set out by the present Prime Minister in Vancouver was, the democratization of industry by giving labour equal rights with capital in forming industrial policy. I should like to ask the Minister of Labour to tell us to-night what has been done towards implementing that promise and that policy. I suggest to you, sir, and to this house, that if the Minister of Labour had exercised as much effort in accomplishing the purpose declared by his leader as he has in fussing about with his employment commission he probably would have contributed a great deal more to the solution of this country's unemployment problem.

[Mr. Lawson.]

The hon. member for Huron North, again in his speech said concerning the leader of the opposition:

> Unemployment gave him his greatest victory, unemployment led to his defeat, and I think it must have been for him a supreme pleasure that he was able to return to this house and review the army of the unemployed which he and his party did so much to create.

Well sir, there may be those who disagree with the policy pursued by the Conservative party during the time they were in power for the solution of the unemployment problem. Undoubtedly there are those who will say that we did not entirely succeed. But I suggest that there are few who would accuse the Conservative party of creating the unemployment problem, having regard to the conditions prevailing in this country when we came into power, and having regard to the economic upheaval which swept the whole world at that time. The hon. member says the leader of the opposition came back to review the army of the unemployed; I should like to suggest that if the employment commission in this country appoints as many more appointees by order in council in the next nine months as it has in the last nine months, the hon. member for Huron North in his field of fiction will have the Minister of Labour going out in the uniform of a little colonel to review that army of employees of the employment commission and to accept the salute from those loyal Liberals who obtained jobs through that medium.

Now I come to the speech of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers), who dwelt at great length on the cooperation that existed between this government and the employment commission, and the cooperation this government was receiving from the provinces and municipalities. Well, sir, that language had a familiar ring, so I looked up some of the election speeches of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). Sure enough I found that on August 6, 1935, as reported in the Ottawa Citizen the Prime Minister said:

> Nationwide cooperation under a national commission in the twin tasks of administering relief and providing work for the unemployed is the policy of the Liberal party on the unemployment question.

Then, a little later, he said:

> A program of useful relief works, including slum clearance . . . public buildings, highways, level crossing elimination, preservation of historic sites and other projects was envisioned by the Liberal leader as an outlet for the energies of unemployed Canadians—

Well, Mr. Speaker, where are they all?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): To the right of Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BENNETT: The unemployed?

Mr. LAWSON: Oh, no; those to the right of the Speaker are employed. It seems to me that this session we had some hon. members of this house propose that something should be done in the way of slum clearance. The Prime Minister promised it, but have we had any legislation? Will someone please tell me what great highways have been constructed or contributed to by this government since they have been in power, in order to create employment? It seems to me that in my own province of Ontario either the minister of highways or the minister in charge of northern development has complained very bitterly in public speeches that he cannot get cooperation and assistance from this government in the matter of the construction of highways. Then there is the question of cooperation on the part of the provinces. Has this government had any cooperation from the province of Ontario with respect to the development of the St. Lawrence waterways, a project that would create an enormous amount of employment? If I can believe what I read in the daily press, the Liberal premier of Ontario not long ago loudly declaimed against this development, and I saw recently that the Prime Minister of Canada had gone to see him in order to try to assuage his feelings. That is cooperation with the provinces!

What cooperation has there been with the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, other than to provide them with money with which to pay their debts? What cooperation has there been with the municipalities? Only within the last two or three weeks a delegation representing the city of Toronto, one of the two great metropolitan centres of this country, came to Ottawa seeking cooperation in the expenditure of $400,000 for an airport in order to help establish that trans-Canada air line which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) contemplates, and to create employment. If I mistake not, the answer they received here was "Oh, we may join you, but you must get the cooperation of the province of Ontario." Then they went back to Toronto and interviewed the government of the province of Ontario, where they were informed, "Oh, we might assist you, but you must get the cooperation of the dominion government." Well, Mr. Speaker, these are both Liberal governments; these are the governments to which the Prime Minister referred during the election campaign, by means of which we were going to have a maximum of cooperation throughout this country. Yet to-day we face the fact that one of the two largest cities of Canada has in the estimates, the supplementary estimates and the special grants, a grand total of approximately $25,000 to create employment.

Mr. HOWE: If I may interrupt the hon. member for just a moment I should like to say that the information he has given the house with regard to the answer on the part of this government concerning the airport is entirely incorrect.

Mr. LAWSON: I can only say that I was present with the delegation when it was in Ottawa, and the Minister of Transport was not there.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Speaker, the delegation interviewed me, and on that occasion I gave them a very definite answer in regard to the airport. The hon. member was not with the delegation.

Mr. LAWSON: I accept the statement of the Minister of Transport. My good friend the dean of the Toronto members, who sits behind me, informs me that the delegation, consisting of the mayor and two members of the board of control, were badgered about the first day and apparently did not get to see the proper authorities. On the second day they did see the minister, and I confess that I was not there. But may I say this? If they did see the Minister of Transport, if the information I gave the house was not correct, may we have some evidence from this government before this session is over that money will be provided in order that this work may be carried on and employment afforded some of the unemployed in that great city?

We are told by the Minister of Labour that all we do is criticize, and he wants some concrete suggestions. Well, I am going to try to give him one or two, though I hope they will not be of such solid concrete that he will not be able to see through them. Why not let us get a little cooperation from the provinces in order to enact those measures of social legislation which are so badly needed and which would provide employment in this country? How well I remember the present Prime Minister going up and down this country during the last campaign appealing to the people to elect a Liberal government in Canada. In effect he said, "We have Liberal governments in almost all the provinces now, and if you elect us to power at Ottawa we will be one big family. We will all be able to get together and agree." Apparently a tremendous number of electors took him at his word. After he came to power he did call a conference; representatives of the provincial governments did come to Ottawa and they did agree, but to what? They agreed to get rid of all this social legislation by hoisting it over to the courts for opinions on hypothetical questions, instead of waiting for a concrete case that could be decided on the facts. As a result of the decision of the court it has been determined that the provinces have the power to enact legislation dealing with minimum wages and maximum hours of labour, measures which I am confident even the Minister of Labour will agree would create a great deal of employment in this country if put into force. Why not seek the co-operation of the provinces with Liberal governments, and have them enact uniform legislation in respect of these social measures? Or, in the alternative, why not get all their Liberal friends to put their feet under the table and agree to turn over to this national parliament the power to enact those measures, and deal with them by amending the British North America Act? That is one concrete suggestion which I think will make more jobs.

I fear, Mr. Speaker, that the true policy of the Liberal party was best expressed by the frank speech made this afternoon by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) in which he pointed out that in his opinion there is just one way to solve the problem, and that is to get more trade. If you get enough trade, no matter where you get it from or what price you pay for it, you will solve your employment problem. Well, that is the true Liberal policy.

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex): A good policy.

Mr. LAWSON: But how the Prime Minister has changed his tune in respect of trade, since the last election! Speaking at Victoria during the campaign he said:

"Recent increases in trade between Canada and Great Britain were not due to the Ottawa trade agreements, as Prime Minister Bennett claimed, Liberal leader Mackenzie King said here last night. They were due to a general increase in world trade, and to a slight relaxation by Mr. Bennett of the trade restrictions he, himself, had imposed." The Ottawa agreements were a mistake, Mr. King believed, because they "pegged" the intermediate tariff for a fixed term of years, and thus prevented concessions to other countries.

Well, Mr. Speaker, if the Ottawa agreements were a mistake, then the present Prime Minister I fear has blundered terribly in running over at the first opportunity to renew them. A mistake because the intermediate tariff was pegged for a term of years? Well, Mr. Speaker, by a backhand method it is just as much pegged under the new arrangement as it was under the former, with the exception of 129 items; and the only difference in terms is that instead of it being pegged for five years, it is pegged for three years. The empire trade agreements were a mistake? The policy of the Liberal party is that trade is the solution of the employment problem? and yet, Mr. Speaker, under that very agreement Canada's trade increased by $300,000,000 between 1932 and 1936.

The hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) says he wants to solve the problem by increasing the purchasing power of the farmers. May I make him a suggestion in that regard? His leader made a speech during the last campaign in which he dealt with farmers. Shall I recall what he said? I read a Canadian press dispatch appearing in the Montreal Star of October 1, 1935, in which the utterances of the Prime Minister at Calgary, speaking to the wheat growers, were reported as follows:

Farmers were just as much entitled to fixed prices for their products as labour was for fixed minimum wages.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. LAWSON: The press item continues:

Mr. King said he believed in fixing these levels for the purpose of maintaining standards of living.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Labour and their colleagues certainly fixed the wheat growers' prices, after they assumed office, and they certainly fixed them well.

Mr. GARDINER: Thirty-three cents up.

Mr. LAWSON: He fixed the prices for the wheat growers by taking away from them their participation certificates, so that they had to sell their wheat at a lower price, although it was passed out later at a much higher price by the grain speculators of western Canada. If the hon. member for Huron North wants to increase the purchasing power of Canadian farmers, then I say the wheat growers of western Canada would have had a mighty sweet increase if they had received one-half of the money made by the grain speculators under the participating certificates.

The Minister of Labour wants concrete suggestions to create employment; I shall make one or two. If you want to create jobs, give the grain growers a fair share of the ultimate price of their wheat. If you want to create jobs, give to industry a reasonable measure of protection, so that Canadian industry may have equal opportunities in competing in the home market. If you want to create jobs, then call together your friends in the provincial governments, and agree as to maximum hours and minimum wages for labour. If these things are done the minister will make a much greater contribution towards solving the unemployment problem than he will by setting up an employment commission.

For these reasons I propose to support the amendment.

Mr. C. E. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the budget and the amendment. As I study it, I am more than ever convinced that I shall support the amendment moved by the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). As one examines casually the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) it would seem that there has been an endeavour to better conditions, but when one scrutinizes his oration a little more closely, he is compelled to change his mind somewhat. I believe in the dire circumstances in which we find ourselves something greater than endeavours are necessary to alleviate conditions in which due to the depression our people find themselves to-day.

One thing upon which I should like to commend the government is the subvention on coal. If there is one thing which will assist the country I believe it is the furtherance of interprovincial trade. Alberta, from which I come, and concerning which I am more qualified to speak, is one of the greatest coal producing sections of Canada. She needs assistance to enable her to produce and deliver her coal to the east, and to compete with the provinces with which she must compete in the industry. I would go further and say that greater assistance should be given to the coal industry, not to the detriment of the eastern coal producing provinces, but to the advantage of all the provinces concerned.

I am sorry indeed to note that millions of tons of coal are shipped in from Pennsylvania, great quantities from Wales and, as was pointed out the other day, even from Germany. I do not believe it is proper to permit coal to come in from foreign countries, particularly when we are faced with an unemployment problem. The coal is permitted to come in and to compete with coal produced in our own provinces.

I do not believe tariffs will solve our difficulties. In my opinion it does not make much difference whether tariffs are high or low, so long as we do not protect the home market for our own people. Subventions, which the government is continuing, have been recommended by the party in this section of the house to which I belong. We call it a price discount; but no matter what it may be called, the principle remains the same. I believe that any industry should be assisted by bonuses or subventions if it can prove conclusively that it is in need of assistance. Under such circumstances proper assistance should be given to it.

I should like now to refer to page 1213 of Hansard where the minister refers to the wheat situation in the following language:

> With regard to wheat, the 1936 yield was about 52·7 million bushels below that of 1935, and was the smallest crop since 1919. Drought conditions again played havoc in certain areas, destroying crops completely in some districts and reducing to meagre levels the yield in others. In spite of the smaller 1936 yield, however, the value of this crop was substantially above the value of the 1935 crop due to greatly enhanced prices, which are again reaching levels which promise more profitable and stable conditions for the western farmer.

I am glad he put in the words, "which promise." I admit that there is some degree of correctness in that statement, but from the farmer's standpoint it is absolutely untrue. The farmers of western Canada have been living on promises so long that they will not be able to carry on much longer. There is an impression among certain members of this house, as well as throughout eastern Canada, that the western farmer has benefited greatly by the rise in the price of wheat. Those of us who live in the west know only too well that the farmer never receives the top price for his wheat. His financial condition generally forces him to sell his wheat in the fall when the price is at the lowest point. It is not he who makes the profit out of the wheat, it is men, such as the one referred to the other day by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), who make profits of half a million dollars out of wheat operations.

Mr. GARDINER: Can the member tell me who is that individual who made half a million dollars?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I do not believe the man's name was mentioned, and I think it was proper that it was not.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the hon. member think it is fair to make a statement of that kind and thus imply that any one of the many grain dealers in Canada might have made a profit of that amount?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I think the hon. gentleman is quite correct. There are many others who have made tremendous profits. When you consider the price at which the average western farmer was forced to market his wheat and the price at which it sold on the world market, you can realize the tremendous fortunes which have been made.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it not true that the wheat pool handled 47 per cent of the wheat, and that the pool is organized by the farmers?

Mr. BENNETT: What has that to do with it?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I do not know whether that is true of this year, but I do know that the farmers of the west never made any huge profits out of wheat. As has just been suggested to me, the wheat pool is not operating this year.

Mr. BENNETT: It operates as a line company.

Mr. GARDINER: It is not operating as a wheat pool, but they are buying grain the same as any other grain company. The elevators are owned by the farmers.

Mr. BENNETT: They are owned by the pool.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): As I said before, because of financial difficulties caused by the orthodox system under which we work, the farmer is compelled to sell his wheat in the early fall and he does not get the top price. It is the speculator working through the grain exchange who buys at the low figure and sells at $1.30 a bushel. Had these farmers been given participation certificates they could have shared in the profits made. The farmers would have been in a much better position, and such a step would have gone a long way towards solving our unemployment problem. I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) pointed out quite clearly that the farmers have not been getting a sufficient share of the profit. At page 1213 of Hansard he is reported as follows:

> Since that time, however, prices have greatly improved, particularly in the past year, and by the end of 1936 this index had moved up to 32·4 of the 1926 level. While prices of things which the farmer sells have been moving upward, there has been relatively little change in the prices of things which he buys. In fact, taking 1926 prices as equal to 100, we find the retail price index in December, 1936, standing at 81·8, while, as noted above, prices of agricultural products had reached the 82.4 level after a rapid rise in the last few months of the year. At the end of 1936, therefore, the farmer's relative position, as far as prices were concerned, was slightly better than in 1926. Wide disparity between prices of primary and finished products is perhaps the most significant feature of what we call a depression, and it is greatly to be hoped that this approximate parity between agricultural and other prices can be maintained.

It certainly is greatly to be hoped that this approximate parity between agricultural and other prices can be maintained. These figures show that the position of the farmer in 1936 is approximately 20 per cent below what it was in 1926. How do you expect the farmers of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba to meet their present obligations when they must produce approximately 20 per cent more to meet those obligations? Had the government been a little more considerate and permitted the farmers to have these participation certificates, the farmers would have been much better off. This is one more instance of how the west has been discriminated against. There certainly has been an increase in business, but I would not say that has benefited the western farmer.

There is one other question I should like to deal with before I sit down. This is something of which we have heard a great deal in this house, but it is always referred to very guardedly. I have in mind the financial position of certain of the western provinces. I do not mean to be sarcastic when I say that this question is treated much too lightly; it is more serious than many of us realize, and the results may be more disastrous than we expect. During the last two or three weeks I have received many letters protesting against what is considered the discriminatory attitude of this government towards the west. I should like to read one letter which I received only to-day, and which is a sample of the many I have received lately. This will give the house some idea of what the people in western Canada are thinking. I might mention that I have received letters from Saskatchewan, Manitoba, British Columbia as well as from Alberta. The following was received from Alberta:

> At a regular meeting held by the above group, the following resolution was made and carried:
> "That this group go on record protesting the obvious discrimination shown by the federal government against Alberta in regards to financial and relief matters."

I do not think there is any doubt, at least in the minds of many people in the western provinces, that there has been discrimination shown by this government.

If this idea prevails widely, it may result in very grave consequences. In regard to this particular question I wish to quote from Hansard, page 1214:

> It is unfortunately true, however, that the financial position of several of our provincial governments is such that they are unable to take advantage of prevailing low interest rates in order either to reduce their fixed charges by refunding outstanding debt or to obtain new funds for relief or other expenditures. Despite drastic efforts to reduce expenditures and increase taxes, and despite a long record of honourable dealing——with their creditors, they have been unable either to balance their budgets or to have recourse to the investment market for the funds necessary to meet their commitments.

I hope that remark was made in all seriousness, and I believe it was.

This is a problem to which the government has given the most serious and unremitting attention since the day it assumed office. I need not recount the efforts which were made last year to find a solution. The plan then evolved which would have made low rates available to the provinces as a result of dominion assistance under appropriate safeguards, proved unacceptable in several quarters. The acute stage which the problem has reached in Manitoba and Saskatchewan during the recent past led the government to make the decision which was announced by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to the house last week.

The question is being asked, and I think rightly, why is Alberta being discriminated against? Manitoba and Saskatchewan were assisted by this government, but Alberta was not.

Mr. FINN: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): The question that arises in the minds—

Mr. FINN: The hon. member cannot introduce into debate something that has been said in a previous session. That is the reason for my remark.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Alberta was forced—

Mr. FINN: Was it something he said this year or last year?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): The fact that the other two provinces were not permitted to default—

Mr. FINN: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member must say whether he is quoting from a speech of the Prime Minister last year or this year.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I ask that the hon. member be requested to refrain from interrupting.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I draw the attention of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Finn) to the fact that when a member is attending a sitting of the house he must not talk loudly and he must not interrupt any member who has the floor by disorderly noises or in any other manner. I do not think there is any point of order.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): The fact that the other two western provinces were assisted would lead people to believe that Alberta was discriminated against. Whether intentionally or not is not the point at issue. But I think it is quite obvious that that is one of the circumstances which have led the people to believe that there was gross discrimination. A moment ago I read one of the many resolutions in that regard that I have received. Not only are the people as individuals in the three prairie provinces, and in British Columbia also, discussing this question, but the press is taking it up. The other day I cut out an article in a western paper, the Calgary Albertan of Saturday, February 20, 1937, entitled, very appropriately, An Ace in the Hole:

The great oil resources of this province have proved to be Alberta's ace in the hole. For the benefit of the uninformed it may be explained that an ace in the hole is an unexposed playing card of that rank which, in a stud poker game, often comes in handy. Recent developments in Turner Valley should convince all people that if there is one part of Canada which has the assets on which credit may be properly and safely founded that place is Alberta.

Neither the scolding nor the sophistries of the financial spokesmen, journalistic and otherwise, can obscure that fact. There is no doubt that at the time Alberta requested aid from the dominion government for the purpose of paying interest and avoiding default this province was entitled to assistance both as a matter of business and as a matter of equity.

I should like to emphasize that—"as a matter of business and as a matter of equity."

It could not and cannot be seriously asserted that the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba are entitled to better treatment than Alberta from the standpoint of possession of assets. These are the firmest bases for credit.

But someone is sure to say that Alberta has been discriminated against because of its Social Credit government. That is doubtless stating the true situation. But it only makes the discrimination more shockingly unjust. If a government is to be penalized because it is engaged in an earnest and honest endeavour—

And in the minister's budget speech he said they had made an honest attempt:

—to restore hope and prosperity to Alberta, then it is none too soon to let all men know it.

It is refreshing to note that Right Honourable R. B. Bennett has publicly stated that Alberta has been discriminated against. The Albertan may not agree with all or many of Mr. Bennett's ideas, but we hasten to admit that on more than one occasion it has been constrained to admire his trong sense of justice. It cannot be said that Mr. Bennett is a Social Crediter, or at least he has not yet indicated it. But he objects, as many others do, to Alberta receiving unfair treatment because it turned out a government of which it was thoroughly weary and supplanted it overwhelmingly with a new one.

All Albertans believe that Alberta should have fair play.

That is all they ask, Mr. Speaker, that Alberta be fairly treated; and the people are determined that they shall get at least justice.

From the point of view of the assets of the province of Alberta there should be no doubt in the mind of anyone that that province should be given greater assistance than any other in the dominion. Alberta is one of the leading wheat producing provinces, one of the leading coal producing provinces, and the dominion's leading oil producing province; I will go further, and say that her actual and potential oil production is the greatest in the British Empire. That asset alone in time of war, as to which we are all so greatly concerned, should make it important to every member of parliament and every Canadian citizen that assistance be given for the development of that industry. I am told by very well informed men that financial institutions in eastern Canada are seriously hindering or endeavouring to hinder its progress.

Some may say that it is because Alberta has a Social Credit government; in fact some hon. members have already said so. I refer hon. members to page 985 of Hansard, to a statement made by the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh). For the sake of continuity I will read the preceding paragraph:

> Mr. Bennett: If the hon. gentleman will permit me, that statement happens to be inaccurate—although I am bound to accept it—Alberta was driven to default, and people holding its bonds have in some cases been practically ruined because of the inability of that province to pay. The Minister of Finance would not help Alberta although it asked for help, and now the other two provinces are to be helped.

Then the hon. member for North Battleford said:

> In answer to the statement made by the leader of the opposition I would say that if Alberta is seeing evil days financially and industrially the fault does not lie with the dominion government, the finance minister, or the Prime Minister of this country. It lies very largely with Alberta, headed by the government existing in that province at the present time.

That is the impression which is being given. We in Canada take pride in our democracy; our government is elected by the people. I say, therefore, that any dominion government that discriminates against a particular province because of its government, a government elected by the people of that province, takes an altogether wrong attitude, and the people of the west are resenting it most strenuously. Surely the time has come for us to take a broader view of things than the view which this government has taken of the situation in Alberta. When hon. members get up and defend the attitude of the government it is time for us to consider the question seriously. The people of Alberta elected their government by an overwhelming majority, one of the largest in history. They were not to blame for the debt that was created by other governments. I do not necessarily suggest that the other governments created that debt intentionally; nevertheless that was the condition of the province when they were in power. The present government of Alberta was elected by the people to help them and that is what that government is doing, and the people of that province are more determined than ever, and justly so, to see that they get fair play.

Mr. NORMAN J. M. LOCKHART (Lincoln): I desire at this time to make a few general observations on the amendment before the house. First may I refer in part to a statement I made last year when I opposed the appointment of the National Employment Commission. I opposed it then and I still oppose it in principle to-day, especially when its accomplishments have been reviewed and the matter has been fully considered. In part I said at that time: We have a bill before us which has for its purpose the setting up of a national employment commission. What purpose can be served when we consider the dire necessity that faces many of our Canadian citizens? What is this commission to do? Is it to review the statistics already compiled by one authority or another, or is it just another way of spending money to no good purpose?

My claim was that the urgent need of the day was to protect the lives and ideals of our Canadian people. That need is even greater to-day than it was at that time. The generation of young voters that has come into being, those who voted in 1935, are still talking about the conspicuous posters that were emblazoned across Canada, and I frequently hear them referring to one in particular. It has often been referred to in this house, the one we were all particularly interested in, which predicted the beneficial effects that would come from voting for the Liberal party—"Vote Liberal and End Unemployment."

It has often been said here that unemployment is a question of paramount importance; that has been acknowledged by the Prime Minister and every member of the house. Challenges have been made to the leader of the government (Mr. Mackenzie King), and when I pointed out last year what the government had promised, hon. members across the floor said "hear, hear" and declared that the promise that had been made would be carried out. I ask now, to what extent has that promise been fulfilled? Someone may say at once, "Has there not been an increase in the number of those absorbed into industry?" Very true; I agree that there has been, but it has been only to a very small extent. I am quite sure the statistics will bear out that statement. We find, however, that as a whole throughout Canada unemployment has increased by approximately 100,000.

Let us turn to the increase in trade with Great Britain since 1932. That was a definite accomplishment of the late government, and a statement of this remarkable increase has already been placed on Hansard. Every newspaper in the country has been lauding the efforts and accomplishments of the late government and there is no need to repeat it here. Our home markets were preserved and with slowly improving world conditions Canada was enjoying her full measure of that prosperity, perhaps even greater than any other nation in proportion to population. To-day, however, young Canadians are asking all the time when they may expect a fuller measure of the benefits from that growth of trade. But, I repeat, unemployment is on the increase. These young Canadians, young voters of whom I have spoken, continue to point to the subsidies that are being given by the government to steamship companies, railways, western farmers, and in many other directions. Many of them are very worthy, but the younger generation can scarcely understand the vast subsidies that are being given, and they ask, and rightly so, "When are the wage earners to be given their just share and to find a greater demand for their labours?" Surely this is a pertinent question to-day when we are spending millions in various ways. There is apparently a tendency to spend money easily and that is something that perplexes the youth of 1937.

It has been pointed out clearly in this house that after the western farmer has been aided in the purchase of fine seed grain, and in many other ways, he has been deprived of his rightful share of the increasing profits from the wheat he has grown. This government has so manipulated the sale of the farmer's wheat that he has never realized on the increased prices paid in foreign markets, these profits having found their way into the pockets of private speculators. That statement also is spread on Hansard in detail, and I do not intend to enlarge upon it. At any rate I do not hear from hon. members any contradiction of the statement that on the whole the struggling farmer was sold out, whereas we do hear a good deal about the private interests. In all the newspapers, both from the west and from the east, we are told how the farmers' wheat was sold at a sacrifice, the profits going into other private pockets, through what might be called illegitimate channels.

Is that a good way to get the confidence of the Canadian people, and particularly the younger generation, who are perturbed in many ways and wondering what this is all about? Is it not playing into the hands of the disturbing influences that we have heard so much about and the many elements which we are told are undermining the very democracy of which we are proud. Is it not undermining the ideals and ambitions of our young Canada? Only this week I received a strong protest from a young Canadian farmer in Saskatchewan who was formerly in my employ. I quote this as an illustration of how this may work out in practice.

He was a keen and ambitious young man; he served overseas for four years and was one of the few who came back unmarked. He decided to take up a quarter section in Saskatchewan, of land allotted to returned soldiers who qualified. He pioneered, as those we have heard so much about in the early days. I have often heard the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) speak of the pioneer days of the west. This young man went through similar experiences. He lived in a shack built by his own hands; for several years he laboured early and late; he saved his money, bought more land, and built himself a small comfortable farmer's home. He married and has a small family. Along with thousands more he was obliged to sacrifice his wheat, which went into the hands of private speculators who, assisted by the present government, were in a position to capitalize on the farmer's necessities. He did not realize enough from his grain to keep solvent, and this week I have received a letter saying that he has given up in despair and intends to move as soon as he can gather his few belongings together, to the United States and start anew. Another good Canadian gone, broken in spirit. Is it any wonder he writes in bitter condemnation of being sold out and his just earnings diverted into private hands? It takes a lot of courage and conviction for a young man to retain his morale after going through such an experience and coming out at the short end.

I think this whole position was very clearly dealt with by the leader of the opposition, and I have not heard anyone contradict the statements he made in moving his amendment. People talk of immigration, when we blot out the lives almost of Canadians who have pioneered and who have a right to a place in Canadian life. I lay such instances at the door of the present government, and I venture to say that many hon. members could testify to experiences of that kind. There is surely a day of reckoning coming, if we deal with young Canadian life in that manner.

I again remind the government that unemployment is the paramount question of the day. We hear rumours of relief camps being again established. Surely with improving conditions we are not going back to the distress of those former days! Surely two years of study of unemployment by duplicating statistical departments should have convinced any government by this time that the amount of money already spent by the National Employment Commission is spent to no advantage. It provides merely a duplication of statistical records. Our young Canadian manhood and womanhood are sick and tired of statistics. Their whole cry is that they want work, and more work, pay envelopes and more pay envelopes. No wonder they are cynical when they discuss the present home improvement plan.

I had the privilege recently of being asked to act on the executive in connection with the administration of this plan. It is a worthy piece of legislation; I am quite satisfied it is good legislation, and I heartily endorse this effort of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning). On the other hand, how can a man without a job apply to any lending institution for a loan of a paltry few hundred dollars to repair his home when the first qualification he must have is a job? No wonder he is critical. No wonder at times these young people come to us and scoff.

In the presentation of the Canada-United Kingdom trade agreement I consider that too much stress is laid on foreign trade, and that our home markets are being overlooked. Scores of small towns and urban municipalities are dependent on small industries such as textiles, which produce steady pay-rolls for their people. Surely it is apparent that reduced protection to this industry will have far-reaching effects. Recent inquiries have revealed that many textile mills are even now finding it difficult to carry on. If their home markets are further invaded one of two results is bound to follow; either wages will be reduced and the standard of living be lowered, or many of these mills will go out of business. Canada has seen this happen before.

The fabricated steel industry of this country should also be better protected. I have some knowledge of that industry, although not engaged in it myself. Why can we not help this industry to expand in Canada, instead of passing prohibitory measures which only curtail its operations?

[Mr. Lockhart.]

The Minister of Finance is to be commended for his efforts to reestablish the building trades and increase employment in that direction. I think, however, that his estimate of the proportion of labour employed in the building trades and in the manufacture of building material was considerably lower than is actually the case. The production of steel in all its forms should be one of our largest secondary industries. It plays a most important part in the construction of homes and buildings of the larger types. Sheet metal could and should be manufactured in Canada, and no restraint should be placed on production of this kind.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I am in favour of expansion of our foreign markets providing that is not done at the expense of our home markets and our basic and secondary industries. Nations can change their foreign policies overnight, as we have seen happen so often in the past. We do not want to wake up some morning and find that our home markets have been sacrificed, but I am definitely of the opinion that this is being done by the lower protection that is proposed.

I strongly criticize the apparent neglect by the government of the unemployment situation which exists in Canada, and the apparent decrease in opportunities for employment. I heartily endorse the amendment proposed by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), and I think hon. members would be well advised to consider the far reaching effects of the lower protection that is being afforded our basic and secondary industries. I feel that the youth of the country are disappointed because they realize the possibility that our home markets will be invaded and their chances of securing employment thereby be lessened instead of increased. I hope many hon. members on the government side will express themselves on this question, because I know there are those in the house who have had the same experiences I have had, and we all hope that our industries and our citizens will be protected to the fullest possible extent.

Mr. W. A. TUCKER (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the address of the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) in the course of which he moved an amendment to the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning). When the right hon. gentleman moved that amendment I had the feeling that probably he did not think he was quite doing justice to the government. At that time he knew that the only real policy he attempted to apply in the solution of the problem of unemployment was that of raising tariffs, and he knew that policy had failed. He knew that he had spent five years in endeavouring to cure unemployment in Canada, and he knew that only sixteen months had passed during which this government had an opportunity of applying its policies. He knew very well that it takes time to get policies in operation and more time for them to have the ultimate effect expected. So I have no doubt that when the right hon. gentleman moved his amendment he realized that it was really too early to condemn a government which had been in power only sixteen months, when he had failed after five years.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend more or less attempted to justify himself by saying, in effect: "I am moving this amendment because it is the same amendment with which I was met when I was at the head of the government." I submit that moving a motion such as this when the policies which you are condemning are failing is very different from moving a similar motion when apparently those policies are succeeding. So it seemed to me that the right hon. leader of the opposition felt that perhaps he was not doing just the right thing by the present government in moving his amendment.

In that connection, and especially in view of the remarks of the preceding speaker (Mr. Lockhart), I think it is only fair to go back to the figures disclosed by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) in his speech on this amendment. According to the right hon. leader of the opposition the number of unemployed in this country when he assumed office was 117,000. When he left office there were 435,000 unemployed, but in October last that number had been reduced to 392,000. In other words, there has been a reduction since this government has been in office. I was glad that the Minister of Labour did not pretend to be satisfied with what had been accomplished, but merely said that the improvement was such as to give hope and confidence. As far as this country is concerned I think it feels that since coming into office the present government has applied itself unremittingly and faithfully to the solution of the various problems confronting it, and I think the country at large really feels that more has been accomplished by this government in sixteen months than was accomplished in a similar time by any other government that occupied the treasury benches of this country since confederation. When I say that I do not pretend that I agree with all that has been done by this government.

Mr. BENNETT: Its monetary policy, for instance.

Mr. TUCKER: No, and I am glad the right hon. gentleman mentioned that. But I do not think he would pretend that when he was a young private member in this House of Commons, supporting his leader, he agreed with all the policies of the government of that time. But that did not prevent the right hon. gentleman from consistently supporting that government because on the whole he thought it was the best government for the country.

Mr. BENNETT: I voted against them, though.

Mr. TUCKER: The right hon. gentleman says he voted against the government at times. Perhaps I may do the same thing if my conscience compels me to do so. No, Mr. Speaker; as I say, it may be that in some matters I should have liked to see the government adopt different policies or go further in certain directions, but I do not believe that anyone should expect any government to do everything that each private member would like it to do. After all, Mr. Speaker, all any member can expect of any government is that on the whole it should be doing, as he thinks, fairly well, making as few mistakes as a government can be expected to make.

A great deal has been said, for example, in regard to what the government has done concerning wheat. I know many hon. members who have had a good deal to say about wheat who had nothing to say when the western farmer was selling his wheat for 21 cents a bushel. But to-day, when the farmer is getting over a dollar a bushel, these members are weeping crocodile tears over his plight. The people of this country and the farmers take note of these things, and they are not misled by this late concern for their interests. They do not forget all that has happened since 1930. I will deal with the government's wheat marketing policy later on.

The hon. member who just spoke, together with many of those who have taken part in the debate on behalf of the official opposition, suggested that by the small tariff reductions being made by this government the home market was in some way not being preserved, so that unemployment will be increased.

Since it has been incorporated, the Dominion Textile Company has made on an average 97 per cent on the investment in its common shares. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if the Dominion Textile Company had been forced by lower tariffs, and the competition it would have had to face on account of lower tariffs, to charge less for the goods which it produced, would it not have sold more of those goods, and would it not have promoted more employment as a result? Would it not have been better if the Dominion Textile Company had sold its goods cheaper, and sold perhaps twice as much to the people who needed the goods, instead of making 97 per cent profit for the promoters, on the common shares? Would it not have been better if it had distributed some of those millions of dollars to the working people of this country, about whom the official opposition pretend to be so much concerned?

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman had not made his last observation I would not have risen to a point of order, but I must point out that this matter is now before a royal commission which has not yet made a report. We have scrupulously refrained from any references to it until the report is made. The rules seem to be reasonably clear with respect to royal commissions, but if the hon. member desires to pursue it in that way, then I am bound to raise the point of order.

Mr. TUCKER: I should like the right hon. gentleman to state the rule which prevents anything being said in this house on any question of fiscal policy just because a commission is investigating it. If he can state any such rule, I shall be surprised.

An hon. MEMBER: What about wheat?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: On the point of order raised by the right hon. leader of the opposition, may I say that all through the debate a very wide latitude has been allowed. Hon. members from all parts of the house and belonging to all parties may have been out of order in the wide latitude they have taken. I do not think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. BENNETT: I only directed attention to the fact that on the budget the widest possible latitude is given to all speakers who deal with any problems affecting the welfare of the country as they see it; but the rule with respect to committees is laid down, and the same rule has been followed with respect to royal commissions. I only mention it; but it is not important at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I think the right hon. gentleman is correct. The same rule would apply to a discussion of the wheat situation, which is under royal commission investigation at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: The royal commission on wheat is not taking evidence; in order to provide a job in perpetuity, apparently, the judge has been permitted to go on with other work.

[Mr. Tucker.]

Mr. GARDINER: I think the hon. gentleman is entirely wrong. The wheat commission has taken evidence on other matters besides barley; they have taken evidence on wheat.

Mr. BENNETT: Very little.

Mr. TUCKER: I had completed the remarks I had intended to make on that branch of the subject; but I am quite interested to see that the right hon. the leader of the opposition feels as he does about the textiles matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, that is an inference which I cannot permit the hon. member to make. I have not expressed any opinion with respect to the textiles matter, and I expect the hon. member to withdraw any implication of that character. The time will come when we will express our opinions upon that, and my views will then be known. I have expressed none so far.

Mr. TUCKER: I meant no unfair implication; I took it that he felt that the unjustifiable profits of the Dominion Textile Company were exorbitant, and that he hated to have them brought up at this time.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course, that makes it only so much worse.

Mr. TUCKER: May I say that this has been the second budget speech to which I have had the opportunity to listen. I felt it was a most complete review of the financial situation of Canada and most understandable to any person even one who is not an expert in financial matters.

I was particularly pleased with the introduction of pensions for the blind. I felt that it was altogether fitting that an administration headed by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) should have introduced such a system, in view of the fact that it was his administration which introduced the system of old age pensions. I notice that in the appropriations for the Old Age Pensions Act the estimated expenditures for the next fiscal year are placed at $22,500,000, which means that apparently it is expected there will be at least 112,000 old people who will benefit by the act in the coming year. Knowing of some of the suffering that prevails now and has prevailed during the last five or six years I think every hon. member must have been grateful on many occasions to know that an Old Age Pensions Act is in force, and has been in force during those years of suffering and hardship. I believe one of the things for which the present Prime Minister will be gratefully remembered is that he introduced in this Parliament one of the first measures providing for social security for those unable to take care of themselves. I have no doubt that already many thousands of old people have gone to their last reward, having enjoyed a much happier evening of life than they would have but for the action of the administration headed by the present Prime Minister in establishing a system of Old Age Pensions.

Similarly, in connection with pensions for the blind, supported as they were by all parties, I am sure every hon. member was delighted that it was deemed possible to introduce the measure at this session. Presumably it will benefit at least 2,000 people who, after all, have enough handicaps to face without having the extra one of not being sure of at least a bare subsistence.

I do not intend now to discuss in detail schedules in the budget, but there is one point which strikes me and it is this, that while not destroying a reasonable amount of protection (and many will still regard as unreasonable the protection left—the protection is still so high that even the official opposition should regard it as reasonable) by introducing a certain amount of competition from old country textiles, the textile people in Canada will be forced to reduce their prices so that people who have just come through the depression will be able to buy more goods, thereby increasing the general wellbeing of the poor people of Canada. Employment will be increased, and no one, with the exception of those people who have had exorbitant profits in the past, will be injured.

How anybody can condemn a budget like that is more than I can understand. The only condemnation that I would have of it is that it leaves far too much protection for those people who to-day, we are told, are going to be forced to the wall because they cannot get along with a thirty per cent protection. I submit that if there is an industry in Canada that has to have a protection of thirty per cent or more in order to exist, it is uneconomical and an absolute burden to Canada. It would be a great deal better if the capital invested in that industry were put into another industry economically sound, one which would provide more labour, and contribute to the general well being.

To find out how the tariff actually works out I looked into a few items, one of which was blankets. On December 30, 1936, a shipment of blankets weighing 1,226 pounds and worth $590, entered this country. The tariff was 22½ per cent less 10 per cent if the goods came through empire ports, so the ad valorem duty was $119.48. There was a specific duty of 10 cents per pound, less 10 per cent, which amounted to $110.34 on these blankets. This meant that this shipment of blankets worth $590 paid a duty of $229.82, or 39 per cent upon an ad valorem basis. Under the new tariff the ad valorem rate is 20 per cent, less 10 per cent, which amounts to $106.20. The specific rate is 5 cents per pound, less 10 per cent, which amounts to $55.17, or a total of $161.37. Worked out on an ad valorem basis, this amounts to 27·35 per cent. In other words, the tariff on blankets has been reduced from 39 to 27·35 per cent.

For every $100 worth of blankets, the manufacturers in this country can still charge $127. They can charge $27 more than would be charged if there was no tariff. I submit that in connection with a necessity like blankets, if the manufacturer in this country is not able to function with the natural tariff imposed by the cost of shipping the goods from another country, plus this 27 per cent, then the industry should not exist. Anything beyond that is too much of a burden upon the consuming people of this country, especially in connection with a necessity like blankets.

Let me refer to a shipment of five dozen woollen socks, valued at $8, which came in on November 7, 1936. The duty was 30 per cent ad valorem, less 10 per cent, which amounted to $2.16. The specific duty was 75 cents per dozen, less 10 per cent, which amounted to $3.38. The total duty on those $8 worth of socks under the old tariff was $5.54. Under the new budget, the ad valorem rate will be 20 per cent, less 10 per cent, or $1.44. The specific rate will be 30 cents per dozen, less 10 per cent, or $1.35. This makes a total duty of $2.79. Worked out on an ad valorem basis, the previous duty was 69 per cent, a rather high duty on an article which is absolutely necessary in this country. This is the sort of duty that was imposed in order that our textile barons could make almost 100 per cent on their money. Under the new tariff the ad valorem rate is 34·87 per cent. When my friends of the opposition cry out because a duty is too low at 34·87 per cent, I wonder how much they really care about the consumers of this country. If they were saying that that duty was too high, that it should be lowered still more in order that more goods might be bought and employment increased, then I might be able to sympathize with them in their argument. But when they condemn the budget because prices are going to be reduced and employment increased, and then move an amendment to the effect that the government is not curing unemployment fast enough, I cannot follow their reasoning.

There is another matter in connection with the budget to which I should like to refer. It should not be forgotten that when the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) came into power in 1930 Great Britain was still a free trade country. He went over to England and suggested that that country should change its tariff policy and give a preference to Canadian goods by putting on a tariff against foreign goods. That suggestion was treated with scorn by the government of that day in Great Britain. The leader of the opposition then suggested that Great Britain might be at the parting of the ways. There was a hint there; and then that if England did not adopt the tariff policy which the right hon. gentleman, then Prime Minister of this country, suggested to them, it might not be so good for trade relations within the empire.

The British people listened to the opinion of that eminent statesman, and who knows but what that opinion may have had something to do with causing England to be no longer a free trade country. England became a protectionist country when she adopted the policy suggested by the leader of the opposition. In fact, I believe the party of which he is the head took a great deal of credit to themselves because for the first time in history we had a market open to us in Great Britain which was closed to other countries by means of a tariff.

Mr. BENNETT: Not closed.

Mr. TUCKER: Partially closed by a tariff. They took credit for that situation, but I ask you: Was it something for which they should take credit? What was the situation? The farmers of Great Britain obtained a certain amount of protection against the foodstuffs of foreign countries, but they obtained none against the food products of the dominions. What was the attitude of the farmers in Great Britain? It must be known to every member of this house that the farmers began to take the attitude that as British manufacturers were protected, they the farmers, should also be protected against empire as well as foreign food products. They contended that as the dominions had put on a tariff against the main products of Great Britain they should have a tariff against the food products of the dominions. Our right to free access to the British market was endangered, and always will be endangered while England is on that basis. For the first time she was no longer a free trade country.

The same thing was true when the present government came to negotiate the new treaty. The people of the United Kingdom began to realize that through the Ottawa agreements we had increased our sales tremendously in the United Kingdom, but we had not given them entry to our market to nearly the same extent. The argument was used that if Canada was going to deal on that unfair basis, then they wanted protection against the food products of Canada. They began to argue for protection against Canadian hams, bacon and wheat to the same extent as they were protected against the food products of foreign countries.

I do not think there is any doubt that if we are not very careful we may lose our preference in that great market. Why? Because of the very thing over which the official opposition boasted, that they had got England to adopt a different fiscal policy. What was this government faced with? They had to go to England and say to the British government: We will give you concessions in order that you may be able to justify your not protecting your own farmers against our food products. The farmers of Great Britain contended that if the manufacturers of that country were protected, they should also be protected. I presume it was pretty hard for the government of Great Britain to deny a certain measure of protection to their farmers. Therefore, we had to offer a much better deal to the British government than that held out by the right hon. leader of the opposition.

But we profit by that deal. If we lower the tariff on goods coming into this country, prices are lowered to the consumers. It means that more of those goods will be purchased. If there remains some protection to the producers of these goods, it means that more will be made and sold in this country, and the result will be that we shall have benefited in several ways, by preserving our markets in Great Britain, by increasing employment at home, and by enlarging our ability to enjoy more of the goods upon which these tariffs are lowered. That is the situation in regard to the tariff as I see it. There is no doubt that the agreement was received with great gratification, especially by the farmers of this country. For example, here is a statement made by Mr. H. B. Cowan, secretary of the Canadian Dairy Farmers' Federation, representing 150,000 organized dairy farmers. He said:

> It is gratifying to farmers that the Canadian government has reached such an important and favourable agreement. National farmers' unions of the United Kingdom backed by strong Conservative support in the British house have been urging imposition of levies and quotas on imports of farm products, and the government there issued a white paper almost committing it to this policy. Farmer organizations in Canada and the other dominions have contacted their governments to combat that policy.

The opportunity to ship into that market 280,000,000 pounds of bacon and ham in the next three years should give us, in view of the fact that we have used in the past roughly only one-half of that quota at any time, a chance to expand that production tremendously. Will anybody say that that is not something worth while? The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) may say that under the treaties which he negotiated we had that right. But I submit that because those treaties were so one-sided—and the official opposition are inclined to take credit for driving such a good deal—because it was such a "good deal," although really, through its ultimate results, a bad deal—this government should be heartily congratulated upon overcoming the handicaps they had to meet in the hostility of many interests in the United Kingdom owing to the one-sided way that the Ottawa treaties have worked out, and upon getting such a favourable treaty for this country.

One of the speakers for the official opposition referred this evening to the fact that the present government when in opposition objected that there were still certain items on which the preference was bound. But it should not be forgotten that in the treaty negotiated by the present leader of the opposition there were 215 such items, and that that number has been reduced by the present government to 91. The opposition may inquire, why did you agree even to 91 items? After all, we all admit that it takes two to make an agreement, and that when the United Kingdom had an absolutely guaranteed preference on 215 items, it was quite an achievement to get that number reduced to 91. I submit, as well as hope, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of our power to lower the tariff on those items which have been dropped from the bound list, it will now be possible for us to negotiate once more with the president of the neighbouring republic and get an even better treaty with Washington than we got last year. Through this agreement with the United Kingdom the foundation has been laid for extending the United States trade agreement from which we have already benefited so much. That is another reason why I intend to vote against this amendment and for the budget resolution.

There is another matter with which at the moment I should like to deal because it is one in which I, as one of the younger members of this house, am very much interested. We hear a great deal, and properly so, from hon. members representing the central provinces about their unemployed young people. We have unemployed young people whom I would designate as the forgotten young people of Canada. They are not on any unemployment relief list. They cannot come under a farm placement scheme. Their ages range from fifteen to thirty years. Their parents do not need them any longer at home, but they remain there because there they get food and shelter. The young men and young women of western Canada are staying in their parents' homes long past the time when they should be out establishing homes of their own.

A very competent observer of Saskatchewan conditions told me to-day that in his opinion there are at least 50,000 young men in Saskatchewan from eighteen or nineteen to thirty years of age who are staying with their parents and for whom there is no real work, who cannot get married and establish homes of their own; at the same time, naturally, there is roughly the same number of young women in the same position. When we pay as much as we do for tariff protection, which helps people who live near these protected industries in central Canada, we should be willing to do something to give our young people the chance to get settled and started in life. We hear something of immigration policies. I submit that this government should set aside a certain sum of money from which a young man wishing to start up for himself and establish a home should be able to apply for a reasonable loan, which he should receive provided he can show he has a piece of land that he can go on with a reasonable hope of making a success. That loan should be repayable at a low rate of interest over a long period of time. If that were done it would enable several thousands of our young men to settle on their own land, get married, establish homes, and begin to raise families the way their fathers did before them. Seeing that Canadian governments have spent millions of dollars in past years in bringing in immigrants from other countries, to-day we should, I submit, have enough vision and imagination to spend some money to settle and give a start to young people who were born in this country, and who are the best settlers we can have. When it is suggested that we spend money on cooperative schemes to bring strangers to our shores from other countries—I care not where they come from—I say that before we fetch anybody in from outside we should look after our own boys and girls who want to make a start in this country.

I congratulate this government upon its decision to appoint a commission to investigate dominion and provincial relationships. I suggest most seriously, though, that that commission should have the power to investigate the question of tariffs. A great deal has been said in this house about the tariff. One hon. member belonging to the official opposition asked how long were Ontario and Quebec going to remain a pair of placid milk cows to be stripped dry to pay the bills of provincial governments over whose expenditures they had no control? He referred to the provincial governments of the west in making that remark, one which, I submit, was not justified by the facts. I would say that in view of the fact—and I intend if I have time to prove it—that we have been feeding these two milch cows we should have a right to do a little bit of the milking. The Nova Scotia government had a royal commission investigating its relationship to the dominion. It got the present Minister of Labour, who was at that time I believe a professor—an eminent professor—in one of our universities, to prepare a submission to that royal commission on its behalf. As he was at that time appearing for Nova Scotia, not for western Canada, I do not suppose he was trying particularly to make out a case for Saskatchewan, Alberta or Manitoba. He examined into the question of the benefit and injury done by the tariff to the various provinces of this country. That was for the year 1931. I should like to give a few of the figures to the house. He found that the estimated amount of the tariff subsidy to protected manufacturers in Quebec was $132,867,447, that being 31·23 per cent of the benefit from the tariff. He found that the estimated tariff subsidy to manufacturers in Ontario was $220,722,484, Ontario benefiting to the extent of 58·88 per cent. Saskatchewan, with over 900,000 people, almost one-tenth of the population of this dominion, benefited to what extent? Not one per cent, no; it was ·77 per cent—$3,275,950. And he found that this tariff subsidy per capita was as follows: Quebec, $46.23, Ontario $64.32 and Saskatchewan $3.55.

We have a few manufacturers in western Canada, but it is interesting to see how little Saskatchewan benefited by the tariff. He gave a table of the net loss or net gain. He found that in one year the province of Saskatchewan paid in extra prices on account of the tariff $29,228,285. He found that it benefited by the tariff to the amount of $3,275,000 as I have already said; in other words, that the tariff cost Saskatchewan in one year, 1931, $25,909,790, or $28.16 per capita. The amount the provincial government collected from our people that year was, I believe, less than $14,000,000, and this tariff subsidy cost our people in one year over $25,000,000. I submit that the year 1931 may be taken as a normal year; and if you multiply $25,000,000 lost in one year by, let us say, five years, you have the tariff costing Saskatchewan alone since 1931—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TUCKER: I should like to be allowed to finish the argument.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: With the consent of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. TUCKER: In other words, Mr. Speaker, in five years the tariff has cost Saskatchewan alone $125,000,000. With the consent of the house I want to deal for a moment with something that may be of interest to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). He mentioned that the present government had suggested that we should follow sterling when England went off the gold standard.

Mr. BENNETT: I said that a motion to that effect was moved by Mr. Coote, in amendment to the acceptance of the British agreement, and that the now government voted for that motion.

Mr. TUCKER: I thought I said that, but perhaps I did not. I understood the right hon. gentleman to say that the members of the present government had supported the suggestion that we should have followed sterling when England went off the gold standard. I submit that in fairness to the primary producers we should have done that very thing. By virtue of the fact that we refused to follow sterling, which was our natural market, and instead followed more or less the United States dollar, the growers of wheat in western Canada lost in 1931 $3,469,000. That was the loss to the western wheat growers alone. What all the primary producers lost I do not know; I have not the figures. In 1932 the western wheat growers lost $24,664,000; in 1933 they lost $6,747,000; or a total in those three years of $34,880,000. Why did we lose that money? Because it was deemed a good thing that we should keep our money as near as possible on a par with United States money so that the government and the financial interests of Canada would not be embarrassed in making payments in the United States. For that reason the primary producer of Canada was penalized to the extent of millions of dollars, the western wheat grower alone suffering to the extent of $34,880,000. Had we followed Australia, which is a great primary producing nation, had we, like them, considered the interests of the primary producer as being of greater importance than the interests of the financial institutions, in the years from 1900 to 1936 inclusive, the western wheat growers instead of receiving $882,970,000 for their wheat, as they did, would have received $1,112,402,000. Had we followed the policy of Australia, which had some compassion on its primary producers, we should have given the western wheat producers $229,432,000 more for their wheat than they got.

There is one more point I wish to discuss; it has something to do with this very question. I find that in the autonomy act of Saskatchewan it is provided that we could not tax the Canadian Pacific railway, and as a result of that provision Saskatchewan, though it has made attempts to tax the railways in that province, has been in a weak position and has been unable to push taxation very far in view of the fear approaching almost to certainty that such taxation would be declared ultra vires.

Mr. BENNETT: A Liberal government did it.

Mr. TUCKER: I am speaking of the way in which different governments in this country, under the influence of central Canada, have passed or permitted to exist laws that exploit the west. And yet in the face of this we hear our friends in central Canada saying that we are milking them. Let us have the facts. If our friends from central Canada can then stand up and say that we are not being exploited, I shall be surprised.

I have read some little history, Mr. Speaker, and from my place in this house I make this statement, that in my opinion the American colonists before the revolution of 1776 were not exploited by the mother country to anything like the extent to which we are being exploited for the benefit of the industrial section of central Canada. What about this question of railway taxation? We find that Ontario collected from the railways in 1934, $3,031,978; that province has 10,842 miles of line. We find that Quebec collected $1,725,731; that province has 4,858 miles of line. Saskatchewan collected $430,954; that province has 8,368 miles of line. The amount per mile collected was in each case: Saskatchewan, $51.50; Ontario, $279.65; Quebec, $355.23.

Mr. BENNETT: Since the hon. gentleman is taking more than his time, perhaps I may be allowed to ask him a question. Does he know that the provincial legislature of Saskatchewan exempted subsidized roads from taxation?

Mr. TUCKER: I know something of the things I talk about, but I do not pretend to have the encyclopaedic knowledge of the right hon. gentleman. When I am as long in this house and as old as he I may perhaps be able to answer more questions than I can now.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think there is any reason why the hon. gentleman should abuse a privilege. I asked him a reasonable question and he has answered in a manner in which Hansard will indicate. When one is trespassing upon the house, with its unanimous consent, one is expected to show at least a little observance of the amenities of debate.

Mr. TUCKER: If I have in any way transgressed the amenities of debate I offer the leader of the opposition, for whom I have a great deal of respect, my most humble apologies.

Mr. BENNETT: Not to me, to the house. Thank you just the same. I am not concerned about myself.

Mr. TUCKER: If I have not yet satisfied the right hon. gentleman, then I offer my apologies to the house. Just to conclude that argument, Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what extent the lines in Saskatchewan were exempted, as suggested, but I rather suspect that the exemption does not amount to much, and it does not affect the argument anyway. If we were permitted to tax the railways to the same extent that Quebec taxes them, we should receive from the railways $2,970,640. We actually receive $404,000. In other words, we are short $2,566,640, and the subsidy which we receive in common with and on the same basis as the other provinces, under our autonomy act, is $2,144,000; that is to say, by virtue of that exemption from taxation we not only lose the amount of the subsidy which we get in common with the other provinces, but $422,640 in addition thereto.

I do not intend to transgress any further upon the time of the house. I wish to express my appreciation of its courtesy in allowing me to finish the argument I was endeavouring to present. May I say in conclusion, however, that any remarks I have made are not intended as a complaint against other parts of Canada. What I am trying to impress upon the house is this: that if the dominion is to be happy in its confederation of provinces; if the provinces are to be content to remain in that confederation; if they are going to work together in that unity and harmony which are essential to make any nation great, then justice has to be done to each part of the dominion. And I lay these facts before the house in answer to the suggestion that western Canada is getting more than it is entitled to. I submit that if you consider our troubles in recent years and the amounts which we have been deprived of in consequence of the considered policy of the central government of the country, what we have received is pitifully small in comparison.

Mr. MAURICE LALONDE (Labelle): Permit me to congratulate the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), who presented to us what I might call a budget of hope. His statement regarding the present financial position of our country gave rise among our Canadian people to a deep feeling of confidence in better days.

While the international situation is one of the factors of our economic recovery, we must not forget that the Liberal administration has had much to do with the satisfactory results which we are now witnessing. I have not the slightest intention of analyzing this whole situation; I shall deal with only two questions of local importance, but both are relevant to that intricate problem of unemployment to which our active Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) is giving very particular attention.

For some years northwestern Quebec has been making great strides. Towns and villages are growing in the mining districts of Abitibi, and the greatest activity is being displayed especially in the country around the great lake Chibougamau. I have not the latest figures before me, but I can assert that the new mines in that district are employing now almost 10,000 people and are producing millions in gold and copper. It is needless to emphasize further the amazing progress of Abitibi.

Unfortunately, beside this comforting picture there appears a shadow. The trade of the district, amounting to more than $15,000,000 this year, instead of going towards its natural centre of attraction, namely Montreal, is directed rather towards Ontario's metropolis, Toronto. No wonder, Mr. Speaker, that the city of Toronto is about to outclass Montreal in the economic rating of our Canadian cities. There is no better chart of our economic life and no better evidence of the deficiencies of our distribution system. Abitibi absolutely needs an outlet towards the Quebec centres. A road is being built the cost of which will be borne in equal shares by the Quebec and dominion governments, but this road will not be sufficient to ensure a continuous outlet to Montreal for Abitibi's traffic. What we need is a railway. Several attempts have been made in that direction, and more or less earnest promoters have made surveys of the district. If I am correctly informed, in 1910 the dominion government went so far as to purchase from Mr. Clergue of Aylmer right of way for a railway to run from Mont Laurier towards the Senneterre district. Later the Northern Railway Company applied for a charter; then came the Abitibi Southern Railway, which also applied for a charter and then let it lapse. To-day we have the Goldfields Transportation Company endeavouring to secure a provincial charter to build a railway from Mont Laurier to Senneterre, to run parallel to the road to which I have already referred.

We are complaining of the heavy deficits of the Canadian National Railways, which constitute an enormous liability in our annual budget. One of the most efficient means of doing away with those deficits would be to build paying lines. I respectfully submit to this house that without further delay the government should advance the necessary funds to enable the Canadian National Railways to build a line from St. Remi d'Amherst to Mont Laurier and from there to the Great Lake-Chibougamau district, through Ferme Neuve, Mt. St. Michel and St. Anne du Lac parishes. This railway would serve four parishes which are being rapidly developed, and would afford an opportunity for settlement in those tracts which are now included within the timber limits of the International Paper Company, more particularly along the Piscatousin river. Investigations have shown that this area contains excellent farming land. Moreover, this railway would become an appreciable source of income for our federal railway system, for all the traffic from the mines now operating in the Chibougamau district would pass over this road.

May I be permitted to utter a warning? The company now asking for a provincial charter in Quebec possesses a boundless appetite. According to official notices in the press it wants to secure not only the area extending from Mont Laurier to Senneterre but also the tract from St. Remi d'Amherst to Mont Laurier and thence to the Great Lake-Chibougamau district. Obviously, therefore, the economic prosperity of our province and the successful operation of our national railway system demand that vigorous steps be taken at once by this government in order to hasten the construction of this line, and also to take over an area that really belongs to the Canadian National Railways, leaving to the Goldfields Transportation Company the privilege of connecting Mont Laurier with Senneterre. I bring this matter to the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) in order to fulfill my responsibility as member for Labelle. Should this government not avail itself of this splendid opportunity of bringing under its control this area which offers such possibilities from the standpoint of revenue and mining development?

In the second place, may I be permitted to point out to the government the fact that the constituency of Labelle has not been pampered by the federal authorities in the past in regard to the trans-Canada highway from Montreal to Ottawa. I should like to read certain documents, showing that the Quebec government of that time decided upon a change in the route that will be detrimental to my constituency. On May 15, 1936, I placed a question on the order paper, as follows:

1. What is the location of the proposed trans-Canada highway from Lachute, county of Argenteuil, Quebec, to Ottawa?

2. Has the location been decided by the provincial or by the federal authorities?

3. Does the highway pass or will it pass through the villages of Fassett, Montebello, Papineauville, Plaisance and Thurso, in the county of Labelle, Quebec?

The reply was:

1, 2 and 3. The route of the trans-Canada highway in the province of Quebec is covered by a report of the Honourable the Executive Council of Quebec, dated October 1, 1931, approved by the lieutenant-governor on October 2, 1931; subsequently amended by a report of the Honourable the Executive Council of Quebec dated March 24, 1933, and approved by the lieutenant-governor on March 25, 1933, and further amended by a report of the Honourable the Executive Council of Quebec dated June 7, 1933, approved by the lieutenant-governor on June 8, 1933, copies of which executive orders are attached hereto.

Copies of these reports in French were attached, and with the permission of the house I will place them on Hansard:

Copy of the Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Executive Council, dated the 1st of October, 1931, approved by the Lieutenant-Governor on the 2nd of October, 1931.

Respecting the Trans-Canada Highway

The Honourable the Minister of Roads, in a memorandum dated the 1st October (1931), recommends:

That a highway running across the province of Quebec be created and designated under the name of the Trans-Canada Highway.

That such highway be constituted as follows: Highway No. 2, from the New Brunswick limit between Saint-Jacques, New Brunswick, and Sainte-Rose-du-Dégelé, province of Quebec, as far as the city of Lévis, passing through the town of Rivière du Loup, and following the riverside road between the village of Andréville and Sainte-Anne de la Pocatière.

Highway No. 3, starting from the city of Lévis as far as the intersection of Highway No. 1.

Highway No. 1, passing by the Quebec bridge, from the intersection of Highway No. 3, as far as Quebec.

Highway No. 2, starting from Quebec as far as Montreal, following the riverside road between Saint-Sulpice and Charlemangne.

Highway No. 8, from Montreal to Hull.

Certified.

(Signed) A. Morisset,
Clerk Executive Council.

Copy of the Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Executive Council, dated March 24, 1933, approved by the Lieutenant-Governor on March 25, 1933.

Respecting the Trans-Canada Highway, in the Province of Quebec

The Honourable the Minister of Roads, in a memorandum dated March 24 (1933), recommends that order in council No. 2510, approved on October 2, 1931, respecting the location of the Trans-Canada Highway, in the province of Quebec, be amended so that the location of that transcontinental highway, between Montreal and Ottawa, follows highway No. 8, as far as Grenville, at which point it would pass over the interprovincial bridge on the Ottawa river, and thence toward the dominion capital, on the Ontario side.

Certified.

(Signed) A. Morisset,
Clerk Executive Council.

This ought to be sufficient, Mr. Speaker, to prove that for no reason at all we have been robbed of our share of the trans-Canada highway. In January of this year I had the following question placed on the order paper:

1. Since July 1, 1936, has the government of the province of Quebec recommended to the dominion government that the location of the trans-Canada highway from Montreal to Ottawa be changed to serve the actual line of highway No. 8 from Grenville to Hull?

2. If so, what is the date of the recommendation?

Answer: No.

By the end of January last I had communicated with the provincial authorities of Quebec, without receiving any reply. The municipalities concerned, Fassett, Montebello, Papineauville, Plaisance and Thurso, have passed resolutions requesting that the highway follow its former route, but this has not brought about any practical result.

I make this statement, Mr. Speaker, not with a view to criticizing the government of Quebec but so that the people in my constituency may know the facts of the matter, and for that reason only. In making this statement I suggest to all those interested in the welfare of the provincial constituency of Papineau that they should cooperate and exert their influence and authority in order that we from Labelle may also have a few crumbs from the rich man's table, that we may recover what has been taken away from us, and that our unemployed may be given a little work and bread.

What can we infer from the two foregoing suggestions? I respectfully submit that by cooperation between the dominion and provincial governments we should undertake without delay the works I have mentioned, which would prove a real gold mine for the indigent of the western part of the province of Quebec. It is true that this year unemployment has been almost unknown in the northern section of my riding, but it has been very acute in the southern portion of the federal constituency of Labelle. With the construction of the railway referred to, and the trans-Canada highway going through the provincial county of Papineau, we would be in a position very materially to assist the unemployed who, tired of begging and of finding themselves under the dire necessity of looking to the state for their living, would find a noble pride in providing for their families by the sweat of their brow.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) of the loyalty and sincere desire of the electors of Labelle to cooperate. In return I trust that he will let us have access to the treasury, not with a view to making a wholesale distribution of direct relief, which is most depressing, but in order to make ample and generous allotment of the moneys that are paid to the state by way of taxation. Such a gesture, by the magic of the work done by our Canadians, would produce an active and profitable asset.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is a pleasure for me to address the house in English for the first time, as I wish to prove to the extremists as well as the slackers that the prosperity of Canada, if dependent upon economic factors, imponderables and mysteries, lies mainly in the true union and efficient cooperation of the two great races which, having equal rights, live and constitute Canadian life, and which create and defend the ideals of their homeland.

On motion of Mr. Heaps the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Crerar the house adjourned at 10.56 p.m.

Monday, March 8, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

REPEAL OF PROVISION RESPECTING GRATUITY IN LIEU OF LEAVE ON RETIREMENT

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of National Revenue) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 55, to amend the Department of National Revenue Act.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

He said: In all departments of government when employees are superannuated because of age, they are given a certain period of leave of absence. In the Department of National Revenue their pensions start at the beginning of that period but in other departments of government the pension starts at the end of that period. There is a difference in treatment between the employees of the Department of National Revenue and those of other departments, and the purpose of this bill is to provide that the officers of the Department of National Revenue shall receive the same treatment in this respect as the employees of other departments.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): It will be remembered that a custom grew up whereby those who on retirement were given six months' leave with pay might begin at once to receive their pension. The six months' salary was paid when the leave began, less the amount of pension for that period, thus enabling pension to begin immediately on leave being granted.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is the practice in other departments.

Mr. BENNETT: It cannot be done in this department?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is not done in this department. In this department the officer retiring does not get the difference between salary and pension; he gets his pension for the same period for which he gets his salary.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF GEORGE A. TOUCHE AND COMPANY AS AUDITORS

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 56, respecting the appointment of auditors for National Railways.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 49, to incorporate Federal Fire Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City).

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

TYVAN, SASK., CENSUS ENUMERATION

Mr. DOUGLAS:

1. Who conducted the census enumeration in the village of Tyvan, in 1935?
2. What amount of money was paid for same, and to whom?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. There was no census enumeration in 1935. The census enumeration in 1936 for the village of Tyvan was taken by Miss Marion Lowe.
2. $7.50 to Miss Marion Lowe.

CENSUS ENUMERATORS

Mr. NEEDHAM:

SOCIAL LEGISLATION

DISTRIBUTION TO THE MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE OF THE JUDGMENTS OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL AND OF THE SUPREME COURT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN-FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the hon. the acting Prime Minister (Mr. Lapointe) whether the members of the house will shortly be supplied with copies of the judgments of the Privy Council regarding social legislation, which have now been printed?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Instructions have been given to publish in pamphlet form the judgments of the Supreme Court and of the Privy Council concerning the legislation referred to. I shall make inquiries as to whether this work has been completed, and orders will be issued for the immediate distribution of the pamphlet to the members of the house.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Friday, March 5, consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Bennett.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, if the house were logical in its deliberations I think the amendment that has been moved by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) should receive unanimous support. I make that observation because in previous years members of the Liberal party, when in opposition, supported motions of this kind. I might go back to March of the year 1930 when a similar motion was moved in this chamber, and every Conservative member voted in favour of the Liberal government taking action to deal with the problem of unemployment. Then in 1931, after the Conservative party had been in power for a little over a year, a motion was presented on going into supply asking the government to take definite and immediate action to cope with the problem of unemployment, and every Liberal member of the house supported it. If therefore on this occasion I asked Liberal members to vote for the amendment I would be asking them to do just what they did in previous years. Even as late as 1935, to which reference has been made already, the Liberal party supported an amendment of this kind.

I think it will be recognized on all sides, and in fact I believe it was admitted by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) in his address on Tuesday last, that up to the present time the government have not been able to take effective action to deal with the unemployment problem in Canada. I think, further, it is generally recognized that there is no question, other than perhaps the question of peace or war, that is of such vital importance to the people of this country as the question of unemployment. It was unemployment and the economic conditions prevailing in the country in 1930 that brought about the change of government that occurred at that time. I also believe it was the unemployment situation and the economic condition of the country in 1935 that brought about the change of government that occurred in that year. Therefore if any government, whether it be Liberal or Conservative, does not deal in an effective way with the unemployment problem its chances of being returned to power at a subsequent election are very slight indeed. So it is evident that if this government hopes to be returned to office at another election it must deal effectively with this pressing problem.

For the moment, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with some of the remedies that have been suggested and applied by parliament during the past six or seven years. In 1930, as most hon. members will recall, unemployment was to be cured by increasing tariffs and by preventing the dumping of goods into this country. By the process of an increase in tariff on all goods entering Canada, and anti-dumping duties, we were to solve the problem of unemployment. As the years went by, however, the failure of that theory became more and more apparent, until in 1934 it was more or less abandoned and the government of the day began to introduce social legislation, which has since been declared ultra vires by the highest court of the empire. In other words it may be said that those who at one time believed the problem of unemployment might be solved by increasing the tariffs of Canada realize to-day perhaps more than ever before that the desired result cannot be achieved in that way. The present government believes it can deal with the unemployment situation in the opposite way. The Conservative party when in power expected to solve the unemployment problem by increasing tariffs; the party now in power expects to solve the problem by decreasing tariffs. In my humble opinion, Mr. Speaker, just as the increases in our tariffs were ineffective in dealing with the question of unemployment, so any reductions in our tariffs will also be ineffective.

The policy of the present government, according to the statements that have been made, is to solve the unemployment problem by increasing our trade with the other nations of the world. I do not think there is one member of this house, regardless of what political party he may support, who is not in favour of increasing our trade with other countries. I do feel, however, that so far as increased trade with the other nations is concerned, the tariff structure of a country to-day, is not as important as it may have been years ago. There are so many other factors affecting the problem, that while it may be desirable for a number of reasons to have lower tariffs both in Canada and in other countries, we have reached a stage in our economic development where the tariff structure is a less important factor than it has been in previous years.

I should like to call attention to some of the election literature issued by the Liberal party during the last campaign. I do not think it is unfair to say that the policy of the Liberal party, as expressed in some of the publications issued from the headquarters in Ottawa, was to the effect that by making treaties with other nations of the world and by reducing our own tariffs we should extend our trade so that other nations might obtain the goods we produce. If this policy fails, as I believe ultimately it must, then I wonder what the policy of the government is going to be. So far they have not indicated what their policy is to be with respect to the unemployment situation. It is admitted by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) that there are 400,000 men and women out of employment. There are over 1,000,000 persons in receipt of public relief, and yet not one definite word have we had from the government as to what its real policy will be.

I know they will come to us and say, "We have appointed a commission to deal with the unemployment problem." But despite the fact that the government has been in power since October, 1935, and despite the appointment of a commission, the results up to this time have not been satisfactory. The commission has done nothing which could not have been done had it not been in existence. A home improvement plan was recommended in 1935; there is nothing new in the farm placement scheme, to deal with the single men. When the Minister of Labour spoke on Tuesday last he dwelt at length with what the government had done to deal with the single unemployed. After the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. MacNeil) I believe no hon. member will again refer to what the government has done in coping with the problem of unemployed single men.

People in Canada expect something more than a policy of inaction such as the government has followed. It would seem that, Micawber-like, the government is hoping that ultimately something may turn up. But nothing is likely to turn up unless the party in power is prepared to take definite and effective action. On many occasions hon. members have been asked what concrete suggestions they have to offer. My suggestion would be that the government look to the sister dominions. Look at what New Zealand has done since the new government took office a little more than a year ago. May I read from a communication sent to a party in Winnipeg, and later published in a Winnipeg paper, in regard to some of the experiments which were tried in New Zealand and proved to be effective. I wonder if our government will be good enough to follow the example set by this sister dominion. This is what, in part, was written:

> Our labour government is in recess, after a most strenuous session in which it has put more bills through than any other government before, viz: taken over the transport of the country; passed the forty-hour-week bill, with forty-four hours for shops; taken over the Reserve bank which controls the finances of the country; taken over the control of butter and cheese (the farmer now gets a fixed price for same and is better off); . . .

May I here interpose that no farmer in Canada would object to the same thing being done right here.

Mr. BENNETT: There are no provinces there.

Mr. HEAPS: It continues:

> Increased pensions for old people and invalids; put 19,000 men on railways and public works, earning from eighteen shillings ($4.32) to £1 ($4.87) per day; done away with relief work; taxed those who can afford to pay.
> The Prime Minister—> Of New Zealand.
> —says if you have more money than you can use, it is no good to you. Wages have risen, people are happier this Christmas than they have been for years. More money is being spent.

And it goes on to say:

> Next session there is to be a health insurance bill and a compulsory superannuation bill to retire men at sixty instead of old age pensions, so let it come soon.

Then it goes on to set out some other things which have been done. As I was reading the document there was the interjection made that in New Zealand there are no provincial governments, as we have in Canada. That is true. I know that to some extent the fact that we have provincial governments may make it difficult for us to cope with the problem as was done in New Zealand. In answer to the objection, however, may I quote from a speech made by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) during the last campaign. Speaking at Barrie on October 7, 1935, the present Prime Minister announced that he was going to call one conference after the election and it was going to be "a conference to end confusion and needless conflict." He went on to say:

> Mr. Bennett has called a few provincial conferences, said Mr. King, but they had lasted only a few days, and the proceedings consisted only in a lecture from Mr. Bennett. The one he personally proposed, would remain at work until an agreement was reached on every problem in which both provinces and dominion had any common interests.

I should like to know whether that promise has been kept, whether the provinces have been called into conference with the federal government, and whether all the outstanding problems or difficulties between the provinces and the dominion have been solved. To my personal knowledge, so far nothing of the kind has been done.

Some of my friends in the Liberal party seem to think that the selling of goods abroad is the panacea for all our ills. They believe that if we find outside markets for our surplus commodities everything will be all right. In some respects that is one of the most absurd policies one could imagine. If we have a surplus of commodities, and I believe we have, those who have the first claim upon that surplus are our own people. When their needs and legitimate demands have been properly supplied, then we may talk about exporting our surplus. It seems to me unreasonable and illogical to consider exporting our surplus when there are such vast potential demands within our own country, and when the present demand is not being satisfied.

For the moment let us suppose that living in one of the cities of our dominion are a husband and wife known as Mr. and Mrs. Canada. They have three or four children. In their larder are found all the good things needed to keep body and soul together. We will suppose one of the children comes home from school one day and says, "Mother, I should like something to eat—some bread and butter or jam." The mother replies,

"Oh, my child, you cannot eat from that cupboard; we must wait until people somewhere else are satisfied. When they have all they want I might let you have a few crumbs from our own cupboard." Obviously that state of affairs in any household would be ridiculous. Immediately the child would say to its mother, "Why can I not have some of the things in the cupboard? They belong to us; we have produced them; why can we not eat them?" But the mother would say, "No, my child, wait until the people a few streets away are satisfied, and then you may have anything that is left in the cupboard." The same reasoning would apply to the situation in Canada. Our people beg of us, "We want the goods we have produced; we want foodstuffs, clothing and shelter." But we say to them, "No, you cannot have those goods 'until we have satisfied the demand in China"—or in Japan, Germany, France or some other part of the world. If for a number of reasons the people in those other parts of the world are not able to obtain or to purchase the goods we have to offer, then our own people must go without them. Is there any hon. member who will say that that is the logical thing to do? Certainly not. That is why I say, when we speak about satisfying foreign markets and creating a foreign demand, that the first thing we ought to do is to satisfy the demand for goods in the Dominion of Canada.

I pointed out that in New Zealand they have attempted to do something to cope with this problem, and I sincerely hope that some of the things which have been adopted there will be adopted here. The government cannot shield itself indefinitely behind the British North America Act. If there is a will to do something for the people of Canada, I think the way can be found to overcome this obstacle which is inherent in our constitution. If, as has been stated, it is the declared policy of the government to wait until the provinces do something, then I am afraid this parliament is in a state of absolute despair. If we have to wait until all the nine provinces of Canada agree upon a definite and fixed policy, we may have to wait many a long day before this parliament will be able to do something in a concrete way to deal with the pressing problems which now confront us.

It has been stated by the Liberal party that the policy of expanding markets has been one of the means of easing this problem. That party also takes credit for the fact that during the past twelve or eighteen months there has been a decided increase in our export trade, which they claim is due to the treaties made with other countries. I cannot subscribe to that theory. Rightly or wrongly, I am of the opinion that if we had made but little change in our tariff structure—in passing I may say that I am always in favour of lower tariffs—there would still have been an increase in the trade of this country with other nations of the world. The worst year that we had from the standpoint of imports and exports was 1932, but from that time onward there has been a steady improvement in the amount of goods exported from this country, and also an improvement in the amount of goods imported. I am always loth to quote figures, but on this occasion perhaps it would not be out of place. I should like to give some figures recently published by the bureau of statistics.

The first figures I shall give refer to trade with the United Kingdom. I find that in 1932 our exports to Great Britain amounted to $178,171,000 in round figures. In 1935 they had increased to $306,897,000, and for the calendar year 1936 they had jumped to $399,830,000. I do not think anyone can claim that the tariff structure as between the two countries was the dominating factor in that tremendous increase in trade. As was pointed out the other day by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol), much of this increase was the result of the tremendous demand in Great Britain for supplies and materials for armament purposes.

We find practically the same increase in trade with other countries where there have been no new trade agreements entered into during the past five years. Both New Zealand and Australia show practically the same results. When the government took credit for the boosting of trade between the United States and this country through the medium of the trade treaty, I do not think their argument was sound. The United States have spent tens of billions of dollars in an effort to improve economic conditions, and part of that increased business was bound to come to this dominion. When we consider the amount of money spent by the United States on their home improvement plan it is quite easy to understand why there has been such a huge increase in the trade between the province of British Columbia and that country. The trade treaty signed a year ago was only a negligible factor in the increase of trade between Canada and the United States.

I have pointed out, and I still maintain, that increases in the tariff will not solve our problem. Neither will decreases. If this government, or any party which may be in power, expects to improve the economic condition of this country or grapple seriously with the problem of unemployment, it will have to go far deeper into our economic structure than merely tinkering with the tariff. Our whole system of production to-day is based on the profit motive. The minute a firm is not making a profit, production begins to slow down or ceases entirely. We in our group contend that the profit motive must give way to a higher one. The production of commodities must be carried on for the purpose of satisfying the legitimate demands of the people of this dominion.

The factors of production and consumption must be closely correlated. If we increase our production, as we have in years gone by, by leaps and bounds, and our consumption does not keep pace, then just as surely as night follows day we are bound to create an unemployment problem or aggravate one which may already exist. The spread between production and consumption is an indication and guide to our unemployment situation. The larger the spread there is between wages and production or consumption, the greater will be our unemployment problem. Unless our purchasing power or consumptive opportunities are correlated in some way to the question of production, then our unemployment problem will continue and remain with us for many a long day to come. It is only by increasing our consumptive opportunities, by increasing wages, if you wish to put it that way, and by decreasing the spread between wages and production, that we can tackle this unemployment problem in a definite way.

It has been stated on more than one occasion in this house by the Minister of Labour that the government has in mind a long-term policy of dealing with this problem of unemployment. How long shall we have to wait before being shown that policy? Are we to be shown it just on the eve of an election? We must bear in mind that when this session has been completed, and it is expected it will be over before very long, practically half the life of this parliament will have elapsed, that is if we are to have an election at the end of four years. I believe before the end of the second session of this parliament the people should be told what the definite policy of this government is to cope with the unemployment problem. So far they have not done anything really different from what was done by the government in office between 1930 and 1935, but they have dressed it up in a different way. Instead of relief being handled by the government it is now being handled by a commission, which, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) points out, does not even report to this house. That body was going to coordinate things, to make matters easier as between the dominion government and the governments of the provinces. I do not think anybody in this country takes the commission very seriously. It may act in some measure as a buffer between the federal government and the provinces and municipalities, or it may be a convenient way of "passing the buck," but so far it has not proved effective to cope with the problem of unemployment. I once described commissions as a convenient way of shelving inconvenient problems; I believe the Prime Minister used similar language a few weeks ago with reference to committees and conferences. The problem of unemployment should be constantly before this chamber; we should not leave it to be dealt with by a body which is not directly responsible to this house.

I am anxious that some time during the debate we shall find out what is the real policy of the government. It was not explained to us the other evening when the Minister of Labour replied to the leader of the opposition. All the minister did was to attempt a defence of the actions of his department in dealing with the single unemployed. Not a ray of hope did he give to our vast army of unemployed scattered all over the dominion. At the present time, when almost half the term of this parliament has expired, all that we can show to the people is a commission, a home improvement plan which they suggested and which is nothing new, a farm placement scheme, and a sort of bureau of statistics which they established on their own account. In my opinion we have in this country a most efficient bureau of statistics and it was unnecessary for the commission to create any new bureau for its own purposes. That seems to be the sum total of the commission's accomplishments since the time it was appointed. It may truly be said that the commission has laboured but has not produced even a mouse.

The Minister of Labour showed great anxiety to bring forward election promises which were made by other political parties. As a rule I do not care to raise these matters, because they speak for themselves. But I recall that huge placards were posted all over my constituency—and other hon. members no doubt had the same experience—stating in big letters, "Vote for King and action." Besides these placards there were hundreds of little stickers, at the top of which appeared the appeal, "Vote Liberal and get action."

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Speaker, I am waiting and the unemployed of this country are waiting for action. What we have had up to now is a period of inaction. It is time that inaction ceased and that we got down to real and definite action to deal with unemployment. I noticed these words in small type in the middle of this little sticker, "Please remove nine days before election day." Evidently it would not do to keep it there too long.

There was a by-election in Toronto in 1933. I remember that when I went down to speak in the constituency this paper I hold in my hand was given to me. Look at the large headlines; they can be seen, I believe, across the aisle. They say, "King banishes fear for workers;" and a huge headline:

Social insurance in Canada to end fear for working class is presaged by the Liberal party leader.

These appeared in a paper published on September 22, 1934. I am still waiting, Mr Speaker, for action, action that will banish fear from the minds of hundreds of thousands who are out of work in the dominion.

What were the specific promises made by the Liberal party? There were many. The first one that comes to my attention is that when they would get into power they would reduce or abolish the sales tax. That was reduced or abolished, was it not? Their method of reducing the tax was to increase it from six per cent to eight per cent, an addition of about thirty-three per cent. Then there was a definite promise that the government would bring in an unemployment insurance bill. Let us see what was said. This is the Prime Minister speaking, I think, over the radio, and reported in a publication of Saturday, August 3. He said:

Unemployment of first concern.

The Liberal party believes unemployment is Canada's most urgent national problem. It would deal with the present emergency conditions, through a representative national commission.

And then he goes on to say:

As permanent measures—

And I want the "hear, hear" of the hon. member to come again after this:

—the Liberal party is pledged to introduce policies which will serve to provide employment by reviving industry and trade; and to introduce a national system of unemployment insurance.

One does not hear any "hear, hear" now from the Liberal side. Instead of that promise being carried out, what have we got? The first thing the Liberal party did when they got into power was themselves to refer this matter to the privy council, and they got the decision they expected and probably the decision they wanted. In my judgment, Mr. Speaker, there is a tremendous responsibility upon the Liberal party. When pledges are made to the electors they should not be regarded in the lighthearted manner in which they are evidently regarded by some hon. members.

Mr. BRADETTE: We are just as serious as you are.

Mr. HEAPS: Now, Mr. Speaker, let us glance at another little publication, one of those handbills which the Liberals distributed by hundreds of thousands:

Tory policies create unemployment. Vote Liberal.

What was the inference? That if one voted for the Liberals their policies would end unemployment in the dominion. Is it in accordance with principles of honest politics that although nearly half the term of this parliament has gone by, and although certain definite policies were promised to the electors, not even an attempt is being made to carry out those promises? I do not think anyone can contend that such political practices are right. One Liberal, however, was not without vision; he evidently had some idea of what was coming—I refer to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie), who, when he was in opposition, made the following cryptic statement:

The majority of the Liberals in the next house is going to be so large that it will be difficult to keep them to their promises. But I promise you that the British Columbia Liberal contingent will live up to its promises.

I should like to see the British Columbia contingent live up to its promises and convince the rest of the Liberal party to go and do likewise. Throughout the country in the last election one of the mottoes of the Liberal party was "work and wages." I am waiting to see the unemployed get the work, and the wages as well, but so far the Liberal party has not provided it. It may not be pleasant for me to bring home to hon. gentlemen opposite some of the promises on which they were elected at the last election. I have before me a little leaflet advising the electorate to "Vote Liberal for work with wages, security and progress." But the people have not the work, nor have they adequate wages, security, and progress. The unemployed cannot be expected to be satisfied with beautiful phrases, which are meaningless when analyzed, as a program of the government. They want something definite, something that will give them a ray of hope. A commission is not in itself sufficient. To-day the policy of the government is simply to hand out a dole to hundreds of thousands of people out of work, and it is not even creating useful public works. As I have contended before in this house, the provision of public works is in itself no solution of the unemployment problem; it is a palliative which ultimately does not palliate. It merely adds to the national debt and makes it more difficult as time goes on to find further capital expenditures for public relief works.

The Minister of Labour was a professor, and he is a close student of economics. He knows far better than I do that no amount of public works which merely adds to the debt burden of the country can in itself be a solution of the unemployment problem; and when we have to-day, as the only means of coping with unemployment, the home improvement plan, it is only another form of capital expenditure in the attempt to solve the unemployment problem. This capital expenditure is not made, however, by the federal government; it is made by the individual, who is creating a debt for himself which it will take one, two or three years to wipe out. In other words, the poorer classes in Canada are being asked to mortgage their own future earnings in order that they may be able to provide work for themselves and others for the purpose of meeting the unemployment situation. My hope is that the government will take hold of the unemployment problem in a real, effective and fundamental way and see whether they cannot do something to inspire some confidence and hope in the vast number of men and women who are out of work at the present time.

Mr. C. E. BOTHWELL (Swift Current): My first word is one of congratulation to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) on the manner in which the budget address was presented this year. He seems to have covered the situation thoroughly, and he delivered the budget in a manner which I am sure every member of the house will commend.

No matter what policies the government put into effect, every one knows that it will take some little time before the full benefit of those policies can be recognized by the people. You cannot undo overnight what has been happening over a period of years; you cannot get the full benefit of any policies within a few days after they are put into effect. The immediate question seems to be, what is to be done about unemployment. We all know that it is a serious question, and hon. members, no matter to what party they belong, are all concerned over the seriousness of it. Everyone in Canada who has anything to do with public affairs is more or less concerned. It will be necessary to have temporary measures of relief for some time to come.

I commend the government for the manner in which they have been administering relief during the sixteen months they have been in office. Late last fall the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) took occasion to visit the constituency I have the honour to represent, and there he had an opportunity to meet the representatives of the councils of eight or nine rural municipalities. He wanted to hear first-hand, suggestions they might have to offer for improvement in the distribution of relief or the better handling of the relief policy, and also any complaints they had to voice. I had an opportunity to sit in at that meeting. These eight or nine municipalities, represented mostly by reeves and secretary treasurers, all had the same word of commendation for the government. They had no difficulties in the municipalities except in one respect; blankets that we supposed to be delivered, as I understood, by the Canadian Red Cross Society, had not yet reached these municipalities. The minister agreed to look into that question, and when a short time later I saw some of these representatives of the municipalities I learned that their troubles on that score had been removed. While the minister was there we should have liked to have had the opportunity of showing him one of the temporary works that might be undertaken to end unemployment in that particular district. For a number of years the people of southwestern Saskatchewan have been agitating for a bridge across the South Saskatchewan river at a place called Saskatchewan Landing. We recognize, of course, that it is a provincial matter, but in the past the federal government has assisted in the construction of bridges across the Saskatchewan river, and we have been hoping that it will at this time continue that work and build a bridge where it is so badly needed.

On February 12 of this year a delegation waited upon the provincial government in Regina. It consisted of the representatives of an association known as the Southwestern Saskatchewan Bridge Association, representatives from the Swift Current board of trade, the council of the city of Swift Current, reeves and councillors of rural municipalities, mayors and councillors of urban municipalities, farm organizations and others. They pressed upon the government at Regina the urgent necessity of a bridge at the point in question. At that time they presented all the facts to the provincial government. They were somewhat encouraged, and were told that representations would be made to Ottawa. This bridge at Saskatchewan Landing is needed for various reasons. There is a tremendous amount of traffic there. In fact some 63,329 units cross at Saskatchewan Landing, and they have to cross on a ferry which during the past two or three years has not been working satisfactorily owing to the low water in the river. At certain times of the year the ferry is closed and in order to get to the other side of the river you have to cross in a cage slung from a cable. Vehicles of all descriptions, during the weeks when the ferry is closed, have to drive from one hundred to two hundred miles out of their way to reach the bridge at Elbow.

The areas which would be tributary to and served by the bridge comprise parts of the richest farming and ranching area of the province, which despite the period of drought has proven its capability to produce enormous agricultural wealth, and is occupied by residents who in normal times produce the best grades of wheat in the world. The area includes approximately eight million acres of rich farm and ranch lands. I hardly need call attention to the difficulty of keeping up communication between the south and the north. This bridge is located on No. 4, highway, which extends from the United States border through to Battleford and Prince Albert and the National park, to the northeast. It is a direct connection with a national park south of the United States line, over the Dominion-Yellowstone highway. No. 4 highway intersects more east and west highways in Saskatchewan than any other north and south highway. It intersects highways Nos. 32, 40, 43, 44, 51, 7, 13, 14 and 31, No. 5 to Lloydminster and Edmonton, and No. 26 west to St. Walburg. The Montana state highway commission have determined on the location of a bridge in their area to be constructed across the Missouri river, and if we had a bridge at Saskatchewan Landing we would have then one of the best tourist roads from the United States to the national parks in the northern part of Saskatchewan. I mention this in order that it may be brought to the attention of hon. members as well as of the Minister of Labour, who by this time I am sure is pretty well fed up with listening to representations from the member for Swift Current and others living in the district which would be served and benefited by that road.

Mr. ROGERS: Not at all.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I am not able to say that any particular saving would result from its construction; the only saving would be the elimination of the cost of the ferry. But we should have much better traffic facilities for tourists from the south, and this country has profited much from tourist traffic in recent years and is endeavouring to encourage it.

One of the objections to the building of this bridge has been that too large a part of the cost would go into material and engineering and not direct relief. Well the material used has to come from its raw state at some stage and gives employment all along the line, even though it is not giving employment in the province in which the bridge is constructed. Of course it will give a considerable amount of employment there; it certainly is needed, and it will give employment in other parts of Canada where steel, cement and other materials of the kind are produced. In addition I can say that the cost of the bridge will be materially lower than that of some other bridges which have been constructed, because of the fact that gravel and other materials are in close proximity.

An estimate has been made of the cost. The plans of the bridge have been prepared, and I understand that the provincial authorities are making representations to the dominion government for assistance in building it. I urge upon the minister and the government that an appropriation be made for this purpose at this session. The bridge is a sound undertaking; the cost is low, and the convenience to the public would be immeasurable.

I now come to another matter which it is somewhat foreign to my disposition to speak about; nevertheless I feel I should refer to it. The Minister of Finance in presenting his budget was able to give the people of this country a considerable amount of encouragement by reciting the progress which has been made and suggesting what may be expected in the future. I spoke a few minutes ago about the municipalities surrounding the area and the city which I happen to represent, and how well the people were satisfied with what is being done. I therefore dislike the sort of propaganda that is being put out through that district in order to foster discontent among the people. I refer to an article written by an hon. member of this house and published in a paper called The Advocate, in its issue of February 4. Because of the misrepresentations it contains it reflects upon every hon. member of the house and I feel that it should be brought to the attention of hon. members as well as of the country at large. I quote a portion of it:

For nearly three weeks we have bombarded the government benches with questions and accusations regarding the betrayal of the wheat board, the problems of the drought area, and the need for a peace program. Throughout the entire time not one Saskatchewan Liberal has opened his mouth although often invited to do so.

To-day there arose the matter of "gerrymandering" the constituencies for the next election. Immediately all the strong, silent men from Saskatchewan found their tongues. One after another they are rising and quibbling about the boundaries of their constituencies. Tempers flare and accusations fly back and forth.

Feeding, clothing, and caring for our people is of relatively little importance. Saving one's seat is of paramount importance. So this is parliament? Pardon me, I thought it was a kindergarten.

The heading of this is "Parliament from the Back Benches," by T. C. Douglas, M.P. That, Mr. Speaker, may be good literature but it does not state facts. I took occasion to check up Hansard after reading it, and I found that two members only from Saskatchewan spoke on this question when a motion was before the house in connection with redistribution. The matter was referred to the special committee on the elections and franchise acts, and only two members of the house from Saskatchewan who had reason to complain about the last redistribution took occasion to speak on it. But this article told the world:

Immediately all the strong, silent men from Saskatchewan found their tongues. One after another they are rising and quibbling . . . Feeding, clothing and caring for our people is of relatively little importance. Saving one's seat is of paramount importance.

I leave it to the house to judge as to the sincerity of the observation. I should like to read another paragraph from the same newspaper, The Advocate, of February 25, 1937. Speaking of the appropriation for defence purposes it says:

What makes it even more lamentable is when other members come to you afterwards and tell you that they feel the same way as you do but of course you understand it would not do for them to say anything.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Who wrote this?

Mr. BOTHWELL: This is "Parliament from the Back Benches," by T. C. Douglas, M.P.; I assume that is the hon. member for Weyburn. Then he goes on:

The outstanding feature of the week was a very excellent speech by Hon. J. G. Gardiner, on the rehabilitation of the drought area. It is doubtful if any man in the House of Commons is better informed than the Minister of Agriculture on the history and economic background of Saskatchewan. Mr. Gardiner was at home discussing this matter, and delivered a most impressive case for western agriculture. However, he somewhat spoiled it the next day by seeking to make political capital out of the work he had done while premier in Saskatchewan, and began to produce documents discrediting the former provincial and federal governments.

And listen to this:

The result was that the day was devoted only to the "knock down and drag them out fight" between him and R. B. Bennett. Mr. Gardiner declared that he was used to discussion in a provincial legislature where apparently it was sometimes permitted to get away with almost anything.

Then later on:

Whereupon the Conservative leader laid him across the table and spanked him soundly, while Mr. Dunning looked on with a rather embarrassed expression on his face.

Well, sir, with reference particularly to the first article, the only advice I am going to give the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Douglas), after drawing the matter to the attention of the house and the country, is that he should acquaint himself with the ninth commandment.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Would the hon. member mind telling us what was said about the wheat board and the wheat question?

Mr. BOTHWELL: My hon. friend can make his own speech. You see, he takes credit for being able to talk by the hour here; he says, "We bombarded the government for hours," but he might also tell the country that when the hon. member for Weyburn starts to talk there seems to be a sudden exodus in the direction of the corridors. If the speeches delivered by the hon. member in this house contain such misrepresentations as appear in his articles in The Advocate I can understand why that exodus occurs.

The other day the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) took exception to a question I asked of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley). I thought he was very fair; he said:

I will admit that stereotyped resolutions emanating from some source or other were sent to the farmers of western Canada, asking them to send in resolutions of that type...

I received several resolutions apparently of that type, all couched in pretty much the same terms. I attended only one of those meetings, and at it such a resolution was presented in typewritten form. I was there before the meeting was called to order. No resolutions committee was appointed; the audience was not asked to present any resolutions, and the only one that was brought before the meeting was the typewritten resolution. I am not going to labour the question; all the resolutions I received were not in exactly the same terms, but they followed the same form so closely that

I agree with the hon. member for Macleod that a great many of these resolutions emanated from some source, and the farmers were asked to pass them and send them on.

The other day the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) twitted some hon. members of the house on their claim to fame based on the fact that they voted against the empire agreements in 1932. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have to plead guilty, if that is the correct term, to that offence, if it was an offence, of voting against the empire agreements at that time, and I am prepared to justify my action at any time. Under similar circumstances I would do the same thing over again. At that time we had the opportunity to compare the empire agreements with the Dunning budget of 1930, and there were so many differences that it was pretty hard for the people then sitting to the left of the Speaker to support the empire agreements. Personally I am convinced that the system of bargaining adopted in 1932 was not in the best interests of either Canada or Great Britain, and I believe the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) in 1930 was greatly to be preferred.

I should like to compare the agreements of 1932 and the budget of 1930 for a few moments, before I discuss the new agreements. Under the Dunning budget there were 414 reductions in duty out of some 514 changes. Under the conference agreements there were 132 reductions out of 223 changes; fifty-five per cent in the latter case and eighty per cent in the former case. Under the Dunning budget the reductions were so generous as to render certain a substantial increase in imports. Under the conference agreements the reductions were so slight as to leave the rates almost prohibitive. Under the Dunning budget the reductions were made principally on goods in general use by practically all consumers. Under the conference agreements the reductions were principally on goods imported by manufacturers for further processing or on raw material, and it is quite arguable that those reductions would not be passed on to the consumer. Under the Dunning budget reductions on goods imported for direct sale to consumers were largely on the necessities of life and the implements of production. Under the conference agreements the reductions on goods imported for direct sale to consumers were largely on non-essentials, such as automobiles, sporting goods, perfumery, expensive linens, kid gloves, omnibuses, typewriters, and so on. Under the Dunning budget all reductions were based on the low Liberal tariff schedules of 1929. Under the conference agreements the reductions were based upon the 1930 tariff increases plus the 1931 increases, both of which were very substantial. Under the Dunning budget excise taxes of Great Britain were not to be included when arriving at the cost for duty purposes. Under the conference agreements all costs including excise duties and exchange differentials were included in the cost for duty purposes. Under the Dunning budget the increases in duty number 100, out of a total of 514 changes, while under the conference agreement the increases in duty numbered 139 out of a total of 223. Under the Dunning budget the increases rarely applied to goods imported for direct sale to actual consumers. Under the conference agreement the increases chiefly applied to goods imported for direct sale to consumers. The Dunning budget deductions, according to Mr. Dunning's own words, were made "in the spirit in which we desire to meet all nations." The spirit of the conference agreement was clearly revealed by the right hon. the leader of the opposition, who said on October 12, 1932:

> These agreements mark the first step forward in a definite scheme of closer empire economic association. They are based upon the principle enunciated by the Conservative party before the last election, and steadfastly supported by it from that time to the present.

That policy was further illustrated by observations appearing at page 900 of Hansard for 1932. The Dunning budget duty reductions were a generous gesture of good will to Great Britain, made in full assurance that they would meet with an equally generous response in the matter of increased purchases by her from Canada, and were unaccompanied by even the mildest rebuff to foreign nations. The conference agreements arrangements were the result of hard and fast bargaining, absolutely devoid of generosity or generous sentiment, accompanied by positive declarations of anti-foreign trade sentiment and distinctly anti-foreign tariff manipulations.

Mr. BENNETT: Whose statement is that?

Mr. BOTHWELL: My statement. The Dunning budget tariff changes left Canada free to make similar or even greater reductions in duties on goods imported from foreign countries. The conference agreements bound Canada not to reduce existing duties on goods imported from foreign countries (a) on any of the 159 articles in the free list and (b) on 213 items and classes enumerated in schedule E of the agreement, if such action would reduce the margin of preference.

The Dunning budget proposals did not involve the idea of empire self sufficiency, or involve the exclusion of foreign nations. They did not invite reprisals. On the other hand the conference agreements were predicated upon the idea of empire economic self-sufficiency. Under the Dunning budget proposals, duties might be adjusted from time to time as experience required; they were not for any fixed term. Under the conference schedule the prescribed duties are fixed for five years certain.

Under the Dunning budget proposals the promotion of trade and the interests of the producer and consumer were the chief considerations. Under the conference agreements the manufacturer and the industrialist were clearly the chief consideration, with but little thought for the producer or consumer.

Mr. EDWARDS: What about the worker?

Mr. BOTHWELL: I now come to the agreement just negotiated with Great Britain, and appearing in the budget address of the Minister of Finance. I am not able to quote figures with authority, but from a study which has been made I believe my figures are approximately correct. Under the new agreement of 1937 approximately $300,000,000 worth of goods, based on the 1936 figures, are guaranteed continued free entry into the United Kingdom. Second, the margins between customs duties imposed by Great Britain on Canadian products and on products of other countries are definitely bound on articles of Canadian export, to an extent approximating $200,000,000 per annum.

People speak about concessions Canada has had to make. I do not believe they are concessions; it seems to me they are benefits. We are in a position to buy goods cheaper, and that should be a benefit to us rather than a concession granted to anybody else. On 179 items the British preferential tariff is reduced. Altogether 425 items are affected. On the remaining 246 items Canada has undertaken that the British preferential tariff shall not be increased during the lifetime of the agreement. Fixed margins are established on only 91 items, as against 215 in the trade agreement of 1932. On 21 of the 91 fixed margin items the measure of margin has been reduced. Sixty-nine textile items are involved in the new agreement, on 32 of which the preferential tariff has been lowered. Where specific duties occurred they have been reduced, and in others eliminated altogether. If cartels in the United Kingdom operate to the detriment of the Canadian consumer the preferential tariff on such cartel controlled articles may be suspended or modified. If after inquiry, it is established that Canadian manufacturers are found to be dumping goods into the British market, the Canadian government will remove the dumping restrictions against the same class of goods imported into Canada. Under the agreement we retain our ham and bacon quotas, and also maintain our position with respect to the export of Canadian cattle.

When we compare the new agreement with that of 1932 I submit there can be no question about the fact that our representatives brought back an agreement from Great Britain which will be of great value, and to a tremendous extent will benefit the Canadian consumer. I was deeply interested in an article appearing in the Financial Post, a copy of which I received on Saturday. It is a publication which has not always been favourable to this government, by any means.

Mr. BENNETT: Look at drawbacks, if there is any doubt about that.

Mr. BOTHWELL: They have set out four outstanding features of the new agreement with Great Britain, and there are one or two paragraphs in that connection I should like to read:

> It is a great experiment: Attempting to maintain reciprocity with the United States, preferential trade with Great Britain and trade treaties with other countries, all alongside of each other. If Canada can make a success of the effort it will have shown the world the way to breaking down the barriers of extreme economic nationalism.
> The treaty was by no means a simple thing to negotiate and its successful conclusion is a tribute to the patience and earnestness of Mr. Dunning, Mr. Runciman, Mr. Chamberlain and other cabinet ministers and governmental officials on both sides.

Throughout the article they draw attention to the fact that the new agreement will have the effect of benefiting the housewives in particular and the consuming public in general.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on the budget speech may I first set out my general impressions of it, and secondly point out a major deficiency in it. Thirdly, may I indicate why the deficiency is there, how it could be remedied, and some reasons why I believe my remedy for it is sound.

For several reasons the minister's speech, in my opinion, deserves commendation. It manifested thoroughness, a literary standard of noticeably high quality, optimism—much needed at the present time—and enthusiasm, which is always to be appreciated in a speech of that kind. It encouraged and embodied lower duties, freer trade, wise protection, and the British preference. In my judgment, all these are sound for Canada.

There was one thing with respect to trade which was omitted from the speech, greatly I think to its disadvantage. I think the time has come when we must look to a national board so to plan and manage our trade as to make sure some time beforehand that we shall not have adverse trade balances. Such a board was not provided.

In my opinion the speech deserves censure in that it states that the government is to depend entirely upon two sources for the money required, namely, taxation and borrowing. There are many people throughout the world inclined to condemn nationally created money, but they are going to find just as sure as they live that sooner or later they must subscribe to the principle of nationally created and issued money. The question is: Shall we build the bridge and cross it before we are thrust into the ditch?

Nationally issued money should have been used for many items. It should have been issued debt free and interest free, and it could have been so issued. There are many who are inclined to look with a certain amount of scorn upon this idea every time it is brought forward. For their benefit I should like to read a short quotation from a book by G. D. H. Cole, university leader in economics at Oxford, fellow of the University College at Oxford, vice president of the workers' educational association, vice chairman of the new Fabian research bureau, member of the economic advisory council. To make light of the opinion of such a man is a different thing from making light of the opinion of some upstart from Alberta.

These are his words:

> Such a policy of government spending on public works is indeed the only way of making a larger supply of bank money effective in a situation in which private entrepreneurs find it more remunerative to leave productive resources unused. But, if this is to be the outcome, why on earth should the government submit to pay interest for the privilege of borrowing resources which it has conferred the privilege of creating? Surely the right course is for the government itself to create the money, paying no interest for its use, but limiting the amount created to the amount that the banks would be allowed to create in accordance with the principles of banking policy laid down earlier in this chapter.

The title of the book from which the above extract is taken is Principles of Economic Planning, and the extract is to be found at pages 113 and 114. This book was published in 1935, so we can be sure that the writer is familiar with conditions as they are to-day, not as they were twenty years ago, when many of the economic principles upon which we seem to be basing our procedure were laid down, principles which since that time have been found wanting.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

There is a passage in the budget speech, to be found on page 1215 of Hansard, to which I should like to refer. It commences with the words "that the velocity of circulation" and continues to the words "advantageously produce." This passage merits special attention for it is here that the minister sets forth the economic theories upon which the budget is based. I should like to read short excerpts from this passage, and comment upon them as I go along. The first one is:

> This indicates, Mr. Speaker, that the velocity of circulation of cheque-book money is speeding up with the rising tempo of business activity and the increase in public confidence.

I want to state definitely that the cheque-book money referred to here is not the kind of money to which I was referring some time ago, nor is it the kind of money to which we of this group will be referring in the future. The passage continues:

> This is the factor so frequently forgotten by advocates of monetary panaceas.

Note the scorn. Anything we propose is a panacea, not a suggestion. I believe the time has come in the history of this country when all parties should be prepared to go into a "huddle," to use an athletic expression, on our problems. If the united opinion of all can find a solution of our troubles, it will be greatly to our credit. Instead of that, any new suggestion is scouted as a panacea. I shall deal more particularly with panaceas in a moment or two. I quote:

> The volume of money work done is the product of the amount of money multiplied by its velocity of circulation. An arbitrary increase in the amount of money by the fiat of a government is likely to defeat its object by a proportionate or more than proportionate decrease in the velocity factor.

It is just as likely to increase the velocity; that should also be noted. So much for that. Here is another excerpt:

> If the increase in the volume of money continues beyond a certain but unpredictable point, public confidence is lost altogether and a flight from money occurs.

I submit that that point is unpredictable. How does the minister know that we are near the unpredictable point? How do the authorities who are managing the financial affairs of this dominion know that we are near that unpredictable point? I say that by no means are we near that unpredictable point. It has been said that if the increase in the volume of money continues, we will have a loss of public confidence; but may I say that if the decrease in the volume of money continues, we shall have a loss of public confidence. In this case there will be a flight, not from money, but from goods, which would be just as disastrous. I quote again:

There will come a time, however, and it may come more quickly than many of us expect, when precisely the opposite policy will have to be followed, if the best interests of the country are to be served.

"Opposite" there meaning decreasing the amount of money. When that time comes we will crush even more the poor. What for? In order that we may be able to catch the few men who wish to speculate. Has the time not come when we should adopt some measure for controlling these speculators, rather than continuing to use vague and indefinite methods by which everyone in the country is ruined in order that the speculators may be caught? Again I quote:

But monetary policy should not be regarded as a panacea.

I submit that no social crediter regards monetary reform as a panacea. What right have opponents of social credit to dub it a "panacea"? The word panacea is used only by our opponents. Monetary reform has been desirable before now, but I submit that it is now essential if we are to deal in any effective manner with our problems of debt, of unemployment, of social service and of defence. This monetary question reminds me of the question of irrigation. When you have a wide semi-arid area of land on which people can no longer live, you begin to wonder whether you cannot find water to go on that land. Those who would advocate irrigation know full well that weeds will grow much more abundantly than before when irrigation is provided; that likewise there are dangers of flooding and water-logging and drowning crops, increasing the difficulty of the work and running up the overhead; the need for a new crop, such as sugar beets, to come in, and the alkali problem besides. But the point is this; they know very well they cannot live in the area unless they get the water. We are rapidly approaching the time, indeed we have reached it, when no longer in this Canada of ours can people live unless the money is available. It is not a question of calling the cure a panacea. Who calls the water used in an irrigation project a panacea? It is merely a sine qua non, to use the Latin expression, "without which nothing" you cannot live unless you get it. Here is another passage from the minister's speech.

It can at best only create conditions favourable to sound development. In a constructive program it should merely take its place as part of a much larger whole.

That statement is absolutely correct. No one from this group has ever contended anything else. But money is lacking among the people. Conditions are now unfavourable to this sound development. Just for an example, let a man go out and become a farmer and try to get a line of credit without which he cannot possibly produce; he simply cannot get the line of credit. And that situation is multiplied ten thousand throughout this country. In another passage the minister says:

Fundamentally our need is an increase in our aggregate national income.

We all grant that. But how are you going to get it? Where in this budget speech has any indication been given as to how that thing is to be done? May I draw to the attention of the house something I have cited once before, a statement by Robert H. Hemphill, a prominent authority of the United States, to the effect that for every three dollars of income which the people of a country are going to have, there must be one dollar in circulation—not in the banks nor in the hands of wealthy men, but in circulation. It does not say that we are to have one dollar's worth of goods. Certainly we must have the goods, but goods without the tickets are not enough. We have money now, it is true; much of it, but it is in the hands of a few people from whom we find it impossible to get it away. What chance have the half million unemployed, their children and dependents, of getting any of that money? Is it not, Mr. Speaker, as though you had plenty of blood in your body but were unable to get it circulating in your hands and feet? What good is the blood if it is not circulating?

Another passage from the minister's speech:

—an increase in material wealth, not a different yardstick by which to measure it. Real purchasing power consists in goods and services produced, not in the number of monetary tickets which are used to facilitate the exchange of these goods and services.

This statement is a major error, as I am going to show as I go on with my speech. Meanwhile, will anybody prove that the tickets are not the thing that count? Will anyone tell me why it was that we had so disastrous a fall in the value of all manner of goods and property in 1929? If it was not that the tickets had been withdrawn, what was it? We still had the goods, but we called those goods in 1929 over-production, although no one had thought of calling them over-production before. Why the change? Values in the United States fell two hundred billions of dollars. Why did that occur if tickets made no difference? Was it because of lack of goods? It was because of lack of tickets—these very things that are so scornfully disregarded.

What then makes purchasing power? We grant that an increase in material wealth comes first. We now have this wealth in abundance, and what abundance we have not now we can easily get.

May I draw to the attention of the house a speech delivered by the hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Kuhl) on March 3 as an indication of our possibilities with regard to goods. Why not have the tickets now if we can so easily get the goods—and we have them? The last passage to which I am going to refer is this one:

> An increase in our national wealth and income can best be secured by facilitating the production of the many things which Canada is best fitted to produce and by exchanging these products on as large a scale as possible for products which Canada cannot advantageously produce.

I am going to challenge first of all the use of the word "best"; it needs to be qualified considerably. The general statement of the passage is good, but how this thing is to be brought about is the question. It is very much like the promises to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps) referred, which the Liberals so freely and abundantly made. They were going to do all these things, but they knew not how. What is the use of telling what ought to be if you have no suggestion as to how the thing can be brought about? If the loss of tickets caused all this trouble, why should we not now, by a discreet renewal of these tickets, remove the trouble we have had?

Turning from a consideration of the minister's speech let me go on to the reason why these difficulties have arisen as mentioned in the speech. It must be re-stated over and over again to hon. members that we have passed from one state of civilization to another; that we are trying to make a system which was satisfactory in the old situation fit the conditions of the new; and it certainly cannot be done. The minister defined purchasing power in a way which led to a great absurdity in his speech. He said that goods and services are purchasing power. Will hon. members pardon me while I examine that proposition for a few minutes. If goods and services are purchasing power, why is not the merchandise in a store purchasing power? Why do we have fire sales and clearance sales to raise money if the goods themselves are purchasing power? How about the cattle and swine and machinery and wheat that we had in such superabundance in 1932? If they were purchasing power, why were we not well off?

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Again, if goods are purchasing power why are we concerned about having dump duties to prevent the other fellow from giving us his goods, his purchasing power? Again, if goods are purchasing power, why are we so franctically eager to export our goods, beef and wheat and the like, which we so much need?

The final test whether goods and services are purchasing power is this. Will the government of this country part with one of its bonds for goods and services—coal, for example, or wheat or beef or wool? Of course it will not; the recognition of which fact is recognition of the fact that the definition which the minister has given of purchasing power is false.

Now, goods should be purchasing power; but they are not; they are merely potential purchasing power. The Liberals realize that; else why the anxiety for foreign markets? Selling bacon to Britain simply brings us British purchasing power—that is why we sell it there. It brings us their purchasing power, what we call money—their credit or foreign exchange; and with that thing, whatever we call it, we can buy machinery or anything else that we need. Therefore purchasing power is not goods and services; it is the thing for which we exchange goods and services. Some will say, "Well, you can trade bacon for clothes." Quite so. But according to the minister's definition clothes in Canada are purchasing power. But so is bacon. Then if we trade bacon for clothes we are merely trading purchasing power for purchasing power, a thing about as wise as trading one dollar bill for another dollar bill. Does that make anything like sense?

Worse still, we all know—members on the Conservative side particularly know very well, and so do the Liberals—that if clothes in Canada are purchasing power and you bring in too many British clothes your clothes in Canada are no longer purchasing power. That is a very serious matter. The members of this house can all clearly see the morass of difficulties into which that definition of purchasing power leads when you follow such a will-o'-the-wisp, for a definition of that sort is a will-o'-the-wisp and nothing else. Take some of our own contentious points that will arise in this house from time to time. We have sugar which we produce in Canada; it ought to be purchasing power, but it is not unless we can sell it. We want to sell it in Canada and therefore we try to exclude outside sugar, and thus we get into difficulties with the maritimes; for they, I understand, have potatoes and salt fish which should be purchasing power, but which are not unless they can sell them. And they want to sell them exactly to the place that wants to sell sugar to us. Again we have manifest evidence that this definition is all wrong.

What has caused this error and consequent absurdity? I should like to speak very slowly and very earnestly to the members of the house on this subject, because right here we find the cause of our whole misconception. The budget speech is based upon the theories and conceptions of the old economics. The guiding principle of the old economics, or the economics of scarcity, was this—mark the words—"Supply creates its own demand." These are not my words; they are the words of an eminent authority. "Supply creates its own demand." Let me read the words of one of the great teachers, John Stuart Mill, and see how nearly the minister's definition conforms to Mill's statement:

> What constitutes the means of payment for commodities is simply commodities.

Good enough, but it leads to all the absurdities I have pointed out. Further:

> Could we suddenly double the productive powers of the country, we should double the commodities in every market; but we should, by the same stroke, double the purchasing power. Everybody would bring a double demand as well as supply; everybody would be able to buy twice as much, because everybody would have twice as much to offer in exchange.

That was sound enough until we got into the era of overproduction; but everybody recognizes now that it is no longer sound. It is a little sounder than the minister's definition, but I will not take time to go into that now.

Here is a comment by John Maynard Keynes on that statement—and Keynes is recognized as an authority worth listening to. He says:

> If this be true, then there is no obstacle to full employment.

Everybody sees the absurdity of that. Keynes leaves it at that, with impressive silence. At another point he says:

> Professional economists after Malthus were apparently unmoved by the lack of correspondence between the results of their theory and the facts of observation—a discrepancy which the ordinary man has not failed to observe, with the result of his growing unwillingness to accord the economists that measure of respect which he accords to other groups of scientists whose theoretical results are confirmed by observation when applied to facts.

That is exactly the trouble with us to-day. We simply cannot understand existing conditions because our conceptions were framed on the theories of the old economics; and as long as we continue to keep those old theories we shall be unable to explain the facts of the existing situation, and we shall never find a solution. The definition is utterly unsound to-day because we are in an age of abundance, an age of technological unemployment, an age of high specialization. A hundred years ago a man made a pair of shoes with his own hands and could exchange it for a tin kettle if he wished. To-day if he were working in a factory and putting on heels on shoes, how could he exchange the act of putting heels on shoes for a kettle? That is a question that reveals in another aspect the absurdity of the whole situation which has developed from the ideas of the old economics.

We must have a new concept, for the old theories have become unsound because, as I say, we are to-day living in an age of plenty. Everyone knows that. As a simple illustration may I refer to page 42 of Howard Scott's Introduction to Technocracy. He there informs us that we have learned now to create a machine which has nine million times the working power that one human being has, and he says that 8,766,000 of these units have been developed since 1900. Must it not be manifest to any hon. member who thinks about the situation that there has been a great transformation which is absolutely epoch-making and which demands treatment that is revolutionary? The machine has displaced more and more men and will continue to do so in spite of everything we can do, as the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) pointed out so well the other night. We are living now in a time when we must acknowledge the new economics; otherwise we shall go on to our doom. We can laugh and sneer about it all we like, but we shall simply be marking time and deceiving the people while civilization crashes into ruin, and then we shall have the melancholy satisfaction of remembering that the danger was pointed out in time for us to have saved the situation if only we had been open-minded enough to see the new economics instead of lingering behind in the old. The new economics can be put in these words: Demand creates its own supply. Just the reverse of the old definition. For example, if you have money in your pocket, is there anywhere in Canada where you cannot get almost anything you want? The goods are here in abundance; what is needed is effective demand. What is effective demand? Effective demand is nothing more or less than those tickets which the minister so scornfully swept away, that is "monetary tickes used to facilitate the exchange of goods and services."

Now what are the principles of these new economics? They are mainly three: (1) that the state shall create and issue the tickets, in the form either of pocketbook money or cheque book money (2) that the state shall distribute this money, not leaving it to the banks, or to people or industry to borrow it; it must distribute the money itself, for public works, for defence, for social services such as pensions to ex-service men, to the aged, to mothers, to the blind, and to unemployables, for the endowment of universities and schools, or by other means tending to bring about adequate use of our resources both material and human. To this end it may be necessary even to resort to dividends, that idea at which so many people are laughing uproariously. But why not dividends, first to supplement the low wages which men are receiving in industry, where they are often so painfully underpaid that they are suffering and driven to strikes? Or why not dividends for those for whom we can no longer find employment?

Then (3) There must be control of prices and prevention of inflation, by means of a device or mechanism called the just price. I have not time to talk about this in any detail, but those who see in the new economics a danger of inflation must be informed that there is a device in the social credit proposals which prevents inflation directly and scientifically, which device is called the just price and the compensated price. Much of this, of course, will have to be accomplished by cooperation with the provinces, but if this government can force certain provinces to accept a loan council in order to get money it ought not to be very difficult to use the monetary power to force them to do pretty nearly anything.

What grounds have we for believing that the new economics is sound? First, it harmonizes with facts as they are. Secondly, it would result in greater production of goods and in the extension of markets at home and abroad. Third, it could be managed so as to prevent inflation; and fourth, we have competent and responsible authorities who favour the acceptance of its principles. Among these are Professor G. D. H. Cole, and also Professor R. F. Irvine, for twenty-five years professor of economics in the university of Sydney, Australia, who makes the positive declaration that social credit is not only sound but is the only way to keep western civilization from being wrecked utterly.

Since the creation, issue and control of money, both pocket book and cheque book money, especially the latter, in an age of plenty such as is ours, possessing an abundance of goods and services, able to produce more abundantly, will turn these goods and services into actual purchasing power; and since such creation, issue and control will bring about immediately much more goods, both producers' and consumers', which goods, according to the minister's own definition, are purchasing power; and since the best evidence tends plentifully to show that the age of scarcity has given place to an age of abundance; and since an economic system of scarcity is obviously likely to be disastrous to an age of plenty; and since there are throughout Canada ghastly evidences that our present economic system has produced and is producing disastrous results; and since a great and growing body of informed opinion, supported by concurrence of an increasing number of highly respectable authorities, is convinced that creation and issue of government money in a country of plenty such as Canada, can be controlled so that it will not cause inflation or other destructive results, and offers the only possible way out of an otherwise apparently hopeless situation, I once more respectfully urge the government to take immediate steps towards the introduction into Canada at an early date of the principles of the new economics, commonly called social credit, exercising the state's constitutional right and duty to create and regulate national money. The government of Canada will thus use the only effective means of dealing with the unemployment problem.

Even without exercising that right the government in 1936-37 could in some measure have alleviated unemployment if it had dealt otherwise with the marketing of Canadian wheat. The evidence indicates strongly that the government's policy deprived the prairie farmers of many millions of dollars in this year of most urgent need. And every dollar lost to the farmer deprived him of a dollar's worth of necessities, deprived Canadian industries of a dollar's worth of sales, deprived the Canadian government itself of revenue from tariff and sales tax, added to the burdens of the provinces and municipalities, and rendered the debt situation more intense.

Therefore, as a representative of a great farming constituency and a great farming province I feel it my duty to move an amendment to the amendment, as follows:

> And that this house also regrets the action of the government in passing order in council P.C. 2202, which in effect deprived western farmers of the privilege of selling wheat to the wheat board unless the price of wheat dropped below 90 cents per bushel for wheat graded as No. 1 northern at Fort William.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I think this subamendment is out of order. The rules, I think, would have permitted the hon. gentleman to move it as an amendment to the motion to go into supply, after the amendment had been dealt with. In other words, in its terms, it is not a subamendment but a substantive amendment, and as such has no relevancy to the amendment, and under the rules can only be dealt with in the manner I have indicated. A subamendment must have some relevancy to the amendment itself; the very word "subamendment" means that it is an amendment to the amendment itself, which this is not. As a substantive amendment to the motion it would be in order if moved by any hon. member who has not yet spoken, after the amendment itself had been disposed of. I do not cite the authorities at the moment, but that is my impression which I submit for consideration as I presume in the absence of the Speaker a ruling will not be given immediately.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I was going to suggest that you, sir, should take the matter into consideration while the debate is going on. I am myself under the same impression as my right hon. friend.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I shall take the matter into consideration.

Mr. DAVID SPENCE (Parkdale): I do not intend to follow the speaker who has preceded me (Mr. Blackmore) because I know very little about finance except financing with real money, and that I have had a good deal of difficulty in getting at times.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Hear, hear.

Mr. SPENCE: But I can assure the hon. gentleman that if he inquires in the maritimes to-day about the price of potatoes he will be assured that potatoes are purchasing power, because they bring a nice penny.

First, I wish to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) on his splendid presentation of the budget. It is not often that I do that, but he has made an admirable presentation. I was disappointed, however, that I and my colleagues who are associated in the business world obtained no relief from certain nuisance taxes that have bothered us for several years; that there was no reduction in the sales tax, and that the minister did not find it possible to eliminate the sugar tax entirely, which I think would have pleased everybody in the country. I was glad to see the minister in the house this afternoon, and to learn that he had recovered from his illness. I hope he will find it possible to be in the house constantly from now on, because I like the twinkle in his eye when things are going his way, and sometimes the scowl on his face when things are going the other way.

I do not intend to take up the time of the house in presenting a great many figures, but I should like to make some general observations particularly with regard to what took place in this country from 1921 on, after the Liberal party came into power. I think it was the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps) who said that any government could eliminate unemployment if it went the right way about it. That is not my view; I do not think any government can end unemployment without the cooperation of the rest of the world. I do not think the present government can be expected to end unemployment, which they did so much to create from 1921 to 1930 by meddling with business and tariffs. I contend that that administration fell down on the job, and caused unemployment at a time when the country was or should have been prosperous. There is no doubt in my mind that our lack of prosperity was due in large part to governmental interference with business and tariffs.

At that time the United States caused most of our difficulties, and no attempt was made by the Liberal party to formulate a policy for Canadians. They seemed to be afraid of offending our neighbours to the south. My own view is that if we had looked after ourselves they would have admired us more. The Fordney-McCumber tariff, which was introduced in the United States in 1921, 1922 or 1923—I do not remember the year but I remember what happened—practically shut out all farm produce that previously had been imported into the United States. I remember it so well because at that time I was exporting a great many cars of mixed vegetables, turnips and so on. That tariff imposed duties so high that it was impossible to ship anything to the United States. As a rule there are no customs houses in the interior of that country, and we who were shipping turnips and other vegetables had to buy the commodity, pay the duty and sometimes pay the freight as well. That was too great a risk to take in shipping vegetables down through Virginia and that section of the United States. Incidentally there is one example in the United States that might be followed by this country. We have too many customs houses in the interior of Canada; I think a great many of them could be closed. We had to clear everything through Black Rock or Niagara Falls, and no one in the business could afford to take the chance, because at that time the duty was higher than the price of the commodity we were shipping.

Then in 1930 the Hawley-Smoot tariff worked a great hardship on the dairying interests of Canada, who were entirely shut out of the American market. No effort was made by the party then in power to work out a policy for Canadians. Before the Conservative party came into office in 1930 Canada had lost her world markets; there were a great many unemployed in the country; the balance of trade was against us, and we landed in an awful mess. The party now in power had continued to interfere with tariffs and the business world until the investing public became discouraged. We have failed to restore the confidence of the investing public, and until we do that I do not see any hope of curing unemployment.

Hon. members will remember when we first reduced the tariff on farm implements around 1924 or 1925. At that time the Massey-Harris people were located in the end of my riding. They increased the size of their plant in Batavia, New York, and did all the work possible there. Then they shipped their goods to the northwest from Batavia instead of from Toronto. In those days the Massey-Harris Company employed people by the thousand where now they employ them by the hundred. I remember when the streets surrounding the Massey-Harris plant were black with people coming out at five o'clock in the evening, but that is not the case to-day, and I have no doubt that some of the negotiations carried on by the administration then in power were responsible for a good deal of that employment. To-day in Canada thousands of people have plenty of money to invest, but they are encouraged to invest it only in government bonds, which to my mind simply ties up money and keeps it away from business and industry. That is so simply because the people feel that government bonds are the only safe investment. Even to-day, though the interest on bonds is very low, investors consider them much safer than other investments. I have had some experience in the business world and in industry, Mr. Speaker, and I know of nothing that will do more to create employment than encouraging the investor to put his money into industry. Then the government should leave industry alone—stop interfering with it.

The closing of the relief camps, which the government tried to make us believe would be to the advantage of the young men in the camps brought no improvement at all. The men who were taken out of those camps and put to work put others out of employment, as I think was said by the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. MacNeil) the other day. The government simply put one class of people out of employment and gave work to others. As I understand it, some camps are open to-day. They may not be under the regulations of the federal government or under the Department of National Defence as they were formerly, but this government must remain responsible for their upkeep. Those camps served a useful purpose, and may I say they were started by a man with a big heart, Hon. Donald Sutherland, for the purpose of giving these young men something to do, good beds to sleep on, good food to eat and plenty of clothing. If it had been possible to keep out the agitators all would have been well, but those agitators were encouraged by speeches made in this house. Otherwise there never would have been any difficulty and the government would not have had to interfere at all.

There is another thing for which I suppose I can hardly blame the Liberal party entirely, but as a rule they always employ the wrong men to carry on investigations. I am sorry to say that sometimes, but not very often, we have done the same thing. For instance, when it was suggested to build up a business in the West Indies, an hon. member of the house who knew nothing about goods produced in Jamaica or any part of the West Indies, was appointed to go there. He came back with a wonderful report, talking about picking beautiful, juicy oranges off the trees, and about the grapefruit of the West Indies, which even to-day are not considered of any great value when compared with the product of Texas or Florida. His glowing report succeeded in convincing the then government that in the West Indies we would find a great market for our products. I believe he stated that we would send them large quantities of flour and lumber. As a result a steamboat service, which has cost this country hundreds of thousands of dollars, was established. That was a foolish thing for the government to do.

Mr. Black, who at that time was senior member for Halifax, was interested in the steamboat business, because he had boats running to the West Indies and other ports. On that occasion he advised strenuously and vigorously against the service, but despite his efforts the government carried on and established a steamboat route which has lost lots of money. No young country can stand maladministration of that kind. The merchant marine of that day was losing plenty of money, without our establishing any such service.

Investigations of one kind and another have been carried on, all of which have proved failures. The present invesigation into the textile business is political, so far as I can see, and a regular pork barrel. Counsel for the commission, Mr. McRuer, has spoken for three weeks, stopping only to sleep and eat; God knows how much he is getting per day.

Mr. MacNICOL: He is getting too much, whatever it is.

Mr. SPENCE: Whatever he is getting, the country will be out just that much, because nothing will come of it, so far as I know. No doubt the cotton industry has made some money; if they have made too much, then the combines and mergers legislation should be used, instead of appointing lawyers and judges and spending barrels of money to make an investigation.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPENCE: There is no use laughing. The Combines Investigation Act is there for that and for no other purpose, namely to investigate monopolies or mergers of any kind. Why the investigation could not have been carried on by the department administering the act, I do not know.

No doubt the woollen industry has made no money, and it is a shame to couple it with cotton. I am satisfied people operating woollen factories would have been better off if they had invested their money in government bonds, because if they had done so, at least they would not have had to worry about it. I would suggest that instead of appointing commissions these matters should be handled by the tariff board.

We hear a great deal about free trade. Some people seem to think that free trade is the remedy for the unemployment situation. While I do not say that high tariffs will solve the unemployment, I do say that free trade certainly will not

May I draw the attention of the government to a situation which I regard as unfair. When witnesses are giving evidence against people under investigation by a commission a great deal of publicity is given to their statements, but the rebuttal evidence is hidden and nobody hears about it. I say that is unfair to the people in the industry. One statement should be printed alongside the other, so that we would have a full report and would be able to see just who has been lying—because someone is usually doing that.

The National Employment Commission was another unfortunate move on the part of this government, one which is costing the country a large amount of money. When the measure setting up the commission was before the house I fought it vigorously, on the ground that we were creating another big spending department, like the civil service commission. All the commission has done has been to repeat the work of obtaining statistics which were already in the office of the Department of Labour. Personally I would rather trust the minister, with the knowledge his department had, than trust a commission. If the minister lacked the knowledge, he would be in a position to get it.

As a House of Commons we should accept the responsibility of running the country— —

Mr. POULIOT: Hear, hear.

Mr. SPENCE: — —instead of appointing commissions behind which we may hide. I think even some hon. members opposite would agree with that statement. Since 1921 the policy of appointing commissions has been followed, and as members elected by the people we have been shirking our responsibility. I for one am prepared to take my share. True we may make mistakes, but we would not make any more than are made by commissions which have no responsibility to the electors.

Mr. MacNICOL: Only a bill of expense.

Mr. SPENCE: Yes, as the hon. member says, only a bill of expense.

We have negotiated a new trade treaty with the United Kingdom and, I am glad to say, it is a very good one—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SPENCE: —but not as good as the one negotiated by my right hon. leader in 1932. Remember that, too. I know something about business. While I may not be able to talk as some of my friends do, yet I can sit around a table and take my part with most of them.

Mr. POULIOT: You are doing very well.

Mr. SPENCE: However, it was not a bad agreement for a Liberal government to make. It does materially affect some items and I am hopeful that the result will not be too bad, although I have some doubts. I must say, however, that I am glad the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) did not carry out his threat to cancel the empire agreement made in 1932. He and his followers shouted from the hill tops that the empire agreements were detrimental to Canada and had to be cancelled. Did he cancel them? No; just propaganda, and more bunk from the platform.

Mr. MacNICOL: Mostly bunk.

Mr. SPENCE: After the fall session of 1930 my right hon. leader attended a conference in the old country. While it may not have been considered a great success, he had the wisdom to invite the conference to adjourn and meet in Canada in 1932. That is something which Sir Wilfrid Laurier in his time and the present Prime Minister in his tried to accomplish, but they both failed; and I say that my right hon. leader should be congratulated upon being able to do something no other leader in Canada had been able to do, and when history is written the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett will be known in this Canada of ours and in Great Britain for the service he rendered the empire by his action on that occasion as the greatest statesman Canada has ever known.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank God you are not an historian.

Mr. SPENCE: Thank God I hope I am more of an historian than you are. That is what history will say, and it will not be long before we read it in print. I am not blaming Sir Wilfrid Laurier; he simply did not have sufficient persuasive powers, nor did the present Prime Minister. But my leader had, and he should receive the credit.

The treaty he negotiated increased our market for practically everything produced in Canada. It gave us a sheltered market for our wheat, with a six-cent preferential duty. We had a preference of about $1.25 or $1.50 per barrel on apples. In fact, we were given a preferred market for practically everything we sold, bacon in particular. The price of pork rose from 4 and 4½ cents a pound to 10 cents; then it dropped back to 8 and 8½ cents a pound, at which level it has remained. Did that happen before the trade agreements were entered into? Not on your life. That is what saved the country.

The Liberals took every advantage of the bad times and the depression; in fact, my view is that they prayed that the bad times might continue for their benefit. Now they want to take credit for the good times, but I do not think the people of Canada will take them seriously when the next election comes around. I do not mind telling them that I shall hate to see them defeated, but at the next election I am sure the Canadian people will give credit to whom credit is due. Not many of my hon. friends will believe that. Let me remind the house how difficult it was for us to get the trade agreements through. Item after item was blocked for days before the legislation could be put through.

In 1935 we introduced social legislation framed wholly in the interests of the people. There was the unemployment insurance act, the maximum hours and minimum wage legislation, and so on. Did any one of hon. members opposite help that legislation through? No. They did everything they could to belittle it. The legislation was finally sent to the supreme court and then to the privy council, where unfortunately much of it was declared ultra vires. This country needs unemployment insurance, and we will not be able to get along without it. Such insurance would save a lot of people from misery.

There is no doubt that the Conservative party is a hard luck party. We were not born with horseshoes. We always seem to come into power just in time to save the country from being ruined by the Liberals. Then we get kicked out and the Liberals get the credit for bringing the country back. We certainly are the hard luck party.

A lot of talk goes on day by day about the protection of industry. To my mind protection of industry means just one thing—the protection of the workers. We must keep the wheels of industry turning; we must keep the smoke pouring from the chimneys of our factories. We must keep our industrial workers busy, otherwise the grain farmer and the cattleman will have but little market for their products, and the truck farmer and the fruit grower will have none at all. Outside of the apples, pears and other hard stuff that these growers are able to ship to Great Britain, they have no export market at all. What will happen to the fruit and vegetable growers south of Toronto to Niagara Falls if the industries in Toronto, Hamilton, Welland and St. Catharines cannot keep going? If that happens, there will be thousands more unemployed. I hope my hon. friends will have some pity on those who live in industrial centres and give us at least a chance to live.

In years gone by, hon. members to my left have done considerable talking about the great spread between prices to the producer and consumer. Much has been said about the middleman. I happen to be a middleman in a small way, and let me tell the house that the middleman always suffers with the producer. To-day many middlemen are just as badly off as those who are producing. I remember when we had in this house from 1921 to 1925 sixty-five Progressives, and some hon. members will remember the calamity howling that occurred every day. Our attention was directed to the scenes of distress and misery throughout the west. There was even talk of secession. There were no hard times then. If hon. members could talk hard times then, they have a much greater right to do so to-day. I told those sixty-five members that they were not representing the views of the western people. I pride myself on knowing something about every part of this country. I have driven thousands of miles through Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba; I have been down to Halifax and out west to the coast, and I think I know something of the views of the people. The people of the west were not asking for secession as was claimed in this house. I never heard such calamity howling.

Thirty-five Progressives came back in 1925, and they sold themselves in order to keep the Liberal party in power. It has been said that they had been bargained with, but I cannot say that that is a fact. Had we sacrificed the principles of the old Tory party we could have had them.

Mr. YOUNG: How do you know that?

Mr. SPENCE: Never mind how. Some of your manipulators beat ours out. You got control and you were able to keep in power. We came back in 1925 with 116 members and you had only 96, and you had no right to be in power. It was only with the help of members who professed to be progressive that you remained in power. Afterwards you accused us of putting one of them on the tariff board. You said he was a Conservative, but if he was a Conservative, why did he not support the Tories at that time?

An hon. MEMBER: He did.

An hon. MEMBER: And he got paid for it.

Mr. SPENCE: I would not say that he or anyone else got paid. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) lost out and another seat had to be found for him. After much difficulty, one was finally found away out in Saskatchewan.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member has become an historian.

Mr. SPENCE: I do not want to ridicule anyone, but I must tell the truth. The Liberal party has always claimed to be so much better than the Tory party, but yet there was all this manipulation and intrigue. We are known as the wicked party, but I do not think we are quite as bad as our friends the Liberals.

I am going to say one kind word to my hon. friends to my left. They are always ready to advocate impossibilities. They are always ready to blame bad times on the government in power. I claim that no government can bring about prosperity, but we should have an economic administration which we are not getting to-day, to help bring back prosperity.

I come now to the vegetable oil situation, to which some hon. members have referred already, and about which I believe I know something. It has been discussed by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris), who knows the business well and thinks of his fellow men. It was also discussed by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thompson), who is a successful farmer and knows what he is talking about. I hope the government will heed their advice and protect Canada's dairy industry, which is one of her chief interests. If they do not it is my belief that with vegetable oils coming in as rapidly as they have done during the past three years, dairying will be practically ruined in another two years. The subject has been before the tariff board, and we have been expecting its decision for some time. I hope the government will try to influence the tariff board, if they need any influence.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh no.

Mr. SPENCE: You would not do it? For anything else, you would.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): No.

Mr. SPENCE: Like ducks! Believe me, it is not the first time the minister's party has tried to influence them.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I hope not.

Mr. SPENCE: Canadian dairymen cannot compete with the cheap labour in hot climates where vegetable oils are produced. The United States protected itself by putting on a duty on vegetable oil, as well as by an impost of three or 3½ cents a pound on animal fats coming from other countries, particularly Canada. I hate the word retaliate, but that represents what I should like to do. It would accord with the countervailing duties that were brought forward in 1930, and which pleased so well some hon. members on the other side.

While Canada is a great country for mines and minerals and forests and water power, it has also great opportunities for hunting and fishing which attract tourists, and I suggest to the government—

Mr. HANSON: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I sat in this house for five years when the Liberals were in opposition, and whenever we tried to read our speeches we were always called to order.

Mr. SPENCE: A wide field is always allowed to those who speak in this debate. I am just offering a suggestion to the government.

Mr. HANSON: Let me put my point of order, please.

Mr. SPENCE: All right, I shall be glad to sit down.

Mr. HANSON: It seems that this session anyone can get up and read a speech. I do not think it is fair.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not think that the hon. member is actually reading his speech. He may be consulting his notes. I cannot see him actually reading his speech.

Mr. SPENCE: I have not noticed the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Hanson) making a speech, either by reading it or in any other way. If I were feeling as well as I should like to feel, I might not find it necessary to read any part of my remarks.

Mr. HANSON: Let the hon. member read it. It does not amount to anything, anyhow. I think that I have contributed just as much to this house as he has.

Mr. SPENCE: If the hon. member wants to make a speech, let him get up after I have finished. When I was interrupted I was referring to the importance of catering to the tourist trade. In some way it should be made clear to those who cater to this trade that the government desires them to treat their guests with the greatest courtesy. Nothing will bring the tourist back faster than pleasant memories of his treatment at summer resorts. I am sorry to say there are some places where the people endeavour to take all the gold they can out of the tourists. At the present time we spend through the Canadian National about $200,000 a year to induce vacationists to come to this country. Perhaps if we treated these tourists in the way I have suggested, all or much of this $200,000 might be saved. It is just a suggestion; I am never opposed to spending money to make money, and I do not object to the appropriation of $200,000.

A great deal has been said in this house about our foreign markets. No doubt at times they are a real necessity, but it should not be forgotten that export trade may be cut down or cut off at any time through competition from other countries. So, I say, we must have more people. Some hon. members will not agree with this point of view, but I have given it a great deal of study, and in my opinion we need more people to consume our products, thus furnishing a stable market. My personal views are that we should admit into Canada all the British and Scandinavian immigrants who will come in under their own steam. One will make work for the other. Labour leaders may not agree with me, but I cannot agree with them all the time. In this vast area we have lots of room for more people.

Mr. MacNEIL: What about the hundreds of thousands who are unemployed and on relief?

Mr. SPENCE: We will make work for them by bringing in another million people. It looks selfish not to fill the vacant spaces which we have in this country. Some other nation may have its eye on these opportunities. I name no names, but such things might happen in these days when so many international difficulties arise. I should like the government to consider allowing British and Scandinavian immigrants to come into the country.

An hon. MEMBER: "Under their own steam."

Mr. SPENCE: If they do not adopt this policy now, they will have to do so later. It would take forty million people to do justice to this country. Eleven millions cannot carry the burden any longer—and that, or probably a little less, is our population to-day. An increased population would solve our transportation problems and benefit the country in a variety of ways. I know that on this subject I differ from some of my friends, but perhaps I have a vision of the future which some others do not share. I hold that this country will not regain prosperity until our population is much greater than ten millions. Sir John A. Macdonald and his associates thought that they had achieved a wonderful success when they brought about confederation, but lately it has been more difficult than ever before to hold confederation together. Canada is a vast country where different interests must be served. What suits the extreme east does not suit the extreme west, and what is acceptable to both extremes does not suit the centre. As far as I can see, there is no hope that a zone tariff could be arranged to regulate commodities and be fair to all parts of the country.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. SPENCE: When the house rose at six o'clock I was about to say that we have a number of monopolies and mergers that are detrimental to the country and that most of them were started in the period from 1921 to 1930, during the Liberal party's time.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Oh, you are a partisan.

Mr. SPENCE: More were started in that time than in any other period in the history of Canada, at any rate as far as I can remember. For example, take Canadian Industries Limited, which controls fifty per cent of the factories in the country. When anyone thinks that he is buying from an individual factory to-day and discovers that in all probability he is buying from Canadian Industries Limited, he is disappointed. We find that Canadian Industries Limited is controlled by the du Pont people of New York. I would suggest to the government that this sort of thing should be curbed so as to allow the small industries, and business houses, to get a chance, and have the profits remain in Canada. As things are they are leaving Canada to-day, the money being made by American concerns. Soon the United States will have the country by purchase, and what will Canadians say then, when this North American continent may be all one country?

In my opinion, the government made a mistake when they changed the wheat board. Mr. McFarland and his associates did good work, for Mr. McFarland proved that he was a good manipulator. He had an advisory board of eight, four representing the railways and industrial concerns, the other four being farmers. No doubt the farmers should have some say in regard to the disposition of wheat. However, that has all been explained by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) and I will not go over it again. Now we have Mr. Murray at the head of the board, with Mr. McIvor—they cannot do without him because he provides some of the brains for the board—and A. M. Shaw, a man so full of education that his brains probably cannot contain any practical ideas; and on top of that we have an advisory committee composed of four ministers of the crown. Who can say that this is not a political wheat board? I am not condemning the ministers because they are all capable of serving on any board, but it seems hardly fair to the farmer, who I think has been sold out.

The rehabilitation bill was brought into the house a few days ago, and in that regard I may say that we in the east are willing to make some sacrifices in order to rehabilitate western Canada. But it makes it difficult for us to assist them when three or four members from that locality will get up and abuse the east for criticism of the west, suggesting that we have no consideration for the people in that part of Canada. Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in my own riding I have been criticized repeatedly on account of the money spent in the west. I submit, therefore, that it would be better if we did not have such speeches from hon. members. When the vote is going their way, it is not necessary to let the whole world know what we are doing in this house. I am willing to do whatever I can in my own small way to help to hold confederation together. Winston Churchill once said that the curse of the world has been the aggressive socialist movement, which is the enemy of ordered liberal progress in any country, and so I say, Mr. Speaker—and I am going to cut my remarks very short—that we should get together, become acquainted, be good friends with one another, and cooperate as far as we can and encourage cooperation with other countries; because no nation can live to itself and be successful.

Those are my views and I thank the house for the patient and attentive hearing I have had. I appreciate the fact that I have not done justice to the speech I intended to make, but that is because I have not been feeling as well as I should like to, and perhaps I should never have started at all.

Mr. SPEAKER: Before any hon. member speaks I must draw the attention of the house to the fact that before six o'clock an amendment to the amendment was proposed by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), and thereupon a point of order was raised by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). I am ready to hear any other hon. member who wishes to speak to the point of order.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): In the dinner hour I looked up the Rules and Forms and I find that rule 422, page 131, says:

> The law on the relevancy of amendments is that if they are on the same subject matter with the original motion, they are admissible, but not when foreign thereto. The exceptions to this rule are amendments on the question of going into supply or ways and means.

That is the broad general statement of the situation, but the question of relevancy has always been held to be one of importance in dealing with a matter of this kind, and where an entirely new matter is added by the use of the word "also," it falls within the general rule. I mentioned that the rule apparently contemplated the possibility of amendments being moved after the amendments before the chamber had been disposed of. Rule 423 says:

> When a motion, an amendment and an amendment to the amendment have been proposed, the speaker will first take the sense of the house on the last by saying: "Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the amendment to the amendment?" After this has been disposed of, another may be moved as soon as the Speaker has proposed the question: "Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the amendment (or the amendment as amended) to the main motion?" After this has been disposed of, the Speaker will propose: "Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion (or the motion as amended)?" Then a member may move another amendment. Any number of amendments may be proposed in this way.

On going into supply there is of course a limitation to this procedure by the practice of parliament. The rule was laid down, by Mr. Speaker Lemieux, I believe, that only what amounts to an amendment to the amendment might be moved. This, of course, is a motion to go into ways and means, which presumably stands upon the same footing. As one of the authorities, I believe, puts it, by the law and custom of the constitution we have established that principle. Standing order 49 says:

> Only one amendment and one subamendment may be made to a motion for Mr. Speaker to leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply or ways and means.

We are therefore subject to the limitation which is contained in that rule, and the general principle that any number of amendments can be moved, which I mentioned before recess, would be an erroneous statement of the situation. There can be only one amendment and one amendment to the amendment when it is a motion to go into supply or ways and means; but if it is a motion for second reading, or any other resolution, when the house has disposed of the first subamendment and then the amendment, it is competent for any member who has not yet spoken to move any amendment that would be relevant, according to the rules as I understand them and as laid down in May, at any rate.

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Speaking to the point of order, reference to standing order or rule 49 is appropriate. But may I call attention to the fact that there is no rule 423. There is a paragraph 423 in Mr. Beauchesne's book, but there is no rule 423, and I suggest to the leader of the opposition that he refer to that number as a paragraph and not as a rule. It would be more appropriate.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I have looked into the matter, and I believe that the point of order is well taken. There must be some relation between an amendment and a subamendment; there must be some relevancy of the one to the other. In this instance the subamendment raises a new and quite different subject matter. Members of the house might be willing to vote for the amendment, but if you added this subamendment, which is another matter altogether, they might be opposed to the subamendment and would have no opportunity to express their views. The same applies to those who might be in favour of the subamendment, but not of the amendment. The subamendment must be relevant to the amendment, as amending the amendment. This subamendment does not amend the amendment; it simply adds to it a different matter altogether.

Mr. SPEAKER: During the recess I had occasion to consult the notes of Hansard and I find that the point raised by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) had been well taken. I might refer the house to standing order 49 and to paragraph 394 of Beauchesne's Rules and Forms:

> A motion may be amended: (a) by leaving out certain words; (b) by leaving out certain words in order to insert other words; (c) by inserting or adding other words.

If we look at the amendment it does not propose to follow that procedure at all, but it is entirely a new motion. Paragraph 395 says:

> It is an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed. Every amendment proposed to be made either to a question or to a proposed amendment should be so framed that if agreed to by the house the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

I do not find that if this proposed amendment were allowed, it would make the amendment it is proposed to amend consistent with itself. Then further, in An Introduction to Procedure of the House of Commons, by G. F. M. Campion, we find on page 150 under the heading Amendments to Amendments the following:

> An amendment to an amendment stands in the same relation to an amendment as an amendment itself does to a motion.

This is not in the form of an amendment to the main motion or in the form of an amendment to the amendment. If it be considered in relation to the motion it cannot be a subamendment, but it must be an amendment, and there is nothing on the face of it to show that it is intended to amend the amendment. Moreover, as the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) have stated, it does not deal with the same subject matter as the amendment. It is in my opinion foreign to the amendment submitted by the leader of the opposition, and I therefore have to declare it out of order.

Mr. H. R. FLEMING (Humboldt): In rising to take part in this debate I do so with considerable trepidation; the subject is of such vast importance and can be approached from so many angles that it is difficult to decide which features to discuss. First, however, may I heartily congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) upon the splendid budget which he brought down, which will remain a memorable document among the public records of this country. No one will deny that the budget presented to this house was a bold budget, and that was expected from so courageous and aggressive a gentleman as the Minister of Finance. Those characteristics he exemplified when as Minister of Railways and Canals he changed the terminus of the Hudson Bay railway from Port Nelson to Fort Churchill. Western Canada will ever be grateful to him for that change and thank him for the tactful manner in which he pushed that railway project to a conclusion. When he presented his budget he showed those same qualities of courage and progressiveness, and again Canada should be grateful to him.

I intend to vote against the amendment and for the motion. In so doing I am confident that I express the opinion of the great majority of the people I have the honour to represent in this parliament. I favour the present budget because it is in accordance with Liberal policy, which has achieved such great successes throughout the length and breadth of Canada in recent years. I accept the budget because it is a Canadian budget, made in Canada to meet Canadian needs and the situation as it really exists in Canada at the present time. By degrees we are becoming more accustomed to conditions to which we have been brought by the depression. Instead of blaming this one and that one at home we are beginning to realize that we belong to a world order and that our ups and downs are the result, not altogether of our own wise actions and our costly errors, but of the conditions that obtain elsewhere. To quote from the budget speech as reported at page 1211 of Hansard:

> Viewing the situation broadly, however, in the light of the progress of the past year and the major underlying forces at work, I believe I can fairly say that since 1929 no New Year has dawned with brighter promise for Canada. I shall be greatly disappointed if, by this time next year, Canada had not moved substantially further along the road of economic recovery.

Those of us who a few years ago were so optimistic about the return of good times during an overnight sleep are now prepared to wait with the rest until the world has made a few more revolutions in its orbit. There is no going ahead alone. If we raise more wheat than the world can buy we must store it or destroy it or use it for feed. If we build more railways than are necessary to carry our freight and passengers the rails will rust through disuse, and if they are national railways the nation must pay the price. If our factories turn out more goods than they can sell, they must close their doors and dismiss their employees. It will require the utmost wisdom to determine what the nation should do to maintain its place in the world of trade, and just as much wisdom to determine what producers in farm and factory should do to preserve the national equilibrium.

Here are some of the suggestions which have been made. A suggestion, of course, is not a solution; in nearly every case there are counter suggestions. Among the suggestions are these: produce less grain; raise more stock; produce more grain and keep the railways busy; produce less in the factories; give shorter hours to men; put the tariff up higher; lower the tariff to any country that will trade with us; stop immigration; fill up the prairies; bring more people into the country; spend; save; make war on Russia; copy Russia; get back to the simple life; break up machines and revert to hand labour; close the universities; cultivate trade within the empire; complete the lake route and get another means of transportation even though there is nothing to transport. And, above all, find fault with everyone who is trying to do something, and finally, if you are of good Canadian or British stock revile the foreign-born. But we must always remember that epithets have no place in logic and will not help towards a solution.

Is there a solution? Must we admit that the human mentality is not capable of combating the forces at present striving to bring chaos into the world? I for one cannot resign myself to that view. I sincerely believe that there is a solution, and a clear-cut one. The solution as I see it is practicable even though it may not be immediate. As the stagnation of trade is a result of world conditions, the remedy is to be sought by bringing about better world conditions, a more friendly attitude and closer trade relations. If nations are bound to act as schoolboys with chips on their shoulders there will continue to be misunderstanding, aloofness and possibly war. But if the law of life, which makes each think of others as of self, is observed, it will not be long until there is concord and enduring peace. If along with good will there is a determined endeavour to break down barriers to trade and tariffs of exclusion, then each country will proceed to give to the world what nature intended it to give, and will exchange its production freely for something which it needs but cannot advantageously produce or manufacture. Free trade and protection are not policies about which nations should wrangle, they are policies that must be faced and settled by the world at large, and their debating point is not in this capital city of Canada but at Geneva.

As to which policy should be followed, there is for me only one policy, the policy which this government has followed and which previous Liberal governments have followed in the past—the policy of the freest international exchange of commodities possible under existing conditions; the absence of artificial interference with international exchange, and the territorial division of industry with its resulting advantages. Its essence is perfect impartiality in the fiscal treatment of home and foreign products. It involves the removal of all artificial restrictions on, or encouragements to, particular industries. In free trade there are no differential duties, no bounties; taxation is for revenue only, and not for protection. It would appear, then, from consideration of the benefits to be derived from international trade that, from the cosmopolitan standpoint, that is, looking to the interests of the world as a whole, permanent protection is theoretically unsound. Temporary protection, however, might be justified in theory, on the ground that it would enable some industry to secure a footing in a country where it was likely to thrive to the general benefit, or would prevent the transfer of an industry through temporary causes from a country otherwise specially suited to it. To render such temporary protection expedient in practice however, would involve on the part of men a degree of insight and foresight with which they are not generally credited. Hence I conclude that from the cosmopolitan standpoint free trade as a rule is, even in theory, and always in practice expedient.

From the national standpoint, however, the argument for free trade and against protection is more complicated. The parties to any act of exchange are in general not nations but individuals, and though both parties gain in utility from the exchange it does not follow that there is a gain to both the nations to which they respectively belong. There is no necessary harmony between the interest of the individual and that of the nation. This possible conflict of interests has been ignored by some dogmatic free traders but has been recognized by all leading English exponents of free trade principles from Adam Smith down to our day.

[Mr. Fleming.]

The most general economic argument in favour of free trade from the national standpoint is that protection, while it may benefit a particular home industry by attracting more capital into it, is yet injurious to the nation as a whole. Its primary object is to raise the price to the consumer who, therefore, is exploited in the interests of a small class of producers. Its effect is a less economic distribution of the nation's productive powers. The same labour and capital which would produce the protected article would find employment under a free regime in producing something else wherewith to buy directly or indirectly more of that article.

All trade is barter; exports pay for imports. The latter are really the reward for which the former are the necessary sacrifice; and we ought, therefore, to buy in the cheapest and sell in the dearest market. But while this argument in favour of free trade is in the main sound, it is easy to point to exceptional cases in which from the national standpoint a departure from free trade principles might be theoretically justifiable. For instance, (1) the validity of the "infant industry" argument for protection might be admitted in special cases; (2) on the ground of national independence, that defence is of much more importance than opulence, certain restrictions in trade may be advocated; (3) retaliation, but this act should be one of great deliberation. The crucial point is, are they likely to be successful in forcing the foreign nation to modify its hostile tariff or to abolish its export bounty, as the case may be?

Even in view of the above exceptions, it is well to remember that it is often a mistake to suppose, when some particular case has been discovered for which it is possible to find a theoretical justification for protection, that a departure from the broad principle of free trade, or taxation for revenue only is therefore desirable. The classical English argument against admitting exceptions to that principle is based not so much on the theoretical excellence of free trade as on the inherent weakness of governmental action; that is, on the practical difficulties in any conceivable system of protection and the abuses with which it is invariably associated. Protective duties, though few and small at first, tend to grow and spread, once the principle is admitted, until the outcome is a general high tariff—such a state of affairs as existed in Canada from 1930 to 1936 and in Great Britain prior to the reforms of Hutchinson, Peel and Gladstone.

It is well at this point to deal with the doctrine that restraint should be put on all articles imported from countries with which the particular balance of trade is unfavourable. Whereas the protectionist policy has its origin in private interest and the spread of monopoly, these extraordinary restraints arise from national prejudice and animosity. Thus, for example, if free trade with France did lead to an unfavourable balance with France, it might yet render the true balance with the world more favourable in general to England. There is no certain criterion obtainable of the real balance between the home country and any other particular country.

The mercantilists supposed that in foreign trade what one country gained another lost, and that if the balance were even in value neither of them gained or lost. They looked on the question of the advantages of foreign trade as one of profit and supposed that this profit from the national point of view is measured by the amount of treasure received. In answer to this I will point out the real advantages of foreign trade:

1. The real advantage is not merely profit and still less a balance of money, but a gain in productive power and utility. We may look at it more from the point of view of the producer than the consumer.

2. (a) The country in the foreign trade of which there is the greatest proportion of native exports and the least of foreign re-exports will be the chief gainer because there will be more employment for home labour and capital; (b) trade with a nearer country is more advantageous than with a remote one; (c) the richer neighbouring nations are the better. We gain not by making our neighbours poorer, but richer. They are thus better customers. One nation's loss is not another's gain, but, in general, a loss also.

It is becoming almost universally accepted that absolute free trade is practically impossible; of necessity, then, it follows that the next best policy is that of reciprocity. Reciprocity is a question of mutual concessions in the matter of tariffs. It is the middle course between free trade and protection. In this case one country will agree to lower its duties on imports from another, or on some of them, provided that the second country in return will agree to lower its duties on its imports from the first country. There have been many objections hurled against the present government for its attitude on reciprocity treaties. The best argument against this attack is contained in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance. Speaking of the trade agreement with the United States, at page 1240 of Hansard, he said:

> I am sure it will be a matter of special interest to the house to observe the growth in our trade with the United States, as we now have a full year's experience under the operation of the agreement which established new schedules of rates on January 1, 1936. During the year our total trade with the United States, including commercial gold, amounted to $787,000,000 as compared with $683,000,000 for 1935, an increase of $104,000,000, or 15 per cent. If we exclude commercial gold entirely from the figures for the two years under comparison we find that the trade increase in 1936 was just over 22 per cent. Calculated on this same basis, exports to the United States were greater by 26 per cent, while imports from the United States were higher by 18 per cent. It will be noted that these percentage increases are appreciably above the corresponding increases in our trade with all countries. The increase in trade with our nearest neighbour is ample evidence of the benefits which follow a policy of seeking wider markets through trade agreements.

It would be impossible to claim that all of this price increase can be attributed to the trade pact between Canada and the United States, yet it certainly must have been one factor in improving the general price scale. The fact that the general world price level has risen must be considered as well. I can see only one reason for this advance, namely, the return to a freer passage of goods between the countries of the world. After about six years of the most nationalistic policies the world has ever experienced, most of the nations are returning to the policy of reciprocal treaties. That some are still adhering to the nationalistic policy of self-independence does not alter the fact that there is more freedom of trade now than existed last year or since 1928-29.

Since 1932-33, the low years of the depression, the world experienced a slow movement in the abolition of trade barriers, with the result that prices have increased, production has gone up in volume and the purchasing power of the people has risen. That the depression is vanishing is, or at least should be clear to all. The process, however, is slow, due mainly to the nationalistic tendencies of a few countries. There is nevertheless great hope that before long these nationalistic countries will realize the error of their ways. France underwent that change recently when her new government took office. Whether other nationalistic countries and one-man controlled countries can do the same without a major conflict is almost impossible to predict. Only when all the nations see clearly that to be prosperous is to be at peace can there be any real assurance of international stability and freedom of trade.

There are perhaps various ways in which world peace can be obtained, but I feel that the best and surest way is by mutual concessions in trade relations, a more "give" than the present "take" feeling. This is pointed out very well in the budget speech at page 1215 of Hansard:

> . . . by exchanging these products on as large a scale as possible for products which Canada cannot advantageously produce. To these objectives the government has been energetically devoting itself by opening up and expanding foreign markets for our basic products, by stimulating employment in productive lines, and by endeavouring to eliminate uncertainty and fear which paralyze initiative and retard industrial enterprise. The success of these efforts is indicated in part at least—for I do not wish to claim for the government all the credit for the recovery which we have enjoyed.

We may, I believe, feel sure that if no major conflict arises in Europe or in the far east the nations will one by one follow that program, if for no other reason than that of self-preservation. No nation can be self-dependent or follow that policy for any length of time without grave danger to itself. Various nations in the past have felt the curse of this policy. More will feel it in the future if they continue their present nationalistic course.

It is, then, most essential that Canada should be prepared to cooperate in the common work of political appeasement and economic cooperation, and if this work is to succeed it needs the collaboration of all. If that collaboration is forthcoming there cannot be any doubt in the mind of anyone that we can create a better, saner and more prosperous world. We must learn the ways of economic cooperation so that the standards of life can be raised. We must never forget that our objective in Canada must be the prosperity of all. This point was brought out most strongly in the words of Anthony Eden when, speaking of Great Britain, he said:

> We are willing to help toward a further advance along the line of increased economic opportunity, but this should be in our view on one condition. Economic collaboration and political appeasement must go hand in hand. If economic and financial accommodation merely result in more armaments and more political disturbance the cause of peace will be hindered rather than helped. On the other hand, new and freer economic and financial collaboration based upon solid, well conceived political undertakings will be powerful aid towards the establishment of unity of purpose in Europe. Ultimately and fundamentally the object of all honest political endeavour in whatever country must be a raising of the standard of life. We know well enough from the resources of science to-day that can be done, if it is undertaken in an atmosphere of peace and mutual confidence.

Consideration of the raising of the standard of life brings us to another exceedingly important point. It is freely admitted that we are entering the period of recovery. I feel it my duty to congratulate the Minister of Finance upon the warning he gave the Canadian people when he said, as reported at page 1217 of Hansard:

> It may seem ironical for me to sound a warning about a problem of prosperity whilst we are still harassed by the problems of depression. Evidence is accumulating however, of the prevalence of a state of mind which justifies a warning signal. If we may judge by the activity in brokerage offices, the rapid rise in stock-market prices, and the ratio of stock prices, particularly in some sections of the market, to nearby earnings and dividend prospects, we are forced to recognize a revival of that get-rich-quick spirit which proved so disastrous in the pre-depression years.

However, I would urge the government to do its utmost to prevent a disaster similar to the one we experienced in 1929. Between 1923 and 1929 on an unparalleled scale, banks united, especially in the United States, in financing speculation, in securities and real estate. Comparatively little of the huge expansion of bank credit was utilized in financing an expansion in the physical volume of industry and trade. The process involved the tying up of a larger and larger proportion of bank funds in assets of a non-liquid character. The investments of the banks and the collateral they accepted for loans consisted of securities and real estate, capitalizing at an unreasonable rate the high earnings of business concerns enjoying a temporary and unstable prosperity at the expense of other elements of the population and business world.

On the average, the farmers' purchasing power during the depression period was more than ten per cent less than it would have been if the 1909-14 parity of prices had prevailed. This was bad enough, but to make matters worse taxes on farm property during this whole period remained on a level ranging from 246 per cent to 267 per cent of the pre-war level, and almost twice as high as the price of farm products, relative to the pre-war level. Naturally the farmers' power to buy and pay for products of industry was severely curtailed, even in the absence of heavy mortgage and interest payments hanging over from the period of wild speculation in farm land during the land boom of 1919 and 1920.

It was only a matter of time until such artificial prosperity must collapse, the bubble of speculation would be pricked, and the banks would be hard put to it to realize in full on their assets. Forced liquidation on an unheard of scale could easily have been predicted by any well trained banker or economist familiar with the facts and capable of reasoning without bias. Such predictions, in fact, were not lacking, but they were unpopular and unheeded. In no responsible quarter was effective action taken while the time for action was ripe. In default of such action the country drifted into financial disaster.

When the inevitable period of deflation and depression came, in their sheer extent financial losses, economic disorganization and panicky fear of complete political, social and financial collapse, turned out to be the most disastrous in the history of the country, and for generations are likely to leave their imprint upon our government and business organizations. The prosperity of industry had been prolonged by the artificial props of the instalment plan, foreign loans and stock market profits. When these failed, the demand for industrial products fell. Sharp price cuts at this time might have brought readjustment in conditions of supply and demand, and an early end to the depression. But restriction of industrial output, with artificial maintenance of high prices, only made matters worse. Rapidly declining pay-rolls, the inevitable result of a policy of restriction, brought a further decline in demand not only for industrial products but farm products, and intensified the decline in the price of farm products—a condition which soon thoroughly demoralized agriculture and almost completely destroyed the buying power of the farmers.

The ruin of the farmers reacted upon the demand for factory products, leading the restrictionists to resort to still further restrictions, and so on month after month in a vicious declining spiral of deflation; in industry, deflation primarily in output and pay-rolls, and only secondly in prices; in agriculture, deflation in prices but not in production.

Statistics of industrial production and prices point strongly to the conclusion that the years of depression in industry were characterized, not by competitive cutting of prices among the producers in a given industry as a means of stimulating demand and maintaining output, but by competitive restriction of output among the industries for the purpose of maintaining prices. It was this policy of adjusting supply to demand, a policy substituted for the old-fashioned one of adjusting price to demand, that prolonged, deepened and is helping to continue the depression. There were, of course, other important contributing causes such as the slaughter of prices on the stock and bond markets, the deflation of bank credit, the demoralization in foreign trade and the financial crises in foreign countries.

There is one most important point which it is essential should be clear to all, and that is that neither the factor of declining bank credits nor of money in circulation forced the deflation of business. The major causes of the decline in business were, first, the maldistribution of buying power arising from the lack of balance between the prices of finished, manufactured goods and the prices of raw materials and wages, and second, the lack of desire of those with buying power in the form of cash or bank credit to use it. Instead of money being scarce in Canada at the present time, it is in fact very plentiful. It would seem an adequate reply to the claim that we are suffering from a money shortage to point out that all money rates have fallen substantially. Well might the minister say in his budget address, as reported at page 1215 of Hansard:

> Monetary policy has a role to play during depressions. That role is an important one; although I am bound to say that as a medicine for depressions monetary techniques are far more effective when applied before rather than after the event.

It is in the light of the above evidence of plentiful money, and of the facts brought out in my analysis of the existing conditions, that I beg the government to do all in its power to prevent any possible recurrence of the 1929 financial misfortune. It is clearly evident that speculation is again finding its path into the country's stock market, that the gap between wages and prices is increasing and that signs of inflation are becoming more and more evident. If we wish to prevent an artificial boom followed by a devastating financial and commercial collapse, we must take steps while the time is still ripe to control the recovery of this country before it gets out of bounds.

The income of the farmer is again lagging behind the advance in the price of finished manufactured goods. This must be stopped if the farmers are not to be oppressed until they are living below the subsistence level. It is essential that a fair share of the increased national income should be distributed among the present unemployed and those living below the subsistence level. In fact, until all are at least on the subsistence level, for sound economic and just social reasons there should be no increase in the wages or profits of those who are at present living above that level. If this country is ever to experience any degree of real prosperity we must have a more equal distribution of the national income. Those who are at present without a decent standard of living must be provided with one. A policy of continued public expenditure of relief funds will not bring this about. Only real increased production, together with a more equal and just distribution, can possibly enable the people to live above the subsistence level.

I believe the ultimate and fundamental object of all honest political endeavour in any country should be the raising of the standard of life. Let us follow this policy with the same diligent effort that we put forth for the betterment of our own individual lives. Increased international trade will help, in fact it is essential, but it is not enough. There must not be a recurrence of what happened in 1929. The draft agenda for the world economic conference contains the following:

> International action, however indispensable, cannot restore a normal economic situation unless the proper internal measures have been taken. Each individual country must be prepared to take the necessary steps to achieve internal equilibrium.

In conclusion I would suggest that we go blithely on the road to the full promise of our nationhood, with Liberal principles the light to guide our way, and the happiness of our people our abiding purpose. Let us garner from the variety of races within our borders the best that they have to give. If our prosperity must be protected, let us do it with wisdom. Let us not be inoculated by Tory imperialism or militarism, but if the pathway of our destiny leads through a virile pacifism, let us not stumble, but with dignity, charity and honesty march triumphantly forward, a peaceful nation building contentment. May the tribute of our children be: They wrought better than they knew.

Mr. H. J. BARBER (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, may I first congratulate the hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Fleming) on his very able address. I wish also to congratulate the government upon having within their ranks a free trader who is prepared to support a protectionist budget. I trust the hon. member will pardon me for not following his remarks, for what I have to say this evening will be confined to the amendment. I hope that at some other time I may have the opportunity of speaking on the main motion.

The amendment deals with what I believe is recognized as being the most serious problem in Canada, that of unemployment and relief. I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) has admitted that this is the most serious problem with which the government has to deal. Let me quote the amendment:

> This house regrets that the government has failed to take effective measures to deal with the problem of unemployment.

[Mr. Fleming.]

I wish to put emphasis on the word "effective." I admit that the government have taken some measures, but we must decide whether or not they are effective measures. Let us consider what those measures are. In his address the other day the minister recited several measures taken by the government since they came into office. The minister, first, spent some time discussing the relief camps which were set-up in this country at one time. I shall not go into the history of these camps as the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Stirling) covered it very thoroughly the other night. I shall not recall the conditions which existed at the time these camps came into being, other than to say that they were established to take care of the single unemployed men who were crowding into our cities, riding our trains and generally trekking throughout the country. They were never intended to be permanent, but during the time they were in existence they played an important part in relieving the problem of unemployment; they functioned as clearing houses, through which passed 31,502 men to useful employment. That achievement I think was worth while. As I say, it was never intended that these camps should continue, and upon the minister's instructions they were closed. A number of us coming from British Columbia recall as I do very clearly, the time they were closed. In my riding some 800 men were turned out on the road. They were men who had been faithful and had not been involved in any disturbance; they had worked well and were at home in those camps. They were turned out with their packs and drifted along the highways to the cities. The equipment from the different camps was gathered together, the shovels and other tools carefully oiled, sorted and packed into crates, the bedding washed and packed, and everything was stored in a central camp. The other day the minister told us, "To this time the camps have not been re-opened." I do not know how he can be ignorant of the fact that a number of them have been opened. The equipment, the property of the federal government, which was so carefully stored has been taken back to some of these camps and is now in use. In my riding there are about 300 men in the camps, and they are carrying on work similar to what they did before.

The minister mentioned the other day one measure, termed an arrangement with the railways. There were 9,224 men transferred from the camps to railway work, and according to information given by the department, 7,773 men worked until the gangs were broken up; in other words, they completed six months' employment. The cost to the taxpayers of this country was over $2,600,000.

Another measure was the farm placement scheme. The minister tells us that throughout Canada 46,000 men were placed. My information, which is from Victoria and is I think authentic, is that 215 were placed in British Columbia.

Another measure was forestry work. We are told by the minister that 5,000 additional men have been employed, mainly in British Columbia, in forestry work. I think the minister must have included labour in the logging industry, which cannot be credited to any action on his part but to the empire trade agreements and, to some extent, the Canada-United States trade agreement. The latest information I have from Victoria is that 1,131 men are employed in forestry work in the province under the category of relief measures.

Another scheme was the home improvement plan. I believe it was unanimously supported in this house. It is good as far as it goes, but I doubt whether it will give much employment to men on relief. It seems to me that a citizen who undertakes to repair his house, to put on a new verandah or redecorate the interior, is not likely to go down to the unemployment office or to relief headquarters to get a man; he wants the work well and properly done and he is going to get a mechanic to do it, someone he knows is a first-class workman. For that reason I do not think this measure will be a means of putting any considerable number of unemployed to work, and the expenditure of one and a half to two million dollars for this purpose is only a drop in the bucket.

These are some of the measures which the government has taken, directed to the solution of the problem of unemployment. Another measure, which I believe the minister considers most important is the setting up of the employment commission. Hon. members recall that, last session, the government induced parliament to pass an act setting up a commission to which the matter of unemployment was to be referred. Apparently it has gone the way of all bodies of this kind, in setting up an elaborate scheme. The commission consists of seven members. Of course they are not paid salaries. It would be an insult to offer salaries to persons who come forward and offer to serve their country. But a kindly government suggests that they should have a living allowance, and with the exception of the chairman they have accepted it. They are paid a living allowance of twenty dollars a day, and in addition their travelling expenses. British Columbia was honoured in having the commission's lady member chosen from that province. It is interesting to note that she has drawn in living allowances and travelling expenses from May 15 to the end of January $5,590.93. Whatever other qualifications she may or may not possess, those of us who live in British Columbia know that she has one—she is a faithful follower of the Liberal party.

There is another commission member from the west who volunteered his services: a defeated Liberal candidate from Saskatchewan. He has drawn $4,559.05. The minister told us the other day that the commissioners have been paid since May 15 in living allowances and travelling expenses $18,666. Its members are furnished with offices and telephone, secretaries and stenographers, all of which goes to make up what he told us was cost of personnel: $16,888.

There is under the commission, the youth committee, which has cost $8,951. The members are not in receipt of salaries but are given a living allowance of fifteen dollars per day each. Going through the orders in council it was noticed that the chairman could not live on the fifteen dollars and was granted an additional five dollars. He happens to be a defeated Liberal candidate from British Columbia. There is also, a women's committee of five, each drawing fifteen dollars per day living allowance; the minister mentioned that the total cost to date was $2,916; they are studying the problem. Also a living allowance of $25 per day has been granted the director of public welfare for some temporary services. I do not understand why the government does not pay salaries, instead of insisting on calling these grants "living allowances." Nor is it clear why the amount of these allowances should vary, why it costs more for one person to live than another. That brings to mind a little article I saw in a Toronto paper the other day, contributed by a man named Oxford. He is referring to the grain inquiry, which is another creature of this government:

> Mr. Justice Turgeon, commissioner for the grain inquiry, receives $35 a day as a living allowance. From inquiries made of some housewives around here, the opinion is that he should do fairly well on that, and get three good meals every day. It would even run to an egg-nog about 11 a.m. and still leave him with enough to buy a packet of cigarettes a day as a "living allowance" multiplied by five and a half —assuming that he knocks off when the whistle blows on Saturday—ought to get him in as the star boarder in any town, with a cup of tea brought up in the morning. . . .

Just to show how discriminating and careful our judicial officers are when spending our money, they have it figured out that Hon. J. L. Ralston, K.C., counsel for the grain inquiry, is only worth $20 a day for his hay and oats. Seems a shame to scale him down $15 a day, but perhaps he's on a diet, or maybe he can't eat as much as Mr. Justice Turgeon. Quite obviously he can only have one egg for breakfast, and he gets no dessert for dinner. A man can't have everything on just $110 a week. You know yourself how far that goes when you are dragging the basket around on Saturday night and the wife is picking up three tins of soup for a quarter.

Of course, Mr. Ralston is being paid $200 a day for his services, with no lost time for rainy weather and no early closing on Wednesday. On the other hand, he doesn't get paid for overtime—just a straight $200 a day—take it or leave it, but you wouldn't expect any part of that to go for the feed bill. Certainly not. Twenty dollars a day is what the government figure his pork and beans will cost, and he should keep within that limit, even if he has to do without tea and toast in the afternoon.

Speaking of cuts, here is the unkindest cut of all. J. E. Coyne, barrister, only gets a miserable $10 a day living expenses. How does he get by? Apparently he can only eat half as much as the Hon. Mr. Ralston. You can readily imagine Mr. Coyne walking round the block at lunch time, munching a bag of peanuts, and thinking of what a fine fish and chip supper he will have. What is worse and more of it, he only gets $50 a day for the job, and it may not last more than a few months.

The really bright spot in the line-up of the grain commission is that the secretary is not listed for any additional salary or living allowance. Presumably he is expected to stay with friends, or drop in on acquaintances at meal times and send his washing home collect.

This government continues to spend money quite freely in providing "living allowances"—I am sure there are many people throughout Canada including the wives of farmers who would like a guaranteed living allowance of, say, $20.00 or $25.00 per month.

There is another organization, under the employment commission which was set up by the orders in council cited by my leader, and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) told us the other night that this organization, a sort of duplication of the bureau of statistics, has cost over $40,000.

Mr. ROGERS: I said it was not a duplication.

Mr. BARBER: No, but we say it is.

Mr. BENNETT: And as a matter of fact it is.

Mr. ROGERS: Definitely it is not.

Mr. BARBER: And according to the supplementary estimates it will cost $125,000 next year. That is plain. The minister charged my leader with creating an impression contrary to the facts when he recited the order in council. He said that some of these employees were seconded and others were temporary employees; nevertheless, if you go through the order in council, you will find that they were authorized for employment in this organization, and the funds provided for the organization next year will pay for their services. As regards this organization set up under the commission the minister said —I believe he interrupted the leader of the opposition when he made the statement—"that it is concerned with registration as provided in the statute." I was of the opinion that the registration had been completed, and my authority for that is a clause that appears in the speech from the throne, on January 14, 1937, at page 3 of Hansard:

A registration of unemployed persons on relief has been completed.

I do not understand, therefore, why this organization is to be continued if registration is completed. However, it is to be continued, because provision is made in the estimates for the purpose. The whole organization is an elaborate and most costly scheme. The supplementary estimates brought down a few days ago contain an item for the National Employment Commission of $150,000; an item for the National Employment Commission, registration, $125,000; and an item for the unemployment relief branch, $200,000; and the heading under which these items are enumerated indicates that they are for administration purposes, salaries, living allowances and travelling expenses. So that if this appropriation is for the maintenance of the organization it would seem that more orders in council will be passed providing for a larger staff. Let me summarize these measures that have been taken by the government.

First, railway work. The minister informs us that 9,224 men were taken from the relief camps and put to work; 46,000 under farm placement measure,—215 being in British Columbia; 5,000 in connection with forestry work, the statistics showing that 1,131 are engaged in this work in British Columbia.

As regards the home improvement plan, $1,500,000 or $2,000,000 has already been spent on this project, and that should give some employment. Then there is the other organization to which I have already referred. These are the measures that the government has undertaken, and as far as I can see they are not what I would call effective measures.

And what about the results in meeting this problem? Sometimes we can judge best by results. A good many figures were placed on Hansard the other day and I shall not repeat them all. The number of unemployed in Canada in February 1935 was 552,000; October 1935, 435,000; in January 1936, it was 556,000, and in December 1936, 502,000. In January 1937, the number was 500,000. In other words, we still have 500,000 unemployed throughout Canada, and if you will sum up all that the government has done in its various measures to cope with this great problem you will find that they will hardly make a dint in it. Then we have the number of those on relief. In February 1934 it was 1,491,059, and in February 1935, 1,433,891. In September 1936, it was 1,029,156, and in January 1937, 1,301,530. On the British Columbia relief rolls which figures were issued not long ago, from Victoria, the figure for December 1936 was 75,812, and in January 1937, it was 79,973, with 213 under the farm replacement scheme, 1,131 in forestry development, and 1,008 in the public works relief camps. In view of the general improvement that has been made throughout the world these figures do not indicate that the government's measures have been very effective.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are those the figures of the bureau of statistics?

Mr. BARBER: Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: The bureau of statistics do not collect these figures at all and have never done so.

Mr. BARBER: I believe they came from there.

Mr. ROGERS: They have unemployment figures but not relief figures.

Mr. BENNETT: They get them from Mr. Hereford.

Mr. BARBER: The Minister of Finance in his usual able manner has drawn to our attention the increase in trade and pointed out the great increase in production, but surely there is something wrong. If trade and productions are increasing, more work must be in progress, yet the demand for public relief is not falling. Let me suggest to the minister and to the government that they direct their attention to the reduction in the burden of taxation in this country. The increased burden from year to year is doing more to prevent recovery than any other factor that I know of. Some hon. gentleman may say that the rate of taxation has not been increased. Well, the rate does not cut so much figure; it is the burden of taxation that counts. If you go over the speech of the minister in regard to taxation you find that that burden is increasing, it has increased this year over last, and the estimate for next year shows an increase over this.

First I should like to deal with customs tax. In years gone by we were reminded over and over again that this is a tax, and told how unfair the tax was. That came from the low tariff people and some of the free traders who are associated with the Liberal party. Let us look at the customs tax. In the year 1933-34 the amount taken from the people by customs tax was $66,305,000. This year, 1936-37, it is put at $81,500,000, and the Minister of Finance says that next year he is going to take from the people of this country by way of customs tax $90,000,000—an increase from $66,000,000 to $90,000,000 in five years.

Someone may say: That affects only certain people. Before I left British Columbia a farmer came to me with a document which shows that he had bought some beet pulp, a by-product of the sugar factory at Bellingham, Washington, a few miles from my district. This load of beet pulp cost him $18. When he came to the border they listed it as 3,000 pounds of beet pulp and molasses, cattle food with molasses, the value of the sacks was included in the price—it was packed in new sacks—and they fixed the valuation at $46.73. To make it even they called it $47, and the duty charged was 20 per cent. The duty amounted to $9.40; excise tax $1.69; brokerage $1.50; total charge $12.59 on $18 worth of stuff. That did not take place under a high tariff Tory government; that took place on November 23 last year. Yet the minister says he is going to take more and more from the people of Canada next year; he is going to increase the customs tax burden to $90,000,000.

Then the sales tax. In 1933-34 the burden of this tax amounted to $61,392,000; this year it is $115,500,000, and the estimate for next year is $131,000,000. The people of Canada, ten and a half millions, must dig up next year for the Minister of Finance some $15,000,000 more than this year in the way of sales tax—and everyone pays the sales tax.

The income tax rose from $61,399,000 in 1933-34 to an estimated $113,000,000 for 1937-38, which is about $10,000,000 more than the present year. Still the minister says the rate has not been raised. I am not here to defend the coupon clipper or the big moneyed men; they of course have their troubles. But the ordinary taxpayer, the men who pay income tax in the lower categories have a hard time. We have the income tax imposed by this government, the provincial income tax, municipal taxes, and all kinds of taxes. As a result a man to-day is so hampered by taxation that he is not in a position to expand his business or give increased employment.

The excise tax this year is $45,500,000, and the minister says that next year he must raise $47,500,000. the burden of this increase in excise taxes increased by $2,000,000 in one year. That 3 per cent excise tax which hon. gentlemen opposite when in opposition said was only an extra customs tariff still remains.

Then we have stamp and special taxes. In 1935-36 the burden of taxation under this item was $35,181,000; this year it is $38,100,000, and the minister says that for next year he is going to increase that burden to $42,000,000. This includes the sugar tax, and, oh, what we did hear in years gone by about the sugar tax! I could quote hon. members who were then on this side of the house; pages of Hansard could be filled with quotations from speeches made by them at that time condemning this tax. I recall one by the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacLean), and I quote him because he is about the furthest east. On May 11, 1934, after protesting vigorously against this tax, he said, as reported in Hansard at page 2997:

> I am glad the government reduced the tax by one per cent, but in the circumstances I think the tax should have been entirely wiped out. There are other ways of raising revenue without resorting to the taxation of articles of food which are necessities of life.

This government has been in power for almost a year and a half; this is their second session, and still the sugar tax remains.

Now let us see about the total taxes. The total to be collected for the year 1937-38 is estimated at $425,500,000. That is the burden of taxation on the Canadian people; about $8,000,000 a week, close to $4 for every man, woman and child in Canada. That figure is an increase of $41,000,000 over the present year, and an increase of $121,000,000 over 1934-35. How can ten and a half million people continue to bear this burden? Taxation is strangling industry to-day; it is the bugbear of the Canadian people and the main factor in preventing the return of prosperity to this country.

In view of the measures put forth by the government for the solution of this great problem of unemployment in this country I am prepared to support the amendment.

Mr. LIGUORI LACOMBE (Laval-Two Mountains) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw the attention of the government to the just claims of my constituents of Laval-Two Mountains in connection with a matter of national importance which I have not ceased to agitate in this house ever since I became a member of parliament. The matter is that of the produce of market-gardens, the value of which, for the province of Quebec alone, reached $5,442,000 in 1935 and $6,221,000 in 1936. I note with satisfaction that, owing to the seasonal tariff, the market-gardeners obtained for their produce last year much more remunerative prices than formerly. In fact, notwithstanding a lower production, the value of their products in 1936 exceeded that of 1935 by nearly $800,000 in Quebec province alone. I have therefore requested and shall again request the government to apply at the proper time this seasonal tariff which has been so beneficial to the producers. I may add that the statistics which I have just quoted have been graciously supplied to me by the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), to whom I offer my thanks.

Field crops, cattle-raising and dairying are sources of wealth on which depends the prosperity of the country. By means of substantial grants, generous help and constant support, our governments owe it to themselves to develop these immense resources in the best interests of Canada. The present government had done a great deal for agriculture. It has negotiated with other countries trade agreements that have greatly benefited the farming community. Let us not stop there. Let us seek to popularize agricultural science. Our ideal should be the full development of the fertility with which providence has endowed our land.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the workmen of my constituency, I ask the government to proceed with certain undertakings of public interest. I have several times drawn the attention of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) and of the management of the Canadian National Railways to the necessity of completing the construction of the Canadian National line from Calumet Point to Oka. The residents of the village of Oka have too long been isolated from the surrounding towns and parishes, particularly from Montreal, during the winter months. The beautiful country surrounding Oka and the lake of Two Mountains is one of the finest tourist resorts in my province. It is frequented each summer by many thousands of visitors. By adding about four miles to its line the Canadian National Railways will surely find there some of the revenue they so badly need.

Having referred to the interesting question of tourist travel, I should not pass over in silence the failure to build the projected section of the trans-Canada highway in my constituency. The necessity of this portion of the highway has been recognized. Plans and specifications for it were drawn a long time ago by engineers of the former Quebec government, in the district of Saint-Martin, Sainte-Dorothée and Saint-Eustache. Why was the execution of the work deferred or given up? I do not know. However, the building of that road would have resulted immediately in giving employment to hundreds of unemployed. That is why I insist upon the construction of that part of the trans-Canada highway in the constituency of Laval-Two Mountains, from the limits of St. Martin to Lachute. Tourists travelling on that road will wonder at the beautiful scenery, as well as the extent of the admirable work carried on by our truck gardeners and farmers, and the example to be drawn from it. Wherever you cast your eyes in that peerless farming country you will see vast tracts of green vegetation, abounding crops, and dainty houses, a symbol of comfort acquired through perseverance and work.

May I also call upon the government to dredge the Back river channel from the St. Vincent de Paul dam to lake of Two Mountains. These works are essential in the interest of the tourist trade which so largely adds to the prosperity of the country as a whole. There are other things that I shall ask for when we take up the public works estimates, for they are more of a local character.

Before I resume my seat, I cannot but speak of the want of confidence motion of the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). It would be sufficient to emphasize the absurdity of this motion. The mover is the former head of the government; he charges the present administration with having failed in its duty by following a policy which cannot efficiently solve the unemployment problem. I deny the former prime minister the right to censure the commendable efforts of the present government in that direction. It has been in power barely fifteen months and already the number of people on relief has substantially decreased. At any rate, are those who are at present administering this country responsible for the baneful and ruinous policy of direct relief? It is no other than the present leader of the opposition who gave birth to this octopus? Did he not summon a special session of parliament for that very purpose? However, if I remember aright, his government was to end unemployment in a rather short time. Let us be fair. Since the beneficent results of its policy of economic recovery are already being felt let us at least pay the present government the tribute that it deserves. For my part, considering the commendable efforts of the present administration, I deem it my duty to oppose the motion of want of confidence of the right hon. leader of the opposition. I shall go further in asserting that many farmers in my constituency have more than once expressed their satisfaction at the betterment of the prices of farm products. Nobody can deny that there is now greater activity in trade and business, more confidence and hope among our people.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot end these remarks without drawing the attention of the house and the government to the administration of the Canadian Farm Loan Act. There are unaccountable delays in the administration of this measure. According to representations that were made to me, the examination of the titles of farmers applying for a loan ought to be done much more rapidly. This examination, especially in the province of Quebec, sometimes becomes a complete maze. The attending notary and the officers of the commission cannot find their way out of it. The farmer frequently loses thereby not only his time but also his borrowing power. In my humble opinion, it is imperative that some one should be appointed as a go-between in each electoral division or court district. Such a man would have to be quite industrious. His work would consist in securing, with the least possible delay, all the necessary papers for the transaction. Some might object, on the ground that these appointments would involve a considerable cost. Let me answer at once that, taking into consideration the necessary efficiency of the act, this cost would be a mere trifle.

Now, what about the famous creditors and farmers arrangement act? During the last session I requested the repeal of this act, which is so greatly unfair to the farmer and the creditor. The privy council has just decided that this act is constitutional. It is no doubt a mere counterpart of the Bankruptcy act. The former government has no reason to be proud of having given birth to such a monster of injustice. Mr. Speaker, before that act destroys all self-reliance among our people, would it not be possible to replace it by a more elastic, broader and more expeditious farm loan act? If a day ever comes when the arrangement act is replaced by a farm loan act adapted to the needs of destitute farmers who would give the authorities the guarantee of their steadfastness and their work, besides the guarantee of their equipment and buildings, on that day we will have achieved much for the rehabilitation of agriculture in Canada.

Mr. ROBERT FAIR (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I regret I was unable to follow the previous speaker (Mr. Lacombe) in French, but I am sure his speech must have been good judging by the applause he received on taking his seat.

I hope I shall not be accused, as have some other hon. members, of speaking politically. I have no political axe to grind, and for that reason I intend to speak as a practical farmer from the west. I say "practical" because I notice that quite a number who are listed as farmers turn out to be gentlemen farmers, who raise nothing but their hats.

One part of the budget pleased me particularly, and that was the government's compliance with the representations of a year ago for pensions for the blind. I am glad the government has seen fit to grant the pension, and I trust that in the near future the qualifying age for the blind may be placed far below forty, because hon. members in all sections of the house must realize that it keeps those of us with good eyesight busy to make a living, and for that reason we ought to remember the peculiar difficulties of those men and women who have not the blessing of eyesight.

My interest in the budget is particularly in matters relating to agriculture, as well as some other matters to which reference has been made. However, as other hon. members are better qualified to deal with some of the subjects brought out in the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), I shall confine my observations mainly to agriculture. May I say at the outset that it is our primary industry. Speaking of agriculture, the minister said:

> Agricultural production suffered in 1936 through unfavourable weather during the growing season. Improved prices, however, resulted in a money return for field crops greater than in any year since 1930, and amounted to approximately $600,000,000, an increase of about 17 per cent over 1935.
> With regard to wheat, the 1936 yield was about 52·7 million bushels below that of 1935, and was the smallest crop since 1919. Drought conditions again played havoc in certain areas, destroying crops completely in some districts and reducing to meagre levels the yield in others. In spite of the smaller 1936 yield, however, the value of this crop was substantially above the value of the 1935 crop, due to greatly enhanced prices, which are again reaching levels which promise more profitable and stable conditions for the western farmer.

While prices are better than they were, the wheat crop last year averaged only about eight bushels per acre, which I believe is about only half the usual average of the Canadian crop. It would seem therefore that for anything like a decent living the price we received for our grain last fall was not nearly sufficient—and when I say not nearly sufficient I mean that very thing.

Listening to the arguments in the house, if one did not know better he might be led to believe that the action of the government in putting the wheat board out of business was justifiable. As one who has suffered from that action, may I say that I do not agree with it. Going back more than thirty years, farmers in western Canada were producing large quantities of grain, and just as they are to-day were being deprived of much of the profits justly belonging to them. A man named Partridge, of Sintaluta, in company with some others began to take steps to improve conditions, and made a considerable amount of progress. I believe the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar) will remember those good old days. May I say I am sorry he has seen fit to take part in getting rid of the wheat board. I suggest that as a western man he should have known what western farmers are up against and should have done his share to keep the board in operation.

More than thirty years ago the farmers in the west began to fight their own battles. They did not do so because they wanted an excuse for fighting, but because they were not receiving their just rights, and they decided that the fellows under their own hats were their best friends. The Canada Grain Act was not then so much in the producers' favour as it is to-day, and we found some years ago that its provisions were not being observed. People were not getting the grading to which they were entitled; they were being short weighted, were being deprived of their turn in getting cars for loading, and several other things. I can remember occasions more than twenty years ago when taking loads of No. 1 wheat a distance of more than thirty miles I was told upon reaching the elevator just about dark by the gentleman who came alongside that he was very sorry but they had no more room for No. 1, but that they had room for No. 3, and he ended up by saying, "If you want to take that, all right; I can unload it." That trick was played time after time, but at last the farmers, who are not quite as easy as they are thought to be, woke up to the fact that they were being gypped. They did a little work and finally got some relief. The united grain growers and other provincial organizations got started, and then the war came along. In 1917 wheat prices were rising along with prices of other commodities. The war had been in full swing for some time but the farmers were not allowed to profiteer. On June 11, 1917, a wheat board was created and the price of wheat was set at $2.40 per bushel.

When the war was over and there seemed a chance that the price of wheat would come down, the government of that day decided that the board was no longer necessary. But the farmers, feeling that the board had been organized to keep prices from going up, thought that it might as well work the other way. In July, 1919, the Canadian wheat board was formed, and an initial price of $2.15 per bushel was set. Those who delivered wheat to the board were given participation certificates, which many farmers sold for a few cents, or even gave away. However, under the good management of the board an interim payment of 30 cents per bushel and a final payment of 18 cents a bushel was made, making the total price for the crop of that year $2.63 per bushel. That board went out of existence on August 16, 1920.

I can remember hauling a carload of wheat a distance of thirty miles that year. When I shipped it out of the elevator I took an advance payment of $1 per bushel. Shortly afterwards the price rose to $2.06 per bushel, but this was before my wheat had got to Winnipeg. There was some delay in my car getting through so I was not able to sell. The price then dropped to $1.56 per bushel, but I was eventually able to sell at $1.83 per bushel. If there had been a wheat board in existence I believe I would have been saved a lot of worry. I had not been in business very long at that time and I had lots of debts to pay, but I was willing to pay them. As the board was not operating, I had to take what I could get on the open market.

In the years preceding 1922 the wheat producers had been working hard to get a national wheat board. The agitation had grown so strong by 1922 that the dominion government decided to pass the necessary legislation. However, it was first necessary to have enabling legislation passed by the provinces. The necessary legislation was passed by Saskatchewan and Alberta, but Manitoba would not agree. I do not know whether that was because the grain exchange was located in that province and there were too many advocates preaching in its favour, but the result was that no wheat board was formed.

In 1923 the Alberta farmers led the way in forming a voluntary wheat pool. In 1924 Saskatchewan and Manitoba linked up. At first the provinces sold as separate organizations, but a short time afterwards they united and sold as one organization. This worked out very nicely until the crash of 1929. Some say that agriculture was the cause, but those of us who have looked around and studied things a little do not agree with that statement. Late in 1929 the price of wheat slumped badly, and the wheat pools got into difficulties. The federal government had to come to their assistance a little later on. In 1930 the price of wheat dropped to a very low level, and the result was that the wheels of industry began to slow up.

The government then decided that something would have to be done, and the result was the formation of a stabilization board by the then Conservative government. After this board was formed the Stamp commission was appointed to endeavour to find out what was the trouble. This commission pointed out in its report that speculators were necessary to the successful operation of the grain exchange. As there were no speculators at that time, the operations of the grain exchange were limited. The crash of 1929 had ruined a number of these speculators while others had learned their lesson and were out of the game for the time being.

At this time the western pools and other farmer organizations were pressing hard for the formation of a wheat board, but they were unable to get it. The government continued the stabilization operations under the chairmanship of Mr. McFarland. However, in 1935, the wheat board legislation was finally enacted. This board was headed by Mr. McFarland, and it started out to operate with a fixed price of 87½ cents per bushel. When the price was first set it looked rather low to the western pool representatives who wanted a price set of 95 cents per bushel; the grain exchange representatives wanted the price set a little above 70 cents per bushel, and the result was a compromise at the 87½-cent level.

If the wheat had been sold as it should have been, I believe everything would have been all right. Under the terms of the legislation, farmers who delivered grain were given participation certificates which entitled them to share in any profits which might be made later on. I remember holding some of these certificates for some time—in fact, I believe I have some yet—but it was finally realized that there would be nothing else coming in, that there was quite a loss on the operations. When I look back and remember the fight put up by the Liberal party when in opposition to that legislation, I was surprised to learn that the wheat board had turned back $8,000,000 of the money that had been advanced. As some of the farmers in the west said, they did very well in spite of themselves.

After the Liberal government came into power a change in the wheat policy was made, and also a change of wheat board. Some say a fire sale took place; perhaps that is right; perhaps not. However, Mr. Murray, the head of the present wheat board, giving evidence before the parliamentary committee last year, had this to say:

> I mentioned yesterday in the opening statement which I read that we considered one of our principal duties was to dispose of the burdensome part of the surplus.

Now, the price did not seem to have anything to do with that. The job was to get rid of the wheat, and when it comes to getting rid of the wheat we have to agree that the board made an excellent job of it. A little further on Mr. Murray said:

I think I used the phrase that it hung like a millstone around the necks of our farmers since 1928. I might mention that that is not my description. If I may be permitted I will say that that is the description given to that surplus by Mr. John I. McFarland on December 8, 1934, if my memory is correct.

Now, we could not afford to wait for one, two, three or four weeks or to wait until it was found out what the policy of the board was going to be. At least we did not think we could. We wanted to get some action. We called meetings of the exporters and millers. They are the only salesmen of Canadian wheat. The act tells us specifically that we have got to use them. It means to use all branches of the trade without discrimination. So we called meetings and we told them the new board was there; that we wanted their cooperation and we wanted them to get busy and sell all the wheat and flour for export that they could possibly sell. We asked for suggestions as to what we might do to help them accomplish that. We told them we did not expect them to do business for nothing.

We agree with that; we have no quarrel whatever with the view that they should be paid for their services. But there is one circumstance there which seems strange. The farmers grew the wheat, and the grain exchange were asked for suggestions how to sell it. I do not know whether that strikes anyone else as odd, but it does me, because such transactions are quite expensive. Again:

One of the suggestions they made to us was that we agree to sell them their hedges against export sales made between the close of the market one day and the opening of the market the next day at not more than one-quarter of a cent over the previous day's close.

That thereby a long step was made in the selling out of the farmers' interests cannot, I believe, be successfully contradicted. Mr. Murray further says:

We made that agreement with them, or gave them an undertaking, whichever you like to call it, with one proviso. We explained to them that we were not handling our own money and our own funds.

At that committee meeting I asked Mr. Murray:

Is that the first time that protection of that kind was extended to exporters?

The answer was:

No, sir, but it is the first time it was done right out in the open.

A little further on he says:

We, wanting them to have that wheat freely, gave them that assurance. We did not anticipate it would continue for an indefinite time.

[Mr. Fair.]

We wanted to get them started. It was discontinued on December 20, for this reason; the market in the pit itself was being killed.

If one analyzes that statement a little something worth while may be gained. Mr. Murray goes on:

People having done an export business, instead of coming into the pit in the morning to buy their wheat, would come direct to us. It was an easier way to do it.

I contend that it was also a cheaper way. This, however, is what has happened; we find that very good progress is indicated by showing a deficit in wheat board operations. I believe a great effort was made to destroy the wheat board and its usefulness. Instead of leaving the man there who had been doing good work, work which so far as I know was satisfactory to the west, the government put in a new man who has fought the wheat board, wheat pools, and farmers' organizations as long as I can remember.

Mr. THORSON: Mr. Murray was the inventor of the wheat board in western Canada.

Mr. FAIR: I know he was an inventor. I also know some other things that happened a little later on. While this committee was sitting, Mr. Murray gave out a statement. I do not know whether it was prepared by himself or by the board, but it was probably composed before he left Winnipeg. This is what he said:

Until recent years our surplus wheat was absorbed into world trade and no one knew, except in the most general way, just how or where it went. The little consideration we gave to this question ten years ago is not sufficient now.

World wheat trade which averaged 721,309,000 bushels for the ten years 1920 to 1929 was large enough to absorb the surplus from average crops in exporting countries.

This situation no longer exists, and if wheat is to retain the position it has occupied in the production of our national wealth, we must wake up to the importance of the problem. I might interject and say that from 1926 to 1930 inclusive, the value of wheat exported was 32 per cent of the total Canadian exports. From 1931 to 1935 inclusive, it was 25 per cent; that is, wheat and flour.

World trade in wheat last year, including 26,000,000 bushels imported by the United States, was only 520 million bushels. This year, including perhaps 50 million bushels which may be imported by the United States, it will probably not be more than 520 million bushels. Excluding the United States this means an average for the two years of less than 500 million bushels of wheat taken by importing countries.

We cannot count on the United States continuing as an importer and they may in a few months again become exporters. Europe may not be as successful as in recent years in growing large crops, but no sensible person would advocate in dealing with this problem that our main dependence should be on Providence continuing to help us through crop failures in other countries.

Then Mr. Murray comes to a very sensible part of his statement. He says:

> Our problem for the future then is, briefly: normal crops on present acreage in exporting countries will give from 640 to 740 million bushels exportable surplus. The available market may be only 500 to 550 million bushels.
> How can Canada continue to grow crops of 375 to 425 million bushels and fit into this picture without again piling up unwieldy and burdensome surpluses.
> Can we, as a nation, tackle this problem intelligently? If we continue as we have for the past few years we will not do so.

I agree with that, and I believe that the only way to handle it is through a system of orderly marketing, which can be done only with a national board handling all the crop.

If I might refer for a moment to any of the years gone by, I might take at random 1925, just to show how the wheat goes on the market from our western farms. In September of 1925, 86,546,000 bushels was marketed; in October, 58,888,000; November, 85,134,000; December, 51,594,000; January, 24,074,000; February, 14,394,000; March, 10,215,000; April, 5,741,000; May, 3,580,000; June, 6,458,000; July, 4,200,000; August, 4,396,000. If hon. members will study these figures they will realize that in the first month the new crop was moving, 86,000,000 bushels were marketed, while in August of the next year only 4,396,000 bushels were marketed. From our experience of a number of years we know that as soon as all that wheat goes on the market, with nothing but an open market to trade on, the price immediately drops; and the wheat has to go on the market because, as I think is well known, the western farmers for a number of years have been in a pretty tough spot.

With all this wheat going on the market, and with depressed prices, somebody buys the hedges, and you will find that the price of wheat drops considerably and goes up again when the light marketings commence. That means that the farmer sells his wheat at a low price, and the speculator, who is allowed to operate uncontrolled, makes a profit out of the wheat. A very good example of that was given this fall when a large proportion of the wheat, seventy per cent of it, was sold at an average of 80 cents a bushel, and then we find that in the months that followed it was around the $1.30 mark. It is obvious that if the wheat board had been in existence there would not have been so many calls for help from the west. The west had been discriminated against in this and many other ways.

Perhaps it would be well for me to give the average price of No. 1 northern wheat at Fort William, and the average cost in Regina of an 8-foot binder for each of a number of years back:

Year	Cost of binder	Price of wheat
1915	$165	$1 13
1916	167	2 05
1917	194	2 21
1918	250	2 24
1919	260	2 17
1920	288	1 99
1921	329	1 29
1922	277	1 10
1923	288	1 07
1924	313	1 69
1925	288	1 51
1926	288	1 46
1927	288	1 46
1928	288	1 24
1929	288	1 24

Now I am coming to the interesting part. In 1929 we had a crash and somebody said it was due to agriculture. We know that is not the case. Here are more comparative prices:

Year	Cost of binder	Price of wheat
1930	$283	$0 64
1931	283	0 59·8
1932	278	0 54
1933	264	0 68
1934	264	0 81
1936	280	0 93

If you will study these figures you will see that there is no comparison whatever between the price of wheat and the price of the machinery which the farmers in the west have to buy. I understand that it is likely there will be another rise in farm machinery prices, although I was told not long ago that one of the big machine companies in the past ten years had paid an average of 6·3 per cent to its shareholders. That is not so bad. I believe I also saw the statement that some $29,000,000 of profits had been reported for one of these machinery companies. There is also a suggestion that a large secret reserve of something like $40,000,000 exists in one of these companies. We do not find very much relief at the other end, however.

In case anyone from the west has any kick on this, I will read from the Saskatchewan Liberal of February 18, 1937, part of an address by the hon. T. C. Davis, K.C., Attorney General. This is from a radio address he delivered on February 9:

> In our development, as I have said, we sought capital and secured it. Money was loaned and borrowed on the basis of our agricultural production. We all assumed the conditions prevailing at the time the money was borrowed would continue to prevail without much change throughout the period of repayment.
> All went comparatively well until the depression hit us in 1929. With the crash in the fall of that year the world was engulfed in an economic catastrophe, the severity of which has never been equalled in the history of the world. Prices tumbled, markets ceased to exist and the world seemed headed for chaos. Wheat prices went lower than they had ever been in the last 400 years. This catastrophe alone would have been sufficient to shake this province from stem to stern, cutting as it did at the very fundamentals of our economic life, but this was not all. Hand-in-hand with this catastrophe walked, for seven years, every plague and disaster known to agriculture. We have had drought, dust storms, grasshoppers, rust and every conceivable disaster and pest.

For seven consecutive years we have gone through this, year after year, with fifty thousand farm families utterly destitute and having to be fed and clothed. Over a hundred million dollars had to be found to maintain human life—enough money, if so used, to pave every road in Saskatchewan.

The results of the combination of depression and drought is told in the production figures of agriculture over the last ten years. Listen to these figures:

Estimated Value of Products Actually Sold Off the Farm in Saskatchewan, 1927-1936

1927	$272,405,000
1928	273,566,000
1929	179,675,000
1930	101,803,000
1931	66,206,000
1932	72,179,000
1933	70,828,500
1934	81,406,000
1935	95,112,000
1936	112,000,000

These figures tell the story of the difficulties, not only of the people of Saskatchewan, but of the province itself. The decrease in the cash income of the farmers of this province from, roughly, $275,000,000 a year in 1927 and 1928 down to $70,000,000 in 1931, 1932, 1933 and 1934, is a vital factor, evidencing the terrific strain upon the economic life of this province. There was a loss in cash revenue in those four years of over $800,000,000. The farmers' income has started to go up since 1933, but last year only reached $112,000,000, which is not nearly one-half of the amount realized in 1927 and 1928 when the majority of the debts were incurred.

Now if I were a good politician I should perhaps make good use of this. As I am not, I merely want to state that the average price of wheat from 1924 to 1929 inclusive was $1.43½. In those years the pools were operating. The average price of a binder then was $292. For the period 1930 to 1935 wheat averaged 69 cents a bushel, and an eight foot binder at Regina averaged $272. This affords a pretty good comparison.

In a survey of a number of Saskatchewan farm incomes, we find that the income in 1925 averaged $2,856 per farm. In 1931 it dropped to $493, and in 1935 it had come back to $708, or approximately 25 per cent of what it was in 1925. The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Hyndman) a few days ago told us he was sick and tired of hearing about wheat, and he went home and looked in the dictionary to find there were oats, barley and other crops. In that connection I can only say that:

A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring.

I remember those lines from the day I went to school, and I think they may be aptly applied to the hon. member and his remarks about agriculture.

Some hon. members from Quebec and Ontario, and others also, cannot imagine why we come here and kick about the treatment we are receiving. We are told that we must sell our wheat on the world market and take the world price for it. But we are buying machinery and other supplies in a protected market. Dealing in that protected market we find that in 1931 the net loss to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta on account of tariffs amounted to $54,925,352. The gain for Ontario in that year alone amounted to $51,989,761 and to Quebec $31,685,885. This means that we lost $54,925,352, and Ontario alone had a net gain of $51,989,761.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his time has expired.

Mr. FAIR: I should like, if I might have a moment, to finish.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Only with the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. FAIR: These are some of the wheat bonuses paid by other countries. These figures are one year behind; I did not expect to have to use them; I thought on account of so much being said about wheat last year that hon. members would have learned a little more about it. In Belgium in 1935 there was a bonus of $2.65 per acre on wheat.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Time.

Mr. FAIR: On other grains $2 per acre. The United States on December 31, 1935, had paid bonuses amounting to $255,624,669.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt but the hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. FAIR: I shall be back a little later and finish it, perhaps.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): The amendment we are discussing now is an invitation to speak about unemployment at large. In September, 1930, according to some information which has often been quoted, the total number of unemployed, including unemployables, was 117,930, or 1 per cent of the population of this country. Before the last general election I asked the former Superintendent General of Indian Affairs of the previous government what was the number of Indians who had been receiving relief for the four or five previous years. He told me at first that it would take some time to gather that information; later I received another letter from him to the effect that it would involve considerable time and work in each agency, and some days later he told me he would endeavour to get the information requested; and finally, I never got it from him. But I got it this year from the present Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar). He stated on February 1, at page 419 of Hansard, that in 1930-31 there were 6,937 Indians on relief, with 9,088 dependents. I am sure that those Indians on relief and their dependents were included in the number of 117,930 unemployed quoted by the leader of the Tory party in 1930. The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens), who was then Minister of Trade and Commerce, is quoted in the Canada Year Book for 1931, published by authority of his department, as follows respecting unemployment:

> In Canada, as in other parts of the world, there was a general slackening in industrial activity during 1930, resulting in a lower level of employment than in 1929, and also than in some months of 1928. With these exceptions, however, the general index was higher than in previous years of the record.

Such was the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce of the previous government. There was less unemployment in 1930 than in the years before.

In September, 1930, the leader of the Tory party, fresh from the general election, overestimated the number of unemployed, but after he had been a few months in office the report of the Department of Labour of March, 1931, underestimated the number. To use his own words, when the present Prime Minister spoke of 117,000 unemployed in this country in September, 1930,

> The right hon. gentleman (Mr. Mackenzie King) was doing this country an injury and a wrong, for there was no warrant for any such figure unless you included every babe in arms and every child from babyhood to the age of sixteen or seventeen as being among the unemployed.

The number 117,000 of unemployed, he then mentioned, included both unemployables and their dependents; so much so that on February 18, 1935, speaking on the unemployment insurance bill, he quoted figures which were a vindication of the policy followed by the Liberal government during the previous nine years. Why was that so? Because the figures he read showed only a small number of unemployed under Liberal government, or about 1 per cent of the total population, and when the leader of the Tory party left office there were eleven times more.

There are three different classes of unemployed. First, there are those on relief; we know their number because we know the amount of money that is being paid to them. Second, there are those who work part time; as yet their number is unknown, and their case is very sad. Their incomes have been reduced very considerably. Many of them are too proud to accept relief. Others face this dilemma: either their meagre pay is deducted from their relief or their names are struck off the relief lists. Third, there are those who are supported by their own families, about whom we have no information as yet. At the last election the names of two hundred thousand young men were added to the lists, and we have no information as to how many of that number are unemployed.

In order to give an idea of what happened during the five years the previous government was in office, I desire to quote some extracts from the speeches from the throne and the prorogation speeches each year. They are on record as an expression of satisfaction put into the mouth of his excellency by the previous government. First I quote from the speech from the throne at the opening of the special session of 1930:

> The necessity for dealing with exceptional economic conditions with the resultant unemployment has induced me to summon you at an earlier date than would otherwise be necessary. Measures will be submitted for your consideration, including amendments to the Customs Act and the customs tariff which it is anticipated will do much to meet the unusual conditions which now prevail.

Then, after 152 tariff items had been blindly increased and eleven items had been decreased, in order to meet the unusual conditions which then prevailed, we heard the prorogation speech, reading in part as follows:

> I thank you for the prompt consideration which you have given to the measures submitted to you, and which are deemed necessary for the relief of unemployment in the dominion. It is my fervent hope and confident belief that these measures will prove effective in accomplishing the purposes for which they have been enacted.

Those were good wishes. Now I quote from the speech from the throne delivered at the opening of parliament in 1931:

> I welcome you to your duties at a time when the nations of the world are passing through a period of great economic depression. Canada has not escaped it. But the Canadian people have met the trials of the moment with patience and fortitude, and are facing the future with the courage and faith which must triumph over every adversity... The problems which stand between us and ultimate prosperity are manifold and great. To be effectually met, they must first be understood. Confusion between cause and effect will but delay their solution.

During that year the number receiving direct relief was 741,000, or about seven times as great as the number mentioned by the leader of the Tory party in 1930. The disbursements made by the dominion under the relief act of 1931 were $42,740,000, or three times the disbursements under the relief act from September, 1930, to March, 1931. The prorogation speech of 1931 included this passage:

Since you entered upon the duties of the session, the world wide depression in economic conditions has grown more acute, and the consequent state of unemployment and distress in many parts of the country has been intensified through the partial failure of the wheat crop of western Canada. To augment existing relief measures, the governor in council has been empowered to take the necessary action to provide the maximum of employment and to aid, by such means as may be deemed expedient, the recovery from the adverse conditions arising primarily from the crop failure.

The great powers of Europe and America, following the generous and constructive action of the president of the United States of America, which Canada wholeheartedly endorses, are unitedly striving for the re-establishment of better world conditions.

Better start at home!

Towards this purpose we may now effectively contribute, by steadfastly bending ourselves to the task of freeing Canada from the consequences of this universal state of economic depression and of the particular misfortune which has befallen the west; so that this country may be ready to take its place in the forefront of the world's recovery.

The speech from the throne for 1932 at the opening of the session was delivered on February 4 of that year, and from it I quote the following:

You enter upon your duties at a time of continuing and universal economic disturbance and distress. World conditions are beyond the control of the Canadian people. But I rejoice that their resolute adherence to policies designed for the welfare of the nation has minimized the adverse influence of external economic forces... The provisions made at the last session of parliament for unemployment and farm relief are proving effective.

You are successfully meeting difficult domestic problems. Conditions are gradually improving. But prosperity in full measure must await the satisfactory adjustment of accounts between debtor and creditor nations of the world and the restoration of international monetary standards, from which the acute financial difficulties have compelled a temporary departure.

Now I quote from the prorogation speech, session of 1932:

My government's policy of unemployment and farm relief, consistently and vigorously pursued, has already achieved an amelioration of conditions and forecasts steady and continued improvement in both agrarian and industrial communities.

The larger the number of unemployed the rosier became the speeches from the throne. Now I come to the speech from the throne at the opening of the session of 1932-33:

The problem of unemployment continues to receive the anxious attention of my ministers. Under the powers granted them at the last session of parliament, they have been able to develop further, in cooperation with the provinces and municipalities, a scheme of direct relief to be put into operation during the autumn and winter months to the extent required by prevailing conditions. Plans for the re-establishment of the unemployed in various parts of the country are in preparation and will become operative as soon as, in the opinion of my ministers, the public expenditure incident thereto will be productive of commensurate benefits.

In January of 1932 the number of individuals on relief was 714,000; in January of 1933, that number had increased to 1,306,000. That was great progress! During the session of 1932-33 the Ottawa trade agreements were enacted, and the prorogation speech that year contained these words:

The courage with which the Canadian people have endured the burdens imposed upon them in these troubled times is witness to their great faith in the future of this country.

They should have faith, indeed.

It is, however, realized that cooperation amongst the peoples of the world is essential to recovery from the unprecedented conditions which have for so long prevailed in all countries.

Now I quote from the speech from the throne at the opening of the session in 1934:

The representatives of the various provinces strongly approve of the arrangements made by my government to care for single, unemployed, homeless men in camps until such time as they could be absorbed in industry, by providing them with employment on undertakings for the national good; and of the provision made in 1932 for settlement of families on the land, which has been extended with satisfactory results. My government propose further to promote employment by expenditures on essential public works and undertakings throughout the dominion.

Did that mean that the previous works imposed by the leader of the Tory party on the provinces and municipalities, and carried on by the joint expenditure of federal, provincial and municipal governments, were unessential and even useless? But this is no time to look backward, says the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett).

The speech continues:

I congratulate you that such improved world conditions are reflected in Canada by expanding trade, improving revenues, increasing employment, and a more confident outlook upon the future. Canada occupies a leading position amongst those countries where the evidence of a return to permanent prosperity is most convincing.

Then, from the prorogation speech in 1934:

The progressive improvement of general economic conditions in Canada which is presently much in evidence gives every indication of continuing in increasing measure.

Then, from the opening speech from the throne in 1935, the last year in which the previous government held office:

During the past year the grip of hard times has been broken. Conditions show marked improvement. Employment is increasing. Our trade is expanding. The national revenues are higher. These evidences of recovery attest the wisdom and efficacy of the measures you have taken. In these improved conditions, there may now successfully be carried forward those great tasks of reform upon which the well-being of this country depends.

And from the prorogation speech of that year:

The enactment of the measure relating to unemployment and social insurance will, through the establishment of a national labour exchange service, provide for dealing more effectively with the problem of seasonal and other unemployment, and will afford the means whereby Canadian workers can, with the assistance of the government, make provision for their own security.

That was the proposal, and the answer of the Canadian people to it was No, even before the Privy Council declared the measure was useless.

We must remember, sir, that in 1930 the leader of the Tory party stated there were 117,000 so-called unemployed. In March, 1935, the number on relief—and we have no figures about the unemployed part-time workers and the unemployed who were not on relief—was 1,258,421. Great progress! Twice a year, in the opening speech from the throne and in the prorogation speech, we were told that business was getting better and better, and yet the number of unemployed was increasing all the time.

To be fair let us compare the record of the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) with the record of the government which held office before him. He said that when he assumed office he would end unemployment. When he took office the total number of unemployed, including unemployables, stood at 117,000; when he left office it stood at about 1,300,000.

Mr. STEWART: No, that is the number on relief. In the one instance the hon. member is giving the number of unemployed, and in the other the number on relief.

Mr. POULIOT: Perhaps I made a slip.

Mr. STEWART: The two figures would be entirely different. The correct figure is about half a million, instead of 1,300,000.

Mr. GOLDING: It went up to 700,000 at one time.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not wish to make any slip. When the Conservative party took office it was admitted that the total number of unemployed—and I am sure the number included the unemployables, and Indians on relief and their dependents—stood at 117,000. It included the dependents of Indians.

Mr. HEAPS: No, no—just the unemployed.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member did not get any more information than I did at the time. I have received information from the Department of Indian Affairs. We have the statement of an hon. gentleman who sits in front of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps) which appeared in an official publication when that gentleman was a minister in the Bennett government that there was less unemployment, and more employment, in 1930 than in the years before. We have that evidence, and the hon. member knows it very well.

When hon. members opposite left office there were 1,258,421 on relief.

Mr. STEWART: Not unemployed—on relief.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, on relief.

Mr. STEWART: How many were unemployed?

Mr. POULIOT: A much larger number.

Mr. STEWART: Oh, no.

Mr. POULIOT: Because this figure did not take into account those who worked part time, and the unemployed who were not on relief. The hon. member knows that very well.

Mr. STEWART: No. The point I make is that the hon. member should give comparable figures and should not confuse the number of unemployed with the number on relief. I understand the number of unemployed was about 500,000, while the number on relief was over a million.

Mr. POULIOT: The figures given by the hon. member are most unfair, because they are those of heads of families on relief—an entirely different thing. Let me tell him that he was a very good Minister of Public Works, and I am pleased to pay that tribute, but I must say that when he was a member of the government he paid no attention to social legislation. He left that to his leader, who was the big boss and did not brook intervention by any of his ministers. Therefore members of the Liberal party knew more about these matters than did the ministers of the former government.

Mr. STEWART: May I ask the hon. member again to give the figure for 1935 which would correspond to 117,000 in 1930.

Mr. POULIOT: I am telling the hon. member that it is impossible for me to give them because his boss, the former Prime Minister, always refused to give me information. I shall now instruct the member from Brockville; I have been trying to give a little information to his leader.

Now let us come to the municipalities. They have considered the question of unemployment from what angle? From the angle of finance. I am in favour of investigating commissions, but managing commissions are sometimes dangerous. We have an employment commission. Let me tell the house that I do not believe much in that commission. It is a window-dressing commission, with the home improvement plan—and walking down Sparks street the other day I was much surprised to see a sign on which were the words "admission free" stuck in a bath room. That seemed strange, because few people appreciate such window dressing invitations when there are other windows showing fireplaces where the sign would be much more appropriate.

The question has been asked about the number of unemployed. On February 8 of this year I asked this question:

1. What is actually the total number: (a) of heads of families; (b) of their dependents; (c) of individual cases of unemployed, all receiving relief at the present time?
2. How many of the three above mentioned classes are employable?
3. What is the total number of unemployed: (a) heads of families, and (b) unmarried boys and girls over twenty, not receiving relief at the present time?
4. What is the number of: (a) employable, and (b) unemployable unemployed in each province at the present time, and what was the average of each of both those classes of unemployed during the calendar years 1935 and 1936?

To which the minister replied:

Mr. Rogers: All available information was included in the report of the National Employment Commission with respect to the registration of recipients of direct relief which was tabled in the house on the 5th day of February. As other data is abstracted from the registration returns it will be made available.

I thank the minister for the copy of the return, but I must say it contains no information about the previous occupations of the unemployed. Therefore it is of no use at all. I cannot see its usefulness as it does not show what the unemployed can do, or how they can be employed. This is a very important point and one that should not be overlooked.

At page 762 of Hansard there is set out the payments to the members of this National Employment Commission. These are as follows:

Name	Travelling expenses	Living allowance
A. B. Purvis	....	....
A. N. McLean	$1,141 07	....
Alfred Marois	603 75	$1,843
Tom Moore	228 95	....
Mrs. M. Sutherland	2,151 93	3,439
W. A. Mackintosh	771 98	1,425
E. J. Young	1,538 25	3,021

Mr. Young would be able to render much better service to the state on the tariff board, and he would be exceedingly well qualified for such a position. Mr. Tom Moore received only $228.95 for travelling expenses, no living allowance being paid. What a great sacrifice he made to serve the state. Apparently he served without salary. But he received $9,000 for doing nothing on the social insurance commission. He received nearly as much in salary as the four commissioners received in living allowances. They received a total of $9,728 while Mr. Moore received $9,000. I saw in the Ottawa citizen not long ago that he was no longer a member of the employment insurance commission, due to the ruling of the privy council, but was to be employed at a salary of $7,300 per year. He was to get $20 a day for 365 days. Apparently he is to work on Sundays. Our Lord created the universe in six days, but on the seventh He took a rest. Tom Moore is doing nothing for 365 days; therefore he does not need a weekly rest.

The creation of the employment commission was just as laudable an effort on the part of this government as were silly the increases made in the tariff by the previous government and its so-called social legislation which was knocked out recently by the privy council.

The speech of the Minister of Labour on the second reading of the employment commission bill on March 30 last year shows that he is fully qualified for his position. I would be quite willing to give him blanket authority to study this whole matter and report to the house. He is a reliable Minister of Labour and I am very sorry that in order to relieve unemployment all he has by way of assistance is a commission which is really more of an obstacle than a help.

Enough has been said already with regard to the abstract side of unemployment. I intend to refer to the individuals concerned. I have received a number of letters from unemployed people, which I should like to read if I had the time to do so. In his speech in support of his amendment, the leader of the Tory party, otherwise known as the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Bennett), made one suggestion. Was it constructive or was it not? Let us see. He said that the bureau of statistics was the place one would expect to go to for the purpose of getting information regarding the numbers of the unemployed. The last information gathered by the bureau of statistics in this connection was during the census of 1931. Therefore, the only information the bureau can supply in this regard would be that relating to 1931. The leader of the opposition did not even dare to quote that information when speaking on the unemployment and social insurance bill. If he does not know where to get the necessary information, it is not surprising that he never got it. After having been Prime Minister for five years he seems to know very little about this matter.

The proper source of this information is the municipalities. This government has authority to collect the necessary information from that source. All the government needs to do is to tell the provinces that they will get no more subsidies unless they provide the necessary information.

I should like to tell the house what in my humble opinion should be done. There should be a classification of the unemployed in each part of the country according to trades. We should have the number of unemployed in the building trades, unemployed factory workers, labourers, merchants, office help, professional workers, railway workers, technicians, iron and steel workers, longshoremen, miners, seamen, fishermen, domestics and sundry other occupations. It is very important to know the previous occupations of the unemployed in order to know what can be done for them.

I would suggest that this question of unemployment should be studied by a committee of this house. After having looked over the record I am surprised to find that during the last few years this question has not been considered by a committee of members of this house. I have before me a list of the different matters referred to the committee on industrial and international relations. In 1928 there was referred to it the question of insurance against unemployment and sickness, and the civil service councils, Bill No. 4; in 1929, grants of family allowances, and insurance against unemployment, sickness and invalidity; in 1930, Bill No. 39, respecting government contracts; in 1931, there was referred to it the resolution by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Miss Macphail) regarding promotion of peace by instituting professorships and scholarships in Canadian universities. In 1932 it had no sittings; in 1933, no sittings; in 1934, no sittings. In 1935 there was referred to it the resolution on oriental seamen on Canadian ships, and the resolution for pensions for the blind. In 1936 there was referred to it a report of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the matter of employment of Canadian citizens on subsidized Canadian ships. In 1937 there have been no sittings as yet.

I should like to give particulars of the special committees of this house which have been set up to study various matters. In 1929 committees were set up to study the Dominion Elections Act, 1920, and the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act. In 1930 committees were set up to study the Dominion Elections Act, 1920; pensions and returned soldiers' problems. The special committees set up in 1931 studied the Beauharnois power project, and Bill No. 4, the Copyright Act. In 1932 special consideration was given to the Bankruptcy Act, Bill No. 41; the civil service and Civil Service Act; certain charges and allegations made by Hon. G. N. Gordon; radio broadcasting; unfair competition in trade and commerce; and Bill No. 4, to amend the Patent Act. During the session of 1932-33 special committees considered Bill No. 78 concerning pensions, and Bill No. 2 to amend the Representation Act. In 1934, special consideration was given to the Civil Service Act; price spreads and mass buying; operation of the radio act, elections and franchise acts. In 1935, consideration was given to the British North America Act; Bill No. 98 concerning the grain board; and housing. In 1936, we had under consideration the election and franchise acts, 1934; pensions and returned soldiers' problems; the marketing of wheat and other grains; and the radio commission.

In 1937, there are committees considering the elections and franchise acts; criminal code (death penalty) bill; farm implements.

It is an omission on the part of all of us, every hon. member is blameworthy, because a reference on the unemployment problem can be submitted to a committee on the motion of any hon. member, seconded by another, and adopted. This session is nearly over, but I hope that next session a motion will be carried for a committee to study unemployment at large. I humbly proffer this suggestion. The membership of this house comes from every part of the country and represents every walk of life, and it seems to me that we could give a hand and substantial help to the government by studying this whole matter ourselves, rather than by referring it to others.

We could formulate our suggestions without reference to party politics, as an assembly of members desiring to consider and come to definite conclusions on this vital problem in order to assist the government of the day.

Here was a suggestion that was made on April 30 to assist the government. A member of this house has done part of the work which is to be assigned to the National Employment Commisison. He is still ready to do that work for nothing—the classification of the unemployed according to their trades—if the government is willing, provided that he can pick up a staff to assist him in his work. It will save the government of the country $125,000. The offer is still good.

Mr. STEWART: Will the hon. member answer this question: Who is the hon. member who made that offer?

Mr. POULIOT: I cannot name him because I fear to hurt his modesty.

We should also make an inventory of our natural resources, an investigation of packing, et cetera.

The trade policy of the government is excellent; and I am sure that if a committee of this house decided to study the whole matter from a non-partisan point of view, examining facts instead of theories, it would achieve very satisfactory results.

May I say in conclusion that as the trade policy of the government is very good there is no reason why its unemployment policy should not be of equal merit. In order to arrive at such a policy, however, we should get rid of any managing commission, and appoint an investigating committee from among ourselves to report back to the house in due course.

On motion of Mr. Rickard the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Lapointe (Quebec East) the house adjourned at 10.56 p.m.

Tuesday, March 9, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS COMMITTEE

First report of the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. McPhee.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Monday, March 8, consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Bennett.

Mr. W. F. RICKARD (Durham): As one of the new members of ths house and a farmer I feel it my duty to say a few words on the question now before the house as it affects the people of this country, and particularly of the county I represent.

In the first place I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) on his presentation of this budget, and to assure him and the house that I am going to vote for the budget and against the proposed amendment of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). I am a little disappointed that this amendment was brought forward; I thought from the attitude taken by the leader of the opposition at the beginning of the session that he intended to follow the example of Sir Robert Peel in the session of 1834. At that time Sir Robert Peel was leader of the opposition, and he deemed it his duty to support the government of the day on its policy of peace, security and financial reform. He set the welfare of the nation above the interests of party. Miss Ramsay, in her book on Peel, at page 170 goes on to say:

> The Tories were not so dainty about their methods, and many of them considered that a factious opposition was quite compatible with conservatism.

They had to learn that they must take their leader as they found him, and pardon his liberalism for the sake of his talents, and that, hanker as they might for a reactionary policy, they were helpless to carry it out without his assistance; that in fact the only chance for their party was to group themselves once more around this most unsatisfactory chief. I am sorry that the leader of the opposition departed from the resolution which he appeared to have made earlier in the session. It is a matter of regret that the board of strategy has appealed to him to give battle on the budget and on the tariff question. The people of Durham county are satisfied with the budget, as are the people of most counties throughout Canada. The agricultural vote is the largest in point of numbers and financial importance in my riding. The farmers are satisfied that last year's budget, and this year's budget too, are well calculated to widen their markets.

It has not been our experience in Durham county that there has been a falling off in the price of cattle and live stock generally during the past few months. We do not find that the importation of vegetable fat has cut into the dairy market to any great extent. Up our way I am confident that good cooks will continue to use a good deal of old-fashioned lard and butter for their cooking. The county of Durham is famed for its fruit, its Devonshire cream, its pure bred live stock and its fertile fields. Strawberry shortcake made with Durham strawberries, and apple pie and Devonshire cream, still taste mighty good to the people of that county. No amount of advertising could induce the cooks in my riding to abandon their tried and proved methods of producing these things or to jeopardize their family reputations by introducing into their cooking too much vegetable fat instead of lard and butter.

Next in order in my riding must be considered the manufacturing interests. In the town of Port Hope a new industry has grown up as the result of a geological find in the Great Slave lake district. During last year we produced 28 grammes of radium, and thanks to the cooperation of our representative in London who is also a Durham boy, a market has been found for this commodity, which sold for $25,000 a gramme or a total of $700,000. This is one industry that is not clamouring for protection. In addition, the revival in the motor industry seems to assure a steady market for the important rubber factory at Bowmanville, the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, Limited. The file factory at Port Hope is the only factory in Canada producing files, and that plant is doing a bigger business than ever before, notwithstanding the fact that during the last election the men were told that if they voted for King and the Liberal candidate the doors of the plant would be closed the next morning and the men would be out of work. Women were told that their husbands would be on relief if they supported Liberal policies, but instead, as you see, an even greater business is being done. Their export trade has increased; the wages of the men have been increased by ten per cent, and in many lines they are working overtime.

We have other industries in Durham county as well. For instance, there is the Ideal works, which makes bathtubs, et cetera, and is working at full capacity, and we also have several foundries which are doing a good business. In the village of Newcastle, where I live, we have a small cabinet factory employing twenty-five to thirty men and women, which is working overtime, with orders for many months ahead. That plant is located in part of the factory where the Massey-Harris company started years ago.

In the county of Durham we have that desirable state of affairs of which the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) spoke in his splendid address on Thursday last—the opportunity to work and to live in clean, healthy surroundings. The towns are not large but they are prosperous. I should like to be able to speak on this subject as Hon. Edward Blake was wont to speak. I cannot match his eloquence, but in love of the county and devotion to its interests I do not yield even to Hon. Edward Blake.

There is another section of the community about which very little is heard in parliament. I refer to citizens who, either by their own thrift and industry or as the result of those qualities in their ancestors, are possessed of a modest competency which they have invested in stocks and bonds. They are the financial backbone of the community, and they are glad to see that the Dunning budget does not indulge in any sensational or freak attempts at financing. They feel certain that their investments will not be jeopardized by any action of this government. Ours is an old, settled community, and during the course of the past four or five generations many small private fortunes have been made. I can remember in my boyhood days when the merchants of Bowmanville put on special sales for the days on which the interest on bonds was paid. "Coupon day" in Bowmanville was a big event. For the past six or seven years coupon payments have been slim, but now they are growing in importance again, and I hope "coupon day" will again return to all the towns in my constituency.

The budget that was brought down last year has worked to the advantage of the people of my riding, and we expect further benefits from the budget now under discussion. The trade agreements that have been made with the United Kingdom, Japan, Russia and other countries, as well as the agreement with the United States, have been very beneficial. I am surprised when I hear farmer members of this house talking in favour of high tariffs and high protection. Surely they must know that our market in the United States during the past year has been of great benefit to the farmers of this country. What would the farmer have received for his cattle if it had not been for the United States market, to which we shipped 160,000 head last year? I venture to say that we would have been hardly able to give them away. I would not have it understood, however, that I am an out and out free trader. I refuse to subscribe to the principle that it is always best to buy in the cheapest market. If the advantages of free trade simply mean the progressive and well-considered relaxation of restrictions on commerce, then I am for it. The industries that are carrying on in Durham county are well established, and by this time they have realized that they need not fear the competition of other countries. With growing markets they feel that they can carry on without asking for contributions from their fellow citizens.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a word about some phases of the unemployment situation. We in Durham county are not very much affected by unemployment; of course we have some people on relief, but that situation does not exist to the extent that it does in the larger cities. We have men and women who would like jobs, but in addition we have a great many young people graduating from our high schools, collegiate institutes and agricultural colleges who cannot find jobs, except possibly at something which does not pay them anything like the cost of their education. In my county we have young people of the finest type, young boys and girls who have put Durham county on the map in various judging competitions, both provincial and interprovincial. These boys and girls are the men and women of to-morrow, and it is up to us to do something for their future. They are getting to the age where they would like homes of their own, but if conditions do not improve it will be difficult for them to realize that ambition. I have every confidence, however, that this government will do something for the young men and women who will have to shoulder the responsibilities of the country to-morrow.

I think the government should be congratulated on the steps they have taken to relieve the unemployment situation, and especially in regard to the demobilization of the relief camps which were in operation under the former administration. By closing these camps and placing the men at work wherever possible the government have effected a great saving to the taxpayers, and, what is more important, have restored independence to the men and brought about a general change for the better in their morale. I believe the problem of unemployment may be with us for some time, even though statistics show a marked improvement in the situation. But we must encourage our people to work for a return of the prosperity which all Canadians feel is their right. With the unlimited reserves within our boundaries, and a self-reliant people, we are bound to succeed and to restore to them the heritage with which the Creator has blessed them.

[Mr. Rickard.]

I do not feel justified, Mr. Speaker, in taking up any more of the time of the house on this question. I do venture the prediction, however, that the budget will be carried by a tremendous vote, and that the size of the vote will favourably reflect the opinion of the country as a whole on this subject.

Mr. W. A. WALSH (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with my observations on the question under discussion, I should like personally to say that I am very happy to see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) again in his seat. Much as we dislike and disagree with his policies, we do enjoy his happy presence in our midst. May I congratulate, too, the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Rickard). Although he confined his remarks to a certain district, yet hon. members must appreciate that the conditions in his own locality are no doubt duplicated in many others throughout the country.

His reference to the budget being adopted by a large majority must, of course, go without dispute. In discussing the amendment before the house, we do not expect to convert even the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) to our way of thinking. On many occasions Canada's financial position has been carefully reviewed. As a country we do not enjoy a unique position in respect of our unfortunate financial circumstances. Other countries are in a similar position and are endeavouring to find a solution of their peculiar financial difficulties. Any effort made even by the present government to find a solution which will point the way to prosperity will, I have no doubt, meet with the support of all parts of the house.

The depression hit Canada with probably more severity than it hit other countries, largely due to the slump in the price of wheat. Wheat trading does materially affect Canada, and the unfortunate position in which we found ourselves, with a large surplus on hand and falling prices, aggravated the condition that was on its way, and made it more severe than it might have been under other circumstances. May I suggest that the slump through which we have just passed is not responsible for all the ills prevailing in Canada. Certain inherent disorders were brought to the surface by the depression. Many of our present troubles were with us before 1929, and have merely been accentuated by the conditions under which we have been living.

The Minister of Finance gave us a clear picture of the financial position of Canada as such, but he could have given a clearer picture had he gone more carefully into the finances of Canada as a whole, taking into account the municipalities and provinces. For a few moments I should like to discuss the actual financial conditions prevailing in Canada to-day, in order that we may see what our financial condition is, taking into account the position of the provinces, the municipalities and the federal government.

Upon reference to statistics I find that Canada's true debt, including all items, stands at $4,163,000,000. The nine provinces have a total debt of $1,415,000,000. The total debt of the municipalities stands at $1,386,000,000. These are tremendous figures for a young and growing country. In round figures the total is $7,000,000,000. That is the debt of a young country with only 11,000,000 inhabitants; it amounts to $636 per person. I want hon. members and people outside the house to realize the full significance of that statement. I repeat: Every person in Canada to-day is indebted to the extent of $636. That is an unhealthy amount per capita for a young and growing country.

Then, from the latest statistics available it appears that the total revenue of Canada last year amounted to $372,000,000; the total provincial revenue amounted to $161,000,000, and that of the municipalities, $285,000,000, making a grand total, through taxation, of $818,000,000. Of this revenue, the dominion spent 46 per cent to pay interest on debts, the provinces paid 37 per cent for the same purpose, and the municipalities paid 24 per cent. Of the $818,000,000 collected in Canada, 38 per cent was earmarked, before received, to pay interest on contracted debt.

Mr. MAYBANK: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he in a position to indicate the extent to which the per capita debt of the nation was increased in the last five years?

Mr. WALSH: I have other figures before me, and possibly the hon. member's question will be answered as I proceed. In the first year after confederation the gross debt of this country was only $93,000,000, and the interest thereon was only $4,500,000, or $1.28 per capita. In 1900 the gross debt had grown to $346,000,000, and the interest charges worked out at $2.02 per head. Just prior to the war the debt had grown to $544,000,000, and the interest cost per capita was $1.87. At the present time the per capita cost of interest upon our so-called gross debt of $3,432,000,000 is $11.44. When we consider the railway debt and other charges, the per capita cost is $27.73.

The growth in public expenditures is equally startling. In the first year of the confederation we spent only $13,000,000. In 1900 our expenditures totalled $52,000,000. Just prior to the war they had increased to $163,000,000. These figures are significant. They show the constant increase in our national expenditures and our national revenues. I must acknowledge frankly that the war had a considerable influence upon the growth of our national debt, but I would go so far as to suggest, as has been suggested on previous occasions, that Canada no doubt overplayed her hand as far as war measures were concerned, and we are paying for it now. But be that as it may, the war had a direct influence upon the expenditures not only of the dominion but also of municipalities and provinces.

I was wondering if it ever occurred to this or any other government that a budget could be balanced in two ways. Most ministers of finance and provincial treasurers know of only one way to balance a budget, and that is by increasing revenue, which means increasing taxation. But a budget can be balanced by decreasing expenditures rather than by increasing revenues. The present government proposes the appointment of a royal commission on taxation. We are familiar with royal commissions and I do not think we need one to tell us that at the present time we are suffering from over-government. We do not need a royal commission to tell us that there is too much overlapping in public service and taxation. The dominion and provincial governments must realize that there is only one source from which revenue can be obtained, and that is the people. The more we spend the more we have to ask the people to provide. A royal commission would serve a useful purpose if it resulted in definite action—if, in this case, it prevented overlapping in the field of taxation or the duplication of services as between municipal, provincial and federal authorities—but my experience with royal commissions has been rather the reverse.

Generally the first consideration in the setting up of a royal commision is the appointment of a strutting counsel at $150 or $200 a day. This gentleman then proceeds to eke out a year's existence on that small stipend trying to dig up facts which the government most likely knows already. I have not much faith in the value of the suggestion of the government that they are going to appoint a royal commission on taxation. They might be getting somewhere if they intended to appoint a commission such as was appointed in England, I think under the chairmanship of Sir George May, which brought out what is familiarly known as the "May" report. But if the commission is to be of the kind usually appointed in Canada, if it is to bring in the usual type of report, it would seem to me that the government's action in this regard is merely another subterfuge for their not making more progress than they are at the present time.

It was my intention to refer briefly to certain items in the budget. I was amazed on going over previous Hansards to read the following on page 2118 of Hansard of Tuesday, March 26, 1935:

With regard to ways and means, my hon. friend makes some proposals in regard to taxation to which I want to refer briefly. He retains his virtual twenty-five per cent tax on sugar, a household necessity, but he reduces his tax on liquor by over forty per cent. I had hoped, and others on this side and I believe a good many on the other side had hoped, that the Minister of Finance had intended to cancel the sugar tax this year. We supposed he put it on as an emergency tax, and he put on the gold tax he said in order to permit the sugar tax to be reduced by half. Last year in making his statement to the house he said that to replace the revenue lost by the reduction of the tax on sugar it was proposed to levy a tax of ten per cent on gold.

That is an extract from the remarks of the Hon. J. L. Ralston, who was then speaking on behalf of the opposition of that day, which opposition now occupies the treasury benches. Two more years have passed, the Minister of Finance has brought down two budgets, each of which included the same tax on sugar to which the government, when in opposition, raised such strenuous objection. I cannot see the reasonableness of complaining about something when you are in opposition, but failing to act when you are in power on the incentive that inspired you while you were in opposition.

It was my intention to discuss briefly the railroad problem which faces this country. However, I notice the chairman of the committee on railways and shipping is present and I shall not abuse the privilege of my position this afternoon by dilating further on the subject to which he listened so patiently for some considerable time this morning. I should like to refer to one statement made by Hon. Mr. Ralston. I read from Hansard of March 26, 1935:

They should tackle the railway problem courageously and not pass the buck as they do.

What is the courageous way in which this government have tackled the railway problem? They have introduced Bill No. 12, but that bill does not add one cent of revenue to the railways of Canada; it does not reduce the expenses of operating the railways; it will not put one unemployed man to work, nor will it give one man at present employed by the railways one hour of additional employment in the future. Yet that is the courageous way in which they are tackling the railway problem of Canada—by taking out of the non-active assets of the dominion and placing in the consolidated fund a sum almost equivalent to $374,000,000. That is their solution of our railway problem—adding to the debt of Canada by extracting it from the non-active assets of the dominion. That may be called a courageous way of meeting a critical situation, but I should like to see something which, without being characterized in quite such strong terms, would be more effective as far as results are concerned.

Last year, participating in another debate which took place in this house, I was happy to be able to congratulate the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) on a theory that he propounded in connection with tariff for revenue purposes. He indicated that he gave his unqualified support to the raising of more revenue by means of a tariff. He represents a western constituency. I want this year to reendorse the stand which he took at that time and my own attitude on the same occasion. In my opinion much more revenue could be collected in Canada, without any injurious effect, through the medium of a tariff. It could be collected cheaply and without any real hardship on either industry or the population in general.

The tendency of the present government is to lower tariffs, and the lowering of tariffs naturally creates a certain amount of unemployment or the possibility of it. In passing I think I should warn the present government that if it pursues such a policy to any great length we in Canada cannot meet the competition of foreign countries in certain fields of industry. I refer particularly, of course, to industries that have been developed in Japan. If the government is not careful to protect Canadian industry against encroachments from that particular source, we shall find ourselves with a greater amount of unemployment to deal with than we have even at the present time. I have here a document published by the United States bureau of statistics, the United States Monthly Labour Review, which gives illuminating figures as to wages paid in certain industries in Japan. I shall quote a few items given in this document, in order to show the utter impossibility of Canadian industry meeting the competition of a nation that has constructed its economic farbric on wages such as are mentioned here:

Textile Industry

	Wages per day
Silk reelers, female	21 cents
Cotton spinners, female	24 "
Silk throwers, female	22 "
Weavers, female, cotton, machine	21 "
Weavers, female, silk, hand	39 "
Hosiery knitters, male	61 "
Hosiery knitters, female	33 "

Metal Industry

	Wages per day
Lathemen	$1 58
Finishers	1 64
Founders	1 28
Blacksmiths	1 42

Leather Industry

Leather makers	92 cents
Shoemakers	70 "
Clog makers	35 "

Among day labourers, stevedores are paid 74 cents per day. Domestic servants, male, receive 23 cents per day; female domestic servants 22 cents per day. Those wages are actually in existence, otherwise they naturally would not be published by an authoritative body. Going further in an effort to persuade the American people to, as the writer suggests, "Buy American," I find this:

A comparison of the low wages paid in Japan with the high levels of American wage rates is sufficient to cause everyone to shudder with fear and issue a fervent hope that such debasing wages may never encompass the millions of American workers, whose efforts and high wages have built the high standard of living we now enjoy in our country.

But the menace of cheap, foreign competition exists and it is real . . . constantly becoming more threatening. Nowhere is it more pointed than in the textile industry.

I should like to urge these considerations on the attention of the government. What I have quoted in connection with American industry applies with equal if not greater force to Canadian industry, and that phase of our trade operations must be carefully watched by the present government, otherwise we shall find ourselves in a dilemma from which it will be very difficult to escape, even with the ingenuity that my good friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) may develop from time to time in the way of commissions to assist him in solving problems that the government are likely to force upon him.

Mr. MAYBANK: Would the hon. member at this point permit a question? Would he contend that it was the high protection policy of the last five years that made the employment situation in Canada so very good?

Mr. WALSH: I am not advocating high protection in Canada. I am advocating a reasonable measure of protection not only for the sake of our industries but for the men and women who are employed in those industries, so that a very grave situation may not be further aggravated by throwing upon the relief rolls men who could be kept in employment if we carefully watched the course of industry and trade and prevented unfair foreign competition. I could go on at greater length, particularly in connection with the textile industry, but I shall reserve that for a later date when, no doubt, we shall hear from that window-dressing commission.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WALSH: When its report is presented we may have something of an interesting nature to suggest. But at this time I would point out to the Minister of Finance what has already been mentioned in this house, that the building industry is of primary importance.

Mr. DUNNING: Just before the hon. member leaves the subject of the textile industry: has he any concrete instance in mind where the budget of last year or the budget of this year put people connected with the textile industry out of employment or reduced employed in that industry?

Mr. WALSH: No. I want to be perfectly fair with the minister. At the present time I have no cause to complain of either last year's or this year's budget, except that in certain instances, particularly in connection with woollens, there is a slight danger that the industry will be somewhat disturbed. But I am afraid of this, that when the Turgeon commission reports the government may by order in council adopt certain measures that will seriously affect the trade in textiles. I am much concerned about that aspect of the situation, not, on the whole, about the aspect that has developed up to the present time. I am a little nervous about the woollen industry, having particular regard to the less extensive plants in our smaller towns. Their position should receive careful consideration by the government before any action is taken that, although not putting them out of business, may compel them to curtail their present production.

I should like to say this, since the Minister of Finance has brought it up. There are in the budget, in connection with hosiery for instance, certain features that undoubtedly place an undue weapon in the hands of certain large merchandising concerns in Canada to the detriment of the smaller merchants. I refer to cheap cashmere hosiery and other hosiery of cheaper quality that can be bought by these larger concerns, through their purchasing agents in Europe, at a much reduced cost and brought into Canada to undersell the cheaper hosiery manufactured here, to the detriment of these manufacturers and of the smaller retail merchants in Canada who have not the same facilities to make such purchases, particularly the purchasing facilities which our departmental stores have at their disposal. I am concerned a little about that particular item of the budget.

Mr. DUNNING: Cashmere hosiery?

Mr. WALSH: I am speaking of cashmere and other cheaper lines of hosiery, not full-fashioned silk hose, because as far as they are concerned we are an exporting nation; we have a fine market in England for full-fashioned silk hose. I am, however, very much concerned about the cheaper lines.

In the course of the debate we have heard much about a stimulant applied to the building industry. With that I am in hearty sympathy, and any stimulant that can be applied to that industry will certainly meet with the approval of every member of the house. I am surprised that the government has not seen fit to introduce, in the course of this session, much more legislation than it has brought down in connection with the building industry. It might be possible to introduce something in the form of tax-free second mortgages, which would give some encouragement to the building industry.

Mr. DUNNING: Tax-free second mortgages?

Mr. WALSH: Yes, to encourage building. Some people can afford a first mortgage but they cannot go beyond that, and if they could get a cheap second mortgage so much the better.

Mr. DUNNING: Will the hon. member explain what he means? The suggestion is an important one, but what does he mean by tax-free second mortgages?

Mr. WALSH: There are some points I want to make before I sit down. I am sure the Minister of Finance knows a great deal more about the matter than I do myself, and there is a useful little pamphlet entitled "Building Societies Eliminate 'Peaks and Valleys' in Industry" which he will find interesting. It touches, I believe, on that particular point. I have no doubt he has a copy of it.

Let me come now to the Department of Labour. I have not noticed, either in the budget or in the debate so far, anything that will give us a lead as to measures for the relief of unemployment and to establish a new social order in Canada. I have here clippings from newspapers of the maritime provinces. The Minister of Labour and his chief assistant, the chairman of the National Employment Commission, visited the maritime provinces during the past summer and held meetings in different places, assembling councillors and members of parliament. Every time I read one of these reports I thought it was the report of a Liberal convention. When they brought together the members of parliament, particularly in the St. John district, to discuss relief measures, it was of course not natural to expect the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks), who lives a few miles out of St. John and who happens to be a Conservative, to be invited to participate in any of these conferences. He was a Conservative and no doubt it was taken for granted that he might not have very much to contribute to the discussion. I suggest, however, that he could have been invited, if only as an act of courtesy on the part of the Minister of Labour, and given an opportunity to express his views and offer assistance in the effort to solve the unemployment problem.

Mr. ROGERS: The Minister of Labour was not responsible for summoning any of the meetings; they were arranged by those who were interested in the particular communities where the meetings were held.

Mr. WALSH: The meetings were conveniently arranged, probably by the Liberal organizer of the district, so that Conservatives were not present.

Mr. ROGERS: That is not correct.

Mr. WALSH: I do not know what is correct, but I know that if I had time I would read a list of names and the minister would be surprised to see how many prominent Liberals were in attendance at these meetings. I suggest that the Conservatives, even if in opposition, are interested in the problem of unemployment and are willing and anxious to offer their assistance in finding a solution of the problem.

I want to read one or two extracts relating to the National Employment Commission. In Hansard of March 8, 1937, at page 1600, an hon. member makes the following statement:

> I am in favour of investigating commissions, but managing commissions are sometimes dangerous. We have an employment commission. Let me tell the house that I do not believe much in that commission. It is a window-dressing commission. . . .
> The question has been asked about the number of unemployed. On February 8 of this year I asked this question:
> Certain questions are set out.
> To which the minister replied:
> Mr. Rogers: All available information was included in the report of the National Employment Commission with respect to the registration of recipients of direct relief which was tabled in the house on the 5th day of February. As other data is abstracted from the registration returns it will be made available.
> Mr. Pouliot: I thank the minister for the copy of the return, but I must say it contains no information about the previous occupations of the unemployed. Therefore it is of no use at all. I cannot see its usefulness as it does not show what the unemployed can do, or how they can be employed. This is a very important point and one that should not be overlooked...

The speech of the Minister of Labour on the second reading of the employment commission bill on March 30 last year shows that he is fully qualified for his position.

I agree with that.

I would be quite willing to give him blanket authority to study this whole matter and report to the house. He is a reliable Minister of Labour and I am very sorry that in order to relieve unemployment all he has by way of assistance is a commission which is really more of an obstacle than a help.

These are not the words of a Conservative opposition member; they are the words of a Liberal member at present occupying a seat in this house and at present sitting not very far from the minister himself.

Mr. ROGERS: My hon. friend is not suggesting that I inspired them ?

Mr. WALSH: I do not think the inspiration would come from that source, but I want to emphasize the fact that one of the minister's own supporters absolutely disengaged himself from any connection whatsoever with the National Employment Commission, condemning it in the same terms in which it was condemned from this side of the house last year, to which condemnation little or no attention was paid.

An hon. MEMBER: Who is the member?

Mr. WALSH: The member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot). Let me remind the house —this has already been emphasized—that this year this commission has cost us $87,418, and I notice in the supplementary estimates we are asked to vote a further sum of $275,000, making a total of $362,418—for what? For a national employment commission who are recording certain facts and figures that should be recorded in the bureau of statistics, and who are not doing one iota to aid unemployment. They are doing nothing real and practical to solve the problem of unemployment in Canada.

I tell the Minister of Labour that I have had the utmost patience with his efforts to solve this problem, but I am entirely losing patience with the attitude and action of the employment commission. I listened to an address by the chairman of that commission in Montreal on January 11, and the facts he gave on that occasion and the expressions he used were illuminating. He embodied in his report the latest figures from the drought area of the west. Why these figures should be included by the Department of Labour in statistics with respect to the unemployed is beyond me. The people in the drought area, who have the misfortune to be out of employment and on relief as a result of a contingency due to nature alone, over which they had absolutely no control, should be looked after through the Department of Agriculture, and the statistics of the Department of Labour should not be confused by the inclusion of the drought area figures. The people there are not unemployed in the true sense of the term; they are unemployed for a definite and specific reason and therefore should be looked after by the department primarily responsible for their rehabilitation and replacement.

During the course of his remarks the chairman of the commission drew an analogy between a boy's knowledge of a lobster or a lobster's knowledge of a boy. When he finished we did not quite understand whether the lobster knew more about the boy or the boy about the lobster, but he did suggest that the knowledge of the people of Canada regarding the unemployment problem was somewhat similar in character.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. WALSH: I am sorry I have to conclude, as I have other interesting data that I should have liked to present, but I hope I may have an opportunity to do so at some other time.

Mr. J. T. THORSON (Selkirk): When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) made his budget statement to this house he presented an encouraging picture of progress to the people of Canada. He was quite frank in his admission that much remained to be done, and that frankness gives hope that further progress will be made. The right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) has proposed an amendment expressing regret that the government has failed to take effective measures to deal with the problem of unemployment. The debate therefore affords an opportunity of considering the policies that ought to be followed by this country, and perhaps our best approach to this problem is to analyze the effect of the policies of the past in the hope that we may profit in the future by avoiding the mistakes of the past.

No useful purpose is served by reminding the people of Canada that the leader of the opposition promised to end unemployment, that his government went into office on the strength of that promise, and that he failed to fulfil it. The important things to remember are the policies that were initiated by his government for the purpose of performing the promise that he made, and the utter failure of those policies to accomplish the purposes for which they were designed. The Bennett administration sought to end unemployment by raising the tariffs against imports from abroad and restricting their entry into Canada in the hope that their manufacture in Canada rather than abroad would solve the problem of unemployment.

It is obvious that these policies did not end unemployment. Instead they did real harm to Canada, for they sacrificed the primary producers of this country in the interests of the secondary industries, and in so doing they did harm not only to the primary producers themselves, but also to those engaged in secondary production as well.

I intend to confine my remarks largely to two commodities that were, prior to 1930 at any rate, the principal items of our external trade: wheat, our most important export, and textiles, our most necessary import; and I shall endeavour to show to the house the disastrous effect which the Bennett tariffs against textiles had upon the export of Canadian wheat. I take wheat as an example of primary production and textiles as an example of manufactured goods, but what I have to say with regard to wheat and textiles might also be said of other primary products and other manufactured goods respectively, the differences being of degree rather than of kind.

An analysis of Canada's export trade shows that at least seventy-five per cent of it consists of the products of agriculture, mining, forestry and fishing, either in their natural state or after primary processing. The list of the twenty leading commodities which Canada exported during the calendar year 1936 in the order of their value shows two things: first, that wheat is our most important export commodity, amounting to 22·3 per cent of our total exports in that year; and second, that our primary production constitutes our basic wealth and the means whereby we are able to maintain our export trade and create the necessary credits abroad which enable us to purchase the commodities that we need from abroad, and which we in Canada must have if our people are to enjoy a decent standard of living.

Since Canada is a large exporter of primary commodities she must therefore be a large importer of manufactured goods; for there is no other way by which she can put into circulation the basic wealth of her primary production. If we wish to sell our goods we must be willing to buy the goods of others. An examination of the distribution of our imports during the fiscal year ending March 31, 1930, according to the classifications used by the bureau of statistics, shows that our most important imports from the United Kingdom, continental Europe and the orient consisted of fibres, textiles and textile products, these being 36 per cent of our total imports from the United Kingdom, 31·7 per cent of our imports from continental Europe, and 52·5 per cent of our imports from the orient.

Since 95 per cent of our total wheat exports went to the United Kingdom, continental Europe and the orient, and since wheat is our most important export commodity, and since our most important imports from these countries were textiles, it follows that Canada's trade with the United Kingdom, continental Europe and the orient depended primarily upon the exchange of wheat for textiles. These are the principal items in that trade, and when Canada raised her tariffs against textiles, after 1930, she touched the heart of our trade relations with our chief wheat importing country. By prohibitive tariffs against textiles the Bennett administration succeeded in restricting the import of textiles into Canada, but in so doing that administration not only lost markets for Canadian wheat, but also allowed the Argentine, Canada's most dangerous competitor in wheat production, to gain the markets which Canada had lost. That, too, Mr. Speaker, was one of the causes of continued unemployment in Canada; for the loss of markets for Canadian wheat meant reduced purchasing power for the Canadian wheat producer, and therefore less ability to purchase the products of Canadian manufacture. The reduced volume of production, for example, of the agricultural implement industry, is directly traceable to policies of the kind that I have mentioned; and that reduced volume means both reduced employment for those engaged in that industry and higher prices for implements to the farmer.

Let us examine for a moment where the wheat exports of Canada went in 1930 and the extent to which they have been reduced since then. I now place on Hansard a short table showing the average exports of wheat per annum during the five year period ending March 31, 1930, as compared with the subsequent five year period ending March 31, 1935, and the main countries to which these exports actually went.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, but there is a rule of the house that nothing may be placed on Hansard unless it is read, except it be done by unanimous consent. I think your honour raised the point here the other evening in regard to another member, and made that ruling.

Mr. THORSON: This table, Mr. Speaker, tells a striking story. In the first place it shows that continental Europe prior to 1930—

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I rise again to a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I ask your ruling. Is it permissible for the hon. gentleman to place a table on Hansard without reading it, unless he first seeks the unanimous consent of the house?

Mr. THORSON: The privilege has been extended on numerous occasions, Mr. Speaker; the table is very short, and its substance will be contained in the remarks I now propose to make.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I have no objection—

Mr. THORSON: I will read the table.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The hon. gentleman has stated that the privilege has been extended on other occasions. I know of no person to whom this privilege is accorded except the Minister of Finance when making his budget speech. That is my understanding of the rule; if I am wrong your honour will correct me.

Mr. SPEAKER: I should like to hear what the hon. member has to say as to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley).

Mr. THORSON: I shall read the table. It shows the exports of Canadian wheat to continental Europe, the United Kingdom, the orient and other countries. The average exports of wheat per year during the five year period ending March 31, 1930, were 155,000,000 bushels to continental Europe; 82,600,000 bushels to the United Kingdom; 16,400,000 bushels to the orient, and 11,100,000 bushels to other countries, making an average annual total of wheat exported in those years of 265,100,000 bushels. The second column shows that during the five year period ending March 31, 1935, the average exports of wheat per year to continental Europe were 103,300,000 bushels; to the United Kingdom, 71,800,000 bushels; to the orient, 9,100,000 bushels and to other countries, 9,000,000 bushels; making a yearly total average in those years of 193,200,000 bushels. These figures are significant. Out of a total average export of Canadian wheat of 265,100,000 bushels per year in the years prior to 1930, 155,000,000 bushels per year went to continental Europe as against 82,600,000 bushels per year to the United Kingdom. It will not help us in Canada to hold the United Kingdom market for wheat if at the same time we lose the markets of continental Europe. In the second place, this table tells an alarming story, for it shows that during the five year period ending March 31, 1935, our wheat exports averaged 71,900,000 bushels less per year than during the preceding five year period, and that 51,700,000 bushels per year of this decline is accounted for by reduced exports to continental Europe. That market was lost to Canada largely as the result of the foolish tariff and fiscal policies of the previous administration of this country and, what is perhaps even worse, that market was surrendered to the Argentine, Canada's strongest competitor in the production and sale of wheat—Canada's greatest individual asset.

In 1929 the six main wheat importing countries of Europe were Germany, Italy, France, the Netherlands, Belgium and Switzerland. They took seventy per cent of the total European imports of wheat. In that year Canada had a favourable trade balance with these countries amounting to $114,603,000, her exports to these countries amounting to $187,388,000, and her imports from them being only $72,785,000. These were good customers for Canada; indeed they were our best customers for Canadian wheat. How did the Bennett adminstration treat these good customers of Canada?

The treatment which Canada gave to Switzerland is perhaps the most striking example of the folly of the tariff policies of the former administration of this country. If an analysis is made of our imports from Switzerland as between the fiscal year ending March 31, 1930, and the fiscal year ending March 31, 1935, it will be seen that our imports from Switzerland declined from $7,314,840 in 1930 to $4,979,543 in 1935. Of this decline seventy-seven per cent was in fibres, textiles and textile products, our imports of these commodities having been restricted from $4,507,296 in 1930 to $652,010 in 1935.

How was this brought about? The Bennett administration proceeded to restrict the importation of silk from Switzerland, first by raising the ad valorem duty, and secondly by inflated arbitrary valuations for duty purposes. Let me give the house an illustration of how the previous administration acted. The chief silk product which Canada imported from Switzerland in 1930 is described in our trade returns as "woven fabrics, wholly or in part of silk, not to contain wool, not including fabrics in chief part by weight of artificial silk." In the fiscal year ending March 31, 1930, Canadian imports under this heading amounted to 1,259,836 yards, valued at $826,109. The average value per yard was 66 cents; the duty amounted to $242,602, and the average duty per yard was 19 cents. But in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1935, Canadian imports under the same heading amounted to 2,582 yards, valued at $3,518. The average value per yard was $1.36; the duty amounted to $1,524, and the average duty per yard was 59 cents. These figures indicate that the average ad valorem rate of duty on these items was increased from 29·4 per cent, as it was in 1930, to 43·3 per cent. But this was not enough: Although the price of raw silk was falling and silk prices in Canada were declining, the valuations for duty purposes were stepped up from 66 cents per yard to $1.36 per yard, thus increasing the actual duties that were collected on this class of silk fabrics by over 215 per cent.

Mr. EDWARDS: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. THORSON: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS: Would he mind telling the house the number employed in 1930 as against those employed in 1936 in the textile industry of Canada?

Mr. THORSON: I have not those figures.

Mr. SPENCE: Because you do not want to have them.

Mr. THORSON: I will deal with the general question a little later on. I have indicated the manner in which the Bennett administration proceeded to deal with Switzerland's trade in silk fabrics with Canada. It succeeded in killing that trade, for it reduced it by 99·8 per cent.

The next most important decline in Swiss imports into this country was under the heading of—

Mr. BAKER: May I ask the hon. member a question? Did the reduction by ninety-nine per cent of silk importations from Switzerland to Canada give more employment in Canada?

Mr. THORSON: I doubt it; I do not think it did.

Mr. BAKER: It certainly did.

Mr. THORSON: I will answer that in a moment.

Mr. BAKER: It certainly did to hundreds and hundreds of people.

Mr. THORSON: The next most important decline of Swiss imports into Canada was under the heading of non-ferrous metals and their products, a decline from $1,795,578 in 1930 to $880,844 in 1935—eighteen per cent of the total decline in Swiss imports. We treated time-pieces from Switzerland somewhat in the same manner as we did silk fabrics.

Now, what did Switzerland do, in return, to our Canadian exports of wheat into Switzerland? She was patient for a time, but at the close of 1931 she passed legislation which empowered the federal council of that country to limit imports by means of quota restrictions. By a decree which became effective on May 12, 1932, wheat was placed under this law, and since then importations of wheat have been allowed only under permit from countries specified by the authorities. What happened to the sale of our Canadian wheat? it should be noted that from 1926 to 1930 Switzerland took 57·4 per cent of her imports of wheat from Canada. Relatively she was our best customer for wheat in continental Europe. Even as late as 1932 she took 52·7 per cent of her wheat imports from Canada, but after the governmental decree went into effect for wheat the picture rapidly changed. In each year since 1932 Canada's share of the Swiss wheat market has declined until in 1935 it amounted to only twelve per cent of the total Swiss imports. This market did not disappear, for Switzerland decided upon a policy of buying from countries that were willing to buy from her; and the Argentine, Canada's most dangerous competitor in wheat production, gained the market which Canada by her shortsighted tariff policy had lost. In 1931 the Argentine supplied only 9 per cent of the wheat import requirements of Switzerland, but in each year since then she has gained an increasing share until in 1935 the Argentine's share of the Swiss wheat market amounted to 45·7 per cent, whereas Canada's share had dropped to 12 per cent. The previous administration of this country was highly successful in accomplishing its purpose of restricting imports from Switzerland, but in so doing it lost a market for Canadian wheat amounting to over 7,000,000 bushels per year, and surrendered that market to the Argentine. Surely the time has come for a change of policy.

The time at my disposal does not permit me to deal in the same detail with the other European countries, but basically the story is the same. Our total imports from Belgium declined from $13,019,000 in 1930 to $3,613,000 in 1935, the chief decline being in textiles, iron and iron products, and non-metallic minerals and their products. Tariff changes in respect of glass have resulted in a marked decrease in the importation of this commodity from Belgium. Our wheat exports to Belgium have actually increased, but when the United States went out of the wheat export business, her share of the Belgian wheat import requirements went to the Argentine, instead of to Canada, the Argentine's share of the Belgian market increasing from 23·6 per cent in 1930 to 58·5 per cent in 1935.

The story of our trade with the Netherlands is similar to that with Belgium. Our imports from the Netherlands have been restricted from $9,432,000 in 1930 to $4,343,000 in 1935, the chief declines being in textiles, and agricultural and vegetable products. Imports of artificial silks declined from $1,051,000 in 1930 to $148,000 in 1935. As in the case of Belgium, our exports of wheat to the Netherlands have slightly increased; but as also in the case of Belgium the former United States share of the Netherlands wheat import requirements went to the Argentine, instead of to Canada, the Argentine's share of the Netherlands' market increasing from 10·4 per cent in 1930 to 59·8 per cent in 1935.

And so the story goes. Canadian imports from France decreased from $25,158,000 in 1930 to $6,443,000 in 1935, 47·9 per cent of this decline being due to reduced imports of textiles. In the case of Italy, Canadian imports declined from $4,963,000 in 1930 to $2,714,000 in 1935, 64·4 per cent of this decline being due to reduced imports of textiles. Similarly, in the case of Germany our imports from that country declined from $21,505,000 in 1930 to $10,474,158 in 1935, 75 per cent of this decline being due to reduced imports of textiles, iron and iron products, and miscellaneous products.

In 1929 the six wheat importing countries of continental Europe had unfavourable trade balances with the rest of the world, and those unfavourable balances were largely with the four wheat exporting countries of Canada, the United States, the Argentine and Australia. When the crash of 1929 came, and the invisible items of trade upon which they had relied disappeared, they were forced to rely to a greater extent upon their commodity balances. The action taken first by Australia in 1929, and then by the United States in 1930, and later by Canada, made it impossible for these countries to maintain their exports, and they were forced therefore to restrict the volume of their imports.

The effect upon Canada of her mistaken policies in dealing with these countries was disastrous. I wish I had time to tell the story in detail, but briefly it is this: By prohibitive tariffs the Bennett administration succeeded in restricting Canada's imports from these six continental European countries from $72,785,000 in 1929 to $16,524,000 in 1935; but during the same period our exports to these countries fell from $187,388,000 in 1929 to $30,154,000 in 1935. Canada restricted her imports by $56,261,000 per year, but in so doing she sacrificed $157,234,000 per year in her export trade. There was almost $3 of exports lost for every $1 of imports restricted. Forty per cent of the restriction in imports was in respect of textiles, and included in the loss of exports was 51·7 million bushels per year of Canadian wheat. What a heavy price the Canadian wheat producer has paid for the protection of the textile manufacturer!

Surely such policies must not be allowed to continue. The primary production of Canada constitutes her basic wealth; surely our tariff and fiscal policies ought to be so designed as to ensure the best circulation of that basic wealth. If we are anxious to increase our total wealth, we ought to be prepared and we must be prepared to buy the manufactured goods of other countries. In order that they may be given the necessary purchasing power to buy our primary products, our tariffs must be reduced on the articles they have to sell. This would be good business for the whole of Canada. I do not think of tariff reductions as tariff concessions; I consider that they constitute good business for Canada. If this were done the whole of Canada would benefit; for the increased volume of our export trade would increase the purchasing power of our primary producers, and those engaged in the secondary industries of Canada would benefit as well.

An increase in our total wealth, which can come about only by the expansion of our external trade, will not solve all our problems, for the problem of the equitable distribution of that wealth will still remain with us. But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that an increase in our total wealth constitutes our best hope for solving the problem of unemployment. Since the beginning of the industrial revolution industry has always depended upon agriculture and the other primary industries that produced food and raw materials. There is no country in the world equal to Canada in its potentialities for the production of real wealth. We ought to be the wealthiest country in the world, and we could be the wealthiest country if our leaders had the vision and courage to put into effect the policies that will best ensure the circulation of our basic wealth, the primary production of Canada.

Mr. EDWARDS: Is the hon. member suggesting that the textile industry of Canada should be scrapped in order to assist in the export of wheat?

Mr. THORSON: By no means. My view is that if we used our primary production as it ought to be used, benefits would accrue not only to those engaged in that primary production but also to those engaged in the secondary industries.

Mr. EDWARDS: What will become of the 63,000 workers in the textile industries?

Mr. THORSON: If we adopt the policies I have suggested I think there will be more workers engaged in the secondary industries of Canada.

Mr. BAKER: That is only a theory; it does not work out in practice.

Mr. THORSON: I think we have demonstrated that it is a fact.

Mr. T. C. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): Mr. Speaker, along with those who have preceded me, I should like to extend my congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) upon a well organized and ably presented budget speech. I desire also to express the regret of those of us in this corner at his having to be absent for some time due to a minor illness. We are glad to see him back in the house. A budget debate without the Minister of Finance would be something like Shakespeare's Hamlet without the ghost. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) has substituted very well, but I think he has felt more like Hamlet than the ghost. During the last few days I could almost hear him saying Hamlet's famous lines:

> The time is out of joint: O cursed spite,
> That ever I was born to set it right.

The present budget runs true to form. The first budget after an election is usually one in which taxes are raised. There is generally a great cry about deficits, which are often attributed to the maladministration of the previous government. The second budget usually states that things have improved, but despite that fact there is generally no reduction in the burden of taxation. The third budget after an election usually announces that the budget has been balanced and that the government is now in position where it is possible to begin to ease the strain. The budget just before an election usually contains a number of generous gestures by which the long-suffering public are given something which they should have been given two or three years earlier.

The present budget contained a very able presentation of the financial condition of Canada and it ran true to form in that it announced no new taxes. But it did not announce any relief from taxes recently imposed. It followed the orthodox path hitherto trodden by our governments. It announced a degree of economic recovery, for which we are all glad. I should like to suggest to the house that this economic recovery is not based upon any permanent factors in our economy. To a large extent that recovery is due to two things. First, there was the widespread existence of drought in large areas in the United States and western Canada, which areas were unable to produce their usual crops. The same thing was true of parts of South America and of Europe, and the result has been that the surpluses of wheat and other grains have been reduced to the point where a reasonable price could be obtained for these commodities. I submit that the drought is not a permanent condition—I am sure none of us would want it to be—and the return of normal crops will mean the return of surpluses. Unless there is some system of orderly marketing, the return of surpluses will mean reduced prices to the farmer in relation to his costs of production. The experience of agriculture from 1930 to 1934 will be repeated when we have a return of normal moisture conditions.

The second factor affecting this economic recovery is the prevalent fear of war to be found in all parts of the world. This fear has caused two things to happen. First, there is the desire to store up foodstuffs and raw materials necessary for the carrying on of war against such time as a blockade might make it impossible to get these commodities across the sea. The result is that in Europe to-day, including Great Britain, they are building storage facilities out of all proportion to anything in their history. Great Britain is hoping to store sufficient wheat for a year's supply in advance. That is true of other European countries. In the main what has happened is, not that we have reduced the surplus, but that we have merely transferred it from the North American continent across the Atlantic, and any release from the fear of war will bring back to us the problem of surplus primary commodities.

A second effect of the widespread fear of war has been, of course, a stimulus to the sale of minerals. Large quantities of nickel, copper and other minerals have been sold to countries that are carrying out a rearmament program. May I suggest that rearmament is not a permanent factor upon which to build a return to prosperity, and that inevitably it means either war or disarmament. What war will mean the Minister of Finance described very ably; it will mean economic catastrophe. But disarmament will mean unemployment, the cessation of trade, the end of that upon which was founded the return to prosperity. I therefore submit that while we are all glad to see an increase of trade, to note indications of economic recovery, a recovery based upon such unstable factors as drought and fear of war cannot be a very lasting affair.

May I also ask, to whom has this economic recovery come and who has benefited by it? The Minister of Finance points out that dividends have increased during the past year 13 per cent over 1935. The last budget showed that dividends had increased 8 per cent over 1934. He gave the index figures of industrial dividends: the low was in August, 1933, 62·5; in December, 1935, the figure was 100·1, and in December, 1936 it was 117. Undoubtedly those who draw their income from shares have profited by this economic recovery, but to what extent have the great masses of the people of Canada benefited through this so-called return to prosperity?

With reference to those who are unemployed, despite the fact that we have spent nearly $100,000 on an employment commission, we have at least half a dozen different figures quoted in this house as to what the number of unemployed really is. The Minister of Finance says that unemployment has decreased five per cent. The February Labour Gazette, issued by the Department of Labour, states at page 165 that eight provinces of Canada had a direct relief roll of 960,634 persons in September, that this compares with 891,921 persons in September, 1935, or an increase of 68,713. In the January issue of the Labour Gazette, at page 36, it is stated that in November, 1935, the number of persons employable but on relief was 723,000, and in November 1936 it was 733,000. I leave the house to make what it can of these figures. Two reports from the Labour Gazette say that the number of people on relief has increased; the other report says that it has decreased five per cent. This much we do know, that the so-called return to prosperity has affected very little the great masses of the people who find themselves living on a bare subsistence.

The Minister of Finance says that profits are the mainspring of our economic activity under our present system. Notice that —"profits are the mainspring of economic activity." That is true, but I hardly expected him to say it. We have always been told that the mainspring of our economic activity was the needs of human beings, the welfare of the citizens of Canada. It is only too apparent from the figures in the budget what is the mainspring of economic activity, as measured in terms of a twenty-one per cent increase in dividends over a period of two years, as compared with practically no increase in the number of people employed throughout the dominion. Who has benefited by this so-called return to prosperity? It has not benefited to any appreciable extent the industrial worker or the farmer. Unfortunately the income tax returns for 1936 are not available, because the fiscal year does not end until March 31. But the income tax returns for 1935, though there may be a difference in proportion, indicate fairly well how the income of Canada is distributed. In 1935 the number of agrarians or farmers paying income tax was 416, the number of professionals 5,800, the number of employees—unfortunately there is nothing to differentiate between those who get wages and the executives who draw salaries—149,418; merchants, 5,104, wholesale merchants, 620, manufacturers, 442, financial concerns, 11,673, and personal corporations, 584. While it is true that speculators may have made some money out of gambling with the farmer's products, the farmers and the workers themselves have received as yet little or no benefit from the so-called return to prosperity.

The other evening I listened to the Minister of Labour speak with great feeling about the "blind alley" young men lived in during the time of the relief camps. He talked about the desperation and frustration with which they were confronted. I heartily agree with him. But had I been a stranger listening to him I should have believed that these evils belonged to the past and that since these horrible conditions existed some new era had dawned. But they do not belong to the past. The minister said that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) hardly realized what a change there was in the sentiment across Canada. Well, there may be a change in the subjective attitude of the Minister of Labour, but I doubt very much whether there is any change in sentiment among the unemployed or the people in general. I doubt whether frustration and desperation have been removed out of the lives of the unemployed. Let us look, for instance, at the problem of the single unemployed. The minister tells us that when the work that was given on the railways ceased, some 46,000 of these young men were placed on farms. I shall deal later with that matter. About 5,000 were put on forestry work. What about the rest? Some are in camps, these camps which are such blind alleys. What about the remainder? What about the thousands who wander to and fro, back and forth across Canada?

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Not very many thousands are doing it.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I wonder whether the hon. member for Melfort realizes that in this city of Ottawa, the capital of Canada, there are about 700 transients living at the mission or the shelter or at Friendship House. I wonder if he and the Minister of Labour know that these men get two meals a day—a breakfast consisting of porridge and bread and tea, and an evening meal consisting of either soup or stew and bread and tea—and a bed.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Does the hon. member propose to allow me to answer the question?

Mr. DOUGLAS: The hon. member for Melfort has all the opportunity that I have; he can have forty minutes at any time.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked me a question a moment ago. A day or two ago his leader objected to rhetorical questions being put to that side of the house. May I say in answer to the hon. gentleman that last year in the constituency of Melfort there was a real shortage of young, unemployed men willing to take jobs available during the fall and winter.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I will continue my speech. The hon. member says there is a shortage of men in Melfort.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): In the constituency of Melfort there was, I said.

Mr. DOUGLAS: If he can influence the Minister of Labour, who sits in front of him, to transport some of these men who have been living on two meals a day, I am sure they will be glad to take the jobs.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Would they be any good when they got there?

Mr. DOUGLAS: No, not after living on two meals a day. I doubt whether the hon. member for Melfort himself would be any good if he lived for any considerable length of time on two meals a day. The fact is, talking about moving these men, they come to town and are allowed one night's lodging and two meals, and then they must move on; but when they go to the station to catch a freight train to go to my hon. friend's constituency the mounted police will not allow them to get on the train; they must wait until it is moving quickly and then try to catch it, with danger to life and limb. They must either do that or stay where they are and beg on the streets.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Why did they come here in the first place?

Mr. DOUGLAS: Because there was nowhere for them to go. The average young man to-day is caught on the horns of a dilemma. He must either look for work elsewhere or stay at home, in which case he is not eligible for most of the government projects such as the home placement scheme. If he leaves home to try to get on any of these projects he at once makes it impossible for himself ever to come back to his home and get relief. He is penalized either way, because if he stays at home he cannot get work, and if he leaves home and wanders about the country looking for work he cannot come back home because the authorities are not willing to accept him as a responsibility.

Let us look at the matter of farm placements. In the first place it is of very little value to those who would like it, the young farmers, young men in small towns on the prairies who would be glad to go on the farm, having had some experience. They cannot go because they have a home; scores of them have been refused on the ground that they have a place to live. The young men who are homeless come in the main from the cities; in the first place they are not suited to farm work, they are of no use to the farmer, and they do not like such work. Therefore, those who want it cannot get it and those who can get it do not want it and are not of much use to the people to whom they go.

I was interested the other day to receive a postcard from the Ottawa Young Men's Christian Association notifying me that Hon. Norman McL. Rogers would be the guest speaker, taking as his subject "The outlook of Youth." I am sorry I did not hear that address.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): You are past that stage anyhow.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Whether the Minister of Labour told these young men or not, the fact remains that for fifty or sixty thousand young men in Canada to-day the outlook of youth is $5 a month on a farm; otherwise they can go to the mission and get two meals per day. Some people think that $5 a month is a lot of money, and sometimes I am amazed at the sense of values shown by hon. gentlemen opposite. I have here a copy of an order in council, which I mentioned before, showing that Colonel Ralston, counsel for the Turgeon grain inquiry, receives $20 a day for expenses, and a salary of $200 per day. Compare that with the lot of these young men. Let us leave out the living expenses, though they are not altogether comparable; the boys get board and this gentleman gets $20 a day. Let us take Colonel Ralston's salary and make a calculation on the basis of it. It would take a young man, working under the farm placement scheme, eighty-seven years to make as much as Colonel Ralston makes in a month of twenty-six days, or 1,054 young men working a year to make as much money as he would make if he worked one year.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Will my hon. friend allow me—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I have been very patient. The hon. member for Melfort has not made many speeches this session, and I am sure the house will be glad to hear him if he has anything to say.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The question was quite pertinent.

Mr. DOUGLAS: In the meantime I suggest that the hon. gentleman resume his seat. Even if we accept the statement of the Minister of Finance that there has been a five per cent decrease in unemployment, it means that the unemployment problem, diminished to the extent of five per cent, is with us for at least twenty years.

Mr. DUNNING: You are a bad calculator, I am afraid.

Mr. DOUGLAS: If you work it on a compound basis it may be less, but according to the commission's own statement the decrease is not even five per cent. There is an increase in the number of people on relief. The Minister of Labour has not told us what he and his commission, on which we have spent nearly $100,000, are going to do. We have a home improvement scheme which may help Canadian Industries Limited, sell paint, but it is still to be demonstrated how many people it will put to work.

Mr. DUNNING: It has paid $1,000,000 in wages.

Mr. DOUGLAS: To whom?

Mr. DUNNING: To the working men.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Yes, and the money has been borrowed by people who next year must take it out of purchasing power and return it to the lending institutions.

Now I come to another question that has been brought to the attention of the house several times, and I do not propose to deal with it in detail. I refer to wheat. When the wheat board legislation was in its initial stages a great many people thought that it was to provide an orderly marketing system by which all wheat was to be delivered to the wheat board, the farmer was to receive a fixed price and a participation certificate. Then the proposal was attacked, the attack being led by Colonel J. L. Ralston. Delegations came from the Winnipeg grain exchange. Mr. J. R. Murray, then secretary of the grain exchange, was in the capital, and at that time we heard bandied about the dominion such phrases as "give the Winnipeg grain exchange another chance" and "give the farmer the right to market his wheat where he wants," with the result that there were amendments to the act which permitted the farmer to sell the wheat either in the open market or to the wheat board. Then came the present government, and the first thing that government did was to change the personnel of the board. They looked all over Canada to see whom they could get, and it is well known whom they selected. They chose Mr. Murray, the former secretary of the grain exchange, who had worked so hard the year before to prevent the wheat board from coming into existence. Putting Mr. Murray in charge of the wheat board was like putting a weasel in a hen coop to raise chickens. And he succeeded very well. Ever since he took over that responsibility we have had what is commonly known as a fire sale policy for wheat. That has been amply demonstrated by the leader of the opposition, by my deskmate, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley), so there is no need for me to place the figures upon Hansard. But most amazing of all, when last year for the first time in five years it was apparent that wheat was going to bring a price somewhat commensurate with its cost of production, what happened? It was announced on August 28 that unless wheat dropped below 90 cents a bushel it would not be accepted by the wheat board. So we see the progress: First of all wheat was to go through the wheat board; then it was to be through the wheat board or the open market; and now unless it is below 90 cents it is to be all sold on the open market. In other words, the 1936 crop of western Canada has been turned over to the grain exchange and the speculators. I know men in my own district who made more money out of buying options than growing wheat. It is coming to a pretty pass when one man can make more money out of paper wheat than another can make out of real wheat that people eat. The result is that the farmers of western Canada have lost on an average between 20 and 30 cents a bushel, which otherwise would have been purchasing power in the hands of the people on the prairies.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I should like to ask the hon. member a question. Does he believe that?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I come now to the statement made yesterday by the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) in his annual speech. He read extracts from some articles which I wrote, and took great exception to them. There is an old saying:

> Oh wad some power the giftie gie us
> To see oursels as ithers see us!

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Hear, hear that makes it unanimous.

Mr. DOUGLAS: The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bothwell) must have been disillusioned on reading that article, so I do not wonder that he was a little upset. On reading his speech this morning I find that I did him a service, because if you take out the articles of mine that he quoted there is not much left of his own. What he did was to give certain excerpts from my articles and say they were misrepresentations, but he did not in any case cite where the misrepresentation lay, although I asked him to do so. He did not, for instance, answer the question of certain Liberals from Saskatchewan, some of whom condemned the action of the government on wheat, while others wired to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) asking for an explanation of the government's action. But throughout the entire speech from the throne and the budget speech there was no reference to the matter. On the hustings, of course, some hon. gentlemen were quite vociferous, but here they become as calm as Mary's little lamb. The hon. member for Swift Current said nothing to explain that. All he said was that I was misrepresenting facts. But, Mr. Speaker, I could go back over Hansard and substantiate exactly what I was saying. That would take some time and this is neither the time nor the place for it. But I will make the hon gentleman this sporting proposition: He and I are very close neighbours, and I am prepared to come to his city of Swift Current, I suggest on the first day of July, but he can name any day he likes—

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Why spoil the holiday?

Mr. DOUGLAS: I admit it would spoil his holiday, but I am quite prepared on that occasion to substantiate the statements that I made in the articles, and my hon. friend will have the opportunity there to prove any misrepresentations. I shall be very glad to come, because there there will be none of the restrictions that the rules of this house place upon a member. The gloves will be off, and we shall see whose hands are dirty. Or since the hon. gentleman is not enthusiastic about that venue and he would prefer to come to Weyburn, I can guarantee him a very warm welcome. But talking as he did about having regard to the ninth commandment, I was glad to learn that the hon. gentleman knows at all events that there are commandments—I had not given him credit for that.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Did you give any other member credit for that?

Mr. DOUGLAS: In his speech yesterday, at page 1565, the hon. member referred to the fact that he had received a number of resolutions, and had attended one of these meetings of protest. He says that some of the resolutions were couched in very similar language. If I remember correctly he said yesterday that he had attended a meeting at a place called Cabri, although I see on reading Hansard that the reporter must have failed to catch the name of the town, but the hon. member mentioned it for I wrote it down and so did my deskmate. The hon. member said there was no resolutions committee appointed, that a prepared statement was brought in and put to the meeting. The man who spoke at that meeting is in Ottawa, and if I am not mistaken he is in the gallery of this house. What happened? I believe some 1,400 people gathered there—

Mr. BOTHWELL: Five hundred at the most.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I am merely giving my hon. friend my understanding; he can correct it later. A committee of eleven business men from eleven surrounding villages sat in with ten farmers, making a committee of twenty-one, which drew up the resolution passed by the meeting.

My hon. friend implied yesterday and on another occasion when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) was speaking that these protests coming from all over western Canada came from some central source seeking to stir up feeling against the government. He has not the courage to say so, but he implies it. Why not say plainly what he means? I received scores and scores of these resolutions, and naturally there was some similarity in the language. Several hundred people could not write resolutions on the same subject without using somewhat the same language. To imply that the feeling of protest that is sweeping across western Canada is to be attributed to only a few persons, who for subversive reasons are trying to stir up trouble is merely dragging a herring across the trail. After telling us that there is a similarity in the language of the resolutions, the hon. member does not say what he thinks about that action of the wheat board, whether he agrees or disagrees with it, whether he is pleased or displeased. He does not say what he told the people of Cabri, does not say whether he objected or acquiesced in the passing of the resolution—not a word, only that there was a similarity in the language in which these different resolutions were couched. I tell my hon. friend and those with whom he sits that perhaps nothing has been done by hon. gentlemen opposite that has caused such a widespread feeling of sorrow even among their own supporters, the farmers of western Canada, and many of the urban residents of western Canada, that the west should have been thus betrayed and that millions of dollars which should have gone to the farming people and through them to the storekeepers of western Canada, are now to be found in the bank accounts of speculators on the Winnipeg grain exchange.

In closing I wish to analyze in a few sentences some of the expenditures of the budget. Of our total revenue 10·06 per cent comes from excise, 25·55 per cent from sales tax, and 18·03 per cent from customs duties, making a total of 53·64 per cent of the revenue of Canada that comes from the consuming public. I have here an article written by the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman), who reads detective stories, and fortunately leaves his thumbprint on all the campaign literature that he issues. He moans nigh unto tears about the forgotten consumer. I wonder about the forgotten consumer, when out of every dollar of taxes raised by the federal government 53·64 cents comes out of this poor forgotten consumer, whereas the income tax produces only 22·56 per cent of the national revenue. I think again of what has been said so often, that we are raising the money to run the Dominion of Canada from the people who can least afford to pay it. Somebody says: Well, the alternative would be to soak the rich. It is not soaking the rich. There is an old principle, and a good one, that "those who are strong ought to bear the burdens of the weak;" that those who have the money are the ones who ought to pay in order to keep the dominion solvent. Instead of that, the bulk of the money necessary to finance this country is taken from the people who buy goods at the store, no matter how small their incomes may be.

Let us now look at government expenditures. We find that funded debt charges take 31·3 per cent of the national income, and that interest on bonds of government-owned enterprises accounts for 9·84 per cent, making a total of 41·14 per cent. If we were to add the loans to the provinces, which in many cases are made for the purpose of paying interest charges, the total would be much higher. But leaving it at that, out of every dollar we receive by way of taxes, we pay 41·14 per cent in interest charges.

Mr. DUNNING: No, no.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I have given the figures: 31·3 per cent for funded debt charges, and 9·84 for interest on the bonds of government-owned enterprises. I should be glad to have the correct figures if I am wrong, but I am taking my figures from the budget speech.

Mr. DUNNING: You are creating a duplication, that is all.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I hardly see where it comes in. I will read the figures from the minister's table; perhaps that will be better. On page 1228 of Hansard I find, under the heading of expenditures, that the total public debt charges amount to 31·30 per cent of the total revenue. Then, continuing to read the table on page 1228, I find that government-owned enterprises account for 9·84 per cent of the total revenue. That includes losses charged to the consolidated fund in regard to the Canadian National Railways and the National Harbours Board, and non-active loans and advances to these two enterprises.

Mr. DUNNING: But that represents losses, not interest charges.

Mr. DOUGLAS: But we are paying the interest on the Canadian National bonds. Let me read further from this table, showing the percentage of the total paid out in various ways:

Subsidies and special grants to provinces	3·76
Grants in aid to provinces	6·40
All other assistance	3·79
Drought area relief	2·15
Dominion projects (special supplementary estimates)	5·45
Old age pensions	4·98
Pensions and after care of soldiers, pensions, war and military	9·53
Treatment, and after care of returned soldiers	2·66

Even taking only the funded debt charges I submit that 31 cents out of every dollar collected by way of taxes goes to pay interest, which is out of all proportion to all other amounts we are paying to take care of the people of this country. Therefore I submit that this budget, like last year's budget, still places the burden of taxation upon those least able to bear it and that we continue to pay too large a portion of our income in interest charges on bonds. We are continuing to practise what we have done for so many years: To him that hath shall be given, and from him that has very little we will take away even some of what he has.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Bennett), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is on the main motion.

Mr. W. R. TOMLINSON (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity of expressing to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) my congratulations upon the budget he presented to the house last week, which reflects the progress of Canada upon economic and national lines. When I look back at last year's budget I see that he has been even better than his word; he is fast leading us out of the land of Egypt and has set our feet on the path toward the promised land of returning prosperity. I congratulate him upon the remarkable feat he has accomplished in reducing the expected deficit of $100,000,000 by approximately $13,000,000, and with his hand at the helm I feel that we are in a fair way to balance our budget within the life of this parliament.

In order to discuss the budget as it affects the county of Bruce, I intend to divide it into four subjects: tourist trade, the fishing industry, farming, and manufacturing. I have the honour to represent a riding having 225 miles of shoreline along lake Huron and Georgian bay. The tourist trade in Bruce county has grown to a considerable extent. We are informed that the estimated value of the tourist trade last year was $250,000,000, an increase of 24 per cent over 1935. I should like to name some of the important towns and villages located along the lake shore. First there is the beautiful town of Wiarton; then there is Lion's Head, Tobermory, Stokes Bay, Sauble Beach, Southampton, Port Elgin, Inverhuron and Kincardine. In between are innumerable small summer resorts. On the Tobermory ferry, which connects with South Bay Mouth of Manitoulin Island, 4,860 persons travelled last year, an increase of 1,000 over 1935. In my own town of Port Elgin we had 2,000 more tourists this year than last, coming from all over the continent as far south as Mexico. I talked to several of these tourists, and their whole idea was to stress the friendly feeling between Canada and the United States since the Liberal government took office; they were pleased to come over here and spend their money, knowing that in return we were prepared to deal with them. The tourist trade means more than that to Bruce; its advantages extend to the farming community. There are farmers selling to these tourists during two months as much as $1,000 worth of goods. More and more farmers are taking advantage of this opportunity to obtain a little ready money. For these reasons I congratulate the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin) on his cooperation in endeavouring to repair and improve the harbours, wharves, piers and docks, in order to accommodate the ever-increasing number of tourists who may visit these parts of the country.

I turn now to the fishing industry. Naturally you cannot have tourists without opportunities for fishing, but the industry is of considerable commercial value. Due to the trade agreement with the United States and the lowering of the tariff on fresh water fish, we received for our Georgian bay and Huron lake trout an average of between 11 and 15 cents per pound during the whole season of 1936, in place of a price of 5 or 6 cents per pound which prevailed before the agreement came into effect. Although the official figures for 1936 are not yet available, I am told that fresh water fish to the value of over $2,000,000 more than in 1935 was shipped to the United States this past year. That is one example of the effects of the trade treaty in that part of the country.

The next industry I wish to discuss is farming. It is, of course, a most important industry in the riding of Bruce. Looking back on the cold dark cruel days of 1931 and 1932, I find we were taking 2 cents a pound for beef, 3 cents a pound for pork, giving our oats away, unable to sell our hay, and receiving 35 cents a bushel for our wheat. Due to the high tariff imposed by the Conservative government of those days the farmers were driven right down into the earth from which they were trying to make a living. Some of them decided to gather together a few shekels, form a deputation and come to Ottawa to interview the government for which they voted in 1930. What happened? They collected the shekels, paid their way down here and when they arrived in Ottawa they could not achieve anything; the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) announced: I am too busy. What was he busy at? I will venture to guess that, for one thing, he was busy firing and hiring. He forgot the farmer. Not only was there the forgotten consumer, but there was during those days the forgotten farmer as well. Never mind, said the then Prime Minister, I received your vote in 1930, and that is as far as I wish to go; there are certain pet industries which I wish to look after and protect. He drove a sword right into the heart of these men. Then he came along and said: Maybe I had better pacify them to some extent; I will make a treaty with Great Britain; I will smash my way into that market. And he smashed in. I venture to say that if he had received a deputation of farmers, practical men who live on the land and know what they are talking about, men who had certain questions they wished to discuss, and had talked over their problems with them, he would have learned that on the farms they raise other produce besides hogs.

After he made that particular agreement, after he drove the wedge home, all he could get from the British market was a concession in respect of that one product, hogs, and naturally the price of hogs increased. That was not sufficient to maintain our farmers. Gradually they went deeper and deeper into debt. So the former Conservative government decided to twist the sword around a little more. They said: An election is coming along; we had better hand something to these farmers—and they dished up the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. That was their idea of a gift to the pioneers of this country. They said: It makes no difference that you have gone so deeply into debt—now, you can repudiate your debts. I do not blame some of our farmers for taking advantage of the opportunity. It was not their fault; it was the policy of the former Conservative government which drove them to that extremity.

I have listened to some illuminating figures from hon. members who sit on the opposition side. I have also a few figures that I should like to place on Hansard. I intend to show what the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act cost the taxpayers of Canada. The dominion expended from the inception of the act to March, 1935, $269,142.09. But then we come to election year, when numbers of officers were appointed throughout the dominion. From April 1, 1935, to March 31, 1936, the administration of the act cost $712,015.06. Yet I hear hon. members talking about the National Employment Commission having cost $87,000! In my own county the act was, of course, a juicy proposition for a few of the old Conservative stalwarts. On September 1, 1934, when the act was proclaimed in Ontario they appointed Mr. Snyder of Wiarton, the president of the Conservative Association, as official receiver. He was to receive $1,800 a year and all expenses. But from September to the end of December, 1935, he received a salary of $2,130, and expenses of $627.07. Some other good Conservatives thought this was too luscious a morsel for Mr. Snyder to keep to himself. So a little pressure was brought to bear, and Mr. Rowland, of Walkerton, obtained an appointment. He was appointed on February 19, 1935, and held office until December 31, of that year. In that period he received a salary of $1,746.23, and expenses of $946.73. Why, Mr. Speaker, he was running around the country selling the scheme like life insurance: every time he coaxed a farmer to take advantage of the act he received a fee and his travelling expenses; at the same time he was doing a little electioneering. Both these gentlemen were active throughout the county, and when the government changed, on October 14, 1935, I asked the government to fire them, and they were fired without hesitation. Here is the cost since then. We appointed one man in the town of Kincardine on January 1, 1936. His salary to the end of December, 1936, was $1,245, and expenses $183.12, or less than one-fifth of what the former government paid for the same services. And don't forget, he does all the work the other two receivers did over the whole county. As I say, it is less than one-fifth of what the former government paid for the same work. Of course that was election year and explains the extra cost. That is the sort of thing the farmers had dished up to them during the Conservative regime.

I believe it was the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) who said that 54 per cent of the people of Canada live in the cities, the rest in the country. How has that come about? It is easily explained. How could you ask the young men and women of Canada to live on the farm where they could not receive enough money even to buy clothes? That is what happened in the five years of the Conservative regime. These young people could not get enough money to spend; there was no future for them. That is not fair play to the farmers—and all the farmers ask for is fair play. They want fair prices for their products; they want a fair return for their labour. And to-day they are receiving a fair return. I admit it could be better, but they are satisfied to-day as a result of the foreign markets which the present Liberal government has made available to them—foreign markets for their wheat and their hogs; because under the present agreement we are guaranteed a market in Britain. That means a great deal to us. It must not be forgotten that a farmer is entitled to the conveniences that are enjoyed by the average town resident to-day. No one will dispute that. Have the farmers enjoyed those conveniences? No, they have not. I am glad to say that the provincial government is now placing hydro at their disposal, and it is up to the dominion government to see that they receive fair prices for their products. As I say, they are receiving fair prices now, and conditions will improve as long as we pursue, under the Liberal government, the policy of foreign markets. Give us foreign markets to absorb our surplus, and then our boys and girls will come back to the farm. For there is no better thing than life on the farm, and with improving conditions our young people will not seek the bright lights of the city.

I am going to support this budget because, as I understand the policy of the government which I pledged myself to support, the object is, first, to place the basic industries of Canada in a thriving position, and once that is done, then automatically the other industries will prosper. As a matter of fact, that is what has happened. The manufacturing plants in my riding are increasing wages. They are not closed by any means, as we were led by the Conservatives to believe they would be. On the contrary, they are prosperous.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Tomlinson.]

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 44, for the relief of Clara Emily Taylor Elkin.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 45, for the relief of Yetta Ginsburg.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 46, for the relief of Margurite Emily Coombe Low.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 47, for the relief of Mary May Rowell Thom.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 48, for the relief Eva Josephine Millicent Good Ross.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 49, to incorporate Federal Fire Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City).

Bill No. 50, to incorporate Wellington Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City).

Bill No. 51, to incorporate Gore District Mutual Fire Insurance Company.—Mr. Edwards.

Bill No. 52, to incorporate Sterling Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Parent (Quebec West and South).

Bill No. 53, to incorporate Toronto General Insurance Company.—Mr. Plaxton.

Bill No. 54, to incorporate the Sons of Scotland Benevolent Association.—Mr. Reid.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview) moved the second reading of Bill No. 22, to amend the Criminal Code.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Explain.

Mr. CHURCH: The subject matter of this bill has been discussed in the house in three different sessions. On February 13, 1935, I brought to the attention of the house the slaughter on the highways of this country which is going on night and day to such an extent that almost every highway in this country is coloured with blood. The debate went on all afternoon and into the evening, and the Prime Minister of the day (Mr. Bennett), now the leader of the opposition, was so much impressed with the casualties that he offered me a committee. As I already was busy on one committee I was unable to go on with another during that session.

In the session of 1936 I introduced Bill No. 57, to amend the criminal code, dealing with various phases of motor car hazards. While it is true that this matter is under provincial control in part, still the criminal law of this country is under this parliament, and we should be able to take some action. The bill was discussed on May 12 last, and after a short debate the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) moved the adjournment of the debate, just as was done in another case the other evening. I have been trying to find out since then whether this is a free parliament or not, because if it is a member should be allowed to bring up any question coming within section 91 of the British North America Act, discuss it and press it to a division. That is one of the principles of Liberalism. The Minister of Justice moved the adjournment of the debate. There were five or six other speakers who wished to speak that evening, and he said he would consider bringing down an amendment to the code. Then about a week before the session closed the minister brought down a general bill to amend the criminal code, and my amendments were not in it and nothing was done.

In my opinion there should be a standing legal committee of this house every session on law reform. The criminal code deals with the liberty of the subject and the rights of property. Law reform is a most important problem. This parliament is far behind England and the United States in what has been done in that respect. As a result of my bill being brought in, the Minister of Justice in the dying days of last session brought down a bill, after a number of hon. members had gone home, and when it was too late for members to consult with judges, magistrates and crown officers in their districts. The result was that no clauses of Bill No. 57 which I had introduced were considered; the house had no opportunity of considering them. If the minister is going to bring down a bill to amend the criminal code or bring about any law reform, it should be done early in the session as is done in the old country, so that members of parliament may consult judges, magistrates and crown officers on the merits or demerits of the proposed legislation.

I wish to acknowledge the debt of gratitude we owe to the press particularly and to the motor league and to the careful motorists of this country for what they are doing to prevent accidents and prolong life and aid in public safety. Were any devastating disease to take the toll the motor car is taking by night and by day, science and medicine would know no rest until they had found a cure. The death toll by the motor car constitutes Canada's greatest scandal. The slaughter goes on all over the country, and the economic losses are appalling. The worst thing about it, I think, is the indifference of the public, and of a great many newspapers and the legislatures, though I may exempt from that criticism a great many Ontario papers, especially the Toronto papers.

The bill I have introduced is not perfect by any means, but section 1 is the same section the Minister of Justice himself proposed during the session of 1930. At that time an amendment was made and adopted, unwisely, I think, but I believe the first section of this bill should pass. The amendment moved to the minister's bill in 1930 and adopted in committee of the whole has been found to be inconsistent, unworkable and full of loopholes, with the result that it has been absolutely futile in checking the slaughter, as many of the ablest judges have pointed out. Any steps taken by way of collecting reports have simply led to a glorious fiasco, while the slaughter goes right on.

This is the score in the city of Toronto, from which I come: Last week-end there were thirteen people hurt. The totals to date for 1937 so far are: Dead, 11; hurt, 538; drivers gaoled, 29. The figures for 1936 were: Dead, 69; hurt, 3,475; drivers gaoled, 104. I have in my hand a picture of an accident which I saw on Saturday, May 4, 1935. Here you can see the husband running up; here you see the wife, who had just bought a newspaper and who, on attempting to cross the highway, was killed instantly. That sort of thing is going on in Toronto all the time. The hospitals are filled with these accident cases; the accommodation has had to be increased. You could fill the seats of this chamber fifteen times over with the people hurt last year in Toronto alone. At the opening of the Toronto winter assizes, January 11, 1937, Chief Justice Rose had this to say to the grand jury with regard to the present law:

"The toll of life by motors is appalling and the number of people injured is infinitely greater," declared Chief Justice Rose in his address to the grand jury this afternoon.

"Careless driving will stop just as soon as the people of Ontario make up their minds that it is to stop," he continued. "It cannot be done by more motor regulations, you would need to have as many constables as there are motorists, to enforce them, but it can be stopped by the penalties of the law and people must not be afraid or get the idea that they will incur odium if they give information that results in convictions.

"It is the part of juries to see that there are convictions. If lawbreakers get the idea there will not be convictions they will continue."

His lordship said there appeared to be something illogical in the fact that a motorist who kills gets a term in prison while another who is merely fortunate enough to injure his victim gets off easily. The reckless driver is a potential murderer, and does not deserve leniency and juries should make up their minds to that effect.

Five years ago in the old country they appointed a committee of both houses of parliament to go into this question, and they got something done. On February 13, 1935, there was a non-political debate on this question in this house on a resolution of mine, in which some twenty-seven members took part. I wrote the Minister of Justice early in the present session to see if he would not nominate a committee to go into the matter. I do not want to be bringing it up all the time; in fact, I may not bring it up again, because I can get no results. They got results in England, however; they created a ministry of transport. It is true that in Canada the provinces have some jurisdiction; the federal government here has not the same power as in England. Here I have a newspaper picture of the Minister of Transport of England down in the east end of London among the working people, many of whom are killed each year while crossing the road, and seeing at first hand the cause and effect of accidents.

I should like now to refer to three or four paragraphs of the bill; then I might go over the clauses, and I should be able to conclude in five or ten minutes. No one of an independent mind should have any doubt but that the condition of motor traffic on our highways is as discreditable to this country as was the enforcement of prohibition in the United States, and I submit that this problem of motor statistics must be approached with an open mind. I have already given the figures for the whole world, but people seem to lack interest. In five years in the United States 125,000 people were killed and 4,000,000 were injured on the highways—twice the number of men killed while serving overseas with the United States expeditionary force.

One of the commandments of God is that no one shall kill, but many men of real worth, through selfishness and carelessness, have violated the laws not only of God but of man. No invention has contributed more to the education, pleasure and enjoyment of the people than the motor car; but its use is one thing, its abuse another. As with every great invention, use and abuse are two distinct things. During the past century scientific discoveries in medicine, chemistry, and physics have resulted in untold good to humanity, but the abuse of some of these discoveries in chemistry, biochemistry and physics has in war proved a curse to mankind. And in like manner to-day the abuse of the motor car is a curse to humanity.

On looking into this question one finds involved in it tremendous annual losses in deaths, accidents, injuries and money. Untold sorrow and suffering is caused, intense pain and grief exceding anything the human imagination can conceive. The only evils which have equalled it are plague, pestilence and famine, battle, murder and sudden death. It would be misleading and mischievous to attribute all the blame for these ghastly horrors on our highways to all who drive and use motor cars. Ninety-five per cent of the drivers want to obey the law; it is the five per cent about whom I am complaining.

One has to study the records to know the facts, and as I study the records of thousands of cases I am driven to the conclusion that beyond dispute this small minority must take the major part of the blame. They appear to have exploited for their own pleasure or profit the generous tolerance of others by using their cars in an irresponsible, careless, cruel and unchristian way. The fault is grievous, and they can have no ground for complaint if they are put under restraint as far as the criminal code is concerned. Ignorance and thoughtlessness are no palliatives; obedience is the only reparation they can make, and it is long overdue.

I should like to quote something that was said by the late Chief Justice R. M. Meredith, who so ably presided on circuit for nearly 46 years and may I say that I am sorry to see such a great name criticized, especially in the province of Ontario, after what the Meredith family have done for the province as judicial officers. At the last assizes over which the late chief justice presided in Toronto he addressed the grand jury and remarked on the very amendments that were made in 1930. He said:

> And as now nearly everyone is a car owner and car driver, young and old, of all sorts and conditions, it is difficult to get justice in even a civil action.
> Car-driver-jurors have nearly all the speed fever; and self-preservation instincts are so strong that they will not be persuaded to decide against drivers who have been no more unlawful than they themselves often, if not commonly, are.
> What then is the remedy? I think it should be: Make the laws plain and reasonably severe and enforce them; and cancel licences freely.
> And at the other end of the matter: Give no licence to anyone who is not proved to be mentally and physically, and from experience and a knowledge of the highway laws, thoroughly capable.

In England this question has been taken up. In five years, from 1929 to 1933 inclusive, 34,000 have been killed and 973,782 injured over there. But in Canada no interest is taken in the slaughter. It is said that accidents are unavoidable, and we are told that an outcome of the modern car is the desire for speed. Everyone seems to have the speed fever, except the House of Commons and the Senate, unless in the dying days of a session. I do not know how many of us will be here next session, from the way I see people driving in the city of Toronto. Hon. members ought to go down to the Danforth or Greenwood constituencies and see the speed fiends from all over who drive through the streets on Saturday nights. I never saw anything like it in my life. It takes a long time to cross a street. One has to wait two or three minutes before it is safe to cross; as a matter of fact, the only safe way is to go down to a street corner and cross with the light. Sometimes even that is not safe, because motorists try to beat the light. A situation such as this calls for united efforts from the church, the press, parliament, the legislatures, boards of trade and chambers of commerce, and all public bodies. The privation and sorrow, the broken lives and shattered homes, resulting from such a holocaust are just as real as at the time of the nation's supreme trial in the war. It is hidden and suffered in silence, but how long will that continue to be so?

Three features dominate in the conduct of motor traffic: a domineering indifference to the convenience of others, excessive speed, and congestion. Ever since man learned to direct a machine more powerful than himself he has asserted his superiority of force over his neighbours. "Make way or take the consequences" has been his cry. Yet this indifference to others is limited to a small number of motor drivers. The motor leagues of the provinces make the same complaint. It is a small number out of the large body of drivers who transgress; 99 per cent of them respect and obey the law. The majority of motor drivers have only a hazy knowledge of the mechanism of their machine, and for absolute control the only condition in which a car is fit to be driven at thirty miles an hour is perfect adjustment and condition. Even so the machine is potentially as dangerous as a loaded gun and must be handled with equal care and vigilance. A moment's inattention may be fraught with dire results. Every motor vehicle is a dangerous implement, even when controlled by the most expert, and requires incessant vigilance in all circumstances, especially at speeds above thirty miles an hour.

The debate in 1935 took place on February 13.

Transportation should be a means to an end, not an end in itself. The Department of Justice seems to rely on turning the matter over to the provinces. There is no reason why slaughter on the highways should be permitted while the House of Commons and the Department of Justice are having a sit-down strike—because that is all we have been having in connection with this matter. In fact, the Department of Justice is always on a sit-down strike, on this question anyway.

I will amend what I said the other night about the Department of Mines and Resources, because I believe that department takes second place when it comes to a question of the sleeping sickness with which the Department of Justice seems to be afflicted on this particular question. I happen to know about it, because the Minister of Justice on a former occasion simply moved the adjournment of the debate, and nothing was done about it. That was done in the last hour or two of the session.

May I read an editorial from a Liberal paper, the Toronto Daily Star. I do not often quote that paper, but its sporting column is all right, and it is sound on many matters and in the matter now before us. They are copying the Evening Telegram, which has waged this battle for five or six years on the need of motor car regulation as a pioneer on the subject. Lawlessness has crept into Canada from the United States, with the result that the freedom of the press has been almost destroyed. The old weekly independent country papers, which were the backbone of the rural press, have been destroyed. May I pay tribute to the Toronto Star for what it said about my leader a few nights ago by the Observer. Hon. members have heard a great deal about the Premier of Ontario and his budget to-day. Now listen to this from the editorial in the Star on Monday, March 8:

> Growing alarm over the increasing number of motor fatalities due to the use of liquor is being shown on both sides of the international boundary.
> During the year 1936 the number of persons killed in automobile accidents in the United States reached 38,000, which is more than half the number of United States troops who lost their lives in the Great war. Every week last year 730 citizens of the republic on the average lost their lives in smash-ups on highways or streets. A graph showing liquor consumption monthly over a period of two and a half years and also the number of automobile fatalities shows the number of fatalities rising and falling in almost exact proportions with the quantity of liquor consumed.
> Many factors contribute to automobile fatalities, some of which are not susceptible of change. But the drunken driver is not in that category. It is a terrifying experience to be on a highway when a car driven by an intoxicated person comes tearing towards you, swerving from side to side of the road. Premier Hepburn, Hon. Mr. Faulkner, Hon. Mr. McQuesten, Sir James Dunn and Mr. Walters, the comptroller of finance, when driving together on Sunday night were thrown about by another car side swiping them after hitting a third car, and it is alleged that the offending driver, as so often happens in such cases, wanted to pick a fight with those whose lives he had imperilled.
> Something more must be done to reduce the loss of life and limb in motor accidents. The police, the magistrates and the crown attorneys have a serious responsibility in that connection. They should not permit charges involving the use of liquor to be reduced because of the influence of the person accused, but should act in every instance in the interest of justice and public safety.

I shall not go further, although I have more editorials from the Toronto papers, the Globe, the Mail and many others throughout Canada.

[Mr. Church.]

May I pay tribute to those newspapers in Ontario of various parties for the stand they have taken in this matter, and in attempting to call to the attention of the people the terrible slaughter that is taking place. The hospitals are full of these cases. One cannot stand in a Toronto hospital for more than an hour without seeing some one brought in, the victim of reckless driving.

I would ask hon. members to turn to Bill No. 22, section 1. It is proposed to strike out the word "intoxicated" and insert instead the words "under the influence of alcohol or of any narcotic"—the words used in the bill brought down in 1930 by the Minister of Justice. Then the words "or has the care or control of a motor vehicle or automobile, whether it is in motion or not," are deleted, the new section reading:

> Everyone who, while under the influence of alcohol or of any narcotic, drives any motor vehicle or automobile is guilty of an offence, and liable—

And so on. There are some changes in the penalties. I do not say the bill is perfect—far from it. I introduced it only with a view to bringing the matter before the House of Commons. Under section 2 of the bill some changes are made in connection with racing and cutting in. Paragraph 7 of section 2 is a new paragraph, following the law in New York state, where they have what is known as unjustifiable homicide. That means that although a person may not have been altogether liable for the accident, yet it takes two to make an accident, and he is guilty of unjustifiable homicide. The Toronto Star stated in an editorial that in time to come any man who kills another on the highway, whether he be wholly or partially liable, will be penalized. A driver having caused a death ought not to drive for two years. What right has a person to drive who has killed another with his car? He should not be permitted to drive for two years. The person killed had just as much right to live as the driver, and there should be some penalty attached to causing death.

Section four deals with the charge of manslaughter arising out of the operation of motor vehicles. There is little change made in this section. Section five deals with trial by jury. On trial by a jury of persons who cause death or serious injury, it is desirable that the functions of the jury should not be curtailed or abolished. There has been much criticism of cases of gross negligence having been taken from the jury. The jury are required to take the law to be what the judge says it is, and owing to the many cases withdrawn by order of the judge, trial by jury in those cases is negatived, and there are so many loopholes that many persons guilty of gross negligence get off. The increased accidents require that the law should be brought up to date to meet changing conditions, while preserving also the liberty of the subject.

Section six deals with another matter. In conclusion, I suggest that section one should be adopted and that during the recess a committee composed of members from all parties in this house should consider this problem. I am not criticizing motor drivers, far from it, but I believe that in the interests of public safety something should be done. We should not meet here year after year and do nothing about this important matter.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I have followed with a great deal of interest the discussions which have taken place on this proposed measure, not only when I was in a more responsible position, but during more recent months. Nothing strikes the average man more in these days than the loss of life upon our highways due to the operation of motor vehicles. Frankly, I have been astounded at the number of deaths reported lately in the press from this cause. I do believe the provisions contained in section one of this bill would go a considerable distance to end this condition. There is no doubt, as the daily press states, that in many of these cases the drivers are under the influence of liquor, and there are disastrous results which in their saner senses would not be contemplated. In my opinion, if we add to the criminal law of this country effective provisions against the conditions that prevail, we will do much to remedy that of which we complain.

There are those who think that making an offence criminal does not add to the weight of public opinion against it. I disagree, when it comes to dealing with matters of this kind. This is a day of high speed, a day in which we hurry rapidly to get from one place to another. I can only say that my own experience has been that frequently I have travelled at rates which upon looking back seem to have been improper. Most accidents happen through thoughtlessness, and the creation of public opinion by making the offence criminal I believe will do much to prevent them. I realize there are some substantially contentious provisions in this bill, but I believe section one will go a long way to end a lot of this difficulty. Section one declares:

> Every one who, while under the influence of alcohol or of any narcotic, drives any motor vehicle or automobile is guilty of an offence.

The mere driving of a motor car while under the influence of alcohol or a narcotic constitutes an offence. I think that is a sound provision, considering present day conditions of our civilization. The section then provides for two classes of responsibility. The first is trial under indictment with appropriate punishment, and the other, under summary conviction. The section then provides that the provisions of section 1035 of the code, in so far as it authorizes the imposition of a fine in lieu of any punishment otherwise authorized, and of section 1081, shall not apply in the case of a conviction for an offence under this subsection. In other words, the punishment is imprisonment without the option of a fine.

Reading an English journal a few days ago I was struck with the fact that a speeding nobleman had been brought into the courts for the third time. His permit was cancelled, I think for a term of years, although it may have been only months. This gentleman was not under the influence of liquor, but he was a speed artist; he had been at it for some time and the authorities made up their minds to stop him. In this country I have noticed quite frequently that just at twilight cars travel at a rate of speed quite unsafe for the walking public. Largely through the efforts of Lord Buckmaster in the English House of Lords, the rights of the pedestrian have been established beyond peradventure. He has the paramount right upon the streets, and the man in the automobile must make the operation of his car subordinate to the rights of the pedestrian.

I am bound to say that this is not the case in continental Europe. I must confess frankly that on one occasion when in a continental city I found it almost like running an obstacle race to avoid being run over. We cannot afford to countenance that sort of thing in this country, and I suggest to the minister that when he brings down his amendments to the criminal code he should consider including section one of this bill among them. I recognize that there may be differences of opinion as to the other features of this measure. But I do not think it is unfair in a country such as this to introduce into our law, where it may be difficult to prove negligence in the sense in which that word is technically used but which really constitutes negligence in the sense that the person operating the machine is made liable, a provision that the causing of the death of another through the operation of a motor car shall constitute an offence. I understand this section is taken from a New York statute, and I believe it should operate very well in this country.

The first part of section two deals with racing and cutting in. The next subsection deals with the causing of death in a culpably negligent manner. The next subsection provides that a person having caused death shall not be permitted to drive for two years, or whatever period the house may think is reasonable.

Mr. DUNNING: That is a provincial law.

Mr. BENNETT: If you make it a punishment for a crime they may or may not pay attention to it. We can make it a punishment for a crime, and the fact that you deprive a man of something he may enjoy under provincial law may be a valid exercise of the power of the dominion with respect to punishment for criminal offences.

Mr. DUNNING: I meant that the present provincial laws provide for a man losing his licence under such conditions.

Mr. BENNETT: I am afraid that some of them do not. They make provision for the suspension of the licence, but if a man is found not guilty, the punishment does not ensue. This section proposes that if anyone is killed in consequence of an accident there shall be no licence issued to drive for a period of time. I am not going to discuss the other questions raised as to the jury being the determinant factor and the provision that there shall be a certain number of women on the jury. Those matters are not relevant to this particular point.

But sections 1 and 2 deal with the enactment of safeguards in our criminal law whereby those who are becoming careless, and increasingly so, may realize that the long, strong arm of the state is to be extended to prevent them from continuing that course of conduct. I suggest to the minister that, rather than entirely disregard the provisions of the measure, he might give it his consideration when he is bringing down his statutory amendments. I know there exists in Montreal a voluntary organization the purpose of which is to render more safe travel by pedestrians on the streets and the use of automobiles. That voluntary effort is highly to be commended, and I think this measure is worthy of consideration in that it looks towards the punishment of offenders. I hope the minister will find it possible to give it the consideration which in my opinion it deserves.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): After what has been said by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) I do not think it is necessary for me to add anything. I should like simply to express my accord with the purposes of this bill. I think we all realize that the streets and roads in their present arrangement were devised primarily for pedestrians and for horse-drawn vehicles. Automobiles have come along more recently and have pretty well pushed horse-drawn vehicles out of use; further, they have rendered crossing the streets extremely difficult for most people. Even in the cities where there are stop-and-go signals travel is not safe, because, though one may be watching the signals, a reckless driver will take his chance, and none of us on foot has any chance against a powerful car. It seems to me that in view of the tremendous toll which has been taken by traffic accidents, something drastic ought to be done. I hope the minister will insert in the criminal code a provision that will act as a deterrent and thereby lessen the large number of accidents, especially to children, which are taking place all the time in the streets of our cities.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I should like to support the first section of this bill. I would far rather have a man sent to gaol for thirty days for driving a car while drunk than I would wait till he had killed somebody and then see him go to the penitentiary for three years for manslaughter, and if he gets the idea that he can drive a car while he is drunk he is almost certain to end by killing somebody. It would therefore, I think, be a benefit to such a man that he should be subject to this penalty. I notice that the provision is "while under the influence of alcohol." It is going to be very difficult to determine when a man is "under the influence." The old phrase was "while intoxicated."

Mr. BENNETT: That is changed.

Mr. NEILL: I notice that there is no provision under section 1 for the cancellation of a man's driving licence. It is provided in section 2 that if he is culpably negligent and kills a man he can be subject to imprisonment for a period not exceeding three months, which perhaps means a day, and to have his licence cancelled for a longer or shorter period. That is all right, but apparently there is a discrepancy between the two sections. A man who kills another wantonly while not under the influence of drink is only liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, and perhaps not more than a day, but a man who drives while under the influence of alcohol and is caught doing it, but hurts nobody, must get a penalty of not less than two months. I suggest that that term should be cut down to thirty days and that his licence should be cancelled for a period. Cancellation of the licence would be for wealthy people a more serious penalty than a fine. I notice that under section 1 it is proposed to do away with the opportunity of paying a fine, but I think that when no accident happens to punish a man whose one and perhaps first offence is that of being, not drunk, but under the influence of drink, with a penalty not exceeding six months and not less than two months is rather steep. I think the effect which is sought could be secured if he were imprisoned for thirty days or even less because no decent man likes to go to gaol even for ten days, and in addition take away his licence for six months.

The last two sections of the bill I do not think are necessary; to me they seem undesirable. As regards section 1, which appears to reflect the observations of both the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and the sponsor of the bill (Mr. Church), I should like to see enacted some provision of this kind.

Mr. W. R. MACDONALD (Brantford City): No doubt something should be done to curb the recklessness of the drunken driver. Just how to accomplish it is a matter of some doubt. The automobile has been in existence for but little more than thirty years, and the law relating to its use must be developed gradually. It has been said that the streets are made for pedestrians and horse-drawn vehicles. It may be true that that is what they were made for, but surely we are not spending all these millions of dollars on highways to-day just for horse-drawn vehicles and pedestrians. Conditions have changed, and though our streets were made for pedestrians and horse-drawn vehicles, the automobilist has some rights on those streets, just as much, in fact as either of the two other classes of travellers. True, he may not drive recklessly, but neither may the pedestrian be reckless; he must cross the street when it is safe; he cannot deliberately stop in front of an oncoming vehicle; also the horse-drawn vehicle must be driven with care.

We do not need to pass laws putting a speed limit on horse-drawn vehicles, but it seems to me that the present law regulating the speed of motor vehicles is capable of improvement. I recognize, of course, that this is a provincial matter. In Ontario the speed limit is thirty-five miles an hour, and to-day if you travel along the highways of that province at thirty-five miles an hour you are hindering traffic, you are lingering along the highway. Scarcely a motor travels along the highways in the daytime at less than fifty miles an hour. The automobile companies publish advertisements in which they announce that their particular cars will travel at seventy, eighty or ninety miles an hour. They are allowed to build and to sell cars to travel at ninety miles an hour, and we are allowed to buy them, but the law says: You must not go faster than thirty-five miles an hour. Yet no one is prosecuted who travels well above that slow speed. It occurs to me that the public would have more respect for the law if the speed limit were increased to, say, forty-five or fifty miles an hour in the daytime, and for night travelling thirty-five or forty miles; and compel drivers to obey the law. If that were done there would not be so many accidents. We all agree that there are too many drunken drivers, but just how that mischief can be curbed is to my mind uncertain. I am not so sure that they will be deterred by increased gaol sentences, but I agree with the suggestion made by several hon. members that there should be a provision in the act for suspending the licence of anyone found guilty of driving while drunk. The present term of imprisonment is long enough, but there should be added to that in every case the suspension of the licence for a period. Then anyone who had driven a car while under the influence of liquor would realize that such a thing simply could not be done; and others would know, from the fact that he could not drive his car, that he had broken the law, and that he had not only paid the penalty of imprisonment but had had his licence suspended. The licence might be suspended for a term of three months or six months or even a year, as might be determined. I suggest that the provinces would do well to consider an increased speed limit by day, and that it would help to make the highways safe if the licence of anyone convicted of driving while intoxicated were suspended.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): I had not intended to speak on this question but the argument so far has been unfair. The man who drives a car after becoming somewhat tightened up by good liquor is blamed, but in my opinion the person that sells the liquor or the government that sells it is just as blameable. The government that sells the liquor is just as much to blame as the man who drinks good government liquor that makes him unfit.

Mr. J. J. KINLEY (Queens-Lunenburg): The suggestion has been made that a part of the penalty for driving while intoxicated should be the suspension of the licence. I would point out that the licence is issued by the provincial government and an order for the suspension of any licence might be an invasion of provincial rights. We all agree, however, that the automobile is perhaps the most hazardous means of travelling to-day and demands our attention. In my experience I have found the truck a considerable hazard. There are great big trucks with trailers, and an automobile coming on the road and wishing to pass one of these trucks is in great danger of meeting someone who cannot be seen coming the other way. Some provision should be made to limit the width and length of trucks. Trucks are used in trade, which is to some extent interprovincial, so that we have jurisdiction to legislate with regard to them. With transportation what it is to-day trucks are numerous on every highway, the loads are so large, and the trucks themselves so high and wide that everyone regards them as a source of danger. I think the width of the truck should have some relation to the width of the road, because there are many narrow roads that are almost wholly taken up by a truck, and the long truck is a real menace on the curves.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I am afraid I shall not have time to-night to answer what has been said and to give all the explanations I should like, but I may assure my right hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) that I will give the matter all the consideration it is entitled to and that every provision of the bill before us will be studied prior to the bringing down of a bill which the government intends to introduce to amend certain sections of the criminal code.

May I say in answer to some hon. gentlemen who have taken part in this debate, more particularly my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), that there are at present very strict provisions in the criminal code governing the very matter which he has been discussing. The hon. gentleman discussed the subject as if there were nothing in the criminal code to protect pedestrians and those who make use of the highways, and urged that something should be inserted in the criminal code for this purpose. I assure him that there is something in the criminal code, so much so indeed that, unfortunately, the courts have declared some of its provisions to be too severe. They have pointed out that it is impossible to get convictions because the sentence is too drastic, and applications are being made to reduce the penalties imposed by the law as it stands.

With regard to the remarks of my hon. friend from Broadview (Mr. Church), I would make this observation as a matter of principle. Personally I believe that the best governed country is not the country that has the largest number of laws. I remember reading this sentence in the Latin poet Juvenal: "The commonwealth abounded in laws, and corruption abounded in the commonwealth." What is important is, not that there should be such a large number of laws but that there should be good laws which are respected, observed and upheld by the people for whose benefit they have been enacted.

My hon. friend from Broadview (Mr. Church) introduces some rather strange bills for the purpose of amending the criminal code. Sometimes his bills sin on the side of leniency. For instance, last year he introduced a bill under which, if it had passed the house, the person convicted would not have had to go to gaol at all; he might have served his sentence under the care of a constable in the court house. The hon. member thought that the sentence imposed by the criminal code was too severe. Some of his other proposals err on the other side.

As regards section 1 of this bill, this is far from being a new proposal. As the law stands, a driver who is intoxicated is subject to a strict penalty. My hon. friend proposes to change that and make it apply to anyone who is under the influence of liquor. This has been proposed many times, especially when the country was under prohibition. At that time, however, there was more reason for the proposal. The mere fact of drinking liquor was illegal; the purchase and drinking of liquor was illegal, but now it is a legal trade throughout Canada, and if you made it a crime for any man who drinks a glass of wine or liquor at meals to drive his car afterwards—because he would be to some extent under the influence of a stimulant—you would, I suggest, be going very far indeed. Most people cannot afford to have a chauffeur to drive them carefully when they have their liquor inside or under the back seat. For ordinary people I think this would be a very harsh proposal to insert in the criminal code.

I am afraid it is nine o'clock.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): In rising to take part in the debate on the budget I desire in the first place to join with other members of the house in expressing my appreciation of the very fine manner in which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) presented the budget to the house. His speech was not only delivered in the best of form but the subject matter was so well arranged that those of us who are not accustomed to budgets could readily discern the real intent and meaning of this budget.

I would remind the house that only two hon. members have spoken on the main motion since the Minister of Finance moved it some days ago—the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and the speaker who preceded me in this debate (Mr. Tomlinson). I think probably the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Glen) was correct when he stated that the leader of the opposition probably had something in mind when he moved his amendment in the first speech delivered following the presentation of the budget by the Minister of Finance. I am inclined to think that probably what he had in mind was that a budget so well delivered, and which would be so clearly understood by the people of Canada as well as by hon. members of this house, required the staging of a debate which might for the time being at least lead the mind of the people of Canada away from the importance of the budget address itself. But I am inclined to think that from the point of view of the party that he happens to lead the leader of the opposition chose the most unhappy topic for discussion.

A number of hon. members have called attention to the fact, which I wish to emphasize by mentioning it again, that when the late government came into power there were 117,000 unemployed in Canada, and when they went out of office, according to figures quoted from the other side of the house on a number of occasions, there were half a million unemployed people in Canada. In other words, the policies which were announced in 1930 as a cure-all for unemployment, after having been tried out for five years, proved conclusively to be no cure. That has been emphasized throughout the debate of the past week. Unemployment was not cured by those policies. The condition of unemployment has been improved by the policies which have been put into effect since the present government came into office. It has not been improved as greatly as hon. members and people outside the house would like to see; nevertheless it is improved, and as far as employment is concerned we are on the upgrade.

I wish to confine my remarks to-night mostly to a question which has been discussed in connection with the proposed amendment, and was discussed also by the leader of the opposition in the speech he delivered before moving his amendment—the question of wheat. Certain hon. members, especially those on the other side of the house in all three groups that are in opposition to the government, more particularly those who come from western Canada, have addressed the greater part of their remarks to the question of wheat. As I represent a constituency in a province which produces more wheat than any other province of Canada, in fact produces more than half of all the wheat produced in Canada even when it is suffering from drought, I think I should reply to some of the remarks bearing on that question. However, before dealing with the questions raised by other speakers may I make a few general remarks concerning wheat.

The question of how wheat is to be marketed is of great importance to all the people of Canada, but it is of particular importance to the people who produce it. It is also of great importance to the people who have put their money into the greatest wheat storage system to be found in any country in the world. We have storage capacity in Canada for 419 million bushels of wheat. In the year that we have just passed through we produced only 229 million bushels of wheat. The people who have equipped this country with storage capacity for 419 million bushels are very anxious that wheat should go into that storage, and as in some years there is only half enough wheat grown, or a little more than half, to fill the total capacity of those elevators, it stands to reason that certain people who have an interest in those elevators will put forth an effort to obtain wheat to store in order that they may collect storage charges on it. And all the people of Canada, who are interested in bringing about better conditions for our transportation systems, are interested in the production of wheat in this country. I might go on to deal with the governments of the different provinces and the government of Canada, and relate to this house the great expenditures which have been made necessary in order to maintain people during recent winters because of the fact that wheat did not grow in the same abundance as in some preceding years.

These general statements are of importance in discussing this matter. But I think all hon. members will agree that a matter of the utmost importance is the price obtained for wheat, and the men most concerned in that are those who produce the wheat. After all, the person who buys the wheat is concerned only with the difference between the price at which he buys and the price at which he is able to sell. It does not make so much difference to him whether the price is low or high, but it does make a great difference to the person who produces the wheat. I make that statement in order to emphasize this: It will be found by those who do not know the farmers of western Canada, and will be admitted by those who do know them—I am speaking of the rank and file of farmers who produce the wheat—that they are much more concerned about the price they obtain than about the agency that obtains that price for them. What the farmers of western Canada want is the very best possible price obtainable for the wheat that they grow. If they can get a better price by one system rather than another they are very likely to be in favour of that system.

In order to place the variations in price on record, I ask the house to bear with me while I go back over a certain period of time. I should like to go back to the year 1908-09, not to deal with every year since in detail but in order to indicate in five well-defined periods the prices that have ruled for wheat produced in Canada.

Taking the years from 1908-09 to 1913-14, before the war, I find that the range of wheat prices was from 84·4 cents in 1912-13, which was the lowest price obtained in that series of years, up to 116·1 cents in 1908-09. That is, the lowest price obtained in that period was 84 cents—using round figures—and the highest price $1.16 at Fort William.

The next period is from the first year of the war, 1914-15, to 1922-23. That takes in the war years and those immediately following the war, until the wheat pool came into existence. During a considerable part of that period we had a wheat board; during the entire period wheat prices were influenced by the fact that we were in the midst of a war or had just been in a war. The lowest price obtained during that period was $1.10½; the highest price was $2.24 at Fort William, and prices varied within that range. May I add that we had a wheat board during that time for the purpose of keeping down the price of wheat, not for the purpose of keeping it up. That wheat board was brought into being in order to control the price downward, so that the allied countries would not have such great difficulty in financing the feeding of their armies and their people.

Then in 1923-24 we had the organization of the wheat pool, and the lowest price obtained during the time the pool carried on in western Canada as a contract pooling organization was in the first year they operated. That price was $1.07 a bushel. The highest price was obtained during the second year they operated, 1924-25; that price was $1.68½, and prices varied between those two levels during that period.

Now I come to the period when we had stabilization, under Mr. McFarland, beginning with the year 1930-31, and continuing down to the year 1934-35. During that period the lowest price of wheat was 54·3 cents per bushel at Fort William, and the highest price was 81·9 cents per bushel. What I wish to point out to this house is that the lowest prices ever obtained for wheat in the history of the Dominion of Canada were those obtained during the stabilization period under Mr. McFarland. I am not going to say there were no influences other than the fact that Mr. McFarland was stabilizing prices that brought about the low prices obtained in that period, but nevertheless that was the fact.

Two crop years have passed since then, and during those two years we have had a wheat board. Part of the time that wheat board was under the chairmanship of Mr. McFarland; part of the time it has been under the chairmanship of Mr. Murray. During the first year the average price received for wheat was 84·3 cents per bushel, three cents more than the price received in any year during the stabilization operations. During the period from August 1, 1936, to February 27, 1937, the average price obtained for wheat was $1.13·7. In other words, as between this year and last year wheat has advanced from an average of 84·3 cents to an average of $1.13·7 cents. And may I call your attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that this is the highest price that has prevailed during any year, or a considerable portion of any year, with the exception of the war years and those years that were influenced by the fact that there had been a war, including a period partly covered by the wheat pool, with the exception of the one year, 1908-09, when the average price was $1.16·1 per bushel. If the price that has prevailed during the past few weeks continues until the end of the year, Mr. Speaker, this year we will have the highest average price for wheat that we have had in any year, with the exception of those years that were influenced by the war.

If the thing that is most important to the producer is—and I believe every hon. member of this house will agree that it is—the price that he obtains for his wheat, then I think the record of the present government in the matter of price is something of which it need not be ashamed. I am leaving out of consideration the methods that have been employed, and disregarding for the moment everything that has been said by way of criticism. We have reached the point where we can show the members of this house, the country, and more particularly western Canada that we are obtaining the highest price for wheat that has been obtained in Canada since the beginning of the stabilization activities of Mr. McFarland, and the highest price that has been obtained for wheat in other than a war period, since we started to produce wheat in anything approaching its present volume in western Canada.

We have had some criticisms levelled at the government, more particularly by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley), with regard to speculation. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the records show very clearly that with regard to the operations of last year, or with regard to the crop now being marketed, there has been probably less speculation than in connection with the marketing of the crop during any of the periods to which I have been referring. Let us go back to 1920, the first year during which we had an acreage under wheat somewhat similar to the acreage we now have, and let us take the three years before the wheat pools came into existence. The average amount of wheat exported from Canada each year during the months from August 1 to the end of November, which is usually the close of navigation, during that period of time was 75,500,000 bushels. Then coming to the period when the pools operated, when we had the highest wheat production we have ever had in Canada, the average amount exported during those same four months of each year was in that period 101,000,000 bushels.

Now taking the period when we had stabilization, from 1931 to 1934-35, the average amount exported in the same four months of each year was 83,400,000 bushels. Coming to the year 1934-35, however, the year during the greater part of which the present board operated in selling wheat, in spite of the fact that the old board did not export wheat itself but only sold 12,500,000 bushels of wheat during that time, there was exported from Canada, apparently by the trade—taking into account the 12,500,000 bushels sold by the board—94,465,000 bushels. Then coming down to the present year, under the Murray board, during the first four months of this season 102,103,000 bushels of wheat were exported from Canada, and this in a year when we had the smallest yield since 1919. Well, Mr. Speaker, 102,103,000 bushels is greater than the average amount exported in any one of the periods to which I have referred, and during that period of time what we have been pleased to call the private interests in the dominion have been handling the wheat of western Canada. But may I point out what I called the attention of the house to the other night, that the organization which bought, and I presume exported about half of that wheat, is the wheat pool organization. During the period wheat has been sold in the ordinary way; 102,000,000 bushels have been sold into export, and actually gone into export, out of the Dominion of Canada, during the first four months. Well, that is an indication to the people of this country when we are considering the question of speculation that there has been less of it proportionately than in preceding years. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that when the pool has handled 47 per cent of the wheat of western Canada in that period of time, members of the house coming from western Canada who seek to prove that there has been great speculation in the marketing of wheat during this particular year are really attacking—if they are attacking anybody—the organization that handles the greater proportion of it. That organization was no doubt the wheat pool.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) has gone back to the old statement that some one said before the committee of the house in 1935—I think he said it was Mr. McIvor—that fifteen cents a bushel profit had been made by the farmers of western Canada through the stabilization activities of Mr. McFarland. That is not exactly what Mr. McIvor did say. What Mr. McIvor did say was that the price was fifteen cents higher than would have been obtained if another method he had in mind had been followed. When pressed for an answer as to what that meant, he stated that if wheat had been dumped upon the world market, instead of held off, the price might have been fifteen cents lower. He emphasized, even that was only an estimate. His final statement on the point is to be found at page 412 of the report, as follows:

A. It was a hypothetical question and it was a hypothetical answer.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Would you just read the part of the evidence that Mr. —

Mr. GARDINER: I have only forty minutes.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Read it all—what he said it meant as to the marketing of wheat.

Mr. GARDINER: The final statement he made in the evidence is to be found at page 412, and is this: "It was a hypothetical question and it was a hypothetical answer."

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Marketed all the wheat they produced in four years.

Mr. GARDINER: And even in making a hypothetical answer to a hypothetical question there was only one possible condition upon which it could have been based, and that was upon the spread as between the price of Canadian wheat and wheat coming from the Argentine or Australia.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): What does the minister think about it—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GARDINER: That spread has been higher during the present year than it was during the years to which he referred.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GARDINER: Then the hon. member for Qu'Appelle went on to say that some representative of Joseph Ranke and Company, or a subsidiary of Joseph Ranke and Company, had stated that wheat might have been ten cents a bushel higher last year. From that he deduced the argument that the farmers of western Canada had lost ten cents a bushel on wheat.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are a few things we ought to know, and the first thing we ought to know is that Joseph Ranke and Company is one of the three great millers of wheat in the British Isles. Joseph Ranke belongs to the organization of millers which controls 80 per cent of all the milling in the old country. Of course, Joseph Ranke and Company, and others who are engaged in the milling business, have been interested in keeping the price down rather than in putting it up. There is a reason for that—the same reason the producers have in wanting to put the price up. I have not any doubt that an agent of Ranke and Company talking to someone who, after all, was interested politically or otherwise, might have made some particular statement with regard to this matter. But I presume that even the member for Qu'Appelle would admit that the gentleman of whom he was talking might have been two cents out on his price. That is, there might have been an advantage of eight cents instead of ten cents.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): How much is that?

Mr. GARDINER: If there was a difference of eight cents instead of ten cents, do you know what would happen? The farmers of western Canada would not be in a single cent, because every farmer in western Canada who delivered wheat to the wheat board last year obtained, because of the set price of 87½ cents a bushel which was paid by all people in the Dominion of Canada, 7 13-15 cents a bushel more for his wheat than it actually brought on the market. So, in so far as the farmer himself is concerned, even on the statement of the representative of Mr. Ranke, he could not have lost more than two cents a bushel in price during that period of time. Those are some of the things I wanted to say in answer to what the hon. member said.

Then he said 63,000,000 bushels of wheat was sold by the board in July of 1936. He made that statement, Mr. Speaker, while he was dealing with the amount of money which the farmers lost on the 1935 crop. One would infer from the statement he made under those circumstances, that 63,000,000 bushels of the 1935 crop was sold in July, 1936. As a matter of fact, only 9,800,000 bushels of the 1935 crop was sold during that month. The other 53,000,000 and some odd bushels was old wheat that had been carried over from the McFarland stocks of a previous time. Only 9,800,000 bushels was sold from the crop of that particular year.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): I never said that at all.

Mr. GARDINER: I have only forty minutes, or the hon. member could interrupt me as often as he wishes.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): On a point of order—

An hon. MEMBER: Can't take it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): On a point of order: I did not make any statement to the effect that it was the 1935 crop that was sold. I said it was in the neighbourhood of 63,000,000 bushels in all, both McFarland wheat and the 1935 crop.

An hon. MEMBER: No point of order about that.

Mr. GARDINER: I made it very plain that he had not said that. But I said he did say it in the midst of his discussion of what the farmer had lost on the 1935 crop. That is when it was made, as Hansard will show. Now, let us look at the situation in connection with that.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Stick to the facts.

Mr. GARDINER. The hon. member went on to argue that that 63,000,000 bushels should not have been sold at a time when everyone knew we were going to have a light crop in western Canada. On June 24, 1936, no less an authority on wheat than Mr. J. I. McFarland announced to Canada that the wheat crop of Canada would be over 400,000,000 bushels. That was on June 24—not at the beginning of the month. In the week following, no less an authority than Mr. Gordon Brown, who reports to all the people about whom the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has spoken, said that we would have 380,000,000 bushels of wheat. I was in London at the end of July and the beginning of August, and during that period of time I interviewed all the leading grain dealers in the British Isles, and discussed the question with them.

What I want to tell the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is this: If at the end of June he knew what the price of wheat was going to be, or if he knew what it was going to be at the beginning of July, or even in the middle of July, there were very few people who considered themselves authorities on the question who really thought they knew. As a matter of fact, in September, 1936, not even the wheat pool in western Canada considered the price was going to be very high. I have in my hand a resolution passed with regard to the formation of a pool in western Canada. In giving their reasons for not forming the pool they said:

> Further in order to operate a voluntary pool in the best interests of its members, it should have been possible to take advantage of the higher prices in the early part of the season, and a substantial amount of grain should have been sold for future delivery at these prices in order to ensure the average price throughout the season.

That was on September 5.

Mr. DUNNING: An absolute endorsement.

Mr. GARDINER: That is an organization which at that time had over fifty per cent of the wheat delivered in western Canada. Apparently they did not consult the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. They did not know at that time that wheat was going to go up.

Mr PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): They did not consult the minister.

Mr. GARDINER: The record of every wheat board we have had in Canada, the record of every marketing organization we have ever had, and the record of every grain dealer has proven that when any man gets the idea that he knows what the price of wheat is going to be six months hence, he winds up by losing millions of dollars for his principals. That is true of all cooperative organization officials; this is true of the gentleman who made a great reputation as the head of the first wheat board in Canada; it is true of the gentleman who was in control of the stabilization operations, and it will be true of every man who thinks he can guess what the price of wheat is going to be six months hence. Why? Because wheat is not produced just on the northern hemisphere; it is also produced on the southern hemisphere. Any man who drives through the wheat fields of western Canada and thinks he knows what the price of wheat will be the following February takes for granted something which any grain dealer who knows anything about dealing in wheat would not take for granted.

The result is that these men do not speculate. When the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) stands in his place and says that he met someone on a street corner somewhere who told him that he had made half a million dollars speculating in wheat, he was not talking about the same brand of business man as he is himself. I remember the right hon. gentleman saying in this house, I think it was last June, that he had never speculated in grain, but I know that he had a very large interest in an elevator concern.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh.

Mr. DUNNING: He said that himself.

Mr. GARDINER: The right hon. gentleman was a good enough business man to sell that elevator business at a profit. I do not blame any business man for doing that. Any profit out of the business I presume he made through conducting a legitimate elevator business, first by buying an interest in it, then by seeing that the business was properly conducted, and then by selling to advantage his interest in that particular concern. That is the way in which any legitimate grain dealer is going to make a profit; he is not going to make it by stating he has a paper profit of half a million dollars. Mr. John I. McFarland announced in 1933, when wheat was at 95 cents a bushel, that if he sold all the wheat he had at that price he would be able to pay off the $25,000,000 that stood against the three western provinces because they had guaranteed advances to that amount. A week or two later he had to admit that wheat had dropped so far that he could not pay any of it off, and as a matter of fact none of it has been paid off through the sale of the stocks then held up to the present time. A legitimate grain dealer avoids speculation because if he attempts speculation he usually runs into trouble.

There is another matter that should be placed upon Hansard. Many members of this house have been attempting to imply that during the last election the Liberal party stood for certain things and that it had not carried out its policy. I wish to state to the house what the policy of the Liberal party was, particularly with reference to western Canada. This was the policy announced, not only by candidates speaking in western Canada, but by our leader himself when he was there. This policy can best be expressed in these words: That a wheat board should be maintained in existence until the surplus accumulated by the McFarland stabilization activities had been so far liquidated as to remove their lowering influence upon the price which could be obtained in the open world market. The Liberal party maintained that our wheat should be exchanged in an orderly manner for the goods we require in this country, thus restoring prosperity and removing unemployment. That was the policy of the party. May I quote from a pamphlet which was spread all over western Canada by the Liberal party. This pamphlet stated:

> The pegging of domestic wheat prices, a year ago, in the interests of the farmers was endorsed by the Liberals. But after the domestic price was pegged the federal government should have made every effort to dispose of the Canadian wheat stocks which were piling up and depressing the market. And any financial losses which such a course might have involved should have been borne by the country as a whole.

This pamphlet was summarized as follows:

> The Bennett wheat policy is:
> 1. Close the channels of trade so no one can buy Canadian wheat, and pile up surpluses which impoverish the farmer and burden the national treasury.
> 2. Place the burden of this disastrous policy on the farmer.
> 3. Protect the manufacturer of farm implements and household needs, so living costs can be kept at a level beyond the farmer's needs.
> The King wheat policy is:
> 1. Guarantee a satisfactory minimum price to the farmer during the crisis.

That was not for all time, but just during the crisis.

> 2. Sell our wheat in the world's markets at world prices, and distribute any resultant loss equitably.
> 3. Open the channels of trade to enable other countries to exchange their goods for our wheat, thus increasing demand and price of Canadian wheat.
> 4. Lower the tariff on the implements of production and household needs, thus bringing close to parity the farmer's income and expenses.

The average price of wheat during 1934 was 81·9 cents per bushel. That was the highest average price of wheat during the time the last government was in power. The first year this government was in power the price was 84·3 cents per bushel, and this year it has risen to $1·137 cents per bushel. May I say that this price is recognized by the farmers of western Canada as being the most favourable price obtained under any policy we have had in vogue since 1931.

Coming back to the point with which I began, the question as to the type of policy which is going to best suit the Dominion of Canada in handling a question of this kind, I return again to the fundamental policies of Liberalism. These policies were enunciated in the statement I have just read to the house, and they are being followed by the government in dealing with this and other matters. It is these policies which have established confidence in the markets of the world where we sell our wheat. We have made it possible to exchange the products of our farms for those things which our farmers need to produce those products. I am one of those who believe that if we want to sell our wheat in the old country market we should be prepared to bring back to this country the shirts we wear when we are producing that wheat, the pants we wear when we grow that wheat, and the boots and shoes we wear when we grow that wheat. At least we should bring back some of these commodities which we use, while producing our wheat. They should be brought in from the country to which we hope to sell our products. If there is one thing more than any other that was made possible by the budget brought down this year by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), it is that. He has lowered the cost of textiles coming into this country to the person who is producing our primary products. He has increased the price of wheat by creating better sentiments in the markets in which we sell. During recent months British millers have been using as much as 70 per cent Canadian wheat in their mixtures, whereas a few months before they were using only 30 per cent. A year or two ago many of them were using only 10 per cent of Canadian wheat. In creating a better sentiment as between the old country and this country, the policies of the Liberal party have triumphed over the policies brought into effect by the Conservative party during the time they were in power.

In conclusion may I ask, Mr. Speaker, what do the people of western Canada themselves say about it? They have had two opportunities of expressing themselves through the ballot. One of these occasions was in 1935, and after this document which I have read to the house had been placed in practically every farm home in western Canada and read by the farmers of the west, they went to the polls and voted overwhelmingly in favour of the policies of the Liberal party. Our friends on the other side were not satisfied with that as a decision, and I had to contest a by-election in one of the districts where wheat is grown and is one of the most important products of the farm. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) came in there? No Conservative candidate was running. The candidate was the nominee of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. But the hon. member for Qu'Appelle took part in that by-election.

Mr. DUNNING: The Holy Alliance.

An hon. MEMBER: Quite different.

Mr. GARDINER: The then leader of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation party in the province of Saskatchewan, and who is now the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) also came in. They brought an ex-C.C.F.'er from Alberta to run; they had in the constituency all the forces that they could amass from three different provinces contesting the election on this issue, and they tried to make it the only issue in the constituency. You know what happened? Right down through the one provincial seat included in the constituency which is preeminently Conservative I got three votes for every one that was polled by my opponent. In the whole constituency I increased what had been, when you total the votes of all the groups, a majority previously of 2,400 votes against us to a majority of over 3,000 in favour of policies which we were told the other night the people of western Canada do not want.

An hon. MEMBER: That was a year and a half ago.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Try it again.

Mr. GARDINER: In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Time.

Mr. GARDINER: Give me about two minutes of the time that my hon. friend has taken, and I shall be through.

During the period that wheat was being delivered to the wheat board, the farmers declared whether they wanted it delivered or not under certain circumstances. During the crop year 1935-36 the farmers delivered a considerable quantity of wheat to the wheat board. Do you know that during the period when the price was above 87½ cents a bushel they delivered to the wheat board only 47 per cent of what they brought to the elevators? But when the price went down below 87½ cents, 140 per cent of all the wheat that came to the elevators during that period went to the wheat board. When wheat went above 87½ cents in the month of July, when that 63,000,000 bushels of which the hon. member spoke was being sold, 4,000,000 bushels of wheat of the previous year's crop was being delivered by the farmers to the elevators, but of that amount only 1,500,000 bushels wes delivered to the wheat board, and practically all of that was delivered at a time when wheat was still below 87½ cents a bushel; the other 2,500,000 bushels went to the trade. Is not that only human nature?

When men come into this house and suggest that the Dominion of Canada should maintain in existence a policy for handling our wheat which of necessity puts the farmer in the position where he delivers wheat to that organization while wheat is below the set price, but does not deliver when it is above the set price, only one result can follow, and that is that the government of Canada will have to pay for the losses of those who deliver when the wheat is below 87½ cents, and will have none of the profits of those who deliver above in order to bring about an equalization of price. That is not fair to the Dominion of Canada, and the government has suggested that when the commission which is now investigating the question makes its report, this whole matter will be reconsidered and some policy suitable to the whole dominion and to the farmers in particular will be inaugurated to handle the wheat of this country in a systematic way.

Mr. VICTOR QUELCH (Acadia): First, I should like to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) upon the very fine delivery of their speeches, though I fear I cannot be quite so complimentary about some of the statements which those speeches contain. I intend to deal very briefly with certain conditions that are prevalent to-day.

One of the most encouraging signs of the times is the fact that it is becoming generally realized that the prosperity of a nation does not so much depend upon stock exchange quotations, statistics of production or trade returns, but rather on the general level of the social well-being of the people. As we go through Canada from east to west we find so much poverty, squalor and actual want, that we must immediately realize that this vaunted prosperity is only for a very limited section of society. So much poverty might be excusable in a country which was producing to the utmost of its capacity, and in a country that was importing more goods than it exported and was still unable to satisfy the requirements of the people. On the other hand, it would appear to be absolutely inexcusable in a country that is producing up to only a percentage of its capacity, and at the same time is able to create a favourable annual trade balance to the extent of some $600,000,000. Personally I should prefer to see that trade balance reduced considerably and this amount of virtual wealth made available, in the form of goods and services, to the people who are in actual want.

I supported the amendment. Nevertheless it is amazing that the Conservatives should move their amendment in view of the fact that they were so unsuccessful in their efforts to cure unemployment when they were in power. But to be perfectly fair, I think the Conservative party in the latter part of its term of office were making better progress towards bringing in better conditions and relieving the distress of the people than the present government is doing.

Altogether too much emphasis is placed upon the tariff as a means for curing unemployment. The true measure of the value of the tariff for such a purpose is whether under a high or a low tariff the amount of purchasing power distributed by industry is going to be sufficient to pay the total prices of goods produced. If it is not, then the effective demand is going to lag behind production, and stagnation of trade, with increased unemployment, is the inevitable result no matter whether the tariff be high or low.

When, in the earlier part of the session, I spoke on a resolution regarding purchasing power, I proved conclusively that owing to certain practices that are inherent within the system, industry fails to distribute sufficient purchasing power to buy back its own production. Under the present system, therefore, one of two things becomes essential; either to export more than we import, or to institute national projects to supplement the wages of industry. The first, I claim, is unsound, because if all the nations of the world endeavoured to export more than they import the thing would become an impossibility. Furthermore, it means that if the demand for foreign exports falls off we are thrown into a depression. In other words, we are at the mercy of our foreign trade. The second I claim is impracticable under our present so-called sound money policy, because it means an increase in debt until eventually our fixed debt charges will exceed our total revenues.

[Mr. Quelch.]

We urge, therefore, that the government relieve industry of the responsibility of being the sole creator of purchasing power. This may be accomplished in many ways—for instance, by the government issuing purchasing power in the form of pensions for the blind at any age. Personally I cannot see that a man of thirty who is blind is in a better position to take care of himself than a blind man of forty. Nevertheless we in this corner join with the rest of the house in endorsing any action towards an amendment to the Old Age Pensions Act to give pensions to the blind at the age of forty. I hope that this is the first step towards making pensions available to the blind at all ages. The next step, I hope, will be to reduce the age for old age pensions from seventy to sixty, thereby increasing the purchasing power of the people and making employment available to younger people. The next step, I hope, will be to make pensions available to all those people who owing to physical disability are unable to care for themselves. Then, in view of the fact that we are living in a new country where there is so much work that actually needs doing to-day, national projects financed by debt-free money could be put into operation—building roads, clearing slums, attending to railway crossings, reforestation and a hundred and one other necessary works. Of course, the extent to which these projects could be carried out would depend upon the amount of purchasing power required to make up the deficiency. These projects might be used as a regulator to maintain the balance as between consumption and production. It is very necessary that a certain definite relationship be maintained between production of consumption goods and production of capital goods if the evil effects of booms and depressions are to be avoided.

I regret very much that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) did not deem it advisable or find it possible either to abolish the sales tax in its entirety or at least to reduce it. Personally I look upon the sales tax as an abomination, a tax the burden of which to a large extent falls upon the poorer classes. The London Chamber of Commerce, which has been making an extensive study of the question of purchasing power, published an article in the London Times Trade and Engineering supplement on September 24, 1932. The following item appeared in it:

> "It has been estimated that 85 per cent of the production in the United States is consumed by those having less than £1,000 per annum."

It of course follows that 15 per cent of the portion that is consumed is paid for by those who have an income of £1,000 or more.

These are United States statistics. No similar statistics are available for Canada, but no doubt they would be fairly comparable; and applying these figures to Canada we find that the sales tax is a tax against 85 per cent of the incomes of those whose incomes are less than £1,000 while on the other hand it is a tax against only 15 per cent of the incomes of those whose incomes are greater than £1,000, showing clearly that it is a burden on the poorer classes. The rich people do not bear their fair share of that burden. In the Railway Employees' Monthly there was a statement to the effect that the millionaires in the United States spend only six per cent of their income as purchasing power for goods. In that event the sales tax is levied only on six per cent of the income of the millionaire.

I should be failing to do my duty by the western grain grower if I did not at this time protest against the action of the government in discontinuing the operation of the wheat board last fall. For many years the farmers of western Canada have been trying to build up a strong marketing agency and in the later years there has been a very insistent demand for a wheat board. Finally that demand was met by the putting into effect of the Canadian Wheat Board Act in 1935. As soon as the first crop is being harvested, however, after this government comes into power, the government deems it advisable or necessary to discontinue the operations of that board—an act that undoubtedly cost the farmers of western Canada many millions of dollars. While all the major nations of the world were doing everything in their power to lessen the burden of the farmer this government has seen fit to take action that has undoubtedly proved a further burden to our farmers inasmuch as it has lost to them a great deal of purchasing power. In view of these facts is it any wonder that a wave of protest swept over western Canada? Is it any wonder that on every side we hear the statement that the government has sold out to the grain trade? Is it any wonder the statement has been made that this government has sacrificed the farmer to the speculators and the grain trade? I cannot help feeling that the action of this government in this regard has been one of the worst betrayals of the farmers of western Canada that we have ever seen in this country. The farmers have been told that they should have held their wheat and benefited by the higher price; but as the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) has pointed out, it is impossible to foretell the price of grain; and in order to hold the wheat the farmers would have had to borrow on it, which would have meant paying interest and storage, and they would have had no definite knowledge that the price of wheat would be maintained. The press refers to the fact—and I have heard the statement from several hon. members—that the farmers are benefiting considerably by the high price of wheat to-day. I would say that the farmers would have benefited considerably had the wheat board been maintained. Unfortunately, however, a very large proportion of the wheat was sold in the fall at a lower price, and therefore to-day instead of the farmer benefiting it is the speculator.

I was surprised, and to be perfectly frank, disgusted, to read the following statement by the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar) in a speech to the United Farmers of Manitoba as reported in the Western Producer. He is quoted as saying:

> Why should the wheat growers of the west be bonussed at the expense of the taxpayers of the country?

At that time he was discussing the guaranteed price based on cost of production and apparently he did not believe that a guaranteed price based on cost of production should be maintained if that price were above world market levels. I hold, however, that the western farmer has every justification for demanding a price for his wheat based on cost of production including a fair remuneration, and I say that for the following reasons. Just what are the farmer's costs? They represent other people's incomes. They represent payments made to various industries and retailers, payments made to machine companies, grain dealers, banks, oil companies, insurance companies, and various other individuals; and these payments are made in anticipation of the recovery of them through prices. The total of these payments represents the farmer's cost of production. The farmer has paid out to society various sums representing his cost of production and he is therefore entitled to demand back from society a price for his products equal to the costs he has paid out. For instance if the farmer paid to society at the rate of $1 a bushel for every bushel produced, and then receives back from society only 80 cents a bushel, then society clearly owes him 20 cents a bushel.

We often hear the statement that if the farmers are assisted other lines of production have an equal claim to assistance. I would answer that by saying that practically every other major industry to-day is subsidized through fixed prices and wages, and the farmer is forced to pay these prices in meeting his obligations.

The protest against a guaranteed price comes chiefly from the east, yet for years the farmers of western Canada have been paying the highly protected prices of the east while at the same time selling their own products at world market prices. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) last session stated that the farmers of this country do not want to be subsidized, that all they want is to be able to buy what they have to buy at world prices and to sell their products at world prices. I am sure the hon. member for Moose Jaw, after taking into consideration the multitude of protest meetings held in Saskatchewan last fall will realize the error of that statement.

As far as the latter part of his statement is concerned, while there may be a certain amount of truth in it, nevertheless it does not begin to cover the actual situation to-day. We must remember that for years the farmers of western Canada have been paying the highly protected prices of the east while at the same time having to sell their own commodities at world market levels. The result has been that the farmers have had to sell below cost of production, with the inevitable result that generally speaking they became heavily indebted. Now if all we do is to bring about a fairer relation between the prices of what the farmer buys and what he sells, how is he going to liquidate his debts? If the farmer is ever going to be in a position to liquidate his debts, not only must there be a fairer relation between the prices of what he buys and what he sells, but the price he receives for his products must be sufficiently high to meet the cost of production plus a small profit; and then this profit will be available to pay the debts he has incurred in the past. After all the meetings held in Saskatchewan last fall I am sure the hon. member for Moose Jaw and other hon. members will realize that what the western farmer wants to-day is a fair price for his products, based upon cost of production plus a fair remuneration, and as I have already pointed out, he has every right and justification in demanding that price.

Last session it was claimed by many hon. members from Ontario and Quebec that these provinces pay the largest percentage of the taxes of this dominion. The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thompson) stated that Ontario and Quebec pay 75 per cent. But who in reality pay those taxes? Take, for instance, the income tax and the corporation tax. These to a large extent are levied against profits on the sale of goods, not in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario only, but throughout the whole Dominion of Canada. Those profits are part of the price of the goods sold. Therefore, when consumers throughout Canada pay those prices they are paying these profits upon which the taxes are levied. In reality, instead of just Ontario and Quebec paying those taxes, it is the general consumer throughout the whole dominion who pays them. The same thing may be said in regard to the tariff. It is part of the price of the goods sold. Therefore, when the general consumer pays those prices, he pays those taxes. In other words, Ontario and Quebec are nothing more or less than the drain pipe through which these taxes pass to the government.

The hon. member also referred to Ontario and Quebec as two placid milch cows being milked by western Canada. I would say he got his metaphors mixed. He should have said they are the two milking machines engaged in milking the cows, and they have abused the cows to such an extent that they are about dried up, and it is going to be a considerable time before they are freshened again. It is necessary to protect these cows from further abuse, and the protection has taken the form of debt legislation to protect these farmers against further exploitation by eastern interests. The eastern manufacturers to-day are largely subsidized by the farmers of western Canada, and the people of western Canada generally. In support of this statement I quote an extract from a submission on dominion-provincial relations and the fiscal disabilities of Nova Scotia within the Canadian federation, presented by Norman Rogers on behalf of the Nova Scotia government. This extract deals with a comparison of tariff subsidies and tariff costs by provinces. A quotation from this submission was made the other day, but I want to deal with the tariff as it applies to the individual. It states:

> The position of the various provinces in relation to gains and losses suffered by the tariff is set out in the following table, which gives for each province separately the per capita tariff subsidy and the per capita tariff costs, as for the year 1931.

As I have been dealing with the western provinces and Ontario and Quebec, I shall take only those provinces:

Province	Tariff subsidy per capita	Tariff costs per capita	Net loss per capita
Manitoba	$28 44	$41 69	$13 25
Saskatchewan	3 55	31 71	28 16
Alberta	11 22	38 15	26 93
British Columbia	32 03	54 36	22 33

Taking Quebec and Ontario, we find an entirely different situation. Instead of a net loss per capita there is a net gain. The figures are:

Province	Tariff subsidy per capita	Tariff costs per capita	Net gain per capita
Ontario.	$64 32	$49 17	$15 15
Quebec..	46 23	35 20	11 03

It was stated last session by some eastern members that western Canada has been spoon-fed. I would not make that claim about Ontario and Quebec; I would say they have been shovel-fed, and they are never satisfied with the size of the shovel. It was interesting to note that while Ontario benefited by the tariff to the exent of $15.15 per capita and Quebec to the extent of $11.03 per capita, the tariff cost the people of Manitoba, $13.25, Saskatchewan, $28.16, and Alberta, $26.93 per capita. In other words, the manufacturers of eastern Canada were very largely subsidized by the western provinces. Therefore when the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Crerar) asks—why should the western provinces be subsidized?—I would say, For the simple reason that they are at present subsidizing the eastern provinces, and are only demanding back what they have already paid out in enhanced costs.

Earlier in my speech I referred to the fact that all the major nations of the world are endeavouring to lighten the burden on agriculture, and to the steps taken by the various nations to increase the price of wheat to the home producer. In support of that I should like to quote a statement from a pamphlet entitled Aid to Agriculture, published in 1936 by the Alberta wheat pool. I shall deal with it only briefly. On page 27 we find the following statement:

> How nations have helped their wheat growers. It is difficult to measure accurately in dollars the aid given wheat growers of various nations by their governments during the past six years, in view of the variety of methods used by different countries. Direct cash bonuses, tariff protection, embargoes on imports and manipulation of exchange are some of the methods employed. A survey of the situation recently made has provided the following information:

In Europe it was found that France had aided her producers during that time to the extent of $1,321,020,000; Germany to the extent of $754,370,000, and Italy, $1,211,490,000; making a grand total of $3,286,880,000. For Great Britain from 1933 to 1936 the total was $125,094,863.

In the southern hemisphere the Australian government during the four years 1931 to 1935 gave subsidies to wheat growers in the form of bounties and grants to the amount of £12,548,000. In addition, the Australian government inflated its money early in the depression, thus giving its wheat growers a decided advantage in world markets over Canadian wheat growers. I quote:

> Argentina
> The Argentinian government inflated its monetary unit thus providing its wheat growers with a comparatively high domestic price and still enabling them to undersell Canadian wheat in world markets. Last fall Argentina established a minimum price for wheat at 92 cents a bushel.
> United States
> Up to the end of December, 1935, a total of $255,624,669.37 was paid as a direct bonus to wheat growers in the United States by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. In addition to this sum the administration of President Hoover spent a couple of hundred million dollars in market stabilization operations. Further the present United States government has bonused the exportation of wheat from certain surplus areas.

When you review these figures, Mr. Speaker, and consider the tremendous sacrifices some countries have made in order to give the producer a fair price, we cannot feel that Canada has been over-generous or over-considerate to her wheat growers. But that is not all. Not only has this government not been over-generous or over-considerate; it actually has been very inconsiderate, inasmuch as it has seen fit to increase the burden that has to be borne by the grain grower through destroying, for the time being at any rate, his marketing agency. What we need is not only the repeal of P.C. 2202 but also the strengthening of the wheat board act by bringing into operation sections 9, 10, 11, 14 and 16, so that the act may apply to coarse grains, and a penalty may be imposed for infringement of the act, so that greater control of grain may be exercised by the board.

In conclusion, I should like to refer very briefly to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, which the minister stated is to be strengthened. When that is done I hope the minister will recognize the fact that in the early operation of this act the farmer did not receive the sympathetic treatment he is receiving to-day. For instance, in the earlier cases, usually interest was only reduced to about seven per cent while to-day it is being reduced to five per cent, and in some cases I believe even less. Then again the adjustments made to-day are more generous than they were in the past. Therefore I would urge that the act be amended in order to allow appeals, which would make it possible for the board to review past adjustments. In the second place, since pressure on the single boards is very heavy in the various provinces, I would urge that additional boards be appointed in order to expedite the work of readjusting these cases.

Mr. A. J. BROOKS (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few observations concerning some provinces which seem to have been more or less forgotten in this house during the past few months. After listening to this debate one would almost think the only crop grown in this dominion was wheat, and that the only part of Canada that existed was the wheat growing section. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the case, and that we are still doing business down in the maritime provinces.

Mr. MICHAUD: And good business.

Mr. BROOKS: Good business at times, but not as good as it should be. I have enjoyed listening to the budget debate so far, and I must say that I enjoyed listening to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) when he presented the budget the other day. He has a very pleasant voice, which I am sure we all delight to hear. The budget speech is the most important presentation made to parliament and, through parliament, to the people of the country. This is properly so, since its contents may favourably or adversely affect the lives of our people, and in any event it is almost certain to affect to a lesser or greater degree the economic and domestic arrangements of our industries and our homes.

Two great problems which confront the people of Canada to-day, and which have been confronting them for the past few years, are taxation and unemployment. The taxpayer had expected some lightening of the tax burden, and I am sure he has been greatly disappointed. We all recall that in 1935, when the Liberal party were seeking the support of the people of Canada, one of their great promises was that if they were returned to power they would reduce taxation. We may well ask what has been done in this regard. Instead of burdens being made lighter the opposite has taken place, particularly in regard to the sales tax, which has risen to eight per cent, a record figure in Canadian history. With the huge increase in revenue from this source, together with the record figures of income tax payments, the Minister of Finance could only show a reduction from an estimated deficit of $100,000,000 to an actual deficit of $87,000,000. We admit that this shows some slight improvement, but nothing like the improvement that should be shown when we consider the colossal sum collected during the past year.

When we analyse the revenue from the sales tax alone, we find that it means that each man, woman and child in the Dominion of Canada paid $10.50 during the year. On an average this represents $52.85 per family, or a dollar a week. When you add to that all the other taxes collected by the dominion government, by the various provincial governments and by the municipalities, you realize the great burden that is being borne by the taxpayer.

Previous to the election of 1935 we heard a great deal about the forgotten man, the taxpayer of this country. This afternoon one of the speakers mentioned the forgotten farmer, but in October of 1935 the forgotten taxpayer was the important man. He was represented as bearing a great burden on his back, and was promised relief, but this forgotten man is still forgotten. Last year he was remembered long enough to have an additional burden placed on his back, but this year he has been absolutely ignored by the government.

It is not my intention to dwell at any length on the subject of unemployment, which has been debated very extensively during the past week. I think most of the pros and cons have been well presented, but I should like to make a few observations with regard to unemployment in my own province.

Last year, not many months ago, the premier of New Brunswick took great credit for being the first premier in the dominion to take his province off direct relief. With regard to direct relief paid by the province that was a fact; but actually the burden was simply shifted from the dominion and the province to the taxpayers of the municipalities, and such a cry went up from the municipalities that further assistance had to be given by the province. I venture to say that instead of the province having fewer unemployed in 1936, when it went off direct relief there were more unemployed at that time than there had been during most of the depression.

In this connection I should like to read a report which appeared in the press about that time:

> Relief Crisis Approaches in Cities of N.B. Municipalities Feel Pinch of Carrying Relief Burden
> Statements made at Montreal by Premier Dysart, that New Brunswick is the first province to "go off relief," are termed "ridiculous" by Councillor George E. Barbour of Saint John. Councillor Barbour told the city council he did not understand how the Premier could make such a claim in the face of figures showing the amount which relief is still costing New Brunswick municipalities, even though the province has not been contributing for the last few months.

He goes on to say:

Government contributions towards relief in New Brunswick terminated in the early fall. Provincial road development projects were intensified at that time with the view of absorbing the unemployed. This program did take care of quite a number of jobless—550 in the Saint John area, for instance—but hundreds were still left to be cared for. The men on the roads received $2 a day and were unable to put anything aside for the winter. Now the road jobs have ended.

Councillor James A. Whitebone, of Saint John, in making a statement at that time said:

"Something has to be done and done quickly." He predicts that further delay in facing the issue squarely will lead to "a very serious situation."

That is the situation, Mr. Speaker, as regards unemployment in the city of Saint John. The same was true of the cities of Moncton and Fredericton, and other municipalities of New Brunswick. It is very interesting to note, in a report for the year 1936 issued by the dominion commission for unemployment relief, that in October, 1935, when the late government left office there were 14,438 on relief in New Brunswick. In February, 1936, the latest month for which I can get records, the number has more than doubled. There were 35,300 on relief in that province. I am sure the situation as regards unemployment in the dominion must be recognized by all.

In his speech delivered a few days ago the Minister of Finance spoke about the disheartening effect of the obvious failure of employment to keep pace with the striking gains in business. We might then ask ourselves what the record of the government has been during the year and a half it has been in power. First, we can point to an increase in taxation, where the people of Canada were promised a decrease. Next we can point to unemployment, because the government has failed to carry out its promise to reduce unemployment.

There is another matter in connection with which the government is claiming great credit—the extension of the British Empire trade agreements. In other words, matters which required close attention or a cure, such as taxation and unemployment, have not been successfully handled, but for the empire trade agreements, which even before this government took office were of great benefit, the government claims great credit. The circumstances remind me of the story of the young doctor who had been called out to attend one of his first patients. It happened to be one of those cases in which a new member of the family is expected. When the doctor came home his wife asked him just what the situation was and he said, "Well, I have lost the mother and child, but the father is still living." That is the case so far as the government is concerned. Unemployment and taxation have not been cured, but the empire trade agreements are still living. It is not necessary for me to dwell at length on the great benefits of the United Kingdom agreement. Unquestionably the British market has been of great value in which to offer our wheat, live stock, lumber, minerals and meats, but it must be observed that the new agreement now under discussion is less favourable to Canada than the one negotiated by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). We are paying a higher price for a preference in the United Kingdom than the Bennett government paid. In a word, the new bargain is not as favourable to Canada as the one made in 1932.

Moreover, may I call the attention of the house to the striking inconsistency and insincerity and complete volte face which the Liberal government has shown in the matter. The Bennett trade agreement was denounced as worthless by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and his followers when they sat in opposition. They described it as an agreement affording no substantial benefit to the Canadian farmer or producer. Yet within the short space of four years we have the spectacle of the Liberal party, headed by the same right hon. gentleman presenting to the house an agreement similar to the one denounced in 1932, and lauding it as capable of accomplishing the greatest benefits for Canada. A British statesman once termed his opponents a party of organized hyprocrisy. That cap would fit the Liberal party in its attitude towards trade agreements with the United Kingdom.

Any hon. member who has read Hansard for 1932, when the agreements were under discussion in the house, must realize that from the statements made by the then leader of the opposition and his followers might have been described in the language of the British statesman to whom I have just referred. The then leader of the opposition said it was nothing but a Tory conspiracy. At page 603 of Hansard for 1932, the hon. member for Perth South (Mr. Sanderson) said:

Mr. Speaker, after carefully studying the articles and the agreements I am free to admit that of all the great blunders that this government have made since they came into power in 1930 this is perhaps the greatest blunder of all. . . . There is nothing in it to give any consolation to the people of Canada.

Again, at page 392 of Hansard for the same session, Mr. Ralston said:

My hon. friends have inserted an article which they say will be of benefit to the lumber industry. Let me make this statement, that this article will not be of the slightest benefit to the lumbermen of the maritime provinces.

I intend to take a little time to show how the agreement has been of the greatest benefit to the people of the maritime provinces. Had it not been for the agreements of 1932, I am satisfied the lumber industry in my province would have gone out of business. It has given employment to large numbers of men, and has been the very lifeblood of the industry in the part of the dominion from which I come. Just to show what effects the agreement has had, I shall place on Hansard a statement showing the lumber exported through ports in New Brunswick during the fiscal years ending March 31, 1932 to 1936. I shall give the figures for planks and boards of birch:

Fiscal year	United Kingdom M feet	United States M feet
1932	10,250	4,211
1933	12,720	1,644
1934	16,211	3,306
1935	23,586	1,666
1936	32,187	5,292

May I now give the figures concerning shipments of planks and boards of spruce, the chief lumber commodity of New Brunswick, and I believe of the maritime provinces:

Fiscal year	United Kingdom M feet	United States M feet
1932	5,389	45,688
1933	21,539	29,214
1934	94,778	29,650
1935	105,230	17,475
1936	45,799	30,040

From 1932 to 1935 shipments of lumber from New Brunswick ports to the United Kingdom increased from 5,389 M feet to 105,230 M feet. In spite of this, when Mr. Ralston was speaking on the possible benefits of this treaty to the maritime provinces he said it would be of absolutely no benefit to the lumbermen of that part of Canada.

There are other commodities to which I might refer. Take apples, for instance. This is a very important product to the people in the Annapolis valley of Nova Scotia, and it is becoming more important to the people in the valley of the Saint John in New Brunswick. I will give the figures for the three years before the agreements came into effect, and for the three years after they were in effect. I could not get the figures for particular parts of Canada, so I shall have to give figures for all of Canada.

[Mr. Brooks.]

In 1927 we shipped to England 980,715 barrels of apples. In 1928 we shipped 838,891 barrels, and in 1929, 912,488 barrels. In 1933, the first year after the British empire trade agreements came into effect, we shipped 3,092,274 barrels. In 1934 we shipped 1,844,026 barrels, and in 1935, 2,232,772 barrels. It will be seen that the percentage of increase was easily one or two hundred per cent.

Then, take bacon. The records show that in 1931 Canada sold to the old country 49,495 hundredweight of bacon. In 1936 our sales had increased to 1,092,401 hundredweight. I think these figures show the great benefits which the people of Canada in general, and the people of the maritime provinces in particular, obtained from these agreements. It is rather hard to give definite figures as to the increased employment which has occurred. We must consider the number of men employed in the lumber woods, the number employed in driving the logs to the mills, the number employed in the mills, in the lumber yards and in loading and shipping the lumber sent to the United Kingdom. This will give us some idea of what these agreements have meant in increasing employment.

Shipping from the maritime ports of Saint John and Halifax has increased greatly in the last few years, and it is particularly good this year. This improvement in business is due to a great extent to the additional shipments brought about by the British Empire trade agreements. There is no great increase of exports to the United States. Speaking for the port of Saint John and the province of New Brunswick I am very pleased indeed to note from the press that the New Zealand and Australia boats are again going to call at Saint John. I notice that a lot of credit is being given in certain places for the return of these ships, but it seems to me that the parties who were responsible for having these ships taken from Saint John to Halifax deserve more censure than praise.

Mr. ISNOR: On what authority does the hon. member make the statement that the Montreal-New Zealand boats are to call at Saint John?

Mr. BROOKS: I make it on the authority of the press. Speaking for the port of Saint John, and for the port of Halifax if I may, it gives me much concern—and I think the same is true of all maritime people—when I pick up Montreal papers and read that the ice breakers are working feverishly on the St. Lawrence river in order to open up the port of Montreal. It seems to me that this is unfair to the winter ports in the maritime provinces. An effort is being made to open up the port of Montreal and take away from the other ports that which is their right in the matter of freight. The maritime provinces are helping to pay for these ice breakers which are working to rob us of what we consider to be our just dues.

I have no intention of dealing at great length with the United States trade agreement, but I should like to point out that last year some hon. members attempted to show the great benefits which would accrue to the maritime provinces from this agreement. There has been no great improvement in the movement of lumber to American ports up to the present time. What may happen in the future I do not know. The statement is made, I believe by the Charlottetown Guardian, that the quota on potatoes was reduced by 50,000 bushels; that is, the market available to the potato growers had been reduced to that extent.

One of the members who spoke last year said that there would be great advantage to the farmers of the maritime provinces in the shipping of turnips. I have in my hand a statement of the exports of turnips from the maritime provinces to the United States during the fiscal years 1927 to 1936. I shall not take time to repeat all these figures, but I should like to give a few. In 1934, before the United States agreement came into effect, Nova Scotia shipped 243,890 bushels of turnips to the United States. In 1936, with the agreement in force, that province shipped only 142,335 bushels. These figures prove that there was no great benefit to the turnip producers of Nova Scotia.

In 1934 Prince Edward Island shipped 179,269 bushels and in 1936, 245,950 bushels. There was an increase there, but the shipments were less than in 1935, when a total of 263,874 bushels were shipped. The shipments from New Brunswick were practically the same. More were shipped in 1936 than in 1934, but the increase was not very great.

I made inquiries of the bureau of statistics as to the amount of cream shipped from the maritime provinces to the United States. I remember one member last year stating that this treaty was going to be of great benefit to the dairy farmers of Canada. I found that not one gallon of cream had been shipped from the maritime provinces to the United States during the year 1936 under the Canada-United States agreement.

I do not intend to speak of the fishing industry to-night, but at some later date it is my intention to say a few words with reference to the deplorable condition of the maritime fishermen—the fishermen who expected so much from this government and have received absolutely nothing. Reading Hansard I noticed that the Hon. J. L. Ralston, discussing a few years ago the St. Lawrence waterway, told the then Bennett government that if it made any concessions to the United States it should be on condition that better opportunities would be provided for the fishermen of the maritime provinces. Our present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) is discussing various matters at Washington with President Roosevelt. I hope he will remember at this time the fishermen of the maritime provinces, who were so inexcusably forgotten when the Canada-United States agreement was in preparation last year.

A few words regarding the county of Kings. Although we are modest and dislike to praise ourselves, I have every reason to be proud of Kings county and also of my native county of Queens, which comprise the constituency of Royal. Some hon. members may have read a short time ago in the editorial column of the Financial Post an article on a certain municipality which had not only been able to pay all its bills during the years of the depression but had a surplus each year. That municipality was in the county of Kings. We have in the town of Sussex one of the finest dairy centres not only in the maritime provinces, but I believe in the whole dominion. I was much concerned when I learned the other day of the great shipments of vegetable oils which are coming into this country. One of the speakers to-day—I think it was the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Rickard)—said that his county was also a dairy county but that unquestionably the housewives of Durham would continue to make their shortening from the good butter produced by the cows in that constituency. I have no doubt that the housewives in my section of the dominion will do the same, but what worries us most is whether the housewives in the cities, the bakers, and others are going to use our dairy butter or will utilize the vegetable oils which are coming in in greatly increasing quantities.

During the depression my constituency has borne up better, I think, than any other part of my native province; I believe it stands high in the whole dominion. But there is one section which is hard hit at the present time, and that is the coal mining district in the counties of Queens and Sunbury, partly in the constituency of Royal and partly in the constituency of York-Sunbury. This area was one of the most prosperous during the years of the depression; at least the inhabitants were able to pay their own way. I should like to give the house a general idea of the coal industry in our province. The annual output of coal is from 300,000 to 350,000 tons; the number of men employed, approximately 1,200; annual wages, approximately $1,000,000; royalties paid annually to the province, $30,000 to $40,000; capital invested, according to the government report for 1934, the last available, $1,856,392. Besides giving employment to a large number of men thus directly engaged, this industry provides good markets for large quantities of our farm produce and our lumber, and thus is of great benefit to the farmers and lumbermen of the surrounding districts. From 1931 on the situation has been as follows:

Year	Selling price	Cost	Profit	Loss
1931..	$4 32	$4 18	·14	...
1932..	4 06	3 94	·12	...
1933..	3 50	3 36	·14	...
1934..	3 47	3 44	·03	...

In 1935 the total loss to the producers was $38,000, and if they had expected 6 per cent on their invested capital their loss would have been $150,000. One of the principal causes of the decline of the industry in this area has been the competition with Nova Scotia mines. Those mines have been more highly subsidized than those of our province. From 1931 to 1936 Nova Scotia received in subsidies $7,023,976; New Brunswick, $36,506. If New Brunswick had been given freight rate assistance at the same rate as Nova Scotia in proportion to output, it would have received during the past six years $350,000 instead of the practically insignificant sum of $36,506. By freight rate assistance Nova Scotia has moved during the past four years 25 to 32 per cent of its total coal output while New Brunswick has moved a maximum of only 6 per cent.

Increased output naturally means a lower cost on every ton of coal produced. Thus Nova Scotia through government assistance is in a better position to undersell New Brunswick coal right in our own province. Nova Scotia sells more than twice as much coal in New Brunswick as do the New Brunswick mines themselves—that is to consumers other than railroads.

I make these comparisons not with the idea of showing that Nova Scotia receives better treatment than it should receive but to demonstrate that New Brunswick is not being as well treated as it has a right to expect. We are all pleased that so much encouragement has been given to the coal mines of Nova Scotia. Like my honoured leader, I believe that in that section of Cape Breton it would have been impossible for the coal mines to carry on during the past few years but for the help they received. But we ask for New Brunswick the same assistance that is given to Nova Scotia.

[Mr. Brooks.]

Another cause of the decrease in returns is the rate paid by the railroads. In 1929 the Canadian National paid $4.08 per ton to the producers; in 1932, $4.20; from 1933 to 1936 it has been paying only $4. This price is too low; the quality of the coal has been improved and the cost of production has increased. I contend that the fuel board instead of dealing with individual operators and so occasioning overmuch competition among the operators, should deal with the producers as a body, and that a fair rate should be paid for all the coal required by the Canadian National Railways. We know that the railway employees are getting an increase, and the civil servants likewise, and we feel that the government could very well increase the price paid for coal for its railways in order to give work to the 1,200 men who are located in this area of Minto, which is partly in my constituency and partly in the constituency of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Clark).

It is almost eleven o'clock and my time is up, but I would make one observation in closing. I do not believe that we in Canada can live, as some of the western members would have us believe, by the production of wheat alone, nor can we live only by mixed farming, nor by our mines and forests alone. We must have some protection for our industries; we must have industries in order to have large centres of population, and the larger the towns we have the better it will be for the primary producers, the farmers of Canada.

Mr. VINCENT J. POTTIER (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak to-night in another language than my mother tongue, and that is because what I have to say concerns a community whose majority is English speaking.

(Text) I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) on his budget and his presentation of it.

I propose to discuss the question of fisheries, a matter which vitally affects a basic production that is of paramount importance to the maritime provinces. I submit that the time has come when this industry must be looked at specifically, with a view to a definite decision being given. I am going to ask that the house apply its mind to the question of fisheries in the light of the interests of the maritime provinces, having regard also to the position of other provinces concerned with the same products and to dominion interests generally.

The fishing grounds of the North Atlantic are the most extensive in the world, and when one looks at a map of the maritime provinces and finds them located as they are, adjoining the fishing grounds, one would naturally arrive at the conclusion that these provinces must have a prosperous industry and a happy fisherfolk. It seems strange, however, that when one investigates, he finds in some sections probably the most destitute fishermen and a picture that would better fit other than present day standards.

We have the following fishing banks, so-called, in the North Atlantic available to our fishermen.

	Square miles
Grand Bank	36,000
Green Bank	1,450
St. Pierre Bank	4,800
Western Bank	6,320
Georges Bank	8,498

There are other banks, and the total area amounts to 69,553 square miles. These banks vary in depth from 10 fathoms to 100 fathoms, or in other words from 60 to 600 feet.

In addition to these fishing banks, there are other well known fishing grounds near the Atlantic coast, and in the gulf of the St. Lawrence. These banks, embracing an area of nearly 70,000 square miles, have in the past yielded annually on the average more than eleven hundred million pounds of cod alone and here undoubtedly is to be found the greatest cod and haddock fishery in the world.

The men who fish on these banks are ready for call twenty-four hours a day. They know nothing of regular hours—no danger of sit-down strikes there. They work in the majority of cases on what we call a lay—that is, they get a share of the return from the catch and every member of the crew gives his utmost in cooperation and energy. No other primary producer has to go through the personal hazards and hardships that the fisherman is obliged to suffer.

Inclusive of some of the fishing banks already mentioned, where cod and haddock are the principal products, there is around and adjacent to the maritime provinces a total ocean fishing area of approximately two hundred thousand square miles, or over four-fifths of the entire ocean fishing area of the North Atlantic. Fifteen thousand square miles of inshore fishing waters are controlled entirely by the government of Canada.

The commercial products of these extensive areas consist for the most part of cod, haddock, hake, herring, halibut, pollock, mackerel, sardines, salmon, smelts, alewives, swordfish, tuna and shellfish, principally lobsters, scallops, oysters and clams.

I want to compare the number of square miles of these fishing grounds with the number of square miles of land under cultivation in the dominion of Canada; in other words, the fishing area with the farming area of Canada. In 1935 we had in Canada 56,923,960 acres or 87,381 square miles under cultivation. This means that all land under cultivation in Canada is only between one-half and one-third the area covered by the fishing grounds that are available to the fishermen of the maritime provinces.

I sometimes think that the lack of interest in the fisheries is due to the lack of appreciation of the size, extent and possibilities of our fishery resources. We think of Canada as a great farming country, because it has huge areas under cultivation, and yet these areas are small in proportion to the areas awaiting harvest from the Canadian fishermen.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we must in the future deal more definitely and specificially with the development of our fisheries in the interests of Canada. I am convinced that the people of Canada and of other countries are going to continue in more or less greater degree to eat fish products, and it is only fair and reasonable to say that this particular industry is worthy of consideration and must be taken care of.

On motion of Mr. Pottier the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

THE BUDGET—SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 28 FOR SITTINGS OF THURSDAY, MARCH 11

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in order that we may proceed with the debate on Thursday it is necessary to suspend standing order 28. By leave of the house, I therefore move:

That standing order 28 respecting committee of ways and means be suspended for the sittings of Thursday, 11th March, 1937.

Motion agreed to.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, March 10, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

RAILWAY COMMITTEE

Second report of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. Vien.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT

FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE CONCURRED IN

Mr. E. C. St-PERE (Hochelaga) presented the first report of the joint committee on the printing of parliament, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answer orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GREAT LAKES-ST. LAWRENCE SYSTEM—DIVERSION OF WATERS SOUTH TO LAKE SUPERIOR

Mr. MacNICOL:

1. Has the federal government consented to, or is it obligated to pay a portion of the costs of the surveys made or being made by the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission engineers from lake Nipigon north along the Little Jackfish river and the connecting chain of rivers and lakes to the height of land and north of the height of land by way of Mojikit lake, Mojikit river to the Ogoki river and east and west along the Ogoki river with a view to diverting the waters of the latter river from flowing north to flowing south via the said chain of lakes and rivers to lake Superior?
2. If so, has the United States consented to the inflow of these waters into the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence system?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. No.
2. No.

Mr. MacNICOL:

1. Has the federal government given the Ontario government or the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission authority to divert water from the Long Lake-Kenogami-Albany river watershed of northern Ontario over the height of land to lake Superior of the St. Lawrence watershed?
2. If so, has the United States government agreed to the said diversion of this water from the said Albany river watershed to the St. Lawrence watershed?
3. What is the estimated cost of the said diversion works and is the federal government obligated to pay a portion of the costs?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. No.
2. No.
3. No information is available with regard to the estimated cost of the diversion works and the federal government has not obligated itself to pay any portion of the costs.

SASKATCHEWAN 1936 CENSUS—APPOINTMENTS

Mr. FLEMING:

1. How many wrote the civil service examinations in connection with the census in the province of Saskatchewan in 1936?
2. How many passed the said examinations in the province of Saskatchewan?
3. How many from the province of Saskatchewan received positions in the census branch?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. 373.
2. 102.
3. 21 (275 appointments required).

CANADIAN RADIO BROADCASTING STATION AT RICHMOND, B.C.

Mr. GREEN:

1. Did the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation or the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission obtain a site of approximately 19 acres for a radio station or other purposes in the municipality of Richmond, province of British Columbia?
2. If so, when was such site purchased, and at what price?
3. From whom was it purchased?
4. To whom was the purchase price paid?
5. Was any commission paid in respect of such purchase?
6. If so, to whom?
7. What building or buildings, if any, have been erected on this site?

Mr. HOWE: The following information has been supplied by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation:

1. Yes. Purchased by the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission.
2. July, 1936. Price: $3,642.55.
3. W. M. Finlayson.
4. A. H. Stephenson and Company.
5. Not by the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission.
6. No information.
7. Main transmitter building, and antenna tuning house.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD—WAGES AT VANCOUVER, B.C.

Mr. GREEN:

1. What rate of pay is paid by the National Harbours Board to carloaders and shedmen at the Ballantyne and Lapointe piers in Vancouver harbour?
2. Is an eight-hour day observed on the work of these carloaders and shedmen?
3. If not, are they paid overtime, and at what rate, and for what days of the week?
4. What were the former rates of pay for this work, and when was a change made?

Mr. HOWE: The National Harbours Board has supplied the following answers:

1. Shedmen: Lapointe pier—Regularly employed, 54 cents per hour; Ballantyne pier—Regularly employed, 50 cents per hour.

In each case, minimum of 3 hours paid when called to work between 5 p.m. and 8 a.m.; also on Sundays and statutory holidays.

Carloaders: Lapointe and Ballantyne piers—Under normal conditions, carloading work is performed by shedmen as above. Carloaders casually employed, 50 cents per hour all the time, except Sundays and statutory holidays when 75 cents per hour.

2. Whenever possible. If more than 8 hours worked on any day, then a lesser number worked on other days to maintain average of 8 hours per day.

3. Answered by No. 1.

4. Shedmen: Lapointe pier—There has been no change in rates paid to shedmen since pier was taken over from previous operator in 1931;

Ballantyne pier—Prior to May, 1936, shedmen were employed as casual workers and were paid 50 cents per hour straight time; and 75 cents per hour overtime.

Carloaders: Lapointe pier—Prior to June, 1935, casually employed and paid 60 cents per hour straight time; and 90 cents per hour overtime;

Ballantyne pier—Prior to May, 1936, casually employed and paid 60 cents per hour straight time; and 90 cents per hour overtime.

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL, QUE., BRIDGE

Mr. LACOMBE:

1. Is the federal government contributing towards the cost of construction of the new bridge at Boulevard Pie IX, St-Vincent de Paul?

2. If so, what proportion of the cost is the government contributing?

3. What is or will be the cost of said bridge?

4. At the request of which government is said bridge being constructed?

5. Who is or are the contractor or contractors for said work?

6. How many workmen and day-labourers are actually employed on the construction of this bridge?

7. Where do these workmen or day labourers reside?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes.

2. 50 per cent.

3. The total estimated cost of the bridge referred to is $600,000.

4. Government of the province of Quebec.

5. Dufresne Construction Company of Montreal.

6. The latest information available is for the week ending January 30, 1937, during which period there were 339 men employed.

7. The provincial authorities advise that the labour employed on the project in question is being recruited from Montreal, L'Abord-a-plouffe, Montreal North, St. Vincent de Paul, St. Michel and St. Laurent.

PUBLIC WORKS IN QUEBEC PROVINCE

Mr. MULLINS:

How many public works have been carried out jointly by the federal government and the government of the province of Quebec, since January 1, 1936, to date: (a) in the counties of Richmond-Wolfe; (b) in the other counties of the province of Quebec?

Mr. ROGERS: Order in Council P.C. 359 dated February 22, 1937, which was tabled in the House of Commons on February 24, 1937, sets forth the works being carried out by the province of Quebec with financial assistance from the dominion under the provisions of the Unemployment Relief and Assistance Act, 1936.

BANK OF CANADA—REGULATION OF CURRENCY AND CREDIT

Mr. BLACKMORE:

1. Has parliament entrusted the Bank of Canada with the function of regulating currency and credit in the public interest?

2. If the Bank of Canada exercises the function of regulating currency and credit in the public interest, what means does it employ?

3. What are the credit control powers that parliament has conferred upon the Bank of Canada that it may use to check wild speculation in commodities, stocks, etc., if such action becomes desirable in the public interest?

4. Who will decide the time when and the extent to which the powers mentioned in question 3 are to be applied?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. Yes—see preamble to Bank of Canada Act.

2. Primarily open market purchases or sales of securities designed directly to expand or contract the cash reserves of the chartered banks, and regulation of the discount rate designed to effect indirectly the same purposes.

3. See section 21 and subsection 4 of section 13 of Bank of Canada Act. The central bank has no statutory powers to determine the specific purposes for which credit is used and effective control of the distribution of credit as between various categories of use depends on the active cooperation of chartered banks and other private lending institutions, the stock exchanges, stock brokers, and the public generally.

4. See sections 7 and 13 of the Bank of Canada Act and section 4 of the Bank of Canada Act Amendment Act.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

LIFE INSURANCE IN CANADA

Mr. TUCKER:

1. How much life insurance was in force in respect of residents of Canada in each of the years 1927 to 1936, inclusive?

2. What was the total of premiums paid by such residents of Canada in each of the years 1927 to 1936, inclusive, in respect of such life insurance?

3. What was the total amount of such life insurance which: (a) lapsed during each of said years on account of non-payment of premiums; (b) was surrendered by such policyholders in each of said years?

4. What was the total amount paid in respect of such insurance in each of said years: (a) to beneficiaries on the death of the insured; (b) to policyholders other than by way of loans on policies; (c) in loans to policyholders?

DOMINION VETERINARIES IN ALBERTA

Mr. QUELCH:

1. What is the number of dominion veterinaries operating in the province of Alberta?

2. What territory is covered by each?

3. What is the scope of work of the dominion veterinaries in the province of Alberta, and the cost of this service to the dominion government?

4. How is this work co-related to the provincial veterinary service, if at all?

RELIEF WORK PROJECTS

Mr. BLANCHETTE:

1. What sums of money have been allotted by the federal government in 1936 on relief work projects in conjunction with the various provincial governments?

2. What sum has been allotted by the federal government to each separate province for such projects?

TORONTO POST OFFICE

Mr. BAKER:

1. What was the total number of employees engaged on the sortation and mail at the Toronto terminal "A" post office in 1925, 1929, and 1936?

2. How many were permanently employed, and under what classifications, including supervisory positions?

3. How many were classed as temporary?

4. How many were part-time employees?

5. What were their daily periods, and what duties did these part-time employees perform?

Mr. BAKER:

What was the average daily load in pieces of mail during 1925, during 1929, and during 1936, including: (a) mail posted in Toronto and handled by sorting staffs, and (b) mail posted at outside points and received at Toronto for sorting and distribution?

PERMANENT LAW CLERKS, COUNSEL AND LEGAL ADVISERS

Mr. BOTHWELL:

What are the classifications and salary ranges of all law clerks, counsel and legal advisers on the permanent staffs of the several departments of the government?

CORNWALL, ONT., PUBLIC BUILDING

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. When was the post office building at Cornwall, in the county of Stormont, erected?

2. In that year, how many patrons were there, and what was the total revenue of the post office?

3. How many patrons were there in 1936, and what was the revenue that year?

4. How many departments of the government of Canada are housed in the post office building at Cornwall, and what arrangements have these various departments made with the Post Office Department as to leasing, taxes, heat, light, etc.?

5. When did the Department of National Revenue (then Customs) open an office in the post office building in Cornwall, and, in that year, what was the total customs revenue collected at the port of Cornwall?

6. What was the total customs revenue collected at the port of Cornwall in 1936?

7. In what year did a detachment of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police open an office at Cornwall in the post office building, and, in such year, how many cases were handled by that detachment?

8. How many were handled in 1936?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

JONES AVENUE, TORONTO, GRADE SEPARATION

Mr. CHURCH:

For a copy of all correspondence, reports and other documents, relating to grade separation at Jones avenue in the city of Toronto, including a copy of any correspondence or offers from the mayor and corporation of Toronto in this connection.

He said: I read in Hansard of Monday the objection of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) to all the correspondence being produced. I agree with him that it would be a heavy matter, as this has been described as the most dangerous crossing in Canada. I want only two copies of recent letters, one a copy of a letter from Mayor Robbins, proposing a new division of the cost of this work, and the reply of the government or the railway commission of a week ago to that letter. Subject to this amendment, I think the motion might pass. There is a vote of two and a half million dollars in the supplementary estimates for grade separation, although the letter received from Ottawa by the mayor a week ago, to which I have referred, says no funds have yet been voted this year.

I suggest that under the circumstances the motion might pass. Two other motions along similar lines were passed a month ago. If the minister has any objection I am willing to drop it.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): I have no objection, subject to the revision suggested.

ST. LAZARE, N.B., POSTMASTER

Mr. BROOKS:

For a copy of all reports, telegrams and correspondence, exchanged between the Post Office Department, the Postmaster General, the District Superintendent of Postal Service at Saint John, New Brunswick, and others, recommending the dismissal of the former postmaster and the appointment of the present incumbent at Saint-Lazare, Kent county, New Brunswick.

ST. FABIEN, N.B., POSTMASTER

Mr. BROOKS:

For a copy of all reports, telegrams and correspondence exchanged between the Post Office Department, the Postmaster General, the District Superintendent of Postal Service at Saint John, New Brunswick, and others, recommending the dismissal of the former postmaster and the appointment of the present incumbent at Saint-Fabien, Kent county, New Brunswick.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

REPORT OF DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE ON RELIEF CAMPS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it will perhaps be within the memory of some hon. members that the Department of National Defence filed an elaborate report on relief camps, up to 1935. When the government closed the camps I assume they made a further report of the manner in which they discharged their duties. While I do not suggest that a copy of the document be prepared, possibly the minister would lay upon the table of the house for reference purposes the report thus made. It would bring our information down to date in connection with the administration of the camps by the Department of National Defence.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should be glad indeed to look into the matter.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 9, consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. V. J. POTTIER (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the debate last night I attempted to show that we have approximately 200,000 square miles of fishing ground available to the fishermen of the maritime provinces; in other words, that we have nearly three times as large an area in fishing grounds as we have under cultivation.

I wish briefly to review the early history of our fisheries, in so far as they have reference to the maritime provinces. We find that since the discovery of America, fisheries have been a matter of vital importance in Canadian development. The first grant in connection with fisheries was made by the King of France to De Monts in the year 1603. Fishing, therefore, may well be regarded as one of the first industries prosecuted by Europeans in what is to-day the Dominion of Canada, and it has never ceased to yield a yearly harvest.

It is estimated that in the year 1550, or thereabouts, the combined fleets of all countries in the north Atlantic numbered about 1,500 vessels. The position of land adjoining the fishing banks was important only in so far as it provided a means of drying or curing fish products caught adjoining the said land. We go first to the island of Cape Breton and find the early village of Cheticamp. The territory was at that time under the control of the French. Next we come to the mainland of Nova Scotia, and note that at Liverpool in 1760 they had 16 fishing vessels. Port La Tour and the Pubnicos were important early fishing settlements. In 1713, for example, at Canso, with a population of about 1,000 persons, there were 100,000 quintals of fish caught. Proceeding to New Brunswick we find that in 1765 William Davidson established a salmon fishery on the Miramichi river. There were other fishing settlements at Grand Anse, Campo Bello, and Deer Islands. In Prince Edward Island they, too, had settlements connected with the early fishing industry.

I refer to that part of our history to-day because we in the maritime provinces hope there may be something in store for us in the future, because our industries are so well established and of such long duration.

The fisheries of the maritime provinces can be divided into three parts. We have what we know as the deep fisheries, the inshore fisheries and the inland fisheries. In my observations to-day I am going to deal with the production of what we describe as ground fish, caught by the first two methods—deep sea fishing and inshore fishing.

The principal kinds of ground fish caught are cod, haddock, halibut, and hake. The prosperity or depression of the fishermen has up to the present depended upon the extent of his catch of these types of fish. I am not unmindful of the fact that the lobster industry has in some districts developed into their principal industry. However, it is carried on only in certain seasons, and is limited as to quantity of production.

Other types of fishing—fishing for mackerel, sardines, salmon, smelts, alewives, sword fish, tuna, shell fish, scallops, oysters and clams are either carried on only during certain seasons or in certain areas. Taking the maritime province fisheries as a whole I am of opinion that they can be considered only as a complement of the main industry as above indicated. I do not wish to be understood as saying they are not important, because they mean a great deal to some districts, and in those districts their development must be attended to.

The remainder of my remarks will therefore be directed to a discussion of the general situation, in so far as the development of the ground fish, so-called, can be carried on. That is the direction in which parliament should apply itself particularly. I have before me indications of what has taken place in Canada in past five-year periods, in relation to cod. These figures, relating to catches and values of cod, are a fair indication of what has happened in connection with other species:

Year	Weight (pounds)	Landed value
1919..	260,677,000	$8,388,243
1924..	188,831,600	4,260,882
1929..	197,944,000	4,040,562
1931..	146,362,600	2,044,371

In 1936 the catch was 162,000,000 pounds, with a value of $2,030,000. In other words, in that one species alone, the value of the catch dropped from $8,388,000 to $2,030,000.

It is of interest to note that in the production of such fish the maritime provinces have not held their own with world production. I find that the production of cod in those countries which produce this type of fish is on the increase. In 1919 the fishermen of Norway caught 359,004,000 pounds. In 1927 the catch had increased to 808,649,000 pounds. In 1932 the catch totalled 661,746,000 pounds. In the Faroe islands they caught 99,888,000 pounds in 1919, and 148,968,000 pounds in 1932. In Iceland they caught 168,885,000 pounds in 1919 and 457,778,000 pounds in 1932. I could go on to show how other countries with which we have to compete have been increasing their production, while ours has been going down. The figures I give are the best available.

In my opinion these figures indicate three things. First, that Canada has gone back; second, that we have not held our own in world production; and third, that we have not kept step with European countries. This unhappy and unfortunate situation must come to an end. These figures tell the story of the maritime fisherman; they explain why we find him bankrupt and why the industry in some areas has taken on the appearance of failure.

The status of a large number of fishermen in the maritimes has become desperate. For example, in one district in my riding, which was once a prosperous and successful fishing district, the catch for 1935 followed this general trend. I want to see it improved. I should like to give some examples of the earnings of some of the fishing boats. I shall not give names, referring to them only by number. Boat number one, with a crew of 22 men, fished for fourteen weeks. It stocked $4,000, and the average share per man per week was $4. Boat number two, with a crew of 21 men, fished nine weeks. It stocked $2,272, and the average share per man per week was about $2. Boat number three, with a crew of 18 men, fished twenty-two weeks. It stocked $3,600, and the average share per man per week was about $1. Boat number four with a crew of 12 men, fished 13 weeks. It stocked $2,100 and the average share per man per week was $5.50. Boat number five, with a crew of six men, fished 13 weeks, and the average share per man per week was fifty cents.

As a further example of the public feeling in connection with this industry, I quote from the Halifax Herald:

> The shore fishing industry in Nova Scotia is down to hard rocks of want. They are crushed by an industry out of control, a juggernaut headed toward doom. They need help and it must be forthcoming.

The special investigations carried on by this Nova Scotia newspaper show the seriousness of the situation. In the end the reports published should help a great deal to bring about a new standard in the industry.

I could go on and give a word picture of the conditions existing in a number of districts where the fishermen have been the unfortunate victims of the vicious circle I have mentioned above. These districts were successful and prosperous at confederation, but now the families living therein are undernourished, the children hungry, and they are forced to live with little hope for the future in houses with leaky roofs on rocky points of land. I do not want to exaggerate and have the house think that this is a picture of every district in the maritimes. Some districts have been more fortunate than others, particularly those where a fresh fish trade has been developed. I felt obliged to give this picture because I am convinced that these conditions are not generally known, and that is one of the reasons why they are allowed to continue to exist. I have in mind one particular case where two fishermen were drowned during a storm. This was one instance where human effort and endurance were unable to withstand the elements, the hardships and hazards of the industry.

I am convinced that the fisheries of the maritime provinces have been neglected, particularly when I look around and see what other countries producing the same type of fish are doing. I should like to refer to the assistance given by other countries with which we compete. This assistance can be divided into three categories, direct assistance, indirect assistance and emergency relief. I find that direct assistance in connection with fishing operations is given by Germany and Japan. Assistance in connection with exports is given by Denmark, France, the Irish Free State, Italy, Newfoundland and Norway. Assistance in the construction of vessels is given by Germany, Japan and Newfoundland. Assistance in the repair of vessels is given by Germany and Japan. Assistance through the establishment of freezing plants is given by Japan and Norway. Other direct assistance is given by Italy, Japan and Newfoundland.

Indirect assistance by way of government loans and guarantees is given by Denmark, France, Germany, Iceland, the Irish Free State, Italy, The Netherlands, Newfoundland, Norway, Portugal, the United Kingdom and the United States. Assistance by way of home market promotion is given by Denmark, France, Germany and Japan. Assistance by way of preferential transportation rates is given by Germany and Newfoundland. Tax or duty exemption is given by Italy, Japan, Mexico, Newfoundland, the United Kingdom and the United States. Other indirect assistance is given by Italy, Japan, Mexico, Newfoundland and Norway. Emergency relief is provided by Germany, Great Britain and the United States.

Let us see what Canada has done. We have the Fisherman's Loan Act which was passed in 1935, but I understand that up to the present time no loans have been made under this act. This country gives no assistance in connection with exports or in connection with the construction of vessels. We give no assistance in the repair of vessels nor have we any provision for emergency relief. I am not forgetting the item voted for the development of deep sea fisheries, as well as the vote of $500,000 last year for general relief. Under that vote all that a fisherman in my constituency could get was a loan of $20 added to a similar amount given by the province of Nova Scotia. Even that small amount was the first he has been able to borrow in connection with his industry. I make no reference to the $160,000 granted under the Halifax award as I consider that to represent simply the interest on money that belongs to us. I cannot treat it as being assistance given by this government.

I should like to mention some other features which have had an effect upon the fishermen in the maritime provinces. We lost the best market we ever had when the Fordney-McCumber tariff was put into effect in the United States. Russia and Germany, which countries were formerly importers of fish, taking the surplus products of Holland, Great Britain, Norway and France, have now built up fishing fleets and have forced these other countries to find other markets. These countries have entered the West Indies and South American markets, as well as the markets of Spain and Portugal, displacing Canada. This has been possible through force of circumstances and by means of the assistance provided by their governments. The immigration laws of the United States prevent our fishermen from signing on American fishing vessels, as was the custom in former years. This has meant that an increased number of fishermen have had to remain in Canada. Then the beam trawler has thrown a large number of fishermen out of employment, as by this method of fishing a smaller number of men are employed to catch the same amount of fish.

As a result of these and other causes what do we find regarding the export of these products to other countries? I will refer briefly to purchases by three countries to which the Atlantic coast exports cod and other fish:

	1920-1921	1935
Cuba (cod, pollock, hake, cusk)	$1,431,704	$236,872
Porto Rico (cod, haddock, herring)	1,169,609	332,805
Brazil (cod, herring)	1,202,207	53,409

Taking it in another way, of the dried cod species alone we exported:

	1920-1921	1935
Cuba	$1,383,628	$228,986
Porto Rico	946,009	271,328
Brazil	1,080,093	9,372

I submit that those figures go to show why the fisherman of the maritime provinces finds himself in the position in which he is. They relate to only a few of the importing countries, but they indicate the general trend.

Up to the present time the federal policy under all governments has been one of regulation and control; in other words, a policy of restrictions and reservations. This has come about, presumably, because of the interpretation placed upon the words "sea coast and inland fisheries," as under the British North America Act those subjects were passed on to the federal government, and the result to the fisherman has been the same confusion and controversy that has occurred in respect of a number of other industries; he has suffered in no small degree since confederation by reason of this question of jurisdiction. When however we examine the developments since confederation, we find that the federal government has realized that the responsibility for taking care of the industry rests with the dominion government. For a long time there was a great deal of uncertainty as to the proprietary rights in fisheries, whether they belonged to the dominion or the provinces. In the British Columbia Fisheries Case and in other cases, it was decided that the fisheries rights in tidal waters belonged to the people of Canada as a whole rather than the dominion or the provinces. For that reason the federal government stated, in effect: We will attend only to regulation. The provincial governments, on the other hand, claimed that they had nothing to do with the matter. The result was that the fisherman found himself between the two jurisdictions, with no one agency to look after his welfare or to promote the development of the industry.

In considering what has happened since confederation, I think the federal government has admitted that responsibility for the fisheries rests with it. We find that by an award under the provisions of the Treaty of Washington, $4,500,000 was paid by the government of the United States for the right to take fish in the maritime provinces. The dominion government still retains that money; it is part of the consolidated revenue in the federal treasury.

A small item appears in the estimates each year for the development of the deep sea fisheries. Besides this, a commission was appointed by parliament to examine, in particular, into the maritime fisheries. If this government has no jurisdiction and no responsibility, why was the McLean commission appointed in 1927 to make a report to the federal government? I submit that when all is taken into consideration it must be realized that the dominion government have admitted responsibility; they have led the provinces to believe that they would assume the duty of developing the industry and enabling it to carry on. It may be of interest to note that in the last investigation, by the price spreads commission, the following reference was made to the maritime fisheries:

> The investigation of the commission found a continuation of the conditions in 1927, though perhaps in a more accentuated form.

There is no doubt that in 1927 this industry was in jeopardy. It is not a question arising out of the depression; the very existence of the fishing industry is jeopardized. I submit therefore that this government must accept responsibility, that the development of the fisheries in the maritime provinces has become a matter of national emergency and national concern.

[Mr. Pottier.]

We of the maritimes had great hopes at the time of confederation. I think it was Joseph Howe who said that we were "leaving a country that had a past to join a country that had only a future." I am afraid that so far as the fishing industry is concerned, we have cause to feel that nothing has been gained. Canada uses only twenty-seven per cent of the production of the fisheries. We have to look to export trade for the balance, and I suggest that our national thought has been more to the development of our other primary products and industries.

The condition of this industry has been recognized, I believe, by all parties in this house. I quote from a speech of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) just previous to the last election, as reported by the Halifax Herald of October 4, 1935, while he was speaking at Bridgewater, in the constituency of the then minister of fisheries, Mr. Ernst:

> Turning his attention to fisheries policies of the Conservative party, the Prime Minister declared an immediate survey of the entire industry was essential to spur the industry along a forward march of progress.

The remedies he suggested were:

> "First: We must have better knowledge of the requirements of the people who buy our fish. . . .
>
> Second: trade commissioners should have complete knowledge of the fisheries. . . .
> Third: we must find out how most we can assist the fishermen. I confess I do not know. I tell you frankly. . . .
> Fourth: we shall continue extensive advertising to make your fish better known."

So that the leader of the opposition, when he was Prime Minister, acknowledged and realized that the industry was in such peril that he recommended an immediate survey, and he admitted he did not know what remedies should be applied to assist the individual fisherman.

Another indication of the condition of this industry is that the government of Nova Scotia on its own responsibility has been carrying on investigations. I suggest to hon. members that they read the Note on the Fisheries Industry issued by the Economic Council of the province of Nova Scotia in October and November 1936. I congratulate the premier of that province upon the interest he is showing in this matter.

There seems to be no question about the gravity of the situation. It is generally admitted by everyone who has any knowledge of the industry, including members of the various parties in this house, that the maritime fisherman is in a pitiful condition.

I realize that it would be unreasonable for me to ask for discrimination in his favour.

A country must be run by definite policies; otherwise everything will end in chaos. We cannot favour one against the other. I therefore propose briefly that we follow the policy adopted to take care of another primary producer in another part of Canada—the farmer of the west. I do not want any of my remarks to be interpreted as criticizing anything that has been done or is being done to help the western farmer. I refer to the details simply to indicate the policy that has been followed, and I ask that the same policy be applied in behalf of the fishermen of the maritime provinces.

Let us look at what has been happening in the last few years. We find that in 1934, chapter 36, there were amendments to the Canadian Farm Loan Act, an act passed some years ago to provide loans to farmers. I think it can be fairly said that in a large measure, at least, those amendments were introduced to take care of a condition that was developing in the Canadian west.

Going on to 1935, we find an act providing for a Canadian Wheat Board, chapter 53 of that year. The outstanding feature of that act was the power given to the government to buy and sell wheat. They were going a step further. They were going to buy the product in order to save the individual farmer, but that was not sufficient. In the same year they went still further, enacting a rehabilitation act for the benefit of the prairie provinces. What was the idea of that? It was to rehabilitate the individual farmer. We find that the government went yet another step and enacted the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, another measure to assist the farmer to carry on, helping him to the extent of enabling him to pay his bills in the amount that he could afford, the balance to be taken care of by compromise.

In connection with these policies with regard to wheat and rehabilitation, I would quote the remarks of the Prime Minister of that day (Mr. Bennett), to be found at page 3457 of Hansard of 1935. Referring to the necessity for the wheat board the right hon. gentleman gave the following explanation to parliament:

> I think possibly I should say that once in this country we had a grain board brought about, of course, by the exigencies of the war. The situation at the present time, without going into the matter in detail, is that this country has not been able to market all its wheat...
> The essential fact for us to recall is that the countries of Europe which during the war did not produce wheat found themselves dependent upon the countries which did increase their production, notably Canada, and that unfortunately for us for some strange reason, we did not realize that in 1925, 1926, 1927, 1928, 1929 and 1930 the countries of Europe had recovered their pre-war position—not only recovered it, but greatly strengthened it, and were supplying not only their own requirements but were also on an export basis.
> Under these circumstances the position was a very simple one. The question was whether or not chaos should reign in respect to the largest industry we have, in point of value of exports, or whether something should be done to endeavour to save it from the chaotic condition prevailing. Something was done.

In other words, the wheat board was brought into existence to save the individual wheat grower, and therefore to save the industry. For this purpose the government went into the market to buy and sell wheat. I submit that the policy adopted by the previous government was to help out the farmers of the west, because the industry had to be saved from the chaotic conditions then prevailing.

I pass next to the policy adopted by parliament when the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act was passed. As indicated in Hansard of 1935 at page 2604, Hon. Mr. Weir, then Minister of Agriculture, on that occasion said:

> Throughout the whole program it is our purpose to assist the farmers, and to demonstrate whether or not the people in these areas can continue to live there with only very little more moisture than they are now receiving. Our first aim is to do everything possible to make these people self-sustaining. Secondly, we must decide which areas are best suited for grain growing, which are best suited for ranching and the best way to handle those areas which are intermediate.
> The basis of our work is a study of the people who have farmed in the district and who have made use of trees and dams and grasses and cultural methods, and then after an analysis and a summing up of what the experts so-called have felt were the most important factors in each case, they will be able to place before a committee of farmers themselves in each province information that will be the basis on which all the work will be done.

The policy of helping the individual was being developed, and a further step in that direction was apparently the effort to restore confidence in the people and to help make them self-sustaining. The other day the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) —I refer the house to Hansard, pages 779 and 780—when discussing an amendment to the rehabilitation bill recognized the policy laid down by the previous government, and he went I submit a step still further. He hinted that the farmer might be moved from one district to another. An effort was to be made to find a proper home for him if necessary. I suggest that we have gone a long way in our endeavour to help this primary producer. First we have lent him money; secondly, we have erected government institutions for the purchase and sale of his product; thirdly, we have passed the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act to take care of his debts; fourthly, we have passed the rehabilitation act to rehabilitate him; and in the last place we are getting ready to find a proper home for him to move into.

I am not saying for a moment that all this is wrong, nor do I envy the farmer for anything that has been done for him. All I am asking is that the fisherman in the general shuffle of policies should be given a square deal.

I could go on to deal with other primary producers who have been helped by the policies of the government but time does not permit. I do not suggest that the farmer has been singled out for special treatment to the exclusion of the fisherman in particular. But let us see what has been done for the fisherman. In 1935 we passed a fisherman's loan act for the benefit of fishermen, but very few loans have been made under it, although many people in my constituency have asked me to assist and recommend them for loans. I suggest that the act should be amended to make loans possible not only on house mortgages but on the security of fishermen's equipment.

In the maritimes there are 41,000 fishermen representing a dependent population of about 200,000, and I suggest to the government that a maritime provinces fisheries rehabilitation act be passed for the maritime provinces to provide machinery and money so as to accomplish, at any rate in part, the following: 1. A survey of the industry; 2. provision for machinery for the proper equipment of the fishermen; 3. an improvement in conditions so as to give the individual fisherman a better return for his labour; 4. the provision of fishermen's emergency relief, when required; and 5, the bringing about of better conditions that will save the industry from the chaotic conditions that now prevail.

I have read several times the words of the Hon. George Brown spoken on one occasion at Quebec. He said:

> It may be that some among us will yet live to see the day when as a result of this measure a great and powerful people may have grown up on these lands—when the boundless forests all around us shall have given way to smiling fields and thriving towns, and when one united government under the British flag shall extend from shore to shore.

I am convinced that unless something is done in the ways I have indicated we shall have no thriving towns and smiling fields on the shores of the maritime provinces, but instead villages gone and forgotten with cellars remaining only as gaping monuments of days gone by.

Mr. W. H. MOORE (Ontario): May I at the outset offer my congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) on his presentation of the budget. We have had many wonderfully good ministers of finance in this country, and not the least in ability is the present incumbent of the office. Finance ministers have a special burden, particularly at this time in Canada—a debtor country trying to remain solvent. Canada has always, or at least in recent years, imposed unusual burdens upon its finance minister. We have a mania for tariff changes. I wonder if the minister could enumerate in the course of committee proceedings the changes that have taken place in the items we are to consider, going back, let us say, over the last six years. If the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) cared to do so we could go back to the days of cut flowers and cast iron pipe. But we have a peculiar condition in this country. I know of no country in which the two major parties are divided in regard to their countries economic boundaries—and tariff schedules are the economic boundaries of a country. It seems to me we have an impossible position, impossible for business and impossible for politics. Business is of the long run; political life, as we know, is of the short run.

To-day in what I have to say I want to confine myself almost entirely to the trade treaty between Canada and the United Kingdom. I am one of those who voted against what was called the Ottawa agreements in 1932. In fact I voted against it several times, and I gave my reasons. I voted against it most sincerely and after very careful thought, and during this debate I have waited to observe if my reasons then were wrong, or if conditions had changed, or if this agreement is different from the one I voted against in 1932. I see no reason to change my view. In 1932 I expressed my doubts as to the efficacy of making tariffs by treaty, the so-called conventional tariff. It was the first way in which tariffs were made, as I read my history, and it was not a good way. Trade treaties in the seventeenth century were associated with trade wars. No, it was not a good way of making tariffs and it passed out not only because of international complications but because of the growth of liberalism, and of course I use that word not in the narrow party sense. I would have used the word democracy, but it has become so hackneyed that one scarcely knows what it means. I use the word liberalism as opposed to state socialism, fascism, dictatorship or autocracy.

Then we made a second step towards the liberal treatment of our economic boundaries. We not only had consideration by members of parliament but we formed a tariff board, and that board existed for a dual purpose. In the first place it provided for direct representation of those who wished to have changes made in the tariff. The manufacturers could come, the consumers could come—they were ably represented at one time by a present member of this house; labour could come; in fact everybody who wanted the tariff moved up or down appeared or had the right to appear before the board upon the say-so of the minister of finance. That was the Liberal way.

Then we had a change of government and we had no tariff board for a while. The other day I exonerated the leader of the opposition of the charge of having dismissed the chairman of the old board. We all remember, however, that the board disappeared, and then we had tariff changes. And we had a treaty made with the United Kingdom. In the last election campaign I confess that I protested against that way of making tariffs. I protested against bringing down tariff changes without information being given to the members of this house in due time so that they could consider the changes that were proposed to be made in our trade relations. Under the old regime we had a copy of the report of the tariff board laid on the table. At one time we had one on woollens; I asked for a copy when it came down. There was only one copy and I kept it until the day before we voted, therefore I know the rest of the members did not have much chance to read it.

Then there was another change. The Liberal party came in. We had a treaty made with Washington, with no reference to the tariff board. The tariff was revised on more than half of the trade of this country without reference to the members of this house. It became law by order in council. That was a step away from liberalism, at least the liberalism that I believe in. Some one may tell me, and I have been told, that the end justified the means. I wonder whether our grandfathers and the men of '37 would have said the end justifies the means. They say that in Europe to-day, but I doubt whether it is true. I am told that I shall find the proof in the statistics. Well, I was interested the other day in what the leader of the opposition said about the increase of trade between Canada and the United States since the treaty was made. I took the January figures and I found there had been an increase of some $3,000,000 of our exports in January. Then I went over the items and I found that increase was more than made up by items that were free before the treaty was made and were free afterwards. We ought to have an analysis. It is beyond the power of any individual member to make an analysis of that kind; I hope the Minister of Finance will have one made for us.

As I say, I exonerated the leader of the opposition the other day from one serious charge, and I am going to exonerate him from another. When he was prime minister it was said he drove a hard bargain with the United Kingdom. Well really, in my opinion he did not drive a good bargain. The figures may appear to carry out the idea of a hard bargain. Great Britain in 1935 imported £56,000,000 worth of goods from Canada; in 1936, £75,000,000. The exports to Canada were £22,500,000 and £24,300,000 respectively. That seems to be a great inequality. So some may say the Prime Minister drove a hard bargain. Well, he was not acting for the United States; he did not drive a hard bargain for the United States. Nobody drove a hard bargain for the United States, because the United States did not make a trade treaty with the United Kingdom. Let me give you some more figures. The United Kingdom imported from the United States in 1935, £87,500,000 worth of goods and in 1936, £93,300,000 worth; they exported to the United States in 1935, £30,000,000 worth and in 1936, £33,300,000 worth. So there you have about the same inequality. And you have the explanation if you consider the items of trade. There is a reason for it, and there is a particular reason for it the last two or three years—Great Britain has had a building boom. Great Britain is preparing for rearmament and has had to import materials. I want to be fair to the old agreement, and I point out—I would have asked to put these figures on Hansard without reading them, but perhaps that is unnecessary—I point out that our position in the credits and the debits of trade between Canada and the United Kingdom has been improved since 1933. I have the figures for 1933 and 1934, they are not as great as they were between 1926 and 1928. In a general way our credit gain with the United Kingdom is balanced by our debit with the United States. Running over the figures, there is a remarkable relation in these figures between the trade of the two countries.

Now I come to an issue that to me is the kernel of our whole situation. It is my opinion that the world is in transition from an old condition which began, let us say, about 1800, to another era, and I cannot see that this measure is making a proper provision to correct the causes of our depression and the world's, or to provide us with the economic structure which in my opinion we must have for the future. The old idea was national exchange of commodities. I was brought up on it as taught by Adam Smith, as was my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. It was specialization of production, and exchange of products between nations. You had in the world two sets of countries, agricultural countries and industrial countries. Reading the other day a book by the great Swedish economist Ohlin, he said such trade has been extraordinarily profitable. Profitable for whom? You will find that the industrial countries are the creditor nations and the agricultural countries, almost invariably, are the debtor nations.

I disagree with much that has been said in this house as to the cause of the depression. It seems to be a common view here and in the country generally, I have heard it from all sides of politics, that we had a depression because of high tariffs which were imposed just before the depression, say some three or four years before. Then we had a stoppage of trade. Well, that is not borne out by the figures. We had high tariffs against agriculture; they began in 1925, when we had a low tariff party in this country. But here are the figures, for what they are worth, of world trade. Between 1883 and 1913 the world's trade increased at the rate of 3·6 per cent, which was just about in proportion to the increase of basic production of the several nations. From 1908 to 1913 you have an increase annually of 4·5 per cent. From 1925 to 1929, just on the verge of the depression, you had an increase in the world's trade of 4·85 per cent. Now, plainly, if these figures are right there were other causes at work, and personally I regard tariffs as merely a symptom of something deeper, something which we in this house ought to study very carefully. I wonder if I may read a statement by Professor Ohlin as to the cause of the depression. I think those in this house who follow the international economists will agree that Ohlin's name stands very high, and more than that, he is a disciple of the classical theory of trade: He says:

> The origin of the agricultural crisis date back to the war of 1914-1918; the chief cause of the crisis is to be found in the production of cereals, in particular, wheat. The area under cultivation declined in Europe, while increasing in the United States, Australia, Canada and the Argentine, from 32 million hectares during the five years immediately preceding the war to 46 million hectares during the period 1926-1929.

Now that is not Ohlin's opinion alone; that is the opinion of the agriculture committee of the League of Nations, as contained in the 1931 report on the agricultural crisis. Ohlin then goes on to give the figures of increase of wheat lands as compared with other cereals:

	Wheat	Other cereals	Totals
1909-13	63,500	131,200	194,700
1920-24	69,000	130,400	199,400
1925-29	74,300	133,800	208,100

(thousand hectares)

He then says:

> Evidently, in the years following the war, the production of wheat tended to exceed the quantities that could be sold at prices affording farmers the customary returns and standard of living. This was not, however, realized until 1928-29. But even then no attempt was made to adapt the output to the new conditions.

I must confess that I cannot find in this measure any attempt to meet that exceedingly difficult position.

Yes, we have come to a new era throughout the world and in this country. In 1932, I think it was, the leader of the opposition—he will correct me if I am wrong—made a statement which changed our whole outlook on life in this country economically.

Mr. DUNNING: That is a big responsibility!

Mr. MOORE: A hundred years ago Malthus said that no man had any right to support from any quarter except his parents. And in 1931 the then Prime Minister said in this house that no one should be allowed to perish.

Mr. BENNETT: Except himself.

Mr. MOORE: Except himself. Well, that was some years ago, and I am glad to say the right hon. gentleman is still very lively. You have a change there, a change which has come over us. It is only a matter of degree, from state socialism to fascism, all the way to us, and probably we have been less affected than most countries. But now we have the responsibility of the state for our individual life.

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. member was asking a question I believe I would say that in dealing with the depression I think I said the government would not permit any man in the country to be without food, shelter, or clothing. My memory is that that was the sense of it, anyway.

Mr. MOORE: Yes, that was my memory of it, and there was no objection. We who then sat on the other side of the house raised no objection. As I listened to-day to the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare (Mr. Pottier) who just preceded me I could not help thinking of those statements, as he talked about the liabilities of the country and the responsibility of the Minister of Finance to the fishermen. We have come to a new era, which means among other things that debtor countries cannot afford to risk specialization.

After citing the figures of agricultural income for representative countries, the League Survey of 1934-35 concludes:

It is clear that the fall in agricultural income was least in those countries where farming is a sheltered industry producing mainly for the home market, greater in those countries which produced manufactured food products such as meat and dairy produce, and greatest on those, such as Canada and Hungary, which exported mainly grains and vegetable raw material.

I believe we should lay aside some of our preconceived theories. I believe we should think of the great lessons of the depression and of the need for a balanced economy. The leader of the opposition has just given us a statement of what he promised those who were down and out. Well, you have to draw upon the Minister of Finance, you have to draw upon the treasury, not only of the dominion but of the provinces. I am glad to say that balances look better these days—the last two or three days, at any rate. But there does come a time when the supply dries up. There does come a time when idleness eats into the hearts of men. Then you have a social problem, and there comes a time when the problem is no longer economic, when politicians must ask themselves how they are going to put these people to work.

Our tariffs set out our economic boundaries. We have to think very carefully as to the future relation of our foreign and domestic trade. I should like very much to have gone into some of the details—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. MOORE: —but I do not want to take too much of the time of the house. Particularly should I like to speak about wheat. I have an idea—and I may be quite wrong—that the preference on wheat under the Ottawa agreements of 1932 was the bait for the pact. I think the then prime minister rather hinted at it, and I have the idea that this government has been attracted by the idea of a preference on wheat.

Mr. BENNETT: Sir Wilfrid was.

Mr. DUNNING: By a free market for it.

Mr. MOORE: You got a preference for it, but of what use is that preference? Am I to understand that it is of some use, or that it is of no use?

Mr. DUNNING: That is arguable; a free market is certainly valuable.

Mr. MOORE: Well, let me quote the argument of a celebrated economist. Possibly the leader of the opposition will remember the statement to which I am about to refer. I am quoting Doctor Benham, who made this statement at a conference in Milan just prior to the Ottawa conference of 1932:

Canada and Australia together export more wheat than Great Britain consumes. What does that mean? Supposing Great Britain said: We will put on a tariff of 100 per cent or 1,000 per cent, or we will prohibit all foreign wheat, it would not help the Canadians and Australians one little bit as long as they competed with one another, because Canada and Australia together produce more wheat than Great Britain consumes. In any case, some of the wheat would have to be sold outside, and if a Canadian producer can get a little more in England than he can get somewhere else, then he will send his wheat to England, and therefore the price of Canadian and Australian wheat in England would be kept down at the world level.

Then Doctor Benham winds up by saying:

For those two reasons I see nothing important which will be done at Ottawa.

I am inclined to think nothing very important to our advantage was done in 1932, and I hold the same view to-day.

Now I go further and say that I believe every government has mandates from the people. I think the present government had two or three of them, the first of which was to restore responsible government—what we believe was responsible government,—and in my opinion they have not done it. Mandate number two was to provide profitable jobs for Canadians. We all know whether they have or have not done that. Then there is a third mandate, one which confronts every government, and that which I believe is an important one, namely good relations within the empire and without. I wonder if an imperial economic pact is designed to bring good relations within the empire? I do not wish to say anything against the right hon. gentleman who was the prime minister in 1932, but when he was dealing with Mr. Baldwin it seems to me both of them had some cards up their sleeves that were not altogether disclosed.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not familiar with cards; I do not understand them.

Mr. MOORE: Well, there are all kinds of cards. We know that the mother country is a wonderful thing, and I have every respect for it; but mother is a sharp trader.

Mr. DUNNING: I agree with that, at any rate.

Mr. MOORE: And the Minister of Finance agrees. When they came here with their experts, and filled the Chateau to overflowing, they came after having arranged to subsidize the production of wheat in Great Britain. Of course that was known to the then prime minister of Canada. That had two effects, and I want hon. members to think of them, because the condition still exists. The first effect was to increase the quantity of wheat. When the arrangement was put into operation Great Britain was producing only about fifteen per cent of its supply of wheat; the last records show that they now produce about twenty-five per cent. There is another effect. They take part of that subsidy from the Canadian wheat grower through an excise tax on flour. The proceeds of that tax are distributed to their own wheat growers. That is their business, but what about our business? I wonder what the Englishman would say if we put a tax on all textiles coming in from the United Kingdom and distributed it to our small mills or, if you prefer, to our homespun textile industry? I wonder if the Englishman would think we were guilty of sharp practice? I wonder if he would think that we were mitigating to some extent the reductions in tariff that were given? The old country provided—I think the prime minister of the day slipped up a bit—against any combination on our part that would destroy or hold back the sale of wheat in England at world prices. That is the argument Doctor Benham used.

The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) says he is not accustomed to cards, but he appears to have had one up his sleeve. He said he would fix the world price by having a controlled price. I suppose that was all in the game. But Great Britain also had a card up her sleeve. There is more than one way of providing a preference. The Minister of Finance will remember the treaty made with the Argentine in 1933, immediately after the other agreements went into effect. Under that treaty provision was made for a loan, which really was the equivalent of a preference, to assist in the exportation of agricultural products, including wheat, from the Argentine to the United Kingdom.

Mr. BENNETT: And the export of machinery from England.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. MOORE: Yes. I shall not give a lot of statistics as to what happened, but I should like to quote one statement made before the imperial economic committee in 1936:

> During the period under review the United Kingdom has been a steady purchaser of cereals. Although the United Kingdom taxed foreign wheat 2s. per quarter late in 1932 as a result of the Ottawa agreements, imports of foreign wheat have increased each year since then, while imports from the empire have fallen in 1934 and 1935.

We could go on and talk of the drought in western Canada, but it must be remembered that they had a serious drought in the Argentine. It is only my own opinion, but when everything is considered I doubt the value of a preference on wheat.

Mr. DUNNING: But you admit the value of a free market?

Mr. MOORE: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: It was always free except during the South African war.

Mr. MOORE: I do not want anyone to think that I am prejudiced against trade with Great Britain. I think sometimes we politicians on both sides of the house are the object of suspicions which we do not deserve. I want to quote a word or two by some political philosophers as to the political effect of the Ottawa agreements. In 1933, immediately after the agreements had been effected, there was a meeting of the International Institute of Intellectual Cooperation. This meeting was held in London, and if we are ever to find political philosophers surely they should be found at a convention of the International Institute of Intellectual Cooperation.

Mr. BENNETT: Its headquarters are in Paris.

Mr. MOORE: It is a branch of the league of nations. Professor Jacob Viner, of Chicago, was there. I understand that this gentleman used to be a Canadian, at least a British subject. He said:

> I feel convinced there is no future for the British Empire on the basis of quid pro quo imperialism. If they try systematically to make mutual profit out of their empire, they will find that Britishers are too good bargainers to remain good friends. That is a matter which used of right to be of concern to me. Perhaps I should not longer speak on such questions. They are perhaps private matters.

Let us have an Englishman's view. I quote Professor Bailey, of London university, who said:

> Nothing in the history of the British commonwealth of nations is more likely to disrupt the association between the various partners than the recently concluded Ottawa agreements.

Professor Coatman, who was in the chair, had this to say:

The outlook was dark in those days and it was natural, in view of the great unemployment here and in Canada, that the minds of men should be dominated by this short term policy of trade agreements and so on.

We are now asked to make, shall I say, a permanent arrangement. We are being asked to take the second step in economic imperialism. Somehow I think that we within the British Empire will be able to get along. We are pretty good friends, but the Ottawa agreements have a direct effect on the world's present hazardous position. There is no doubt about that. Professor Von Beckerath, who was speaking for Germany, had this to say at the same conference:

Although the Ottawa agreements may be consonant with the Zeitgeist, we cannot at the same time believe them to be objectively good. The interesting argument was put forward that in the long run the whole world economic order must profit by a procedure by which the economic situation and productivity within the realm of the British Empire gets better. Under certain conditions that is a small consolation for certain countries who are only interested in making sure of their share.

Economists should bear these factors in mind when planning a new economic world order. There are members of that world order who are sick, and one cannot, without causing great harm in the long run, act on the assumption that all the members are strong and well when such a condition does not exist.

I was interested the other day in the little passage at arms as to who had been the better essayist, the man who wrote the agreements of 1932 or the man who wrote the agreement of 1937, on the question whether economic imperialism or the pact of 1932 or the pact of 1937 will lead to greater world trade, and I was interested in this statement in the London Economist, which journal, I think everybody will admit, is practically the organ of international liberalism:

The British government, acting within the letter of the most-favoured-nation clause but scarcely within its spirit, concluded the Ottawa agreements, which effectively imposed fresh handicaps on the trade of many countries with Britain and her dominions and empire. The inevitable reaction to the Ottawa gesture, and to the new British tariff accompanying it, was that the countries most affected proceeded to strengthen their own barriers. Ottawa had, in fact, quite the opposite effect to that which Mr. Baldwin declared to be its intention—namely, to loosen the shackles of world trade.

Let hon. members carry their minds back to world conditions in 1932. They will remember that Japan was stretching out her hands for a new empire in Asia. They will remember the bold steps that were taken, and the defiance of the League of Nations. Those who keep in touch with the publication Pacific Affairs will remember that the Japanese stated in effect: We are going to do as Britain has done. It is only a step to trace the movement to Italy and on to Germany, and then to remember that Ottawa led the way. I have no desire to exaggerate, and when I make a statement of that kind I want to give some tangible evidence. If hon. members will turn up the League of Nations Survey for 1934-35 they will find that it refers to the conference that was held in Paris in 1935 to tighten the bonds of the French empire, and the League's observers say that that conference was called a "French Ottawa." The league observers go on to relate the trade agreements in which the nations of the world sought to protect themselves from the consequences of our new imperialism, and they wind up with this conclusion:

The list of these agreements is very long and as they follow each other in rapid succession, their practical effect is not only restrictive of trade but leads irresistibly to a greater degree of state control.

And may I add, war. You have to-day a division of the nations, and you say it is socialist, fascist and liberal. Well, Russia is all for peace. We of the British Empire are all for peace. The United States is for peace. It is the "have-nots" that are for war. When we made a preferential pact, though we had the old preference before, we have affected the psychology of nations. It is all very well to say, and I have no doubt the Minister of Finance will say, that every nation—Germany, Italy and the rest—is able to buy our wheat on a free market; they do not need to put tariffs against it. Quite true, but they have to have means of payment, and we have given Great Britain, their industrial rival, a preference in the means of payment.

Mr. DUNNING: We have done so for forty years.

Mr. MOORE: As I suggested a little while ago, when the whole empire is brought together, a psychological effect is produced different from that resulting from individual preferences under the old arrangement made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. BENNETT: The other dominions gave preferences.

Mr. MOORE: Yes, the others gave preferences too.

Mr. DUNNING: For many years.

Mr. MOORE: May I follow that thought? You had a different condition after the war. Before the war London was the world's banker, lending money all over the globe, and half of it to foreign countries. When, in 1932, Great Britain and the dominions came together, a very different condition existed. Great Britain had lost some of her credit. The United States, the world's new banker, would not allow the peoples to pay their debts in goods. In the old days Canada and the dominions provided practically an open door for immigration, but after the war that door was closed. That was the atmosphere in which the Ottawa agreements were devised and which we to-day are asked, I take it, to perpetuate. I do not feel that I can support them. I do not believe that the Canadian people as a whole have realized the responsibility those agreements entail. I doubt whether from the debate a few days ago this house is prepared to defend a pact of economic imperialism. But surely we cannot leave others to defend the trade routes for which we have bargained! We cannot be a party to economic imperialism and then run away from its defence! We cannot contribute to the cause of war and then run away from war.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Kootenay East): In the opening session of this parliament, somewhat over a year ago, I told a number of Liberal members, many of whom were then entering the house for the first time, that they had a magnificent opportunity to render a great service to Canada, but I wondered whether sooner or later they would not find that their individual convictions conflicted with party expediency, and whether in all probability the latter would not prevail. At that time I assured the government that if they would use their unparalleled majority to remedy some of the domestic problems and grievances and injustices that were noticeably prevalent I would support them. We are now, Mr. Speaker, approaching the end of the second session, and we are justified in asking this question: Has the government, with its unequalled opportunity and its huge majority, been true to the confidence imposed in it by the people? In other words, is it keeping faith? The views I shall express this afternoon will be offered rather in a spirit of warning than of condemnation, but I wish to call attention to certain things which in my opinion should engage the attention of parliament. In doing so I say to the minister at once that any apparent criticism I offer is not directed at him personally, because I do recognize that he is an able administrator of his department. I believe he has devoted his strength and energy to the discharge of his duties. But having said that, I do not think it necessarily follows that I must agree with the policies he has enunciated on behalf of the government or with all that he has said in the name of the government in the course of his budget. Before I proceed let me express to my hon. friend who has just taken his seat, the member for Ontario (Mr. Moore), my admiration of the manner in which he always presents his thoughts. A little later I have some remarks to make on the British agreement and I will reserve until then anything I have to say to him. I shall probably refer to his remarks then. I hope therefore he will not think I am neglecting him at the moment.

Mr. MOORE: Not at all.

Mr. STEVENS: The annual budget, I presume, is intended to give to parliament a broad picture of the country's economic condition and to indicate policies for the removal of such grievances as may exist. This budget, I submit with all due respect to the minister, was perhaps the longest, and apart from the presentation of the British agreement, about as barren a budget as any I have listened to in twenty-six years—not barren perhaps of reports of conditions, which reports were most admirably given, but barren of real remedies for internal or domestic problems which I know are agitating the minds not only of members opposing the government but of members sitting on the other side.

Let me invite hon. members, particularly my Liberal friends, to put to themselves a few pertinent questions. What hope is offered in this budget to the unemployed toilers of the country? What assurances are there to the struggling farmers of relief from exploitation? What solace is there to the harassed business man who finds himself little more than a tax collecting agency for the government? Business men in this house know very well that this description of the average modern business man is perhaps as nearly correct as any description could be.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh no.

Mr. STEVENS: The minister says "Oh no," but I have talked with scores and scores of business men who, with the innumerable reports, tax schedules and so on, which they are obliged to make out, are little more than tax collecting agencies for the government.

Mr. DUNNING: Their income tax returns do not show it.

Mr. STEVENS: The other day I was talking to a prominent business man who told me that his business had increased over fifty per cent in 1936, but that he had made less and had worked harder for it; and he gave as the reason that increased taxation and harassing measures imposed by provincial, municipal and dominion governments were occupying the time and attention of the staff to the exclusion of the business of the company.

What answer is given to the repeated declarations of certain of the provinces that they cannot carry on the responsibilities placed upon them in social services and other lines, the relief of unemployment and all these other problems, with the revenues they are able to collect at the present time? That problem is before parliament; it is before the government; and nothing in this budget indicates a policy that will afford relief. I ask: What does the government propose to do about the continuing national railways deficit? And again we are bound to say that the budget gives us no answer.

I do not intend to deal with unemployment or the devastating relief charges, because they have been debated in the house for the last week. I will say nothing in that regard except this, that there is no current policy of the government that would indicate any permanent remedy for this condition of unemployment, unless perhaps it is contained in the plaintive cry of the government for wider markets. To that I shall return a little later.

Let me turn now to the British agreement. The hon. member for Ontario, who is so well qualified to discuss matters of this kind, not only by reason of his long study of these subjects but also because of his experience as chairman of the tariff board for a number of years, takes exception to the British agreement. I should like to call to his attention one set of facts which he seems to have overlooked. He referred to the historic background of 1932, but if you want to find what really made necessary the Ottawa agreements you have to go back ten years beyond that and follow up step by step the tendency of Italy, Germany and other European countries, which previously had been excellent markets for Canadian goods but which virtually closed their doors to Canadian products, particularly wheat, dairy produce, meat and other products of the farm. Italy raised its duty on wheat from free to something like 97 cents a bushel; Germany raised its duty to 87 and then to 90 cents and then to $1 a bushel. Other countries did the same, and Canada was confronted in 1932—in fact prior to that year—with markets which had been hers for years being gradually closed to her. That was the condition that obtained at that time. When therefore Canada entered into these agreements there was more justification for them than was indicated in the very able address by the hon. member for Ontario. I can quite appreciate the broad philosophical view which the hon. member takes; but unfortunately we are not dealing at this time, or indeed at any time, with countries who direct their financial policies on broad philosophical lines. The unfortunate part is that we are dealing with countries that erect tariffs and impose quotas and inhibitions of various kinds; and these things were done before Canada took action at all. And because of these things Canada, other dominions of the empire and the mother country, deemed it necessary to enter into these agreements.

Mr. MOORE: May I remind the hon. gentleman that I said the movement began in 1925 when this country had a low tariff government?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes; I recall my hon. friend having said that. This agreement which the minister has introduced in the budget is the one and only justification for the presentation of the budget, apart from a review of conditions. The government is to be congratulated in my opinion on securing an extension of the agreement for a further period of three years, because the agreement in essence is the same as the preceding one, and what the minister has done is to ensure a continuity of the trade expansion achieved so remarkably under the old agreement. I congratulate the government on having secured an extension of this agreement for a period of three years. It is not my intention to discuss the agreement, because when we come to the committee stage there may be items which will require scrutiny and debate. On the whole I agree with the agreement. It marks, I believe, the sensible abandonment by the government of the impossible stand taken by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in 1932. He said that if and when the Liberal party came into office the first thing it would do would be to repeal, rescind and abandon these agreements, and I say that the abandonment of that position by the Liberal party and the Liberal government is a matter of congratulation to the government. It displays a degree of common sense for which I think they should be commended.

I am not going to say more about the agreement, because there are other subjects with which I wish to deal. The government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), and I believe the Liberal party, attach great importance to external trade. I warned them last year, and I warn them again, that in external trade we are not going to find the solution for the domestic problems of Canada. I am not belittling external trade; I think it is a splendid thing if we can extend our trade, and I know that every government, no matter how it might be composed, certainly would do its best to extend our trade with foreign countries. In his budget speech, however, the minister had this to say—I invite the attention of the house to his words, and after reading them I propose to review them very briefly:

> This expansion of our foreign commerce of course reflects in part the improvement in world conditions. . . . But that is by no means the whole story . . . it is not unreasonable to interpret this as clear evidence of the success of the governments trade policies.

Those are the words of the minister. Here he takes his stand; here is the justification for the policies of the government. I have no doubt that the minister invites analysis and criticism, so let us examine the matter.

The minister tells us that the increase of exports in 1936 over 1935 was $189,920,000, and I recall that when the minister made that announcement there were loud cheers from the party supporting the government. If, as the minister says, credit is due the government for that increase in exports, then I suppose the government would not object if we laid at their door responsibility for any diminution in trade or any decrease in exports. I think the responsibility must rest with them in the latter case if they choose to accept credit for the former. Let us examine these increases in exports. It is easy and simple to do.

Among the principal increases we find that the export of alcoholic beverages increased by $10,000,000. Well, I am quite prepared to say that government policy was responsible for that; let them have the credit. But next we find an increase of $89,750,000 in the export of wheat. There was no government policy responsible in that case. It was the result of a world drought condition, plus a war scare, plus a surplus that had been accumulated during the regime of a Tory government. What was a tragedy last year is today a great boon to the country, and is announced in the budget as part of the great surplus of exports. But that would not have been possible if that unfortunate accumulation had not been there; so certainly that was not due to any policy of this government.

The next large item of increased exports is in wood products, amounting to $35,000,000, and if you want the reason for the steadily increasing export of wood products in recent years you must turn to the Ottawa agreements.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Now I turn to some other large items of increased exports:

Scrap iron	$1,266,000
Zinc	1,100,000
Copper	7,000,000
Nickel	8,300,000
Lead	3,250,000

In these five classes of metals we have an increase of about $21,000,000, every particle of which was due to the war scare in Europe, and not to government policy. The minister said the increase of exports was partly due to good policy, and partly due to good luck. I would say it was stark tragedy, international insanity, that was the reason for this great stimulation in the export of these metals. For seven, eight or nine days we debated the question of defence; member after member called to the attention of the house the tragedy of this war scare—and that is what was responsible for this increase.

Our exports increased by $189,900,000 as compared with 1935, and these three items I have named, wheat, lumber and metals, with which government policy had nothing to do, account for $145,000,000 of that increase. I do not wish to take away from the minister or the government any comfort they can get out of the improved times, but it is well for the house to look at these figures and to realize that there is nothing very stable or secure in them. If the thing we all profess to desire, a condition of mind that would engender peace, could be brought about in the world, much of this trade would vanish overnight. If tomorrow the nations of the world were assured that there was no danger of war, prices of metal and our exports of metal would fall in a tragic way. So would the price of wheat and the exports of wheat, and we might say the same of other commodities. Thus, Mr. Speaker, when we look at the improved conditions and analyze the figures, we must come to the conclusion that not very much of the improvement is due to government policy.

Now let me turn to the other side of the picture. A moment ago I suggested that if the government should receive credit for increases, it must accept responsibility for decreases. What about these decreases? In the export of motor trucks the decrease was $1,100,000, and in the export of passenger cars $1,600,000; or a total decrease of $2,700,000 in the export of automobiles, representing 8,760 vehicles. That was in the calendar year 1936, as against 1935. Again I ask if the government is prepared to take responsibility for that.

Then let us take fruits, which concern a very substantial section of this country. The diminution in the export of fruits amounts to $4,230,000. In exports of apples the decrease was $3,850,000; in other fresh fruits $265,000; and in canned fruits $245,000. Then take shingles, an important item to the province of British Columbia. These exports have fallen off by $1,200,000. There has been a decrease in the exports of sausage casings amounting to $185,000, and in processed milk of $366,000. In patent leather the decrease has been $400,000; in malt, $500,000; in electric vacuum cleaners, $400,000; in sewing machines, $500,000; in soap, $400,000, and in oats, $2,140,000. These, Mr. Speaker, are decreases in exports, and again I ask if the government is responsible for these decreases. Why does not the minister give us an analysis of the decreases?

Mr. DUNNING: May I be permitted to say that in the case of oats in particular, and certain kinds of fruit, the blame must be attached to providence or the weather, because they were not produced in sufficient volume to export.

Mr. STEVENS: That is a very fine excuse.

Mr. DUNNING: Is it not a reason?

Mr. STEVENS: But the minister took credit for an increase of $185,000,000 in exports.

Mr. DUNNING: Read my words again.

Mr. STEVENS: I quoted them just now, and they were rather interesting. The minister said:

> This expansion of our foreign commerce of course reflects in part the improvement in world trade conditions. . . . But that is by no means the whole story.

Then he said:

> . . . it is not unreasonable to interpret this as clear evidence of the success of the government's trade policies.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: Very well. I have pointed out that of the total increase of over $189,000,000 some $145,000,000 was made up of exports in connection with which government policies could not have played any part, and I am now pointing out a few items in which government policy could play a part.

Mr. DUNNING: We sold some wheat, you know.

Mr. STEVENS: Yes, the government sold some wheat. Last year on the floor of this house we listened to the most bitter condemnation of the wheat policy of the previous administration, under which that accumulation of wheat took place, and if it had not been for that accumulation the minister would not have had the wheat to export.

Now let us come to the subject so ably discussed a few moments ago by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare (Mr. Pottier), who made an appeal to the minister. Let me put this to the minister: Is the policy of the government responsible for the decrease in the exports of fish? Those decreases were as follows:

Dried codfish	$500,000
Herring	150,000
Pickled mackerel	40,000
Dry salt salmon	90,000
Pickled salmon	177,000
Canned lobster	195,000
Canned salmon	1,030,000

Once again I ask the minister, who is responsible for those decreases? Let me take this opportunity of congratulating the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare on his very able speech, the preparation of which must have required a great deal of time and thought. I want to say to the hon. member that one of the problems of the fishing industry, and one of the root causes of distress among the fishermen, lies in the control of the distribution of fish by the National Fish Company. That is where the trouble lies. Will this government do anything in regard to it? I am warning this government and hon. members from Nova Scotia and the maritime provinces, where large fisheries exist, that they will find a major cause of their trouble in regard to fisheries in the overbearing and dictatorial power exercised by the great distributing companies, chiefly the National Fish Company. That is where the trouble lies, and that is where we must correct the trouble. I asked the president of that company, when he appeared before a parliamentary committee some two years ago, if, somewhere between the half cent a pound paid to the fishermen and the twenty to thirty cents a pound for which the fish were sold, another half cent could not be found for the fishermen, and he said it could not. All we have to do is pause for a moment and ask ourselves in this parliament if we are helpless to find the fishermen another half cent a pound. I was in the little town of Sackville, I think it was, though I am not quite sure—at any rate it was close to the bay of Fundy, in the southern part of New Brunswick—when a fisherman brought in five hundred pounds of the finest haddock one could wish to see. I wonder if hon members will believe me when I tell them what that man received for that five hundred pounds of fish. I was there that day, and was told by the man personally that he received one dollar, or one-fifth of a cent per pound. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare knows, as other hon. members know, that in the maritimes there are hundreds of fishermen who do not see more than $75, $100 or $150 in a year as their whole return. What I say to the minister is this: It is all very well to talk about expanding foreign trade, but what are we doing with regard to the problems of our fishermen and others within the country, the domestic problems that it is within the power of this government to remedy and correct?

Now let us turn to some other matters that I conceive to be of grave importance, but which are conspicuous by their absence from this budget address. The minister pays little or no attention to anything I have to say; I really do not expect it, but if he will not listen to me I want to direct this question to him through the pages of Hansard: Is the government aware of the serious condition of unrest that is prevalent throughout this country? My hon. friend to whom I have already referred, speaking of the maritimes, knows that the plight of the fishermen down there has contributed to a condition of dissatisfaction and unrest in those provinces. My hon. friends from Quebec know that in that great province there is a feeling of dissatisfaction regarding conditions in Canada and with the results of the administration, shall I say, of this great country under the British North America Act. My hon. friends from the west on all sides of the house know perfectly well that many of the citizens of western Canada, thoughtful, earnest and honourable men and women, are convinced that their various provinces would be better out of confederation than within confederation.

These are matters to which consideration ought to be given. I notice some hon. gentlemen laugh. It is no laughing matter. Whether or not hon. gentlemen laugh at and ridicule it, I am going to give a few words of warning to this house in regard to that condition of unrest as I know it to exist throughout this country. Men everywhere are labouring under a feeling of hopelessness. There is an increasing number of our fellow citizens convinced that many of these injustices are unnecessary, and that the inequities that prevail in the country to-day could be remedied without the destruction of the present economic system. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, never since confederation has the power and influence of parliament been at as low an ebb as it is to-day. Public confidence in parliament is waning. I question if there is an hon. member of this house, when he goes back to his constituency, whether he goes there weekly, or at intervals of some months, as some of us do whose ridings are more distant, who is not met by his supporters, his friends, and independent opinion conveying the low level at which this parliament stands in the eyes of his fellow citizens and his electors. There is scarcely a problem brought to this house, whether by members supporting the government or others, which is not met with the answer: Nothing can be done because it is not within our competence under the British North America Act. That is the stock answer given to all. So much so, Mr. Speaker, that parliament has become little more than a collecting agency of postal and customs revenues, an agency through which some pensions are paid, and the source of supply for the deficits of the Canadian National Railways. I think if you cover those points you cover pretty well what parliament does.

Someone suggests that I should not forget patronage. Let me pause to say that one of the curses of politics to-day is the patronage system, whether in provincial or dominion politics, because members know that if they do not behave themselves when they are on the government side they will suffer for it. I do not apply this only to the members of the Liberal party; it applied when the other party was in power also. Members know that if they dare step outside the directions of the party whip, their patronage will be cut off. Look what happened here during the last couple of weeks, in connection with the debate on defence. A score or more of Liberal members rose in their places—

An hon. MEMBER: Fifteen.

Mr. STEVENS: I thought it was more than that, but fifteen is a fairly large number. Fifteen Liberal members stood in their places and denounced the defence policy; then, like sheep, they walked up and voted for the very policy they had denounced. There is only one weapon left to a member of parliament, only one way in which he can express his objection to anything; that is by his vote, and I sat here and saw that spectacle go on day after day. Members made magnificent, interesting speeches in which they presented their views ably and gave cogent reasons for the stand they were taking; then they declared by their vote their unswerving support of the government. Why? Well, they know better than I do, but speaking in a general way I know the reason is the fear of losing the patronage which goes to supporters of the government. This inglorious position in which parliament finds itself is due largely to the failure of parliament to occupy the field that has been given it under the British North America Act. I said that two years ago; I repeat it to-day. Parliament is not occupying the field it was given under the British North America Act. Parliament is not and has not been discharging the powers it rightfully enjoys. It will not and it is not applying those powers to the remedy of public grievances in the country. Parliament is perishing slowly but surely from inertia and ineptitude. We play the game of politics, but we do not play the game with the people.

Let us look at the privy council decisions. Only one measure came through the reference to that body, and I pause to say that those references never should have been made—never. The only way properly to test a law is to put it into operation, with the force and influence of the government behind it. Then let a citizen challenge the law in the courts on its merits. But what is the sense, where is the courage, in taking a measure before it is given an opportunity to operate, and placing it before the courts, saying "Please tell us, have we done right or have we done wrong?" The basis of consideration under those circumstances is wholly technical and constitutional—not upon the merits, or upon a consideration of whether the law is applied correctly.

In spite of all that, one measure survived, the Dominion Trade and Industry Commission Act, which provided for the setting up of a tribunal before which those having grievances in connection with trade practices might appear. I shall not go into details, but I must say it has never yet been given a chance to operate. In the first place, administration of the act was given to the tariff board, a body already overwhelmed with duties. When the present government took office they referred the measures to the courts, and since that nothing has been done. Not even the prosecutor has been appointed, an officer of the crown who was to administer those obscure laws already on the statute books, but which business men and others hesitate to invoke.

Some time ago a prominent business man drew to my attention a flagrant violation of the criminal code in connection with false advertising. There was no question as to the falsity of the advertising. He said, "Well, how can we have the act enforced? I have asked the Attorney General, and he does not take any interest in it." I am not sure whether he said he had consulted the Department of Justice. I said to him, "Lay the information yourself." But he replied, "Oh, no, I cannot lay the information." He did not want to do it, and as a matter of fact he should not be asked to do it. The measure provides for the appointment of an officer to prosecute on behalf of the public in the event of violation of a law such as that respecting false advertising, which has been in the criminal code for years, but which has had nobody to enforce it. There is law dealing with false advertising, and deceiving or defrauding the public. Can the government do anything to correct that? Of course they can. What action is being taken? Concluding that part of my remarks, I say that if in the next two years parliament does not produce some practical results in the correction of grievances within Canada, then Canada is heading for disintegration and dissolution. Some may think that is strong language, but I warn the house that there is a deep-rooted dissatisfaction throughout Canada with the manner in which our affairs are handled under the so-called constitution.

Let me now turn to another subject. May I ask the minister this direct question: What does he intend to do about the railway deficit? Here is what he says:

> I shall be greatly disappointed if we cannot keep our total deficit for 1937-38 within the limit represented by the net cash deficit of the Canadian National Railway System.

And I recall that that was greeted with cheers. What a thing to put before the taxpayers of Canada—we hope next year to restrict the deficit within what we are going to lose on the Canadian National Railways. That was a very graceful way of evading a very difficult question.

It is not as if we did not have information about the matter, because we have had most intensive investigations of the railway problem. We have had engineers' reports, expert opinions, traffic surveys, royal commissions, special committees of parliament, and standing committees of parliament, for twenty years to my knowledge. Since 1917 and the Drayton-Acworth report we have gone on year after year, accumulating data and information of all kinds until we have it by the ton—literally, Mr. Speaker, by the ton—in the archives of parliament. It is all there, available for the use of parliament. What are we doing about it?—just nothing; nothing.

Let me now examine some of the reports. I have the Drayton-Acworth report and the report of the Duff commission before me, but I shall not go into them in detail. I shall not read them, because anyone who wishes to may read them.

I shall be content with pointing out only one or two points. Some of the recommendations of the Drayton-Acworth report were adopted, thereby giving birth to the Canadian National railways. But its most vital recommendations were ignored, and because of that Canada has a railway problem. Those recommendations were that the railways were to be operated by trustees—I am talking about twenty years ago. They were to be operated upon a commercial basis, and were to be undisturbed politically. The trustees were to be non-political, permanent and self-perpetuating. They were to be given the widest powers in the management of the property. It is the disregard of these recommendations which has been the chief cause of the deficit and our dilemma in connection with our railways. They have been subjected to political interference; no one can deny that. Let us be frank; let us state frankly what we know. We know they have been subject to political interference. We know that political lines were bought; I know it, other hon. members know it. We know, too, that political branch lines costing scores of millions of dollars were built; we know that. We know that there was political interference with the managements; we cannot deny that. No man can deny it. Yet these were the very things against which the Drayton-Acworth report of twenty years ago warned parliament and the people of Canada.

What did the Duff report say? Speaking of the Drayton-Acworth report made fifteen years previously, the Duff commission made these observations in 1932:

> The recommendations were designed to provide safeguards against political interference but—

And this is the finding of the Duff commission:

> —the government declined to follow the plan of organization recommended by the commission.

Then they go on to show what the results have been. In other words, this parliament, you and I, stand convicted before the people of Canada of having failed to carry out the expert advice given to us, and particularly in connection with the one point of political interference, which has been the nemesis of the Canadian National railways from its very inception. The Duff commission made recommendations among which were emancipation from political influence, elimination of duplication, cooperation between the two systems, and economies. They proposed to achieve these objectives by the appointment of three trustees, to be appointed from a panel named by themselves. Then, there was to be an arbitral tribunal to adjudicate in connection with disputes between the two systems. In part, that was put into law in 1933.

But once again politics wrecked the recommendations of that commission. Once more we are floundering in a sea of prejudice and partisanship. We have no chart, no compass; this parliament is just drifting so far as the railway problem is concerned. Yet this problem is the source of the greatest proportion of our deficits. It is the most serious problem, and has been so declared over and over again, with which Canada is confronted. Yet we are drifting along just as we have drifted for twenty years—and we expect the country to have confidence in parliament! I would not presume to say that I have a remedy or a solution for this problem, but there are a few suggestions I should like to make.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member's time has expired and he can proceed only with the unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. STEVENS: The two previous speakers took ten minutes more; I have only a few further sentences in connection with this railway problem. I would suggest, first, that we agree in both houses of parliament to drop politics when we are discussing the railway problem. That is a real foundation upon which we might hope to build something of value. Second, I would suggest that we refer all existing data to three committees, made up of senators and members of parliament—one committee to report on coordination, another to report on the rights of labour, and the third to report on the elimination of political interference and influence. Then I suggest that we hold a special session of parliament this autumn for the exclusive purpose of discussing and dealing with the railway problem and receiving the reports of these committees.

I have this further suggestion to make, one which has been in my mind for many years but which I have never uttered as I felt it was more within the realm of experts and I feared to tread therein. I have been in the house twenty years, and year after year this railway problem comes up and nothing is done. I am going to make this further suggestion. There is not a single transcontinental railway in the United States. Let hon. members get that. Canada should be divided into three zones for transportation purposes, one taking in Fort William to the coast; another taking in the great central areas of Ontario and Quebec, as far east as Quebec or Rivière du Loup; and the third taking in the maritime provinces. The maritime provinces have their confederation problems which are entitled to consideration. The great central provinces have their dense traffic problems, and the west has its wheat and farm products movements and other problems peculiar to that part of the country. Each of these zones ought to be administered from a central point within itself, and inter-zone traffic arrangements made just as they are made in the United States.

With a system of that kind I believe we could bring the railway problem of Canada within the ambit of the understanding of a board of directors or a group of individuals. Quite frankly I question whether any one mind or any one board is capable of fully understanding and grasping the problems of either the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific from Halifax to Vancouver. I contend that if parliament and the country would address themselves to this problem and take advantage of the information within our archives, a solution could be found.

Before I take my seat let me say one word in conclusion. In order that a democracy may succeed, it must be founded upon justice and equity within the state. Hon. members know that there are serious grievances which remain uncured. Apparently there is no possibility of correction by parliament, and until we as a parliament address ourselves to the correction of these iniquities, we cannot hope to retain the confidence and respect of the people of Canada.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate I should like to join those who have already congratulated the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) upon his excellent presentation of the budget. There are some things in the budget I like and there are some I dislike. I dislike exceedingly both the sales tax and the sugar tax, but I do not propose to discuss them this afternoon. I think we have had a most profitable discussion to-day The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Moore) brought a refreshing air of reality into the debate. We may not agree with his philosophical fundamentals, we may not agree with his conclusions, but at least we can admit that he has given this house food for thought. The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) has done the same thing in a somewhat different manner.

I would point out that while the hon. member for Ontario was speaking, the evening editions of the local newspapers were delivered in the chamber. One of the statements appearing therein bears out what the hon. member said, that the Ottawa agreements might have repercussions which were not foreseen by some who supported the last agreements. We read in the press that the Australian Minister of Trade has resigned. The article continues:

> Canada found it impossible to agree to concessions of such magnitude, it was understood. The Canadian argument was that the balance of trade in Canada's favour was a natural one, largely because Canadian industry had developed to a point at which it was able to provide cheaply and efficiently a large range of manufactures which Australia required.

The commercial situation is thus set out in a few words. Every nation including this dominion is ready to sell but is not ready to buy.

The budget speech contains only a brief reference to a matter which I wish to discuss. The minister said that it was a matter for congratulation that a liability of amazing proportions in our national finances had been removed. He referred specifically to the accumulation of wheat which in a few short months had turned from a great liability into an asset of national importance.

Last evening the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) made what I thought was an extraordinary and rather weak defence of the government's policy in relation to the marketing of wheat. The minister devoted considerable time to a comparison of prices in widely dissimilar periods during past years. He paid no attention to the point made this afternoon by the hon. member for Ontario, that during those years there had been tremendous increases in both acreage and production not only in the four great wheat producing countries but also in the importing countries. The result was that during that period a glut occurred. He forgot to mention, of course, that this accumulation began under the previous Liberal administration, whose failure to implement their own tariff policies and the wheat board legislation of 1922 was, I believe, in no small measure responsible for the accumulations. The failure to implement the wheat board legislation led, in 1923 and 1924, the years to which the minister referred, to the formation of the second best thing to a wheat board from the point of view of the western farmer—the Canadian pools. The minister said last evening, at page 1631 of Hansard:

> The question of how wheat is to be marketed is of great importance to all the people of Canada, but it is of particular importance to the people who produce it.

That, I might say, is the reason why the the government's disregard of the wishes of the producers is very keenly resented throughout western Canada. The efforts of our farmers over a period of at least thirty years to create and to own their own marketing facilities prove conclusively that their hope of getting equitable prices for their products was through the establishment of their own marketing organization rather than in risking alternately high and low prices—mainly low prices—on a purely speculative market. It is this effort which the farmers of the west believe the attitude and the policy of the government and the present wheat board have very largely nullified. The minister said, at page 1632 of Hansard:

> The person who buys the wheat is concerned only with the difference between the price at which he buys and the price at which he is able to sell.

Quite so, and that of course is the attitude of the trader, and of the middleman into whose hands, we believe, the government has played during the past eighteen months or so; for the bigger the difference between those two prices, the greater the profit to the speculator. I recommend to hon. members that they read the resolutions that were passed by western farmers during August and September last. They will find that those resolutions were more concerned with the method of marketing, the retention of the wheat board, than with a minimum price. Again may I repeat, in the words of the minister:

> The question of how wheat is to be marketed is of great importance to...the people who produce it.

Knowing this, I rather admire the courage of the minister, who last night, by inference at least, condemned the pools and their policies, and in effect gave his approval to the grain exchange method of marketing the farmers' crop. The minister contended, at page 1633 of Hansard, that the farmers are obtaining to-day:

> ...the highest price for wheat...since the beginning of the stabilization activities of Mr. McFarland.

Are the farmers getting that price or are the speculators getting it? If the speculators are getting it, I should like to know why they should be allowed to do so. Look at the world condition now and compare it with that of 1932, when world prices were the lowest in four hundred years. Of course, the minister said that there is less speculation now than ever before. I disagree with that statement because I view the matter of speculation relatively. If there is less speculation it is because there is relatively less wheat, but I venture to suggest that there is a great deal of speculation with paper wheat—perhaps more relatively than ever before. The minister attacked the stabilization operations. But what would have happened to the west and to the entire dominion but for those operations? Moreover the stabilized price was on the basis of Fort William, not on the basis of the world price—fortunately for the western producer, for the world price, as I mentioned a few moments ago, was the lowest in four centuries.

A great deal of propaganda is coming across the ocean to western Canada to the effect that the new policy is hailed with delight in Great Britain. May I say, in passing, that I am glad to notice the better type of advertising which has lately been done in Great Britain? But I do not believe those reports present a true picture of the British attitude. For example, I have before me a copy of the leading editorial from The Miller, a British publication of February 1, 1937. It refers to articles that have been sent from London by Mr. Grant Dexter to certain western papers, the purport of which is that there is a new feeling, a new spirit, in Great Britain towards Canadian wheat and flour since the change in the policies of the Canadian wheat board. The editorial goes on to state:

> Thus, it is claimed, the campaign has demonstrated conclusively that the active resentment of the British millers and bakers during the past years to the Canadian policy of holding for a premium price has disappeared.
> But it is perhaps allowable to point out at this stage that there never existed such a thing as active resentment on the part of the British millers to any Canadian policy. Canadian policy is an affair of the Canadian people, and always commands the most strict and friendly consideration of the Britisher. Milling for the British public is not an emotional pastime, but an economic service. The completest freedom of thought and action, to buy in the best market, and manufacture the finest product having regard to the requirements of the consumer, has been the policy of the British miller, and we maintain quite confidently that he has fulfilled his charge.

Incidentally, I am not so sure about that. Again:

> The Canadian wheat policy under Mr. John McFarland had everything to commend it, had it been successful.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. COLDWELL: Further:

> Looked at in a very practical way, its only fault was its non-success.

May I just say to hon. members opposite who laughed, that that statement comes from a British source. We were told last year that we had to win anew the confidence of the British millers. This is a quotation from a trade organ with which usually I have found myself in disagreement. But I find myself in complete agreement with the statement that the non-success of the wheat stabilization policy was a tragedy, not to the millers but to the farmers of Canada, although it might well react ultimately upon the milling industry, because that industry must have a source of supply, and if bankruptcy overtakes farmers over a wide area of the world the milling industry suffers accordingly. I say it was a tragedy because last July, wheat was dumped in record quantities upon the market —no matter how we divide it between last year's crop and the crop of the year before or of the year before that. The accumulations and the 1935 crop, some 63,000,000 bushels of grain were dumped on the market and sold during July, when world stocks of wheat were the lowest in nine years and widespread drought threatened north American crops. Last night the minister said:

What I want to tell the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is this: If at the end of June he knew what the price of wheat was going to be, or if he knew what it was going to be at the beginning of July, or even in the middle of July, there were very few people who considered themselves authorities on the question who really thought they knew.

Does the minister, who is a member of the wheat advisory committee, recollect that on July 6—that is, in the first week in the month—the three Canadian wheat pools through their executive presented a lengthy statement, a copy of which I have in my hand, to that committee, to the government of Canada? Let me read just a portion of that statement:

We offer a few reasons why we believe the initial payment on wheat for the coming crop season should be above rather than below average production costs.

First: The restoration of buying power to agriculture is in the best interests of the entire dominion. If our main branch of agriculture is on the brink of bankruptcy every industry depending on agriculture will suffer.

Second: Largely as a result of disastrous crop conditions in exporting countries, particularly on the North American continent, the world wheat carryover is at the lowest figure in the past ten years and there has been a substantial reduction in the Canadian wheat carryover.

Third: The disastrous drought in the United States, particularly in the spring wheat belt, makes it more than probable that instead of having a substantial surplus for export, that country will again require to import a considerable quantity of Canadian wheat.

Fourth: The damage already caused to our own wheat crop by drought extending over a wide area along the southern boundary of the three prairie provinces in western Saskatchewan and eastern Alberta, and in northwestern Saskatchewan, so that the most we can look for is a fair crop, with very light crops over a great part of the west which has suffered severely in the past from partial or total crop failures.

Fifth: The setting of an initial price below production costs by the Canadian government would almost inevitably be regarded by importing countries as the price at which Canada would be prepared to dispose of its wheat, with injurious influence on world price levels.

Sixth: The bulk of the Canadian wheat crop will have been delivered and a considerable portion of it will have moved to world markets before there can be any competition from the Argentine and Australia so that the export market price of wheat will be largely determined by the policy adopted by your committee.

Seventh: If the minimum price for wheat is set below the futures market price, the Canadian wheat board might be crippled if not destroyed, as farmers, after the experience of the present crop year would be reluctant to deliver their wheat to the board if they could secure a higher price on the open market. We believe that the continuance of the wheat board is vital to the welfare of our wheat growers under present world conditions and that any policy which would curtail the operations of the wheat board and increase the control of the private trade in marketing the Canadian crop would be against the interests of the producers.

Mr. GARDINER: Does the hon. member think that there is in that statement anything that contradicts what I said last night? I would take it from the statement that what they are asking for is a set price at least no lower than the price as it was then. The price at that time was nearly the set price of last year. It does not indicate any increase.

Mr. COLDWELL: There are two things indicated in this statement. One is this—and it is the point I am making—that the Canadian wheat producers on July 6 drew the attention of the government to the fact that there was likely to be a great crop failure over the United States spring wheat belt, and over wide areas of the Canadian prairies, that stocks were the lowest in ten years, and that therefore a price above the cost of production was warranted.

Mr. GARDINER: The point I made last night, and which I wish to emphasize, was that in spite of that fact they did not prophesy a big increase in prices.

Mr. COLDWELL: I think that was clearly implied.

Mr. DUNNING: Their later statement disproves that.

Mr. COLDWELL: I will deal with that in a moment—the later statement of September 5. I have only forty minutes, and the minister will have an opportunity to say something at some other time.

As I said on another occasion, I left Ottawa at the end of June and motored back, and I saw this condition. When I went to my own constituency early in July, day after day I saw crops fading out until about July 10 it was well known that the whole of southern Saskatchewan would be faced with almost an entire crop failure; and yet in the face of that, day after day, the Canadian wheat board dumped wheat on the market—during that month of July nearly 63,000,000 bushels. I say that policy was inept. In the face of the condition that existed the board should have fed the market and watched developments so that, not for our farmers only but for the entire Canadian people, we might have recouped some of the so-called losses which have been referred to so frequently in this house. And the Minister of Finance took credit for some eight million dollars in his budget statement out of the very type of price advance to which I am referring. I believe that the experts in charge of the government's marketing policy, the wheat board, ought to have so advised the government. Their policy surely constitutes something in the nature of a betrayal of trust.

But the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) says that the people approved these policies in the election of 1935, and that in the Assiniboia by-election they confirmed their approval. He also took a sly dig at the running of a Cooperative Commonwealth Federation candidate in that constituency. I wonder whether it would surprise him to know that on the day that candidate was nominated the campaign fund was $30, and that on that campaign fund we began. Out of the nickels and dimes that came in we financed the campaign. I am wondering whether the minister could say the same thing of his campaign fund. The largest contribution we received from any one person or any one source was the sum of $25. May I say, however, that what we have often heard suggested in Saskatchewan regarding the way in which elections are run in that province has been pretty well summarized in a few words in the Canadian Journal of Economics and Political Science, Volume 2, No. 1, February, 1936, in which the following statement is made:

Mr. DUNNING: Who makes it?

Mr. COLDWELL: Escott Reid.

Mr. DUNNING: Ah, yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: The Prime Minister in a recent debate quoted him as an authority, so I think I might also quote him as an authority.

Mr. DUNNING: I only wanted to identify him.

Mr. COLDWELL: This is the quotation:

> The Saskatchewan Liberal machine was efficient, but it was corruption which furnished it with many of its workers, and when it could not win converts by legitimate persuasion it did not shrink from using corrupt methods. Seldom, though, did it corrupt by buying votes with money. It used the more sophisticated method, when seducing an individual, of offering him a job or a contract, and when it tried to seduce a section it offered a road or a public building.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

And sometimes dams, and other rehabilitation measures perhaps.

Last evening the minister (Mr. Gardiner) was, I think, to a degree guilty of misleading the house. He quoted four lines from a statement issued on September 5 by the pools.

Mr. GARDINER: I may call attention to the fact that in Hansard to-day the quotation cited on page 1635 is not all given as a quotation. There are four further lines; that has been corrected this morning.

Mr. COLDWELL: The other lines follow?

Mr. GARDINER: The lines that follow are part of the quotation.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was not thinking of the lines that follow; I was thinking of the lines that came immediately ahead.

Mr. GARDINER: All I wish to point out is that I read the section—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member who has the floor will permit me, I know. I only wish to point out that I read every word in section 3, which was the third reason for not forming the pool.

Mr. COLDWELL: As a matter of fact the word that led me to look for something ahead of this particular quotation was the word "further" which I think was the first word the minister used in the quotation in question. I find that the paragraph immediately ahead is this:

> In view of early harvest a very substantial amount of wheat would have already reached the market before it would be possible to make the necessary arrangements to accept delivery to a voluntary pool.

The minister has corrected the final lines, to which I was also going to refer, so I shall let the matter rest there. But I may say that if these words had been used prior to the four lines which were quoted, a somewhat different construction would have been placed on the quotation by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), who interjected a remark last evening.

Mr. DUNNING: Not in relation to price.

Mr. COLDWELL: The farmers were forced to market their 1936 grain without the advantage of an initial price and participation certificates; that is, the wheat board method as we understand it was denied to them. I say that has meant a very serious loss to these farmers. My colleague from Weyburn (Mr. Douglas) had one of his constituents in his room the other day. After years of drought that gentleman had a good crop last year. He raised 17,000 bushels of wheat, but owing to his obligations he had to market that grain at once. He did market it, at a price some twenty or twenty-five cents below the price he might have received if he had been able to hold it for a little while. If he had been able to market that wheat through the board and participate in the average price it is probable that he would have received a considerably greater amount of money than he did receive for his crop.

Inferences have been drawn in this house that the whole agitation of last September was inspired by someone. I do not know who that someone was. The Minister of Finance points at me and smiles.

Mr. DUNNING: I read some of my hon. friend's speeches on the subject.

Mr. COLDWELL: Well, I deny it most emphatically, and I will tell the house why I deny it. On August 28 the price was announced. The morning of the 29th I was asked for a statement, which I gave. Then that same day I got in my car and drove to Ottawa. I was ten days on the way, and during the whole of that time I neither sent nor received a communication. No one had my addresses en route. So I was not responsible for the organization of that agitation in any way whatever. On the contrary, it was the most spontaneous thing within my experience and came about to some extent from the very keen disappointment which was naturally felt on the part of the farmers. For example, on the 17th of August one of my constituents wired the Minister of Agriculture from Dinsmore, Saskatchewan, as follows:

> Please advise if wheat board is to function through crop year nineteen thirty-six and thirty-seven and if so what is to be the set price? Threshing is in progress and farmers are anxious to dispose of crop through wheat board if it continues to function. Wire reply.

The reply received on August 20 by that gentleman was as follows:

> Wheat board will function this year. They will announce decision on nineteen thirty-six crop price shortly. I presume it would be impossible for them to make any announcement re nineteen thirty-seven crop.

Of course, the latter sentence was entirely unnecessary. The point is that apparently at that time the minister himself was not sure exactly what was going to happen in relation to the wheat board method of marketing.

Mr. DUNNING: What minister?

Mr. COLDWELL: The Minister of Agriculture. That reply, intentionally or otherwise, certainly was both misleading and evasive of the question. Then on the 28th of August the announcement was made. A moment ago the Minister of Finance pointed at me, suggesting that I had led this agitation. During the last day or two I have looked up the files, and I am going to let the newspapers tell the story. However, I see that it is just two minutes to six, and perhaps you will call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker. To-morrow afternoon I can go on for the remainder of my time and refer to the public press records of what happened in western Canada last autumn.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

THE BUDGET—SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 28 FOR SITTINGS OF FRIDAY, MARCH 12

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, in order that this debate may continue on Friday, if there are still those who desire to continue it on that day, it is necessary to provide that Mr. Speaker will not leave the chair without question being put. With the permission of the house, therefore, I move:

> That standing order 28 respecting the committee of ways and means be suspended for the sittings of Friday, 12th March, 1937.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pusuant to standing order.

Thursday, March 11, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

BUSINESS PROFITS WAR TAX ACT, 1916

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to revive and amend the Business Profits War Tax Act, 1916, to validate any actions which may have been taken since the coming into force of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, and to provide that the procedure for dealing with appeals from assessments under the said act shall be similar to the procedure for dealing with appeals under the Income War Tax Act.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

GRAIN MARKETING

WHEAT BOARD SELLING POLICY—TELEGRAM FROM MR. MCFARLAND RESPECTING STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I desire to direct attention to a matter of some importance. I regret I was called out of the chamber the other evening when the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) was speaking, but my absence was not a matter of intentional discourtesy to the minister. I have just received a telegram from Mr. John I. McFarland reading as follows:

Newspapers report Hon. Gardiner's statement in Commons in defence of wheat board selling policy wherein he said McFarland estimated crop four hundred millions on June 24. Please insist on my behalf that Mr. Gardiner gives direct authority for that statement. I never informed any newspaper man of my opinion of prospective crop at that or any other time and no one had authority to make any statement for me. It was obvious before the end of June that all hope for a crop had been destroyed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. BENNETT: This is in order; pardon me.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Reading a telegram from the outside?

Mr. BENNETT: Very much so. The Minister of Agriculture made a statement with respect to a citizen of this country and it is in order for me to direct attention to the fact that there must be some mistake with respect to it. I am quite sure the Minister of Agriculture would desire to remedy any mistake in a statement which might have been based upon erroneous information. I am placing this information upon Hansard in order that he may do so at the appropriate time.

Mr. POULIOT: Was the telegram sent collect?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I am sorry that my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), is not in the house at this time. I shall call his attention to the remarks of my right hon. friend.

SOCKEYE SALMON FISHERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Might I inquire if the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) is now in a position to give us some information with respect to the salmon treaty, concerning which the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and myself spoke a few days ago?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): If my hon. friend will wait I shall be able to give him an answer to-morrow.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 10, consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the fifteen minutes or so which remain to me, I desire to add to my remarks of yesterday and correct an impression which has grown up in this house that the agitation last fall in western Canada against the action of the government in regard to the wheat board was not a natural result of the situation thus created, but was something fostered by certain individuals or organizations. The wheat board announcement regarding price and operations was made on August 28, and on August 29 the Leader Post contained the following report:

> Farmers up in arms over the low minimum price. Those in southwest area called a protest meeting at Mossbank for August 31. J. Gordon Ross, M.P., and Thos. Waddell, M.L.A., are being invited to attend.

The same day the United Farmers of Canada at Saskatoon issued the following statement:

> Greatest sell-out in the history of the west.

As I said yesterday, I had left that day for Ottawa by car and so was out of touch with everyone for the next ten days. But I issued the following statement:

> As I understand the announcement, it means, in effect, that the wheat board will not function in relation to this year's crop unless the price falls to nearly the minimum announced. Western members of parliament, regardless of party affiliations, will, I believe, resent the government's disregard of western Canada's interests. It is time that we forgot largely meaningless party divisions, quit chasing rainbows and theorizing and tried to act together on behalf of the great agricultural industry upon which the west depends. Meantime, the grain exchange and food speculators have won. Virtually, the wheat board has gone. At least, its going is plainly foreshadowed.

I think the speech of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) the other evening was somewhat in the nature of an obituary for that particular board. The Minister of Finance referred to something else that I had said. A few days earlier I had been asked what my opinion was regarding a proper minimum price. Based upon what I had seen in three trips through the United States and southern Saskatchewan, I stated that I thought a minimum price of $1.25 might be justified.

The farmers soon began to show their bitter resentment of the action of the board and the government as was evidenced by numerous newspaper reports. On Aust 31, Mayor W. D. MacKay of Strasbourg, expressed the opinion that a protest meeting should be held in that town against the government's action. At Milestone, J. E. Willoughby complained that the price was far too low. At Weyburn, Doctor J. K. Brimacombe, president of the board of trade, a former mayor and a prominent Liberal, stated that undoubtedly a strongly worded protest would be sent to the government. At Assiniboia, J. E. Johnstone, president of the board of trade, said that there would be a protest meeting. On September 1, the Crane Valley Liberal Association wired protesting vigorously against the setting of a minimum price at 87½ cents. Mr. J. B. Smith, the Liberal M.L.A. for Bengough, expressed his dissatisfaction, both with the initial payment and with the suspension of the board's action with regard to participation certificates. The same paper reported a protest meeting at Mossbank, at which the Liberal M.L.A. for Gravelbourg, Mr. E. M. Culliton, indulged in strong criticism of the government's action. Milestone's rural municipal council of Caledonia passed a resolution asking for a minimum price of $1.15 and board action. The Leader Post of September 3 reported a strongly worded protest from the United Farmers of Alberta. On September 5 the Saskatoon Young Liberal Association decided to ask for a reconsideration of the government's decision regarding the marketing of wheat. Copies of this letter were sent to the Minister of Agriculture and the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Young). On September 8, Prince Albert district farmers passed a resolution deploring the influence of the private grain trade upon the government and charging the government with violating the laws of democracy by refusing demands for a fair price. The September 10 issue of the Leader Post reported an interview with the government by Mr. L. C. Broullette, president, Saskatchewan pool; Paul F. Bredt, president, Manitoba pool; George Bennett, president, Alberta pool, at which interview the delegation protested the pegged price of wheat. On September 5 the Prairie Messenger of Muenster, Saskatchewan, reported the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Fleming), as having wired the wheat pool on August 21 as follows:

> I, as one of the western Liberal members, am absolutely opposed to the government setting the price of wheat at 87½ cents. I believe the price should be set at $1 owing to the increased cost of production. I also believe that the government should set a minimum price for coarse grains as well.

Mr. W. A. Tucker, M.P., for Rosthern, was present at a farmers' meeting at Saskatoon and he pointed out that, in common with the farmers, he was disappointed that the price had not been left at $1 a bushel. Mr. Charles Agar, M.L.A. for Hanley, read a telegram which he had sent to the hon. member for Saskatoon urging him to continue the fight to get the minimum price raised to $1. At Bethune, Mr. J. Gordon Ross and Mr. J. F. Johnstone defended the government's action, but the farmers passed a resolution expressing dissatisfaction and asking for the immediate establishment of a minimum price of $1.15. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. MacMillan) addressed a large gathering of farmers, business men and professional men at Elfros on September 5 when he said:

> I left Ottawa with the impression that the wheat board's initial payment for this year's crop would not be less than $1 and I am extremely disappointed at the action of the government in establishing this at 87½ cents.

Mr. MacMillan added that he was unable to understand the attitude of the government and that he had written to the Prime Minister and the Hon. J. G. Gardiner, registering a strong protest. The meeting went on record unanimously against the government's action.

At North Battleford four hundred farmers, by a standing vote, demanded reinstatement of wheat board operations and a fixed minimum price of $1.15 per bushel, basis No. 1 Northern, Fort William. The meeting was presided over by Mr. W. A. Campbell, a local business man, and among those present were Mr. C. R. McIntosh, M.P., and Mr. J. A. McGregor, Liberal M.L.A. Mr. McIntosh is reported to have stated that he regarded the government's action as a complete reversal of policies for which western agriculture stood. He thought it was the duty of all western members of parliament to take a strong stand in support of the farmers' rights. He read a wire he had sent to the Saskatchewan wheat pool on August 20, expressing dissatisfaction with the suggestion of continuing the 87½ cent minimum price and favouring a fixed minimum of $1.10 to $1.15 a bushel. Mr. Gregory, Liberal M.L.A., said the government's wheat marketing policy was reactionary in view of the present tendencies for the control of all industries. At Rosthern, Mr. Tucker again witnessed the criticism of the government's action. At Lang, Saskatchewan, William Peterson, Liberal M.L.A., took part in criticizing the government's action. At Golden Prairie, two hundred persons attended an indignation meeting which was addressed by J. J. Mildenberger, Liberal M.L.A., and C. R. Evans, M.P. The meeting resolved—

> That the time is opportune for the Liberal party to implement the dollar wheat as promised by them in the provincial election, and sanctioned by the Hon. J. G. Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture, then a candidate for election and the office of provincial premier.

At Birch Hills, at a meeting attended by Malcolm McLean, M.P., and John R. Taylor, Liberal M.L.A., a resolution calling for the immediate operation of the wheat board was passed with only one dissenting vote according to the newspaper. I presume that that was the vote of the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean).

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I want to say that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has no foundation on which to make that remark. There is not the slightest particle of truth in it, and there is no evidence in the report of any truth in it. The resolution was voted on and carried by a very small percentage of the people who were present in that hall, in spite of the fact that a director of a certain organization who was not invited to be present came in and made a speech.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Speaker, usually I am very courteous to hon. members opposite who rise for the purpose of making a correction. But if the hon. member wants to make a speech I think he should take time to do so after I get through. Yesterday I had fourteen interruptions.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

An hon. MEMBER: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has risen to a question of privilege.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I have said that there is not the slightest truth in the assertion. The hon. member has referred to his courtesy. On this matter no hon. member of the house needs the courtesy of the hon. gentleman, because it is a matter of right. Withdraw.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Speaker, I am not withdrawing the statement which I read—

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The hon. member must accept my statement.

Mr. COLDWELL: —which I read in the public press. My authority was The Western Producer, published at Saskatoon, Saskatchewan. If the hon. member says that that is not correct, let him correct it through the newspaper.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Surely the hon. member knows better—that on a question of privilege, on a matter within my knowledge, he must withdraw his published presumption. I was one who talked on that occasion. I did not vote; I addressed the meeting by invitation.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member says he did not attend the meeting or that he did not vote, his statement must be accepted and the suggestion withdrawn.

Mr. COLDWELL: I made the statement on the authority of the newspaper.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The "statement"!

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar must take the responsibility for it.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was quoting from a newspaper. However, I accept the statement of the hon. member.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): On a question of privilege, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar read a statement which was in the paper and which was absolutely correct, and then he added of his own volition these words, "I presume that was the vote of the member for Melfort"—who did not vote on that occasion. What I am asking him to do is to withdraw his presumption; that is all.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is different. The statement I read from the paper, then, is correct. I assume therefore that the gentleman remained silent, and silence gives consent. Therefore in effect he voted for the resolution.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): Entirely presumption. That is all.

Mr. COLDWELL: On September 31 a meeting was held at Saskatoon to which the Hon. J. G. Gardiner and other western members were invited. This was the only meeting which I attended. I arrived in Saskatoon from the east on September 21, and I went to the meeting at the invitation of the citizens' committee which organized it. I might say that I went because the Minister of Agriculture was to be there. He had other engagements and was not able to attend.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of privilege may I call the attention of the hon. member to something that he must have known if he was at that meeting—that I sent a wire to the organizers of that meeting before it was actually called—

Mr. HEAPS: That is not a matter of privilege.

Mr. GARDINER: —indicating to them that I could not be there.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was not aware of that.

Mr. GARDINER: The message was read to the meeting.

Mr. COLDWELL: I had to address a meeting 100 miles away the same evening, and I attended for a short time only. May I ask, what of the statement of the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell)? The hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Johnston) may remember the statements made at the meeting at Semans. Also the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) was at the Cabri meeting, which was attended by a large number of persons and the town band. He agreed that the board should be continued and heard the resolution condemnatory of the government. At this point may I say that the resolutions, as my files testify, were quite evidently drawn by a very large number of different people. There are differences in the phraseology and in the terms; sometimes even slightly different things are asked for; but they all criticize the government on two grounds, first, the discontinuance of the wheat board method of marketing grain, and second, the setting of a minimum price which they regarded as being too low.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

An hon. MEMBER: Sit down.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I be permitted to conclude?

Mr. SPEAKER: With the unanimous consent of the house.

An hon. MEMBER: Go ahead.

Mr. DUNNING: Give the hon. member five minutes.

Mr. COLDWELL: I thank the house for that courtesy. What I want to ask is this: where now are all these protesters? If these protests are to be made effective, this is the place to do it.

Mr. MacNICOL: They are all under the woodpile now.

Mr. COLDWELL: The accuracy of no single newspaper report which I have quoted has been denied. Last August and September hon. members sitting on the opposite side were loud in their condemnation of the government's action. Where are they now? The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) stated yesterday that he was astonished that members had not risen in their places to offer some criticism of the government's policies; and he proceeded to give reasons, which he thought were the true reasons, for that silence. I hope that the reasons which he gave are not correct. I should like to hear western members, particularly those on the Liberal side of the house, discuss this problem from the point of view from which they discussed it in the fall of last year. Are they going to allow what the people of western Canada believe to be a great betrayal of their interests to pass unchallenged by themselves in this parliament?

One last thing. It has been said on occasion that I am acting for some one else. Last year the chairman of the wheat board referred to me at least once as "Mr. McFarland's friend." I have never met Mr. McFarland, have never seen him, have never communicated with him by letter, telegram, or by proxy, and I would not know him if I met him on the street. Further, it has been said that I am acting on behalf of the wheat pools. May I say that I have had no communication with the wheat pools except when I have met officials casually, and the only letter I have had in months from them was the letter which probably other hon. members also received, giving information of a public nature. I am merely endeavouring to express on behalf of the people who sent me here the deep resentment they feel at the discontinuance of the wheat board method of marketing.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The hon. gentleman read a list of different members from western Canada and said that they had protested against the action of the government. In the list there was more than one member whose name I heard read and who did not protest, although they went to these meetings. Surely the hon. member should be fair enough to point that out.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is perfectly correct, and if a member did not protest I did not say so. I read the protests of those who did protest.

Mr. R. W. GLADSTONE (Wellington South): It will be my purpose, Mr. Speaker, to deal in a constructive way with the broader aspects of Canadian economy. To do so I have decided to direct my remarks along two lines—first, the budget from the point of view of an Ontario city; and second, the consideration of constructive efforts to create and stabilize prosperity in Canada.

The latter I propose to divide under three headings: (a) elimination of over-government; (b) economy and efficiency in administration; (c) the creation of new wealth. Expressed otherwise my two main headings might be: (1) What we are doing, being the story of the budget and its interpretation; (2) What we might do, being the suggestions of a member who has been a rather silent observer in parliament.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) delivered the budget two weeks ago to-day. The ground has been well covered in the debates during the intervening period. Newspaper comments express the opinion that many industries were not affected by the budget changes, but in my opinion it is doubtful whether there are many industries that have not been or will not be affected, and affected favourably, by the Canada-United States agreement of 1936 and the Canada-United Kingdom agreement of 1937. The point is that these agreements have been designed to give enlarged markets, three-way markets, local, British and United States, for our natural resources.

Prosperity on the farm is the best assurance of prosperity in industry. Increased purchasing power with the farmers in Wellington county will be reflected in a demand for the goods produced in the factories in the city of Guelph and in other towns and cities. It is the expectation, then, that more people will be employed both on the farms and in the factories as a result of these two agreements.

I do not propose to take time to discuss my next heading, namely, elimination as far as possible of over-government, since the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has announced recently that a royal commission will be named to study taxation and the division of financial powers and responsibilities. The scope of this commission, federally and provincially, was suggested recently quite comprehensively by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce to include the following purposes: (1) to clarify the interrelation of financing and taxing powers; (2) to survey duplication of public services; (3) to redefine legislative policies; (4) to establish administrative responsibilities. We can only await the recommendations of the royal commission and thereafter hope that the counsels of wise statesmanship, rising above petty politics, will prevail to establish relationships whereby duplication of services will be eliminated.

Economy and efficiency in administration: I realize I may here be treading on dangerous ground. This is a topic that will not be popular in a narrow political sense; I mean it will be unpopular in the sense of the remarks of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) on February 8, at page 683 of Hansard. The right hon. gentleman said:

> There is not a general disposition on the part of all of us to see our friends, as distinct from somebody else's friends, deprived of the employment by which they earn their livelihood. We are all perfectly willing that somebody else's friend should leave his position, but none of us is prepared to think our own friend should.

It all depends upon whose ox is being gored.

The very nature of a consideration of the subject of economy in government carries with it definite personal risks and makes it necessary that I say at the outset that I am dealing with a system and not with individual cases. Should it be found that departments are overstaffed such circumstances can be corrected. I have reason to believe they are being corrected, through the effluxion of time, by transference and by marriage and death. I say, therefore, there is no need for anxiety on the part of faithful civil servants because of anything I may say. Rather, I suggest that the prospect for the promotion of capable people will be enhanced through improved efficiency of administration. And further, I am not critical of any cabinet minister, past or present, except in his capacity as a member of parliament. Responsibility in general must come home to private members who frequently, on the urging of electors, exert pressure for the expenditure of $50,000 when the purpose would be served adequately by the expenditure of $25,000.

I wish here to express the highest confidence in and admiration of our cabinet ministers of to-day, and likewise former cabinet ministers in this house, except, of course, as regards our differences in policies.

The object of my treatment of the subject is to bring about a better form of presentation to parliament of the estimates of money required for the ensuing year and to discover means of saving public money. I have been giving this matter consideration for many weeks and at one time thought of placing on the order paper for discussion a resolution in the following form:

> Whereas, accumulated debt in Canada now constitutes a crushing burden upon the people and there is widespread criticism of the cost of government; and,
> Whereas the estimates of proposed expenditures are submitted to parliament without adequate details; and,
>
> Whereas the burdens of their respective departments and responsibilities of government in general impose a full time load upon the minister of each department; and,
> Whereas there is very little opportunity between sessions of parliament whereby private members may in any organized way seek to discover wastages of money;
> Therefore be it resolved that in the opinion of this house the government should establish a ministry of economy, with the object of saving money, of promoting efficiency, and, between sessions especially, of consulting with the elected representatives of the people to further these objects.

It is suggested that this department should be organized on an economy basis, without deputy minister or private secretary and looking to its discontinuance when it has served its purpose. It seemed best, however, that I should continue my study of the subject for a time in order to feel assurance of a more convincing, or perhaps invincible, argument, carrying with it some hope for definite action this session. I have discussed this subject with the Minister of Finance who will welcome any effort, soundly based, towards the discovery of means of promoting economy and efficiency in the service. I have found also in my visits to the Department of Public Works, the Department of National Revenue and the Post Office Department a recognition of need for greater cooperation and for an improved system, probably such as a rental charge for space used, to keep the space requirements within reasonable bounds commensurate with businesslike provision for the expectancy of expansion.

Search of the pages of Hansard over previous years reveals a long-time recognition of the fact that estimates have not been presented in a form to be understandable. Quoting from Hansard of June 9, 1928, at page 4,039, on the motion of Hon. J. A. Robb, Minister of Finance, that the house go into committee of ways and means, an amendment was moved by the then leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) to strike out all the words after the word "that" and to substitute therefor:

> This house is of opinion that the expenditures for the year ending March 31, 1928, and the proposed expenditures for the year ending March 31, 1929, are excessive and extravagant and that the country has not received, and cannot expect to receive, any adequate returns therefrom.

This amendment was debated at some length and finally negatived, after a statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) concluding in these words:

> Speaking for the government I would say that we would welcome a change in the present method, a change which would not only afford fuller opportunity for discussion but which would carry with it an obligation on the part of the heads of different branches of the public service to appear before a committee of the house and explain fully the reasons which have occasioned the recommendations which find their place in the estimates submitted to the house.
> Having said this I would like to supplement my remarks further by saying that if we are not voted out of office as a result of this blanket amendment and if when another session comes around we still retain the confidence of the House of Commons, one of the first matters to which we will ask the house to give its attention and consideration will be the one mentioned by my hon. friend, namely that of arranging some method by which the estimates may to a greater or less extent be considered by a special committee or by the standing committees of the house.

The assurances of the Prime Minister of June 9, 1928, were carried out the next session as recorded in Hansard of February 14, at page 147 on a motion of the Prime Minister to consider the advisability of amending the standing orders so that certain estimates might be referred to a committee. This motion was referred to a special committee, and when the findings of the committee were reported to the house I find on page 461 the following interesting comment by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill):

> . . . there is evidence of a tendency to divest this house of a certain portion of its responsibilities and to hand them over to other bodies, sometimes to the cabinet, sometimes to boards, and sometimes, as in this case, to committees.

The gist of the argument of the hon. member at that time was a protest against taking from parliament in any way the full right of discussion respecting the expenditure of money. Doubtless the same objection would be taken to-day, and quite properly so, to a committee on estimates, so that it behooves us to work out some other method by which economy in the expenditure of money will be practised in parliament as it is in ordinary private and corporate enterprises.

In view of the criticism right across Canada of the cost of government I would urge that supplementary to the royal commission on federal and provincial relations, a definite start be made this year looking to the getting of something more nearly approaching one hundred cents in value for each dollar expended. We have opportunities every day to vote money to be expended; may we not be given an opportunity at this session to vote a modest sum to be devoted to a systematic effort to save money? Each session has witnessed a considerable amount of questioning by the opposition of the day to get at the facts. Apparently the procedure has been to give as little information as possible, and unless the opposition is alert the good henchmen of whatever government is in power sweep through without discussion votes for millions with their "carried, carried, carried." We accept the recommendation of the minister of the department; the minister himself must rely largely on the advice of his staff. With all deference to ministers, present or of the long past, as far as it is humanly possible for them to supervise personally, I am inclined to agree with the observation of one faithful and capable civil servant to whom I talked, that paid servants and not members of parliament to quite a degree control the purse.

The main estimates as submitted to parliament this session, asking for money, occupy in all ninety-five printed pages, including much white space. The Auditor General's report of the expenditures for the previous year occupies upwards of 1,200 pages, for the most part closely printed. Only those hon. members who have behind them a considerable background of parliamentary service and accumulated information can possibly know what it is all about, as millions are being voted. The system is inadequate and unbusinesslike.

I believe I have emphasized sufficiently not only the need but also the desire on the part of parliament for many years for a better method of presenting and considering estimates. The question is how this can be brought about. The best suggestion I have had from any departmental head is for parliament to tear into some particular phase, and then the officials will endeavour to make corrections; the next year some other phase, and so on—a piecemeal sort of method. I am glad to note in the budget speech that the Minister of Finance has been giving some thought to this matter. I quote Hansard of February 25, page 1227:

> The form of our estimates and appropriations, and the method of classifying accounts make it impossible to achieve precise accuracy in such calculations as those I am now placing on Hansard, and I hope that by another year we may be able to introduce such changes in our procedure regarding estimates and accounts as will make it possible to determine more accurately the real costs of the various important services of government. I think members of the house have long recognized the need for the change I suggest.

Speaking as a new and humble member of this house I venture to suggest that this whole matter goes far beyond what may be contemplated at present by the Minister of Finance. If it were only a matter of accountancy and the purely clerical routine of the assemblage of data and the tabulation of figures, I have no doubt we have in the departments now many who are competent for such work. But it goes far deeper, to the origin and justification of the proposed expenditure. It is a matter for instance, of enlisting the cooperation of all members in a plan for reasonable economy. All honour and praise is due the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver) who, promptly after he was elected, cut almost in half certain proposed expenditures in his own riding. But if we fail to follow his example we will leave him looking foolish in the eyes of his electors for missing an opportunity to get Halton more deeply into the public trough. I have discovered a number of instances where the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin) has cut costs, but I also know the pressure he has to resist both from members and in the way of extravagant specifications by departments.

Our economy, Mr. Speaker, is not a matter to be worked out by civil servants. It is a matter that requires much study by this parliament, and non-political cooperation. I find in other parts of the empire confirmation of the importance of detail in estimates. In Hansard of January 19, at page 100, I note the comment of the right hon. leader of the opposition, who said:

During the time I was absent I took the trouble to look into the matter of estimates and the detailed reports furnished to the parliaments of Australia and New Zealand. I was amazed at the amount of detail furnished in those countries in connection with estimates.

The question of the wastage of public money has been discussed in the British parliament on numerous occasions. I quote from Politics from Within, written by Doctor Addison, at page 110:

> The real reasons for all this are to be found in the characters of the discussions on the estimates in the House of Commons, as well as in the character of the proceedings of the public accounts committees. If parliament wants this thing done it can get it done; but unfortunately for some years past public attention has been focused, for example, upon the number of typists that a department employs, and when a few of the typists have been got rid of, these exponents of "economy" plume themselves before the public as protectors of its purse.

At page 111 of the same book I find comments apropos to my suggestion for a moderate expenditure of money by this parliament to effect economies, many of which will carry on and compound from year to year. Doctor Addison says:

> I remember on one occasion the treasury objected to my employing a certain type of officer at a greater salary than £250 a year . . . and later . . . I was therefore for this special work authorized to employ one man at £1,000. . . . Within the first week of his appointment he had secured a modification of a contract which saved the country, on one undertaking, £50,000—or his own salary for fifty years.

In view of all the circumstances I have related I desire to make an appeal to the Minister of Finance and to the government to set up a miniature royal commission, composed of members of this house, to work in cooperation with the entire administration during the next parliamentary recess, in order to devise ways and means of effecting economies and promoting efficiency. At page 70 of the main estimates there is an item for a director of estimates. Perhaps the minister would agree to supplement that item by providing a royal commission of not more than five members of the House of Commons to carry on this special work. Some time ago the Prime Minister intimated that consideration would be given to the matter of appointing under-secretaries to various ministers. If this were done now even to the extent of three under-secretaries I would suggest that to them might be delegated this special work of improving the presentation of estimates for the 1938 session, and in the meantime they might recommend to the government measures of economy. No hon. member would wish to see an expenditure made to no purpose, but I suggest that a dollar expended now may save ten dollars per year, which would mean one hundred dollars in ten years. This suggestion is along the line of an editorial which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of November 30, 1936, as follows:

> An annual saving to the federal treasury of $25,000,000 could be effected in administrative economies, according to estimates of those intimate with governmental activities. These sorely burdened people would like to see some balancing done by economy rather than by increased taxes.

Thus far I have presented a picture of improved trade helping to create purchasing power and more employment, and I have also urged economy in government and administration. I would not be honest with myself, however, if I did not recognize that great impetus to the present increase of trade within the empire has been given by preparations on a tremendous scale against war. I can see no other course for the empire at present than to be ready to defend itself against those who would take from us what we have. Right now strength in defence is our best assurance of peace, and we are all against war. But, Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that either high tariffs or low tariffs will be found sufficient to stabilize prosperity in Canada. An editorial appearing in the Ottawa Citizen of to-day contains this sentence:

> One more reminder that "recovery" will not solve the problem of unemployment and relief is furnished in the warning of Harry L. Hopkins, one of President Roosevelt's right hand men, that the United States will have at least four million "normally unemployed even in the best of times."

I am unwilling to be a defeatist; I am unwilling to surrender to the position held by some that a large number of people in Canada never again will have the opportunity to work. Theories are being expounded that may not be practicable to-day. I would remind this house that British liberty was achieved by evolution, commencing with the magna charta in 1215 and developing stage by stage during the succeeding years. Our external debt is an obstacle to our freedom of action financially. I am against borrowing another dollar outside of Canada, beyond what is necessary to refund the present external debt. I would try to find within our own country some means of financing, not for paternalism, not for palliatory measures, but in order to stimulate production based on our natural resources.

Permit me, Mr. Speaker, to refer now to what we all consider to be an outstanding opportunity for Canada in the development of our mineral resources. In his radio address of April 24, 1936, the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar) used these words: "There is within our grasp the cure of the depression in Canada." The minister has reorganized his department and is giving leadership to wider interest in all our national resources. I should like to see him given more financial support in his efforts to speed up development and to give more employment. May I point out that mining gives a maximum employment to labour—nearly one hundred per cent. Fifty per cent is given in the mines, and a large amount is given in the factories, on the railways and on the farms which supply the produce for the workers.

No one doubts the existence of enormous deposits of minerals throughout Canada. After visiting the mines a great personage in this country gave it as his opinion that our mineral resources will not be exhausted even by the grandchildren of our great great grandchildren. But there are dangers of development being retarded selfishly. We have only to look to the record of the manner in which our timber resources have been handled to get a glimpse of what may happen to some degree in our mineral fields. Prospectors may give the best years of their lives, and then lose the fruits of their labour to octopus mining corporations or to foreign capital, due to the inability of the prospector to finance. Surely federal and provincial governments should cooperate to assist the prospector and to hasten development. South Africa is enjoying unparalleled prosperity, emanating from her mines—so much so that in 1935 the debt was reduced by $100,000,000 and in 1936 by $90,000,000. In his recent world tour the right hon. the leader of the opposition witnessed the prosperity in South Africa, and in the house made the general suggestion that it might be desirable for the dominion government to carry on gold mining operations in the northwest territories, thereby providing about the only hopeful method of making large scale payments on our national debt.

This brings me to my last heading, namely the creation of wealth. During the session of 1936 a number of members of this house visited several of the mines at Kirkland Lake and Noranda. I was very much impressed with what I saw and I was so thrilled with the vision of the possibilities as expressed in the radio addresses of the Minister of Mines that I went so far as to draft some suggestions which I will now place on record for what they may be worth.

First I would suggest that the mineral resources of Canada, particularly gold and the by-products of gold mines, be developed more speedily through government loans, or partnership with others, or profit sharing arrangements, to bring recommended gold mining prospects into production and to carry on operations. Further, if methods of orthodox finance are found to be a barrier against immediate action on the part of the government to bring about speedy development of the mineral resources in the north country, then I suggest the following scheme of moderately unorthodox methods of finance: (1) That the participation of the government in gold mining operations be financed by an issue or issues of gold development certificates, non-interest bearing and negotiable as currency in Canada; (2) that interest at the rate of 33/100 of one cent per one hundred dollars per day, approximately 1·2 per cent per annum, be paid from the consolidated revenue fund to the holders of gold development certificates, for the time they are in the possession of the Bank of Canada; (3) that the transactions under minerals development be kept in a separate account, and that as profits accrue the consolidated revenue fund be reimbursed for payments made for interest on gold development certificates, and then for retirement of certificates.

I submit this method of financing should be favourably received by holders of dominion bonds outside Canada. I believe they would consider their investments more secure under a carefully organized plan for the development of our mineral resources, than as now with the wastage on relief. These suggestions are made as a contribution for further thought as we endeavour to find some new revenue producing channel of employment of labour. Many Canadians spend the best years of their lives prospecting for gold, and so often the reward for discovery slips from them into the hands of foreign capital. Can we not somehow help them, and at the same time help the nation?

It may be pertinent to ask: Similarly situated, would Germany be arming to the teeth or would she, in a peaceful way, be lavishing money on the discovery, recovery and utilization of the hidden wealth of the Cambrian shield which stretches almost from the Atlantic to the Pacific? Likewise Italy?

I have been venturing suggestions to-day, but I would not be so egotistical as to imagine their being in final form for adoption. My hope however is that they may provoke thought and discussion which may lead somewhere. To some extent let me amplify my suggestion for the issuance of gold development certificates, without cost to the government of Canada, with the exception of 1·2 per cent per annum when returned to and held by the Bank of Canada. Possibly the Bank of Canada and chartered banks might suffer some loss in this way, but as they have paid dividends all through the depression perhaps they can afford to. Indirectly however I believe such a loss would more than be recouped in extra business transacted. I am sure the government would not lose on interest more than would be offset by sales taxes collected on increased business. I will admit that through speculative hazards of mining we would lose, but the loss brought about by many failures would easily be offset by the returns from one paying mine. It would be much better to lose in an effort to give work than to pour money down the sink-hole of relief.

Permit me now, sir, to summarize the suggestions I have been endeavouring to advance. The motor car manufacturers change models annually, but the record of efforts to improve the estimates confirms the suggestion that apparently politics is a handicap to the adoption of anything new. In parliament and out of it we hear much talk of future depressions, and almost a resignation to cycles as something inevitable. I would say that cycles only leave stranded the people in the cities, and wipe out their savings. We must make an adjustment whereby we may be able to achieve more nearly a level by taking from the peaks and filling in the valleys. This surely means reducing the sales tax before reducing the income tax. Overhead is too high in many places other than in government. We must get more nearly to a pay-as-you-go basis. Not only must we balance our budget, but we must reduce our national debt. I have confidence in the leadership of the Prime Minister and his cabinet. They stand for the promotion of trade with all nations, and I believe that therein lies the road to enduring peace.

Internally we need more speedy development of resources, and especially of our minerals. In conclusion may I emphasize that point. Even with some risks, pioneering is the way to progress. The first aeroplane flew only a few feet above ground, and for a very short distance. There is carved on the peace tower these words: "Where there is no vision the people perish." This is our challenge. Let us grasp the vision of greater possibilities and give to youth and to all who by birth or adoption claim Canada as their homeland, the opportunities that should be theirs, where ten million people possess a continental expanse of almost inexhaustible resources.

Mr. A. M. EDWARDS (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to contribute a few remarks to this budget debate I hope the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Gladstone) will not consider me discourteous if I do not follow his remarks. He suggested that the government should set up another commission in order to save some money. I think the experience of all hon. members is that exactly the opposite effect is obtained by this procedure. Personally, I am against the commission form of government. However, I shall follow this point later.

At the outset I should like to make my status clear to hon. members. I do not intend to speak particularly as a Conservative member of the House of Commons, although I am always ready and willing to do so. I realize that at this time any suggestions made by Conservative members are more or less cries in the wilderness. However, my optimism is such as to lead me to believe that within at least three years the situation will be reversed. In the meantime I propose to bow to the democratic idea of majority rule. I realize that nothing can be hoped for from the present government in connection with any ideas that I may put forward, as they would be considered Conservative doctrines. I feel that for the next two or three years Conservative policies will be under an eclipse, but I do not consider it necessary or wise that I should remain silent for this reason. I welcome the opportunity that such a situation gives me to be free from party considerations which are sometimes hampering to the expression of independent views and those beyond the scope of party doctrines.

I sat in this house from 1930 to 1935 as a Conservative member, and I was pleased indeed to support the administration of my distinguished leader (Mr. Bennett). His administration during those difficult years was such as to warrant the closest support and cooperation. The depression has passed and I suggest that the time has come when private members of this house should be given the fullest opportunity to contribute any ideas they may have for advancing the sound progress of this country. I sometimes wonder if we have not departed greatly from the real meaning of the word "parliament." It seems to be quite popular to be bilingual, and I would direct the attention of the house to the fact that the word "parliament" is derived from the same root as the French verb "parler," which means, "to speak." In its original meaning, a parliament is an assembly in which the members speak about and discuss problems of national interest, but I am afraid that in recent years we have departed from the original conception of that word. Instead of all members of parliament taking part in the discussions, either briefly or at length, the majority sit silent while the few are extremely vocal. The measure of a loyal party man and the merit by which the final reward of the senate is too often gained is a combination of silence and lip service which a member gives to his party either in power or in opposition.

I believe the manner in which Canada has come through the depression justified my action during the past five years. No nation came through these difficult times as well as Canada. No nation suffered less, and now that the crisis is over I should like to speak, not as a member of this House of Commons but as an ordinary Canadian business man who sees a great future ahead for Canada. But unless we correct our course in many vital particulars, we may yet fail to reach that pot of gold at the end of the rainbow which is Canada's certain future if sound policies are followed.

It is a matter of great satisfaction to me, and I am sure it is to every hon. member, to see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) back in his place. We welcome his usual happy and genial manner and trust that he has recovered fully from his illness. We sympathize with him in the arduous duties which he has to perform and which no doubt rendered him a prey to that illness. The budget he has just presented to the house is a monument to the labours he has been performing in recent months. If we presume to criticize either the budget or the government's fiscal policy it must be understood at all times that such criticism does not detract in the slightest from our recognition of the conscientious work he has been doing in the national interest.

I have explained, perhaps somewhat elaborately, my desire to speak not as a member of any political party but as an ordinary Canadian business man. I intend to look at the problems with which we are faced from the viewpoint of a business man. The first point which I should like to mention is one which my leader raised in this house the other day and the soundness of which cannot be called into question. I refer to the reckless manner in which this administration is staking the fortunes of the nation in a colossal gamble in export trade. I wonder if we have considered the ultimate results of such a policy.

This is a day of intense competition for export markets. We live in a world of tariffs, quotas and clearing house agreements. There are many countries competing for the rapidly dwindling export markets. The great exporting nations such as Japan, Germany, Czechoslovakia, Russia and others have standards of living much lower than Canada. The essence of successful competition in export trade is a nation's ability to meet the standards of other nations. If Canada wishes to compete in these markets she must reduce her cost of production, which means reducing the living standards of her workers either to or below the levels prevailing in the nations with which she is competing. Does any Canadian really want to see the living standards of this country dragged down to the level of the living standards of the countries I have mentioned? Truly not. Yet there may be no alternative if we are to follow to its inevitable result the policy which this government has embraced so wholeheartedly. By the mad mania for export trade which seems to obsess this ministry Canadian living standards are seriously threatened, and their doom is sealed unless the government takes warning in time and adopts a more balanced policy. This is an age of statistics. I will use only a couple to illustrate my point before I leave it. The value of Canada's field crops for 1935 was $506,000,000, exclusive of wheat. Of this total only $149,000,000, or approximately twenty-nine per cent went to the export markets of the world. In other words, in staking everything upon export trade, and in lowering our own tariff barriers to achieve this end, we are acting in the interests of less than thirty per cent of our agricultural products and jeopardizing the market which absorbs seventy per cent. Could there be any better illustration of a penny-wise-pound-foolish policy?

I come now to the other phase of public business which I conceive to demand the urgent and thoughtful consideration of every member of parliament, and that is the budgetary position of this dominion. I want to give the house a few figures which are available in the government account books but are all too rarely contemplated. The Minister of Finance takes some pride this year in the fact that a deficit which he had expected to be $100,000,000 has turned out to be only $87,000,000. I must admit that I cannot share his feeling of unalloyed rejoicing. The fact that a situation is more favourable than it might have been is always, it seems to me, poor ground for consolation so long as the situation remains fundamentally bad. I wonder if it is generally realized that since 1930 the direct national debt of this dominion has increased by $660,000,000, and a guaranteed debt, largely on account of the railways, by $403,000,000. That is an increase in seven years of more than a billion dollars in the interest-bearing liabilities of this country. I mention only in passing the fact that the federal government has not been alone in achieving this record. Provincial and municipal governments have piled up funded obligations at an equal or greater rate during the same period. That only makes the situation so much worse. In fact, we have now come to the point where the cost of carrying our governmental obligations is almost the largest item in the budgets of our governing bodies. Need we look elsewhere for the cause of continued unemployment How can industry absorb the thousands who are out of work to-day when so large a proportion of its revenues is appropriated by the taxing authorities of the nation simply to meet the interest charges and expenditures of other years?

If this situation were a thing of the past, it would be a matter to be regretted and we would be left with hope for the future: but it is not a thing of the past, it is continuing. I wonder if hon. members realize that the estimated expenditures of this government for the year now ending stand at a total of $539,500,000? In 1925 the expenditures totalled $335,000,000. In other words, over a period of eleven years we have expanded our federal expenditure by almost $200,000,000. The truth is that our budget has grown in recent years to almost wartime proportions. As a matter of fact, during at least three of the four years of the war we spent less than we shall spend during the current year. In 1915 our expenditures were only $248,000,000, in 1916 they were $339,000,000, and in 1917 they were $498,000,000.

It seems to me that this situation should make us pause and reflect. I noticed in a recent government publication that in the three years ended March 31, 1935, the net increase of the debt of the dominion was $470,000,000; we are travelling into the red at the rate of half a billion dollars in three years. Surely that cannot continue. But what steps are we taking to reverse the trend? Is there any improvement in sight? I confess that I cannot see any in the policies which the Minister of Finance has submitted to the house this session. Our main estimates this year call for an expenditure of $410,000,000, and already supplementaries total $96,000,000; that makes a total expenditure planned already for 1938 of $506,000,000, and we know there are supplementaries yet to come—for instance, the appropriation for payment of the destroyers purchased from the British admiralty has not been placed before us. Judging from the present outlook I think it can be reasonably said that the fiscal year for which we are planning promises to be a year of the greatest peacetime expenditure in the history of confederation. We are planning for it in the clear realization that since 1930 the dominion has been consistently failing to balance its budget, and that in three years ended 1935 we increased our debt by no less than half a billion dollars.

The Minister of Finance may ask what suggestions I have to make, and doubtless he will not be satisfied if I simply say: "Rigorous retrenchment." He might properly say that such advice is more easily given than followed. But I have one question to ask the minister, and I do so recognizing that it may not be very popular with either side of the house or the immediate galleries. What justification under present conditions can there be for restoring to the civil service the five per cent cut? It would have been all very well if all the citizens who contribute to these salaries were living in the district of Ottawa, but when one thinks of the man who for a number of years has been on short time and is finding it very hard to get along, but yet has to contribute his share of the taxes, one feels that people who have not had to work on short time, who have employment the year round, and regular holidays, are hardly entitled to very much consideration. That applies equally to members of parliament. The plain truth is that neither hon. members, from the point of view of their financial capacity as such, nor civil servants, have known what the depression was. They were not suffering; they were not threatened by any crisis. I submit that under the circumstances the only possible justification for the restoration of the five per cent cut is a political one, and the country has reached the stage at which, Mr. Speaker, it can no longer afford politics of that kind.

Another suggestion I would make, although I realize that it is put forward only in general terms, is that the cabinet should carefully scrutinize government services with a view to the elimination of those which are wholly unnecessary or which are justified only by a condition of extravagant prosperity such as the treasury is certainly not enjoying at the present time. Again, the Minister of Finance may reply that this is good advice but very difficult to follow. Well, anyone who has been around these buildings for a few years will agree with me that duplication of services should not be tolerated. Numbers of positions are filled by two people because, one being English-speaking, necessarily there much be a French-speaking official as well; or if the position is filled by a French-speaking employee an English-speaking official must also be appointed. That sort of thing is not good business, and as I mentioned at the outset,

I have been trying to consider this budget from strictly a business point of view. While I agree with the view of the hon. member who preceded me that a committee for the purposes he suggested should be set up, it seems to me that it is the function of each minister to investigate and decide whether his department is or is not overstaffed. As I have already said, I am certainly against the idea of commission government. Apart from very exceptional circumstances—and I have not known of many of these exceptional circumstances in my time in the house—I think that the business of the country should be carried on entirely by the men who are sent here and paid to do it. There are 245 members of the House of Commons, all well paid. They are sent here to transact the business of the country; and to say that there is not sufficient intelligence among the different members of the house to investigate any question, I do not care what it is, is a reflection on the house. There is only one reason—I believe we are all agreed on this: it is a case of passing the buck. We have had committees of the house studying large problems and they have done their work quite as satisfactorily as some of the commissions that have been appointed. We have only to look at the commissions that are travelling about the country to-day, one in particular, though perhaps I should not say much about it seeing that it is still functioning. The only thing that has come out of that commission so far has been a four or five-day tirade on the free trade policy. Everything it has investigated has been investigated by other commissions, and I am going to refer to that a little later.

I come now to the subject I have discussed several times in this house; it is one that I have familiarized myself with to some extent. I refer to the textile industry, and I am going to discuss one particular branch of that business. I wish hon. members would differentiate between the branches of this industry when they are criticizing the business. I do not know anything about the cotton business, or about celanese, but I do want to say a word or two about the woollen, worsted and knit goods business, and more particularly those branches that pertain to wool. It seems to be a favourite sport of some hon. members, and it has been for some time, to take a crack at the textile business. I do not know of any other business that has been so unmercifully hammered, not even the farm implement business.

An hon. MEMBER: There must be a reason.

Mr. EDWARDS: It is an obsession, not a reason. I admit at once that there are certain branches of the textile business that will have to do some explaining on the ground of overcapitalization and so on, in the light of what has been brought out, but I do not agree that the textile business as a whole should be entirely condemned. There are certain branches of it that do need correcting, but the woollen and worsted business has never been found to be in that position.

Mr. MACDONALD (Brantford): The report is not yet out condemning it.

Mr. EDWARDS: I am not paying attention to that report. The price spreads commission investigated the textile business thoroughly from end to end; every branch was under examination. What was the result? A clear sheet for the woollen and worsted business. Not only that, but after the 1932 agreements were signed—I believe it was a year later or perhaps two years, but one year at any rate—when the representatives of the United Kingdom woollen industry came to Canada they put their case before the tariff board and argued that the duties imposed by the treaty were too high. Again, what was the result? The result was that they admitted that the duty on woollen and worsted yarns was only sufficient to equate cost of production as between the two countries, and that the duty on woollen and worsted cloth was inadequate to bring about this equation. That is the situation, and it makes no difference what we say about it. When we think of this branch of the industry and what it means to the different localities in which the mills are located, I suggest that a little more care should be taken in cricitizing the business. I seldom disagree with the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Thorson), but I do disagree with his suggestion that the textile business should be sacrificed in order to sell more wheat abroad.

Mr. THORSON: I never made such a statement.

Mr. EDWARDS: That is the inference from what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. THORSON: It is not a proper inference.

Mr. EDWARDS: I take the hon. member's word for it, but that is what I gathered from what he said. I do not know how you can reduce the manufacture of woollen cloth in Canada, through the importation of such goods, and still expect a man to buy a suit of clothes from the old country or anywhere else and another suit from cloth made in Canada. I cannot figure that out. As has been said many times in this house, and more recently by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thompson), the woollen industry is located in small centres of population and its success must be assured if those who are engaged in it are to survive. There are 500 mills of all sorts throughout Canada located, roughly speaking, I believe, in 150 different cities, towns and villages. In the district of South Waterloo, which I have the honour to represent, there are a number of large industries —quite large—one employing over 800 hands, another 600, another 300 or 400, and so on, and I want to pay this tribute to the textile business and as well to the government that imposed the tariff at the short session of 1930. During the depression years, when in 1933 twenty-six out of every hundred men were unemployed, the textile business saved the situation as far as our part of the country was concerned. In many cases where the girls and women of the household were working in the textile mills supporting the home the father or the sons were out of work. And that happened not in a few cases, but in hundreds of cases that I know of, and in more that I have been told about. Prior to 1930 these mills were working on short time, and in fact in many mills the yarn department was completely closed down. In 1930 the industry was given a break by the tariff imposed by the Bennett government. Prices on cloth—I wish hon. members would get this—were in many instances definitely lowered, and the mills were busy because they were able to obtain between 75 and 80 per cent of the home market. The industry did not take advantage of the protective tariff to raise prices but actually lowered them by reason of the fact that they were able to produce more, thereby reducing operating cost per unit.

Canada is a country in which woollen garments are worn during a great part of the year. Our position is such that we require woollen clothing. Surely hon. members will admit that where the people wear woollen clothing six or seven months of the year it can be truthfully said that the woollen industry is indigenous to Canada. I have heard it said so often in this house that goods should come from the place where they can be produced cheapest; for example that woollen goods should be brought from the United Kingdom. But will anyone say that the rubber industry, for example, is indigenous to the United States? Yet look at the tremendous business they have built up in that line. Or can it be said that the cotton industry is indigenous to the United Kingdom? Yet look at the enormous development of that industry which has taken place there. If our manufacturers are to be deprived of the business I have mentioned it is going to be just too bad for the 63,000 workers at present engaged in it, together with their dependents. I have not a great deal to complain of in regard to the tariff reductions made and the renewal of the empire trade agreements, so long as our mills are able to secure something upward of sixty per cent of the business. I do not think there is any particular danger so long as that protection is given them. But if we get below sixty per cent of the home market there is very great danger. Surely the manufacturers and workers of this country are entitled to sixty per cent of the home market.

Much has been said about the cost of clothing having been high on account of the tariff. This is definitely not true. If the yarn is brought in to be manufactured into cloth at the 12½ per cent duty on the yarn—and it is still lower now with the specific duty off—it will not affect the consumer. I think hon. members will be surprised to learn that the duty on the yarn used in a finished suit of clothes valued at say, $40, is less than 80 cents. Who will say that the 80 cents imposed by the tariff makes any appreciable difference in the cost of the $40 suit? If the cloth is brought in, in the form of worsted, 3½ yards to a suit, the duty is not more than $1.75, figuring 16 ounces to the yard of cloth. Would any hon. member say that the $1.75 imposed by the tariff gets to the consumer? Never; it is taken up in the manufacture and in profit to the retailer. The cost of clothing is not in the price of the cloth to any large extent. In a $40 suit of clothes the cloth represents somewhere between $10 and $12; the difference is made up by labour, overhead and the clothing manufacturer's profit. If this protection is taken away it means throwing all these thousands of people out of work, with no benefit whatever to the consumer.

Prior to 1930 sufficient cloth was brought into this country to make a suit of clothes for every adult male in Canada per year. Would anyone say that that was giving the home manufacturer too much of his home market? What was left, when sufficient cloth was brought into Canada prior to 1930 to make a suit for every adult male in the country? When the higher duties were imposed in the short session of 1930 a lot of that was shut off, and jobs provided for thousands of people. May I give the figures of employment in the textile industry from 1930 to 1936?

1931—50,931 on part time.
1932—51,030 on part time.
1933—52,753 on full time.

And so on up to 1936 when there were 63,800 textile workers working full time. That was at a time when out of every 100 industrial employees 26 were unemployed. I repeat, the textile industry did a real national service for Canada.

Perhaps at this stage a comparison of wages paid in the United Kingdom with those paid in Canada, as brought out by the Turgeon textile commission, would be useful:

	Cents per hour
	Canada	Great Britain
Woollen industry. ..	30·19	16·90
Cotton industry.. ..	26·64	16·58
Carpet industry.. ..	36·28	18·98

The textile industry continues as an integral and valuable part of the industrial fabric of Canada, in the wages it disburses, and taxes it pays, and the amount it expends for freight and other services. It maintains a substantial part of the population of this dominion. So much for the textile business.

I regret, along with other hon. members, that it was necessary for the finance minister to retain taxation on the high level that it is. The sales tax and the excise tax have been fully retained; other taxes, particularly corporation taxes, act as a severe handicap on business.

Mr. MACDONALD (Brantford): You do not want the excise tax taken off, do you?

Mr. EDWARDS: No, but if the hon. member will wait a minute I will give him a solution. This high taxation is indirectly responsible for a lot of the business worries of industrial concerns to-day, and directly and adversely affects the employment situation. I realize, of course, that these taxes must be imposed under present conditions; there is no doubt about that. But I make a suggestion, for whatever it is worth. I suggest to the minister that prior to bringing down the next budget, careful consideration be given to the idea of putting into force the turnover tax as a substitute for many of the nuisance taxes which we have to-day. I realize that this suggestion will require considerable study, but I leave it with the minister, after quoting part of a speech made some years ago by Sir Edmund Walker, addressing the annual meeting of the Canadian Bank of Commerce. He said:

> "A small tax on the sales of commodities and real property in Canada would hurt so little, would be so fair, would be so easily collected, and would produce such a very large sum that to fail to levy it seems excusable only if it can be shown to be impracticable."

I leave this quotation with the finance minister to ponder. It is not anything new, but I think it is worthy of consideration.

I should also like to suggest to the government, in view of the recent decisions given by the privy council, that during the recess a real honest-to-goodness attempt be made by this government and the provincial governments to get together and devise some plan under which social legislation may be made workable on a national scale. I refer particularly to the minimum wage act, unemployment insurance, and old age pensions. Although of course it has been decided that these are provincial matters, I do not see how they can be successfully handled in any disjointed way, and I suggest that every effort be made to place them on a uniform national basis.

The home improvement act is to be commended. I commend the Minister of Labour for that; I think it is beginning to show good results in the building trades. It has been stated that 83 per cent of the cost of building is labour, so that it means a great deal for the working men and mechanics of this country—and not only those actually engaged in the building trades; it goes much further back. The hon. member for Brantford I think will back me up when I say that it goes back to the machine shops; there it is very noticeable. I suggest, however, that the interest rate on these small loans should be reduced to the minimum.

The suggestion has been brought forward by several hon. members that a duty or quota or both should be imposed on vegetable oils coming into Canada, and as a result I have received many communications from farmer constituents asking what will be done. From what I can gather, the importation of vegetable oils from foreign countries is an ever-increasing menace to the butter fat producers of Canada. This question is now before the tariff board, and careful consideration should be given the findings of that board. If the threat to our dairying interests is as great as it is reported to be, I suggest that action should be swift and sure.

Last session I protested against the reduction in the duty on furniture coming into Canada from the United States under the agreement. I want to tell the house to-day that the fear I then expressed has been abundantly justified. The furniture industry in Canada is in very bad shape. I do not say this is entirely because of our imports from the United States, but that has been a major contributing cause to the troubles of the furniture industry. I was informed lately, and I believe the information to be correct, that either the government of the United States or the governments of individual states, I do not know which, have subsidized factories that had been closed in large centres in the United States of America. These factories have been reopened and a good deal of the output is coming to Canada. To quote statistics again, imports of wood furniture for 1935 amounted to $286,746. In 1936, following this agreement with the United States, they amounted to $663,634; in other words they were about three times as great. For January of this year, the last month for which complete figures are available, wood furniture valued at $84,001 entered Canada from the United States, and this at a time when the industry here is struggling for existence.

I am surprised that many other hon. members of this house have not brought this serious situation to the attention of the government. There are very few Conservative members representing ridings in which furniture is made, but many Liberal members represent constituencies in which there are large furniture factories. All these members need do is go and inquire as to the facts, as I have done in several cases. Let them go into these factories; let them find out what the situation really is; let them see the reason for the low wages that have been paid and the strikes that have occurred. If they do that I believe they will have something to say to the government which they support, if they do their duty by their constituents.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I must tell the hon. gentleman that his time has expired.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. EDWARDS: We hear a great deal about the high protectionist policy of the Conservative party, but right here I say, with no fear of successful contradiction, that this is an absolute myth, that it is not true. As I understand it, the tariff policy which I support is one that asks a tariff simply sufficient to equate costs as between Canada and the country that is competing with us in order to give our manufacturers a fair break. That is all.

Mr. THORSON: Since when?

Mr. EDWARDS: That has always been our policy; that has always been the attitude of the Conservative party, but the high tariff bogey always has been used by the Liberal party as a peg on which to hang the argument that ours is a high protectionist policy.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I again suggest that the government give greater consideration to the balancing of business instead of paying so much attention to the exportation of any particular commodity. Only by adopting this principle may we expect to relieve the treasury of the terrific burden caused by the unemployment situation.

[Mr. Edwards.]

Mr. WILFRID GARIEPY (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, as a Liberal of independent leanings representing a riding with a strong labour complexion I wish at the outset to congratulate the government upon having appointed the textile investigating commission. It has been a blessing to the country. We have been very fortunate in having as chairman of that commission a gentleman of high culture, integrity and energy, assisted by counsel, Mr. McRuer, a leader of the Canadian bar, well equipped to bring out the facts, and ably supported by a leading member of the Montreal bar, Mr. Beauregard. While the report of the commission has not yet been presented, sufficient evidence has been adduced to enable us to draw some conclusions. In the first place, the real capital invested in these factories has never been properly disclosed. Second, in many cases the profits were hidden.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; I would ask for your ruling whether it is open to members of the house at this time to discuss a subject now under investigation by a royal commission with respect to which no report has as yet been received or laid before the house. It is unprecedented that such a matter should be discussed prior to a report being made by the commissioner.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I quite agree with my hon. friend, Mr. Speaker, but I am sorry he did not raise the point when the investigation was being criticised by members on his side of the house.

Mr. CAHAN: I was not here; I heard no such criticism.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): My hon. friend is correct in his point of order, I think, but the commission was criticised by many speakers on the opposite side of the house.

Mr. CAHAN: If there has been any backwardness on the part of members to raise objection, I now raise it distinctly, and I ask for a ruling. Otherwise we open the door to a discussion that may last not weeks but months.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I agree with my hon. friend, but I do not congratulate him on his impartiality.

Mr. CAHAN: I would ask for the Speaker's ruling.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I shall take the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) under consideration, and give my ruling later.

Mr. GARIEPY: It follows clearly, Mr. Speaker, that the high tariff which has been in existence for the protection of the textile industry had not its raison d'etre, was not a real need, and that the arguments presented to this house and the country were without any real foundation. Conditions of labour warranted the complaints that were being made throughout Canada, and it seems to me it was a step in the right direction when last session the attention of the house was directed to the strike of employees of the Wabasso Cotton Company in Three Rivers. In my view the complaint invited some remedy. No doubt cognizance of the circumstances has been taken in the preparation of the budget, which on the whole I would say is well balanced. It includes provisions which are compatible with real progress, and the budget presentation was on a par with budget speeches made in the past by such leading statesmen as Mr. Fielding and Mr. Robb.

The present Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) has a knowledge of both western and eastern conditions. I knew him before he became a member of the legislature of Saskatchewan and I believe he may well take credit, with the means at his disposal, for rising through sheer ability and force of character to the important position he now occupies in the government.

I listened with keen interest to the observations yesterday of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Moore). He knows his subject, and many of the statements he made will not suffer contradiction. But this is not an idealistic world; we must face facts and conditions. If external trade is to be developed, agreements are essential, and the government is to be commended upon what it has done in that direction. It has effected agreements with the United States and with the mother country. I would go a step farther and say that before long I hope that similar agreements will be made with Belgium and with France. By the way, one does not hear much about Canada's representative in France. Our present representative the Hon. Philippe Roy, is an old friend of mine, but his physical disability, I think, deserves the attention of the government. Though diplomats should not always be listening, they must be able to hear. I suggest the time has come when improved representation of Canada in France should be made. I do not say this by way of criticism, but with all due respect I suggest that the members of the government are broadminded enough to expect hon. members addressing the house to speak their minds.

One matter which I think requires attention is with respect to answers given to questions placed on the order paper. Owing to pressure of business, ministers must leave to their departmental officials the duty of answering these questions. Perhaps the officials do not understand the mentality or sufficiently consider the atmosphere of the house. A few days ago the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lacroix) asked what steps were being taken against communism in Canada. The answer given was: "Such means as are proper for the preservation of peace and order." I say that does not go far enough; it is not satisfactory. If the government had said, "For reasons of state we cannot disclose the situation," that would have been understood, but when some answer is attempted to be given we should be told in all frankness whether or not something is being done. I have it on good authority that in the city of Montreal there are at least two hundred communist clubs with active memberships, initiations, recruiting organizations and all the various means of propaganda. After visiting my home constituency of Three Rivers last Saturday, I can vouch that in that part of the province in season and out tons of communist literature are being distributed. I am not an alarmist, nor do I mean to suggest that this alone will bring about revolution in a month or a day; but the point is that we in parliament should keep our eyes open. The matter should be investigated more than it seems to have been, if we may judge by reports received in the house.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Does the hon. member know that if seditious literature is distributed or propagated anywhere, it is for the provincial authorities to put the law in motion? There is a law against it.

Mr. MICHAUD: I understand that is the constituency represented by the Attorney General for Quebec.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Exactly.

Mr. GARIEPY: The point I make is that the two powers should work in conjunction. I do not think in a matter of such importance the ball should be thrown from one to the other. I am not criticizing or complaining, but I do say we should attend to this thing before it has gone too far. If it is a matter for direct provincial intervention, then no doubt something should be done from that end. At the same time I submit the federal government should follow what is taking place, and see to it that proper remedies are applied.

Again referring to answers to questions, may I say that on three occasions I have asked the names of employees engaged in government work on the St. Lawrence river, a matter under the control of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe), who is not now in his seat, but to this date I have not received the information. Last session the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Dubois) sponsored a resolution requesting that the government consider the advisability of appointing experts to look into the building of a bridge over the St. Lawrence river at a point opposite Three Rivers. Later the same hon. member again asked what had been done and the answer from the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin) was nothing—no word of explanation, and no report of any kind. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the instructions of the house are not being followed, and that an answer of that kind is not satisfactory. In the province of Quebec we have unemployment, just as in other parts of Canada, no more and no less. I am not blaming the government for not doing more than it has done, but at the same time conditions in my section of the country warrant taking all means at our disposal to improve labour conditions. If construction of this bridge I mentioned a moment ago were thought advisable, it would certainly afford work to many people. It would seem that money can be found to finance the construction. If hon. members look at the map they will find that the bridge would be in the very centre of the province and would serve almost a million people. It would be the last link for a direct connection between the north shore of the St. Lawrence and the United States boundary.

This is work which would not prove very costly. Votes have been passed for armaments and for other things. The province of Quebec has joined with other provinces in contributing to direct relief, and it seems to me that some of the money might have been used in Quebec for useful projects such as the one I have mentioned.

A moment ago I mentioned that we are a confederation of component parts which decided to unite; but still retaining their original identity. Prior to 1867 Lower Canada was a self-governing body, so far as it could then exist. It did not give away any of its essential powers when it entered confederation. The majority of the population of the province of Quebec are French-speaking, but this is not the essential point in my argument. If complaints are made by my province, they should be considered in the same way that complaints received from Upper Canada were considered in the days of William Lyon Mackenzie, and from Nova Scotia in the days of Joseph Howe.

I come now to a delicate matter, but one to which serious consideration should be given. I think we have reached a point where it must be said that the civil service commission is nothing less than a menace to this country. I could give many instances which have occurred throughout the whole province of Quebec, but I shall illustrate what I have in mind by referring to certain incidents in the city of Three Rivers.

A year ago the Wabasso Cotton Company had a strike, and a delegation of its employees was sent to meet the Department of Labour at Ottawa. There were eight French-speaking employees who met Mr. Dickson, the deputy minister of Labour, and certain members of his staff. I was along also, and for hours the discussion was carried on through myself as interpreter. There was no French-speaking employee available in the department to listen to the views of these employees.

In the city of Three Rivers the mounted police is headed by Mr. Chamberlain, an English-speaking official. I have nothing to say against his ability, but he is being retained there in spite of protests. These protests are not being made because of his inability to perform his duties, but because Three Rivers is more French than any other city not only in Quebec or in Canada but in the whole world.

I could go on and give many other instances. Last summer a wharf was being built opposite my city. An engineer from the Department of Transport would come down for a few days each week to inspect the work. This gentleman was very able, but he could not speak one word of French, yet all those with whom he had to deal were French-speaking.

Just a few days ago an audit of the books of the Three Rivers harbour board was ordered by the government. This audit was conducted by two well educated gentlemen, both graduates of good schools, but neither of them could speak French. They were there for two weeks checking books in an office where nothing but French is spoken. I am not blaming the government or any minister of the government; I am blaming the system. There must be interference of some kind. Just picture an auditor not able to speak a word of English being sent to audit books in the city represented by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church). He would not last two hours; he would soon find himself in the waters of lake Ontario. We, too, have water in the St. Lawrence, and, Mr. Speaker, it is deep.

I do not want to appear to be harsh about these things, but I must tell the house what has happened. Much has been said about the dissatisfaction existing in the province of Quebec. We have even had the younger element speaking of secession, but I am not of that school. If this is not a matter of dollars and cents, if it is not a matter of a share of the patronage, it is at least a matter of self-respect and dignity. The two million people of our province must receive some consideration, and I raise this question in the hope that some means may be found to do justice to the population I represent. I am not speaking for this or that individual; I am speaking for a group, and I want results. Something must be done to give satisfaction and to improve the service.

I have just one more remark to make in this connection. Last session we properly voted $10,000,000 to close the relief camps and provide work on the railroads throughout the country. This vote was criticized by the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens), but apart from him I think we were all of one mind as to the propriety of making that move. Mr. Humphrey Mitchell, a good friend of mine, a man with great ability and a former member of this house, was put in charge of the expenditure of that $10,000,000. I will admit he did not do too badly for us in the province of Quebec, but the fact remains that he was not able to speak French. He could not talk to the men who came to him to get work; he could not make the right contact with our population. Here is a case where the expenditure of a few paltry dollars would have provided a bilingual assistant.

I wish to call attention to a remark made yesterday by the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens). He was emphasizing the importance of doing away with the party spirit as we have it in this country, but the example he chose was a bad one, for he said that fifteen Liberal members had stood in their places and denounced the government's defence policy and then like sheep voted for the very policy they had denounced. For my part I wish to protest against that statement. The hon. member did not live up to his reputation; he is usually more fortunate in expressing himself. He should remember that it takes more courage to dissent than to be a "yes-man." In that particular situation the position was clear, although it may not have been clear to the hon. member and others. Speaking for myself, I am not against a policy of expenditures for the defence of this country, but to my mind the amount that was proposed, the increase intended to be made, was not justifiable; it was too large. That is where I drew the line. With the general policy of the government I was in perfect accord, but in regard to this increase I raised a protest, and under the rules the only way to do it effectively was by voting on the amendment to reduce that amount, which was done in committee of the whole house. No other course could be followed. Besides, in spite of what has been said, another aspect of the situation has appeared in the newspapers without any contradiction, and I mention this as a reason for hesitating before we follow our leaders. The following statement appears in Saturday Night of February 27, at page 4:

> The 1937 program now before parliament is simply the 1933 program resubmitted. . . . The memorandum with which the general staff submitted it to the government stated specifically that the purpose . . . was to enable Canada to contribute and maintain an efficient contingent in the event of trouble for the empire.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I think the hon. member is out of order, because he is referring to a former debate which is closed. I will ask him to confine his remarks to the budget debate.

Mr. GARIEPY: I had completed my remarks on this score, but I wanted the hon. member for Kootenay East to be informed as to the stand I took on this matter.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): While on this point, may I ask my hon. friend whether he prefers to take the word of Saturday Night to that of my right hon. leader and myself?

Mr. GARIEPY: Mr. Speaker, since you have decided that this matter is out of order I shall not enlarge upon it, but I think I could give a reply to the question of the minister which would not reflect on his integrity, honesty of purpose or ability. He knows well the esteem, regard and consideration that I have for him. I have followed his career for years. I know from where he started, and to-day in this house he enjoys the respect of one and all. He is an authority in matters of government. But he, like other ministers, must take advice from those surrounding him, from members of his staff. He must read reports. He must appreciate them, each one uses his own judgment. In the past the people of this country have been misled, not intentionally, quite without bad intention on the part of any of those concerned. In the minds of those who gave the advice there were no doubt good reasons at the time the people were invited to endorse and follow a certain course, but afterwards it was found out that through lack of proper information some mistakes had been made. In this case, which was so important, I decided after consultation and study to take the stand that I have mentioned. I did so with all due respect to my leaders, who should not forget that the same kind of debate arose in 1922 over the same principle, over figures of the same kind, and—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member is out of order.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): And that is not an answer to my question.

Mr. GARIEPY: Mr. Speaker, I bow to your decision. I did not intend at all to transgress. I want to respect your decision, and if I erred it was because I wanted to deal justly and adequately with the remark that was made by the minister who asked the question. I desired to show my good faith. I have no personal object to serve in this matter; it is a question of doing my duty to the public, of being fair to those who have elected us.

I have spent a considerable time in the west. I served for some years as a minister of the crown, and on every occasion I have manifested my respect for British institutions, and I have never said anything disparaging of the great flag under which we live. My stand is written in black and white in all the books in which my observations while I was a member of the legislature have been recorded.

The budget which we are now discussing has been accepted with great enthusiasm throughout the country. Much has been said of the needs of western Canada. With those views I do not disagree; on the contrary I intend to support every expenditure for the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta which, as we all know, are so hard hit at the present time. But it should not be forgotten that if we are able to do something for these younger sister provinces it is because the older provinces have developed themselves, have maintained relatively a sufficient prosperity, and have contributed substantially to the credit of the country as a whole. I think the time has come to state that the old provinces of Ontario and Quebec should also receive from the public treasury some measure of consideration. I may be told that this is a matter of provincial politics, and it is to some extent. But I have been satisfied for some time that the agricultural parts of the province of Quebec are suffering from a lack of proper production and proper marketing. We have there the oldest farming lands in the country, splendid stretches that have been occupied for ages by farmers of no mean ability. But, though I am not a specialist in that line, I am convinced that the efforts of these toilers could be better directed so that their products would be of better quality and more varied; and then these products should be marketed to better advantage. There is lack of organization and coordination. I wonder whether one of these commissions created by the government could not give some time and attention to this problem.

I am not going to weary the house with details but I have no doubt that some man like Doctor Tory, who was at one time the head of the National Research Council, could if so instructed get to the root of the trouble and suggest ways and means whereby some improvement could be brought about.

Mr. MICHAUD: Is my hon. friend aware that the privy council has recently told us that it is not our business to deal with these matters?

Mr. GARIEPY: I will not enter into a legal argument. I prefaced my remarks with the statement that it was essentially a provincial matter. At the same time, here we are dealing with matters almost of the same kind in other provinces. It may be said that the marketing of wheat is something related to commerce and trade and is therefore a dominion subject. Well, it might be made a matter for the dominion to deal with if we wished to improve marketing conditions for the farmers of Quebec and to secure better markets for their eggs, butter, cheese and all the other products of the farm.

Mr. MICHAUD: For export?

Mr. GARIEPY: Quite so. I am sure an investigation would show that not enough has been done to help the farmers of the province I come from. I will not say that they are in a very bad way, but they are not as prosperous as their toil and the natural resources at their disposal should make them. Their organization, I repeat, can be improved upon and I trust that the government will look into this phase of the economic situation in the province of Quebec.

As I said at the beginning, with slight changes, this budget is on the whole satisfactory to me and for that reason I am going to support it. I support it with confidence; I support it with enthusiasm; I support it, satisfied that the members of the government are fair-minded enough, in this favourable year, to take into consideration the remarks I have made, especially with regard to the public service and the work that is done throughout my province. There is a grievance there, a serious grievance; but I am not making an appeal for sympathy. I leave it to the judgment and the business sense of everyone here. Peace-loving as the electors of my riding may be, when it comes to dealing with the government of the country they want to meet people who can understand them and get at the substance of their ideas, people with whom they can really fraternize. This can be done, and there is no reason why we should not satisfy the people of Quebec in this regard. I trust that at the next session when I speak again I shall have the pleasure of congratulating the ministers and of acknowledging that a step has been taken in the right direction and some real improvement brought about.

Mr. J. S. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): The final accomplishment of any worthy task constitutes its greatest merit, and it is a great thing for humanity that that merit first falls to the performer of the task. For that reason, therefore, I congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) on having brought to final accomplishment a very arduous task well and truly performed. But when I say that, what is that task? What does the budget teach us? To me, unfortunately, it is a tale twice told, as flowing water dammed again.

It is true the minister draws attention to the fact that we are entering upon better conditions and that happy days are near again. But I am reminded of a saw in common parlance in the British West Indies, appropriate to the days of horse-drawn vehicles. It runs: Up the hill hurry me not; down the hill worry me not; on the level spare me not. And so because the minister conceives that Canada is now running on the level road he still spares not the tax-ridden, war-worn and depression-wearied citizen. But, unfortunately, Canada is not running along the level road, and all too soon that fact must become apparent even to the minister himself, whose historically orthodox approach to all the problems of finance places him in a niche almost entirely by himself, admired it is true by the monitors of big finance, but almost too far removed from the flow of our world's affairs to be of real fundamental value to this country. I am saying this very deliberately. I said it last year. I accused the minister of having produced a banker budget, conceived and worked out by an orthodox banker mind.

This budget of 1937 is last year's brother, and it carries the generic weaknesses of the family. I want this statement to be a condemnation of the minister and the government in so far as they are responsible, because in spite of their real honesty of intent, which I am daily coming more and more to recognize and respect, there is nevertheless an underlying sense of sophistication which tends to render them oblivious of the changing times and conditions in which we are now living, and causes them to inhibit the practical connotations of the archaic efforts to which they commit themselves. It is for these reasons that the first budget was conceived in a desperate and uncompromising attempt to balance the accounts of the nation, malgré the wails of the homeless and the curses of the frustrated. The younger brother of to-day is only slightly less unyielding, save in the matter of national defence, which has been very much contested, and with some sops here and there to the wailing. Let me say again, some sops here and there to the wailing. But why does the minister soak the sops in vinegar? I received a telegram from Vancouver dated March 8, which I shall read to the house:

> Blind people in British Columbia beg your aid in house protesting unnatural inhuman marriage clause blind pensions bill wherein blind persons marrying are penalized by losing half pension. This would only prevent civil marriages and encourage irregular situations. British Columbia with 650 blind persons has had only seven both blind marriages, all in Vancouver, with only one child to each of two couples. We estimate total both blind marriages in Canada about 70 therefore problem not serious. We regard as unfair to deserving citizens the twenty year residential qualification. The calamity of blindness may strike worthy citizens any time and we suggest ten years' residence. Recommend no limit be placed on permissible earnings over pension by blind. Protest meeting held in Vancouver to-night.
> Canadian Federation of the Blind, Mrs. E. Scott, secretary, and John Munro, president.

So the government, in giving, gives with one hand and snatches away with the other. Still the have-nots are plundered and the haves scarcely feel the drain; still to-day the working man hangs nailed to the cross, pouring forth his life blood for the salvation of the rich. I am not for one moment losing sight of the levies paid by the industrialist and the primary producer, but in our economy to-day we live with the idle rich and the idle poor, and in effect the worker has to keep them both. These two idle groups, the contributory and the non-contributory, those living with their hands in the pot, and those scarcely existing on hand-outs from the pot, are the reasons annexed to the economic difficulties of our position. The one cannot be considered apart from the other. The necessary flow of our economic affairs is already developing a delta in the river of production, and the arm called national revenue is broken into one large branch which one might call the interest reach, diverting 30 per cent of the flow, while another large branch is digging its way tortuously through the delta growing year by year, and in 1936 it absorbed and diverted another 30 per cent of the flow.

I refer to the relief channel. It attained that percentage by adding war relief figures to the ordinary relief problem. This represents 60 per cent of the effluent, and is a truly staggering proportion.

Let us figure this out. The available national financial capital of the country, symbolized by the idle rich—I say symbolized—and the available human capital of the country, symbolized by the idle poor, together demand 60 per cent of the nation's revenue, and return nothing to the country but the continued existence of the obligations. The two arms I have spoken of are steadily growing and will unquestionably come together unless the government in general and the Minister of Finance in particular will make a speedy and earnest effort to realize and act upon some of the profound truths in economic heterodoxy. It is suicidal to the country and to us all to refuse to change. If the present safety of the country depends on concessions to orthodoxy, then I assure the house that the future safety of this country will be assured only by facing facts obvious even to the man in the street, and by preparing entering wedges born of sound understanding which will, for instance, prepare interest for its proper place in our economy. I say, prepare interest for its proper place in our economy. This is a big subject, and I do not propose to discuss it fully this evening, but I want to cast one thought into the pool.

We are recording constantly the failure of housing. Housing demands loans; loans demand interest. The potential householder hesitates to build because he sees all around him houses forfeited to the mortgagees and lost because of tax imposts. There is no reason I can discover why interest should be a first call on repayment. The government might do well to consider, and if possible enact, that all repayments shall be at least in part repayments of principal, and that the principal outstanding shall be the only basis on which interest is charged; and once the principal is repaid, there remains still the repayment of deferred interest and interest due.

Another entering wedge which might easily be prepared is one which will assure to every citizen in the country not merely a starvation existence or all-but-withheld dole, but an existence determined by the productive capacity of the country, subject only to its natural resources.

Another entering wedge should be prepared in view of the fact that the unemployed in the country are largely unemployable in normal avenues of production, and while no man or woman or child in Canada should at any time go without food, clothing or shelter, the assurance of these cachets to existence carries with it the responsibility of service to the country; therefore an amazing increase of social service by its people should be discovered, invented and devised to take the place of self-destroying idleness and frustration. Has the government grasped the significance of that statement: self-destroying idleness and frustration? To-day in Canada the young suffer with the old. Is youth developed in frustration? Is it right that youth should be frustrated? Go into the forest and look about you. There you will see trees which in the early days of their growth were frustrated; stunted in growth, gnarled and twisted and ugly, they point a lesson which we dare not neglect. As with the tree, so with the man. Let us in Canada beware. Until every citizen of Canada is freed from his present distress; until every citizen can face the future with the assurance of suitable and adequate food, clothing and shelter, no government, no minister of finance, and no minister of labour can be considered to have earnestly and effectively grappled with the necessity for economic adjustment which is compellingly evident, or even to be worthy of the full approval of the citizens.

To do all this demands a premise different from that presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) when he said in his budget speech, at page 1213 of Hansard:

> Profits are the mainspring of economic activity in the system under which we operate. Increasing profits are therefore the best augury for increasing employment, the best indication of the approach of the day when private industry will be able to release governmental bodies from the enormous burden which they have had to bear in recent years.

Let us face this: It will be at least two years from this date, as presaged by the Minister of Finance, before the budget can be balanced. Then must come an expansion of expenditure due to the needs of the country which were neglected during the years of deficits. Grant, however, that Canada is facing a lengthy era of prosperity; for the next sixty years give her an average surplus of $25,000,000 per year. What do we find? Two generations still to come will have succeeded in wiping out nearly half the present national debt, and they will hand on to their children and grandchildren an obligation contracted by forebears whom they scarcely knew, and whom they cannot respect as worthy citizens of a country which we hope will still be in that day a worthy country in which to live. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that instead of attaching himself to such a premise the minister should endeavour to discover and appreciate the value of this better metaphor: The needs of a people are the mainspring of its economic activities, and the profits from these activities are the hairsprings operating the escapement, and so governing those activities.

Is there anything wrong with that idea? Is it not more true to actual facts? In crude form the post office and the postal system are developing along these lines. Is it not possible to bring the same sensible formula to the development of our natural resources and public utilities? We must come to it; why not face the facts and prepare for it? The minister must surely see that in this form of national activity is presented the truest form of thrift—and I use the word in its true etymological sense—and of progress. Let me read what the minister has said with regard to thrift, at page 167 of Hansard, and repeated at page 1392:

> Moreover, sir, I still believe in the virtue of thrift, I still believe that a man in the full flush of his manhood has not merely the right but the duty to himself and to those who depend upon him to set aside in any manner which seems good to him a portion of the proceeds of his labour to-day in order that he and those dependent upon him may not later be dependent upon the state.

If it were possible to ensure the success of every investment of the frugal and saving youth who so loves his country that he does not wish to become a charge upon it, and therefore withholds from his present dependents and from himself, in order that he may give the fruits of the fruits of his labours to his future failing self and his future failing dependents; if it were possible to ensure that these investments would give satisfactory returns to this intrepid youth, there might be something in what the minister has said. In effect, however, the youth is exhorted to withhold from his present fullness in order to cast it into the whirlpool of investment, the major force of which is purely speculative, and the vortex of which is very largely disorder and loss.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. J. S. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I was in process of questioning the minister's exhortation to thrift, and I did question that word thrift as being scarcely applicable in its true etymological sense. I think it was rather intended to convey the idea which in its tenor from comparative to superlative runs through savings, frugality, parsimoniousness, penuriousness, niggardliness, miserliness and sordidness.

Mr. DUNNING: I didn't mean that.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): But if that is the meaning of thrift in its mild form, which the minister implied, then I want to draw attention to some facts. The minister still believes in the virtue of thrift, and I want him to understand that I am not in any sense unkindly or cynical in the sense in which Mark Antony was, when I say that the minister is an honourable man, and so are they all, all members of the government, all honourable men.

But still believing in the virtue of thrift let me read what thrift did to a man in Vancouver. This is a letter I received shortly after the date it was written:

> 2930 Granville street,
> Vancouver, B.C.,
> Jan. 4, 1937.
> Mr. J. S. Taylor, M.P.
> House of Commons,
> Ottawa.
> Old Age Pensions
> Dear Sir:
> Knowing that you are especially interested in the general welfare of old age pensioners, I am taking the liberty of calling the attention of parliament, through your representation, to one or two weaknesses, or injustices, of the Old Age Pensions Act, and also of asking the question why it is our Canadian government penalizes thrift.
> To state my own case briefly, and there must be many others in a similar position, I am in my seventy-second year and have been receiving a small old age pension during the past fifteen months. I worked at my trade, lithography, in Scotland and in Canada close on fifty-five years. On January 27, 1931, while still employed, my wife and I purchased a Canadian government annuity, policy number 13078, which cost $2,980.80, and which brought us in the sum of $20 monthly, which sums were immediately transferred to the savings bank, as they came to hand. On August 16, 1933, being now permanently unemployed, my wife and I withdrew from the bank the $620 received in cheques from the above mentioned Canadian government annuity, and added to that sum the balance of our savings, $2,827, making the sum of $3,447, and purchased another Canadian government annuity, policy number 17354 value for the sum of $25 monthly which, the two policies combined, bring us in a total of $45, or $22.50 each per month.
> On attaining the age of seventy on October 1, 1935, I made application for old age pension and discovered that, because my wife and I for fifty years (just passed our golden wedding anniversary) had been thrifty and saved wherever we could, and then handed all ($6,427.80) back to the Canadian government, this same government in return penalizes me to the extent of $12.18 per month or in other words, I am awarded an old age pension of $7.82 per month instead of the recognized $20 per month. The British government does not penalize good citizenship and thrift!

In conclusion, I may say that our income and expenses per month are as follows:

Income—
Canadian government annuities		$45 00
Canadian old age pension		7 82
		$52 82
Expenses—
Rent		$20 00
Gas, light, etc.		2 82
		$22 82
Income	$52 82
Rent, etc.	22 82
Divided by two people	30 00
	$15 00 each, or 50 cents a day.

Fifty cents per day each for food, clothing, incidentals. What a glorious achievement for fifty years of self sacrifice, plus a sum of nearly $6,500.

I am,
Yours sincerely,
Henry Jas. Rhodes.

Let me earnestly ask the minister if he considers that Henry James Rhodes and his wife, who have metaphorically toiled all night and caught nothing, should be satisfied with the sacrifice they made for their country to save it the expense of $12.18 per month—$20 less $7.82, for the absolutely unpredictable life of this worthy citizen now already seventy-two years of age.

Is it not realized that Mr. and Mrs. Rhodes would have been far better off if they had spent their savings in a leisurely trip all round the world for nearly two years—let me say two years less one day, in order to put them within the provisions of the act—returning to the shelter of the unworthily called old age pension, for the evening of their days? What benefits could they not have conferred upon those they were destined to meet if they could have related all their experiences, and said that their country honoured them for their long service, their honesty of effort, their sterling citizenship and those qualities which reflect the highest worth of its people? To-day, every month they receive another painful reminder of the ashes of effort which too often render miserable the worthiest people. And the government of this country can enter a wedge which will change all that. Is it too much earnestly to implore them to consider it and do it—and do it quickly?

Many points remain to be spoken about in connection with the budget speech, but I want now to refer to one which appears at page 1216 of Hansard. Having partially explained the obvious failure of employment to keep pace with the striking gains in business activity previously reported, the minister (Mr. Dunning) goes on to say:

> For the rest, the explanation rests upon the progress of invention and the improvement in technical and managerial processes. To this extent it is a phenomenon which is usually met with in the early stages of recovery from depression. As it indicates an increased efficiency in the productive mechanism, its results are not to be deplored. Its ill effects are temporary; in the long run it increases employment by cheapening production and expanding consumer purchasing power. As recovery gathers momentum, increases in employment will tend to conform more closely to expansion in business activity.

With all due respect to the minister, I fail entirely to understand how he can make that statement without fear of being accused of terminological inexactitude. Invention and discovery grow like snowballs rolling down a mountain slope. Machines become more effective and more labour-displacing. Our present economy indicates no possible way by which the wage earners can avail themselves of the products which increase the complexity of our already too complex lives. I quote again briefly from page 1223 of Hansard:

> The sales tax is now the largest single source of governmental revenues.

This tax meets with strong abuse and opposition. It is for that reason that it gains a certain amount of consideration from me, because nothing induces me to study a thing more than the realization that it is opposed. I am disposed to believe that it will be many years before we can get rid of the sales tax. Having considered the matter carefully, I have come to the conclusion that if we must have this tax, I doubt if there is a better tax, provided it is properly levied. It is by all odds the easiest and the simplest tax to levy, and the easiest and the simplest tax to collect. It is a tax placed directly at the point of consumption, and thus is prevented that woeful pyramiding which lies between the importer of dutiable goods and the ultimate price to the consumer, where importer, jobber, manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer all exact percentages of profit on the moneys they spend for duty as well as on the money they spend for goods. This is not pure taxation, and some method should be devised by which all charges should be assessed for payment at the point of purchase for ultimate consumption. I confess that the question bristles with difficulties, but I want to draw the attention of the house to the facts as they exist.

The minister has told us that approximately $80,000,000 is received in customs duties. I dare say that an undefined and probably undefinable amount less than $80,000,000 could be recovered if the minister could devise a method by which it could be levied at the point of ultimate consumption. It is quite possible that at least $20,000,000, and probably up to $50,000,000, could be secured if machinery could be devised to handle it. Unquestionably it would represent an increase in the amount of duty, but it could be tried out in connection with certain commodities which could be easily traced by the government, such as motor cars or other large and costly items.

However, the sales tax itself is very effective and is relatively complete, but I suggest to the minister that if he must continue this tax, he should preserve this ideal and remove all present tendencies in any other direction. I further suggest that whole or at least partial relief from sales tax should be granted on those commodities which are the necessary subsistence items of the poor. The crumbs that fall from the rich man's table should neither be grudged nor minished, nor should they be made difficult to gather. That, sir, is the least kindly way of expressing a very real idea.

The next point I noticed in the budget is one to which I draw attention with considerable pleasure. It is a welcome innovation and constitutes an almost epoch-making provision. Its advantages should be demonstrated to every minister of finance who will follow the present minister. I refer to the issuance of perpetual bonds in the field of the nation's debt. The minister states at page 1231:

> The issue of perpetual bonds in the Canadian market represented a new departure in dominion financing. It was intended as the initial step in a program which is designed to provide for the consolidation and simplification of our public debt structure.

All efforts of big business to prevent the encouragement of these Canadian consol issues should be strenuously resisted, for the minister will find that they mark the peak of security and acceptability, with low interest, ruling in our dominion. However, I desire to say that I do not agree with the minister when he says that he wishes to set up a general sinking fund for amortization. As a general principle I do not favour sinking funds. If a security is not good at the end of its term, it is really not good at the beginning. Too frequently the investment of sinking funds is made in securities which have proved to be very insecure, such as many of the bonds of defaulting municipalities in British Columbia and elsewhere. The best security can admit of no better, and consols need no support from a sinking fund lying sleeping in a less secure resting place. Therefore, I suggest to the minister a policy of repurchase in the open market when the price of the bonds falls below a predetermined figure. This would be easy of accomplishment through the ordinary operations of the Bank of Canada and would establish the reliability of the investment for long term investors, and ensure its relative translatable utility when in the nature of things it must find its way to the market.

Mr. DUNNING: I think the hon. member has mistaken the meaning of my remarks regarding a sinking fund. The object was not so much to enhance the value of the investment in the hands of the investors as it was to have a definite plan for the gradual reduction of our debt, somewhat along the lines the hon. member has indicated.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): In any case I think the point is well taken. Another move in the right direction is the sealing down to Canada of a call and short term money market. Congratulations to the minister. The enlarged field of operations of the Central Bank of Canada should very early show its worth in this aim and bring the whole financial situation of the country into more favourable acceptance throughout the world.

And so I pass along to the pleasure with which the minister reviews the rising credits abroad. This in moderation is an excellent sign but taken in excess, like salt it nauseates and poisons, and at this period of our country's growth we do well not to encourage foreign credits to the point where we are compelled to invest abroad. The days when such a condition was a compelling advantage are gone. We live to-day in a world where even a negro in central Africa can become an expert aeroplane mechanic, and the successful exploitation of any country is particularly well attended to by its own nationals.

I will finish on one note prompted by the rising note of cheer and challenge with which the minister closed his speech. Let us truly see to it, as he said, that we qualify as a people in continued endeavour, individual, corporate and national integrity, to a keener sense of trusteeship in carrying out our every day business and civic responsibilities; but, here I say, let us not lose sight of the fact that in doing all these things our paramount duty is to do them first in Canada, first for Canada, and first by and with the amazing resources of Canada and the no less amazing resourcesfulness of the Canadian people.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I end, having both praised and blamed. I do not want the minister to feel like that excellent old character, Dick Fennell, in Pinero's Sweet Lavender, when he said, "Blame, blame, blame—oh yes; but praise—oh dear no." I want the minister to feel that there are many things in his budget which we have good reason to accept and be satisfied with, but the eternal concession to the orthodox in economic situations worries me so that I cannot understand why it is that he so slavishly follows it. However, taking it all by and large, I shall have very much pleasure in voting for the motion.

Mr. MARSHALL: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: Before the hon. member proceeds with his speech I should like to draw the attention of the members of the house to the point of order which was raised by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) before six o'clock with reference to a statement made by the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Gariepy) in the course of his speech. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George said this:

> Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; I would ask for your ruling whether it is open to members of the house at this time to discuss a subject now under investigation by a royal commission with respect to which no report has as yet been received or laid before the house.

I should like to ask whether any hon. member wishes to speak to the point of order? Then I will proceed to render my decision.

I refer to standing order No. 41. We find under this standing order that paragraph 293 states as follows:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in this standing order, it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking, must not:
> (m) discuss messages or reports which are not regularly before the house.

And reference is made to Bourinot, at pages 358 and 474, and to May, at page 292.

By reference also to the order in council which was adopted in the year 1936, a copy of which will be found at page 84 of Hansard, February 11, 1936, it appears that the commission known as the Turgeon commission was appointed under chapter 99 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, and in the last part of the order in council it is stated:

> The minister further recommends that the commissioner be instructed to make his report as speedily as possible.

[Mr. J. S. Taylor.]

As no report appears as yet to have been made by the commissioner the house cannot very well discuss the matter now. I think therefore, that the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George was well taken, and that it was not competent for the hon. member for Three Rivers to proceed to discuss the matter.

Mr. J. A. MARSHALL (Camrose): Budgets may come and budgets may go, but the problems of the returned soldier, of railways, of interest and debt, and of unemployment seemingly go on for ever. It is an old Canadian custom when hon. members are speaking to the budget, to extend to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) congratulations upon his presentation. This, with certain reservations, I do. I believe that we should reserve most of our congratulations for the taxpayers of this country who have striven valiantly through the medium of taxation to assist the Minister of Finance to balance his budget this year. They have taken upon themselves increased burdens, and they have done it with a smile. I say to the minister and to the party in office that no budget can be balanced unless the taxpayer takes out of his pockets the wherewithal to balance it.

Mr. DUNNING: That goes without saying.

Mr. MARSHALL: What long-suffering patient mortals the taxpayers are! They are patient almost to a fault. It is necessary that they give the shirts off their backs almost to uphold the sanctity of interest contracts. The interest burden now resting upon the Canadian people is one under which they are going to crack one of these days, and the responsibility for such a situation will fall upon us in this parliament. I fear the time is not far distant when we shall have a revolution on our hands. Of course, we shall blame it upon the communists and the fascists, but we shall not be right in so doing. That revolution is coming, just as surely as night follows day, unless we awaken to our responsibility. Apparently we are not yet awake; I hope we shall awaken before it is too late.

I was interested in a statement which the minister made some little time ago when the bill covering home improvement loans was up for discussion. He stated at page 750 of Hansard:

> I am just coming to the joker. The main reason why people who have $500, and who could get a home of that kind of which they would be proud, are not going into the scheme, is not because of any interest factor . . . but because the local taxes are what they are, and again I say that is within provincial and municipal jurisdiction.

I ask the minister: Are the municipalities and provinces alone in this matter of high taxation? I suggest to him that the reason for the high taxation is that a large portion of our tax dollar goes to pay interest. You cannot divorce taxation from interest or interest from taxation, no matter how you try. At least 25 cents of every dollar that the minister raises under the terms of his present budget go to pay interest charges. It was said the other day that over 40 cents goes to this one item, so I think I am safe in saying 25 cents. Interest is indeed an important and alarming factor in our whole business life to-day. It faces us at every step from the cradle to the grave. It has assumed such large and serious proportions that even governments all over the world, whether municipal, provincial or national, recognize that before we can hope to cope with any national problem we must tackle interest.

May I now give a few moments to the question of unemployment. I realize, of course, that the amendment covered this point; but we cannot discuss the railway problem, or the problems of the returned soldiers or any other problem without bringing in the problem of unemployment and poverty, so closely are they connected. It is not only a national problem; it is international in its scope. It is not a disease, but a symptom of a disease.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend, but this house has discussed unemployment on an amendment which has been disposed of, and I do not think he has the right to discuss it now.

Mr. MARSHALL: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the question is embodied in the budget, and for that reason I think I have a right to continue to discuss unemployment. It is closely allied to all these other problems, and I wish to show the connecting link between it and some of the other problems we have been discussing to-day.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The rules of the house say otherwise.

Mr. MARSHALL: As one hon. member said a few days ago, unemployment is a sign of progress.

Mr. SPEAKER: The point of order raised by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) is well taken. The question of unemployment was discussed on an amendment which has been submitted to the house and disposed of, and the hon. member is not in order now in discussing it.

Mr. MacINNIS: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I submit that any subject matter of the budget is a matter of debate on this motion. The Minister of Finance dealt with the question of unemployment in his budget speech.

Mr. VIEN: The ruling of the chair has been given; it is not now in order to speak to a point of order.

Mr. BENNETT: The point taken by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) would undoubtedly be sound if this were other than the budget; but though the motion with respect to the attitude of the government towards employment has been negatived there still remains the right of a member of the house to allude, by way of illustration or analogy, to conditions respecting unemployment, though he cannot make that the subject matter of his address. I fancy that is what the minister meant when he pointed to the rule of the house. It would be a serious curtailment of the right of speakers if it were to be said that the use of illustrations or analogies in reference to the problem of unemployment was not available to them.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): My right hon. friend was not listening to the hon. member. The hon. gentleman did not say that he was referring to unemployment or drawing an inference; he said that he was going to speak on the subject.

Mr. BENNETT: What the minister said with respect to that is undoubtedly true, but I thought that the hon. member said in effect: I now propose to deal with unemployment, not as the subject matter of my speech, but for the purpose of showing it to be one cause of the many evils from which the country is suffering. I did not understand that he was making unemployment the subject matter of his address but rather that he was touching upon it by way of analogy or illustration. I would not venture to discuss the matter, but I do think that to narrow the debate by precluding such references to the question of unemployment would be going farther than the rules have thus far gone. I wholly agree, however, that the amendment having been disposed of, the right of a member is restricted with respect to the question of unemployment, so that he cannot make it the subject matter of his address. I thought that the hon. gentleman was making the question merely incidental to the discussion of an evil which he was suggesting should be remedied.

Mr. MARSHALL: If I have your permission to proceed, Mr. Speaker, unemployment, as one speaker said a few days ago, is a sign of progress, and that means that man is rapidly escaping from the era of slavery and bondage into one of leisure, brought about to a large degree by the mechanization of industry. I know that many do not agree with the Social Credit party in that regard, and that is why it is difficult for us to solve some of these other problems that arise out of it. I am indeed disappointed that the National Employment Commission has done so little. Some members try to insult our intelligence by saying that it has done a great deal, but I, for one, cannot accept this conclusion. It has done nothing, and so far as I can see it will do very little in the future. Someone from the depths of his wisdom has said that you get what you pay for, meaning, of course, that a good article will command a better price than a poor one. I think there is a lot of truth in that statement. The chairman of the National Employment Commission is Mr. Purvis. For his work as chairman of that commission he receives nothing, according to the returns which have been brought down. Up to the present we have had practically nothing from that commission. We have got what we paid for. Of course, I realize that the expenses of the commission have totalled somewhere in the neighbourhood of $85,000—

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I think this point must be decided. I claim that the amendment on the subject of unemployment having been discussed and voted down, the hon. member has no right now to discuss unemployment as the main subject of his address. I refer to paragraph 491 of Beauchesne, dealing with the situation where an amendment has been negatived on the motion to go into committee of supply or ways and means:

> If that amendment is negatived, a discussion on other questions may be raised but no other motion can be proposed.

"A discussion on other questions." Surely my hon. friend cannot discuss the amendment again after it has been disposed of.

Mr. FAIR: When the amendment to this motion was being discussed we had a wide open debate, and the deputy speaker at that time ruled in favour of a wide open debate. We discussed almost everything and anything we wanted to on that amendment, and I do not see any reason why we should not be allowed to discuss unemployment on the budget. This is just one more way of putting this question under the table.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That also is absolutely out of order, and unfair.

Mr. STEVENS: There is nothing out of order there. You cannot put a gag on everybody in the house.

Mr. BENNETT: I think we agree that with respect to discussions on the budget the rules are framed so as to give the widest possible latitude. The general rule that when an amendment has been negatived the discussion shall not centre about it is a perfectly sound one, because otherwise there would be no termination to discussion at all. On the other hand during the progress of the discussion on the amendment, much of the debate was not referable to that point at all, and the deputy speaker indicated that in his judgment the budget debate had generally been regarded as the opportunity, shall I say, for hon. members to indicate their reasons for believing that all was not well in the state, and that the government had not done all that might be done. That I think is putting it correctly.

I wholly agree with the minister that a speech on unemployment at this time would not be within the rules, but surely freedom of speech in this house is so important that any hon. member who desires to do so may amplify and illustrate his point, and by analogy press it on the attention of the house in any way he pleases. The hon. member, I think, started out with the statement that he was dissatisfied with conditions, and he said: If you examine all these conditions you will find that ultimately they are traceable to a cause. And he gave that cause as unemployment. Now if he continued to discuss unemployment only, I would wholly agree with the minister, but when he is discussing the whole situation and mentions unemployment only for the purpose of indicating a failure on the part of the government to grapple successfully with other problems because this is the root problem, I am inclined to think that freedom of speech must permit of that being done. I say it with deference to the Speaker, but if we are going to apply a rule of order narrowly it should have been done some days ago.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): This afternoon.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so. On the other hand, to narrow it too much would destroy the whole purpose of the budget debate, namely, the right of the subject, through his member, to make known his grievances to the throne; that is to the government in this case. I am inclined to think that on reconsideration the minister will agree that so long as a member is dealing with the whole subject matter he may amplify and illustrate his remarks in any manner he thinks desirable.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): As far as freedom of speech is concerned, I do not think I am one who could ever be accused of desiring to curtail it, and I very seldom raise a point of order, even though at times there might be occasion to do so. In this matter my right hon. friend is perfectly right in saying that if the hon. member was simply alluding to unemployment and drawing some analogy nobody would think of raising a point of order against him. I also agree that in the budget debate one may refer to almost anything and everything. But when there has been an amendment on a special subject, moved to the motion, and full discussion has taken place on that special subject, and the amendment has then been disposed of, no hon. member has the right to revive entirely the debate on the amendment and make a new speech on it. That is the whole point.

Mr. MacINNIS: With all due deference to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) I do not think he read the rule applicable in this case. He should have read paragraph 490 instead of 491. Paragraph 490 reads:

> When an amendment for the Speaker's leaving the chair has been negatived, as it has been decided that the words proposed to be left out shall stand part of the question no further amendment can be moved thereto; though general debate on the main question can be maintained by those members who have not exhausted their right to speak to that question.

This does not rule out a general debate on the subject matter of the budget. I maintain that the hon. member is quite in order in making his remarks on unemployment part of his general comment on the budget.

Mr. NEILL: With a view to promoting harmony and letting us get on, I suggest that the hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Marshall), might exercise a little diplomacy and save the situation. I recall in years gone by the hon. member for one of the Battlefords had a resolution on the order paper in connection with a Canadian flag, and the hon. member for Huron North, I think at that time Mr. Spotton, insisted on making a stump speech on the tariff, on the motion. A point of order was naturally taken, and the Speaker ruled that he would have to keep his speech strictly in line with the resolution concerning the flag. The hon. member went on making his stump speech on the tariff, and whenever he saw the Speaker or some member rising to protest he hurriedly said, "All in connection with the flag, Mr. Speaker," and that saved the situation. He made a regular stump speech on the tariff under that resolution. Of course, he carried it to an absurd and unreasonable extent, but he got away with it. So if the hon. member for Camrose would modify his statement by occasionally interjecting that he is dealing with unemployment only in a general way, he would probably save a lot of the time of the house.

Mr. HARTIGAN: I think an hon. member is perfectly entitled to discuss any item in a budget debate, even though he has spoken on an amendment to the motion which probably covered a vast range of subjects. All last week in the budget debate there was scacely any item that could be debated that was not debated. I take it that the member who was speaking was discussing unemployment from the point of view of departmental expenditures, and any member of this house is perfectly at liberty to discuss that matter. Right is right and wrong is wrong. I think if we put too many inhibitions and restrictions on the members of this house we will have good cause to worry as to what is to become of our parliamentary institutions.

Mr. QUELCH: I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Marshall) had desired to speak on the amendment, but in order to expedite matters he agreed to wait until the main motion was called. He refrained from speaking previously in order to assist the house in getting on with its business.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must say that the point raised by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) is well taken. There is merit also in the point raised by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), and perhaps even more in the suggestion of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill). I think perhaps the latter suggestion is about the best, and now that the hon. member for Camrose (Mr. Marshall) has commenced to make a speech on the budget perhaps he would try as best he can not to speak about unemployment.

Mr. MARSHALL: I wish to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your very kindly suggestion. I do not wish to transgress any rules either of propriety or of this house; I simply want to make a few general remarks, and I wonder if I would be in order if I used the word "employment" instead of "unemployment." It just happened that I was coming to something that really would touch upon the point that has been under discussion.

In his speech the other day one member of the Liberal party pleaded eloquently for cooperation. I should like to ask that hon. gentleman what kind of cooperation he would like to have from the Social Credit party. From time to time we have made suggestions, some of which have been met with ribald laughter, and others with scorn and derision. In my opinion such conduct will not promote cooperation. To-day the Liberal party holds the reins of office in most of the provinces of the dominion, and they have 170 seats out of a total of 245 in this house. They have control of the central bank, and by this time they should have had control of currency and credit. The government have had at their beck and call innumerable commissions, yet they plead for cooperation from a few of us on this side of the house. It seems to me that instead of crying out for cooperation they should get on with the job entrusted to them—the solution of the employment problem. We are most anxious to assist, but I am afraid the cry for cooperation is nothing more than idle talk.

I have a suggestion to offer to the Liberal party to-night. I suppose it will be relegated like many others to the waste paper basket, but still I am going to make it. Last Sunday I was privileged to listen to a broadcast entitled "What Is Behind the News"?—sponsored, I think, by the life underwriters' association. In discussing some of the matters relevant to the situation prevailing at present the speaker was very definite in some of his conclusions. I have listened to him on many occasions, and apparently he has an excellent grasp of some of our problems. As he concluded his talk I wondered if it would not be possible for us to get that gentleman to give us the benefit of his knowledge. Then I thought of another individual who a short time ago went out to the province of Alberta, stayed a week or so, then came back and became an expert on conditions out there. This gentleman held the chair of economics at one of our leading universities, but lately he has been able to do a little better by writing humorous stories. Sometimes I wonder if he does not think that his teaching of economics is a joke. But could we not get hold of him and have him help us deal with this problem? Then I thought of a lady who has been writing very excellent articles in the Financial Post, and who now holds a position in the employment commission, and I wondered why we could not get her to help us solve our problems.

It occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that we should be able to form a commission to end all commissions, and I would suggest that this commission consist of the leading business men of the country. Why not try to solve these business problems in a businesslike way by the use of business methods? Why not form a committee consisting of economists like the governor of the Bank of Canada, the president of the Bank of Montreal, the president of the Royal Bank, two or three representatives of the mortgage companies and three or four representatives of business, and entrust to that committee the problem of unemployment? You can go on appointing commissions from now to doomsday without result, unless you provide penalties for their failure to carry through what may be given them to do. Why can we not run our government as a man runs his business, in a businesslike way? I venture to suggest that if we actually commanded these people to come to Ottawa and form a committee, and made them responsible and attached penalties for any failure to find a solution of this problem, we would solve it—and it seems to me that is the only way we will ever solve it.

I am talking from the standpoint of orthodox economics, not from the standpoint of the new economics. I would solve it in a different way if I were speaking on the problem from the standpoint of the new economics. I venture to say that if we adopted such a suggestion as I made we would solve the problem in a very short space of time. It would be the representatives of business against the forces of poverty and everything else that goes to degrade civilization. If those men and women did not solve the problem, they would admit they were unable to solve it, and would stand condemned in the eyes of all the people of Canada. In my opinion that is the way the problem can be tackled and solved.

Let me make a few observations on the railway problem. I ask the government this question: Why have almost two sessions been permitted to pass without tackling the railway problem? Are we afraid of it? If so, of what are we afraid? Is it not time that we did something about the problem? I say that if we appoint a committee of business men charged with the responsibility of solving this problem, with penalties attached, they will solve it.

I was interested in a statement made last year by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid). I want hon. members of the Liberal party to listen carefully, because I really believe he touched the core of the problem. The hon. member is reported as follows, at page 3377 of Hansard for 1936:

Every member of parliament is aware of the heavy load which the country is carrying and the heavy interest charges which have to be met each year on the Canadian National railways, and in all our deliberations with a view to finding a solution of the problem, no one seems to have put his finger on the one spot which, if properly taken care of, might lead to a betterment of conditions and the bringing of our railways up to date. I speak of the labour element. Every attempt that has been made by either of the railways to amalgamate services has brought numerous telegrams and representations from every labour organization in the country, and rightly so, because they fear, the dismissal of the railwaymen. If more serious note were taken of this labour aspect of the question, and an investigation made into it as was done in the United States, where there is provision in all their railway mergers for compensating by way of pension the employees dismissed, if we similarly made provision or set up a commission to take care of the men dismissed—

There is the point.

If we . . . set up a commission to take care of the men dismissed in any amalgamation or merger of the railways, I believe we might find a solution of this great railway problem. But that aspect of the situation has never been touched. It is true the financial aspect looms largest in the minds of most hon. members. Nevertheless, every time we approach this problem we are met with the question: What shall we do with the men who are dismissed? I am strongly of the opinion that if we set up a commission to look into the possibility of taking care of the men so displaced, we might bring about a solution of our railway situation. I know that this question has been gone into in the United States and some such plan is afoot there.

Is not that the reason why we are afraid to tackle the railway problem at the present time? The suggestion I made in connection with the employment situation I make again in connection with the railways—that we appoint a commission charged with solving the problem, a commission not of those attached to any political party but rather one composed of business men, and attach penalties for their failure to solve the problem. Do that and we will get somewhere. If the appointed head of a business concern is not successful, he is removed without hesitation. But to-day when we appoint a commission they go on and on indefinitely, without any solution.

In closing may I say that these questions are of paramount importance to the people of Canada. They are not being solved. To use an ordinary, common term the Liberal party to-day is passing the buck, and in the very near future will have to answer for its actions. I hope and sincerely trust they will do something before it is too late.

From day to day I have heard nothing but talk about high and low tariffs. May I leave a thought with those hon. members who still consider that tariffs are the important factor in the solution of our problems? I would refer them to a sentence written by Abraham Lincoln, who said "I know very little about the tariffs, but this I do know, that if we buy rails from Europe, then Europe has our money; but if we buy rails in the United States, then we have the rails and we have the money, too." That is a fact I should like some hon. members to ponder over carefully. I earnestly beseech the Liberal party to get busy and solve these very important problems now confronting us.

Mr. J. M. TURNER (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the first time in this house, and wish at the outset to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) on his able and early presentation of the budget. I have been told and believe that old wines improve with age. I understand that in that respect they are similar to the budgets brought down each year, because they too improve with age; each year they become better.

The constituency I have the honour to represent is one of the largest in Canada, and covers almost all of eastern Manitoba. At the north end of the constituency of Springfield is the central Manitoba mining area, a great gold producer. South of that are the large paper mills situated at Pine Falls. The company at that point has this year contracted to take out nearly 100,000 cords of pulpwood from the surrounding district, an enterprise which will be helpful to the farmers and settlers.

Continuing in a southerly direction we find five of the largest power plants in the province, all situated on the Winnipeg river, and supplying all the electric power for greater Winnipeg and other points in Manitoba. Continuing farther we come to the five municipalities of Lac du Bonnet, Whitemouth, Brokenhead, Springfield and St. Clements, where a total crop failure has never been known. This area is noted for mixed farming, truck farming, and for its numerous beaches and tourist parks. Next we come to Beauséjour, the largest town in my constituency, and the county seat, situated on the trans-Canada highway, where the farmers hold a semi-monthly market. Here every two weeks one may see from 1,000 to 2,000 farmers trading and selling their produce.

Next we come to the towns of Garson and Tyndall, where the famous Tyndall stone quarries are situated. This stone needs no introduction here, for the interior of this beautiful building is built of it. Just in passing, I may say that it makes very good tombstones, but I am not soliciting any orders at the moment. Lastly, we have East Kildonan, a suburb of Winnipeg. This is usually a great labour centre, but at the present time there are many unemployed in that municipality.

What we need to help solve the unemployment problem in Springfield is more mining roads and a greater development of our mining areas. I want to take this opportunity of thanking the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar) for the help he gave to this district last year. We need better rural roads to help our farmers and to increase the very important tourist trade. We need industries, such as sugar beet factories, to absorb our surplus man power as well as our surplus electrical power. I might mention that the provincial government of Manitoba has gone on record as being willing to guarantee the bonds of a sugar beet company to the extent of $600,000. We need the extension of our power lines to all important points in Springfield, for the two reasons I have just mentioned. We want the federal government to specify Tyndall stone for all future buildings. This should be done on account of its well known qualities.

Mr. L. A. MUTCH (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, when I first decided to take part in this debate I had thought perhaps that I would be speaking shortly after the amendment, and I had intended to draw attention then to some of the things at which I was much surprised during the debate on the amendment. A stranger dropping into the gallery at that time might well have asked, "Where and when is the election"? Now that that thunder no longer shakes the edifice of government, perhaps a whisper from within may be heard for a few moments.

It is perhaps presumption on the part of one so new in politics to compliment the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) upon the splendid budget he has presented, but I do want to take this opportunity of saying that in spite of the fact that the paeans of praise that went across the country have died down, there is still in the hearts of most of the people, not only in my constituency but throughout Canada, appreciation for a job well done.

I do not propose to recount again the virtues of this government. All that they have done—and much has been accomplished —is only what the people of Canada expected of them. It is not, then, of things they have done that I would speak at this time. In the few minutes allotted to me I would speak of the fights not fought, and of the campaigns as yet uncharted. Last summer I had the opportunity of travelling from Montreal to British Columbia. I made that journey in a leisurely way; I walked and talked with many of those who sent us here, and I brought back with me a picture which I would like to give to the house to-night. It is a picture which I hope we might all carry clearly in our minds during our deliberations.

The endless struggle to keep on an even keel while the world around us is reeling is taking its toll of our people. Young men are greying at thirty-five years of age or younger, and perhaps I am ungallant in mentioning that their women folk for the first time in two decades are showing their age. Even the great war failed to place its impress so clearly upon the faces of our people as has this depression. It has been said that anxiety is the architect of new lines on the faces of humanity. Anxiety and fear and want ride with us in these days and it is our task to find relief from their soul-destroying blight. War terrifies; but it also exalts. I would not minimize the anxious horror of those who sent their dear ones into battle, but there was a veil of glamour about it which relieved even the starkest tragedy. For the combatant there is always the thrill of uncertainty and the chance of a sudden end. Add to that the exuberance of perfect physical condition, and the singing soldier is no mystery.

But in the grim, relentless and unrelieved struggle of depression there are no non-combatants, or at best very few. No glamour veils, even thinly, the raw stuff of failure, misery, want and hopelessness. No cheering muffles the sobs of women or the cries of children. No poet sings the praises of the worker who wages a losing fight with poverty. His failing hand holds no torch to fling to those he leaves behind. For him no cenotaph is raised. He will be known, if he is remembered at all, as a futile thing—a man who failed. Not daring, these men, with nothing to dare, are simply hopeless, struggling creatures just plodding along, their only motive spark the dim embers of their former enthusiasm for life.

Dare we in our deliberations put from our minds for an instant the real problem of these our fellow Canadians? No one realizes better than I do that appeals to fellow Canadians have been traded upon in this house, and yet I can frame no better phrase to describe them. We are most of us of a generation under whose leadership the fruits of folly matured, a generation which cannot even yet realize that the depression is the result of a combination, if you like, of those mistaken policies inherited and nurtured—a generation which still believes that the depression settled upon us unheralded, like the visitation of locusts in the Egypt of biblical times.

Having failed to see and heed the warning signs, having been content just to wait and wait, serene in the belief that the storm would pass, people now at last fearful of a condition which they yet fail to comprehend turn like fear-stricken sheep to mass objectives and try to find in various "isms" collective courage and collective authority for change. They seek in collectivism the means to stem the tide of the affairs of men. I am persuaded that most of the "isms" of the world are bunk. They miss the vital truth that the actors in this world drama are men and women. We can never really face up to the problems of society until we learn to think and speak and calculate in terms of men and women. The weakness of every "ism"—I exclude Liberalism—is that it puts emphasis on the system and its machinery, and disregards the human factor. We must ask and answer this question: Are we men or are we puppets? If we are men, then it is we who matter and not the system.

We have sought too long a magic formula by the application of which we hope to restore society to the good old days that never existed. The world has given position and power to men who promised, not a fuller life but a life which in retrospect seems all good. It gives ear to such men now. When will we learn to turn to ourselves, to forsake false counsel, to know what it is that we seek, and to seek it in the one place where it is to be found—in ourselves?

To the government front benchers I would say this: The opportunity for leadership is in this house. The qualities of leadership are not lacking. The courage of leadership will give to the men who exercise it opportunity and reward unparalleled in history. Moses the lawgiver has been remembered in brass and stone, but Moses the man who led his people out of captivity is enshrined as a living model in the heart of every man who would be free.

And now, Mr. Speaker, to be more specific—now that we are resolved to examine ourselves, first, in relation to our problems—where shall we begin? It seems to me that one great problem overshadows all others, and sir, I hasten to say it is not the problem of a balanced budget, although it is related to that. To me there is no problem of a balanced budget. The determination of the hon. gentleman who presides over the treasury will balance the budget. There is no doubt of that, but at what cost remains to be seen. But we shall see, and the people will judge, and I for one, am hopeful that the result will not be a worse horror than an unbalanced budget. Most of the people by whose grace I am here have unbalanced personal budgets, and most of them are worried about it. But there is a great and ever-growing number of people who feel the hopelessness of their situation and, realizing that they cannot cope with the arithmetic of their misfortune, are entirely indifferent to the arithmetic of the Minister of Finance. But let that pass. The greatest problem is the problem of the economic emancipation of the individual. As always, misfortune begins at the bottom, and restoration begins at the top.

There are those who view this situation and cry out that socialism is the answer, that we should begin restoration by levelling down the top to the standard of the lower strata. I have said that to me the collectivism of socialism is nonsense. To many, debt adjustment seems to be the answer. Obviously a measure of debt adjustment was and still is essential to a program of recovery. But to me it is a means, not an end. It is much easier for me to go along with the Minister of Finance when he states that the real and abiding recovery comes from an increase in the national income. The government has realized in this matter that the critical thing is the problem of the reality of recovery. The immediate need can be, has to be, and will be, met.

We in Canada have been much concerned with the problem of keeping the farmer producers on the land. The Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act was drafted and is being administered to that end. While the act is far from perfect in its application, it has served, despite abuses, to effect some real relief.

So far no government has recognized by any action the plight of that great taxpaying body, our urban and suburban home owner. No other section of the Canadian public bears anything remotely approaching the tax burden borne by these people. They pay the biggest percentage of the property tax; they contribute generously to the income tax; in almost every centre in Canada their school taxes are extremely high. As salaried men and wage earners they were the first to absorb the shock of the depression; as such they are likely to be the last to gain by any improvement. They are for the most part unorganized for their own defence; indeed they cannot hope to be otherwise. We have, on the one hand, capital, comparatively small in numbers, organized, compact, served efficiently by the ablest of advisers; on the other hand, organized labour, with a tradition of unity, the machinery of cooperation, and compact units based on mutual interest and mutual objectives. Contrast with this the great mass of urban and suburban workers in professional and clerical occupations; add to them the men and women on the farms, on small holdings, and in the villages. They are not, nor can they ever be a compact unit, socially or economically. If we in this house do not raise our voices in their behalf, they are voiceless, and it is our duty to see that these people, the same people who sent so many of us here, are not forgotten while the battle rages between those who would strengthen the present social order and those who would tear it down.

Mr. C. R. EVANS (Maple Creek): As one of the new members from western Canada, and having listened to the debate on both the amendment and the budget, I shall try for the few minutes of time that I occupy to keep as nearly as possible within the rules of the house.

First I congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) upon his presentation of the budget and his comprehensive survey of Canada's improved condition in world trade and in our economic and financial relations. While all these improvements may not be due to government policies, in a large measure they are so. The government has taken the lead in promoting world trade. Shortly after it assumed office in 1935 the Canada-United States trade agreement was consummated, and from that time on our government has extended the hand of friendship to all the nations of the world and has been successful in promoting and increasing empire and international trade. It has come to be widely recognized that the Ottawa trade agreement of 1932 was not sufficiently favourable to Great Britain, and that the lowering of certain duties might tend to expand trade currents not only in one direction but in both. The general effect of the new trade agreement should be to render more effective the policy of this government—to canalize more trade in inter-imperial channels.

The constituency which I have the honour to represent is entirely rural. Being primary producers we are naturally free traders. Therefore tariff policies mean dollars and cents to us. We are pleased with the reductions of tariff put into effect by the present government, but look forward with the present tendency to freer trade to greater reductions in the future. Being primary producers we have to sell our products in open markets, while everything we purchase is bought in a highly protected market. That is a condition that cannot continue if farmers are to stay in business. Unless there is a levelling of the spread in prices of the articles we have to sell in relation to those we purchase, it will be difficult for the farmers of western Canada to carry on.

It is true that in the past six or seven years we have met with disastrous crop failures through drought and other causes beyond our control, but the fortitude and courage of our people through the period of drought and depression have been wonderful. Picture a farmer putting seed in the ground year after year, without ever reaping a harvest, while each year he sees his assets dwindle until he is finally forced to come to governments and other agencies for assistance, and then you may realize in a small measure the problems with which we in the drought area of the west are faced. It is encouraging to know that the federal government now recognizes the gravity of our problems and is taking steps under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act to combat the ravages of drought and bring these vast areas back into production.

The Maple Creek constituency produces great numbers of cattle, sheep and horses. In the year 1936 we shipped out of this constituency 36,000 head of cattle of all classes. In passing, I would mention that the feeder policy of the government increased by about 10,000 head the shipments of feeder cattle out of our district. We also shipped around 22,000 sheep and lambs, and about 2,700 head of horses.

I desire to draw to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) the importance of stimulating in some way the horse industry in the south west country. For the information of the house and the people of Canada generally, I would point out that the Maple Creek and Willow Bunch constituencies produce perhaps more horses than any other district in the dominion.

It is encouraging to note the increase in the exports of cattle in 1936 over 1935. The total exports to the United Kingdom in 1936 were approximately 39,000 head, as compared with about 7,000 head in 1935, while to the United States in 1936 we shipped approximately 225,000 head, as compared with about 106,000 in 1935. Exports for the twelve months of 1936 showed the heaviest volume in many years, reaching a total of 264,000 head, as compared with 116,000 in 1935.

The other day, in the course of the debate, the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thompson) made references to the vast amount of new wealth which had been created in western Canada in the past fifty years, and he went on to say that had it been properly handled that wealth would have been sufficient to tide the western provinces over any ordinary difficulty. At page 1453 of Hansard he is reported as follows:

> Ontario and Quebec, where the great majority of these protected industries are located, pay seventy-five per cent of the taxes collected in Canada. I ask this house: How long are Ontario and Quebec going to remain a pair of placid milch cows to be stripped dry to pay the bills of provincial governments over whose expenditure they have no control? . . . In all fairness I say it is high time that these western provinces were told quite frankly that they must put their own houses in order to balance their budgets and live within their means.

The hon. gentleman's criticism is in order, no doubt; but if he would consider what became of the great wealth that we made in western Canada during, say, the past thirty years, and consider where the feed came from that kept those cows, he would realize that if it had not been for the wealth we poured into the industrial centres of eastern Canada to the extent of millions of dollars each year through tariff duties, those placid cows he talks about would have been dry long ago.

It is true that we did produce a vast amount of wealth, and it is equally true that the provincial governments in the west find it difficult to-day to carry on, with the financial problems that face them. But there is a story behind the provincial problem in western Canada, and I should like to put it before the house for consideration. In 1905 our province was formed, and from 1905 to 1929 we had a Liberal government in power; and during all those years that Liberal government never once failed to balance its budget. At the end of 1929 the public debt of Saskatchewan was $66,000,000. What did we receive for that $66,000,000 of bonded debt? We got all the services which a new and growing province demands, such as parliament buildings, gaols, sanatoria, mental hospitals—and by the way we have built one at Weyburn—a system of highways, bridges, the university, three normal schools, court houses and many other services that are required to carry on the functions of government. In 1929 a change of government took place, and after five years of Conservative administration we found that our public debt in Saskatchewan had increased to $154,000,000. True, $18,000,000 of this was spent for relief, but the rest has been spent extravagantly on commissions and many other unnecessary investigations. During their five years of office the Conservative government did not at any time balance its budget, and I would point out to the hon. member for Lanark particularly that that is the reason why the province of Saskatchewan to-day is in financial difficulties.

Last July I made a survey of the constituency I represent. I interviewed municipal and urban councils, school boards, live stock associations, farmers' organizations, and also held public meetings in order to get first hand information as to what our people thought would be the best means of giving to the needy assistance until such time as crop conditions improved. In every instance a works program was suggested whereby our people might be able to earn a living, instead of being demoralized by direct relief. Suggestions were made that the federal government cooperate with the provincial government in the construction of highways, the hard surfacing of main highways, the elimination of dangerous level crossings, increased activity in our water conservation program and improvements in our provincial and national parks.

This afternoon the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) referred to the stand which the federal members in western Canada took with regard to the action of the government last summer. I made one statement which I wish to confirm in this house to-night. At a meeting I attended, on invitation from many of my constituents, I said that I felt that the dominion government should have continued the operation of the wheat board during the crop year 1936-37, and I still think so; but I qualified my statement by saying that I was not in favour of governments being in business because that was the first step towards state socialism.

Let me say this in conclusion. The people of western Canada face the future with optimism and confidence, believing that nature will this year supply sufficient moisture once again to produce a bountiful harvest.

Mr. WILLIAM HAYHURST (Vegreville): The keynote of the budget speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) was one of cheer and confidence, or cheer and challenge, I believe the actual words are. These two words evidently influenced the general tenor of his speech, the peroration of which was dramatic. No problem, he said, is insuperable.

Seeing that the minister is so optimistic, I should like to mention the subject of slum clearance. I suggest that the government should start in the near future an active campaign for slum clearance. Most of our cities must be subjected to some type of slum clearance, because there is much overcrowding, and the people in these districts have to put up with living conditions that should be abolished. In England Sir Hilton Young called these areas in the centre of the cities the bad old cores of the inner areas of our great towns. We find these bad old cores in the inner areas of all our cities in Canada. We feel, Mr. Speaker, that every family should have such housing as is essential for decent and healthy living. The whole country is sadly neglected in this respect. So a strong effort should be made by the dominion government to bring about slum clearance. This subject has been before the house in a resolution, and I mention it here merely to drive home to the government, if possible, the gravity of the situation. It cannot be too often reiterated. Bad housing conditions are the supreme social evil of our time, poisoning life from infancy, and undoing much of the good results which education and medical science would otherwise achieve. Thousands of our young people have no home in any real sense of the word, but dwell in these ill-constructed, vermin-infested, insanitary old houses, in foully overcrowded districts. If this malignant growth is not excised it will drag us down as a nation in body, mind and soul. Slum clearance, of course, involves planned development, and team play amongst owners, architects and the government; but planned housing in some form must come if the bad conditions brought about by present happy-go-lucky methods are to cease.

I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussions in this house and in this debate on the budget, of the problems which face western Canada. I noticed that sometimes the wheat problem was discussed when we were speaking of unemployment. The wheat problem of the past few years, the wheat problem of the future, and the present problems of the farmers are vitally important. I was very much interested in the remark of the previous speaker that western Canada had produced such enormous quantities of wealth in the last few years. To-day and yesterday something was interjected into the debate regarding the wheat marketing schemes of the present government and the preceding government. I have in my hand a pamphlet published in Calgary in February 1936, by the former chairman of the wheat board, Mr. John I. McFarland. That is over a year ago. Sometimes we hear it said that the wheat marketing situation had not been thoroughly discussed prior to the present government taking office. I should like to read a short paragraph from this pamphlet, to illustrate what the previous speaker has mentioned about the great amount of real wealth which western Canada has produced in recent years, and in relation also to the marketing of this our greatest primary product. Mr. McFarland said:

> In the years before the depression our public men were proud to describe Canada as the "bread basket of the empire." From November, 1930, until 1934, the whole world had become a bread basket, but, despite that obstacle, Canada supplied more bread in the past five years to the great consuming centre of this empire than we did prior to 1930. From 1930 until 1935 inclusive, this dominion produced over two billion bushels of wheat. The farmers have marketed their surplus from these crops and have received prices which have been denounced as higher, and much higher, than so-called "world prices." Broomhall and others have recently made the statement that our carry-over next fall will be down to normal or near normal. Why? Simply because Canada is now the only country from which import countries of Europe can secure supplies except for a moderate quantity from Australia.

When Mr. McFarland wrote this pamphlet the Argentine had suffered from drought and its crop was already harvested, or at least most of it. They knew at any rate the amount of wheat available in that country. He goes on:

> The scene has now so changed that until another crop is harvested Canada is, in large measure, the "bread basket" not only of the empire but of the world. In the face of these facts the Winnipeg Free Press maliciously refers to me as the man who says, "Don't Sell Wheat." I ask you, is that fair play?

This prediction by Mr. McFarland in February 1936 came to pass. The world to-day is facing more or less of a shortage of wheat, owing to successive bad harvests in various countries. I did not bring with me to-night a copy of the Manchester Guardian which I had, containing an article written just about that time. The article said that the British crops in February last year were very badly damaged, as were the French and German crops—that is the winter crops—through too much precipitation. This would suggest that the main areas of Europe which need large importations of wheat were then realizing that their crop conditions were bad and that they would probably harvest a smaller crop than usual.

It is not only western members who should be interested in the wheat situation. Practically every farmer realizes that some just price—and when I say just price I mean a price which will give to the farmer the cost of production—must be accorded to the farmer not only for wheat but for dairy products and cattle, hogs and other products. The trouble is that for all the goods which the farmer has to sell he must accept the price offered by the buyer, but for everything he purchases he must pay a stipulated price which is based upon factory cost, plus the profits of wholesalers and retailers. It is evident that during periods of depression farmers' prices are below the cost of production; therefore a just price must be established for farmers' products which will give them at least the cost of production. The great majority of farmers in this country are most eager to obtain the economic equivalent of what the tariff gives to industry. That means that the farmers not only of eastern Canada but western Canada should have the prices of their goods to some extent stabilized, because the prices of factory products are stabilized through tariffs and through selling organizations. Farmers in western Canada are severely handicapped by reason of the fact that machinery costs them so much more because of the tariff. The investigations that are proceeding at the present time would seem to indicate that the tariff is not the only factor, and that selling organizations and factories seem able to put up prices to their own satisfaction.

When the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Thorson) was speaking the other day he quoted figures regarding Switzerland and other European countries in an endeavour to show that the Bennett administration had lost our European markets. Of course, the hon. member was not really analysing the entire European situation. He knows, as all hon. members know, that a period of economic nationalism, brought about by fear, affected the entire import and export trade of every European country. At one of the conferences held by the international wheat committee a delegate from Switzerland remarked that wheat in that country was grown at altitudes much higher than was the case in other countries, and in very poor soil. Naturally the wheat was of very poor quality. But the Swiss government subsidized the growing of this wheat, just as the French government and the governments of other European countries subsidized their home products. In regard to the subsidy on Swiss wheat a British expert composed the following verse to illustrate the conditions that existed in most European countries:

Red is the wheat, denatured,
On which the fowl is fed;
Red the impending ruin
About the farmer's head.
Red glow Helvetia's harvests
Amid the glaciers cold
Where every frozen wheat ear
Has cost its weight in gold.

In 1934 even South Africa produced a surplus of wheat amounting to about 860,000 bags. In other words, the nations of the world, whether belonging to the British Empire or in Europe, were intent upon raising more of their own products and becoming as self-sufficient as possible. Because of the change in economic conditions and the determination of importing nations to become as self-sufficient as possible, flour milling standards were altered very radically; lower grade wheat was used, and other foods were substituted for bread. Prohibitive tariff walls against foreign wheat and the ever-increasing domestic production enabled European countries so to reduce their import requirements that the entire world situation was affected. I should like to place on Hansard figures of the wheat imported by all European countries from 1930 to 1935:

	Bushels
1930-31	786,000,000
1931-32	770,000,000
1932-33	615,000,000
1933-34	523,000,000
1934-35 (to June 30, 1935)	525,000,000

The importing countries of Europe were endeavouring at all costs to become self-sufficient, and the high grade wheat of western Canada, which formerly commanded high prices because of its quality, became more and more ignored. At the same time cheaper wheats of lower quality from other countries were being substituted on a larger scale. This resulted in the building up of a huge surplus in Canada, but practically all political economists were agreed that the day would come when this surplus would be needed.

In their mad desire to become self-sufficient, practically every European country subsidized its farmers; and improved methods of land fertilization brought about increased yields. Even Sweden had a surplus of wheat of inferior quality, which was sold on the English market. Our highly developed and efficient wheat producing areas in Canada were competing with Poland, Russia, the Argentine, Australia and Roumania. In addition, we were met with bounties on wheat in Great Britain, amounting to 45 shillings a quarter up to a certain maximum, after which the bounty was reduced. Efficient advertising campaigns suggested that the people should eat less wheat and consume more fruits and vegetables. In such circumstances it is vital to the welfare of world agriculture that Europe be restored to its former status as an importer of food grains. With lower tariffs the consumption of wheat would be considerably higher, and that factor alone would automatically take care of world prices. We must endeavour in every way to increase world consumption, because we know that the goods can be produced.

In recent days Sweden has been held up as an example of what good government can do, and many people have been using the book, Sweden—The Middle Way, as illustrative of the prosperity of so-called prosperity in Sweden. The other day I clipped from the London Times of February 13, 1937, a report from its Stockholm correspondent, which says:

> Overcrowding in many Swedish towns and in most rural communities is worse than in England. Swedish architects and builders have produced a standardized tenement of "one room and kitchen." More than 40 per cent of all Swedish urban families with more than three children live in tenements of this type.
> The committee concludes that such improvement in the housing of the Swedish working classes, as has taken place in the past two or three decades, has been due not so much to the provision of better houses and tenements as to the birth of fewer children.
> In Stockholm conditions are even worse; an ordinary middle class couple cannot have more than two children without overcrowding. . . .
> So long as overcrowding remains so widespread and large sections of the Swedish people live around or below the poverty line, no increase in the birth rate is to be expected. The average income of each Swedish wage earner is £85 per year. Yet between two-thirds and three-quarters of all Swedish wage earners of fifteen years and over earn less than this and more than half earn less than £50; more than one-fifth of all Swedish families have a combined income of less than £50. In Stockholm this applies to only five per cent of all families, but in the rural areas it applies to about forty-four per cent. That explains why successive Swedish governments have pursued an aggressive agrarian policy, their aim being to raise the incomes and hence the purchasing power of the rural population.

It seems that we are always talking about export trade, and judging nations by the amount of such trade. If any nation in this world sells more abroad than it consumes at home, that nation is Sweden, yet we find that urban families with three children consume on the average only fifteen pounds of butter a head a year. The same trend is found in the consumption of milk and eggs, fresh vegetables and fruits. As in Sweden, we in Canada are facing a new era, whether we like it or not. If export trade were the criterion, Sweden should have a happy and prosperous population, because she produces nearly three times as much as she consumes. The report goes on.

> The facts and figures presented by the committee show that Swedish prosperity has as yet only touched a fringe of the Swedish population. In terms of industrial development, Sweden is still in the pioneering stage; great advances have been made in some directions but in others conditions have remained so bad that effective birth control is now the only way whereby the poorer classes can protect themselves against being completely submerged.

And so we come to what is probably the most vital factor in Canada. We recognize that people are the main wealth of our nation, and from various sources we hear that we should adopt some type of immigration policy, when we are really not endeavouring to the best of our ability to favour the full development of our own people. Instead of recognizing that moral rectitude, good homes, and children are the great asset of the nation, many people place before us the idea that we must make money and get rich. For that reason we are always considering the possibility of making money on the stock market. In this connection I should congratulate the government because they must be to some extent behind the attempt to stop the present gambling on the markets. I do not believe, however, that they have succeeded as well as they might have done.

The question of population is one which the Canadian people must face. One of the determining factors in the solution of our difficulties will be the attitude we take towards home, the building of homes, and the encouragement of our people to establish homes. We must recognize that our little children are our main asset, and that we must love them, and if we do Canada will become a place worthy of Canadians. We must rise to the occasion and realize that the people born in Canada are the ones who must receive a just and decent living. If those facts were urged upon the government and the people at all times, there would not be so much talk about immigration.

The district from which I come is a pressure population centre, and in that respect is something like Quebec. I admire Quebec because it is a pressure population centre of real Canadian people. If we are to develop a real Canada we must recognize that to make a home-loving people we must encourage the building of homes, the abolition of slums, and the encouragement of early marriages, which are usually happy marriages. If we were to do these things we would be taking a great step in the right direction.

As I travel across Canada I cannot help realizing that we are faced with the major problem of properly populating our vast areas. Yet in this country there are thousands of people seeking employment. Surely, as the minister said, the problem of wandering transients is not an insuperable one. These people are in the prime of life. Thousands of young people leaving high school are at a loss to know what occupation to follow. There does not seem to be any vocational guidance—at least very little of it. Otherwise there would not be that note of tragedy in these young lives. We should devote ourselves to the problem of seeing that our young men and women are encouraged to establish themselves in homes to raise families. Canada must be developed having in mind a proper attitude towards life. It does not matter whether we discuss the breaking of laws, the speed of motor cars, or the killing of people on street corners by people who have little respect for the law, but we must direct our attention to the attitude of our people towards our laws and the vital questions affecting the dominion.

I feel keenly about these matters and believe that in the next few years the government must do all it can to help the provincial governments in their educational programs and to help rehabilitate people who may become useful citizens. If we devote our attention to those matters we shall not need to worry so much about the great immigration problems which seem to hold the attention of some people.

May I close my observations by reading a short extract from Stevenson's Virginibus Puerisque, El Dorado—with boys and girls.

> A strange picture we make on our way to our chimaeras, ceaselessly marching, grudging ourselves the time for rest; indefatigable, adventurous pioneers. It is true that we shall never reach the goal; it is even more than probable that there is no such place; and if we lived for centuries and were endowed with the powers of a god, we should find ourselves not much nearer what we wanted at the end. O toiling hands of mortals! O unwearied feet, travelling, ye know not whither! Soon, soon, it seems to you, you must come forth on some conspicuous hilltop, and but a little way further, against the setting sun, descry the spires of El Dorado. Little do ye know your own blessedness; for to travel hopefully is a better thing than to arrive, and the true success is to labour.

Mr. GORDON B. ISNOR (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, when it was suggested to me a week or ten days ago that I should take part in this debate I welcomed the opportunity as there were certain items in the budget which affected the eastern maritimes, and about which I desired to make a few remarks. However, after having listened to the various speakers who have spoken on the main motion and the amendment, and having heard the various items in which I was interested discussed in considerable detail, I have decided that perhaps the best thing I can do is to follow the lead of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) and review the financial picture of this country. Before doing so, I should like to refer to the remarks of one or two speakers.

I should like to compliment the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) upon the stand he took. He is the only member from the maritimes on his side of the house. The hon. member referred to many matters affecting our section of the country, such as apples, fish, potatoes and lumber. I do not propose to deal with them.

I hesitate to touch upon the question of fisheries after the excellent manner in which it was dealt with by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare (Mr. Pottier). He painted the background of this industry in such glowing water colours that I am sure his suggestions will carry weight with the members of the government and with other hon. members in this house. He outlined the conditions which existed in the fishing industry many years ago, and referred to the decrease in production and the decline of markets. He left with the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Michaud) many constructive thoughts and recommendations which I am sure will receive the attention they deserve. If they do, the fishermen will benefit in the future as they have never benefited in the past.

I should like to refer particularly to a statement made by the hon. member for Royal. He is generally fair in the statements he makes, and I am sure he would not want to put a different complexion on the picture of unemployment from the one that really exists. I am keeping in mind the point of order raised this evening and I shall not deal with the unemployment except to make what I feel is a needed correction of the figures quoted by the hon. member. The other evening he said:

> That is the situation, Mr. Speaker, as regards unemployment in the city of Saint John. The same was true of the cities of Moncton and Fredericton, and other municipalities of New Brunswick. It is very interesting to note, in a report for the year 1936 issued by the dominion commission for unemployment relief, that in October, 1935, when the late government left office there were 14,438 on relief in New Brunswick. In February, 1936, the latest month for which I can get records, the number has more than doubled. There were 35,300 on relief in that province. I am sure the situation as regards unemployment in the dominion must be recognized by all.

In business when we desire to make a comparison, we usually take a week or a month of one year and compare it with the corresponding period in another year. In order to be fair, I think the hon. member (Mr. Brooks) should have followed the same procedure in giving his figures. When he gave the figures for October, 1935, he should also have given the parallel figures for October, 1936.

Mr. BROOKS: I stated that the latest figures I was able to get were for February, 1936.

Mr. ISNOR: I quite appreciate that the hon. member made that statement. I should like to give the house the correct figures so that it will have the true picture before it of unemployment in our section of the country.

The hon. member stated that in October, 1935, there were 14,438 on relief in Nova Scotia. Those are the figures submitted to me by the unemployment relief branch. They are divided as follows: 2,804 heads of families and 11,634 others. The figures for October, 1936, show 6,171 unemployed, made up of 1,396 heads of families, and 4,775 others. There is a marked difference. Hon. members will see the decided improvement which has taken place when the figures for October, 1936, are compared with those for October, 1935. I know the hon. member had no desire of presenting these figures in an unfair way, and I hope he will pardon me for making this correction.

I turn now to the budget. It was my privilege during the past ten days to make a visit down east. When I travel on a train I do not make a habit of using a drawing room; I like to mix with people from whom I am likely to gain information. I go from the smoker to the first-class coach, and then into the pullman, and so on, and so I was able to get, in an interesting way, the reaction to the budget presented by the Minister of Finance. The reaction was such as to give me as a business man a lot of encouragement to carry on.

This afternoon the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Edwards) said that he wanted to deal with the budget in a strictly business-like manner. I desire to speak, not as a representative of one of the important centres of eastern Canada, Halifax; nor as one who has always taken an active interest in board of trade matters in the city of Halifax; nor do I desire to speak as a business man; I desire to speak simply as a citizen of Canada and to express my appreciation to the Minister of Finance for his very able presentation of the budget. There are many pleasant things from a business standpoint disclosed in that budget. Not alone should the Minister of Finance be complimented; I believe some of the credit belongs to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the members of his cabinet, who by their cooperation in concluding trade agreements with the United Kingdom and our neighbour to the south have made it possible for the minister to present a financial picture which certainly should, to use his own words, bring cheer and prosperity to the whole nation.

I am going back a few years to review the financial structure from the time of the golden era which began in 1896. In 1897 a budget of $38,000,000 was presented by the late Hon. W. S. Fielding, that Nova Scotian who stood so high in the esteem of the people of Canada. In 1913 a budget of $112,000,000 was presented by Sir Thomas White. Passing along to the year 1932, we find that the budget was presented by the Hon. E. N. Rhodes, who estimated revenues at $311,735,000. Finally we come down to the Dunning budget of 1936, amounting to $452,123,000. I wish to show that the present budget represents a surplus this year. In doing so, I would mention that in 1932 the total revenue was $311,735,000, and ordinary expenditures $354,643,000, showing a deficit for the year of $42,908,000. Turning to the picture to-day we find an estimated revenue of $452,123,000, and an expenditure of $391,860,000, leaving a surplus of $60,307,000. Over the short period of four years there is a change in the financial picture from a deficit to a surplus representing a turnover of $103,171,000. Surely the people of Canada placed their trust in the right man as Minister of Finance when they sent to parliament the Hon. Charles A. Dunning.

Hon. members on the other side will immediately turn their thoughts to where the revenue comes from. I admit it comes from the pockets of the people. You cannot get it otherwise than through taxes. If you are going to spend a certain amount in business you must take it in before you can spend it if you are doing business on sound lines.

May I point out one or two items which naturally will come to our attention. First, there is an increase in income tax from approximately $82,000,000 to $102,000,000, and in sales tax from $77,552,000 to $115,500,000. It seems to me that this increase is necessary if the government is to carry out the request made to the Minister of Finance by the Canadian chambers of commerce that no unnecessary expenditures should be undertaken and that a closer relationship be established between revenue and expenditure, even if this necessitated increased taxation. That request was made last year. But what do we find this year? Not a single tax has been added, and yet a very much brighter financial picture is presented to the Canadian people. I believe that business men throughout the dominion will welcome this budget and will regard it as having done much to restore confidence in our business institutions.

The hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Edwards) questioned to-day the wisdom of restoring the five per cent salary cut to the civil service employees. I take an altogether different view. I believe it will be accepted generally throughout the dominion as a move in the right direction. It will release something like $3,000,000 of purchasing power, to be disposed of by large numbers of people who are not hoarders of gold but who will put into circulation their increased spending power. On the whole, from a business standpoint, instead of being criticized the government should be commended for restoring the cut. I am reminded of some words of Ella Wheeler Wilcox which I copied from the wall of a restaurant the other evening, while waiting for my meal:

> Don't look for the flaws when going through life,
> And even when you find them
> It is wise enough to be somewhat blind
> And look for the virtue behind them.

I commend the thought contained in those lines to hon. members opposite who during the last ten days have persisted in looking for flaws and searching for omissions in the trade agreements, rather than recognizing the benefits to be derived through them in increased business and employment.

May I briefly touch upon the matter of grants for assistance to the prairie provinces, and more particularly to the agricultural interests, as compared with the amounts provided to help the fishermen or the fishing industry. I have the figures since 1920, but I do not propose to read them all. For instance, in 1920-21 we find that $1,275,000 was devoted to fisheries; as against that we spent $3,903,000 on agriculture. Right down the line one finds very little variation in the votes so far as fisheries are concerned, until in 1936, as compared with 1935, we find a decrease instead of an increase. In 1935-36 the amount voted for fisheries was $1,753,012, and for 1936-37 the amount was only $1,407,900.

Let us compare that with the increases for agriculture. In 1921 we spent $3,903,000 on agriculture, and last year $7,117,341.39. If there is need for this amount of money I have no objection. I am not one of those who believe in bonuses and subsidies as a rule, but if the prairie provinces need the assistance then I say it is good business. But if you do it in the one case, it is also good business to do it in the other, when our fisheries show such a decline in production. We do not ask that these moneys be given to our fishermen in the form of a dole or relief. What we do ask, what we press for—and I support the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare (Mr. Pottier) in his plea—is enlarged markets. We believe that if the government makes provision whereby we can secure enlarged markets then the fishermen will take care of themselves.

Possibly we in the maritime provinces have not said enough; perhaps we have not said as much about the fisheries as the prairie provinces have said about wheat. We may be to blame in that regard, but this year we are united. We are demanding of the government more serious consideration for the maritime provinces in the east, and that applies also to the maritime province in the west. We are asking for serious consideration, and if markets are provided for us we will take care of ourselves.

Just one more figure in connection with agriculture. I find that including the special supplementary estimates, the sum of $10,090,481.65 is to be expended this year on agriculture. What do we find in connection with the fisheries? Compare $10,000,000 for agriculture with $2,194,582 for fisheries, including the fishing bounty and the supplementary estimate. And when the $500,000 is brought forward in the special supplementary estimates for promoting the fisheries of the maritime provinces, the statement is at once made: Once again the maritimes are digging into the treasury. These figures will show what we have to contend against. We have no fault to find with the west, but we do ask in all sincerity that the west give us its support.

An hon. MEMBER: We have been keeping the east too long.

Mr. ISNOR: Somebody says, "We have been keeping the east too long." I do not know who said that, but I dare him to stand up and repeat it. All I can say is, I am glad he is alone on the other side, for I do not believe his colleagues share that opinion. I am surprised that any hon. member should take the stand in this house that we in the east have been treated in too friendly a manner, that we have been treated too kindly. Surely the hon. gentleman who made the remark cannot mean that. Where would the west be if it were not for the east? We have sent able men from the east to every part of Canada. We, in the east, are not conceited, but in years gone by we did send the brains of the country to different parts of Canada. I hope the hon. gentleman will read a little history and become acquainted with what the east has done for the rest of Canada.

I should like to discuss the railways and the national harbours board, but I will leave that until the appropriate estimates are before us. I believe, however, that it is very necessary, as one member said this evening, that we should face the problems of the railways and taxation.

Before getting away from the budget I wish to refer to a matter I discussed when the post office estimates were before the house. Looking at the expenditures tabled by the Minister of Finance, I find a surplus shown in the Post Office Department. I repeat, that until we have a true financial picture showing on one side of the balance sheet the total revenue, derived from all sources, credited to the Post Office Department, and on the other side the total expenditures, including all rentals and all incidentals, the people will not have a proper idea of the financial standing of this branch of government. If it is necessary to set up, as has been done in the public accounts, a balance sheet reflecting the affairs of the dominion as a whole, then I suggest that each one of the departments should be shown in a similar manner so that we might know whether a particular department was paying its way or not.

On behalf of the people of Halifax I extend to both the former and the present administration their thanks for the splendid new building recently erected in our city to house the post office and other government branches. So often we fight for some particular project, and then forget to thank those who provided us with that facility. In Halifax we have a very fine building. It was badly needed, although I doubt very much whether it will be large enough; but in any case I wish on behalf of the people to extend our thanks for it.

On behalf of the people along our rugged coast line I should also like to thank the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin). A great many members do not realize the hardships, which the fishermen undergo. This has been touched on upon more than one occasion, but I wish that hon. members could travel with me along those rugged shores of Nova Scotia. I was privileged last summer, when the Canadian Bar Association held its convention in Halifax, to welcome several members of this house and to show them some of what we at any rate regard as scenic beauty spots in our province. I should like to take hon. members into the fishing villages, so that they might see for themselves just how our fishermen exist. The conditions were described by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare yesterday.

[Mr. Isnor.]

I mention this to bring home to the Minister of Public Works the fact that in providing breakwaters for these people he and the government have on more than one occasion saved the life savings of the fishermen of these communities. Let me picture a small settlement of perhaps fifteen fishermen. Gradually a wall has been raised which closes them in with the exception of a very small opening through which they sail out to the fishing grounds. I can point to any number where there is just enough space to enter and leave that shelter. I particularly stress this, in order that when we make a request on behalf of these people, the minister may give it very favourable consideration, not looking solely at the dollars that it is going to cost, but rather to the effect it is going to have in making it possible for those people to continue to provide for themselves and their families. I wish to express my thanks to the minister for what he has done, looking also to building in the future those breakwaters that are so sorely needed along certain sections along our coast line.

I have mentioned one distinguished Nova Scotian this evening, the late Hon. W. S. Fielding, and I should like now—and I know I am speaking the thought in the minds of many hon. members—to express our regret at the illness of a former Minister of Finance, Hon. E. N. Rhodes.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted again to express appreciation to the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister, and the members of his cabinet for a budget which I believe signifies great progress towards the solution of two great problems, those of reducing the annual deficit and lessening the need to expend huge sums on unemployment. I would ask that further consideration be given to these two subjects during the present year, as unless we find a solution for them we shall not see the happy and prosperous days that we hope are before Canada. Even a partial solution of these two great problems would give great hope to the taxpayer and a sense of cheer to all Canadians. I believe a door of hope and cheer has been opened by the Minister of Finance, and I congratulate him upon his splendid forward step in the direction of recovery.

Mr. W. G. CLARK (York-Sunbury): The budget speech of the Finance Minister (Mr. Dunning) was great in its clear delivery, great in its cheerful tone, great in the figures of trade extension, and may I add, great in its encouragement for the future balancing of outgo with income.

Having been elected on the Liberal policies over the former Minister of Trade and Commerce, who in the previous election in 1930 had a majority of 5,600, I am a profound believer in the importance of the efforts being put forth to extend the trade of this dominion. I heartily congratulate this government on what it has accomplished in this respect since taking office. The results have indeed been so considerable as to have imparted a measure of confidence to business. Of this I can speak from personal knowledge, being connected with companies doing business throughout the province of New Brunswick. My principal companies showed an increased volume of business of over 25 per cent in 1936 as compared with 1935, and a great recovery from the loss years of 1931, 1932 and 1933. I am interested in farming and manufacturing too, and can testify to the benefits from the United States trade treaty. Many cattle from my county have been sold in the United States at good prices. In most lines of produce, prices are better. Much lumber has been shipped to the United States since the reduction in duty. In my constituency there is a cotton mill which before the election of 1935 was working half-time. Shortly after the election, the working time was increased until for a period the mill was running overtime, and it is now on full time at increased wages. The government's closing of the relief camp that was near the city of Fredericton has also been much appreciated.

I have said that we are dependent upon Liberal policies, and may I point out the importance of changing some of the late government's unfortunate acts as promptly as possible. New Brunswick is largely an agricultural province, and the act which did most harm to the credit of the farmers and injury to the tradesmen was the Farmers Creditors' Arrangement Act of 1934. I should like to picture the harm that this can do. A hard-working, thrifty and honest farmer—and most of our New Brunswick farmers can be so described—a few years ago had his farm and stock fully paid for, and it was a good farm. That was about all he had except what he had given his children. When he was about fifty-five years of age his health became poor, and being urged by his wife to visit a married daughter living in the west, he thought he would sell his farm. Buyers were hard to find. One day a man came and proposed to buy the farm and stock for $10,000, paying $500 down and giving a mortgage at 6 per cent, and a bill of sale on the stock for the balance. The farmer thought it would be as good as renting the farm, but being careful he went to town and consulted the best lawyer there, saying to him: Will I be sure to get my farm and stock back if this man does not pay? The lawyer assured him he could, by taking a mortgage on the farm, and that in case of default he could get the stock back also by taking a bill of sale, both of which would be placed on record. He added that nothing was more secure in such circumstances, because under the British North America Act property and civil rights were under the control of the province, and each county had its registrar's office where the records were kept in a fireproof vault.

The transaction was completed and the man went away, expecting to receive payments in due time, but none came. On writing back he found that instead of looking after the farm, the purchaser had bought a hay press, paying only a small portion down and giving a lien for the balance, and he was going around the country pressing hay instead of looking after his farm. He made some money from the hay pressing, but instead of paying his debts he bought a car and sported about; he became careless in his habits; he sold some of the stock off the farm and did not replace it; some stock died from neglect, and the farm rapidly deteriorated in value.

Mr. BROOKS: Would the hon. member say that this would apply in every case in New Brunswick?

Mr. CLARK (York-Sunbury): No, it would not apply in every case. In the latter part of 1934 the original owner, having recovered his health, returned home and took a look over the farm. He was greatly worried, and said to the purchaser, "Why, you have not done as you agreed, and I must take back this farm and the stock right away." But the purchaser, under bill of sale and mortgage, replied, "Oh, you cannot get back the farm now; I have come under the Farmers Creditors' Arrangement Act. The official receiver was here and he said I did not have to pay for the farm, that I could keep it and keep the stock as well, and that I could make the implement firm stand a heavy loss on the hay press." By the way, the official receiver who did the greatest business in my county was an organizer for the Conservative party. He went about soliciting business under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

So the original owner went to see his good friend the lawyer, and said, "Surely it cannot be true that I am going to lose my farm and stock." But the lawyer said, "I am afraid it is true. The Bennett government passed an act making it possible for farmers in debt to hold the farm and the stock." But, he was told, the board of review still had to consider the matter. The board of review, however, took a narrow view of the law; they did not agree with their lordships of the privy council, who said:

To deal first with the last contention, their lordships are clearly of opinion that section 7 does not enable any creditor to be deprived of his security.

Under the view taken by the board of review in New Brunswick, however, creditors were deprived of their security and could not get their property back at all. The New Brunswick board has changed its views slightly now, but the same judge is still chairman of the board. The case was considered by that board one day; it was adjourned to another day, and judgment was rendered on still another day. When judgment finally was delivered the board said there should be a reduction of the mortgage by $1,000, that the interest should be reduced to five per cent, and that the man who had bought the farm should pay $125 within a year, making further payments at a later time. No arrangements were made to see that this was carried out, just as in hundreds of cases no arrangements have been made to make sure the decisions of the board were followed. It simply means that dishonest people consider that they do not have to pay at all when they come under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. In this case the original owner saw that it was hopeless to expect ever to get his farm or stock back again, so he lost the living he had worked so hard to obtain. The farm was really given to one who was unworthy of it, and the original owner fairly worried himself to death. And during a campaign speech in 1935 the then leader of the government referred to this act as the one of which he was proudest.

Mr. BROOKS: If I may interrupt the hon. gentleman, his objections to the Farmers Creditors' Arrangement Act seem to be on account of the fact that he is a dealer in farm machinery, and for that reason he has lost a very considerable amount through the act.

Mr. CLARK (York-Sunbury): That is not my only reason. There is no doubt that I have lost a great deal of money, but I know of many other cases. Tradesmen throughout New Brunswick have spoken to me time and again about the difficulties they have had and the injustices they have suffered under this act.

Mr. POULIOT: And the farmers have lost their credit.

Mr. CLARK (York-Sunbury): The act brought about a drying up of credit on the part of private individuals having money available. They would not accept farm mortgages, nor would they give credit to farmers. Many of our people who have money leave it in the banks at one and a half per cent because they are afraid to put it out on mortgages. Personally I do not believe the government should be loaning money on mortgages; in fact, I do not believe the government should be lending money at all. It is all right for the government to spend money on public works in order to keep people employed; it is all right for the government to have great schools in which to train supervisors to show people how to farm, how to market, how to cook and how to live, but what good does it do to make loans to farmers who come forward with proposals such as those I am going to mention?

[Mr. W. G. Clark.]

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, March 12, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEDNESDAY EVENING SITTINGS

On the order for motions:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with the consent of the house I should like to move a motion which appears in to-day's votes and proceedings providing for sittings of the house on Wednesday evenings. I understand the whips have conferred about this matter, but if there should be any objection I shall not press the motion.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I think perhaps if the motion was made operative as of Wednesday the twenty-fourth instead of Wednesday the seventeenth, it would be all right, I happen to know that engagements have been made for Wednesday the seventeenth which it would be difficult to break.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Then I move:

That on Wednesday the 24th of March next and all subsequent Wednesdays until the end of the session the sittings shall in every respect be under the same rules provided for other days.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROVISION AGAINST REFUSAL TO EMPLOY OR DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEES FOR MEMBERSHIP IN TRADE UNIONS

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 62, to amend the criminal code.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The purpose of this bill is to prevent employers from refusing to employ, or from dismissing employees, or conspiring with others therefor for the reason that they are members of a trade union. As it is lawful for workmen or employees to form themselves into trade unions and to bargain collectively, as a matter of public policy it should be unlawful for employers to seek, by overt acts or intimidation, threats or conspiracy, to prevent them from belonging to such trade unions.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Increasing the number of crimes.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 59, for the relief of Eva Schiller Lightstone.—Mr. Heaps.

Bill No. 60, for the relief of Ruth Jessica Kimpton Shiells.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 61, for the relief of Grace Ellen Doris Newman.—Mr. Lennard.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR EXPENDITURE, INDEBTEDNESS AND THE REFUNDING OF MATURING OBLIGATIONS

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to authorize the provision of moneys to meet expenditures made and indebtedness incurred by the Canadian National Railways Company during the calendar year 1937, to provide for the refunding of certain maturing financial obligations and to authorize the guarantee of securities to be issued by the said company to an aggregate amount of $30,721,700.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

FIRE-BOAT PROTECTION FOR VANCOUVER WATERFRONT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. C. GREEN (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, in answer to a question I had placed on the order paper, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) disclosed that the National Harbours Board has ceased to operate the fire-boat "Pluvius" in Vancouver harbour. This means that the water-front is now without fire protection except from the shore, and a fire starting on the water-front might lead to a great disaster. What steps are being taken by the National Harbours Board to provide fire-boat protection for the Vancouver water-front? I understand that the minister, whom I saw last night, is out of the city to-day, but I would ask that an answer be given as quickly as possible.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I will draw the attention of the Minister of Transport to the question of the hon. member.

GRAIN MARKETING

WHEAT BOARD SELLING POLICY—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE RESPECTING TELEGRAM OF MR. MCFARLAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, I wish to take just a moment to deal with the telegram which was read to the house yesterday by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). The telegram was as follows:

Newspapers report Hon. Gardiner's statement in Commons in defence of wheat board selling policy wherein he said McFarland estimated crop four hundred millions on June 24. Please insist on my behalf that Mr. Gardiner gives direct authority for that statement. I never informed any newspaper man of my opinion of prospective crop at that or any other time and no one had authority to make any statement for me. It was obvious before the end of June that all hope for a crop had been destroyed.

I had on my desk the other evening while I was speaking the authority for the statement I made, but owing to the fact that we have a forty-minute rule I thought I could state it in a shorter time than it would take to read it from the authority, and I stated the fact as it was reported in the press on June 24 last. I have now before me the same authority which I had the other night. It is a Canadian Press report which appeared in the Montreal Gazette, and in that report this is stated:

Lethbridge, Alberta, June 24.—John I. McFarland, of Calgary, former head of the Dominion Wheat Board, expects a good wheat crop this year.

Then in quotation marks:

"As far as one could forecast at the moment it looks like a 400,000,000 bushel crop," he said here.

I brought that item with me because in June last, when I was going west at the end of the session, I had read in a western paper the same statement with a little added to it. In the Manitoba Free Press of June 24, 1936, is this article:

"J. McFarland sets new wheat crop at 400,000,000 bushels."

That is the heading.

Lethbridge, Alberta, June 24.—A 400,000,000 bushel wheat crop for Canada this year was the prediction of John I. McFarland, of Calgary, former head of the federal wheat board, who visited here following an inspection of southern Alberta grain lands.

Then in quotation marks:

"As far as one could forecast at the moment," said Mr. McFarland, "it looks like a 400,000,000 bushel crop."

After the reading of the telegram yesterday I had other papers examined, and I find that this statement went right across Canada. More particularly, it appeared on June 24 in the Calgary Herald, which is the newspaper of the city in which Mr. McFarland lives. I quote:

Lethbridge, June 24.—A 400,000,000 bushel wheat crop for Canada this year was the prediction of John I. McFarland, of Calgary, former head of the federal wheat board, who visited here following an inspection of southern Alberta grain lands.

"As far as one could forecast at the moment," said Mr. McFarland, "it looks like a 400,000,000 bushel crop."

Then I had examined yesterday the records of the paper at Lethbridge, where Mr. McFarland was assumed to have made the statement, and I find his picture on the front page alongside of the article, which reads like this:

McFarland is impressed with south Alberta crops.

That is the heading. Next:

Sees chance for Canada harvesting 400,000,000 bushels this year.

Optimistic over western crop conditions, John I. McFarland of Calgary, well known Canadian grain man and former manager of the central selling agency for Canadian wheat, was a week-end visitor in Lethbridge and district. Mr. McFarland has important business interests in this city and expressed his gratification at the good showing these are making.

Mr. McFarland said he was impressed with the evidence of good times in Lethbridge and surrounding farm areas. "Lethbridge is one of the most thriving cities in western Canada," he said.

With A. G. Baalim and others, Mr. McFarland saw southern Alberta's fast growing wheat and beet crop and he was delighted with what he saw. Speaking of the Canadian wheat crop, Mr. McFarland said as far as one could forecast at the moment it looks like a 400,000,000 bushel crop. He did not comment on wheat prices.

I may add that when I was in the old country last July I was confronted with this statement when I was discussing grain matters on the floor of the Baltic exchange, on the floor of the corn exchange in Liverpool and in the offices of grain men in different parts of London, and I was interviewed by newspapers with regard to the condition of the crop. I find that there appeared in the Ottawa Citizen a Canadian Press report sent from London under date of July 28, in which this statement appears:

The Daily Mail also quotes the ministry—

That is the British ministry.

—as saying: "It seems at present that Canada, the source of our main supply, likely will have a good crop with conditions there mainly favourable."

Nevertheless, Canadian Minister of Agriculture Gardiner is reported by the Daily Express as saying: "The latest information is not cheerful. Drought has reduced the crop nearly fifty per cent."

These are my authorities, Mr. Speaker, for the statement that I made. I wish to add that, if Mr. McFarland did not make the statement, in view of the fact that it appeared all across this country and also appeared in Great Britain, where our wheat is being sold, he should have denied it about the twenty-fifth of June last and not this year after the statement was again repeated in this house. To my knowledge it has been quoted at least a score of times across Canada, and never before have I heard it denied. My own opinion is that statements of that kind at that time had more influence upon any keeping down of the price that might have been brought about during July than any sales of wheat that were made in that month.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I placed upon Hansard yesterday a telegram which I had received from Mr. McFarland, and I desire to express to the minister my thanks for the full and ample way in which he has dealt with that telegram and for the reasons he has given for the statement he made. The fact that it was issued by the Canadian Press would in itself ensure that it would have publicity wherever the connections of the Canadian Press went. Personally I know nothing of it. Until to-day I had not heard the statement to which reference has been made, and I have had no communication beyond the telegram itself. But I felt that in fairness to one who had served this country and was a friend of mine I should put his denial upon the record. The answer that has been given to the inquiry made by Mr. McFarland is a very full one. The only criticism I have to offer is that the privileges of this parliament were utilized to make deductions which I think are hardly warranted under the rules.

Mr. POULIOT: Will the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) be good enough to table the original of the McFarland telegram which he quoted yesterday if it has not already been destroyed?

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE

PUBLICATION AND TABLING OF AGENDA—FOREIGN POLICY AND DEFENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS VIEN (Outremont): I wish to call the attention of the government to articles that appeared in the press last night with reference to the agenda of the forthcoming imperial conference, and also to the fact that this agenda was published in London and in the dominion capitals at the same time. I note in the same article that empire defence is foremost on the agenda. I would ask the acting leader of the house (Mr. Lapointe) whether it is the intention of the government to table this agenda for the information of members.

Mr. BENNETT: I believe the Prime Minister said he would.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) The hon. member kindly sent me notice of his intention to bring up this question to-day. The announcement of the agenda in the House of Commons in London yesterday was appropriate, because the conference is meeting in London on the invitation of the government of the United Kingdom. This announcement was made at 3.45 p.m. London time, which is 10.45 p.m. here, and as the press was to have it at the same time that it was tabled in the House of Commons it was arranged that at 10.45 the agenda should be communicated to the press in the various dominions. I notice that on other occasions the agenda has not been tabled in the house, but in accordance with my hon. friend's request I have had copies prepared and am now laying them on the table of the house.

With regard to the matter of defence, I see that on the agenda of the imperial conference of 1926 the very same words appeared in an item of the conference—"foreign policy and defence." The same is true of the conference of 1930. The placing as usual on the agenda of this subject of foreign affairs and defence means that there will be discusison and consideration and that information will be given regarding the matter. I need not remind the house, however, that the parliament of Canada is the only authority on matters of defence when they concern this country, and that any recommendation that may be made by the imperial conference on the subject will be of no effect unless and until submitted to and approved by the parliament of Canada.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I think the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) will recall that I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) a question about the production of the agenda before this house should rise, and I understood him to say that he would look into the matter. The truth is that on some occasions the agenda has not been completed at the time of prorogation and therefore has not been laid on the table. I think the government is to be commended for having laid the agenda before the house, thus enabling the house as a whole to have an understanding of the problems with which the governments of the dominions and the United Kingdom will have to deal. For myself and those associated with me I thank the minister for having made that possible, and probably it might be desirable, as my hon. friend from St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) suggests, to have it incorporated in the votes and proceedings of to-day so that it may be available to all.

SOCKEYE SALMON FISHERIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES CONVENTION FOR PRESERVATION AND EXTENSION IN FRASER RIVER SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) was kind enough to say that he would make a statement with respect to the Fraser river Sockeye salmon treaty.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Yes. The question raised by my hon. friend the other day relates to a convention which was signed by the United States and Canada in 1930 with respect to the sockeye salmon fisheries in British Columbia in international waters. This convention was approved by the parliament of Canada in 1930. The senate of the United States consented to the ratification of the convention only in June, 1936, adding certain conditions to the ratification.

Mr. BENNETT: Reservations.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Reservations; they call them understandings. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said the other day in answer to my hon. friend, it was not considered here that these reservations were of sufficient importance to deter Canada from acceding to the treaty as it had been approved by the house in 1930, but were merely matters of administration, interpretation of the convention and so forth. I am pleased to say that the ratification has not yet taken place, and as my hon. friend is of the opinion that these reservations are important, and as my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), has agreed with the view taken by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), I have given instructions that a resolution be placed on the order paper for the approval by the house of these reservations before ratification takes place.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I suppose it is within the memory of some hon. members of the house that the treaty was originally negotiated some time prior to 1930 and certain objections were taken which, while the then government thought they were not very sound, enabled them to negotiate a new treaty. A new treaty was negotiated in 1929-1930 and it was the late government—the government of the now Prime Minister—that asked this house to ratify the treaty in 1930 before the general elections. I then suggested that when 11,000,000 people are negotiating with 125,000,000 or 130,000,00 people, it is desirable to have them ratify in their senate before we do so; for that relieves us of a good deal of difficulty. For five years we endeavoured to have the treaty ratified by the United States senate, and the president did in fact submit it on more than one occasion. The result is that now we have the ratification of three of the United States reservations—the United States used to call them reservations, but to-day in this treaty they are spoken of as understandings. It will be recalled that when the treaty of Versailles was before the United States senate they spoke of the conditions which they imposed upon it as reservations, and numbered them. For my part I cannot see very much difference between the reservations, now called understandings, imposed upon the sockeye salmon treaty and those of a similar character in connection with the treaty of Versailles. I desire again to thank the government for having placed upon the order paper a resolution looking to the ratification of these reservations or conditons or understandings; for frankly, as I read the original treaty and the understandings or reservations I think they cannot be read together into an intelligible whole, that one of the reservations negatives a provision of the treaty. However, it may be that after listening to the lucid explanations of the minister and the government I shall be able to revise that opinion. But it is because of the difficulty I have in reconciling the understandings or reservations with the terms of the original treaty that I was anxious that the matter should not be disposed of by ratification in a formal sense until such time as parliament had had an opportunity to deal with it. I think the government have taken the eminently proper course in permitting the House of Commons, which originally gave its approval to the treaty, to consider now whether it is disposed to give approval to these understandings or reservations.

IMPERIAL DEFENCE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Before the orders of the day are proceeded with, Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the acting leader of of the government (Mr. Lapointe). The question is based upon a Canadian Press dispatch appearing upon page 10 of the Montreal Gazette, dated March 12, 1937, and reporting a debate in the parliament of the United Kingdom that occurred on March 11. The report states:

> Lord Stanley, parliamentary secretary for the admiralty, said the dominions were being kept in the closest touch, through their representatives at meetings of the committee of imperial defence.

May I ask the acting leader of the government what statement he has to make by way of reply to that report?

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, Canada is not a member of that committee on imperial defence and does not sit on it. I presume Lord Stanley had reference to New Zealand and Australia, which I understand take part in the proceedings of the committee.

THE BUDGET

INSTRUCTION TO COMMITTEE OF WAYS AND MEANS RESPECTING CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM TRADE AGREEMENT

On the order:

> Resuming debate on the motion of the Minister of Finance that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of ways of means (subject to the instruction given by this house on February 25, 1937).

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Before this order is proceeded with I have to make a few observations, lest there be any misunderstanding in connection with the matter. It will be recalled that, in an endeavour to expedite the business of the house, without comment or discussion a resolution was moved by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) on February 25, 1937, as follows:

That it be an instruction to the committee of ways and means that they have power to consider the terms of the trade agreement entered into on the 23rd day of February, 1937, between the government of Canada and the government of the United Kingdom together with the modifications in the customs tariff therein mentioned and to report to this house on the whole agreement prior to the introduction of a bill respecting the said agreement.

This resolution was introduced into the house on the authority of a notice of motion given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) on February 23, the day on which the treaty was executed. It was adopted without question or discussion, with the view that we were doing something to expedite the business of the house. In other words, if hon. members are interested in comparing this with what took place in connection with the United States agreement last year they will find that if we proceed as contemplated we shall have saved a great deal of discussion—in my judgment futile discussion—because it is not the manner in which we have discussed trade agreements with other countries. I notice for instance that on February 13 of last year, on the motion of the Prime Minister, we set up the committee of ways and means, and then on February 21 the Prime Minister submitted a statement of the tariff changes resulting from the Canada-United States trade agreement signed at Washington November 15, 1935. That was followed by a notice to this effect:

Resolved, that it is expedient that parliament do approve of the trade agreement entered into at Washington on the 15th day of November, 1935, between His Majesty's government in the Dominion of Canada and the government of the United States of America, and that this house do approve of the same, subject to the legislation required in order to give effect to the provisions thereof.

This resolution was moved by the Prime Minister, seconded by the Minister of Finance, on February 25 of last year. The debate proceeded for a long time—it is reported again on March 6, for instance—and we have a further report of it; finally the resolution is adopted and a bill framed upon it, as will be found in Hansard of March 19, indicating that the whole subject matter was then placed before the house, including the schedules and the terms of the articles themselves, which constituted the agreement. That was discussed in committee as I say for some time until finally the resolution was passed and a bill framed upon a further resolution providing for the ratification of the agreement and the introduction of the bill. The house then divided upon the resolution as such and a division was taken upon the acceptance or rejection of it.

The other day I spoke to the clerk of the house with respect to the terms of the resolution, because there was nothing on the order paper that indicated that this instruction had been given. Thereupon I noticed the next day in the order paper we had these words:

. . . subject to the instruction given by this house on February 25, 1937.

If, for instance, by voting against the resolution it is suggested that one votes against the agreement between the United Kingdom and Canada, obviously that would be a highly improper thing. I propose to vote for the agreement and not against it, as I indicated the other day. Those associated with me have criticisms to offer with respect to some of the details, but as far as the agreement is concerned we propose to follow the course which we followed in 1932 and support the agreement. That is the reason I put the parallel paragraphs upon the record.

I am sure the government would not endeavour, however innocently, to deceive those of us who sit to the left of the Speaker, but the effect might be—and I have heard it whispered about that it was intended it should be—because of the addition of these words, "subject to the instruction given by this house," that by voting against the budget we vote against the agreement. It is perfectly clear that that must be cleared up, or we cannot vote at all. We are not, in an effort to expedite the business of the house, going to be put in the impossible position of its being said that in voting against the budget we have voted against this agreement. I cannot suppose that any such thought was in the mind of the Minister of Finance. I think he was good enough to thank us for having helped him to expedite the business.

One of two things must now be considered. One would be that the vote on the agreement be deferred until such time as the motion is made by the government for ratification. As far as my present knowledge goes there is but one member of the house who will vote against it; there will therefore be no recorded vote. Or, secondly, the motion as it now stands could be taken as carried without division, and then on the next motion made by the Minister of Finance, that the Speaker do now leave the chair and the house resolve itself into committee of ways and means, we can take the vote against the budget. That is one way to deal with it. I mention this because of what is, I trust, merely an idle rumour, that there was in the minds of hon. members opposite the thought that they were placing us in an embarrassing position.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Oh no; my right hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, at times the urbanity of the Minister of Justice embarrasses me. At any rate, Mr. Speaker, I thought it my duty to bring this matter to the attention of the house at once so that there should be no possible opportunity for misunderstanding in connection with it.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): I can assure my right hon. friend at once that no thought of trickery was intended—

Mr. BENNETT: I did not use the word trickery.

Mr. DUNNING: The sole object was to endeavour to expedite consideration of the trade agreement. I spoke to my right hon. friend before determining to make the Canada-United Kingdom trade agreement a part of the budget itself, and he was kind enough subsequently to agree to facilitate the manner of discussion. The question arises very largely because of the addition of those words to the resolution now before the house. In that connection I am bound to say that the government was not consulted in regard to their being added. I did not know how they came to be added. If they were deleted, quite obviously it would be the ordinary resolution for the Speaker to leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the point therefore would not arise.

As far as the government is concerned of course it is presenting the budget as a whole and in this motion now under discussion is asking that the house, by approving the motion that the Speaker leave the chair and the house resolve itself into committee of ways and means, approve the budget. That never means that every member so voting approves of everything in the budget; that is quite clear. Individual members of the house on both sides, I am quite sure, will take full advantage of the liberty which is theirs in committee of ways and means to criticize individual proposals in the budget, each of which will be dealt with subsequently in the appropriate manner. That is to say, there must be a bill founded upon the resolutions of the committee of ways and means with respect to each separate matter dealt with in the budget, under the various statutes. there will have to be a bill to approve specifically the trade agreement—

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. DUNNING: —and I presume, though I would not like to be absolutely certain, that there will not be a motion of ratification, although it occurs to me that the second reading of a bill approving of a treaty or agreement is itself a motion for ratification.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. DUNNING: That might be the occasion of recording the approval or disapproval of the members of the house with regard to the principles of the agreement as a separate part of the budget. In the same manner amendments are made to the Special War Revenue Act, to the customs tariff and other matters contained in the budget and dealt with by separate bills. It has happened in my experience, and I am sure in the experience of my right hon. friend, that members have voted for the budget but against the second reading of certain individual bills founded upon the budget resolutions. That, I take it, can occur on this occasion, but in asking that the discussion be facilitated there was no thought whatever of putting anyone in the house in an embarrassing position in relation to the agreement.

Mr. BENNETT: With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make the observation that the terms of the motion that was agreed upon are very important:

> On motion of Mr. Dunning, it was resolved that it be an instruction to the committee of ways and means that they have power to consider the terms of the trade agreement entered into on the 23rd day of February, 1937, between the government of Canada and the government of the United Kingdom together with the modifications in the customs tariff therein mentioned and to report to this house on the whole agreement prior to the introduction of a bill respecting the said agreement.

That involves three things: (1) That the agreement is considered by the committee of ways and means; (2) that a report is made to the house, and (3) that a bill is founded upon it. In fairness to the clerk at the table I should say that I spoke to him at the table pointing out that there was nothing on the record that indicated that this was to be dealt with, and next day I noticed that these words were added. In view of the statement made by the minister I think it would simplify matters if, with the consent of the house, the words were deleted and the matter considered as having been on the order paper continuously, that the instruction had been unanimously agreed upon and given to the committee of ways and means.

Mr. DUNNING: Agreed.

Mr. BENNETT: Then as I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the clerk is to eliminate those words from the motion as it now appears, with the consent of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes.

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Thursday, March 11, consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. W. G. CLARK (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, at adjournment last evening I was referring to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act of 1934, which, as far New Brunswick is concerned, is an iniquitous law. The hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) tried to make it appear that I was taking up this matter because of personal losses. It is true that my company has lost thousands of dollars through this act, but that would not trouble me if any good resulted. I am speaking, however, for many tradesmen and a host of reliable farmers.

One cannot dissociate oneself from experience, and my experience has been that in many of these cases advantage has been taken of the act to aid dishonesty and increase unreliability. I mentioned that in my opinion the government should not make loans. Under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act debtors may get clear without a cent of cost, and when it is so easy at first why should they bother about their debts thereafter? Here is a sample proposal made under this act:

> I propose to retire my obligations both secured and unsecured by apportioning amongst my creditors the annual sum of $200 for a period of ten years with interest on interest-bearing claims at the rate of five per centum per annum.

Included in this farmer's statement of debts amounting to some $5,000 is an amount of $1,895 owing the Canadian Farm Loan Board, which I take it means the government of this dominion. This man proposes to pay only $200 per year on his debts for the next ten years. Here is another farmer, with liabilities of some $13,000. He says:

> I propose to ask for an extension of time of four years without payments on account of my indebtedness, in order that I may have an opportunity of improving my land and effecting repairs to the buildings on the farm.
> At the expiration of the four-year period I propose to convene a meeting of my creditors to consider my situation at that time.

I have many other similar proposals with which I need not trouble the house at present. I only wish to point out that this legislation has made it too easy for some people to get clear of paying their debts, and has deprived creditors of their security.

With reference to unemployment I desire to say only this: Unemployment can be cured by the adoption of policies that will restore true value to farm lands and to the products of our fisheries. Then with the return of complete confidence on the part of all classes in our country there will be active business, prosperity, good wages, and contentment for all.

Mrs. MARTHA LOUISE BLACK (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) occupies a most difficult position. He must provide the actual moneys to be paid out for pressing needs, and he must look to the future in order to provide the staggering amount required to pay the interest on those moneys. No matter whether we agree with his policies or not, we all realize that he lives in an atmosphere of horrible anxiety, and is weighed down by enormous responsibility. I believe that all hon. members, irrespective of party lines, will acknowledge that under the circumstances the minister has done the very best possible.

Returning to my constituency last summer I was anxious to find out how some of my Liberal supporters would take the fact that I voted against the trade agreement with the United States. I spoke to one of our very dear friends, a hide-bound Liberal, if there is such an article, who had supported me because of a great favour the previous member for the Yukon had done him. I said, "What did you think of the stand I took?" His reply was, "Oh, I don't know; it all works out the same way in the end. Dunning put on an eight per cent sales tax, and after all what you loses on the swings you gains on the roundabouts."

The isolation of the Yukon will make whatever remarks I have quite different from any of the speeches of other hon. members. We are separated by a land belonging to another nation. We are separated from Canada by seas, mountains and rivers. Since I have sat in the gallery and in the house, in those years from 1921 to the present, I have heard hon. members one after another cast little slurs on the Yukon, with its small population, which they said was always coming to the government asking for money. It was only a few days ago that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McCulloch) asked what the government of the Yukon had cost in 1935 and 1936 inclusive. He also asked for information about the population. The answer he received was that the moneys for all expenditures by the federal government during 1935 and 1936 inclusive amounted to $568,081.54. The population of the Yukon on June 1, 1931, according to the last census, was 4,230. It is probably the same at the present time.

I ask the government and hon. members if it would not be just as fair to ask for information as to what value the Yukon has been to Canada. From 1898 to 1936 inclusive the Yukon has produced in gold alone $193,578,489. From 1925 to 1936 the production of silver in the Yukon territory has amounted to $11,195,090; there is no record of silver production prior to that time. I believe a moderate estimate would put previous production at $1,000,000. The production of lead from 1925 to 1936 amounted to $2,312,772, and prior to that time amounted to possibly $125,000. Customs duties collected on imports entered for consumption in the Yukon territory, from 1898 to 1936 inclusive, totalled $7,262,994.41. Then we must not forget for one moment the great market the Yukon territory has afforded Canadian goods. Millions of dollars have come to Canada from the Yukon every year. The Canadian packers, wholesale firms and machine manufacturers have benefited. From 1898 to 1936 the expenditures of the Department of the Interior in the Yukon territory amounted to $11,489,883. Other expenditures made by the government for the Yukon territory include those for public works, post offices, justice, Indians, telegraph lines—there has always been injustice in connection with that item, because much of the cost was charged to the Yukon when it should have been charged to British Columbia—miscellaneous expenses and mounted police. From 1898 to 1936 expenditures on these items totalled $20,895,649. These, added to the expenditures by the Department of the Interior, make a grand total of the cost of the Yukon to Canada of $32,385,532. I would ask in all reason if we have not returned that amount of money, in view of the fact that we have produced almost $225,000,000. I should say that was very good interest for the government of Canada.

It is said that Seward, Secretary of State under Lincoln, who purchased Alaska from Russia for the United States for the sum of $7,200,000, died of a broken heart because of the ridicule heaped upon him. Alaska was called Seward's icebox and Seward's folly, and yet we all know that within recent years that territory of Alaska in one year alone returned to the United States as much as $120,000,000. Hon. members must try to realize the significance of the fact that the Yukon, a much smaller territory of only 200,000 square miles, in less than forty years has produced at least $225,000,000, and I believe I am safe in saying that the land has not yet been scratched. That amount seems to me somewhat more than a fair return on the national expenditure of $32,385,532. The return is almost $200,000,000 greater than the expenditure. From the first rush in 1898 the Yukon has never asked for mercy, but has asked only justice in all things. When Lord Byng, as His Excellency the Governor General, came to the Yukon, after he had visited the various mining camps, he said to the then member, "Captain Black, I believe you represent the only truly socialistic community in the British Empire to-day," to which the member replied, "No, we are not socialists up here." "On the contrary," was His Excellency's reply, "you are ideal socialists. You have no very rich; you have no very poor; you have no social distinction. Both the men and the women must work, or go without. You take care of your sick and aged, if they have no means of their own." That, of course, is true.

It is in this connection that I want to speak about the old age pensions as they are applied to the Yukon. Many of our men and women have been in that country for from thirty to forty-five years and have not at the present time sufficient to keep them in their old age. Some of them had money and went through it, while others worked steadily almost beyond human endurance for that length of time and yet have not sufficient to take care of their old age. The local government gives these people $20 a month. It is not called a pension; it is referred to as a dole, which is a most offensive thing to every self-respecting man and woman. No matter how poor we may be, we all have a right to honest pride. The great majority of these men and women have worked hard while in the Yukon. They receive this $20 a month in the form of a dole and, unless they are absolutely helpless, under the conditions that prevail there they are able to live even on that small amount. Wood can be had for the cutting, there are fish in our waters and game in our woods; there are plenty of moose and caribou, and during the summer months our gardens produce almost anything that anyone might want. Then there is a great spirit of comradeship and generosity among Yukoners which I do not think can be equalled anywhere else in the wide world. I have lived in the Yukon since 1898 and I cannot recall having met half a dozen truly mean men or women.

Many of our people who are entitled to old age pensions would like to go outside where they could be near relatives and friends. At present they are forced to remain in the Yukon because they are deprived of this dole when they leave the country. I contend that the dominion government should pay the whole cost of pensions for these people. If a man or woman lives for five years in British Columbia, after spending twenty-five or thirty years in the Yukon, he or she can obtain only $5 per month, an amount hardly sufficient for even an old person to live on. The government pays the whole cost of these pensions in the Northwest Territories, and if the same could be done in the Yukon it would help our people greatly. They could then go outside where they would be more comfortable, where they would be close to relatives or friends and be able to enjoy some of the amenities of outside life. Sections 1, 2 and 3 of chapter 156 of the revised statutes of Canada give to the residents of the Northwest Territories the right to receive a pension from the dominion government, and I ask this government to consider giving the same right to Yukoners. These men and women have worked hard and have been a credit not only to the Yukon but to Canada as a whole. I ask the government to give the same consideration to the people in the Yukon as is given to residents of the Northwest Territories.

Once again I must refer to the superannuation paid to civil servants in the Yukon. The superannuation act was changed by the government in office prior to 1930, and this change has been continued down to the present time. When the government announced through an order in council that Messrs. George MacLean and George Mackenzie, former gold commissioner and acting commissioner in the Yukon, were being paid superannuation on their combined salaries and living allowances, I looked for the same justice to be shown the other civil servants in the Yukon. For years the following civil servants have been contributing on both their salaries and living allowances:

Interior department: Messrs. Jeckell, Grant, Burton, Faulkner and Gillespie.
Justice department: Mr. Blankman.
Customs department: Mr. Betts.
Public works department: Mr. Wyness.

The above list does not include any post office employees, the three officials in the White Horse customs or the eight or ten men who have been retired from the various departments. It is on record that these members of the government service have paid into the superannuation fund on the basis of salaries and living allowances. Section 2 of the Civil Service Superannuation Act provides as follows:

It will be seen by this section that the government promised the payment of superannuation on both salary and living allowance and the employees paid accordingly into the fund. For some time the government retired employees on this basis. Later when certain civil servants from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories were brought down they realized that they would be retired only on their regular salaries. Accordingly they made application to the government for a return of the money they had paid into the fund on their living allowances, which application was granted. I think all hon. members will agree that by that act rank injustice was done to those civil servants who remained in the service in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Members of the service who for years had been paying on both living allowances and salaries, on retirement, either compulsory or voluntary, found to their consternation and despair that the government had betrayed its trust. In many cases incomes were reduced below the actual cost of living necessities. We would have the same thing in a widow going to an insurance company for the $5,000 or $50,000 of insurance for which her husband had paid and being told by the company that as they could not afford to pay all that had been paid for, she would receive only half. That is just what is being done to the civil servants in the Yukon. The Yukon civil servants made their payments when they were due, but the government, in order to make a few friends, changed the act over night and has failed to meet its obligations. I am asking only for justice for these men and women who have worked so hard in the north.

Labour organizers are beginning to work among the workmen of Canada, and it behooves the leaders among the employers as well as those among the employees to meet each other on a footing of reason and equity. The fight that is going on in the United States between the leaders Green and Lewis for control of the powerful labour organizations under one head is already finding a repercussion in this country and in my own land to the north. When one realizes that many of the labour unions in Canada are so closely bound with those of the United States that before making any settlements regarding policy permission must be given by union headquarters in the United States, the time has come when thoughtful men and women must ask, "Whither are we drifting?" Would it not seem strange to ask Italy or Germany or Russia for permission to carry on our business? As an integral part of the British Empire, would it not be more sensible to have an imperial labour organization?

Times are changing; they have changed. Laws accepted as a matter of course to-day would have been revolutionary fifty years ago. The same will be true of development in another half century.

For a number of years in the north my closest associates and best friends have been the working men and women of that country. At one time I myself cooked for sixteen men, baked bread for as many more, and did all of the work with the assistance of my twelve year old son, taking time off on Saturday afternoons to have candy pulls or other parties for the boys in the Sunday school class I taught at the Forks. I know what work is; I know what luxury is. Hard work never hurt anyone, given good health.

My heart goes out to the women who at the present time must watch their children deprived of the necessities of life. I know that in addressing hon. members of this house I am talking to many who have children of their own; in a special degree they must realize their responsibility for the well-being of our children and our grandchildren. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) understands as well as if not better than any member of this house the dangers and anxieties of our present situation.

On the whole, labour conditions in the Yukon have been fairly good. Hitherto we have been free from the strikes that trouble the outside world, but this spring, to my shocked surprise, a strike occurred in the silver district. At first a "sit-down" strike was intended, but better counsels prevailed. One mounted policeman visited the camp: he said, "Boys, this is, after all, private property; I think you had better go down to Mayo"; and the boys moved off. I am told that the citizens of that town, the strikers' committee, and the mounted police communicated with the present acting commissioner asking that he order the government liquor shop be closed during the period of the strike. These requests were either ignored or refused—I shall be very careful to obtain exact information upon my return to the Yukon in the spring. But to the credit of the strikers, they themselves organized a committee to see that there was no disregard of the decencies of life. I believe that the mining company met practically all of the demands of the workers, at least sufficient of them so that the men went back to work. Can anyone in this part of the country or in the United States imagine a strike of several hundred men carried through with absolutely no rowdyism in spite of the fact that there was only one police officer in the entire district? I wonder how many people in this part of Canada appreciate what the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have done in the isolated districts of our great country? Surely high tribute must be paid to the strike committee and the men generally, and also to the lone member of the mounted police who represented the federal authority.

Governments must move with the times, and learn to face new conditions. For the first time in the history of the Yukon I have come to realize that we must meet labour conditions such as exist all over the world. Fortunately we have had almost invariably strict observance of law and order. I have known one mounted policeman to go among a milling mob of several thousand men, including "bad men," as we call them, from the south of the line in Alaska, and step up to one of these men and say, "Boys, I don't think you want those guns with you here. You won't have any use for them. We don't have any use for them." In the early days the mounted policeman was never armed, but no harm was done; men who were known in Alaska as bad men readily gave up their guns. This they did not because of fear of that stripling, not because of the way they expected law and order to be executed in the Yukon, but because everyone in that country knew that the entire force of the Canadian government was back of that one lone mounted policeman. We thank our justice department, we thank our governments—no matter under what regime—for the execution of law and order in the north. True, many times in the early days the police protected the unjust as well as the just, but after all these things work out in the long run.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that my remarks are wholly inadequate to the love I bear for that great north land. From the bottom of my heart I thank every member of the government and every member in this house—the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), and the Minister of Justice

(Mr. Lapointe), and every private member—for the great kindness and consideration that they have shown me in the last few weeks.

Mr. P. J. ROWE (Athabaska): During the past few days the house has listened to a great deal of destructive criticism of the government. Much of it is fully justified, but a surfeit of that kind of thing, unless accompanied by helpful and constructive criticism, leaves one cold. It leaves me cold for the reason that sometimes the stone throwers live in fragile glass houses. I am fully aware of the value of a vigorous and well informed opposition. In the words of Gladstone, given a strong overwhelming majority with a weak and ineffective opposition, you can corrupt a government of angels. I believe that is so, and yet it seems to me that the evils of the party caucus system outweigh the good points. I would express my appreciation and commendation of the revolts against that system which have been staged in three Canadian legislatures within the last few days. Naturally, of course, I do not want to be interpreted as criticizing or condemning any individual; but this system, which subordinates free and untrammelled thinking, is an evil that must be ended. In view of the circumstances surrounding my own case within the last few days I ask the indulgence of the house to make that remark before beginning an analysis of the budget. I am tired of this never-ending squabble between the ins and the outs under our parliamentary system, the ins of course enjoying all the benefits and spoils of office and the outs everlastingly trying to take their place in order that they may enjoy these benefits. Our objective here should be the creation of an informed, enlightened, intelligent public opinion which in my opinion would unquestionably support a sturdy, individual open-mindedness on the part of the members. I commend and support the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) the other day in which he deplored this situation.

There is something else I should like to refer to. As one of the new members I feel appreciative of the detachment, impartiality and courtesy extended by all members of the house, particularly the government members, when some of us have to indulge in destructive criticism. I believe we all here have on these questions an open mind, a mind which has tried to rid itself of prejudices and prepossessions and tried to understand and evaluate the good in every one of the conflicting economic philosophies that are presented to this house, a mind that is susceptible to new truths, a mind that can forget and live down opinions and put opinions beneath it. I believe that type of mind, with the council form of government which I am advocating, would ensure greater progress in parliamentary government. And it is just as well to remark that instead of thinking too much about the next election in our policies we should give some thought to the next generation; and instead of thinking in a calculating way about what the country can do for us, we should sometimes think about what we can do for the country. A man should also try to be careful to distinguish between his honours and his honour. There again I do not wish to be misunderstood; I merely lay that down as a general principle.

We of the Anglo-Saxon and the Latin races have an especially precious heritage to guard and keep inviolate against the assaults and encroachments of dictatorships both political and economic. The thousand year old struggle of the Anglo-Saxon race and the French race for freedom, magna charta, trial by jury, freedom of assembly, of the press and of religion, and the secret ballot will have been in vain if we permit much longer the subjection of the world's real fruitfulness to the will of a purely instrumental mechanism, the money system. The fantastic veto, which the political leaders who acquiesce in, agree to and accept this present money system, are placing upon life, the frustration of everyone and the denial of the inalienable and legitimate aspirations of our young people, is becoming dangerously close to a matter of life and death.

I wonder if the unemployed, over a million in this country, who are unemployed because of the policies of sound money governments, can look with the same degree of detachment, impartiality and freedom from prejudice and passion and fear that we can when we come to study these questions. And this very directly links up with the budget. Every four or five years in Canada under our present democratic parliamentary system we have an election. My grandfather and my father used to tell me about it and they used to describe it in this way. It was really a kind of circus and we all dressed up and went to it, and while the political balloon was going up into the heavens and our eyes were fixed upon it some adroit gentlemen were picking our pockets through the device of watered stock, monopolistic control and all that sort of thing. That brings us to the conclusion that preelection pledges are made primarily and specifically for the purpose of getting into office, and once we get into office the science of successful government seems to consist in trying to convince everybody that nothing can be done about anything. That is the layman's point of view, because we have the result of the system of our budgeting bearing fruit in a million and a quarter of honest, decent, good citizens compelled to endure the heart-breaking degradation of public charity in the form of the dole and unemployment relief. It is therefore an inescapable fact that the fruits of the system are the result of the methods employed in handling the production and distribution of the country.

I will now discuss the farmers under the present budgeting system, and I merely point out that a system based as the present one is upon privilege and power is distorted and strained in every direction by inequalities which arise out of the system itself. The unjust property laws and regulations placing in the hands of irresponsible persons who neither toil nor spin the power of life and death, power over the destiny of those who toil unceasingly for small returns, pathetically inadequate returns—such a system, I say, to refer once more to Gladstone's saying, would "corrupt a government of angels". I do not want this government to seek refuge or find consolation in the comparison. I am merely attempting to prove that this government is trying to perform a hopeless and impossible task. Think for a moment of the plight of the farmers in this country. The only purchasing power they have is the proceeds of the sale of their products—grain, fruit, vegetables, hides and wool—and the prices they receive for their production are fixed by the vagaries of chance and the weather in countries beyond the seas where they have to compete in world markets. Farmers therefore have no say whatever about the price that they shall receive, except as they begin to develop cooperative organizations which will in some measure protect them and guarantee an adequate return for the services which they render in the production of indispensable necessaries which we of other classes consume from day to day.

On the other hand when the farmer comes to buy, every single thing that he buys is likewise produced in a market beyond his control. When he buys machinery and clothing and shoes and furniture and building material the price is dictated by people who simply say to him: that is what it is going to cost you, and that is all there is to it. Is it then any wonder that in the absence of any regulatory control of these things we find the farmers flat on their backs in this and every country which operates under that system? Actually it means that the farmers and the workers and the fishermen who produce our goods are regarded as a means to an end, which end is the enrichment of those who own and control and exploit them. The harder they work, the more skill and energy they put into their efforts, the poorer they must become. It is a fallacy to say, as the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) said in this house a little while ago, that consumption and purchasing power are determined entirely by production. That is not true. Year after year when we had good crops in this country and other countries, down went the price. A good crop is a calamity, and the harder we work and the more skill and energy we put into our undertakings the poorer we must become.

In spite of our vaunted humanity and Christianity and our glorious empire upon which the sun never sets, the vast majority of our people live in the shadow of a nameless terror, while the privileged few riot in unimaginable luxury. The submerged masses live in a famished world, a world in which they have always toiled for small returns. They go to bed at night haunted by terrible nightmare dreams of penniless old age, and wake in the morning often pursued by the gaunt wolf of hunger and harassed by a thousand fears and worries over rent, food and clothes, possible sickness with no one to care for the children, and not enough insurance to protect the family in case of sudden and always ignominious death.

Let us not be deceived by signs of a false prosperity, if we can speak of prosperity while over a million of our people are on relief. This country is now experiencing a slightly increased activity, due in part to the swing of the boom and depression pendulum, the replacement of depleted stocks consequent upon the years of depression, and in part to the enormous increase in the manufacture of armaments and munitions of war, the preparation of a rich harvest for death's sickle, the way of annihilation for multitudes of the humble and nameless of earth's children. This is all being done on borrowed, debt-creating and debt-increasing money and credit, and as sure as to-morrow's sunrise the day of judgment will come in higher taxes and lowered standards of living when we come to pay off the money hucksters, gamblers and belt-tighteners of the money system.

Can the government prevent all this? Certainly it can. It can at once take control of the issue of currency and credit, it can restore to parliament its sovereignty, which has been usurped by the chartered banks of this country. That was the mandate upon which this government was elected to office. Why has it not been carried out?

Then we have this gold business. To me it is simply idiotic to talk about gold as wealth.

Gold is not wealth. It cannot be eaten, it cannot be worn, it cannot be used to heat houses; all the energy employed in the production of gold is wasted energy. That is equally true of the production of armaments. If we would consider for a moment the diversion of that wasted energy into the beneficent channels of production of clothing and shoes and furniture and building material, what a difference it would make!

I want to review rapidly and briefly what I believe to be constructive suggestions for the assistance of the government in next year's program. I appreciate that this year's program is pretty well defined and that nothing I can say now will have much effect on the policies of the government. But I want to present the point of view of the common people with respect to what the policies of this government seem to be for this year—people who are unemployed and who realize that their unemployment is no fault of their own, no fault of the fertility of the soil; people who are willing to go to work on the idle land and in the idle factories, producing wealth for themselves and their children. It seems to me if you were to bring in from the streets an unemployed man who sees all that, and who is keenly aware of the attainable possibilities of a planned economy in which is envisaged the maximum application of engineering energy to the production of wealth and its equitable distribution among the producing classes, he would say this, probably with a great deal more bitterness than I say it. I say it with bitterness against the system, not against the government of course. This is true of any government that pretends to defend and acquiesce in and operate a system of this kind. I have already said that a government of angels could not do any better, because the system is in reverse—it works backwards. We must say that the government has done nothing for the common people of this country, unless it is to shatter for all time their faith in party politics, in government, and in God and man.

The first thing I want to condemn is the restoration of the reduction in the indemnity to members and senators. When the low bracketed income people who are rendering indispensable services for our daily well-being witness the spectacle of a group of well-paid people with the power to do it increasing their own salaries while there is a very palpable and evident lack of equity in the distribution of the national income, when the former are compelled to try to balance their personal budgets on a pathetically inadequate income, I say it is an exhibition of un-Christian savagery. Again, to any member of the government or of this house who might be inclined to resent that, I say I do not mean it in a personal sense. But it is wrong and unmoral and un-Christian, and I protest against it.

We had, then, the wage demands of the railway men, which were refused, and we have speculators making millions out of wheat at the expense of the debt burdened farmers. We have the increase in the price of bread. We have enabled loan companies and banks to charge usurious rates of interest on housing loans. We have filled the pockets of armament and munitions racketeers, placing one of them, Arthur B. Purvis, of the du Pont dynasty, at the head of an employment commission which in my opinion is utterly useless. We have ruined the building industry by allowing the prices of base metals to climb to impossible and heartbreaking heights, affecting plumbing, heating and wiring. The reason for that, of course, was clearly stated by the hon. member for Kootenay East the other day; it is the result of the export of material to meet the demands of countries which are building up war defences. We have failed to bring back the value of the dollar. We have allowed millions of feet of lumber and other building material to be shipped out of this country while large numbers of our people are living in uninhabitable shacks.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we are even boasting about our increased foreign trade, while we have allowed hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of living necessities to be shipped out of this country at a time when our own people are in dire need of these things. I must repeat that the present faulty financial system which fails effectively to develop a home market—which could be done by the issue and control of debt free consumer credit—gives rise not only to the shocking abnormalities I have just mentioned but, by causing needless poverty at home, creates war and international anarchy abroad. Most if not all of the moral diseases of modern society are due to the abnormal conditions under which people past and present have been compelled to live, and of necessity the cure is the removal of the cause. There is one major cause; that is, poverty. Remove want and the fear of want and you automatically dry up the poison-breeding springs of vice and misery and make both tyranny and anarchy impossible. A free, happy and contented people is a peaceful, sober and law-abiding people. When we take the proper, intelligent, scientific steps to remove forever the causes of poverty from our land there will be no more talk of "subversive elements" from within, because "subversive elements" are caused by two things, poverty and injustice, and those two things alone.

There is no physical reason for poverty in this country to-day. We have vast resources in Canada. With regard to my own riding, a few days ago a competent engineer gave me the estimate that the Athabaska tar sand area contains approximately seventy-five hundred billion gallons of oil, or enough to furnish the entire world at the present rate of consumption for 1,800 years. We live in a country that has concentrated within its borders a greater body of vital natural resources than any other land on earth, and I say there is no physical reason for poverty here. The sole reason at present is that we have failed to implement a sound, sane and rational scientific control of the production, distribution and exchange of wealth within the country. The problem of production has been solved; the problem of distribution alone remains, and that is a money problem. Since the dawning of the era of economic plenty, which was ushered in with mass machine production in the nineteenth century, the financial system has operated haltingly and with periodic breakdowns, yet scientific control of the financial system is the only means by which we can benefit from power machine production. The only way to do this is to apply engineering principles to finance. This is the constructive suggestion I wish to offer to the government. I suggest that scientific control of the mechanism of money constitutes the most significant contribution which this or any other government could possibly make in this power age of mass production and potential plenty, but the time is very short; there is none to lose. If we are to win in this race between ordered planning and imminent chaos we must act quickly.

In looking over the budget I can find very little reason for congratulation. No attempt has been made to survey the capital assets of Canada, either actual or potential. There is no balance sheet showing what we have in the way of wealth, or what standard of living would be possible for our people if we were to put our machinery to work creating goods and services. We have but a summary and list of our debts and expenditures for the coming year, with the amount required to meet these expenditures and the service charges on the debts. Then on the other hand we have a survey of the possible taxation that can be heaped on an already overburdened people.

The present system of finance takes care of production only. It must be adapted to take care of consumption as well. May I suggest to the government that they take the first constructive step by appointing a potential products capacity commission to make a survey similar to the one conducted by Mr. Harold Loeb in the United States two years ago. I should like to refer to my remarks in this house on March 10 of last year, concerning this question. I want to quote again, as I did on that occasion, from the foreword, written by Mr. Stuart Chase, the eminent industrial engineer and chartered public accountant, to a book called Plan of Plenty, published by the Viking Press, New York. He used these words:

> This study is destined, I believe, to have historical importance. It has furnished comprehensive statistical proof for a possible era of abundance; proof which has long been wanted. It gives the lie to the scarcity men, the hucksters, gamblers, and financial jugglers who once promised the end of poverty, and who now, their system in reverse, foretell an America of industrial serfs, peasants, and belt-tighteners, into a bleak and undated future. Where are you going to get the money? they cry. If the abundance men can carry the findings of the National Survey to every hamlet in the land, there will be in the end no question of where the money is coming from. Americans will not be content to idle in semi-starvation because the rules of an antiquated money game demand it, when they know that the good things of life are theirs for the taking—and, mind you, the working. An income of $4,400 a year in sound goods and services is not affluence, but it looks like paradise to most families in this country to-day. And it is only a beginning; only the first indication of what the power age can do for mankind, if once it be given an opportunity genuinely to serve mankind.

May I suggest to the Minister of Finance that we have a scientifically controlled means of rectifying our national accounts so that they will present a true picture of the facts of production. Then if we follow this up by financing consumption we make our home market fully effective; we abolish poverty and by the same token we abolish war, because we abolish the necessity of fighting for foreign markets. Remember the words of the late King George V at the opening of the economic conference in London in 1932:

> It must not be beyond the power of man to utilize the vast resources of the world to ensure the material progress of civilization.

It is not beyond the power of man, and it is not beyond the power of this government. If this government wants to stay in office indefinitely I suggest that it should turn its attention to this problem, and deal with it along these lines. As far as I am concerned the government is entirely welcome to remain in office. I do not know that I have any particular ambition to remain in parliament, because once we develop the proper scientific system of handling governments and the control of production, then I think parliamentary and civil service jobs will be the least desirable, because you have to please so many people. I am suggesting a plan. We call it social credit. It does not matter what you call it, so long as its engineering and scientific principles are recognized and applied. We must not only apply them but translate them into action by effective legislation and enforcement.

As I said in the house last year—and I shall quote my words on this occasion:

> If Canada would exhibit before the eyes of all mankind the spectacle of a great people liberating themselves from financial and economic bondage in this way, there is not a government on earth that could resist the demand of its own people, that a similar thing be done for them.

In other words, one example would be worth a thousand sermons. I do not believe that Canada can participate effectively in the entanglements of other countries, but I do believe we can make a significant contribution at this critical point in human history by giving an example to the world of a people deliberately planning the creation of wealth and its distribution, so as to put an end to these maladjustments of poverty and war. The only way we can pay our debt to the pioneers and trail blazers of the past is to assert, not only by words but by effective deeds, that the earth and the fullness thereof belongs to the living. Are we going to pay that debt by handing on to those who follow us across the years a better, happier world than the one we had left to us? The choice is ours.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I have been thinking a great deal about the position of this country in relation to the rest of civilization. It seems to me that a civilization founded upon tyranny and injustice has no more right to continue than had the civilizations of Babylon, Nineveh, Rome and Greece. Indeed, a traveller from Mars standing among the ruins of ancient cities and empires, and seeing on every hand the fallen pillars of prostrate walls reminiscent of ancient glory, must ask the question—and this question must be asked by our own civilization—"Why did these cities fall; why did these empires crumble?" The ghost of the past or, if you like, the wisdom of the ages, answers, "These cities, these palaces and these temples, upon the ruins of which you stand, were founded upon tyranny and built upon injustice. The hands that built them were unpaid. The backs that bore the burdens also bore the marks of the slave-drivers' lash. Those civilizations were destroyed as this civilization will be destroyed because they bought and sold the bodies and souls of men, women and children." And if there is any lesson to be gained from history, and any challenge to us in this generation, it is that no nation or no institution founded upon slavery or injustice can expect to survive.

Mr. DUFFUS: Mr. Speaker, I did not wish to interrupt the hon. member when he was speaking, but if I understood him correctly he said that the increase in salaries and in indemnities of members was unmoral. I should like to ask him if it is his intention to accept the increased indemnity?

Mr. ROWE (Athabaska): If the house would give me permission to answer the question, I should be very glad to do so. I said that, and I meant it. In answer to the query as to whether I shall accept the increase I say that I will, and I intend to use it in disseminating information among the people of Canada with respect to the infamies of this system.

Mr. RALPH MAYBANK (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might first, in addressing the house in the budget debate, congratulate the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Rowe) both upon the manner of his speech and upon one expression which I noted as he went along. When he came to what I fancy would be called his peroration, and quoted his peroration of last year—had he been here earlier there might have been others to quote—I could not help envying both his facility of speech and his flair for phrase making. In all sincerity I congratulate the hon. member upon his presentation this afternoon. I must be frank to say that in so doing I refer more to the form than to the matter of his speech.

I commend to the house the hon. member's approval—and he spoke, I thought, somewhat feelingly—of the tolerant attitude which he stated had always been shown both by the official opposition and those sitting on the government benches with reference not merely to himself but to other members of his party. I agree that there has been a tolerant and kindly attitude shown by the house. I am glad of it, and I am glad to be numbered among those so described by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. He may think we have been more tolerant than the members even of his own party. So far as I am concerned, I know that I can disagree at any time I like with my party on a matter of principle; so long as I do not get angry enough to walk out, I am pretty confident they will not throw me out.

I wonder, however, if the hon. member would permit me to suggest that upon further consideration he must agree he was wrong in saying that one of the difficulties in Canada is that there are too many people without those things which we are in the main exporting. All hon. members will agree that there is too much misery in the country, but surely the hon. member for Athabaska cannot contend that the fundamental difficulty is that we have not enough wheat, nor indeed unreasonable distribution so far as we need wheat for consumption—and so with practically all other products we export.

The hon. member spoke about certain economic philosophies. He no doubt is aware that the economic philosophy which we in this section of the house are endeavouring from time to time to put before parliament is the exchange of surpluses, in order that we may get more of the things we lack and in that way help to relieve misery; it is not an endeavour to load upon the backs of our people more wheat, more copper, more nickel, more pigs, more hides, and so forth. Surely that is a sound economic philosophy. But no philosophy can be expected to better conditions overnight. I think he ought to remember that ours is a philosophy in contradistinction to his own, which is essentially, as he said, a distribution or diffusion of the monetary unit of the country, which he wrongly described as purchasing power.

Mr. ROWE (Athabaska): May I ask the hon. member a question, because I am interested in his analysis? Is the economic philosophy he is now advocating producing good results?

Mr. MAYBANK: I am glad the hon. gentleman has asked that helpful question. I shall first give my answer, and then during the course of my speech I shall give reasons for my answer. My answer is: Yes, it is producing results. The exchange of our surpluses is improving conditions, but I am just as impatient as the hon. member over the fact that the improvement is not as rapid as I should desire. The only difference between us is that possibly I have better control over myself and am still able to think even though I am impatient.

I should like to join with others in offering my congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) upon the picture he has presented this year of the country's affairs. Last year he presented a rather sombre picture, but we had hope at that time that changed policies would bring about an improvement. We were faced with the necessity of having to pay a thousand million dollars, or thereabouts, of new debt put upon us during five years of rule by the present opposition. The minister's statement this year has shown that our hopes at that time were justified. The minister apologized for the length of his speech, but in order to offset that he said he would try to offer something of a cheery nature. The house, I think, will never weary of long speeches from him provided he can make as many cheerful statements as he did in his presentation this year.

There are two general observations I should like to make with respect to the budget. There will be perhaps a sequel to one of my statements later on in my remarks, while the sequel to the other will appear in the budget of next year. The minister forecasts the probability of a deficit next year of not more than $35,000,000. He hopes that our revenues will come to within that amount of meeting our expenditures. I am inclined to think that he may perhaps be puling the composite leg of this house. I have a feeling that he is perpetrating a gentle joke upon us. He predicted a deficit of $100,000,000 last year, and when I realize how much he bettered that, I cannot but think that he is now playing a little joke when he says that he expects a deficit of not more than $35,000,000 next year. I fancy he expects to do better than that.

The minister would have done much better this year had it not been for what might be called certain acts of God,—a legal phrase with a blasphemous smack about it, but sanctioned by usage. I refer particularly to the drought in western Canada. I suspect that the minister is holding back some good news now in order to give it to us next year. A Scotch member of this house referred to the minister as being a Sassenach but that he had a good deal of the canny Scot about him. Needless to say that Scotchman thought he was paying a compliment to the minister in attributing to him the qualities of a canny Scot. I said to him I thought he was trying to take some credit to his own race, and then I walked away from him as quickly as I could.

I think the whole country is gratified with the announcement that the improvement is such that there is no necessity for new taxes. We sometimes forget that when increases are announced in the budget they are really taxes which are spread over the whole country. Likewise, when reductions are announced, there is a proportionate tax reduction. I think the present budget, with its treaty appendage, is notable for its tax reductions. This is what I was referring to when I said I hoped to give a sequel to one of my statements later on this afternoon. It must be gratifying to all to see the manner in which the patient is recovering under gentle, beneficent Liberal rule and the application of Liberal doctrines. Our trade has advanced more rapidly than the trade of the rest of the world. The improvement last year for the rest of the world was about eight per cent, whereas Canada's trade improved twenty per cent. The fact that we came up to fourth place as an exporting country was doubtless due in large part to our policy of selling wheat for export rather than continuing the silly system of hoarding it in elevators and paying storage tolls.

The deficit this year is $19,000,000 greater than it might have been because of the return of certain moneys to the farmers of western Canada. There has been a writing off of certain debts of Manitoba and Saskatchewan upon the condition that the benefit be passed on to the farmers. This is an act of far-sighted governmental administration and will benefit all Canada. As a representative from the prairies I think it behooves me to express my gratification.

As a general justification of this policy of the government I should like to present to the house a picture of the disaster which has overtaken the prairies during the last five years. Such a picture has been given to the house in one way or another many times, but there is no harm in presenting it again. I hold in my hand a graph which was prepared by Mr. Mitchell Sharp, of the Sanford Evans Statistical Service, for the Actimist, the organ of the junior board of trade of Winnipeg. The story of the disaster which overtook the prairies is indeed startling. Agricultural wealth in the year 1928-29 is shown in the chart as having a value of $528,254,010. The following year it had dropped to $380,131,404. The next year there was a further decrease to $212,761,271. The next year another decrease took place to $158,179,522. The following year, 1932-33, there was a slight increase to $159,717,822. The next year another increase occurred, bringing the value up to $159,820,270. The next year, 1934-35, it increased to $197,139,780. In 1935-36 it had increased further to $201,431,932. But it will be seen that even though there has been an improvement in the last two or three years, the fact remains that for every dollar obtained from this source to-day, over two dollars was obtained at the beginning of the period to which I have referred. The mineral development of the country has not been such as to act in any way as a counterpoise for this dead loss in agricultural wealth.

During that same period, as I think everyone knows, the dollar has been sweating off some of its value. In the light of the tremendous losses to the country as a whole, the fall in government revenue can be easily appreciated. I make these remarks with a view to again expressing gratification, as one representative from the prairies, at the action of the government in respect to this remitted debt of $19,000,000. In spite of the hard times that have befallen that part of Canada in recent years, the prairie mind is both buoyant and optimistic. The west will prosper again and will become once more—and gladly so—the mainstay of Montreal, Toronto and other eastern cities.

A heavy attack has been made since the commencement of this parliament upon the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) by the apostles of what is sometimes called soft money. The minister thinks, no doubt, that he has confounded his critics. I do not know about that. I should be inclined to wait for the reply of my genial though passionate friend from Rosthern (Mr. Tucker), and of the redoubtable member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. McGeer) before being sure about that.

Arising out of this budget presentation there is a wage question to be considered. I wish to say a word or two upon the theory of hard versus soft money, because I think it has a close bearing upon the general wage question. My own opposition to what may be called the soft money theory does not arise from any horror through contemplating the fate of the assignats of France, nor the chaos that resulted in the United States at the time of the greenback issue, nor the confiscation in Germany which followed the inflation of the mark, nor yet the Russian ruble orgy. After all, our advocates of soft money argue for what they call controlled inflation, with emphasis upon the adjective. I do not think any person can deny that there might be merit in a controlled inflation. It would be bound to have certain benefits. One of those benefits—perhaps the one which is chiefly spoken about—is that it would make it more easy to pay debts. The value of the dollar would be less in relation to goods, and therefore it would not be so difficult to pay debts contracted some time ago. My disinclination to fall in with that doctrine does not arise from a consideration of various money debacles which have occurred in the world, but rather because I regard it as a scheme to cut wages and other income payments. When in this way we depreciate money ten per cent for the purpose of making it, shall we say, ten per cent easier to pay debts, we at the same time cut all wages and salaries in the same degree. The old age pension, instead of being twenty dollars, is immediately cut to eighteen dollars. Every war-earned pension is automatically reduced ten per cent. The insurance which people are keeping up for themselves or their loved ones is reduced ten per cent. Even the aid we are now endeavouring to work out for the blind would have ten per cent less value in terms of purchasing power than we now expect. Such schemes are frankly experimental. I am opposed to experimenting in this way with the wages and salaries of our people and with the pittances granted to the blind and the infirm. To my mind those who advocate action of this kind should be required to make out an overwhelmingly compelling case.

It was a surprise to me to learn of the civil service salary restoration at this time; I had not expected it until next year—which shows what a poor forecaster I would be. Nevertheless I am very pleased, as I believe every hon. member must be, that it has been made. The payment of full salaries will have beneficial effects for the country at large out of proportion to the actual amount thus restored, because the esprit de corps of the service will be improved by more than a mere five per cent. When the government reduced wages it gave a lead to industry in wage cutting; that, I think, is within the memory of us all. I trust that this action by the government will be a counter-signal to all employers of labour, and I hope the government will do all in its power to urge restoration of wage cuts whenever the opportunity occurs, and particularly in industries which have not yet done justice to their workers in this regard.

I notice by the newspapers that the government is acting even now, as it should, as mediator in the railway wages dispute, consequent upon the strike vote which the employees have taken. I believe that at the moment majority opinion in the country is against the men on this wage issue, believing that the men should wait a while. Frankly, I am not in accord with that opinion, whether or not it is the sentiment of the majority. The railway men see that profits everywhere are increasing; the fact was referred to in accents of satisfaction by the Minister of Finance. They see themselves doing work for a wage seventeen per cent below that paid to other men doing the same class of work. They know that the railways, both the publicly, and the privately owned one have paid their bond coupons without regard to whether enough money has been earned to meet that obligation; and they feel that their wages ought to be just as much a charge upon the industry as the bondholder is. I confess that I see much justice in their position. If the employers will take the risk of restoring the wage reduction, putting it up to the men to make all possible savings and eliminate wastage, I believe that sufficient money for the restoration of these wages can probably be found.

May I point out that a very large proportion of the work of the railways is done without supervision. Has anyone ever stopped to think how much loss there would be on a railway if a three per cent slowing up of trains were to be effected? That ought to bring home the fact that when there is esprit de corps among the men in this particular industry you will probably have a prosperous industry; and no doubt the converse of that is true. You cannot have a good spirit in labour when there is a sense of injustice, and in all its mediation I would urge upon the government to keep this concept in mind.

I have spoken once or twice, once anyway, about the effect of the shrunken dollar. May I give my authority for the statement? The Labour Gazette for January indicates an upward trend in prices and a downward trend in the dollar. At the beginning of 1933 the wholesale price index was 67·2, and at the end of 1936 it was 85·1, a difference of nearly 18 points. True, this is not the last nor only criterion in estimating the dollar value, but it is important, and no one will dispute the fact that the wage-earner's dollar, and everyone else's dollar for that matter, has been losing some of its purchasing value in recent years. In considering the question of wages that is something that should be kept in mind.

A proper appreciation of the trade agreement which has been brought down in the budget cannot be had until we study it in committee, but enough can be seen to show that this is a great forward step in the direction of trading sanity. It is not inappropriate to refer to the agreement which the new one replaces, in view of the fact that there is much desk-thumping on the part of the present opposition when any supposed benefits of the former agreement are referred to. I do not suppose that anyone would deny that some benefits resulted from the old agreement, nor do I think anyone would have been disposed to deny that at the time that agreement was negotiated. However, it is not at all clear that the benefits are such as are claimed.

Mr. H. V. Hodson, writing in the last bank letter of Lloyds, makes a significant statement. On page 69 of that letter he has a table which I am not going to ask to have placed on Hansard without reading it, and it would not be convenient to read the whole table. I shall therefore give the comments of Mr. Hodson himself upon his own table. At the bottom of page 69 he observes:

> An inspection of this table points to several facts as outstanding. First of all, the most sudden and remarkable change of all, the rise in the empire's share of United Kingdom imports, took place chiefly between 1931 and 1932, and therefore is to be ascribed far more to the protective tariff itself and the depreciation of sterling than to anything that happened at the Ottawa conference.

Perhaps I should guard myself by pointing out that the protective tariff he there refers to is the protective tariff of Great Britain, which was adopted without any reference to and indeed long before the time of the Ottawa agreement. Again on page 69 there is this comment which I commend to the house:

> Unfortunately it is next to impossible to tell from the statistics which of them was dominant in the actual effects of Ottawa; for the figures are influenced by a great many other factors, some of which, like world recovery and the rise of prices, are far more powerful than any adjustment of tariffs in the commonwealth whether upward or downward. The consequences of Ottawa cannot be isolated from the consequences of currency realignments, changing price levels, the pursuit of self-sufficiency by foreign countries, and other outside forces.

Consequently it would appear that the benefits of that trade agreement have probably been grossly overstated. In any event it ought to be perfectly clear to any reasonable person that they have been considerably less than they should have been had the agreement been negotiated in a different fashion. We have still in our memories Baldwin's plea that we should give preferences not by building fences against other people, but rather by levelling them down in respect of ourselves. That plea fell on deaf ears at that time. All the handicaps of 1930, and others, were left against the British. We simply said, "We will treat others worse that we treat you, and that ought to make you feel better." There was no positive, independent benefit to the Englishman with whom we were dealing, nor was there any benefit to the Canadian consumer. There was no lessening of tariff taxation at that time so far as the Canadian consumer was concerned. Not only that, but it is within the memory of all of us that Britain signed the agreement under duress; she felt she had to sign it. It did not do us any good to force an agreement of that kind. All the journals of England witness to the fact that people who endeavour to deal in that way never do themselves any good. Neither in the case of individuals nor in the case of nations does it do any good to try to drive hard bargains and to overreach. As a matter of fact our endeavour to overreach at that time reacted on us in the psychological way I have been trying to point out, and we never obtained the benefits that we should have had. The present method is different. We have on the one hand actual reductions in favour of those with whom we are dealing, the exporters of the old country, and on the other hand actual benefits in the way of tax reductions for the Canadian consumer.

There are about this new agreement several things which I fancy it would be just as well to point out at this time. In the first place I am struck by the amount of the reductions. I have not had an opportunity to make all the arithmetical calculations I should like to in connection with reductions in duty, but I have gone through the first twelve pages of the schedule and the results are indeed gratifying. I find several 100 per cent reductions, a good many 50 per cent reductions, and many of 33, 25, 16 and 11 per cent. I believe 11 per cent is the least. This is a large tax reduction, aside from everything else. True, not everyone gets the benefit of each one of these reductions, but in view of the fact that all or practically all of the articles in the schedule I am discussing are important in the daily lives of the Canadian people, the general effect of this agreement is an important lowering of taxes for every man and woman in Canada. A few specific items will make this plain. One or two have perhaps been mentioned already, but I took from some newspaper this statement regarding 329 pounds of woollens. I did not rely entirely upon the newspaper report but checked it up myself with the schedule as it was and as it is. On a shipment of 329 pounds of woollens having a value of $114, the buyer was mulcted to the amount of $78; that now is reduced by $20. Woollen socks worth $8 were levied upon to the amount of $5.54; that is reduced by over 50 per cent. Practically all housewives —and their husbands of course, since the housewife would be buying the socks for him —will benefit by that 50 per cent reduction. I take from the Winnipeg Free Press of Saturday, February 27, a sentence which will indicate to the house the importance of these reductions:

> Woven dress linens bearing 25 per cent minus 10 per cent plus 3 cents a pound, an effective duty of from 30 to 40 per cent, depending on price and quality, are now to come in free of duty. Fabrics of cotton with cut weft pile, wholly of cotton, or of cotton and artificial silk, formerly taxed 15 per cent and 30 per cent, depending on the composition, now enter at 5 per cent.

Now sir, in many items the tariff is still quite high and for the textile industry ample. We hear a great deal from time to time about the forgotten man, but no one seems to say anything about the forgotten woman. Perhaps the finance minister has discovered her, because there is a great deal in this budget of benefit to the housewife. Perhaps it would be as well if the husbands of the country did not find this out too soon—perhaps I should have said nothing about it—so as to allow the housewives, the forgotten women, to get along somewhat more easily for two or three months on their budgetary allowances before their husbands find out about it and cut the allowances, to buy for themselves perhaps razors and fishing tackle and things of that sort, which also come in cheaper under the agreement.

The dropping of article 11 will, I think, be admitted by most people to be a good thing. That must have looked to the Englishman like a trick clause. He expected to have a chance to be heard by the tariff board and in that way get redress from unfavourable rulings previously handed down. But, of course, he little realized the kind of tariff board which had been rigged up against him, or the lead given to departmental officials. These people seem to have developed a doctrine of import prohibition. They do not think of the consumer last, they simply do not think of him at all. The sooner there is some brooming done in regard to the tariff board, and some readjustment of the officials in the Department of National Revenue, the better it will be not merely for this government but for all concerned. I have not forgotten the nefarious inside job of tariff jacking attempted last summer when officials tried to make loggers and farmers pay from $200 to $300 more than they ought to pay for tractor tires, until they were forced by public opinion to return to their earlier and truer judgments.

Another thing. In examining the schedules you realize what a pampered child of government paternalism is the textile industry. Its protection was indeed prodigious, amazing; one wonders that any person could ever have thought that such a protection could last—$75 carpet carrying $33 protection; hose to the value of $7 protected by a tax of $3.26. That, of course, meant that a woman paid $1.50 for a dollar's worth of hose, if these are the right prices for hose—other hon. gentlemen will know more about that than I do. At any rate they will agree that when a pair of hose is worth a dollar no woman, and no man buying them for her, should be called upon to pay $1.50. I think the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) drew the attention of the house a few days ago to a tax of $1.81 on an auto rug having a value of $2.92.

The reductions, of course, are excellent. I do not propose to discuss the evidence given before the Turgeon textile commission or the report that may perhaps be made, but I hope that when the report comes down we shall be able to go forward and make still greater cuts in the textile items. I recall, for instance—of course, this does not exist now—a tariff of $1.53 on a 25 cent article.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but he has exhausted his time.

Mr. MAYBANK: May I ask the indulgence of the house to present this short argument?

Mr. SPEAKER: With the unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. MAYBANK: I thank you, sir, and the house, for this privilege. It is patent that the benefits of protection have not been passed along to the textile employees, and that furnishes a striking example of the futility of trying to improve the standard of living of the worker by giving protection to the employer. I have worked out a few examples relative to protection and wages which I should like to place before the house.

In 1930, before the change of government, a pound of yarn worth 31·5 cents had a wage content of 8·02 cents; that is the wage that had to be paid in making a pound of yarn. The protection at that time to the industry in relation to that one pound of yarn worth 31·5 cents amounted to 4·09 cents, which is close to half of the whole wage bill. In October, 1930, by which time we had a change of government, two changes had come about. First the wage content had decreased, doubtless from causes internal to the industry itself. The wage content was only 6·6 cents, but the protection at that time on a pound of yarn, was 8·2 cents. In other words we, the people of Canada, were paying the whole wage bill of the industry and 25 per cent more. The industry was on relief, but on a magnificent scale. As I say, we not only paid the wage bill of the industry; we paid an additional 25 per cent for profits to the employers. That, it would seem to me, is a demonstration of the futility of endeavouring to improve the wage standards of workers by giving protection to employers.

There is perhaps a great deal more that might be said on this phase of the subject, directly related to such remarks as I have made so far. I am appreciative, however, of the fact that a concession has been granted to permit me to present this aspect of my argument, and I do not desire to trespass further upon the time of the house.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me say that I heartily agree with the latter part of the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank). Undoubtedly protection of an industry is no guarantee that the worker in that industry will be protected.

According to the rules governing this debate we cannot offer an alternative to the proposals of the government. A subamendment must be strictly an amendment to the amendment, and no other amendment is admissible. However, I should like to criticize certain features of the budget. Some are good, of course; some are bad. In determining which way we should vote we have to ask ourselves whether the budget is generally satisfactory and whether it is moving in the right direction. An unusual feature is the inclusion of the trade agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom. To-day we were told that this agreement will be presented in the form of a bill, so we propose to study the agreement and vote on it on its own merits.

In this connection, I should like to compliment the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Moore) upon having brought before the house some of the fundamental considerations which should guide us in judging an agreement of this character. With two points raised by the hon. member I heartily agree; first in his objection to tariffs being made by way of treaty, and second that this agreement looks in the direction of economic imperialism. I take it that imperialism is simply an extension of the protective system into the international field.

I looked over the debate which took place in 1932 in connection with the first agreement, and I may say that at that time our group took a position somewhat similar to that outlined in this connection by the hon. member for Ontario. I quoted a passage by Sir Arthur Salter, a passage which had been quoted by the then leader of the opposition, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). Sir Arthur Salter said:

> The world as a whole will either move toward a system in which each country can exchange the products which it is best qualified to produce for those in respect of which other countries have corresponding advantages, or it will move toward an organization, national, imperial or regional, in which each unit will pursue the idea of self-sufficiency, with their standard of living poorer for the loss of world trade. . . . We shall move as a whole to a world order in which each national unit will be a unit in the general commonwealth, or to a system of closed and, it may be feared, increasingly hostile units which will add immensely and incalculably to the risk of further wars.

Then at page 428 of Hansard for that year I commented as follows:

> I submit that the conference is a move in the direction of an organization, national, imperial or regional; that we are still pursuing the ideal of self-sufficiency, and that, in the words of Sir Arthur Salter, this will inevitably involve lower standards of living and it will develop hostile groups with undoubtedly war at the end of the road. Who can read history and believe there can be a continued increase of tariff walls and of alliances such as we are making without these leading inevitably to war?

And a little later, referring to freer trade relations:

> This agreement is not a step in that direction. It is a step backwards, towards less free intercourse between Canada and other nations. No one will doubt this. The Prime Minister himself said in his Calgary speech:
> "Nations outside of the empire would be asked to pay some tribute for the privilege of trading within the empire."

Then I concluded with these words:

> We are not voting against every particular item in it; let no one make that statement. We are forced to say yes or no, and looking at the matter in a large way, from a Canadian standpoint, we must say no; looking at the matter from the international standpoint, we must say no.

At that time the Liberals in the house stood solidly with us and voted with us. I wonder why to-day the Liberals are taking an altogether different position. The Liberal government brings forward an agreement not very different from that which we all denounced in 1932. There are two, or perhaps three questions I should like to have answered. Have the Liberals changed their minds? Has the agreement worked so well that they have been converted to the Conservative policy? I think we have a right to expect an answer to that question. Again: Is this agreement sufficiently different from the former as to indicate a getting away from the policy of protection and the policy of imperialism? I have not heard that question answered, and I think we have a right to an answer. Or are we in such a tight corner in our international affairs that Canada must adopt a second-best policy whether we like it or not? I think the government should be frank with us and tell us exactly why a policy similar to that which was denounced by the Liberals in 1932 should now be put forward as their policy.

Let me point out that in the budget the sales tax and sugar tax remain. Further, in spite of the revelations of conditions existing in the textile industry, there is no very material lowering of the tariff. Those conditions are known to exist, although a report has not yet been presented. Further, there is no increase in the higher brackets of income tax. I think under those circumstances the government can hardly expect independent members to vote in favour of the budget.

I have considerable sympathy with the Minister of Finance. There is no doubt that he must raise large revenues. We all do, or at least should recognize that fact. That means heavier taxation. The question is: By what method shall he raise the revenues, and upon whom must the taxes fall? He has said that the budget offers "greater cheer." I submit that it may offer greater cheer to certain industrialists and financial operators, but that it does not offer much cheer to the great body of the people in Canada. Let me quote the minister:

> An obvious indicator of the general state of our economic health is the volume of dividend distributions by corporations. It is gratifying to report therefore, that reliable estimates of profits for the past year were the highest since 1930, and reveal an increase of more than thirteen per cent over the 1935 total.

And again:

> Profits are the mainspring of economic activity in the system under which we operate.

Undoubtedly that is altogether too true. But he goes on to say:

> Increasing profits therefore are the best augury for increasing employment.

And the minister nods his head in approval. Personally I do not think that anything like that conclusion follows.

Mr. DUNNING: Would the hon. member admit the converse, that decreasing profits are an augury of decreasing employment?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We are not discussing the converse; we are discussing the statement of the minister, and I am quite sure he is sufficient of a logician not to think that because the converse is not true, that therefore his statement is true.

Let me illustrate the situation which exists. I turn to some of the figures given before the price spreads commission. Let us take tobacco, for instance. Dividends rose from a usual rate of 7 per cent to 10½ per cent in 1933. In the three depression years, 28 executive officials were paid a total of $1,500,000. The company's own figure is understood to be

$1,146,923.65. On the other hand, we find that in six united cigar stores the total wages dropped from $4,600 in 1931 to $2,900 in 1933.

Or, if you like, let us turn to meat packing. Since the merger in Canada, Canada Packers made a yearly profit at the Toronto plant of $900,000. On the other hand, from 1927 to 1933 over 1,600 employees were let out. By 1933 the wages had fallen by 16·9 per cent and the average annual wage in the packing plants was $933.

Turn again, if you will, to the canning industry. In 1933, when the lowest price in five years was paid for tomatoes, the company gave a bonus to certain stockholders, largely its own officers and directors. In the depression years the profits of the American Can Company rose from 9·0 per cent on sales in 1931 to 21·1 per cent in 1933.

Turning to the investigation into milk we find the investigating committee discovered that in 1932, while prices paid the farmers for milk had been reduced, dairy company profits as a whole had been maintained at pre-depression levels. In the opinion of the committee, profits in some cases were even greater than those shown on company balance sheets. Items listed as "depreciation reserves" and "bad debts," it was thought, were sometimes merely disguises to cover hidden profits. But the milk prices did not reflect the dividends paid.

Let us look at conditions in connection with agricultural implements. From 1927 to 1929 the four large companies made profits of $16,000,000. That did not mean that higher wages were paid.

Let us turn to merchandising. The commission learned that chain stores had weathered the depression in fine shape. Between 1929 and 1933, six large chains increased gross profits from $11,840,935 to $14,421,416, and net profits from $1,568,845 to $1,730,592. Dividends paid increased from $823,690 to $1,243,597—all on net sales which fell from $64,182,714 to $62,616,029.

In the year preceding that in which the investigation took place, the net profits of the Woolworth Company amounted to $1,960,959, or 21·95 per cent of the cost of goods sold. Dividends paid annually on the basis of $5 per share amounted to $3,750. What about the wages. Fifteen men averaged $7.34 and 120 women $6.78 for a full week's work. Another organization paid 194 grocery clerks from $4.50 to $25.00 for a sixty-one-hour week, and 110 women clerks $7 to $15 for forty-eight hours work, with an average wage for men of $10.69 and for women $10.85. Delivery boys worked sixty-six hours for $1.50. Employees of a grocery and fruit chain worked from sixty-five and a half to eighty-four and a half hours per week. A married man was employed as a dish washer at $6 a week and his meals, and a girl as a waitress for $10 and meals.

I give these figures because they refute the statement of the Minister of Finance that increasing profits are the best augury for increasing employment. There seems to be no connection between large profits and wages or large profits and employment. In a number of the cases I have set out, all the profits went to the country south of the boundary line.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 24, for the relief of Joseph Neilson Blacklock.—Mr. Plaxton.

Bill No. 25, for the relief of Francis Hector Walker.—Mr. Hyndman.

Bill No. 26, for the relief of William Edward Connor.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 27, for the relief of Annie Nemchek Cohen.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 28, for the relief of James Gordon Ross.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 29, for the relief of Florence Anna Iverson Salberg (without amendment).—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 36, for the relief of Charles Marsh Doxsey.—Mr. Walsh.

Bill No. 37, for the relief of Phyllis Stanners Kitchin, otherwise known as Judith Stanners Kitchin.—Mr. Walsh.

Bill No. 38, for the relief of Ivy Jackson Beaulne.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 39, for the relief of Charlotte Opal Moore Norton.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 40, for the relief of Mildred Tannenbaum Sufrin.—Mr. Jacobs.

INDUSTRIAL LOAN AND FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. THOMAS VIEN (Outremont) moved the second reading of Bill No. 57, respecting Industrial Loan and Finance Corporation.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): With reference to this bill and the one which follows it, my own views with respect to small loan bills have not changed since one year ago. I must, however, recognize that the bills now before the house—my remarks on the one will in some respects apply to both—differ from bills previously presented in that they purport to have the effect of reducing the rate of interest which the companies are at present allowed to charge under their existing acts. I say they purport to do that. The bills have been examined with some care by the banking and commerce committee of the Senate, and I think that we are warranted in at least allowing an examination of these two bills by the banking and commerce committee of this house. Personally I should be content if the second readings were given without prejudice to the ultimate fate of the bills, which could then be referred to the banking and commerce committee for examination and report; for as I have stated, the companies concerned are already in existence and are permitted by existing law to charge a higher rate of interest than seems to be contemplated by the bills. We might, therefore, at least examine them in committee where interested parties both for and against may be heard.

Mr. HEAPS: May I ask the minister, did he not last year promise to consider legislation under which all such companies would be brought, and has the government or the Department of Finance taken any action along this line?

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry I omitted to mention that matter. A year ago that was the intention of the government. A considerable amount of work has been done departmentally, but not such as would lead us as yet to any satisfactory conclusion on the matter. In the meantime I am bound to say that the volume of demand for this type of small loan appears to have grown rather than lessened; in fact, I believe I am correct in saying that one of our chartered banks is now making such loans upon terms considerably more favourable to the borrower than are contemplated in any of the statutes now existing incorporating companies for the purpose. From the best information available, however, I do not believe that the experience of that chartered bank is yet sufficient to enable us to base intelligent conclusions upon it. Certainly such examination as we have been able to make departmentally during the year does not point the way to positive conclusions as to the character of such general legislation as I had in mind a year ago, and which, I may say to the hon. member, I still have in mind if a basis can be arrived at which will enable people needing this kind of accommodation to get it upon less extortionate terms as I regard them, than now prevail.

Mr. THORSON: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. DUNNING: It is the second reading, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. THORSON: A moment ago the minister said that the bills now before the house apparently reduce the rate of interest which these corporations now are actually charging. Would the minister explain what he meant by "apparently"?

Mr. DUNNING: Of course, Mr. Speaker, that is one of the reasons why a committee examination is desirable. It is rather too complex for me to enter into at the moment. That I have my doubts was indicated by the language I used.

Mr. THORSON: That is why I asked.

Mr. DUNNING: At least in the case of one of the bills.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested publicly, and I heard it elaborated last year before the committee of the other house, that these bills are designed especially to benefit small deserving borrowers; and around these bills and that other bill which was introduced a year ago but was dropped there has been spread, shall I say, a sort of halo of righteousness. I have given this subject study over a great many years. One of the first things I did twenty-six years ago when I came into the house was to bring up the subject of extortionate rates of interest; and I did so on several occasions. If parliament passes these bills in their present form, or entertains a general bill of this character that permits a rate of interest around two per cent per month, parliament, in my opinion, will be putting its sanction upon extortion, or as the minister says, upon extortionate rates of interest. Borrowers from this class of money lending concerns are the most needy people in the country.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. STEVENS: They are the people least able to pay high rates of interest. It cannot be contended that the risk is such that these companies must charge a high rate of interest, because they are particularly careful, I notice, to exact from borrowers the most ample security they can get in the way of endorsements, besides assuring themselves that the borrowers have lucrative occupations.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Another thing I very definitely object to, and some years ago I brought it to the attention of the finance department, is that some of these companies issue literature in which they wisely advertise that they are operating under dominion government sanction. The impression of the average citizen, particularly women and others who contemplate borrowing from these institutions, is that they are in some way or other allied to the government. It is not so—

Mr. DUNNING: I agree so thoroughly in that regard with the hon. member that just a few months ago, upon one of these advertisements coming to my attention, I instructed the superintendent to take it up with the parties concerned and have it stopped. Whether the effort has been entirely successful I cannot say. The companies can at least announce, as my hon. friend says, that they are incorporated by special act of the parliament of Canada. They can and do say that, and of course we cannot object, because it is a simple fact.

Mr. STEVENS: They go further than that.

Mr. DUNNING: They do.

Mr. VIEN: My hon. friend will allow me to point out that when he was in the cabinet a public bill was introduced in parliament to enact that the maximum to be charged by these small loan companies would be two and a half per cent per month; this bill purports to reduce the rate to two per cent, and the other bill, to two and a quarter per cent.

Mr. STEVENS: I am no more in favour of this than I was of the other.

Mr. VIEN: Except that my hon. friend says we are sanctioning the principle. It has been sanctioned by parliament long ago.

Mr. STEVENS: In my opinion it is time we withdrew the sanction. As far as the hon. gentleman's interruption is concerned, for the twenty-six years I have been in parliament this thing has been going on to a greater or less extent, varying from time to time, and it is all wrong. It is time parliament took into consideration the erection of a loaning body that would take care of this class of loans. As a matter of fact, in the great majority of cases they ought not to get the loan. That may be misinterpreted, it may be misunderstood; but those who know the business know perfectly well that in the majority of cases, at any rate in nearly half of them, they should not get the loan at all. Some of the most pitiful stories may be told of the way in which corporations of this kind are exploiting not only the needs but the bad habits and difficulties some people get into by having this resource available to them.

Mr. MACDONALD (Brantford): Why should not the poor man have an opportunity to borrow money when the rich man has?

Mr. STEVENS: Here is an illustration of what I warned the house against ten seconds ago. If a highly intelligent gentleman like the hon. member who interrupts me misunderstands what I said, it demonstrates how careful one has to be. If he will do me the courtesy to read what I said about ten seconds ago, he will get the answer to his question. Certainly poor people have a right to borrow money; but poor people have a right to borrow at a rate of interest that they can bear, and not at two per cent a month. I am trying to point out that by passing this type of legislation we are surrounding institutions of this kind with an air of sanctity that does not belong to them. That is my objection to this class of legislation, and personally I should like to see parliament turn thumbs down on all bills of this kind. I am as well aware as any member of the house of all the arguments that can be made in support of the bill—the difficulty of controlling small loans, the cost, and all that sort of thing—but I still believe that it is within the common sense of members to devise a law that would give protection to the poorer borrower, much better than is given either in the general interest act or in these special bills. Personally I will vote against this bill, just as I have always voted against divorce bills, on general principles. I am against the thing, absolutely.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister has suggested that if these bills passed the second reading they could then go to the committee without prejudice. Personally I object to that way of doing business. We are here deciding on a principle, and we should not allow these bills to be proceeded with if the principle on which they are founded is unsound. Last year, with reference to certain bills very similar to these—

Mr. DUNNING: No, different.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —the minister said:

> We can only look forward to dealing with the situation effectively at another session, in the meantime preventing the further spread of the evil by refusing to pass bills incorporating more companies to do business along these lines. Certainly the house, having been unwilling to pass Bill No. 86, cannot consistently vote for the one now under consideration.

That will be found at page 3552 of Hansard, 1936. Now if that was true last year, when there had been a very general discussion and the house had refused to pass the bills then before it, it is just as true to-day when another set of bills are before us, very similar to the ones we dealt with then.

Mr. DUNNING: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend does not intentionally misrepresent me. I was dealing last year with bills to incorporate new companies. The bills now before us are amending bills with respect to companies that are doing business at this moment and will continue to do business unless this house repeal their charters. I mentioned a moment ago that the only reason I suggested that they should go to the committee was that they purport to reduce the amount of interest which these existing companies are now charging and may charge under their charters. That is quite a different thing.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is somewhat different but the principle is the same.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it is different.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think it is the same. In the explanatory note to one of these bills it is stated that:

> The reason for this amendment is that the company, though originally incorporated in 1928 and still locally managed and staffed by Canadians, was acquired in January, 1933, by and is now virtually a wholly owned subsidiary of Household Finance Corporation, incorporated under the laws of the state of Delaware.

Mr. BENNETT: Whose charter is also before us.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes; but why should we seek to give some vested interest to what is virtually a new corporation?

Mr. DUNNING: Oh no.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is the old corporation but now, although managed and staffed by Canadians, it is virtually a wholly owned subsidiary of Household Finance Corporation, incorporated under the laws of the state of Delaware. If we in this house have made mistakes in the past—and I think we have—in giving charters to corporations of this kind, we should do nothing further to give any sort of vested interest to any of those now operating or allow any of them to have what may become more or less of a monopoly of this kind of business.

I believe it was brought out last year, and again before the committee in another place, that there were large fees charged and two per cent a month, which means nothing but extortion on the part of these companies and a very great hardship for poor people. I cannot see where the pressure comes from that induces any member to advocate the perpetuation of this kind of thing, and I hope that right now on the second reading the house will refuse to allow these measures to go any further.

I should have been glad if the minister could have introduced at this session legislation which would lead to the repeal of all charters of this kind. As I said last year, I should hope that before any further bills of this kind are allowed to become law we should do something definite, as the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) has suggested, to provide some means by which the poorer people might obtain credit. I call attention to the wonderful growth of the credit unions in certain sections of Quebec and the maritime provinces. The department might do something to encourage that kind of organization.

Mr. DUNNING: The caisse populaire?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes. I do hope that the house will refuse to give second reading to these bills.

Mr. PAUL MARTIN (Essex East): I am glad that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has referred to the credit unions. I have given this whole problem a good deal of study, particularly from the point of view of the credit unions, and especially those in the maritime provinces operating under the auspices of St. Francis Xavier university. The credit union as it is known in the maritime provinces, as it is known under Mr. Desjardins' auspices in the province of Quebec, should be studied. These credit unions effectually operate where there is a certain amount of homogeneity, which is not possible in the case of companies operating as I believe these companies contemplate operating and are operating in localities where there are all sorts of people and all sorts of occupations.

I know nothing about these two bills, but I do know something about the problem of borrowing from the loan companies. I have particularly in mind those companies which advertise in the Toronto and Montreal papers. I cannot say I have seen any advertising in the Windsor Daily Star, but I know there are companies operating in that city charging as high as 200, 300 and in one case I know as high as 600 per cent. The way companies of that sort can be eliminated is not by an emotional appeal, but by a clear examination of this whole problem.

I would like to have seen general legislation, but the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) has given the reasons why that is not possible this year. I am glad to know he still hopes it will be possible before long. In the meantime the whole problem requires consideration, and this house cannot escape its responsibility. We at least should set in motion the banking and commerce committee to make an exhaustive survey of this whole problem. It is true it was dealt with by a committee of the Senate, but I suggest, with great deference to that body, that possibly our point of view may not be theirs. I for one am anxious to eliminate loan companies operating without restriction and imposing an excessive burden of interest. It seems to me that one very effective way of eliminating them is by giving the kind of regulation which we can give.

I inquired the other day from the department of the superintendent of insurance about the character of outstanding obligations in these respects. If this matter is allowed to drop without a thorough examination there will be a number of people in the province of Ontario who will suffer. I understand there are some 30,000 outstanding loans in respect of one of these companies alone. I do not know whether the company is charging a high rate or a low rate, but having in mind that there is a market for this kind of loan, and as a considerable number of people have been affected, I should like as a member of this house an opportunity to examine in the committee the superintendent of insurance, whose job it is to supervise these things, and to get from him his point of view, and information which it is not possible to get in this house. I want to see a complete and thorough examination of this whole matter, and at once.

Mr. R. J. DEACHMAN (Huron North): A young man came to me a few days ago wanting to borrow $41. I thanked him for the compliment. He had purchased a bill of goods in this city amounting to $120, and he owed $41 and was behind in his payments and they were pressing him. But they offered to carry on, letting him pay it off at the rate of $5 a month, providing he would renew the contract for $61. That is, he owed them $41, and they wanted him to promise to pay $61 at $5 a month. I do not know how much of that sort of thing there is going on in this city, but that instance suggests that there ought to be some provision for loans to these people on fair terms. So I rise to support the suggestion of the previous speaker that this be referred to the committee on banking and commerce, so that some examination may be made of it. It would have been much better for that young man to pay 2 per cent a month, because as I figure it the proposed rate which these gentlemen were offering was 75 per cent a year. If this bill went to the banking and commerce committee it would give members a chance to examine it. They need not decide in favour of this company; they might decide upon some broader course of action based upon future legislation. Something ought to be done because whatever evils there may be in the present system there are perhaps greater evils in the charges which are made in connection with instalment sales and transactions of that kind.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): Would it not be possible to have before the committee to give evidence one of those who have had to pay 24 or 30 per cent or have lost their goods? If I were asked now to vote on this bill I would vote it sky-high because of experiences of which I have knowledge. I have read the speeches in the Senate, and the Senate are not whole-heartedly in favour of the bill, and hope that the commons will defeat it. I think the whole thing should be thoroughly examined. There is no risk in bringing it back into this house. Sharks of this type should not be tolerated and allowed to take advantage of men who are cornered, as some are who have to avail themselves of small loans.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I quite appreciate and sympathize with the position of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning). It was my unpleasant lot to occupy somewhat the same position with respect to somewhat similar measures. These measures were submitted to the house between 1930 and 1935, and we endeavoured to do something towards providing a general code to govern the operations of these loan companies.

An hon. MEMBER: It was 1934.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I say between 1930 and 1935; I was not sure of the date. The library contains a number of volumes, notably the report of the Russell Sage Foundation, dealing with the problem of these small loans. From what I was able to learn, the history of them is certainly not creditable and not desirable to have continued. The Minister of Finance however is in the same position to-night as I was then. One of his own supporters has proposed a measure, and the minister does not want to kill it. He says he is opposed to it, says it is reprehensible, but like all party chiefs he desires that his supporter shall not be annoyed by any action taken by the government, and therefore he proposes to send it to the banking and commerce committee. Well, I speak from a wealth of experience when I say that it should not be done. It is putting the imprimatur of our approval upon a principle to which I believe we are opposed. If the minister had not expressed himself so strongly—

Mr. DUNNING: I thought I was moderate.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister says his language was moderate, but he denounced the measure as reprehensible. What stronger language he could have used may be left to the imagination rather than the memory. At any rate the position is this: the Finance Minister of Canada asks us to do something which he condemns.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. BENNETT: He asks us to give second reading to a measure which he condemns as reprehensible. If that is not asking us to do something which he condemns I cannot understand the value of language as a medium to express thought. To send the bill to a committee in view of the minister's opinion that this is undesirable legislation, is to compromise with the principle which he asserts. I do think we should not do it.

I am not going to traverse the matter to-night. One of these bills provides for 1½ per cent a month, another for 2 per cent, and one of them says the experience has been that they had a reduction in gross revenue from 2·45 to less than 2·25 per cent. We have three rates in the bills before the house. One rate is 1½ per cent per month, another is 2 per cent per month, and the third is 2¼ per cent per month. According to one of these bills we find that this business has become so attractive that we are asked to increase the capital of one company to the enormous sum of $5,000,000. It is a corporation owned in Delaware, with a present capital of half a million dollars. Now we are asked to increase that capital to $5,000,000, to be put out in loans that cannot exceed $500 each.

I must say that when I came in here I was somewhat hesitant as to what view I should take about the matter. Having heard, however, the minister who is charged with the conduct of the financial affairs of this country denounce the principle, I cannot bring myself so to depart from his advice, his wisdom, and his experience as to attack the feeling which I must confess any man situated as he is probably would have: We will not annoy our supporter and follower who has moved the bill, so we will just send it to the committee on banking and commerce. In the closing days of this session, having regard to the time now at our disposal, there will be no opportunity to consider the matter in all its bearings, or to study that close analysis made of the whole situation which we could find by going to the library and getting the report of the Russell Sage foundation.

Under these circumstances I think we should let these companies worry along with the powers and capital they now have. We will have done them no harm, and they will realize that this parliament proposes to pass general legislation that will be effective, I trust, in regulating their operations.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): If this were a public bill, Mr. Speaker, I would agree with my right hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) and would be disposed to vote against the second reading. I am under the impression, however, and I believe I am right, that voting for the second reading of a private bill does not mean approval of the principle of the bill. There is a difference between a public bill and a private bill in this respect. Sending this bill to a committee will merely have the effect of permitting members of the house to receive the report of that committee as to the reasons for the introduction of these bills, which do not seem to be approved by many members of the house. The principle seems to be abhorrent to many hon. members. By sending the bill to a committee we will permit consideration of the very matters which were discussed a few moments ago by my hon. friend from Essex East (Mr. Martin). I know that has been done on other occasions. The second reading of a private bill has been voted in order that it might be sent to a committee, without approving or in any way committing ourselves to the principle of the bill. As far as I am concerned I absolutely reserve my right to vote against the bill if the report of the committee justifies me in doing so.

Mr. VIEN: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the house—

Mr. SPEAKER: I would direct the attention of hon. members to the fact that if the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Vien) speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. MACDONALD (Brantford City): If this bill is not sent to the committee, will this company, and the other company dealt with in the next bill, automatically pass out of existence?

Mr. DUNNING: No, they will continue as they now are.

Mr. VIEN: I can tell my hon. friend that they will continue to charge 2½ per cent interest under the general legislation now on the statute books. These bills tend to reduce the rate and to change the basis of their operations.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They could reduce the rate if they wished to do so.

Mr. ROBERT FAIR (Battle River): This is legalized robbery. Instead of helping these fellows increase their profits I think we should pass legislation, and do it quickly, to get rid of these corporations which at the present time are bleeding the poor by charging them from 1½ to 2½ per cent per month. It is our job; let us do it now. I think we should get busy and cut out this highway robbery.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Charles A. Dunning (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the house took recess at six o'clock I was passing some criticisms on certain passages in the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning). I had suggested that contrary to his statement, increasing profits did not necessarily involve increasing employment.

In referring to certain industrial activities the minister emphasized the increase in forest products and in mining. May I suggest to him that the increase in lumbering activities and pulpwood production does not necessarily involve anything of great value to Canada, because according to the methods on which logging is now carried on there is no replacement of our timber resources.

Only a few evenings ago, in connection with another debate the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) told us of the very successful precautionary measures against floods being instituted in certain parts of the United States. I am sure all hon. members appreciate the benefits of that kind of work, but in this country we are passing through the stage where we are denuding our hillsides. If this goes on much longer undoubtedly it will mean floods in this country, as it has meant floods in the country to the south of us. Now is the time when floods may be effectively prevented, and at the same time our forest wealth conserved. Further, I think we must recognize that the great stimulus which has been given to mining has been in connection with those metals required mainly for war purposes, such as nickel and copper, and in connection with gold, which occupies a peculiar position in our economy. I have wondered why the minister cannot see his way clear to tax more heavily the minerals being produced in this country. I am informed that in South Africa the larger mines pay almost fifty per cent of their profits into government revenues. I cannot for the life of me see why a very small proportion of our people should be able to make huge profits out of the war preparations and war scares of Europe. Some of us would like to see the government take over the monopoly of production of these essential war materials. Failing that, it seems to me that the least the government could do would be to place a heavy tax upon the profits being made in this way. If we must spend public money for war preparations, that money should come out of the industries which are making huge profits out of the war scare.

Gold occupies a very curious position in our economy. To a certain extent it is the measure of everything else. It is because of that unique position that it is necessary for the government to treat it in a special way. Under these circumstances I cannot see why this country as a whole should not benefit directly from our gold production.

Referring to the proposed royal commission to investigate dominion-provincial financial relations, the minister said:

> That decision followed investigations which demonstrated what had long been recognized as a fundamental weakness in the allocation of financial powers and responsibilities to the provincial governments by the fathers of confederation seventy years ago.

I should like to ask: Why ignore the tremendous problem of unemployment, the great problem of public health, the pressing problem of housing and the urgent problem of education? All these problems are not being solved to-day, largely because of the position in which our provinces and municipalities find themselves under the existing interpretation of the British North America Act.

Mr. DUNNING: Is my hon. friend suggesting that those problems are not being considered? They are all included in "and responsibilities." That is precisely the point my hon. friend is making.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I understand that this commission will be charged with the investigation of the situation existing in connection with provincial jurisdiction and federal jurisdiction.

Mr. DUNNING: Jurisdiction, no; but responsibilities. They are all included in that. Jurisdiction is a different thing. The provinces now have certain responsibilities, and we have been told by the privy council just what they are. It will be within the purview of the commission to review the responsibilities which the governmental bodies, dominion and provincial, are under by virtue of the constitution.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I suggest that in practice it will be difficult to do the one without doing the other.

Mr. DUNNING: A bit difficult, that is right.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not know whether the inference can be taken from the decisions of the judicial committee of the privy council that unemployment is a provincial matter, but supposing it is, what will be done? What is needed to-day is some rearrangement, not only of the responsibilities but of the jurisdictions of the dominion and the provinces.

Mr. DUNNING: That is involved in what I suggested.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I want to impress upon the minister the absolute necessity of this commission being charged with wider duties. The commission should not have to confine itself narrowly to financial relationships.

Mr. DUNNING: Quite.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then the commission could perform valuable functions.

Mr. DUNNING: It would be useless otherwise.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Practically so. Let me turn to another matter. In criticizing monetary fallacies the minister said:

> Fundamentally our need is an increase in our aggregate national income—an increase in material wealth, not a different yardstick by which to measure it.

In making that statement the minister ignores the fact that because of the inflation and deflation which has taken place during the last few years tens of millions of dollars have been transferred from one set of pockets into another. The yardstick is a very important matter and it cannot be ignored, even although some of us cannot agree with all the policies put forth by certain monetary reform groups. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) suggested this afternoon that the wages of our railway workers should be restored. He also mentioned that the dollar had shrunk in value. I think that is true. He denounced soft money, and so on, but he did not apparently recognize the relationship between real wages and monetary control. After all, the dollar as it is to-day does vary from time to time. I think we ought not to fail to recognize that fact. But aside from monetary control I suggest to the minister that fundamentally our problem is not so much an increase in our aggregate national income, much as that is to be desired, as a just system of distribution. I am convinced that if that took place there would follow a release of productive energies.

According to the Canada Year Book of 1936 the total value of the productive activities of the Canadian people in 1933 was $3,340,000,000. How is that distributed? Some indication is given by the income tax returns. According to the year book of 1935, income tax payers receiving under $2,000 per year numbered 85,385, and paid a tax of $950,120. Taxpayers receiving from $2,000 to $3,000 numbered 41,918, and paid total taxes of $938,923. Going to the other end of the table, we find that those receiving from $10,000 to $15,000 numbered 2,815, and paid a total income tax of $2,402,696. Those receiving $15,000 and over numbered 259, and paid a total income tax of $6,458,127. I recognize that a different rate applies to those in the higher income brackets, but nevertheless it is astounding how few people are able to pay an income tax of any large amount. A footnote in the Canada Year Book states that the reports are presented in a way "to conceal net income and identity of taxpayers." I cannot see why people who are receiving such large incomes should be so much afraid of having their identity disclosed, nor why governments should pander to that fear. It seems to me that we should know or have at least an approximate idea of what the incomes of these large income taxpayers really are.

The fact is that the vast majority of Canadians are too poor to pay income tax. This is said to be largely an agricultural country, but agrarians who pay income taxes number only 416—an astounding situation!—and pay only $824,083. On the other hand, those who come under the class "financial" number 11,673 and pay $6,379,503—thus clearly demonstrating that in Canada we are witnessing a widening breach between those who labour and those who live on other people's labour; and unfortunately the budget does not seem calculated to lessen that breach very much.

Let me suggest to the minister and to the house that the gaining of wealth is not necessarily an indication of ability. Sometimes it is largely a matter of chance. Often it is merely an indication of cunning and greed and heartlessness. May I suggest to him that the opportunities to make money are very largely dependent upon the artificial arrangements of our national economy; for example, our tariffs, the protection of corporations, and such matters. As indicated in this budget, the government is doing very little to check this tendency. The sales tax remains unaltered, although it bears very heavily on the masses of the people, and the income tax also remains unaltered, although it does not take as much as should be taken from those who are wealthy.

Speaking of unemployment and invention and technical improvement, the minister said:

> As it indicates an increased efficiency in the productive mechanism, its results are not to be deplored. Its ill effects are temporary; in the long run it increases employment by cheapening production and expanding consumer purchasing power.

I am not at all sure that those statements, for many years accepted by economists, are to-day endorsed by some of the very best economists. The minister however says that this development is not to be deplored. Looking down from Olympian heights upon the struggling masses, he may be so aloof from the petty worries of the ordinary man that he can utter such a sentiment. Can it be forgotten that over a million people are unemployed to-day? Surely at least the immediate results are to be deplored. The minister says the ill effects are temporary. Well, that is not very much consolation to the million-odd people who are under relief, or to the 400,000 odd who are out of work.

Mr. DUNNING: A moment ago you said a "million."

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Under relief.

Mr. DUNNING: You said, a million unemployed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If I said so I correct it. I should have said, in the first statement, "under relief," and I said just now that there were 400,000 unemployed. The minister suggests that these ill effects are very temporary. I suggest that to a doctor, symptoms—

Mr. DUNNING: I think you inserted the word "very." I do not think I used the word "very."

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That the ill effects were temporary.

Mr. DUNNING: You said "very temporary."

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister said:

> Its ill effects are temporary; in the long run it increases employment by cheapening production.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, I do not think we can take very great consolation out of the fact that in the course of the next twenty, thirty, forty or fifty years these effects will have passed. We are dealing with things as they are to-day, and under these circumstances it seems to me that this budget should contain some cheer for those who are unemployed or under relief. Again, the minister says:

> It is probably true that a hard core of unemployment and relief will always remain.

And he added that some may become permanently unemployable.

> The depression will leave us with a new problem which will demand new methods of treatment from the appropriate authorities.

Here, again, the solution is left indefinite. Who are the "appropriate authorities"? Certainly in the last year the government has been trying to shift very largely the responsibility for the unemployed from the federal government to provinces and municipalities who are ill prepared to care for it. Again—and I criticize these statements because I believe that very often we take for granted the truth of a great many of these general statements,—the minister calls special attention to the expansion of our foreign trade. Canada has moved from fifth to fourth place among the nations of the world. I should like to ask the minister whether that fact is in itself very significant. What are we doing with our huge exports? Paying debts; very largely paying debts. The minister himself says that we have had a total credit balance of $617,000,000. This, to use his own words—> —gave Canada an ample supply of foreign exchange funds with which to meet interest and dividend payments to foreign creditors as well as other invisible debit items in our balance of payments, and at the same time enabled us to effect a very substantial reduction in our net capital indebtedness abroad.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the point. We paid off debt.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, quite so. There are two or three things we do—pay interest, pay dividends, and pay debt.

Mr. THORSON: And pay for imports, necessary imports too.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, but this is the credit balance over and above the payment for imports to which, I think, reference is being made. That is where our balance goes. It is of tremendous significance that Canada has to pay such huge debts, such huge interest, such huge dividends when at the same time many of our own people are unemployed and their families are suffering.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will recognize that it was a good thing for Canadians to pay off outright last year something like $145,000,000 which they owed abroad. At least they will not have to pay interest on that much any more.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is a good thing in itself. It is not a good thing when it had to be done at the cost it has involved to tens of thousands of homes in this country.

Mr. DUNNING: But it is not the government that I am speaking of.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, I am speaking of the government.

Mr. DUNNING: The $145,000,000 was paid off by the Canadian people.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so—under arrangements that have been established by the government.

Mr. DUNNING: No, no.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We try to get decent amounts paid to the unemployed; we try to get decent wages for employed people; we try to get adopted various schemes that will raise a little higher the standards of living of our people, and had those standards been raised a little we should not have been able to pay off so large an amount of our debts; I think that is true.

Let me turn to another matter which perhaps throws some sidelight on our foreign investments. A few weeks ago a labour deputation from Cuba came to see me. Unfortunately I have not been able to check the statements they made, because our bureau of statistics can give very little detailed information with regard to foreign investments; but according to this delegation almost a hundred million dollars are invested by Canadian interests in Cuba. The delegation made this statement:

> The Royal Bank of Canada controls more than eleven sugar mills through the Sugar Plantation Operating Company; the Bank of Nova Scotia controls three sugar mills and the Canadian Bank of Commerce controls Central Covadonga sugar mill.
> Canada is the fifth buyer of Cuban sugar; the United States, Great Britain, France and Belgium are first in importation in order as set above.
> Although there is a law setting a minimum wage of 80 cents per eight hours, due to the help given by the army to the large sugar interests, they pay only 25 to 40 cents per day of eleven or twelve hours and labour cannot protest.
> Workers are paid chiefly in vouchers and script money good only at the company general store, with prices 10 to 20 per cent above prevailing prices in nearby towns.
> The military dictatorship has continuously increased its stranglehold on the Cuban people with the help of powerful United States, British and Canadian financial interests who use him as a tool to force labour and others to work for practically nothing.

Mr. DUNNING: What is the hon. gentleman quoting from?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am quoting from a memorandum which was presented to me by a delegation of Cuban labour people.

Mr. DUNNING: Cuban?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Cuban, yes. I am giving this as a side light on our foreign investments and what they may really involve. We have Canadian banks chartered primarily to do business in this country but doing business abroad. Not only have we low standards of living in Canada, but if this statement is at all correct, Canadian institutions are assisting in keeping down the poorer people of other countries as well.

Mr. DUNNING: Has the hon. gentleman verified those statements?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If the minister had been following closely he would have observed that I said I had not had an opportunity to check carefully the financial side of this matter, since our own bureau of statistics had no accurate information with regard to the details of foreign investment. I suggest that the Minister of Finance ought to have control over investments made outside Canada.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his time is up.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I have two or three minutes longer?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: With the unanimous consent of the house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My time was split at six o'clock. I want to call attention briefly to one or two other matters involved in the budget speech. Our revenue from all tax sources will amount to $384,618,000. May I point out that this amounts to nearly $35 per head, or $175 per family of five. Our sales tax, now the largest single source of government revenues, amounts to $115,500,000, which is about $10 per head or $50 per family of five; and undoubtedly it falls most heavily on the ordinary people of the country—and all this in addition to monopoly exactions and tariff robbery. I wish I had time to discuss some of the hidden profits of the textile firms, but I do not suppose I should be permitted to do that until we have the actual report of the commission.

Our public debt charges amount to 26·23 per cent of our expenditures, debt charges due very largely to the war. War pensions amount to 10·22 per cent; national defence 4·36 per cent. In other words we have a total, on account of the last war or prospective war, of 40·81 per cent of our expendtiures.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not say that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, the minister did not say that, but I am saying it. I think I am correct; I hope I am. In addition to this we have under the estimates for public works, votes for armouries and so on, and grants to provinces for relief. What I should like to point out is that a very large proportion of the amount which we expend in Canada to-day does not go to any service to the public but rather in payment of debts. Our net debt is $3,993,495,000.

I will abruptly conclude, thanking the house for its courtesy in extending my time.

Mr. JOSEPH NEEDHAM (The Battlefords): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that by now you are thinking that everything that should be said on the budget has been or ought to have been said, and that induces me to be as brief as possible in order to comply with the wish to bring the debate to a close.

In every session there are two items that are of particular interest to the citizens of this dominion. One is the speech from the throne, which gives an outline of the measures that will be presented to parliament, and the other is the budget, which gives us a financial statement showing the success or otherwise of the past year and the estimated revenue of the year upon which we are entering.

Many things have been said both for and against the budget and I shall touch on only a few that have impressed me. Much has been said about the sales tax. I have not the least doubt that thousands of our people were expecting a little relief from this tax, and I would point out to the minister that on this side of the Rocky mountains there is a province that has a sales tax, the manner of enforcing which I wish the dominion would copy. I wish the dominion government would do as that province does in connection with the sales tax. With each purchase that is made the amount of the tax must be registered on the sales slip so that the purchaser knows exactly what he is paying in the form of sales tax. If that were done in connection with the dominion tax, the feeling towards the tax would be far different from what it is at the present time. People would see red quite often. But, hidden as it is in the cost price, the tax is apt to be less impressive.

The minister in the budget speech, at page 1214, deplored the low commercial loans that were being issued. Looking up the Year Book I find that in 1935 commercial loans amounted to $878,748,000; I find also that $915,076,000 was loaned to governments; and I ask this question: What must be the opinion of the people when more money is being loaned to government for government purposes than is loaned for the commerce of the country? That seems to me a very serious situation. The minister's statement to which I referred reads:

> Our banking system currently finds itself with ample reserves for the accommodation of commercial borrowers. While the volume of commercial loans is abnormally low, there have recently been indications of growth, and a moderate increase is expected during the present year. Contrary to the prevailing belief in some quarters, the banks will heartily welcome the opportunity thus provided to invest their funds at somewhat higher rates than have recently been available on gilt edged securities.

I wonder what are gilt-edged securities at the present time. There has been a great change in the last twenty-five or thirty years in that regard. It used to be that a borrower's moral character counted largely when it came to getting a line of credit or a loan at the bank. If he had collateral security, that was considered good; if he had real estate, that was considered gilt-edged. But to-day it is not so. If he has a life insurance policy in good standing, that is what is demanded to-day. But if it is not in good standing it is not accepted.

The minister in his budget speech said:

> Real estate taxes are high, for instance, because relief costs are high; relief costs are high because unemployment is heavy; and unemployment is heavy, to an important extent, because the building industry is inactive.

I want briefly to analyse the home improvement plan, which is offered as a means of stimulating the building industry. There is no doubt that thousands upon thousands of homes need improving and enlarging. But we are also forced to acknowledge that there are thousands and thousands of homes being lost to the owners. If the tax sales in both rural and urban municipalities had been enforced in the last few years it is estimated that in many places over 50 per cent of the homes and property would be in the hands of the municipalities. That is a very serious situation. Thomas Jefferson said:

> If the American people ever allow private banks to control the issue of currency, first by inflation and then by deflation, the banks and corporations which will grow up around them will deprive the people of their property until their children will wake up homeless on the continent their fathers conquered.

That statement is just as applicable to Canada as to the United States. I have been very much discouraged the last year or two in going about and finding people renting the houses in which they were born, and not renting them from their parents either. So this home improvement plan seems to me to be just another attempt to patch up for a little longer the present system. I do not believe it can succeed, with an interest rate of 6·3 per cent. How can a person who cannot save out of his earnings sufficient to repair and improve his home pay for it with interest added? It does not seem to me to be common sense. Besides, prices are going up. I got two letters this week, one from a lumber merchant who tells me there have been two raises already in the last six months, and one from a hardware merchant telling of the large increase there is at the present time in hardware, which is largely used in the repair of homes. I understand that next week there is to be held in this city a conference of the mayors of the various cities, so no doubt we shall hear something then about the condition of the people in the different communities.

Speaking of municipalities I see from the figures of the bureau of statistics that in 1919 the municipal debt of the dominion totalled $729,000,000. In 1929 it was $1,193,000,000, an increase of $46,000,000 a year. From 1932 to 1934 showed an increase of over $50,000,000 per year, with 1934 showing an increase of $70,000,000 over 1933. Bearing out what I was saying in regard to the condition of the municipalities, the North Battleford paper dated last October states that Canada's municipal debt has increased during the last fourteen years by $484,259,000 or an average of 69 per cent. The Financial Post recently compiled a table of the total of municipal bonds in default, which shows to what extent Canadian cities have been unable to meet their financial obligations. Ontario showed $98,000,000 defaulting, out of a total of $494,000,000; Quebec $15,000,000 actually in default, and more in doubt; Manitoba $12,000,000 in default, out of a total of $92,000,000; Saskatchewan $4,000,000, out of $46,000,000; Alberta $5,000,000, out of $76,000,000 and British Columbia $12,000,000, out of $129,000,000. So it does not seem a very hopeful course to load up the citizens of these municipalities with additional debt.

There is one other very serious feature in connection with this home improvement plan, and that is that it will enslave a lot of our citizens who have so far escaped. I have in mind particularly the wage earner. Heretofore he has not been in a position to borrow because of not having the necessary security, but now a special arrangement is being made whereby he can be brought into circumstances which have caused so many to lose their homes and their holdings.

I turn to the question of debt and interest. The budget last year reported the national debt at $3,008,000,000 and this year the addition is estimated at $87,395,000, which makes a total of $3,095,395,000. The estimated interest charge on this debt for the coming year is $137,405,000. That is a tremendous burden of added debt to pay. Interest is the big millstone around the necks of the Canadian people at the present time. Take the figure of the national debt, and then add up the interest that has been paid on the national debt from the very first, and you will see that the two just about balance. In other words, taking the interest that has been paid since confederation, and adding to it the national debt at that time, it will be found that we have paid just about the same amount in interest up to the present time.

To me that indicates two things which I do not think anyone can dispute. The first is this: Had there been no interest there would have been no national debt, and you can apply the same statement to provincial and municipal debts as well. The other point is that we are going into debt annually by the amount of the interest we owe to financial institutions. If anyone can dispute those two facts I hope they will do so, but the figures are there. So you see where we are going with this added national debt, which means added interest; and the accumulation goes on.

If I had time I should like to show this house that in the final analysis, under our present system, interest cannot be paid. In the seventeenth century the world debt increased by 47 per cent. In the eighteenth century it increased by 466 per cent, and in the nineteenth century by 12,000 per cent. Still it goes on; still we hope to get out of this difficulty under the same system that got this dominion into it. If you attempted to apply that principle to business I do not think you would find anyone who would accept it. Last year the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) stated that in the previous five years the dominion government had paid $200,000,000 for relief purposes. That is a staggering amount, but if you will look up the figures you will see that in the same five years we paid $638,500,000 in interest. That did not impress us so much as paying $200,000,000 for relief.

I think the thing that most impressed me last session was a statement by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. McGeer), in which he showed this house that for some reason or other our coin and currency issue at the present time is only 50 per cent of what it would have been if the rate of advancement from 1915 to 1935 had continued in the same ratio that prevailed from confederation up to 1915. That seemed to me a very serious state of affairs. I should like to know what is the power behind the throne that can so regulate our coin and currency issue as to interfere with its normal growth. To me these are very serious matters.

I suppose all the activities of life can be said to be directed to three things, and I have not the least hesitation in saying that it is the concern of the government to recognize those three things. They are production, consumption and distribution. Taking a bird's eye view of the activities of the world, what would we see? We would see people ploughing and sowing and reaping and mowing; people struggling down in mines; people going out to sea, and all the other everyday activities that go on the world over. Then if we could come a little closer we would see the anxiety, the worry and the strain shown by the people, and if we were to ask the reason the only answer would be: That we may live; that we may be enabled to consume. So we acknowledge the right of people to live the best possible life according to the tme in which they live, and it is the duty of every citizen to live the highest possible type of life. It is also our bounden duty and privilege—and we all want to do it—to create conditions under which succeeding generations may have a higher type of life than we had. Look how parents strive and deny themselves the necessities of life in order that their children may have a better chance than they had. So I say one of our principal tasks is to look after the consumption needs of the people.

Some time ago an investigation was made in the United States with regard to money, and I should like to place before the house a table showing the relationship between coin and currency in circulation, per capita, and bank deposits, also per capita:

Year	Coin and currency	Bank deposits
1834	$ 5 24	$ 7 11
1860	9 76	9 85
1880	13 93	44 30
1900	17 10	111 57
1915	18 56	218 48
1930	29 76	485 57

You will notice, Mr. Speaker, how the one has increased in relation to the other. I cannot understand, and I hope the minister will enlighten me as to why the government should hold down the issue of coin and currency in order to force, shall I say, people to bank money which as a rule they can only secure by borrowing. Why that is, I do not know. There is a reason why the banks can withdraw money from circulation and cause deflation or inflation, as the case may be. But we never hear anything about inflation, if it is a bank credit that is issued. On the other hand, when one talks about the government issuing currency, it is called inflation.

May I point out one thing? I said that interest could not be paid. It can be paid if there be put into circulation, without debt attached to it, the amount of interest that has to be paid each year. And so I say that all economic questions should be studied from the standpoint of the consumer, for the consumer's interests are those of the human race, and in the long run the consumer will be master.

So there is nothing wrong with consumption. Production should be divided into three parts —machines, equipment or plant, and production by hand. Then you have labour with which to operate, supervise and maintain that plant, and you have raw material to use in your production. In the system of production there have been great changes in the last fifty years. In early history there was no doubt what production was for, because it was consumed almost as soon as it was produced. Conditions to-day, however, are different. The idea now is that production is for money, and production and consumption have become divided. The labour end of production is playing a lesser and lesser part as time goes on, because to a great extent the machine is taking the place of the worker. Something will have to be done whereby the machine which takes the work from the worker, and produces the wealth the worker would otherwise produce, must provide for the worker who has been deprived of the opportunity of producing that wealth.

There is a somewhat different problem in connection with raw material, and in some countries the problem is serious. In Canada we are most fortunate in having an abundance of raw materials, and for the benefit of succeeding generations we should be careful how the raw material is distributed. So I say, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing wrong with production, and there is nothing wrong with consumption.

But when we come to distribution, we find the greatest problem. This was emphasized again and again during the debate. Here is where we come up against what connects consumption with production, the final link between them. The purpose of all production is consumption; there is no doubt about that.

If production and services were purchasing power, there would be no poverty in Canada; but it is the lack of this purchasing power which is the reason for many factories standing idle, and for goods being piled up, and people on relief. As I said a little while ago, this purchasing power can be withdrawn, and to a great extent between 1930 and 1934 it was withdrawn.

We listened this afternoon to an address by the hon. member for Yukon (Mrs. Black) in which she pointed to the tremendous wealth which the Yukon has produced, and the expenditures which had been incurred in that territory. But when she referred to the condition of the people there we had cause to wonder where that wealth had gone. And the same with province after province; what are we going to do about it?

I find that in 1934 Tasmania appointed a committee of their legislature to inquire into and report on subjects which I shall set out in a moment or two. These are matters we should consider. We ought to be familiar with what steps are being taken in other places to solve this serious problem. If we took the time to find out what others are trying to do, and followed the success or otherwise with which they had met, we would have a guide. The committee were to report on the following:

(1) Whether the people are being prevented by any removable banking or financial circumstances, factor, law or condition from possessing, consuming or utilizing and enjoying the increase of wealth, or the actual increase of production over the last thirty years. And if so, the cause, and what steps should be taken to remedy it.

(2) All matters and things pertaining and incident thereto.

The committee held meetings, examined witnesses and found that there had been great increases in actual production. They found that this increase had come with machines and fewer workers; that displaced workers were left without incomes, and that those working had lower purchasing power than in 1907; that small retailers and firms were driven out of business, and were taken over by monopolies closely identified with banks and financial institutions.

The committee's findings are as follows:

That the people are being prevented from possessing, consuming, utilizing and enjoying the increase of wealth or the increase of production over the last thirty years; that the cause of this shortage of purchasing power in the hands of the people can be effectively remedied only by,—

1. Restoring to the sovereign community of effective control over money in all its forces;

2. To establishment by parliament of machinery which would secure regular equation between the community's production and the community's purchasing power.

That is one problem upon which we need to concentrate. We must find the equation between production and consumption. The report of the committee continues:

The opinion of the committee is that the government should control all forms of money and equality of production and purchasing power. This should be attained and maintained right through.

That is what was promised during the last election campaign in Canada. I am going to make an appeal to the Minister of Finance, because I can remember when thirty years ago west, east, and north from the homestead at Willowbrook he electrified the whole countryside with his ideas on conditions as they then existed, and his predictions of what would come if those conditions and that system continued. He stated then that it was the duty of the federal government never to allow a shortage of legal tender money to exist; that if such a policy was permitted, debts would accumulate that never could be paid, and interest would eat up the new wealth faster than it could be created; that we would be poorer in the next twenty-five years than we were at that time. He has the chance now to make good his contention of years ago. I want to assure him that I am behind him to the utmost of my ability in every move he may make for the welfare of the citizens of this country.

Mr. G. T. PURDY (Colchester-Hants): Mr. Speaker, twice have I listened to the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) deliver his budget speech, and twice have I gone away filled with pride and thankfulness that in 1935 the Hon. Mr. Dunning was prevailed upon to reenter public life. We of the maritimes are proud that he chose a maritime riding for his seat. Again history repeats itself—a wise man comes from the east.

I voted against the amendment of the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) not solely because I was true to my leader and to my party, but because I felt that it ill became the party of which the right hon. gentleman is the leader to try at this early date to embarrass this government regarding a problem which the last administration tried to solve for five years, only to leave it in far worse shape than they found it, and particularly when it has been clearly demonstrated that the present government is making substantial headway in its endeavours.

If a further amendment had been introduced against the government's wheat policy, I would have opposed it because I feel that in this matter the government is acting in the best interests of the taxpayers of Canada. When friends to my left try to make political capital out of this matter in their particular sections of the country they show little appreciation of what Canada has done and is doing for the west. It seems to me that this move is in bad taste, and my suggestion is that their short-sighted policy will have repercussions even in their own districts.

The other night the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) took occasion to refer to the Canada-United States trade agreement. He gave certain figures in connection with exports from the maritime provinces, and his conclusion seemed to be that the agreement had been of no use to the people of the maritimes. I have before me a table showing the exports of twenty-four of the principal items dealt with in the agreement for the years 1935 and 1936. I find that the value of the total exports of these twenty-four items in 1935 was $1,933,429. In 1936 the exports had increased to $3,796,885, or almost double. Yet the hon. member dares to say that an increase in trade of that proportion is of no benefit to the maritime provinces. Apparently he looked up what he had said a year ago and realized that he would have to show that he was right at that time, when he said that such a trade agreement would be of no benefit to us. I place the figures on Hansard and he can read for himself.

The hon. member claimed that the increase which has taken place in the exports of lumber to Great Britain from the maritime provinces since 1933 was due to the Ottawa agreements. I should like to place on Hansard certain figures I obtained from the Bank of Canada showing the average price in Montreal of the pound sterling for the years 1932 to 1936 inclusive. These are as follows:

1932	$3·9801
1933	4·6073
1934	4·9891
1935	4·9267

If the hon. member will note the increase in the average price of the pound sterling, he will see that the largest increase occurred at the same time as the increase in our exports of lumber. The increase in the price of the pound sterling between 1932 and 1933 was equivalent to from $4 to $5 per thousand feet of lumber. While our lumber operators could not operate at a price of $15 per thousand feet alongside the ship, they could operate at a price of $19 or $20. The increase in the price of the pound sterling was the reason for the increase in the exports of lumber from the maritime provinces. If my hon. friend can show me that the Ottawa agreements were responsible for the rise in the value of the pound sterling, or if he can show me that those agreements were responsible for the increased demand in Great Britain for our lumber, which has become quite marked during the last few years, I will agree with him that those agreements are all he said they were. Otherwise, I shall have to disagree.

I had intended to ask hon. members to bear with me while I attempted to change the trend of the discussion from the drought areas of the west to what I would term the forgotten areas of the east. However, as my time is limited I shall have to consign that part of my remarks to that place where so many good speeches have been consigned. While a large number of our population are engaged in fishing, lumbering and manufacturing, yet we have a large acreage of good farming land and with the same density of population as Sweden, a country very similar in climatic conditions and products, we could maintain on our land a population of approximately 1,000,000. To-day our farming population is somewhere around 230,000. I contend that in Nova Scotia we should have a forward policy to encourage the growing of more of our grains at home. In passing, I should like to quote a statement published by the experimental farm at Nappan, as follows:

> By utilizing home-grown feeds to a large extent, as outlined above, the cash outlay in rearing dairy heifers is kept at a minimum and the intelligent feeder can develop them properly to producing age at a minimum of expense.

I shall not deal further with agricultural problems this evening, but will confine myself to putting on Hansard certain facts and figures about our position. I should like to show what we have contributed to confederation and what we are doing to maintain our place in the dominion.

At the time of confederation our per capita national wealth was reported to be the highest of any of the four provinces which entered confederation. However, for the purposes of our argument I will say that it was equal. Yet in 1932, while the average per capita wealth of Canada was $2,413, that of Nova Scotia stood at $1,514, the lowest of any of the provinces. In spite of that fact, however, let me put on record the cost of unemployment relief of the Dominion of Canada as a whole, and to Nova Scotia, for the years 1930-1936 inclusive. In 1930-31 the total cost to the dominion was $4,431,655. I do not think it worth while to go all down the line, except to mention that the total expenditure for the six years was $255,422,528, or $24.62 per capita. I should like hon. members to bear in mind that per capita figure.

I now come to the figures for Nova Scotia. In the six years referred to, the total payments to Nova Scotia for direct unemployment relief were $5,566,208, or $10·854 per capita. In other words, had we in Nova Scotia received the average aid, the average per capita amount paid in the dominion, we should have received an additional $7,650,240, or more than double the amount of the coal subvention we received in that time, and to which such strong objection was taken in this chamber a few days ago by some of the western members.

Coming to the estimated expenditures for 1936-37, the total relief expenditures by the dominion for that year were $80,429,000; the estimated share of Nova Scotia is $1,160,473. In other words, with approximately one-twentieth of the population, we will receive one-seventieth of the direct relief. Putting this in another way: had we received the same percentage as Canada as a whole we should have had the additional sum of $2,840,000.

In connection with our low relief costs, there are some facts and figures which I should like to put before the house to show that things are not going along quite so easily with us as some may assume. First, however, let me refer to the evidence given on the transport bill before the standing committee of the Senate. According to the record, in 1934 Nova Scotia collected 29 per cent of its provincial revenue from automobiles and automobile taxes; Alberta collected 24 per cent, Manitoba 19·6 per cent, Saskatchewan 22 per cent. Had those three provinces collected from automobiles the same percentage of their revenues as we in Nova Scotia, Alberta would have had an additional revenue of $750,000; Manitoba, $1,300,000; Saskatchewan, $980,000. If our revenues had been collected on the same basis as those of the prairie provinces, I wonder whether we should have to-day been able to present a balanced budget.

May I point out further that an important element in keeping down our relief costs in Nova Scotia is that in 1934 the provincial government entered into an extensive program of hard-surfacing roads, extending over four years, and involving an expenditure of well over $15,000,000. It can easily be seen that if we had not undertaken such a heavy expenditure, our relief costs would have been much greater than they are. A further feature which I think is not generally known to hon. members is that a great many of our towns and municipalities do not participate with either the provincial or the dominion government in direct relief. For instance Truro, the town from which I have the honour to come is this year taxing the ratepayers direct $25,000 for relief. Neither the provincial government nor the federal government is asked to share in any way in this burden.

There are some other figures relative to our province which I will put on the record. In 1935 the average outstanding taxes as compared with total taxes in the municipalities of Canada was 52·30 per cent; the percentage in Nova Scotia was 54·9 per cent. Yet in our province not a single municipality is in default, whereas the average of municipal indebtedness throughout Canada is 9·9 or almost 10 per cent.

For the few moments that are left to me I will revert to the matter of our population at the time of confederation. From 1871 to 1881 our population showed a healthy increase, and by the end of 1931 we had reached a figure of 512,846, whereas in 1891 our population was 450,396. In arriving at the figures I propose to put before the house, I take the average increase in our population between 1871 and 1881. Had that ratio of increase continued, to-day we should have a population of 847,000. That may seem a large figure, but it is approximately the same increase that has taken place in Ontario and Quebec. At the time of confederation we were given to understand that we would have equal chances of development with those provinces, which, I assume, would have resulted in a corresponding increase in our population.

A few minutes ago I mentioned that our loss in per capita wealth from the time of confederation to 1933 was $900 per capita. Taking the figure 512,000, our present population, and multiplying it by $900 gives the sum of $460,800,000. Take the 335,000 of our population which we contend we should have had if reasonable chances of development had been afforded us, and multiply that by $2,400, the per capita wealth of Canada, and we get the sum of $804,000,000. Add together these two sums, and we have a total of $1,264,800,000 that Nova Scotia has contributed to the rest of Canada or that she has suffered in loss of the national wealth because of her place in confederation. I submit these figures merely to show that when we of Nova Scotia come to this house for some assistance we do so not without reason.

Those of us from the maritimes take off our hats to our friends from the west, but we will not lay them down for fear they will go the way of our shirts. We have a few traders left in the maritimes and we may need the hats—in our hands at least—when we commence to negotiate. If, however, our western friends are really in need of them, they may be sure they will get part at least.

There is one thing which we from the maritimes are very thankful to the west for, and that is that they have demonstrated that when the will exists the constitutional barrier between province and dominion is not insuperable. I would ask hon. members to study what took place in the maritime proinces from 1881 onwards, and see how our population was driven from our shores by policies over which we had no control. Our trouble was not lack of production, but lack of markets. I venture to say that if a small percentage of the assistance now being given to the west had been given to the maritime provinces in their time of greatest need, then instead of twelve Liberal members sitting in this house from Nova Scotia we would have twenty-four to-day, and instead of twenty-five Liberal members from the maritime provinces we would have fifty-two.

Motion (Mr. Dunning) agreed to, on division.

WAYS AND MEANS

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Lapointe (Quebec East) the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

Monday, March 15, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SPEECH

ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF ADDRESS IN REPLY

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received a message from His Excellency the Governor General, signed by his own hand, reading as follows:

I have received with great pleasure the address that you have voted in reply to my speech at the opening of parliament, and thank you for it sincerely.

Tweedsmuir.

Government House,
Ottawa,
9th March, 1937.

VETERANS' ASSISTANCE COMMISSION

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of Pensions and National Health): I desire to lay on the table of the house interim report of the Veterans' Assistance Commission, with correspondence relating thereto and supplementary recommendations, together with a list of members and secretaries of the honorary local committees. Five copies of this report have been tabled, and I have also arranged that copies shall be distributed to all hon. members of this house who were members of the pensions and soldiers problems committee of last year.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TABLING OF REPORTS, RAILWAYS, STEAMSHIPS AND AUDITORS—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): I desire to lay on the table the annual report of the Canadian National Railways for the year ended December 31, 1936; the annual report of the Canadian Government Merchant Marine Limited and the Canadian National West Indies Steamships Limited for the year ended December 31, 1936; the report to parliament of George A. Touche and Company, auditors of the accounts of the Canadian National railway system, for the year ended December 31, 1936. These accounts are tabled in both languages. The annual reports of the railways and the steamships are being distributed this afternoon through the post office to each hon. member. These reports, together with the railway estimates and the auditors' report, will be referred to the standing committee on railways and shipping; and, Mr. Speaker, if I may obtain the unanimous consent of the house, I will move, seconded by Mr. Crerar:

That the resolution passed by this house on the 18th January, 1937, referring the following estimates to the committee of supply, be rescinded, and that the said estimates be now referred to the select standing committee on railways and shipping:

Vote 96 M.F.R.A.—Canadian National Railways, eastern lines, 20 per cent reduction in tolls, $1,800,000.

Vote 97 M.F.R.A.—Railways other than C.N.R., 20 per cent reduction in tolls, $700,000.

Vote 293—Canadian National (W.I.), S.S. capital, $48,500.

Vote 361—Canadian National Railway, deficit 1937, $35,000,000.

Vote 362—Canadian National W.I., S.S. working capital, $500,000.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I think it will be found desirable, if not necessary, that the items should continue in the supply bill; otherwise it will be essential that a separate bill be provided dealing with these matters, and they would not then be in the supply bill itself. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has indicated that it was his wish that appropriations should all appear in a supply bill if possible, and I think the resolution would be better if in terms it indicated that these items were to be referred to the standing committee and reported to the house without taking them from the supply items at all. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning has placed these items in his estimates and, being in the estimates, they will therefore form part of the supply bill. I quite agree with the minister that it is desirable to refer them to the committee and I thought possibly he would make the motion broad enough to refer to that committee as well the report that he has just tabled, so that the one resolution would cover it all. If he would reconsider the resolution he might frame it in somewhat different terms. Possibly it would suit his purpose to let it stand and refer back to this order of business later in the day, making his resolution comprehensive enough to include the report in the reference to the committee and to ensure that the items would still remain in the estimates for consideration with a view to the framing of a supply bill when the time came. That, I gathered, was the policy laid down by the Prime Minister with respect to matters of the kind. The Minister of Finance will be able to correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. HOWE: The clerk of the house advises me that these estimates cannot be before two committees at the same time but that the report goes to the railways and shipping committee and is then referred back to the committee of supply. However, I should be glad to allow it to stand.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no—if that is understood.

Motion agreed to.

TREMBLAY DIVORCE BILL

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier) moved:

That the petition of Maurice Tremblay, presented on the 4th instant, praying for a bill of divorce from Jeanne Réné de Sales La Terrière Tremblay, together with the report of the clerk of petitions thereon, be referred to the standing committee on standing orders for the purpose of considering the suspension of standing orders 92 and 93 (3) (a) and (b).

Mr. BENNETT: Explain.

Mr. JACOBS: I understand that there has been some irregularity with regard to the delays in connection with this bill, and in order to correct it I am moving that the petition be sent to the standing orders committee for the purpose of having their decision thereon. It will be reported back to the house.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Has this bill gone through the senate, where all these bills originate?

Mr. JACOBS: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: It must be on account of certain irregularities that the divorce is asked for.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE—MR. JACOBS

DIVISION ON INDUSTRIAL LOAN AND FINANCE CORPORATION BILL

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier): I rise to a question of privilege. In the votes and proceedings of Friday, March 12, I note that a vote was taken on Bill No. 59, with reference to the Industrial Loan and Finance Corporation, and I am declared to have been present and to have voted on this bill. I may say I was not here during the whole of last week, having been confined to my house through illness, and I am a little surprised to find that some person in my stead voted for me. I wish to say that the voice was not the voice of Jacob although the hands were the hands of Esau.

LORD'S DAY ACT

Mr. H. E. BRUNELLE (Champlain) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 63, to amend the Lord's Day Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. BRUNELLE: The proposed amendment has reference only to section 14 of the act dealing with penalties. The purpose is to make corporations which violate the law in question liable to penalties more severe than those now in force.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PROSECUTION OF UNEMPLOYED VAGRANTS

Mr. ROWE (Athabaska):

Are criminal prosecutions taking place on the charge of vagrancy as the result of unemployment?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): No information. Enforcement of the criminal law rests with the provincial authorities.

CENTRAL PLACE OF EXECUTION—QUEBEC

Mr. GARIEPY:

Is it the intention of the government to refer to the committee considering the execution of the death penalty the advisability of having in the province of Quebec a central place of execution?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The government has no power to refer anything to the committee. The bill before the house does not deal with the place of execution.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. CHURCH:

What are the names, occupations, addresses, salaries, living and travelling expenses of the present federal radio commission?

Mr. CHURCH:

1. What are the names of the staff of radio station CRCT, in Toronto, and the length of service, rank, remuneration of each, and what were their respective living and transportation expenses during the past year?
2. How many musicians and other officials are drawing federal pensions as well as salaries, and who are they?
3. Who are the announcers at this station, and are they related to any musicians or others employed there? If so, what is the relation?
4. How many of the musicians are: (a) union men; (b) non-union?
5. What are the names of the announcers and musicians, and of the choir leader and quartette?
6. How long has Mr. Lucas been employed; and are any members of his family also employed?
7. Have any other officials relatives employed?
8. Do the choir leader, quartette, and the minister draw government pensions?
9. Are any members of the family of Mr. Waddington, known on the radio as Frank Gladstone, employed? If so, what are the names?

Mr. HOWE: These two questions refer to matters of internal management in connection with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, having to do with salaries of major and minor employees. It has always been the practice in the house to decline to bring down details of this kind in connection with the Canadian National Railways, and I think that a similar policy should be adopted with respect to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I realize that these questions can be presented to a special committee in the case of the Canadian National Railways, and in my opinion the government must consider whether a special committee of the house should not review the position of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. That can be taken up another year.

Mr. BENNETT: From the date of the establishment of the radio commission until last year this house insisted upon having presented to it every detail with reference to the persons who occupied positions in that commission—what salaries they received and the dates of their appointment, and many other questions as well. I regard it as wholly erroneous and at variance with the general principle that governs the Canadian National matter to say that that rule should apply in this connection. The house has a right to all the information it is possible to receive with respect to the radio commission, which stands on a basis entirely different from that of the Canadian National Railways. I protest against this question not being answered; I protest against the attitude taken by the government in connection with it. It is at variance with their own established policy during five years. One recalls by looking at Hansard the attacks that were made upon the commission and the salaries paid, and to say that this house should not have that information now is to say that when in opposition we can insist on receiving information which under different circumstances we decline to give to the house. I think that on reconsideration the minister will conclude that the house has a right to the information. If he lets the question stand it would perhaps serve the immediate purpose.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I ask that these two questions be allowed to stand.

Questions stand.

RAILWAY GRADE CROSSINGS

Mr. LANDERYOU:

1. How many railroad crossings are there in Canada protected by: (a) gates; (b) automatic bell; (c) automatic bell and wigwag; (d) watchman; (e) flashing lights; (f) any other form of automatic protection?
2. What was the total number of accidents on railroad crossings in Canada, in 1936?
3. How many people were killed, and how many were injured on the above-mentioned crossings in 1936?
4. How many people were killed or injured on unprotected crossings in Canada during the year 1936?

Mr. HOWE:

1. (a) Gates, 204; (b) automatic bell, 159; (c) automatic bell and wigwag, 717; (d) watchman, 90; (e) flashing lights, 10; (f) flashlight and bell, 17; bell and illuminated sign, 4; wigwag and watchman, 4.

2. Total number of acidents, 1936, 243.

3. At protected crossings; persons killed, 15; persons, injured, 45.

4. At unprotected crossings: persons killed, 98; persons injured, 322. Total at all crossings: persons killed, 113; persons injured, 367.

BANK OF CANADA—SHAREHOLDERS

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo):

1. What was the total number of shareholders of the Bank of Canada at the date of its last annual report?

2. How many transfers of shares were effected during the year under review in the said last annual report of the Bank of Canada?

3. What was the largest individual holding of class A shares of the Bank of Canada at the date of its last annual report?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. Class A shares, 10,423; class B shares, 1.

2. Information regarding transfers not in the the possession of the government. According to returns tabled in the House of Commons on February 12, 1936, and February 4, 1937, the number of class A shareholders was as follows: December 31, 1935, 11,021; December 31, 1936, 10,423.

3. 50 shares—maximum permitted by the Bank of Canada Act.

*IMPERIAL CONFERENCE—AGENDA

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Will migration within the empire be on the agenda for the coming imperial conference in way for discussion and settlement in view of improved empire economic conditions?

2. If not, will Canada's delegates bring it up for discussion?

3. What steps will be taken there by Canada to promote British-born immigration to the dominions?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The hon. member will find an answer to his question in the Votes and Proceedings of Friday, March 12, where the agenda of the conference appears.

Mr. SPEAKER: Answered.

ALBERNI-PACIFIC LUMBER CO.—RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN RESERVE

Mr. MacNEIL:

Has the Alberni-Pacific Lumber Company secured or arranged to secure right-of-way through the Indian reserve situated on the Alberni canal immediately south of the municipality of Port Alberni, British Columbia?

Mr. CRERAR: No.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

BANK OF CANADA

Mr. TUCKER:

1. What constitutes the "other assets" of the Bank of Canada valued at $5,417,407.96 as set out in the statement of assets and liabilities of the bank filed this session as sessional paper No. 84?

2. What individual items make up the amount of $350,718.63 given as the value of "bank premises" in said statement?

3. What items make up the item "other liabilities" $1,273,197.48 in said statement?

4. What were the total gross receipts of the said bank since it commenced business, and what expenditures have been made from said gross receipts which reduced the said gross profits to the net profits shown in the two annual balance sheets filed to date?

5. What are the details constituting said totals of gross receipts and expenditures?

Mr. TUCKER:

1. Was any amount of money paid to the Bank of Canada by the government during the years 1935 and 1936 on account of: (a) interest on short term securities issued by the government; (b) interest on bonds issued by the government; (c) interest on the loan of money by the bank to the dominion; (d) any other item or items?

2. If moneys were paid in respect of the item or items mentioned in question No. 1, what was the amount paid in each of the said years and in respect of each of the said items (a), (b), (c) and (d) as set out in the above question No. 1?

3. Was any amount of money paid to the chartered banks of Canada during the years 1935 and 1936 by the government on account of: (a) interest on short term securities issued by the government; (b) interest on bonds issued by the government; (c) interest on the loan of money by the banks to the government; (d) any other item or items?

4. If any money were paid in respect of the item or items mentioned in the above question No. 3, what were the names of the chartered banks receiving payment, and what amount was received in each of the said years of 1935 and 1936 by each of the chartered banks in respect of the items (a), (b), (c) and (d) as set out in question No. 3?

5. Did the chartered banks of Canada or any of them during the years 1929 to 1936 hold securities issued by the government?

6. If the said chartered banks or any of them did during the years 1929 to 1936 hold securities issued by the government, what were the names of such banks, and what amount of securities issued by the government did each such bank hold in each of the said years of 1929 to 1936 showing the amount of: (a) short term securities; (b) bonds; (c) other securities so held?

Mr. DUNNING: With regard to these two questions, in asking to have them made orders for returns I point out that some of the information therein requested is not in the possession of the government. As much information as possible will be brought down.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) has asked a question on which for some time I have had it in mind to seek information. But I realize that there may be some difficulty as to whether we should ask the Bank of Canada to disclose to the house its internal operations, if they are subject to competition from the chartered banks. I do not know to what extent that may be so in this particular matter. But I saw that item get into its present form of "other assets" and I have a shrewd suspicion what it is, and I therefore think this house is entitled to receive the information.

Mr. DUNNING: Do you think it is?

Mr. BENNETT: I certainly do, because we provided for a fund to be utilized in a certain way, but an order in council was never passed to enable that fund to function. I am not strictly in order, Mr. Speaker, but I desire only to make this statement: the minister will recall that in 1935 we passed an act by which the bank was permitted to revalue gold, and the difference between the statutory value at that time and the market value was to be used for an exchange stabilization fund.

Mr. DUNNING: I may tell my right hon. friend at once that any difficulty I had in mind does not relate to that item.

Mr. BENNETT: Well I am glad to hear that. We provided by order in council that the fund thus created might be utilized for exchange stabilization purposes. I asked whether any order in council had been passed and the reply was in the negative; therefore this item does not refer to that. But as I say, I have a shrewd idea to what it does refer, and this house probably is entitled to receive the information. I say "probably"—I would modify that view if it were made apparent to me that in any way the effect of giving the information to the house would be inimical to the efficient operation of the bank.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the whole point.

Mr. BENNETT: If the minister on his honour as a minister is of the opinion that it is inimical to the interests of the bank to give it, I think the bank's position would be one in respect of which the information would not be furnished to the government for that purpose.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no doubt at all that with respect to the possibility of interfering with the internal management of the bank at this time the governor of the bank must be the judge whether to answer the question would hamper the operations of the bank. That is the view that the government take with respect to questions regarding the bank. Subject to that qualification the information will be brought down as asked for.

Mr. BENNETT: If I may be pardoned, it seems to me the minister's position—

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The whole thing is out of order.

Mr. BENNETT: Just one word I think might be said without being out of order, on a matter touching the privileges of this house—the question whether the minister should not say he or the government is advised by the governor of the bank that it is not in the public interest that the information should be given.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the position.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I think that settles it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order for return.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR—LAY-OFF LIST

Mr. MULOCK:

1. How many permanent appointments from the lay-off list of the Interior department, not including transfers, were made by the Civil Service Commission in each year from January 1, 1932, to January 1, 1937?
2. How many returned men under 40 years of age on the lay-off list of the Interior department, have not been re-assigned to any position; what are their names, age, number of dependents and date of superannuation in each case?
3. How many employees on the lay-off list of the Interior department have died in each year from January 1, 1932, to January 1, 1937?

SWEDISH LANDRACE PIGS

Mr. BLACKMORE:

1. When were Swedish Landrace pigs first brought into Canada?
2. How many were brought in?
3. How many are now in Canada?
4. At how many agricultural stations in Canada are there at present Swedish Landrace pigs?
5. What is the name of each station, and the number and sex of pigs at each?
6. Do these pigs mature earlier than Yorkshire pigs?
7. If so, how much earlier?
8. Can farmers get these pigs from the stations at present?
9. If not, how can they be obtained?

GERMAN REPARATIONS PAYMENTS

Mr. HALL:

1. What was the amount of money paid by Germany to Canada by way of reparation?
2. What amount was turned over to the consolidated revenue fund?
3. What amount has been distributed?

4. How many claims were paid?
5. How many applied for reparation?
6. Do the claims of the ex-prisoners of war come out of this same fund?
7. How many ex-prisoners of war sent in claims?
8. How many of these claims were accepted?
9. How many of these claims were rejected?
10. What was the basis of payment on these claims?

DREDGING AND DRAINAGE WORKS

Mr. FERLAND:

1. Has the federal government carried out drainage works on cultivated lands, or dredging works in non-navigable or non-floatable waters, during the years 1934, 1935 and 1936: (a) in the province of Quebec; (b) in other provinces; (c) alone; (d) in cooperation with provincial governments?
2. If so, for what amounts in each case?

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—MARINE EMPLOYEES

Mr. GARIEPY:

What were the names, occupations and domiciles of the persons engaged by the Department of Transport for governmental marine work on the St. Lawrence river during the months of January, February, March, and April, 1936, respectively?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

HARBOURVILLE, N.S., WHARF

Mr. BROOKS:

For a copy of all payrolls showing money expended, and to whom it was paid, on certain repairs made by the Department of Public Works to the government wharf at Harbourville, Kings county, Nova Scotia, during the year 1936.

HALLS HARBOUR, N.S., WHARF

Mr. BROOKS:

For a copy of all payrolls showing money expended, and to whom it was paid, on certain repairs made by the Department of Public Works to the government wharf at Halls Harbour, Nova Scotia, during the year 1936.

SASKATCHEWAN CENSUS ENUMERATOR

Mr. ELLIOTT (Kindersley):

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and other documents dated from January 1, 1936, relating to the appointment of Thomas Annett of Fairmount, Saskatchewan, as enumerator.

NATIONAL DEFENCE DEPARTMENT—CIVIL AVIATION SENIOR MAP DRAFTSMAN

Mr. MULOCK:

For a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the department and the Civil Service Commission in connection with the temporary appointment on August 25, 1936, and the permanent appointment on November 2, 1936, of the senior map draftsman in the Civil Aviation branch of the National Defence department.

BLACK ROCK, N.S., WHARF

Mr. BROOKS:

For a copy of all payrolls showing money expended, and to whom it was paid, on certain repairs made by the Department of Public Works to the government wharf at Black Rock, Kings county, Nova Scotia, during the year 1936.

CANADA CREEK, N.S., WHARF

Mr. BROOKS:

For a copy of all payrolls showing money expended, and to whom it was paid, on certain repairs made by the Department of Public Works to the government wharf at Canada Creek, Kings county, Nova Scotia, during the year 1936.

WHITE SETTLEMENT, N.B., POSTMASTER

Mr. BROOKS:

For a copy of all reports, telegrams and correspondence exchanged between the Post Office Department, the Postmaster General, the district superintendent of postal service at Saint John, New Brunswick, and others, recommending the dismissal of the former postmaster and the appointment of the present incumbent at White Settlement, Kent county, New Brunswick.

EXCISE OFFICERS' EXAMINATIONS—MONTREAL

Mr. BEAUBIEN (for Mr. Deslauriers):

For a copy of the examination papers of the under-mentioned candidates who participated in the civil service examinations for excise officers, grades 1 and 2, held in Montreal, June 10, 11 and 12, 1936: grade 1, Bélanger, Jean Paul; Duval, J. A. O.; Faucher, Philippe; Désève, Joseph Charles; Lagacé, J. L. S.; Lacas, Joseph Jean; Déchène, Gaston E. Grade 2, Tessier, J. A. W.; Denis, M. J. A. L.; Duquette, Emilien; Leblanc, Damien; Roy, J. Francois. Also a copy of all correspondence. letters, telegrams, reports and other documents pertaining thereto, in the possession of the civil service commission, the Department of National Revenue at Ottawa and at Montreal.

Mr. RINFRET: I have been in communication with the civil service commission, and I am told that at no time has the commission submitted to the house the answer papers of candidates in an examination. It is believed that it would not be in the public interest to furnish this material in a form in which it would become a public document, as would be the case in some measure in response to an order of the house. It is further pointed out that these papers may be shown privately to an hon. member on his request, but that it would be highly improper and undesirable that they be made public in the way of a return. Therefore I will ask that this order be dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

UNEMPLOYMENT

PROVISION FOR ALLEVIATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT AND AGRICULTURAL DISTRESS

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture, for Mr. Rogers) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to provide for the alleviation of unemployment and agricultural distress and for such payments appropriated by parliament as may be necessary for all or any of the purposes of the proposed legislation.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

SOCKEYE SALMON FISHERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Will the leader of the opposition be kind enough, in order that we may adequately consider the Fraser river treaty, to lay on the table the correspondence in connection with the proposed modification, particularly in relation to the reservations that have been suggested?

Mr. DUNNING: The leader of the opposition?

Mr. NEILL: The leader of the government.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): My hon. friend is looking to the past.

Mr. BENNETT: No, he is looking forward.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Anything that is not contained in the document itself certainly will be tabled as my hon. friend suggests.

BRITISH IMMIGRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar). In a widely circulated memorandum it is stated that the question of the resumption of British immigration on a considerable scale is now under examination by his department. I should like to ask the minister whether he will give the assurance that no new immigration policy will be adopted without the matter being presented to parliament.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources): I understand that the memorandum to which my hon. friend refers was submitted to the officers of the department for such study as they might care to give it. With regard to the latter part of the question, I think my hon. friend may rest assured that he will have notice sufficiently in advance to enable him to say anything he wants to say on the question either within or without the house.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think I asked a perfectly reasonable question, and I believe the minister should state whether the government propose to go ahead with this immigration policy without consulting parliament. I think I have a right to ask that question. It does not merit merely a facetious reply.

Mr. CRERAR: I certainly do not wish to be facetious with my hon. friend, but I think the reply covers the question sufficiently.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not so understand it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The question is improper, in any case.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Chairman, I had thought, subject to the desire of the committee, that the most convenient way to proceed would be to take up the text of the trade agreement clause by clause, and that when we reached an article relating to a schedule, it would be an appropriate time to consider that schedule. Every member has been supplied with a copy of the trade agreement and with another document containing statistical information in relation to the volume of trade in connection with each item which will be under discussion by the committee. I think, then, we should start with the trade agreement itself and consider it section by section.

Mr. BENNETT: My own view, Mr. Chairman, having regard to some of the provisions of the agreement, was that possibly we would be further advanced if we considered the schedules first, particularly the schedule that has to do with rates of preference. I say that, for instance, because of the vague and uncertain terms of the paragraph that deals with dumping. I can conceive of nothing more difficult to appreciate and understand than the clause in this agreement dealing with dumping. It is an invitation to dump in Canada and then, if that invitation is accepted, Canada may do certain things. In the light of the schedules we may be better able to appreciate and understand exactly what is at issue, and I had thought possibly it would be preferable to go through the schedules first and then have our discussion on the text of the agreement. I have no very fixed preference in the matter, however. It may delay the measure a little to follow the minister's suggestion; perhaps we would have a better understanding as we went along, if we took the items as they appear.

Mr. DUNNING: I want to meet the convenience of the committee, and particularly the opposition, in every possible way. I had thought the method I proposed would be perhaps simpler, in that it would relate all the clauses of the agreement to the schedules to which they referred, as we reached them, and possibly help us avoid being at cross purposes later in connection with the matters which will be dealt with. As to the method, however, I am entirely at the disposal of the committee.

Mr. BENNETT: That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN: This is the trade agreement between Canada and the United Kingdom, signed at Ottawa on February 23, 1937:

The governments of Canada and of the United Kingdom, recognizing that the revival and development of trade is an essential feature of the prosperity and well-being of all countries and to this end desiring further to facilitate trade and commerce between Canada and the United Kingdom, and having resolved to replace by the present agreement the agreement concluded between them at Ottawa on the 20th August, 1932, have agreed upon the following provisions:

Article 1: The government of the United Kingdom undertake that goods grown, produced or manufactured in Canada and consigned from any part of the British Empire which are now free of duty, shall continue to enjoy entry free of customs duty into the United Kingdom, subject, however to the reservations set forth in schedule I appended hereto.

Mr. DUNNING: I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to read schedule I.

The CHAIRMAN: Schedule I is as follows:

As regards eggs, poultry, butter, cheese and other milk products, the government of the United Kingdom reserve to themselves the right, if they consider it necessary in the interests of the United Kingdom producer to do so, to review at any time the basis of preference so far as relates to the articles above enumerated and after notifying the Canadian government either to impose a preferential duty on Canadian produce whilst maintaining preferential margins, or in consultation with the Canadian government to bring such produce within any system which may be put into operation for the quantitative regulation of supplies from all sources in the United Kingdom market.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, the items mentioned in the schedule may be dealt with by the United Kingdom in a manner different from that in which they are now dealt with. I take that to be the sense of it. The old agreement contained a provision whereby, by mutual consent, there could be a modification of the agreement then made. This schedule provides that if there is a duty imposed by the United Kingdom they will consult with us and that we may have a preference; is that right?

Mr. DUNNING: No; schedule I compares with schedule A of the former agreement, and refers to certain dairy products. The provisions of schedule I are similar to the provisions of the old schedule A, with the difference of course that the three years certain mentioned in schedule A expired two years ago. Since that time the United Kingdom have had the right to do what schedule A empowered them to do, but they have not yet done so. They continue to reserve the right to do so.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose the minister does not place upon schedule I the construction the present Prime Minister placed upon it in 1932—that this is an intimation that England proposes to do it. I placed upon Hansard the observations in that regard made by the right hon. gentleman. He said it was quite clear that that was what England proposed to do. Has the minister any reason for believing that Great Britain has any greater intention to do it now than she had formerly? Has the government any reason to believe that the United Kingdom does contemplate taking such action?

Mr. DUNNING: The position in that regard, Mr. Chairman, is not dissimilar from what it was in 1932, in that the United Kingdom then and since was engaged in a highly technical inquiry into industries covered by these commodities. At the time of the negotiations last summer the inquiry had not been concluded. Certain advances had been made, but the United Kingdom desired to be left as free in the new agreement as in the old one. I believe I am correct in saying that the report on one phase of the matter has been presented—the British milk report is now down, and of course it is available to the British government for consideration in formulating its own policy. It was with respect to that report particularly, and detailed examinations which were taking place with respect to other phases of the industry, that the British government desired under the new agreement to reserve its freedom of action, in the same degree as they had possessed it under the old one, after the expiry of the first three years.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; in other words, there were three years in which we had the preference, that is, to 1935. The five years do not expire until 1937, but on August 20, 1935, the three years expired. After that Great Britain had freedom of action with respect to eggs, poultry, butter, cheese and milk products. But that freedom of action was limited to (a) imposition of a duty with a preference in favour of Canada, or (b) regulation by quota of importations from this country; or possibly both. The investigations to which the minister has referred were concluded, I believe, some time ago. I believe they were completed before we left office, as a matter of fact, but the report was not made. The investigations with respect to some matters have been completed for some time. The question of a report is another matter altogether. This we regarded, and do regard, as a matter of very great importance.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: If Great Britain is to regulate by quota the extent to which we may export eggs, poultry, butter, cheese and milk products to that country, then of course it becomes important, from our standpoint, lest the quota limited to Canada be such as to make our further operations very much restricted. That is one point we had under consideration.

The question of duties was very strong in the mind of one member of the British government. And the agricultural population of Great Britain, as indicated by the farmers' organization, is strongly in favour of a tariff against colonial and dominions produce. Of course this would probably apply equally to New Zealand or Australia. If it were applied to Canada it might become of transcendant importance. I do not know to what extent the minister is able to give further information about it, but certainly in the fall of 1935, at the time the late government left office, the end of the three years had almost been reached. Since that time the government of Great Britain has been carrying forward these investigations, looking towards the inauguration of a new policy. Whether or not that policy will come into being—of course it is entirely speculation on my part—I am asking the minister if he has any reason to believe that we might contemplate the imposition of a duty on Canadian eggs, butter, cheese or other milk products or, in the second place, the restriction of the extent of our exports by quantitative regulations in the form of quotas, or a combination of both. That is the only point to which I wish to direct attention; perhaps the minister can enlighten us upon it.

Mr. POULIOT: Do the numbers of these items correspond with the numbers of the items in the agreement passed at the session of 1930? If not, would it be possible to have such a list?

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member will notice in the Votes and Proceedings of February 25 that there is a column containing figures in black type; then another column shows the existing rates which are the rates of the 1932 agreement between Canada and Great Britain. I understand the comparison my hon. friend wants to make is with a prior period?

Mr. POULIOT: With 1930.

Mr. DUNNING: There was no agreement in 1930. I did not think of bringing down comparative material of that type; it would have represented a considerable amount of work. I suggest to my hon. friend that he can obtain that information by having before him the Hansard of 1930 giving the budget. That would be a simple way of doing it. Any information I could furnish would simply be a reproduction of the Hansard of that date. It is a little difficult to answer the leader of the opposition as one cannot know the mind of the British government with respect to the report which is before it.

Mr. BENNETT: I only wanted to know what had been expressed.

Mr. DUNNING: There are certain things that may be gathered from the report itself. The recommendation now under consideration by the British government does not deal with import duties; it is a rather non-committal report in that regard. It emphasizes the domestic market situation rather than import control. It cannot be said to be conclusive with respect to either of the alternatives contemplated in schedule I of this agreement or in schedule A of the old agreement. I notice my right hon. friend emphasized, and quite properly, the fact that the word "or" is used in schedule I, as it was used in schedule A of the old agreement. That is to say, the qualification involves either a preferential duty on Canadian produce, or, in consultation with the Canadian government, the bringing of such produce within any system which may be put into operation for the quantitative regulation of supplies from all sources in the United Kingdom market. That appears in schedule I, but it may not be adopted by the British government. I cannot say to my right hon. friend that I have any information that the British government is intending to adopt either alternative.

Mr. BENNETT: That is all I want to know.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps I may tell him that the report is rather comforting from that point of view.

Mr. SENN: Except with respect to the quantitative regulations in connection with supplies coming from the other dominions. It seems to me that we are in a different position with regard to butter and cheese from that which we occupy and have occupied for some time with respect to bacon and hog products.

Mr. DUNNING: We will reach bacon and hogs under another section.

Mr. SENN: Has there been any consideration as to the quota Canada will receive should quantitative regulations be placed on imports of butter and cheese? In these products we are competing directly with other parts of the empire whereas in the case of bacon and hog products we are competing with outside countries.

Mr. DUNNING: I think my hon. friend will understand that at no time did I desire to intimate to the British government that there might be a possibility of quantitative regulations in connection with Canadian produce embodied in this schedule. The schedule itself involves consultation with the Canadian government and I thought it was far better to cross the particular bridge to which he refers when we got to it. I can say quite frankly that I viewed with horror the possibility of the imposition of quantitative regulations on these commodities, and I told the British government so. They are well aware of the views of the Canadian government in that regard.

Mr. BENNETT: I think it is fair to say that those views are shared by the representatives of the other dominions. I am not quite certain, but I think the observations I made a moment ago might have suggested that they would utilize both. What I intended to say was that they could not utilize both.

Mr. DUNNING: That is what I understood.

Mr. BENNETT: They could utilize either one or the other. The words used are "either" and "or." All I wanted to get from the minister was any intimation he might have as to whether the British government was considering the utilization of either. I know about the milk report and also about the others, in a general way. This agreement cannot be changed unless you consent to it, but schedule I goes further and says that after consultation they can change entirely this portion of the agreement, first, by providing for a duty on our products, giving us a preference, or, second, by imposing quantitative regulations.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a slight difference, if my right hon. friend will permit me. They can impose a preferential tariff after notifying us, but they obligate themselves to consult us before imposing quantitative regulations. There is an important difference there.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a distinction without a difference.

Mr. DUNNING: I regard it as important.

Article 1 agreed to.

On article 2:

The government of the United Kingdom undertake that the goods the manufacture of Canada enumerated in schedule II appended hereto when consigned from any part of the British Empire shall not on importation into the United Kingdom be subject to duties of customs higher than those specified in that schedule.

Mr. BENNETT: I take it that those are the McKenna duties.

Mr. DUNNING: Schedule II should be read before we adopt article 2.

The CHAIRMAN: Schedule II reads:

Motor cars (including motor bicycles and motor tricycles) and accessories and component parts of motor cars, motor bicycles and motor tricycles: rate of duty, 22½ per cent ad valorem.

Stockings and socks of natural silk or where the value of the natural silk component exceeds 20 per cent of the aggregate of the values of all the components of the article: rate of duty, 28% per cent ad valorem, or 8s. per pound, whichever is the greater.

Reed organs (including harmoniums) complete: free.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no parallel to article 2 in the former agreement. This is a binding by Great Britain of the existing rates of duty applicable to the articles mentioned in the schedule. They undertake not to increase the present duties on motor cars, stockings and reed organs, the products of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: The McKenna duties, which govern there, were for a fixed time. I have not the English statute before me, but I should like to know how long it provides for the maintenance of this 22½ per cent duty on motor cars.

Mr. DUNNING: My understanding is that they are intending to maintain the rates.

Mr. BENNETT: You will remember that the McKenna duties expired at a certain period. Whether they were renewed for a term of years, or just renewed, I cannot say. This article corresponds with the McKenna duties, against which the greatest agitation has been carried on for a long time by free traders in England. It is a principle to which Mr. Asquith is supposed—whether he did or not I do not know—to have given his approval in Paris upon one occasion, and later the so-called McKenna duties were introduced. So far as we are concerned, all we know is that the rate cannot be higher than it is here.

Mr. DUNNING: It cannot be higher, no matter what is done about the McKenna duties. The important fact is that the duty on silk stockings and socks made of real silk is reduced to 28% per cent ad valorem, or eight shillings a pound, whichever is the greater. This reduction results in a preference of one third as compared with the existing preference of one sixth, and it is important from the point of view of Canada, as our exports last year, 1935-36, were $327,000 worth of silk stockings falling within this classification. In fact fifteen per cent of our total exports of those commodities went to Great Britain.

Mr. BENNETT: Our export of motor cars was, I suppose, limited.

Mr. DUNNING: Last year it was $2,725,000. Again, fifteen per cent of our total exports of motor cars went to the United Kingdom. Our exporters much feared an increase of this duty against us, and they regard as an assurance of some value the binding of it for a three year period.

Article agreed to.

On article 3:

The government of the United Kingdom undertake in respect of the goods the growth, produce or manufacture of Canada enumerated in schedule III appended hereto that the difference between the rate of the duties of customs on such goods on importation into the United Kingdom when consigned from any part of the British Empire and the rate upon similar goods the growth, produce or manufacture of any foreign country shall not be less than the rates set out in that schedule:

Provided that the duty on either wheat in grain, copper, zinc or lead, as provided in this agreement, may be removed if at any time empire producers of wheat in grain, copper, zinc or lead respectively are unable or unwilling to offer these commodities on first sale in the United Kingdom at prices not exceeding the world prices and in quantities sufficient to supply the requirements of United Kingdom consumers; and,

Provided further that while the arrangements contained in the report of the import duties advisory committee of the 2nd July, 1935, are in force, the duties on lead and zinc shall be in accord with the proposals in appendices B and C of that report.

Schedule III
(See Article 3)

Article	Margin of Preference
Wheat, in grain	2s. per quarter.
Butter	15s. per cwt.
Cheese	15 per cent. ad valorem.
Apples, raw (excluding apples consigned direct to a registered cider manufacturer for use in making cider)	4s. 6d. per cwt.
Pears, raw	4s. 6d. per cwt.
Apples, canned	3s. 6d. per cwt., in addition to the difference in the rates of duty in respect of sugar content.
Eggs in shell—
(a) Not exceeding 14 lbs. in weight per great hundred	1s. per great hundred.
(b) Over 14 lbs. but not exceeding 17 lbs	1s. 6d. per great hundred.
(c) Over 17 lbs	1s. 9d. per great hundred.
Condensed milk, whole, sweetened or slightly sweetened	5s. per cwt., in addition to the difference in the rates of duty in respect of sugar content.
Condensed milk, whole, not sweetened	6s. per cwt.
Milk powder and other preserved milk excluding condensed milk, not sweetened	6s. per cwt.
Honey	7s. per cwt.
Copper, unwrought, whether refined or not, in ingots, bars, blocks, slabs, cakes and rods	2d. per lb.
Timber of all kinds imported into the United Kingdom in substantial quantities from Canada, in so far as now dutiable	10 per cent. ad valorem.
Fish, fresh sea, excluding fish livers	10 per cent. ad valorem.
Chilled or frozen salmon	1½d. per lb.
Salmon, canned	10 per cent. ad valorem.
Other fish, canned	10 per cent. ad valorem.
Asbestos	10 per cent. ad valorem.
Zinc	10 per cent. ad valorem.
Lead	10 per cent. ad valorem.
Patent leather not forming part of another article and goods composed wholly of patent leather	15 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. BENNETT: It seems to me that from the standpoint of the future it is desirable that the minister make some statement as to the last proviso of article 3. I fancy that very few hon. members have had an opportunity to read the report of the import duties advisory committee of July 1935, and it might be desirable, inasmuch as we are perpetuating these arrangements, that such a statement be given by the minister so that it might appear on the record and references be made to it at any time.

Mr. DUNNING: Anticipating that difficulty, Mr. Chairman, the nature of which my right hon. friend is aware—

Mr. BENNETT: I know, but it is not on Hansard.

Mr. DUNNING: —I draw attention to the fact that in appendix B, on page 40 of the copy of the trade agreement and connected papers, will be found the proposals for the modification of the import duty on lead and the provisions of the Ottawa agreements relating thereto, under which we are at present operating. The article of the agreement as just read ensures that the provisions contained in this appendix B shall be continued in force so long as the arrangements contained in the report of the import duties advisory committee of July 2, 1935, which are the arrangements contained in the annex on page 40, are in effect; the duties in this schedule regarding lead and zinc shall be modified in accordance with those arrangements. For reasons which they state to be connected with defence, there is a strong desire on the part of the British government to build up a zinc and lead industry in England itself. That is, indeed, part of the reason for the annex to which I have just made reference, and is further clarified by reading letter No. 1 on page 38 of the document now before members of the committee, which is a letter on this matter from the Prime Minister of Canada to Sir Francis Floud, High Commissioner in Canada for the United Kingdom. Perhaps I had better read it so that it may be on the record in Hansard.

Mr. BENNETT: Might it not be well for the minister to permit Hansard to place on record the annex on pages 40 and 41, so that the material may be there for those who desire to know how this restriction comes about?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: A number of hon. members may not have followed the details of the lead and zinc items of 1932 and the dealings with them. This committee was set up and made a report. In addition to that, some problems with respect to rearmament have arisen, notably questions of refining zinc and lead in England—that is bringing in pig lead and rough zinc and refining it. As a matter of fact a large refinery for that particular purpose was built in England. If the minister thinks it desirable, as I do, that he shall offer the explanation he has here and state that details will be found in the annex, I suggest that it be printed as part of Hansard, and if he proposes to read letter No. 1, which is an amplification of the explanation, I think that it, with the two annexes referred to, should be available for the purpose of completing the record.

Mr. MARTIN: I think it would be helpful if the minister would tell us what the import duties advisory committee is, and whether Canada has a body corresponding to it.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: One might say that it corresponds, though not in all particulars, to our tariff board. It is a body which advises the British government with respect to import duties. Its functions are, however, wholly advisory.

With respect to the suggestion made by the leader of the opposition, I think it would help subsequent discussion to place upon Hansard, with the consent of the committee, the information appearing on pages 40, 41 and 42 of the printed copy of trade agreement which is in the hands of hon. members, being the complete record with respect to lead and zinc, and also the letter, signed by the Prime Minister of Canada, which appears on page 38.

(See Article 3)

Appendices B and C of the Report of the United Kingdom Import Duties Advisory Committee on the Working of the Agreements concluded at the Imperial Economic Conference at Ottawa regarding Lead and Zinc.

(Cmd. 4983)

Note: The following recommendations were accepted by the governments concerned and applied by the import duties (general ad valorem duty reduction) (no. 1) order, 1935, effective August 27, 1935.

Appendix B
Lead

Proposals for the Modification of the Import Duty on Lead and the Provisions of the Ottawa Agreements relating thereto

The governments of the United Kingdom, Canada, Australia and India should be asked to agree to the suspension of the provisions of the Ottawa agreements relating to lead, and to the following arrangements being brought into operation at the earliest possible date:

(1) In substitution for the present customs duty of 10 per cent ad valorem on lead of non-Empire origin entering the United Kingdom there should be imposed a duty of 7s. 6d. per ton subject to the following provisions.

(2) At any time after the commencement of the duty, representatives of United Kingdom producers, of other empire producers, of United Kingdom consumers and of the London metal exchange, either jointly or separately or any section thereof, may approach the import duties advisory committee in regard to any matters relating to these arrangements, and it will be open to the committee, after enquiry, to recommend such variation in the arrangements as appears to them desirable. In particular, following such enquiry, the committee may, after the expiration of a period of twelve months, recommend the suspension of the duty either wholly or in part, if they are satisfied that the price of good soft pig lead, as indicated by the London metal exchange daily settlement price (duty for buyer's account), is likely for a reasonable time to remain at not less than £13 a ton.

Provided that in considering any such matters the Committee shall have regard to the principle embodied in the relative clauses of the Ottawa agreements, viz., of assuring to the empire producers overseas a preferential position in supplying the needs of the United Kingdom market without at the same time imposing a handicap on United Kingdom trade and commerce.

(3) Arrangements shall be made in accordance with the supplementary provisions appended hereto for mitigating any adverse effects on the trade and commerce of the United Kingdom.

Supplementary Provisions

1. While the duty is in operation the committee of the London metal exchange undertake:—

(a) to maintain the existing provision in the standard contract for "good soft pig lead" that the duty payable is for buyer's account;

(b) to amend the above-mentioned standard contract so as to enable sellers, at their option, to deliver empire brands of lead at a premium above the London metal exchange contract price equal to the rate of duty for the time being in force.

2. The agreement between representatives in the United Kingdom of empire producers of lead and certain United Kingdom consumers dated July, 1933, shall be abrogated as from the date of first imposition of the duty of 7s. 6d. per ton.

3. The producers and consumers, recognizing that it is in the interest of both parties to make the London metal exchange an effective market for lead, will transact more business through the exchange.

4. During periods when a duty is in force arrangements shall be made between the representatives of the producers and the United Kingdom consumers whereby the former will provide, in respect of exported goods in which the cost of lead is an important consideration, for the payment of a rebate equivalent to the duty on the lead used therein, irrespective of its origin.

5. The producers and consumers agree that it is in their joint interest to support one another and that they should not act in a manner calculated to prejudice the interests of each other. In particular, the empire producers overseas undertake not to supply manufacturing consumers within their domestic territories at more favourable price than United Kingdom consumers, and to take all reasonable steps in their power to see that United Kingdom manufacturing consumers are not prejudiced by the action of other empire manufacturing consumers.

In the event of negotiations taking place for the regulation of the world production of lead, the producers will, in such negotiations, safeguard the interests of the United Kingdom manufacturing consumers, who, on their part, will take all reasonable steps to assist the producers and promote their interests.

Appendix C

Zinc

Proposals for the Modification of the Import Duty on Zinc and the Provisions of the Ottawa Agreements Relating Thereto

The governments of the United Kingdom, Canada and Australia should be asked to agree to the suspension of the provisions of the Ottawa agreements relating to zinc, and to the following arrangements being brought into operation at the earliest possible date:—

(1) In substitution for the present customs duty of 10 per cent ad valorem on zinc of non-empire origin entering the United Kingdom there should be imposed a duty of 12s. 6d. per ton subject to the following provisions.

(2) At any time after the commencement of the duty, representatives of United Kingdom producers, of other empire producers, of United Kingdom consumers and of the London metal exchange, either jointly or separately or any section thereof, may approach the import duties advisory committee in regard to any matters relating to these arrangements, and it will be open to the committee, after enquiry, to recommend such variation in the arrangements as appears to them desirable. In particular, following such enquiry, the committee may, after the expiration of a period of twelve months, recommend the suspension of the duty either wholly or in part, if they are satisfied that the price of zinc, as indicated by the London metal exchange daily settlement price (duty for buyer's account), is likely for a reasonable time to remain at not less than £15 a ton.

Provided that in considering any such matters the committee shall have regard to the principle embodied in the relative clauses of the Ottawa Agreements, viz., of assuring to the empire producers overseas, a preferential position in supplying the needs of the United Kingdom market without at the same time imposing a handicap on United Kingdom trade and commerce.

(3) Arrangements shall be made in accordance with the supplementary provisions appended hereto for mitigating any adverse effects on the trade and commerce of the United Kingdom.

Supplementary Provisions

1. While the duty is in operation the committee of the London Metal Exchange undertake:

(a) to maintain the existing provisions in the standard contract for "virgin spelter" that the duty payable is for buyer's account;

(b) to amend the above-mentioned standard contract so as to enable sellers, at their option, to deliver empire brands of zinc at a premium above the London metal exchange contract price equal to the rate of duty for the time being in force.

2. The price of empire electrolytic brands of zinc of a purity of 99·9 per cent up to, but not including 99·99 per cent shall not exceed £2 10s. per ton above the mean of the London metal exchange spot and forward quotations.

3. The producers and consumers, recognizing that it is in the interest of both parties to make the London metal exchange an effective market for zinc, will transact more business through the exchange.

4. The producers and consumers agree that it is in their joint interest to support one another and that they should not act in a manner calculated to prejudice the interests of each other. In particular, the empire producers overseas undertake not to supply manufacturing consumers within their domestic territories at more favourable prices than United Kingdom manufacturers of similar products, and to take all reasonable steps in their power to see that United Kingdom manufacturing consumers are not prejudiced by the action of other empire manufacturing consumers.

In the event of negotiations taking place for the regulation of the world production of zinc, the producers will, in such negotiations, safeguard the interests of the United Kingdom manufacturing consumers who, on their part, will take all reasonable steps to assist the producers and promote their interests.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall now read the letter signed by the Prime Minister of Canada which appears on page 38 of the printed document setting forth the trade agreement and connected papers, so that the committee may have clearly before it the understanding that was reached:

Letter No. 1

Ottawa, February 23, 1937.

Sir,

With reference to article 16 of the trade agreement signed this day, I have the honour to inform you that the Canadian government, having taken note of the statements of the United Kingdom government in the course of the recent discussions:

(1) that it is essential to the national security that the production of the zinc smelting industry in the United Kingdom should be maintained at a satisfactory level;

(2) that at any enquiry into the question of the effects of imports of zinc from oversea empire countries on the maintenance of the production of zinc in the United Kingdom at a satisfactory level having regard to the needs of national security, the Canadian zinc producers would have the opportunity of submitting evidence, and

(3) that the government of the United Kingdom would consult the Canadian government before taking any decision to impose a customs duty on imports of Canadian zinc into the United Kingdom, agree that it will be open to the United Kingdom government, after such enquiry and after consultation with the Canadian government, and notwithstanding the provisions of article 1 of the trade agreement, to impose a customs duty on imports of zinc produced or manufactured in Canada, without prejudice however, to the provisions of article 3 of the agreement.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. BENNETT: I should like to know what that means.

Mr. DUNNING: The maintenance of the preference.

It is understood that no customs duty will be imposed on Canadian zinc which is not equally applicable to zinc from other oversea empire sources.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
W. L. Mackenzie King.

Present market conditions with regard to lead and zinc completely eliminate this problem for the immediate future from the standpoint of the British government; but the letter I have just read, together with the annex which is placed on Hansard, clearly covers the ground with respect to any possible occasion upon which the British government may desire, for the purpose stated in clause 1, national security from their point of view —among other things that the production of zinc, in the smelting industry in the United Kingdom, should be maintained at a satisfactory level. Provided action is desired by the British government the letter indicates the basis upon which it must be taken. My right hon. friend says he cannot understand the relation to article 3.

Mr. BENNETT: No; perhaps I had better amplify that. It does seem strange to talk about a letter modifying an article and then to say that it is without prejudice to that article. It is absurd. Perhaps I did not use the proper terms with respect to it, but these are the words in the letter:

—agree that it will be open to the United Kingdom government, after such inquiry and after consultation with the Canadian government, and notwithstanding the provisions of article 1 of the trade agreement, to impose a customs duty on imports of zinc produced or manufactured in Canada, without prejudice however, to the provisions of article 3 of the agreement.

So that we have a letter which will modify, without prejudice, the whole of the article. What it was desired to do was what the minister said, namely, to make it without prejudice to the maintenance of the preference; but what is contained in this document is without prejudice to the provisions of article 3.

Mr. DUNNING: I can scarcely believe that my right hon. friend has missed the first sentence in the letter:

With reference to article 16 of the trade agreement signed this day . . .

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. DUNNING: Article 16 is the one that enables either government to take up with the other the question of the modification of any part of the agreement. The Canadian government is agreeing in this letter in advance, under the provisions of article 16, as to the manner in which the peculiar situation in zinc and lead may be met. That is really the whole point.

Mr. BENNETT: It is an odd way to express it.

Mr. MacNICOL: I understand the minister to say that in connection with the article pertaining to lead and zinc the British government for security purposes hope to build up a lead and zinc industry.

Mr. DUNNING: No; if my hon. friend understood me to say so I could not have conveyed my meaning properly. There has been established a refining industry for lead and zinc in the United Kingdom, and the British government deems it of importance from the standpoint of national defence that this industry should operate, and that is the consideration which they desire to have kept in mind at all times and upon which they can approach us in accordance with the terms of the annex and the letter.

Mr. MacNICOL: I congratulate them upon the maintenance of the industry in the old country and I hope that this government will follow that principle and not be so hard on the industry in Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: The provisions of the agreement in article 16 are merely the provisions, in other words, of the old one, the old language not having suited the critical attitude of mind of those who drafted the present agreement. Not being perhaps quite scholarly enough for them it is expresed in other terms. The old agreement, in part was written or approved, I believe, by a lord chancellor, but this is obviously an improvement upon it, because it provides in article 16 that if they desire to vary the terms of the agreement then they may do so! The old agreement conveyed exactly the same meaning but in different words; something in the language "lacked the cool repose of Vere de Vere."

Mr. DUNNING: The language is identical.

Mr. BENNETT: No, there is a slight difference. If it is identical, I am glad to hear it, because it is the only instance in which there has not been a verbal change in order that it may be said that a different agreement has been prepared. That is the reason I put the articles on Hansard side by side, so that there might be no misapprehension. There is, however, something that does affect us. The Canadian consumer must not be forgotten, and with respect to zinc and lead I think the Canadian consumer is forgotten. I had considerable difficulty and some differences of opinion, very acute differences of opinion—so acute as to bring about rather strained relations for a time—between certain gentlemen and myself. It is monstrous that Canadian consumers of zinc and lead should have to pay for that zinc and lead the price in London plus freight back here on it.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: Now I know I am wrong.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I am glad the right hon. gentleman admits for once that he is wrong.

Article agreed to.

On article 4:

The government of the United Kingdom undertake that until the 19th August, 1942, tobacco grown, produced or manufactured in Canada and consigned from any part of the British Empire shall enjoy on importation into the United Kingdom the existing margin of preference over foreign tobacco, so long, however, as the duty on foreign unmanufactured tobacco does not fall below 2s ½d. per lb., in which event the margin of preference shall be equal to the full duty.

Mr. DUNNING: This continues the present arrangement, with a very slight difference in drafting. I was pleased to hear my right hon. friend's remarks with respect to the drafting and shall convey them to the British and Canadian draftsmen who were engaged somewhat critically in this task. It is interesting and useful from a lawyer, because as a layman I sometimes feel diffident with respect to bills that are drafted for me for presentation to the house and which when they get to another place receive the attention of another expert draftsman who sometimes deems it desirable to make changes. I believe we can regard it as, shall we say, a disease of draftsmen to attempt to improve on the work of each other—or perhaps it is not without merit that they should try to do so. Of course from time to time it is possible to improve even language, I believe.

Mr. BENNETT: That is hardly a correct statement, but it is not a matter of great importance. The late Lord Bowen made an observation which might be applied with some force to what the hon. gentleman has said. It was with reference to the address presented to the late Queen Victoria by the judges of England on the opening of the new courts of justice. "Conscious as we are of our limitations and failings," Lord Bowen said. I suggest that we substitute "conscious as we are of the limitations and failings of each other." Possibly that might apply here. What I desire to point out is that if hon. members of the committee who now sit to the right of the Speaker desire to have a correct appreciation of this article they should read the comments of the present Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition. When they have done that I fancy they will hesitate to vote for it, because many of them voted against it in 1932 and gave reasons for doing so. There have been no changes since; in fact it continues until 1942. It is one of the clauses of the agreement that is covered by a British statute which provides for a preference not for five years but for a period of ten years, from 1932 to 1942, and the present Prime Minister then pointed out how terrible it was to make a matter so important as tobacco subject to the condition that it should be effective:

> . . . so long, however, as the duty on foreign unmanufactured tobacco does not fall below 2s. 0½d. per lb., in which event the margin of preference shall be equal to the full duty.

He explained at some length how iniquitous such a provision was and the effect it would have on the Canadian producer, subjecting him to a contingency that never should be contemplated. I assume the members of the committee are in no such state of mind today; they have seen a great light. There is my friend the Minister of Justice; I can remember how he voted — —

Mr. DUNNING: But he does not smoke.

Mr. BENNETT: No, but not as to this particular item alone—all of them. It was so offensive to hon. gentlemen that we should have any such thing as this, but now they all with one accord give their approval. They have seen a great light. I do not know whether they travelled from Jericho to Jerusalem, or just to Damascus.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I am listening to my right hon. friend—to some extent.

Mr. BENNETT: They have agreed with me now.

Article agreed to.

On article 5:

The government of Canada, recognizing that it is the present policy of the government of the United Kingdom to promote the orderly marketing of bacon and hams and of meat in the United Kingdom with due regard to the normal development of trade, declare their willingness so far as their power extends to continue to assist the government of the United Kingdom in carrying out this policy and, in particular, to furnish from time to time estimates of forthcoming shipments of bacon and hams and cattle and beef.

As regards bacon and hams, the government of the United Kingdom undertake:

(1) that any duty or levy which may be imposed on bacon and hams imported into the United Kingdom shall not apply to imports of Canadian bacon and hams when consigned from any part of the British empire;

(2) that there will be no regulation by them of such imports unless the rate at which the trade from Canada progresses towards two and one-half million hundred-weight per annum should become abnormal and such as to endanger the effective working of the system of supply regulation;

(3) that no such regulation would be put into effect without prior consultation with the government of Canada.

As regards cattle and beef, the government of the United Kingdom undertake:

(1) that any duty or levy which may be imposed on cattle or beef imported into the United Kingdom shall not apply to imports of Canadian cattle or beef when consigned from any part of the British empire;

(2) that, if so requested, they will make themselves responsible for Canadian interests in any international conference that may be set up to arrange for regulating supplies imported into the United Kingdom and will use their best endeavours to ensure that Canada secures an equitable share in the trade in cattle and beef;

(3) that any agreement for the setting up of such a conference, to which they may become a party, will not provide for any reduction in imports of Canadian fat cattle and beef into the United Kingdom below recent levels;

(4) that any such agreement will recognize that special provision may become necessary for increased shipments of fat cattle and beef from Canada and will provide for specified reductions, if necessary, in shipments of chilled beef from foreign countries;

(5) that there will be no regulation of imports of cattle or beef from Canada unless, after consultation with the government of Canada, it appears to the government of the United Kingdom that the effective working of a general scheme for the orderly marketing in the United Kingdom of meat cannot otherwise be secured.

Mr. BENNETT: I wonder if the minister has fancied what his leader would have said in 1932 in view of what he said about the rest of the agreement. Having in mind their previous arguments and votes, the attitude of those who sit across from me is most amazing. Let us look. First of all the government of Canada says it recognizes that the policy of the United Kingdom is a certain type of policy, and desires to help them carry out that policy. That is No. 1. They are to continue to assist the government of the United Kingdom. We undertake to assist them by giving them information. But this says in particular:

. . . to furnish from time to time estimates of forthcoming shipments of bacon and hams and cattle and beef.

Cattle and beef are added.

Mr. DUNNING: Which we have been doing under the old arrangement.

Mr. BENNETT: We were not under the same obligation in respect to cattle and beef.

Mr. DUNNING: But we have been doing it.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, we were doing it before this government came into office, but that was not a treaty obligation as it now is. There is no doubt that if we are to continue to occupy a place of any importance in the market of Great Britain with respect to bacon we shall have to do two things: (1) maintain a standard of quality beyond question; (2) assure the British government that they shall have some idea of what we can supply in order that they may know how they are to meet their requirements. I quite agree with this provision of the agreement. In other words we have the most valuable market in the world, which we can only keep if we play cricket with the British government in connection with the requirements of their people. Shortly put, that is the story. And it is an extremely difficult thing to do in a country the size of this.

Mr. DUNNING: Very difficult.

Mr. BENNETT: I recall that I obtained figures from the Department of Trade and Commerce to answer one cable from England, and figures also from the Department of Agriculture, and they were not the same. The endeavour to coordinate the figures, as was done, involved a good deal of difficulty. In the end we made the best guess we could —I use the word "guess" with hesitation, but that is what we did. I think we must try to do something better than that.

I recall a discussion in England with a representative of the Danish government. England has been a great customer of Denmark. This agreement of 1932 to a very considerable extent deprived Denmark of a market for her bacon and gave it to Canada. This gentleman said: "The only thing I can say is we have lost part of our market, but we are nearer to England than you are, and we perhaps study their requirements a little more closely than you do."

Mr. DUNNING: There is no question about that.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the essential thing that the government must keep in mind. The former minister of agriculture did everything in his power to establish a uniform quality. Only this morning I received a letter from one of our western producers, who ships not in a very large way, in which he said: "The difficulty we have is that there is no cooperation in Canada with respect to the shipment of bacon to Great Britain. It will go on for a time; then someone in Great Britain will suggest that the price is going to be lowered. The producer here is discouraged; the result is that the supplies which should be maintained at a constant level fall to a lower level, and provision has to be made to supply English bacon requirements from Denmark or Poland, or, in these latter days, Russia, which has been supplying some; and that is not easy to do." I do urge upon the government that they continue as far as possible some form of effective control over the conduct of the Canadian industry to ensure (a) uniformity, (b) a steady flow or supply of bacon to the British market, and, (c) the preventing of the class of competition which has been destructive of this industry in Canada in so far as it relates to British imports. I cannot dwell on that too strongly, because I live in a community where there are two, three or four packing plants. This is an unfortunate tendency that manifests itself in Canada; if one man is making a little money at something, somebody else says, "I am going to start right in that business, too," and in the end you get them exchanging a new dollar for a new one; then a receiver comes in and you have all the consequent trouble that we have had in connection with some of our enterprises in Canada. If I were asked to say what I regarded as the most important matter to bring to the attention of the government, in order that it might be impressed upon the people at this time in connection with this business, which under this agreement in one year Mr. McLean said meant over $30,000,000 to the Canadian people—I would not have put it so high myself; but he has the widest possible knowledge and he put it at over $30,000,000—

Mr. DUNNING: Between $25,000,000 and $30,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: He put it at $36,000,000, to be exact, for one year, which is a tremendous increase in new wealth. But I want to dwell upon this point, that when you get to beef and cattle you are in an entirely different realm. As sure as we are here, Mr. Chairman, this idea of using the British market as a convenience and using the United States as the market that serves you, is entirely wrong. When you find some difficulty, because of tariffs or otherwise, you turn to the British market, but you give them no constancy or certainty of supply, and that is the most ruinous thing that can happen. It is right on us now.

Mr. DUNNING: That is our difficulty.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course it is; as I pointed out last year, I felt that when we negotiated the agreement with the United States. You see, if we could look to the United States with the same degree of certainty as we can look to Great Britain in connection with the marketing situation it would be entirely different, but we do not know what sudden changes may take place in the attitude of the legislators to the south of us, whereas with respect to our own country we have every assurance that nothing will be done that will be prejudicial to the interests of the dominions or their market in Great Britain without complete discussion and timely notice. I can only say that I look upon the addition of beef and cattle to this agreement as representing the effort the English consumer has made to ensure some steadiness of supply from this country, but it does appear to be fairly clear that as things now are the number of cattle that will go from Canada to Great Britain will not be very great. As a matter of fact our cattle exports have been getting smaller, as compared with the days when we had to deal with the problem of the relaxation of regulations and restrictions that tied us up. I was looking up the figures not long since. I wonder how many members of this house realize that at one time we shipped over 200,000 head of cattle to Great Britain in one year.

Mr. DUNNING: We shipped 216,000 head in 1927.

Mr. BENNETT: If you go back to the eighties, when we were relatively a poor country—

Mr. DUNNING: No, I am wrong; the figure I gave was the total exports.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought it was rather prior to that.

Mr. STEVENS: 1922.

Mr. BENNETT: In 1922 we sold over 200,000 head to Great Britain. That trade was carried on in the old days until some low tariff man such as President Cleveland of the United States would come into power and say, "I guess we will let Canadian cattle in." Then for three or four years Canadian cattle would be sent to that market, and the British market would be lost. Then President Wilson came along and we got free entry. After that everything went south; then one morning we found ourselves without a market at all, and people were ruined. Those familiar with ranching in western Canada know that some of the largest ranchers went bankrupt. One gentleman, whose assets at one time were estimated at $7,000,000, did not leave an estate large enough on his death to pay the costs of probate, and that was brought about by the emergency United States tariff on our cattle.

If the government can do anything to assure a steady supply of cattle to the British market, I think it should be done. I know how difficult it is, because certainly I have tried. We should not allow the idea to develop that the only market for Canadian beef and cattle is the market to the south. If we could induce our people to ship a steady flow of even 50,000 head of cattle per annum it would mean a great deal, so long as 50,000 head went forward each year. But when you have 50,000 one year, 25,000 another year and 75,000 another year, with uncertainty as to the flow of cattle across the ocean, you will have just the condition that confronted us. I have no hope, for instance, that under changed conditions we shall continue to have ready access to the United States market. That may continue to be the case during the term of the Democratic party, but you must look a good deal further ahead than that. It is not a matter of five or six or eight or ten years; you must take the long view of it.

I am sorry to see this item extended to include beef and cattle, but on the other hand I quite appreciate the reason for it, and since it is here I think we must do our very best to assist the British government. But I am quite sure that if conditions were reversed the welkin would ring in this parliament, as it rang in 1932. We would be told that to take our policy from the United Kingdom or to undertake to assist Great Britain to carry into effect its policy, which is its business, would be so very contrary to the whole spirit of our institutions that I would almost expect them to fall.

Mr. LEADER: I think the remarks of the leader of the opposition are very timely. Only the other day I noticed in the Commercial Intelligence Journal that we were not keeping up a constant supply of live stock for the old country market, which made it difficult to secure the confidence of those engaged in that trade there. Speaking from memory I believe that last year we exported to the United Kingdom about 33,000 head of cattle, though we had the privilege of shipping at least 50,000 head to that market. This year I believe the number is even smaller, due to the fact that prices have been much better in the United States. You cannot blame the breeders of cattle for selling in the best market, and that is why cattle are going to the United States at the present time. I do believe, however, that it is very important that we should strive to maintain our market in the old country, which after all is the most stable of all export markets. I think the government might very well undertake some scheme under which a fund would be created—

An hon. MEMBER: Subsidies.

Mr. LEADER: Pay a subsidy, if you wish, so that a situation such as exists to-day might be looked after, and so that we might guarantee to the old country market at least 10,000 head of cattle per month the year round. Then, when the price dropped in the old country, or when the price in the United States or any other market exceeded the price in the old country and the Canadian producer desired to get all he could out of his cattle, the government could step in and subsidize the breeder of cattle so that at least those 10,000 head per month would go forward to the old country market. I think that suggestion is worthy of consideration. I believe it will have to be done unless we are prepared to reestablish that market every few years, which is very hard to do. We should endeavour to maintain that market, and it seems to me something could be done in the way of undertaking to furnish a continuous supply of cattle to the old country.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I think the suggestion that has been advanced by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Leader) is an excellent one. Really I cannot see how we can maintain a steady flow of bacon without some such scheme. I was wondering whether the leader of the opposition would tell us what ideas he had in mind for stabilizing the market. If there is something better than a subsidy, we are ready to listen to it.

Mr. STEVENS: Referring to the remarks of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, and the desirability of maintaining a supply of beef cattle in the British market, may I say that I entirely agree with the desirability of achieving that end. In the past, one of the great difficulties has been the securing of shipping equipped to carry cattle. A shipping concern wishing to carry cattle must maintain stalls on its ships, and the equipment for handling cattle, and by installing that equipment they find it difficult fully to utilize their space on return cargoes. For this reason shipping companies have been somewhat loath to fit out their ships, because the original cost runs about $14 to $16 per stall. They do not wish to make this expenditure unless they are assured of a continuous supply of cattle.

That is one factor, a very important one, with which we have had difficulty in the past. I agree that we have used the British cattle market as a convenient market or, perhaps I should say, a convenience market—a market to suit our convenience.

Mr. DUNNING: That is better.

Mr. STEVENS: When we have a surplus we supply it, but when the United States market opens up and other conditions are advantageous, we desert the market in the old country. That is a bad state of affairs, and one which I believe could be overcome by organization among the larger shippers, who export cattle in substantial quantities, of which there are only about half a dozen. So far as the number engaged is concerned, the matter could be handled easily. I believe there could be cooperation among the larger shippers, and shipping companies, and perhaps the government would sit in. The question of subsidy might arise, but I believe the problem could be overcome without going that far. When subsidies are paid a condition is immediately created which very often in the long run will do more harm than good. I believe the matter could be dealt with without resorting to subsidies.

I rose to speak particularly with regard to the British bacon market, which is of vastly more importance to the Canadian producer than is the cattle market. One of our difficulties in the British market lies in the fact that Canada has not made a genuine effort to put on that market the best bacons she can produce. I am not making that statement carelessly, because I hold in my hand the sworn statement of Mr. E. J. Smith, the president of the packers' association, who at the time in question admitted that grade A bacon, which fixes the price of Canadian bacon on the British market—and incidentally, on the sworn evidence of Mr. Stanley McLean, fixes the price of hogs in Canada—consisted of sides varying in weight from 50 to 70 pounds. They are grouped 50 to 55 pounds, 55 to 60 pounds, 60 to 65 pounds and 65 to 70 pounds, and all go into grade A. He further admitted, according to his evidence which I have under my hand, that the hogs which went into the production of those sides included selects, bacon, lights and heavies. Any farmer who sells hogs knows that when he sells a heavy or a light he is penalized a dollar or a dollar and a half, and sometimes as much as two dollars for that hog, as against the base price which is based upon bacon hogs.

Someone may say, "Well, the difficulty is to get selects and bacons." Again I refer to the sworn evidence of Mr. Stanley McLean, in which he admitted that fifty per cent of the hogs would grade selects or bacons. If our export business were composed more largely of selects and bacons the Canadian farmer would be getting a better price in Canada for his hogs. Even with the tremendous increase in the last two or three years, the export of bacon to the United Kingdom does not exceed more than thirty per cent of the total production. A very few years ago it was only about five or ten per cent. If the price of bacon on the British market fixes the price of hogs in Canada, as the sworn evidence declared, we have a condition whereby the thirty per cent exported determines the price of the hogs which go into the production of the other sixty or seventy per cent in Canada. That is a tremendously important point. In my opinion it far outweighs the added value of the British market, which I do not minimize a particle. In fact I take a great deal of pride in the thought that in 1932 I supported the agreement. I believe the bacon arrangement was one of the best features in it, so that I am not by any means minimizing the importance of it.

I am trying to point out how certain conditions work back to the Canadian farmer. I hold in my hand the result of a year's careful study; some may say that it does not amount to very much, but it was very difficult to compile. It has been verified by actual references to officials of the Dutch, Polish and Danish governments. I shall refer to the statement in my hand at sufficient length, Mr. Chairman, to satisfy the rules and to warrant its inclusion on Hansard, because one cannot read a statement of this kind in its exact form. May I say that I am now referring to the statement that the price of bacon in England determines the price of hogs in Canada. I suggest therefore it is reasonable to say that the price of Danish bacon in London fixes the price of Danish hogs, and that the price of Dutch bacon in England fixes the price of Dutch hogs. I offer these statements as reasonable deductions.

The table contains a comparison of hog and bacon prices, which have been carefully worked out. The information contained therein has been analyzed by the best advisers I can get, both here and in the countries to which reference was made. I hold in my hand some of their comments. The information is for the year 1934-35. I am sorry my study covered a period a year ago and that because of the time taken to make the references I could not bring all the figures down to date. The first column shows the prices of Danish bacon in shillings and the second column shows the prices of Danish hogs in Canadian cents. These prices have been reduced to Canadian money in order to make a comparison with Canadian prices. The third column shows the prices of Dutch bacon in London while the fourth column shows the prices of Dutch hogs in Canadian cents. The fifth column shows the price of Canadian bacon in London while the sixth column shows the prices of Canadian hogs. The statement then shows the differentials between Dutch and Canadian hogs. I shall refer to the differential between Danish and Canadian bacon before I take my seat, but for the moment I am disregarding them. The statement is as follows:

Average differential—4·7 cents per lb.

Loss to Canadian farmers:

1934 bacon to Britain 119,717,600 lbs. at 4·7 cts. lb. = $5,626,727.00

1935 " " " = $5,852,331.90

(But, all Canadian hogs are paid on basis of London, although less than 15% of total bacon production goes to Britain.)

I do not know what the figures were last year, but prior to that time ninety per cent of the exports of bacon to Great Britain were made by one concern. It has been declared that the British market fixes the prices for hogs in Canada, but I am putting this statement on Hansard to show that if that is correct, there is something wrong with the price the Canadian farmer is getting for his hogs as compared with the prices the Danish or Dutch farmers receive. Reference may be made to the differential in freight, but on the other hand the matter of exchange operates the other way. There is not very much difference in that respect.

Mr. DUNNING: Has my hon. friend allowed for the time factor? I was told in Great Britain that that is important.

Mr. STEVENS: In order to adjust the time factor all that one has to do is to compare the Canadian hog price with the bacon price of two months away. It will be seen upon examining the statement that there is little difference. There is such a uniformity in the prices for hogs that the variations in the prices of bacon are not reflected properly, apart altogether from the comparison with Dutch prices. All one has to do is to adjust the time between the purchase of the hogs and the production of the bacon, which is well determined. There is no difficulty in doing that.

Why is it that the Danes get from 10 to 14 shillings, and not very long ago as high as 19 shillings, above the Canadian price? We know that Canadian bacon made from select and bacon grade hogs is on a parity with the best Danish bacon. The chef at the Picadilly hotel at London made a test of Russian bacon, Canadian bacon, Danish bacon and another type. This gentleman is one of the most noted chefs in London and without knowing the origin of the different bacons he was testing, he gave first place to the Canadian. This bacon was produced by Schneider's of Kitchener, a very good company but shipping only comparatively small quantities. There is a point I should like to draw to the attention of the government at this time, one which is vital to this transaction we have made with Great Britain. We have the bacon hog grades of lights, heavies, bacons and selects, and then we have four definite grades of bacon ranging from 50-55, 55-60, 60-65 and 65-70. Why is that done? I will tell you. This matter was brought to my attention some years ago when I was Minister of Trade and Commerce. I had a conference with the representatives of the Canadian packers and against my wishes they gained their argument that there was a market for number two bacon in England. Therefore, they insisted on this differentiation in the classes of hogs. No man can say that a heavy hog will produce as good bacon as a select or bacon type hog, especially for a discriminating market such as Great Britain. They insisted upon this variation in the grading of hogs.

This brings us to another point. How is the price of bacon fixed in England, or in the London market? The price of Canadian bacon is fixed by a committee composed exclusively of Britishers, representatives of British importers and distributors. I do not for a moment suggest that they are not fine people and good businessmen; I think it will be found that they are among the best. But I submit that it is absolutely unfair, bearing in mind that the price of British bacon fixes the price not only of the hogs that are shipped overseas but of the sixty or seventy per cent that are not so shipped, to have the price of Canadian bacon determined by a committee composed entirely of representatives of distributing houses in England. I know it will be answered that some of these gentlemen represent the Canadian distributors. That is true: Canada Packers have as their agents some of these gentlemen who are in business over there, making their profit out of the bacon they sell in England, and I certainly should expect them to look after their own interests first. The packers are protected, because, on their own statements, according to a letter written by Mr. McLean in January of this year, they know what to expect on the British market; they know how that market declines in certain months in the autumn, and they anticipate that decline; and the price of hogs in Toronto, in Winnipeg and in other Canadian markets drops in anticipation of the decline they anticipate, based upon their knowledge over a period of years of the British market.

My reasons for saying what I have said are these. First, I want to emphasize the value of the British market to the Canadian producer, but I lay upon this government the responsibility of seeing that the producer gets the full value of that market. That, I think, is a duty which rests upon us as a parliament, and particularly upon the government. I believe that, as the price spreads report recommends, we should inquire carefully as to this committee which fixes the price of Canadian bacon in the British market; we should ascertain definitely whether the Canadian farmer is getting a return equal to that of his competitors in other countries.

There is no differential in the practice of packing. We can cure and pack these products just as cheaply as any country in the world. Of that there is no doubt; or if there is, let us know it, because there is no secret about dealing with these products. I say emphatically that we owe the producer of this country the full measure of the return made available for us by this excellent agreement, and I congratulate the minister on this particular section for having continued the earlier agreement. I should like to refer briefly, before sitting down to this clause respecting—

Mr. CLEAVER: Mr. Chairman, before the hon. member leaves the subject of bacon and hogs, would he mind indicating what steps he thinks should be taken to confine the grade within the limits to which in his opinion it should be confined?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes. I am not pitting my judgment against that of others; I am basing my statement on the views of experts; and I have no hesitation in saying that the weights fifty-five to fifty and fifty-five to sixty, which is the way they are now graded, should be included—but none others—in grade A.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): And only from selects.

Mr. STEVENS: And they should be from selects and bacons. I should like to say a word or two about grading. We have a very good grading system, particularly where hogs are sold on open markets, but great numbers of hogs are delivered direct to the packing plants. The system may have been changed in the last year or two—if it has I do not know—but formerly they were not graded or weighed under government supervision when they were delivered direct; and we recommended definitely, and I have an idea that the recommendation was adopted, that they should be weighed by government weighers when delivered direct to the packers. I would put only these two particular grades under grade A, and I would classify the others as grade B, and let grade B have the lower price. If we did that, grade A would be well up to the Danish price, and what a difference it would make to the Canadian producer, even on the present allocation of price in Canada by the packers, if instead of getting 79 shillings he got 89 or 92 shillings, which would be ten or twelve shillings more for the higher grade. So long as you have in grade A heavies and lights and other classes which have no business there at all, the whole grade gets a lower price than Danish bacon; whereas if the selects and the bacons only were included in the grade A class you would get ten to twelve shillings, and in some cases more than that, above the present price, which would be reflected in the return to the producers.

I intend to conclude with a word on this particular clause. On the face of things it might look as though we were blindly complying with an agreement to restrict, or permitting one party to the bargain to impose arbitrary restrictions. But that is not at all the point at issue; it never has been. The point at issue is that, due to propinquity and its standard of quality, Danish bacon secured a very strong hold on the British market, as also did the bacon of Poland, Ireland, Holland and some other countries. They were improving their standard of products, were in close touch with the British market, and gave good service. By reason of distance we were at a considerable disadvantage. But in 1932 the British, very generously, I think, with respect to an item of this kind, because as the Minister of Finance knows, from time immemorial bacon has been looked upon as a favourite item almost a sacred, on the British breakfast table—

Mr. DUNNING: Particularly bacon.

Mr. STEVENS: Particularly bacon. Great Britain gave us a quota of two and a half million hundredweight on the British market, which was far beyond anything that we were then equipped to supply; in fact, up to the present we have supplied, I think, not more than half that quantity in any one year. In doing that the British government had to impose a quota on other countries, that is, notify other countries that they could not exceed a certain amount. If we had suddenly increased our production without notice to them, and without any assurance that it would be maintained, it would have disturbed their whole internal market as well as their relations with other countries. Therefore they asked that Canada advise them from time to time what she could supply; I believe the request was that we should indicate for three month periods, as long as six months ahead, what the probable supply would be.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the present arrangement.

Mr. STEVENS: It is simply a common sense, businesslike request from the British government to ourselves, and everything possible should be done as no doubt is being done, to comply with it.

The fixing of the price of Canadian hogs by the price of bacon in Great Britain lays upon the government as well as upon those who control the packing business a most onerous responsibility. Personally I do not believe that the Canadian hogs slaughtered and marketed as Canadian bacon should necessarily be on the same basis as export bacon. I know that the general law applies; but after all, in these days the general laws of supply and demand and so forth are being shot to pieces, to use a colloquialism, by every country in the world, and we are faced with these conditions everywhere. My opinion is that we should study these matters first from the standpoint of the producer, because if there is one class that has suffered it has been the producer, particularly producers of live stock and wheat.

I have one further observation to make; I do not like to say this, but perhaps it ought to be said. The argument is advanced that if you look at the profit on meats you will find that it is only a quarter of a cent per pound, or something like that; and of course, if you accept that at its face value, you are silenced; there is no answer. But this is what I cannot get over. During the last six years Canadian farmers as a class from coast to coast have been suffering perhaps more than any other class because of the low prices of cattle and hogs. The Canadian farmer has been suffering hardships which he ought not to be asked to bear. But during these same years the packing industry has passed through the most prosperous period in its existence. It will be observed that in a four year period—it may have been a five year period prior to 1935—they set aside, in addition to these depreciation reserves to which I have referred, reserves equal to one-half their total capital and had further reserves that were not disclosed until uncovered by an investigation. Again, I am not for a moment saying that merely for the purpose of calling attention to this healthy condition shall I say among the packers; but I do say that in the light of all the other points I have raised it is due to the farmer that this house should scrutinize, and scrutinize with a degree of attention approaching suspicion, some of the statements that are made to farmers as an excuse for the low price of their products.

Mr. BLAIR: I appreciate the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Stevens). The difference between what the Dutch farmer gets for his bacon and the price in England, and the difference between what the Canadian farmer gets and the price of Canadian bacon in Britain, is a question that should be very seriously considered by this house. Unquestionably the Canadian packers are making it difficult for the Canadian farmer to raise pigs. I am sure that those who have raised pigs in Canada must realize that they have been doing so at a loss for a number of years. I have here a letter from Mr. Stanley McLean of Canada Packers, an outstanding man, who disagrees with some of the opinions that have been expressed. He says:

> In other words, if Canadian hogs had been as good as Danish hogs, the Canadian farmer in the last three years would have received for the hogs he produced an additional $12,000,000 per year.

That is an important statement.

> The fact that the Canadian farmer did not receive this extra $12,000,000 per year was a misfortune.

That is from Mr. Stanley McLean of Canada Packers. It is believed that the spread is too great between the price paid in Great Britain and the price paid here to the Canadian farmer. The hon. member has referred to the differential in prices, and I was going to bring that up. I have figures—they are the same as he has given—showing an average of about 4·7 cents as the differential between what the Canadian farmer gets and what the Danish farmer gets in relation to the profits made by the packer. Our packers seem to take all the profits, leaving a small margin of loss for the farmer.

There is another matter to which I would call attention, something I have been working at for the last eight or nine years. I started nine years ago and made a poor success. At one time I was in touch with certain Danish professors; in fact, these gentlemen from Copenhagen were at my home. They said I would never get good bacon and hams from Yorkshire hogs. I had two hundred of them, and these gentlemen laughed at me and said, "These hogs have no hams on them; they have just two posts for hind legs and you will never get hams from them." I got reports from Denmark, and this professor gave me the differentiation between the shoulder and the side. Danish hogs have a larger ham than shoulder. Our Yorkshire hogs are wild animals; they have not been really domesticated. The Danes have beaten us in bacon, eggs, and butter on the British market. Their industry is highly specialized, and I suggest we take advantage of specialization along these lines.

Eight years ago I appealed strongly to the Minister of Agriculture of that day (Mr. Motherwell). One of his assistants was named Arkell, and they wrote to me that they had tried Canadian bacon on the British market and that it tasted better than any Danish bacon. Well, I do not care what they like or do not like. If they want Canadian bacon, we can keep a few Canadian hogs for them; but what we want to know is what the British market wants. It was from that point of view that I argued with them eight years ago. Then the Hon. Mr. Weir got in, and by persistent efforts he imported the Swedish Landrace. It is not a Danish pig but it is far superior to our Yorkshire. It is different from the Danish landwehr which is a better type. I received from Copenhagen a statement comparing the two types with our own Yorkshire. The Swedish is midway between, but is a part Red York, and in the British market it is priced exactly between the price of Canadian bacon and Danish bacon. Danish bacon is generally ten shillings per hundredweight—112 pounds—above the Canadian; Swedish runs about five shillings above Canadian. You will find by your weekly reports that that keeps fairly steady. The trick is here. If we in Canada are going to compete with Denmark on the British market why should we not secure a type of pig that the British people want, and then try and cure that pig by the system they require?

Another thing. Hon. Mr. Weir imported some fifty or sixty of these Swedish pigs from Sweden, and I believe he would have brought in the Danish pig but for the interference of the oligarchy in the Department of Agriculture here. I believe they prevented the Hon. Mr. Motherwell bringing them in. I never blamed him; I blame the department. I blame the department for not allowing Mr. Weir to bring them in, and I blame the same department for not allowing Mr. Gardiner to bring them in. I am not sure of the personal views of the minister, but it is from that department I got the opinions. To show how brilliant they are in the Department of Agriculture, I was there the other day and I said to the man in charge of the publishing, "You should send to the members of the agriculture committee the live stock market report." He said, "We do; we send them every week." I said, "You do not." He said, "I will show you," and he got out the list of names. The first was Shaver, the next Eccles Gott. I said, "They are out of the house." The next was George Spotton and the next Tom Cayley. I said, "They are dead. Your list has not been revised for the last six years.

Mr. BENNETT: That is right.

Mr. BLAIR: I should like to know why the members of this house are not getting that report. That shows how they are conducting their affairs. I touch my hat to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). I have great appreciation of the service he has rendered already, but I will take my hat right off to him if he will go there and dismiss about one-third of them. They are simply deadbeats, not alive to the world, but dead as Caesar's ghost.

Mr. BENNETT: Then they do not need the lethal chamber.

Mr. BLAIR: They say it is impossible to bring these pigs in because of the foot and mouth disease. I said, "I will go to the books and see what you have in your department." I wanted the latest on foot and mouth disease, but I could find nothing less than thirty years old. If you go to the library over there, I doubt if you could find anything more modern now. The foot and mouth disease is not a congenital disease; the department well knows it, and the man talking to me well knew it—he was a veterinary. Those pigs could be removed at birth with perfect safety. I said, "I will pay the expense of keeping these pigs under quarantine for two generations. You bring them in and leave them here, and surely by that time if they have any disease we shall know." But he said no; for the welfare of the animal husbandry branch he would not.

I am indebted to Hon. Mr. Weir for bringing in these Swedish pigs. I believe he was conscientious and made a noble effort to help the Canadian farmer. Here is the first report on those pigs, and I have followed them carefully since they came in for experiment. I want to draw attention to how these six York pigs compared with the two Landrace pigs. The average age of the York pigs was 189⅔ days, and the average weight was 208 pounds. The average age of the Landrace pigs was 161 days, and the average weight 212 pounds. The Landrace pigs, in 28⅔ days less time, were four pounds heavier than the Yorks. That is the poorest report we have of the Landrace pigs.

The next experiment took place in Hull; I followed them to Hull. These men have told the truth as far as I know, although they were opposed to the pigs. Here we have six Yorks and two Landrace. The Landrace, 55 days younger than some of the Yorks, weigh as much as the Yorks. Hon. members who are not farmers surely can appreciate this: You have two pens of pigs, Yorks and Landrace; you have finished feeding the Landrace pigs and 55 days after they have been shipped, you are still feeding a bunch of Yorks. The cream, the profit, is all gone. With the permission of the house I should like to put these tables on Hansard.

Mr. MacINNIS: On a point of order. A few evenings ago the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Douglas) wanted to put some figures on Hansard and the Minister of Justice, leading the house, said it was out of order. A few days later someone else on the government side got away with it. If it is not good for us on this side it is not for the other side.

Mr. BLAIR: I will read them.

Mr. DUNNING: On the point of order, I think on reflection my hon. friend will admit that he was wrong in the case he refers to with regard to hon. gentlemen on this side of the house. My recollection of the incident is clear; no objection was taken.

Mr. MacINNIS: I did not say there was any objection taken, but the leader of the house could have objected as he did when we on this side tried to do it.

Mr. DUNNING: Further, without trying to limit the generality of the discussion, may I say that some of it at least would more properly take place on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture than on the clause of the agreement. Not that I can urge it to a final ruling, because I suppose one could say that anything connected with ham, bacon or cattle might be discussed, and of course Landrace hogs might become Canadian bacon which might be sold in the British market. While I suppose my hon. friend can connect it up, I do suggest to him and others who might follow the same line of discussion that a more fitting time for much of the material would be on the estimates of the Minister of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN: Any hon. member has the privilege of placing any documents on Hansard provided he has the unanimous consent of the house. If not he can read them if he has time.

Mr. SPENCE: I suggest that the hon. gentleman be allowed to put them on Hansard without reading them. It will take less time, and be more accurate.

Mr. HEAPS: I have no objection to the hon. member putting these figures on Hansard by consent of the house, but if he is going to do it we want the same privilege extended to every hon. member of this chamber.

An hon. MEMBER: This is very important.

Mr. HEAPS: The figures are no more important to the hon. member for Wellington North than the figures of the hon. member for Weyburn last week were to him. If it is understood that every hon. member will have the same privilege, I have no objection.

Mr. BENNETT: This is a very important statement. Perhaps the hon. member might read part, and then let it go in.

Mr. BLAIR: I suppose I am obliged to read these figures, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member has received unanimous consent to place the tables on Hansard without reading them.

Mr. BLAIR: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The tables are as follows:

Kindly notice the age, weight, and grade of Landrace pigs compared with the Yorks. The farmer has to feed the York pigs 30 days longer to be the size of the Landrace. This partly explains why the Danes buy our grain and drive us off the British market. Last year we only filled half our quota.

I should like to direct attention to the experiment at Guelph. Six pigs were taken there and slaughtered one day, cut up the next day and examined carefully. The weight of one Landrace pig yas 195 pounds, as compared with a Yorkshire weighing 210 pounds. The Landrace pig was fifty-five days younger, but dressed four pounds more than the Yorkshire. What is more, I saw a professor there lecture to two hundred farmers and tell them to raise the Yorkshire pig, one of which took fifty-five days longer to grow and dressed four pounds less than the Landrace. I was very angry at the professor: I asked him, "Have you no consideration for the farmer or are you simply considering the grading of pigs for Canada Packers?" He said, "Yes, the time required in growing these pigs should be taken into consideration."

[Mr. Blair.]

There is just one other point I want to mention. I would like hon. members to notice the age and weight and grade of the Landrace pigs as compared with the Yorkshires. The farmer has to feed a Yorkshire pig for thirty days longer in order to get a lower dressed weight. I could have made it much more than thirty days, but if I am lying I want to be lying on the right side. This partly explains why the Danes are able to buy our grain and drive us off the British market, as they have been doing for years. Last year we only half filled our quota, because we could not afford to feed our pigs. What with the differentiation mentioned by another hon. member, and the type of pigs we are compelled to grow, we cannot compete with the Danes on the British market. I may be wrong, but it seems to me a real crime against our farmers that this should be permitted. The Swedish pigs should be distributed among our farmers.

Mr. FURNISS: Mr. Chairman, I have been very much interested in the discussion this afternoon, particularly in what has been said by the hon. member for Kootenay East and the hon. member for Wellington North. I am a farmer, and I am interested in seeing that the farmer gets as much as possible for his hogs. Perhaps a conversation I had last fall with a pork packer might interest this committee. That conversation was induced by a market report appearing in the Farmer's Advocate, which was called to my attention by one of my neighbour farmers. Under the heading Hog Prices Drop, the article says:

Last week hog prices tumbled from 35 to 50 cents, closing at 8.50 for bacons off trucks at Toronto.

Then several other quotations are given which I need not read. The significant part of this report follows:

Canadian bacon in the old country held steady with the previous week, which was 7 shillings below the same week a year ago. On the other hand Danish bacon was quoted for the week ending September 18 at 15 shillings above the same week a year ago. English, Irish and Swedish bacon were all quoted, the week above mentioned, from 8 to 10 shillings above Canadian.

I wrote the editor of the magazine and asked if that statement was correct, and the reply I received was that he had no reason to think it was not correct. So I went to a pork packing plant not far from where I live to inquire into the matter, and in the course of our conversation I referred to the price spreads committee, to which the hon. member for Kootenay East referred. Mind you, I hold no brief for the pork packers, but there may be some merit in his reply, which was: "There was something about the production of bacon that the price spreads committee did not get at. He explained it in this way: "We will never have bacon in Canada as uniform in quality as they have in Denmark, because they import all their feed, and they feed to a formula in order to produce pork of the best quality as cheaply as possible. The quality of pork or bacon that we get in Canada depends largely on the grain grown in the locality where the hogs are fed."

I think there is something in that argument, because as long ago as I can remember I heard farmers discussing the relative qualities of bacon from hogs fed on corn and hogs fed on peas. It may be that there is something in the quality of Danish bacon which cannot be seen or told by the weight of the bacon in the particular grade. I think that is something the Department of Agriculture should take up: Perhaps I should have mentioned these points when the estimates of that department were under consideration, but when the discussion turned this way I thought it would not be improper to introduce this question.

There is just one matter about which I should like to ask the hon. member for Wellington North. Was any record kept of the amount that was fed the Yorkshire pigs and the Landrace pigs?

Mr. BLAIR: Records were kept, but I have not an accurate record here. It is in terms which I do not very well understand.

Article agreed to.

On article 6:

The government of Canada undertake that the goods the growth, produce or manufacture of the United Kingdom enumerated in Schedule IV appended hereto, when conveyed without transhipment from any part of the British Empire enjoying the benefits of the British preferential tariff into a sea, lake or river port of Canada, shall not be subjected to duties of customs higher than those specified in that schedule.

The government of Canada undertake as regards goods the growth, produce or manufacture of the United Kingdom other than those enumerated in Schedule IV that, under the British preferential tariff, no new protective duty shall be imposed and no existing protective duty increased except after an inquiry at which United Kingdom producers shall enjoy full rights of audience.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like to say something wth regard to article 6 of the budget. What the industrial worker in Canada wants more than anything else is permanency and stability in his job. I quite realize that some of the items contained in schedule IV do not reduce the rates of duty to any great extent, though of course others do. Perhaps the effect on industry just now will not be anything like as detrimental as might have been the case but for the fact that, as everyone knows, every pound of steel that possibly can be imported into Great Britain is being secured by that country, and their shipments of steel are not very great. On the whole the steel industry, on account of the war scare in Europe, is not affected as adversely as it would have been. But what everybody in industry is frightened to death over is this: How far is it going to go? Every year for the last ten years or more of Liberal rule the whole industrial fabric, including hundreds, thousands, and up to a million workers in industry have been alarmed by the constant, never-ceasing tariff tinkering. The party now holding office, the Liberal party, brought in a budget in 1922 in which it reduced the tariff on some 50 items, more or less.

Mr. GOLDING: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacNICOL: The hon. member says "Hear, hear," but he is not talking for the industrial worker.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacNICOL: Thank you for that, sir—although I thought it was another hon. member. Thank you for your "Hear, hear." Then in 1923 the Liberal party gave a ten per cent discount on all British preference items imported from Great Britain. At that time the country had a very able Minister of Finance, and I will not say we have not such to-day. I confess I think a great deal of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Carried.

Mr. MacNICOL: He has improved very materially since he came east.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): That is the worst knock he ever got.

Mr. MacNICOL: His association with business in the east has broadened him out a great deal. May I quote what the late Mr. Fielding said in 1923, as it appears at page 18 of a pamphlet containing his budget speech:

> There is a thought which does not receive as much consideration as I think sometimes it should be given in public discussions, and that is the desirability of something like tariff stability. Business men do not like to be always threatened with changes in the tariff. There is no finality in legislation either as respects that tariff or as respects anything else.

Further on he says:

> Speaking broadly, it is possible to give the country a reasonable assurance of stability of tariff.

I say the very same thing about the workers in industry. I know something about industry, and about the attitude of mind of the worker. He is just as much interested in tariff schedules as any industrialist, because he knows his job depends on the tariff protecting the plant in which he works. How can there be any permanency in employment if we are going to have anything but permanency in tariff schedules?

Here we have a new set of tariff schedules. The government of the province of Ontario has adopted or is about to adopt a minimum wage regulation. How can they carry out any minimum wage regulation in that province if there is a constantly changing tariff? I submit it would be very difficult to do. When in office in 1924, the Liberal party cut the tariff on a long list of items. I shall not enumerate them, but will content myself with saying that the list was long, and the change seriously interfered with employment in industry.

Mr. GOLDING: No.

Mr. MacNICOL: The man who says "No" does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. GOLDING: That is your opinion.

Mr. MacNICOL: I can prove it right now. That is my opinion.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Give your figures.

Mr. MacNICOL: I will give them; I did not intend to do so, but I will. In September, 1924, J. R. Shaw of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, appearing before the unemployment conference in Ottawa told the government of the day that their tariff policy was ruinous to employment in industry, and backed up his statement with a long list of industries which had closed from 1921 to 1924. Among those industries there were 240 making foodstuffs of one kind and another, which in the previous three years had closed their doors as a result of the tariffs imposed by the dominion government. There were 24 tobacco industries; 19 fertilizer industries; 85 connected with oils, chemicals and drugs; 43 making pulp and paper supplies of one kind or another; 271 engaged in the preparation of lumber and wood products; 49 furniture manufacturers—and quite a number of furniture factories are ready to close their doors to-day; 81 engaged in making building materials, and all kinds of materials in connection with the building industry; 31 concerns manufacturing agricultural implements and tools—

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): What about this year? Are they going to close this year too?

Mr. MacNICOL: —18 making carriages; 172 engaged in some kind of iron and steel fabrication; 23 manufacturing leather products and 24 in the footwear industry.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: What is the hon. member reading from?

Mr. MacNICOL: I am reading from a report submitted in Ottawa on September 4, 1924, to the government of the day by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Oh.

Mr. MacNICOL: Someone says "Oh"; it is all very well to say "Oh".

Mr. DONNELLY: Can the hon. member tell us how many factories were opened in that time?

Mr. MacNICOL: I will tell the hon. member this—and other hon. members from Saskatchewan—that the workers in Ontario are becoming alarmed. The Prime Minister of Canada represents a Saskatchewan constituency. The Minister of Finance is a former premier, as is the Minister of Agriculture. Parliament has done little else in the last year or two but vote for the province of Saskatchewan. The worker in Ontario wants some stability in his job; otherwise he cannot put up the money to help Saskatchewan. In 1925 the list of reductions to the tariff by the present—

Mr. GOLDING: Will the hon. member permit a question? He has told us about the industries which closed up. Would he now give us the total number employed in industry between the years 1921 and 1930?

Mr. MacNICOL: No, but I will do better than that for the hon. member. In a few minutes I shall make a statement in reply to something said a day or two ago by the Postmaster General, because I must set him right. At the same time I will set the hon. member right. The statement was with reference to emigration, and men being thrown out of work.

Mr. GOLDING: Give us the number employed.

Mr. MacNICOL: I would like to proceed in chronological order. May I repeat that in 1922 there were cuts on some 50 odd items. In 1923 there was a ten per cent cut, or a ten per cent discount. In 1924 there was a long list of tariff cuts on all kinds of manufactured goods made by Canadian workers. In 1925 also there was a short but very important list of items cut. In 1926 there were 40 important items cut, but by 1927 the wise words of the late Hon. Mr. Fielding, as uttered in 1923, had apparently sunk in. The castigation and severe thrashing which the government received in the 1925 election for its tariff cuts apparently had sunk in, with the result that in 1927 there were no tariff cuts. In 1928 there were 169 reductions in the tariff, affecting commodities most of which were made by Canadian workers. In 1929 changes were made in 35 items. When the present Minister of Finance came into office in 1930, changes were made in from 250 to 300 items. In the 1936 budget, 150 items more or less were affected, while in connection with this agreement there are 27 pages of items. As one who has been long associated with industry I say it is about time the Canadian workers and the Canadian manufacturer were given a little relief from attack by the government through the cutting down of tariffs and the cutting out of jobs.

Perhaps I have not gone through the items as closely as I should have, but I have noted some of the changes. The agricultural implement manufacturers are not the bandits and robbers they have been called in this house. In any event, their workmen are as fine as can be found in the world. Those workmen use Canadian products. I am opposed to any interference with the jobs of Canadian workers. What do we find? We find that in 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, 1928, 1929 and 1930 there was an attack, either small or large upon the agricultural implement manufacture and his employees.

Mr. GOLDING: In the number employed?

Mr. MacNICOL: If the hon. member will look at the Canada Year Book he will get the figures of employment in the agricultural implement plants.

Mr. DONNELLY: There have been very few employed in the manufacture of implements since 1930.

Mr. MacNICOL: The hon. member knows that a world depression has existed, but even during that time the manufacturers kept quite a number of men employed. In connection with the manufacture of blankets, cottons, flannels, woollens and knitted goods changes were made in 1922, 1923, 1927 and 1928. The same thing has happened in connection with the manufacture of boots and shoes. The tariff on these articles was cut in 1922, 1923, 1928 and, while I am not sure, I believe it is being cut again this year. There are a lot of plants in this country making machinery of one kind or another. I find that the government now in power has always taken delight in crucifying the worker in the machinery plants of this country. Reductions in the machinery tariff were made in 1924, 1925, 1926, 1928, 1929 and 1930. I am not referring to the manufacturers of agricultural machinery; I am referring to the manufacturers of woodworking machinery, iron working machinery, mining machinery and other types.

A moment ago I said that I wanted to refer to what the Postmaster General said a day or two ago, and in doing so I shall reply to the hon. member for Huron-Perth.

The Postmaster General lives in the city of London, and perhaps he can make a manufacturing establishment out of a school house. Here is a report of his meeting in Hamilton a day or two ago:

Hon. J. C. Elliott, Postmaster General for Canada, who also spoke, dealt extensively with explanations of Canada's new trade treaties and with statistics showing an increase in international trade.

"Tory rule in Canada has always brought with it a depression and an exodus of our youth to the United States when opportunities here became scarce," Hon. Mr. Elliott said.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacNICOL: Hon. members say "hear, hear," but no one knows better than the Postmaster General that that last statement is not based on facts. What happened when the party of the Postmaster General came into power in 1921?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Prosperity.

Mr. MacNICOL: I represent thirty to forty thousand workers, and when they are out of work they do not consider there is any prosperity. That may be the kind of prosperity the hon. member for Moose Jaw wants, but it is not the kind I want.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I take objection to the remarks of my hon. friend. There was prosperity between 1921 and 1930.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am going to give a little picture of how prosperous the workers were in 1922, after one year of Liberal rule and tariff cuts. Emigration to the United States increased. The number of Canadians leaving this country for lack of something to do here increased. In December, 1921, the number of Canadians who left Canada for the United States was 3,057. In June, 1922, a total of 4,899 left Canada. In December, 1922, the number increased to 7,468, and in June, 1923, it had increased to 18,879.

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex): I should like to say to my hon. friend that at no time during my remarks in Hamilton did I use the words "Tory rule." What he says now as to what I said then about Tory rule applies to Conservative rule.

Mr. MacNICOL: The Postmaster General knows—

Mr. BENNETT: That it is six o'clock.

Mr. MacNICOL: I shall continue after six.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

[Mr. MacNicol.]

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. DUNNING: We are on article 6, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: On schedule IV.

Customs tariff—ex. 8. Extracts of meat and fluid beef, not medicated: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Mr. MacNICOL: When the house rose at six o'clock I had nearly finished. I was speaking about the report of the speech made by the Postmaster General in Hamilton on, I believe, March 13, and was analyzing the statement that "under Tory rule—

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex): The 12th, it was.

Mr. MacNICOL: —"there was a great exodus to the United States." I pointed out that from 1930 to 1935 migration to the United States was prohibited, and Canadians could not have gone into that country even though they wanted to. Shortly before that I was pointing out what happened under a Liberal administration following 1921. I gave the figures of emigration from Canada to the United States for several different months in three different years. I will add this, that for the whole of the year 1922, under Liberal rule, the average monthly emigration of Canadians to the United States was 5,190, and for the whole of the year 1923 the monthly average of Canadian emigration to the United States was 15,165. The total for 1922 was 62,289, and for 1923, 181,973. I have not the totals for 1924, but for the first six months of that year, under Liberal rule—and, I maintain, largely as a result of the constant slashing of the tariff by the Liberal party in the years 1922, 1923 and 1924—the emigration from Canada to the United States was as follows: January, 15,513; February, 13,993; March, 13,409; April, 17,517; May, 17,216; June, 19,177. Those figures do not at all bear out the statement quoted as having been made by the Postmaster General at Hamilton. Perhaps he did not make it, and the newspaper report is wrong; but if he did, it is founded on an error as far as the Conservative party is concerned.

I was asked earlier in my speech by an hon. member, and neglected to answer, how many businesses were started under the Liberal administration in 1922, 1923, and 1924 up to the time of the report made by John R. Shaw, of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, to the unemployment conference which met in Ottawa on September 4, 1924. There were 934 businesses started and 1,351 closed.

Mr. DEACHMAN: What year was that?

Mr. MacNICOL: Up to 1924.

Mr. DEACHMAN: Between 1922 and 1924?

Mr. MacNICOL: 1922, 1923, and 1924.

Mr. McINTOSH: Is that actual or speculative?

Mr. MacNICOL: I doubt very much whether a responsible citizen, the head of a great organization, would come to Ottawa and present to an unemployment conference, called by the government, fictitious figures. They are not mine; I take them as they were quoted. At that time I was in business and attended more than one such conference. The meaning of those statistics is that during the three years mentioned there was a net contraction in Canada of 417 businesses. During the dinner hour my attention was called to the fact that I had not completed the list of the businesses which closed. It is not in the notes of Hansard, and I must have left it out. This report shows that six rubber goods factories and twenty-three factories for autos and auto supplies were closed.

Mr. DUNNING: Automobile factories?

Mr. MacNICOL: Automobile and automobile equipment factories.

Mr. DUNNING: Twenty-three?

Mr. MacNICOL: Well, the number twenty-three was given by the chairman of the Canadian Manufacturers Association on the occasion I refer to. He may be wrong. As to that I do not know.

Mr. DUNNING: Sounds exaggerated.

Mr. MacNICOL: Well, maybe, but if you consider bumpers and wheels and—

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex): Nuts.

Mr. MacNICOL: —cushions and other articles that enter into an automobile, I suppose it may be correct. There were also closed seven toy factories, six glass parts factories, 156 textile factories of one kind and another, including wearing apparel, and 73 miscellaneous. I give that list as it was given at the unemployment conference. I assume that the government of the day would check it over, and I never heard that its accuracy had been disputed.

I may be asked how many factories started in Canada as a result of the beneficial tariff introduced by the present leader of the opposition when he was prime minister of this country. The Ottawa correspondent of Business Week—I do not seem to have the date—says 272 branches of United States industries were established in Canada between 1930 and 1935: these included 23 manufacturing vegetable products; 8, animal products; 20, textile products; 25, wood and paper products; 73, iron products; 33, non-ferrous metal products; 10, non-metallic mineral goods; 63, chemical products; and 17, miscellaneous.

Mr. DUNNING: Can the hon. member give us the number of factories that closed during that period?

Mr. MacNICOL: The report does not give it and I have not the figures here, but the facts are probably as stated here. But the minister knows just as well as I know—and I know personally—that a great number of splendid factories were started in Canada during the time the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) was Prime Minister.

Mr. YOUNG: Is my hon. friend trying to prove that employment was greater between 1930 and 1935 than between 1925 and 1930?

Mr. MacNICOL: Oh, no, I am not trying to prove that, but I do say that as a result of the beneficial tariff policy of the ex-Prime Minister, between 1930 and 1935, there was much more employment in Canada than there would have been but for that policy. I do not want to get into an argument with my hon. friend for Huron North (Mr. Deachman); he and I are as far apart as the poles. He may have been secretary of the Consumers' League, but that does not mean a single solitary thing to me; that did not give any employment. The only man that I want to get into an argument with is the man who can tell me how many men he gave employment to.

Mr. DEACHMAN: How many men did the hon. member's policy give employment to? Take a typical Canadian city, Hamilton. Let him tell us how many men his policy gave employment to in that city. That would be interesting.

Mr. MacNICOL: I certainly can, and I am glad the hon. gentleman has asked that question because I can plainly see that he is so far removed from employment and industry that perhaps he cannot grasp the situation. I will mention only one factory.

Mr. DEACHMAN: Give all.

Mr. MacNICOL: No, one will do. I could give a great number, and in fact I have given the list before so that it is not necessary to repeat it now. He has spoken of Hamilton so I will mention the Dominion Foundries and Steel Company. As a direct result of the tariff policy of the late government, giving protection on steel plate over forty inches and I believe up to sixty-six inches, in that one plant alone a goodly increase of men were employed making steel plate which would not have been made in Canada had it not been for the fact that steel plate under sixty-six inches was protected. I will go further. I believe the present Minister of Finance has the best interest of the country at heart, as he sees it, but with due respect to him I will say that the number of men in the Dominion Foundries and Steel Company's plant in Hamilton can be increased materially if his government will increase the protection on steel up to seventy-eight inches, twelve inches more than at present. A short time ago I saw a statement which perhaps the hon. member for Huron North also has seen.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps my hon. friend will be interested to know that the plant he mentions was never so busy as it is to-day.

Mr. MacNICOL: Yes, and the minister knows why as well as I do. It is because the British companies that make steel plate are at present as busy as they can be making steel plates for battleships, cruisers, destroyers and so on. The minister knows very well that there is not much, if any, construction steel coming to Canada to-day from the old land. There may be some, but I believe the quantity is shrinking. And for the same reason.

Mr. DUNNING: That is not the only thing they make.

Mr. MacNICOL: Construction steel may not be shipped out of England at present because of the insufficiency of steel at home for the manufacture of necessary war equipment, and therefore it is no wonder that the steel business is active in Canada. During the late government's administration the company in question equipped their plant to make steel plate over forty inches, and the very fact that they were able to roll steel up to sixty and seventy inches resulted in employment for a good many more men.

The Minister of Agriculture on March 9 last, made the following remarks as reported in Hansard:

> I am one of those who believe that if we want to sell our wheat in the old country market we should be prepared to bring back [Mr. Deachman.]

to this country the shirts we wear when we are producing that wheat, the pants we wear when we grow that wheat, and the boots and shoes we wear when we grow that wheat.

I venture to suggest that the Minister of Justice does not agree with the Minister of Agriculture that boots and shoes should be imported.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I did not hear the argument, but on general principle I would side with the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. MacNICOL: The Minister of Justice knows that they make very fine shoes in the city of Quebec. I do not blame the Minister of Agriculture for speaking as strongly as he can for his agricultural friends and trying to get material for them at as low a price as he can, but he is a minister of the crown now, and he must think of all Canadians. He has to think of the workers in the factories throughout Canada, and if he goes to Hamilton to make a speech he may not say to the workers in that city: How would you like to have your boots and shoes, your clothing, textiles and cottons, brought in from Great Britain? He cannot ask that question in Hamilton because in the audience there will doubtless be a good many textile and cotton workers listening to what he has to say. No; that is not sound doctrine. We have all got to work together in this country, and if the hon. member for Huron North does not know it—and I do not suppose he does—I may tell him that there are hundreds of thousands of men employed in industry throughout Canada. There are, of course, some men working in Huron, but because there are not many thousands of men working there is no reason why the hon. member should persist in season and out in attacking the workers of Hamilton, Oshawa, Toronto, and other cities throughout Canada.

I would ask the hon. member for St. Johns-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Rheaume) whether the bringing in of sewing machines from Great Britain, as no doubt some will be brought in under the lower duty, will provide employment in the city of St. Johns. I would ask the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Gladstone) whether the bringing in of lawn-mowers from Great Britain, providing employment for workmen over there, will help the workers who make lawn-mowers in Guelph. I would ask the hon. member for Brantford City (Mr. Macdonald) whether chocolate imports will help the chocolate workers in Brantford City, or whether helping the biscuit makers in Great Britain by means of imports from that country will help the biscuit makers in the city of London, Ontario. Will the bringing in of hollow-ware from Great Britain at a lower duty give plenty of work to the hollow-ware workers in London, Ontario.

Take the fine paper workers in Cornwall and Mille Roches, Montreal and other paper making cities; will this give work in those cities? Suppose steel girders were admitted at a lower rate of duty from Great Britain; it is not going to happen at the moment on account of the war scare, but if the war scare passes they would be admitted, some coming perhaps from Belgium, processed a little in Great Britain; would that provide work for the steel workers of Hamilton and Sault Ste. Marie? And I ask hon. members in whose constituencies there are textile mills whether the bringing in of $25,000,000 worth more or less of British textiles will help the textile workers in Sherbrooke, Montreal, Hamilton and Kingston—I wish the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) were here to get that last. I do wish the hon. member for York North (Mr. Mulock) were here to-night, because I should so like to ask him whether the bringing in of lead pencils from Great Britain in large quantities will help the pencil makers in Newmarket—a new industry.

Mr. DUNNING: I take it my hon. friend is in favour of this trade agreement with Great Britain?

Mr. MacNICOL: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: I understood so. I know he wants to be helpful. Perhaps he would be good enough to indicate what he suggests we should take from Great Britain in exchange for our exports of wheat, metals, motor cars and all the other things we send there.

Mr. MacNICOL: As I am not the Minister of Finance I do not propose to tell the minister what he should do.

Mr. DUNNING: But I want advice.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am first for the Canadian worker, because I was one of them for a long time.

Mr. DUNNING: And are yet.

Mr. MacNICOL: I try to keep their interests paramount, because sitting in this house there are too many free traders from Saskatchewan, and I am sorry to say we have one from Huron North, Ontario. What business wants, and what the workmen want, is stability in the tariff. We all know that during the ten years more or less when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power there was a constant procession of tariff cuts. It is surely time to end that, and to let business get set, so that the worker who stands at the machine can feel that that machine is going to continue in operation, and not be put out of business by a tariff cut. I realize the problem the minister is up against, and I want to help in any way I can—

Mr. DUNNING: That is the line I want.

Mr. MacNICOL: Labour and capital are crying out for stability. Industry and labour ask that the government cease the constant cutting of tariffs; let them become stabilized, and get on with production along established lines. To-day they are all scared to death. A man said to me when I was home over the week-end, "There is the Prime Minister down in Washington. He will be coming back with a bag full of tricks, and next year we shall have an onslaught of tariff cuts."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacNICOL: It is interesting to observe hon. members thumping their desks in anticipation of another onslaught of tariff cuts. I will tell them what will happen to them, the very same as happened in 1925, when they were trimmed to a frazzle. But they did not go out of power then because we had free trade groups from the west at that time and they kept them in power. But they were trimmed to a frazzle in 1930—

An hon. MEMBER: What about 1935?

Mr. MacNICOL: Keep right on along the road you are going and out of power you will go the first chance.

Mr. GOLDING: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: I think I had better remind the committee now, in order to clarify the situation, that we are on schedule IV, item ex 8, extracts of meat and fluid beef, not medicated.

Mr. GOLDING: There were some statements made to which I wish to refer. Since the question has been discussed I think an answer should be permitted. Let me say at the outset that I appreciate the addresses given in the house by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) because I believe he is absolutely sincere in what he says, and also that he makes a careful study of any questions before he speaks. This afternoon he said that thousands of industrial workers were thrown out of employment by the tariff reductions in 1923. I asked the hon. member to give a statement of the number employed for the years from 1922 to 1930 in order that we might know whether thousands were thrown out of employment. I think the leader of the opposition will agree with me that that is a fair question to ask. It has not been answered.

Mr. MacNICOL: I did not have the figures. I am not a walking encyclopaedia.

Mr. GOLDING: I quite agree. The point is that any hon. member who makes such a statement as that should have the figures. He ought to have the figures before he makes the statement.

Mr. MacNICOL: I made the statement that thousands were leaving this country to look for work in the United States.

Mr. GOLDING: What I want is the number employed in industry in those years. I think that is fair.

Last year when the reduction in agricultural implement duties was being discussed the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey) made a statement, and the hon. member for Davenport supported him, as to the disastrous results that were going to happen from the reduction in the tariff on agricultural implements. Here is what the hon. member for Greenwood said:

> I am sent here by an industrial riding; I am sent here to represent the industrial worker, and so long as there is breath in my body and red blood in my veins I will plead his cause. And I say to-day that the jobs of eighteen thousand men are at stake. Yes, and how many more jobs are there at stake in industries which contribute the raw materials?

His statement of eighteen thousand jobs being at stake related to the number of employed in the industry itself. Now I have the figures here, and I want my hon. friend to notice these figures. I want to put them on Hansard once more so that our friends will have them to refer to. I am going to try and get the figures for all industry so that we may know what we are talking about.

In 1922 there were 6,221 employed in the agricultural implement industry. What does that take in? I am quoting from a report given to the price spreads committee. It included the factory worker, the factory administration, the clerks, the selling agents, and the executives. They are all included in this number. The numbers for the succeeding years were as follows:

	Number employed
1923	7,792
1924	6,700
1925	7,559

[Mr. Golding.]

Here are the disastrous results!

	Number employed
1926	10,091
1927	11,011
1928	10,867
1929	11,408
1930	7,405
1931	4,471
1932	2,758
1933	3,039
1934	3,706
1935	4,989

In other words from 1931 to 1935 the average number employed in the industry was 3,773, yet the hon. member for Greenwood rose in his place and told us that eighteen thousand jobs were immediately placed in jeopardy, which I submit is quite an exaggeration. I have followed these arguments for years and years, and I am satisfied that statements of this kind are made for one purpose only, and that is to intimidate the industrial workers.

Let me refer to what actually happened in connection with the Massey-Harris Company, for example, in 1936. We have not the figures for the other companies as yet, but we hope to obtain them later. Instead of all these employees and thousands more, as my hon. friend said, being out of work in 1936, we have the statement of the company that last year they employed 451 more persons than in 1935.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Of course; why not?

Mr. MacNICOL: May I interrupt the hon. member? The hon. gentleman is an industrial worker, and I am sure he knows the reason for that situation. The greatest pork barrel in the history of the world was the $400,000,000 that the United States gave the farmers of that country as a bonus in 1936. Probably every farmer throughout the western states is buying machinery, and they cannot make enough machinery in their own country, so our factories are shipping machinery to the United States. That $400,000,000 was a huge pork barrel.

Mr. GOLDING: That is a nice way of getting around a ticklish question, but I am afraid my hon. friend will not be able to put that sort of thing over on the country. I want to say to my hon. friend from Davenport that I am an industrial worker and, further, that I am just as much interested in every industrial worker as he is. But I am also interested in the consumer.

Let me say this further. If there is going to be a trade agreement at all someone has to make concessions. Let me ask the agricultural implement maker this: If in 1936 we were able to lift some 220,000 head of cattle out of this market and sell them at a profit to our neighbours to the south, was that not worth while for his customers? What would have happened if there had been no agreement and these cattle had been left on this market? You can imagine how many implements these farmers would have been able to buy. I submit that the first concern of the implement manufacturer should be the position of his own customers. I submit further that if, instead of linking up with the manufacturers association and wanting a duty on everything, including his raw material, which is bound to increase the cost of the implement to the farmer, the implement manufacturer had gone with the farmer and tried to get lower duties on the materials entering into the manufacture of the implements, he would have served his own purpose and that of his customer very much better.

I am not going to conclude until I have also placed on record the amounts paid in salaries and wages during those years, starting with 1922 and giving only the even millions:

	Salaries and wages paid
1922	$ 7,000,000
1923	9,000,000
1924	8,000,000
1925	9,000,000
1926	12,000,000
1927	13,000,000
1928	13,000,000
1929	14,000,000
1930	9,000,000
1931	4,000,000
1932	3,000,000
1933	3,000,000
1934	3,000,000
1935	5,000,000

Those figures are supplied by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. I have not the figure for 1936, but I am quite sure it will show a very substantial increase over 1935. As an industrial worker, anxious to see every other industrial worker prosper, I should like any member who reads those figures to tell me how the increase in duty on some of these implements in 1930, amounting to some 300 per cent, helped the position of the industrial worker at all. If these figures indicate anything, surely they indicate that the tariff reductions did not destroy the industry. I am quite satisfied they helped the consumer and also the industrial worker. That is my opinion.

Mr. DEACHMAN: The hon. member for Davenport has had nearly forty minutes in which to discuss this question, and I crave your attention, Mr. Chairman, for less than ten minutes. My hon. friend suggested that I was not interested in labour. Let me suggest that he reconsider this question and face it honestly, as we ought to face it. I am interested in labour; I accept his word that he is interested in labour; I believe that every man in this house—I include also the women—is interested in the employment of Canadian labour at the highest possible wages that can be obtained. But we differ as to the method which will bring about the desired result. My hon. friend thinks a doctrine of exclusion is the proper one; he thinks we must retire from the main street and do business on a back road. I think we should do business in the markets of the world. That is the distinction between Liberalism, on the one hand, and Conservatism on the other. The Conservative looks forward to a contracting world, but the Liberal looks forward to an expanding world. I stand for the expanding world, and my hon. friend stands for a contracting world.

Permit me to prove my assertion, and as an example I take the city of Hamilton. I take Hamilton because it is a great, proud industrial city, which has made great progress. It is a splendid city. I have been there once or twice, and I like it much better than Toronto because occasionally it returns a Liberal member to this house. In 1922, at the very time when fate struck the Dominion of Canada, when a Liberal government was coming into power and when every man in Hamilton ought to have shivered for fear of losing his job, there were 23,475 industrial employees in that city. In 1930, after eight years of that policy, just before the Liberals retired, there were 31,033 workers. I ask my hon. friend to check my figures. He will have time to do that and come back to this chamber before this debate is ended, and he can refute my contentions if I am wrong. Let me go over the figures again. In 1922 there were 23,475 workers; in 1930 there were 31,033 workers. Then lightning struck this country, with a change of government; a gentleman came into power who was going to wipe out all unemployment. We were going to have factories on every corner and prosperity such as men never knew before. In 1934, however, the number of industrial employees in the city of Hamilton had dropped to 24,072, a decrease of nearly 7,000. We were back almost to the level of 1922,—twelve years lost. The progress gained in eight years was thrown aside—and then the backward movement. Let us consider the salaries and wages. In 1922 the figure was $26,000,000—I am leaving off the odd hundred thousands. In 1930 it was $39,000,000, and then in 1934 it went back to $25,772,000, or less than in 1922.

I put it to you another way: Between 1922 and 1930 the increases in wages in the city of Hamilton under a Liberal administration, under a low tariff, and under what the hon. member describes as a policy of ruin, was one-half as great as that which took place between the invasion of England by William the Conqueror and the coming into power of William Lyon Mackenzie King in 1922. We gained $13,000,000 in that period. When we started in 1922 the salaries and wages paid in Hamilton were only $26,000,000. At the end of that period, in 1930, it was $39,000,000.

Let us take the value of products—and here of course, price level has something to do with it. In 1922 production was only $100,000,000. In 1930 it had risen to $166,000,000. Why do not the hon. member for Davenport and those who support his view throw out their chests and cheer at that good news? Why do they not cheer an expansion to the extent of $66,000,000 in one city of the Dominion of Canada under eight years of freedom? I challenge the hon. member now to take any other city he chooses to take. Let him go to Vancouver and from there follow down to Calgary, Edmonton, Winnipeg, and right straight through to the Atlantic. What does he find? I know all this is useless; there is no use arguing with the hon. member. Macaulay said of James II that when he made a statement which was perfectly absurd and his court corrected him, he would always repeat the same statement in exactly the same words, believing that by repetition he had given a complete answer to those who took the opposing view.

The hon. member (Mr. MacNicol) will come before the house time and time again and he will have with him the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris). There will be the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thompson), and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey), who never fails to offer a prayer in defence of protection. They will all be here, and they will repeat these statements time and again before the debate is ended, telling us of the losses and the destruction which will come from lowering the tariffs.

I ask the hon. member again to go over the record; take it city by city, town by town, province by province—take the dominion as a whole, and what would he find? He finds progress under Liberalism; not because it is Liberalism—oh no, progress because Liberalism accepts in part the way of freedom, and if Liberalism moves forward as it ought to do, in a still wider broadening of the opportunity for trade, then even the hon. members in the corner would be afraid to rise in their places and suggest that progress under Liberalism has been lacking. Lower the tariffs. I say to my hon. friends on the opposite side, who are with me spiritually but not physically: You have not gone far enough. If you go farther, if you expand Canadian trade, if you lower the tariffs, then your progress will be so clearly marked that even those gentlemen on this side who suffer, if not frailty of sight, at least a certain touch of intellectual strabismus, will be able to see the vision clearly, and understand the progress we are making.

Mr. HARRIS: The hon. member for Danforth wants to make one or two observations.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps) has the floor.

Mr. HEAPS: I think hon. members in both major parties are over-emphasizing the importance of tariffs on our internal and external trade. I listened, with a great deal of interest, as I always do, to the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman), who has just taken his seat. When he spoke with such enthusiasm I think he failed to realize that when he endorses this trade agreement to-day he is endorsing exactly what the Conservative party did in 1932.

Mr. BENNETT: Absolutely; take Hansard and try to deny it.

Mr. DUNNING: What about the reductions?

Mr. HEAPS: The amount of reductions between this agreement and the old one is not very great. Those reductions are extremely small. I think it goes without saying that they will not be contested too strongly by those who were here in 1932 and listened to the hostile criticism which the agreement introduced in that year received. They will not go so far as to say that they will not have anything to do with this agreement. I voted against the agreement in 1932 and I am not very anxious to support it in 1937, for the reasons I gave earlier in the year. When I see what the Liberal party objected to in 1932 and what they endorsed a few years later, I cannot take their arguments too seriously.

This afternoon and this evening the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) spoke at length and attempted to point out that tariffs were a great protection for workers in Canada. From the day I came to the house I have maintained that tariffs are practically no protection for the workers. It cannot be shown where they have been a protection by way of keeping their jobs, nor can it be shown that through tariffs the workers have been protected with respect to the wages they have received.

I remember well that at the short session of 1930 tariffs were increased to a great extent. The tariffs on textiles went up; I believe the tariffs on furniture were increased, as were those on many other items. Yet it was not more than a year or so later that the employees engaged in these industries were subjected to reductions in their pay. Not only that, but in spite of the fact that the industries had received increased protection, the workers were unable to retain the jobs they had held in 1929 and 1930.

For these reasons I say that no great amount of importance can be attached to the question of whether a tariff goes up a little or down a little. Sometimes I am amazed at the amount of discussion engaged in by hon. members on the question whether the tariff should go up or down a few points. Of course, I realize that tariffs may be good talking points at election times. I remember what happened at the by-election in Hamilton in 1931, and I would not be afraid to repeat in 1937 exactly what I told the workers in Hamilton in the earlier year when I visited that city during the course of the by-election. I told them then that protection does not protect them at all. The hon. member for Davenport is in his seat, and I will tell him it neither protected them in their jobs nor in their wages, because had it done so there would have been no need for trade unions. If protection worked as some hon. members believe it does, when a tariff is put up wages should go up; but we have had the very reverse. When tariffs went up, wages went down. When tariffs went up in the textile industry, even the volume of employment went down. Volume in industry in the last two or three years has increased when tariffs were high, up to the year 1935, and will probably increase still more after 1935 simply because world volume of trade is increasing. The world volume is of far greater importance to Canada than the question of whether a tariff goes up or down a little bit.

Mr. HARRIS: Mr. Chairman, I notice that article 6 is as follows:

> The government of Canada undertake that the goods the growth, produce or manufacture of the United Kingdom enumerated in Schedule IV appended hereto, when conveyed without transhipment from any part of the British Empire enjoying the benefits of the British preferential tariff into a sea, lake or river of Canada, shall not be subjected to duties of customs higher than those specified in that schedule.
> The government of Canada undertake as regards goods the growth, produce or manufacture of the United Kingdom other than those enumerated in Schedule IV that, under the British preferential tariff, no new protective duty shall be imposed and no existing protective duty increased except after an inquiry at which United Kingdom producers shall enjoy full rights of audience.

The question I should like to ask the minister is this: In passing article 6 do we automatically admit or pass schedule IV?

Mr. DUNNING: I can understand how my hon. friend has become confused. We cannot pass article 6 until we have passed every item in schedule IV. The first item in the schedule covers extracts of meat and fluid beef, but I do not believe my hon. friend thinks that this item has been before the committee since before six o'clock. The Chairman called attention to the item shortly after eight o'clock. I do not want to try to limit the general discussion on the tariff because I know I would not succeed in doing so.

Mr. HARRIS: I should like to make just one observation. Apparently the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) has forgotten that there was a world wide depression. Having said that, I come back to the item under discussion and ask the minister: what were the imports?

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. member will pardon me. I have listened with great interest to the discussion that has taken place on the question of a tariff or no tariff. The objection I have is that when in opposition the government of the day adopted a free trade attitude, while in office they practise protection.

Mr. McINTOSH: Freer trade.

Mr. BENNETT: If freer trade means having closer alliances with the manufacturers, then you have freer trade. The hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) made one error which I could hardly imagine a man of his intelligence making. He compared conditions in boom days with conditions that existed eight years prior to that, making no allowance for increases in population, expansion of industry and increases in trade. I wonder if he knows that between 1930 and 1934, the year he last quoted, world trade shrunk 66 per cent? Is he also aware that the most outstanding fact between 1930 and 1935 was that free trade England adopted protection, and that under protection there were fewer unemployed in England than there had been during the last quarter of a century? I merely mention these facts lest they have been overlooked by hon. members of this house. Merely to let these statements pass uncontradicted might indicate acquiescence.

I do not propose to follow the argument further, although a great deal might be said with respect to it. I could not permit these points to pass unnoticed in view of the character of the observations that were made.

The trade agreement which we are now discussing deals with a number of items contained in the particular schedule now before the committee. I put this question to the committee: To what extent does the government think the consumer in Canada is going to profit by a reduction of 2½ per cent in the duty? I wonder if the minister is aware that on analysis our English friends have taken advantage practically to the limit of the preference granted to them? Their sales price has been the sales price of their competitors, with the exception of possibly a half or one per cent difference. A 2½ per cent reduction is useless so far as the consumer is concerned. It only enables those who sell their goods in Great Britain to make a little larger profit on them. That is the experience I have gained from talking to people throughout this country. I have asked why there was not a larger sale of British goods in this market, and that is what I have been told. I have seen goods on store shelves that came from other countries and I asked why English goods were not being sold when there was a preference. I found, unfortunately or fortunately as you may want to put it, that the price at which English goods were being offered was the price at which other goods were being offered, with a slight reduction in some cases.

That is not the general principle upon which we have operated with respect to our preference in the English market. I have suggested to the manufacturers in Great Britain that if they expect to seek a market here, they must expect competition. The preference was not meant to inure wholly to their benefit; part of it should be passed on to the consumer, and the consumer would then buy more of their goods. I think that on analysis the minister will find that that is a very mild statement of the case.

Mr. DUNNING: I am pleased to hear these observations from the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), and I commend them particularly to the attention of the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol). Obviously if what the leader of the opposition says is true, the consequences feared by the hon. member for Davenport cannot possibly occur.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so.

Mr. DUNNING: In general terms, I would say that all that we heard in the budget debate as to the harm that was to be done to Canadian industry through this agreement cannot be so, if what the leader of the opposition now says is the fact. I submit that neither he nor I can correctly present a matter of this sort in general terms. I think he will agree with me when I say that the test of the situation to which he refers is to be found in a discussion of the individual items under review. I am quite sure that before we get through this schedule the leader of the opposition will be the first to point out the tremendous seriousness of some of the small cuts to which he has now made reference. I would point out that from the consumers' standpoint there is already evidence of benefit in connection with certain items. I qualify that, as I must, in the light of the general situation to-day in Great Britain, where we have a generally rising price level and a general rise in the cost of production. There has been an even more pronounced rise in the price level in the republic to the south than has occurred in either Great Britain or Canada. Canada seems to be lagging behind somewhat in the general increase in the price level which has become, with one or two notable exceptions, almost world wide. Because of that fact I submit that no government could adopt the attitude which the hon. member for Davenport recommended we should adopt with respect to tariff matters.

The world is not stationary with regard to matters of trade, or with regard to matters of exchange, which is important; matters of trade restrictions, quotas, quantitative regulations and so forth. I do believe that if one could generalize correctly he would say that the tendency throughout the world is more toward the development of international trade than it is toward the restricting of trade, as was the case during the major portion of the last five years. However, that general tendency needs to be qualified by a detailed study of the effect upon the major items of international trade. What one might say with respect to steel, for instance, would not be equally true with respect to textiles. What one might say with respect to textiles, might not be true with respect to some other major classification in the tariff. What is required, and what this government intends to continue to give with the machinery at its disposal, is a continuous study of the world trade situation, and the empire trade situation. We shall continue to do what we consider is in the best interests of the Canadian people as a whole. If we can, we want to take account of the best interests of all Canadians. I would be the first to admit that every Canadian government is actuated by the same desire.

As I said in introducing the budget, the difference between us are differences as to the method of the attainment of objectives which we all have at heart, and which we can debate as much as we wish. The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps) takes a somewhat superior attitude with respect to both of the old parties in connection with this question; he says it does not really matter to the worker. Well, there is plenty of evidence that the terms upon which international trade are carried on do matter in many countries,—matter profoundly to the worker. Those of us who are responsible for government cannot adopt the detached attitude of the hon. member for Winnipeg North, and if he occupied a seat in the government I am quite sure that his air of detachment would speedily leave him and he would be quite as conscious as we are of our responsibilities and of the necessity of continuously studying the major factors of international trade.

Now, Mr. Chairman, If I could give a little information regarding extracts of meat, and get on with the job—the proposal is to reduce the tariff against Great Britain with respect to extracts of meat and fluid beef, not medicated, from the present rate of 15 per cent to 10 per cent. Our total imports of these articles in 1936 were valued at $229,000, of which $208,000 came from the United Kingdom. The concession is confined to that portion of the present item 8 of which the United Kingdom is the principal source of supply. As to the balance of tariff item 8 which includes among other things, canned meat, poultry and game, our principal sources of supply apart from our own country are Uruguay and the Argentine. An extract is being made from the item of the tariff of the article in which the United Kingdom is particularly interested, and a reduction of five per cent is proposed in connection with it.

Mr. WARD: I had not intended to speak at this time, nor did I take part in the budget debate proper, but in view of some of the statements made by certain hon. members opposite, particularly the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol), and the other by the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Edwards), I was led by the expressions of fear and the wails of woe that came from that quarter of the house to examine certain figures, which I proposed to put on Hansard.

I should like to deal with a point which arose a few moments ago when the leader of the opposition spoke of what he called the inconsistency of the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman). In 1928 the income from our farms was $1,533,000,000, but by 1932 that had dropped to $528,000,000, or about one-third. When we hear of the condition of the workers in our factories, the unemployment they have suffered, and the losses the manufacturers themselves have sustained, may I remind hon. gentlemen that the answer is that the income from their consumers has dropped to about 35 per cent of what it was prior to 1930. The other day the hon. member for Waterloo South spoke of hundreds of men and women having been given employment in Kitchener because of the policies of the present leader of the opposition when he was in office. I would remind him that during the first three years the Conservative administration was in power, namely from 1931 to 1933, unemployment increased in Canada at the rate of about 200,000 a year. So that if the policies of the government of that day did increase employment in Hamilton or Kitchener or some other industrial centre, for each additional man or woman so employed at least six or seven must have been thrown out of work in some other part of the country. That, I think, is a reasonable deduction, and I believe that at all times it will be found that the increase in employment due to raising the tariff and any advantages it may bring to workers in the cities will be offset by the effects upon those in the farming sections of this country.

At this time may I answer some other questions that have been asked during the last couple of hours. It is with satisfaction that I compliment the government on their suggestion to appoint a commission to investigate the relationships between the provinces and the dominion. This allusion in this debate may seem far-fetched; I see the leader of the opposition shaking his head.

Mr. BENNETT: We are getting so close to the item; that was the reason!

Mr. WARD: I hope to show in the next few moments that there is a very direct relationship.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will permit me, there will be a splendid opportunity later to discuss that matter. This is going farther away from the item, I think, than we have ever got yet.

Mr. WARD: I should like to agree with the Minister of Finance. Of course, all these matters are closely connected with tariffs and their relationship to the economic life of the community. It seems to me—whether it is meat extracts or farm implements or cotton goods—it is pretty hard to separate them.

Mr. BENNETT: Butter and fluid beef!

Mr. WARD: I come now to a statement which I think will be a fairly adequate reply to some observations of the hon. members for Davenport and Waterloo South. It comes from no less an authority than the present Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers), who was formerly on the faculty of one of our great universities as professor of economics. Using his figures, I find that in 1936 Manitoba paid in the form of tariff bonuses to the manufacturers in a very small part of central Canada no less a sum than $20,775,000, or $277 per capita. When hon. members speak, as I think the hon. member for Davenport did, of Ontario and Quebec being a milch cow for the western provinces—

Mr. BENNETT: It was Sir Richard Cartwright who some years ago made the remark about the milch cow. You are getting a little mixed up.

Mr. WARD: Hon. members from Toronto and other industrial centres need to be reminded that western Canada has been feeding that cow very well for a long time, and the fact that in all these years we have had no recompense for the feed given to this cow explains very largely, I think, the condition of the western provinces to-day.

Mr. STEWART: You are getting a pretty fair amount of feed just now.

Mr. WARD: Well, I do not know. Manitoba has paid in one year $20,775,000 in the form of tariff bonuses to the manufacturers of this country; we have never had any such amount paid back either in relief or in any other form. I think it behooves us all to recognize that Canada is a great dominion made up of many parts, and that we cannot have a prosperous country by continuously bonusing and subsidizing the secondary industries and giving no consideration to the foundations of our wealth; that, in fact, is what we have been doing in this country from the beginning of its history.

Our financial and railway and fiscal policies have been always in the interests of the secondary industries. No wonder that the western provinces, far removed from tide water, with long rail hauls, high freight rates, and paying enormous sums in the form of tariff bonuses without any compensating factors, are becoming poorer and poorer. I hope it will come to be generally recognized that agriculture must be put in a position where the farmers will be able to buy the things they need. The trouble to-day is that agriculture is not in that position. All one has to do is to visit the farms on the prairies and see the worn-out equipment the farmers are trying to carry on with. No wonder the implement manufacturers are not selling the number of implements they should; they would sell more if the farmers could afford to buy them. If we are going to continue subsidizing and bonusing every little industry in Canada, then I suggest that we shall have to subsidize and bonus agriculture. There is no escape from that. At a later day I shall have something to say with regard to bonusing or in some way compensating agriculture for the maintenance of the huge machine we call secondary industries.

Mr. MAYBANK: Will the minister at some convenient time explain the loss in imports under this item? In 1931, the exports amounted to $63,000, and in 1932 they were $30,000. The next year they dropped to $20, the next year something less, and finally to nothing.

Mr. DUNNING: I can give the answer now. The hon. gentleman is quoting the figures relating to the whole of item 8, whereas what we dealt with from item 8 was only that part of the present item comprising extracts of meat and fluid beef, not medicated.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—20a. Butter produced from the cocoa bean: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no change in this item, but I would point out that while it was bound free in the 1932 agreement it was also bound with respect to the margin under that agreement, but is not so bound under the new one.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—23. Preparations of cocoa or chocolate, n.o.p., and confectionery coated with or containing chocolate, the weight of the wrappings and cartons to be included in the weight for duty: rate of duty, 12½ per cent; and 2½ cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a reduction in the rate.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—34. Mustard, ground: rate of duty, 17½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—41. Salt, n.o.p., in bags, barrels and other coverings: rate of duty, free. Bags, barrels and other usual coverings used in the importation of the salt specified in this item: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change since 1906.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—65. Biscuits, not sweetened: rate of duty, 12½ per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the minister make a statement as to what effect, if any, is anticipated?

Mr. DUNNING: The rates in the tariff at present are 15 per cent, 22½ per cent and 25 per cent respectively on unsweetened biscuits. The proposal is to reduce this rate to 12½ per cent. The leader of the opposition will remember that in 1935 a tariff board recommendation was made proposing to grant the United Kingdom free entry of biscuits either sweetened or unsweetened when valued at not less than twenty cents a pound wholesale in the United Kingdom. In the present negotiations the United Kingdom requested a rate of 12½ per cent on unsweetened biscuits, and under the agreement the request is being met, having regard to the information available from the former examination of the matter.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—65a. Diabetic breads and biscuits, under regulations prescribed by the minister: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—66a. Biscuits, sweetened or unsweetened, valued at not less than 20 cents per pound wholesale, f.o.b. any port in the United Kingdom, said value to be based on the net weight and to include the value of the usual retail package: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 82. (d) Rose bushes, n.o.p., rate of duty, 1½ cents each.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 90. Vegetables, prepared or preserved: (b) pickled or preserved in salt, brine, oil, or in any other manner, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—105d. Jellies, jams, marmalades, preserves, fruit butters and condensed mince meats; rate of duty, 2 cents per pound.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not suggested that the consumer will get any advantage from this?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: What?

Mr. DUNNING: The ad valorem incidence of duties paid on imports from the United Kingdom in 1936 was approximately 23 per cent after the usual deduction for direct shipment. The request of the United Kingdom was for free entry under this item in so far as it concerns high class marmalades and preserves. The Canadian government felt that apart altogether from the possible anomaly of providing a reduced duty on a luxury type of preserves, there might be considerable difficulty in determining what constituted high-class products. In view of the fact that the ad valorem incidence of duty last year was in the neighbourhood of 23 per cent, it was felt that the rate on United Kingdom products under the entire item might be reduced to 2 cents a pound, which is a reduction of more than one-third in the amount of duty to be paid. I have every reason to believe that the consumer price will be affected.

Mr. STEWART: Is there a substantial import to-day?

Mr. DUNNING: The total imports from the United Kingdom last year were 506,000 pounds out of a total importation of 590,000 pounds, the value of the imports being $53,000.

Mr. SENN: Are there imports from Australia or other parts of the empire?

Mr. DUNNING: There are none on record. The only other country given is the United States, with 81,000 pounds, which practically makes up the total.

Mr. BENNETT: There are imports from New Zealand.

Mr. DUNNING: A very small quantity.

Mr. BENNETT: The imports total 507,000 pounds from all countries, with a value of $53,000. So that if the hon. gentleman suggests that that little pot of high-class marmalade is going to cost the consumer less because the duty on a pound is reduced three-quarters of a cent, I think he is asking us to go too far. In view of where the imports came from and the character, it is quite clear that we are not going to buy it any cheaper.

Mr. DUNNING: I shall be glad to communicate that to those who are making representations.

Mr. BENNETT: They have had it communicated to them quite frequently.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—105e. Fruits and peels crystallized, glacé, candied or drained; cherries and other fruits of crème de menthe, maraschino or other flavour: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. DEACHMAN: Are these products produced in Canada or are they imported?

Mr. DUNNING: The last figure I have on Canadian production is for 1934. In that year we produced $231,000 worth of fruits and peels, candied, and $335,000 worth of fruits, glacé. Our imports last year under the whole item were $46,000 of which $31,800 came from the United Kingdom.

Mr. DEACHMAN: I should like to make a suggestion in regard to these items which I think would facilitate examination. My hon. friend has the figures of exports and imports, also whether they are produced in Canada or are entirely imported; that is whether it is a revenue item or a protective item. I would suggest that information should be provided to the committee as a whole in printed form; that is, we should know in regard to each of these items whether it is a revenue item, that is one not produced in Canada but imported, the tariff on it therefore being a revenue tax, or whether it is made in Canada and therefore subject to protection. I should like to know the imports with countries of origin, the exports with countries of destination, the production of each of these items and also the wages paid, together with the percentage relationship which the wages and salaries bear to the value of the product. The minister will see clearly what I am coming at. If an industry carries a wage cost of 25 per cent, and we should happen to discover by examination that it carries a duty rate of 50 per cent, I think it would be admitted that that industry is on relief; that is, the amount of protection we are giving it is more than the wages paid. That information in the hands of all hon. members, and in the hands of the people of the country, would certainly be a distinct help to understanding the nature of the tariff and its impact upon the trade of the dominion. I submit that in these matters you cannot go too far in telling the truth as to what the tariff means. Rather even than have a reduction in tariff I would have the truth in regard to it known from one end of Canada to the other.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear. The only difficulty is it cannot be done.

Mr. DUNNING: I was about to say that I can give where it is on record in the bureau of statistics, the amount and value of Canadian production in connection with every item which comes before the committee; but I cannot, and I am sure no one can, get the information which my hon. friend requests with respect to the wages paid in relation to each item, the reason being that the classification of the tariff is not by employment, but by commodities. For instance, candied fruits and peels which we are now discussing, are probably produced in plants which are also producing several other commodities, and it would be utterly impossible to determine the amount of wages in any particular plant properly assignable to an individual tariff item. In connection with the major classifications which approximate at all closely to the statistical form of employment records it is possible to get the information asked, but I think my hon. friend will understand how utterly impossible it is with respect to the great volume of tariff items. We have different rates of duty upon many commodities produced in one plant, because conditions surrounding world trade in those commodities differ very widely. I agree that the more information we can get the better, but I think the committee will see at once how impossible it is to comply with the request of the hon. member with respect to the great bulk of tariff items.

Mr. DEACHMAN: As far as that is concerned I was not suggesting that the minister should go outside the field of possibility. I recognize that he can do it only within the limits of possibility, but no man could come closer to the limits of possibility than the minister. All I would ask is that these facts be given in so far as possible, so that we may have a closer understanding of the impact of the tariff upon the consumer and the wage earner.

Mr. DUNNING: I am prepared to go, as my hon. friend indicates, as far as possible, but that "as far as possible" must be with accuracy. If it is not accurate it is without value, and with respect to the great bulk of tariff items it is impossible to segregate the wages bearing on a particular item. I think we can take groups. I think you could take the cotton textile group, for instance, and work out the wage bearing on the cotton textile industry, and then I suppose you could make a calculation of the tariff bearing on the industry as a whole, although that would be attended by some difficulty. But with respect to the great bulk of the tariff items I could not produce information which I could guarantee to be of sufficient accuracy with relation to the particular item to be of any service to the committee, and I do not think anyone could.

Mr. MAYBANK: I understand that the last remark of the minister as to the impossibility of getting certain information, relates only to the wage cost. Am I right?

Mr. DUNNING: Not altogether; it goes beyond that.

Mr. MAYBANK: I thought there was special emphasis being laid upon that. My impression was that substantially the minister's answer was: I can give you in regard to practically all these items just about what you want except when it comes to giving the wage content of each item, and that I cannot very well do. I was going to suggest that what we should have, and it would be better to have it in printed form as soon as possible, not handed out item by item here in committee, is as much of that information as possible upon each item. When a member asks a question here in committee as to the amount imported, the place from which the imports came, volume, value and so on, the information is given quickly; it goes down on Hansard and it can be read there afterwards, but it cannot be analyzed unless there is a constant holdup all the time. It cannot be fully appreciated as we go along. Now knowing the sort of information that is really wanted, would it not be possible in effect to answer a great many of these questions in advance?

Mr. DUNNING: In practice I have never found that that helps.

Mr. MAYBANK: It might. I do not know what the minister means by saying that it does not help. He may mean that it does not help him get this particular legislation through with speed, and there should be no complaint simply because the minister desires to get this through the house as quickly as possible. After all, this is an agreement we have made; whatever it means, we have made it. But if, on the other hand, he means that it does not help those who desire this information, or in this particular case that it would not help the country at large, I think he is mistaken. I think all the questions that can be asked and all the information that can be given is distinctly to the advantage of every member of this house and equally to the advantage of every person in the country. I would recall to the minister a word he spoke within the last five or ten minutes, practically agreeing with that position. Of course, I know it may not help to get anything through very quickly, because one question answered very often leads to another, but nevertheless if that sort of information could be given in printed form now, it might save a great deal of the time of the house later on. Certainly it would be much more informative than answering questions one after another here in committee.

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to this particular item, I found some difficulty in understanding why we should have purchased practically none of the various articles mentioned from other than the United Kingdom and the United States last year.

Mr. DUNNING: A little from France.

Mr. BENNETT: A little; I was coming to that. At one time we purchased large quantities from France. It will be observed that this item also includes cherries, and I believe it will be found that the development of the British Columbia industry has had a very great deal to do with this result. I was amazed to find the extent to which the cherry has been developed in British Columbia and given the maraschino or creme de menthe flavour, so that it has become a very well known article of commerce in Canada. It must be that something has taken the place of the crystallized fruits and peels, because it is obvious that we buy practically nothing of that kind from England that is produced in England, though our importation from England amounted to 247,000 pounds, with a total value of some $40,000. There are two factors which must be considered, because I observe that at one time we purchased over 300,000 pounds from France. The fact is that the result, for some reason, has been the development of the industry in Canada and the apparent lessening of the quantity that is imported for any purpose at all. I do not know whether or not people have abandoned the idea of using candied or crystallized fruit, but at any rate the imports have fallen off and the business has become lessened.

With the best will in the world on the part of the minister to supply the information, as was suggested a moment ago, I do not see that the information would advance us any with respect to this item, for instance. In the past my difficulty has been, as I fancy the minister's is, that we do not break up these items in connection with importations or exports. We do not keep the records with regard to exports in such a way as to answer a question such as I put to the minister now: How much, if any, did we export? The only possible answer the minister can give is that the exports were so small that there is no record of them at all. That would be what he would have to say.

With respect to imports, all the various classifications within that item are bulked in a broad way for importation purposes, and they cannot be divided except by guesswork. I remember asking the authorities to endeavour to do it for me on many occasions, and I was told that the cost of tabulating and keeping separate reports would be prohibitive. For instance, in connection with one of these items we find the total amount involved only $53. It would cost $53 to obtain and tabulate all this information that is suggested. There are, however, other large items, such as those dealing with steel and woollens and cottons, in connection with which I should think fairly accurate information could be supplied, but except through the inquiry carried on by the tariff board you cannot get information as to the cost of production and the wages paid outside this country. The briefs filed by the textile interests gave us some knowledge along that line, but certainly other than that I do not know where that information could be obained.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not want to pass by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank). I did think, and my staff also thought, that this time I was insisting on rather more information being placed in printed form at the disposal of the members of the house than ever before in connection with an agreement, and if hon. members will look at the votes and proceedings for February 25 and then at the statistical data pamphlet and the agreement itself, I think they will agree. In order to point out the almost physical impossibility of complying with my hon. friend's request, let me say that with respect to each of these items I have at least one loose leaf page in this book before me, and if the item is important I may have three or four pages. Following the statistical data here given for my information, in case the committee desires it, is a lengthy note explaining the bearing of that statistical information, and from my knowledge and experience in dealing with tariff items in this house I can say positively that the presentation of the mere figures which was suggested by my hon. friend as being the maximum that could be expected in the way of statistical data would not convey to members of the house the information which the hon. gentleman desires they should have, unless the notes that I have with respect to each item were printed also. The notes give the figures meaning. My hon. friend no doubt is going to suggest that I might print the notes also.

Mr. MAYBANK: No, I was going to ask if there would be any chance of renting the book.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps my hon. friend will let me finish. Will he believe me when I tell him that for the purpose of putting through this agreement I have six books like this. Just imagine the physical labour that has been involved in the preparation of these books for my use in order that I may give the information to the committee! Then try to imagine putting that into printed form, to be supplied to every member of the house.

There is another point, and I say this with no personal egotism, because every man who has occupied this position has had the same experience: Of necessity it is very often presumed that I have knowledge beyond the actual notes, because of the fact that I have been engaged in the negotiations that brought about the result. I am pointing that out, not that it is my desire to deprive hon. members of information which would help them to come to a decision, but merely to emphasize the complexity of the whole matter. One cannot say that any general rule with respect to the information here given runs steadily through the whole item unless one has the whole history back of it, the various circumstances surrounding the production of this particular item in this country and the world at large; sometimes its movement; sometimes the exchange situation; sometimes volume and quantitative restrictions and so forth. All these things may have a bearing on the various items and, as I say, in order to get that information in sufficiently condensed form for me to handle in this house there are six books like the one I now have, and I may say that this one is fairly voluminous.

Now I should like to say a word with respect to the point made by the right hon. leader of the opposition. I know he will agree with me as to the difficulty of getting our Canadian statistics in any uniformity for the different purposes for which they are used. The preparation of the tariff is only one purpose served by the compilation of statistics. That I know has been his difficulty, and it has been mine. It is quite impossible to have the bureau of statistics set up to gather information on a tariff item basis. They must use broad groupings of exports and imports in order to get the volume of statistics which they reduce from time to time into a compass sufficiently comprehensive to be of use to the people using the information.

Mr. BENNETT: And to have any international value.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and to have any international value. Gradually our various bureaus of statistics, under the aegis of the League of Nations, are attaining a degree of uniformity in presentation, something which for many years past has been badly needed. In fact there is room for very considerable further development along that line, in order that international statistics may be truly comparable with each other. They are not today.

For instance, you will find if you look at the records of Swiss imports that Switzerland imports Canadian wheat; but if you look at the records of Canadian exports you would be led to believe that we do not export wheat to Switzerland. I use that as an example, but there are scores of others. When an export leaves the country it is recorded as going to the place of destination allocated to it when it leaves the country, but before reaching that destination it may be diverted to another one. Then, upon landing at its destination it may stay in bond, and subsequently be transhipped to another country. That has the effect of confusing international statistics. I mention that as one of the difficulties of arriving at a sufficient understanding of all that is involved in order to be able to place it before hon. members.

Mr. MAYBANK: I appreciate the difficulties the minister sets forth when he waves the book before the house. It does seems to be a voluminous book. I know just about how many words would be in it, and I think when printed it would not be any more bulky than the sort of books to which hon. members have already been subjected, namely those books such as the tariff law and the report of the Department of Trade and Commerce. True, those books may not be so easy to understand, but members are given an opportunity to confuse themselves through reading them.

I feel that so far as printing the information is concerned, even with the very confusing notes at the bottom it would be an advantage. At any rate, to tell you the truth about it, I would rather have an opportunity of confusing myself with one of those books than to have to sit here listening to the minister confusing me by quickly answering a great many questions. He might answer so quickly that I should not grasp the significance of his answers, and would not have time later to read them. So I do not believe we should be so tender towards each other, as the minister has indicated he is towards us. There is a great deal of information regarding many of these items which I should like to get. As I cannot get it in printed form, the only way of getting it is to sit and ask, and ask, and ask—

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, that is what I am here for.

Mr. MAYBANK: And that is a very tiresome procedure; one which serves neither the questioner nor the person questioned. Personally I feel that in the future if we cannot have the information given orally, it would be best to supply the most voluminous information possible in regard to all these tariff changes. There should be a history of all the tariff items concerned, so that it would not have to be obtained by cross-examination. Then, where the wage content can be supplied, it ought to be. I am glad to learn that in connection with some of the present items we will be able to find out whether some industries are indeed on relief on a magnificent scale, or whether we are only paying their wage earners. I cannot help repeating that the more information we get in printed form, with which we may be permitted to confuse ourselves, the better.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 120. Herring (not including kippered herring in sealed containers) packed in oil or otherwise, in sealed containers: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Here is one of the best illustrations of what has been said with respect to the difficulties of obtaining information. The item refers to sardines, anchovies, sprats, pilchard and herring, except herring packed in tin boxes weighing eight ounces or less. Last year we bought 5,400,000 of these boxes of which 4,800,000 came from Norway. The total value was $335,000. Only 102,000 cases came from Great Britain. There is no attempt to separate herrings from others, because it cannot be done. The item is now separated, and obviously all the minister can say is that the British people desire that this item should be separated and given better treatment than the other part, because they might be able to supply herring, but they could not supply the others. The minister has done it, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. DUNNING: That is it exactly.

Mr. KINLEY: How does the 20 per cent compare with the 1½ cents originally charged?

Mr. BENNETT: I think it is a reduction.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, it is a reduction. Unfortunately, for the reasons advanced by the right hon. leader of the opposition, the separation of the herring makes it practically impossible to give the information asked by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg, because the present tariff item covers a variety of fish such as sardines, pilchard, sprats and several others.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and we have very little from Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. We are now taking herring out and giving it a separate classification. I will be able to tell more about herring a year from now than I can to-day, because in future we will have statistics based upon the new item.

Mr. BENNETT: It might be suggested that the hon. member had in mind a red herring.

Mr. KINLEY: It will apply to sardines mostly, will it not?

Mr. DUNNING: No, it must be herring. The Minister of National Revenue and his officials have very strong views as to what is a sardine and what is a herring, and I would not presume, being a fisherman only by adoption—

Mr. BENNETT: And a temporary one at that.

Mr. DUNNING: No, I am not prepared to admit that.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh no.

Mr. DUNNING: I am finding the fish-eaters very good company.

Mr. BENNETT: They find their adopted citizen very desirable.

Mr. DUNNING: It has to do with herring only.

Mr. KINLEY: There is a herring called a sardine, although not officially so.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—123. Salmon and all other fish, prepared or preserved, including oysters, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 17½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—141. Sugar candy and confectionery, n.o.p., including sweetened gums, candied pop-corn, candied nuts, flavouring powders, custard powders, jelly powders, sweetmeats, sweetened breads, cakes, pies, puddings and all other confections containing sugar, the weight of the wrappings and cartons to be included in the weight for duty: rate of duty, 15 per cent, and ½ cent per pound.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I should like to ask the minister a question which would relate to other items as well. Is there any real necessity for having both a specific and an ad valorem rate? We are confused all the time by having not only one tariff which in many cases nobody can understand, but two tariffs, so that it is more difficult to know what exactly is being done in connection with a particular item. Surely we can simplify our tariff schedules by having the duties either specific or ad valorem, and not a combination of both.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: Personally I would like to adopt either a specific or an ad valorem rate, but there are situations where the classification of the article is very wide as to value. That is to say, the same item may cover an article of a low value and an article of twenty times the value, and a combination of rates seems to be the only way to bring about an equalized condition. This is particularly so where one of the major components of the class of articles is another dutiable or excisable item. It is meant to bring about an equitable bearing in cases of that sort. My hon. friend will note that in recommending tariff changes to the house my endeavour is to get away from the combination rates wherever possible.

Mr. BENNETT: I think there is a great deal to be said about this item. Last year we bought a total of 4,600,000 pounds of confectionery, valued at $491,000. We bought 3,775,000 pounds from Great Britain, valued at $446,000. The only other country from which we bought any substantial quantity was the United States, which supplied us with 177,000 pounds, worth $34,000. These are the figures supplied by the statistical department. We do a substantial confectionery business in Canada, and it cannot be said to have been so highly profitable that they can resist any form of competition. For instance, in the city of Halifax—I notice one hon. member for Halifax present (Mr. Isnor)—one great firm was forced into liquidation for reorganization. The profits obtained by these confectionery houses have not been large during the last few years. Perhaps it is not desirable to mention particular firms and the extent of their profits, but I think we should note that they are being subjected to additional competition. The specific duty, to which the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) referred, is still being left at one-half cent per pound, but the ad valorem duty has been reduced from 22½ per cent to 15 per cent. In other words, we have reduced it by one-third. Can our Canadian industry successfully meet that form of competition? Three great firms have established branches in Canada, and when I was in one of the other dominions I noticed that a combination of three British houses had been formed.

Mr. DUNNING: It is being formed here also.

Mr. BENNETT: I heard they were coming here.

Mr. DUNNING: McIntosh is one of them—perhaps I should not mention the name.

Mr. BENNETT: That was not the one to which I had reference.

Mr. DUNNING: That is one of the three.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so. I notice that the measure of protection afforded to confectionery houses in other countries is somewhat higher than what is provided under this new arrangement. I suppose it is not unfair to say to the committee that the confectionery business utilizes substantial quantities of Canadian products. For instance, a large quantity of sugar, which is produced in Canadian factories, is used, but more than that is the benefit to the farmers through the use of eggs and other farm products. We have practically prohibited the importation of eggs from other countries, notably from China. I dare say hon. members will recall the discussion which took place in connection with that. In addition, large quantities of cream and whole milk are used. This industry does not strike the average observer as being one that touches the agricultural life of the country, and yet it not only touches its agricultural life but its horticultural life. Large quantities of fruit are used, but I shall not go into that in detail. The dairyman and the poultryman are both greatly concerned in what quantities of their products are utilized in the production of confectionery. This is especially true with regard to chocolates. Those who read the newspapers know how fond I am supposed to be of chocolates, so therefore I may be said to speak with some degree of authority.

Mr. DUNNING: Chocolates would not come under this item.

Mr. BENNETT: I just mentioned them.

Mr. DUNNING: This is sugar candy.

Mr. BENNETT: I was amazed to find the type of confectionery produced and sold as a domestic product in the other dominions, and to learn of the restrictions which had been placed by statute against importations from other countries. I was just asking whether the minister had satisfied himself that the effect of the reduction of the ad valorem duty by one-third, while still maintaining the specific duty of one-half cent per pound, would not be detrimental to the business in this country. Presumably he has so satisfied himself. I know exactly the representations which have been made with respect to it. I say to the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman), while it may be entirely wrong, there has been established in this country as the result of our clinging to a certain definite fiscal policy the branches of three British houses. I did not know they had yet come here, but I knew they were going to come. These three houses are operating as one enterprise. According to what they say, this move was attributable to the fact that we had offered a measure of protection to the industry. They are spending many hundreds of thousands of dollars in erecting their factories here and will give employment to a large number of people.

Mr. DUNNING: Sugar had something to do with it.

Mr. BENNETT: I know sugar had something to do with it, but it had not everything to do with it by a long shot. In Tasmania, the question of dairy products is the main factor in the manufacture of chocolates. There is also the fact that large quantities of eggs are available at reasonable prices. Although it may be adhering to false principles of political economy, the fact is that that has been the result. The factors can be seen by anyone who desires to see them.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—143a. Cigarettes, the weight of the paper covering to be included in the weight for duty: rate of duty, $3.50 per pound.

Mr. MALLETTE: The rate here is $3.50 per pound, but I do not think that will be very clear to the general public which buys its cigarettes in packages of ten, twenty and twenty-five, and tins of fifty and one hundred. This rate of duty of $3.50 per pound will not tell them what it amounts to per package; so could we know what the duty will mean for, say, one hundred cigarettes?

Mr. DUNNING: I have here information with respect to the amount per thousand which will clarify the matter in the hon. member's mind.

The bulk of Canadian production is made up of cigarettes weighing not more than three pounds per thousand. Apart altogether, therefore, from the fact that customs duties against United Kingdom products represented in 1936 a rate of one hundred per cent, it will be shown from the following calculations that, even with the ad valorem duty removed, the Canadian industry in so far as concerns the vast proportion of its products will still have what I think is quite sufficient in the way of a tariff. If we base the calculation upon domestic cigarettes blended of sixty per cent imported leaf and forty per cent Canadian leaf, and allow a weight of two and a half pounds of tobacco per thousand cigarettes, as an average, the relative imposts of duty are about as follow:

First, on cigarettes weighing not more than three pounds per thousand, the imported variety would pay a customs duty of $8.75 per thousand and the domestic would pay an excise of $4, plus approximately ninety cents duty on the leaf, or a total of $4.90. I hope my hon. friend is following this; if he cannot, he will get it in Hansard in the morning.

Second, on cigarettes weighing not more than four pounds per thousand, the imported variety would pay customs duty of $14 per thousand, and the domestic would pay total imposts, including the leaf impost and the excise, of about $12.40 per thousand.

Third, on cigarettes weighing not more than five pounds per thousand—that comprises the very large variety—the imported variety would pay customs duty of $17.50 per thousand, and the total imposts of excise and duty on the leaf on the domestic production would be $12.80 per thousand.

I think that answers the question.

Mr. MALLETTE: I confess I did not intend to cause the minister so much trouble. I thought it would be easier to answer on the basis of so much per hundred.

Mr. DUNNING: It is quite complicated.

Mr. MALLETTE: This information is much more to the point, and I am much obliged. Is this rate lower than under the old Ottawa agreements of 1932?

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Lower, I suppose, by over $1.50 a pound.

Mr. DUNNING: The specific duty was reduced in 1932 from $4.10 to $3.50 per pound. There was a 60 per cent reduction under the former agreement from what had obtained up to that time, and the reduction here, as will be seen, is—

Mr. BENNETT: Twenty-five per cent ad valorem.

Mr. DUNNING: It is the removal of the 25 per cent ad valorem. I was trying to see if I had the information as to the bearing of that in terms of specific, but I have not.

Mr. BENNETT: I see that the value of the imports from the United Kingdom last year was $29,976, and the importations amounted to 6,177 pounds, which would be a little less than five dollars a pound of value; twenty-five per cent of that is $1.50; so what has been eliminated—roughly—is the $1.50 ad valorem per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: Roughly.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): You still have about a 300 per cent tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, no. It was only 100 per cent before.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. STEWART: The difference between the Canadian excise and the duty certainly is not 300 per cent. You have overlooked the excise.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—144. Cut tobacco: rate of duty, 80 cents per pound.

Mr. BENNETT: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—145. Manufactured tobacco, n.o.p., and snuff: rate of duty, 75 cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—147. Ale, beer, porter and stout, when imported in bottles: rate of duty, 15 cents per gallon. Provided, that six quart bottles or twelve pint bottles shall be held to contain one gallon.

Mr. BENNETT: Here is an item presenting a little difficulty.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a change as regards ale and beer. The ale and beer duty is reduced to the same level as the duty accorded last year to the Irish Free State, from 30 cents to 15 cents per gallon.

Mr. BENNETT: The Irish Free State got that concession with respect to stout—Guinness' stout.

Mr. DUNNING: The whole item.

Mr. BENNETT: I mean that was the principal purpose of it, and this puts them on the same level.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—152. Lime juice, fruit syrups and fruit juices, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—156. Ethyl alcohol, or the substance commonly known as alcohol, hydrated oxide of ethyl or spirits of wine, n.o.p.; gin of all kinds, n.o.p.; whisky and all spirituous or alcoholic liquors, n.o.p.; amyl alcohol or fusel oil, or any substance known as potato spirits or potato oil; methyl alcohol, wood alcohol, wood naphtha, pyroxylic spirit or any substance known as wood spirit or methylated spirits, absinthe, arrack or palm spirit, brandy, including artificial brandy and imitations of brandy, n.o.p.; cordials and liqueurs of all kinds, n.o.p.; mescal, pulque, rum shrub, schiedam and other schnapps; tafia, angostura and similar alcoholic bitters or beverages; and wines, n.o.p., containing more than forty per cent of proof spirit: rate of duty, $5 per gallon of the strength of proof.

Provided, as to all goods specified in item no. 156 when of less strength than the strength of proof, that no reduction or allowance shall be made in the measurement thereof for duty purposes, below the strength of 15 per cent under proof.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—159. Spirits and strong waters of any kind, mixed with any ingredient or ingredients, as being or known or designated as essences, extracts, or ethereal and spirituous fruit essences, n.o.p.: rate of duty, $5 per gallon and 30 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—160. Alcoholic perfumes and perfumed spirits, bay rum, cologne and lavender waters, lotions, hair, tooth and skin washes, and other toilet preparations containing spirits of any kind:

(a) when in bottles or flasks containing not more than four ounces each: rate of duty, 30 per cent;

(b) when in bottles, flasks or other packages, containing more than four ounces each: rate of duty, $5 per gallon.

Mr. DUNNING: No change. That is the item to which my right hon. friend referred, I believe, in his remarks on the budget, where he spoke of eyewash being reduced from sixty to thirty per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Skin washes.

Mr. DUNNING: I should like to tell him in this regard that it was he who, by his arrangement with the French republic, effected the reduction in question. I am now only putting the tariff rates in conformity with what the actual condition is; so that any credit for reducing the duty on eyewash must be reluctantly disclaimed by me and attributed to my right hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps my hon. friend has slightly misunderstood the point. I said that there was a great desire on the part of the government to make it apparent that there had been fifty per cent reductions promised in 1919 and in 1935 in the House of Commons, as well as in 1933, and in order that the promise might be adequately kept we had resorted to this item, which was for tooth and skin washes, but actually it amounted to eyewash.

Mr. DUNNING: It includes eyewash.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, it is doubtful whether it included eyewash, but it certainly does now.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—168. Malt flour containing less than 50 per centum in weight of malt; malt syrup or malt syrup powder; extracts of malt, fluid or not: grain molasses—all articles in this item upon valuation without British or foreign excise duties, under regulations prescribed by the minister: rate of duty, 25 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—169. Books, viz: novels or works of fiction, or literature of a similar character, unbound or paper bound or in sheets, but not to include Christmas annuals, or publications commonly known as juvenile and toy books: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—171. Books, printed, periodicals and pamphlets, or parts thereof, n.o.p., not to include blank account books, copy books, or books to be written or drawn upon: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—178, 178c. Advertising and printed matter, viz: advertising pamphlets, advertising show cards, illustrated advertising periodicals; price books, catalogues and price lists; advertising almanacs and calendars; patent medicine or other advertising circulars, fly sheets or pamphlets; advertising chromos, chromotypes, oleographs or like work produced by any process other than hand painting or drawing, and having any advertisement or advertising matter printed, lithographed or stamped thereon, or attached thereto, including advertising bills, folders and posters, or other similar artistic work, lithographed, printed or stamped on paper or cardboard for business or advertisement purposes, n.o.p.:

(i) when produced in countries entitled to the British preferential tariff and relating exclusively to products of such British countries, but not relating to Canadian products: rate of duty, free.

(ii) n.o.p.: rate of duty, 5 cents per pound.

Mr. BENNETT: What is the effect of this item as it stands?

Mr. DUNNING: It has the effect of rewriting the two existing items and putting them into one, with two divisions in the one. It is really an item intended to facilitate customs administration, although it does bring about a reduction in rate. The import figures show $161,000 worth imported from the United Kingdom, actually representing last year the dutiable advertising matter which fell under item 178 and that which obtained free entry under items 178b and 178c. In 1936 some $92,000 worth of printed and advertising matter qualified for free entry, the greater part of it, no doubt, under 178c, which means that the residue, some $78,000, paid duty under the British preferential tariff on item 178. In so far as concerns that printed and advertising matter which did not qualify for free entry under 178b and 178c ad valorem, the effect of the specific duty on last year's imports from the United Kingdom was about 12 per cent, and of course the matter arose during negotiations, as I am sure hon. members will understand, that the United Kingdom was anxious to get some concessions, which we could not meet. This does have the effect of clarifying the situation, inasmuch as it combines former tariff item 178, which was dutiable, and former tariff item 178, which was free, to afford free entry under the new wording for advertising matter of the kinds enumerated when produced in countries entitled to the British preferential tariff and relating exclusively to products of such British countries, but not relating to Canadian products.

Mr. BENNETT: The n.o.p. might have no application at all, but it covers possible cases.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—180. Photographs, chromos, chromotypes, artotypes, oleographs, paintings, drawings, pictures, decalcomania transfers of all kinds, n.o.p., engravings or prints or proofs therefrom, and similar works of art, n.o.p.; blue prints, building plans, maps, and charts, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 12½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—180c. Decalcomania transfers, when imported exclusively for use in the manufacture of vitreous enamelled products or of tableware of china, porcelain or semi-porcelain: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—181a. Pictorial post-cards, greeting cards and similar artistic cards or folders; rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: The reduction is from 22½ to 20 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Under this item we have been endeavouring to build up this industry in Canada, and we have had a very substantial amount of success. I have been amazed at the character of the work being produced in Canada in connection with greeting cards and similar artistic cards and I daresay the minister, like myself, has read with some sense of pride the "Made in Canada" mark upon so many of them as compared with what it used to be. I was wondering whether we had in any sense imperilled the continuance of the industry by the reduction of 2½ per cent. It is a very trifling reduction in one sense and yet it might be sufficient to bring about the termination of the industry.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: As my right hon. friend knows, the principal country from which we import this class of goods is the United States.

Mr. BENNETT: It has been except for Raphael Tuck & Sons, Limited, who have been supplying increasing quantities.

Mr. DUNNING: The imports last year from the United Kingdom amounted to $53,000. Our own production for the last year on record was over $1,000,000, and the class of production which comes and will come from Britain, the imports of which are facilitated here, comprises the more expensive variety which they are better equipped to produce than we are.

Mr. BENNETT: Then the minister believes that it will have no injurious effect on the industry?

Mr. DUNNING: I think the industry in Canada can compete in its field.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I think the leader of the opposition asked a sensible question in regard to the item, when he inquired as to the possible effect of the tariff. Would it be possible for the minister in connection with such items to place on Hansard the imports in the last year?

Mr. DUNNING: I did so just now.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): He should also give the quantity made in Canada so that we may know a year or two from now whether the effect has been injurious or not.

Mr. DUNNING: The Canadian production in the last year of record was $1,001,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that for the calendar year 1936?

Mr. DUNNING: The last year of production figures with which the bureau can supply us on any item is 1934. The total imports were $382,000 from all sources, and the figure I quoted of $53,000 from the United Kingdom bears upon the item now before the committee.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—187. Albumenized and other papers and films chemically prepared for photographers' use, n.o.p.: rate of duty, free.

Mr. BENNETT: I believe our production has been very limited in Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: We have a tremendous export business; our production is large.

Mr. BENNETT: I am wrong then.

Mr. DUNNING: Under this item we imported last year $766,000 worth, of which $660,000 came from the United States, $60,000 from Belgium, $44,000 from the United Kingdom and $150 from Germany. Our exports total $3,768.000. That is to say, we exported more than five times the amount that we imported; and we exported to the United Kingdom $1,869,000 worth, or more than twice as much as we imported from all sources. We exported to the United States $1,415,000, more than twice as much as we imported from that country. I could go on and give the figures for Australia, Hong Kong, the Irish Free State and so on. This is one of those items that illustrate the peculiarities of trade, which is one of the reasons why one cannot dogmatize or produce standardized information with respect to it. It is an item under which in a measure the trade flows both ways. We are ourselves great producers and great exporters. We export even to countries from which we take a considerable volume.

Mr. BENNETT: The total imports are only $30,000.

Mr. DUNNING: They are $766,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that so?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. I think my right hon. friend has the wrong item. This is item 187.

Mr. BENNETT: I am looking at the item in connection with albumenized and other papers chemically prepared for photographers' use, n.o.p.

Mr. DUNNING: The figure is $766,000.

Mr. STIRLING: Is it for the same year?

Mr. BENNETT: The total imports, as given for 1936, are: albumenized and other papers chemically prepared for photographers' use, n.o.p.—

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will look at the figures he is quoting from he will see that the word films is omitted from his description.

Mr. BENNETT: The value is given here as $117,000 odd, and the duty is $31,000. That is albumenized and other papers chemically prepared. Films are not in the item from which I am reading.

Mr. DUNNING: Is the right hon. gentleman referring to the trade statistics?

Mr. BENNETT: This does not cover films, so that the item to which the minister refers must be the film item.

Mr. DUNNING: The film item is the big item by all odds.

Mr. BENNETT: The film item is not 187.

Mr. DUNNING: It is a combination of two items.

Mr. BENNETT: The item as it is in the tariff is albumenized and other papers chemically prepared for photographers' use, n.o.p.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes; there must be added to that item $648,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Which item in the tariff is that?

Mr. DUNNING: It is all one item. They are two trade items in the trade statistics but they fall within the same item of the tariff. Statistically they are separate in the quarterly report of the Trade of Canada though the tariff item is a combined item.

Mr. BENNETT: In the figures prepared by the department the item is given at page 522, and it reads: "albumenized and other papers chemically prepared for photographers' use, n.o.p." Then follow the countries from which we imported—the United Kingdom, Belgium, France, Germany, Japan, the Netherlands and the United States. The value of total imports in 1936 is given as $117,524, and the duty is $31,525.20. Under the general rates there came in $60,000 worth, with duty of $18,000, and under the preferential, $8,670 worth, paying $1,300. Under the treaty rates, that is from the United States, we took $48,-630 worth, on which duty amounting to $12,-157.50 was paid. Those are the figures I have. That does not include films.

Mr. DUNNING: The tariff item does include films. When classified as trade paper it comes in under "paper and manufactures thereof."

Mr. BENNETT: Under wood products.

Mr. DUNNING: Under the general classification of wood products. Then on page 427 of Trade of Canada, of imports into Canada, "other drugs, dyes and chemicals n.o.p." that is the general classification used by the bureau —my friend will find "films chemically prepared for photographers' use." Perhaps my right hon. friend has not the same volume. It is under miscellaneous commodities, $648,-000, which if added to the $170,000 odd which my right hon. friend gave a moment ago, brings us to the $766,000 which I quoted, which of course combines the two import classifications.

Mr. BENNETT: What duty did films carry before?

Mr. DUNNING: Fifteen per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Was that the same as the other item?

Mr. DUNNING: All one item, and we are now taking the 15 per cent duty off.

Mr. HARRIS: The minister just mentioned that the exports from this country to Great Britain are of some magnitude. At the same time it might be observed that the gelatin, the raw material for the photographic film, is all produced in Great Britain, shipped to this country and then shipped back to Great Britain, at which time they get the drawback to the extent of how much a year. No photographic gelatin is manufactured in Canada at all. The same remark applies to the United States.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—187a. Hypersensitive or supersensitive panchromatic films and infrared films, unexposed, for aerial photography: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff— ex 192. Electrical insulating pressbroad, not less than ·040 inch in thickness: rate of duty, free.

Mr. BENNETT: Do we make any insulating pressboard now in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: No, we have no available data on the production of electrical insulating board. It is described as not manufactured in Canada, or not in a commercial way.

Mr. BENNETT: It certainly was not made in Canada. An effort was being made to produce it in Canada. I have not followed this in detail; I do not know how far it has gone, but I think one of the large concerns, either the one at Peterborough or at Hamilton, was experimenting in its production. If the minister says it is not made in commercial quantities, that is satisfactory from my standpoint.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—192b. Sandpaper, glass or flint paper, and emery paper or emery cloth: rate of duty, 12½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: A reduction in rate. Imports, $110,300, of which $79,000 came from the United States and $23,000 from the United Kingdom. The rate is reduced from 15 to 12½ per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: I am afraid that the consumer will not get much of that 3½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—192c. Roofing and shingles of saturated felt: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no change.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Customs tariff—193. Paper sacks or bags of all kinds, printed or not: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: A reduction in rate.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the minister will remember that when paper bags began to be used for cement and heavy products we were compelled to import them. I speak from a very indistinct memory but I thought we were beginning to produce these articles.

Mr. DUNNING: We are manufacturing them practically altogether.

Mr. BENNETT: The heavy bags of commerce?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: What were the importations last year?

Mr. DUNNING: Our imports of all paper bags and sacks coming under this item were $110,000 worth, of which $55,000 came from the United States and $54,000 from the United Kingdom. Our exports totalled $134,000, of which $29,000 went to the United Kingdom, $19,000 to the Straits Settlements, $17,600 to Trinidad, $16,000 to Newfoundland, $11,000 to Jamaica, and then a number of smaller amounts to British countries, and $2,500 to the United States. Our production in 1934 was $3,000,000 worth.

I can tell my right hon. friend from my personal knowledge that bags for cement, known as the Bates valve bag, to which he is referring, have been for some years now a Canadian product. But, of course, the use of those bags declined with the construction industry, and I would expect a considerable advance in the production of that type of bag as a result of the gradual increase in the construction industry.

Mr. BENNETT: That is exactly why I asked the question, and the difficulty in my mind was whether or not a 5 per cent reduction might have an injurious effect on the industry as it developed in this country. Increase of production should compensate for the reduction of duty.

Mr. DUNNING: It will, particularly in view of the point at which the reduction takes place. It is a reduction from 20 per cent to 15 per cent, and that brings it in the intermediate stage, so that the actual reduction effected is 3 per cent, not 5 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—194. Playing cards, in packs or in sheet form, n.o.p.; cards and sheets partly lithographed or printed, for use in the manufacture of such playing cards: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction there.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the difference between 5 cents a package and 15 per cent?

Mr. DUNNING: Ad valorem; that is right.

Mr. BENNETT: We have in addition an excise tax, have we not?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: Which is not touched?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: So that the effect really is negligible.

Mr. DUNNING: The 10 cents applies to both imported and domestic cards.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—195. Paper hanging or wall papers, including borders or bordering: rate of duty, 17½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: A reduction in rate.

Mr. BENNETT: Five per cent. That is an industry which we were endeavouring to develop in this country. There is a factory in the province of Quebec and one in Ontario.

Mr. DUNNING: It is in my opinion a very highly capitalized industry. Our exports are larger than our imports, of the class of goods represented, and I thought a considerable reduction there would not do any harm and might do the poor consumer some good.

Mr. BENNETT: Five per cent will hardly be passed on.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 197 and ex 199. Hand made papers, not to include mould-made deckle-edge papers, valued at not less than 40 cents per pound wholesale: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Limited use for the purpose of high grade note paper.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—197b. Wrapping paper of all kinds, not pasted, coated or embossed: rate of duty, 17½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Reduction in rate. If anyone wants the figures I have them. I do not want my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) to feel that he is being slighted. Exports are very much bigger than imports.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—198. Ruled and border and coated papers, boxed papers, pads not printed, papier mâché ware, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Reduction in rate, 2½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—199. Papeteries, envelopes, and all manufacturers of paper, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: This item shows the same reduction.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—199c. Waxed stencil paper for use on duplicating machines: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—200a. Regenerated cellulose and cellulose acetate, transparent, in sheets, not printed, and manufactures of regenerated cellulose or of cellulose acetate, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Is this our so-called cellophane?

Mr. DUNNING: That is it, and there is no change in the rate. The present rate is bound as a maximum.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it necessary to maintain a rate as high as 20 per cent on cellophane when we are the greatest producers of the raw material?

Mr. DUNNING: I am prepared to consider that. Of course, there is nothing in the British agreement that would prevent us from reducing the rate in future.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—203a. Chemical compounds composed of two or more acids or salts soluble in water, adapted for dyeing or tanning: rate of duty, free.

Mr. BENNETT: All the rest of the items on this page are free and were heretofore free.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. This is binding free entry.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—203b. Aniline and coal tar dyes, adapted for dyeing, in bulk, or in packages of not less than one pound: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—206a. Biological products, animal or vegetable, n.o.p., for parenteral administration in the diagnosis or treatment of diseases of man, when manufactured under licence of the Department of Pensions and National Health under regulations prescribed by the Food and Drugs Act; and biological products, animal or vegetable, n.o.p., for parenteral administration in the diagnosis or treatment of diseases of animals or poultry, when imported under permit of the veterinary director general: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 208a. Chloride of lime and hypochlorite of lime: 1. When in packages of not less than 25 pounds weight each: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208e. Cresylic acid and compounds of cresylic acid, used in the process of concentrating ores, metals or minerals, n.o.p.: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208j. Sal ammoniac and nitrate of ammonia: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208l. Bichloride of tin and tin crystals: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208m. Sulphate of copper (blue vitriol): rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208n. Sulphate of iron (copperas): rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208o. Cream of tartar in crystals and tartaric acid crystals: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208r. Oxide of tin or of copper: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208s. Sulphate of zinc and chloride of zinc: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—208t. All chemicals and drugs, when of a kind not produced in Canada, which were on August 20, 1932, dutiable at rates of 15, 25 and 25 per cent under tariff item 711: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—209c. Bichromate of potash, crude; red and yellow prussiate of potash: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—210. Peroxide of soda; silicate of soda in crystals or in solution; bichromate of soda; nitrate of soda or cubic nitre, n.o.p.; sulphide of sodium; nitrate of soda; arseniate, biarseniate, chlorate, bisulphite and stannate of soda; prussiate of soda and sulphite of soda: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—210d. Sodium, sulphate of, crude, or salt cake: rate of duty per pound, one-fifth cent.

Mr. BENNETT: With respect to this item, is this the same rate that has hitherto prevailed, and that has been regarded as ample for the development of the sodium deposits in Saskatchewan, to which reference was made previously? The other day I saw that one of these large deposits had changed hands, and I take it that this rate of one-fifth cent per pound which is continued must be regarded as ample to ensure the development of these deposits.

Mr. DUNNING: We have only the figures for the production in 1933, and in that year we produced 3,995,000 pounds.

Mr. BENNETT: Does the minister know where that was produced?

Mr. DUNNING: There are a number of salt lakes, so-called, in Saskatchewan. One, I remember, is south of Moose Jaw, at Dunkirk; another, which has been just sold to the International Nickel people, I believe, is near Crane Valley, further to the south and east. Then there is another lake near Humboldt, though I am not sure whether that is being worked at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: Is the Canadian production entirely from Saskatchewan?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not aware of any production elsewhere. There is a certain synthetic production, however, of which my right hon. friend probably is aware, which has a bearing on the utilization of the natural product beyond a certain freight rate range. Really the freight rate is of more importance in connection with the utilization of our native product than the duty.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—212. Sulphate of alumina or alum cake; and alum in bulk, ground or unground, but not calcined: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: This is free entry, bound.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—215. Stearic acid, n.o.p.: rate of duty, free.

Mr. HARRIS: What were the imports of stearic acid?

Mr. DUNNING: Total imports were 1,976,000 pounds, valued at $143,000. Of that total 1,589,000 pounds came from the United Kingdom and 320,000 pounds from the Netherlands. There is no record of any production in Canada, and I am informed that there is no production.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—216. Acids, n.o.p., of a kind not produced in Canada: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: This is free entry bound.

Mr. BENNETT: I think all these were made free in 1933, were they not?

Mr. DUNNING: 1932.

Mr. BENNETT: A number of acids and things like that were added to the original agreement.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, there may have been as many as five added in subsequent budgets.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—218. Acid phosphate, not medicinal: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—219. (i) Solution of peroxides of hydrogen, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 12½ per cent. (ii) Solutions of hydrogen peroxide containing 25 per centum or more by weight of hydrogen peroxide: rate of duty, free.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a reduction of 2½ per cent in the one case?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and in the second case the existing free entry is bound.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—219c. Non-alcoholic preparations or chemicals, such as are used for disinfecting, dipping or spraying, when in packages not exceeding 3 pounds each, in weight, the weight of such packages to be included in the weight for duty: rate of duty, 5 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—219d. Sulphuric ether; chloroform, n.o.p.; preparations of vinyl ether for anaesthetic purposes: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: Free entry bound; no change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—220. All medicinal, chemical and pharmaceutical preparations, compounded of more than one substance, including patent and proprietary preparations, tinctures, pills, powders, troches, lozenges, syrups, cordials, bitters, anodynes, tonics, plasters, liniments, salves, ointments, pastes, drops, waters, essences and oils, n.o.p.:

(a) When dry: rate of duty, 17½ per cent.

(b) Liquid, when containing not more than two and one-half per centum of proof spirit: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: This is a 2½ per cent reduction?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, on a wide range of pharmaceutical products.

Mr. BENNETT: This involves many preparations, such as those made by Smith Brothers. I am curious as to what will be the reduction in price to the consumer. They make a very fine quality peppermint lozenge, and things of that kind, and I am quite curious to see how much the consumer will benefit by this reduction. Being a consumer I am naturally rather curious.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—228. Soap powders, powdered soap, mineral soap, and soap, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in the rate on soap powders and soap. This is a pretty important item.

Mr. BENNETT: I am rather curious here, too, as to just how much less the cake of soap is going to cost, or the soap powder.

Mr. DUNNING: It is a substantial portion of the duty in this case.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman hardly means that. Two and a half per cent from 22½ per cent means only ten per cent of a reduction, or thereabouts.

Mr. DUNNING: A little more.

Mr. BENNETT: Ten times two and a half is twenty-five; therefore it is not ten per cent. There is also a discount of ten per cent, presumably in both cases. One is rather curious as to just how much soap powder, mineral soap and soap not otherwise mentioned is going to cost the unfortunate consumer by reason of this arrangement, which reduces the duty from 22½ per cent less 10 per cent, to 20 per cent less 10 per cent.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I must say to the minister that I agree entirely with the right hon. leader of the opposition. The minister has not taken off nearly enough.

Mr. DEACHMAN: I would suggest that if these reductions are made in the duty, so far as the business man is concerned they constitute reductions in the cost of the products he buys. If his other charges remain the same as before, there will be a reduction to the consumer. But let us reverse this and put it the other way. Supposing that on a number of these items we raised the duty 2½ per cent. I wonder if my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition thinks there would not be an increase in price. Certainly it would follow. While I agree with him in his contention that in many of these items the reduction in duty has not been as great as it ought to have been—

Mr. DUNNING: He did not say that.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): He has been arguing that all day.

Mr. BENNETT: He did not say that.

Mr. DEACHMAN: —we are at least gaining ground mentally if we are not financially.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): We are gaining a recruit.

Mr. DEACHMAN: If year after year the Minister of Finance will continue this process now that he has made a beginning, and if he will remove the duty to the extent of 2½ per cent each year we will get rid of some of our troubles, and in the course of time will not be forced to carry them forward to the next generation.

Mr. MacNICOL: If the Minister of Finance follows the advice of the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman) he will lose his job as secretary of the consumers' league, because the poor workman for whom he thinks he is fighting will not have anything to buy with. Out he would go.

Mr. DEACHMAN: Do you see any tears falling?

Mr. KINLEY: The leader of the opposition has been stressing the point that some of these reductions are very small. I must remind him that in a competitive business it does not take much of a reduction to switch the trade and give it to somebody else. One per cent might destroy a man's business, because he might have just that much advantage. These reductions, though small, might mean that the whole business may go to the one who has the preference through duties.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I would entirely agree with the hon. member if I were not certain of the facts; but I have had some little experience. No wonder the Minister of Finance laughs. The real truth of it is that under the old item, on an invoice of $100 a duty of $22.50 was paid. Under the new item he will pay $20.

Mr. KINLEY: That is 22½ per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes; 22½ per cent of $100 is $22.50. But you have to be sure that he buys his goods from the producer in Great Britain at a price which in any sense reflects that position. My investigations to the moment indicate that they take advantage of the preference just as far as it is possible to do so, and instead of there being a reduction to the consumer the price would be regulated by the competitive duty. Instead of the consumer, or the purchaser here representing the consumer, getting the advantage in the laid down cost in the store, assuming that all other items were constant, he would find the goods on his shelves representing just what they did before. In other words, he sees that the traffic stands all it will bear.

Mr. DUNNING: Who does?

[Mr. Deachman.]

Mr. BENNETT: The seller in Great Britain.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Presupposing that the man in this country is taking full advantage.

Mr. BENNETT: No, not presupposing the man here is doing anything, except buying and paying.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): No, but the man here would not reduce it.

Mr. BENNETT: No; he buys his goods from Great Britain, but so far as it is reasonably possible he is compelled to pay for them substantially what he would buy them for from his British competitor. The British salesman is taking advantage of this preference almost to the limit. In some cases my investigations indicate it is one per cent less, and sometimes less than that. In one case I am bound to say it was 99 and a fraction of the percentage.

The reason I looked into the matter was that it had been said that I made a hard bargain. I pass that by, because I think the minister's own experience has been that the man who represents Canada never makes a hard bargain, but rather has a hard job to maintain his position against the experience of, shall I say, very experienced traders. Of course, if you say we do not bargain—and of course that was said—I think I could give a fair reason why boots and shoes do not appear here, and if the Minister of Trade and Commerce were in his seat I think I could state why hides are not here.

Mr. DUNNING: Boots and shoes are here.

Mr. BENNETT: To the extent of the change in the tariff requested, of course, boots and shoes are here; we put them there. But I mention to the minister—

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction on them.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, we will come to that presently. If the minister will investigate this matter, as I was compelled to do, I think he will find that the complaint as to the lack of business is not wholly attributable—not wholly attributable; I use those words—to conditions to which reference was made, but rather because sellers have endeavoured to utilize the preference to the limit for the purpose of getting out of the trade everything it would stand. I could give days and dates in support of the statement, but there would be no purpose in giving the details. I could have brought the papers down. I desire to make clear that we are not wholly to blame with respect to it, and that this endeavour to take advantage of the preference is to no inconsiderable extent responsible for the lack of expansion of trade. Of course, as the hon. member beside me mentions, there is added to that the question of cartels, which cut both ways, and to which reference will be made before we finish the schedules.

However, I do mention this as important, and I always confront my friends with these facts when in England they say to me, "We do not get enough trade." "Well," I say, "you do not go after it."

Mr. DUNNING: I said the same thing exactly.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, Mr. Chairman, that shows that there is still some hope in Israel, because I always knew that in his heart the minister would support protection to the end. He is making an excellent job of it, and I congratulate him.

Mr. DUNNING: No, I must take the opportunity to correct that. My remark to the leader of the opposition was with respect to what we said to the British concerning trade with Canada. I may tell the right hon. gentleman that I said it to the Britishers even before I became a member of the federal government, and I believe my right hon. friend will do me the justice of admitting that fact. I was endeavouring to interest the British in a certain commodity which I hoped to see produced in larger volume in Saskatchewan, and that was one of the answers I had to make. I may tell my right hon. friend that I used then what I used this year as an illustration, namely, the farm implement industry in Canada, and the manner in which it had grown up, and the manner in which the British had lost what market they formerly had through failing to adapt their product to the necessities of a new country and a different system of agriculture. I do not think I was any less vigorous than my right hon. friend in pointing out to the British traders this summer at least some reasons why they do not enjoy more of the Canadian market. I would not accept in all cases the formula he lays down with respect to the British seller always taking advantage to the last degree of the amount of preference granted by our tariff. I admit that in all too many cases that has been true, but in going through the various items with which one had to deal I was surprised to find very many cases in which it was not true. I venture to predict that before the discussions on this schedule are over we will have pointed out to us by the hon. member for Davenport and others, who do not quite see eye to eye with their leader on this matter—

Mr. BENNETT: Of course they do.

Mr. DUNNING: —a position opposite to that stressed this evening by the leader of the opposition. I am quite sure the hon. member for Davenport is only waiting to point out instances where the British industrialist is a keen and destructive competitor of the Canadian industrialist. I am quite sure that will be his argument in connection with some of the major features of the agreement now before the house. We had only to listen to him this afternoon to notice that he was holding a strong rein upon himself until the proper item was reached to pour out the vials of his wrath upon the poor Minister of Finance, who is proposing something which it must be admitted benefits someone in Canada.

Generally speaking, the use of the term "bargaining" is somewhat of a misnomer when used in connection with the negotiation of an agreement of this kind. Obviously, it is ridiculous to say, "I will trade you a concession on boots and shoes if you will trade me a concession on textiles, on wheat or butter or something else," because you are not dealing with comparable articles. When we went horse trading in the old-fashioned sense, we traded one horse for another, or possibly a yoke of oxen or a mule for a horse, but there was always the suggestion of the common utilization of the objects being traded. In negotiating a trade agreement the approach is quite different. I cannot speak for my right hon. friend in this regard, but our approach was to find out what the other fellow wanted, having a very clear idea of what we wanted ourselves. The things were not related nor could the matter be approached in the spirit of horse trading. An effort is made to meet the other man's point of view, without injuring the interests of your own country, to a degree which will encourage him to go as far as possible in connection with what you want. It is a very complex kind of negotiation. So far as the remarks of my right hon. friend with regard to the approach aspect are concerned, let me say that the British are the shrewdest traders I know anything about, and are most dangerous when they are depreciating their own ability along that line.

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not want the Minister of Finance to get away—

Mr. BENNETT: With murder.

Mr. MacNICOL: I did not want to use an expression like that. I do not want him to get away with the idea that there is any conflict in the positions taken by the right hon. leader of the opposition and myself, because there is none. I do not think the minister is very much concerned about anything I may say on any of the items. I think I have been very quiet so far because, as I said before, the reductions are not large.

Mr. DUNNING: I will apologize to my hon. friend if I have offended him. After getting a general jeremiad off his chest, he can now take up specific items.

Mr. MacNICOL: I have too much regard for the Minister of Finance to let him get into a class with the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Deachman).

Mr. BENNETT: No fear, he is a protectionist.

Mr. MacNICOL: In many cases the reductions are small and they merely annoy people in business. What industry is alarmed over is whether the minister is going to go further on another occasion, and also as to what will happen next year in the United States. We do not know whether the government will follow the advice of the hon. member for Huron North who will not be satisfied as long as there is an industry left in the country. We want to know just where they are going to quit.

Mr. DUNNING: The minister will endeavour from time to time to negotiate such arrangements with other countries as will increase the sale of Canadian goods, at the same time having some regard for the interests of the Canadian consumer.

Item agreed to.

Mr. DUNNING: In moving that the committee rise and report progress I wish to express my thanks to the committee for the progress we have made to-day.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, March 16, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

First report of the standing committee on banking and commerce.—Mr. Moore.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of Labour): I wish to lay on the table of the house the final report on the unemployment relief scheme for the care of single, homeless men, as administered by the Department of National Defence, 1932 to 1936. I do so in the absence of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie).

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REFERENCE OF FINANCIAL STATEMENT TO RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING COMMITTEE

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): I lay on the table the Canadian National Railways budget for the year 1937. If I may have the unanimous consent of the house, I move, seconded by Mr. Michaud:

That the financial statements of the Canadian National Railways and Canadian National Steamships for the current year, laid on the table of the house this day, be referred to the standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government.

Motion agreed to.

SOCKEYE SALMON FISHERIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES CONVENTION FOR PRESERVATION AND EXTENSION IN FRASER RIVER SYSTEM

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I desire to lay on the table of the house the text of the resolution adopted by the senate of the United States on June 16, 1936, advising and consenting to the ratification of the convention respecting the sockeye salmon fisheries of the Fraser river system. I find there is no other correspondence to lay on the table.

BANK OF CANADA

REPORT ON THE FINANCIAL POSITION OF SASKATCHEWAN

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): I lay on the table copy of the report made by the Bank of Canada on the financial position of the province of Saskatchewan dated March 8, 1937.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Several of my colleagues have suggested that it might be desirable to print the report of the Bank of Canada on the Saskatchewan situation. It is a matter of grave public interest and I think the suggestion is not unreasonable having regard to the importance of the matter from the point of view of the nation as a whole as well as of the community concerned. Perhaps the minister would consider whether or not the report can be printed.

Mr. DUNNING: I think the same remarks would apply to the report previously tabled with respect to Manitoba.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite.

Mr. DUNNING: The bank is now beginning an examination with respect to the province of Alberta. I will look into the question whether it is practicable and desirable to print the report separately. If any are printed I think it will be agreed that all should be.

BURLINGTON BEACH TUNNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. E. LENNARD (Wentworth): Before the orders of the day are proceeded with I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe). Did the minister promise federal aid to the extent of fifty per cent of the cost of the proposed Burlington beach tunnel?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): The minister did not. It is purely a provincial matter.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

FIRE-BOAT PROTECTION FOR VANCOUVER WATERFRONT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): On Friday last the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) asked a question about the fire-boat Pluvius at Vancouver. This boat was built in Norway in 1904 for use as a whaler, and was purchased and brought to Vancouver in 1931 for use as a fire-boat. Her annual cost of operation has amounted to $31,500. As will be seen from the date of construction, the boat is very old. It was condemned by the marine department as unsatisfactory, and repairs were ordered which would cost in excess of $28,000 before a certificate of seaworthiness could be issued after December 31, 1936. The whole situation was considered. It was found that the boat was totally inadequate for the service required. There had been two major fires in the harbour since the Pluvius was put in commission in 1931, and in neither case was this boat able to render the slightest service in checking the fire. The harbour commissioners therefore approached the city with the request that they join in considering some more efficient means of fighting fires in Vancouver harbour, and I understand the matter is still under consideration between them.

OLD AGE PENSIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE CERTAIN CLASSES OF BLIND PERSONS

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 42, to amend the Old Age Pensions Act.

Mr. NEILL: Is the minister not going to speak now?

Mr. DUNNING: I did not intend to say anything further on the motion for second reading beyond what I said on the introduction of the resolution. The principle of the bill, which is adopted at this stage, is I think unanimously concurred in by the house, being the granting of pensions to blind persons at the age of forty years. The detailed provisions can be much more easily considered in committee than on the motion for second reading, and I was hoping we might go right into committee, when I shall be prepared to deal with every phase of the matter.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I should like to say something on the general principle of the bill—certainly not in criticism of the minister; rather I congratulate him upon bringing it down. There might be some possible criticism in committee as regards the provision relating to two blind people marrying, but that I realize is for the committee stage. And I know the minister will not allow us to open the act in so far as old age pensions generally are concerned. But there are phases of the situation, and the manner in which the Old Age Pensions Act is now being carried out, which could legitimately be debated now, because they will affect blind people, as they will be subject to the same conditions. Therefore I should like to draw attention briefly to two or three of them.

The act itself is the Old Age Pensions Act. There is little to find fault with in it except that I think we should all be glad if the government would allow the eligible age to be reduced say to sixty-five years; and there are some provisions as regards residence qualifications which we would like to see changed. I realize that it would be out of order to move an amendment of that kind to this bill. It is of the regulations made under this act, some of the conditions to which blind people will be subjected, that I wish more particularly to complain. I am free to confess, as far as I am concerned, that the objections and complaints are largely due to the manner in which the British Columbia government carry out their understanding of the regulations.

But this government furnishes seventy-five per cent of the cost, therefore it is possible for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), when he pays this seventy-five per cent, to attach conditions. I think one condition might well be, as far as British Columbia is concerned, that the act be administered in a fair and reasonable manner, which I do not think it is at the present time. But there are some general provisions applicable to the whole of Canada which might be amended.

Regulation 18 (b) provides that the income of applicants shall be considered, in so far as real property is concerned, to be at the rate of five per cent of the assessed or market value thereof, whichever be considered the more equitable standard. That creates a great injustice under certain circumstances. People often have what is known in British Columbia as wild land. They are paying taxes on it. By no possible stretch of the imagination can they be regarded as getting any money from it; on the contrary it is a source of constant and considerable expense in taxes. It is hardly fair that such property should be charged against them as though they were in receipt of five per cent of its assessed value. Suppose it is assessed at $1,000; they are charged with an income of $50. They are also paying $40 to $50 for taxes on that same property, but it is not bringing in a cent, so that they are out $100 on the deal. I submit that it is not fair and not in accordance with the provisions of the act, which are that people who are otherwise destitute, within limits should receive a certain pension. By this regulation that provision is violated and they are prevented from getting the pension which the act intended they should get. It is quite obvious that real estate which is nothing but an expense is of no value whatever to a destitute old person. One cannot eat tax bills.

There is another phase of that same regulation on which I should like to speak for a moment, and this I think is largely the fault of British Columbia. Originally the clause read "the assessed value," but it was discovered, I think in Ontario, that the assessed value is often lower than the market value; therefore the regulation was changed to read "the assessed or the market value thereof, whichever is considered the more equitable standard." In British Columbia conditions are different; real estate is notoriously over-assessed. The board which administers this act in British Columbia, purely, I submit, to save themselves trouble, have chosen to adopt and adhere to the assessed value, and the assessed value I repeat is not the true market value—nothing like it. I think it would be a reasonable thing to say—I know I can say it of myself—that ordinarily the assessed values in British Columbia are such that I should be glad to sell any real estate I have, except for some local value in connection with my home for instance, at about half the assessed value. I know on one occasion I was provoked into appealing an assessment, and I won all along the line, principally because the assessor refused to go into court and swear to his own assessment. He said: I will not go into court and perjure myself by saying that is the value of the land, because I know it is not. The result was that the assessment was pulled down from $10,000 to $1,800. That gives an idea of the wide difference there is between the real market value and the assessed value in British Columbia. And that was not in the hard time years, either. But simply to save themselves trouble, I submit, the British Columbia board has chosen to adhere to the assessed value, which results in very great unfairness.

I know one case of an old, old man, far above the seventy years, who had some property away back in the bush. I went out to see it, and it was nothing but a hill of sand. He did have a reasonable house on the property, which was the only thing that gave it any value, and that property was assessed at something in the neighbourhood of $8,000, if I remember rightly. In the ordinary market, $1,500 would have been an extravagant valuation, but this old man had to pay heavy taxes on that absurd assessment and in addition was deprived of an old age pension. I submit that this regulation should be applied in the most equitable way possible.

Then I should like to quote paragraph (d), which reads:

> Salary, wages or other means of livelihood, whether in money or in kind, which the pensioner may reasonably be expected to receive—

That is to be taken into consideration in arriving at the income of the applicant. In the old days, when the act was first introduced, the regulation read differently. I have not it before me, but I think the words "which the pensioner may reasonably be expected to receive" were left out. In other words, it was confined to the salary or wages or income actually received by the man or woman applying for pension. By the introduction of those words, however, a totally different interpretation has been given the act, at least in British Columbia. I hold that this legislation has been abused, and I know that the interpretation placed upon it out there has greatly delayed people in getting the pensions to which they are entitled. The most extraordinary circumstances have been imagined and held to be something to which the pensioner might reasonably be entitled. It is like the Parents' Maintenance Act out there, which imposes an obligation upon children to support their parents. That act contains a provision whereby the children may be sued in the lower courts by the municipality, by any other body or by their parents in order to force them to contribute to the support of their parents. But the pension board in British Columbia have interpreted that to mean what I am sure it was never intended by this house to mean. This is how it is applied. An old man or woman—and I am talking with the knowledge obtained from many cases I have handled myself—applies for pension. I have one particular woman in mind at the moment. I was told that she had a son and that her son ought to support her; therefore they could not give that old woman a pension since she could be "reasonably expected to receive" money and support from her son. I investigated the circumstances of the son and found him to be living on relief, receiving $8 per month. I told the board the circumstances and they said, "That does not make any difference. She can be 'reasonably expected to receive' money from her son, because he is her son, and therefore we will not give her a pension."

In another case they put that decision in writing. They said, "We will not give this old man a pension unless he sues his son and obtains either a judgment of the court against him or a statement by the court that the son is not required to pay anything." I went to see the son, to see if I could arrange a friendly suit and get the matter adjusted. I found that he also was living on a relief allowance of $5 a month; he and his father were living in an old shack about six by eight.

Is it the right attitude for this board to take, to say to an old man or woman, "Go and sue your children"? Is that a nice idea? Possibly the only pleasure in the life of an old woman is the society of her son or daughter, and her grandchildren, and then these people say, "Go and sue your son." How does that affect the daughter-in-law, say, who has several children of her own and who is in difficult circumstances? She says the old lady, her mother-in-law, is trying to take the bread out of the mouths of her children. Look at all the trouble it makes in a domestic way, and what practical use is it? In one case the board said to me, "Tell them to sue their children." One child was living in Pittsburgh, another in Prince Rupert, and another in some equally remote place. Who is to do all this suing? Is it to be done by the old man, over seventy years of age, with no money, who is trying to get a pension of $20 a month? Where is he to get the money with which to sue his children, and what use is it when that is done? There is provision in the act under which anyone can sue.

Mr. DUNNING: Not under this act. My hon. friend is discussing British Columbia legislation.

Mr. NEILL: Quite so. The Parents' Maintenance Act of British Columbia contains a provision under which any body or any person can sue. I said to the pension board, which is under the control of the British Columbia government, "Give the old man or woman the pension to which he or she is entitled now. Then you go ahead and sue their children, whom you think should pay." There are very few cases in which there are children who are so unfeeling as to allow their old parents to accept the old age pensions if they can afford to support them.

Mr. DUNNING: There are a great many in Canada.

Mr. NEILL: There are not a great many in British Columbia, but in such cases I believe the mere threat of the board to sue would be sufficient to compel these children to look after their parents. In many other cases, however, the slightest investigation would show that the children were unable to contribute anything. A son may have three or four children of his own, and be living on relief.

Mr. DUNNING: And a man may have $40,000 or $50,000.

Mr. NEILL: I would suggest that the old man or old woman be given the pension, and that the board should sue such children and expose them in public. That would be far better than saying to the old woman, "You go and sue your son." She has neither the desire from the human point of view nor the money to sue her children. I am only suggesting that this act should be administered in a different way, so to speak.

Then there is another petty ruling—I cannot say it is a regulation, because this is purely a demand by the British Columbia board—which is used as a pretext to refuse or delay applications. I just came across it the other day, and I only mention it because it is one of many such rulings. To try and get an old age pension in British Columbia is like trying to get into the senate; it is just about as difficult and takes just about as long. Members of parliament have to do these things for nothing, and they involve a tremendous amount of work. In the case I have in mind an old couple had been in Saskatchewan for a number of years, having come from Nova Scotia originally. They had gone to church in Nova Scotia and when they moved to Saskatchewan they met the same pastor there. Later they all came to British Columbia, and the old people came to the district which I represent. On their behalf I applied for an old age pension, and in British Columbia you must furnish an affidavit by someone who knew them for a certain period of years in the province where they previously lived. So I had this reverend gentleman, a minister of the gospel of high standing in Vancouver, sign an affidavit that he had known these people in Saskatchewan, and that they had been there for the required period of years. It took me some time to get that affidavit signed, and then it was returned to me by the board in Vancouver with an intimation that it would not suffice, that I would have to get such an affidavit from someone now resident in Saskatchewan. This old couple had been away from Saskatchewan for ten or fifteen years, and after the lapse of that space of time it was very difficult to find anyone who remembered them during the period they were there. This reverend gentleman, this man of God, of good repute, well known in Vancouver, swore that he had known them in Saskatchewan for a number of years, but that was not sufficient. Heaven only knows why: this could have been checked up very easily, since this gentleman lived only a few blocks from the board's offices in Vancouver, but his affidavit was not sufficient, so we had to dig up somebody in Saskatchewan, which was very difficult.

I do not see that public funds are guaranteed or made safer in this manner. Apparently these regulations are designed to make as much trouble as possible. Since I am on the subject, I remember taking up some cases with Hon. Mr. Gordon, when he was Minister of Labour. I named half a dozen cases in British Columbia, and he undertook to investigate them. I remember one particularly bad case. The answer that came to him was, "We have no evidence in this office that this woman is even seventy years of age." I had been citing her case in this house, and had said that this woman had been unfairly treated and discriminated against. They came back with the retort, "Why, Mr. Neill has not even proved that the woman is over seventy years of age," which, of course, is an elementary qualification. Mr. Gordon naturally put that up to me, and what was my explanation? She had put in her application and had sent in her birth certificate. Her application was refused, and they sent the certificate back to her, accompanied by a letter saying that they noted that she was over seventy years of age. But when the minister took up the case they were technically correct in saying there was no evidence in that office as to her age, because they had sent the certificate back to her. That was deemed sufficient answer to my complaint. I can give the minister particulars about it, if it will do good.

Then, I have here the form—it is an elaborate one—setting out some of the information required; it is not required by regulation or by the act. It takes about an hour and a half to fill out the sheet, and then the information given must be wrong, because it almost invariably comes back.

Mr. DUNNING: But it does not relate to this act.

Mr. NEILL: It relates to the carrying out of the act.

Mr. DUNNING: It is not under the act at all.

Mr. NEILL: And as I say, I am not attacking the minister or—

Mr. DUNNING: Or this act.

Mr. NEILL: I am trying to suggest that the minister should take power to tell the people in British Columbia that if they want to get their money they will have to administer the act according to our act. Is that not a proper idea?

This is some of the information they want: The name of the child; relationship; age; number of dependent children; full address; married, single, widower, or divorced; occupation; name of employer of each son, daughter or daughter's husband; his employer's address, and his earnings for the past twelve months. A woman may have a daughter married to a man with six children. They must have information about his employer, and the employer must put in a return of the employee's wages for the last twelve months, and for the last three months, month by month.

Mr. DUNNING: Not under this law, or under the regulations.

Mr. NEILL: That is what I am complaining about. I am glad to hear the minister say it is not under this law.

Mr. DUNNING: I just wish to say that what the hon. member has been saying has not been about the bill now before the house, not with respect to this statute, but with respect to some statute in the province of British Columbia, which, it is true, to a certain extent ties in with the operation of the present old age pension law. That is one of the difficulties which arise where partnership arrangements exist between the dominion and the province. I must say however that it is conveying a false impression, because I think every complaint of the hon. member is with respect to British Columbia administration and British Columbia law, not the law we are discussing to-day.

Mr. NEILL: Then I have totally failed to make my meaning clear. I did mention the British Columbia law, namely the Parents' Maintenance Act, but that was only incidental. Now I am talking, and have been from the start, about the action of the British Columbia board under regulations made by this act.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend said it was not under the regulations.

Mr. NEILL: I said it should not be; that is what I meant. Here it is, headed "Old Age Pension Act; application for a pension," and it is done by authority of this act.

Mr. DUNNING: No, no.

Mr. NEILL: And by regulations made under the act.

Mr. DUNNING: No; the hon. member forgets there are old age pensions acts in every province, by which each province may authorize its government to enter into an agreement with the government of Canada, under the provisions of the federal act. The province may and often does impose conditions in and for the province which are over and above the conditions imposed by the federal act and the federal agreement.

Mr. NEILL: Again that is not the situation. In the first place, the Old Age Pensions Act provides for agreements to be made between the provinces and the dominion.

Mr. DUNNING: Right.

Mr. NEILL: Specifications are made in an agreement which is arrived at, and signed. All a province does is to pass an enabling act, agreeing to the agreement.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it is more than that.

Mr. NEILL: It is not permitted under our act to impose any conditions in British Columbia different from those in Alberta. For instance, there could not be a provision for twenty years' residence in Alberta, and ten years' in British Columbia.

Mr. DUNNING: No; with respect to that kind of condition the hon. member is correct. But my statement is nevertheless correct with respect to conditions other than the one he has mentioned.

Mr. NEILL: The conditions about which I am complaining are not carried out under any British Columbia act. They are carried out under the powers of the federal act. When I say, "Who is administering the Old Age Pensions Act in British Columbia?" I am told it is the board in Vancouver. It is the workmen's compensation board that administers it. They say they are not bound by any law of the province. When they are administering our act they take advantage of the regulations under the act. What I am complaining about is that they go beyond those regulations and invent restrictions of their own, which are not under the dominion law or authority at all. That is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. DUNNING: But it is not correct.

Mr. NEILL: Our act does not allow them to ask about the earning of a son-in-law; there is no suggestion of that.

Mr. DUNNING: Would the hon. member permit me to speak?

Mr. NEILL: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: But the British Columbia Parents' Maintenance Act does allow them. Under the British Columbia law the same board is administering that and other acts for the province.

Mr. NEILL: Yes, but this form I have in my hand is not sent out under the Parents' Maintenance Act.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, well—

Mr. NEILL: As a matter of fact the Parents' Maintenance Act does not extend to sons-in-law and daughters-in-law. It is the pension board which puts it in, and that is the point of my complaint. I say they are not adhering to the dominion law, they are not adhering to the provincial law; they have a law unto themselves. They are making these fool regulations—

Mr. DUNNING: And they are responsible to the government of British Columbia, not to this government.

Mr. NEILL: When I ask that in British Columbia they say, "Oh, it is under the dominion act; you will have to go to them." I got into trouble with the minister there. He said I had no business going around blaming the province for the way they were carrying out the act, the way the Minister of Finance suggests I should. Then I went over to our Department of Finance and they told me, "We only operate to the extent of seeing that they are making no unjust demands, but we cannot put any pressure upon them to do even what is right." I submitted certain cases to them, and said, "What do you think about these?" They said, "We would pass that in a minute. Why does not British Columbia O.K. it? We would do it." I said, "Can you not make them do it?" and they said, "Our authority goes only to the extent of saying that we will or will not make certain payments. We cannot say that they ought to pay something." I think that is correct—the minister nods his head.

Then I went back to British Columbia, and I was told that that was not so—passing the buck again. They said what their principal object appeared to be, and communicated it in a letter. They boasted that in a number of years past they had never had one case rejected by the dominion authorities, while they could point to other provinces where as many as four hundred had been rejected. The obvious answer was that that was exactly what I was kicking about. Because if a case came within a thousand miles of the limit they would not grant it; that was the trouble, and then they boast that never once were their cases turned down. They are leaning back so far in their fear that the dominion government might possibly refuse a case that they are rejecting cases that the dominion government would be willing to pay. That is one of my complaints.

I have a letter under my hand which I shall not read, but the contents of which I shall state briefly. One of these cases was to be put through, and the board said—not the regulations; not the act—"You must show us what your son-in-law and daughter-in-law earned in the last year, and in the last three months individually." One of the sons was teaching school up in the Peace River district, and it took a lot of time to get word back from him. His school trustee was really in the position of an employer. To shorten the story, may I say that he sent in his income tax return, but the people in Vancouver would not accept it, or the affidavit which came with it. They said they had to have a statement signed by the actual school trustee. By the time that had been accomplished, due to delays in winter service three months had gone by. The board then said, "You sent us in a return for the three individual months of January, February and March, but it is now May; we want another return for February, March and April"—and the whole performance had to be gone through again. Was anybody's interests or property protected by that? No, it was nothing but red tape from beginning to end.

I wish to bring to the attention of the house something which happened a few years ago under the present leader of the opposition. It will be remembered there was a lot of fuss about soldiers' wives and about red tape causing a great deal of trouble. We asked the right hon. gentleman about it across the floor of the house, and he said he would attend to it. Later in the session he was asked whether he was going to bring in legislation, and he said, "No, I do not think it is necessary; all that is needed is common sense application of the act. I have had a word with the chairman of the board." From that day to this we have had no particular trouble in that connection. It was not the act; it was not the regulation, but it was the foolish way it was carried out by the people concerned. That is the condition in British Columbia. There was an election in British Columbia in 1933 and at that time I told the people that perhaps with a change of government they would get a better deal. There is another election coming on and I am afraid I shall have to tell them the same thing.

I am trying to convey one point to the minister, but I do not appear to have succeeded. I am sorry if I have not succeeded, because I have been desperately in earnest about this matter. I suggest that these people should be told that if they are going to draw funds under this act they must administer the act in a reasonable, decent and common sense way. They must conform with the regulations of the act and not administer it according to their own private opinion. Apparently they have got the tip not to spend more money than they can help, and they are doing that.

Mr. DUNNING: There was no such tip from here.

Mr. NEILL: Not from Ottawa, from Victoria.

Mr. HARRY LEADER (Portage la Prairie): Mr. Speaker, if this is the proper time, I should like to make one or two observations. I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), and if I understood him aright, he is asking that in interpreting the Old Age Pensions Act we should make it easier for the applicants to obtain pensions. I do not see why the authorities should take it for granted that these applicants are committing perjury or stating something which is not in accordance with the truth, especially when the local authorities are there to vouch for the declaration. Instead of making it harder for these people to get a pension, we should make it as easy as possible, provided they are able to fulfil the first requirement of establishing that they are seventy years of age and entitled to a pension.

I understand there is a provision in the Old Age Pensions Act to the effect that an applicant must have lived in the province for five years immediately prior to making his application. There was some reason for that provision when the act was first drafted, because at that time only two or three provinces undertook to work with the dominion. It is quite easy to understand that old people in a province which was not taking advantage of the provisions of the act would drift into one which was. I understand that now all the provinces have come under the provisions of the act. If that is so, I think it should be sufficient when a person proves that he is seventy years of age and has lived in the dominion for twenty years without regard to any particular province. I know of one case where a man eighty years of age who had lived for the last thirty years in Alberta moved into my constituency in order to be near his son. This man is destitute and cannot get a pension because he has not been in Manitoba for five years. Because he preferred to come to Manitoba to be with his son, he cannot get a pension. I do not think that is right.

The other observation I want to make is in connection with the blind. I feel sure the minister will have every sympathy with what I am about to say. I understand that this bill provides that a blind person applying for pension must have had five years' residence in the province in which application is made. Is that right?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not expect that this bill would start a discussion on old age pensions generally. If I had, I would have made a statement in that regard at the outset. I am debarred from speaking now, but I can answer my hon. friend's question very briefly. This bill assumes that a blind person is seventy years of age when he attains the age of forty. That is the sum and substance of it. There are one or two provisions which make it a little more favourable to blind persons than to others, but the main factor is the assumption of the age of seventy when the age of forty is reached. If a discussion is to be permitted on old age pensions generally, I would crave the indulgence of the house to be permitted to make a statement in reply, although I am out of order in so doing.

Mr. LEADER: I have been requested to bring this matter before the minister and I am doing it to the best of my ability. I think that anyone labouring under the terrible handicap of blindness should be able to obtain a pension provided he has lived in the dominion, without its being necessary to prove residence of five years in the province immediately prior to his application.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

On section 1—Definitions.

Mr. GREEN: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make one or two suggestions to the minister and also express one or two thoughts with regard to this bill, which I trust will be helpful to him. I think every hon. member is in favour of the principle of the bill, and I believe it has the support of practically every person in the dominion. The thought in everyone's mind is that it will help a very deserving group of Canadians who are seriously handicapped in their struggle to take a worth while part in the life of the nation. This being the spirit in which the bill is received, I think that now is the time for us to make certain that the administration of the bill and of the Old Age Pensions Act which it amends will not defeat our intentions. We should make sure that the act will be administered in the way in which we intend it to be administered, and in the way in which the people of Canada believe that it will be administered.

This bill provides for pensions for the blind by extending the provisions of the Old Age Pensions Act. When the bill is passed, the Old Age Pensions Act will provide pensions, not only for our elder citizens who have reached the age of seventy years, but also for blind Canadians who have attained the age of forty. Ten years ago when the act was first before the parliament of Canada it received practically unanimous support both from the members of that parliament and from the Canadian people. They had much the same thought in mind as is in our minds to-day, that is, that the legislation would help a deserving group of our people, in that case the needy old who otherwise might be forced to spend their declining years in want and probably in suffering.

My submission is that the old age pension was never intended to be a dole or a form of relief. When the act was passed ten years ago we had no such thing as a dole or no such thing as relief. The old age pension was intended to be a pension payable to a worthy group of our people. I refer the committee to the terms of section 8 of the Old Age Pensions Act, showing the class of people whom it was expected to help. Under clause (a) a person, in order to get this old age pension, must have been—

. . . a British subject, or, being a widow, who is not a British subject, was such before her marriage.

Under clause (c), the applicant must have—

. . . resided in Canada for the twenty years immediately preceding the date aforesaid.

And under clause (d) he must have—

. . . resided in the province in which the application for pension is made for the five years immediately preceding the said date.

But by reason of the regulations which were adopted under the Old Age Pensions Act, and the administration of the act and these regulations, the old age pension has come to be considered a form of relief. My suggestion is that that is not good enough, either for British Columbia or for any other province, and I suspect that the conditions are just as bad in the other provinces as they are in British Columbia.

An hon. MEMBER: No, they are not.

Mr. GREEN: Well, that is all to the good. The trouble arises not so much because of the terms of the act, which on the whole are fair and just, but, as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has said, because of the regulations made under the act and the administration of those regulations; over the years in the hurly-burly of building up a system for administering the act and particularly during the depression, when cuts were made in services in all directions, the tendency has been to restrict the application of the act and to make these older Canadians feel that they are paupers when they apply for the old age pension. I should like to give the committee a few instances. I must refer of course more particularly to British Columbia. First I would quote regulation 18 (d). That is a regulation passed under the dominion act, not a regulation under an act of a province. It reads as follows:

For the purpose of determining the income of any applicant, the pension authority shall take into account any of the following sources of income:

In British Columbia the pension authority is the board set up by joint action of the provincial and dominion governments.

Mr. DUNNING: And this regulation also.

Mr. GREEN: Yes. But this board is or should be subject to some direction from the dominion government.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. DUNNING: No. Where do you find that in our law?

Mr. GREEN: Well, they are administering the act for the dominion—

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. GREEN: —and the dominion is paying three-fourths of the money. If we have not any authority over them it is time we did have some.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, that is the point.

Mr. GREEN: Clause (d) reads as follows:

Salary, wages or other means of livelihood, whether in money or in kind, which the pensioner may reasonably be expected to receive.

The pension authorities have worked that out in this way, that they require particulars of the children of the applicant for a pension, and then they say to the applicant: "Why do you not use the Parents' Maintenance Act and go to the courts and get an order against your son or against your daughter to the effect that he or she must maintain you?" As the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has said, a parent will not do that. There is authority under the provincial Parents' Maintenance Act of British Columbia for a municipality or the province to do that, and I think that regulations could be drafted to provide that it would be the duty of the province or the municipality to lay a charge of that kind, rather than requiring this drastic action to be taken by the applicant for an old age pension.

Mr. DUNNING: Does the hon. member realize, when he says that regulations should be devised to do so and so, that in connection with this matter such regulations must be the subject of agreement between the provinces and the dominion? He is missing the essential difficulty of legislation of this kind. We cannot compel the provinces to agree to a regulation which we, the dominion, suggest. Later on I shall make a statement with respect to the matter.

Mr. GREEN: My suggestion, Mr. Chairman, would be that the Minister of Finance call the provincial ministers of finance together and make some agreement on this point.

Mr. DUNNING: They have been together.

Mr. GREEN: The lead in all these questions must come from the dominion parliament. I suggest that this government should give the lead—

Mr. DUNNING: That has been done.

Mr. GREEN: —and call the finance ministers of the provinces together and see whether proper regulations cannot be drafted.

Mr. DUNNING: That has been done, not only by this government but by the preceding government.

Mr. GREEN: It would not do any harm to try it again. Another unfortunate thing that is done by the pension authorities is that where the daughter of an applicant is married—it may be, to a man who presumably has some means—the pension authorities will say to the applicant, "Your son-in-law must keep you." Just think what an impossible position it is—that a parent applying for a pension has to go to the son-in-law and ask him for support! Goodness knows how many of his own relations that son-in-law may be keeping or what his actual financial position may be. The ruling is simply ridiculous. Are the blind people of Canada to be subject to administration of this type? Are they to be subject to similar regulations? If they are, I am afraid they are going to be very much disappointed with this bill.

Then regulation 18 (b) provides that for the purpose of determining the income of any applicant the pension authority shall take into account any of the following sources of income:

(b) Real property at the rate of five per centum of the assessed or market value thereof (whichever be considered the more equitable standard), exclusive of encumbrances.

That, too, is a regulation of the dominion government, passed by the governor in council. I suggest that it is entirely unreasonable. The test should be whether there is any income earned from this property. Why should an old person lose out because he happens to have a vacant lot or a building that he cannot rent? There is no income from either. I suggest that this regulation should be altered. I believe, too, that the applicant for a pension should be allowed to own his or her own home up to a value of, say, $3,500, or, if that is too much, at least to the value of $2,500, and that home should not be taken into consideration in arriving at the amount of the applicant's income.

Mr. DUNNING: Does my hon. friend think that the provinces would consent to that?

Mr. GREEN: Well, the dominion is paying three-fourths of the amount of the pension. I do not see that the provinces have very much ground for objection to regulations that the dominion lays down. I believe the Minister of Finance will find that the provinces will not object very strenuously to such regulations.

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid that my hon. friend does not know the provinces.

Mr. GREEN: Of course there is considerable pressure of public opinion brought to bear on provincial governments as well as on the federal government, and they may not be as unreasonable as the minister expects. Perhaps the minister might look more favourably upon a suggestion for a change in the definition of residence as contained in regulation 10 (b):

10. An applicant may be presumed to have been resident in Canada for the twenty years immediately preceding the date of the proposed commencement of the pension if he—

Then (a) sets out the time he must have lived in Canada:

(b) has not within the said twenty years been absent from Canada for more than 731 consecutive days . . .

And so on. My suggestion is that the test should be, not absence from Canada, but change of domicile—"should have been domiciled out of Canada for the period of 731 days," which means two years. In many cases applicants lived in England during the war for over two years, and the result is that they are now not eligible for pension although all the time their domicile was actually in Canada.

Mr. NEILL: In some cases they could not get back from England.

Mr. GREEN: If the Minister of Finance cannot consent to a change of that kind, I suggest that at most the pension should be reduced only by the proportion of time during which the applicant was out of Canada. Section 9 of the act is, I think, too stringent. It provides that:

The maximum pension payable shall be two hundred and forty dollars yearly, which shall be subject to reduction by the amount of the income of the pensioner in excess of one hundred and twenty-five dollars a year.

That means that the old age pensioner can only—

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, this is out of order.

Mr. GREEN: —earn ten dollars a month, and I suggest that that should be increased to at least twenty dollars a month.

There is one other matter that should be dealt with by the government and that is the application of the Old Age Pensions Act to the Yukon.

Mr. DUNNING: This is entirely out of order.

The CHAIRMAN: I agree with the minister; the hon. member is out of order. He is discussing the Old Age Pensions Act and this deals only with pensions for the blind.

Mr. GREEN: This bill is an amendment of the Old Age Pensions Act, the terms of which I am therefore in order in discussing. Since the act is to be amended to provide pensions not only for the aged but also for the blind, surely I am in order in discussing the terms of the act itself.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not want to insist, but I did not anticipate a general discussion on old age pensions. I thought the principle of the bill was decided on second reading, namely, the question whether or not the provisions of the Old Age Pensions Act should be extended to blind people at the age of forty instead of at the age of seventy. I did not on second reading take the liberty myself of discussing the present position of the Old Age Pensions Act; I considered that I was discussing the principle of the bill before us. There is no provision in this bill for changing the provisions of the Old Age Pensions Act. This is simply a bill to extend the provisions of that act to blind persons at an earlier age than seventy. I will not block the discussion if the committee wants it to be free and to let everyone take part and go all over the place. We are now on section 1 of the bill. I shall abide by your own judgment, Mr. Chairman, or by the judgment of the committee, whether we shall go all over the place in considering section 1 of the bill in committee.

Mr. GREEN: I purposely refrained from speaking on the second reading of the bill so as to help the minister get it into committee.

Mr. DUNNING: It is a poor way of assisting.

Mr. GREEN: I did not expect that I should be told at this stage that I should have spoken on the second reading. However, I am about through and I should like to be allowed to finish.

Mr. BENNETT: In view of the terms of the bill the hon. member is perfectly within the rules in discussing the bearing upon this particular provision of the other provisions of the act.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the ground the hon. member for Comox-Alberni took in discussing it on the second reading.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. BENNETT: We are now at the first section of the bill, which is an amendment to an existing section of the act, the substitution of another for it, and the hon. member is pointing out the relation of this change to the other provisions of the act. This section defines the word "pension," and we have right through the whole bill changes in the existing legislation. As I listened to the hon. member, he was only elucidating the point he desired to make by reference to other provisions and regulations of the act; that is all.

Mr. DUNNING: The discussion is now on section 1 of the bill. I agree at once that any relationship between the subject matter of section 1 of this bill and the section of the present act to which it refers is competent for discussion at this time, but I do suggest that the definition of the word "pension"—

Mr. BENNETT: That opens up the whole matter. "Pension" means a pension payable "in accordance with this act and the regulations hereunder." That is what the hon. member has been discussing.

Mr. DUNNING: That means that we have no rules of order in committee—

Mr. BENNETT: That is unfair.

Mr. DUNNING: —and that on any section of the bill one may discuss anything in relation to the act which it amends.

Mr. BENNETT: Depending entirely on the terms of the amendment. This amendment substitutes a new meaning for the word "pension," namely, that "pension" shall mean a pension payable in accordance with the act and the regulations thereunder. The hon. member has been analyzing what pensions were payable under the act and the regulations under the act; he has been analyzing the regulations for the purpose of ascertaining payments payable under (a) the act, and (b) the regulations.

Mr. GREEN: If I may be allowed to go on, I wish to speak briefly about the pensions that are payable to people who have been resident in the Yukon. The position with regard to these old Yukoners, old pioneers who went there in 1898, is this. Many of them as they have grown old have broken down and have come out to the cities of Vancouver and Victoria; then after they have been there perhaps six or seven years they reach the age of seventy years and apply for the old age pension, but they are told that though they are seventy and have been in Canada twenty years they can get only $6 or $7, depending on the length of time the applicant has been in British Columbia. The applicant cannot get anything for the time he has been in the Yukon, because the Old Age Pensions Act does not apply to the Yukon.

I would refer the minister to the report of the Department of Labour for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1935, at page 63:

While legislation was enacted by the Yukon territorial council in 1927, which empowered the gold commissioner of the Yukon territory to enter into an agreement with the governor in council to make the system effective in the territory, the proposed scheme of administration, which must be approved by the governor in council before an agreement can be entered into, has not yet been submitted.

These old Yukoners are being deprived of their full pensions and yet the dominion government would be responsible for seventy-five per cent of the portion of pension which they cannot draw. Furthermore, I believe that the dominion government would be required to pay the whole thing because they finance relief in the Yukon. I put a question to the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar) last year and I would refer the committee to page 2782 of Hansard:

Mr. Green: If the old age pension scheme were made effective in the Yukon territory, where would the money come from? Would that money be raised by the Yukon territorial council or would it come from the dominion government? As the minister knows, the provinces pay one-quarter of the old age pension. If the scheme were made effective in the Yukon, where would that one-quarter come from?

Mr. Crerar: It would come from the territorial government, and I assume in the last analysis it might really be provided for by the federal government.

Mr. Green: The federal government would really have to pay the whole shot.

Mr. Crerar: It is federal government territory.

Mr. Green: That would not come out of local taxes raised by the Yukon council.

Mr. Crerar: I could not say, speaking offhand.

I suggest that these Yukoners are being deprived by the national government of the pittance which the people of Canada expected would be paid to them and which they believe is being paid. In my opinion the Old Age Pension Act should be made applicable in the Yukon from now on and provision should be made for paying the full pension to those whose applications have already been dealt with.

When the Old Age Pensions Act was passed it provided that the dominion should pay half the cost of pensions and the provinces half. In 1931 the late government increased the contribution of the dominion to three-fourths and provided for the examination and audit of all expenditures by the provinces and of the accounts of the provinces. This means that this national parliament is the body most directly concerned in the administration of the old Age Pensions Act and further that this parliament must assume the bulk of the responsibility for the administration of the act. Certainly we are going to take the whole of the blame if the act is not properly administered.

Mr. DUNNING: That is very evident.

Mr. GREEN: My suggestion to the minister is this—and I believe it is a constructive suggestion—that he should have a thorough investigation made at once into the administration of the Old Age Pensions Act in the different provinces, and that he then make any necessary changes in the regulations and in the administration. I would suggest further that that investigation be not made by a commission—we have had enough commissions, for a time at least. I suggest that it be made by an official of the department. I have far more confidence in the department—

Mr. DUNNING: It is going on all the time.

Mr. GREEN: Well, I ask that some representative be sent right across Canada—

Mr. DUNNING: It is done now.

Mr. GREEN: —and that he call in delegations from or representatives of the different old age pension associations. These old people have been getting together in the different cities in a social way, and I suggest that they be called in and given a chance to explain the points in the administration with which they are dissatisfied.

This government should spare no effort to make sure that the intention of parliament and of the Canadian people is carried out in the administration of the Old Age Pensions Act, namely, not that the act should be used to provide relief or a dole, but that it should help to make the lives of our blind people and the last years of our own old people happier than they have been.

Mr. MacINNIS: When this legislation is passed will it be necessary for the provinces to enact legislation to make this measure effective within their respective jurisdictions?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. That is why I am trying to hurry it on now.

Mr. MacINNIS: If the provinces take advantage of this measure, by enacting provincial legislation, will the regulations now covering old age pensions be also applicable to pensions for the blind?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. MacINNIS: If that is so I think the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) and the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) were quite in order.

Mr. HEAPS: I am very sorry to hear the complaints of hon. members from British Columbia regarding the administration of the act in that province. I do not know that the complaints apply generally throughout this country. There are some provinces where perhaps the administration is not as rigid as it is in British Columbia. However, it is well to bear in mind that this act came into operation not quite ten years ago. It was in a way new legislation—

Mr. DUNNING: Experimental.

Mr. HEAPS: The legislation was not adopted as unanimously as the hon. member for Vancouver South thinks. There was quite an acrimonious discussion in this chamber before it passed. Not only that, but in the senate the measure was thrown out, and it was only in 1927, after the election in 1926, that it was passed by the senate. That, however, is past history. There are at present in Canada, including Quebec, about 150,000 people receiving the benefits of the Old Age Pensions Act.

Mr. DUNNING: At least that number.

Mr. HEAPS: When the Old Age Pensions Act was framed it was something new as far as Canada was concerned. Something had to be done to overcome the difficulties inherent in our constitution. I have no doubt that many of the regulations which have proven so irksome to some are the result of constitutional difficulties. The five year residence clause was one of the problems which provoked a good deal of thought and discussion at the time. But in view of the fact that all the provinces, with the possible exception of one, have adopted the principle of old age pension legislation and have come under the act, I feel that now is the time for the government to see whether changes could not be made in the regulations, as suggested by the hon. member for Vancouver South.

Mr. BENNETT: The agreement is for ten years.

Mr. HEAPS: Yes, but I think the provinces would not object.

Mr. DUNNING: I know four of them which would.

Mr. HEAPS: The five year clause?

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, for obvious reasons. I know British Columbia would object because it would tend to increase the load on that province, which is a more desirable place for old people to live than some other parts of Canada. That is the whole story. The provinces consider these matters in relation to their own peculiar interests. I know, because I have discussed it with them.

Mr. HEAPS: I remember some arguments being used in this chamber about ten years ago—

Mr. DUNNING: It is not argument. I have discussed that possibility with the provinces.

Mr. HEAPS: Well, it is an argument controverted by the facts, because the percentage of old age pensioners in British Columbia is no greater than it is in other provinces. If the five year residence clause were abolished I doubt whether many old people would care to leave the old homesteads and familiar surroundings for the purpose of living in British Columbia. The number of pensioners in British Columbia at the present time is no greater proportionately than in Manitoba; in fact the most recent figures I could get showed that the number was somewhat less in British Columbia. If the minister through his department would confer with the provinces and see whether something could be done along that line, I would be content to abide by the decision so arrived at, and if the provinces objected to the deletion of the five year residence clause we in this chamber would have nothing further to say.

Another matter which the minister might take into consideration, and one that creates a good deal of feeling amongst prospective or actual recipients of old age pensions, is the right of provincial authorities to put a lien on property in the possession of pensioners. I do not know whether this would apply to the blind; if not, I need not refer to it, but if it does, the argument applies. Suppose an old person is in possession of property worth $2,000 or $3,000—I have known of many such instances. He may have a small home which he has owned for twenty or thirty or forty years, but before he is entitled to receive the benefit of the Old Age Pensions Act he is compelled to assign that property over to the provincial authorities. I do not think this parliament desires to be so harsh with old people as to compel them to give up such small properties. Many old people, being loath to part with their little possessions, resort to subterfuge in order to evade that provision. I am wondering whether we could not be a little more generous now than we were in 1926 or 1927, and abolish that regulation.

Another point which I think also comes under the present bill relates to the question of earnings. Under the existing legislation a recipient of old age pension is allowed an income of $125 a year over and above his pension. He is entitled to have a total income of $365 a year, including $240 pension. If the pensioner has an income of $200 a year over and above his pension, the amount of pension is reduced. I think that restriction on the earnings of pensioners should be done away with. They should be entitled to a larger income under the act, and the same should apply in respect of the blind people who may come under the present proposals. I draw this to the attention of the minister and the government. I know they are sympathetic and I appreciate the bringing in of this legislation. It is one of the best things they have done since they came into office; for although the number of pensioners may not be great, it is because of the principle embodied, and the satisfaction it will give to so many people, that the bill has been received with interest and approval throughout the length and breadth of Canada.

May I say one further word. As I pointed out a moment ago, this bill is something new so far as this country is concerned, just as the old age pension legislation was something new when it was brought in. At that time the government had to find ways and means of overcoming the difficulties presented by the British North America Act, so they took the course of making an agreement under which the provinces could come under the provisions of the bill. Where there was a will there was a way, and I am pointing this out to the house and to the government for the simple reason that if there is the will to overcome the difficulties inherent under our constitution, ways and means can be found just as a way was found to bring in old age pension legislation. If our government really desired to bring in other social legislation, which is long overdue in this country—such as unemployment insurance, minimum wages and maximum hours of labour—they could find ways of overcoming the difficulties in that connection also.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): I wonder if I might be permitted now to say a few of the things I might have said on the second reading of the bill, and possibly thereby shortened the discussion. What has been said causes me to preface my remarks by saying that more than 150,000 people in Canada are now receiving old age pensions.

Mr. HEAPS: Has the minister the exact number?

Mr. DUNNING: I have not the exact number, because Quebec just came in a few months ago, and is adding to the number very rapidly month by month. We are anticipating some thirty thousand from that province by the end of April, which would bring the total closer to 160,000 people who are in receipt of old age pensions.

I think it is proper for the minister whose unpleasant duty it is to try to guard the treasury to point to that fact in view of the discussion which has taken place to-day, which to a casual listener would indicate that the Dominion of Canada has not been carrying out properly or generously the provisions of the law. The amount which will be required from the federal treasury commencing on the first of next month in order to pay old age pensions during that year will be $27,500,000. That sum of money represents the dominion's share only, and does not include anything for the cost of administration, which is borne by the individual provinces under the terms of the agreement and the legislation.

With these figures before it, Mr. Chairman, I think the committee will at least reach the conclusion that the cases which have been cited this afternoon by practically every previous speaker must be the exception rather than the rule, and that there is a much more humanitarian administration of old age pensions generally across Canada than the discussion in this house this afternoon would lead one to believe. In fact I am bound to say this: The administration of the act, in so far as it concerns the relationship of this dominion, until just prior to the change of government was entrusted to the Department of Labour. Difficulties between the provinces and between provinces and the dominion, as a result of the peculiar arrangement necessary under our constitution to make a scheme of this kind work, had accumulated down through the years, and I believe it was my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) who decided that in future the administration of the act should be under the Department of Finance, inasmuch as it concerned a financial contract between the provinces and the dominion. With that decision I have no quarrel, except that it does put on the Minister of Finance the not too pleasant task of trying to deal with the awkward situations which develop because of differing conditions in different parts of Canada and different views taken by provincial governments and legislatures as to the manner in which their responsibilities under this act should be carried out.

Mr. BENNETT: Was it actually transferred before the government went out?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, just before.

Mr. BENNETT: I know we appointed inspectors as well.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. That brings me to the second point, and I am sure my right hon. friend will not find fault with me for saying that the reason for appointing federal inspectors was not from the point of view expressed in this house this afternoon, that the provinces were not sufficiently generous in their treatment of individuals, but from the point of view of protecting the federal treasury.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. DUNNING: That is something it is necessary for me to say. During the short period I have been in office I have had an opportunity only from time to time, in the midst of pressing duties, to see how this inspection work is getting on. But as a result of that examination, on the last occasion on which the provincial ministers were together, at the meeting of the national finance committee, I advised that body—it being representative of the provinces—that from what we had discovered up to that time with respect to the administration of the act we hoped they would agree that there should be a meeting during the year 1937 solely for the purpose of going over the administration of the Old Age Pensions Act, taking into account what the dominion inspection—only recently instituted, remember—had revealed by way of, yes, by way of abuses, by way of disparities in administration in one place as contrasted with another; in short, with a view to taking account of the accumulated experience of nine years of experimental administration of this kind of legislation, in order to see if we could not agree on measures necessary to bring about improvement.

I frankly confess that from the point of view of the Minister of Finance there is much more to be said with respect to tightening up than with respect to loosening up, and I am bound to say that there can be produced not one but hundreds of cases where people having property—and not property worth one or two thousand dollars, such as has been mentioned here this afternoon—managed to obtain old age pensions. It had not been discovered until after they had died, and then only through a circumlocutory process, that they were possessed of real property and a real income. There are not a few cases, also, of people who have sons and daughters, not poor and with big families, but well off, who do not look after their parents but leave them on the old age pension.

It is unpleasant to say these things, Mr. Chairman, but it is my duty to say them. In my judgment there is a sufficient number of those cases to outweigh any cases of individual hardship such as those to which the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) referred. I say that without detracting at all from the point the hon. member made, that any injustice should be susceptible of cure. I do not dispute that for a moment. I only deprecate rather the tenor of the discussion this afternoon, which has been so one-sided, assuming that authorities all over the country were trying to deprive of the privilege people who ought to have old age pensions. I can assure the committee, on my responsibility as a minister, that the abuses—yes, I will say it—are very great in the opposite direction, and in my opinion demand the attention which can be given only by a conference of the contracting parties to the agreement. Let us not forget that there are two contracting parties. Our part is clearly set out in the law; it is the payment of moneys to the provinces. It has been said that we should make conditions with respect to the payments we make, and that we should say, "If you do not do this, we will not give you your money." I have had experience in trying to make that form of control—

Mr. BENNETT: You seemed to make it stick in the wheat board.

Mr. DUNNING: —effective, in connection with the provinces and old age pensions, and I am bound to say it is not a very effective sort of control. I am one who believes that the problem can best be solved by the kind of reallocation of powers, responsibilities and taxing powers as between provinces and dominion as would transfer the sole power, the sole authority and the sole responsibility in the matter to the dominion government. But I do say that in considering the suggestion hon. members should not for a moment think I am advocating the transference of a responsibility to the dominion without the transference to it also of the sources of revenue which would enable the dominion to carry out the responsibility so transferred. I say that because the figures involved in our present old age pension scheme, without regard to any extension of it or any reduction in the age limit, which would obviously increase the expenditure, are large. Judging by an examination I had made a few weeks ago, from an actuarial point of view, even if we do not change the conditions or age limit at which pensions are payable, by 1941 if we continue on the present basis, and if the proportion of those over seventy now receiving old age pensions carries on through that portion of our population which in the future will attain the age of seventy, the expenditure will be $46,000,000. By 1951 it would be $62,000,000. I think I need not go farther than that, because the projection beyond 1951 involves an estimated increase in population, which of course is a debatable factor.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): May I ask the minister whether these figures are estimated on an increase in population?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Only on the administration of the present act?

Mr. DUNNING: Pension payments have been computed on the assumption that fifty per cent of the population aged seventy and over will receive pensions of the average annual amount now being paid. The average number of the population seventy and over will increase very considerably in the future, which will mean that a larger proportion will exhaust their own resources and a smaller proportion will be able to contribute to their own support.

Mr. HEAPS: Why does the minister claim that the number of people over seventy will increase so rapidly in the near future?

Mr. DUNNING: Mainly due to the fact that in the past the increase in population has to a great extent come from immigrant sources at adult ages. That is the actuarial reason. The sources of our population in the past having been immigrant sources, at adult age upon arrival in Canada, the certainty of increase in the proportion of population at ages over seventy to the proportion at productive ages means a rapidly increasing load for a country whose resources are not unlimited.

The figures I gave are on an actuarial basis, and the rapid increase is due to the fact I have just stated, namely that a larger proportion of the population came to the country as immigrants and had reached an adult age upon arrival.

Mr. BENNETT: Based upon the present records of the census department?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes; I cite these figures to indicate the prospective load. I may tell hon. members the occasion for asking for them; it was the very rapid increase during the current year, and the demonstrated necessity for what looked to me to be the very large sum of $27,500,000 for the next year.

Mr. TUCKER: According to the budget speech I think the amount is $22,500,000.

Mr. DUNNING: For the current year?

Mr. TUCKER: No, for the coming year.

Mr. DUNNING: For the coming year it is $27,500,000.

Mr. TUCKER: Then it is misprinted in the budget speech.

Mr. DUNNING: It is $22,500,000 for the current year which closes at the end of this month, and $27,500,000 for the next fiscal year. I think the hon. member will find it in the estimates now before the committee of supply. However I shall not speak with absolute assurance, as I am apt to make mistakes, and may have made one.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought the estimate was based upon the fact that the possibilities were unknown because of Quebec having recently come in.

Mr. DUNNING: To some extent that is true. Because of the facts I have endeavoured to state, and because of the statements made by hon. members who have spoken, statements which of course reach me from complaining parties in various parts of Canada, it is the intention, hope and expectation of the government to have a meeting with the provinces specifically devoted to old age pension administration, to old age pension regulations, and generally to the whole matter, between now and the next session of parliament.

There are many difficult positions to be cleared up. When in recent interprovincial gatherings old age pensions have been mentioned, the diversity of opinions at once became apparent, as did the diversity of experience, of desire and of conditions in the various provinces. That made it very difficult indeed to take old age pensions as one subject in a general conference and expect to get anywhere on a matter in connection with which there must be a substantial measure of agreement among the provinces on one hand and between the provinces and the dominion on the other, in order that improvements in connection with administration may be effected.

I do not think I can usefully add anything further in a general discussion, except to say that the government is fully alive to the difficulties inherent in this class of legislative and administrative cooperation between two sovereign authorities. It is not easy to work it out. We in this parliament do not dominate the situation.

Mr. BENNETT: Do not call them sovereign authorities.

Mr. DUNNING: There might be some question; I believe we have had statements from high sources recently as to how sovereign they really are.

Mr. STEWART: Mr. Chairman, I think every hon. member is interested in the question of the administration of old age pensions. We have to meet it almost daily when we are at home. I hope there will be some good results from this discussion.

Conditions have changed since the act was placed on the statute books. As I recall it, at first the dominion and the provinces made equal contributions to defray the expenses of old age pensions. I think it is agreed by all that no deserving person should be deprived of an old age pension; on the other hand a designing person should not be able to get a pension unjustly, unfairly or improperly. The difficulty arises in finding a type of administration to cover both cases. As I said, the basis of contribution has changed since we started out. At first, when the provinces and the dominion contributed equally, it might be assumed that their interests were on an equal basis. Then the provinces passed on a certain amount of the expense to the municipalities, in some cases as much as half.

Mr. DUNNING: It varied.

Mr. STEWART: It varied from one province to another. I think the initial difficulty arose through the fact that the boards which determined who should be entitled to old age pensions were largely municipal. I am afraid that in some instances, for one reason or another, sufficient care was not exercised in the granting of old age pensions. Let the reasons be what they may, I think we know some of them. In some provinces the share contributed by the municipalities was decreased and their interest became different. Then the share of the provinces was decreased and their interest is not what it was. I suggest to the minister that a change in administration is necessary.

I have had people come to me and ask me to fill out their forms for old age pensions. I have examined them carefully and in some instances have declined to go any further because I was certain they were not entitled to pension. To my surprise they would go to someone else, get their forms filled out and obtain their pension. There is undoubtedly an impression abroad that if you work through the right political channels you will obtain an old age pension, and if you do not, you will not. Rightly or wrongly, that is the impression in the minds of many applicants for old age pensions.

Mr. YOUNG: Are you speaking of Ontario?

Mr. STEWART: I am speaking of what I know.

Mr. YOUNG: In what province?

Mr. STEWART: In Ontario, and I should not think it would be any different in any other province. We all think alike when it comes to getting something from the government for nothing. I suggest that it is necessary to make a complete change in the administration of the act. For a long time I have felt that applicants for old age pensions should be required to appear before a county judge in chambers and make out their cases. You would thus be able to get an impartial, honest and candid report, without political bias or political influence. I think the provinces would be safe in acting upon such a report, and the dominion could confirm the action of the province.

Mr. DUNNING: That is one of the suggestions coming up for consideration.

Mr. STEWART: I am glad it is to be considered. It seems to me that that would relieve men in public life of much embarrassment. We all know the pressure that is brought to bear to have these applications granted for old age pensions. People think that if you are a member of parliament you should be able to get an old age pension for everyone who applies for it. If you do not, well, look out—you will be punished next time.

Miss MACPHAIL: Mr. Chairman, I was not present in the chamber to hear the speeches to which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) referred, but I feel like agreeing with him, which I am sure will be a surprise. I believe that there are more people trying to get pensions who do not come within the scope of the act than there are people who do come within the scope of the act but who cannot get pensions. I do not think there has been any great difficulty in Ontario in connection with people who are entitled to pensions not getting them. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart) suggested that political influence had something to do with it. If that is so, where would the independent old age pensioner come in?

Mr. STEWART: He would probably work both parties.

Miss MACPHAIL: I have not found that to be so. People who have supported me for many years have been able to get old age pensions.

Mr. DUNNING: I think that would be a help to them.

Miss MACPHAIL: I believe in some cases the pension is held down too much, due nearly always to information given by some person living close to the applicant. I have investigated some of these cases, but nearly always I have been able to get them straightened out. When a person reaches the age of eighty or eighty-five years, $20 a month is not sufficient to live on. There is generally an expense for some sort of attendant. Someone in the house where he lives has to spend a good deal of time taking care of him. Something additional should be paid to people of eighty-five and over. I have received many letters, and I dare say other members have also, from very old people who find they cannot manage because something must be paid out for some sort of nursing care.

I do not know how many of these elderly people would have got through the depression had it not been for the provisions made for them under this act. I congratulate the government upon bringing down this bill to provide for the blind, but I regret that the last government did not do it. Doctor Cotnam did excellent work in bringing this matter before the house again and again. It is true he was assisted by others, but he took the responsibility, and I should have liked to see his government bring down this measure when he was in the house. However, I am thankful it is being brought before us, and I am doubly thankful that the age limit has been reduced to forty years. I was afraid the age limit would be higher, in which case the bill would not have been as useful.

There is just one other thing I should like to say, and I do not think the Minister of Finance will enjoy hearing this. There is another class of people for whom we should provide. I refer to those who are totally disabled from increasing arthritis and such diseases. They are disabled sometimes quite early in life, and certainly, for a good many, around an age at which the blind are to receive pensions. There are a great many men and women who suffer intense pain and also the humiliation of not being able to do anything for themselves, and the feeling that they are a burden upon their families or their friends. I suggest that the minister should consider to provide very soon—I hope, at the next session—for an extension of this act to take care of totally disabled persons, for whom life would be hard even though they had a pension, and is almost unbearable when they have none.

Mr. DUNNING: In reply to the hon. member's last point, I know she will wish me to say this: the question of extending the act to the blind at the age of forty was made the subject of discussion at two provincial conferences; hence I am able to state to the committee that the provinces are unanimously willing to adopt it. My hon. friend can understand that with respect to any other extension along the lines suggested by her it would be necessary to secure a very considerable measure of assent, if not complete consent, on the part of the provinces. Having in mind that picture, I shall be glad to continue to give consideration to the classes she suggests.

Mr. McIVOR: Mr. Chairman, being one of those who most energetically urged the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) to bring in this measure last session, now that we have it I should like to see it enforced in the same way that the Old Age Pensions Act is administered at Fort William. No political pull whatever is used. There are old people on pension who qualified when the former minster of railways was representing Fort William, and there is no flavour of politics at all in the administration. I pay my tribute to the responsible officer in Fort William—I venture to use his name; he is our city treasurer, Mr. McNaughton. He has three rules. The case must be deserving—and he knows; the applicant must produce his age certificate or be able to establish his age in some satisfactory way, and he must have lived in Canada for twenty years. Every individual whom I have brought in to the city clerk has been most courteously treated; we are never given the feeling that it is the city clerk's money we are after. When there has been some difficulty in getting a certificate of age, I have not found, as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) seems to have done, that they would not take the word of a minister of the gospel; even his word is accepted when it is reasonably evident that the facts are as stated. I am profoundly thankful that the government have seen fit to introduce the bill at this time and not leave it to the year before election.

Mr. DUNNING: With respect to the figures I gave a few moments ago, it has been called to my attention that I might have left a wrong impression by giving, as I did, the actuarial rate of increase and not stating that the amounts mentioned would be for the total cost of old age pensions, both dominion and provincial shares.

Mr. HEAPS: Could the minister give at this point the number of pensioners in the various provinces?

Mr. DUNNING: I have that information approximately with respect to all provinces except Quebec. As Quebec is so large and the act is just coming into operation there, the variation would be quite considerable. I have the information here and will give it as soon as I can lay my hands on it.

Mr. TUCKER: In regard to party politics entering into the administration of the Old Age Pensions Act, my experience is that in Saskatchewan it has been administered without any thought of intrusion of party politics, whatever may be the practice in Ontario.

I wish to bring to the attention of the minister a specific case illustrating a class to which hardship is caused through a regulation passed by dominion authority. I have it in mind that two people in my constituency, a man and his wife, went to California seven or eight years ago, intending to stay about a year, but one of them having fallen ill they remained about two and a half years. They then returned, and are now in destitute circumstances. They homesteaded in this country and with the exception of the two and a half years I have mentioned they have lived here over forty years, but now they are told that they must reside in Canada for practically another fifteen years before they can qualify for an old age pension. In other words if your stay outside Canada runs to two years and five days you have to wait after you come back for another twenty years before you can qualify for a pension. I think the rule is too rigid, and I have suggested and do suggest that, based on the present rule of allowing two years' absence from Canada out of twenty years—in effect one month out of Canada for every ten months residence in Canada—the rule should be modified so that if you have actually spent, say, two and a half years out of this country you should be able to qualify for a pension provided you have lived in Canada for, say, twenty-five years. In other words, you should be allowed an extra month's residence outside Canada for every ten months over twenty years of residence in Canada. That would provide for the people I have referred to, and others who, though they were out of Canada for a little over two years, have lived in Canada for twenty, twenty-five or thirty years, but cannot get a pension and have no hope of getting one for, in some cases, another fifteen years. Such a provision would cover quite a number of very deserving cases in Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: The residence rule is the most difficult of all rules to administer. My hon. friend will see at once, of course, that if we make some provision such as he suggests, immediately those who cannot quite fall within it will have the same ground of complaint. However, I have no doubt that even though I wanted to, I could not prevent a detailed discussion upon the application of the residence rule when the various provincial representatives confer with respect to old age pensions. I will admit at once that the feature to which the hon. member has referred has given the government much concern.

Mr. BENNETT: If the absence has been to set up a new home, of course they should not claim the benefit under the act.

Mr. DUNNING: But the difficulty is to prove these things. Then we encounter my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), who objects to red tape, and red tape is a term used whenever an effort is made to protect the treasury by investigation; that is the charge which is made by everyone, of course.

In answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps), who wished to know the number of pensioners, I can give him only this information as of September 30, 1936, with an amendment which I will mention at the conclusion:

	Number of pensioners
Alberta	8,644
British Columbia	10,480
Manitoba	11,281
New Brunswick	8,728
Nova Scotia	13,410
Ontario	54,960
Prince Edward Island	1,693
Saskatchewan	11,259
Northwest Territories	7
Total	120,462

At the end of December the total was approximately 130,000, but since that time Quebec has reported 21,000, and we are advised that by the end of April there will be 30,000 from that province. So that I was quite within the mark when I said between 150,000 and 160,000 at the present time.

Mr. CLEAVER: The suggestion has been made by the hon. member for Leeds, I believe, that the administration of the pensions act in Ontario is under political influence. I do not think that suggestion should go unchallenged in view of the fact that some months ago the administration of the act in Ontario was changed, with the result that it is now administered by the local municipal clerk and treasurer. I do not know of any class of officials who are less politically minded or less biassed politically than the local clerks and treasurers appointed by the municipal councils, and while political influence may have had much bearing in the past I do submit that we should give the present set-up a chance to function for a year or two before we start criticizing too freely.

Mr. STEWART: The hon. member has not quite caught the point I was endeavouring to make. I tried to make it clear that on the part of applicants for old age pensions there was a belief that the administration was political or that political influence could be used to advantage on their behalf. I did not openly charge that those in the municipalities responsible for making the report were actuated by political motives, especially more recently when, as the hon. gentleman says, the set-up has been improved. There is no doubt there is a temptation to make political capital out of the granting of old age pensions, and I would not want to tell my hon. friend of some experiences I have had in that respect. I hope that what he says is true and that conditions are improving. I do think, however, that it is desirable to remove any such temptation, and that can be done, I believe, by having the matter dealt with as I suggested, by the county judge. I think my hon. friend will agree that it is desirable that there should not be any suspicion or any belief on the part of the applicant or anyone else that the granting of an old age pension is dependent upon political influence. I do not think the hon. gentleman will deny that in some quarters there is that belief—that in some instances political influence may be used, should be used, can be used, or has been used, in support of an application for an old age pension.

Mr. CLEAVER: I have had that feeling in the past, but I understood my hon. friend to suggest that the applicants should go before a county judge and make out their case. I am pointing out that they now have to go before a local official who is just as independent and non-partisan as a county judge. They must go before the clerk and treasurer and make out a case. I say, let us give the present set-up a chance and see how it will work out before we criticize it too freely.

Mr. THOMPSON: Has the minister any record of the proportion of old age pensions paid to urban and to rural municipalities in the different provinces?

Mr. DUNNING: No, we have not.

Mr. THOMPSON: My own experience is that in the county where I live it is a rare thing for a farmer or a man living in a rural district to receive the old age pension. The great majority are from the urban municipalities.

Mr. McCANN: My experience in connection with old age pensions leads me to agree with the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart). I do not know of an election that has been held in the county of Renfrew since 1926, either federal or provincial, in which the administration of old age pensions has not been the subject of discussion, and people have been led to believe—both political parties have been sinners in this regard—that if this or that party were in power old age pensions would be more easily obtained. The suggestion which the hon. member for Leeds has made is in the right direction, and the very course that is being taken at present, the applicant having to go before the county clerk and a board of the county council, leads me to believe—

Mr. CLEAVER: No, that is out; it is the local clerk and treasurer.

Mr. McCANN: They are still passed on to the county.

Mr. CLEAVER: No.

Mr. McCANN: I beg your pardon. I believe his suggestion is a step in the direction of bringing people before the proper judicial authority in the county, namely the county judge. When that is done there will be more of the spirit of fairness and equity in the granting of pensions or in the recommendations that are made.

The fact that we have so many people getting old age pensions is to my mind an evidence of the absolute lack of recognition of moral obligation by the children of those who are receiving the pension. They lose entirely that sense of obligation to their fathers and mothers that was possessed by the children of two or three generations ago. To my mind, the reason for that is that perhaps we are indulging in too much paternalism in this country. There is no sense of obligation on the part of sons and daughters to-day, at any rate in a great number of instances, and the sooner a sense of responsibility is brought home to them the better it will be for themselves, for their parents, and for the morale of the people in general.

The Minister of Finance has told us that as the years pass we are going to have an increased burden in connection with the payment of pensions. It seems to me that we tackle the thing at the wrong end. Why are so many people blind? In the schools for the blind in London, England, fifty per cent of those who are there are there because of venereal disease. What is this country doing, either through the Department of National Health or through the provincial departments of health, to educate the people so that they may ward off these diseases? We discuss the little tutti-frutti grants from the federal government to the national institute for the blind, and give only $13,000 for maternal and child welfare and to carry on education at a time when it is needed and when it might prevent that blindness. In that regard I think we should be much more careful than we are in the medical examination of prospective immigrants to Canada. If we are to cut down the ever increasing sum which it will take to pay pensions to the blind we must start a good deal further back and do something towards the prevention of those diseases that contribute so largely to blindness.

I am not in favour of the policy of this or any other government paying seventy-five per cent of the total expenditures and not having under its jurisdiction complete control of the expenditure of that money. It makes no difference whether you hand it over to a Liberal administration in Ontario or Quebec or to any other type of administration of whatever political colour. When you are paying 75 per cent of the money you should have complete and absolute control of how it is to be spent. If politics are entering into the administration, it is because provincial governments say: The dominion is paying 75 per cent; we are paying only 25 per cent, and heretofore we have passed on part of that to the municipalities; we can use it as a political lever. The whole system needs revamping, and anything we can do to prevent the diseases which cause blindness and to control the expenditure of the moneys which we collect from the people in taxes will be a step in the right direction.

Mr. MacINNIS: References have been made to-day to political influence in the getting of old age pensions; and the administration of the act in British Columbia was severely criticized, and I think rightly so. But as far as I know there is not any political interference with old age pensions in British Columbia.

Mr. NEILL: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacINNIS: From that point of view I think the act is very well administered. The same board that administers old age pensions administers workmen's compensation, and it has been very free from criticism ever since it was appointed in 1916 or 1917.

I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. McCann), but there seemed to be a certain contradiction in the statements he made. First he said that old age pensions and other kinds of pensions are paternalism going to extremes, and then he wanted paternalism in the prevention of disease. I am in agreement with him on that, but looking after old people is not a matter of paternalism; it is necessitated by the development of our social and economic institutions, which has made it impossible for people to provide for their old age themselves. In fact, it has made it impossible for people to provide for themselves in their youth and manhood; so how can they provide for old age? Not very long ago people working on a farm were able to do a little useful work until they died, but such is not the case to-day. If you read any of the reports of industrial institutions you will find that to-day people are put out of industrial employment, not at the age of sixty-five or seventy, but at the age of forty-five, and their chances of getting into employment again if they lose their jobs at that age are very slight. So this question of old age pensions and other pensions results directly from the development of our economic and social life, and we can no more avoid it than we can avoid the variation in the seasons.

Regarding venereal disease, I was going to raise that question when the estimates of the Department of National Health are before the committee. I read a lecture recently given by Professor C. E. A. Winlow, director of the Yale school of public health, in which he referred to the ravages of syphilis in the United States. There has been considerable discussion of this disease in British Columbia, and the minister of education, who is also provincial secretary, made the statement that some 150,000 persons in British Columbia suffered at one time or another from some form of venereal disease. In other countries they have taken steps to deal with this very important question. Professor Winlow said:

> Such free service reduced syphilis in England by about one-half. In the Scandinavian countries where registration of all venereal diseases was compulsory, it has resulted in the virtual elimination of syphilis. "Syphilis is as rare to-day in Sweden as is typhoid fever in the city of New York."

I did not intend to bring that up at the moment, but it was injected into the discussion and I just wanted to call attention to its importance. It will have to be discussed at some time and provision be made for dealing with it.

Mr. DUNNING: Could we get back to section 1?

Mr. BENNETT: There are three points to which I wish to direct attention. The first is, can anything be done to provide for reciprocal benefits with respect to old age pensions? That is, to provide for our citizens continuing to receive old age pension if they go to England, and for New Zealanders, say, coming here still to receive the old age pension on the same conditions as would be granted to a Canadian who might go to New Zealand. I found that question engaging the attention of our friends in the Antipodes, and it has frequently been brought to my attention in connection with aged men and women who would like to go back to the homeland and die beside the old home. They cannot now carry with them their pension, but reciprocal arrangements might be provided. The matter has been considered, and I think there must be a considerable volume of correspondence in respect to it. I was going to ask whether it has been advanced any further than when I last knew of it.

The second point relates to the Yukon, to which reference has already been made. In the Northwest Territories seven pensions are being paid, and seven only. The Minister of Labour of that day, Mr. Heenan, thought he had accomplished a great deal when he negotiated an agreement with the government of the Northwest Territories, and it was spoken of in terms quite complimentary to the minister. Might I suggest that the position of the Yukon is somewhat stronger than that of the Northwest Territories. I think no one knows that better than the minister, because I gathered from something he said the other day that he had been giving attention to it personally and knew something of the number of people who would be affected.

The third point has to do with the administration of the act. No one who has been in the Finance department, as I was until 1932, would deny that the act has been badly administered. I wholly agree with what the minister said, and when I took steps to have the administration placed under the Minister of Finance—I had forgotten for the moment that it had been completed before we left office—I did so because of the abuses which had arisen. I use that word deliberately and carefully. The results of the investigations that were made would amaze this house if they knew of them.

Mr. DUNNING: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: If the Minister of Finance read to this chamber some of the cases of which he has record in his department it would amaze this house, using the word "amaze" in its proper sense. For instance, one of our leading citizens happened to be in western Canada, in the branch of a bank of which he was director, and it may amaze this house as it certainly did me, to know that a customer of the bank came in and cashed a Canadian bond coupon at one wicket and an old age pension cheque at the other—and the amount of the coupon was not trifling. I have known of transfers of property taking place on a scale that would arouse the interest of at least one collector of revenue in this country as applied to succession duties.

Mr. DUNNING: Hear, hear; numbers of them.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, numbers of them; and what is more, taking them in the aggregate, a large number.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: I was amazed to find that in one case there was a substantial deposit in the savings account of a recipient of an old age pension.

The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart) has stated a fact that most of us are not quite fitted to discuss. When we get into the realm of political discussion of matters of this kind we each blame the other—it was a Liberal crowd that did it, or a Tory crowd. The fact is that efforts have been made in Canada to administer the Old Age Pensions Act for political purposes. I do not say that from hearsay but from investigations that were made. We endeavoured to check up. Every month, I think it is—and if I am wrong perhaps the minister will correct me—each province sends to the Department of Finance a list of all those who received old age pensions during the preceding month.

Mr. DUNNING: Quarterly.

Mr. BENNETT: We were endeavouring to have it done monthly, for reasons which I will explain, and I did not know whether or not it had been put on the monthly basis. We took that list; we appointed inspectors and checked up, and we did clear the list a little. But, Mr. Chairman, there was still much to do when I last dealt with the matter, and the minister says there is still much to do. The reason is that we have not sufficient control. We can say this is a fraud or that is a fraud, but when you send men to remote sections of this country to check up these things, just watch the difficulties they encounter. When I saw the reports that came back from some of the men we sent out I began to realize for the first time the magnitude of the difficulties that confronted them in endeavouring to check these reports.

I recall very vividly the discussion in this house when this statute was passed providing for an agreement for ten years, not longer. It was to be experimental, and we were to pay fifty per cent of the cost. Subsequently we increased our contribution to seventy-five per cent, because the provinces were clamouring for more revenue and larger payments. The matter got into the realm of politics, just as it did in Australia and in Germany. The first old age pension act of Bismarck became a matter of political discussion very soon after it was introduced. The questions raised were two. They were the subject of agitation in Australia, and they are beginning to be the subject of discussion here. They are, first, the reduction of the age when pension will be paid to sixty-five or sixty; and, secondly, the increase of the benefits beyond $20 per month. Those are the same problems wrestled with in Germany, and later in Australia. As a matter of fact in Australia one government was defeated practically on that issue, though not wholly.

What did we do? We passed a statute that provided definitely that if one had attained a certain age, under certain other conditions which I need not take time to repeat, he or she was entitled to benefits; and unless there was compliance with those conditions, benefits were not payable. My colleague from Leeds made that abundantly clear. But human nature is human nature, and at the very beginning people began to say, Well, they are inquiring about my age, but my age is all right, and I have been quite a number of years in this country now. My hon. friend from Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) referred to a case, and I know of one somewhat similar. This man left the country and went to California, with no intention of ever returning. But the depression came along and he was practically driven out of California, so he came back and said: Oh, that was only a temporary absence and it should not count. There are many cases of that kind; I fancy there is not a member of this committee who does not know of them.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Then there is the other question, of age. It is said that the provinces are very stiff in requiring evidence of age. Well, those who have had to do with life insurance companies, and who know anything of the claims that are made on the basis of the establishment of age, will realize the ease with which people will stretch their imagination and advance or lessen their age as may be desirable. Those are facts; we have evidence of them right here in this house.

I think this committee should give the minister every possible support in the discharge of a most difficult task. If I say I know what that task is, I am but repeating what the minister himself has said. Perhaps I would not have referred to it if he had not done so, but I think we can purge these lists of a very substantial number of names. I regret to say that, but I think I know what I am speaking of when I say that the lists in some of the provinces could be reduced quite substantially. The other question, having to do with the means test, is of course one about which there may be differences of opinion.

Mr. DUNNING: And will be forever.

Mr. BENNETT: In England the acute differences of opinion with respect to the means test have aroused a great deal of bitter controversy, but I think the better leaders of the Labour party and others have agreed that the means test is a fair test and that the state should not pay where the necessity for payment is not apparent.

There is just one other point, which was raised by the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. McCann). It is not quite correct to say that all the people of this country are now looking to governments. I have been amazed at the number of people who are saving a little money, even in the face of great difficulties. On one of my recent visits to Calgary an old lady and her husband came to see me. He had worked in the shops all his life, and they wanted me to take their money and buy a government annuity for them when I returned to Ottawa. They had saved over $11,000, and they owned a little house. They were just average people who had come to Canada from the old country. They had saved their money steadily and in their old age, the husband having reached the time when he was retiring from service, they desired an annuity, which they now have. You will find many such people in this country.

I do agree with what was said by the hon. member for Renfrew South, however, that as a rule the farming class, the agricultural population, took less interest in old age pensions than did the urban dwellers, for reasons that are apparent. Before the disaster I did contemplate, and drafted myself without calling on the law officers of the crown, a statute providing for contributory old age pensions. Under that statute a man would buy an annuity for himself with his savings, commencing at sixteen or seventeen or whenever he liked, and the state, applying actuarial rules to these savings, would be able to say that he had acquired the right to an annuity based entirely upon what his contributions had been. That might promote thrift. Certainly in Great Britain the effort has been in the direction of contributory benefits of all kinds. I am satisfied that if the state is to carry on the social services to which reference has been made this afternoon, without contribution on the part of those who will receive the benefits, we might as well make up our minds that the future of this country is the past. We might as well get right down to that—its future is its past. We cannot give everything, expect the taxpayers to make the whole provision, and administer successfully.

The only way in which I believe we can do it, and this is only an opinion, is through contributions for health, old age, and the social services to which reference from time to time has been made. When you have that, you have compulsory thrift. Whether a man likes it or not, he has to make his contribution. The question of the extent to which the state should make its contribution in connection with administration or any other factors, I am not now discussing; the extent to which employers should make contribution I am not now discussing. But I am pointing out that unless we are prepared to deal with the problem on a broad basis, I cannot see anything but disaster before us. In dealing with his budget Mr. Churchill pointed out that we have to take up the lag, and there is a period which must be dealt with by the state as a whole. We are doing it now. That is the reason I press for some form of social legislation without delay, because the lag is getting greater every day. The minister's figures indicate it. Mr Churchill pointed out that what he was doing then represented a capitalized value of £750,000,000; that is the capitalized amount, of course. The sum is so vast that we do not comprehend it. However, that is what he did at that time when he was dealing with the consolidation of the services on the one hand, and provisions for contributions on the other.

All this arises out of the agreement which was made ten years ago. I should like to remind the minister that he still has great power in dealing with it, because I satisfied myself we had great power to deal with it. The time of renewal affords him the opportunity to make it clear that there must be a purging of the lists on the one hand, and a revision of powers to exercise authority on the other. I wonder how many members realize that all those in the so-called institutions in the provinces are receiving old age pensions?

Mr DUNNING: In every province.

Mr. BENNETT: I was not speaking of every one, but I was speaking of some. I wonder how many hon. members realize that fact? In the beginning, that was never intended. The provinces got the money to maintain these so-called poor houses; I do not know what they are called in the various provinces, but in England they are known as poor houses.

An hon. MEMBER: Houses of industry.

Mr. BENNETT: They are getting the money for them. Obviously that was not the purpose originally intended, but the practice has grown up and has been extended. That is all there is to it.

Mr. DUNNING: I know of some provinces where an old age pension system without that money would be impossible.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that is the other side of it. They are able to carry on, because they do not exhaust that money in caring for the people who receive the benefits.

I had not intended to detain the committee so long, but the point I desired to make is that I am particularly anxious that the minister continue his effort in connection with reciprocal arrangements with the British dominions and the motherland, because I believe, indeed, I am sure, it would be helpful to us as well as to them.

I do once more urge upon him that the claims of the Yukon are as strong as, and in my judgment stronger than those of the Northwest Territories. I believe that with his sense of fairness, looking at the two, the minister will agree that the claims of the Yukon are the stronger.

Mr. THOMPSON: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased indeed that some provision is being made for the blind. I believe great credit is due Doctor Cotnam, the former member for Renfrew North, who so ably supported the cause of the blind on many occasions in the house. He should be given the credit for doing the spadework in bringing the case for the blind before the house and the people. I agree too, with the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. McCann) that we are paying seventy-five per cent of the cost of old age pensions, and have no say in their administration.

Not long ago a change was made in administration. The county boards were discarded, and the work was handed over to municipal clerks. Hon. members must be aware that municipal clerks are never well paid. They were ordered by the Ontario legislature to do this work, for which they were to receive no remuneration. I know old people will sometimes come to these officials and take up half a day of their time filling out blanks, answering questions, and giving information as to age, and so forth. The clerks are obliged to receive these people, but are not paid for this work. I suggest that when the federal government is paying seventy-five per cent of the cost of pensions, it should have some say in the administration. In the province of Ontario I think a great injustice is done in commandeering all clerks to do this work for which they are not paid. They are helping in the administration of the Old Age Pensions Act, by filling out blanks and sending in applications.

Mr. CAMERON (Cape Breton North): Mr. Chairman, may I say at the outset without hesitation that I believe the Old Age Pensions Act has been administered without the slightest political tendency. I believe the head of our board, Mr. Blois, who was formerly a judge of the juvenile court, is absolutely impartial and absolutely fair in the administration of the funds which come under his control.

I have an idea that the Old Age Pensions Act should be administered and supported entirely by the dominion government, and I took that position before the original bill was introduced. At that time I was provincial secretary of Nova Scotia, and when consulted by the then Minister of Labour I said on behalf of the government of Nova Scotia that we did not propose to enter into any contributory scheme on a fifty-fifty basis, because the government of that province could not afford to make the contribution. Hon. members will recall that Nova Scotia did not enter into any agreement with the dominion until 1933.

I am amused at the turn which matters sometimes take in a discussion of this kind. I have had experiences somewhat like those of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart). People have come to me and asked me to fill out applications. I have been told: My neighbour was a good Conservative and was getting an old age pension; why cannot I get one? I have been told plainly that I did not stand in well with the government, or otherwise the pension would go through. I had to tell this man that I did not know how the other man had secured his pension, but the probabilities were that he had not made a proper return. I told him I could not advise him to make an incorrect return, as that would not be worth doing. I said that if on a correct return he was entitled to a pension, I was quite sure the board would see that he got whatever he was entitled to under the regulations.

Something has been said about pensions being paid to the inmates of poorhouses. These pensions are of no benefit to the provincial government of Nova Scotia, as these institutions are supported by the municipalities. I had an experience with an inmate of one of these institutions. I told him I was surprised that he was looking for an old age pension, as I knew what he had received for a farm he had sold not more than a year before. He has not put in his application yet, but he is all ready to do so.

I believe the act is administered with reasonable honesty in Nova Scotia. The gentleman at the head of the department is conscientious and very capable. However, I am afraid that some of the inspectors who take applications throughout the province are not as careful in collecting data as they might be. I believe pensions are being paid in the province which should not be paid, but I suppose this is true of all provinces.

Mr. SPENCE: Mr. Chairman, as one of the members of the committee which brought in a report in 1926 recommending to the house that old age pensions should be granted, I have taken a deep interest in this matter. As the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Miss Macphail) has said, I do not know how we could have got through the years of depression without this act being in force.

There have been many abuses of the Old Age Pensions Act. We are not amending the act this afternoon, so anything that any of us may say will be simply for the information of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning). I agree with the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. McCann) and the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart) when they suggest that everyone wanting an old age pension should appear before a county judge. I would hate to tell this house just what happens sometimes in order that pensions may be obtained by certain people. I know that in my own province many farmers and others signed over their property to their children just before the Old Age Pensions Act came into force in order to become eligible for a pension. I give a great deal of credit to the Hon. George S. Henry, former Premier of Ontario and Minister of Highways, for rechecking the pension lists. Many names were struck off, as it was found that many people who had lots of money to live on had been trying to impose on the public.

I do not agree entirely with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) as to red tape in granting pensions. I think what is needed is a wider interpretation of the act. The boards should cut out a lot of red tape and administer the act in a businesslike manner. They should not try to inconvenience or humiliate an applicant for a pension, but at the same time the treasury of this country should be protected to see that it is not drained dry. It seems to me that everyone is after the Minister of Finance for something.

I do not agree with the provision in the act that a man receiving a pension of $20 a month cannot earn over $100 a year. That provision should be changed. A man of seventy or seventy-five years of age should be entitled to make a few dollars to buy himself some little luxuries. I think such a man should be allowed to earn more than $100 per year before his pension is reduced.

I cannot agree with the actuary who prepared the figures for the Minister of Finance, although he is generally correct. He says that the cost this year of old age pensions in Canada is $27,500,000, and he estimates that in 1951, about thirteen years hence, the cost will be $62,000,000.

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid I misled my hon. friend.

Mr. SPENCE: Oh, no, you did not. That is what you said.

Mr. DUNNING: I may have misled the hon. member in the manner in which I used those figures. The dominion's share for the coming fiscal year will be $27,500,000. The figures which I gave and which were prepared by the actuaries, were the estimated total cost on an actuarial basis, both provincial and dominion, for old age pensions in 1941 and 1951 respectively.

Mr. SPENCE: I understood the minister to say that that would be our share. That makes quite a difference.

Mr. DUNNING: It is bad enough, even at that.

Mr. SPENCE: I am glad that the blind are going to receive consideration, but I think the pension should start below forty years of age. A few weeks ago I met a poor, unfortunate blind chap who was peddling some articles in a fire hall in Toronto where I go sometimes. He told me that a man of twenty years of age was more in need of a pension than one of forty years. He was twenty-nine years old, and had become blind when he was only twenty-one. When he had to go out to try to do something for himself he found he was afraid to cross streets, to go into buildings or to do anything of that sort. He told me that a man of forty who had had some experience was better able to make a living than a man of twenty. I think this pension should be paid to men of twenty who are blind, as well as to those of forty. I think such action would please a great number of people, and it would be a godsend to the blind. I think pensions should be paid to the blind of any age.

Mr. DUPUIS: Mr. Chairman, some reference has been made to the provision in the act whereby a man who has been absent from Canada cannot obtain a pension. I am sure the minister has had many cases of this sort brought to his attention. Could not the benefit of the doubt be given to a man who is seeking to obtain a pension and who gives evidence to the effect that although he was absent from the country he maintained a domicile in Canada? Power should be given to the minister or to those in authority in the provinces to decide these cases. I have in mind a man who is eighty-five years of age. He was one of those who took part in the Northwest rebellion. I discussed this case in the house when the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. Power) brought in his estimates. Although this man was not wounded, he lost all he had during his absence in the army repressing that rebellion, yet he is told by the minister that he is not entitled to a pension. The minister, seconded by the leader of the opposition, told me that the applicant should have availed himself of the old age pension. He applied for an old age pension, only to be told in turn he was not entitled to it because he was absent from the country for a time during the last twenty years. He was engaged in prospecting in the Yukon territory. As a matter of fact he spent the largest part of his life in that territory, and in the course of prospecting he passed over the border and went into Alaska.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not want to interrupt the hon. member but if he would not mind, the committee might pass clause 1 before six o'clock, and he could then resume.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Child.

Mr. DUPUIS: Shall I now proceed, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: Yes.

Mr. DUPUIS: This man crossed the borders of the Yukon into Alaska, and was there engaged in the business of prospecting. Although he had his residence in a town in Alaska—Skagway, I believe—he always preserved his Canadian domicile, and after returning to the Yukon and again prospecting there for a few years, he came back to Quebec, and is now living at Marieville. I think his case illustrates the advisability of giving the minister jurisdiction to decide whether a man has retained his domicile in Canada although he may have been absent for one purpose or another. At any rate I should be very glad if such a decision could be arrived at. As other hon. members have told this committee, while many people abuse the law, I think the minister would be justified in giving sympathetic consideration to cases similar to the ones I have mentioned.

Mr. WEIR: May I follow the example of others in offering a suggestion for discussion at the coming conference with the provinces concerning old age pensions. I have in mind two cases which I think are of sufficient importance to establish principles as others may be similarly circumstanced. They have to do with the matter of desertion. In one case, a lady, a pioneer in this country, went out to western Canada when she was very young, and got married in her later years. After she had become quite elderly her husband left her and returned to France. She had no word from him for, I believe, six years. She then became destitute and tried to secure the old age pension. The department required assurance that the husband was either dead or presumed to be dead. An investigation was made and, unfortunately, the husband was discovered to be living in France, with the result that his wife is debarred from securing the old age pension in this country. If he had not been found, or could have been presumed to be dead, or had been dead, the lady would have been entitled to an old age pension.

The other case is of a similar kind. A French Canadian woman moved out to western Canada in her early years and there married a Swedish citizen. Before he was married he acquired Canadian citizenship; in fact, he took out a homestead in this country and farmed it for a number of years. Then, because of family quarrels or perhaps for other reasons, he left this country and returned to Sweden. It is now two and a half years since the case was brought to my attention, and we have been trying to find out the circumstances of the husband. I am told that if he has again applied for Swedish nationality his wife can revert to her Canadian status and become eligible for an old age pension; but if he has not done so, although he may remain in Sweden, she cannot qualify for a pension. Perhaps the principles which are involved in these cases could be dealt with when the minister meets with the provincial representatives to reconsider this legislation.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad to bear that in mind. We are now on a section which limits us specifically to discussion of the blind, and we could probably make better progress with other questions this evening on section 3, which deals with the qualifications.

Section agreed to.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CENTRAL FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. J. J. DUFFUS (Peterboro West) moved the second reading of Bill No. 58, respecting Central Finance Corporation and to change its name to Household Finance Corporation.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. DUFFUS: The bill which I am sponsoring known as Bill C, an act respecting Central Finance Corporation and to change its name to Household Finance Corporation, was passed by the Senate on March 9, 1937. There seems to be a widespread opinion that this is a new company, but that is at variance with the facts inasmuch as the company has been doing business in Canada for eight years on authority of the dominion parliament.

The corporation makes two requests, one to change the name to Household Finance Corporation, and the second to have a reduction in the prevailing rates. I desire to have it distinctly understood in the first place that I have no interest financial or otherwise in this corporation except in so far as it benefits the borrowers of money on the plan set out. There is a large body of people whose borrowings are not attractive to our banking institutions. The bill admirably provides for exactly that type of borrower.

I am not asking that the house pass the bill. I am simply requesting that it be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce where it may be thoroughly discussed.

The Central Finance Corporation was the first loan organization to ask for and secure government supervision, control and regulation of its business. It has by far the largest investment, and the most complete statistics in regard to this kind of business in the dominion. It was incorporated in 1928 by a special act of the Canadian parliament, which defines and limits its powers. I might give a typical example to show how some of our bootlegging finance corporations have been carrying on business in Canada.

I have here information with regard to one company making loans, including the sum of $200. The borrower receives $200 in cash, for which he pays $135 in charges, repayable in equal monthly payments over a period of one year. The rate charged by the lender was 124·4 per cent per annum or $10.38 a month. This is the very condition which this legislation is designed to end. Under the terms of Bill C the legal charges permitted on such a loan would have been $29.28 instead of $135. The charges indicated are not uncommon among unregulated lenders in all parts of the country, and unless this legislation is passed, permitting a rate sufficient to compensate for the expense in making these small loans, but preventing exorbitant rates of profits, the needy borrower who cannot qualify for a bank loan will have no alternative but to patronize these so-called bootlegger organizations and pay bootleg prices.

I have here a copy of the Toronto Star under date March 15, 1937, and there are twelve of these companies advertising small loans. There are only two of them under government regulation and control. I have another paper which is well known to some members of the house, the Toronto Telegram, and it carries advertisements from thirteen of these firms, only two of them being under government control.

My suggestion is that this bill be treated the same as the bill that was presented to the house last Friday evening; that is to say, that it be sent to the standing committee on banking and commerce, where it may be thoroughly discussed. To my mind the question is not whether this bill is right or wrong. The point is, does the house desire to have the bill considered in committee where it may be thoroughly discussed? I for one am eager to eliminate loan companies operating without jurisdiction and imposing any excessive burden of interest. I am satisfied that this bill is at least a step in the right direction, and hence my reason for requesting that it be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Contrary to the general opinion, all members of the house have the privilege of attending the committee and participating in its discussions, and also the right to ask questions. In other words, they have the same privileges as the members of the committee, except that they have no vote. Furthermore, Mr. Finlayson, an official of the finance department, whose duty it is to protect the general public in matters of finance and interest, is also in attendance at the committee. I therefore move that this bill be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce where it may receive attention without delay.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion for second reading will have to be disposed of first.

Mr. C. G. MacNEIL (Vancouver North): I sincerely hope that this bill will not be dealt with in exactly the same manner as the bill which was discussed on Friday night. This bill embodies certain decidedly objectionable features, and it seems to me regrettable that the stamp of the house should be placed upon it by giving it second reading and so perpetuating what may be termed shady business practices through various obnoxious features incorporated in the bill.

I would remind the house that this problem has faced hon. members for a number of years, and it has been generally agreed that the situation reveals that the people who must apply for loans to companies of this character are those who cannot obtain credit from chartered banks. They usually obtain these small loans when facing emergent circumstances such as death or sickness, when they cannot lodge any effective protest against the extortionate terms demanded by companies of this sort. I consider it highly significant that the amending bill is now brought before parliament because of certain objections lodged by the superintendent of insurance. I gather from evidence given before committees of parliament that the superintendent objected to the procedure followed by the company in demanding a fee of ten dollars in respect of all chattel mortgages. This particular company, I understand, specializes in a loan business in connection with which security is required under chattel mortgage.

Some irregularity was alleged concerning the fees they were charging, there being a maximum fee of $10 whether or not any actual disbursement had been made. I understand there is some doubt whether the annual licence may be renewed because of this alleged irregularity.

Furthermore, the explanatory notes attached to the bill are grossly misleading. They would lead one to believe that the company is voluntarily reducing the rates of interest. Opposite page 3 the note reads in part:

The maximum rate of charge provided in the bill is lower than the present maximum and constitutes a reduction in rate on the majority of loans made.

Lower down it states:

Two rates are suggested because the ordinary endorsed loan business costs less to operate than a chattel loan business.

It goes on to say:

The personal loan department of the Canadian Bank of Commerce is at present doing an endorsed loan business at an effective rate of slightly over 1 per centum per month.

We find upon examination of section 5 as it at present stands, that under its present charter, the company may charge a discount of 7 per cent. Referring to section 5 (i), the company may:

(i) lend money secured by assignment of choses-in-action, chattel mortgages or such other evidence of indebtedness as the company may require, and may charge interest thereon at the rate of not more than seven per centum per annum and may deduct such interest in advance and provide for repayment in weekly, monthly or other uniform repayments;

In addition, under subsection (ii) the company is empowered to charge:

—in addition to interest as aforesaid, for all expenses which have been necessarily and in good faith incurred by the company in making a loan authorized by the next preceding subparagraph (i), including all expenses for inquiry and investigation into character and circumstances of the borrower, his co-maker or surety, for taxes, correspondence and professional advice and for all necessary documents and papers, two per centum upon the principal sum loaned;

That means a total discount of 9 per cent, or an effective interest rate of 18 per cent per annum, or 1½ per cent per month. That, of course, is exclusive of the charge made for the chattel mortgage fee.

Under existing legislation no company is now permitted to charge more than 1½ per cent per month on the unpaid balance of loans of $500 or less. I am referring to the Loan Companies Act. The amending section provides a fixed rate of 1½ per cent:

(a) on loans made in whole or in part upon the security of co-makers, endorsers, sureties or guarantors other than one only of the following, the wife, husband, brother, sister or child of the borrower, at a rate not exceeding one and one-half per centum per month on the unpaid principal balance owing by the borrower.

And subsection (b):

On loans made without security or secured in any manner permitted by this act other than the manner described in the next preceding subparagraph (a) of this section, at a rate not exceeding two and one-quarter per centum per month on the unpaid principal balances owing by the borrower.

The proposed change, instead of lowering the interest rate, will increase the charges by 50 per cent from 18 per cent to a rate of approximately 27 per cent per annum. That is, the rate will be increased by ¾ of 1 per cent per month. Therefore I submit that the explanatory notes attached to this bill are grossly misleading, and this house should not countenance any such misrepresentation of the facts.

For many reasons this bill does not stand in the relationship of a private bill because of the discussion that has taken place during the years, and the likelihood that endorsement by second reading will be regarded as establishing vested privileges for companies of this character. I submit that such legislation should not be approved until a thorough investigation has been made of the whole problem. I suggest that such investigation might properly be conducted by a royal commission. The only evidence yet heard on this subject has been the evidence secured from the loan companies; no evidence has yet been heard from the borrowers before committee of this house. I find that assurances have been given in the past on this score. At page 3550 of Hansard of 1936 the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), discussing a similar bill, said:

It is evident, Mr. Speaker, that this matter of interest rates and the conditions applying to small loans must again engage the attention of parliament. It is the intention of the government to initiate, between now and the next session of parliament, a further examination of the matter with a view to amending the existing general legislation. In the meantime I must oppose the second reading of the bill now before the house which, to summarize, provides for effective annual rates of interest ranging from 24½ per cent up to 94 per cent. I am sure that the house will regard such rates as excessive. It is true that in the general legislation now governing the matter the rates are expressed in terms of monthly rates, but there are various other charges, such as chattel mortgages and so forth, which operate to add to the annual interest charge or the monthly interest charge which the borrower has to pay. In connection with this bill and the one that follows, the government suggests that the house should reject them at this session on the principle that we should not incorporate any more companies of this kind until the general legislation can be brought more into harmony with present day conditions, so far as the cost of money is concerned.

I submit that although this company is already incorporated and operating in the dominion, the same argument applies, particularly in view of the objections which have been raised by the superintendent of insurance regarding its operations.

The matter was thoroughly discussed in the session of 1934. I find that on that occasion the then Prime Minister, the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) said in part, referring to the practice in other countries:

As they are the subject matter of much legislation in various countries my own view is that the enactment of this amendment will protect the public in the meantime, and that we could pass at next session of parliament a money lenders' act modelled along the general principle of the British legislation.

Further he says:

Under the circumstances I desire to assure the hon. member for Macleod that it is my intention to proceed with this bill immediately the opportunity offers, and to make all companies, which heretofore have been, are being or may hereafter be incorporated, subject to it. The limitation mentioned in the bill is 2 per cent, but after reading the British Money Lenders Act, and other legislation, I may say that when the time comes we may adopt a rate of 2½ per cent instead of 2 per cent.

But the assurance was given then, and subsequently, that the whole problem would be reviewed and legislation would be introduced governing the general practice. I think it was the intention of those who spoke on that occasion that such general legislation would to some extent govern companies obtaining charters under provincial legislation, such companies, it was alleged, being guilty of more serious sharp practice than has been attributed to companies such as the one now under discussion. It is interesting to note, during the discussion which took place in the session of 1934, as reported at page 4479 of Hansard, the advertising conducted on behalf of some of these companies. The then member for Macleod spoke of circular letters received headed, "Keep on the sunny side," with the text reading as follows:

Harassed by petty debts?

Are they impairing your ability to work? Clear them all this simple way.

Figure up how much you owe—then come to the Industrial Loan. We will advance you sufficient to pay them all at once. Take a year to repay us in small monthly instalments.

Do it now! Free your mind of worries and get out of debt on the convenient thrift plan. You will be surprised how easy and simple it is for any salaried man or woman to obtain a loan from $50 to $500 or more.

If you are keeping house and are able to make regular monthly repayments, you have all the security necessary for a loan. No negotiable collateral or real estate are required, the only signatures necessary are those of husband and wife.

Simplicity is the keynote of the thrift plan.

And the hon. member went on to say:

Then at the bottom appear the words, "Industrial Loan and Finance Corporation," and in brackets the words "under dominion government supervision." Then the circular goes on to give the name of the manager and the address of the Ottawa office. Then, in the corner, under the very pretty title of "Keep on the sunny side," I find the following:

Personal loans from $50 to $500.

1. The only investigations made are the questions asked of you.

2. The only signatures needed are those of husband and wife.

3. Lowest charge in Canada on loans of this type—our rate authorized by a special act of the dominion parliament incorporating the company.

He added:

My reason for bringing this circular to the attention of the Prime Minister and the government is to suggest that in some section of the bill we should incorporate a paragraph which would limit the type of advertising these companies may carry on.

Then he says:

I certainly think some of this advertising is misleading.

I submit that a bill of this kind tends to nullify existing legislation. I refer to the Money-Lenders Act, which forbids a rate of interest in excess of 12 per cent per annum in respect of loans of less than $500. This act has been honoured more in the breach than in the observance. As far as I can ascertain no definite attempt has been made to enforce this provision in connection with loan companies, all of which goes to show the need for a thorough investigation of the whole problem at this time.

As I have already said, the bill now before us distinguishes between two classes of loans, those secured by endorsement, and those secured by chattel mortgage. I understand that this company specializes in loans on chattel mortgages, and does very little business on loans secured by endorsements. By the explanatory note they would have us believe that the reduction to one and a half per cent in one instance, and two and a quarter per cent in the other, represents a general reduction in the gross revenue from loans, but this is of little significance when you consider that practically no business is done by this company on the basis of personal endorsements.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the provisions of this bill make it liable to grave abuses. The parent company, to which the sponsor of the bill has referred, has stated very definitely on more than one occasion in the United States that it cannot profitably make loans of less than $200 at a lower rate than 2½ per cent per month. If the fixed rate suggested in this bill is secured, no doubt the Canadian company will follow the practice that has been adopted in the United States and refuse to make loans for sums of less than $200, confining their operations to the more profitable field of loans between $300 and $500.

Furthermore, I am reliably informed that when an applicant goes to an office of this company, having been attracted by the advertisement stating that loans may be secured at the exceptionally low rate of 1½ per cent per month, he is persuaded by various means to take a loan on the security of a chattel mortgage rather than on a personal endorsement. In discussing matters with the applicant the official usually informs him that of course they will make the loan at 1½ per cent if he secures more than one endorser, say his brother and another individual, but he cannot get the advantage of that low rate without the second endorsement. Then it is explained to the applicant that under the circumstances he can obtain a loan of, say $500 if he gives a chattel mortgage, and human nature being what it is, the applicant usually accepts the loan at an interest rate of 2½ or 2¼ per cent. I am informed also that the chattel mortgage given as security is usually for an amount far in excess of the total loan, so if through some further mischance foreclosure should be executed, the borrower is practically ruined.

I suggest that this paves the way to grave abuses. I believe public opinion demands an investigation such as I have urged, and I understand that on more than one occasion the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) has received petitions from representative groups of people urging that a royal commission be appointed to investigate the whole question.

Mr. DUNNING: The petitions have been initiated by these very loan companies, may I say.

Mr. MacNEIL: At least I believe such an investigation would determine how far dominion legislation might regulate the activities of these companies now operating under provincial legislation.

Mr. DUNNING: It could not, unfortunately.

Mr. MacNEIL: I understand the dominion controls interest rates. However, as this bill stands, because of the very objectionable features to which I have referred, I suggest that it should not be given second reading until a more thorough investigation of the whole question has been made.

Mr. PAUL MARTIN (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, those who were in the house last week will recall that the discussion at that time largely concerned this and another similar bill that came from another place. It was only because of the question of time that this bill did not receive the treatment that was accorded the other, of receiving second reading before being sent to committee, where the whole matter might be thoroughly discussed. This morning in the committee a rather fruitful discussion took place. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) made what I thought was a very sensible suggestion when he pointed out the futility, until this bill reached the committee of discussing the bill which is now before the committee, and which, while not in all respects the same, nevertheless involves the principle with which this bill deals. I concurred with the hon. gentleman in that view, and the discussion was more or less suspended.

I had another reason for taking that position. Since the previous discussion in this house I have received a communication from the credit unions in the maritime provinces asking for an opportunity to present their point of view to the committee with respect to this whole matter. As I indicated last week, my interest in this question arises largely because of my belief in the real merit of the credit unions themselves. While I realize that the sphere of the credit unions is not altogether the same as that of these companies, I think the time involved considering this whole matter might be spent wisely and with great advantage.

There is a further reason. It strikes me that a parliament such as this would be eminently unfair if it gave one bill the privilege of full consideration by a committee while denying that privilege to another similar bill. While these bills may differ in some of their details the same principle is involved, and I do not think it would be fair to discuss one bill without at the same time discussing the other. On that ground alone, Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill should be referred to the committee.

There is also a further reason. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken (Mr. MacNeil) quite properly pointed to the need of an investigation into this whole question. The other night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) gave reasons which, with his knowledge of the situation, he considered good reasons for not holding that general investigation at the present time. Personally I should like to see such an inquiry held, but I must take the minister's view that this is not the time for it. Failing that, is there not more to be gained by considering this matter in committee than by merely taking the attitude that it should not be discussed at all? Giving the bill second reading does not mean that the bill is adopted. I do not know whether or not I am in favour of the bill. I see some merits in it and a good many objectionable features, but all those can be brought out in committee.

This morning the superintendent of insurance appeared before the committee and discussed the general problem of borrowing, having in mind these two bills. There is no opportunity in this house of examining the superintendent of insurance; there is no opportunity of finding out what he thinks of credit unions; there is no opportunity of finding out what he thinks would be a proper relationship between credit unions as existing in the maritime provinces and the caisse populaire in Quebec. Failing a royal commission, the very examination which the hon. member is urging should be pursued in the banking and commerce committee. If this is not done, I want to point out to the hon. member what he is doing. The situation in respect to borrowing and lending is this: Human nature being what it is, the need for credit seems necessarily always to pursue individuals.

I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) when the other evening he took the view, having in mind this constant demand for credit and the classes of people who must look for credit, that possibly the time had come when the state should set up organizations to extend credit to people with low incomes. I agree with that suggestion, but I do not think that to-day it is possible to attain it. I do not want to criticize the government of the day. While I cannot speak for it, I do not suppose it would be prepared to accept the suggestion. Failing that, to dismiss this bill in the summary fashion in which the hon. member would have it dismissed would be to place the whole question of borrowing and lending in the hands of people who now escape supervision and regulation.

The sponsor of the bill pointed out that in current numbers of two of the Toronto papers several companies engaged in the business of lending sums from $500 down did so in every instance but one without being subject to any kind of regulation. Why? Because they operate in two ways, either under provincial charters, where there are no regulations, or without charters at all.

Mr. HEAPS: May I ask a question?

Mr. MARTIN: Yes.

Mr. HEAPS: Does the hon. member mean to say that companies incorporated under provincial authority operate without provincial regulation?

Mr. MARTIN: There is no regulation whatsoever. You may read their advertisements, and following that, go to their places of business and get a loan. You would find that their rates of interest vary to the extent of at least fifty per cent. I was told the other day of a transaction in my own community where the rate imposed was as high as 600 per cent.

I presume the companies concerned by this bill and the bill now before the senate have considered that it is good business to subject themselves to a measure of regulation. As a result they have taken out a dominion charter. The superintendent of insurance does in respect of these companies, and these companies alone, make certain regulations as to the rate of interest which can be imposed, the kind of advertising, and the like. What I would like the hon. member who has just spoken to realize is that it is not a question of supporting something you want; it is a question of trying to eliminate the bootlegger and the shark by recognizing something which you would prefer did not exist.

Mr. STEVENS: The hon. member surely does not argue that that very desirable objective will be advanced one iota by the passing of this bill?

Mr. MARTIN: I certainly do.

Mr. STEVENS: How?

Mr. MARTIN: As I said the other night, I am interested in the problem. When I went to St. Francis Xavier university last fall for a week seeking to interest myself in the subject, I was referred to the research in the matter already mentioned by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), namely, the works undertaken and prosecuted by the Russell Sage foundation. In answer to the question of the hon. member for Kootenay East I would say those works show the following: In those states in the union where the rate was reduced to a point lower than the present, the number of loan shark companies increased so much that in the state of Maryland, and I believe also in the state of New York, the legislatures increased the rates, and the actual result was a decrease in the number of illegitimate companies operating. If the ordinary man with a small income can get money from companies such as those dealt with in these bills at a rate of interest lower than he can from the scabs or sharks, that is where he is going to go.

Speaking on this question the other night the right hon. leader of the opposition said his researches into the work of the Sage foundation—and I wish to be quite fair in quoting him—resulted in showing abuses of the very kind then under discussion in the house. I have gone through at least two books issued by the Russell Sage foundation since the right hon. gentleman spoke, and I say these companies do not come within the mischiefs contemplated by the foundation.

It is not a question of our approving the present situation or saying that it is the best. People will continue to borrow. They have always borrowed, and while it may be desirable to set up an agency where they can borrow at the lowest possible rate of interest, one has to recognize not so much what is desirable but what is immediately possible. If this measure were killed a difficult situation would arise. I made the statement the other night, on the basis of information I received from the superintendent of insurance, that some 30,000 outstanding loans not now paid by borrowers would thereby be affected. I have since learned from the superintendent of insurance that during the past four years some $15,000,000 have been loaned by this particular company. Just think what that means. If we dropped this measure suddenly we would only be placing a great burden on this company, and more particularly upon the borrowers.

The real issue in my opinion is this: A bill involving in substance this same principle has been referred to a committee. I supported the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) to the effect that our committee discussion might better take place on both bills together. With him, I should like to see this bill referred to the committee, in order that the borrowers might be given the opportunity to present their point of view. I would suggest that we bring representatives here of the Russell Sage foundation, also the superintendent of insurance, and I personally would like to bring two individuals from my own constituency who have suffered from the operations of this very kind of a company which will be protected unless we exercise some measure of regulation.

While I do not think this is a full and proper way of regulating, yet under the circumstances and having in mind the observations of the Minister of Finance I would say it is the only way left open. I ask the hon. member who has just spoken to consider seriously what the results of his suggestion if adopted would be. In any event, whether or not what I have said is correct, I believe that any company given recognition by the government of the day, no matter what its business may be, should be accorded subsequent privileges consistent with that recognition. This company and the company dealt with previously were granted charters. The company now under consideration, as I understand it, operated under arrangements which were then acceptable but which, if the information of the hon. member who has just spoken is correct, are not now acceptable to the superintendent of insurance. Surely if our proud boast of democracy means anything, the individuals affected have the right to present their point of view. They have not the right to present those views in this house. I submit that the gentlemen who are prosecuting an endeavour in the maritime provinces, which I am sure hon. gentlemen will recognize as being a very desirable objective, should have an opportunity to come before the committee to state their views.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I can see just one good thing about this bill, and that is the fact that it is sponsored by an hon. member in this corner of the chamber. We in this corner, known as the honourable rump, feel that we are just as intelligent as those who sit on the other side—and perhaps we may be a little more worthy of being trusted. The government has no fear that we are going to be contaminated. I sat in the committee this morning when another bill of a similar nature was being discussed, and I feel I am taking no risk in saying that this bill should go through the mill the same as the other. I am convinced that this house is composed of Christian members—

Mr. JACOBS: Not all.

Mr. McIVOR: It would include the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), who would take a foremost place. It is evidenced by the manner in which we open our proceedings. I am going to support the sending of this bill to the committee in order that I may have a little more time to prepare myself for hitting this bill in the way I think it ought to be hit. When a man falls into a hole or a pit, even our Hebrew members would stop to pull him out even though it were on the Sabbath day. Anyone who is forced to borrow money at 24 or 30 per cent is in a hole, and any moneylender who comes along and shoves him in further should in my opinion be sent sky-high, and I am going to be one of those who will help to do that when this bill comes before the committee.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think the position taken by the last speaker (Mr. McIvor) could hardly justify the second reading of this bill. He believes that the bill is essentially wrong. If that is the general belief, we cannot possibly agree to the second reading. Even the sponsor of the bill (Mr. Duffus) said it was not a question with him whether the bill was right or wrong, that we ought to let it go on to the committee in any event. I think it is the accepted rule of procedure in this house that the principle of a bill is decided on its second reading. Anyone who has been in the house for some time or who is at all familiar with the rules will recognize that fact. It is here and now that we should decide whether we are in favour of the principle of this bill. Still there are many hon. members who believe that this bill should be sent to committee without prejudice. Speaking to the bill which was before the house on Friday night, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) had this to say:

> Personally I should be content if the second readings were given without prejudice to the ultimate fate of the bills, which could then be referred to the banking and commerce committee for examination and report; for as I have stated, the companies concerned are already in existence and are permitted by existing law to charge a higher rate of interest than seems to be contemplated by the bills. We might, therefore, at least examine them in committee where interested parties both for and against may be heard.

Personally I do not think that was a sound way of dealing with the bill. However, the minister made his appeal and the house agreed to the second reading of one bill and referred it to the committee. But what did we in the committee find this morning? We found that the sponsors of that bill raised every objection to having both sides of the question presented to the committee. Their attitude was to hurry the bill through the committee, that it was a separate bill which should be judged on its merits, and that we should not take time to go into the fundamental principles involved, which some of us were trying to bring before the house and the committee. I tried to move an amendment in committee this morning that before any decision was given, the whole question should be gone into, as was suggested by the minister. But the sponsors of the bill did not want anything of that kind; they wanted to get the bill through.

Mr. JACOBS: I did not think the rules of the house permit us to discuss what has transpired in committee before the matter is brought back to the house.

Mr. BENNETT: Before the report.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think the hon. member's objection is well taken, but reference was made by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), to what went on in committee, and I thought it was only fair that I should do likewise. I do not want to pursue the matter further because I recognize that it would not be the usual practice.

The sponsor of this bill made the astonishing statement that any member of this house had the same rights in the committee as a member of the committee itself, except possibly with regard to voting privileges. Those of us who have sat on committees for some years know that that is not the case. Members of the house are usually permitted to appear in committee, and sometimes they are given the right to participate in the discussion, but no member of the house has the same right in committee as the committee members.

The sponsor also suggested that if the bill went to the committee the superintendent of insurance would be present to safeguard the interests of the public. Since he has introduced the question, I think it is only fair to state that the superintendent of insurance, while he seemed to be in favour of the previous bill, was definitely opposed to the present bill. There is no use dragging in the superintendent at this time.

The sponsor of the bill also suggested that this was a step in the right direction. That might have been said for the bill which was before us on Friday night—in that case it was not a very long step in the right direction—but I do not think even this can be said with regard to the bill under consideration. If the bill is voted down, the company could continue to carry on its business in the old way.

Mr. MARTIN: I was under that impression but the superintendent of insurance advises to the contrary. The reasons he gave are reasons which should be discussed in committee.

Mr. BENNETT: It could carry on business provided it could get a licence at the end of the year, which the superintendent might or might not give.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is my point.

Mr. MARTIN: It is the same thing.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It can carry on business if it is obeying the law, but it is not obeying the law. Why should this company which cannot obtain a licence under present arrangements come here seeking to have its privileges extended? The hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) seems to take it for granted that if a company has once been established and recognized, it should go on and on.

Mr. MARTIN: No, I did not say that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Perhaps the hon. member did not say it in those words, but he implied that it should be given the privilege of having its affairs examined and of being allowed to make changes. It seems to me that if a company has not been complying with the existing regulations, there exists a very good reason why those privileges should be promptly withdrawn. Whatever may be said about the previous bill I do not think it can be said that this one is a step in the right direction.

I understand something of the reasons that may be alleged for having regulated companies. Admittedly there is something to be said for having a regulated company, even though its practices are reprehensible, but it is a desperate alternative that we are asked to adopt. If the small loan business is iniquitous, if it consists essentially in the practice of usury, why should we go on tolerating it to the extent of 24 per cent, or as in this particular case, I believe, 27 per cent per annum? Is that the alternative that we should adopt? I do not think so. There are possibilities of establishing other agencies to do this kind of work. The companies take the ground that their losses are so heavy that they have to charge this very heavy rate; that the carrying on of this business involves large expenditures and for that reason they must charge high rates. I can follow their reasoning though I cannot accept their conclusions. It may be essential for a company which goes into this business and pays its officials $6,000 a year and over in salaries, even though they charge a moderate rate of interest, say five or six per cent on their investment, to impose such rates as this in order to recoup themselves for the losses they sustain. That is all very well, looking at it from the company's standpoint. But we in this parliament should think not so much of the company's interests as of the interests of the borrower. I submit that no man can pay around two or two and a half per cent per month and remain solvent for very long.

Mr. DUNNING: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is that principle that we are here considering, because this bill provides for the continuance of that kind of thing. It occurs to me that the situation is very much like attempting to rescue a man who is drowning. You say, "Poor fellow, he is going down; he ought to be thrown a life preserver." But if you throw him something which is in the shape of a life preserver but which is heavier than water, you are not helping him very much; your help is simply sending him down. And if the best this house can do is to provide that private companies, regulated and all the rest of it, can charge 24 to 27 per cent interest, we are not doing very much to help out the borrowers.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Might I suggest that this is not 27 per cent per annum; it is two and a quarter per cent per month, which amounts to a great deal more than 27 per cent per annum.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, I suppose that is true, although these loans are for short terms, and perhaps strictly we should not speak of them as 24 or 27 per cent per annum.

Mr. MARTIN: That is the difficulty. We are supposing. We don't know. Let us consider this.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But we know it is not less than 27 per cent.

Mr. MacNEIL: The effective rate.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The effective rate is not less than 27 per cent. I do not see why, because a somewhat similar bill was passed on Friday, we should pass another bill now on Monday. The bill that was passed on Friday was a great deal better in principle than this one.

Mr. MacNICOL: It only slipped through.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It slipped through by a very small majority, and it went through on the express understanding that we should have the entire situation considered in committee. Let me emphasize that once more. The position as the Minister of Finance, said was that:

> We might, therefore, at least examine them in committee where interested parties both for and against may be heard.

But there was no disposition in committee this morning to listen to interested parties against the bills. There were a few who supported that idea.

Mr. MARTIN: I strongly supported it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, the hon. member for Essex East supported that idea.

Mr. DUNNING: So would I have done, had I been there.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I mentioned that the finance minister would have done it. But that was not the unanimous idea in the committee. I felt that before passing a single bill more, before giving one little bit of privilege more, we should have a full examination of the whole question.

The house is now considering another bill —each bill standing by itself—and we are back again into the question of principle. Personally I strongly urge, and I am quite prepared to call a vote on the question, that here and now this bill should be voted down. The principle involved is that of 27 per cent interest, or much more, as the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Taylor) suggests. I think it is outrageous. In spite of the wretched conditions that prevail among a great many of the poor of this country, apparently the best thing parliament can do is to allow companies of this kind to go on exploiting, as I regard it—yes, exploiting the people. The fact that they do not exploit them to the extent of 30 or 40 per cent—someone suggested that certain companies have robbed borrowers to as much as 100 per cent, or was it 600 per cent?—that I suggest is no reason why we should permit this company to exploit people up to 27 per cent. I hope the house will vote this bill down now.

Mr. MARTIN: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member has already spoken.

Mr. BLACKMORE: If there is any chance at all that this bill will not receive complete consideration from all angles in committee, I should certainly support the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) in his view that we ought to kill it now while we have a chance at it?

Mr. MARTIN: Let us try to consider it first.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with those who are opposing this bill. I believe that in passing the second reading of the bill we are adopting a principle that is absolutely vicious. I agree with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), or rather I agreed with him last June when he said that this whole matter of loan companies should be referred—

Mr. SPEAKER: It is nine o'clock. The hour for public and private bills having expired, the house will revert to the consideration of Bill No. 42, to amend the Old Age Pensions Act.

OLD AGE PENSIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE CERTAIN CLASSES OF BLIND PERSONS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. 42, to amend the Old Age Pensions Act—Mr. Dunning—Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

On section 3—Pensions to the blind: conditions.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, section 3 (a) of the bill, defines blindness for the purposes of the act. The definition there used is the same as is used in the Blind Persons Act of 1920 of the United Kingdom. There are many definitions of blindness, and they vary considerably—

Mr. BENNETT: There is political blindness.

Mr. DUNNING: —even in the same countries. The definitions are different, depending on whether they have reference to census enumeration, education or pensions. After careful consideration the English definition has been adopted as the most satisfactory. It is recognized that this definition is general in character, and that it will be necessary to express what it means in terms which can be used and applied by medical examiners, and section 4 of the bill provides that that may be done by regulation.

It is, however, important to note that in the definition adopted the test is not whether the person is unable to pursue his ordinary occupation or any particular occupation, but whether he is too blind to perform any work for which eyesight is essential, and that only visual conditions will be taken into account, and other bodily or mental infirmities will be disregarded. I may amplify that by saying that in discussions with those interested in the problem, from the standpoint of the blind themselves, there is practical unanimity in expressing approval of the definition of blindness used in the British act, which has been adopted in (a) of the section now before the committee. I think it would be convenient if we adopted this section by alphabetical subdivisions, as (a) does not relate to (b), (c) and (d). I shall have an amendment to (c) when we reach it, but for the moment I am dealing with (a), the definition of blindness.

Paragraph (a) agreed to.

On paragraph (b):

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): How does the minister arrive at forty years, if we are to assume, as he said this afternoon, that a blind man at forty is equivalent to an old man at seventy?

Mr. DUNNING: I did not say that.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): The minister is treating them on parallel lines.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, no.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Will he kindly tell us what he did say?

Mr. DUNNING: I said that this act assumes an age of seventy for a blind person of forty, which is different from what my hon. friend is saying.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): I want to have that established so as to deal with the other clauses when we come to them.

Paragraph (b) agreed to.

On paragraph (c):

Mr. DUNNING: I have discussed paragraph (c) with the Minister of Pensions and National Health, who points out to me that the present wording might conceivably create some difficulty in connection with statutes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Pensions and National Health. I will, therefore, ask the Minister of Labour to be good enough to move this amendment to paragraph (c). The paragraph as amended will read:

Is not in receipt of a pension in respect of blindness under the pension act or an allowance in respect of blindness under the War Veterans Allowance Act.

The reason for that amendment is obvious. It avoids disqualification by reason of allowances which may be made under those acts for reasons other than blindness.

Mr. ROGERS: I move that the amendment which has been read be substituted for paragraph (c) as it stands.

Mr. HEAPS: Is it under this particular clause that the amounts of earning power which a blind person may have can be discussed?

Mr. DUNNING: Paragraph (d) deals with that.

Amendment agreed to.

Paragraph (c) as amended agreed to.

On paragraph (d):

Mr. DUNNING: Paragraph (d) allows a total income of $440 for a blind person who is unmarried, or a widower without a child or children, or a widow without a child or children, which means that the pensioner could have a permissible income of $200 over and above the maximum pension of $240 per year. In the case of a blind person who is married, or a widower or a widow with a child or children, the maximum total income is $640 a year, and the maximum permissible income is $400 a year, or just double that for an unmarried blind person. For old age pension the maximum total income is $365 and the maximum permissible income otherwise is $125, and no distinction is made between married and unmarried persons. The extra provision here contained for blind persons recognizes, by the permissible income, a more generous scale in view of the fact that the cost of living for blind persons is higher than for seeing persons, and encourages them to support themselves and their families by augmenting their pensions by earnings. This was the subject of considerable discussion with those organizations that have to do with the blind, and I believe the committee will recognize that there is naturally a certain extra expense falling upon a blind person. There is also the further factor of the training work, work peculiarly suited to blind persons which is carried on by various institutions and which does return a certain income for the blind. For these reasons it is intended to treat blind persons more generously with respect to permissible income than the old age pensioner at seventy.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not think that any member will suggest that we are treating the blind generously when we allow such a small earning power as this bill provides. According to the minister's statement and the terms of the bill itself, a blind single person is allowed to earn not more than $200 per year. If he earns more than that, his pension allowance is reduced accordingly. In other words, he is allowed to earn approximately $4 per week. Perhaps I might put it this way. His total maximum income, the amount he will receive as a pensioner and the amount he will be allowed to earn, will be about $8.50 a week or a little over. I do not suppose any one will claim that for a single blind person $8.50 per week can by any stretch of the imagination be called a generous amount. Would not the minister consider increasing the amount that a blind person should be allowed to earn?

It is not a question of what he may earn, as he may have an unearned income slightly more than is provided for under this bill.

The same might be said with regard to married persons. According to the provisions of this bill the maximum income would be $640 per year, including the amount of the pension. In other words, a married person would be allowed to earn $400 per year, or a total income of a little less than $12.50 per week. I do not think anyone will say that that is treating over-liberally a blind person of the age of forty-five who may have a dependent or partly dependent family. I plead with the minister to increase the amount which a blind person may earn and still be eligible for pension. One of the great hardships under the existing old age pension legislation is that the maximum amount of income allowed a person aged seventy or over is only $365 per year. As persons become older there are times when their requirements become greater on account of sickness and invalidity, and the same thing applies to some extent to the blind pensioner. Is it asking too much, or am I not in this instance voicing the opinion of all the blind people, that they should be allowed to earn more than the amount stated in this bill?

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): I wish to add my plea to that of the last speaker. It will be remembered that in the discussion on the budget resolution I read a telegram from the blind people in Vancouver, and one of their special requests was in connection with the earning allowance for blind people.

Mr. HEAPS: May I ask the minister if the persons he consulted as representing the blind were in favour of this clause in the bill?

Mr. DUNNING: I have naturally had representations from many quarters. One would expect those representing the parties who are to benefit from the bill to ask as much as possible; they would not be truly representing their people if they did not ask for enough. I may, however, tell my hon. friend that I have ample evidence that the blind people are very, very grateful indeed for the provision here made, as a start. More than that I shall not say at the moment.

To determine the relationship which shall exist in regard to income is not an easy matter. One has in mind, of course, the existing provisions of the Old Age Pensions Act. Whatever opinion there may be that the income permitted under that act should be increased, as was expressed this afternoon by many hon. members, the fact remains that the people of this dominion are putting up for the coming fiscal year $27,500,000 under that act. It is anticipated that this additional provision will require $500,000 more during the coming year. I say to-day what I said on the introduction of the Old Age Pensions Act in 1928, that I believe this represents a very fair start, and entirely without prejudice to the future of the legislation.

Mr. HEAPS: I have not the least doubt that the blind people of this country are extremely grateful for the measure now before the committee. I have had expressions to that effect from them, but I have also had communications expressing dissent from certain provisions of this bill, and while I have had no direct communication in regard to this particular clause, I know the hardship such a provision involves for those who come under the existing Old Age Pensions Act. I know how difficult it is for old people who take in the full amount allowed and then find that they have perhaps received in pension and earnings more than they are entitled to. I know this involves a good deal of work on the part of the government, and I have no doubt they have given the matter a good deal of consideration, but I am wondering whether pensions to the blind in other countries, particularly in England or Australia, are restricted by provisions of the same kind. I have an impression that those countries are perhaps a little more generous in their allowance for earnings than this. I am pretty sure such is the case in Australia, and I do not see why we in enacting legislation of this kind cannot be just as generous in our provisions as our sister dominions.

One question that occurs to me while I am on my feet is this: Would a blind pensioner who attains the age of seventy come under the provisions of this proposed bill or under the provisions of the existing act?

Mr. DUNNING: It would not make any difference.

Mr. HEAPS: It would in respect of earning capacity.

Mr. DUNNING: As far as earning capacity is concerned he would come under this provision, because he is blind.

Mr. LEADER: In speaking to this bill this afternoon I mentioned what I thought were some desirable features. I am sorry I had to leave my seat and attend the committee inquiring into the prices of farm implements and therefore did not hear the discussion after four o'clock. However, I am not coming to the rescue of the government; they do not need it. I feel more like congratulating them for establishing the principle of pensions for the blind.

I do not think my hon. friends on the other side are entirely fair when they ask for earnings to be permitted in excess of $200 a year, in addition to the $240 pension granted under this bill. I am more concerned about those blind persons who are not going to receive this pension, and who will receive nothing at all. I should like to make it a little easier for all blind people to receive this pension. I believe those who are entitled to come under this legislation have been taken care of, perhaps not generously, but fairly well under the circumstances.

I had a letter the other day asking me to suggest to the government that provided the applicant was a British subject, and a resident of Canada for twelve years he or she should be qualified for this pension for the blind. I do not know how the minister will receive that suggestion, but I think I would prefer that to increasing the pension, as advocated by some hon. members to the left.

Then what is going to become of blind people under the age of forty? It seems to me many of them are in a worse position than some who have reached the age of forty, and who perhaps have acquired knowledge of some trade and are able to make a living for themselves.

Mr. GOLDING: What is happening to them now?

Mr. LEADER: I want to follow up my argument. I had a letter from a constituent who said he knew of a young man seventeen years of age, not only blind but deaf also, and he wanted to know if any provision could be made for such a person. Under this bill no such provision whatever is made. I suggest that the right to get a pension be made easier, instead of imposing too many restrictions, and I therefore urge that the age be made less than twenty years provided the person is a British subject. Put it at twelve years, as my correspondent suggests. Before increasing the amount of the pension, as some hon. gentlemen are asking, let us consider the blind under the age of forty.

Mr. DUNNING: In the discussions which I had with those interested in the blind people, representing the institutions which deal with them educationally and otherwise, one of the strongest pleas put up to the government in favour of the legislation now proposed, with the age provisions now proposed, was that if provision were made by way of pension for the blind over the age of forty, the institutions now existing for the care of the blind would be able to do very much better work in the way of education, particularly along the lines of the vocational training of those who have not yet attained the age of forty. We are assured by those interested that the passing of this legislation will liberate the hands of these organizations and give assistance where it will do the most good, because generally speaking those who have passed the age of forty cannot readily acquire the ability to do work which will produce an income, while those under forty can be educated by the organizations interested in the welfare of the blind to enable them to earn quite reasonable sums for their own support. So I would point out to my hon. friend that the age of forty is quite acceptable to those who represent the blind in this country. I do not say they would not like a lower age, but in support of the proposal they point out that if the parliament of Canada will make provision for pensions to the blind at forty, it will enable them to do a great deal more work, and more valuable work, for those under forty than they are now able to do.

Mr. LEADER: Perhaps I should mention that I have received communications from those in charge of institutions for the blind, and they say they are very, very grateful and quite well satisfied to have these pensions apply at forty years of age.

Mr. DUNNING: The age in Great Britain is fifty.

Mr. LEADER: I know those in charge of these institutions believe that now that we have established the principle of pensions for the blind we have gone a long way in taking care of these people. But I should like to ask the minister how this will affect a case such as I mentioned, that of a young man who at the age of seventeen is not only blind but also deaf. Are there any institutions that take care of cases such as that?

Mr. DUNNING: I would point out to my hon. friend that normally the care of people of that kind is a provincial responsibility, and the provinces have institutions for the purpose of taking care of those who are deaf. In legislation of this kind the dominion is again taking upon its shoulders a responsibility which normally belongs to the provinces, and we are contributing seventy-five per cent of the cost of attaining that objective.

Mr. BENNETT: It is a grant in aid.

Mr. DUNNING: It is a grant in aid, and I think the tendency of this parliament to deal with problems as though this parliament alone was responsible, with respect to matters which under our constitution are committed to the provinces, should be made clear. This is another grant in aid, and I would point out to the committee generally, not specifically to my hon. friend, that those grants in aid are creating more and more financial difficulties, not only for the dominion, but in some instances for the provinces as well. The dominion must deal with all provinces on the same basis, regardless of the ability of the individual province to meet the financial conditions laid down by the dominion. That is one of the factors, in my judgment, which require to be cleared up as between the dominion and the provinces in a constitutional sense, and it constitutes a major part of the problem which has been mentioned time and again in the house this session. Here we are definitely making a grant in aid towards meeting a provincial responsibility.

Mr. BENNETT: I think perhaps one word might have been added by the minister, and it is this: When the report was made it was indicated clearly that this was not within the power of this parliament under section 91; that it came within the exclusive powers of the provinces, and that, as far as we were concerned, we could not validly legislate with respect to the matter except by a grant in aid. This is a grant in aid, and the conditions and provisions with respect to how it is to be administered must be worked out by the provinces and not by the dominion. Until there is a constitutional amendment that power will not be ours.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to commend the minister on having taken this step along a road which I am sure we will have to follow much further in future. Whether or not there is a constitutional difficulty in the way, this is a sound move, and I commend the minister for having made it.

Mr. MacINNIS: I wish to do two things, without taking up too much time. I wish to point out to the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Leader) that we are not criticising the government at all. Surely we can ask that the bill be enlarged or improved without being accused of criticising the government. We ask one thing; the hon. member asks another. We are not criticising the government or being unfair to it any more than the hon. member is.

I should like to support what has been urged by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps) in this connection. We are not asking that the amount of the pension be increased; we are only asking for an increase in the amount of earnings allowed before a deduction from the pension is made. With earnings of $200 allowed in the case of an unmarried person and $400 in the case of a married person, the earning power of the blind would have to be very low before there would be any considerable increase in the amount the government would be asked to pay, even if the earnings allowed were increased considerably. We must understand that when we provide such a meagre living allowance people are continually on the border line of destitution. Consequently they cannot maintain their health; if they become ill there is no reserve, and they have no savings for an emergency. While I am quite appreciative of what the minister has been able to do, I wish he could see his way clear to increase the earnings allowed before any deduction is made from the pension.

Mr. GREEN: What is the total amount that may be received by a blind husband and a blind wife living together, including their income and the pension or pensions that may be payable to them?

Mr. DUNNING: It is $640.

Mr. GREEN: There would be no second pension for the wife?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: Would she get $240 also?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is on the next subsection, I think.

Mr. GREEN: Paragraph (ii) provides "as much as six hundred and forty dollars a year." Over and above that would the husband be entitled to $240 and the wife to $240 if they were both blind?

Mr. DUNNING: No, that is the total, including both pensions. In the case of a blind person who is married, or a widow, or a widower with children, the maximum total income is $640 a year.

Mr. BENNETT: Not from the country.

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, no, the maximum permissible income is $400 a year, or just double that allowed for a single blind person.

Mr. GREEN: What is the possible total income for two old age pensioners, husband and wife, who are living together? They are allowed more than that, are they not? They are allowed $240 each, and earnings up to $125 each, are they not?

Mr. DUNNING: Earnings of $125 exclusive of the pension.

Mr. BENNETT: We do not deduct anything until they earn that much.

Mr. DUNNING: That is quite true; we do not deduct anything unless the two old persons have an income of more than $125 each in excess of the $240 each which is granted under the act. I think I have it right this time.

Mr. GREEN: Then the two old age pensioners would get more than the two blind persons? The blind persons can get a maximum of only $640, while the two old age pensioners can get a maximum of $730.

Mr. DUNNING: It cannot work out that way.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no doubt that an old age pensioner can get $365, and if they were both earning they would have $730.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: But so far as the blind are concerned, they get only $240 each, or $480 for the two of them. But if they were earning, conceivably under the statute they might get $640 only, and not $730.

Mr. STIRLING: If they are both destitute, the old age pensioners get $730 and the blind get $480.

Mr. DUNNING: No, if in both cases they are destitute and there is no income, then the blind person—let me get this straight—

Mr. BENNETT: They all get the same.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, they all get the same, in the case of destitution.

Mr. BENNETT: But if they had incomes, the old age pensioners could get up to $365 a year each conceivably, if it were possible for a destitute man and his wife each to be earning $125 in addition to his or her pension. That is that. So far as the blind are concerned the limitation is less.

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. BENNETT: It is $640, is it not—the maximum?

Mr. DUNNING: The two blind persons can get $240 a year each.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, and in addition they are allowed, without deduction from the $240 each, an income of $200 each.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, quite.

Mr. DUNNING: That is $480 in the one case, plus $400 making a total of $880 which two blind persons could receive.

Mr. GREEN: Is not the figure of $640 wrong?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. DUNNING: It should be $880.

Mr. HEAPS: Only in the case of two blind persons receiving pensions.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. HEAPS: In the case of only one the $640 applies.

Mr. DUNNING: I read the figure for one.

Mr. GREEN: Should there not be an amendment to cover that point? Otherwise it would be impossible for them to get over $640.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it is clearly dealt with in the section, if the hon. member will read it.

Mr. STEWART: I should like to ask a question to clear up a doubt which has arisen in my mind. "Income" is not defined in the act.

Mr. DUNNING: Under the Old Age Pensions Act?

Mr. STEWART: Would it include a pension? Assuming a blind person receives a military pension, either in respect of blindness or for some other disability, and that pension reaches, we will say, $600 a year, would he get anything under this act? In other words, is a military pension payable to a blind person treated as income?

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps I had better read regulation 18 relating to income in connection with the present Old Age Pensions Act, to which the provinces have agreed.

For the purpose of determining the income of any applicant the pension authority shall take into account any of the following sources of income:

(a) annuity, and the amount thereof;

(b) real property at the rate of five per cent of the assessed or market value thereof, whichever be considered the more equitable standard, exclusive of encumbrances;

(c) the amount of Canadian government annuity purchasable by the personal property of the pensioner, after making due allowance for reasonable clothing and household furniture;

(d) salary, wages or other means of livelihood, whether in money or in kind which the pensioner may reasonably be expected to receive and

(e) net profit or gain or gratuity from any other source.

That is the whole of the income regulation.

Mr. STEWART: Would a military pension be taken into consideration?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. STEWART: It is not mentioned there. Just to clear it up, let us assume a person is receiving a pension for blindness; would that be taken into consideration?

Mr. DUNNING: With respect to a pension for blindness I would ask the hon. member to refer back to the amendment to paragraph (c):

Is not in receipt of a pension in respect of blindness under the pension act or an allowance in respect of blindness under the War Veterans Allowance Act.

The amendment was made for the reasons I stated.

Mr. STEWART: Assuming a blind person already has under the pension act a pension, not in respect of blindness but because of some other injury, such as the loss of a leg; how would he be treated?

Mr. DUNNING: That is taken into account in respect of old age pensions generally, and would be considered with respect to blindness.

Mr. STEWART: I should think it would be, but the regulations under the act do not so specify.

Mr. MacNEIL: I should like to be clear in connection with an explanation made a minute ago by the minister with regard to other earnings. May I present a hypothetical case? Two blind persons are already married, each over the age of forty years. Do I understand the minister to say that each will receive an old age pension of $240, and that each will be allowed to make other earnings up to $200, in which event the combined earnings and old age pension would amount to $880?

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps if we would go along to another subsection which bears directly on the point I could, in the meantime, be making more sure of my facts.

Mr. MASSEY: This afternoon the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Leader) brought up a point which I thought was peculiarly interesting. He referred to an old blind person who desired to move from his former place of residence to his son's place in another province, and was therefore unable to obtain a pension at that point. It seems to me that if the age is reduced from seventy to forty years there will be considerably more moving about than there was before; therefore cases falling under this clause affecting the pension paid a man who has recently become a resident in a province will be more abundant and more frequently encountered. I notice that in his explanation the minister states that one must be a resident of a province for five years immediately preceding a certain date. If a man receives a pension for five or ten years and then moves to another province, does his pension continue or does he have to reside for five years in the province to which he has moved before he receives a pension, thereby losing the pension he had received in the province from which he moved?

Mr. DUNNING: This afternoon I indicated that one of the most difficult things in connection with old age pensions was the residence feature as between provinces. All matters connected with the problem must be the subject of agreement not only between the provinces and the dominion but among the provinces themselves.

Mr. BENNETT: Inter se it is a question of the provinces themselves, unfortunately.

Mr. DUNNING: To deal with the case to which the hon. member has referred, five years residence in the place in which application is made is obligatory; there is no doubt about that. But where an individual has received a pension under the Old Age Pensions Act in one province, and subsequently has moved to another, that feature has been adjusted between the various provinces.

Mr. BENNETT: In the past.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes; there is now no difficulty with respect to a person who is qualified for a pension in one province, and subsequently moves to another. That degree of reciprocity, if I may call it such, we have succeeded in obtaining.

Mr. BENNETT: Only recently.

Mr. MASSEY: There is no break in the pension.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry I did not answer the leader of the opposition this afternoon with regard to reciprocity with other countries. Very little progress has been made in that regard. There has been some informal exchanges of views with those interested in Great Britain, but my right hon. friend knows as well as I the difficulties connected with this matter, not so much at the British end as in connection with our federal and provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Subsection (c) requires a residential qualification of twenty years immediately preceding the application for pension. Pensions to the blind start at forty years of age, so this would mean that residence would have to commence at twenty years. In the case of an old age pension, residence from fifty to seventy years is required. This provision seems to be harsh on the blind people. The blind people have requested that the qualification as to residence should not be for more than ten years, and I think the point is well taken. They claim that a man can be stricken blind at any age, but he cannot become seventy years old at any time. The situations are quite different and should be considered in that light. The application of a definite residential qualification which may be satisfactory for an old age pension, is not so satisfactory for a pension for a blind person. Would the minister consider reducing this qualification to ten years?

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid I cannot undertake to give consideration to that matter in the passing of this bill. I would not care to undertake to do more than discuss the matter with the provinces. It is true that a man can be stricken with blindness at any time, but he cannot attain the age of seventy years without waiting.

Mr. BENNETT: This is only a question of residence.

Mr. HEAPS: It is residence in Canada, not in the province.

Mr. DUNNING: I should like to point out something on the other side. Under our immigration laws a person would not be permitted to come to Canada if there was any danger of his becoming a public charge because of blindness. My hon. friend is asking that any person who was stricken with blindness within ten years of his coming to Canada should be qualified for a pension. I want to be clear as to what he means before undertaking to discuss the matter with the provinces. I cannot answer definitely as to what my own view would be in that regard because it would require very careful consideration.

Mr. QUELCH: There seems to be considerable confusion with reference to paragraph (d). I should like to cite a case which was brought to my attention by the superintendent of old age pensions in Alberta. The man concerned was born in Canada in August, 1866, and has resided here ever since. In the last twenty years he has resided in the following places. From 1916 to 1925 in Fort Pitt, Saskatchewan; from 1925 to 1933 in Lloydminster, Saskatchewan, and from May 1933 to 1936 in Lloydminster, Alberta. From 1925 to 1933 he lived in Lloydminster on the Saskatchewan side of the boundary, and from May, 1933, up to the present date he has lived in Lloydminster, on the Alberta side of the boundary. This man is not eligible for an old age pension in the province of Saskatchewan because during the past five years he has not lodged 1,095 days in that province, as required by the dominion regulation. He is not eligible for a pension in the province of Alberta because, although he has lodged in Alberta for 1,095 days during the last five years, he did not lodge in Alberta at any time prior to the commencement of the five-year period, as is required by the dominion legislation. I should like to know if there is some flaw in the Old Age Pensions Act which makes it impossible for this man to obtain a pension, and which would apply to a blind person in similar circumstances. If that is so, would it not be possible to amend the act to overcome this difficulty?

Mr. DUNNING: I must compliment my hon. friend upon his ability to present a question so complicated that I cannot give him an immediate reply. He pays me quite a compliment in thinking that I can deal offhand with the case to which he has just referred. Perhaps it will be helpful to the hon. gentleman to know that years ago when I was premier of Saskatchewan the legislature of that province attempted to deal with the peculiar situation which exists in the town of Lloydminster. As is generally known, that town is situated on the boundary line between the provinces. There is a village of Lloydminster in Alberta on one side of the main street, and a town of Lloydminster in Saskatchewan on the other side. By arrangement between the two provinces a number of years ago legislation was passed which attempted to clear up the anomalous situation created by the then existing problems. That was prior to the passage of the old age pension legislation, which was not enacted by this parliament until 1928. My hon. friend has perhaps more time than I, and I would suggest that he look up that legislation. It is conceivable that it may provide an opportunity for him to help the individual to whom he referred. With regard to his suggestion that the act be amended, I cannot offhand suggest an amendment which would cover such a case.

Mr. QUELCH: This man is not getting a pension, and the provinces have been told by the federal government that he cannot get it under the regulations as now drawn. I am asking if it is not possible to amend the act to make it possible for that man to get a pension. This man has resided in Canada for seventy years and he cannot get a pension.

Mr. DUNNING: Certainly if a man moves around from province to province with sufficient frequency, no matter if he has been a resident of Canada for twenty years, he cannot qualify for a pension under the present law. As I pointed out, that is not a matter to be decided between the dominion and the provinces; it is something to be decided between province and province. If my hon. friend will be good enough to give me particulars in writing of the case to which he has referred, I shall investigate it. An investigation will also be made to see whether the provincial statute to which I referred might not have some bearing upon the residential qualifications of the individual in question.

Paragraph (a) agreed to.

Paragraph (e) agreed to.

Subsection 1 agreed to.

On subsection 2 of section 3—Maximum pension.

Mr. MacINNIS: I think this subsection should be amended. As it now stands it is absolutely inhuman. This subsection reduces the pensions paid to blind persons if they marry after this legislation comes into effect. According to the explanation on the opposite page the purpose of this subsection is to discourage the marriage of blind persons. It may be desirable for various reasons—I do not know—to discourage the marriage of blind persons, but I assume that the desire to marry is just as strong in blind persons as in those who are not blind, and that possibly marriage is more necessary, for in a great many such cases one of the factors that leads to marriage is the desire for companionship. People who are denied their sight, and who cannot have access to interests that the rest of us enjoy, should not be denied these pleasures of companionship.

Mr. DUNNING: They are not.

Mr. MacINNIS: They certainly are not, but they are punished—

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. MacINNIS: —and discriminated against if they do.

Mr. DUNNING: No. Evidently the hon. member does not understand the section.

Mr. MacINNIS: I hope I am wrong. I do not understand it, and I should like very much to have the minister explain it to me.

Mr. DUNNING: I know that the hon. member for Nanaimo is interested in this.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): If the minister is going to explain it and point out that I am wrong in assuming that the money is the means by which we are going to prevent blind people from marrying, I shall be only too pleased to hear his explanation.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member for Nanaimo, refers, I know, to an exchange of correspondence which we had, in which I wrote a reply a little hastily perhaps, being rather hurt by the manner in which he referred to the lack of earnest consideration which he seemed to attribute to me in connection with this section.

The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) was in error in his statement that there would be discrimination with respect to blind people who married. Such is not the case. It might be urged that there is discrimination with respect to blind persons who marry blind persons, but it cannot be contended that there is such with regard to blind persons who marry sighted persons.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is what I meant.

Mr. DUNNING: That is not what my hon. friend said. He spoke of blind persons being denied the companionship which the rest of us get. I suggest that ordinarily the companionship of a seeing person is of very much more use to a blind person than the companionship of another blind person.

Mr MacINNIS: I suggest to the minister that it may be very much more difficult to get.

Mr. DUNNING: When my hon. friend has had the acquaintance with this problem and has given to it the study that I have, he will find that the very great majority of married blind persons are married to people who can see, and it is a godsend that it should be so.

I want to leave myself in the judgment of the committee with respect to this section. I am not going to insist upon the qualification in this subsection. I place the responsibility squarely on this committee. I am going to state plainly the reason why it is proposed that when two blind persons marry, they shall receive only the pension of one.

We are extending the privileges of the old age pension to people who are over forty years of age. Some forms of blindness are congenital. Those who are interested on behalf of the blind in promoting this legislation suggest to me that it is not desirable to say to two blind people just over forty years of age, "If you two get married you can pool your pensions, blind though both of you may be."

Mr. BENNETT: "Or whether you live together afterwards." That is the other side of it.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the other side of it. A blind person can receive all the benefits of the act if he or she marries a sighted person after the passing of this section. Blind persons, both parties to the marriage being already blind, are not discriminated against in the slightest degree.

Mr. SPENCE: That is fair enough.

Mr. DUNNING: But the proposal in this subsection is that if two blind people who are to-day unmarried, and who are over forty years of age, get married, they will receive not two pensions but one pension. I have attempted to state the reason. Hereditary blindness is a very difficult problem. I believe I am correct in saying that there is considerable dispute among experts with regard to the transmission of blindness from one generation to the next. But it is certain that in connection with many forms of congenital blindness the marriage of two blind persons so afflicted ensures that the children will be blind. So I am advised. If we say to two blind people, a man and a woman, that if they marry they can double up their pensions, we shall be encouraging by law that kind of marriage, and those who are interested in the welfare of the blind do not, for the most part, recommend such a provision.

The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Taylor) quoted a telegram I had from the Vancouver branch of one of the main organizations dealing with the blind, protesting very much against what they call a discrimination. Reading the telegram, I wondered whether the sender of it imagined that the provision would apply to those who are already married. Such, as my hon. friend knows, is not the case. He thinks that I am trying to conduct an experiment in eugenics—that I believe is the term he used in his letter to me. Such is not the intention. I leave it entirely to the judgment of this committee whether we should provide that two blind people who marry and are suffering from congenital blindness shall be enabled to double up their pensions.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like to ask the minister a question at this point, not with reference to those who suffer blindness from a congential condition, but regarding those who have lost their eyesight accidentally, as the result say of the Halifax explosion or some other disaster. Such people would not be suffering from any hereditary trouble, but their condition would certainly have occurred through no fault of their own or of their ancestors.

Mr. DUNNING: Of course, I had to give consideration to that possibility, and my medical friends tell me that the difficulties in connection with it are practically insuperable. If one could confine the provision to accidental blindness or to certain defined types of congenital blindness, it might be different. I was lost in a sea of technical terms—

Mr. HEAPS: You were blinded.

[Mr. Spence.]

Mr. DUNNING: —in endeavouring to find out from medical authority just where the division would lie. May I suggest to the hon. member and to the committee generally that we have not only to consider in connection with congenital blindness on the part of both parents the likelihood of blindness in the children, but also the very serious handicap that the children would be under in any event.

Mr. GREEN: Is not the position simply this, that if a blind man and blind woman lived together they would be entitled to get $240 each? There is nothing in this bill to prevent them getting it.

Mr. RYAN: The blind are not like that, I might tell the hon. member, if that is his suggestion.

Mr. GREEN: Is that not quite possible?

Mr. RYAN: That is rather a nasty imputation.

Mr. GREEN: There is no imputation on the blind at all.

Mr. RYAN: It is uncharitable, anyway.

Mr. GREEN: I am asking this question because I do not think this section is satisfactory. I ask the minister if that could not be the case.

Mr. DUNNING: I admit, of course, the possibility stated by the hon. member, but I wish he had not done so.

Mr. TAYLOR: Not only the possibility, Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Vancouver East has the floor.

Mr. MacINNIS: The minister referred to a telegram he had from an organization in Vancouver, a branch of the Canadian Federation of the Blind. I have no doubt that all the British Columbia members received a copy of that wire.

Mr. DUNNING: I may tell the hon. member that that was the only place in all Canada from which such a communication came.

Mr. MacINNIS: I do not think that is to its discredit.

Mr. DUNNING: No, of course not.

Mr. MacINNIS: We are a live people in Vancouver. This wire points out that although there are 650 blind persons in Vancouver, there have been up to the present only seven marriages in which both parties have been blind. It points out further that, taking the dominion as a whole, only approximately 70 such marriages have taken place up to the present time. There may be some dangers in allowing blind people to marry, as the minister has pointed out. They may propagate and have blind children. But when by law we try to prevent such things happening we are by law making possible other things that might be worse than what we are trying to prevent. I move, therefore, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. MacNeil) that section three, subsection two, be amended by deleting all the words after the word "yearly" in the third line of the said subsection.

Mr. DUNNING: Much as I dislike to do so, Mr. Chairman, I must point out that the amendment is out of order inasmuch as it increases the charge upon the crown.

The CHAIRMAN: The amendment does not require a seconder. I must declare it out of order for the reason stated by the minister.

Mr. MacINNIS: I cannot see that it does increase the charge upon the crown. It might, but the minister cannot say that it would unless he can prove that marriages between blind people will take place. Consequently I submit that the amendment is not out of order. If in support of his point the minister can prove that marriages between blind persons would take place, my amendment would be out of order.

Mr. DUNNING: A few moments ago I expressed myself as willing in this matter so delicate, so very human, and one on which we all feel deeply, to take the sense of the committee. That, however, does not make it possible for me to encourage my hon. friend to break the rules of the house. If I find during the discussion a consensus of opinion in favour of some such action as that proposed by my hon. friend, and having undertaken to accept the sense of the committee, as a minister empowered to move such an amendment I would give consideration to doing so. The discussion so far has been confined to very few members. If I were any judge of the comments made by the committee generally, I should say that the sense of the committee was rather favourable to the section as it now stands in the bill. I am willing to listen to the discussion and, as I say, if I find a consensus of opinion along the lines indicated by my hon. friend's proposed amendment, which is out of order, I shall be pleased to deal with the matter in an orderly fashion myself. But on the basis of a snap move of that sort, I cannot do so. I think we should try to treat this matter without any thought of advantage or manoeuvre or anything of that kind.

Mr. MacINNIS: I object to the minister using such language. If my amendment is out of order, though I claim it is not, it is not necessary for the minister to say that I am trying to get a snap decision or trying to manoeuvre. That is decidedly out of order, and should be retracted.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not want to give offence to my hon. friend or anyone else. If my words have given offence to the hon. gentleman I shall be glad to withdraw them in so far as they did, and I hope he will do me the same courtesy.

Mr. MacINNIS: I have always tried to be as courteous as possible not only to the minister but to all other hon. members. In moving the amendment, even if it is out of order, I was only exercising my privileges in this house.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Apparently the committee has in a form expressed itself on this question, but I do want to bring one point before the minister, who to my mind shows a very evident intention of recognizing the difficulties that would be established by the passing of such a section. The minister knows as well as the rest of us do that propinquity is the law which will be established in this case, and that blind people already making friends of other blind people will tend to consort and to come together, and you cannot legislate against them with money or by depriving them of money. In connection with the correspondence which the minister referred to between himself and myself, if he will permit me to do so I should like to quote one excerpt:

> But in this matter we develop different points of view, and if you are attempting to introduce eugenical considerations into legislation it should not commence with the blind.

I think that point is very definite. We should not introduce into legislation for blind people matters which are better dealt with in a proper consideration of eugenics in the interest of advancing the physical condition of the people. For that reason I should very much like to see a definite expression to the effect that this paragraph should be cut out. I sincerely hope the minister will reconsider it.

Mr. MacNEIL: Some time ago I submitted to the minister a question as to income.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry to inform my hon. friend that a sheet on which I had worked it out and on which I had other notes I inadvertently threw away. I shall be glad to get the information.

Subsection 2 agreed to.

Subsections 3 and 4 agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 4 agreed to.

On the preamble:

Mr. STIRLING: Is the minister going to give the information asked for?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: I want to say a word or two before the preamble carries. I was a member of the committee that was appointed in the last house and I also supported the member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Donnelly) in this house in the projection of this legislation. I feel, therefore, that I should take this opportunity first to pay a tribute to the former member for Renfrew North, Doctor Cotnam. Although he was not a member of the committee, it was in pursuance of his resolution that the committee was appointed, and it inquired thoroughly into the whole question of pensions for the blind.

There appeared before the committee a number of witnesses who were well informed on the subject, and I think their names should be mentioned and that they should receive the compliments of the house.

I would place first Captain Baker of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. He had made a very exhaustive study of the subject, and the evidence he gave was of great importance and assisted very much in inducing the committee to support the Cotnam resolution. Then there was Mr. Layton, of the Canadian Federation for the Blind, and a number of other witnesses whose names I do not remember.

I should like also to compliment the hon. member for Wood Mountain (Mr. Donnelly), who made an excellent speech on behalf of the blind in the house last session and well deserves the thanks of the house for the part he took in bringing this great boon to the blind.

Finanlly I want to compliment the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) because the bill could not have been introduced into the house without his consent. I am very happy that the minister was able to find the necessary money, owing perhaps to the increase in revenues, to enable him to introduce this legislation. All hon. members are for the bill, and I am sure the whole house earnestly hopes that it will result in great relief to our unfortunate blind people.

Mr. HEAPS: I wish to associate myself with what has just been said, and I hope that when the bill goes on its final journey to another chamber it will receive the same sympathetic consideration as it has here. I well remember what happened to the first old age pensions bill sent to the other chamber in 1926. I hope this time there will be a different attitude towards this measure there. This is one of the few pieces of humane legislation that we have been privileged to discuss in this house, and I am more than pleased at the unanimity of the sentiments expressed regarding it. I should also like to compliment the Minister of Finance for the thorough grasp he has shown of this question, as he does of all questions.

Mr. DUNNING: I was asked for some information, and I have found the sheet on which it is worked out.

Blind persons married prior to the coming into force of this act could each receive a pension of $240 a year. Each of them could have, without disqualification, further income of $400 each, or a total income each before any deduction is made from pension of $640, or $1,280 for the two of them.

If married after the coming into force of this act, presuming subsection (3) of section 3 stands as it passed the committee, they could receive by way of pension $120 each. That amount would not be reduced unless they were in receipt of more than $400 a year independent income each, making a total of $520 each, which they might receive without deduction from the pension of $120 each, or a total income for the two of them, before any deduction would be applied, of $1,040. I base that upon the language of section 8A (1), paragraph (i) relating to a person who is:

(i) unmarried, or a widower without a child or children, or a widow without a child or children and is not in receipt of an income of as much as four hundred and forty dollars a year,

And paragraph (ii) relating to one who is:

(ii) married, or a widower with a child or children, or a widow with a child or children and is not in receipt of an income of as much as six hundred and forty dollars a year;

That is what I base the calculation on. With respect to those coming under the Old Age Pensions Act, these figures are modified to the extent that a married couple could each receive a pension of $240 and have an additional income of not over $125 each, or a total of $365 each, making $730 for the two. In a comparable case of two blind persons already married the difference would be between $730 and $1,280.

With respect to two blind persons who marry after the coming into force of this act the difference would be as between $730 for the old age pensioners and $1,040 for the blind persons.

Mr. HEAPS: May I point out that by the figures just given, two persons who are blind and married are in a much more favourable position than those who are single. They could each have a total income including pension of $640 each, whereas a single person could have a total income of only $440.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not know whether that is discrimination, but it does not work out fairly.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

Mr. DUNNING: With the consent of the house I should like to move the third reading now by unanimous consent. That would enable the bill to go to the Senate and if passed there, to the various provincial legislatures which are sitting at the present time.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

FEEDING STUFFS

REGULATION OF IMPORTATION, EXPORTATION AND SALE

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to control and regulate the importation, exportation, sale and other dealing with feeding stuffs by registration and inspection; the imposition of registration fees; and to authorize the Minister of Agriculture to appoint officers for the effective execution of the act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, the present Feeding Stuffs Act which the bill founded on this resolution is intended to replace has been in effect without amendment, except with regard to wheat by-products, since 1921. The purpose of this measure is to provide for the control of additional feed products; to require guarantees suited to the different kinds of feed products now on the market; and to facilitate enforcement, and to consolidate and clarify the wording of the act where necessary or advisable.

It will be apparent to members of the committee that during the years since 1921 there have been a number of new feed stuffs for feeding animals placed upon the market, and it is intended to bring the act up to date. For the benefit of the committee I may say that when this bill is given second reading it is my intention to have it sent to a committee, in order that those interested may appear and make representations in connection with any changes that may be proposed. Therefore I would suggest that it might not be necessary to enter into any detailed discussion of the measure at this stage.

Mr. BENNETT: I am very seriously concerned about our power to enact legislation founded upon such a resolution, in view of the recent decisions of the court of last resort. It will be observed that we are selecting one article of commerce, namely, feeding stuffs. It will be observed that we propose to control and regulate (a) the importation, (b) the exportation and (c) the sale, and other dealings therewith. If the judgment to which I refer has any value at all it has the effect of saying that any attempt on the part of this parliament to regulate the sale would be an invalid exercise of our powers. I am not going to use technical language; I am speaking broadly and generally at the moment.

Further, these means are to be accomplished by registration and inspection. It will be recalled that the court said that it made no difference what method was used; if the purpose sought was what is sought here, then it was not a valid exercise of power by parliament to attempt to do it. The imposition of registration fees, and the authority given the minister to appoint officers and so on, are supplementary matters.

I am not going to raise the issue in any sense beyond directing attention to it at the moment. Perhaps a bill might be introduced based on this resolution, without prejudice to any position which may be taken subsequently; then the bill might be given first reading tonight and stand for second reading as soon as convenient thereafter. In the meantime I merely direct the attention of the Minister of Justice to the matter, for what it may be worth, because these words in the form in which they are now used, having regard to the language employed by the privy council, would seem to me to indicate a contemplated measure that would be beyond the jurisdiction of this parliament to enact. I say that regretfully, because I should like to see this parliament have that power.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I think that was the reference on which there was a unanimous decision.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, against us.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Quite so.

Mr. BENNETT: As a matter of fact, since the minister has mentioned it, that is the one I am least able to understand. Had this arisen through a concrete case I say to the minister frankly that I think the judgment might have been different, because that measure provided that there should be co-operation. The minister will remember that in the Crystal Dairy case the privy council said British Columbia could not impose fees that, according to the privy council, amounted to the exercise of the taxing power in an indirect manner, which was beyond their jurisdiction. The marketing act, to which reference was made by the minister just now, certainly shared the fate of previous acts, but on the ground that in this instance it was the exercise by this parliament of powers that belonged to the province. As I say, I can hardly reconcile that. But without going into the matter at any length, I think ample opportunity to look into it will be afforded after the bill has been printed and second reading given, since the bill is to go to a committee, which appears to me to be a very proper course to pursue with respect to a matter of this kind.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Gardiner thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 64, to control and regulate the sale of feeding stuffs.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SEEDS

REGULATION OF TESTING, INSPECTING, SALE AND IMPORTATION

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to regulate the testing, inspection, sale and importation of seeds; to provide for the appointment and definition of duties of an advisory board; the appointment of inspectors and analysts; the licensing of new varieties of seeds and the imposition of licence fees, and to provide for penalties in consequence of violations of the act.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, I think probably the comment that was made by the leader of the opposition with regard to the last bill would apply here also. The purpose of the proposed bill is to amend and consolidate the Seeds Act, in the light of the experience gained in the administration of that act and the merchandising of seeds over a period of thirteen years. The act has been on the statute books for thirteen years. We have gathered certain experience from the administration of it, and think there should be amendments to it. It is mostly a consolidation of amendments which have been made during that period of time.

I intend to make the same suggestion with regard to this measure, that it be sent to the committee on agriculture, in order that those representing seed houses and producers of seed may appear before the committee and make their representations. I would therefore suggest that the resolution be passed and that the bill based upon it be read a first time, with the understanding that the whole matter will be open for discussion at a later stage.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that there is some slight difference between the two resolutions. The resolution dealing with seeds does not purport to control. That dealing with feeding stuffs does undertake to control as well as to regulate. Of course, there has been held to be a substantial difference between the use of the words control and regulate.

The word which I believe should be given special consideration in the resolution is the word "sale." I would not go to the trouble of mentioning it now, were it not for the fact that possibly the law officers of the crown may desire to look into the matter with care. I direct the attention of the house to the word "sale" because a decision of the court of last resort apparently is to the effect that sale is a matter which is regulated by the law of the province, dealing as it does with property and civil rights. It would seem to me, indeed, difficult to indicate under what branch of section 91 of our constitution this legislative power is conferred upon the parliament of Canada. Our claim that it came within property and civil rights fails, because the court has reasserted the view that we cannot consider a specific article of trade and commerce when we are dealing with a question of regulation.

With respect to sale, I have already indicated the extreme view taken by the court in recent cases. I certainly think, however, that this parliament has complete power to deal with questions of importation. Obviously that power is exercised and has been exercised every day. But the other questions which arise are not so free from doubt.

I believe the suggested method of dealing with the measure is to be commended. The bill could be read a first time and then after it has been given second reading—which probably would have to be without prejudice to the position which might develop after the discussion in committee as to its legality—it could be referred to the appropriate committee. Do I understand it is to be referred to a special committee or the standing committee on agriculture.

Mr. GARDINER: The understanding is to refer them both to the standing committee on agriculture.

Mr. STEWART: I notice the resolution proposes to appoint officers. How are they appointed under the existing legislation? Is it by the minister or by the civil service commission?

Mr. GARDINER: Speaking offhand I believe it is now by the minister, but I would not be certain.

Mr. STEWART: I do not think so.

Mr. GARDINER: That is a matter which can be discussed.

Mr. BENNETT: It depends on the grade of the office. Some of the day-to-day men and field men are appointed by the minister; others are appointed by the civil service commission.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Gardiner thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 65, respecting the testing, inspection and sale of seeds.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

On motion of Mr. Lapointe (Quebec East) the house adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

Wednesday, March 17, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED ABOLITION OF HANGING AS DEATH PENALTY—REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. McPHEE (Yorkton) presented the second report of the special committee appointed Tuesday, February 2, 1937, to study the subject matter of Bill No. 6, to amend the Criminal Code.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): This is rather a long report. I would suggest that it be printed in the Votes and Proceedings, in order to avoid the necessity of reading it.

Mr. LAWSON: What is the effect of it—for or against?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I think it is against the main purpose of the bill. No action may be taken to-day; I merely suggest that it be printed in the Votes and Proceedings.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—STATION CRCT, TORONTO

Mr. CHURCH:

What are the names, occupations, addresses, salaries, living and travelling expenses of the present federal radio commission?

1. What are the names of the staff of radio station CRCT, in Toronto, and the length of service, rank, remuneration of each, and what were their respective living and transportation expenses during the past year?

2. How many musicians and other officials are drawing federal pensions as well as salaries, and who are they?

3. Who are the announcers at the station, and are they related to any musicians or others employed there? If so, what is the relation?

4. How many of the musicians are: (a) union men; (b) non-union?

5. What are the names of the announcers and musicians, and of the choir leader and quartette?

6. How long has Mr. Lucas been employed; and are any members of his family also employed?

7. Have any other officials relatives employed?

8. Do the choir leader, quartette, and the minister draw government pensions?

9. Are any members of the family of Mr. Waddington, known on the radio as Frank Gladstone, employed? If so, what are the names?

Mr. CHURCH: I suggest that the minister let these questions stand until next Tuesday. I have some information to give him which I think will alter his opinion; also to give to the leader of the opposition, as both of them referred to these two questions last Monday.

Questions stand.

NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT COMMISSION

Mr. CHURCH:

Who are (a) the women's committee, and (b) the consultants of the national advisory committee, of the National Employment Commission, and what remuneration, living allowance and travelling expenses were paid for 1936?

Mr. ROGERS:

(a)

	Remuneration	Living Allowance	Travelling Expenses
Mrs. W. J. Lindal, Winnipeg, Man...	Nil	$292.50	$107.00
Mrs. L. G. Ferguson, Westville, N.S.	Nil	442.50	96.10
Mrs. A. J. Currie, Govan, Sask...	Nil	285.00	84.30
Mrs. M. Cormier, Montreal, Que...	Nil	142.50	23.68
Miss Ruth Low, Kitchener, Ont..	Nil	210.00	28.05

(b) There are no consultants to the national advisory committee. There were, however, two consultants to the National Employment Commission—Mr. Shepherd's employment terminated February 28, 1937.

	Remuneration	Living Allowance	Travelling Expenses
Miss Charlotte Whitton (from Nov. 16).. ..	$926.25	Nil	$84.48
Mr. D. Shepherd (from Sept. 1)..	$2,375.00	Nil	$904.72

FAIRMOUNT, SASK., CENSUS ENUMERATOR

Mr. ELLIOTT (Kindersley):

1. Who recommended the appointment of Thomas Annett, of Fairmount, Saskatchewan, as enumerator?
2. For how long was he appointed?
3. What salary has he received?

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Thomas Annett was not an enumerator for the taking of the census of 1936.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT—OFFICIAL RECEIVERS, MANITOBA

Mr. McDONALD (Souris):

1. How many official receivers are there in Manitoba?
2. What is the total cost of their services including any expense account?
3. What is the remuneration of each member of the board of review, including living expenses, if any?

Mr. DUNNING:

1. Under the Farmers Creditors' Arrangement Act, 14.

2. From appointment to January 31, 1937, $26,366.26.

3. Under the Farmers Creditors' Arrangement Act,—

Chief commissioner, living allowance $25 per diem applicable to each day's sitting.

Representative of creditors and representative of debtors, fees $25 per diem together with living allowance of $10 per diem applicable to each day's sitting.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

OLD AGE PENSIONS ACT—EXTENSION TO AGE SIXTY-FIVE

Mr. FERLAND:

1. What would be the approximate additional number of pensioners of the state, if the Old Age Pensions Act were made applicable to indigent persons of 65 years and over?

2. What is the approximate number of unemployed and indigent persons from 65 to 70 years of age?

QUEBEC FEDERAL SUBSIDIES AND FARM LOANS

Mr. FERLAND:

1. What are the amounts of the subsidies which the federal government has granted to the province of Quebec during each of the past five years in the following categories: (a) agriculture; (b) colonization; (c) fisheries; (d) education; (e) public works and unemployment relief, etc.?

2. What is the amount of farm loans, (a) approved to date; (b) granted, in the province of Quebec, by the Canadian Farm Loan Board?

GOVERNMENT PAYMENTS TO INDIVIDUALS AND FIRMS IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. PURDY:

1. What sums of money were paid to the following individuals and firms by the Dominion of Canada during the years 1930 to 1936 inclusive: (a) George C. Nowlan, barrister, Wolfville, Nova Scotia; (b) Parsons Limited; (c) Albert Parsons, retired lumberman; (d) Ralph Parsons, and (e) Arthur Parsons, contractors, Windsor (or Walton), Hants county, Nova Scotia; (f) Windsor Tribune Publishing Company Limited; (g) Mrs. P. M. (Jean U.) Fielding; (h) Miss Antoinette Forbes, Windsor, Nova Scotia; (i) Leonard W. Fraser, barrister, Halifax, Nova Scotia?

2. For what services, in each case, were moneys paid to these individuals and firms, and by what departments of the government?

3. What parts, if any, of the accounts of these individuals and firms against the Dominion of Canada were disallowed, and, in each case, why?

4. What accounts, or parts of accounts, of these individuals and firms against the dominion have not been paid?

MOTION FOR PAPERS

MR. H. B. WALKER

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Fair moves, seconded by Mr. Coldwell:

For a copy of the complaint or charge laid against Mr. H. B. Walker of Wainwright by Mr. Francis H. Morcom. Also a copy of the evidence given at the investigation held by Mr. Gariepy at Wainwright in September, 1936.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Will my hon. friend state what department is concerned with this matter?

Mr. MITCHELL: The hon. member is not in the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stand.

TORONTO POSTAL EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. G. CLARKE (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General (Mr. Elliott) in reference to a request I made for the names and addresses of the temporary post office employees in the city of Toronto. The Postmaster General said he would let me have this information, and I should like to know when I may expect it.

Hon. J. C. ELLIOTT (Postmaster General): I understand that the list is in course of preparation, and I hope to be able to give my hon. friend the names very shortly, though I cannot say just when.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): As this will be a short session I should like to have this information as soon as possible.

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex): I will look into the matter.

WAYS AND MEANS

AMENDMENT TO MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE —CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. E. E. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few observations, and to direct the attention of the house to chapter 53 of the statutes of 1935. Subsection (a) of section 8 deals with the duties of the wheat board, and provides:

8. It shall be the duty of the board:

(a) to fix a price to be paid to the producers for wheat delivered to the board as by this act provided, subject to the approval of the governor in council;

Section 7, subsection (e), reads as follows:

(e) to pay to producers delivering wheat at the time of delivery or at any time thereafter as may be agreed upon such fixed price per bushel, according to grade or quality or place of delivery, as may be determined by the board with the approval of the governor in council; and to issue to such producers when such wheat is purchased certificates indicating the number of bushels purchased, the grade, quality and the price, which certificate shall entitle producers named therein to share in the equitable distribution of the surplus, if any, of the operations of the board during the crop year, it being the true intent and meaning of this section that each producer shall receive for the same grade and quality of wheat the same price on the Fort William basis. Such certificate shall not be transferable—

Order in council P.C. 2202 was passed on the 28th day of August, 1936, a copy of which I hold in my hand. It is certified to be a true copy of a minute of a meeting of the committee of the privy council, approved by the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General on the 28th day of August, 1936. The order in council reads:

The committee of the privy council have had before them a report, dated August 27th, 1936 from the acting Minister of Trade and Commerce, stating that under clause A of section 8 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, provision is made that it shall be the duty of the Canadian Wheat Board, established under the said act, to fix the price to be paid to the producer of wheat delivered to the board as by the said act provided, subject to the approval of the governor general in council;

That the Canadian Wheat Board established under the said act, has fixed a price of eighty-seven and one-half (87½) cents per bushel for wheat graded as No. 1 Northern at Fort William, as a basic price for wheat for the 1936-1937 crop year, effective from August 1, 1936, delivered to the board as provided by the said act, the price of other grades of wheat to be fixed by the board on the basis of the price for No. 1 Northern wheat delivered at Fort William as aforesaid:

The final paragraph reads:

The minister, therefore, recommends that the recommendation of the Canadian Wheat Board be not approved unconditionally but that approval be given only in the event of the closing market price for wheat dropping below ninety cents per bushel for wheat graded as No. 1 Northern at Fort William, in which event the price of 87½ cents per bushel as recommended by the board shall be approved, and this order in council be regarded as approving the same.

That order in council meant the repeal of the act. There is no conditional clause in the act; it contains nothing that states that the price of wheat must drop to a given level before the board shall set a fixed price. That order in council meant the sacrifice of the western producer to the open grain trade, and brought about a loss of several millions of dollars to the farmers on the 1936 crop alone. It also took away from the producer the second choice of a buyer, which is important.

It is not necessary for me to take up the time of the house to-day in reviewing this question at length. Already this session much has been said in this regard. The other day in his speech on the budget the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) set out very clearly the result, as far as western Canada is concerned, of the passing of this order in council. I had something to say myself as well, and the situation created in the west by this action on the part of the government has been made quite clear. The language used by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) in his reply on that occasion would indicate that he intends to stand by this order in council. Therefore, without taking further time, I desire to move the following amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon (Mr. Beaubier):

That all the words after "that" in the said motion be omitted and the following substituted therefor:

"this house regrets that the government rendered the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, inoperative in its application to the 1936 wheat crop."

I should like to know if hon. members opposite from western Canada, the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Young), the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross), the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. McLean), the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh), and others, approve of the action taken by this government in making the 1935 act inoperative last year. If they do, and if this house defeats this amendment, the farmers will know what to expect in the fall of 1937.

I am not going to argue the point further, except to give one more quotation. I think hon. members should be made acquainted with what happened on July 1, 1935, when the act was finally drafted and prepared for submission to this house. The last move made by the Liberal members of that committee was a motion proposed by Mr. Ralston and seconded by Mr. Stewart, as follows:

The operations of the board shall not extend beyond the fifteenth day of August, 1936, except for the purpose of sale and realization of assets, collections, payments and generally for the winding up of the affairs and business of the board, unless on or before the first day of July, 1936, the operation of this act be extended by order of the governor in council for one year from the date first mentioned in this section, in which event such operations with the exceptions above mentioned shall terminate on August 15, 1937, unless further extended by parliament.

Parliament is preparing Mr. Speaker, for prorogation in the near future. We should know where hon. members stand with respect to this important public question, and I say that without further argument of the point parliament to-day should declare itself.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the silence of the government with respect to this matter is, I suppose, purely for tactical purposes; therefore I shall proceed to make my observations.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The matter has already been discussed three times.

Mr. BENNETT: I rise to discuss the matter not as it affects the merits of the marketing of wheat. For the purpose of what I have to say I am not concerned whether or not the best that could be done has been done by those charged with the responsibility. I rise to deal with the matter purely as a constitutional issue, and one of far-reaching consequences, involving the usurpation of the powers of parliament by the executive—nothing short of that—and this is the most serious instance of it I know of, so far as I have been able to read the records of parliament.

In 1935 parliament passed a statute known as chapter 53, the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935. That act was the outcome of a report made by a committee comprising representatives from all sections of the House of Commons. In the end the act as submitted to parliament was as unanimously reported from the committee, of which I happened to be chairman. The act embodied the suggestions made by the various members of the committee, with respect to which little or no evidence was taken. I am not concerned with what transpired before that committee, nor at this time am I interested in how or why its conclusions were arrived at. For my purpose it is sufficient to indicate that in the exercise of its powers parliament saw fit to adopt the report in the form of a statute, which is now known as the Canadian Wheat Board Act of 1935.

There was discussion in the house upon the motion for the third reading of the bill; there was wider discussion as it was considered section by section in committee. In particular I direct attention to two or three sections of the bill. Section 7 of the act as it now stands provided for a wheat board, which was to be set up under the provisions of the statute for the purpose of buying, selling and disposing of the crop of 1935-36, or subsequent crops, and the large accumulated bushelage in the hands of the Canadian producers' association at the head of the lakes and elsewhere, and that section charged the board thus set up with various responsibilities.

Section 4 made the board a body corporate, with powers to sue and be sued, but section 7 is the one to which I desire to direct careful attention. The board was to undertake:

—the marketing of wheat in interprovincial and export trade and for such purposes shall have all the powers of a corporation and without limitation upon such powers the following:

(a) to receive and take delivery of wheat for marketing as offered by the producers thereof;

(b) to buy and sell wheat: Provided that no wheat shall be purchased by the board except from the producers thereof;

(c) to store and transport wheat.

That and succeeding subsections dealt with conditions which might or might not arise, depending on whether or not to make the act effective it would be necessary to take over the elevators of the country. But before the board could function, obviously it was important that it should have some regulation of price. And so in section 8 of the act we find:

8. It shall be the duty of the board:

(a) to fix a price to be paid to the producers for wheat delivered to the board as by this act provided, subject to the approval of the governor in council;

(b) to sell and dispose of from time to time all wheat which the board may acquire, for such price as it may consider reasonable, with the object of promoting the sale and use of Canadian wheat in world markets.

Those were provisions which dealt with (a) the acquisition of wheat, (b) the disposition of it; and (c) at the price fixed by the board and approved by the governor in council. Those were the conditions first suggested. But owing to the difficulty which, as was at once realized by all, must be experienced in fixing a price, the government and the members of the committee all agreed that it would be desirable to make provision whereby the farmers or producers of wheat might share in any subsequent increased price which might arise after the price was fixed through conditions which could not be foreseen. If Mr. McFarland was right in the belief that wheat would increase in price, obviously the farmer should share in it. If others were right in the belief that wheat would not increase in price, but might even diminish in price, obviously the country would have to pay because the price had thus been fixed and the producer would have benefited by reason of the fixed price.

In this connection, however, attention must be directed to paragraph (e) of section 7. This is what the board was directed to pay:

(e) to pay to producers delivering wheat at the time of delivery or at any time thereafter as may be agreed upon such fixed price per bushel, according to grade or quality or place of delivery, as may be determined by the board with the approval of the governor in council; and to issue to such producers when such wheat is purchased certificates indicating the number of bushels purchased, the grade, quality and the price, which certificates shall entitle producers named therein to share in the equitable distribution of the surplus, if any, of the operations of the board during the crop year, it being the true intent and meaning of this section that each producer shall receive for the same grade and quality of wheat the same price on the Fort William basis. Such certificate shall not be transferable, and a statement to that effect shall be printed on the face thereof.

The sections which I have read indicate clearly the principles embodied in the measure adopted by parliament which became chapter 53 of the statutes of Canada for 1935.

When the bill was finally before parliament on July 4, 1935, we spent much time discussing it in detail. True, it was suggested in committee that a provision should be inserted in the bill whereby the measure would lapse on a given date, and that its life might be extended beyond that date by the governor in council. That suggestion came from representatives in the committee of hon. members opposite. I took the view that it was not desirable that legislation of this kind should ever have its life determined by order in council, and at that time we successfully contended in the house that the measure should continue in force until rescinded or repealed by parliament.

Bear in mind the importance of that provision. Conditions were changing from day to day and month to month; what might be an emergency to-day might not be an emergency to-morrow, or new emergent conditions might arise. So we provided that chapter 53 should remain upon the statute books of Canada until such time as it was repealed by parliament. Parliament has not repealed that statute; it has not been repealed to this day. Of course, that principle is embodied in all legislation, namely, the right of parliament to repeal it unless the life of the measure is determined by the measure itself or by other legislation. Therefore, this legislation was of the type or character that continues in full force, validity, and effect until such time as it is repealed by appropriate action of this parliament. In order that there may be no doubt as to what was the real intention of parliament, I should like to quote from pages 4270 and 4271 of Hansard of 1935. At that time I clearly indicated what were the purposes of the measure. After stating that there were two principles involved, I said:

The first was the price to the producer to be fixed by the board with the approval of the governor in council. In other words, the government of the day must approve of the action taken by the board, ascertain the factors that determine the action they take and arrive at a conclusion. It will be a very difficult conclusion to arrive at and one fraught with grave responsibilities and great implications, but it must be done. The argument with respect to the Argentine was developed during the progress of the examination of witnesses who spoke so highly of the system in use in that country. I thought that if they thought so highly of that system I would put questions to them as to why the same thing should not be done in Canada. The Argentine has a fixed price and anyone can buy wheat above that price. If a producer in a far distant locality is unable to sell his wheat he can sell it to the board at the fixed price and the board then makes provision for its export to the markets of the world.

That was the condition in the Argentine. Mr. Ralston, who was a member of the committee, asked many questions with respect to the system prevailing in the Argentine where a fixed price was provided and the wheat marketed under conditions which ensured that those who lived in far distant localities would receive the fixed price for their commodity if they so desired. But there was nothing that precluded the paying of a higher price if such a price was thought desirable by those who desired to purchase. I then proceeded to the second principle, as reported on page 4271:

There is a second principle in this bill with respect to the producer. It was decided that he should share in any surplus which might arise because of the operations of the board. Objections were made to the initial payment and it was pointed out that certain difficulties had arisen in the past and it was undesirable that a fixed price should be paid. That fixed price does not determine the ultimate price which the producer will receive as he is to share in any surplus which might result from the operations of the board. In connection with the producer there are two principles, the fixed price and the sharing in any ultimate profits which might be made. Through this equitable distribution every man will receive for a bushel of wheat the same price on a Fort William basis if he delivered it to the board.

I believe that those statements concisely and accurately indicated the principles that underlay this measure. There was to be a share in any ultimate profit and a certainty that the fixed price would be received by the producer in any event.

I shall not here refer to what transpired last session with respect to the taking over of a portion of the wheat of the Canadian producers, for that is not important from this standpoint as it has nothing to do with the constitutional issue here involved.

Now we find that action has been taken by the government of the day. Here is what was done by order in council, and if I raise my voice in protest against the executive thus repealing an act of parliament, I am doing it for no other purpose than to point out the danger of it. I should have liked to repeat, although I am not going to take the time, the language which has been used in this house from time to time with respect to an executive that arrogates to itself the exercise of powers that are vested in parliament. Let us look at this order in council. It is headed:

P.C. 2202

Certified to be a true copy of a minute of a meeting of the committee of the privy council approved by the deputy of His Excellency the Governor General on the 28th August, 1936.

The words that follow are words the like of which I do not think we have had in this parliament since confederation. These words in effect repeal the statute setting up the Canadian wheat board. It reads:

The committee of the privy council have had before them a report, dated August 27th, 1936 from the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce, stating that under clause A of section 8 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, provision is made that it shall be the duty of the Canadian Wheat Board, established under the said act, to fix the price to be paid to the producer of wheat delivered to the board as by the said act provided, subject to the approval of the governor general in council;

That the Canadian Wheat Board, established under the said act, has fixed a price of eighty-seven and one-half cents (87½) per bushel for wheat graded as No. 1 northern at Fort William, as a basic price for wheat for the 1936-1937 crop year, effective from August 1, 1936, delivered to the board as provided by the said act, the price of other grades of wheat to be fixed by the board on the basis of the price for No. 1 northern wheat delivered at Fort William as aforesaid:

Then follows this illuminating paragraph:

That the Honourable William Ferdinand Alphonse Turgeon, of Regina, Saskatchewan, a judge of the court of appeal of Saskatchewan, was appointed a commissioner under part 1 of the Inquiries Act, being chapter 99 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, to inquire into and to report upon the subject of the production, buying, selling, holding, storing, transporting and exporting of Canadian grains and grain products, and other questions incident to such matters, and in particular, but without restricting the generality of the foregoing terms, to inquire into and report upon:

The methods now or heretofore employed in marketing Canadian grains abroad, including government grain boards, cooperative or pool marketing, price stabilization measures and the open market or competitive method; and the effect of those various methods upon markets;

The measures which should be taken to retain and to extend the marketing throughout the world of Canadian wheat and other grains and their products.

Just why that is inserted I cannot make out, because up to the present there has been little or no investigation, the commissioner being otherwise engaged and no other commissioner having been appointed. Now follows a paragraph of the order in council to which I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) patiently to listen:

> The minister, therefore, recommends that the recommendation of the Canadian Wheat Board be not approved unconditionally but that approval be given only in the event of the closing market price for wheat dropping below ninety cents per bushel for wheat graded as No. 1 northern at Fort William in which event a price of 87½ cents per bushel as recommended by the board shall be approved, and this order in council be regarded as approving the same.
>
> The committee concur in the foregoing recommendation and submit the same for approval.
>
> E. J. Lemaire,
> Clerk of the Privy Council.

I have read the language of the subsection, and here in the order in council I find the executive of the government of Canada recommending that the recommendation of the Canadan Wheat Board be not approved unconditionally. There is no power for not approving conditionally or unconditionally, because if they do not approve they do not exercise the power. The power is to be exercised only in the event of approval. That is what the section says. You cannot give power by the mere exercise of it by the executive; there must be some foundation for the exercise of the power. In this instance the order in council states that they recommend it be not approved unconditionally. Let us assume for the sake of argument what I think is wholly erroneous, that you could have a conditional approval. But that is not what this is. This recommends that it be not approved unconditionally. It says that if wheat drops to ninety cents or lower it may be taken that that is an approval of 87½ cents. It is hardly necessary to say that the effect of that was to render the statute inoperative and no longer capable of being administered.

The second principle which I pointed out, namely the right of the producer to carry his load of wheat to the elevator and sell it to the wheat board and get for it 87½ cents, with a participation certificate, was gone—gone by executive action, destroyed by an order in council.

Mr. THORSON: Was it not rather gone by the rising price of wheat?

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend is too good a lawyer to argue for a single moment that a constitutional question depends for its solution upon the price of wheat; of that I am sure. Whether or not the farmer could exercise that right is the issue to which I am directing attention, and this order in council makes it impossible for him to do it as provided for by the statute.

And what have we? The farmers of this country were told when the wheat act was unanimously adopted in 1935 that they were to have an opportunity to share in the rising market which we believed was coming—whether rightly or wrongly is of no importance in this discussion. The question at issue is whether or not the executive of the country can by order in council destroy the operation of a statute that was passed by this parliament, there being no provision to that end in the statute itself.

We now find, from statements made by those who are familiar with the matter, that no producers have been selling any wheat to the board. The producer is deprived of that market; he has lost it because of this order in council. Rising price might indeed be a factor with respect to the situation. The farmer surely had the right to say, if the price went to a dollar: "I will wait and see whether or not I will share in the rise to the level of $1.30," as it is at present. That right was given to him; that right has been taken from him by executive action. It was his right to bring in a thousand bushels and say "I will take $1.10," or "I will take $1.15," and to get his participation certificate and await the ultimate distribution; but he is deprived of that right by the terms of the order in council.

I am glad the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Thorson) mentioned the matter of price, because I am trying to point out that this act contemplated the possibility of the farmer selling his wheat to the board at a low price or a high price—it mattered not. The price fixed was 87½ cents, and seeing wheat going to a dollar or $1.10, it was the farmer's right to say "I will take my 87½ cents, awaiting the rise in the market to share in that rise." But as matters are now he took his price, and he cannot and could not share in any increase that has occurred by reason of the conditions that exist.

It is to that, Mr. Speaker, that I direct attention. I repeat that I am not at the moment concerned about the question of marketing, about the merits or demerits of respective systems, or about the merits or demerits of those who managed or controlled the system. What I am concerned about is a statute passed by the unanimous consent of this parliament, which provided that any producer might take his chance with his second buyer instead of the grain trade, might take his chance with his participation certificate to share in the increased price of wheat, if there was an increase—as to which he himself must determine.

The board stated that they would buy all the wheat that was offered at 87½ cents. The government said: "No, we recommend that that recommendation be not approved unconditionally," and the conditions imposed made the position such that the board did not buy a single bushel of wheat and the farmer had no chance to avail himself of that second market. Had he done so, he might or he might not have shared in the increased price; that is not the point I am now discussing. What I am discussing is the usurpation of power by the executive, the arrogating to the governor in council of a power which belonged only to this parliament, and about which in days gone by, when there was a distinct delegation of powers to the governor in council to take such action, my friends used to talk so vigorously. Hour after hour they used to declaim against the exercise of this power by an executive which was authorized to exercise it because the power had been delegated to it by parliament under the relief act. Now, without delegation, without authority, without a semblance of authorization, they see fit to exercise through their function as governor in council the power entrusted under the constitution to this parliament—parliament having made no provision for the governor in council to exercise such power in any way. Against that unconstitutional use of power I am now protesting—against that violation of the terms of the statute itself, which not only had the effect of making it inoperative so far as the producers of wheat were concerned, but more, set at naught this parliament, treated us as being without authority, and usurped the exercise of a power which under our constitution rests only with parliament—the authority not only of the commons and the senate but of the crown itself. The real issue is whether hon. members are prepared to stand in their places and say that they approve of the executive making a statute inoperative when there is no power or authority so to do.

Mr. J. G. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have just listened to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), and I do not blame him at all for taking the position he has taken. Anyone whose record with regard to wheat in this country resembles that of the right hon. gentleman had better find refuge in a legal technicality of some kind, if there is any; that at least is true in western Canada, which is greatly interested in this question. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) raised this question, I am sure, not merely to precipitate a legal discussion about it, but to attempt to prejudice the minds of some of the farmers in the west with regard to the policy of this government in the handling of wheat during the past year.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): They are already prejudiced.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): With regard to the wheat question we have heard a good deal in this house, and it was discussed in committee last year, but I do not think the whole subject has yet been covered. The other day, on the budget debate, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) mentioned the stand taken by some hon. members while in western Canada. My hon. friend from Qu'Appelle wishes to know—and he mentioned my own name—where we stand on this question. That, of course, is the reason for his amendment. This question is not going to be debated simply on a legal technicality raised by the leader of the opposition but on a wider ground. In the first place we had better go back and find out what was said by the members of this party, or by some of them at any rate, in western Canada at the time this matter was discussed with the electors, and when they put us here on the basis of what we discussed with them. Perhaps I had better give my own idea as I expressed it then. Let me tell the house what I had to say and what I am willing to stand by inside or outside the house at any time. I claim that a large part of the trouble in connection with wheat in Canada was brought about by the refusal of my right hon. friend and his party, while they were in power, to trade with other peoples of the world. Their policy backed up wheat in the dominion until as a government they had to take action in regard to it. They even went so far as to negotiate with other nations in the restriction of world acreage, curtailing the production of wheat. On the platform in western Canada I told the people that if any such action were ever taken by a government in Canada it would mean that the equity of the people of western Canada would be gone, and I still stand by that.

One of the troubles during the regime of my right hon. friend was the fact that exchange rates between Canada and other parts of the world became so wide that these exchange rates alone decreased the price of wheat in Canada by fifty per cent or more. My right hon friend tried devious methods while he headed the government—

Mr BENNETT: The word "devious," I am afraid, the hon. member must withdraw.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Well, various or different methods. He tried different methods in order to help out the situation which he himself had largely created. He tried, for instance, a bonus to the wheat grower of western Canada, and the effect of that bonus of five cents a bushel was this, that the more wheat the farmers grew the less bonus they needed, the more bonus they got the less money they needed, and the more money they needed the less bonus they got. In other words, the principle was: Give to those that have and give nothing to those that need.

In the election campaign, speaking as a Liberal in western Canada, I stated that if we were returned to power we would endeavour as rapidly as possible to open up trade routes in order that wheat might again be sold as it had been during the past Liberal regime. We were asked at that time whether the Liberal party would continue the wheat board and we said that of necessity we should have to continue the board until such time as the wheat held by that board was sold and business got back to more normal proportions in Canada and the farmer could get a reasonable price for his wheat. We said then that the policy of the Liberal party would be to sell wheat, not to hold it back; that it would be to sell it and if necessary take a loss upon the wheat that was held by the board at that time, but that the supluses must be got out of the way because they were largely responsible for the lower prices that we were receiving at that time. We also said on that occasion that we would endeavour to advertise and merchandise the products of the farmer in Canada and that we would endeavour in every way to increase the use of Canadian wheat in the world.

Last session when some of the estimates were under consideration I mentioned something in regard to the advertising and merchandising of farm products. Unfortunately for those engaged in agriculture, it is perhaps the one industry that is from twenty to twenty-five years behind the times in the sale of its products. For every other industry in the last twenty-five years has gone a long way towards advertising and merchandising the things which it produces. In agriculture we have endeavoured to produce better products but we have done little in the way of advertising to place those products to advantage before the different peoples of the world. In the election campaign we said that we would endeavour to merchandise and advertise our products and at the same time try to increase the use of Canadian wheat. The new board that was appointed by this government, as one of its first acts, sent a man to Great Britain to try to get the millers there to use a greater amount of Canadian wheat in their mix for flour, and they have been extremely successful in having that done. We were told at the last session, when the wheat board started to sell wheat, that it was a fire sale, that our wheat was practically being given away. We maintained at that time that if that surplus of wheat were sold prices would rise and the grain farmer would be again in a position to make a living, to secure a profit out of the production of wheat. Prices have risen; they seem to be rising all the time.

In regard to the statements made by myself, for one, in western Canada, after the action of the government last fall or summer, I was in Ottawa when the announcement was made of its policy. When I arrived in western Canada, mass meetings were being called by certain people, as former speakers have said, for the purpose of criticizing the action of the government. I was asked to speak at one or two of these meetings, and I agreed to do so. I stated that we had quite a problem in the drought area of western Canada, and that first of all we had to look after those who for several years had been badly hit, to see that they got through, that they got a proper amount for relief, for seed and for feed, before we asked the dominion government to go further in expending money on the people who had a considerable amount of wheat to sell. Besides, I said that a price such as they were asking the government to fix for wheat would be entirely unfair to those who had produced little or no wheat. At that time wheat was about 94 or 95 cents a bushel, which was the lowest it went during the season. The thought then was that because the government had taken this action wheat would immediately drop below 90 cents; that was the story told throughout the west at that time. They were asking the government to set the price at $1.12 to $1.15 per bushel Fort William as a minimum. In other words a man in the northern end of my constituency who had thirty bushels of wheat to the acre would be given $6 per acre over the market price, while a man in the southern end who had little or no wheat, perhaps one or two bushels to the acre, would be given 40 cents per acre. Surely that was an unfair proposition. I set that out to the farmers of that country, and I said: "You are asking that a board be continued indefinitely in Canada—what for? First of all you had a cooperative elevator company, which you formed not for the purpose of having a cooperative elevator company but to try to get a better price for your wheat. You then had a board, during and just after the war, and although you may think that that board got you a better price for your wheat, it did not; on the contrary it held the price of your wheat down. Farmers in western Canada during and after the war would have had a higher price for their wheat if it had not been for the wheat board of that time. Wheat sold at as high as $4 a bushel on the Liverpool market just after the war, during the term of the former wheat board. After that you formed a wheat pool, not for the purpose of having a wheat pool but for the purpose of getting more per bushel for the wheat."

Then my right hon. friend and his party came into power, and they were willing to do almost anything to get a better price for wheat. Stabilization operations were undertaken, in an attempt to get a better price, but they were not successful. Finally the new wheat board was formed, and as a result of its action a better price was realized for the farmers, and has been ever since. I said to the farmers at those meetings that as a farmer and as a representative in the House of Commons I did not think, nor do I think now, that they have a right to a minimum set price for wheat. There was a reason for it when the government had gone into the grain business and mixed the business of the farmer all up so that he could not get a reasonable price. But the wheat farmer in the west—and I said this to the wheat farmers, as I am saying it here—has no more right to a minimum fixed price than the farmer who grows oats, barley, rye or flax, or than has the man in this part of the country who produces butter, cheese, cattle or hogs, or the man in the maritimes who produces fish or lumber. And by the same token those engaged in the manufacturing industries have no right to a bonus from this government. The other day I spoke against a subvention on coal. Why? Because it is identically the same in principle as a subvention on wheat. After all, Mr. Speaker, we cannot put every industry in this country on the dole. One of Canada's troubles is that for years we have had too many industries on the dole. In this highly industrialized area of central Canada the government have not given to the manufacturer so much per article produced, as they might have given the farmer so much per bushel on wheat, but they have given the manufacturer the right, by indirect methods, to tax the people of this country through higher prices for the things they have to buy. The greatest amount of relief, the greatest dole that has ever been paid in all Canada, has been paid to central Canada through the tariff taxation imposed for its benefit by the government of this country. We in western Canada do not want any dole; we never did want any—

Mr. SPENCE: You are taking a lot of it.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): No, we are not. There was a national emergency in western Canada as bad as or worse than the floods in the United States, and it continued without interruption for five or six years. Money was spent to keep those people in that part of the country until they could get back on their feet and produce again the millions of dollars that in the past have flowed to your industries in this part of Canada. Those people never were on relief; they were working just as hard throughout the dry period as they had been before, in many cases, harder. This government did the proper thing all the way through in endeavouring to hold those people there to produce not only for their own benefit but for the benefit of the rest of Canada as well. When my hon. friends mention the amount of money expended on the national emergency in western Canada they had better stop and check up the continual drain on the treasury for the many services that are rendered to the people of Canada as a whole, and they will find that in comparison with the rest of this country western Canada gets a very small proportion of what is drained out of the treasury. One of these days, if necessary, I am going to endeavour to obtain those figures and place them on Hansard so that everyone may know exactly what is the drain on this country, not to the prairie provinces or the maritime provinces but to the little old provinces of Ontario and Quebec, which are supposed to be so self-sustaining. Those are the provinces that have been criticizing the expenditures made in western Canada. They had better check up and find out what they receive from this dominion before they criticize us unduly.

The stand I took in western Canada and the stand I will always take, is that the farmer of western Canada has no right to a set minimum price that has to be paid by the government by way of subsidy, but that we should endeavour in every way—and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle should help—to see that some of the rest of the people of Canada get off the backs of the wheat growers of western Canada and give them a chance to live.

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to find it necessary during this session to rise again to speak on the question of wheat, and it is not my intention to traverse the ground that has been covered in previous debates. But the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) are justified in expecting some member of the government to make a statement with regard to the government's position in respect to the act that is under discussion at the present time. I say they are justified in expecting that, because of the statements that have been made in western Canada, by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle at least and I think by some other hon. members, with regard to the results of the action taken by the government in relation to the wheat board act of 1935.

The amendment that has been moved to the motion to go into committee of ways and means expresses the position of hon. gentlemen opposite in a few words:

> This house regrets that the government rendered the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, inoperative in its application to the 1936 wheat crop.

The whole contention is contained in those words, "inoperative in its application to the 1936 wheat crop." In order to determine whether or not the government has acted contrary to the intention of the house in 1935 I should like to direct attention to what happened in that year. In 1935 the government, which was then under the leadership of the present right hon. leader of the opposition, brought into this house a bill which, if I remember rightly, provided for an initial payment, not a set price but an initial payment on the wheat of the farmers. In the second place I think it provided for compulsory delivery to a wheat board. That is, we were to have compulsory delivery of the farmers' wheat and an initial payment to be made on the wheat, with interim payments as the season progressed and a final payment at the end of the crop year. In other words the bill provided for a compulsory wheat board under the control of the federal government.

During the discussion in this house certain changes were made. I have never known a government, Liberal, Conservative or of any other political stripe, in any parliament anywhere, with a majority such as that possessed by the last government, to bring in a bill based upon such well-defined principles as I have just set out, which, merely on the word of the opposition, finally agreed to the adoption of a bill based upon principles entirely different. There is no doubt that this was the result. The wheat board act of 1935 did not provide for an initial payment in the sense provided for in the bill originally introduced in the house. It provided for what was intended to be a reasonable payment for the crop of that year, and, further, that if any losses were sustained as a result of that payment such losses were to be borne by the government of Canada. It provided at the same time that if any profits were made over and above that set price, those profits were to go to the farmers who produced the wheat.

If we examine the discussions that took place in 1935 we find that the reason for this change was twofold. In the first place there was decided opposition in this house, on both sides, to the compulsory principle contained in the original bill, that is, the compelling of all those who produced wheat to deliver that wheat to the board. Then there was also objection, particularly on the part of the then opposition in the house, to putting those who produced wheat in 1935 and succeeding years in a position where the enormous carry-over that had been piled up in the previous three or four years would have an effect on the marketing of subsequent crops. For that reason it was maintained that the price that would be possible under the board to be set up ought to be a price that would be considered reasonable for the crop then being produced. In other words, if selling the surplus that had been piled up in previous years resulted in driving the price below that set price, the government would assume the responsibility of paying the difference between the price obtained and the price the government undertook to pay the farmer during that particular year. In taking that position, however, every member of the house, at least every member on the Liberal side if not on other sides, presumed, and made the statement in so many words, that the board would go out and sell the surplus of wheat that had accumulated to the best possible advantage in the circumstances that existed.

With those ideas in mind an act was placed upon the statute books in 1935 known as The Canadian Wheat Board Act, being chapter 53 of the statutes of that year. In this amendment it is contended that the action of the government made the intention of that act inoperative so far as the crop of 1936 was concerned. Let us look at the sections of the 1935 act that have been mentioned by those who sponsor this amendment. In the first place let us look at section 7. In the previous sections provision is made for the setting up of a board of three members, to be appointed by the governor in council. After appointment it is to begin to function. Under section 7 of the act we find:

> The board shall undertake the marketing of wheat in interprovincial and export trade and for such purposes shall have all the powers of a corporation and without limitation upon such powers the following:

I am sure the leader of the opposition is too good a lawyer to argue that any corporation in Canada, because it has the power to buy something, is therefore compelled to buy it. Section 7 provides that the board shall have all the powers of a corporation, and without limitation upon such powers the following: "to receive and take delivery of wheat for marketing as offered by the producers thereof." There is nothing in the act which compels them to take delivery of it. If there were anything in the act compelling them to take delivery of the wheat, it would not be just either to the producers or to the federal government. They have the power to take it, but they are not compelled to do so.

I might just as well argue that because under section 8 the board has the right to sell wheat and continuously through established channels to offer wheat for sale in the markets of the world, therefore the board had to sell wheat every day it was in existence, and must continue to do so. Hon. members know that the intent of the measure, namely to get rid of the surplus which had piled up for years and to put the farmers who were producing new crops in a position where the old wheat could not affect the price for the new crop, could not have been carried out if the position my right hon. friend takes were sound, namely that the wheat board, in all or any circumstances which might exist, at some price which might happen to be set either by themselves alone or by them and the government combined, had to take delivery of the wheat. It would be just as logical to argue that because of another section, at all times they had to have wheat in the market for sale at whatever price happened to prevail.

What did the wheat board do in carrying out the terms of the act? In the first place, on July 29, 1936, the board presented its opinion to the government and, as a matter of fact, set the price of wheat at 87½ cents. The producers of Canada delivered wheat under that set price from July 29 down to August 27. On August 27 the opinions of people who produced wheat were very obvious. Thirty-eight million bushels of wheat had been delivered, but only 600,000 bushels had been delivered to the board. The opinion of the people in western Canada was that if the price was to be set at 87½ cents, then so long as the price was above that figure the overwhelming majority of them did not want to and did not intend to deliver to the board. They intended to deliver some other way.

The argument is offered that because the act says it shall be the duty of the board to "fix the price to be paid to the producers for wheat delivered to the board as by this act provided, subject to the approval of the governor in council," therefore the governor in council had no right to disapprove. What is the use of a term such as that in a measure, if the government has no right to disapprove?

Mr. BENNETT: I did not say that.

Mr. GARDINER: The words used were "not approved unconditionally;" those were the words to which the objection was taken. The statement was made that the government had no right to disapprove of a price which had been set by the board, or to say that they did not approve of it unconditionally. Well, the statute definitely says that there really is no set price in existence until the government does approve of that particular price.

My right hon. friend would argue that when the government said—if the government did say, and they did not—that the price of 87½ cents was too high, then the board had the right to go back and set another price of, say, 75 cents, and bring that to the government. If the government said that was too high, then they had the right to go back to 50 cents—and so on, probably down to one cent per bushel. In other words, Mr. Speaker, we reduce the argument to an absurdity; we attempt to do indirectly under this measure what was intended should have been done under the bill which was thrown out of the house in 1935. Or, there is an attempt to set under this bill a price sufficiently low that there would not be any chance in the world of the government taking a loss on it—in other words, paying an initial price instead of paying what was conceived to be a reasonable price for wheat in that year, and then, starting with that initial price, realizing as a result of having done so that the farmer would not deliver a single bushel of grain to the board.

If that is what my right hon. friend is arguing for; if he is arguing that the government of Canada should have tried to fool the producers in western Canada into believing that they were actually setting a price for wheat, and at the same time were putting them in a position where no wheat would be offered to the board, then I want to say to him that we have not a government in Canada to-day that is playing that kind of politics. Already in Canada there has been too much politics played in connection with wheat. If there is anything that will defeat a wheat board, certainly it is the extent to which wheat has been played with by governments in Canada at a time when they have been pretending to handle wheat in the interests of the producers. Wheat cannot successfully be handled in that way. It can be handled only on principles based upon sound business practice. Hon. members know how difficult it is for any government to handle a product as important as wheat without admitting political consideration in the handling of it.

Down to the time the present government took office, considerable politics had crept into the matter. As a member of the government from western Canada, where most of the wheat is produced, I for one do not intend to hide behind any decision of any government which would lead the farmers in the west to believe that we were setting a price for wheat which we thought would be a reasonable one, and then say to them at a later time, "Well, you did not deliver it." I could read the observations of no less an authority than the leader of the opposition himself to indicate what that kind of thing might mean to the people of Canada. Possibly I could state the position briefly; I believe he would agree with my statement. I hold in my hand a newspaper report of July 18, 1936, in which it is stated that the right hon. gentleman gave expression to the view that a fairly high price might be set for wheat in 1936. In making the statement he said that to set a price which was comparatively low would probably result in the price of wheat tending towards that particular price. I think he was right in that statement. I would say that for the government of Canada to come out on August 27, 1936, and say that the absolute set price for wheat was 87½ cents a bushel, would have tended to lower rather than to raise the price to the farmers in western Canada. If you are going to proceed in the opposite direction and put yourself in a position where you are absolutely certain you are above the market and above where the market is likely to be, every year the board is in existence you are asking the whole dominion to assume a position where, irrespective of what happens, it is going to take a loss. I might illustrate that by repeating one of the figures I gave to this house the other day. The average price received for wheat down to February 27, the last date for which I had figures when I was speaking, was $1.13 per bushel for this crop. Many of the resolutions which came in suggested that we should set the price at $1.15 per bushel. If that had been done, down to February 27 this government would have taken a loss of two cents per bushel on the price at Fort William, leaving out of consideration altogether the charges there would be against the operations of a board of that kind.

Without committing myself or the government or anyone else to a particular position in connection with the principle as to whether or not the wheat board should be continued, I want to repeat that if the wheat board is continued in Canada it should not be a board which submits the people of Canada, through the government, to a position of that kind. I would go into a further discussion of that issue in order to indicate the position I would take with respect to it, were it not for the fact that at the present time a commission is taking evidence upon these questions. That commission will finally give a decision and when that decision is brought down we will have some idea as to what those who have given evidence throughout the length and breadth of Canada think about the different policies that have been applied. We shall then be in a position to arrive at a more logical conclusion as to what should be done in connection with the marketing of the crop.

I do not think it is necessary for me to say more to indicate that the board has been operating all through 1936 in accordance with the spirit of the act of 1935. In acting in accordance with the spirit of the act, I think the board has been more nearly in accordance with the terms of the statute than had they followed the policies of any other organization which functioned since this act was passed by the house. The people of western Canada have not been nearly so much concerned about this matter as some of our hon. friends would try to lead this house to believe. I know the people of western Canada fairly well; I have contested eight elections in the province of Saskatchewan and have yet to lose one, and I think I can gauge fairly well the opinion of the public of western Canada.

When I sat in the house in Saskatchewan I saw many resolutions coming in from farmers' organizations and individual farmers throughout the province. They came in in such numbers on one occasion that I had to get a special secretary in order to answer them. Twelve months later I found that the people of the province did not agree with the terms of those resolutions. They probably agreed when the resolutions were coming in, but with the experience of another twelve months they came to the conclusion that after all those who were acting upon the question were probably right.

It is true that resolutions came into the government immediately after the action was taken in connection with the recommendation of the board. I would have been more than surprised if none had come in. However, I must say that I was agreeably surprised at the small number. I wonder if the house knows how the audiences were obtained for these meetings which were held all over the province? They advertised the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), and they advertised the then Minister of the Interior (Mr. Crerar).

Mr. DUNNING: Without consulting either of us.

Mr. GARDINER: They advertised the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Euler) and they advertised myself. They advertised the different members whose names have been read to the house. The bills were sent to me afterwards by some of my friends. They had yellow bills three feet long giving the list of speakers and there was not a single individual or organization in the province of Saskatchewan proud enough of those bills to put his or their name upon them. They were just bills which came from nowhere, run off in somebody's printing establishment, asking the people to meet to discuss this question.

I went into a hotel in a town in my old constituency one night at nine o'clock and they told me I was supposed to be in the town of Cupar. I said, "What am I supposed to be there for?" They told me that carloads of people had gone through to that town to hear me speak. I did not know anything about that meeting. It is true that the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) spoke, as well as my successor in the local house, but I was not present for the very good reason that I did not know until nine o'clock that night that there was a meeting, and at that time I was down at the other end of what had been my old constituency.

Mr. DUNNING: You had not been asked.

Mr. GARDINER: They selected my political opponent, a man who had contested the election with me in that constituency, and they sent him up to Saskatoon to hear me speak at a meeting when it was known it was not possible for me to be there. Two or three hundred people gathered in Saskatoon as a result of these gatherings to discuss this question. Some have stated that I refused to attend that meeting. They moved the meeting from a church to the hotel so that I might be present after attending another meeting which was being held in the dining-room of the same hotel. I had only a few minutes to catch my train after the first meeting, so they sent a delegation up to my room. Before I left I discussed this question with them. To say that I ran away from them or did not see them is begging the question. I saw them and discussed the whole matter with them. I explained things very much as I have explained them to-day. As was said by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar the other day, two or three days later the same message was broadcast by me over the province of Saskatchewan.

Do hon. members know the number of resolutions I have had sent to me from that time to this in connection with the very issue which was up at that time? I could count most of them upon the fingers of my two hands. These men are talking in terms of four or five months ago, some of them in terms of six months ago; they are not talking in terms of how the people of Saskatchewan are thinking to-day. They are talking in terms of what some people thought on the spur of the moment. The farmers of Canada know that every political opponent of this government in western Canada, whether he calls himself a Conservative, a member of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation or anything else, had been for twelve months previous to August last parading through the province holding up the little pamphlet, which two hon. members held up in this house last session, saying that the Liberals had promised dollar wheat to western Canada. We know what the farmer is saying to-day. He is saying, "I guess after all the Liberals were right." We have had dollar wheat for the first time since the Liberals went out of office. The Liberals did not say they were going to bring back dollar wheat by some magical means; they told the people that if they put them in office they would reestablish the confidence of the markets of the world in the fact that Canadians were going to grow wheat to sell and not to store up. One of the reasons why wheat is selling at such a high figure to-day is that a gentleman went over to Great Britain early last summer and discussed this whole question with the milling interests.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what the milling papers say.

Mr. GARDINER: I will leave it to the leader of the opposition to speak for the milling interests; I am speaking for the farmers. It is not what the milling interests say and it is not what Mr. Ranke says. Mr. Ranke said at that time that from the point of view of the milling interests of Great Britain it would be a mistake to put more than thirty to forty per cent of Canadian wheat in their mixture. He had a very good reason for saying that. He knew that the Canadian farmer always produces at least enough wheat to put thirty to forty per cent of the Canadian product into the mix of the flour used in Great Britain. He knew that sometimes there is difficulty in scraping up enough Canadian wheat to keep the percentage at any higher level than that; and in the interests of the British milling industry it was better, of course, to maintain the content of Canadian wheat in British flour at a point not greater than forty per cent.

Then men representing the interests of the producer, members of the government; officials of the wheat board and of advertising agencies engaged by the wheat board, went over to Great Britain. When I went to London I ate my usual amount of bread, and it remained such a load upon my stomach that I could not sleep until twelve o'clock at night. I had been used to eating bread in this country, and I made my first meal out of bread when I got to London; but I felt the effects of it for a long time, and I did not eat so much bread afterwards. A week later I went over to France. I ate some bread there, but I had only one meal containing my usual amount of bread in that country. Then I went up to Scotland. I sat down at a table where the flour in the bread was made one hundred per cent of Canadian wheat, and I ate bread just as freely as I had done back in the province of Saskatchewan and felt no ill effects.

Mr. BENNETT: What about oatmeal?

Mr. GARDINER: As a result of the activities in Great Britain of those who are interested in the producers of western Canada, the content of Canadian wheat in British flour rose constantly during July, August and September, and now the British people like Canadian flour in their bread so well that they will not let even Mr. Ranke take our wheat flour out of it, and Mr. Ranke has to come to Canada and pay us premiums as high as twenty-seven and thirty cents per bushel over Argentine prices in order to get our wheat to put into his flour.

Mr. DUNNING: And he is doing it.

Mr. GARDINER: And he is doing it, Mr. Speaker. That is not to the disadvantage of the producer in western Canada. It may be to the disadvantage of the milling industry, although I doubt it. I believe that the milling industry in Great Britain will find in the end that if they increase the percentage of Canadian flour in their bread to seventy per cent, they will sell more; people will eat more bread, perhaps replacing some other foodstuffs, and we in Canada will be back in the position that every Liberal in Canada said at the last election we should be in. We said: "Let us go into the markets of the world and tell them we are willing to trade with them, and are willing to give them a product that is second to none, willing to show them that our bread is at least as good as bread made from the flour of any other country; and having done that we can build up a trade more than equal to the best years we have had in the past."

During the first year we were in office we sold into export trade 254,000,000 million bushels of wheat, and did so without putting the price down materially. It may have gone down a cent or two as a result of selling that quantity, but if it did, it merely proved our contention, that in order to get rid of this enormous carry-over we must have an act on the statute books which in the meantime would make it possible for the government to pay a set price which would save the farmer from loss on the crop of 1935. I admit I had not sufficient confidence in our own policy to believe that we should get rid of the 1935 carry-over in time for the crop of 1936. It is true as has been said we had Providence with us. But I still believed in the saying of Sir Wilfrid Laurier that it is better to have Providence with you than against you, and it is true that, with Providence on our side, we got rid of the wheat more quickly than we thought we would.

Does our friend now tell us that the wheat board of Canada should have sold wheat from the old crop into the markets of the world every day that the farmer in 1936 was marketing his wheat? One might just as well argue that as argue the opposite—that we should have bought wheat every day. The hon. member says the act gave us the power to sell wheat; therefore we should have sold it. But the board chose, under the terms of this act, not to sell wheat during the greater part of August, nor during the whole of September, nor until after the middle of October—only small quantities were sold in October—and not to come back into the market in an effective manner until November of last year. Does the hon. member tell me that I should go back to western Canada and tell the farmer that this board was not operating during that period? The board was operating to hold wheat off the market and in not buying to prevent the piling up of another enormous surplus in Canada; and by operating in both those ways it was carrying out the intent and purpose of the act of 1935.

I can quite understand that some of the men who discussed the bill at that time did not understand the question. I realize that when I listen to the same people discussing it in western Canada. Many of those who have been criticizing us in the west because of the position we have taken do not live on the farms of western Canada. Those of us who do live on the farms, who have belonged to farmers' organizations ever since such organizations came into existence, who have lived with the farmer and have been of the farm, have some idea what he is thinking; and I am quite sure that the farmer would rather get for his wheat $1.34 a bushel, as he is getting to-day under a Liberal government and in accordance with Liberal policies, than have even some kind of board that meets somebody's desires, as a reason for propaganda; policy conceived of in the minds of certain people and not derived from experience. The farmer prefers $1.34 a bushel to some kind of board that might meet the principles laid down by a group of individuals, but which, from the very nature of it, could not function. What the farmer wants is a fair return for his wheat. To-day he is getting $1.34 per bushel Fort William, for No. 1 wheat. Some hon. member may say; Yes, that is for the wheat that he has yet to sell.

Mr. DUNNING: He is selling a million bushels a week.

Mr. GARDINER: May I tell him that the farmer is still selling a considerable amount of wheat? It is true that he delivered more this year in the early part of the season, but he delivered it in spite of these arguments that my friends are putting up in the house, and which were presented in school houses all over western Canada. Our opponents went out and talked to the farmer as they are talking now. They said: Why don't you hold your wheat? Elevator companies' representatives went around and said: We will give you eighty cents a bushel Fort William, advance on your wheat, and let you hold it in the elevators as long as you like. But the farmer said: No, I am going to sell. Why did he say that? He had had enough of this policy of holding. He had learned by experience, long before some of our friends became interested in him, that the time to sell Canadian wheat is between August and December in the year in which that wheat is produced, and to sell it in quantities. Why? Because the proper time to market Argentine wheat and wheat from Australia is in January and following months, and the farmer is not the kind of gambler that some hon. members try to lead us to believe. He does not believe that he can guess what the crop in the southern hemisphere is going to be next year. He knows from his own sad experience that he cannot even estimate the crop in his own country and he is not going to try to guess about the crops of other countries. Experience has shown him that, taking one year with another, he can obtain the best price for his wheat by getting it threshed fairly early, taking it into market and selling it early; and the only thing that might have prevented his doing that this year would have been for the government and the board to have followed the policy that the mover of this amendment (Mr. Perley) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) suggest should have been followed in connection with one clause of the act—have insisted upon the board not only buying wheat all the time but selling wheat all the time too, and if they had sold in that market the price would probably have been kept down. But they did not sell in that market, and to-day the millers are out bidding for our wheat, and I am hopeful that we shall go into the next crop year without any surplus. We will go into it very much as we went into the market in every year previous to the war and during the greater part of the time the war was on. I hope that we shall go into the market without a surplus, but with the crop we grow this year. I am hopeful—I do not know whether it will happen but I hope it will—that we shall go into that crop year with a recommendation from the Turgeon commission which is now studying the question, and that that recommendation will be such that we shall be able to set up in the interests of the producers of wheat in Canada the best system of marketing that Canada has ever had. I am not at the moment anticipating that report and suggesting what that system ought to be; but I am here to say, along with every other member who comes from the western part of Canada—I believe I can include all members of the house—that the Dominion of Canada, through this government, should establish a system of marketing not only wheat but all the farm products of this country in a way that will bring the best returns to Canadian farmers.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): This debate is, of course, upon a motion which is in effect a motion of want of confidence in the government's policy for the marketing of wheat. I should like to deal very briefly with some of the things that have been said this afternoon. For example, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) has stated what in his opinion was the attitude of the Liberal candidates in western Canada in October, 1935. May I point out that the gentleman who to-day leads the government, speaking in Brandon and subsequently in Saskatoon, though in his first address he was I thought more explicit than in the second, claimed that the legislation setting up the wheat board was in reality a Liberal measure, and that the government that was then seeking reelection could not properly take any credit for it. That was interpreted throughout the whole of the wheat-growing area of western Canada as an approval of that legislation. Whether my hon. friend from Moose Jaw took that position or not, I know perfectly well that the candidate in the constituency for which I was elected, and other Liberal candidates in Saskatchewan, did tell the producers of western Canada that the wheat board system of marketing would not be endangered by the return of a Liberal government. That, I believe, all members of this house from western Canada will recollect.

The member for Moose Jaw blamed the trade policies of the former government for the wheat accumulation. I am not going to enter into any defence of those trade policies because in 1930 I stated over and over again that in my opinion steps should be taken by any government elected to open up the channels of trade, and that any steps taken in the opposite direction would have dire results upon our political economy. In fairness, however, I would point out that in 1931 it was the economic committee of the League of Nations at Geneva that brought to the attention of the world this whole matter of accumulating wheat and other cereal surpluses. It will be recalled that in consequence of their report, and because of their insistence that something must be done, a wheat conference was called. The United States attended that conference, and the conference failed largely because of the attitude of the United States, the contention being made by that country that it was legally unable to make any wheat agreement.

The other reasons that were subsequently listed by the committee were these: (1) The large number of wheat exporting countries and the difficulties of reaching an agreement among those countries on the details of any plan regarding the world supply of cereals and particularly wheat; (2) the lack of a national organization in most countries to deal with the matter effectively; (3) the uncertainty at that time as to Russia being an exporter of wheat; (4) the possibility of setting up a British Empire plan of trade agreement.

Last Sunday evening I heard an interesting discussion between the well-known correspondent, Mr. Vernon Bartlett, and a British representative on the committee dealing with the world supply of raw material, sitting at Geneva at the present time. The British representative made this statement: We are having difficulty in reaching agreements because of types of agreement like the Ottawa agreements. In other words those agreements, in the eyes of the League of Nations economic committee, are evidently restrictive rather than expansive in their general effect. And because of the possibility of such an Ottawa agreement being reached there was a difficulty in arriving at any conclusion regarding wheat in that particular year. We recollect that some measure of agreement among the big four exporting countries was reached, but the Argentine broke the quota following a big crop shortly afterwards. In spite of what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) said a few moments ago, I believe that the story of the wheat operations for 1936 will go down in our Canadian economic history as a story of opportunities sacrificed either by political partisanship or by economic blindness. If the holdings taken over by the Murray board in 1935 had not been pressed for sale as they were last year, I venture to suggest that the prices realized ought to have been considerably higher than they were. They ought to have been higher had the holdings been marketed in an orderly manner. The minister confirmed that a few moments ago in the speech he has just delivered. He said that Mr. Ranke, a British miller, was willing to pay a premium up to 27 cents a bushel above the Argentine product for Canadian grain, and yet in December, 1935, and in the weeks that followed our Canadian grain was selling below the Argentine levels. If our wheat could command a premium in 1937 it was, from the miller's point of view, worth a premium in 1935 and 1936.

Mr. DUNNING: In December, when there was no Argentine wheat.

Mr. COLDWELL: Oh yes, there was some Argentine wheat in December, 1935, and particularly in the three or four months that followed.

Mr. DUNNING: I hope my hon. friend will check that up.

Mr. COLDWELL: But for weeks on end our wheat was selling below Argentine wheat price levels. I say that was due to the dumping policy of the Canadian Wheat Board. I believe that a proper selling policy, a policy of orderly marketing, would have brought this country millions of dollars, and the Minister of Finance would have been able to report this year a much greater return for the carry-over than the $8,000,000 which he did report. As to how much the potential loss amounted to I am not going to hazard a guess. To my mind the pre-election speeches of some at least of our prominent Liberal members were interpreted as promising a fire sale policy for Canadian wheat should a Liberal government be returned to power; and the importing countries took them at their word, and I venture to say were not disappointed.

Credit has been taken by the government for acts of providence. It is true that disastrous droughts have changed the picture to a very large extent, but let us not forget that the wheat crisis was due to a glut, and that glut was turned into a shortage in a very short time by acts of nature; and, as an hon. member suggested a moment ago, the war scare also has been a contributory factor. In considering the situation in western Canada to-day we have to remember that the people there have gone through many years of depressed prices, and to-day when prices have risen, the relatively small amount of wheat which they had last year has passed out of their hands, and they have not the advantage of receiving any deferred payments by way of participation certificates. That is largely the cause of the present discontent in western Canada. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) emphasized the need for what I have called the fire sale policy of last year, which as I said was to some extent foreshadowed in the preelection speeches of some prominent Liberal candidates.

Now let us for a moment review the situation. Early in December, 1935, the wheat board took over some 300 million bushels of wheat, speaking in round figures, in various positions and forms. Foreign buyers knew that we had that wheat. In passing, let me say that to my mind it is a tragedy that an accumulation of wheat or some other raw material which may subsequently be of inestimable benefit to the world should be a depressing factor in our economic structure. That is one of the features of the present economic system which will have to be dealt with sooner or later in an intelligent manner. Even in ancient days, in the land of Egypt it will be remembered that a great leader stored up the corn in the years of plenty so that there might be corn for the lean years that followed. It seems to me we must institute a plan of that kind. Great Britain to-day is considering the storing of food within the country as a protection in the event of war. It is unfortunate that that policy was not put into effect in Great Britain two or three years ago when it was proposed by leading men of the labour movement there. However we know that under pressure of selling by the Canadian Wheat Board, wheat dropped below 75 cents a bushel. I wonder how much we sold at that figure. And it was not due to competitive selling from the Argentine or some other exporter, because Argentine wheat was being held at a price considerably higher than 75 cents a bushel—in fact, at 90 cents. Our people have a right to feel that the policy of the government and the wheat board played directly into the hands of the great speculators in grain and other foods.

Those of us who heard the evidence given before the committee last year by Mr. James R. Murray, chairman of the wheat board, realize fully that Mr. Murray was a believer in the grain exchange method of marketing. He contended that that was the method which the legislation setting up the wheat board compelled him to adopt. He explained that all board purchases were covered by sales of futures, and that when real wheat was sold, future options were taken by the board in exchange. Hon. members will remember that. He said that although the pools had endeavoured to arrange some direct trades—not many—with British millers several years ago, he did not intend to enter into exchanges of that kind. In other words, one of the things which undermined public confidence in the wheat board established by the present government was the fact that the chairman of that board was a thorough-going advocate of the grain exchange method of marketing.

Then in July of last year it was perfectly obvious that there was going to be a great drought, not only in the southern part of western Canada but throughout the whole of the spring wheat belt of the United States of America. I motored over that country three times, as I said the other day, and at the end of June, from Minneapolis to the neighbourhood of Weyburn, between 800 and 900 miles, the wheat had practically gone. About the middle of July when I went back over the route the countryside was like a veritable desert.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Was that not true of 1934 as well?

Mr. COLDWELL: To some extent. But in 1935 according to the United States statistics the area was larger, and in 1936 was larger than in 1935.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Not much.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, it extended right down into the southern states, into Kansas. That confirms my argument of course that after several years of drought, as the shortage developed the wheat board should at least not have dumped 63 million bushels of wheat on the market in July, 1936. Again may I refer to the memorandum presented to the government, or to the wheat advisory committee of the government, by the executives of the wheat pools on July 6, in which they pointed out the serious condition that was developing at that time. I never speculate in wheat; I never bought or sold a bushel of wheat on the grain exchange in my life. I do not believe in the system and I never use it, but had I been inclined to speculate last July, after what I saw I was convinced that there was a good opportunity to make some money out of such a speculation—although, as I say, I have never done it and I do not intend to begin.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend mentioned $1.50 for wheat, I think, if I remember correctly.

Mr. COLDWELL: Oh, no. At the end of August, after the trips I have mentioned and in view of the world situation, I said I believed a price of $1.25 for wheat was justified. To-day the price of wheat is considerably higher than $1.25, and I venture to add that if an orderly method of marketing had been adopted the figure mentioned by the minister might have been approached if not exceeded. That, of course, is an opinion which may not be sound.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will forgive me if I tell him that he was certainly reported very widely in the newspapers as advocating a fixed price of $1.50. I should be glad to show him the extracts.

Mr. COLDWELL: I can assure the Minister of Finance that if I was reported as having suggested a figure of $1.50, that report was incorrect. I never saw that report, but I did see myself reported as having said $1.25, which was quite correct. I should be very glad to see the newspaper clipping mentioned by the minister.

To-day hon. members from western Canada sitting on the opposite side of the house have an opportunity of registering in this house the protests they made last August and September. They did make them, and I do not think they have any reason to feel ashamed of them. I believe they were made sincerely, and I do not think anything has happened in the intervening months that should have altered their opinion. On the other hand, I believe that during the months that have passed the events which have taken place in the market have confirmed the criticisms made at that time. The hon. member for Moose Jaw spoke of the fact that during the war a wheat board was established to prevent prices from rising unduly. The hon. gentleman was quite right, and I venture to say that the agrarian population of western Canada did not raise a vehement protest, if they raised any, against that action of the board. They felt that because of the war situation a certain measure of control had to be instituted, and they were prepared to accept it.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): My hon. friend says I stated that there was a wheat board during the war. I may have said that, but there was no wheat board during the war. There was a board of supervisors during the war and a wheat board just after the war.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes; we usually speak of it as a war board. That is one reason why I think to-day, and have thought for some years, that a wheat board operating in exactly the opposite way is justified. If it was right to establish a board to protect society against high prices during a particular period it is equally sound to establish a board to protect the producer against unnaturally low prices. My hon. friend from Moose Jaw left out one fact in dealing with the history of the marketing of wheat up to the formation of the pools. He neglected to say that in 1922—speaking from memory I think it was in June of that year—the Liberal government placed legislation on the statute books providing for the formation of a wheat board. That legislation, however, never became operative, and that was one of the reasons, though only one, for the subsequent formation of the pools.

The hon. member was emphatic in his statement that the farmers had no right to a minimum fixed price for their wheat, and that the dairy farmers should have the same protection. I am in agreement with the latter part of his remark; I believe the dairy farmers and other primary producers should have precisely the same protection. They have that protection in New Zealand, under a Labour government. But I am going to point out that as long as there is an industrial market receiving protection the farmers are entitled to protection for their products and for the prices of those products, and as long as the government supported by the hon. member for Moose Jaw and other western members maintain tariffs that are reasonably high, then the government must expect to give protection to those who have to sell in the unprotected markets of the world. If on the other hand the government implement their tariff policy, which they have never repealed, and which I hold in my hand, my argument might be discounted to that extent. Let me remind my hon. friend that in the tariff plank, which I understand forms the basis of the policy of the Liberal party and which was adopted in 1919, there is this statement:

> That the best interests of Canada demand that substantial reductions of the burdens of customs taxation be made with a view to the accomplishing of two purposes of the highest importance: First, diminishing the very high cost of living which presses so severely on the masses of the people; second, reducing the cost of the instruments of production in the industries based on the natural resources of the dominion; the vigorous development of which is essential to the progress of our country.
> That to these ends, wheat, wheat flour, and all products of wheat, the principal articles of food, farm implements and machinery and repair parts thereof; rough and dressed lumber, gasoline, illuminating, lubricating and fuel oils, etc., nets, net twines, and fishermen's equipments; cements and fertilizers, should be free from customs duties, as well as the raw material entering into the same.
> That a revision downwards of the tariff should be made whereby substantial reductions should be effected in the duties on wearing apparel, and footwear and on other articles of general consumption (other than luxuries) as well as on the raw material entering into the manufacture of the same.
> That the British preference be increased to 50 per cent of the general tariff, and the Liberal party hereby pledges itself to implement by legislation the provision of this revision when returned to power.

That is the Liberal tariff platform. If they are going to maintain protection for our industries then they must give protection to our farmers, who are at the mercy of an unprotected world market. If on the other hand they implement their tariff policy, remove all protection and let everyone take a chance, of course the situation is entirely different.

I should like to ask the hon. member for Moose Jaw one further question. Did I understand him to say that he was in Ottawa when the minimum price was set?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: The western newspapers carried a story to the effect that western members were in Ottawa endeavouring to get the government to establish a price of one dollar or more per bushel. I assume the hon. member joined in that request.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): No. I came down here, together with three other members of this parliament, with the ministers of the provincial government, to endeavour to have arrangements made in connection with the drought area. I happened to stay longer than the other members, and I was in Ottawa at the time the price was fixed.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am very glad to get that information; I asked the question in order to clear up that point in my mind. It is true that the government has appointed a royal commission to inquire into the whole matter of the marketing of wheat, and that a report will be made by that commission. But unfortunately the government, I think, made a grave error when they appointed Colonel Ralston as counsel for that commission. I said that before Colonel Ralston was appointed, because on the floor of parliament he was the chief opponent of the wheat board legislation.

Mr. BENNETT: Denounced everybody.

Mr. COLDWELL: He was the chief opponent in committee, and endeavoured to amend section 10 of the act so that the board would not function beyond August, 1937.

Mr. BENNETT: Except by order in council.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes. And although the suggestion was defeated and the house subsequently unanimously adopted the wheat board act, it looks to me as if Colonel Ralston may have really represented the intentions of the party to which he belonged. I say the very fact that he has been appointed counsel for the commission has undermined the confidence which people might have had in any finding the commission could make. We must add to that, of course, the tremendous fee of $200 per day, and $20 per day for living allowances, especially in these times.

Mr GARDINER: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is he aware that the government asked Mr. Milliken to act along with Colonel Ralston?

Mr. COLDWELL: No.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, that actually did happen. The government asked Mr Milliken to act with Colonel Ralston, and after consulting with the pool he expressed a preference to act in his present capacity with the pool.

Mr. BENNETT: For whom is Colonel Ralston counsel?

Mr. DUNNING: He is counsel for the commission.

Mr. GARDINER: Colonel Ralston is counsel for the commission, and Mr. Milliken was asked to act as his assistant.

Mr. COLDWELL: But that does not alter the fact that the government is paying Colonel Ralston as chief counsel. Moreover, I was unaware of the fact that Mr Milliken had been invited to act, because as I said the other day, although I am generally accused of it I am not in the confidence of the pool, nor have I any connection whatsoever with it. But I would say this: If the government suggested that Mr. Milliken act, they must have understood that he is the pool's counsel, and if the pool was preparing a case for presentation before the commission the pools could not possibly allow Mr. Milliken to act on behalf of the commission. That would be a most difficult situation. The fact remains that the government's counsel is Hon. Mr. Ralston.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Hear, hear.

Mr. COLDWELL: And, as I have said, I think his appointment was a mistake.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): He is an eminent man; we are proud of him, and he has the confidence of the people of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: He must have, if he is attacked from the floor of the house.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am not saying he is not an eminent man; I am not saying he is not a well qualified man; but I do say that the man who was regarded as the principal opponent of the wheat board legislation when in committee and before the house cannot command the confidence of the people of Canada, no matter how eminent he may be.

Mr. BENNETT: Two hundred dollars a day, and expenses.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I ask my interrupters, from this point, to address the chair.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): What about Tilley, Peter White, and those fellows?

Mr. COLDWELL: In spite of what may be said in this house I wish to state emphatically that the farmers in western Canada of all political persuasions want the wheat board continued. Secondly, they want producer representation either on the board or on the advisory committee. Thirdly, despite the observations of the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) they want an adequate, set minimum price. If we are to set prices for other commodities by means of taxes and tariffs, then the western farmer has the right to expect that his price will receive an adequate measure of protection.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) questions the justice of a set price. Whether we like it or not—and I do not like it—when we look over the world to-day we notice that in practically every country, including the motherland, France, Germany and Italy, the producer is guaranteed a price for his cereal production and uneconomic production is encouraged. Under those conditions any group of producers in Canada, left at the mercy of a world market, is in a very awkward position indeed.

The minister has said that the purpose of the wheat board act of 1935 was to set up a board to sell wheat to the best advantage of the people of Canada. I am going to vote for the amendment because I believe the present wheat board has not sold wheat to the best advantage of our people. That is the main criticism of it that I would make. Again, in spite of what the Minister of Agriculture has said, I say the purpose of the board has been nullified by the order in council to which reference was made this afternoon. Of course, the fact that there was not very much wheat delivered to the board prior to August 28, 1936, does not mean a great deal, because already the then chairman of the wheat board, Mr. James R. Murray, had lost the confidence of the great mass of producers in western Canada. They did not feel like delivering to a board headed by Mr. Murray. I make that statement—

An hon. MEMBER: Cheap.

Mr. GARDINER: May I ask one further question? Why, under similar circumstances, did they not deliver to the board while it was under the chairmanship of Mr. McFarland?

Mr. COLDWELL: They did deliver to the board, in very much larger quantities.

Mr. GARDINER: I would call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that the figures I gave the other day show that during the 1935 period, while the price was above the set price, the farmers did not deliver, whether Mr. Murray or Mr. McFarland was there.

Mr. COLDWELL: That may be so. Of course, I agree with the statement made by the minister the other day to the effect that the element of human nature enters into the picture. However. I would ask the house to bear in mind that the two situations were not analogous, because in 1936 the price of wheat was likely to remain above the set minimum price of 87½ cents a bushel.

Mr. DUNNING: The pool did not say so.

Mr. COLDWELL: I think they did. I believe their statement of July 6 clearly indicates that a price above the cost of production was warranted. We have frequently referred to a cost of production price; what does the Saskatchewan farmer mean when he speaks of the cost of production? We realize the cost must vary in different parts of the province, but the figure offered by Professor Hardy of the university of Saskatchewan, and confirmed by Professors Allen and Hope of the department of agricultural economics, shows that the total average cost per bushel in Saskatchewan to produce and ship to market is $1.03. Of that amount, 85 cents is stated to be the average cost of producing a bushel, and 18 cents the average cost of shipping. The amount would be lower or higher, according to the locality, type of soil and moisture content. Consequently they asked that a price above the cost of production should be approved by the board. The minister criticized those people in western Canada who were saying that prices would go higher. If I remember correctly, he said at Moose Jaw that we were in danger of creating some speculation.

Mr. GARDINER: At Regina. I did not say that prices would go higher. I stated that some speaker had said the price would go to $1.50, and I made the statement that they did not know any more about it than I did.

Mr. COLDWELL: I think you are quite right. I do not know of any speaker who said it would go to $1.50. The minister pointed out that the wheat board might conceivably result in a loss.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I would point out to the hon. member that he has spoken forty minutes.

Mr. COLDWELL: I have been interrupted many times, and I should like to finish.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: It must be with the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. COLDWELL: The minister, like other members of the Liberal party, minimized the importance of the meetings held in western Canada last autumn. I think that was a mistake. I believe the minister will give me credit for having done this. The only meeting I attended was the one at Saskatoon. That meeting was inclined to be not only critical but vehemently condemnatory of the minister. I made this statement then, and I make it again to-day that one of the things all hon. members from western Canada should do is to endeavour to interpret the needs of the people of western Canada to people of eastern Canada. One of the difficulties in asking for something for the west is the fact that the people of the east do not understand the situation in the west. Incidentally, I have been criticized for having made that statement, but I believe it to be true. Hence, I think it is a mistake to try to minimize the importance of those meetings. I did not see any of the bills advertising protest meetings to which the minister referred because I was not out there until the end of September. I had nothing whatever to do with the organization of those meetings, and I believe they were spontaneous. I do not know who printed the bills to which reference has been made and I had nothing to do with organizing protest meetings either through broadcasts or through public appeals. I confined my activities mainly to my own constituency.

I thank the house for the courtesy of allowing me a few additional moments, and I ask all hon. members from western Canada to join with those of us who intend to support this amendment.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, we are, and we always have been, in competition with the world. Other nations are protecting their industries by means of tariffs, quotas, subsidies, marketing boards and the like. All this is largely a development of the last twenty years. Therefore we should be particularly attentive to the necessity of bringing our method of procedure up to date. Canada has long protected generously her manufacturers, by means of tariff and a laissez-faire attitude to prices. It was because of this that we had a price spreads commission sitting not long ago, from which we have not seen many results.

Canada has all too recklessly left her primary producers to look after themselves. A heroic effort on their part to rise to the occasion was the Alberta wheat pool and the cooperative elevators, already referred to to-day. Canada in those times should have been solicitous of her farmers and primary producers, as they are less able to look after themselves than the manufacturers, especially when the manufacturers are able to form themselves into combines. There has never been the need of a price spreads commission to investigate the machinations of those who produce our wheat, our dairy products; of our stockmen, our poultrymen, our fishermen or our miners. Rather are all these people the luckless and well nigh helpless victims of a wide variety of predators. Long has this condition continued until at last there is a cry for adjustment from end to end of this country. As the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) would likely say, our Canadian industries have been on our backs. For many years our primary producers have suffered in impotent misery. How long are they to suffer?

The primary producers of other countries are receiving various forms of assistance. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) referred to the Argentine, which is a case in point. Our powerful neighbour to the south has for years been guarding her primary producers. The N.R.A. and the A.A.A. of the new deal would appear to be designed to overcome the inequalities which exist between the primary and secondary producers. Our primary producers consequently now find themselves the victims not only of our domestic predators but of the subsidized primary producers of other lands. How can we stand against the competition of the farmers of France, who in six years have received $1,321,020,000; or the farmers of Germany, who have received $754,370,000; or of Italy, who have received $1,211,490,000; or of Australia, who have received £12,548,000 between 1931 and 1935; or of the Argentine, who had the benefit last year of a minimum price of 92 cents per bushel; or of the United States, who received $255,624,699 up to December 31, 1935, through the agricultural adjustment administration? Hon. members who are interested in these figures will find them on page 27 of a pamphlet entitled Aid to Agriculture, published by the Alberta wheat pool. They will also find in that pamphlet an illuminating discussion of the whole situation. This pamphlet shows how Canada is lagging behind other countries. Apparently we think that our primary producers can stand anything, and that the only people who need protection are our manufacturers.

I hasten to add that I have no quarrel with our manufacturers. But if they are to be protected while the primary producers are not, then we have a situation which is impossible and which, if continued, will result in the complete destruction of our primary industries. I admire the rugged individualism and the self-sufficiency breathed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, but facts are stubborn things. Let us not break our primary producers on the rocks of stern reality. We are now in an age of plenty. We shall be forced to study means of guaranteeing a just price. There are plenty of people who will scout that suggestion as to just price the minute we mention it, but, Mr. Speaker, as sure as we are in this house we are approaching an era in which one of the first considerations must be a just price for both producers and consumers, whether the producers be engaged in secondary or in primary industries. That is the end to which we are feeling our way—a just price for fish, for wheat and other grains, for butter, coal, meats, sugar beets and other primary products too numerous to mention. There are many who because of free trade notions which they learned from their fathers believe that we must not have such things as subsidies, for example; "Oh," they say, "these are terrible things, altogether contrary to Liberal principles." But I maintain that before long we shall be violating virtually every Liberal principle that we learned from our forefathers and shall be deeming that violation a good thing; and the sooner we begin to face realities as they are to-day, the sooner we shall find a solution.

I contend, therefore, that we must strive to have a just price—even if it means subventions in respect of Alberta coal; even if it involves tariff protection against imported sugar, in order that we may guarantee a fair living to our primary producers of sugar beets and those engaged in our sugar factories; even if it means the appointment of an effective board to market such of our products as wheat, oats, and barley; even though we have to subsidize bacon in order to supply the British market, as the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Leader) suggested the other day.

Mr. LEADER: Beef.

Mr. BLACKMORE: We may even have to subsidize beef, although I would hesitate to say that, because at present it might be too big a task.

I deprecate any tendency to weaken the board that was established by the last government, either in its design to set a just price or in its efforts to enable the farmer to participate in such rises of price as a developing market throughout the year may bring about. I feel very resentful about the government's policy of 1936. I believe it was entered upon in good faith, but there is surely resentment regarding it in my district. I am much reassured, however, by the promise which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) implied in the closing words of his speech, and I believe that feeling will be shared by a good many people throughout the country. Nevertheless, to register my disapproval of what we believed the government's policy was leading to, I propose to vote for the amendment.

Mr. T. F. DONNELLY (Wood Mountain): For the last five or six years there has been a debate each session with regard to the marketing of wheat, and this year is no exception. The question arose back in 1929, when the pools got into financial difficulties and applied to the dominion government for assistance. At that time the pools were condemned for their policies with regard to wheat. I was then a member of this house, and I listened to many hon. gentlemen of the Conservative party expressing their objection to the policy of holding wheat. What was true as regards the pools applied also to every marketing facility employed in western Canada. The banks, those operating the ordinary marketing facilities, and many others, held wheat believing that the price would go up. In 1930 the pools, however, found themselves in such financial difficulties that they asked the then prime minister, the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) to assist them. Assistance was given.

Mr. BENNETT: The provinces assisted them, I believe.

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, at first, but afterwards the federal government gave them help.

Mr. BENNETT: Not financially.

Mr. DONNELLY: Well, it assisted them to the extent that a man was put in charge, somewhat in the capacity of a receiver, to try to market their wheat. About 77,000,000 bushels were taken over by this official with the idea of selling it. From year to year we tried to get information as to what disposal was being made of this wheat, whether it was being sold or not, but we had a great deal of difficulty in finding out what was being done. At last it was disclosed that this man, who was supposed to be selling these 77,000,000 bushels, was also buying wheat, and by so doing was supposed to be stabilizing the market. On December 6, 1935, after the Liberal government came into office and a new board was appointed, we found that there were 175,000,000 bushels of wheat in the hands of the board or of John I. McFarland. The policy of the former government as carried out by Mr. McFarland was apparently to set a price for wheat and make the world pay that price whether buyers were willing to do so or not. The result was that year by year our surplus grew, and with every month and year that passed we were losing our markets.

Take the 1932 crop. There was sold at that time, under the Conservative government, 264,000,000 bushels. The next year, 1933, we sold 194,000,000 bushels, and in 1934, 165,000,000 bushels. This shows the extent to which year by year we were losing our markets. After the election of 1935 the Liberal government came into power, with a new policy. As I understood that policy and propounded it from the platform, we were to set a reasonable price which the farmers were to receive, and were to sell at the world price; that is, we were to compete with other nations in the marketing of wheat, to try to hold such markets as we had and get back those we had lost. Following out that policy, under the new wheat board, with James Murray at the head, we immediately began to regain what we had lost. To such an extent was that true that in the year following the appointment of the new board, whereas in 1934 we had sold only 165,000,000 bushels, in 1935 we disposed of 254,000,000 bushels. Take for instance our greatest market, that of Great Britain, where we have been rapidly losing ground. We exported to Britain, of the 1932 crop, 113,000,000 bushels; of the 1933 crop, 80,000,000 bushels; of the 1934 crop, 75,000,000 bushels, but in 1935, under the new board, we sold 105,000,000 bushels. Under the policies of the Liberal party, week by week and month by month our hold-over diminished and our prices increased. We made it clear that we were growing wheat in order to sell it, that we would clear out our bins and get rid of the accumulation, and that is just what happened.

I have listened for some time to the theories propounded by hon. members on the left. I believe that some of those who belong to the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation have a new policy; I hear the hon. members for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and Weyburn (Mr. Douglas) arguing that farmers should get the cost of production plus a reasonable profit. When I hear this talk about cost of production plus a reasonable profit, I begin to wonder what that is. I live in a district where for eight years farmers have had no crops. How much will it cost them to produce a bushel of wheat? Are you going to pay them cost of production where they have produced nothing for eight years?

In my opinion what the farmer in western Canada expects is a reasonable price. It is all very well to talk about cost of production; they are nice words to roll under the tongue; but to carry it into practice is a different thing. I can take you to my own constituency and show you two farmers, a barbed wire fence separating their farms, one of whom had ten bushels of wheat for the year, and the other not a bushel. Are you going to give each of them cost of production? Where will you set the price? It absolutely cannot be done. This sort of thing is ridiculous; it is merely something to talk about.

Mr. DUNNING: No farmer ever lived on an average.

Mr. DONNELLY: No. It cannot be done. What we should talk about is a reasonable price for the farmer, a price that would enable him to make a living. But we find people talking about a higher price.

Mr. QUELCH: Will the hon. member define reasonable price? What is a reasonable price?

Mr. DONNELLY: Some people fancy that 87½ cents is a reasonable price. Personally I do not know how they arrived at that precise figure; I have often wondered how they got the half cent. I think it should be a round figure, 90 or 85. Perhaps the leader of the opposition will tell us how the 87½ cents is arrived at. I have grown wheat for many years at 87½ cents and made good money, and I have grown wheat at 85 and 80 and done very well.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose one of those farmers was a Liberal and the other a Conservative.

Mr. DONNELLY: Those were the farms one of which I wanted to give you and which you would not take.

Mr. BENNETT: I suspect the farm you wanted to give me had no bushels.

Mr. DONNELLY: I hear a good many people saying they want a higher price. I was one of those who last fall talked about what should be done in regard to wheat, and I maintain that the fixing of a higher price is absolutely wrong. I will show you why. It is the very policy that broke the pool; it is the very policy on which the Conservative government got in wrong, by setting a price that was too high.

Mr. BENNETT: It broke us, too.

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, that is right. I repeat, it is absolutely wrong. A reasonable price is the thing to expect, and I figure that the price we have here is reasonable. Many pool officials went throughout the country and I met them on the platform and talked with them, and I can say that the policy that broke them was the setting of a price above the world price when they knew that they could not get it. That is what broke them. In my opinion the price should have been left at 87½ cents; it should not have been raised above that figure.

I have heard some men talking about the board we had and saying that we put on a fire sale. The same thing was brought up last year in the committee, where reference was made to this so-called fire sale. We were told that we were selling wheat below the world price. I would refer the house to some of the evidence to show whether we were really selling wheat at a sacrifice. The board began to operate about the sixth of December, 1935, and began selling about the ninth. On the twelfth of December the Argentine fixed their price for home consumption, which was above the world price at that time, and the result was that the price of wheat that day went up and there was a great demand on the Winnipeg exchange. Mr. James Murray sold over twenty-two million bushels that day, and yet he was accused of sacrificing wheat and putting on a fire sale. My only criticism of Mr. Murray at that time was that he did not sell enough.

Mr. HANSON: How much did he sell?

Mr. DONNELLY: He sold twenty-two million bushels at an average price of 88·7 cents. That was the price he obtained that day, and I hold that he did not sell enough, because shortly after that the price of wheat began to fall. During the month of December he sold 49,000,000 bushels and obtained an average price of 88·6, and the May average price of wheat in that December was 88·3. In other words, for the wheat he sold in December he obtained ·3 cent more than the average price for May wheat at that time. That was not bad; in fact I call it good. During the month of January he sold something like 26,500,000 bushels at an average price of 88·483, and the average price for May during that January was 88·057.

Mr. BENNETT: January of this year?

Mr. DONNELLY: January, 1936. That was December, 1935, and January, 1936. In other words, in those months he was averaging a little better than the May average, so that there was no fire sale. I could go on and give the figures for the different months. He was doing exactly what we asked him to do; that is to say, he was selling our wheat at competitive prices in the world market, getting rid of the product and cleaning out the bins, so that we might be able to sell our wheat.

Will you call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER 28 FOR SITTING OF THURSDAY, MARCH 18

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): In order that we may be able to proceed with this debate to-morrow I move, seconded by Mr. Dunning:

That standing order 28 respecting the committee of ways and means be suspended for the sittings of Thursday, March 18, 1937.

Motion agreed to.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, March 18, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

QUEBEC SENATORS HOLDING PROVINCIAL PORTFOLIOS

Mr. GARIEPY:

What measure is the government taking to prevent a person who happens to be a member of the legislative council of the province of Quebec, or a minister of the crown for such province, with or without portfolio, or with or without emoluments of office, from holding a seat in the senate?

Mr. RINFRET: No measures.

[Mr. Donnelly.]

EASTEND, SASK., POST OFFICE

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. Has the Post Office Department purchased the Royal Bank building at Eastend, Saskatchewan, for post office purposes?

2. If so, what price has been paid or agreed to be paid for the said building?

Mr. CARDIN:

1. No.

2. Answered by No. 1.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

PRINTING BUREAU—OVERTIME

Mr. PINARD:

What amount of extra moneys has been paid by the Government Printing Bureau for overtime during the year 1936-37?

PORT ALBERNI, B.C., ASSEMBLY DOCK

Mr. MacNEIL:

1. What was the total revenue secured in respect of the government assembly dock at Port Alberni, British Columbia: (a) during the fiscal year 1935-1936; (b) during the period of April 1 to December 31, 1936?

2. What was the cost of maintenance and interest charges in respect of the government assembly dock at Port Alberni: (a) during the fiscal year 1935-1936; (b) from April 1 to December 31, 1936?

3. What proportion of the revenue from this dock was secured from the Alberni Pacific Lumber Company during the periods referred to above?

PRINTING OF ELECTORAL LISTS

Mr. FERLAND:

1. What was the cost of printing the electoral lists which were used in the general elections of 1930?

2. What is the approximate expense incurred by the King's Printer for the printing of the electoral lists which were used in the federal elections of 1935?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EASTER ADJOURNMENT FROM THURSDAY 25TH UNTIL MONDAY 29TH MARCH

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there is a notice of motion in Votes and Proceedings, in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), concerning the Easter adjournment. Many hon. members have expressed the desire to know how long the adjournment will be in order that they may make arrangements accordingly. As the notice of motion indicates, it is proposed that when this house adjourns on Thursday, 25th March, it stand adjourned until Tuesday, 30th March, next. This would involve an adjournment from Thursday night until the Tuesday after Easter; the house would not sit on Friday or Monday, so that only two sitting days would be lost. With the consent of the house I would move accordingly.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Argenteuil): Mr. Speaker, hon. members on this side of the house are quite willing to fall in line with any suggestion the government may put forward with regard to the few days of recess at Easter. I must say, however, that many hon. members feel it would have been just as well to take only Friday, in addition to the ordinary week-end, and to proceed with business on Monday as usual. They hold that view because we are all most anxious to have sufficient time properly to discuss matters, and still make it possible to prorogue early enough to permit of the necessary arrangements being made with respect to the coronation. But, as I said to the minister privately, whatever the government desires to do in the matter will be satisfactory to us.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Of course if it is the general wish of the house that we sit on Monday I shall be pleased to amend the motion accordingly, and have only Friday taken off the ordinary sitting time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Very well; I move, therefore:

That when this house adjourns on Thursday, 25th March, it stand adjourned until Monday, 29th March next.

Motion agreed to.

TORONTO COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ilsley) a question based upon a press dispatch from Ottawa appearing in the Evening Telegram of Toronto, March 17. It is to the effect that Mr. E. D. Lennie, of Ottawa, chief inspector of the Department of National Revenue, has been appointed to the long-vacant office of collector of customs at Toronto, over all the Toronto staff.

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of National Revenue): The answer is no.

Mr. CHURCH: I object to all these people being brought from all over Canada to Toronto.

WASHINGTON STATE SALMON TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, according to a press dispatch appearing in the Vancouver Province it appears a bill has been passed in the state of Washington, placing what is designated as a privilege tax of five cents per fish on all spring salmon entering that area. As Canadian fishermen sell a considerable portion of their spring salmon catch south of the border, the five cent tax it is feared will operate as a tariff against this trade. I wonder whether the minister has any information on the matter, and if so would he be good enough to inform the house what representations if any have been made to the United States authorities protesting against the proposed imposition of any such tax?

Hon. J. E. MICHAUD (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) may I say that we have information that a bill was passed by the Washington state legislature on the twelfth instant, under which a privilege tax is to be imposed on all salmon irrespective of where they are caught. Details of the bill have not been received up to the moment. The United States tariff governs conditions under which fish may be imported into the United States, and so far as imports of salmon from British Columbia are concerned it would not appear likely that the proposed tax would apply, unless they were processed within the state and the tax were in the form of a process tax. The matter is now being closely followed.

VETERANS' ASSISTANCE COMMISSION

POSSIBLE LEGISLATION ARISING OUT OF REPORT RECENTLY TABLED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I should like to ask the Minister of Pensions (Mr. Power) this question: In view of the great amount of suffering and consequent hopelessness, despair and even bitterness which are developing among many returned men in far too many portions of Canada, does the minister propose to bring down at an early date recommendations based upon the interim report of the veterans' assistance commission recently tabled in the house? If so, does the minister feel free to give the house any assurance that there will be in his proposal substantial hope of relief for distressed returned men?

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of Pensions and National Health): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was courteous enough to give me notification of this question. The matter he brings to the attention of the government is one involving a question of government policy, and I fear that whether I answered in the affirmative or in the negative he would not be satisfied. I will say to him, however, that as soon as the estimates of the Department of Pensions and National Health are considered I shall do my utmost to answer the question he has put to me and in a manner which will be satisfactory to the Canadian people.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR EXPENDITURE, INDEBTEDNESS AND THE REFUNDING OF MATURING OBLIGATIONS

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are proceeded with may I say that last night unfortunately among the measures to be considered to-day we omitted to mention the financial resolution preceding the introduction of the usual bill to provide for the finances of the Canadian National Railways. I am asking the house to permit us to take the resolution now, in order that the bill in question, which is the usual one dealing with Canadian National Railways finances, may be referred to the special committee on railways and shipping and the work of the house thus expedited. Needless to say, if there is any objection from any quarter, in view of the fact that the item was not named last night, we will not proceed with it.

Mr. LAWSON: Is any part of the amount a new issue, or is it all refunding?

Mr. DUNNING: The amount is stated in the resolution. It refers to "maturing financial obligations, and to authorize the guarantee of securities."

Mr. LAWSON: That is new?

Mr. DUNNING: It ties in with the budget of the railways with respect to new expenditures, that budget already being before the proper committee.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does the minister propose to deal with the subject exactly as it was dealt with last year?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, exactly.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: That is to say, that without discussion here it will go to the committee, the house having the right to discuss it as it pleases after it is returned?

Mr. DUNNING: Correct.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

Mr. DUNNING moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to authorize the provision of moneys to meet expenditures made and indebtedness incurred by the Canadian National Railways Company during the calendar year 1937, to provide for the refunding of certain maturing financial obligations and to authorize the guarantee of securities to be issued by the said company to an aggregate amount of $30,721,700.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Dunning thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 73, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to authorize the provision of moneys to meet certain expenditures made and indebtedness incurred during the calendar year 1937.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read a second time?

Mr. DUNNING: With the consent of the house, I would move the second reading at this time and also that the bill be referred immediately to the railways and shipping committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the committee on railways and shipping.

WAYS AND MEANS

AMENDMENT TO MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE —CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD ACT

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Dunning for committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment thereto, of Mr. Perley (Qu'Appelle).

Mr. T. F. DONNELLY (Wood Mountain): Mr. Speaker, just before the house adjourned yesterday I had dealt with the policy of the Conservative government in connection with the sale of wheat during their term of office. Previous to that I had dealt with the policy of the Liberal government prior to the last election. I dealt also with some of the suggestions put forward by hon. members of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation as to what the policy of the government should be in the marketing of wheat. Many criticisms have been made of the actions of the present board, one being that our wheat was put up at fire sale prices. I dealt partly with that criticism and for a few moments I intend to discuss more fully this so-called fire sale of our wheat.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) referred to a letter given to Mr. Lamont by the head of our wheat board when he was going over to England. It was a very fine letter and I recommend its being read by every hon. member. It is to be found on page 145 of the evidence given before the special committee on the marketing of wheat which sat in 1936. It must be remembered that our wheat was not considered in a favourable light in England and that we had lost much of our market for wheat in that country. Yesterday I referred to the fact that we had lost many of the markets for our wheat, especially the market in England. The letter to which I refer was written by Mr. Murray and given to Mr. Lamont before he went to England in an endeavour to get back our market for wheat. I should like to read one or two paragraphs from that letter, as follows:

It is the desire of the board to permanently regain for Canadian wheat a full share of the import requirements of wheat in the British Isles and elsewhere. It is recognized by the board that a proper price relationship with other wheats must be maintained. With the good will of millers and consumers we feel that a better share of the available markets can be obtained for Canadian wheat.

I do not see anything wrong with that section; that is just what we were after. I continue:

You are authorized to assure the millers that in the event of their increasing the percentage of Manitobas in their flour blends that the policy of the board will be consistently that of making Canadian wheat available at fair competitive values. It is recognized by the board that the millers require, and must be given, assurance that when they do revert to the use of greater quantities of Canadian wheat in their flour blends that sufficient Canadian wheat will be constantly available to enable them to maintain the standard of the product supplied to their clientele of bakers and that no attempt will be made to hold them up in obtaining the needed supplies. The fixed minimum price paid producers by the board does not necessarily bear relationship to the board's selling price. Particular emphasis should be laid on regaining, through the British millers, the good will of the bakers for the use of a flour containing increased volume of Canadian wheat.

That is the very thing we were after. We wanted to get back the English market for our wheat which we had lost and which we had been losing for the past two or three years. The letter continues:

A fair premium should be considered what the millers of the world will pay for Canadian wheat, based on its season-to-season value compared with other wheats, and allowing for the free use of Canadian wheat in volume.

The principal reason the board are sending you to England is to cultivate the cooperation and good will of British millers towards the use of Canadian wheat.

I think anyone who reads that letter must come to the conclusion that that was the very thing that needed to be done. Under the conditions that existed then, I think the letter was well prepared and very well written. There is no suggestion in it that our wheat was going to be sold at prices which were not competitive with other world prices. We did regain our markets and we did sell our wheat. There is no doubt that this letter written to Mr. Lamont, and the other letter sent to the British millers, which will be found in the same place in the evidence, indicating to them that we were intending to compete with other wheats of the world, and that we would do everything we possibly could to see that they got our wheat at fair competitive prices, did much to get back for us the market in the British Isles which we had lost.

Another criticism in connection with this matter has to do with the amount of money which the western farmers are said to have lost because of the fact that the price of wheat went up last year. I listened to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) say that he had told people last year that the price of wheat was going up to $1.25—at all events he said it was reported in the press and that the report was correct. I wish I could have been sure that the price was going up to $1.25 last year; had I known that I would have made some money. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle says: "They were so certain in Winnipeg that the price of wheat would go up that you did not even have to put up any hedges; the banks allowed you to buy wheat without having any money at all." Just think of having an opportunity like that—knowing that the price of wheat was going up and knowing that you could get all the money you wanted for nothing. Why, a man could be a millionaire—that is, a man who had brains enough to get into this house should have been a millionaire. I should like to ask the hon. member for Qu'Appelle how much money he made. Surely he made a lot. I am not much impressed with the remarks of a man who relies on the course of the markets, whether the stock market or the wheat market, for his political arguments. How can he tell what is going to happen? I wish someone could tell me what the price of wheat will be next fall.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Or to-morrow.

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, or to-morrow. I should like to get into the market if I could tell what the price of wheat will be next October. I wonder whether those who prophesy these prices are ready to back their opinion with their money.

Mr. DUNNING: Or with their wheat.

Mr. DONNELLY: If they are not, I do not think much of their predictions. There is one sure way for a man to show that he is sure of a thing, and that is by spending his money to prove it. As the saying is, if our foresight were only as good as our hindsight, we would be all right. A lot of us would like to be in that position.

I should like to say a word or two with regard to a criticism made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. He said yesterday:

> Mr. James R. Murray had lost the confidence of the great mass of the producers in western Canada. They did not feel like delivering to a board headed by Mr. Murray.

All I want to say in that regard is that any man who sat on the committee last year and listened to Mr. James Murray giving evidence must have been convinced, if he knew anything about the grain trade, that Mr. Murray knew his business, that he was a capable man and that he was the right man to do the job that he was doing.

Mr. DUNNING: And an honest public servant.

Mr. DONNELLY: Not only that, but a man who had supported the wheat pool policy—who was one of the first to advocate it and still supports it.

Mr. GARDINER: And drafted the contract.

Mr. DONNELLY: If we had had a man like Mr. James Murray at the head of the wheat pools when they were started, it is my firm belief that they would be operating successfully yet. What was wrong with our pools was that we did not have at the head of them a man who knew his business, who knew how to carry them on. That is why they went broke; that is why they are in the position they are in to-day. If there is any truth at all in the suggestion that Mr. Murray has lost the confidence of the producers, it must be because there are cheap politicians going around among the farmers and abusing Murray, saying that he does not understand his job and is trying to work against their interests.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, speaking here yesterday, referring to the Turgeon commission, also said:

> The government, I think, made a grave error when they appointed Colonel Ralston as counsel for that commission.

[Mr. J. G. Ross.]

I am not going to say anything about the compensation that is paid Colonel Ralston, but I will say that I sat for three years on the committee which investigated the mixing of wheat, and I know we tried to get the services of a counsel to write amendments to the grain act: we had the greatest trouble in obtaining one who understood the grain act and the wheat business well enough to rewrite the statute in its present form. We practically had to dictate the terms which our counsel was required to write into the act, and to amend and reamend the draft in order to get it right. I repeat that it is one of the hardest things imaginable to find an unattached lawyer who is fully conversant with the workings of the act. We could, I suppose, have got lawyers who were tied up with the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, but what a howl would have gone up from western Canada if we had asked them to assist us. It would have been said, "We know now what we are going to get; we shall get a report in favour of the grain exchange."

Another point to be borne in mind is that wheat marketing is a national problem, not one confined to western Canada. Only last year the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) said in the committee that the greatest problem with which we had to deal was that of marketing wheat, that it was as important as our railway problem. I remember remarking at the time that I thought the growing of wheat was just as great a problem as the marketing of it. But I agree that marketing is of national importance; and we wanted to engage someone in whom eastern as well as western Canada would have confidence. That can be said of Colonel Ralston. He is an able man; he knows wheat, and he knows the grain act as well as any man in eastern Canada. I was astonished at the knowledge he displayed both of the law and of the handling of wheat.

Having dealt with some past criticisms, I will refer briefly to what happened at the last session of the house. At that time the leader of the opposition criticized the chairman of the wheat board and laid certain charges against him. The government saw fit to appoint a special committee to deal with those charges and also to study the best ways of marketing wheat. That committee sat and looked into the various charges that were made against the head of the wheat board. After the hearing of witnesses a report was drawn up with reference to those charges. I remember that the adoption of that report was moved by the man who made the charges, namely, the leader of the opposition, so that he must have been satisfied that his accusations against Mr. Murray had not been proved.

With regard to the marketing of wheat, we as a committee did not feel that we were in a position to investigate and bring in a report as to the best method. We came to that decision for several reasons. We could not go to England, to Australia, to the Argentine and elsewhere to examine the systems in operation there and decide whether they were applicable to our Canadian situation. Another reason was found in the constitution of the committee. Some of its members, being Liberals, believed in the Liberal policy of marketing wheat: "Let the world know we have wheat to sell at a fair price." Others, who belonged to the Conservative party, apparently thought the best way to sell was: "Set a price and make the world pay that price before they can get our wheat." Also on the committee were some of our Cooperative Commonwealth Federation friends, who suggested, "Let us take over all elevators and boats and the marketing of our wheat all over the world, and let us have our agents who will carry on that marketing business." I presume it would be a socialistic form of marketing wheat. There were those who believed in a one hundred per cent pool, those who believed in a compulsory pool, and those who believed in the open marketing of wheat. With all these divergent views it was impossible for us to come to a definite decision, and we therefore suggested that a royal commission should be appointed to look into the whole matter, and advised the government accordingly. A commission was then appointed, in the person of Mr. Justice Turgeon, and the investigation is still in progress. I held, and I am still of the opinion, that the government made a mistake when it altered the marketing of wheat in the absence of a report from that commission. I submit that the board should have been allowed to function until such time as the commission brought in its report. I do not think that the price of wheat should have been raised until that time. The minimum payment, or whatever you choose to call it, was 87½ cents and it should have remained at that level until the submission of the report by the royal commission. I do not believe that the marketing of wheat as it was carried on under that board should have been changed in any respect until the commission gave its report. I may be wrong, but that is the view I expressed at home before coming here and it is the view I hold now.

The amendment which has been moved to the motion before the house expresses regret that the government rendered the Canadian Wheat Board Act of 1935 inoperative in its application to the 1936 wheat crop. So far as that is concerned, I suggest that the wheat board was not altogether inactive; at any rate its inactivity with regard to the 1936 crop helped the farmers of the west. It helped in the marketing of the 1936 crop because when the crop began to come on the market the wheat board did not press for sale of the old crop which it had on its hands. In that way it kept the 1936 crop from becoming a burden on the market and forcing prices down. For a considerable time the wheat board refrained from selling wheat and therefore did help in the marketing of the 1936 crop.

If I were in the house—I do not expect to be here when the vote is taken—I should feel obliged to vote for the amendment. I will say this, however. As far as this motion is concerned, it does not represent, to me at any rate, a loss of confidence in the government. I still have confidence in the government and I believe that it will do what is right with respect to many other matters. This particular question may be one of the things in respect to which I differ from the government, but that is to be expected in human affairs. People are apt to differ in many ways but in this respect only do I differ from the government so far as its wheat policy is concerned.

Mr. HARRY LEADER (Portage la Prairie): In rising to speak to the question before the house I intend to be as brief as possible having regard to the importance of the subject. By way of introduction I may observe that I have been a producer of wheat all my life and therefore I should know something about the production end of the business. And having operated a public elevator and bought and sold wheat in the grain trade I think I should know something of the selling end of it. In addition to that I was selected as a member of the special committee last year which inquired into the marketing of wheat. But what is of more importance to me is that this is a vital question to my constituents.

I believe it was the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) who pointed out yesterday that there had been altogether too much politics in connection with the marketing of wheat. With that statement I heartily agree. Wheat is the most important food of all the nations of the world and is the very lifeblood of the farmers of western Canada. It seems to me therefore that we should get away from the political aspect in the marketing of wheat and try to get together to see if we cannot decide on a policy which will be in the interests not only of the wheat producers but of all the people of Canada. I regret therefore that there is a political side to this great question.

I suggest however that politics is not altogether confined to one party; I believe we have it more or less in all parties. In my opinion the Conservatives have seized upon this opportunity to make political capital out of the wheat question and they must be content if we judge them by their actions when they had responsibility. It is quite easy to offer criticism when you have no responsibility, and that is what has been done by my genial friend for whom I have much respect, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley).

Politicians have the inclination when they have not the opportunity, and very often when they have the opportunity they have not the inclination. When I was out on the farm a few years ago I wondered why our government had not made an attempt to get our money on a parity with the English pound. Britain was our market; that was where we had to sell our products; and in 1932 when the price of wheat reached the lowest point on the Liverpool market in over 400 years; and when it was selling in Fort William at a little over 38 cents per bushel, we were selling that wheat in the markets of Great Britain when the English pound was worth only $3.60 compared with a normal value of almost $5—$4.86 and a fraction to be exact. That was a serious handicap and the result was a very small price for our farm products. It struck me at that time that something should be done, and I remember picking up our family bible, which was the Winnipeg Free Press, in which I noticed on the financial page a double column article giving a speech made by Senator Sharpe in the Senate of Canada. The remarks reported in that article were made by a supporter of the then Conservative government, and they were interesting to me because it is so unusual for the supporter of a government to criticize the powers that be. I should like to read an extract from Senator Sharpe's speech. It will be found in the debates of the senate of November 24, 1932 at page 178:

> I cannot believe that the Prime Minister understands the real condition of the people. Our farmers are facing ruin because of the disparity between buying and selling prices. The British pound is now at $3.60, a discount of 25 per cent. If we went off the gold standard and brought our currency to the level of the British pound the result undoubtedly would be an increase of from 12 cents to 15 cents a bushel in the price of wheat; we should get $20 more for a 1,200 pound steer, and butter, cheese, eggs, pork and all other farm products would command higher figures. Virtually all our important competitors in agricultural products throughout the world, except the United States, have gone off the gold standard.

[Mr. Leader.]

I believe it was the following year that President Roosevelt of the United States decided to desert the gold standard, and thereby Canada's money was brought to a parity with the British pound. But it was only through the action of the President of the United States that this came about. Judging by events taking place at that time, if the Conservative party were in power in Canada at the present time the British pound would still be worth only $3.60 to the Canadian producer.

Senator Sharpe went on to say:

If we were tied up to the British pound—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I must remind the hon. member that it is not permitted to quote here a speech made in another house.

Mr. LEADER: Well, I shall abide by the rules, but I am sorry, because it is very interesting.

Mr. STEVENS: Quote the Free Press.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Was it not made outside of the senate?

Mr. LEADER: With this reference I will conclude. Senator Sharpe declared, according to the Free Press report, that $125,000,000 was lost to the producers in Canada in 1932 in selling their products on the British market on account of the difference in exchange.

I am sorry that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) is not in his seat to-day; he was prime minister at the time. I am sure he would agree it is a fair statement that he did not place our money on a par with the British pound because he thought it would ruin Canada's credit, and as usual the farmers of western Canada paid the price.

I want to compare the actions of the former wheat board under Mr. McFarland with the actions under the present manager, Mr. Murray. Mr. McFarland's policy was to stabilize the market, to hold for a higher price. I cannot understand his attitude in view of the experience we had under the pooling system, because that is exactly what the pool did, and it proved disastrous. Our customers were not going to pay any more than they had to, and to hold a gun to the head of our best customer, demanding a higher price, was a disastrous policy. That, however, is exactly what the pool did, and Mr. McFarland, after all that experience, adopted the same policy. When Mr. Murray was made manager of the wheat board he adopted the opposite policy; he assured our customers that there was Canadian wheat for sale every day at the market price. Thus he won their confidence. Between the two I have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Murray's policy is the better.

The fact that he sold that huge surplus is the greatest factor in the better price prevailing at the present time. There are other factors I know, but buyers know that Canada has got rid of that huge surplus and it will not come into competition with the crop that we hope to produce this year.

It seems to me that the present wheat board is going out of business. I can come to no other conclusion. But the farmers of western Canada are not going to give up the fight they have made for twenty-five years for a better marketing policy, and if this wheat board goes out of business something else will have to take its place. I made that statement in Winnipeg this year at the annual meeting of the pool elevator companies of Manitoba. They asked me to say something and I did so very hesitantly, because at that time the government was not in very good repute with the Manitoba pool elevator companies. I spoke of course without assuming any responsibility except for myself. I said that I believed the government's action was wrong, that I felt that the wheat board was going out of business and that we should rebuild on the foundations of the old wheat pool another selling agency. I told them that we have in Canada two farmer organizations dealing in wheat, the pool elevator companies and the United Grain Growers' Grain Company. The latter company, although owned by the farmers, is a commercial institution pure and simple, yet it is regarded by the people of eastern Canada as a farmers' organization; therefore they say to us: You people in western Canada do not know what you want; you have got two farmer organizations out there and cannot agree among yourselves; there is cutthroat competition. And it is the truth. I suggested that the United Grain Growers' Grain Company and the western pool elevator companies get together and prove to eastern Canada and to ourselves that we have a policy, that we can cooperate to sell our products on the world markets, assuring our customers that we have a good product for sale and are willing to sell it at the market price. I took the same attitude at the convention of the United Farmers of Manitoba at Neepawa. I told them the same story and I am telling it to the house to-day, because I want the house to know that I am consistent. At their annual meeting held in Calgary on January 20 the United Farmers of Alberta instructed their executive to study the possibility of a merger between the pool elevator system and the Grain Growers' Grain Company.

There has been a good deal said in regard to resolutions passed at meetings of farmers in the west. Some of the resolutions referred to were stereotyped, some were different, some could not be vouched for, others were suspicious, and they were rather up in the air in general. But I hold in my hand a resolution passed at the convention of the United Farmers of Manitoba at Neepawa last fall, which I should like to read to the house:

> Wheat marketing: In considering the matter of wheat marketing we discover a very wide spread for opportunity to market western wheat under a dominion grain board. This view, which prevailed almost if not quite unanimously among our delegates, is expressed in the following resolution:
> Whereas the opinion prevails almost universally among producers of grain that the operations of a grain board in Canada may prove in future of very great practical value;
>
> And whereas we are convinced that the grain board should operate regardless of the market price of wheat;
> Therefore the United Farmers of Manitoba puts itself on record as urging that the wheat board set up last year be retained in operation, that it function independently of the figure at which the market price stands, and that thus there be secured to the farmers the privilege of placing their wheat with the board at any time.

That is the resolution passed by men and women who are engaged in this business of producing wheat. I was present at the convention and I voted for the resolution.

The government must take full responsibility for their action in changing the Canadian Wheat Board Act. They did not consult me, therefore I have to make my stand clear. I intend to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. The amendment is regarded by some as a vote of want of confidence in the government. I do not regard it as such. I still have confidence in the government, but I do not believe in the course they took in regard to this measure. I do not believe it was justified; I do not believe it was in the best interests of my constituents, and Mr. Speaker, my constituents come first.

Mr. W. A. TUCKER (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the question as it has been placed before the house by a member of the official opposition, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley), the action of the government is being criticized because it is said to be legally unsound. The right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), who I suppose speaks for the opposition, concluded his remarks with this statement, appearing at page 1870 of Hansard:

> The real issue is whether hon. members are prepared to stand in their places and say that they approve of the executive making a statute inoperative when there is no power or authority so to do.

I presume we may take it that the right hon. gentleman was speaking of the true intent of this motion, so in effect he said that anyone who voted for this motion would be declaring that the government acted illegally in the course it took; that it is not a question of whether the government's action was right or wrong or whether or not it was justified. The straight charge is made that the government had no power to do what it did, and this parliament is asked to criticize the government for that reason.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. TUCKER: If that is the issue upon which we must vote, every hon. member should carefully consider the situation, and I have endeavoured to do so. I must admit that when I heard the first report of the government's action I was inclined to take the position that the government had no legal power to do what they did. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, even to-day I am inclined to doubt whether they had such legal power, but I am prepared to take this position: I recognize that in this house we have in the person of the right hon. leader of the opposition a lawyer of very high standing in this country, and that his opinion is entitled to a great deal of consideration and respect. I also realize, however, that advising the government we have a lawyer of equal standing in the country whose opinion is entitled to the same consideration and respect. I refer to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), and I take it that he advised the government in this matter. I have no doubt that the government would not have taken this action if they had not been advised by the Minister of Justice and the law officers of the crown that they had a legal right to do so.

Faced with that situation, with the leader of the opposition giving it as his opinion that the government had no legal right to take that action, and with the opinion which I must assume has been given by the Minister of Justice that the government had a legal right to take the course that was taken, what am I to do, as an ordinary and rather young member of the legal profession sitting in this house? I must bear in mind the debates which took place in connection with the so-called new deal legislation of the last administration, which I followed closely. At that time the present right hon. leader of the opposition was positive that the legislation he was introducing was intra vires of this parliament and so would receive the approval of the judicial committee of the privy council. At the same time the present Minister of Justice was very doubtful whether those acts were within the power of this parliament. What was the opinion of the highest judicial authority in the British Empire? Right along in its decisions as to whether those acts were intra vires or not it upheld the opinion of the Minister of Justice as against that of the right hon. leader of the opposition. How does that affect me in judging which opinion, in the present case, is likely to be upheld by the highest court of this empire? I must say that under the circumstances I am forced to take the position that, until something different has been proved, I can follow the opinion of the Minister of Justice with more confidence than that of the leader of the opposition.

But there is something else I think should be mentioned as well. We know that the wheat pool of western Canada has become a powerful organization, retaining some of the best lawyers in the west. We know that the suggestion was made at once that the government had no legal power to pass the order in council in question. I confidently expected that if the wheat pool held that opinion they would immediately challenge the action of the government in the courts, as they had a right to do. They could have brought an action or made application for a mandamus forcing the wheat board to accept wheat as they alleged it was required to do under the wheat board act. I waited, confidently expecting the pool to back up their statements by an action to test the validity of their opinion. After all, Mr. Speaker, we who are lawyers are hesitant about being over sure as to the interpretation of a statute. We are inclined to let the courts express opinions rather than state our own with too much certainty ahead of time and, as I say, I confidently expected that the position of the government would be challenged in the courts at once. I waited day after day and week after week, but when the most powerful organization in western Canada which was vitally interested in the matter, did not see fit to resort to the courts I must confess in all sincerity that I began to have doubts as to the soundness of my own opinion that the government had acted without legal authority.

That is my position. At the time the government made this decision I thought they had acted without legal authority, as the leader of the opposition said. When no action was taken by the wheat pool I began to have my doubts. Then when I thought the situation over and considered the history of the two men whose opinions I should value, I had further doubts, so that I am in this position: I am asked by the official opposition to vote against the government because they did something without legal authority, illegally, but to-day the whole matter is in doubt. No one can say with any assurance that the action was legal or illegal, so in effect the official opposition want the members of this house to vote against the government before they have proved their case.

That is the legal point of view, and I think that is a fair attitude to take. If they want us to find the government guilty, let them prove their case. Unsupported statements are not sufficient before a court of law, and they should not be sufficient before this parliament. That is the bare legal ground, and the right hon. leader of the opposition has placed the matter on that ground. I do not think that is altogether sufficient for this house, however, and for a few moments I should like to refer to the effect of this amendment. What was the proper thing for the government to do last fall. Well, the question may be considered from many angles, but this was my attitude: Having set up a royal commission to investigate the whole question I felt that the government should not have made any change in the operation of the act until that commission had reported. But there was another point to be considered. Every farmer in western Canada, especially those who believed in cooperation, wanted to see the wheat board get a fair chance. Would the wheat board have had a fair chance if the initial price had been set at 87½ cents a bushel? I noticed that the hon. gentleman who introduced this amendment did not mention what initial price he would have liked the government to set. I take it that he would have liked the government to continue the wheat board, setting the initial price at 87½ cents. He has not said differently; the official opposition have not said differently, so I take it that is their attitude.

What would have been the effect if that had been done? Well, the other night the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) in effect said this: Considering the attitude of those who believed in the wheat board and who wanted it to have a fair trial, we realized that if we had continued the wheat board as in the previous year and set a price of 87½ cents, very few people would have delivered wheat to the board. There is no doubt about that being correct, because the price on the open market was very much higher than 87½ cents. Very few people would have delivered to the wheat board. The expenses of running the wheat board would have come out of the small amount of wheat delivered to it. Those who wished to destroy the board would have been able to come to parliament the following session and say the people in western Canada do not want the wheat board because they did not deliver to it, and therefore we should do away with it. The question is this: Who is the greater friend of the wheat board, the man who is ready to give it a chance or the man who pretends to give it a chance, under conditions that he knows will cause it to be destroyed? That is something for the people of Canada to consider.

We have to be fair about this matter. I heard someone say—not loudly, but I was just able to hear it—

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): I will say it loudly.

Mr. TUCKER: I hoped the hon. member would.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): In setting a ninety cent conditional figure a situation was created under which absolutely no wheat would be delivered to the board. They had no opportunity, even if they so desired.

Mr. TUCKER: That is just my point. The government prevented a situation developing whereby the farmers would have had the right to deliver to the wheat board, knowing that they would not do so as would have been the case if the price were left at the old figure of 87½ cents. Very few would have done it. The figures were given by the Minister of Agriculture. In the time they could have delivered to the wheat board, 38,000,000 bushels were marketed and only 600,000 bushels were actually delivered to the board.

Then we have the proof from the people who should know most about it, namely the wheat pools themselves. What is their opinion about it? I should like to place it before the house, because we want to be fair. This is the considered statement of the executives of the three Canadian wheat pools, as issued on July 6. Here is what they said:

> If the minimum price for wheat is set below the futures market price, the Canadian wheat board might be crippled, if not destroyed—

Is that what my hon. friend wants?

> —as farmers after the experience of the present crop year would be reluctant to deliver their wheat to the board if they could secure a higher price on the open market.

That is the opinion of the wheat pool officials themselves. They believed that if the government had permitted delivery to the wheat board at an initial price of 87½ cents it might have destroyed the wheat board. Will anybody stand here and vote for that sort of thing, while pretending he is supporting the wheat board and the wheat board idea?

But I am asked, "What attitude did you take in the country"? My answer is that I tried to take the attitude in the country that I thought was the right one. The proper idea, it seemed to me, should be for the present to continue the wheat board in operation. The only chance in the world it had to get a fair trial was to set its price sufficiently high that the farmer would feel able to deliver to it. I advocated that the initial price should be $1.01, which was slightly under the existing market price at that time. I figured that on that basis the farmer would deliver in reasonable quantities to the wheat board, and in that way the board would be given a fair chance. Again, on that basis, it seemed to me, the government would not stand to lose much. I hoped the government would take that attitude, and made representations accordingly. They decided, however, not to take that stand—and mind you, Mr. Speaker, if they did not see fit to set the price high enough to give the wheat board a chance, it was better to take the attitude they did take. Anybody who says he prefers to see the wheat board continue, while setting a price of 87½ cents, is voting for something which in the words of the wheat pool officials themselves, might have killed the wheat board. I tried to take a consistent attitude. I said the price should be set high enough so that the wheat board should have a chance, and made representations accordingly. When the government decided it would not do that I expressed my disappointment. If that is a crime, if it is a crime to say one is disappointed in the attitude of a government on a specific question, then I am guilty of it. But—

Mr. DUNNING: That is a virtue.

Mr. TUCKER: Probably I have been guilty of it more than once. However, to say that I am disappointed in some action of the government, and to say it not only to the country but on the floor of the house, is entirely different from saying that I am going to vote lack of confidence in the government. Ever since there has been a Liberal government in Canada and ever since I have taken an interest in public affairs, I would have liked to see those Liberal governments cut the tariff to a point a good deal lower than it was at the moment. But government in Canada is a matter of compromise. Just because it does not go as far as one would like to see it go, should one throw out people who are going farthest in your direction in order to bring in others who will not go any distance in your direction? That is the question one must answer.

Mr. THORSON: Or will go in the wrong direction.

Mr. TUCKER: Yes. The hon. member is certainly not referring to the Liberal party when he makes that observation.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): He would not admit it if he were.

Mr. TUCKER: In regard to the attitude taken that we might have lost some money, may I say, in passing, and by way of putting myself on record, that I think no harm would have been done by setting the price at $1.01. That is only my opinion. In justice to the western farmers I feel a reasonable price should be fixed or ensured for our wheat production. It is my view that when western Canada has come through such hard times and has suffered a succession of crop failures or poor crops that last year the government might very well have set an initial price at $1.01, so that those farmers who wished so to do could have delivered to the wheat board and obtained some benefit from any subsequent rise in price.

In that connection however there is something I should like to draw to the attention of hon. members. There seems to be the idea that if the wheat board had been permitted to operate, the grain exchange or the grain dealers would not have got the wheat delivered to the wheat board. May I invite your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that one of the first things Mr. McFarland did, as head of the wheat authority set up by the last administration, was to force the pools to close their direct selling agencies in Europe and to deal through that very grain exchange, through the established selling agencies. And so last year, had the wheat board been taking the delivery of wheat from the 1936 crop, under the specific direction of the last parliament in the wheat board act, that wheat would have had to be sold through established channels to the grain trader members of the grain exchange, and the grain exchange would have got just as much of it as it has already got. That is something which should not be overlooked.

Then, suppose wheat had been delivered to the wheat board: under that condition they would have had to turn round and sell it on the grain exchange through established channels. What would have been the effect? They were supposed to sell their wheat in an orderly fashion. The members of the grain exchange would have been able to buy it up and if they had thereby gambled successfully they would have made their half million dollars which the leader of the opposition mentioned the other day. The only thing was that it would have gone from the farmer to the wheat board and from it to the grain exchange, instead of direct from the farmer to the grain exchange. Is that something to raise an issue about? Is there much difference in that? I am asking hon. members that question.

Then, there is the question whether or not the farmers of western Canada, the primary producers, are entitled to some consideration under our present economic set-up. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) gives it as his opinion that the farmers in western Canada are entitled to no subsidy, no protection, nothing of that sort. I would say to him that if it were within the realm of pracical politics to do away with tariffs and subsidies, then the wheat farmer of western Canada would have to take his chance with the rest and would be willing to do so. But who in parliament will say that to-day that is within the realm of practical politics? Who will stand in his place and say there is any chance of our doing away with tariffs, within the lifetime of any hon. member? We know that a certain measure of protection for the secondary industries of this country is a permanent part of our fiscal set-up. It has not been quite so high under the Liberals as it has been under the Tories, thank goodness. I pointed out recently that in 1931 in one year the tariff subsidies had cost the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta a total of $54,925,000. If that should be taken as a normal year, in six years the cost to the three prairie provinces of tariff subsidies to protect our secondary industries would total $329,552,000. Through failure to place our money on the same basis as Australia during those years the prairie provinces lost another $229,000,000 in the selling price of their wheat alone, so that the total loss to western Canada under these items was $558,000,000. Then somebody says that the western farmer is not entitled to a fixed price for his wheat, sufficient to ensure him a fair standard of living which might cost the government half a million, a million or even ten million dollars. That is the situation as it appears to a lot of people in western Canada and as it appears to myself. I say: Go as far as you can in lowering tariffs, go as far as our party is willing to go—goodness knows I should like to see them go farther than they have gone yet—and when you have gone that far, in justice to those who are engaged in our primary industries, give them some compensation for the loss they suffer because of that tariff policy. That is only just.

We are asked to vote non-confidence in the government. Is it better for the farmers to have wheat selling at $1.31 with marketing machinery not quite as perfect as it might be, than to have the price forced down to 50 cents per bushel through your trade policies and have the most wonderful marketing machinery that could be devised by the mind of man? We are asked to vote non-confidence in this Liberal government, but what is the record? I predicted in 1930 at more than one of the election campaign meetings that if the Tory government got into power and carried out its tariff policies, there would be reprisals, quotas and so on on the part of countries with which we refused to trade. I told my listeners that as a natural result wheat would pile up in this country until the price dropped to 25 cents a bushel. I was fortunate, or perhaps lucky, in 1935 when I again made a prediction that has already almost come true that if the Liberal party came into power and the tariff was lowered so that we could sell our wheat in the markets of the world, inside of two years wheat would be back to $1.25 per bushel. What does the record show?

In 1926 there was grown in this country 407,000,000 bushels of wheat, in round figures. In 1927 the crop totalled 479,000,000 bushels and in 1928, 566,000,000 bushels. What was the carry-over after such large crops? On July 31, 1929, the carry-over was only 104,383,000 bushels. In 1929 the crop totalled 304,520,000 bushels. In four years while the Liberals were in office there was a crop of 1,758,000,000 bushels. The carry-over on July 31, 1930, was just 111,094,000 bushels. What is the history of the time the Conservative government was in power? We find that in 1931 the crop totalled 321,000,000 bushels, in round figures. In 1932 it totalled 443,000,000 bushels; in 1933, 281,000,000 bushels, and in 1934, 275,000,000 bushels. In other words, in 1931 to 1934 inclusive the total crop of wheat amounted to 1,322,000,000 bushels. Even with those comparatively small crops the carry-over had increased to 203,000,000 bushels as at July 31, 1935. During these four years of Conservative administration there was 449,000,000 bushels less wheat grown in this country than the four years of Liberal administration, but the carry-over had increased by 92,000,000 bushels. Can anyone say that there is nothing in trade policies? What was the result? Prices responded accordingly. If enormous carry-overs are built up in this country, the inevitable result is that prices go down. When your trade policy is such that you can get rid of that carry-over and continue to show signs of getting rid of it year after year, prices go up.

This brings me to the last step. Is it not better for the farmers of this country when they do grow a crop to be able to get well over a dollar a bushel than to have a perfect wheat board operating and get only 35 or 40 cents a bushel? We have to get down to fundamentals. What is the situation? When the government announced its policy last year I suggested to some members of the wheat pool directorate that the pool was set up to carry on cooperative marketing. I told them that in the past they had been hampered due to the fact that when they wanted to make an initial payment they had to go to the banks to borrow the money and the banks insisted that they hedge their wheat. The purpose they had in mind, that of orderly marketing, was thus defeated. I told them that with the policy of this government of guaranteeing 87½ cents a bushel they could establish at once a voluntary pool and offer the farmers 80 cents a bushel as an initial payment. I told them they would not need to hedge their wheat, that they could once more get their pool going and if it was destined to be the success it should be, if they had confidence in it themselves now was the time to start it under such favourable circumstances, they would then have one year of successful marketing operations to take before the Turgeon grain commission.

Mr. DUNNING: They were guaranteed against loss.

Mr. TUCKER: As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) says, they were guaranteed against loss. That was a golden opportunity for the wheat pools of this country if they had seen their way clear to take advantage of it. With all due deference to eastern members, I must say that I have more confidence in western people when it comes to handling our wheat. It is their own work and they should know it intimately. I feel they are better able to do that than any grain board which might be appointed by the government. After all a grain board appointed by the national government would have to consider questions affecting eastern Canada as well as western Canada. It seems to me that we should try to handle our own business as much as possible. People might be placed upon that wheat board who would not be satisfactory to western Canada. I suggested that under the pool system they could see to it that the men they wanted were appointed. They could appoint whom they liked and they would thereby have control over their own business. They had their opportunity. That was laid before the wheat pools and their first answer was that they did not have time to set it in motion. There might have been something in that argument; it is unfortunate that the decision of the government was not made sooner. However on the basis of the government's decision, the other grain handling concerns in western Canada said to anybody who wanted to deliver wheat to them, "We will give you an advance of 80 cents per bushel on your wheat." I think the wheat pools should have been able to do just the same as these other grain marketing organizations. They are just as well organized and just as ably managed. But they also gave another reason. They said in effect, "We have been fighting for a wheat board, and if we start a voluntary pool going again it will be more or less an admission that we do not stand firmly for a wheat board." In that regard, I think, the executive of the wheat pool did not represent the real wishes of their people. Their members believe in cooperative marketing, not in state socialism. That is where this house is perhaps split. Do you believe in cooperation, in people handling their own business, or do you believe in placing it in the hands of the government and asking them to handle it for you? That is the situation.

I may have disagreed with things the government did at the time. But while I might disagree for the moment with some step that was taken, I believe they are moving in the right direction. I believe that there is a great opportunity, upon the basis of the policy the government have pursued so far, of setting cooperation in motion again. I hope the government will again guarantee a price during the coming crop year, so that the pool will have another opportunity to commence again the pooling of wheat and that the policy will be announced at an early enough date that it will not have to be said again that there is not time to get it in motion to handle this year's crop.

In conclusion, I am inclined perhaps more than some other members are to speak out, to criticize, when I do not agree with something. But there is this to be remembered. A man may give his whole life to the service of the people; he may be right ninety-nine times out of one hundred, but let him make one mistake and people will sometimes pay more attention to the one mistake than to the ninety-nine times he was right. That is a tendency which has caused many people to refuse to have anything to do with public life. This I bear in mind when considering the attitude I should take towards the present government: while there are certain directions in which I should like them to go further than they have; while sometimes I have not agreed with all they have done, I think they are moving a good deal further in the direction I would have them go than would conceivably be the case with the official opposition that moved this amendment, and so I have no hesitation in saying that I intend to vote against the amendment and to vote confidence in the present Liberal government.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to impede the passing of the motion that you, Mr. Speaker, do leave the chair; therefore I shall be brief. I am anxious to get along with the business of the ways and means committee. My task is rendered easier by the remarks of the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) to which we have just listened, because he developed a number of the points which I had it in mind to make.

First, I should like to point out that the address of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) on the amendment the other day did not call in question in the slightest degree the wisdom of the government's policy; it merely called in question the legality of the government's action. As to that legality, the hon. member for Rosthern has developed the obvious legal answer. I can only say on behalf of the government that in legal matters we are and must be guided by the opinion of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and the law officers of the crown, and with respect to the legality of the course taken there is no doubt whatever in the mind either of the Minister of Justice or of the law officers. I know, of course, that the leader of the opposition dealt with the legality, leaving it to his colleague the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) to speak with respect to the advisability. The reason is apparent. The leader of a great national party could not make an address having to do with the affairs of merely a section of the country from the standpoint of the advisability of the policy. He had to approach it on some broad, national ground, and the only such ground available to him was that of legality. However, he left the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and others quite free to develop their own sectional arguments with respect to the advisability of the policy followed, and of course the gentlemen concerned have done so.

I am not going to evade in the slightest degree the question of the soundness of the policy followed by the government; I am prepared to meet the issue of the soundness of the policy at the time it was determined. In saying that, Mr. Speaker, I feel conscious of my limitations. I am not a wheat expert like the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and some of the other hon. members who have spoken. I have only been dealing with wheat, growing it, buying it and selling it long enough to be sure of one thing, and that is that the man who projects his course upon an opinion as to what the price of wheat will be three months ahead is headed for disaster. It is easy to come into this house now and say how sure we were six months ago of what was going to happen in the wheat markets of the world to-day. I wonder whether the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar would not help those of us who have an interest in wheat by telling us what the market is going to be three months hence. If he and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle—who, I think, has some claim to knowledge with respect to the marketing of wheat, because he has been engaged in it as a farmer and to some extent as a merchant over a long period of years—were so wise last fall, will they not be good enough to tell us poor ignoramuses now what the price of wheat is going to be three months hence, six months hence? Is it going up or is it going down?

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, will the minister permit me—?

Mr. DUNNING: Why, surely. If I can get an answer to that question, it will mean a lot.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): If the evidence now were as plain that the price is going up as it was in July last that it was going up, I should be glad to give the minister the advice at once.

Mr. DUNNING: Surely that is begging the question.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): Not so far off.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a continuous problem.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): So was that.

Mr. DUNNING: Along the line of the argument advanced by my hon. friend—if his line of policy is to be followed—someone will have to predict what is going to be done three months hence. It is not sufficient merely to take action when the evidence is plain. You are not in this business for one day or one week. What faced the government of Canada last fall was that it was in the wheat business to a greater extent than any other organization in the world had ever been. Joseph in Egypt was a piker compared with the government of Canada. We had a very great volume of wheat, and who owned it? The people of Canada. They had taken delivery of it. They had paid a price for it, a price which was greater than the price which up to that time they had been able to obtain in the markets of the world when they went to sell it. The people of Canada were holding the bag for the farmers of western Canada. I am not quarrelling with the policy in that regard. In a national crisis such as was involved in relation to the wheat business it was necessary for this nation to take some action with regard to a national asset of such tremendous importance. But the people owned that wheat—nearly 300,000,000 bushels of it, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle indicated. There are two peculiar things about wheat. One is that wheat is ripening somewhere in the world all the time. The second is that the wheat that you did not eat last year you cannot, increasing your consumption, eat this year. With respect to some commodities a decrease in consumption during a period is followed by increased consumptive demand at some later period. It is not true of wheat. That people were deprived of wheat or did not eat it a year ago does not mean that they will eat twice or one and a half times as much this year. These are two important facts to bear in mind in connection with wheat.

The government had this enormous liability. It had another problem—which brings me to my second point. Another crop was coming along in western Canada, a crop which at that time and until its disposal was owned by the individual farmer producing it. It was in the highest national interest that the individual farmer who owned the growing crop of 1936 should be put in a position to get the best possible price for it. Who was the greatest competitor with that growing crop? The government of Canada, owning the vast quantity of wheat to which I have made reference. In the light of those circumstances what was the best policy to follow? To make provision for further increasing the load of wheat carried by the government, or so to handle that load as to give the farmers of western Canada the maximum possible opportunity of disposing of their new crop? The course the government took involved two or three major advantages of a national character, and some considerable advantages to the farmers of western Canada. I will deal with the latter first.

What was the advantage to the farmer of western Canada? First, the announcement of the government policy rendered utterly impossible bear raiding during the process of rush marketing. There was no possibility of organized bear speculation forcing down the price of wheat for the farmer's new crop. Why? Because the world had notice that the government of Canada was prepared to take delivery at any time the price was forced down to ninety cents. That was a degree of protection which the farmers of western Canada have never enjoyed during all the period of their marketing—never in the world. In consequence, for the first time during a period of free marketing, there was no attempt at a bear raid during the time of rush marketing of the 1936 crop. That was one advantage reaped by the farmers of western Canada. As the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) reminds me, the development of bear raiding was already apparent before we took action. It was plain to be seen.

What was the second point? The greatest competitor of the farmer of western Canada in the marketing of his 1936 crop was the wheat board holding these hundreds of millions of bushels of old wheat. Always in the past the size of the carry-over from the preceding crop has had a bearish price influence upon the new crop—always. The larger the carry-over of old wheat the more likelihood is there of successful bear raids on the price of new wheat. What happened? By the development of the government's policy, for the first time in the history of open market wheat trading, there was from the farmer's point of view no carry-over in competition with the marketing of his new wheat. Why was that? It was because the wheat board did not sell any old wheat in competition with the rush marketing by the farmer of wheat of the new crop. The government continued to hold back, as it had been holding back for years; it kept out of the farmer's way and left him a free rein to sell his 1936 crop without the bearish influence of any carry-over from the old year.

That, I believe, was a major service rendered by the people of all Canada to the people of western Canada, and the only reason that there is criticism to-day is that the gentlemen who are criticizing now have the advantage of hindsight, which, of course, in argument is converted into foresight. The price of wheat has gone up. It has gone up very largely because of the steady, persistent selling policy adopted as a result of this government's wheat policy. It has gone up largely by reason—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DUNNING: I should like to answer the question but I cannot hear it.

An hon. MEMBER: What put the price down?

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker) gave us several very sound reasons why the price went down in previous years, but I do not intend to be diverted from 1936 into previous years. I am discussing the amendment now before the house, which relates to the government's policy with respect to the marketing of wheat in 1936 as set forth in the order in council. In addition, we performed, by reason of this policy, a further great service to the farmers of western Canada, and without injuring the national well-being in so doing. The hon. member for Rosthern touched on it. For the first time in the history of marketing in western Canada cooperative marketing on the pool plan was made possible, insured against any loss on the part of the pools. Think what that means. We are all aware of the great disaster which overtook the pool marketing organizations in consequence of having made during one year a larger initial payment than they were afterwards able to realize from the wheat. We know that the provinces concerned, which undertook a part of the load resulting from that occurrence, became financially embarrassed. We know that subsequently the former government of Canada had to come to the rescue, and we know that because of that the tremendous load of wheat developed.

Now in 1936 for the first time the wheat pool could have said to all farmers, "Deliver your wheat to the pool; you will get 87½ cents as an initial payment and whatever else we may make out of the wheat as a result of its disposal in due course." I am not criticizing the pools for not taking that step; that is their business. Nor am I foolish enough to overlook the fact that they are one of the greatest business organizations in Canada, one of the most powerful in point of size of assets and control of volume of commodity—because it has been said repeatedly that the wheat pools control normally forty-seven per cent of the wheat. See what an opportunity was given by the government of Canada to the cooperative organization controlling forty-seven per cent of the wheat to operate a pool and make an initial payment without any fear of loss in so doing, because the government would come in and take delivery of the wheat at 87½ cents. Why that was not done remains a matter of policy with the pools themselves; they had a perfect right to make a decision. But I have a perfect right to point out that the policy of the government would have enabled the wheat pools to give to all of their customers all of the advantage, if any, which has come about by the increased price of wheat since that time and without any risk of loss to the pools, for the first time in the history of cooperative marketing in the west.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): When was that offer made to the pools on the part of the government?

Mr. DUNNING: No offer was made; the order in council itself constituted the offer.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): What was the date of it?

Mr. DUNNING: August 28, I believe. But it does not matter what the date was, the effect is just the same. Prior to that date every farmer marketing his wheat had a right to market with the board at 87½ cents initial payment. The extent to which he did so prior to that date was indicated by the Minister of Agriculture. There were 38,000,000 marketed and 600,000 delivered to the wheat board. Those figures constitute in my opinion the main reason why the pool organization decided not to continue, not to go ahead as a pooling organization on the same basis. I am not questioning their wisdom; that is an internal matter for themselves; but I do point out that they are very powerful organizations. If anything in Canada can be described as a truly big interest, then the western cooperative marketing organization engaged in the marketing of wheat can truly be described as a big interest—and I am not using that term in any critical or disrespectful sense. The wheat pools, with their expert knowledge gained by experience in this business, aided as they might have been by the advance knowledge of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, have some responsibilities. The government of Canada have many other responsibilities besides wheat. The cooperative organizations are organized specifically to deal with this problem, and when the government of Canada by order in council under the wheat board act, lays down a policy saying to these organizations: "Go out and market your wheat cooperatively; make an initial payment of 87½ cents a bushel, being insured against loss by the fact that the government of Canada will take delivery at that figure," it seems to me that the people of Canada are supporting in a very fair way the cooperative marketing of wheat in western Canada.

I think there is nothing further I wish to say, except that, as one who believes in cooperative marketing and not state socialism,

I believe that the government of Canada on behalf of the people of Canada should extend to wheat growers or anyone else the maximum assistance in the way of promoting self-help on the part of those directly interested. I believe that the order in council of last August was truly cooperative in the spirit of what I have just said. It represented a degree of cooperation on the part of the people of the whole of Canada with those who are joined together in an effort to market a commodity, and I doubt very much if we whose hearts are in the life of western Canada shall make any progress by attempting to follow the line of state socialism, by attempting to dragoon the whole of Canada into applying the principles of state socialism to the marketing of our chief product; because quite obviously if we insist on support for that we must be content to move in the direction of state socialism in the marketing of many other commodities as well as wheat. I believe that governmental assistance in the marketing of all these commodities can best be given by helping those who are engaged in the cooperative marketing of their own products to help themselves.

Mr. W. G. WEIR (Macdonald): I am one of those who rather appreciate the amendment moved by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley). I say so for this reason—and I offer this as a criticism of the government: I do not think the story of the reasons for the action that was taken last fall with respect to wheat board legislation was sufficiently told. The debate on this amendment will do a good deal towards clarifying the situation with regard to the action taken when the government declared its wheat board policy of last year. This I think will be appreciated not only by hon. members of this house but by all who are particularly interested in the problem as far as western Canada is concerned.

I think it will be readily apparent now, if it was not before, that there is a wide diversity of opinion, not only in western Canada but throughout the whole dominion, as to the best policy for marketing wheat. During the past twenty odd years we have had in reality three different marketing systems. First we had the war-time wheat board, which was really set up for the purpose of keeping the price of wheat down. I think the opportunities and accomplishments of that board, under circumstances which were unique, have led a good many people to think that the same things can be done by a wheat board under very different circumstances. Many people to-day having those results in mind, think of another wheat board as being able to accomplish similar results.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Following that wheat board we had the voluntary pool. When the government of Canada and the provincial governments failed to implement the legislation creating the wheat board, farmer organizations in the three western provinces set about establishing a voluntary wheat pool. In that they were reasonably successful. It was followed a few years later by an attempt to create a one hundred per cent pool owned and controlled by the farmers' organizations. That attempt was not successful. Then we have had the open market system, sometimes called the speculative market, in which the grain is moved into the different positions by open market trading. May I digress for a moment with respect to the so-called speculative marketing of wheat? I cannot for the life of me see how we can get away from it. When you look at the market page of any newspaper you find quotations for products throughout the world, reflected in markets in different places. They have to come to some point where a price is established. Even last year when the crop which is at present being marketed was in its growing season Mr. McFarland made a forecast as to what in his judgment that crop would amount to. I am not going to argue whether his judgment was right or wrong, but in that sense he speculated as to the prospects of the crop. Unfortunately he was in error.

Crop prospects throughout the world, particularly with respect to wheat, have a definite effect on the prevailing price. When the different markets of the world have an opportunity of forming a judgment with respect to the conditions and requirements of the world these judgments converge in some quarter, and the recognized place is the Liverpool market. We have had argument as to whether a wheat board under government control, or the pool, farmer-owned and farmer-controlled if you like, is the more desirable to establish in this country. As far as I am concerned I subscribe to the policy of the farmers owning and controlling their own marketing organization, and I think our western Canadian farmers have an opportunity to establish for themselves a very creditable marketing organization. The only difference I see is that probably a government wheat board backed by the resources of the state might be stronger financially than would the farmers with their own resources alone. But in that regard there is the possibility that the government could assist to some extent a cooperative grain marketing organization.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle undoubtedly had something in view in moving this amendment, and no doubt it was that the prices of wheat and other grains have improved considerably since the beginning of the crop season. I am wondering where my hon. friend and those associated with him, particularly the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), were in 1932. Were they shedding the same crocodile tears at that time when the price was ranging in the neighbourhood of 30 cents a bushel? That is when something should have been said by way of protest, and an attempt made to establish a reasonable price. Here I wish to make a further observation with respect to government policy at that time. The government in its wisdom decided to adopt the policy of sound money, and I agree with the argument of previous speakers this afternoon that that policy had a decided influence on the prices received for the primary products of this country, particularly those sold on the English market.

I think all of us are inclined to reflect the opinions expressed in our home districts and communities, and give a good deal of thought to the observations that come to us from time to time. I am one of those who were obliged to attend one of the so-called pool protest meetings last year. But before I touch on that I should like to make one other observation. No doubt the policy of a government where a democracy is working properly should reflect in legislation what are the desires and wishes of the people. I do not mean that as supposed leaders of public thought we should not use every possible opportunity to guide that thought; but when we go home we listen to the observations and representations made by various individuals and organizations with respect to different questions. In regard to the marketing of wheat we find perhaps as many differences of opinion throughout the length and breadth of this country as there are upon any other question.

As I said a moment ago, I attended one of these wheat pool protest meetings, and this afternoon I intend to take here exactly the same position I took there.

May I go back just one step? This meeting I suppose was similar to those attended by other hon. gentlemen, protesting against the government's action in passing the order in council which prohibited the wheat boards accepting wheat unless the price dropped below 90 cents per bushel. But may I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in 1930, a few days after I accepted the nomination as candidate for the constituency of Macdonald, and when the wheat pool was probably at the height of its power, I attended a meeting in my home town attended by some four or five hundred people who were there to protest against the payments that the pool were making and to protest also against being tied to their contracts and forced to deliver further wheat to the pool organization.

In my district, as in other districts, opportunity was afforded to the growers to organize a one hundred per cent pool. That proposal was turned down. An attempt was made to establish a poultry marketing organization in western Canada, and it will be remembered that these same people turned that down very decidedly. So I think you will agree, Mr. Speaker, that sometimes because of the many divergencies of opinion it is very difficult to know exactly what is in the minds of people who are carrying on an agitation to promote certain marketing policies or, as a matter of fact, policies of any kind. Sometimes it is impossible to get enough of these people to put their names on the dotted line to bring about the desired result.

With regard to last year's crop, undoubtedly the early prospects were reasonably good. That must have been recognized by those who travelled through the west, particularly through the northern sections of Manitoba. Even Mr. McFarland, who is undoubtedly a man of considerable experience in the grain business, realized that fact. The observations I am about to make have been made before, but perhaps it will do no harm to repeat them. The government made no change in the marketing policy of the board during the first twenty-seven days of this marketing season; in other words the board was free to accept wheat at the initial payment of 87½ cents a bushel. During that period, with a guaranteed price of 87½ cents and an opportunity provided to deliver to the board and to participate in any increased price, the board received only one and a half per cent of the deliveries made.

Going a step further and referring to the crop of 1935-36, when the price of wheat was above the board's price only forty-seven per cent of the elevator deliveries were sold to the board; but when the price fell below the board's price sales to the board increased to one hundred and forty per cent of the deliveries to the elevators. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that when a board is so uncertain what its deliveries and what its opportunities for selling that wheat will be, its opportunity to accomplish results that might be comparable with those obtained through open market operations or otherwise, is certainly very limited.

I have not been in this house very long Mr. Speaker, I admit, but I have been here long enough to learn to recognize the realities of a situation. Hon. members opposite, particularly my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) and my hon. friend from Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), if they realize anything at all must appreciate that there is a very decided difference of opinion on the question of the government's being in the grain business at all. Undoubtedly that difference of opinion is reflected in this house, as well as throughout the entire dominion. What I wish to point out to my hon. friends, the reality which I should like them to face, is this: Even supposing it was possible to secure the support of every member from the four western provinces for a government wheat board, you would have only seventy-one members out of a house of two hundred and forty-five members. To me that is the practical side of the situation. I do not say that you would be able to get the support of every western member for such a proposal, but even if you could get all the members from the four western provinces to support a measure providing for the marketing of wheat through a government board you would have only the number I have indicated. That to me is the crux of the situation, and I can quite appreciate the position in which the government found themselves last fall when they attempted to deal with this matter.

If we are to adopt a policy of state assistance in the marketing of wheat I should like to ask my hon. friend who proposed this amendment how we can refuse the same assistance in the marketing of fish, live stock, lumber and other primary products that are sold on the markets of the world. So I say that if we are going to give assistance in the marketing of wheat we should consider all the factors involved, and particularly what the consequences may be in connection with the marketing of other commodities. Many hon. members of this house from eastern Canada have protested strongly against the prices being received for fish, dairy products and other commodities, and they have said very unkind things to me at least, and I am sure to other hon. gentlemen, with respect to the action of the government in regard to wheat.

There is another point that I think is of sufficient importance to be referred to at this time. Since 1930 this country has been accumulating large surpluses of wheat. At the same time we were coaxing and begging European countries to purchase additional quantities of Canadian wheat. Many protests have come to the government against their action in interfering, as the buyers claimed, with the normal flow of wheat; in other words, the buyers did not think they were being given the chance to buy Canadian wheat at a price that had any relation to open market competition. This year, when the condition is completely reversed and there is a possibility of greatly increased prices, I think that having in mind the desirability of selling our wheat in the export market, the government of necessity must take notice of that sentiment that exists abroad. They are in a very much better position to say to the European buyer, who, after all, is the most important factor in our established price structure, that with prices increasing the government has nothing whatever to do with the situation, and that they are buying their wheat in open competition on the same basis as all other buyers.

I believe we cannot emphasize too strongly the fact that Canada must maintain the goodwill of those who are purchasing wheat. Any action, particularly on the part of the government, which would in any way cause ill feeling and react to the detriment of this country, or any action by the government to maintain prices higher than they should be, would be a dangerous policy for us to follow.

Some hon. members have gone so far in their accusations as to say that the present chairman of the wheat board was a grain exchange man. It has been my privilege to know Mr. Murray for a considerable time. I believe I do not overstate it when I say that he was one of the men who many years ago recognized the possibility of pool marketing methods. He was one of the men who promoted in its early stages the pool idea among farmer organizations. He was one of those who helped to draft the first contract and, as I recall it, even went so far as to prepare the agreement used in the initial stages by the pools in their dealings with the elevator companies, whereby the elevator companies would handle pool grain on the specific basis set out in that agreement. For these reasons I submit that the reflections on Mr. Murray's ability and character have not been to the good; certainly they have not been fair to him. I suggest, on the other hand, that the house must recognize that Mr. Murray has done a good job in marketing wheat. Through his operations he has relieved the market of the surplus standing over, one which undoubtedly would have had a bad effect on the price for this year's crop.

When he took over in his official capacity the board held 298,000,000 bushels of wheat. He received a further 48,000,000 bushels, which meant that he had to handle over 346,000,000 bushels. That being so, and with a crop to be marketed, if he could get into a position where the carryover or surplus at the end of this crop year was down to reasonable proportions, a good deal of the credit must be due to his activities.

Many hon. members have criticized the actions of the government, and have suggested that it could have foretold what the price trend was going to be for this season's crop. May I place this observation before them: Even as late as the end of June Mr. McFarland made a forecast. At that time the size of our crop was by no means known—at least not definitely. Of course it was known that the United States crop had been somewhat damaged. May I point out, as was done this afternoon by the Minister of Finance, that we cannot limit our operations to a month-to-month policy or, if you like, to a three-month policy. There has to be a long range view taken of the situation. Had there been a normal crop in the United States last year, and a reasonable crop in Canada, one can readily appreciate the different circumstances that would have existed.

Through the board, I believe the government has recognized the position of the wheat farmers. We must give them credit for their action in at least this one respect, that they refrained from selling while the delivery season was at its height, thus leaving the market wide open for the farmers and giving them an opportunity to sell without government wheat board competition and as well with a guaranteed price of 87½ cents per bushel. One cannot help smiling at the reflections made by hon. gentlemen opposite and at their claims that everybody could have been sure that the price of wheat was going to go up. I had no such assurance personally, and I gave no advice. But with the sure knowledge these hon. gentlemen now claim to have had, certainly they could have made good fellows of themselves if they had gone out and urged their friends to hold their wheat, and buy futures. That might have been a good way of definitely guaranteeing re-election. However, if the price had gone the other way the results might not have been so good.

Turning to the amendment of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) I note that he was careful to draft it in a cute manner. It is in these words:

> This house regrets that the government rendered the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, inoperative in its application to the 1936 wheat crop.

In other words, he has attempted to limit the discussion to that particular phase of the question. He knows it is a want of confidence motion, and that those who support it declare themselves to be totally lacking in confidence in the policies of the government. May I say to him that I, too, regretted the action which the government took last year. I thought they had made a mistake. At the same time I am not prepared to say that to date all the government's policies have been wrong. His proposal is undoubtedly designed to place western members on the spot. In confining his amendment to one specific question he is attempting to limit discussion to that one phase of government policy.

I shall not attempt to say anything on the constitutional issue raised by the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). I believe his observations were effectively met this afternoon by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker). His explanation has been the clearest that has been given so far, and I, for one, am grateful for the contribution he has made.

As I have said, I regretted the action of the board at the time, but I must say that I am grateful to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle for moving the amendment, for by so doing he has forced, if you like, or has obliged, if you care to use that word, some ministers and some hon. members to come forward and tell their stories.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): They have not told it all, though.

Mr. WEIR: I say again I had hoped that the wheat board would operate, but the difficulty which presented itself in connection with establishing a price was one of the important factors which had to be taken into account. It is all very well for some hon. members to argue that a price should have been set sufficiently high to ensure that a considerable quantity of grain would be delivered to the board. May I say in that regard that if I understand anything about the marketing of grain and the establishing of a price, it would be necessary to do it at the beginning of a crop year. No one can deny that an initial payment of 87½ cents per bushel at the beginning of last year's season would have been considered a reasonable price at that time. I do not believe even the wheat pools, had they been functioning as formerly, would have set a higher initial payment. I doubt if many people in Canada were disposed seriously to urge the government to set a higher price at a point higher than 87½ cents per bushel, having regard to the future and the possibility of the state being obliged to make contributions if there were losses.

I regret the action which the government took at that time. I think they made a political blunder so far as western Canada is concerned. At the time I thought it was an error, but I recognized the facts of the situation. I say to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) who moved this amendment that the majority of the people in this country are not very sympathetic toward the government being in the grain business. That being so, all the strength that hon. members opposite can muster will not be sufficient. When the government of Canada goes into the wheat marketing business, it has to take into consideration the viewpoints of different parts of the country. If western Canada can claim the support of only 71 members out of 245, there is a situation which ought to be faced.

I am one of those who appreciate what the hon. member (Mr. Perley) has done. He knows perfectly well that his amendment is a want of confidence motion. Had he not made it a want of confidence motion as applied to the entire policy of the government I should have been inclined to support him. I would not trade the wheat marketing policy of this government for the wheat marketing policy of its predecessors in office.

Mr. C. R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to place a few words on record in regard to the stand I took in my own riding with reference to the continuation of the Canadian wheat board. The amendment before the house reads:

> This house regrets that the government rendered the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, inoperative in its application to the 1936 wheat crop.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) who moved that amendment put the word "regrets" in it, but I doubt very much whether his regrets are as substantial as he would like to make them appear.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Speak for yourself.

Mr. McINTOSH: I'm doing that. It has been said that some men are born great, that others aspire to greatness while others have greatness thrust upon them. I should like to parody these statements and say that some men are born destructive, others aspire to destruction while others have the methods and policies of destruction thrust upon them. As I read this amendment, it is purely destructive. I think the one outstanding idea in the back of the head of the hon. member who moved the amendment was to divide the western members of this house on this wheat board issue—divide and destroy. The hon. member is actually attempting to destroy the influence of the Liberal party in western Canada. His desire to put me on the spot does not make a bit of difference to me. I rather like to think that a member of the Conservative party thinks he can put me on the spot, and then gives me an opportunity to prove that he cannot.

I have no hesitation in saying that this amendment is a motion of want of confidence in everything the government has done since it came into office and in every policy and principle sponsored and accepted by the Liberal party. I feel sure that when this amendment is put to a vote it will not command any support worth speaking of on this side of the house.

Mr. McIVOR: Or on this side.

Mr. McINTOSH: There is no doubt that the vote will be overwhelmingly against the motion.

I was surprised the other day to hear the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) say that he opposed the policy of this government on the wheat board and supported this want of confidence motion. He argued that what had been done was unconstitutional and illegal. That does not come with very good grace from the leader of the party which opposed a report brought down in 1928 and again in 1929 by the industrial and international relations committee dealing with a matter of great social importance; that is, insurance against unemployment, sickness and invalidity. The view of the committee was that they should take the advice of the law officers of the crown in drawing up their report, and their final report was that this measure could be worked out only by following along the orbit of provincial jurisdiction. Hon. members of the Conservative party got up in this house and staged a debate opposing the report of the committee. They said the report was not sound, that the jurisdiction rested with the federal parliament.

But they did not stop at that. When they were in power between 1930 and 1935 they enacted legislation which in effect announced to the country that the federal jurisdiction was sufficient. Their position in this respect has been rendered untenable by the decision of the privy council, which has recently declared this legislation to be ultra vires. We are now back to where we were in 1928 and 1929. Eight or nine years have been thus wasted in inaugurating necessary social legislation, and I place the responsibility where it in a great degree belongs—on the present opposition in this House of Commons.

When that was their stand a few years ago in connection with social legislation of outstanding national importance, what must we say to them to-day when they tell us that the stand taken by this government on the wheat board is unconstitutional? Since the Conservative party and its leader were wrong before, I do not think we can go far astray if we conclude that they are wrong again. The stand which this government has taken is legal and constitutional—not illegal and unconstitutional as hon. members say. We have the opinion of the law officers of the crown, and not to follow out that opinion is only an excuse for delay and inactivity. It is said that for every action there is an equal and opposite reaction. There has been no equal and opposite reaction in a judicial way, in a constitutional way or in a legal way to the action taken by the government. That being the case up to the present time, I think I am on sound ground when I say that there is not much to the argument of the leader of the opposition that the stand of the government was unconstitutional. Yesterday the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) in discussing this question, made a few statements to which I should like to draw attention. He said:

> We are, and we always have been, in competition with the world.

I think he is correct in that statement. I do not think there is any doubt but that the world is the ultimate economic and industrial reality and that a country which does not fit its policies into the world as a whole will certainly not go very far in the race, nationally or internationally. The same applies to a party. If—and this statement cannot be challenged—the world in an economic and an industrial sense is ultimately a single reality, then to be effective a party's policies must be in accord as far as possible with that world entity or reality. To the degree in which that principle is carried out the policies of any party will be efficient and successful. I believe the Liberal party has always tried to recognize that objective, that its outlook is for world trade linked with national business established on a sound and progressive basis.

A little later the hon. member said:

> Other nations are protecting their industries by means of tariffs, quotas, subsidies, marketing boards and the like. All this is largely a development of the last twenty years.

So far as Canada is concerned, it has not been a development of the last twenty years. Our protective policies have been a development of the years since 1878. When in that year the people pronounced upon economic policies they pronounced in favour of high protection, and they have had just what they asked for, ever since that time. We talk a lot about freer trade and free trade. Yet even in 1930, when in western Canada the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) courageously told the people that if he were returned to power he would raise protection to a high level, thousands upon thousands of votes in every constituency in Saskatchewan and throughout the west were cast in support of that policy—which would almost lead me to the conclusion that if we are to have progressive trade policies the people themselves will have to take a more determined stand. As I have pointed out, protectionism has been a development not merely of the past twenty years but of the much longer period since confederation.

The hon. member for Lethbridge comes practically to the conclusion that since we have high protection in Canada—the Liberal party is trying to pare it down, but it is more easily raised than reduced—we should accept the other alternative of setting to work to nationalize the marketing of every primary product and adopting a system of state socialism. As far as I am concerned I could not accept a policy of that kind. Neither can the Liberal party.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Mr. Speaker, I never said at any time that we should have state socialism, nor have I advocated any such thing. The hon. member is giving his own conclusions, not mine.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am very happy to hear that, and I accept the hon. member's explanation. It was high tariffs instead.

Mr. LAWSON: It is not an explanation; it is a straight denial.

Mr. McINTOSH: All right. The hon. member went on to state that we had a price spreads inquiry from which, he inferred, practically no results flowed. I would draw his attention to the fact that, outside of the publicity which the inquiry gave to social and industrial conditions in Canada, it resulted in the passing of the Trade and Industry Commission Act, which was declared intra vires by the privy council.

Mr. THORSON: Only in part.

Mr. McINTOSH: Well, if only in part, it would go to show that the investigation was along the right lines, and that we might well add to that power of investigation and regulation, as we are doing in amending the Combines Investigation Act.

The hon. member further says:

> Canada has all too recklessly left her primary producers to look after themselves.

Is not self-preservation the first law of nature? My own opinion is that when it comes down to a vote on fiscal, industrial and financial policies, if the primary producers go wrong and vote for a protective policy, what can you do for them? Nothing. It is hard to assist a class of people who say one thing to-day and perhaps the opposite to-morrow.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Vote for a free trade government!

Mr. McINTOSH: You mean freer trade. The primary producers of this country must take a definite stand against high protection, and not do what has been done too often before in the last seventy years. They must nail their colours to the mast and say that they want more free trade, more exchange of commodities, and a policy in harmony with the fact that after all the world is the final economic entity that must be reckoned with.

I now pass on for a few moments to some statements made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell). At page 1879 of Hansard he stated that—

> Liberal candidates in Saskatchewan did tell the producers of western Canada that the wheat board system of marketing would not be endangered by the return of a Liberal government. That, I believe, all members of this house from western Canada will recollect.

As one member, I do not recollect it because I did not say it. I put my confidence in the Liberal party, its leaders and the people. I was satisfied that if the people returned the Liberal party to power without it having made too many promises or indefinite statements, the right type of policy, financial and industrial, would be inaugurated and a new era for the industrialist, the producer and consumer would result.

The hon. member made another statement which I should like to contradict. He said:

> . . . I stated over and over again that in my opinion steps should be taken by any government elected to open up the channels of trade, and that any steps taken in the opposite direction would have dire results upon our political economy.

I have always understood that the group to which the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar belongs is opposed to free and freer trade. They believe in policies of self-sufficiency, of narrow nationalism and state socialism, and they are absolutely opposed to international trade. I had to meet that issue in my own riding in 1935; I demolished those who took the opposite viewpoint, and I am ready to do it again.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Will the hon. member give his authority for stating that the group to which we belong is opposed to international trade? That is, will he quote the statement from our platform?

Mr. McINTOSH: It is not necessary. It is plastered all over your platform and characteristic of all your public utterances.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Over what?

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): He is trying to plaster it now.

Mr. McINTOSH: It is not necessary—the job is complete. I want to hurry on. I am astonished at the temerity of the hon. member in coming into this house and making assertions of that kind, when every member of his incoherent group, himself included, made statements of policy of a direct opposite nature. Further, the hon. member says:

> To my mind the preelection speeches of some at least of our prominent Liberal members were interpreted as promising a fire sale policy for Canadian wheat should a Liberal government be returned to power.

There was no suggestion whatever of anything in the nature of a fire sale of wheat so far as the North Battleford constituency was concerned. The people of that constituency knew precisely what legislation had been enacted and they inferred that the legislation setting up a wheat board meant that the board would continue. But as to any suggestion of a fire sale policy, I say emphatically that no such thing was discussed in my riding. There was nothing of that kind suggested in connection with the sale of wheat, and therefore this statement of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar is at variance with the facts.

An hon. MEMBER: As regards your constituency.

Mr. McINTOSH: That applies to the whole of western Canada.

Mr. DOUGLAS: You cannot speak for all western Canada.

Mr. McINTOSH: I can speak as well as you can and perhaps a little better. The hon. gentleman makes this further statement:

> To-day hon. members from western Canada sitting on the opposite side of the house have an opportunity of registering in this house the protests they made last August and September.

There is not very much in an argument of that kind. There is absolutely no reason why a member of parliament may not take a definite stand on any matter of government policy in his own riding without regarding it as incumbent upon him to come to Ottawa and re-hash the whole thing over again. I say, Mr. Speaker, there is no gumption in an argument of that kind; and if the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) tries to put me on the spot in that regard he is simply wasting his breath because I am delighted to stand here and answer him in his own coin. But if it comes to a question of any member's attitude on matters of policy, I can go back a little in history and tell the house what my stand has been on some important matters. I do not know where the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar stood in 1917 on one particular question, but I can assure him that at that time I opposed the iniquitous War-Time Elections Act. I opposed national conscription, and was practically alone in my opposition to it in Saskatchewan. As a newspaperman I stood alone.

Mr. SPENCE: Are you proud of it?

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes, I am; conscription was not necessary. Again, when the party opposite put through the gerrymander in Saskatchewan in 1933 I was the first member to go home and tell my people what had been done, and took a definite stand in my own riding in opposition to such a policy. With regard to the action of the government last summer, I should like to tell the house exactly what my position was at that particular time. When the government made its decision my own opinion was that they had made a great mistake, though I admit that the opposite view may, in time turn out to be a short range view and that from a long range point of view the decision of the government may prove to be the correct one. At any rate when the government made their decision—and they had a perfect right to decide the matter, for the people sent them here for that purpose—as the member for the North Battleford constituency I took the stand that as an emergency measure the wheat board should have been allowed to function for another year. I took the view that it should function as an emergency board, not as a permanent institution. Before the government made their decision there came to my office in North Battleford a telegram from the pool organization at Regina, as follows:

Regina, Sask.
Aug. 20, 1936.

C. R. McIntosh, M.P.
North Battleford, Sask.

Press dispatches in Leader Post this morning state that federal government has decided to allow minimum wheat price paid by wheat board to remain at 87½ cents basis one Northern Fort William according to report from well informed quarters. Dispatch ends quote Western Liberal members appear to be satisfied with the continuation of the old minimum price unquote. Our organization vitally interested amount initial payment and believe that should be set in relation to production cost which is substantially higher than amount indicated. Our board would appreciate your reaction on this statement.

Sask. Co-Op. Wheat Producers Ltd.

I have been in business in North Battleford for twenty-five years, and altogether apart from politics I have always supported the pool. As a public man, though not as a politician, I stood by them, and throughout that period of twenty-five years I have come in contact with the leading grain growers of the province as well as the leading officials of the pool. Our relations have been quite friendly and indeed we have been co-partners in the upbuilding of the province. So that the stand I took on this occasion was nothing new; in fact, I could not follow any other course and be consistent with my past action. If I had done anything else it would have been opposing the pool to no good purpose, and therefore when this telegram came I wired back—

An hon. MEMBER: What are you quoting from?

Mr. McINTOSH: I am quoting from a copy of my own newspaper, the North Battleford News; of course it cannot be contradicted. The telegram I sent in reply reads:

North Battleford, Sask.
August 20, 1936.

Sask. Co-Op. Wheat Producers Ltd.
Regina, Sask.

Wire fixed minimum wheat price received. Nothing final heard regarding decision federal government fix minimum price 87½ cents bushel. Am Western Liberal member and represent large farming population but do not "appear" nor am I satisfied with continuation old minimum price. Agree with your organization fixed minimum price should be higher and that an initial payment certainly should be set, possessing fair and definite relationship with cost of production. Production costs higher in north. Take stand fixed minimum should run from dollar ten to dollar fifteen cents bushel thus assuring farmers satisfactory initial payment.

Cameron McIntosh.

That was one step I took; I should like to put another on record. After that telegram had been dispatched, the decision of the government being far from satisfactory, a large mass meeting was held in North Battleford. It was quite spontaneous, for I saw no large bills advertising the meeting; the only bills I came across were very small ones of the dodger size.

An hon. MEMBER: Printed in your office?

Mr. McINTOSH: No, in my opponent's office. About four hundred persons, farmers and business men, attended the meeting, and the chairman was Mr. W. A. Campbell, manager of the Western Groceries.

It is only fair to say that that audience was made up of Liberals, Conservatives and those who supported policies of socialism and other isms of that kind. After the matter was discussed the meeting decided to put a resolution before the gathering and have it accepted. That resolution was unanimously, passed, handed to me and I wired it as quickly as possible to Hon. J. G. Gardiner, the Minister of Agriculture, coupling with it the following words:

Public meeting farmers and business men held here Saturday strongly protested government's announced wheat policy tantamount destruction wheat board because of failure to establish fixed minimum price guaranteeing cost production plus fair profit. Preferred treatment manufacturers compared with shabby consideration given agriculturists has aroused much resentment and bitter opposition. Personally consider government emergency policy far from satisfactory and would therefore respectfully urge immediate and serious consideration same.

Then the resolution follows:

Resolution unanimously endorsed by gathering approximately four hundred as follows:

"This meeting protests the action of the dominion government in discontinuing operation of the wheat board by leaving a stop loss price of 87½ cent per bushel basis No. 1 northern Fort William and prohibiting delivery to the board unless market closes at 90 cents per bushel or less.

"Therefore be it resolved that this meeting demand the federal government authorize wheat board to announce immediately a minimum price of $1.15 basis 1 northern Fort William, and further that this wheat board establish its own sales agencies with a view to marketing wheat direct to final purchasers, and further that this meeting requests C. R. McIntosh, M.P. to present this resolution and opinions expressed at this meeting to the government, using his influence to have same accepted by the government.

That was signed by myself.

That was the stand I took in my own constituency on that question. And my stand in that regard was nothing new, nothing strange. I have already said that for the twenty-four years preceding that date I had always done my best to support the pool when it could be done, not that I accepted their policies a hundred per cent but because as a business organization backed by the farmers it was desirable to give them support and strengthen their hands in the solution of the many problems confronting them.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Would the hon. member mind putting on record the answer he received to that wire?

Mr. McINTOSH: I have not the answer here, but it was that the government would give the matter its consideration, as asked by the meeting. I take it for granted that that is all that could be expected as an immediate answer to any such wire.

Before and after that meeting resolutions came in from all over the riding. I shall just mention a few that came, I shall not read them. They came from wheat pool committees at Maymont; Ruddell; Radisson; R.R. 2, North Battleford; Hafford; Brada; Redfield; Keatley; Krydor; Mullinger; Paradise Hill; Struan; Rabbit Lake; Belbutte; Bapaume; Bolney; Hatherleigh; St. Walburg; Cleeves; Whitkow; Medstead and Langham, and from the Radisson town council, the North Battleford board of trade, Rural Municipality No. 407 Round Hill, a public meeting in the town of Radisson, North Battleford rural municipality No. 437, Spiritwood rural municipality, Hamlin district farmers, Maymont district farmers, Borden district farmers, a mass meeting of Krydor farmers and Douglas rural municipality.

These are practically all the resolutions I received on the decision of the government. After the mass meeting in North Battleford and after the stand I took in my constituency, and after these resolutions were received, the farmers in the riding took it for granted that all was done that could be done, and since that time I have heard of very little opposition in that constituency. Everything done was done above-board, was reported in the press, and my own stand as a member was given to the people in such a way that I do not think there was much doubt as to where I stood in the entire matter.

In closing, you may ask what is to be my stand on the amendment before the house? It can be readily understood from what I have said. My stand will be to oppose the want of confidence resolution and to support the Prime Minister of this country and every member of the cabinet, and especially the Minister of Agriculture in his arduous duties, and to uphold the policy of the Liberal party as a policy which in the long run and even now must work out beneficially to the whole nation. The improvement in exports and imports, the prosperity which is evident on all sides, and the new encouragement that is being given to the people everywhere is I think complete proof that the trade and agricultural policies of the government are in line with its traditional policy of freer trade, getting into all the markets of the world and thereby giving the rank and file of this country purchasing power which is sure to bring prosperity.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Perley, Qu'Appelle), which was negatived on the following division:

Motion (Mr. Dunning) agreed to and the house went into committee of ways and means, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM TRADE AGREEMENT

The CHAIRMAN: Schedule IV.

Customs tariff—229. Soap, common or laundry: rate of duty, 50 cents per 100 pounds.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—230. Castile soap: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: Binding free entry; no change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—232. Glue, liquid, powdered or sheet, and gelatine, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 17½ per cent and 2 cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: Present rate bound; no change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—232c. Gelatine, edible: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 232d. Mucilage and adhesive paste: rate of duty, 15 per cent and 1½ cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: Reduction in rate.

Mr. STEWART: What is the reduction?

Mr. DUNNING: It was a combination rate previously, 17½ per cent as against Great Britain, plus 2 cents per pound. Under the amendment it will be 15 per cent and 1½ cents per pound.

Mr. STEWART: A very slight reduction.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—234. Perfumery, including toilet preparations, non-alcoholic, viz., hair oils, tooth and other powders and washes, pomatums, pastes and all other perfumed preparations, n.o.p., used for the hair, mouth or skin: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: A reduction in rate.

Mr. STEWART: What was the former rate?

Mr. DUNNING: Twenty per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—236. Surgical dressings, antiseptic or aseptic, including absorbent cotton, lint, lamb's wool, tow, jute, oakum, woven fabric of cotton weighing not more than seven and one-half pounds per one hundred square yards, whether imported singly or in combination one with another, but not stitched or otherwise manufactured; surgical trusses and suspensory bandages of all kinds; sanitary napkins, spinal braces and abdominal supports: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Mr. STEWART: Is that a reduction?

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in the rate on surgical dressings. Prior to the agreement it was 12½ per cent, and it is being made 10 per cent.

Mr. STEWART: What were the importations last year from Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: From the United Kingdom, $230,000 worth out of a total import value of $268,000.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—238a. Manufactures of celluloid, or of which celluloid is the component of chief value, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in the rate. Before the agreement the rate was 15 per cent and it is being reduced to 10 per cent. The total imports were valued at $389,000, of which only $21,000 came from the United Kingdom. It is felt that this is a field into which the United Kingdom may enter.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—240. Ultramarine blue, dry or in pulp; whiting or whitening; Paris white and gilders' whiting; blanc fixé; satin white: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change; binding free entry.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—241a. Litharge, other than for battery purposes: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—242. Dry red lead; orange mineral; antimony oxide, titanium oxide, and zinc oxide such as zinc white and lithopone; white pigments containing not less than 14 per cent by weight of titanium dioxide: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—243. Dry white lead: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in rate. Prior to the agreement, the rate as against Great Britain was 20 per cent and it is being reduced to 15 per cent. The imports were quite small, being valued at only $1,071 from all countries. The imports from the United Kingdom were very small.

Mr. HEAPS: I have noticed the reductions being made and I was glad to hear the minister say that in some cases they were very substantial as compared with the agreement of 1932. Could the minister give us the rates in effect when he introduced his budget in 1930? It may be a little difficult to make comparisons as between 1930, 1932 and 1937, as I understand that since 1930 certain items have been split up. I voted against the agreements of 1932 for the same reason that hon. members of the Liberal party voted against them. I felt that as between those agreements and the tariff which the Minister of Finance made effective by his budget of 1930, there was a great increase in the tariff rates. I was just wondering how much greater our tariff is at the present time than it was when the minister introduced what has commonly been called the Dunning budget, increasing the preference to Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: It is difficult to generalize, and it is particularly difficult to give a comparison of the rates affecting the different items. Since 1930 there have been between 400 and 500 additions to or alterations in the items in the tariff. I can tell my hon. friend that in connection with many items the rates provided for in the present agreement are below what was being charged on United States goods under the budget of May 1, 1930. However, that would be an inaccurate generalization if it were taken to be true all through. There are cases where it does not apply. While I think a great deal of the budget of 1930 and its proposals applied to conditions prevailing at that time, I would not say that in connection with every item I would be inclined to do the same thing in view of the conditions which apply in 1937. I have tried to view the matter objectively and deal specifically with each item in accordance with the conditions that prevail to-day, having regard to our trade situation.

My hon. friend must remember that in 1930 the United States came under our general tariff, whereas under the agreement of a year ago it automatically came under our intermediate tariff with respect to all its exports to this country. That is a consideration which must enter in relation to the tariff schedules we are now discussing, particularly in relation to the marginal aspects of the matter as between the British rate on the one hand, and the intermediate rate on the other. I can only suggest to my hon. friend that if on a particular item he is interested in knowing what the rate was in 1930, in some of my notes where the items are comparable in language and incidence to the item of 1930 I have the information, and shall be glad to give it when I have it. But there has been so complete a recasting of many of the items themselves, that comparison is impossible.

Mr. STEWART: The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps) has addressed to the minister a question which calls for a statement in addition to that which the minister has made. On the part of many hon. members there is an assumption that since 1930 the tariff has been raised all round the board. It was undoubtedly raised in 1930 and in 1931 in some instances, but as the minister says, a general statement like that cannot apply to the whole tariff, and I think he will agree with me that a very large number of items have been reduced since 1930 and a good many placed on the free list. I do not remember in which year the budget effected this change, but I know that a large number of items, particularly those coming from Great Britain, were placed on the free list. So, as the minister says, it is difficult to make a general statement applicable to the tariff as a whole: there have been increases and there have been reductions; items have been broken up and redistributed; some have been raised and some have been lowered. I think the minister will agree that that is a fair statement.

Mr. HEAPS: I think the minister's statement is eminently fair. I did not and could not expect him to have under his hand at the moment information about all the items to which I have referred. But as regards the larger items which Great Britain exports to Canada it is quite possible that the minister may have the information I have requested. What I have in mind at the moment is the textile schedules.

Mr. DUNNING: When we come to them.

Mr. HEAPS: When we come to them I hope the minister will be able to give the information to the house. A few moments ago the minister suggested that the British preference has been considerably reduced through the United States coming under the intermediate tariff.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, that depends on what I may call the datum point. The degree of British preference was reduced, of course, immediately the United States came under the intermediate tariff, but only by comparison with the degree of preference which existed immediately prior to that time. It would be equally difficult to make comparisons of the degree of preference in 1930 with the degree of preference to-day, for the reasons I have indicated.

Mr. HEAPS: That may be true, which shows how difficult it is to generalize on this question.

Mr. DUNNING: That is right.

Mr. HEAPS: But I am under the impression, perhaps wrongly, that the preferences granted under the 1930 budget are probably greater than those granted at the present time, for the possible reason that the intermediate tariff to-day is applicable to goods that are coming in from the United States.

Mr. DUNNING: But my hon. friend must recognize, of course, that between 1930 and 1935 the intermediate tariff was raised. That is, the intermediate tariff of 1930 applicable to intermediate countries as at that time is not the intermediate of to-day. In many cases the intermediate was increased in 1931. As the hon. member for Leeds said with reference to the tariff generally, and his remarks in that regard apply with greater force to the intermediate than, certainly, to the British rates, and very probably with as great force to the intermediate as to the general tariffs of 1931 and 1932, it is awfully difficult; I doubt if months of study could reveal exactly the situation throughout the whole tariff, and what applies to one item cannot possibly apply to another.

With respect to the item now before us, for instance, I may point out that the rate of 20 per cent which we are now reducing to 15 per cent has been 20 per cent against Great Britain since 1906. I have the information and therefore I can give it on this item. But to say that because this is so with respect to this item, the same thing applies throughout the whole tariff, would not, as the hon. member for Leeds says, be accurate.

Mr. STEWART: I think the minister did not desire to leave the impression that the intermediate tariff had been increased all along the line since 1930.

Mr. DUNNING: No, no.

Mr. STEWART: There have been reductions as well as increases.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, but—

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—244. White lead ground in oil: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: A reduction in rate, Mr. Chairman. The rate on this item as against Great Britain has been 30 per cent since 1906, and the proposal before us is to reduce that rate to 20 per cent.

Mr. STEWART: What are the imports?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: Imports 16,710 pounds, of which 15,000 pounds came from the United Kingdom. We have a tremendous production in Canada, the last figures of which, I believe, are 9,400,000 pounds.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Have we exports?

Mr. DUNNING: No export figures. They are included in the figures given for the previous item, which were $14,000 worth, 2,228 hundredweights of exports, chiefly to the United Kingdom.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—245. Ochres, ochrey earths, siennas and umbers: rate of duty, 5 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. STEWART: Do not try to rush us on this side, and we shall get along a little faster. Do not call "carried" before the Chairman announces the number of the item. Will the minister tell us what the present rate is, and what is the reduction?

Mr. DUNNING: Under 245 there is no change.

Mr. STEWART: What are the imports and exports?

Mr. DUNNING: Ochres, ochrey earths, siennas and umbers, $54,000 of imports, principally from the United States. Our exports do not accurately reflect this item. "Mineral pigments, iron oxides, ochres etc." is the description in the trade of Canada for the exports: they amounted to $111,000, some of which went to the United Kingdom. There is a two-way trade in these commodities.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—246. Oxides, fireproofs, rough stuff, fillers, laundry blueing, and colours, dry, n.o.p.: rate of duty 12½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a reduction in rate. The existing rate is 15 per cent, which is being reduced to 12½ per cent. Here again, the hon. member for Winnipeg North will be interested to learn, the rate has been 15 per cent since 1906. Our imports total 6,458,000 pounds, $616,000 in value; from the United Kingdom, 1,204,000 pounds, valued at $170,000. Our exports—again that general item of "mineral pigments, iron oxides, ochres etc." covers it—were 39,009 hundredweights, valued at $111,000, of which only $10,000 worth went to the United Kingdom.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—246b. Stains and oxides, valued at not less than 20 cents per pound, for use exclusively as colouring, constituents in the manufacture of vitreous enamels and pottery glazes; and liquid gold paint, for use exclusively in the manufacture of tableware of china, porcelain or semi-porcelain: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—247. Liquid fillers, anti-corrosive and anti-fouling paints, and ground and liquid paints, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 17½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: A reduction in rate, Mr. Chairman. The existing rate of 20 per cent, as will be noticed in the sheet, is reduced to 17½ per cent. The 20 per cent rate has existed since 1926. Our imports from the United Kingdom last year were 27,000 gallons, valued at $38,000. Our exports are included in the general item. We exported 571,000 gallons, on which 301,000 went to the United Kingdom.

Mr. STIRLING: Is there any Canadian production?

Mr. DUNNING: The latest figures are for 1934. I can give each item but the quantity is large.

Mr. STIRLING: Considerable quantities?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. It amounts to seventeen or eighteen millions.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Do we import any from the United States?

Mr. DUNNING: We imported 106,000 gallons valued at $172,000.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 247, 247a. Artists' and school childrens' colours; fitted boxes containing the same; artists' brushes; pastels, of a value of one cent per stick or over; artists' canvas, coated and prepared for oil painting: rate of duty, free.

Mr. STEWART: This would appear to be a subdivision of the other item.

Mr. DUNNING: It is a rewording of two items. In giving the figure of between sixteen and seventeen millions of Canadian domestic production I was including all of the production comprised within these three items of tariff description. The item with regard to artists' colours, et cetera, is intended to take that portion out of the general item and reduce the rate.

In tariff item 247a the rates of duty are free, 27½ and 30 per cent. This item was inserted in the budget of 1935 to provide free entry under the British preferential tariff for artists' and school childrens' colours, artists' brushes, pastels and canvas. As it has stood in the tariff, the item defined artists' and school childrens' colours as being in tubes, cakes, pans, and vials, and during the negotiations last summer it was represented by the British government that this reference in the wording to method of packing or nature of container was having the effect of excluding from the tariff item considerable quantities of artists' colours. Presumably when the rate was inserted in 1935 the intention was to permit the entry of artists' colours, and the government feels the wording then introduced regarding the nature of the container was meant to be descriptive rather than restrictive. In order that the presumed original intention may operate in administration, opportunity is being taken of the present negotiations to reword the item, leaving out the restrictive words regarding the style of package. This item is therefore one of seven in this agreement which bind or freeze an existing rate on United Kingdom goods and incidentally enlarged the scope of the item, to this extent reducing the rate of duty on the part of the commodities affected.

Mr. STIRLING: What has happened to the duty?

Mr. DUNNING: It was carrying twenty per cent. Of course, it was scattered through the tariff. The qualification in the old item as to the nature of the container determined what particular tariff item it would fall into, because of the contents in the container plus the container. I am informed that most of those which could not get in under the item of 1935 carried twenty per cent.

Mr. STIRLING: Now all are free.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. STEWART: What were the imports last year?

Mr. DUNNING: There was $88,000 worth of imports of which $67,000 came from the United Kingdom, and in addition there was $17,000 worth of artists' brushes, of which $9,700 came from the United Kingdom. There was $2,386 worth of artists' canvas, of which $2,200 came from the United Kingdom.

Mr. STEWART: Some of that would come in free under the item and some would bear a duty?

Mr. DUNNING: I should say that between 80 and 90 per cent would come in free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—248. Paints and colours, ground in spirits, and all spirit varnishes and lacquers: rate of duty, 75 cents per gallon.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in rate.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): What are the imports and exports?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports of lacquers were 14,544 gallons, valued at $46,000, of which 1,352 gallons came from the United Kingdom, valued at $4,500. The rest came from the United States. We were also large exporters of varnish, which in the export classification includes this item of lacquers. I suppose the description is really the same. We exported 17,700 gallons or slightly more than our total imports, and our exports were valued at $23,000. Some went to the United Kingdom; practically all of it went to different countries of the British commonwealth.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—249. Varnishes, lacquers, japans, japan dryers, liquid dryers, and oil finish, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 15 cents per gallon and 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a reduction in rate. Perhaps it will serve the purpose of the committee if where there is a reduction in rate I give information with respect to imports and production without being asked. The existing rates are twenty cents a gallon under all tariffs plus an ad valorem of fifteen per cent in the case of Great Britain. The reduction is from twenty cents a gallon to fifteen cents specific, and from fifteen per cent ad valorem to ten per cent on the ad valorem incidence of the item. Last year we imported 90,000 gallons, valued at $174,000, of which 83,000 gallons came from the United States and 5,800 gallons from the United Kingdom.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Is there the same reason in each case for the ad valorem and specific?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. The variation in value of these commodities would render either one of the forms of duty alone very variable in incidence as applied to different articles. The combination does have an equalizing tendency with respect to different values of commodities comprised within the item.

Mr. STEWART: Do we export goods of this class?

Mr. DUNNING: They are included in the varnish figure.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Customs tariff—250. Paris green, dry: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: We imported from the United Kingdom 33,500 pounds valued at $5,500. The present rate from the United Kingdom is five per cent, which has been unchanged since 1906, and the item is made free from Great Britain under the agreement.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: As the whole importation is from Great Britain, this would be a very good test case to show whether the consumer gets any benefit from the reduction in rate.

Mr. STIRLING: Is there any Canadian production?

Mr. DUNNING: It is not separately recorded; there are not three concerns manufacturing it. As my hon. friend knows, unless three concerns are manufacturing, the bureau of statistics does not keep any record. It is manufactured in Canada, however.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: As the whole import is from the United Kingdom I wonder if the minister does not consider it rather curious that we should be taking off this five per cent unless it will give some benefit to our own people. Evidently it will not help the British exporter.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, it is one of those things that helped me a great deal in asking for continued free entry into the British market for Canadian goods. There are many such items as to which I could not advance very strong arguments against lowering the duty when asked to do so. Some of them are very much a matter of good will.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: One of the many concessions the minister was forced to make.

Mr. DUNNING: I would not say "forced" to make. There was not any force, but I did evince a willingness to consider what was in the interests of the British so far as it did not, in my judgment, conflict with the interests of Canadian producers and consumers.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Strongly urged, may we say.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not remember strong urging on paris green. It is not a pleasant subject.

Mr. LAWSON: What puzzles me is why they should want a reduction, even on the basis of good will. If they have the market and have the business, any tariff on it would surely be a matter of revenue for Canada. Apparently it is purely a tariff for revenue.

Mr. DUNNING: The intermediate tariff is 7½ per cent; their margin was only 2½ per cent from the intermediate.

Mr. LAWSON: But I understood the minister to say that all our importations came from Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, with a margin of 2½ per cent. With their generally rising costs of production in all lines, there was a disposition on their part to ask for an increase in margin wherever it could be arranged, and this was one of the cases.

Mr. KINLEY: How many pounds were imported?

Mr. DUNNING: 33,510 pounds.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): As the hon. member for Argenteuil (Sir George Perley) said, this is a good chance to find out whether or not the consumer gets the benefit. If he does not get the benefit during the next year, I suggest that the minister reduce the other rate to free in order that the consumer shall get the benefit. This article is important to agriculture in this country; it is used in primary production. My hon. friends on the other side always think of the producer, seldom of the consumer.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): My hon. friends a moment ago asked: What advantage are the producers of Great Britain going to get? Why can they not think once in a while of the Canadian consumer?

Mr. STIRLING: That is exactly whom we are thinking of.

Mr. LAWSON: My hon. friend from Moose Jaw is very unfair in his statement. We do consider the consumer, so much so that I venture to suggest that it is possible that we see far enough ahead now to know that there will not be any reduction in prices to the consumer. The minister told the whole story of that a moment ago, when he told us that costs of production and prices in England are increasing.

Mr. DUNNING: Generally.

Mr. LAWSON: Generally costs are increasing—the wage scale and other factors. The net result is going to be that the government of Canada is going to lose its former revenue on this item. I am not criticizing them for doing so; I simply want to make it plain that they are giving up this revenue and there will be no reduction in price to the consumer; the difference will go to the British producer. In return, if the minister adopts the suggestion of my hon. friend—which of course he cannot do—

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Oh, yes, he can.

Mr. LAWSON: —to reduce the intermediate tariff to free, he has got to maintain a certain spread—

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. LAWSON: Is this not one of those items? At any rate, if he makes the intermediate tariff free next year he defeats the very purpose he has in mind in reducing the British preferential this year. The reason he is reducing it this year, on his own statement, is for the purpose of good will, to put the other chap with whom he was negotiating —not bargaining—in a good humour. Therefore if he follows the suggestion of my hon. friend and makes the intermediate tariff free next year, he defeats the whole purpose he has in mind in negotiating the trade agreement.

Mr. DUNNING: It is rather a small matter we are talking about, because the total revenue on the basis of last year's imports would be about $250. I do not attach very great importance to it either way.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—252. Shoe-blacking, shoemakers' ink, shoe, harness and leather dressing, and knife or other polish or composition, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 12½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: A reduction in rate. Shoe-blacking, at present 15 per cent in the tariff, is reduced to 12½ per cent. This is an item which has stood at 15 per cent since 1906. Our total imports come chiefly from the United Kingdom, $278,000 worth out of a total of $373,000 imported. In addition, there is a sub-item of polish or composition n.o.p.— $125,000 worth out of $163,000 of imports came from the United States. Our exports, none. Our total production in 1934 was $1,663,000.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—254. Gums, viz: Australian, copal, damar, elemi, kaurie, mastic, sandarac, Senegal, tragacanth, gedda, and barberry; gum chicle or sappato gum, crude; lac, crude, seed, button, stick and shell; ambergris; Pontianac: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—256. Printing ink: rate of duty, 12½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change. Present rate bound.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—259a. Sesame seed oil, crude: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—264. Essential oils, n.o.p., including bay oil, otto of limes, and peppermint oil: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change. Free entry bound.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 265a. Halibut liver oil, crude or refined: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: A reduction in rate on halibut liver oil, crude or refined. The rate of duty at present applying against Great Britain is 12½ per cent. It is proposed to make this item free. Our imports were 20,400 gallons last year, valued at $27,800. Of this amount 12,600 gallons came from the United States and only 200 gallons from the United Kingdom. I am afraid I have not accurate export statistics relating to halibut liver oil, we have not that separate.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Do we manufacture any in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, there is manufacture in Canada and we export considerable, but the figures I now give include other fish oils as well as halibut liver oil; 1,243,000 gallons, valued at $302,800. The United Kingdom was our best customer, taking 584,000 gallons, valued at $129,000.

Mr. STIRLING: In view of the very considerable Canadian production, is not the cut from 12½ per cent to free very considerable?

Mr. DUNNING: We are large exporters and very small importers from the United Kingdom.

Mr. REID: Has the minister any information as to whether halibut liver oil from Canada enters Great Britain free? I think there are only three countries in the world that manufacture halibut liver oil. It is becoming quite an industry in Canada, and due to the severe competition from Japan, which is now entering the market, it is worth watching.

Mr. DUNNING: That is just the point. Our halibut liver oil does enter Great Britain free, and I was anxious to preserve that free entry.

Mr. STIRLING: The minister has not the figures for halibut liver oil separate?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: No, the export figures are under the general heading, "other fish oils." We have never had a separate item before for halibut liver oil.

Mr. TOLMIE: Could the minister give us the amount of whale oil exported

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid that is also included in the total I gave for "other fish oils."

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—265b. Cod liver oil, crude or refined: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—276b. Cotton seed and crude cotton seed oil, when imported by manufacturers of cotton seed meal and refined cotton seed oil, for use exclusively in the manufacture of such commodities, in their own factories: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Mr. HARRIS: What were the imports?

Mr. DUNNING: Imports of cotton seed and crude cotton seed oil for the manufacture of meal, and refined oil imports, amounted to $1,476,000, of which $1,438,000 came from the United Kingdom and $30,000 from China. We have no production in Canada.

Mr. HARRIS: How many pounds?

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry I have not the figure in pounds. I can get that and give it to my hon. friend later on. It will be in the trade statistics.

Mr. HARRIS: Never mind; I have it here.

I should like to make a few observations with regard to cotton seed oil, Mr. Chairman. I am sure the minister will agree that while it comes here from the United Kingdom the points of origin are Egypt and India, so when we consider this item in terms of trade perhaps we would be justified in short-circuiting England, Ireland and Scotland and getting right back to the point of origin, which in the main is India. Last year we imported from India goods to the value of $8,245,194.

Mr. DUNNING: From India direct?

Mr. HARRIS: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: That is not affected by this item.

Mr. HARRIS: Let me get back to the point I was trying to make. If one should suggest any measure of consideration for the producers of animal oils and fats in Canada, in view of this tremendous importation of cotton seed oil, which in this one division amounts to 25,597,600 pounds—and the minister knows there are two other divisions—the thought would immediately come to one: Well, but we must not disturb our trade with the country originally producing the cotton seed. That country is principally India, and to a lesser degree China.

As I started to say a moment ago, we imported from India $8,245,000 worth of goods and exported $2,473,000 worth. Does the importation of this huge amount of cotton seed oil or other products of the cotton seed help the agricultural Englishman, Irishman, Scotsman or Welshman, or does it not rather help our friends in India, who grow the cotton? Our friends overseas, who the other evening were called sharp traders or shrewd traders or something like that, are the people who sit in their offices and pull the strings, bring the seed from India to England, press it and send the resultant oil to Canada to the extent of some 25,000,000 pounds. Does that trade actually help our fellow Englishman, Irishman or Scotsman, as the case may be, the individual agricultural worker or artisan, or does it rather help those large organizations who handle this business? That is the point I want to make, in order that in considering this item hon. members of the committee may start with the essentials and give some thought to the man who originally produces the material.

When this seed gets to England it produces fifteen per cent cotton seed oil, forty-five per cent mill feed which is fed to cattle and hogs in England, twenty-nine per cent hulls and five per cent cotton linters. The oil is shipped to Canada. It is a neutral oil, limpid and wholesome looking, which is treated with hydrogen gas to bring it to a consistency that will enable it to compete with a similar product which might be made in Canada from commodities we in this country should be able to produce.

I should like the committee to bear with me for five or ten minutes while I deal with the products I have in mind. We produce animal oils and fats in Canada, and we could produce a great deal more. I have an idea in the back of my mind that the white race needs animal fats. I have another idea in the back of my mind that in the years to come it will be proved that while the peoples of India and Africa, where the largest proportion of oils of this kind come from, may be able to live on vegetable oils, we in this country will be much better off if we stick to the product which a kind providence has given us in abundance in our own country for the strengthening of the white race as against the other races. We require a certain amount of fat to sustain life. I should like to read into the record various opinions by medical men as to the amount of fat required by a human being in order to sustain himself. First I quote from a book published by Robert Hutchison, M.D., Edinburgh, F.R.C.P., physician to the London hospital and also to the children's hospital, London, England; author and lecturer on medical subjects, entitled Food and the Principle of Dietetics. He says that the maximum which a human can consume each day is 150 grammes of fat. This can be absorbed daily without much difficulty, but with most persons anything above 100 grammes in winter or less than 100 grammes in summer would be apt to produce disorders of digestion. Many authorities, however, recommend that the daily ration of fat should not fall below 75 grammes.

McLester, the American author, in his book Nutrition and Diet in Health and Disease, quotes the eminent German authority Voit as prescribing 56 grammes or approximately two ounces of fat daily. Samson, another eminent and widely quoted United States authority, estimates that the human system consumes 100 grammes per day, or three and a half ounces. For easy figuring, and in order that members of this committee may understand the foundation I want to lay for my argument, suppose we make the daily average 100 grammes or 700 grammes per week. At 28½ grammes to the ounce, that means approximately 25 ounces per week or, roughly, a pound and a half. One pound of that may be considered as being made up of straight fat, such as butter, oils and so on, and we may say that the other half pound is assimilated during the week in the consumption of pies, pastry, fried foods and so on. So we will say one pound of straight fat per person per week is required as a maximum. At fifty weeks in the year that would be fifty pounds per year per person. Ten million of our people using fifty pounds per year each, means that the Dominion of Canada requires 500,000,000 pounds of fat in order to sustain and maintain her people. I make this statement, that we Canadian people and particularly the agriculturists—and to them I address these remarks—can produce in Canada 500,000,000 pounds of fat each and every year to sustain our own people.

For fifteen years I have sat in the house and have heard the agriculturists talk—mostly about wheat, of course—and have heard them say that they are the backbone of the nation. If that be the fact, then the challenge I put up to the agricultural industry is this: If you are the backbone of Canadian industry and of Canada itself, then produce sufficient fats in Canada to sustain and maintain our people. Five hundred million pounds are required. I am not going to stress butter.

Mr. DUNNING: Do I understand the hon. member to say we need 500,000,000 pounds exclusive of butter?

Mr. HARRIS: No, inclusive—all fats. The dining room of the cow is where the butter fat comes from. When you slaughter her, you render her down and get another kind of fat. That fat is animal fat, like the fat which comes from the suet of a steer. It is all animal fat. True, it is only three or four per cent out of the milk from the cow, but nevertheless I maintain that that is animal fat, and for all practical purposes is part and parcel of the fat requirements of Canada.

The dietitians from whose records I have quoted certainly say that butter fat is a good fat for this or any other people, and to a great degree is preferable to many of the vegetable fats which are coming into this country in increasing amounts. While I am discussing this subject I should like one of the pages in the chamber to pass this document to the Minister of Finance. It shows that a baking company uses nothing else but one hundred per cent butter in its baking. Then, so long as the minister and I are on the same ground, that butter is an animal fat—

Mr. DUNNING: I did not say that.

Mr. HARRIS: I did not wish to get into a butter discussion to-night. Let me say briefly that we can produce 250,000,000 pounds of creamery butter per year.

Mr. DUNNING: 250,000,000 pounds?

Mr. HARRIS: Yes, I believe that is about correct.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): It used to be about 280,000,000.

Mr. HARRIS: It is 250,292,677 pounds, to be exact. Over and above that, we produce on the farms of Canada, a considerable quantity of dairy butter. In round figures the butter produced on the farms, and perhaps consumed there to a large degree, amounts to 100,000,000 pounds. I shall not quibble over a million or two, because there will be some left over when I have finished what I have to say. There we have accounted for 250,000,000, plus 100,000,000 pounds, or a total of 350,000,000; and we are looking for 500,000,000.

Mr. DUNNING: There is the bacon to come.

[Mr. Harris.]

Mr. HARRIS: The bacon is coming. We will bring home the bacon, although we must say that in this project we do not seem to have much success. Before we reach the bacon let us deal with beef.

In the abattoirs under government inspection in Canada, we slaughtered in the year 1935 832,540 beef cattle, averaging 1,100 or 1,200 pounds in weight. In the farming centres, beef rings, small slaughter houses and uninspected institutions throughout the length and breadth of Canada we have a figure equal to that, making a grand total in the year 1935 of 2,035,698 head slaughtered in Canada. It is on record that each and every head of beef averaging 1,100 pounds will yield an average of 45 pounds of edible fat or tallow. Over and above that, in the inspected abattoirs we slaughter 589,066 calves and veal, and 897,314 head of sheep and lambs. The total of sheep and lambs slaughtered throughout Canada in uninspected and inspected abattoirs is 1,696,-061. If we add the calves, the veal, the sheep, and the lambs we have another figure of about 2,000,000. Each lamb, calf or sheep will average five pounds of edible tallow or fat. You have 45 pounds from beef, and 5 pounds from sheep, lambs and calves, making a total of 50 pounds. Then, 50 pounds for 2,000,000 head of stock gives a total of 100,-000,000 pounds of edible fat. If we add that 100,000,000 pounds to the 100,000,000 pounds of dairy butter and the 250,000,000 pounds of creamery butter, we now have a total of 450,-000,000 pounds.

As the minister has said, we have not touched the bacon, or brought home the bacon. Only 50,000,000 pounds more is required to make up the total, and we have all the hogs to deal with. In the inspected abattoirs we slaughter 2,969,987 hogs, and adding the figure from the uninspected institutions we get a total slaughter of 5,415,289, or as is commonly said 6,000,000 hogs per year. A slaughtered hog produces 15 pounds of edible fat. With 6,000,000 hogs at 15 pounds each we have a total of 90,000,000 pounds. In our computation we already have 450,000,000 pounds if we add that 90,000,000 it will bring our total up to 540,000,000 pounds of edible fat available in Canada to-day to supply the requirements of the Canadian people. The amount required, according to the best authorities in dietetics, is barely 500,000,000 pounds. Therefore I make the statement that we can supply the edible fat requirements of our Canadian people.

I say at once that if your tastes demand vegetable oils of some kind or another, or cotton seed oil, and if you want to pay for them, by all means have them. If we take the figures the minister gave a minute ago we find that we imported last year 25,000,000 pounds of cotton seed oil, at a cost of $1,476,-823, averaging about 5·7 cents per pound.

Mr. DUNNING: But that is not edible purposes.

Mr. HARRIS: Thank you, sir.

Mr. DUNNING: I call the hon. member's attention to the wording of the item: "When imported by manufacturers of cotton seed meal and refined cotton seed oil, for use exclustively in the manufacture of such commodities."

Mr. HARRIS: Yes, "refined cotton seed oil"; let me finish my sentence. The average cost was less than six cents per pound. All right. Now, the minister has said that it is not imported for food, that it is inedible. I do not think he meant to say that.

Mr. DUNNING: I just quoted the item.

Mr. HARRIS: But he knows, I know, and parliament should know that these products come into Canada and are indexed in this blue book as "not for food," when actually they are "for food." When those oils arrive here they are refined and sold throughout the length and breadth of this country as food. These statistics are compiled year after year and the Canadian people are hoodwinked into believing that these products are not being used for food. When you slaughter beef cattle you insist upon government inspection in the abattoirs, but on the other hand you permit tank steamer loads of these commodities to come into this country, labelled as being "not for food purposes," shipped without any inspection or control, and refined and sold as food to the tune of 103,-000,000 pounds last year. That is what is going on.

Mr. GOLDING: How much was made in 1934?

Mr. HARRIS: Roughly about 82,000,000 pounds, and about 56,000,000 pounds in 1933. Back in the oleomargarine days when the Liberal party was in power the manufacture amounted to only 4,475,000 pounds. A cry went up to high heaven against these importations. Not only were the importations stopped, but the product could not be made in Canada. Since I have been in this house, that figure of 4,475,000 pounds has increased until in 1935 it reached 103,000,000 pounds. A good deal is going to be said about this before we are much older. The Minister of Finance must be made to feel that something should be done about it.

I want to make this point abundantly clear. Away back in the oleomargarine days when the manufacture amounted to only 4,475,000 pounds, a conference was held in Ottawa on May 30, 1923. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) was in the chair, and among those present were the Hon. G. P. Graham, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), the late Mr. Robb, the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell), Mr. Stewart and other hon. members. In order to save time I shall not give the prefixes and affixes to the names of all these gentlemen. The conference was considering this item.

Mr. DUNNING: Oleo.

Mr. HARRIS: Oleomargarine. It was decided to stop the blending of our animal fats with the vegetable fats from other countries in order to make oleomargarine. The figures I have given refer only to vegetable oils, such as cotton seed oil, and yet only thirteen short years ago the government of that day prohibited the use of Canadian materials in manufacturing this particular product.

While we are bringing in these large quantities of cotton seed oil, we are shipping out of this country quantities of butter and fats of all kinds. It is only a few years ago that provision was made for a bonus on the export of butter to the extent of $100,000. Yet we let this other oil come in free of duty. I ask hon. members to note the geography of this country. We are bounded on the south for 3,000 miles by a country with a population of well over 100,000,000. Hon. members will ask themselves, as I have asked myself: What are they doing? There is an administration in power in Washington which some people consider as being akin to the administration in power here. Even though the party in power in the United States do not like to be called protectionists, they realized the menace to their home industry and they passed certain measures to the detriment of Canada. Our economic and industrial situation is similar to theirs. Their markets are our markets. Ever since Chicago has been a city it has been the fat market of the north American continent. It bears the same relation to Toronto as it does to New York.

What has the United States done during the last few years in connection with this tremendous flood of oils coming into their country? On June 21, 1936, they put an excise duty of three cents per pound against Canadian animal oils and fats. I wish the minister would use some of the good will which he radiates when dealing with these items in an effort to bring about some reciprocal treatment on the part of Washington. As I say, on June 21, 1936, the United States Congress passed what is known as the Bailey amendment. That amendment provided for a duty—I must not call it a duty; it was an excise duty—upon animal oils and fats. Democrat governments do not place duties upon commodities, they place excise duties against them. If hon. members can tell the difference between the two I wish they would let me know. Excise duties are provided for when the Democrats are in charge, and when the Republicans are in power tariff duties are provided for. In this case the excise duty was three cents per pound on animal products. There was already one-half cent per pound duty, so this made the total rate 3½ cents and 4½ cents per pound average on vegetable oils. In addition they passed section 702, which provided for a processing tax of 3 cents per pound on certain fats, and 4½ cents per pound on the other group of fats. The result was that the commodities which we are now discussing were faced with a tax of 3½ cents per pound in one case, 4½ cents per pound in another: It was 5 cents per pound on cocoanut oil, which I shall deal with later, and 4 cents on peanut oil—I shall leave that until later—when entering the United States from the countries to which I have just referred. They slowed down the importation into the United States of these products. They shut off Canada's normal exports of 30 to 50 million pounds of animal fats into the United States. They slowed down the imports from the world of a billion pounds of vegetable oils. Yet these world sources of supply have free access into Canada, with the result that we are finding the Canadian market demoralized, and before we are twelve months older the fat production of the farmers of Canada will have been so disastrously affected that something will have to be done. For the moment, due to the world armament situation and the fact that these fats produce from 10 to 13 per cent glycerine—and the glycerine market jumped from 6 cents eight or nine months ago to 22 cents in New York to-day—and there is 10 per cent glycerol in these products—there has been a world market firming of the price.

Mr. DUNNING: Of all of them?

Mr. HARRIS: Except butter.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, except butter.

Mr. HARRIS: And as I pointed out during the few remarks I had the pleasure of making in a previous debate, when this artificial stimulus which has been given to these markets and affects them to-day starts to fade, what are we in Canada, an agricultural country, going to do about it? That is the position in which we find ourselves as regards this item. Seeing that we buy, as we do from India, one of the countries of origin, $8,900,000 worth of products and sell them only $2,000,000 worth, and recalling that the balance of trade with Egypt, the other producer of cotton seed in the hull, is against us, if some little thing were done to help the Canadian producer of fat products you would not be hampering freer trade. As long as you give a preference to the Englishman—and he is the man you are thinking about when you are dealing with this schedule—he is satisfied.

When this 10 per cent preference was provided, these goods were being treated in Germany, Denmark, France and the Netherlands, more particularly, but that preference diverted the trade to England, with the result that a normal pressing of only 1,300,000 long tons per year jumped to a volume last year of pressed nuts and seeds of all kinds of 1,870,000 long tons. The Englishman, then, is satisfied. As he expressed it to me during a conversation in 1932: Give us a preference and we will get the trade. England is a workshop; the Englishman knows how to handle trade. Perhaps you and I, sitting in this house, think we are helping the English artisan or farmer. If I could think of a better word than manipulator I would use it; I would not want such an expression to go to my English friends overseas, but the man who operates that English plant by machinery employs but few men and handles millions of pounds of raw materials provided by the colonies.

Some of my friends ask: Who in Canada imports all this oil? Ninety per cent of it is imported by just five firms. I am going to mention their names. I realize that they are not here to protect themselves, but every word I say will be a word of congratulation and commendation for their conduct of their business. They know how to run their business, and if I commend and congratulate them I should not be condemned for mentioning their names.

Swift and Company. I do not need to say anything about where they come from or who they are. They are a very efficient organization.

Lever Brothers. A sizable portion of their business is the manufacturing and selling of edible oils to the trade. They have connections in England. They are a great credit to Canada, and an efficient organization if there ever was one. We are glad to have them here. So we have one controlled in the United States and one in England.

Next, Proctor and Gamble, Hamilton "Crisco"—controlled, operated and run from Cincinnati. If you want to sell them anything, go down to Cincinnati as I have done. They are a high-class United States concern and deserve a lot of credit.

Then there is the Palmolive Company, promoters of that schoolgirl complexion you hear so much about, the Canadian organization being a branch of the United States organization.

There are four of the firms, and to what extent they are Canadian you and I may judge, but I say they are well organized, well run and efficient organizations, giving a great deal of work to our Canadian people, and we are glad to have them here.

Incidentally, if I may be permitted to interject a personal note—I have nothing whatever to do with any packing house, and at no time in my career have I had a dollar in one. Because my name happens to be Joe Harris I hope I shall not be confused with the Harris Abattoir Company. They are a great firm and a credit to Canada, and I know the men in charge, but I have nothing whatever to do with the organization, and never had. So any remarks I may make in this house are not coloured or influenced by the people with whom I have the pleasure of doing business, but are made primarily on behalf of the Canadian agriculturist. By making a speech of this sort on behalf of our agriculturists I take some risk of not being reelected in a city constituency. If I was speaking with sole regard to my position as representative of a city constituency, they might want cheap oil so that the poor people could get cheaper products with which to maintain themselves.

Fifth, Canada Packers. Canada Packers is a great credit to Canada. It is a wonderful thing that Canadians have built up such an organization as this to process products produced by our people on behalf of our people. Criticize them as you will; I still say they are a great credit to Canada.

This little group of five firms imports 25,000,000 pounds of cotton seed oil and 60,000,000 pounds of palm oil, and so on all down the line, and I venture the opinion that by April 1 of this year there will have been imported into this country 250,000,000 pounds of these products. The minister says, mark you, they are not for food; but I venture the opinion that 125,000,000 pounds are brought in for no other purpose but to be refined and made into products that will be sold in Canada for food, and sold, as I said a while ago, with very little inspection by the Minister of Agriculture, who I observe has retired one seat further back. He knew about this situation last May. He has known about it for some years. But he is so wheat-tweet-tweet-minded that I am afraid he cannot get a little oil into his system. I recommend that he get a little into his system.

Mr. DUNNING: Vegetable oil?

Mr. HARRIS: I recommend some good stearine. This is a serious problem for Canada. The price structure alone is something that we should give consideration to. If you take this 25,000,000 pounds of cotton seed oil and turn it into a product that can be used, say for shortening, do you not replace butter? You say you do not replace butter, you do not replace lard, you do not replace beef dripping. I say that you do replace these commodities. I sent a little clipping to the minister. Here is a baker in Hamilton using 100 per cent butter for his shortening—

Mr. DUNNING: And is sufficiently unique to boast about it.

Mr. HARRIS: That is right; that is important. I appreciate that, coming from the minister; and perhaps there is some line of argument in the back of his mind right now. Perhaps he would suggest that more should be done in the direction of producing our own Canadian products. But I say that we have to face the situation where we have 25,000,000 pounds of cotton seed oil coming in at 5·7 cents per pound, and we have to ask ourselves this question: How is the man who is collecting milk from cows yielding 3½ per cent butter fat to compete with a product of that kind? That product is dumped on the St. Lawrence river from a tank freighter through a six inch pipe line and it competes with the products of 40,000 dairy farmers in Saskatchewan. That is the unhappy position in which providence has placed us; and providence will say to you if you ask him about it, "God helps those who help themselves." I say that the time has come for us to help ourselves in this particular problem.

The minister closed his speech the other night with a reference to the consumer. If something is being done, either by a processing tax or by an excise tax or by a duty to help out the situation, I can imagine my hon. friend opposite—I have forgotten his constituency, but he knows whom I mean—saying that the cost to the consumer is going to rise. Cotton seed oil was the first product to be denatured of its odour and peculiar taste and made into a limpid, odourless, tasteless, one hundred per cent oil. This was accomplished in 1887 by the Wesson process, which was finally perfected about 1900. While in New York a few days ago I took the liberty of asking for some invoices in connection with this product. Mark you, it pays an excise duty of 3 cents per pound when the commodity enters the United States. The information I got was with respect to the Ward Baking Company, a reliable concern, operating at 57th and LaSalle streets, Chicago, Illinois—this happens to be a Chicago invoice. These people bought from the Wesson oil concern nineteen drums and thirteen drums, a total of 11,621 pounds at 11¾ cents per pound, valued at $1,365.47.

Mr. DUNNING: Is that the refined product?

Mr. HARRIS: Yes, vegetable oil product. Again, the Ward Baking Company for their New York factory bought from Best Foods Incorporated, twenty-seven drums of vegetable compound No. 1, 10,910 pounds, at 11¾ cents per pound, or $1,281.93. Mark this carefully. In the body of the invoice there appear the following words:

> This invoice includes processing tax as levied under section 602½—

In that case the tax is under the Bailey amendment. I quote from the invoice:

> This invoice includes processing tax as levied under section 602½ of the Revenue Act of 1934. Should this tax be held invalid and unconstitutional and should it be recovered by or refunded to us by the United States of America or any collector of internal revenue, we agree to return such tax to you less a proportionate amount of expense that may be necessary in connection with the collection of such tax from the government, upon your agreement to repay same to us should we be legally required to repay same to the government or anyone else legally entitled thereto.

That is to say, they would give the tax back to the customer if the judgment were reversed. What is the result? Let us suppose the baker secured the 3 cent rebate, by straight processing of their own domestic product. Deduct from 11¾ cents that 3 cents, and the cost to the baker is 8¾ cents. On January 27 some shortening was bought for the same purpose from our friends, Proctor & Gamble of Hamilton. I might say that I had photostats taken of the New York and Chicago invoices. On February 12, from the Proctor & Gamble company one tierce of Primex vegetable shortening was bought. I have here a certified true copy of the sale of this tierce of vegetable oil shortening bought from that company on February 12, 1937. How much do you suppose was paid for it? Did we in Canada pay 8¾ cents, which our friends in the United States were willing to accept if they got a rebate, or, if they paid the three cents to their government, 11¾ cents per pound? Was that what we Canadians paid? No. This man paid 13 cents per pound. We pay 13 cents in Canada. I make no charge against them. Anyone in business gets, I suppose, all he can. And what is "all he can get" in Canada, as a rule? About the same price as in the United States?

An hon. MEMBER: Plus the tariff.

Mr. HARRIS: Minus the tariff in this United States case, my friend. Canada Packers on the same day sold one tierce of vegetable oil shortening. I have here a certified true copy of invoice for tierce of vegetable oil shortening bought from Canada Packers Limited, February 12, 1937. The price is 11¼ cents, quite close to the American level. But the United States has sense enough to try to protect its domestic production of fats of all kinds, for over there they impose an excise duty that will help them to produce in their own country the major portion of their own fat requirements. So I appeal to the Minister of Finance. He will probably be going to England and sitting in at a conference. We do not want to make this a political question in any sense of the word—I do not say to get a laugh from my friends opposite—

Mr. DUNNING: I really hope not.

Mr. HARRIS: I am quite sincere in that. I have had many conversations with certain members of the government and I challenge any member of this government or any official in any department or anybody in any place where I have spoken, to point to any remarks I have made on this subject that had any political flavour. If they can I should like to know about them and I will answer for them. I have not that in my mind at all. If I had, as I said a moment ago, if I was thinking of my own constituency perhaps I would not be talking at this particular time.

I started out to say to the minister that he still has time. Speaking in the budget debate I said to him as kindly as I could that in the back end of his budget speech there is this short statement: "I have in mind some amendments which might be brought down during the committee of ways and means." If it is not possible for him to bring them down in the committee of ways and means I hope he will pursue the matter further and see if something cannot be done when he is overseas this summer. England is willing—I do not quote very often, but "Barkis is willin'." But Barkis needed a little coaxing, and the minister is the man, with good will blossoming out all over him, to go and do the coaxing. If she is not willing—

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): We will send you, Joe!

Mr. HARRIS: —I think the minister can get her in the humour. I give him that much credit. I hope he will, because she will still make just as much money out of it, and we shall not be in the unhappy position of competing against sources of origin with which it is very difficult for us in this hemisphere to compete.

The minister has all the figures in mind. I cited the last time I spoke the 7,800,000 pound cargo brought to this country by the steamer Swartzemmer unloaded in September, which cleared the customs on the basis of 2·7 cents a pound. I admit there are other costs on top of that. But try and visualize the production of animal fats of any kind in this country at 2·7 cents a pound. Do hon. members want to sell their steers, the fat portion after being dressed, at 2·7 cents a pound?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): For years we thought ourselves lucky to get that.

Mr. HARRIS: Can you refine it for that price? If you cannot what are you going to do about it?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): We have been doing without it the last few years.

Mr. STEWART: And kicking all the time.

Mr. HARRIS: If you bind this item for another three years you are going to do without it still more, for look at the increasing inroads they are making, from 119,000,000 pounds three years ago to 156,000,000, then 191,000,000, and for this year we are now in, 234,000,000 pounds. Bind it for another three years and see what you are going to do without. They can produce it over there is India, in Ceylon, in the Straits Settlements and in Nigeria—why? Because nature is kind to them. Nature houses the tree without a barn; but you have to have a barn for your cows and a pigsty for your hogs.

The CHAIRMAN: I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. member but he has spoken more than forty minutes.

Mr. HARRIS: Perhaps I may be allowed to finish my sentence. These other countries have cocoanuts or copra, yielding 63 per cent fat; the palm, the inner kernel 43 per cent fat, and the meaty outside 60 per cent fat; and the peanut, 43 per cent fat; while your cow in Saskatchewan yields only 3½ per cent fat from her milk, and from her weight of beef on the hoof 50 pounds in 1,100 pounds, or 2½ per cent. Three and a half per cent against 40, 50, 60 and as high as 70 per cent —and what chance have you got?

Mr. DUNNING: First I want to congratulate the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) on his excellent presentation of a case which he has presented to me previously. It is always worth while to hear a man talk who knows his own business thoroughly and can explain it.

Mr. HARRIS: Will the minister permit me? If he will just take out that word "own" business—say the business.

Mr. DUNNING: I always understood my hon. friend to be engaged generally in the business which he has been discussing.

Mr. HARRIS: Well, to a degree, probably 5 or 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: I did not mean to imply that my hon. friend's argument was one of self-interest, and I am sorry if I gave that impression. But that he is a specialist in connection with this class of business he has demonstrated. I was really paying him a compliment. I also accept what he said as to the non-political nature of his remarks.

Mr. WEIR: Do not be so sure of that.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, I may tell my hon. friends behind me that I am sure of it because the party to which the hon. member for Danforth belongs was in power for five years, during the whole of which time these vegetable oils from the British Empire remained free. I am quite sure—my hon. friend will correct me if I am wrong—that he made the same kind of speech in committee of ways and means back in 1932 as he made to-day. I hope he is not going to fall from grace by saying this is the first time.

Mr. HARRIS: I do not like to interrupt, but if the minister will permit me, he knows and I know that this matter was not brought to a head until the United States took certain action in June, 1936.

Mr. DUNNING: But the imports of vegetable oils into Canada were very considerable.

Mr. HARRIS: And I made a speech on it.

Mr. DUNNING: As far as the competitive effect on Canadian animal fats is concerned that effect has been present for some time, although the increased imports in recent years indicate that if there is any effect, that effect has increased. I admit that in the short time I have been Minister of Finance I have had a great deal of difficulty with animal fats. My hon. friend and other hon. members of the house and some people outside who are interested have done a pretty fair job in organizing public opinion with respect to their views on the matter. I am not blaming them for it; that is their right, but I do feel a little concerned over the fact that this sort of thing starts and becomes such an enormous problem overnight soon after a Liberal government comes into office. That is the only political word I intend to say; from now on I want to talk about the facts as I know them.

The animal fat producers of Canada, not including the dairy people, made representations to me something over a year ago with respect to the action of the United States in barring exports of animal fats from Canada to that country, the action not being directed against Canada particularly but being taken for the reasons indicated by the hon. member for Danforth. In that connection my attention was directed by my hon. friend from Danforth to Canadian consumption of products of this kind and to the increasing competition of vegetable oils. I think I am correct in saying that at that time my hon. friend was engaged in making a detailed study of the effects of those importations, the results of which he has given to the committee tonight. I want to emphasize, however, that at that time there was in my mind no idea at all of the competition of these vegetable oils with our dairy products, and I do not think my hon. friend had then reached the conclusion that they were at all a serious competitor with dairy products.

Well, I went to England to negotiate this treaty. Obviously the British people were interested in continuing free entry into Canada of a commodity such as this which, from their point of view, was an important export commodity. The fact that they import the raw material from India or Egypt does not lessen their desire to obtain a market for the refined product they derive from that material, and I did not offer any great difficulty in agreeing to continue free entry of these vegetable oils, not merely those included under this item but also those dealt with in the three or four succeeding items.

It is a little difficult to generalize about them, but I am sure my hon. friend will admit that some are positively not edible and cannot be refined to make them edible. My hon. friend spoke of the Wesson process in connection with cotton seed oil, but the Wesson process is not equally effective with respect to some of the other vegetable oils which are imported in large volume, and which by no stretch of the imagination can be said to come into competition with dairy products, though of course all these importations are in greater or lesser degree in competition with animal fats as distinguished from dairy products. I drew then, and I still draw a distinction between the product of the cow while she is living and the product of the cow after she is dead. The dairy product is distinguished in all our minds, I am quite sure, from the product of the beast after it has been killed.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): The fat is a factor whether the animal is dead or giving milk.

Mr. DUNNING: Undoubtedly it is a factor, but I think my hon. friend from Dufferin-Simcoe will admit that in this connection our dairy products are of more importance to us than the animal fat residue of the beast after it is killed.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): I am not so sure about that.

Mr. DUNNING: I hold that view very strongly, because fifty pounds is the beginning and the end of it as far as the animal fat content is concerned, while on the other hand during the productive life of the animal she produces three and a half pounds of butter fat per hundred pounds of milk.

Mr. HARRIS: The lady has a brother, sir.

Mr. DUNNING: Certainly; some ladies have brothers, but in any case the brother does not produce milk or butter fat. However that may be, after I returned last fall my hon. friend brought a delegation to see me on this question. And lo and behold, for the first time there appeared as part of that delegation representatives of the National Dairy Council of Canada, who wanted me to consider the relationship of this question to dairy products and butter. That was the first occasion on which the question of a tariff on vegetable oils had been related to the butter argument. Up to that time, as my hon. friend will agree, I had discouraged a reference to the tariff board. On that delegation, as I say, there were the dairy people and some of the packers. You see, of course, it depends entirely upon what class of business the packers are in, as to the stand they take in this connection. Naturally there were not on the delegation headed by my hon. friend from Danforth representatives of the packers who were importing this material.

Mr. HARRIS: Not headed by me, but by a gentleman from Montreal. I trailed along.

Mr. DUNNING: Well, yes; the hand was the hand of Jacob, but the voice was the voice of Esau. Naturally none of the packers named by my hon. friend as importers of vegetable oils were represented on that delegation, but several other packers were. Apparently it does not depend on whether or not you are a packer; it depends on what kind of packer you are and just what sort of business you are in whether you are on the side of the question represented by my hon. friend from Davenport and those with him, or on the other side. As usual, it depends very largely on whose ox is gored.

Mr. NEILL: Were any representations made by the pilchard oil industry? That would be in competition also.

Mr. DUNNING: I cannot recollect any at the moment, though there may have been some a year ago. I have received thousands of communications in this connection, of course. At any rate, after I had listened to the story of this large and, may I say, influential delegation, including as it did representatives of the National Dairy Council of Canada, I said, "Well, gentlemen, you will get a reference to the tariff board."

I am inclined to think that my hon. friend from Danforth and those associated with him may feel that I was scarcely frank with them in agreeing to that reference to the tariff board when on behalf of the government of Canada I had already undertaken with the government of Great Britain that free entry of these oils from Great Britain should be continued. I now make the explanation, and I hope an apology will not be necessary. It was not possible for me as a minister of the crown, knowing what I knew, to communicate that information at that time to interested parties who were waiting on me in connection with the matter. My hon. friend may ask: Well, if you had already made an arrangement with Great Britain why did you give us the reference to the tariff board? The answer is that I thought the reference to the tariff board would bring out all the information.

I may point out also that what we are considering here to-night involves not only free entry under the British column, but also a ten per cent duty against intermediate countries. There is nothing in the agreement to prevent us from increasing the intermediate and general rates at any future time if in the judgment of the parliament of Canada that should be a desirable thing to do. For that reason I thought the people interested had the right to a reference to the tariff board, and they got it. However, I could not communicate to them at that time, as I say, that the British agreement contemplated a continuance of free entry.

Mr. STEWART: Could the minister tell us, just to illuminate the discussion, what proportion of the imports comes in under this item, and what proportion under the intermediate rates?

Mr. DUNNING: I will have to give it under each item separately, and I shall do it later. I could not even approximate it at this time. I may say, however, that at present the imports are unimportant from intermediate countries, because prior to 1932 these oils were free wherever they came from. In 1932 British oils were left free, and hon. members opposite imposed a duty of ten per cent against all other countries.

Mr. HARRIS: At the request of Great Britain.

Mr. DUNNING: Possibly at the request of Great Britain; I do not know. I have no knowledge of what effect an increase in the intermediate duty might or might not have. That is one of the points on which I thought possibly we might get information from an examination by the tariff board.

My point in telling this history I am now about to make. It became public, of course, that the Minister of Finance had granted a reference to the tariff board with respect to vegetable oils coming into Canada. The board gave it wide publicity, and invited the public and those particularly interested to come to give evidence. What resulted? I will tell the committee, just to show that there is another side to this question. No less than sixty members of this house—more than sixty—wrote me protesting against any idea of putting a duty on these imported vegetable oils, and conveying to me resolutions by the hundreds from all the bakers in their constituencies, from all the laundry people in their constituencies, and from others interested in the use of this commodity. I repeat, there were no less than sixty members, regardless of party. In fact, I believe there are members in the committee to-night who will remember communicating to me the most violent kinds of protests from people in their constituencies engaged in these different classes of business who claimed they would be ruined if a duty were put on vegetable oils, as was proposed by the applicants in the hearing before the tariff board.

I thought a storm had been raised. I have no doubt the hon. member will reply, and probably accurately, that this was the result of propaganda from those interested in keeping oils free of duty on entering Canada. But I assure him I doubt very much if there is a baker from Sydney to Vancouver who did not address a letter to me, in addition to those I received from members of the house who wrote me about the matter.

Mr. BAKER: I did not write you, honourable sir.

Mr. STIRLING: Nor did I.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is an exception; I think he must have been away on a holiday. Then, there were not only bakers but—

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Half-bakers.

Mr. DUNNING: —users of soap, soap powders and that sort of thing, who wrote me. Quite a number of people keeping stores and interested in the sale of packaged shortening, wrote protesting. The hon. member for Danforth, and those who believe with him, got busy. They saw the result of propaganda, and evidently thought it would be well to try it. Since they started I have been in receipt of literally hundreds of communications from dairy organizations from one end of Canada to the other who are inclined to think the hon. member is right, and that unless something can be done to stop vegetable oil coming in some horrible end awaits the dairy cow, that it will put the Canadian cow out of business.

There the situation stands. There the issue is joined between those who are using the commodity and who believe they will be seriously injured if a duty is put against it, and, on the other side, those producers who have been convinced by the hon. member for Danforth and those associated with him that unless a duty is put against the commodity their interests will be prejudicially affected.

May I express my own views in the matter, so far as they have gone? In doing so I do not wish to prejudice the report from the tariff board which I hope to receive, but which I am assured by the chairman will not, due to the complexity of the question and the voluminous nature of the evidence both pro and con, be presented for some time. Speaking subject to that qualification, my own view is that it is conceivable that the growing importance of vegetable oils may have effects which even up to now could not be foreseen. The hon. member for Danforth has mentioned one factor which has a bearing in the opposite direction, namely, the factor of increased prices for vegetable oils in countries which are arming. That increase comes about because of the glycerine content contained in them. That may have what might be described as a mitigating effect upon their competitive relation to our Canadian production of animal fats. I am not yet prepared to admit, I am not yet convinced, and have not had the evidence to satisfy me, that the present importation of vegetable oils is at all a serious competitor of the Canadian dairy cow in her productive capacity. I am willing to admit they compete with her after she is dead, but I have yet to be shown that they are a serious competitor with her so long as she is alive. However, as the hon. member for Danforth knows, I am willing to be convinced.

Now, have I said sufficient, together with the informative address of the hon. member for Danforth, to show the committee what a difficult and complex question this is, and that it will repay close and unprejudiced examination by producers and consumers in Canada, because obviously to a very large measure it affects both classes?

I was a little amused, may I say, to get from some twenty members of the house, and from others outside the house—letters on both sides of the question. When the bakers and laundrymen were busy, I got rather warm letters from them telling me that on no account must a duty be put on these articles. Then later, when the dairy associations and others got busy, I got further letters, including those from the same twenty members, telling me that a duty must be put on these articles—all of which leads me to think that there is quite a number of members in the house who require to balance themselves very carefully as between producers and consumers, in regard to this particular item.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): You are not keeping any secrets.

Mr. DUNNING: No, I am not keeping any secrets at all. But let me assure everybody that nobody will ever know the names of those members. I wished to give the information only in order to illustrate to the committee the difficulty of reaching a fair conclusion in a complex matter. I do not recognize necessarily that it is a tariff problem, but rather that it is an economic problem affecting our welfare.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): I do not intend to speak at length. As the Minister of Finance has said, we have had a most excellent explanation of the issue by the person who understands it possibly better than any other hon. member. In making that statement I do not reflect at all upon the Minister of Finance. I am not surprised he has not yet made up his mind what he would do, especially after receiving recommendations from twenty hon. members whose names he will not reveal, who have advised him both ways.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Is the hon. member one of them?

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): No. I can say to the Minister of Justice that purposely I have been rather quiet this session, but at least I have not yet said yes and no to the same issue. I do not propose to add anything to the exhaustive explanation of the hon. member for Danforth, but as one interested in the live stock industry and in Canadian agriculture I do say that the Minister of Finance might say to me even more than to the hon. member for Danforth that I am speaking about my own business. I know he did not mean it in that sense, as he explained. The hon. members of this committee who should be the most concerned about this item are those who are themselves interested in or are the representatives of agriculture. I do not care whether they come from the far west or the extreme east; if they represent agriculture in this parliament it behooves them to consider what is involved in this issue. I do not propose to interject what might be termed a political slant, but if the next three years reveal a development similar to that which has taken place in the last three, it will strike almost a death blow to Canadian agriculture. I think the Minister of Finance will agree with me when I say that.

Mr. DUNNING: I would not go that far.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): If the minister will not go that far, will he say that there will be no bad effect if our importations increase in the next three years as they have increased in the last three?

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is referring to edible oil. I do not think either he or I can make a positive statement at this time as to what is edible and what is not.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): I quite agree. With the lack of inspection which we have had in this country, neither you, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Danforth, nor myself could state to what extent these oils are edible or not. As one who knows something about the cost of producing animal fats and oils, I can say that they are very costly to produce. Every hon. member within sound of my voice will agree with me when I say that what this country needs more than anything else to make agriculture profitable, to ensure the stability of agriculture, to keep the land in western Canada from drifting away and to keep the land in eastern Canada fertile enough, is increased live stock production. I am not going to impose on hon. members a repetition of the remarks I have made on other occasions. At different times I have attempted to convince my hon. friends from western Canada of the necessity of reasonable protection for the live stock industry of this dominion, in order that there may be more of a balance between the grain growers and the live stock producers.

When the hon. member for Danforth and the Minister of Finance were speaking I attempted to figure out the cost of producing animal oils and fats. Perhaps I could put it this way. I attempted to figure out how much of the surplus products of this country would be consumed in the production of animal fats and oils. The hon. member for Danforth suggests, and I have reason to believe he is not far astray, that upwards of half of the vegetable oils being imported into Canada are edible. The Minister of Finance admits that whether or not they are edible, whether or not they are substitutes for butter fats, whether or not they are used only by soap manufacturers and so forth, they do take the place of animal oils and fats which might be produced in this country. It would take 150,000,000 bushels of the best hard wheat of Canada to produce the animal oils and fats to the equivalent of the vegetable oils being brought into this country.

This is a very important issue, and as a representative of an agricultural district and as a farmer I want to urge upon the Minister of Finance that he give it his most careful consideration because it is a dangerous issue. I can imagine that in three years time we may be bringing into this country considerably more of these products than we are bringing in to-day. We have increased our importations every year for the last three years. Mr. Chairman, before you more or less relinquished your political leanings, when you belonged more or less to one side of this house, you and I differed with reference to the necessity for protection for our live stock products. May I point out to you that prior to 1930 we were importing an enormous quantity of live stock products. Between 1920 and 1930 we saw an unbalancing of the agricultural production of this country. In 1920 or 1921 we were exporting more nearly the same quantities of live stock products and wheat than we have ever done since.

The live stock industry of Canada is undoubtedly the basis of Canadian agriculture. For many years this industry has produced even more than the grain growing industry, despite the millions of bushels of grain which have been grown in western Canada. In 1920 we exported from this country $77,000,000 worth of animal products. The government of that day, still clinging to the idea of freer trade, refused to raise the tariff when animal products began to come into this country. In 1930 we imported into Canada 44,000,000 pounds of meat and 55,000,000 pounds of butter. As an hon. member beside me points out, these commodities were being imported into an agricultural country.

Mr. DUNNING: You are starting something now.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): If the Minister of Finance lets this go for three years he may be starting something.

Mr. DUNNING: You will be starting the old tariff argument.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): I do not see that the tariff argument should confuse my hon. friend very much.

Mr. DUNNING: It does not.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): I can remember how he came to this house more or less a free trader, and he now adopts many of the policies and principles that the Conservative party put into effect.

Mr. DUNNING: I ask my hon. friend to take my word for it that I never was a free trader; I am just as much a free trader to-day as I ever was.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): Then when my hon. friend came to this house he certainly misrepresented his position. We certainly had the understanding that he was a free trader. However, I do not wish to confuse the issue by interjecting tariff matters. I hope the Minister of Finance will give me credit for being sincere in this matter.

Mr. DUNNING: Do not speak for me, though.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): I have not in the past and I do not expect I shall in the future. But tariffs are necessarily involved in this issue and I do not see why my hon. friends should hold up their hands in holy horror because mention is made of the tariff policy of this country. No party has condemned it more when in opposition and practised it more when in power than the Liberal party. This policy has become the policy of both parties to a great extent. I want to point out that at a time in 1930 when our grain elevators were filled with unsold wheat we were importing into this country vegetable products to the equivalent of 25,000,000 bushels of our wheat, in the form of animal fats and oils. Every farmer within sound of my voice knows that you cannot produce animal fats and oils with timothy hay; every farmer in the house knows that you have to feed costly grains. It is true that our farmers have struggled along for several years; it is true that between 1930 and 1935 there was a world depression; the farmers of this country have struggled through all these years. And now, when there is an opportunity for some improvement in live stock products, the farmer, with grain prices as they are, can scarcely make it pay to produce animal fats and oils; he would be better off to sell his hard grain. I again point out that in the production of animal fats and oils, live stock products, dairy butter if you will, lies the hope for the future of Canadian agriculture. There is not one capable business man in this house who will not have the reasons immediately in mind. I do urge upon the minister to think of these articles as an agricultural product. We are importing now the equivalent to the production of 150,000,000 bushels of grain if it was converted into animal products sufficient to produce the equivalent in oils and fats.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Is that in oils?

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): In fats and oils.

An hon. MEMBER: How many pounds of animal fats would 150,000,000 bushels of wheat produce?

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): I am speaking of the amount of animal fats which is gained as a by-product from the production of that amount of grain. I understand the Minister of Finance figured on the production of the total pounds. I am talking of fats and oils that are taken from the production we might have in this country.

Mr. DUNNING: Let me get this clear, please. Does my hon. friend mean that if we fed 150,000,000 bushels of wheat we should thereby produce enough cattle at the rate of 50 pounds of fat per head to equal the imports of vegetable oils?

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): It would amount to more than that on that basis. I was taking it on the hog production.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend will of course see what a fallacious basis that is.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): I might point out that we have lost markets overseas which we should have saved and developed. I do not blame it all on one government; I have criticized in this house both governments for their neglect of markets overseas. In 1920 we sold more bacon than we have ever sold since. Not even with the imperial trade agreements, of which my party is proud, have we recovered in the British market the bacon trade we had in 1920. I wish to emphasize that the vegetable oils we are importing are replacing to a great extent the oils and fats whose production through the live stock industry means a great deal in the stabilization of Canadian agricultural prosperity. I do not wish to derive any political advantage from this issue. I know that my friends to my right thought we overemphasized the importance of the importation in 1930 of New Zealand butter; the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) humorously remarked on different occasions that his government slipped out of power on New Zealand butter. I think it is only fair for me to say that I do not wish this government to slip out of power on vegetable oil, but—

An hon. MEMBER: You want to slip in on it.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin): —I do urge the minister to keep an eye on the benefits which might be reaped by the Canadian agriculturist at a time when he needs them most. To my friends in western Canada may I say that we cannot produce animal fats and oils, whether in Saskatchewan or in Ontario, without consuming a great deal of hard grain which on many occasions is difficult to dispose of. I think there is here a very close relationship which should be carefully considered by the government of the day. I feel that I should express to the Minister of Finance my views as a farmer, and not wishing to delay the committee further I urge upon him the most careful consideration of this matter before he disposes of an issue which to my mind is vitally correlated with the future security of agriculture. The live stock industry is the basis of agriculture in Canada, as in every other country in the world.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does it make any difference from what country cotton seed comes out of which this oil is produced in Great Britain? That is to say, are all importations of cotton seed oil from Great Britain made free under this agreement?

Mr. DUNNING: Continued free.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Are they continued free under this agreement no matter from what country the cotton seed itself comes?

Mr. DUNNING: Of course it makes no difference in what British country they originate. With respect to the importation of the seed itself into Great Britain from foreign countries, it would have to conform to the 50 per cent content provision of the agreement.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is any inquiry made as to the source from which this cotton seed comes?

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) was quite right. It is principally India, and to some extent Egypt. I made some reference in the budget speech to our situation as regards India. While the privilege of the British rates in this agreement automatically extend to all countries of the British commonwealth, as my right hon. friend will remember, there is under the law power in the government by order in council to withdraw that privilege from any British country which does not reciprocate on a fair basis by way of trade agreement with Canada. As my right hon. friend knows, no government of Canada in recent years has been able to make a trade agreement with India, and as the hon. member for Danforth pointed out, the balance of trade between Canada and India is very heavily in favour of India—made up largely of tea and rice, and to some extent of many other commodities. It is the desire of this government, as I believe it was of the previous one, to reach a trade agreement with India; and in that regard one does not forget, of course, the power which the government has to withdraw from India or from any other British country the privilege of British preferential rates unless it is possible to reach a fair trade agreement with her. I am not now issuing any warning or anything of that nature to India, but it is well that we should see facts.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Unless India reciprocates in a way that is satisfactory to this country, the government would have the power to withdraw this privilege with reference to their cotton seed; is that right?

Mr. DUNNING: My right hon. friend will understand that in the case of cotton seed, which comes from India to England and is there processed, the situation of that product for content purposes would be affected by any action which we might take vis a vis India.

Mr. STIRLING: Is the main reason why these empire products come to Canada via Great Britain that they should be processed there?

Mr. DUNNING: Well, they are the greatest processors of all.

Mr. STIRLING: That is the main reason they come via Great Britain?

Mr. DUNNING: Oh, yes, practically the only reason. As my hon. friend knows, England is the great gathering and distributing centre, particularly for these tropical products in which she has specialized for so many years. There is no doubt that vegetable oils are supplied by Great Britain to most of the world, she being the country importing the seeds or nuts, as the case may be, and the pressing being done there for many countries, even outside of the British Empire, because they were first in the field, first saw the possibilities of it, and are in addition, of course, the great merchants of the world.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: This is in no sense a political question. This item was made free by the Conservative government under the agreement in 1932, and now it is proposed to continue that free entry for another three years. As a matter of fact, though, the situation has changed tremendously. The minister himself has referred to the fact that the import of these oils has increased from year to year during the last four or five years. He says we could not help that. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) yesterday or the day before told us that providence was with the government and that he would rather have it with them than against them. In this particular instance providence has been against the government, for during their term of office the importations of this oil have increased by leaps and bounds.

I represent an agricultural and dairy constituency, and I can assure the committee that no better herds are to be found anywhere in Canada than those in Argenteuil, so this is a matter that greatly affects the dairy people of that district. I have listened attentively to what has been said to-night, and though I have never given the subject much consideration before, I must say that I am impressed by the argument put forward by the hon. member for Danforth. I believe the minister himself is impressed by it. As a matter of fact this is a question of the utmost importance to the agricultural and dairy people of Canada and I urge the minister to consider it as carefully as possible, to go into it more fully, and let the tariff board make its report on this phase of the matter as well as on the importations under the intermediate and general tariff. Let the board make a full report on the question.

Under present conditions, though we want to trade with our friends in India, if they do not reciprocate in a way that is satisfactory to the government I suggest that we might very well consider the desirability, almost the necessity, of taking action under the powers which this government has to stop these vast imports of cotton seed oil made from cotton seed coming from India or any other country that does not reciprocate with us. I understand that Canada will be bound for three years under this agreement. That cannot be helped; but I take it there will remain a residue of power in the government to take some action, not to prohibit import of these oils but to limit it to a reasonable quantity so that our agriculturists and dairy farmers may have a better chance to sell their products in Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: We are now really discussing cotton seed and crude cotton seed for the manufacture of meal and refined oil. That particular product does originate in India and comes via the United Kingdom. But the difficulty to which my hon. friend from Danforth refers is only to a small degree created by imports of cotton seed oil. The total imports of cotton seed oil last year were less than a million and a half dollars. I am coming more and more to the view that the separation of edible and non-edible oils in a proper manner might go a long way towards the solution of the problem. I will not debate this question further because it is under investigation, and the tariff board reference covers all aspects of the question.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: No objection has yet been taken to the importation of non-edible oils except those that can be refined into edible oils.

Mr. BAKER: Could there not be one rate for edible oils and another for non-edible oils?

Mr. STEWART: I am sure that everyone who has discussed the matter approaches it from the same standpoint, namely, the necessity and desirability of doing what we can to assist agriculture in Canada. We all know that during the last six or seven years agriculture has been passing through one of its most serious phases, and whether you consider it from the standpoint of the grain producer or the live stock producer or from any other point of view that is true. It has been necessary to give bonuses and to impose duties with a view to protecting agricultural products, and the argument that is made by the hon. member for Danforth, who has presented the case to-night, is along that line. There is no doubt that conditions have changed with respect to the importation of these commodities in the last few years. As I understand it, these products were free from Great Britain; they have always been free, there being no tariff against them. But the imports from any source were insignificant until within the last three or four years. There cannot be any question that the quantity of these oils imported has become a factor in connection with agricultural production. They are taking the place of animal fats, and that is in a measure beyond what could have been anticipated.

The minister has stated his position quite frankly. An agreement has been entered into covering a period of four years, but there is in that agreement a provision, article 16, which I think the minister and the government might make use of. It reads:

> In the event of circumstances arising which in the judgment of the government of the United Kingdom or of the government of Canada, as the case may be, necessitate a variation in the terms of this agreement, the proposal to vary those terms shall be the subject of consultation between the two governments.

That is an elastic provision, and as the minister knows, since the agreements were first negotiated, advantage has been taken of it and concessions have been made in both directions. I suggest that when the facts are known in connection with the matter under investigation by the tariff board an opportunity will be afforded the minister to take the matter up in the light of the information he has, and to make representations under this article. We may talk about the agricultural industry, but after all dairying has been over the years the backbone of that industry, and the dairy cow needs all the help she can get, dead or alive. I am sure the minister appreciates the importance of this and will give it the consideration it deserves in the light of the expansion of the competition of these oils with dairy products and animal fats. I hope he will deem it necessary to take action with a view to reducing this competition, which has not been foreseen, but which is growing and is likely to become quite serious. After all, the minister must be able to find a way out.

Mr. SENN: I am sorry I was not in the house earlier in the evening when the hon. member for Danforth began his discussion of the question. I did hear him, however, the other night when he referred to the subject in his speech on the budget, and I am sure that anyone who heard or read that speech could not help feeling something of the seriousness of this menace—shall I say?—to our agriculture.

The value of these trade agreements lies largely in the benefits which they have brought and will continue to bring to the live stock and dairy industry of Canada. I doubt whether the government would have gone as far as they have by way of concessions to the British people in our markets if it had not been for the advantages we received in the entry of our dairy and hog and cattle products into the British market. Therefore it seems too bad that this item has been left unchanged. The minister in his explanation to-night said that when the agreement was made he did not anticipate that the entry of these vegetable oils into Canada would have any effect whatever upon the dairy industry, but I think he and the committee will agree that when 103,000,000 pounds of edible fat and shortening is imported into Canada during the year, or made in Canada from imported oils, it must to a certain extent displace some kind of animal fat produced in Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: Not necessarily. I cannot go that far.

Mr. SENN: Well, the greater part must displace some kind of animal fat.

Mr. DUNNING: To clarify my point, I call attention to this fact: There is no question that animal fat shortening cannot be packaged and sold retail because it lacks keeping qualities. I am advised that a large business has been developed in packaged shortening, with vegetable oil as its base, which will keep on the store shelves. That is the point I had in mind when I said that there are some factors which require to be examined in regard to competitive effects before I would accept the large figures my hon. friend mentioned.

Mr. SENN: I agree with what the minister has said regarding the keeping qualities of vegetable oil shortenings in packages. I admit that lard and shortenings of that kind probably will not keep as well as vegetable oil products, but before vegetable oils were in common use in this country the only alternative the Canadian housewife and people had was animal fat for shortening and similar uses. So I think my contention is fairly sound that these vegetable oils which are being brought in do to a certain extent displace the products of the Canadian dairy farm and live stock industry.

The dairy industry is a very important one for Canada. It brings larger returns to agriculture than any other branch of animal husbandry. The unfortunate thing is that we have a small exportable surplus. That small surplus of milk or milk products is the dominant factor in determining the price of dairy products in Canada. If our dairy products and animal fats are to continue to be displaced in larger and larger amounts as time goes on, the result will be that we shall have a larger exportable surplus to go on the British market or wherever we can sell it.

We have heard from different parts of the house during the budget debate, and I have heard hon. members on both sides make the statement in other places, particularly in some of the committees of which I happen to be a member, that the agricultural industry as a whole is not in a good position. The prices obtained are in many cases not commensurate with the cost of production. The dairy farmers, many of them, are not enjoying the prosperity they should. So when their production comes in competition with a cheaper class of product such as vegetable oil, the tendency is to keep the prices of dairy products down below what they would otherwise be.

I know that it is impossible at the present time for the minister to make any change in the present agreement, but I think he should seriously consider, and that he will have to consider seriously within the next year or two, the proposition made by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart) that this matter should be brought to the attention of the British government and some concession be arranged.

Mr. GRAYDON: I think I should not let this item pass without making a few remarks on the importance of the issue at stake. Those of us who were born and raised on dairy farms in Ontario, as I am proud to say I was myself, cannot but be seized of the importance of a matter so far-reaching in its effects as the item now under discussion. When one calculates that in a riding such as I represent, the county of Peel, for the last recorded year the production of milk reached the enormous total of 87,000,000 pounds, one gets some conception of the importance of this item to the dairy industry. Those of us who were conversant with the issue prior to 1930 when large importations of butter from New Zealand found their way into the markets of Canada, know full well the effect which that had upon the dairying industry here.

In the part of Ontario from which I come, the whole milk industry is the most important branch. We provide a large proportion of the milk for the great metropolitan market of Toronto. One of the major problems, and one which is most pressing with the farmers in that riding, is that of surplus milk. There is scarcely a milk association meeting anywhere in the neighbourhood of Toronto or any of the large urban centres where this question of surplus milk does not arise year after year. One of the reasons why there is a surplus of milk is that the farmers seek the best and most convenient and most remunerative market for the product of the dairy cow. One cannot blame them for that. The fact is that the surplus milk which exists in such great quantities around Toronto must find a release through some channel, and one of the channels which I have heard suggested on many occasions, both when I was on the farm and since I have left it, is that, if the price of butter, cheese and other dairy products were higher in proportion to the price of milk, many dairy farmers would find it profitable to leave whole milk production and go into other lines of dairying. So, as was so forcibly shown to-night by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) and others, it is a matter of much importance that the farmers and dairymen of this dominion should be seized of the grave consequences which come from the free entry of these oils competing with the product of the dairy cow. After all, it does not seem to me that we are likely to do much in the way of increasing the price of the dairy commodities which the farmers have to sell so long as we permit the competition of commodities produced under the conditions so clearly stated to-night by the hon. member for Danforth.

I often think that farmers do the least advertising of their products of any class in Canada. I am not referring, of course, to the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) who is an excellent advertiser along certain lines. Someone just now suggests that he is not a farmer, but he has answered that point several times, and from his tremendous interest in wheat I am almost inclined to think that he must be engaged in some agricultural enterprise. In any event I do think that this vegetable oil industry, which produces the various brands of shortening and other vegetable oil products that are for sale in the country, very largely promotes the sale of those products through intensive advertising. I believe that this government, which from time to time spends money on things which it believes to be legitimate might give some consideration to spending some money in advertising our own agricultural products. The Minister of Agriculture looks very interested as he sits over there, and I am sure he would be the first to agree that wherever possible the products of the farm, particularly the dairy farm, ought to have some encouragement and assistance by way of advertising throughout the country. A couple of weeks ago I attended a little gathering at which I heard several housewives discussing vegetable oils in relation to the butter fat industry. An argument ensued, and it does appear to me that there is a grave division of opinion as to whether butter fat or vegetable oil is actually the best for the purposes of the housewife. I have come to the inescapable conclusion, however, that one of the reasons for the wide use of the different kinds of shortening is the extensive and intensive advertising which has been carried on.

We are all interested in farm affairs and agriculture in general. It may be a hackneyed phrase, but agriculture is still the backbone of this country. If you study the matter at all you will soon find that when the purchasing power of the farmer is reduced there is not very much business left in the country for anyone else. So I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that our farm products ought to be brought before the purchasing public by means of intensive advertising. I think we have a right to expect that the purchasing public, not only in this country but overseas as well, should be made acquainted with the excellent qualities of the products of our farms.

I leave this suggestion with the Minister of Agriculture to-night. I think he might very well give some study to the situation, because in many instances the merits of our agricultural products are not being properly brought before that great buying public from which the farmer must obtain his livelihood.

Further, by way of caution to the Minister of Finance, I think we ought to be very careful to see that the interests of the dairy farmer in the province of Ontario, as well as in every other province of this dominion, are thoroughly protected against competition from products such as those which have been described and which are under discussion to-night, in order that the farmer of eastern Canada as well as the farmer of western Canada may receive a fair deal at the hands of the government of the day.

Mr. HARRIS: I should like to correct an observation made by the Minister of Finance, if I may, and in doing so may I say that I am very anxious that nothing that may be said by any hon. member of the house, particularly myself, shall prejudice our position before the tariff board.

The minister mentioned the name of the National Dairy Council of Canada, and intimated that he had received no word from them until they joined with the animal oil and fat producers. I am glad that the Minister of Agriculture is here. He knows, and the Minister of Finance knows, that the national dairy council make their representations to the Minister of Agriculture. They always cooperate and consult with the minister, and he and they get together and work out everything they possibly can in the best interests of Canadian agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture had representations made to him, and when those representations were made, I suppose the natural feeling was that they were being made to the government of Canada. So when this is referred to as something new that was brought forward by this group of packers, if you like to call them that, who were not importing or manufacturing shortening, that is hardly the fact. I know that the first letter I saw in Montreal was written by the dairy council to the Minister of Agriculture, and I think as long as thirteen months ago he had certain people come to see him regarding the matter. If he will consult his files he will perhaps find correspondence from the hon. member for Chateauguay-Huntingdon (Mr. Black), the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Davidson) and others, and he may remember that members of the dairy council had interviews with him and with the Prime Minister, who I am sorry is not here.

In all fairness I think the Minister of Agriculture should not let this item go through without giving us his views based on the economics of this question, which I conceive to be of great national importance. Perhaps now that we are all tattling just a little, the Minister of Agriculture will remember that another member of this house, the hon. member for Danforth, discussed this matter with him and agreed that it was a matter for the Minister of Finance. The member for Danforth left the office of the Minister of Agriculture after that first interview, which was very cordial, and went to see the Minister of Finance. I do not propose to pursue the matter; I just wish to make the situation abundantly clear. The Minister of Finance rather left the impression in my mind that there might have been some deep—I will not say conspiracy, because that is not a nice word—but a correlation between the actions of certain groups, a getting together of strange bed-fellows all of a sudden to further their own interests.

Mr. DUNNING: I congratulated you on your organization, and I said so.

Mr. HARRIS: I will leave the Minister of Agriculture for a moment and deal with that point. Sixty members of parliament wrote letters as a result, as the minister knows, of propaganda by very powerful interests, carried on to the extent of many thousands of letters circularizing everyone on their lists of customers. They even went so far as to tell their members of parliament in writing, "Prices will jump four cents a pound immediately if the Minister of Finance takes any action on this question." That assertion is in black and white. I have it under my hand.

The evidence is available now to members of the house, or will be after the report of the tariff board is down. I do not wish to prejudice the position of anybody. But the bold statement was made, and the users and consumers, the bakers, confectioners, laundrymen and so on swallowed it hook, line and sinker, and felt badly about it. Members of parliament were written to, but members of parliament being such busy people just looked at it, and sent it to Mr. Dunning. So he got sixty letters. Had the other group which had been taking the Minister of Agriculture into their confidence, and now that their names have been mentioned I can name them—the National Dairy Council of Canada and the Animal Oil and Fat Producers of Canada—started out with propaganda, the minister would have had two complaints to-night, instead of one, from those members. The minister knows, and we know, that I had thought to keep this thing out of a political atmosphere. He will agree with me that neither the National Dairy Council of Canada nor the Animal Oil and Fat Producers permitted themselves to engage in any propaganda whatsoever in any way until after they felt the Minister of Finance was fully satisfied to air the whole thing.

The customers and friends of the five firms who control this business in Canada—two United States, one English, and one Canadian—had been spreading propaganda for months and had come here equipped with professors, statisticians, legal talent, and what not, to break down the issue as it was laid before the government by this other small group.

I had hoped that the problem being of such magnitude the Minister of Agriculture would have seen fit to confirm what I have said, that we worked through his department, or rather kept his department informed until such time as he thought it might be good business to approach the Minister of Finance on the problem.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Young): Shall the item carry? Carried.

Mr. HARRIS: No; the Minister of Agriculture was on his feet.

Mr. GARDINER: No, I was not on my feet; but I think in view of what the hon. member has said I had better check up on the records of my department. I realize the hon. member did come to my office on one occasion, and as he has already stated to the committee he informed me it was his intention to take this matter up with the Minister of Finance. In a very general way he outlined his ideas in regard to the matter, but did not go into details. My memory is that all representations made to the department, so far as they were made to me personally, were pretty much along that line. The question was not discussed at length, but reference was made to the fact that they intended to bring the matter up with what they considered to be the proper department, the Department of Finance. But I should like to check up before making any general statement to the house on just what the records of the department are in regard to the representations made.

Mr. HARRIS: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if, in view of the fact that this report will probably be down in a month or two, or three months, and in view of the fact also that these items are bound, is it still possible, as it was in the case of the previous agreement, to have conversations with representatives of the United Kingdom, even on a bound item?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, on any item. That is covered by section 16 of the agreement. The parties to the agreement reserve the right by agreement to vary its provisions.

Mr. HARRIS: The minister in making his earlier observations mentioned that there was that possibility. Is it the possibility he had in mind when on the budget speech being made he intimated the possibility of some amendments?

Mr. DUNNING: No, it was a different thing altogether. In the budget speech I did not refer to the tariff items in the agreement. I referred to tariff board reports which might be received prior to this committee finishing its work. May I say that I have received some tariff board reports. I expect under the law to lay them on the table, but may I say that I should like to have a little time to look into them before doing so. However, under the law I must lay them on the table within fifteen days of their receipt. Can we say "Carried"?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Item agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Young): Item 277.

Palm and palm kernel oils, unbleached or bleached, not edible; shea butter: rate of duty, free.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Young): Item 278.

Mr. HARRIS: Mr. Chairman, I do not take much of the time of the house. Further, I do not make any threats and do not purpose making any, but if you are going to start the practice of trying to carry items when I am on my feet—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Young): I did not see the hon. member; I am sorry.

Mr. HARRIS: Perhaps you, Mr. Chairman, have been in the house long enough to-night to know that I have been talking on a matter of great moment to Canada, a matter respecting oil. Perhaps, you, sir, realize that the item previous to the one now called is of a like nature, that you have declared it carried, and have tried to get on with the next one.

Mr. DUNNING: In all fairness to the chair, if the hon. member will permit me, may I say that I am at least equally guilty, because the discussion in the last two and a half hours has ranged completely over the oil items. The observations of the hon. member were not confined to one item, and if he is insisting upon a strict interpretation of the rules, his remarks should have been confined to cotton seed. No one attempted to confine him to cotton seed. He was permitted, and I believe properly, to deal with the general question. I was under the impression that the discussion which we have had covered, not to the exclusion of further discussion, but to the satisfaction of the committee, items 277 and 278, at all events. However, I shall not insist. The committee can do as it likes, but it is my duty to point out—the hon. member said he did not want to threaten, and of course I am not threatening—that at the present rate of progress it will take six weeks of steady sittings to pass the items in the agreement. I speak only of the rate of progress, and move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. Evidently it is not the intention to pass the oils items to-night.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, March 19, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

WEBSTER DIVORCE BILL

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier) moved:

That the petition of Rosalie Annie Arathoon Webster presented on the 11th instant, praying for a bill of divorce from Harold Leslie Webster, together with the report of the clerk of petitions thereon, be referred to the standing committee on standing orders for the purpose of considering the suspension of standing orders 92 and 93(3)(a), (b) and (c) in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

FOREIGN ENLISTMENT

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 23, respecting foreign enlistment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the second reading of the bill does not call for any discussion because the principle of the measure is already the law of Canada. The terms of the British Foreign Enlistment Act have always applied to Canada, therefore the principle is already accepted in this country. The purpose of the bill is to have a Canadian act, because under the Statute of Westminster any dominion, including the Dominion of Canada, may re-enact, repeal or amend any statute already applying to it. It has been thought advisable and proper to have a Canadian act, known as the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1937, and to make the very few changes adapting it to Canadian conditions, especially changes which will make it applicable to modern air and land conveyances, as well as to sea conveyances, to which the original measure was limited. I suggest that the bill be read a second time and that any suggestions with reference to its provisions be made in committee.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) has said that the principle of this bill has been accepted by Canada. I think that principle was imposed upon Canada by imperial statute without any reference whatever to the will or opinion of Canada.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): But it applies to Canada.

Mr. CAHAN: Yes, it applies to Canada, but it was imposed rather than accepted. Although the British North America Act of 1867 purported to declare that the exclusive legislative authority of the parliament of Canada extends to all matters coming within certain classes of subjects mentioned in section 91 of that act, it was nevertheless soon ascertained that the Colonial Laws Validity Act, enacted two years previously by the parliament of the United Kingdom without any reference to the legislatures of Canada or of the maritime provinces, effectively restricted the field of Canadian legislation. Section 2 of that act of 1865—leaving out the unimportant words—reads:

Any colonial law which is or shall be in any respect repugnant to the provisions of any act of parliament extending to the colony to which such law may relate . . . shall be read subject to such act . . . and shall to the extent of such repugnancy but not otherwise be and remain absolutely void and inoperative.

A few years ago I asked for a return from the Department of External Affairs showing the existing statutes of the parliament of the United Kingdom which extend to this dominion. This return was only partly prepared and for that reason was not laid upon the table of the house. From personal research I tabulated scores of such statutes which then and still apply to Canada, although under the act of 1867 they are now within the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. The Statute of Westminster, 1931, provides as follows in section 2:

(1) The Colonial Laws Validity Act, 1865, shall not apply to any law made after the commencement of this act by the parliament of a dominion.

That is after 1931.

(2) No law and no provision of any law made after the commencement of this act by the parliament of a dominion shall be void or inoperative on the ground that it is repugnant to the law of England, or to the provisions of any existing or future act of parliament of the United Kingdom, or to any order, rule or regulation made under any such act, and the powers of the parliament of a dominion shall include the power to repeal or amend any such act, order, rule or regulation in so far as the same is part of the law of the dominion.

After the enactment in 1931 of the Statute of Westminster this parliament proceeded to revise the Canada Shipping Act. This monumental work was the first step by way of amending or revising imperial statutes which had hitherto restricted the operation of statutes passed by this parliament, and which had also restricted the effective expression in legislation of the will of this parliament. There are certain of these imperial acts which are and always have been assumed to be within the sphere of the parliament of the United Kingdom and with respect to which the parliament of the United Kingdom has assumed exclusive jurisdiction up to the present year. The parliament of the United Kingdom has assumed exclusive jurisdiction to regulate the succession to the throne, the titles of the crown, the royal declarations on accession and the regency in certain cases, as shown by the Demise of the Crown Act, 1901, the Regency Act of 1910 and the Royal and Parliamentary Titles Act, 1927, which concern the whole empire.

I do not intend to refer particularly to these statutes at the present time. I wish only to express for myself and on behalf of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), who is unavoidably absent, approval of the action of the government in revising the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870. That English act extends to all the dominions and hitherto has regulated the conduct of all of His Majesty's subjects during the existence of hostilities between foreign states with which His Majesty has been at peace. Therefore we commend this action, not with particular reference to the special clauses of this bill, but with reference to the purpose and intent of the bill to take additional measures to exercise the rights of nationality and sovereignty which we believe are now inherent in the parliament of Canada. Times have changed and are changing and I think it is necessary that this parliament should endeavour to express itself with regard to all these matters as an assertion of its sovereignty in all matters which are normally within its jurisdiction.

There are other acts of a like character. There is the Army Act and the Naval Discipline Act of the United Kingdom, both of which extend to the whole empire. All dominion forces serving outside of the dominion are subject to the provisions of the Army Act and the regulations issued thereunder. The parliament of the United Kingdom has also provided for the extradition of accused persons from one part of the empire to another for trial. There is, for instance, the Fugitive Offenders Act, 1881, which provides for the arrest in any dominion of any person who is accused of the commission of an offence in any other of the dominions. We have dealt partially with this matter in the Canadian act, which is chapter 81 of the revised statutes of Canada. I suggest that that act should be extended still further by the assertion by this parliament of its legislative competence to deal with these matters.

Then there is the Admiralty Offences (Colonial) Act, 1849, which conferred on dominion or colonial courts the power to deal with crimes committed in the territorial waters of the dominion or colony. The Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act of 1878 makes provision with respect to offences committed by foreigners on foreign ships within the territorial waters of any dominion. The Naval Prize Act, 1864, and the Prize Court Act, 1894, provide for the constitution of prize courts in British dominions, colonies and possessions. The Slave Trade Act, 1873, for the suppression of the slave trade, extends to the whole empire and confers jurisdiction upon the vice-admiralty courts of the dominion.

There are other classes of cases which have the same special application to Canada and which restrict to a certain extent the legislative jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. Such are the International Copyright Act, 1886, and the Geneva Convention Act, 1911. A large number of these acts, which were passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom and with respect to which Canada has had up to the present no legislative jurisdiction by way of repeal or amendment, are not generally known. In the course of my professional practice I have had on one or two occasions to quote one or more of these acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom which are in force in this country, and I was astonished to find that the judges presiding in the courts had no idea that any such acts were in existence extending to and applicable to Canada.

Now that parliament has commenced the consideration of acts of the parliament of the United Kingdom which extend to and are applicable to Canada, I suggest that the Department of External Affairs or the Department of Justice or both should proceed at once to make a complete survey of all such acts and determine which should be retained either in their present or in an amended form. If they are not amended and thereby included in the statutes of Canada they should be repealed by act of the parliament of Canada. Those not repealed should then be compiled and published in a special volume for ready reference, so that all concerned with the administration of the law may be fully informed as to what the law is. I suggest with deference that in a number of our courts, both in Quebec and other provinces, the judges are not fully aware of the extent to which the laws of the parliament of the United Kingdom apply to Canada and are to be enforced by our courts, both in civil and in criminal matters. I suggest also that if this work is too onerous and too extensive for the Department of External Affairs—which has one or two officials whom I know to be thoroughly competent for work of this kind—and if the Department of Justice has so much work in hand that its officials cannot devote the time necessary to a compilation of these enactments and to the preparation of amending statutes, it would be proper for the Department of Justice to employ some competent lawyer—I would not object if he were of the Liberal faith and persuasion so long as he is capable—to make a compilation of these laws and place them before parliament in a way in which they can be effectively dealt with. In an address I made to this house some time about 1928, dealing with this matter, I stated, if I remember correctly, that I had found over a hundred statutes of the United Kingdom which dealt with matters of this kind.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I have a list of about one hundred and fifty.

Mr. CAHAN: Well, I remember that in the former discussion I said one hundred and fifteen, and my leader at the time remarked that on the previous occasion I had referred to the number as being about one hundred and fifty; but on this occasion, not having had the opportunity of reviewing the list, I referred to the smaller figure. I have no doubt that the number is over a hundred.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Of course many of them are the same measures, revised. For instance, there are many laws on the slave trade.

Mr. CAHAN: Quite so. The original act as amended is still in force. I suggest, therefore, very earnestly, that this matter be taken up. In expressing this opinion I think I may say that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett)—

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It is a good suggestion.

Mr. CAHAN: —is entirely in favour of the suggestion which I have made. In my opinion this parliament should again and again, at every opportunity, assert its sovereignty in regard to matters affecting the peace, order and good government of Canada which are within its legislative jurisdiction. We have emerged from the colonial status, whether the judicial committee of the privy council recognize the fact or not; and, when they decline to recognize it, it is absolutely necessary in the present temper of this country that they be brought to a condition of mind in which they cannot avoid cognizance of certain fundamental facts. One way of doing that is to proceed as I have suggested, although there are cumulative remedies which on an appropriate occasion I shall take pleasure in expounding in this house from my point of view. I have simply to say that I approve the principle of this bill.

There is one matter which I might mention now, and which I think will require further consideration. This bill is a criminal statute. It provides penalties for certain crimes. It also proceeds to deal with nationals of Canada who commit these breaches of the law. To mention that fact is to revert to a consideration which I have very much at heart, and that is the necessity and the advisability of an amendment and consolidation of the laws of Canada relating to Canadian nationality. In the consideration of the provisions of the treaty of peace at Versailles dealing with reparations and other matters I was brought face to face, week after week and month after month, with the fact that this parliament has never clearly expressed the meaning of Canadian nationality nor decided the qualities which apply to a Canadian national. Following up some work which had been done under the present prime minister before I came into office in 1930—he procured a professor of the law department of the university of Toronto to prepare a report in connection therewith—I attempted the preparation of a bill on Canadian nationality and submitted it to this house. But I was unable to proceed with the matter, for the reason that, while the permanent officials of the various departments of government are intelligent and of ripe experience in the administration of their departments, their minds are very obtuse indeed to the reception of new ideas which concern general public policy in matters only incidentally affecting their departments. I ran up against barriers which I could not overcome, and I was unable to accomplish what I had sought, the enactment of a comprehensive measure setting forth the qualifications of a Canadian national and the definition in express terms of Canadian nationality. I repeat that sometimes I fear we have more of the colonial spirit of inferiority than even our fathers and grandfathers had, and certainly the time has come in the history of this dominion when, if we seek to ascertain who are Canadians and who are Canadian nationals, we should be able to find it in some substantive enactment outside of the immigration act, the real purpose and intent of which is to exclude certain classes of people from obtaining domicile in Canada. Why we should be compelled to look to that act for a definition of who are Canadians, who are Canadian nationals, I cannot understand. I think it is a discreditable condition in which we find ourselves to-day. Canada has taken an important part in international affairs. Under the imperial conference resolutions of 1923 and 1926, and again at the imperial conference of 1930, we assumed a large part in the administration of external affairs relating to Canada. But we are now met by that same old imperial spirit, as expressed by certain members of His Majesty's Privy Council of England, who cannot understand that men of English descent and men of French descent whose forbears have been living in Canada for a century and more, and who are Canadians to the backbone, are not of the same inferior mental complex as all colonials were deemed to be a century and a half ago. The sooner we assert the sovereignty of Canada in all matters with which this parliament is competent to deal, the better I think it will be for this country —far better for the development of that national sentiment in Canada, which is absolutely necessary if we are to maintain cohesion among the various races and creeds and all sections of the dominion.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): With respect to a bill of this importance there seems to be no good reason why there should not be a full discussion on second reading. I regret that the government has introduced the measure at this time. At least in its present form, it may easily involve us in those European entanglements which ostensibly it seeks to avoid. Personally I am in favour of neutrality, but that neutrality must be thoroughgoing.

It seems to me that this bill has not been drawn with any great care. I do not know whether the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) is responsible for it: I am not reflecting upon him.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): We cannot please the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We are told that the Foreign Enlistment Act passed by the parliament of the United Kingdom in 1870 extends to Canada. I submit that the government might have done one of three things. They might simply have repealed that act as far as it extends to Canada; or they might have reenacted it just as it stood, as applying to Canada; or they might have improved upon it. In my opinion the bill as drawn is no improvement upon the British act; rather in addition to the principle underlying the British act it introduces one or two other principles that make it quite involved.

We are in favour of what I think is the principle of the bill, at least the principle of the British act, that is, to prohibit military assistance to the enemies of a friendly state. The explanatory note to section 3, which I take it indicates the principle of the bill, reads:

> This section makes it unlawful for a Canadian national to enlist anywhere, or for any person within Canada to induce any other person to enlist in the case of a foreign war, for service against a friendly state.

This undoubtedly involves control over our own nationals, and though we have not had many occasions on which to assert that control, I suggest that on the whole we must concede that at any rate, when the actions of Canadian nationals may involve us in international complications, the state must take control, or assume some power over their actions. The bill provides—I am inclined to think this is the original bill—for certain permits. Let me read section 3:

> If any person, without a permit, being a Canadian national, within or without Canada, accepts or agrees to accept any commission or engagement in the armed forces of any foreign state at war with any friendly foreign state, or, whether a Canadian national or not, within Canada, induces any other person to accept or agree to accept any commission or engagement in any such armed forces, such persons shall be guilty of an offence under this act.

This idea of permits is carried into the other sections as well. By this provision for permits I suggest that the government is given power virtually to nullify the purpose of the bill by allowing the very things which it is intended to prohibit. It must be noted that the bill itself makes no reference whatever to the conditions under which such permits may be issued.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Does not my hon. friend think that that question should be discussed in committee? To show him how much better it would be to leave to the committee stage the discussion of such points I may tell him that certain things will be omitted from the bill.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I want to discuss the principle of the bill as briefly as possible.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is not the principle.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It has to do with the principle of the bill because certain important matters are left to the discretion of the government—a procedure to which we are opposed. Further, there is a similar objection to section 19. This is important and should not be passed over at this stage. Section 19 reads:

(1) The governor in council may, from time to time, make orders and regulations relating to any or all of the following matters:

(a) the extension and application of the provisions of this act, with necessary modifications, to any case in which there is a state of armed conflict, civil or otherwise, either within a foreign country or between foreign countries.

(b) the issue of permits, the prescribing of conditions upon which permits may be issued, and the designation of the authority or authorities who may issue permits.

And so on. It strikes me that this government should be the last to advocate government by order in council. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said a few weeks ago, as reported at page 249 of Hansard:

Over and over again we have laid down the principle that so far as participation in war is concerned, it will be for the parliament of Canada to decide. Having taken that attitude with respect to participation, I think we might well take the same attitude with respect to neutrality.

I suggest to the government that this bill be brought into conformity with the principles laid down by the Prime Minister. The powers given to the government by section 19 to extend the provisions of the act are too wide, and certainly undefined. This is a delegation not to regulate but to legislate. Power should be given to apply the provisions of the act, not to extend them.

Further, in the event of civil war in a foreign country the act should be made to apply only when there has been prior recognition by his majesty's government in Canada of the insurgents as belligerents.

There is another point—and while it might be appropriately dealt with when we reach the relevant section, I think it is important to refer to it while discussing the purpose of the bill and the situations for which provision should be made. If enlistment, recruiting, and outfitting and use of ships are not permitted in aid of the armed forces at war with any friendly state, why should not the ban be extended to the sale of arms, munitions and implements of war or material essential to the manufacture thereof? In this connection I should like to quote a summary of the United States neutrality bill as approved by the senate. This summary is from the Montreal Gazette of March 4, 1937:

As soon as he should find that a state of war existed or that a civil war of such dimensions as to threaten the peace or neutrality of the United States was in progress, the following steps would automatically result:

1. An embargo would be placed on all shipments of arms, ammunition and implements of war, and all loans to all belligerents and to all factions in civil strife.

2. It would be unlawful for United States citizens to travel on ships of belligerent registry, except under such regulations as the president might prescribe.

3. All trade with belligerents would go upon a "cash-and-carry" basis. No goods of any kind could be shipped to them from this country except after all right and title therein had been transferred from American nationals to foreigners.

4. American ships could not legally transport to belligerents commodities designated by the president, presumably in accordance with belligerents' own proclamation of contraband of war.

We have before us a bill which no doubt is intended to keep us out of European difficulties. But we are simply prohibiting foreign enlistments; there is no thoroughgoing prohibition of arms and munitions. There is a mention in one case of ships, but prohibitory action is not extended to munitions of war.

A second principle emerges, which is quite different from the principle of the British act. It is contained in section 11, which makes it illegal to recruit or accept any commission or engagement in the armed forces of any foreign state, thus going much farther than the British act. Section 3 prohibits anyone from enlisting against a friendly state, but this goes farther and makes it illegal to recruit or accept any commission or engagement in the armed forces of any foreign state. Why should not prohibitions which are directed against assistance to states at war with friendly states also apply against assistance to rebels against a friendly state? An anomalous situation results. If I may quote the words of a friend who wrote to me with regard to this matter, he said:

All recruitment or inducement to enlist in favour of a friendly foreign power immediately becomes unlawful under this section. There is not even the qualification "without a permit" which applies to the unlawful action under section 3 dealing with aid to an enemy of a friendly state. The effect of section 11 is that while recruitment in aid of the armed forces of a friendly state is unlawful, recruitment in aid of the rebellious forces within the state is lawful.

Mr. CAHAN: Who is the author?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am stating it as my own. The memorandum is from a friend who wrote me in regard to this matter. This is a technical matter; I am not a lawyer, and for that reason I am using the words as given.

Mr. CAHAN: It might have more force if we knew who wrote it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I am letting the statement stand on its own merits.

Such an act is not forbidden by section 3, because it is not recruitment for a foreign state at war with a friendly power.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Again if my hon. friend would wait we might change this section to satisfy him.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am very glad to hear it.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I thought I told the hon. member I would.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, there is still another section.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): A speech having been prepared, it has to be delivered.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, it is not because it was prepared and has to be delivered. That remark is hardly fair. On account of the importance of the subject I did give some study to it, and asked one or two of my legal friends to advise me in regard to certain sections, and I think it is only fair that I should present the case at this stage, because the bill has to be considered as a whole; unless we give consideration to sections 11 and 19 we can hardly deal with the important section 3.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Why not wait until we reach those sections?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, as I have already said there are two or three principles involved. I wonder if I might be permitted to proceed for a few minutes more. I continue this statement:

Such an act is not forbidden by section 3, because it is not recruitment for a foreign state at war with a friendly power. It is not forbidden by section 11, because the enlistment is not "in the armed forces of the foreign state." Recruitment in aid of the armed forces of a friendly power is at all times unlawful, while recruitment in aid of the armed rebels within such a friendly power is lawful, and remains lawful unless power to declare otherwise is secured under section 19(1)(a). It is dubious whether such power is secured under 19(1)(a).

There is one other section which I think is very important. Section 14 takes away trial by jury. The explanatory note states that it is designed to enable the prosecuting authority to proceed summarily in the manner provided by part XV of the criminal code, in cases of minor importance. I suggest that this is not a matter of minor importance.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): This I will not change.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, I regret that we should here be deprived of the right of trial by jury in a very important matter. I hope the government will see its way clear to accept such amendments as will clarify the situation and provide for thoroughgoing neutrality, and that parliament, not the governor in council, shall decide whether our nationals shall engage in war.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Johnston (Lake Centre) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I wish to thank the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) for the illuminating address he gave this afternoon on the various enactments and statutes which apply to Canada. I thoroughly agree with him that the present anomalous situation should be remedied, and I believe his suggestion that this should be made a special undertaking is a good one. I do not know whether the advisers in the Department of External Affairs and the Department of Justice can do it properly in the limited time at their disposal, but someone will have to do it. I agree entirely with everything my hon. friend has said in that respect.

As far as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) is concerned, he says he is in favour of the principle of the bill, and I am pleased that he is. But I cannot agree with his statement that the bill permits things which should be prohibited, that it will make it easier to do things which should not be done. I understood my hon. friend to say that instead of restricting, the bill would permit certain things to be done.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If I may say so, I was dealing with section 3 and the following sections which contain the words "without a permit."

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): If my hon. friend could see the hundreds of telegrams I have received from people who are opposed to this bill he would see that they are not objecting because it gives them more freedom to enlist for service in European wars.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the minister explain the meaning of the words "without a permit"?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): We used those words because they are in the British act. They used the word "licence," but now the League of Nations has changed it to "permit," and that is the word we are using. The act would be made more rigid by removing those words "without a permit" in the various sections. So far as I am concerned I have no objection to that change. It will take away some flexibility, some elasticity in given cases which we cannot foresee, perhaps, but it may be better for the government not to be asked to issue permits; if they have not that power it will make it easier for them. So when the sections in question are reached I will move that those words be deleted. Meanwhile we will have to change section 2 accordingly, by striking out subsection (a), and another change may be required following the discussion of the other sections of the bill. I will ask that section 2 stand in the meantime.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Johnston, Lake Centre): Shall section 1 carry?

Mr. CAHAN: Has the minister decided that the government should not be able to license an enlistment under section 3, for instance? Certainly under the act in force throughout the British Empire since 1870 licences could be granted, and I can conceive of circumstances and conditions under which a licence or permit might hereafter be issued.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I think so, too.

Mr. CAHAN: I can conceive that. The government of the day must be responsible; it has to assume responsibility in such matters. I did not follow the reasoning of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in that respect. I think in a statute of this kind a certain amount of elasticity is necessary if justice is to be done under all circumstances and conditions.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I will ask that this section stand and that the question raised by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George be discussed on the other sections. I may say that my mind is open on the question, and I should like to hear the reasons that may be given in support of the request of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Section stands.

On section 3—Offence to enlist with a foreign state at war with a friendly state.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not know that I can do more than repeat what I have said already. If it is to be made illegal, as I think it should be, to enlist in the armed forces of any foreign state at war with a friendly state, I do not see why there should be any provision for a permit to do otherwise. It seems to me if that is to be illegal provision should not be made for the government to go against its own act. There should be no exemption at all. I can see no reason for a permit to enlist in the armed forces of a state at war with a friendly state.

Mr. CAHAN: Let me give an example. In the republic of Brazil we have had a large number of Canadian engineers professionally engaged in carrying out great undertakings. Yet by its own military law, unless that law has recently been changed, Brazil assumes the right forcibly to conscript the nationals of other countries temporarily domiciled in that state, and to compel such foreign subjects to take part in the wars of that state, either domestic or with another state. I am putting an extreme case, but should we visit upon such Canadian nationals the penalties imposed under this act? Should we say that they are committing a crime when they are forcibly enlisted by another country?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If it is done under duress it would hardly come under the provisions of this section, which says "accepts or agrees to accept."

Mr. CAHAN: Well, he accepts; he has to. This section says "Every person without a permit who accepts or agrees to accept any commission or engagement—."

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Surely that means a voluntary action.

Mr. CAHAN: My hon. friend takes that as meaning a purely voluntary action. Well, I doubt that, but let me go further. Under the English act licences were seldom granted, but throughout the years they have reserved the right to license British subjects to take part in foreign wars.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Against a friendly state?

Mr. CAHAN: There is hardly a war to which they do not send representatives of their own staff to participate. Russia and Japan were friendly states, yet the British government sent members of its own staff to participate not only in the naval conflicts but in the land conflicts as well in that war. They do that in every great war. There must be some latitude allowed; you must not make it so rigid that there is no possibility of allowing exemptions in individual cases.

Mr. MacNEIL: Did the members of the general staff participate as combatants in the wars to which the hon. gentleman has referred?

Mr. CAHAN: They certainly did; on occasion they had to in order to preserve their own lives.

Mr. DOUGLAS: With regard to the argument of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, staff observers accompanying some army are not there because they have enlisted in the forces of that foreign state. A staff officer acting in the capacity of an observer is something very different from a man who has enlisted or accepted enlistment in the services of that state. It seems to me that if we leave a loophole through which permits may be given which will nullify the very intent of the act, we will set a dangerous precedent. As I understand it, the clause in the British act with reference to licences was inserted at the time of the Franco-Prussian war, at a time of imperialistic expansion, when perhaps there was more interference in the wars of other countries than there is to-day. The whole situation has changed now, particularly with reference to Canada, whose desire to keep out of international entanglements is even stronger than the desire that existed in Great Britain in 1870. It seems to me we are setting a very dangerous precedent if we leave any loophole through which by the issuance of permits or licences, individuals or groups of individuals may be permitted to enlist in the service of a foreign state.

Mr. CAHAN: Medical officers from Montreal are at present enlisted with and engaged as part of the royalist service in Madrid. They are rendering surgical and medical aid and assistance, and form part of the forces and of the medical service of an army. Should that be prohibited?

Mr. DOUGLAS: That would depend entirely on the definition of "armed forces." Paragraph (c) of section 2 says:

> (c) "Armed forces" includes military, naval and air forces or services, combatant or non-combatant.

We are waiting to see what the minister has to say with reference to the definition of armed forces. I do not think the term "armed forces" has ever applied to the Red Cross or to medical services rendered in some other country for purely humanitarian reasons.

Mr. DUNNING: To medical services, yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS: In the last war the Swiss forces helped both sides. The Red Cross is recognized as a non-combatant.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, the Red Cross, but not the medical staffs of armies.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I believe people rendering humanitarian or medical services on either side—

Mr. DUNNING: No, it is strictly limited to the Red Cross.

Mr. DOUGLAS: That depends entirely on the definition of "armed forces." If we want to preserve the right to any country to send medical units to render humanitarian services, we can do so by dealing with paragraph (c) of section 2, rather than leaving in the words "without permit," which would cover military units.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: With reference to the suggestion of the hon. member to the effect that medical men looking after the wounded are not treated as combatants, may I refer to a clear example in the late war, about which I happened to know. I refer to Doctor Beland, who was a member of the Laurier government and of the House of Commons. When war was declared he was in Belgium, and he remained there. First he looked after Belgian wounded, and then, when the Germans came to Belgium, he went on with his work in the hospitals, helping the German wounded. Eventually, however, he was taken to Berlin and put into prison. Why? Because he had been a minister of the crown in Canada—at least, that was the reason given. Although he was not a combatant, and under international rules of war should not have been taken prisoner, he was imprisoned in Berlin and kept there for several years, during which time he was badly treated. So the hon. member is entirely wrong when he suggests that a medical man looking after the wounded may not be treated as a combatant.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Is it not true that the gentleman in question was a national of a country at war with Germany?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, that is right.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Chairman, I might as well deal with the matter immediately, because it is an important one. At the proper time we are going to move that paragraph (c) of section 2 be amended to read:

(c) "Armed forces" includes military, naval and air forces or services, combatant or non-combatant, but shall not include medical, nursing and other services engaged solely in humanitarian work, and which are under the control or supervision of the Canadian Red Cross Society or other recognized Canadian humanitarian society.

Canada is a party to the international convention for the amelioration of the condition of the sick and wounded in armies in the field. The Canadian ratification of this convention was deposited on February 20, 1933. Article 11 reads as follows:

A recognized society of a neutral country can only afford the assistance of its medical personnel and formations to a belligerent with the previous consent of its own government and the authorization of the belligerent concerned.

The belligerent who accepts such assistance is bound to notify the enemy thereof before making any use of it.

I think it is important that such medical units be under the control of the Red Cross, that relief of the suffering be impartial and that it apply not only to one side. The wounded in both sides of a conflict suffer. All who want to take part in the work of the Red Cross in a country where there is a war, civil or otherwise, should certainly be under the supervision and control of the Red Cross, to which there could be no objection. We want to remain outside these conflicts, and in any humanitarian work we want to deal equally with both sides.

Then there is a further reason for taking this stand. When collections of money are sought for only one side of the conflict, the requests are always accompanied by information showing only one side of the difficulty, a condition which I do not think is in accord with the spirit of neutrality. We must encourage anything humanitarian in scope, anything which will alleviate suffering, but I believe the work of Canadians who may want to devote themselves to the noble work of the Red Cross should be done impartially. Instead of having the word "Canada" on the cars and trucks, pictures of which I have seen in the papers, I believe the words "Red Cross" should appear. For these reasons, when we reach paragraph (c) I am going to move the amendment I have suggested.

Mr. MacLENNAN: Is the bill wide enough to cover enlistment in the Spanish civil war? I can see that it would prevent persons from enlisting on the side of the so-called rebels, but I cannot see that it would prevent enlistment to serve the government of Spain, if there is such a thing.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Section 19 of the bill will give to the governor in council power to extend and to apply provisions of the act, with the necessary modifications, to any case in which there is a state of armed conflict, civil or otherwise, either within a foreign country or between foreign countries. An order of the governor in council, by virtue of the provisions of the bill would apply to both sides of the conflict.

Mr. CAHAN: I understand section 2 is to stand.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It was to stand until we decided about the permit.

Mr. CAHAN: There is one other phase which might be considered. The exception made by the new definition suggested by the minister does not apply in the case of Canadian nationals who may enter the medical or surgical service of one of the countries at war.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): He would come under the definition of armed forces.

Mr. CAHAN: There are many countries to which the Red Cross does not effectively intervene and I am suggesting that there are cases where it should be within the power of the government of Canada, through official channels, to give a permit or a licence to a thoroughly qualified Canadian to enter the surgical or medical service of one of the combatants for strictly humanitarian purposes. I still urge that the word "permit" be retained in section 3.

Mr. STEWART: I think we were all helped considerably by the address of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). He pointed out the absence in our laws of a definition of a Canadian national. I appreciate the difficulty in arriving at such a definition and I should like to ask the Minister of Justice to let us have the wording of the corresponding section in the British Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It refers to British subjects.

Mr. STEWART: Of course that is a fairly well defined term. With the section standing, would it not be possible for the minister to draft a definition of a Canadian national, either complete in itself or by reference to some other act? This would clear up the matter and make prosecutions more successful.

Mr. CAHAN: That is given in chapter 21 of the revised statutes of Canada.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): We have already a definition in our statutes. Perhaps that might be improved, but until it is improved it stands as the law of Canada. Section 2 of the Canadian Nationals Act reads:

The following persons are Canadian nationals, viz:

(a) Any British subject who is a Canadian citizen within the meaning of the Immigration Act;

(b) The wife of any such citizen;

(c) Any person born out of Canada, whose father was a Canadian national at the time of that person's birth, or with regard to persons born before the third day of May, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-one, any person whose father at the time of such birth, possessed all the qualifications of a Canadian national, as defined in this act.

Under the Immigration Act, 1910, a Canadian citizen is defined as follows:

(b) "Canadian citizen" means

(i) a person born in Canada who has not become an alien;

(ii) a British subject who has Canadian domicile; or

(iii) a person naturalized under the laws of Canada who has not subsequently become an alien or lost Canadian domicile:

Provided that for the purpose of this act a woman who has not been landed in Canada shall not be held to have acquired Canadian citizenship by virtue of her husband being a Canadian citizen; either shall a child who has not been landed in Canada be held to have acquired Canadian citizenship through its father or mother being a Canadian citizen;

That would be the definition of a Canadian national as referred to in this bill.

Mr. STEWART: Would it not be well to state in this bill that a Canadian national shall be determined in that way?

Mr. CAHAN: Chapter 21 of the revised statutes leaves no doubt about that.

Mr. STEWART: I thought the hon. member was raising some question as to the meaning of a Canadian national.

Mr. CAHAN: It could be defined only by redrafting the statute.

Mr. STEWART: The Immigration Act contains a definition of the term.

[Mr. Stewart.]

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I must come back to the matter of the permit. There is something to be said for both sides. I suggest that the reason why the British act has been copied in that regard was to give more elasticity and flexibility to the legislation. On the other hand, it has been represented to the government, not only by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) but by others, that in certain circumstances too much discretion might be given to the government in the issuing of such permits. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would seem to be afraid some government might not be entirely impartial in that matter.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But this is permanent legislation.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I thank my hon. friend; I assume he means that he is not afraid at this time. This matter has been discussed extensively by the government and when my hon. friend intimates that the bill has not been carefully drafted, I must say that there has not been a bill presented this session which involved more preparation than the one now before us. The best officers in both departments have been working on it for a part of this session. We have now come to the conclusion that perhaps it is better to exclude the words "without a permit" and not leave it within the power of a government to issue licences to take part in these conflicts. I will ask my colleague to move an amendment accordingly.

Mr. MICHAUD: I move that section 3 of the bill be amended by striking out the words "without a permit" in line seven.

Mr. CAHAN: Section 4 of the Foreign Enlistment Act of the United Kingdom reads:

4. If any person, without the license of Her Majesty, being a British subject, within or without Her Majesty's dominions, accepts or agrees to accept any commission or engagement in the military or naval service of any foreign state at war with any foreign state at peace with Her Majesty, and in this act referred to as a friendly state, or whether a British subject or not within Her Majesty's dominions, induces any other person to accept or agree to accept any commission or engagement in the military or naval services of any such foreign state as aforesaid,—He shall be guilty of an offence against this act,

That statute has been in force since 1870, and so far as I can remember there has been no difficulty with regard to its administration. My own opinion is that it would be well to retain the form as we have it at present.

Mr. MacNEIL: This section, I understand, deals with enlistment in the armed forces of a foreign state at war with any friendly state. It is specific in that regard. I should like to ask the minister whether or not this section should also apply to the armed forces of insurgents within a friendly foreign state.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Well, that will be dealt with under subsequent sections.

Mr. MacNEIL: As I understand it, this is the section which covers enlistment.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes.

Mr. MacNEIL: I know of no other section under which any such provision could be made effective.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Of course it will have to be extended—or applied, because the word "extended" is objected to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth)—under section 19. There will have to be an order and regulation under section 19 to apply to an insurrection.

Mr. MacNEIL: I suggest to the minister that, as we have been specific with regard to "the armed forces of any foreign state at war with any friendly foreign state," and as this section deals with enlistment, there should be some specific provision dealing with insurgents rebelling against any friendly foreign state.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That will come as a result of the application of the act to civil war.

Mr. RYAN: The insurgents are members of the foreign state.

Mr. MacNEIL: This section prevents enlistment in the armed forces of enemies of a friendly foreign state. Should it not also apply to insurgent forces in any friendly foreign state?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It will have to be under section 19.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Subsection (g) of section 2 provides:

> "Foreign state" includes any foreign prince, colony, province or part of any province or people, or any person or persons exercising or assuming to exercise the powers of government in or over any foreign country, colony, province or part of any province or people.

"Foreign state" under that definition would not extend to cover an insurgent group, particularly prior to its having assumed any powers of government. That is, a power within a state preparing to rebel could, it seems to me, recruit Canadian nationals without their coming directly under this clause. It would clarify the situation to add at line 10, after the words "friendly foreign state," the words "or the armed forces of insurgents rebelling against a friendly foreign state." As it stands, it seems to fail to touch Canadian nationals joining insurrectionary forces within the confines of a friendly state. I wonder whether the minister would consider an amendment along that line.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I am afraid that that will only confuse the meaning of the act. It is clear as it is drafted, and in its application to a conflict such as there is in a country at the present time, it will clearly apply to both sides. I do not think this section should be amended as the hon. member suggests. It does not appear in the British act, and, as the hon. member knows, the British act is applied at the present time to both sides.

Mr. MacNEIL: We may not be making ourselves clear to the minister, but, as I interpret the section, it would be quite unlawful for me to enlist in the armed forces of a foreign state at war with a friendly state. That is clearly stated. In that event I would become an offender under this act.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes, when there is a state of war between the two.

Mr. MacNEIL: But under the section it remains unlawful for me to enlist in the armed forces of insurgents against a friendly foreign state. It seems to me that that is highly inconsistent; it is not good law. I cannot see why the minister should not be willing to include in the section a provision making it unlawful for a Canadian national to enlist in the armed forces of insurgents against a friendly foreign state, thus placing such enlistment in the same category as enlistment for service against a friendly foreign state as defined in the bill.

Mr. RYAN: I cannot agree with the contention put forward by hon. members on the other side. If you attempt to define insurgency arising in any particular state you are apt to get into very serious difficulties. There might be an uprising which would not amount to war; later the movement might develop into civil war and conditions might arise requiring the minister of justice to take action; under such circumstances he could act under the powers conferred by section 19. I think the section covers the situation sufficiently and that it would not be wise to include references to some state which may have trouble within its own borders. The section is well worded, and I have no doubt the Minister of Justice has given it serious consideration. He has had the advice of his law officers, and it is hardly competent for us, without any serious consideration of the matter, to suggest forthwith some amendment of this section of the bill.

Mr. MacNEIL: I assure my hon. friend that I am not speaking without careful consideration, and I have such advice from men of experience in the legal profession; it is their opinion that an addition such as the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Douglas) has suggested, should be made. This is a permanent statute, and it places too much responsibility on the government to assume discretionary powers with regard to civil conflict within another nation. As to the definition of civil conflict, one in the form proposed by my colleague would, I suggest, meet the situation. I think that the inconsistency of the section as it stands is clear. This is one of the governing sections of the statute. It is unlawful for me to enlist in the armed forces of a foreign state at war with another foreign state, yet it continues to be lawful for me to enlist in the armed forces of insurgents within a friendly foreign state. Surely the inconsistency must be apparent. It is not so much a question of legal technicalities as a matter of common sense. The minister apparently pins his hope to a definition under section 19 of the jurisdiction of the government in such matters, but I refer him to the terms of section 19, which gives discretionary powers. It is extremely dangerous to attempt to exercise discretionary power, or to define without bias what is civil conflict, when the government is actually confronted with a state of civil conflict. Inasmuch as we are dealing with a permanent statute it is essential to give a proper definition, and "rebellion" or "insurgency" or "insurrection"—any of those terms could be used. They are clearly understood; they are defined, I understand in international law, and the inconsistency can easily be removed.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That shows that there should be some elasticity and some flexibility in this matter. If we agree to what my hon. friend suggests, at what time will a trouble become an "insurrection" or a "civil war" to meet the conditions mentioned in the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Weyburn? The Foreign Enlistment Act has always been for the purpose of preventing British subjects from enlisting and fighting in the army of a foreign state which is at war with a state friendly to his majesty. This will go further than that; although the British government, not by order in council but by a statement issued a few weeks ago, declared that the Foreign Enlistment Act applies to the present conflict in Spain. There had been discussions about this matter in the British press and some legal gentlemen claimed that the Foreign Enlistment Act did not apply to a case of civil war. But the British authorities at this time have given warning to all British subjects that it does apply to both sides of the conflict. The question arises, however: at what time does the trouble assume the proportions of a conflict so serious as to justify other countries in considering it a case of civil war or a rebellion in the sense suggested by my hon. friend. In international law it is not as clear as he suggests. I could quote precedents on both sides. It is extremely difficult to ascertain when the trouble has become an insurrection that is recognized by other countries.

Then there are conditions under which war practically exists without having been declared. We saw that situation in China and Japan a few years ago in connection with Manchukuo, and then we saw it in Ethiopia. Italy did not declare war on Ethiopia; she described it as a territorial adventure, or expansion. That is one of the main reasons why it is important that the government should be given the power which we seek in section 19, to be able at a given point to declare that a conflict, such as the trouble in Manchukuo, in Ethiopia or elsewhere, has developed to such an extent as to be a threat to the peace of other nations. At such a time it will be for the governor in council to apply the provisions in this act to a conflict of that sort and prohibit Canadians from taking part in it.

In my opinion the bill as drafted covers everything, and my hon. friend's suggestion instead of helping would make it more difficult because it would not then be for the governor in council, in the light of the conditions that might exist at the time, to apply the act to a particular armed conflict. It would be difficult to determine at what stage this amendment could apply.

Mr. MacNEIL: I presume it is the minister's intention to restrain Canadian nationals from enlisting in armed forces of any insurgents in order that this country may not be involved in any entanglements in a foreign conflict.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Absolutely.

Mr. MacNEIL: Does the minister envision any particular instance of armed rebellion within any friendly state where an exception might be made or where no restraint would be placed on Canadian nationals enlisting in the armed forces of insurgents?

Mr. CAHAN: The question whether armed forces are insurgent or are government forces depends upon the recognition by Canada of a state as the government or of the forces as insurgent. That may change in the twinkle of an eye; it is a matter within the discretion of the government of the United Kingdom in any case. We might have a long discussion as to how far recognition would be within the discretion of the government of Canada under a recent decision, but circumstances change from day to day, from week to week, and the government must always be at liberty to determine whether a sit-down strike in any foreign country is an insurgency or whether it has reached that stage when rioters have become an insurgent force.

Mr. MacNEIL: I am speaking of armed insurgency.

Mr. CAHAN: The sit-down strikers seem to be armed in most cases. At any rate some of their deeds result in conflict, and whether they carry bludgeons or pistols does not decide the issue. The insurgents may become the loyalist forces by the recognition by the government of the United Kingdom of the insurgent party as the controlling government force, or vice versa. There must be a discretion vested in the government.

Mr. MacNEIL: Would not that then become a friendly foreign state if the insurgent force conquered?

Mr. CAHAN: I do not think that without knowledge of the actual conditions and the facts you can draw a line. If you have a government in this country you must give it authority to exercise a certain discretion in complicated cases. You cannot tie down by a rigid statute the government's decision in every complicated case that may arise in international affairs. You must have a government that takes responsibility. You cannot call this parliament together simply because a question arises as to whether a certain band of insurgents, although armed, should be regarded thereafter as the loyalist forces. Parliament cannot be convened on every such occasion, and you must give the government of the country discretion. If you have a government which you are confident will not exercise proper discretion the sooner you vote against it the better; but there is human frailty everywhere, even in governments. In drafting a statute such as this you must assume that the government of your country will exercise a reasonable discretion in dealing with such matters in accordance with the exigencies of special occasions as they arise.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I do not want to labour the matter, but it is not a question of not having confidence in the government. Legislation is of no value in this regard unless you indicate the lines along which you desire the government to act.

Mr. CAHAN: You cannot now do that by statute.

Mr. DOUGLAS: The Minister of Justice touched on the very point when he talked about the powers of discretion and the question of determining when there exists an insurgency or a civil war. It seems to us in this group that it places too great a responsibility on the government and too much discretionary power in their hands to have them make that decision. What is suggested is that the participation at any time by Canadian nationals in the forces of any group who are insurgents or even preparing to be insurgents shall be unlawful. As it stands now we are saying that it is permissible for a Canadian national to participate in an armed rebellion up to a certain point until such time as the Canadian government declares that this act operates against such participation. If it were placed in the statute, at any time it would be illegal for a Canadian national to participate in any armed revolt against a friendly state. As to the difficulty the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) brings out in reference to deciding which is the government and which the insurgents, as they may vary from time to time, the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. MacNeil) pointed out that the government that is recognized by his majesty's government is the friendly state; those at war with that government are armed insurgents, and any Canadian national enlisting in the forces of such a body is breaking the laws of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): We want to prevent that.

Mr. DOUGLAS: But we shall not prevent it if we say that the Canadian government must exercise its discretion at some time in the future rather than have the provision included in the act.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): What is the practical purpose of my hon. friend's objection? Does he think it would be permissible to enlist on one side and not on the other?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is as it stands.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Not at all. It would not apply there. If the conflict is not of such a kind that the provisions of the act apply to it, there would be no intervention on one side or the other. When it is of that kind, and one side, the government side if you like, comes under this provision, the other side comes under it as well. This legislation is to prevent enlistment in the armed forces of a country at war with another country. If it applies to a war within one country because of an order under section 19, surely my hon. friends have never had it in mind that the government would apply it only to one side. It is discussing an absurdity; it could not be.

Mr. DOUGLAS: No, no.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Then what is the object of this discussion?

Mr. DOUGLAS: The point is not that we are afraid it would be applied to one side and not the other, but that it should not be left to the government to apply it at all.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It has to be.

Mr. DOUGLAS: It should be applied from the beginning, not at the discretion of the government.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Let me quote from a very able article in Foreign Affairs of January, 1937, by Philip C. Jessup, on The Spanish Rebellion and International Law, discussing the present conflict over there. I quote only two or three sentences, to show that the matter is not so clear as my hon. friends seem to think it is.

> The importance and difficulty of distinguishing between a mere internal disturbance and an actual case of civil war is indicated by the Brazilian case of 1930.

This act is not to apply to any little disturbance in other countries. He quotes many instances where governments have decided that both sides were belligerents and where they decided that they were not. Then he continues:

> If the insurgents have reached a very considerable degree of organization and stability, and if they are contending on more or less equal terms with the forces of the established government, they may attain the status of belligerency. If their belligerency is recognized, they thereupon acquire the same rights which are granted to a sovereign state when it is at war. In other words, recognized belligerents may establish blockades, may visit and search ships of third powers on the high seas, may seize and confiscate contraband goods, and the like.

Here is something that is interesting to Canada:

> As an example of a formal recognition of a state of civil war bringing into play the obligations of neutrality, reference may be made to President Van Buren's proclamation of January 5, 1838, during the course of an insurrection in Canada: "Whereas information having been received of a dangerous excitement on the northern frontier of the United States in consequence of the civil war begun in Canada . . . any person who shall compromit the neutrality of this government by interfering in an unlawful manner with the affairs of the neighbouring British provinces, will render themselves liable to arrest and punishment under the laws of the United States. . . ." President McKinley's proclamation of June 12, 1895 was similar; he recited that Cuba was "the seat of civil disturbances, accompanied by armed resistance to the authority of the established government of Spain" and admonished all persons in the United States to respect our neutrality laws.

It is more or less a question of fact—the conditions as they exist in the conflict which distinguish between a state of war and belligerency or a dangerous insurrection. It is a matter which must be left to the discretion of the government. We cannot foresee and by an amendment of this kind deal with all cases that may arise. Particularly is this so when there is no advantage one way or the other; it applies to both sides. When it is provided that Canadian nationals cannot enlist in a war, civil or otherwise, which is raging somewhere, obviously it applies to both sides. Then why this discussion?

Mr. MacNEIL: As the section reads it is not stated that it is unlawful for me, for instance, to participate in armed insurgency within a friendly state.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): As the section reads it applies as between two foreign countries.

Mr. MacNEIL: It has no reference to civil conflict?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Not that section.

Mr. RYAN: Hon. members overlook the fact that violation of this act is made an indictable offence. I suggest that if this amendment is carried, any lawyer would have difficulty in drafting a charge with these words, and it would not be susceptible of proof.

Mr. CAHAN: Why not use the same terms as in section 4, in determining what is a friendly state? Section 4 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, says:

> . . . service of any foreign state at war with any foreign state at peace with Her Majesty, and in this act referred to as a friendly state, . . .

We have not defined "friendly state"; why should we not define it in the terms of the British Foreign Enlistment Act—"a friendly state is any foreign state at peace with his majesty"?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It could be done, but I do not believe it would change the meaning of the section.

Mr. CAHAN: It would clearly define a friendly state as a foreign state at peace with his majesty.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I will consider that when we come to section 2 again.

On section 4—Offence to quit or intend to quit Canada to enlist.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): There is a similar amendment to be moved to this section.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Johnston, Lake Centre): Mr. Michaud moves that section 4 be amended by striking out the words "without a permit" in line 15.

Section 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Owner of conveyance may be guilty of an offence.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): There is a similar amendment to be moved to this section.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Johnston, Lake Centre): Mr. Michaud moves that section 6 be amended by striking out the words "without a permit" in line 33.

Mr. CAHAN: You could not ship some criminals out of the country; it would be an offence if the criminal you sent out of the country went on and enlisted.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): We want to keep them and deal with them here.

Mr. CAHAN: I suppose so, but you may not be able to carry out your immigration act to the full extent.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 7—Offences.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): There is an amendment to this section, striking out the same words and adding other words which are in the British act.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Johnston, Lake Centre): Mr. Michaud moves that section 7 be amended by striking out the words "without a permit" in line 44, and by adding thereto immediately after the word "act" in line 20 on page 3 the following proviso:

Provided that a person building, causing to be built, or equipping a ship in any of the cases aforesaid, in pursuance of a contract made before the commencement of such war as aforesaid, shall not be deemed to have committed an offence under this act, if, forthwith, upon a proclamation of neutrality or any other proclamation notifying or bringing into operation the provisions of this act, he gives notice to the clerk of the privy council that he is so building, causing to be built, or equipping, such ship, and furnishes such particulars of the contract and of any matters relating to or done, or to be done under the contract, as may be required by the clerk of the privy council, and, if he gives such security and takes and permits to be taken such other measures if any as the President of the Privy Council may prescribe for insuring that such ship shall not be despatched, delivered or removed, or otherwise dealt with, without the permission in writing of the President of the Privy Council, until the termination of such war as aforesaid.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): This is exactly the proviso that is in the British act, except that the words "Secretary of State" are replaced in this amendment by "President of the Privy Council."

Mr. CAHAN: Why should we not leave it to the Secretary of State? The duties of the clerk of the privy council are restricted, and he is not the proper person to receive representations of that kind. With respect to the department of state you have the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but as this is an internal matter notice to the Secretary of State of Canada should be quite sufficient. In scores of cases we have reports made to the Secretary of State which he immediately brings to the attention of the governor in council. I do not think the clerk of the privy council is the proper person to attend to this.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I will tell my hon. friend why it has been placed under the control of the President of the Privy Council. Anything that relates to war is a very important matter, and it was thought better to leave it under the Prime Minister, or the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. CAHAN: Then make it the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but certainly not the clerk of the privy council. I protest against that.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I will accept the suggestion of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George.

Mr. CAHAN: And then it should not be dealt with by the President of the Privy Council but by the governor in council.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Instead of the clerk of the privy council I suppose it ought to be the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. CAHAN: It should be the Secretary of State for External Affairs. That is the term. Sometimes when he is absent it goes as a matter of course through the under-secretary, but there may be an acting secretary of state for external affairs.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I think that is an improvement.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Johnston, Lake Centre): The amendment now reads:

Provided that a person building, causing to be built, or equipping a ship in any of the cases aforesaid, in pursuance of a contract made before the commencement of such war as aforesaid, shall not be deemed to have committed an offence under this act, if, forthwith, upon a proclamation of neutrality or any other proclamation notifying or bringing into operation the provisions of this act, he gives notice to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that he is so building, causing to be built, or equipping, such ship, and furnishes such particulars of the contract and of any matters relating to or done, or to be done under the contract, as may be required by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and, if he gives such security and takes and permits to be taken such other measures if any as the Secretary of State for External Affairs may prescribe for insuring that such ship shall not be despatched, delivered or removed, or otherwise dealt with, without the permission in writing of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, until the termination of such war as aforesaid.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS: It seems to me this section might go much further, in view of the fact that the object of the bill is to prevent our getting into any foreign complications by reason of the participation of our nationals in any foreign war or by reason of our ships being used for war purposes. I believe it ought to extend to the shipping of munitions and war material. After all, the number of Canadians likely to participate in any conflict in any part of the world is relatively small, but Canada is recognized as an important source of raw material, particularly war material. In any future war it is very likely that a blockade will be one of the principal weapons used to subdue an adversary, and that the object of one opponent will be to cut off the supplies of the other, or if possible destroy his base of supplies. In view of the fact that Canada is a foremost source of supply for raw materials I think the Minister of Justice might consider something along that line.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I realize the importance of the suggestion made by my hon. friend, but that does not properly come within the question of enlistment. That is the situation under the British Act as well. The whole question of the export of munitions will be dealt with in amendments to the Customs Act. It does not properly come under this legislation.

Mr. DOUGLAS: May I point out that although the act deals with enlistments, under subsection (c) of section 19 we deal with the seizure, detention and disposition of conveyances, goods and merchandise.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes, relating to this act.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Since this bill deals with goods, merchandise and ships, could it not apply also to war materials, particularly to munitions?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I may assure my hon. friend that for the effective legal working of these matters it is better to deal with that in separate legislation.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Will something of that nature be done?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It is being considered.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is hardly good enough. In this case, as in so many others, we are taking the power to determine what certain individuals may do but at the same time continuing to permit other people to make money out of the distress of those in warring countries. I do think we ought to have some assurance from the minister that, under circumstances in which enlistment would be prohibited, copper, nickel and material of that sort will not be allowed to reach those who are at war with a friendly foreign state. To me that is a reasonable proposal. We are prohibiting the sending of men, but we are not prohibiting the sending of copper or nickel, and the making of all the money that can be made out of it. The sending of materials of war is likely to involve us in international complications.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It cannot be done under this legislation.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As my hon. friend (Mr. Douglas) suggests, it is possible, because there is mention of it in paragraph (c) of section 19. All I would like to have is the assurance from the minister that provision will be made in another act.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I am in charge of this measure having to do with the Foreign Enlistment Act. The other matter will be one of government policy, and the decision in connection therewith will have to be made by the government. I have no authority to tell the hon. member anything else.

Mr. MacNEIL: Would the minister explain in what respect the authority of this act will be invoked to deal with the goods and merchandise, as suggested in paragraph (c) of subsection 1, section 19? As I read it, the government proposes to assume the power to make orders and regulations with respect to the seizure, detention and disposition of conveyances, goods and merchandise. That might be construed to apply to goods and merchandise intended for use in armed conflict abroad.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): We will deal with that when we reach section 19.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 8 agreed to.

On section 9—Arming or equipping ships for foreign state at war.

Mr. MICHAUD: I move the following amendment:

That section 9 of the said bill be amended by striking out the words "without a permit" in line thirty-three.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 10—Outfitting expedition against friendly state. Offence.

Mr. MICHAUD: I move the following amendment:

That section 10 of the said bill be amended by striking out the words "without a permit" in line forty-two.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS: I do not want the minister to think I am labouring the point unnecessarily; possibly I am unusually dense to-day. I must point out however that in section 9 we dealt with ships. I should like the minister to explain why he would prohibit the use of Canadian ships by some enemy national or a foreign state at war with a friendly state, and yet permit the shipping of nitrates used in high explosives. If the Foreign Enlistment Act applied only to the enlistment of men, I could understand it; but section 9, and possibly section 10, apply to the use of ships. If the sections apply to ships, why not to high explosives?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That would be different altogether. The section specially provides for the prevention of an expedition, and makes it unlawful to prepare or to fit out an expedition of ships or otherwise. The intention is to prevent citizens from leaving Canada to fight in a foreign country at war. Ships may be belligerents as well as men.

Mr. DOUGLAS: The bill would apply only to ships carrying soldiers, or potential armed troops?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes.

Mr. HAYHURST: Why not include aeroplanes?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It applies to air expeditions as well.

Section agreed to.

On section 11—Recruiting.

Mr. MacNEIL: May I point out that the section deals exclusively with recruiting.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I shall present an amendment which may meet any objection.

Mr. MICHAUD: I move in amendment the following:

That section 11 of the said bill be amended by adding thereto immediately after the word "state" in line four, the following words: "or other armed forces operating in such state."

Mr. MacNEIL: Is it the minister's understanding that the amendment deals with armed insurgency within any state?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: I suggest that we consider the provision:

Provided, however, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to the action of foreign consular or diplomatic officers or agents in enlisting persons who are nationals of the countries which they represent, and who are not Canadian nationals in conformity with the regulations of the governor in council.

That does restrict it to the operation of consuls or agents within certain limits defined by the governor in council. But certainly I am not in favour of giving legal effect to certain operations which have taken place in Canada in very recent years with regard to the enlistment for service in foreign states of persons domiciled in Canada. The difficulty has arisen chiefly in view of the fact that certain foreign states do not recognize certificates of nationalization granted in Canada. The result was that, as Secretary of State, for four or five years I declined to grant certificates of naturalization to aliens resident in Canada and otherwise qualified, unless they obtained from the foreign government to which they formerly paid allegiance a certificate of the renunciation of their allegiance. I do not wish to name certain governments, but it must be known to every hon. member that in recent times certain foreign governments have undertaken widespread propaganda and preparation for the enlistment of their former subjects, resident in Canada, for service in foreign armies. I believe any regulations made should be very severe indeed. Propaganda such as has been carried on in the last few years is most injurious and prejudicial to the development of a Canadian national spirit among those immigrants from foreign countries who are domiciled in Canada, many of whom in times past have applied for and obtained certificates of naturalization in Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad the hon. member has raised the question. In the last few years I have had a good many complaints sent to me from various sections in Canada that we describe as foreign communities—

Mr. CAHAN: Foreign language communities.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes. The complaints have been to the effect that a great deal of pressure has been put upon them by their consuls. A great many of those people came to Canada to become Canadian citizens. Their naturalization has not been granted or has not been recognized by their own countries, and the result in the event of an international dispute would be that in these large communities there would be much trouble. In some sections of Canada there are considerable numbers of Italians, and in other sections we find Germans, Ukrainians, and persons of other nationalities. While I firmly believe most of them want to be loyal to Canada, yet they would be placed in an awkward position if a clause of this kind were put on the statute books.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Of course, hon. members will see that this applies only to the nationals of the countries represented by consuls or diplomatic officers. These foreign diplomats, consuls or ministers may recruit only their own nationals for the armies of the lands they represent.

Mr. CAHAN: If they would just confine it to that.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The words are "who are nationals of the countries which they represent, and who are not Canadian nationals." This privilege, if you want to call it that, is recognized in other countries, but I think it should be made as difficult as possible to exercise these activities. However, I do not think we should go to the extent of making a criminal of the consul general of a friendly country who asks his fellow-nationals to complete their military service. Those nationals might be under an obligation of military service so long as they are nationals of that particular country. If they do not complete their service they may not be permitted to return and might be subjected to penalties, and all that sort of thing. I do not think my hon. friend should ask that we make criminals of these representatives, but I think their activities should be circumscribed within certain limits by regulations of the governor in council.

Mr. DOUGLAS: It means that many people are placed in an awkward situation I had a man come up to my room the other day who is from my own constituency. He came to Canada in 1923 from a country in Europe. He has moved around from one part of the country to another, working in lumber camps and so forth, and has never taken out naturalization papers. He was in the east for the purpose of getting married and had intended going back to Saskatchewan. He told me that several inducements had been held out to him by a consular agent to go back to his own country. My advice to him was to take out Canadian naturalization papers, but he had not gained a domicile in any particular locality because of his movements. It does not seem right to me that a man who has lived in Canada and who intends to make his future home in this country should be bothered in this way. In some cases it amounts almost to bullying by foreign consuls.

Section as amended agreed to.

Sections 12 and 13 agreed to.

On section 14—Penalties.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This is one of the sections to which I called attention when I spoke on the second reading. It practically takes away the right of trial by jury. It permits the prosecuting attorney to proceed summarily in the manner provided by Part XV of the criminal code. The crime which we are creating here is not a minor crime, and a man faced with a serious crime should have the fullest possible protection.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The hon. member would make the treatment more lenient?

Mr. CAHAN: The difficulty is that on occasions such as this there is bound to be a division of opinion as to the issue involved. Under our system, where the jury must be unanimous, it would be almost impossible to obtain a conviction. If it is left to a judge, the judge will decide the case strictly in accordance with the law. For instance, there is a definite cleavage in opinion right across the continent with regard to the civil strife in Spain. I am old enough to remember our boys in western Nova Scotia coming back from the civil war in the United States in a condition much worse than those who came back from the war in Europe. Anaesthetics were not known or used at that time. In western Nova Scotia, where I was born and bred, the young men went out and enlisted in the northern army, while the sailors along the shore served in ships which were running and evading the blockade against southern ports. These ships were carrying cotton to England, where it was sold in the textile markets at enhanced prices. In a war of that kind there is bound to be a decided division of domestic sentiment. I can remember how as a lad I used to go to the post office every night and wait until nine, ten, or eleven o'clock to get the latest daily paper which came in by coach, in order to see the progress of the Franco-Prussian war. We were watching the progress at Gravelotte, and Sedan and were interested in what the communists were doing in Paris. The whole community was divided in sentiment. There were staid and sober citizens who would gladly have fought on one side, while other equally staid and sober and religious citizens would have gladly fought on the other. I think it would be just as well to have these cases withdrawn from the jury and decided by a judge in strict accordance with the law.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would not that argument apply against all trials by jury?

Mr. CAHAN: No. I have had considerable experience in years past in a professional capacity, and I think I can say that with very few exceptions the great body of our people are in favour of proper and impartial administration of our criminal law.

Mr. MacNEIL: What is meant by summary prosecutions? Does that mean that the case will be dealt with by a judge sitting in a criminal assize, or will it be considered by a magistrate in police court or by two justices of the peace?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Under part XV of the criminal code it could be dealt with by a magistrate or by two justices of the peace.

Mr. MacNEIL: This is a very serious offence, the offender being liable to two years' imprisonment. I think we should make sure that the man will be brought before a judge as we understand the term.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The accused would always have the right of appeal to a judge of a superior tribunal. There are many sections of the code which provide for trial in this manner, and offences under the customs act are treated in the same way.

Section agreed to.

Sections 15 to 18 inclusive agreed to.

On section 19—Orders in council.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): There is an amendment which I shall ask my colleague to move.

Mr. MICHAUD: I move:

That section 19 of the said bill be amended by striking out the first eleven lines of the said section and substituting therefor the following:

"19. (1) The governor in council may, from time to time, by order or regulation provide for any or all of the following matters:—

(a) the application of the provisions of this act, with necessary modifications, to any case in which there is a state of armed conflict, civil or otherwise, either within a foreign country or between foreign countries."

By striking out the letter (c) in line one on page six and substituting therefor the letter (b);

By striking out the letter (d) in line three on page six and substituting therefor the letter (c);

By striking out the letter (e) in line six and substituting therefor the letter (d);

By striking out the letter (f) in line eight and substituting therefor the letter (e).

Mr. MacNEIL: Subsection (b) is being deleted?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes, and because of that we have to change the lettering of the other subsections.

Mr. MacNEIL: Would it not be wise to introduce a proviso to the effect that this should be given application only when there has been a prior recognition of the insurgents as belligerents by his majesty's government in Canada? It seems to me that we should attempt there to define belligerency so that the regulations may be more clearly framed.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I do not think so. In my opinion the section gives all the powers necessary to make it applicable to the conflict. I do not think we should intervene in the way suggested by the hon. member; that is, by declaring that parties in a conflict are belligerents. We simply declare that we do not want our nationals to take part in these troubles. To recognize their status, what they are or what they are not, would seem to me to be arrogating to ourselves a little too much importance, and, more particularly, to be intervening in things which do not concern us to that degree. We do not want our country to be involved or our nationals to create a situation which might endanger the peace of Canada. Why should we declare that rebels in the country of the government which they attack are belligerents? I think the League of Nations might attend to that question before Canada does by her own action.

Mr. MacNEIL: May I inquire of the minister how this subclause may be interpreted?

(f) The issue, restriction, cancellation and impounding of passports, whether within Canada or elsewhere, to the extent to which such action is deemed by him to be necessary or expedient for carrying out the general purposes of this act.

It seems to me that here the government is assuming extraordinary powers. I do not know of any precedent for such interference with civil liberties. It strikes me that under this section the government might even impound a passport on suspicion, if they deemed it expedient. The other provisions of the act are clearly defined, and if a man commits an offence under them he is liable to the penalties provided. I cannot see any necessity for this particular clause, enabling the government to proceed as may be deemed expedient, merely on suspicion, without any concrete evidence, and especially in view of the fact that regulations dealing with the matter of passports are elsewhere provided.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): If this were only a legislative gesture I might agree with the hon. member. But it is a serious matter. We do not want our people to go abroad and fight in these conflicts, and one of the best ways to prevent them is through the control of passports. Of course, a young Canadian may slip across the border in order to enlist in one of these armed conflicts, and if he cannot be caught before he leaves Canada, there is a reasonable expectancy, if we are empowered to interfere with the passport, that he will be stopped somewhere en route. As a matter of fact, within a couple of months we have in two instances cancelled passports which were granted through false representations. One case was that of a young man in my own constituency who succeeded in getting a passport upon a member of the clergy agreeing to be responsible for him, but who afterwards stated that his assistance had been obtained by false representations. We cancelled the passport. Another man, named I believe Leclair, obtained a passport under somewhat similar circumstances and got as far as France; he was there arrested, and can proceed no further with that passport.

If we do not have the power contained in this provision there will be many who will certainly evade this legislation. The hon. member says it is an invasion of liberty. Certainly to some extent the bill, from the first line to the last, is an invasion of liberty; but it is for the good of the country. Salus populi suprema lex: the state does not desire to be involved in difficulties. I believe the hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Taylor) will be pleased with this allusion in a language he speaks so well!

As far as the issuing of passports is concerned, consider our position in the present conflict. If the provisions of this bill apply to this conflict, and if we have the right under this subsection to grant passports to people for travel in any country in the world except Spain, this particular provision will be a great help in the enforcement of this act. Without it, I fear much of the effect of the legislation will be lost.

Mr. MacNEIL: Perhaps the minister has missed my point. I agree that anyone who makes false representations to the department should have his passport cancelled, and I think the minister said that that power has already been exercised, that it exists under another statute.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes.

Mr. MacNEIL: But I should like some assurances from the minister that the well-known principles of British justice will not be contravened under cover of this section, and that a man's guilt will not be assumed until it has been established. We are anxious to avoid interference with the movements of people who are innocent of any intent to contravene the act, and who may be travelling for proper purposes to European countries where no conflict exists, and who have given no just cause for suspicion.

The phrasing of this particular section is important. Either because of suspicion or because some departmental officer might deem it expedient, a man might be held up and subjected to a great deal of inconvenience. That would be quite unjust, and it should be made clear that no action can be taken until some evidence is produced to show that there is an intent to break the provisions of the act.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I can give my hon. friend that assurance. I may tell him that every precaution will be taken to make sure that the legitimate liberties of Canadian nationals will not be interfered with. On the other hand, the government must certainly have this power in connection with the issuing of passports.

Mr. MacNEIL: If a man's passport is cancelled, or if his application is refused, will he be given an opportunity to appear before the department before his application is finally rejected, so that all the evidence may be properly reviewed?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is a discretion that rests with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I do not think we should make that any easier in legislation which purports to be stricter, in view of the circumstances for which it is enacted.

Mr. MacNEIL: There are some cases in which it has been alleged that applications for passports have been refused and the reason has not been revealed. I submit that the reason should be communicated to the applicant so that if any injustice is done he can produce evidence in refutation of any improper charge that may be brought against him.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I will direct my hon. friend's remarks to the attention of the Secretary of State.

Mr. CAHAN: They are definitely refused in certain cases. I do not think that the passport office knowingly grants a passport to a naturalized citizen of Canada who is going to his former country if that country does not recognize his certificate of naturalization. In such cases the passport office is bound to refuse a passport, because a passport when issued and held by a British subject domiciled in Canada is a clear evidence that all the power than can be brought to bear by Canada will be exercised to enforce respect for his person and to ensure his security when he is abroad.

Mr. MacNEIL: I suggest that in subsection 2, line 15, there be substituted for the word "the" the words "a subsequent" so that the subsection would read:

> Such orders and regulations shall be published in the Canada Gazette, and shall take effect from the date of such publication or from a subsequent date specified for such purpose . . .

I think it is generally agreed that it is poor law to make the provisions of an act retroactive. This is a minor matter but it will ensure that the provisions of the act will not be given retroactive effect.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I do not think the hon. member need have any fear on that score. Certainly retroactivity is not intended, and none is indicated.

Mr. MacNEIL: In a previous section the minister introduced an amendment to provide that the section should not be retroactive. That was with regard to the construction of ships. Is it not equally just that with regard to the movements of persons we should remove any fear of the act being regarded as retroactive?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It cannot be retroactive unless that is specifically authorized by the statute; and, in fact, it is not retroactive.

Mr. MacNEIL: Is it not true that this section is so phrased that the governor in council may fix any date from the date specified in the order or regulation?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It may be a later but not an earlier date.

Mr. CAHAN: Perhaps there is some ground for the hon. gentleman's criticism. I do not see why under this section the date from which the order in council shall take effect may not be a date prior to its publication.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is not what is intended.

Mr. CAHAN: I know that is not what is intended, but is it not possible? Would there by any objection to making it clear that it shall take effect from the date of publication? But on the other hand it might not be desired to have it take effect on that date; the government might wish to have it take effect at a later date. My hon. friend from Vancouver North suggests "from a subsequent date specified for such purpose"—that is a date subsequent to the publication.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not a lawyer, but would it be possible at all to put me as an individual in the position of having committed a crime which was not a crime at the time I did the act? Surely our statutes would not permit that.

Mr. CAHAN: Are you discussing morals or law?

Mr. DUNNING: Law.

Mr. CAHAN: On moral grounds there may be an objection to it, but the parliament of Canada is not like the congress of the United States. It may make its legislation retroactive, or if it sees fit may establish penalties with respect to such retroactive legislation.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): This wording has been taken from other acts.

Mr. CAHAN: I am sure that the governor in council would not undertake to make it retroactive.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It cannot be done. This is the usual wording, and the main reason why it would be difficult to accept my hon. friend's suggestion is that it would throw a doubt on other legislation which is phrased in exactly the same way. It can be found in many statutes. If we adopted my hon. friend's suggestion it might be construed as implying a doubt with regard to other statutes. Moreover, the courts have decided that retroactivity cannot be declared unless it is specifically mentioned in the statute. I really think we ought to keep the wording as it is.

Mr. DUNNING: If I were charged with an offence such as is being created by an order of the kind mentioned in this section, would it not be a good defence for me to say to the judge trying me, "Well, Your Honour, this was not an offence at the time I committed the act." And if it was not an offence at that time, how could any government make me guilty of it? Surely justice would not permit such a thing.

Mr. CAHAN: My hon. friend ought to study the customs laws and regulations for the enforcement of which he is partly responsible. He will find many such examples. I have not clause (a), which has been rewritten, but we are dealing with the seizure, detention and disposition of conveyances, goods and merchandise, and the designation of officers or authorities who may execute any of the provisions of this act, and with the issue, restriction, cancellation and impounding of passports. These are not criminal offences.

Mr. DUNNING: But look at (a).

Mr. CAHAN: I do not know what (a) is because it has been changed.

Mr. DUNNING: (a) in the amendment is exactly the same as here with the omission of the word "extension."

Mr. CAHAN: Then (a) is simply the application of the provisions of this act to any case in which there is a state of armed conflict. In ordinary course that would date from the passing of the order in council—that is, when the order in council comes into force —if no other provision is made.

Then we make another disposition here, that it only comes into force and takes effect from the date of its publication. It would, I think, be very proper to say "or from a subsequent date which is specified for such purpose in such order." I think that would be clear. Of course, I think the Minister of Justice is still influenced by certain misapprehensions he had with regard to the statute under which the government asked for the inclusion of Canada in the Abdication Act recently passed by the imperial parliament, when he referred to another clause of the statute as giving a special meaning to the particular clause of the statute which related to Canada. But I cannot imagine that any other statute from which this form of words has been taken, could be invalidated by the insertion of the word "subsequent."

Mr. MacNEIL: Is there not some fear of retroactive action in this matter because of the fact that the act of 1870 is now in force and applicable to conditions in Canada? That is why I made my suggestion.

Mr. DOUGLAS: What would be the position under this clause of medical units which I understand are assisting on both sides of the conflict now going on in Spain?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Of course we could deal with them in the order or regulation which will apply the act to the civil conflict.

As I said, I want to make an amendment to section 2, which has been allowed to stand, in order to deal with this matter. As soon as this clause is carried we shall revert to section 2.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 20 agreed to.

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It is proposed to amend this by striking out paragraph (a) dealing with permits; also by striking out the letter (b) in line 10 and substituting therefor the letter (a); striking out the letter (c) in line 12 and substituting therefor the letter (b), and by adding after the word "non-combatant" in line 13 the following:

"But shall not include medical, nursing and other services engaged solely in humanitarian work and which are under the control or supervision of the Canadian Red Cross or other recognized Canadian humanitarian society."

Mr. MICHAUD: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DOUGLAS: In what position will this place Canadian medical units now operating on both sides of the civil conflict in Spain?

Mr. CAHAN: They will go to the penitentiary as soon as they arrive home.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): As I stated, there will be no retroactivity in regard to this legislation. Anything in the future will have to be supervised or controlled by the Red Cross or some other recognized humanitarian association, which will make it clear that we are not intervening on either side.

Mr. CAHAN: I do not know what a recognized humanitarian association is. The Lord only knows. It would take a Philadelphia lawyer to define that. Why not leave out altogether the word "non-combatant"? If they are not there as a fighting force and engaged in fighting they should not come within the definition of armed forces.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): My hon. friend says "the Lord only knows" what it is. We were not governed by the Lord in 1933 when my hon. friend was a member of a government. This is the very language of the international convention for the amelioration of the condition of wounded and sick in armies in the field. Article 11, which was ratified by Canada in 1933, reads:

A recognized society of a neutral country can only afford the assistance of its medical personnel and formations to a belligerent with the previous consent of its own government and the authorization of the belligerent concerned.

Mr. CAHAN: Clearly so. That is why we did not have to have the Lord's intervention in order to ascertain the exact application of that phrase. The doubt is simply because my hon. friend without the Lord's advice is making some new interpositions of his own which will require clarification. But of course this act comes into force the moment it receives the assent of his excellency in the name of his majesty. Therefor it would apply to all medical students who were then with either combatant force in Spain.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: Therefore, strictly speaking, on their return to Canada, if they were so engaged in the medical service of either the so-called royalist army or the insurgent army, they would be liable to prosecution. But I wonder why we should not leave out the word "non-combatant." Could not the clause read: "'Armed forces' includes military, naval and air forces or services"? That is, those who are engaged in combat, and leave out "non-combatant"?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): There are many individuals who take part in wars without being combatants. In the various armies there are advisers, liaison officers and many other classes who are not really in the fighting line. I am afraid it would be too wide if we accepted the suggestion. It is not in the British act either. This is modelled on the British act altogether.

Mr. CAHAN: Is "non-combatant" in the British act?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): No, I beg pardon, I thought it was. But it is to apply to people who are really not combatants and have never been considered as such, but still are with the army or assisting in the operations of war. This will make it clear that those units of the Canadian Red Cross are excepted from the act altogether, and in the regulations under section 19 others may be excepted as well.

Mr. CAHAN: Under what subsection of section 19?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The new subsection.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Subsection (a) of section 19 says, "The extension and application of the provisions of this act, with necessary modifications—"

Mr. CAHAN: That is dealing with civil strife and the application of those provisions concerning war between state and state to the particular circumstances arising in civil strife.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The intention was that it would give the governor in council certain powers when deciding as to that application. This amendment is merely to make it sure that those humanitarian workers will not go there anyway.

Mr. CAHAN: Would the minister find it difficult to leave this bill in committee until we could have it reprinted with the amendments, or is the minister anxious to pass it to-day? These amendments are rather important, and one would like to read them again.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I am anxious to proceed with the bill. I have been ready to proceed for a long time, and had to wait because at different times someone interested could not be here.

Mr. CAHAN: Very well; I do not raise the objection.

Mr. DOUGLAS: The amendment was read so quickly that it was difficult to follow. I wonder if the minister would consider the advisability of taking out the words "solely under the Red Cross." As I understood it, only medical units operating on either side in Spain that are endorsed by the Canadian Red Cross come within this exemption. Anyone serving with other medical units is liable to indictment under this act. Those words simply eliminate any group that does not receive the endorsation of the Red Cross organization. Would the minister mind reading that part of the amendment again, so that we may follow it?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It reads:

But shall not include medical, nursing and other services engaged solely in humanitarian work and which are under the control or supervision of the Canadian Red Cross or other recognized Canadian humanitarian society.

The word "solely" applies to "humanitarian work."

Mr. DOUGLAS: There would still be provision for a medical unit which had not been endorsed by the Canadian Red Cross but which was engaged solely in humanitarian work?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): No, it would have to be under the control and supervision of the Red Cross.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Does that mean that all medical units now operating in Spain, unless within the next few days they receive the endorsation of the Canadian Red Cross, would not qualify under this clause, and that Canadians so engaged would be indictable under this act?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): They are excepted now. This is not retroactive; it deals with those who may go from now on.

Mr. CAHAN: No.

Mr. DOUGLAS: But must those already there discontinue their work the moment this bill is passed?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): No, that is not the intention.

Mr. DOUGLAS: But is that what the bill says?

Mr. MacNEIL: I think the remarks of the minister, coupled with those of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), make it necessary that we should have a clear understanding of the situation. These people left Canada on their own initiative, without the slightest thought that they would become offenders under a measure of this kind. Evidently they secured passports and thus left with the sanction of the government. At that time the Canadian Red Cross society had not organized any units to carry on humanitarian work in Spain, and these people associated themselves with similar groups in the United Kingdom. So at the present time, serving perhaps on both sides, we have eminent Canadian surgeons whose reputation for humanitarian endeavour is beyond question. As the bill now reads, and according to the opinion of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, if they continue in this humanitarian endeavour without securing the endorsation of the Canadian Red Cross, as soon as they return to Canada they are liable to indictment and imprisonment.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I assure my hon. friend that that is not the case. Certainly no man engaged in humanitarian work in Spain at the present time will be indicted under this act because he is there now.

Mr. MacNEIL: But in the circumstances under which they went abroad they had to attach themselves to the armed forces of one side or the other, though of course not as combatants. Those in command will not allow any persons except members of their armed forces to penetrate their lines even to alleviate the sufferings of the wounded.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): What is the objection to having them work under the Red Cross? The Red Cross is in Spain at the present time, carrying on its humanitarian activities on both sides. Why should there be any objection to coming under the Red Cross? I have in mind a resolution of the League of Nations, at its last assembly, dealing with this matter. Part of that resolution reads:

Notes that there are problems of a humanitarian character in connection with the present situation, in regard to which coordinated action of an international and humanitarian character is desirable as soon as possible—

The article from the convention, which I read a few moments ago, is also to the effect that such work should be impartial and international, and that it should apply to both sides. We have a splendid organization in the Canadian Red Cross society, which is affiliated with the International Red Cross committee, which is subject to certain rules and regulations, and surely Canadians who sympathize with the wounded and who want to give their money for that purpose might do it through this noble channel. I do not see the objection to it.

Mr. MacNEIL: Do I understand that if they are not under the Canadian Red Cross, by reason of relationship entered into before the Canadian Red Cross became active, they will not be indictable under this act?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): No, not those already there, but I would say that surely from now on those carrying on this work should do so under the Red Cross.

Mr. CAHAN: I would ask the minister to insert the word "surgical" before the word "medical"; I think there is a clear distinction between surgical and medical services.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Very well; I agree to that.

Mr. MICHAUD: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1936-37

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1937, was presented by Hon. Charles A. Dunning (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Deputy Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

PRIVATE BILLS

DIONNE QUINTUPLETS

The house in committee on Bill No. 19, for the protection of the Dionne quintuplets.—Mr. Gray—Mr. Johnston (Lake Centre) in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. STEWART: I should like to ask the sponsor of this bill (Mr. Gray) for some information. I think the bill has a worthy purpose and is exceptional in character. I believe hon. members are in the main sympathetic with the principle of the bill and are ready to give it their approval. As I understand it, the object of the bill is to prevent individuals, firms, corporations or associations from exploiting for financial profit the names of these famous children. I should like to know if the statutory guardians have granted to any firms, corporations or individuals the right to make use of the names mentioned in this bill.

Mr. GRAY: As the hon. member states, this bill is quite exceptional in character. I can only say that prior to the application by the Blossom corporation of Pennsylvania certain patents had been granted, and these are excepted from the operations of this bill by section 6.

As far as the words quins, quints, and quintuplets are concerned, the guardians themselves have applied for the right to use these names in looking after the welfare of the quintuplets. Last year some 500,000 tourists came to Canada to see the quintuplets, and the guardians felt that it was their duty to protect them as far as possible. The guardians are limited by the Unfair Competition Act of 1932 to a period of fifteen years. The Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) and the commissioner of patents found that this was the only way in which the quintuplets could be protected. As the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart) have both said, this is unusual legislation but it will not exist forever. The guardians are brought under the provisions of the Unfair Competition Act, but for fifteen years they are given the power to grant franchises and award contracts to protect the Dionne quintuplets in a way that I feel sure my hon. friend wishes.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2, 3 and 4 agreed to.

On section 5—Guardians may license use of words.

Mr. STEWART: Have any licences been granted by the guardians for the use of these words?

Mr. GRAY: Not by the guardians. I am told that permission has been granted in two or three cases, and perhaps the Secretary of State could give us the particulars.

Mr. RINFRET: I regret I am not in a position to make a definite statement, but there have not been many cases. Perhaps my hon. friend will be satisfied with that information, which can be supplemented later if he is interested in the matter.

Mr. STEWART: I should like to have the information. I should like to know who have the right to make use of these names.

Mr. RINFRET: I do not want to appear to be evading the question. My officers are in the gallery and they can come down if necessary. Perhaps my hon. friend will be satisfied if I give him the information later.

Section agreed to.

Sections 6 and 7 agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. RINFRET: I should like to draw attention to a mistake which has been made in the French version of the bill. Instead of repeating in the French version the exact words used in the English version, the translator has made an error. The effect is that in the English bill we reserve certain names, while in the French bill we appear to be reserving other names. I drew the attention of the clerk to this matter and have given instructions to my department to see that the French translation is corrected in order that the same names may be reserved in both versions. I make this statement so that there will be no misunderstanding.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Johnston, Lake Centre): I have the English version here and it contains the addition of the French terms as the minister has suggested.

Mr. RINFRET: The French copy should contain all the English names.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE

Bill No. 53, to incorporate Toronto General Insurance Company—Mr. Plaxton.

CENTRAL FINANCE CORPORATION

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Duffus for the second reading of Bill No. 58, respecting Central Finance Corporation and to change its name to Household Finance Corporation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Is the house ready for the question?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): I think that before the question is put, a statement is necessary similar to the one I made in the banking and commerce committee when Bill No. 57 was before it, in connection with which there was a discussion upon what had taken place in the house previously with regard to this class of bill.

I intimated to the banking and commerce committee that the government had received within the last few months a very largely signed petition, which I believe originated with some of the companies concerned with this class of business, asking for the appointment of a royal commission to inquire into the whole matter. I was able to indicate to the banking and commerce committee that the government had given consideration to the petition and that, in the light of the discussion of its subject matter in the house, the government did not deem it a suitable subject for reference to a royal commission but rather that it should be investigated by a special committee of this house assigned to that particular task. I indicated last session the government's desires in this regard from the standpoint of gathering information in an effort to enable the house to reach a decision on policy. I also stated earlier in the session the reasons why in the judgment of the government the information was not as yet sufficiently complete to enable progress to be made.

During this year the superintendent of insurance will be asked still further to gather all available material in connection with the problem of small loans, and at the next session of parliament the government will ask the house to consent to the appointment of a special committee which will be charged with the investigation of the whole problem of small loans.

In the meantime the company concerned in the present bill has apparently taken cognizance of the proceedings in the banking and commerce committee and in the house and of the criticisms which have been levelled against it, and also of the action of the banking and commerce committee with respect to the other bill, No. 57. I say that because I found on my desk this evening a letter from the Central Finance Corporation, reading as follows:

> We hereby undertake and consent to amend our private Bill No. 58 (Letter C of the Senate) by reducing the rate to two per cent per month and altering the wording of the bill so as to make it conform to private Bill No. 57 (Letter H of the Senate) of Industrial Loan and Finance Corporation, except that section 1, changing the name, and section 2, increasing the capital stock, will be retained in our bill as at present.

Under the circumstances I am personally prepared to let this bill go to the banking and commerce committee. I am quite satisfied that in its previous form it could not have passed the banking and commerce committee, but having regard to the decision made on Bill 57 I think there is justification for sending this bill to the committee in the expectation that it will be amended in the same manner as the former bill, and bring about to that extent at any rate, a reduction in the maximum rate of interest and in the total charges which may be made by the company.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Leeds): I do not desire to discuss this bill at any length to-night. The general subject which it covers has been debated on a former occasion in connection with a similar bill.

This company has a charter issued by the parliament of Canada and has operated for a considerable time under its provisions. It now comes to parliament and asks for some amendments. I know that parliament is seized of the importance of this question, and I am sure that if the bill is referred to the banking and commerce committee, with the information which that committee has and with its disposition thoroughly to study and investigate the matter, the bill will be given that consideration which it deserves and which all bills receive when they go to a committee of this house charged with the duty of studying their provisions.

The subject is one upon which a great deal may be said on both sides, and I agree with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) that under the circumstances, and in view of what has taken place, the proper course for the house to adopt now is to refer the bill to the committee. In that committee both those who support the bill and those opposing it will have an opportunity to express their views. Moreover, I am sure the superintendent of insurance will be consulted as to the provisions of the bill. There, I have no doubt, full justice can be done to all parties concerned. I concur therefore in the suggestion that the bill be referred to the banking and commerce committee.

Miss AGNES C. MACPHAIL (Grey-Bruce): I am quite sure that the bill will be referred to the banking and commerce committee, but I do not think we should lose this opportunity of protesting not only against the bill itself but against the small loan companies that charge excessive interest rates. Two per cent sounds small, but actually it is two per cent per month, and it has been said that this comes to about 27 per cent a year. That is not interest, and for the life of me I cannot understand how people who cannot pay their debts can pay them plus 27 per cent per annum. I am therefore opposed to the bill on every count.

The government and parliament of Canada are no doubt aware that there are a great many people in this country who need loans; but those who need them most are the ones who can least afford to pay such exorbitant interest rates. I suggest that we ought to encourage credit unions which would help out people with small, steady salaries. They would help these people in this very way by making small loans at reasonable rates.

Frankly another reason why I am opposed to the bill is the lobbying that has been done for it. I do not mind anyone asking me to dinner, but not for the purpose of lobbying me in connection with a bill, and there are now in the gallery people who are paid substantial salaries and who have been spending money, which I judge is not their own, asking people to lunch. If there is anything I hate worse than another it is just that. If their bill is as good as we are led to believe they could have saved their money and the common sense of the house—because there is a good deal of common sense scattered throughout the house—would have seen its virtue. Intensive lobbying is suspicious, and is a good reason why we should investigate very carefully any bill that is supported in that way.

There is only one reason why I should like to support the bill, and that is on account of its sponsor (Mr. Duffus). But one cannot allow friendship to carry one so far. I shall therefore vote against the bill on the general principle that such bills are wrong. The people who need loans most are being charged the highest rates of interest, and some provision must be made for them. It is true, information may be brought out in the committee; but if we allow this bill to go to the banking and commerce committee without protest and a division we consent to its principle, and I do not consent to the principle of the bill. I simply wish to register my objection and my reasons for it.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): It gives me a good deal of pain to express an opinion in opposition to the hon. member who has just spoken (Miss Macphail). At first I was very much in doubt what I should do about this bill, and I have examined it with considerable care during the last few days—let me add, not as the result of lobbying. No one has invited me to lunch in connection with this bill.

In the first place I am very much opposed to high rates of interest; no one in the house is more opposed to such rates than I am. That fact would naturally prejudice me against the bill but for certain other considerations which in my judgment ought to be borne in mind. We must not forget that there are people who simply must borrow; there is no doubt about that. Many times they need to borrow in case of death or an operation or because of some other unforeseen circumstance. For all these reasons people are forced into a position where they absolutely must borrow.

At present we have no provision for such people. Personally I favour the development of credit unions, but they are not yet developed. And what are we going to do for people who need to borrow between now and the time when the credit unions are in a position to help them? This government has made no arrangement whereby such people may obtain loans from $50 to, say, $150; and as far as I know, no province or municipality has any such provision; and as I say, the credit unions are not yet sufficiently developed. Where can these people go? There is only one bank that is in a position to offer personal loans, and after looking into the situation with respect to that bank I find that the conditions under which it will make loans are prohibitive to a great many people who might need loans very badly. These are considerations that have greatly influenced me.

There is another matter that we must not forget. We became much in favour of prohibition at one time. We thought that by passing a law against liquor we should stop people drinking it. But they only went to bootleggers. That was entirely an unforeseen and unexpected result. Similarly, we know that people will borrow, and if we do not provide an orderly way in which they may obtain loans, they will go to bootleggers; and I am not at all convinced, after looking into the matter, that they will fare any better at the hands of bootleggers.

Some facts have been drawn to my attention with respect to this particular company, the Central Finance Corporation. I have not had time to investigate and find out whether all these things are true, but the following facts have been brought to my attention regarding the company and I submit them to the house for what they are worth. I must say, that when they tell us earnestly that these things are true, these things ought at least to be taken into consideration.

I understand that this company is at present carrying 30,000 borrowers. Manifestly there are 30,000 Canadians who have been in such a position that they have had to turn to this company for assistance. If we prevent this company from carrying on, what will happen to these borrowers and those who would follow after them? I understand further that this company during the past four years has issued 86,204 loans, totalling $15,213,781, and that during that time this remarkable record has been established by that company: They have never seized any furniture or household goods, they have never garnisheed anyone's wages nor had recourse to court action. I do not know whether that is true, but if it is I consider it a very fine record. I submit that in all justice this house should allow this company's doings to be investigated by an impartial body with more time at its disposal than we have.

Here is another thing which impressed me greatly. It was brought to my attention that the average net profit of the three chartered personal loan companies in Canada for the years 1933, 1934 and 1935 was only 5·73 per cent. On the face of it, it looks like 27 per cent per annum, but when the company is making only 5·73 per cent net, it does not seem so exorbitant as at first I thought it was. I understand, further, that it has been calculated that if the reduced rate of 2 per cent per month proposed in the present bill and Bill No. 57 is made effective, on the basis of the business of 1936 the net earnings of the company would be 4·97 per cent, which is not exorbitant.

Another feature is that passing this bill does not commit parliament to anything new; the principle has already been established. It only reduces the rate which is already permitted by parliament. And when in addition to all these things I consider that we have already sent Bill No. 57 to the committee, the only fair thing to do is to send this one along the same road. I am in favour of sending this bill to the committee.

Mr. H. G. CLARKE (Rosedale): The hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) has just said that this company earns only a little over 5 per cent. That may be so as far as the shareholders are concerned, but it does not take into consideration the salaries of the executives and those behind the concern.

Referring to the rate of 2 per cent odd per month which figures up to approximately 27 per cent per annum, I understand that those who have to borrow money from these companies are people in great need of money and with very little security. I have understood from people who have gone to them that some companies have said: "We will charge you 3 per cent per month for your short term, but there is something more for which we must charge. We have our general overhead and office expense, for which we must add a percentage. Then we have our investigation costs to be taken care of, so we must add a percentage for that. Then we have losses with those unable to pay, which we have to write off; so we have to make another little charge for that." When it is all totalled up, it is not merely 2 or 2½ per cent per month which has been charged, because the addition of all these costs runs it up to a very great amount.

There is another thing. When people find themselves unable to pay the company will say to them: Well, could you pay at some future time if we extend your note? Borrowers will try. If the loan was for say $50 the company will make it $75, and extend it for three months. That is something that this house should look into very carefully. I am entirely in favour of having this matter go to a commission and have them investigate fully the companies which are applying for these charters.

Mr. A. M. YOUNG (Saskatoon): We had a bill similar to this before the house a short time ago, and I voted against its being sent to the banking and commerce committee. I do not wish to appear to be sanctioning in the remotest way the interest rates provided for in that bill or in this one; I am decidedly opposed to that. But inasmuch as the house has already permitted the other bill to go to the committee I am going to vote in favour of this bill going there. It may be that there it will be so radically changed in respect to interest rates that I might see my way to vote for it when it comes back to this house. But I shall never vote for any bill which permits the rate of interest provided for in the present bill. It may seem a paradox but I want it clearly on record that I am not sanctioning the interest rates provided for in this bill by voting that it go to the committee.

Mrs. MARTHA L. BLACK (Yukon): I intend to vote for this bill's going to the committee. We all know that even a criminal has the right to be heard before a judge and jury. I do not know that I approve of the interest rate, but I do approve of the bill being examined by the proper committee. I should also like to state that while I have had luncheon with one of the so-called lobbyists in the gallery, I do not feel that that luncheon purchased me. It is ten or twelve years since I had my first luncheon with that so-called lobbyist, and neither did that lobbyist intend to purchase me then nor did I intend to purchase her by the meals I have given her at different times. I shall vote for the bill's going to the committee.

Mr. T. C. DOUGLAS (Weyburn): I should like to say a word—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Tell us about the meal.

Mr. DOUGLAS: The only meals I have had so far are those I have had to pay for myself, unfortunately. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Miss Macphail) has offered to take me out for dinner—

Mr. MacNICOL: That is bribery.

Mr. DOUGLAS: Very delightful bribery. I was glad to hear the Minister of Finance make the statement that he proposes to appoint a committee of this house to go into the whole question of small loan companies. Perhaps one of the most detrimental things in Canada to-day, from the standpoint of the small wage earner, is the small loan company.

In reply to the suggestion that we should let this bill go to the committee, I want to remind the house that Bill No. 57 also went to the committee, and it is now back for third reading. It seems to me that if we are to make any protest, this is the time to do so.

The arguments and statements presented by the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), I have heard presented before, but I do not know just how much value they have. The hon. member stated that a large number of people must borrow. That is quite true, but those who must borrow are the very people who are not in a position to mortgage their future by paying interest at the rate of 27 per cent per annum. The argument, of course, is that we already have other loan companies charging exorbitant rates, and because this is so, we must legalize certain companies which will perhaps charge more moderate rates.

Someone used prohibition as an illustration. When we tried to prevent people from drinking intoxicating liquor they turned to bootleggers, and now the suggestion is that because we have loan companies which charge exorbitant rates of interest we should legalize other companies which perhaps will not rob the public to such an extent. In other words, because we have pirates we must now legalize some gentler form of piracy. It does not seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that by perpetrating a wrong we can hope to remove a great evil, and I should like to see this house take the stand that no action whatever will be taken with regard to this bill or Bill No. 57 until such time as a committee of this house has gone into the whole question of loan companies right across Canada.

The fact that there are thirty thousand borrowers from this company is something that hon. members should think about very seriously. When it is stated that this company is carrying thirty thousand borrowers, I think it is probably true that the thirty thousand borrowers are carrying the company. It is being carried by people all over the country who, from their small weekly earnings, are compelled to pay more than they can afford in order to meet interest charges.

One of the regrettable features of this whole question is that when a member of this house, for instance, or any one receiving an average income needs money in a hurry, usually he can go to the bank and borrow it at six or seven per cent. But a person who cannot afford to pay high rates of interest when he borrows money cannot get a loan for six or seven per cent but is compelled to pay this exorbitant rate of twenty-seven per cent. There is an old biblical saying that to him that hath shall be given, and from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath. That is very true of borrowing. The man who can afford to pay a high rate of interest can borrow at a low rate, while the man who cannot pay a high rate is the very person who is compelled to do so.

While in the city of Chicago I spent some time studying in the court of domestic relations, and since that time I have had the privilege of sitting on the bench beside various judges in juvenile and domestic relations courts in order to make a study of juvenile delinquency and marital disputes. It is a safe prediction that a large percentage of the cases coming before the average domestic relations court is concerned with couples whose marital incompatibility is due largely to the fact that they are in straitened financial circumstances, due in large measure to their having borrowed money from some small loan company. Then, as the months went by, they got deeper and deeper into the toils of the company, with the result that there were disputes and bickerings that often led eventually to the divorce court.

I think it is criminal for us to condone in any form any bill that will legalize financial piracy in the Dominion of Canada. In my opinion, sending this bill to a committee, will simply result as in the case of Bill No. 57, in its being sent back here for third reading. If we have any thought at all for the small wage-earners of Canada, who have been and will become entangled in the toils of loan sharks, we ought to turn down this bill now rather than merely go through the motions of sweetening the poison and salving our conscience by putting the bill through a series of committees and then letting it slide through the house. I am opposed to this bill. I am opposed to its going to any committee until an investigation has been held into the whole question of small loan companies.

Mr. L. A. MUTCH (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I am not in the position of one who is forced to sing for his supper; I paid for my own. I think I know something about the principles involved in these bills. I have been somewhat entertained by the suggestion that the majority of people who are willing to pay high rates of interest for a short term loan are people in unfortunate circumstances. What little knowledge I have leads me to the conclusion that a much greater percentage of the money that is made in this kind of transaction is made at the expense of shorts in the market than at the expense of unfortunate people who need money for some emergency and who have to pay these interest rates. In most communities in Canada we have educated the people to the point where those who have to go into debt because of sickness or some similar reason know that funds will be made available to them. So I say that in my experience the major part of this money is loaned to people who have been caught in the market.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Young in the chair.

CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM TRADE AGREEMENT

Customs tariff—277. Palm and palm kernel oil, unbleached or bleached, not edible; shea butter: rate of duty, free.

Mr. SENN: Mr. Chairman, a number of items in the schedule deal with importations of vegetable oils. Last night the minister was asked the amount of these oils imported. I believe he gave the committee to understand that as each of the items came up, the information would be provided. I ask him therefore if he would give the committee the importations of oils under the item, not only for this year but as complete as he can possibly give. It is very important that we should know just what the increases have been in the past few years.

Would the minister also be good enough to inform the house as to the uses to which these oils are put when imported? I understand this is the item under which the great bulk of the importations come in. Can the minister tell the committee the amount of oil coming in under the item processed and made available for edible purposes? With that information I think there will be little further discussion of these items.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Chairman, I shall gladly go as far as I can in giving information. I regret I have not the import figures with me for the years prior to 1936, but before taking my seat I shall give the figure for the year 1935-36.

With regard to the other angles of the question raised by the hon. member, I must say I am in some difficulty in view of the fact that the matter is being investigated by the tariff board. I am not in possession of a record of the evidence. A great many points to which the hon. member very properly draws attention are points which are naturally under investigation by the board. As was mentioned the other evening, the question as to edibility or non-edibility is very important. However, judging from the figures I have with respect to the item dealing with palm and palm kernel oils, not edible, and shea butter, it would seem that the importations of palm and palm kernel oils are for the manufacture of soap. That is the designation of the item. I am not a specialist on every item in the tariff, but my advice is that this type of oil cannot be made edible in a commercial sense. The hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris) knows more about these matters than I do, and if he says it can be made commercially edible, I would be inclined to accept his word. My information is that this particular article is imported for soap-making purposes. The imports last year were valued at $2,011,000, and they came from the Straits Settlements, Nigeria, the United Kingdom and the United States.

Mr. SENN: Could the minister give the importations by quantity?

Mr. DUNNING: Here again we are up against the difference between the bureau of statistics' classification and the actual tariff item. The nearest figure to be obtained from importation figures of the bureau of statistics is 4,007,000 gallons.

Mr. HARRIS: Mr. Chairman, the minister was kind enough to mention my name in connection with this item. First of all, I shall deal with the question of edibility or non-edibility. Originally palm oil and palm kernel oil came from west Africa, but some twenty-five years ago the Lever group in England conceived the idea of starting plantations in the British East Indies, the Malay peninsula, and in Nigeria. It was thought that these plantations would come into production sooner or later to supplement the supplies of these particular oils. Twenty-five years ago the normal world's production ranged from 10,000 to 15,000 long tons per year. The original method of production was for the man of the house to go into the woods and gather these fruits, the outside layer of which yielded sixty per cent of what is commonly known as palm oil. The inside kernel yielded about forty-three per cent of palm kernel oil, which to-day is being used for edible purposes. The meaty, fleshy, outside substance was used for non-edible purposes.

Up to ten years ago the process of manufacture was to bring the nuts home and throw them into a pit in the barnyard, where the moisture and drainage from the yard fermented and broke down the hard outside structure. The whole mass was permitted to ferment for a period of two or three months in the very hot weather. It was then dug up, put in a jute bag or some other container, and the womenfolk pressed out the grease or oil. This was taken into the village and traded for groceries and other articles, and in due course it reached the seaboard and was shipped abroad. This substance ran very high in what is known as free fatty acid, at times the content reaching forty per cent. The combination of glycerin and fatty acid was broken up by fermentation and the resultant oil was non-edible. The nuts were kept separate and they finally found their way to England where they were subsequently pressed, the oil obtained being edible. What I want to say at this time is that whereas the world's production of these oils at one time was only 10,000 to 12,000 long tons per year, through the development of plantations this production has increased, until in 1931 they had a total production of 32,000 tons; in 1935, it was 135,000 tons, and it is estimated the production for 1936 will be 150,000 tons. There has been an increase of 1,500 per cent in twelve years.

I make again the same point I raised in connection with the other item. The United States and Canada have a similar economy. Some 59,000,000 pounds of palm oil entered this country last year, at an average price of 3·4 cents per pound. It will thus be seen that those in Canada who are endeavouring to gather the Canadian produced fats, inedible if you will, are handicapped. The producers in the United States also found it difficult. Ever since confederation there has been no excise duty imposed by the United States against our fat products. Within the last couple of years the United States saw fit to pass a reciprocity agreement, if you want to call it that. There was a clause in that agreement which stated that any item not specifically mentioned in the agreement could be dealt with by either country. They just waited a few short months and then in June of last year they put an excise tax of 3 cents per pound against the normal production of animal fats which compete with these vegetable fats coming in from the countries which I have mentioned. By that action the Canadian market immediately collapsed to the extent of 3 cents per pound. In other words, the Chicago market has been riding from 3 to 4 cents per pound higher than ours.

I come now to the next point. This Bailey amendment placed an excise duty of 3 cents per pound on these products, and also provided for a processing tax. Section 703 states that nothing in the section shall be construed as imposing a tax against the importation of any article—in this case any fat-bearing article—or any component of any such article derived directly or indirectly from a Canadian waste product or any other waste product. The result is that many fat-bearing products enter the United States free of this tax. The manufacturer of oils or fats which compete with the United States is up against an impost of 3 cents per pound. I know one company in Montreal which makes 100,000 pounds of these fats a week. That manufacturer in Montreal finds that his market is 3 cents per pound lower than the market of his competitor in New York. The man in New York can buy our materials as waste materials, and take them into the United States without the payment of this duty. He has an advantage of $3,000 per week over his competitor in Montreal. The result is that thousands of tons of Canadian materials are entering the United States as waste material, and the Canadian manufacturer is deprived of these products. He is forced to fill his needs from the importations into this country.

The minister will agree that I have raised a second question or a second possibility with regard to this matter of inedibles. First, he might deal with the tremendous imports of vegetable oils and see what can be done about it. Second, he might go to Uncle Sam and say, "Why not let the natural products of Canada be excepted from the provisions of the Bailey amendment? We have an economy the same as yours, and we find ourselves terribly handicapped." If they would consent to that, it would not affect very seriously the United States consumption of oils and fats, because that country consumes two billions pounds per year and Canada's surplus is only about twenty or thirty million pounds, her total production being less than three hundred million pounds. At the most it would not affect the United States economy more than about three per cent, and they would be keeping good faith with Canada if they would admit our natural products to that extent. But that may be a vain hope. Therefore we get back to the question: What are we going to do about the tremendous imports which are taking the place of a natural product of Canada? What is the natural inedible fats production of Canada, and why is it necessary to bring in 150,000,000 pounds of inedible oils and fats to supply our requirements?

The soap maker is the big consumer. They manufactured last year 164,000,000 pounds of soap and soap products. Breaking that down, we find that they manufactured 251,000 pounds of textile soaps, 22,850,000 pounds of toilet soaps, 34,250,000 pounds of flake soap, and 72,902,000 pounds of household soaps. That makes a total of 130,000,000 pounds used in Canada by the Canadian people. The difference between that and the 164,000,000 pounds that are manufactured is accounted for by exports; we sell some $875,000 worth of soap to the old country. Now, how much animal oil or fat or any kind of oil or fat is required to make 130,000,000 pounds of soap? In round figures, from forty to fifty pounds of fat makes a hundred pounds of soap; therefore it requires only 65,000,000 pounds of oils and fat to meet the requirements of the Canadian people. Each one of us requires ten pounds of soap per year to keep himself clean, and as there are 11,000,000 people, multiplying that number by ten pounds you will see that we need 110,000,000 pounds, and we are actually using 130,000,000 pounds, so we must be an exceptionally clean race of people.

To pursue the matter a little further, where are we going to get the material for manufacturing these soaps? Why are we not getting it at home? I should like to put on record, to wake up Canadians to this idea, that there is a tremendous waste going on at our very doors, a condition which does not obtain in England, nor in Europe, nor to the same extent in the United States. The Canadian supply of fat comes from large centres of population, where they take 2,000,000 sides of beef which are used each year, and the butcher breaks them down on the block, and the waste from this, that and the other part of the animal is gathered together. In an area of which I have knowledge, the city of Montreal, with an estimated population of a million people, out of that one item of waste alone can be manufactured five million pounds of animal oils and fat per year, and with our total population of over ten millions we should be able to approach an output of 50,000,000 pounds per year from that one product alone. But allowing only half efficiency, you have 25,000,000 pounds available for this soap requirement.

I mentioned last evening that each year we slaughter about 890,000 cattle in our inspected abattoirs, and the product goes for edible purposes. In the beef rings and slaughter houses here and there throughout the country there is slaughtered another million cattle, and the by-products of cattle slaughtered outside of the inspected abattoirs sometimes go into inedible channels, but more often are wasted. Why? That same steamship of which I spoke comes in with palm oil and dumps off 7,000,000 pounds at 2·7 cents per pound. It does not pay to go from Montreal to Kingston with a motor truck to gather up our Canadian waste, paying the wages that have to be paid to the driver, taxes, and other expenses, including buying coal at six dollars a ton to melt the resultant fat-bearing product and turn it into the channels into which it should be turned. So it is wasted, and the waste represents a charge upon the Canadian people, and they are asking this government to give some help in that regard.

The average life of our dairy cattle, of which there are 3,600,000, is six years. Each year 600,000 of them pass into some other existence. Say that 400,000 are slaughtered; that leaves 200,000 which die a natural death. What happens? Are they rendered? Is the fat taken away from them? It is wasted; most of them are buried.

There are in Canada 2,918,000 horses—for easy figuring, say 3,000,000. They live fifteen years and then they die or pass on; in each and every year 200,000 die. What happens to the carcasses? About half of them are used up; the other half are wasted. Add those 200,000 to the 200,000 cattle that die a natural death; take the minister's estimate of fifty pounds which he mentioned last night; from that 400,000 head you have a potential 20,000,000 pounds of inedible fats to supply the requirements of soapers, who in their turn supply the requirements of the Canadian people. Therefore I say we are a wasteful people. Perhaps we cannot be economic because of a factor against which we cannot make headway; I refer to the tremendous imports of inedible products which come to our shores at a very low price. I am not one who asks for duties or high tariffs, but I do maintain that this country, spread over 4,000 miles, must compensate producers who are a long way from their markets and handicapped by railway rates and by the high standard of living which this country is trying to maintain in comparison with the living standards in other lands I have mentioned.

More than that, it is bad business to waste this material. If the Canadian government would do only 75 per cent of what the United States did in June last to protect and promote production in that country, it would net to the coffers of this dominion, on the basis of last year's figures, a revenue of $9,490,000, provided the same quantity came in. Of course, there would be a slowing down; it would not be prohibited but would still come in. On the basis of those figures the revenue would be $9,000,000 odd. Take that $9,000,000 and give it to the dairy industry if you will; give it to agriculture generally or to any phase of Canadian economy; let the people realize that in this regard we are a more or less wasteful nation; do anything you can to help the natural production of these commodities in Canada, and in the long run those that come after us will say, I am sure, that you have done a good job on their behalf.

This vegetable oil comes not only from Nigeria but from the Straits Settlements, from the Dutch East Indies and the British Malays, directly without breaking bulk: From Nigeria 21,000,000 pounds; from the Straits Settlements 23,000,000 pounds; from the United Kingdom 11,000,000 pounds. The United Kingdom product is that which has been pressed from the kernel and probably goes into the edible channel.

We do not owe these countries from which this material comes anything in the matter of trade. Here again we see the same situation that was disclosed last night in connection with the figures given with regard to cotton seed oil. From the Straits Settlements we imported $9,976,328, whereas we sold to them only $1,392,000; in other words, we bought from them almost six times as much as we sold them.

Mr. DUNNING: Which country is that?

Mr. HARRIS: The Straits Settlements. If the minister does not want me to make a second speech to-night he will permit me at this stage to deal with the cocoanut oil item. Our imports are largely from Ceylon. We sold to Ceylon last year $122,719 worth, and bought from that country $3,701,465 worth. We sold to British East Africa $704,297 worth, and bought from them $2,630,896 worth—almost five to one. In nearly all cases the balance of trade is against us.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Are these figures in the British trade figures too?

Mr. HARRIS: The palm oils total is 59,000,000 pounds: 11,000,000 from the United Kingdom, the points of origin being Nigeria and the Straits Settlements; 21,000,000 pounds from Nigeria; 23,000,000 pounds from the Straits Settlements. In order to speed up the debate I interjected the Ceylon figures of trade.

We do not really owe these countries anything in the matter of trade, and when the minister is thinking in terms of the United Kingdom let me tell him that the man in the old country wants the preferential spread. That is all he wants, and he will get the business. England will gather and distribute the goods, selling them again. Give her a little preference. She asks for ten, but I would not object to her getting twenty-five, so as to keep the trade in that channel.

I urge upon the minister the seriousness of this matter—and let me assure him that there is absolutely nothing political in what I am saying now. When I stand here to discuss these matters I feel sorry for the Minister of Finance. He has this heavy load to carry when there are around him a hundred able men, some of whom could relieve him of a great deal of the burden. There ought to be some way of dividing up the work among the able supporters of the minister so that some of them might stand part of the gaff, if I may call it that, and allow the minister to touch the high spots. I suggest that somebody else might have put this agreement through the House of Commons so that some of the rest of us might feel free to pound away at it, because it is hardly fair that one man should stand the whole gaff of this budget and of the United Kingdom trade agreement as well. Half of us in the house are loafing, having very little to do, while a little circle of men sitting in front of me are doing most of the work. It is unfortunate, I say, that something cannot be done to distribute the work.

However, seeing that the minister has assumed these heavy responsibilities, I am bound to appeal to him and I ask him to do something to ease the situation and to promote the manufacture of these raw materials in Canada. I want to see him invoke article 16, or take action in some other way, to encourage the Canadian people and to put a stop to the economic waste that is now going on. There is a vast natural increase in the production of these materials overseas, and the United States is backing up a billion pounds of them on the world's markets; and the same neighbourly United States takes from our Canadian people this very waste material which is a natural product of Canada.

In the inedible field the situation is equally, if not more serious than in connection with the edible products. In a few years, if nothing is done about it, those interested in the inedible product in Canada will be out of that field. As an example in 1936, 560,000 pounds went to New Albany, Indiana, to a large plant situated at the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers. As it happened, the flood submerged that plant. Nevertheless the product is entering the United States free of duty. I know of a plant that is being started outside Buffalo by a Canadian who wishes to hold his connection in this country. He does not want to go there, but unless something is done he will be forced to do so. That is the situation. Products containing proteins only but not fats are being conserved in Canada. And the products which contain proteins and fats combined are going to the United States. The difference is being made up by buying non-fat bearing materials from the continent, to the amount of $70,000 worth in the last two months, on account of this one condition. The Indian kip and calf waste has no fat but just protein. That is coming here, replacing our natural beef material which contains fat and protein, which is going to the United States. That is false economy, it is making the products of these protein-bearing substances more expensive, and lessening the ability of our Canadian economy to hold up its head in the face of world conditions which surround us at the present time.

This, the minister said the other night, was something new just because a Liberal government came in. Now that is not the case. The something new was when the United States passed the Bailey amendment in June, 1936, and put 3 cents a pound against the natural products of Canada, and nothing was done about it. That 3 cents stands there, and our market drags 3 cents behind United States. The normal market being 6 cents, the 3 cents they put against us is equal to 50 per cent. They take away the raw material free, and shut out Canada's finished product; and we depend on cheap products from overseas and let our own natural production, which is ample, go to waste. That economic waste is a matter of concern to all parties, regardless of politics. After many conversations with the Minister of Finance I feel that the matter is in safe hands, and without any political motives whatever, and begging my colleagues to do likewise, I ask that he and his colleague the Minister of Agriculture give consideration not only to the edible fat situation but also the inedible in connection with this national problem.

Mr. DUNNING: In reply I can only say that, as my hon. friend knows, that is precisely what I have asked the tariff board to do, and they are engaged on the job. I do not want to minimize the importance of the problem from my hon. friend's point of view. As I said the other night, I am willing to be shown, and I expect to get information which will at least enable a course to be determined. Whether that course has to do with tariffs I have grave doubts, as I know my hon. friend has. There are many angles to it, and it is being investigated now. More than that I do not think I could say if I continued talking for a long time.

Mr. DAVIDSON: I should like to make one or two observations on this matter. I will identify myself with anything that will assist the producer of dairy products, as I have always done. These figures on vegetable oils were brought to my attention about a year ago, and when I saw the amount of vegetable oils brought into this country and the amount of domestic shortening sold, I came to the conclusion that a lot of the inedible was refined and sold as edible. During the recess I made some personal investigations and was surprised at the amount of shortening being sold in eastern Canada. If this government can do anything to assist the dairy farmer, it is up to them to do it.

The provincial governments have done much to help the dairy farmer. Starting on June 1, 1934, when the dairy commissions or milk control boards were appointed, the man who had a fluid milk market was fortunate among dairy farmers. The price was increased from about $1 a hundred pounds until to-day they are getting $2 a hundred for 3½ per cent milk, and those who go a little higher in butter fat get more, up to about $2.45. Compare that with the man who is obliged to sell his milk to the butter factory and take 60 to 80 cents a hundred. I have produced this stuff and I know what it costs. The man who produces for the fluid milk market has a little higher cost than the man who sells his milk to the butter factory, but not in the same proportion. The spread is too great.

The dairy commissions of the provinces are being constantly approached by farmers who are compelled to sell to the butter factories, asking them to do something. To such an extent is that true that about a year ago there was a meeting in Toronto of all the dairy commissions across the country to see if they could do anything, and a resolution was sent to this government asking them to do what they could. Our Department of Agriculture is spending hundreds of thousands of dollars to improve the quality and quantity of the dairy products of this country. I am not against that, I am in favour of it. But it would be much easier if we had a market for the dairy products when they are produced. So I ask the Minister of Finance to look into this matter and do something about it. And if he has any money left over when he puts this duty on, let him give it to the Minister of Agriculture who can use it to advantage to help the dairy farmer of this country.

Mr. DUNNING: There are some others as well.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—278. Oils, viz: cocoanut, palm and palm kernel, not edible, for manufacturing soap; carbolic or heavy oil: rate of duty, free.

Mr. GARDINER: Last night I agreed to deal with the letter which was referred to by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris). The letter was dated May 29, which of course is not quite thirteen months ago as was suggested. It is from Mr. Allan C. Fraser, secretary of the National Dairy Council of Canada, and is not too long to read. It expresses the view of the council at that time and indicates what they desired when they wrote to the department. The letter reads:

Ottawa, May 29, 1936.

Dear Mr. Gardiner,—

Re imports of oils into Canada. We are seeking your aid in determining the need for these importations to the extent to which they are made and the class of industry making the importation, and the tariff which they pay, if any.

The matter is of serious concern to our industry in that it appears that these imports are competing with butter produced in Canada at a time when exportable surpluses are increasing.

The manufacture and sales of oleomargarine is prohibited by law in Canada and it is well for our industry that such is the case. This is best illustrated by the increased manufacture of oleomargarine in the United States, which country now produces as much oleomargarine as we in Canada produce butter. It occurs to us that while the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine is prohibited here, the law is being made less effective by the manufacture and sale of these foreign oils in the form herein indicated.

The facts, as nearly as we can determine them, are as follows:

We import (in round figures)—
Cocoanut oil, edible, 498,000 pounds.
Cotton seed oil, edible, 377,000 pounds.
Olive oil, edible, 3,918,000 pounds.
Peanut oil, edible, 330,000 pounds.
Soya bean boil, edible, 1,365,000 pounds.
Peanut oil (crude, for refining for edible purposes), 52,000,000 pounds.
Cocoanut oil (not edible, for the manufacture of refined cocoanut oil), 8,529,000 pounds.
Cotton seed oil (crude, for the manufacture of refined cotton seed oil), 20,276,000 pounds.

The total of these importations is 87,831,000 pounds with a value in excess of $5,000,000. The figures quoted are for 1935.

In addition to the foregoing there would appear to be certain lard compounds imported, amounting to about 1,700,000 pounds.

The slaughtering and meat packing industry produced and sold in Canada shortening containing no animal fat to the amount of 58,640,000 pounds. They produced cotton seed oil, refined, to the amount of 3,155,000 pounds and certain vegetable oils, 4,700,000 pounds.

Miscellaneous food industries produced shortening containing no animal fat to the amount of 22,575,000 pounds, and refined oil, 7,434,000 pounds.

Summarizing the foregoing: there is produced and sold in Canada 81,215,000 pounds of shortening containing no animal fat and it is suggested (and we believe it a fact), that this production is made largely from the imports referred to above. We think this is a reasonable conclusion in that our information indicates that the packing industry is making the larger part of these imports and they are the ones putting on to our Canadian market these various shortening products. You are in a better position to confirm this than I am; as a matter of fact, I have no facilities for going farther than I have gone and I hardly know where to go from here or what specifically to ask you for. I am hoping, however, if you can and will confirm these figures substantially, that we may be able to discuss the matter profitably with you and work out some plan for minimizing these imports so as to improve the domestic market for our own production of butter fat. If ways and means can be found for utilizing butter fat in place of these imported products, the problem of our exportable surpluses will be solved.

As evidence of the menacing aspect of the situation, the production of (what we call) these fat substitutes has increased by 24,000,000 pounds in two years.

The picture suggests another problem and that is the actual food value of these commodities. My impression is that they are without such value or at least that there is sufficient doubt about it to warrant some investigation by the department interested in the administration of our food laws.

Yours faithfully,
A. C. Fraser,
Secretary-Manager.

It will be noted that this letter was written in order to obtain certain information from the department with regard to figures that apparently had been submitted to Mr. Fraser. I immediately took the matter up with the department and sent a memorandum to Doctor Barton, asking him to have this matter investigated and to give me any information available. After receiving the information I replied to that letter under date of June 17, 1936, as follows:

Mr. A. C. Fraser,
Secretary-Manager,
National Dairy Council of Canada,
Journal Building, Queen street,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Fraser:

I have your letter of May 29th, with reference to the importation of vegetable oils for shortening purposes, in which you point out that there was produced and sold in Canada 81,215,000 pounds of shortening containing no animal fat. It is true that this represents an increase, as you suggest, but according to further information I have received the total importation in 1930 was 74,855,227 pounds of vegetable oils, so that, over the period of years, the increase is not so striking as would appear, when compared with 1932.

As you are, no doubt, aware, the popularity of these products with housewives generally, rural as well as urban, would make the curtailment of their use very difficult. It is true that packing plants supply the larger part of these products but a substantial amount comes from other industries as well.

As to comparative food values, I understand that this is quite an involved question and determination is exceedingly difficult to make. However, I am informed that information available would indicate that the chief differences are in vitamin content and digestibility.

In reply I had a letter from Mr. Fraser dated June 22, 1936, as follows:

Importation of Vegetable Oils

Dear Mr. Gardiner:

In reference to your letter of the 17th instant, I fully appreciate the difficulties of the situation and wish that I could make some concrete suggestion as to a remedy.

The situation, however, is assuming proportions alarming to our industry, and we can only appeal to you and through you to the government to endeavour to find some way out, either by restricting imports or by restricting the manufacture and distribution of the products.

While the importations may not have been so greatly increased from 1930 on, it is, I think, agreed that in the two years ending 1934 the increase was very sharp. It is in these recent years that the intensive advertising program of the manufacturers and vendors of these products has taken place.

My information is that the manufacturers and packing companies manufacturing this product, are in spite of huge advertising appropriations, making very substantial profits out of the product, indicating that the original cost is small. I do not contend, generally speaking, that because a food product is cheap, it is undesirable, but I do suggest that this is very often the case, and I think it rather obvious that these products are not only taking the place of butter, but to some extent are taking the place of lard—good lard—the exports of which amounted to some 18,000,000 pounds last year.

It is our further contention that the virtues of vitamin content and digestibility in these manufactured products is more "assertive" than real, and that the health of the community would not suffer one bit by the curtailment of the use of these products.

My own early childhood was spent on a Manitoba farm where no such substitutes were used and many of my forebears still living well past the four score years have never, in their own household, used anything but animal fat.

We trust it will be possible to find some way of reducing the manufacture and distribution of the products in question so that our own natural product—butter—will find its rightful place on our Canadian tables, and the problem of the exportable surplus minimized thereby if not completely solved.

I replied to Mr. Fraser under date of June 25, in these words:

Dear Mr. Fraser:

With further reference to your letter dealing with vegetable oils, I may say that I think your comment on the effect of advertising suggests a way in which we could improve the position of live stock products.

It is very apparent to anyone travelling through this country that we are not making the most of the market which is available for such products as butter and cheese, and some others that I could name. Everywhere you go there is a sign advertising something which is a substitute, but very little advertising of the products in which those of us who are on farms are interested primarily.

You will perhaps have noticed that I had an item of $300,000 placed in the supplementary estimates for the purpose of promoting the sale of farm products.

I am going to England on the 11th July for the purpose of seeing at first hand what is being done by some of our competitors in that market. I hope after I come back to be able to take some definite action towards promotion and sale of farm products in the home market as well as in the British market.

After my return, and before deciding upon our line of action I hope to have an opportunity of discussing the matter with you.

In reply I had this letter from Mr. Fraser, dated June 26:

Dear Mr. Gardiner:

Many thanks for your letter of the 25th instant. This is a very encouraging letter, and I would greatly appreciate the opportunity of discussing the whole situation with you on your return.

Meantime, for your information I enclose a copy of a telegram which I have to-day sent out to the secretaries of the various creamery associations in the west.

Yours faithfully,

A. C. Fraser.

That telegram has to do with the advisability of meeting market requirements for butter in the old country. That is the correspondence, and I have read it in order to bear out what was said by the Minister of Finance yesterday, that as a matter of fact, as far as the correspondence reveals, there was no pressure brought to bear upon the government to take any particular action in connection with this matter, at least no action related to the British trade agreement, before we went overseas.

Mr. HARRIS: There is just that one little sentence which says "through you to the government."

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; the Minister of Finance will agree with me that the substance of these letters has been submitted to the government. The representations spoken of yesterday or last night are not altogether in line with the representations in these letters. Mr. Fraser, as secretary of the dairy council, was apparently quite satisfied with the correspondence which took place and with the proposals which we made in order to assist in the marketing of the farm products, which have been so much emphasized in the discussions we have been having.

May I add that in searching through the files to find out whether there was any other correspondence to which reference might have been made, I did gather considerable information as to the whole matter. I find that the last letter written emphasizing the question, previous to the letter I have just read, was written in March, 1932, and addressed to the previous Minister of Agriculture. That letter contained reference to the representations of some twenty packing houses and representations made by the United Farmers of Ontario with regard to the inclusion of the arrangements then proposed in the agreement of 1932.

That is, previous to bringing together those who were going to meet at that conference, apparently there had been considerable discussion on the question, and considerable agitation carried on in connection with it. I believe I should place on file along with the letters I have read at least three others.

On March 5, 1932, a letter was addressed to the then Minister of Agriculture from Kitchener, on the stationery of Dumarts Limited, in these words:

Re. request for tariff on vegetable oils with British preference.

I now have pleasure in enclosing the endorsation from the United Farmers of Ontario. It has been difficult to have these people see this matter in the proper light. I expect several other endorsations in the course of a few days.

Respectfully submitted,
Yours very truly,
R. D. Morrison,
President.

The letter I have just read was attached to the following, which comes from the farmers of Ontario, and clearly explains their position. Dated, February 29, 1932, and addressed to the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa, on the stationery of the United Farmers of Ontario, the letter reads:

Dear sir:

Great Britain has been generous in the measure of preference which she has extended to Canada in her recently announced tariff proposals. This action gives Canada distinct advantage in the European market. With a preferred position on the British market Canada is assured of the best possible outlet for her large exportable surplus of staple farm products. So long as she, in turn is willing to buy British goods in exchange should we not do all we can to strengthen our position upon that market? And should we not also demonstrate our appreciation of her action in granting Canada this preference. Since we can do both by extending a greater measure of preference to British imports surely it is in our best interests to do so. Not only would such action result in mutual commercial advantage to Canada and the mother land, but it would, at the same time, tend toward a better understanding and a strengthening of the bonds of empire.

The unanimous viewpoint of the various provincial united farmer movements in regard to British preference was set out in the national policy issued by the C.C.A. in 1918.

I believe the Minister of Finance subscribed to it at that time, and as a member of a farmer organization out west, I believe I subscribed to it. It is in these words:

"By reducing the customs duty on goods imported from Great Britain to one-half the rates charged under the general tariff and that further gradual uniform reduction be made in the remaining tariff on British imports that will ensure complete free trade between Great Britain and Canada in five years."

We learn that Canada is importing annually a very large volume of vegetable oils from the United States which could be, we are informed, just as well secured from England.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

You will notice they are not objecting to the importation of all the oils. They say they are being secured from the United States, and they might just as well be secured from England.

The United Farmers of Ontario has repeatedly expressed itself as favouring an increase of preference on those products and goods which can advantageously be secured from Great Britain. Accordingly we would request the government to give careful consideration to the possibility of placing vegetable oils on the preference list.

Yours very truly,
Robt. J. Scott, President.
J. J. Morrison, Secretary.

The other letter on file, which refers to both of those, is the only other one I shall read. I find this letter, dated March 8, 1932:

R. D. Morrison, Esq.,
President
Dumarts Limited,
Kitchener, Ont.

Dear Mr. Morrison:

I acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 2, enclosing brief for a duty on vegetable oils, and your telegram of the 4th instant reading as follows:

"Have mailed you brief for tariff on vegetable oils with the British preference with endorsations from twenty packers. Stop. Trust you will give this every attention as is very vital to the Canadian farmers. Stop"

That is the end of the telegram. The letter continues:

Your letter of the 5th instant enclosing endorsations from the United Farmers of Ontario has just come to hand. I am forwarding copies of these letters to my colleague, the Minister of Finance, and I wish to thank you for the trouble you have taken in getting the endorsations.

Yours very truly,
R. Weir.

All I wish to say is that when the budget was first introduced, and when the right hon. leader of the opposition was replying, the Prime Minister made a remark across the floor of the house. The remark was to the effect that if it had not been for the nature of the agreement made in 1932 it might have been possible to have made a different agreement at this time. Every hon. member will recall that the reply he received from the leader of the opposition, who then had the floor was, "Yes, if it had not been a fox it might have been a cat." Well, I do not know that it was an answer to the suggestion, because after all, the suggestion made by the Prime Minister contained the essence of the position in which we find ourselves in connection with this whole matter.

Probably that can best be indicated by reading to the house the first sentence of each paragraph of the address delivered by the then

Prime Minister, the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), to the conference called in 1932. The conference of 1932 was called in Ottawa, following a conference which had been held in the old country in 1930. At the conference in the old land certain suggestions were made by the present leader of the opposition, one of which was that Great Britain should establish duties, particularly on the natural food products and farm products imported into that country from outside the British Empire which would make possible a preference of ten per cent in favour of Canadian products. Here is a statement by the present leader of the opposition at the conference of 1930, held in London:

I offer to the mother country, and to all the other parts of empire, a preference in the Canadian market in exchange for a like preference in theirs, based upon the addition of a ten per centum increase in prevailing general tariffs, or upon tariffs yet to be created . . .

The basis of the proposal is the adequate protection to industries now existent, or yet to be established.

Here is what was said by the present leader of the opposition at the 1932 conference, held in Ottawa:

At the imperial economic conference held in London two years ago, Canada submitted what she conceived to be the basis of a plan for closer economic association.

What do we hope for from this conference? The answer is, I think, from all of us, greater markets within the empire.

As we desire greater empire markets, it is our task to decide the means by which they may be obtained.

Under our prevailing tariff system, Canada is equipped to make this readjustment. The United Kingdom, through its existing tariff preferences and their application in principle to natural products, will be similarly equipped. We, therefore, will propose that the United Kingdom shall extend the principle of her present tariff preferences to natural products.

It is most important that the attention of the committee should be called to the fact that it was the government of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) that asked to have the principle of tariffs applied to British imports of natural products. I continue to quote the statements of the then Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett):

The Dominion of Canada has always enjoyed free entry into the markets of the United Kingdom. That free entry has been for products which, generally speaking, did not come in competition with their own. We now propose that the United Kingdom have free entry into Canada for her products which will not injuriously affect Canadian enterprise. Canada in the days when its industrial structure was less strong than it is now, granted to the United Kingdom preferences in her markets. And we will ask that for those natural and processed products which comprise the most important part of our exports, we be given a preference.

On the assumption that measures will be taken to ensure that the effective operation of the agreement will not be impaired by the unfair competition to which I have referred, Canada proposes to grant to the United Kingdom: (1) extension to the free list; (2) retention of the existing preferences in favour of Great Britain, and (3) increased preferences in respect of a selected list of articles in which Great Britain is especially equipped to supply the Canadian market without injuring efficient Canadian enterprise.

And in exchange Canada asks: (1) the retention of existing preferences and (2) their effective extension to those other natural and processed products of which the United Kingdom is an importer.

I submit that those sentences give as clearly as it is possible to give it, the policy that was laid down at that time in connection with natural products, and more particularly in connection with farm products going from this country to the United Kingdom.

Mr. BAKER: Does that relate to the item we are dealing with?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, it relates to the item we are dealing with. The argument was advanced last evening, and again to-night that we should do something or other about these vegetable oils coming into Canada in order that a better market might be provided for the farm and dairy products of the dominion.

Mr. BAKER: That is far-fetched.

Mr. GARDINER: It is not a bit far-fetched. In the statements which have been made to this committee in the last few hours of discussion on these items, I think a very decided attempt has been made to show this. The statement has been made that we should not introduce politics into the discussion.

Mr. HARRIS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GARDINER: An attempt has been made to show that something has been done by the government of Canada which might injuriously affect the farmers of Canada. I often wonder why men want to come to this parliament who do not want to discuss politics. I have always understood politics to be a business of the people of the country.

Mr. HARRIS: It should be, but it is not.

Mr. GARDINER: When we are here we should be willing, not only to discuss the business of the people of the country, but to check up on the discussion of others. The information obtained from the packers in 1932 resulted in there being included in the agreement a section having to do with the bringing of vegetable oils into Canada and the providing of free access to the British market for our dairy products.

Mr. DUNNING: And animal products.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. If we look at the facts we find that our farm products have not been affected by the agreement of 1932 in the way it was thought they would be. Had it not been for the challenge thrown out the other evening, I would have let this discussion go until we were dealing with the estimates of my department. But since it was thrown out, and thrown out so strongly, I think the figures in connection with one or two items should be placed on the record alongside what has been given already.

The trend of the development of a market for our farm products in Great Britain has not been in the direction which was indicated. I should like to give the Canadian exports to Great Britain of some farm products. The exports of cheese were as follows:

	Canadian cheese exports (hundredweight)
1931-32	813,106
1932-33	825,081
1933-34	714,133
1934-35	572,102
1935-36	528,914

The exports of butter were as follows:

	Canadian butter exports (hundredweight)
1931-32	86,927
1932-33	21,022
1933-34	37,185
1934-35	4

There was a decrease from 86,927 hundredweight in the year before the signing of the agreement to 4 hundredweight in 1934-35, the last year of the regime of the previous government. In order to increase the exports of butter, a bonus was provided that fall which brought the exports up to 71,358 hundredweight. The exports of cattle were as follows:

	Canadian cattle exports
1931-32	26,734
1932-33	24,301
1933-34	54,448
1934-35	47,861
1935-36	2,811

What I want to point out is that, under the agreement, the exports of live stock and live stock products to Great Britain did not increase. In all but one of these important farm products, the exports went down year after year. In only one case was there an increase, which was brought about by the granting of a bonus.

Mr. STEWART: Might I ask the minister to go a little further and deal with hams and bacon?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: That is just what I was going to do. If you go back to the figures given for hams and bacon, you will find that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) started with the year 1932. He was able to build up fairly good figures to the year 1935. As a matter of fact we exported to Great Britain—attention was called to this fact last evening by the hon. member for Dufferin (Mr. Rowe), and for that reason I might have passed it over—in 1925-26, 1,233,000 hundredweight. The quantities went down year by year until in 1931-32 exports were down to about 105,000 hundredweight. By 1932-33 they were up to 366,000, and from that time there was a constant increase until, in the year 1935-36, the total exports to Great Britain only were 1,186,000 hundredweight—still considerably less than was exported away back in 1925-26 before there was any agreement. Running over the records one finds that with or without the agreement, there has been a rise and fall in the exportation of hams and bacon from this country to Great Britain.

Mr. STEWART: Does the minister argue that the agreement made in 1932, which gave a preference on Canadian hams and bacon, has not been of any advantage to the Canadian farmer?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not going to argue whether it has been or not; I am going to give the facts. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) stated, or at least has been quoted to-night as having stated last evening, that the change of policy since the new government came in has had something to do with some matters which were then being discussed; and, dealing with exactly these same products, I want to give the figures and place them on Hansard so that anyone reading them can see what has happened. Because after all, as regards all these products we have been discussing, there has been a very remarkable change in the last eighteen months. Take the exports of cheese:

	U. K.	U. S.	All countries
1935	$ 5,900,000	$ 85,000	$ 6,400,000
1936	9,400,000	1,600,000	11,300,000

Then let us take a look at exports of bacon. Our exports amounted to:

	U. K.	U. S.	All countries
1935	$19,700,000	$ 100,000	$20,000,000
1936	25,100,000	600,000	26,000,000

Exports of cattle:

	U. K.	U. S.	All countries
1935	$ 400,000	$6,300,000	$ 6,900,000
1936	2,900,000	9,400,000	12,500,000

Mr. TUSTIN: The minister gave us the value of the cheese exported in 1935 and 1936. Could he give us the weight that was exported in those two years?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, I can give the hon. member the weight. It is not in this particular table, but I have the figures for all the years back to 1900. I do not suppose the committee wishes me to read all of those.

Mr. TUSTIN: All I wanted to point out is that there was about three cents difference in price.

Mr. GARDINER: That is another factor of which I want to speak in a few moments. I am now dealing with sales and exports of our products, and pointing out that there has been a very remarkable increase since the adoption of the policy of promoting sales in other countries along with the principles of agreements entered into with other countries by a Liberal government. I now come to the exports of wheat and flour:

Crop year	U.K.	U.S.	All countries
1934-35 ..	$ 91,100,000	$12,300,000	$136,700,000
1935-36 ..	144,500,000	23,200,000	210,200,000

Mr. STEWART: I should like to ask what relation all this has to the importation of edible and inedible oils.

Mr. GARDINER: I will connect that up in a minute in a way which the hon. member will completely understand.

Mr. BAKER: We asked some time ago that the connection should be explained, and the minister has gone miles and miles away.

Mr. GARDINER: I am right alongside of it. I am indicating to this committee that in spite of what has been said about edible oils coming into Canada and replacing the dairy farmer and the live stock producer, both the dairy farmer and the live stock producer are selling more of their products than they ever sold while hon. members who have been carrying on this discussion had control of the government of this country. That is clearly shown by the records.

The facts regarding the production of butter indicate this, that in spite of all that has been said about edible oils coming into this country and replacing butter, more butter was produced in 1936 in Canada than ever before in the history of the country. The production of creamery butter alone amounted to 250,000,000 pounds, and the greater part of it—all, with the exception of about 5,000,000 pounds was consumed in this country. That happened at the same time that these edible oils of which hon. members have spoken were being consumed.

And cheese: cheese production during the last year was higher than it has been in any year since 1928, and in that you have some of the fats derived from the dairy industry. Then butter was up in price during the year 1936, higher than it has been in any year since 1930. It went down and down from 1930 to 1933, remaining about the same price during the years 1933 and 1934 namely, about 18 or 19 cents, but in this last year it has been 23·66 cents per pound on an average throughout the year. The price of cheese has been the highest since 1930; as was indicated a few moments ago, it is about 3 cents higher than it was the previous year—to be exact, 2¾ cents.

Mr. BAKER: Have not the prices of almost everything been higher in 1936 than in 1934?

An hon. MEMBER: The Liberals are in power.

Mr. BAKER: That has nothing to do with it at all.

Mr. GARDINER: The price of cheese was higher in 1936, at 12·76 cents than at any time since 1930.

Mr. BAKER: So is the price of everything.

Mr. GARDINER: And we are very happy to be living under a Liberal government, and have these prices go up.

Mr. BAKER: That had nothing to do with it at all.

Mr. GARDINER: Then with regard to consumption. In spite of the fact that edible oils are coming in—and I am not advocating the bringing in of more of them—in spite of all we have heard about edible oils, there has been consumed in Canada this last year 12,000,000 pounds more butter than in the previous year.

Mr. BROOKS: Would the minister not consider that he should protect that market so that more butter will continue to be consumed in Canada instead of vegetable oils?

Mr. GARDINER: Out in our country we do not talk as much about protection as some of those who live in other parts of Canada. We like to be able to demonstrate that when we are not indulging in so much of that kind of thing we get a better market for everybody and, as has been said, a better price for everybody on everything.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister knows that the government has not a single solitary thing to do with it.

Mr. GARDINER: I am just placing the figures on Hansard so that my friends can read and examine them.

Mr. BAKER: Do you not know, as the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) correctly says, that your government had nothing at all to do with it?

Mr. MacNICOL: No more than the man in the moon.

Mr. BAKER: You surely know that.

Mr. GARDINER: I am quite sure my hon. friends thought that we had something to do with the price of butter back in 1930, and I am sure, too, that they had something to do with the price of butter in 1932, and something to do with the very question that has been thrown across the floor of the house on two or three occasions since this debate began.

Mr. BAKER: We rightly protested when you allowed New Zealand butter to fill Canada.

Mr. GARDINER: It has been stated time after time that the members on this side of the house—I was not here and had not the privilege of voting with them—in 1932 voted against the British agreement when they voted for a resolution, introduced by Mr. Coote, connecting up the agreement and the prices obtained then for goods with something that happened in the previous year, when the government of Canada refused to do what almost every other country that traded in farm products with Great Britain did. Those countries tied up their exchange with the British pound sterling, and by doing so in 1931 the Dominion of Canada could have reduced the amount of money required to pay the indebtedness of Canadian farmers. That indebtedness could have been reduced by about 30 per cent if the Canadian government had followed the other countries in that regard. In other words, we should not have required from that time to this the various debt adjustment acts which we have had to pass. They would have been unnecessary if the Canadian government had done exactly what more than twenty other countries did in tying their dollar to Great Britain's pound sterling. But our friends sat by for one whole year after that before they realized the damage they had done. As a result of their inaction the prices of farm products were driven down to the point indicated by the figures which I have given to the house. They went down year after year until they touched bottom; and when the government were compelled to enter into a trade agreement to revive Canadian trade they based their action, not upon the principle of greater freedom of trade between Canada and Great Britain, but upon the blocking of trade between Great Britain and some other countries. That was what was meant by the statement made the other day, that if it had not been for the type of agreement drawn in 1932 we might have been in a position to draw up a different agreement to-day.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister is rambling all over the lot. Has the government anything to do with the price of scrap iron being $26 a ton?

Mr. GARDINER: I will leave my hon. friend to deal with that. He speaks for the scrap iron people; I am speaking for the people who produce these particular products. The position is simply this. We have been trading in these products now in what may be called a new spirit with regard to trade, if not under an altogether new policy. We have gone as far as it is possible to go in one new agreement with Great Britain in wiping out the bound articles and in changing the policy that was inflicted upon the whole empire at that time. Probably, when one or two more agreements are made, we shall get back into the position occupied prior to the coming into power of the previous government; and as we advance into that position, more and more Canadian farm products will be sold in different parts of the empire, and Canadian consumers will be able to pay for and consume more of our farm products here.

There are two reasons why vegetable oils are being used here at the present time. One is the fact that they can be put up in convenient packages and placed on the shelf, and they are not so liable to damage as animal products used for a similar purpose. The other reason is this. There has been a great improvement in the production of butter in this country. Everyone knows that the grading policies established by the provincial governments, with the support of the federal government, have resulted in raising the standard of our Canadian butter and cheese; and by raising the standard of our butter we have put more into consumption. There is more butter being used on the tables of the nation, and more being diverted from use as shortening. More and more of our butter is being used for the purpose for which it is intended. Indeed, Canadian butter can now be placed on the tables of people the world over as a product that is second to none, if the best butter produced in our creameries is used. And it brings a better price because of that. Less and less of it is being used as shortening, and more and more as butter; and because it is of better quality our people are buying more of it. The result is that our farmers are getting a greater market at home to the extent this year of 12,000,000 pounds more than last year.

I am going to ask the house later on to vote a greater sum than was voted last year in order that we may promote the sale of farm products; and I may tell hon. gentlemen who have been discussing this question that the Department of Agriculture intends to follow the policy outlined in the letters to the secretary of the dairy association. Judging by his reply to the last letter I wrote to him, the policy meets with the approval of the Dairy Council of Canada.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—278b. Crude peanut oil, for refining for edible purposes, used as materials in Canadian manufactures: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—278c. Cocoanut oil, not edible, when imported for use in the manufacture of refined cocoanut oil: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—278d. Olive oil for manufacturing soap or tobacco or for canning fish; olive oil for use in the processing of textile fibres, including the finishing of fabrics: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: On the last of these items perhaps I should make this statement. It is important that there should be no misunderstanding in regard to the tariff on these particular items especially in the light of the discussion that has taken place. For the most part these goods do not come from the United Kingdom. Importations from the Straits Settlements and other British colonies are still being made under the provisions of schedule F of the 1932 agreement, which is being carried over without modification for the time being as schedule VII of the new agreement. The provisions of the trade agreement respecting the colonies which my hon. friends opposite negotiated in 1932 with Great Britain continue in force. I might be asked, why did you not negotiate a new agreement with the colonies. The answer is that Canada's commercial relations with the colonial empire are regulated in part by the Canada-West Indies trade agreement, of 1925 which cannot be revised before 1939, and in part by schedules D and F of the 1932 agreement with the United Kingdom. After considering the whole question we decided it was better to continue the colonial clauses of the 1932 agreement until they could be reconsidered at the same time that the agreement with the West Indies, which they supplement, is revised. I want the committee to be clear on the point that there is no change whatever with respect to the colonial arrangement under which the great bulk of these commodities enter Canada. They enter Canada under the provision of schedule F of the 1932 agreement, and will continue to do so. It is merely continued by this agreement until revised by a further one.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 282a. Firebrick, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 7½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—284. Drain pipes, sewer pipes and earthenware fittings therefor, chimney linings or vents, chimney tops and inverted blocks, glazed or unglazed, n.o.p.; earthenware tiles, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Mr. STEWART: Could we have the particulars of the imports from Great Britain as we go along?

Mr. DUNNING: Wherever there is a reduction in rate I undertook the other evening to give it and must therefore turn back in that regard to ex 282a:

There is a reduction in rate from 12½ to 7½ per cent on firebrick n.o.p. Imports from the United Kingdom, $97,000 worth.

On item 284, drain pipes, sewer pipes, and earthenware, etc. the total imports in 1935-36 were very small, $9,000 from all sources, of which $2,300 were from the United Kingdom. Earthenware tiles, part of the same item, is rather larger, $102,400 worth, the principal amount of which, $49,000, came from the United Kingdom.

Then we exported during that year only $71,000 worth of the articles covered by this item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—285. Tiles or blocks of earthenware or of stone prepared for mosaic flooring: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: A reduction in rate from 20 per cent to 15 per cent. Our imports were $31,000, principally from the United States, about $5,000 from Great Britain. We have not any record of exports of that item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—286. Earthenware and stoneware, viz:—demijohns, churns or crocks, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Small imports, $3,900, principally from the United States; our exports are not listed separately. There is a reduction in rate of 5 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—287. All tableware of china, porcelain, semi-porcelain, or white granite, but not to include teapots, jugs and similar articles of the type commonly known as earthenware: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: Free entry bound.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—288. Stoneware and Rockinghamware and earthenware, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: A reduction from 25 to 20 per cent as against Great Britain. I shall have to take a moment to give the information in regard to the imports because they are classified under different commodities. Our imports of brown earthenware, stoneware, Rockinghamware were $20,000, of which $10,000 came from the United Kingdom. Cream coloured ware, total imports, $23,000, of which $12,000 came from the United Kingdom.

China and porcelain ware, n.o.p., $46,400 of which $11,700 came from the United Kingdom.

Earthenware n.o.p., $254,000, of which $88,000 came from the United Kingdom.

Of the combined items, $120,000 altogether came from the United Kingdom last year.

Our exports are not listed separately. Our home production in 1934, the last year for which I have figures, was $223,700, but that should not be taken as production confined to these articles, as it includes coarse earthenware and stoneware.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—288a. Chemical stoneware composed of a non-absorbent vitrified body specially compounded to resist acids or other corrosive reagents: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—288b. Hand forms of porcelain, when imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of rubber gloves in their own factories: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—289. Baths, bathtubs, basins, closets, lavatories, urinals, sinks and laundry tubs of earthenware, stone, cement, clay or other material, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Reduction in rate from 20 to 15 per cent. Our imports totalled $75,000, of which $44,000 came from the United Kingdom. Our statistics of production are not available separately; they would be part of a total of $1,600,000, covering porcelain insulators, sanitary ware, sewer pipe, floor and wall tile, tanks, pottery, et cetera.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Customs tariff—296c. Magnesium carbonate, imported for use in the compounding or manufacture of rubber products: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—300. Crucibles of clay, sand or plumbago: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—312a. Asbestos in any form other than crude, and all manufactures thereof, when made from crude asbestos of empire origin, n.o.p.: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—316a. Incandescent lamp bulbs and glass tubing for use in the manufacture of incandescent lamps, and mantle stocking for gas light: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: A reduction of 5 per cent. Imports $504,000, of which $500,000 came from the United States. Our exports, none. Our domestic production in 1935, that is incandescent electric lamps, the finished product, was about $4,800,000. That is reported by fewer than three firms.

Mr. MacNICOL: The plants making this line of material at present are not over busy. Any importations of course would reduce the employment in making that material in Canada.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—318. Common and colourless window glass: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change. Free entry bound.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—319. Glass, in sheets, and bent plate glass, n.o.p.: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—320. Plate glass, not bevelled, in sheets or panes not exceeding 7 square feet each, n.o.p.: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—321. Plate glass, not bevelled, in sheets or panes, exceeding 7 square feet each, and not exceeding 25 square feet each, n.o.p.: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—322. Plate glass, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 17½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: A reduction in rate from 20 per cent to 17½ per cent. Our imports in 1936, not bevelled, $183,000 worth, of which $78,000 came from the United Kingdom and $69,000 from Belgium. Of bevelled plate glass we imported $1,687 worth, practically all from the United States.

Mr. BAKER: What is the Canadian production?

Mr. DUNNING: We exported $81,000 worth, some of which went to the United Kingdom. Our total production for 1934, the latest year for which we have records was $238,774. As my hon. friend doubtless knows, the statistics in regard to production are considerably behind those for imports and exports.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—323. Silvered glass, bevelled or not and framed or not, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: A reduction in rate from 22½ to 20 per cent.

Our total imports were $105,000, of which $65,000 came from the United States and $12,000 from the United Kingdom. Our exports are not separately listed in the trade returns. Our total production of silvered glass in 1934 was $566,000.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—326 and ex 326a. (i) Demijohns or carboys, bottles, flasks, phials, jars and balls, of glass, not cut, n.o.p.; lamp chimneys of glass, n.o.p.; decanters and machine-made tumblers of glass, not cut or decorated, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 15 per cent.
(ii) Opal glassware, glass tableware, cut glassware and illuminating glassware, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change in the first part. There is a reduction in the second part, opal glassware, et cetera, from 15 to 10 per cent. Our total imports of these goods were $884,000 in 1936, of which $558,000 came from the United States and only $68,000 from the United Kingdom.

Our exports were less than $100. Our Canadian production in 1934 was $185,000 worth. Including pressed and blown glass bottles in the production figures, there was a very large production, $7,500,000 worth in Canada.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—326a. Manufactures of glass, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: The statistics I last gave apply to the second division of the previous item. I have not given the figures with regard to item 326a. The imports of glass lenses, n.o.p., totalled $202,000, of which $169,000 came from the United States and only $10,000 from Great Britain. Other manufactures of glass which are included in the same item total $482,000, of which $345,000 came from the United States and $41,000 from Great Britain. As I indicated a moment ago, the rates are reduced from 15 per cent to 10 per cent against Great Britain.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—326e. Articles of glass, not plate or sheet, designed to be cut or mounted; articles of glassware, when imported by manufacturers of silverware, to be used in receptacles made of, or electro-plated with, precious metals, in their own factories: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—326g. High thermal shock resisting glassware: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—339a. Lead capsules for bottles: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—340. Type for printing, including chases, quoins and slugs of all kinds: rate of duty, 7½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—341. Babbit metal and type metal, in blocks, bars, plates and sheets: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 352, ex 427, ex 445k, ex 446a, ex 462. Fixed or stationary meters, of a size or capacity not made in Canada, for hydraulic engineering; gauges, indicators and recorders for water or other liquid levels, volume or flow, of a class or kind not made in Canada: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a reduction in rate. This is included in schedule IV of this agreement in order to afford free entry from the United Kingdom of meters, gauges, indicators and so on, described in detail in the item. In each instance they are of a size, capacity or class not made in Canada. Formerly they would have been dutiable at the rates shown opposite the items in the votes and proceedings, ranging from free to 20 per cent. Now they have a classification of their own.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 352, ex 362, ex 519, ex 597a, ex 624, ex 647, et al. Antiquities (other than spirits or wines) produced more than 100 years prior to date of importation, under such regulations, including proof of antiquity, as may be prescribed by the minister: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: I think this speaks for itself. It is a reduction all round.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—353. Aluminum and alloys thereof, crude or semi-fabricated, viz:—pigs, ingots, blocks, notch bars, slabs, billets and blooms; bars, rods and wire; angles, channels, beams, tees and other rolled or drawn sections and shapes; pipes and tubes; plates, sheets and strips, including circles; leaf, n.o.p., or foil, less than ·005 inch in thickness, plain or embossed, with or without backing; wire and cable, twisted or stranded, reinforced with steel or not; aluminum powder: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—353a. Aluminum leaf, less than ·005 millimetre in thickness; aluminum scrap. Provided, that nothing shall be deemed to be aluminum scrap except waste or refuse aluminum, fit only to be remelted: rate of duty, free.

Mr. STEWART: Is there any change in this item?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—354. Manufactures of aluminum, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—354a. Kitchen household hollow-ware of aluminum, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—357. Britannia metal, nickel silver, Nevada and German silver, manufactures of, not plated, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a reduction from 25 per cent to 15 per cent. Our imports of Britannia metal were quite small, amounting to only $4,400, of which $1,500 came from the United Kingdom. In the larger part of the item, manufactures of nickel and German and Nevada silver, total imports were $133,000, of which $20,000 came from the United Kingdom. There are no exports, and there is no separately recorded production.

Mr. BAKER: What do we produce in Canada?

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: It is not separately recorded, so there are less than three firms producing. We have no information.

Mr. BAKER: The output is not great?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—361. Gold and silver leaf, Dutch or schlag metal leaf; brocade and bronze powders: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—362. Articles consisting wholly or in part of sterling or other silverware, n.o.p.; manufactures of gold or silver, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 20 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a reduction against Great Britain from 30 per cent to 20 per cent. Total imports of manufactures of silver were $70,000, of which $47,000 came from Great Britain. Imports of manufactures of gold were $20,000, of which $10,000 came from Great Britain. Our exports were none, but our production of silverware in 1934 amounted to $2,878,000; of gold to $957,000; of gold filled wire and gold leaf to $54,000.

Mr. BAKER: Will not this change mean a great deal more unemployment?

Mr. DUNNING: I am not of that opinion. I have not had a single objection from any source.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—362b. Toilet articles of all kinds, including atomizers, brushes, buffers, button hooks, combs, cuticle knives, hair receivers, hand-mirrors, jewel boxes, manicure scissors, nail files, perfume bottles, puff jars, shoe horns, trays and tweezers, of which the manufactured component material of chief value is sterling silver: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Mr. STEWART: There is an expansion of the item, is there not?

Mr. DUNNING: There was a tariff board report two sessions ago in connection with this item, and the language used is exactly that language.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—362c. Nickel-plated ware, gilt or electro-plated ware, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 17½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—368. Clocks, time recorders, clockwork mechanisms, and clock cases: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in duty on clocks, movements, cases and so on, from 20 per cent to 15 per cent as against Great Britain. We imported $298,000 worth of clocks, of which $178,000 came from the United States and only $22,000 from the United Kingdom. Our imports of clock movements totalled $74,000, of which only $13,000 came from the United Kingdom. Our imports of time recorders totalled $21,000, of which $4,000 came from the United Kingdom. We are also exporters of clocks, watches and parts; in fact, we sold to the United Kingdom $60,589 worth. That is, we sold to the United Kingdom far more than we bought from them of clock and watch movements. Our Canadian production of clocks and watches was $905,000 in 1934, and of watch cases $202,000 in the same year.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—369. Parts of clock movements or of clockwork mechanism, finished or unfinished, not including plates: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a reduction on parts of clock movements, excluding plates, a companion item to the previous item, from 15 to 10 per cent. Our imports amounted to $150,000, of which only $1,000 came from the United Kingdom. Our imports came principally from the United States and Germany.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—370. Copper rollers, and stones, used in the printing of textile fabrics or wall paper: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 377a, et al. Wrought iron in the form of billets, bars, rods, sheets, strips, plates or skelp: rate of duty, free.

Mr. STEWART: I suggest that these steel items are likely to involve a good deal of discussion. I know the leader of the opposition and some other hon. members on this side desire to make some statements in regard to these items, so I suggest that they stand.

Item stands.

Customs tariff—488. Nitrate and acetate of lead, not ground; platinum and black oxide of copper, for use in the manufacture of chlorates and colours: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—506b. Wooden doors of a height and width not less than 6 feet and 2 feet, respectively: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 511. Fishing rods: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction, requested by Great Britain, in the rate on fishing rods from 20 per cent to free. Our total imports were $53,000 last year, of which only $16,000 came from the United Kingdom.

Mr. STIRLING: What did we produce?

Mr. DUNNING: It is a combination item; it goes wider than this item. It includes fishing nets and fishing tackle, and under that combination item we produced $139,000 worth in the last year of record.

Mr. POTTIER: Would that include fishing reels?

Mr. DUNNING: No, just the rods.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—511a. Cricket balls, bats, gloves and leg guards: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—512. Picture frames and photograph frames, of any material: rate of duty, 17½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a reduction from 20 per cent. Our total imports amounted to $115,000, principally from the United States. Only $12,000 worth came from Great Britain.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—518. Billiard tables, with or without pockets, and bagatelle and other game tables or boards, cues, balls, cue-racks, and cue-tips: rate of duty, 17½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in rate from 22½ per cent to 17½ per cent on billiard tables. We imported 52 last year from the United Kingdom, valued at $2,553. I did not know billiard tables ever got as cheap as that. However, that is the figure. Our principal source of supply is the United Kingdom. Then, bagatelle and other game tables totalled $156,000, of which the principal import came from the United States. Of the $156,000, $145,000 came from the United States. There were $5,000 worth of balls, cues, cue-racks and cue-tips, of which $1,700 came from the United Kingdom. Our Canadian production is included in sporting goods generally, and it cannot be separated.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—519. House, office, cabinet or store furniture of wood, iron or other material, in parts or finished: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in the rate from 20 to 15 per cent. This is a very large item, and widely subdivided. If hon. members wish the information, I shall be glad to give it.

Mr. BAKER: Does the minister fear any more unemployment because of the change? It must be understood that we manufacture a lot of these materials around the Newmarket district.

Mr. DUNNING: The competition in furniture is only to a small degree from Great Britain.

An hon. MEMBER: Could the minister give the round figures?

Mr. DUNNING: It would be more simple to read the list. In connection with furniture of metal, the total imports were valued at $221,000, of which $208,000 came from the United States. Great Britain is not a very strong competitor. The total amount of furniture of wood or other material, n.o.p., was valued at $564,000, of which $364,000 came from the United States and $104,000 from the United Kingdom; and there are a number of other countries. We exported $107,000 worth of furniture of metal, and $145,000 worth of furniture of wood, a small amount of which went to the United Kingdom. Our total production, in round figures, would be about $12,000,000.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—522. Rovings, yarns and warps, wholly of cotton, not more advanced than singles, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 12½ per cent.

Mr. STEWART: Could we not proceed to another item? This one deals with textiles, and it seems to me that there might be considerable discussion on it. It is now eleven o'clock.

Mr. STIRLING: The clock is striking.

Mr. DUNNING: Would the committee prefer to permit the textile item to stand? If so, we will proceed to the end of the textile items.

Mr. STEWART: It is eleven o'clock.

Item stands.

Mr. DUNNING: We may proceed to item 586, in connection with which there is no change:

Customs tariff—586. Coal, anthracite, n.o.p.: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—597a. Musical instruments of all kinds, n.o.p., phonographs, graphophones, gramophones and finished parts thereof, including cylinders and records therefor; and mechanical piano and organ players: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in rate from 20 to 15 per cent against Great Britain. Our imports total $58,000 in connection with part of the item, of which $11,000 came from the United Kingdom. In another part of the item imports totalled $73,000, of which $13,000 came from the United Kingdom. Other musical instruments, not included in the figures I have just given, were valued at $282,000, of which only $6,000 worth came from the United Kingdom.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—598. Brass band instruments, n.o.p.; parts of pianofortes and parts of organs: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—598a. Brass band instruments, of a class or kind not made in Canada; bagpipes and complete parts: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—603. Fur skins, wholly or partially dressed, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 604. Belting leather in butts or bends; and all leather further finished than tanned, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 7½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a leather item. Sole leather is taken out of the old item. If hon. members wish, I can give the figures at length. If any hon. member is particularly interested he need only say so, and I will give the information.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 604. Crust oil leather, for use in manufacturing chamois leather: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a reduction. It covers the raw material used in the manufacture of fully finished chamois leather.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 604. Sole leather: rate of duty, 12½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: No. change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—605. Leather produced from East India tanned kip, uncoloured or coloured other than black, when imported for use exclusively in lining boots and shoes; genuine reptile leathers: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—605a. Genuine pig leathers and genuine Morocco leathers; so-called roller leathers: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—607. Leather, when imported by manufacturers of gloves or leather clothing, for use exclusively in manufacturing gloves or leather clothing, in their own factories: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in the rate from five per cent to free. There are imports valued at $31,000 of which $4,700 came from the United Kingdom. Of leather n.o.p., which would also be included in the item, the total imports were $402,000, of which only $22,000 came from the United Kingdom. Canadian production is about $1,000,000.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—607a. Leather, not further finished than tanned, in whole hides, in grains, or splits, when imported by manufacturers of upholstering leathers, for use exclusively in the manufacture of upholstering leathers, in their own factories: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—608. Leather, not further finished than tanned, and skins, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 5 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in rate from 10 to 5 per cent against Great Britain. On one part of the item the total imports were over $11,000, and on the other part they amounted to $138,000, of which $112,000 came from the United Kingdom. The Canadian production is included in all other leathers.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—610 et al. Belting, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in the rate from 20 to 15 per cent as against Great Britain. The total imports of rubber belting for machinery were valued at $80,000, of which $22,000 came from the United Kingdom. Beltings of cotton were valued at $39,000, of which $12,000 came from the United Kingdom. Under the n.o.p. item the value was $36,000 of which $8,000 came from the United Kingdom. Under this item we export to the United Kingdom more belting than we import from her. It goes both ways, but we sell them more than they sell us.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—610a. Belting of camel's hair, for machinery: rate of duty, 7½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in duty, but this is a relatively unimportant item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—611a. Boots, shoes, slippers and insoles of any material, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 22½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in rate from 25 to 22½ per cent.

Mr. BAKER: Have the Canadian boot and shoe manufacturers had much to say about this?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, of course I have had letters.

Mr. BAKER: Do they fear unemployment through it?

Mr. DUNNING: They do not say so.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. BAKER: This is not a joking matter.

Mr. DUNNING: I realize the hon. member is asking a serious question.

Mr. BAKER: But somebody thinks it is funny.

Mr. DUNNING: The letters I have received with regard to the item make the usual complaints made when a duty on a manufactured article is reduced. I am not surprised to receive them, but I would point out that we are large manufacturers. More than 98 per cent of the Canadian boot and shoe demand is supplied by Canadian manufacturers. They also export a substantial quantity of boots and shoes, notably canvas shoes with rubber soles, the exports being valued at $1,205,000; and exports of boots and shoes of leather are valued at $350,000. Our Canadian production in 1934, the last year for which there is a record, was valued at $30,305,000.

Mr. BAKER: The minister does not anticipate that it will cause much more unemployment?

Mr. DUNNING: Well, Mr. Chairman, in negotiating the agreement, so far as my judgment would permit me I was anxious not to cause unemployment at all, but rather to create employment. I think on the whole that will be the effect of the agreement.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 612. English type saddles: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in the rate.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—617. India-rubber boots and shoes: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—619a. India-rubber clothing and clothing made from waterproofed cotton fabrics: rate of duty, 25 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a reduction brought about by the removal of a former specific duty. Previously there was a specific duty of 50 cents per garment under all tariffs, and under this item that is being removed as against Great Britain. Our imports were $21,000 in the one item and $45,000 in the other, $5,000 and $4,000 of which respectively came from the United Kingdom. We are large exporters of rubber clothing, in fact, we exported to the United Kingdom considerably more than we imported from that country. Last year the total Canadian production was close to $700,000.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—622. Trunks, valises, hat boxes, carpet bags, tool bags, and baskets of all kinds, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in rate from 20 to 15 per cent. Our total imports were $84,000 and $44,000, of which $43,000 and $4,000 respectively came from the United Kingdom. We exported a small quantity. In 1934 our production was valued at about a million and a quarter dollars.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—623. Musical instrument cases and fancy cases or boxes of all kinds, portfolios and fancy writing desks, satchels, reticules, card cases, purses, pocket-books, fly books, and parts thereof: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction from 20 to 15 per cent. Our imports of pocket-books and so forth were valued at $552,000, plus $345,000 for books, cases and so forth. In both cases the principal source of supply was the United States, with the United Kingdom coming second. The total imports of both items from the United Kingdom were valued at about $258,000. We do not export these commodities. The total Canadian production would be valued at about a million and a half dollars.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex 624. Statues and statuettes of porcelain or earthenware: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in the rate from 20 per cent to free. The making of these art ornaments is an important branch of the English ceramic industry. Several potteries specialize in this type of product.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Customs tariff—624a. (i) Dolls; toys of all kinds, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

(ii) Mechanical toys of metal: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

(iii) Juvenile construction sets of metal, consisting of various stampings, punched, and connections therefor; parts of the foregoing: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in the rate on dolls and toys from 20 to 10 per per cent; there is no change in the second division.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—625. Caps, hats, muffs, tippets, capes, coats and cloaks of fur, and other manufactures of fur, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—628. Braces or suspenders, and finished parts thereof: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: This is a relatively unimportant item, but the reduction is from 22½ to 15 per cent. The committee may be surprised to learn that the Canadian production in 1934, when people did not use as many suspenders as they are using now, was valued at $700,000.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—647. Jewellery of any material, for the adornment of the person, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 25 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in the rate from 30 to 25 per cent. Our total imports were $621,000, only $40,000 coming from the United Kingdom. We exported $68,000 worth, of which $29,000 went to the United Kingdom. Our own production is just over $2,000,000.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—653. Brushes of all kinds: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in the rate from 17½ to 15 per cent. Our imports were in the following amounts: $31,700, $65,900, $88,400 and $99,036. The United Kingdom is the principal source of supply in all but the last item. We exported to the value of $85,000, of which $13,000 went to the United Kingdom. Our total production is valued at a million and a half dollars.

Mr. BARBER: Were there any importations from Japan?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes. On one item, $16,000; on another $9,000, and on another, $2,000.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—655. Pens, penholders and rulers, of all kinds: rate of duty, 12½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: Reduction in rate from 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—655a. Lead pencils and crayons: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in rate from 15 to 10 per cent.

Mr. BAKER: How will this reduction affect the manufacturers north of Toronto?

Mr. DUNNING: The imports will tell the story. Our total imports of lead pencils, non-propelling—I like that description—were $76,000, of which $35,000 came from the United Kingdom. Of lead pencils, not self-propelling, our imports totalled $117,000, of which $37,000 came from the United Kingdom. Our imports of crayons totalled $62,000, of which $15,000 came from the United Kingdom. The production in Canada in 1934 of lead pencils was valued at $397,000; of other pencils, $166,000, and of crayons, $9,300.

Mr. BAKER: I do not see the hon. member for that district upholding his industry.

Mr. DUNNING: The industry is well-established, and in fact, is exporting.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—656. Tobacco pipes of all kinds, pipe mounts, cigar and cigarette cases, cigar and cigarette holders, and cases for the same, smokers' sets and cases therefor, and tobacco pouches: rate of duty, 17½ per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: This is an item for myself. There is a reduction in the rate from 22½ to 17½ per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex. 657a. Film of standard width (one and one-eighth of an inch and over) when imported for the sole purpose of having 16 millimetre reproductions made therefrom and provided that the original is re-exported within three months from date of importation: rate of duty, free.

Mr. DUNNING: The previous rate was 1½ cents per lineal foot, and it now comes in free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—659. Photographic dry plates: rate of duty, 15 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—663. Fertilizers, compounded or manufactured, n.o.p.: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—663e. Sea-weeds or sea-plants, charred, whether powdered or not, for use exclusively in the feeding of animals: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—670. Grinding wheels, stones or blocks, manufactured by the bonding together of either natural or artificial abrasives; manufactures of emery or of artificial abrasives, n.o.p.: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a reduction in rate from 15 to 10 per cent. This is a rather important item for industry.

Mr. STEWART: What is the production in Canada?

Mr. DUNNING: In 1934 the production was $46,000 in one item; $569,000 in another; $62,000 in another, and $934,000 in another, We export more than we import.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—683. Barytes: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—684. Rubber thread, not covered: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—685. Pantagraphs and parts thereof, including diamond points, and engraving mills, for engraving copper rollers used in printing textiles and wallpapers; blankets, blanketing and lapping imported for use exclusively by textile manufacturers and wall-paper printers: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—689. Charcoal, animal, for use in the refining of sugar: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex. 710. Coverings, inside and outside, used in covering or holding goods imported therewith, shall be subject to the following provisions, viz:

(b) Usual coverings containing goods, not machinery, subject to any ad valorem duty, when not included in the invoice value of the goods they contani: rate of duty, 10 per cent.

(bb) Usual coverings containing machinery subject to any ad valorem duty, when not included in the invoice value of the goods they contain: rate of duty, 5 per cent.

Mr. DUNNING: There are reductions from 15 to 10 per cent and from 7½ to 5 per cent.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—ex. 711. Iodised mineral salts, for use exclusively in the feeding of animals: rate of duty, free.

Item agreed to.

Mr. DUNNING: This leaves us only the steel and textile items in schedule IV. We still have schedule V to deal with. I would point out that this schedule deals only with margins of preference not with rates. It is the guaranteed margin of preference which, as I said in the budget speech, applies to 91 tariff items as compared with 215 in the former agreement. Perhaps the committee would like to know that 20 of the 91 items carry a lower guaranteed margin than they did in the former agreement; the remainder of the 91 carry the same degree of guaranteed preference as in the previous agreement. Hon. members have had a chance to look over it and perhaps they would be willing to carry schedule V as it is.

Mr. STEWART: No, it is eleven o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DUNNING: I am well satisfied.

Mr. BAKER: These items will not take long.

Mr. DUNNING: They should not, but you never can tell. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

It being seventeen minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, March 22, 1937

The house met at three o'clock.

MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince) presented the second report of the standing committee on marine and fisheries, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Mr. A. M. YOUNG (Saskatoon) presented the third report of the standing committee on railways and shipping.

He said: With the consent of the house, I move, seconded by Mr. Hanson:

That the estimates referred to and approved of in the third report of the standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, viz: items 96, 97, 293, 361 and 362, be referred to the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Dunning.]

PREMIER TRUST COMPANY

Mr. D. G. ROSS (St. Paul's) moved:

That the petition of the Premier Trust Company, presented on the eleventh of March, praying for an act to authorize an increase of capital stock, together with the report of the clerk of petitions thereon, be referred to the standing committee on standing orders for the purpose of considering the suspension of standing orders 92 and 93(3)(a) and (b).

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

COAL DELIVERIES, OTTAWA

Mr. POULIOT:

1. During the present fiscal year, did the weights and measures inspection service inspect for shortweight on loads of coal delivered in the city of Ottawa?

2. If so, how many loads were delivered: (a) overweight; (b) correct weight; (c) shortweight?

3. If any delivery was shortweight, what was the greatest individual case of shortage, and also the total shortage on all inspected loads?

4. Referring to the above paragraphs, what action, if any, was taken by the weights and measures service as a result of this test, against companies or individuals selling shortweight coal?

5. Over what scale or scales are the weight deliveries of coal on government contracts or purchases ascertained in the city of Ottawa?

6. How recently have these scales been inspected?

7. Was there any error found on the scale or scales used to weigh the government coal, and, if so, what was it?

8. Were any scales: (a) rejected; (b) condemned; or (c) sealed, as a result of any inspection?

9. If so, when, how many, and where are they located?

10. Did the government take action to secure the reimbursement for shortweight deliveries ascertained over any scale found defective on an inspection during the period mentioned in paragraph 1?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. Yes.

2. Overweight—none; correct weight—none; short weight—7.

3. Greatest shortage—172¼ lbs. on 1 ton. Total shortage—342¾ lbs. on 7 tons.

4. Retailer affected was notified of results of check, and a special inspection of public weigh scales instituted.

5. According to information furnished to the under-secretary of state, the following scales were used to weigh coal on government contracts or purchases:—

Public Scale No. 1, Nicholas street.
Public Scale No. 2, Mann street.
Public Scale No. 6, Mann street.
Public Scale No. 10, Catherine street

6. No. 1—Inspected February 24, 1937.

No. 7	Champagne st..	..Mar. 10, 1937
No. 8	Echo Drive..	..Feb. 24, 1937
No. 10	Catherine st..	..Mar. 2, 1937
No. 11	Day st..	..Mar. 3, 1937
No. 11	Day st..	..Mar. 6, 1937
No. 12	Lees st..	..Feb. 24, 1937

(b) Condemned, none; (c) Sealed against use—No. 6 (Mann st.), sealed on Feb. 24; No. 7 (Champagne st.), sealed on Mar. 11; No. 11 (Day st.), sealed on Mar. 6.

10. The departments concerned have no knowledge of any short weight deliveries.

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Are the scales used in weighing coal purchased for government buildings in the city of Ottawa suitable for size and nature of loads weighed on same?

2. How are weights obtained for truck loads of coal when the truck is larger than the scale platform?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes, but there have been occasions when these scales were used to weigh loads for which they were not suitable.

2. Three methods are practised to obtain the weight of truck loads of coal when the truck is larger than the scale platform, as follows:

A. To weigh the load in two drafts, the first draft by placing the front end of the load on the scale, and the second draft by placing the rear end of the load on the scale, and taking the total of the two drafts as the gross weight of the load.

B. To extend the platform of the scale on each end to accommodate the increased length of the truck.

C. To attach extension skids to one side of the scale platform and run the front wheels of the truck on these skids until the rear wheels rest on the scale platform, and thus clear the load.

TOBACCO CULTURE, L'ASSOMPTION, QUEBEC

Mr. FERLAND:

1. Did the Department of Agriculture attempt to grow cigarette tobacco at the experimental station at L'Assomption, province of Quebec, during the past years?

2. If so, what were the results?

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Yes.

2. Good yields were obtained but the quality of the tobacco was not high. The results obtained in the year 1936 were fairly satisfactory both from the standpoint of yield and quality, but this may possibly have been due to the fact that the tobacco was grown on stronger soil than is customarily used.

SASKATCHEWAN-ALBERTA BOUNDARY SURVEY

Mr. HAYHURST:

1. When was the original survey of the meridian between Alberta and Saskatchewan completed?

2. Has the government any immediate plans for the resurvey of the portion of the meridian between Alberta and Saskatchewan within the Cambrian Shield?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. The survey of the meridian between Alberta and Saskatchewan was completed to the south shore of lake Athabasca in 1913. The balance of the meridian is unsurveyed.

2. No.

IMMIGRATION OFFICERS

Mr. REID:

1. What amounts of money were paid by way of overtime to immigration inspectors during the calendar years ending 1934, 1935, and 1936?

2. What is the total number of immigration officers employed by the Department of Immigration in the various provinces?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. Calendar year 1934, $39,645.84; 1935, $46,426.63; 1936, $48,379.13.

2. Prince Edward Island, none; Nova Scotia, 10; New Brunswick, 18; Quebec, 51; Ontario, 162; Manitoba, 16; Saskatchewan, 5; Alberta, 6; British Columbia, 37; total, 305.

The above figures include only immigration inspectors.

SWIFT CURRENT, SASK., EXPERIMENTAL FARM

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. Has the government purchased or agreed to purchase additional land for the experimental farm at Swift Current, recently?
2. If so, how many acres?
3. How is the soil classified under the soils surveys of the university of Saskatchewan?
4. From whom was the land purchased?
5. What did the government pay for the property?

Mr. GARDINER:

1. The government has agreed to purchase additional land for the experimental station at Swift Current.
2. Approximately 480 acres.
3. Mostly Cypress loam, but some Haverhill loam.
4. The present owner is W. J. Sykes.
5. The purchase price has not yet been paid. The agreed price is $9,000.

AUTOMOBILE TRAFFIC, CANADA-UNITED STATES, 1936

Mr. ELLIOTT (Kindersley):

1. What number of Canadian motor cars reported outward from Canada during 1936 for United States?
2. What number entered Canada during the same period?

Mr. ILSLEY:

1. 689,674 Canadian automobiles reported outwards for touring purposes during the calendar year 1936.
2. 2,880,265 foreign automobiles were reported inwards for touring purposes during the calendar year 1936 for periods of 48 hours or less; 1,192,935 for 60 days; 1,323 for 6 months. 59,535 automobiles were reported inwards during that year for other than touring purposes.

2. If so, where is it located, and what does it consist of?
3. Who is the warden?
4. What are his duties?
5. (a) Is he required to make reports to the government from time to time, and (b) if so, how often?
6. (a) Is the park inspected regularly by an official of the parks department; (b) if so, how often, and (c) when was the last inspection made?
7. What is the warden's salary?
8. What was the itemized cost of maintaining the park during the last year of which the government has record?
9. (a) When was this park opened, and (b) who was the first warden?
10. (a) Does the government own the land; (b) if so, from whom was it purchased, and (c) what price was paid?
11. How much money has this park cost the dominion since its inception?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. There are two antelope parks in southern Alberta—Nemiskam national park at Nemiskam, and Wawaskesy national park at Bindloss. (The remaining questions will be answered separately for each park).

Nemiskam National Park

2. Nemiskam national park near Nemiskam, Alberta—comprised of 8·5 square miles of a fenced enclosure.
3. Edgar McHugh.
4. Responsible for the care and safeguarding of the antelope in the park, supervising the erection and repair of fences, the carrying out of precautionary measures against disease and predators, and the forwarding of reports and information to the department as required.
5. (a) Yes.
(b) Monthly and annually and special reports when required.
6. (a) Inspections are made when considered necessary.

10. (a) Yes. (b) Title to the park area contained in the description in answer (2) was still in the crown in the right of the dominion when the park was established. (c) Answered by 10 (a) and 10 (b).

11. $1,471.53.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY, QUEBEC

Mr. LACOMBE:

1. Did the dominion government discuss with the former provincial government of Quebec the construction of a section of the trans-Canada highway in the county of Laval-Deux-Montagnes?

2. If so, were plans and specifications prepared with that object in view by the engineers of the former provincial government?

3. Were estimates prepared in connection with this proposed project either by the former provincial government of Quebec or the dominion government?

4. If so, who asked for the suspension of the execution of the project?

5. Has the construction of the new bridge at Boulevard Pie IX, at St. Vincent de Paul, been substituted for the construction of a section of the trans-Canada highway in the county of Laval-Deux-Montagnes?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. P.C. 1945 of August 4, 1936, authorized the Minister of Labour to enter into an agreement with the province of Quebec under the terms of The Unemployment Relief and Assistance act, 1936. The agreement thus authorized was duly executed under date of August 6, 1936. This agreement provided that the dominion government would contribute 50 per cent of the cost of certain projects listed in schedule "C" including project 24:

"Travaux preliminaires fondation, stabilisation, et lapis., St. Augustin-St. Eustache." The maximum dominion contribution toward the cost of this project was set at $143,883.75.

2. No information.

3. Not by dominion; no information regarding province.

4. By P.C. 2840, November 3, 1936, a new agreement was authorized between the dominion government and the province under the Unemployment Relief and Assistance act, 1936, in which an entirely new schedule of works proposed by the provincial government was incorporated and which did not include the project set forth in the answer to No. 1 above.

5. Included in the schedule to the agreement authorized by P.C. 2840 of November 3, 1936, is project No. 12 providing for the building of a bridge on Pie IX Blvd., at St. Vincent de Paul, maximum dominion contribution $300,000, but there is nothing to indicate that this was substituted for any particular project authorized by the earlier agreement.

ST. ANN'S ONTARIO, MAIL SERVICE, R.R. NO. 1

Mr. LOCKHART:

3. How many persons applied for the position?

4. What are their names?

5. Were any of the applicants returned soldiers?

6. Has the location of the post office been changed within the past few months?

7. If so, how many years was it maintained at the former location?

8. What was the revenue of the post office for the calendar year 1936?

9. What compensation did the postmaster receive for the calendar year 1936?

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex):

1. Yes.

2. (a) Yes. (b) William Charles Lorimer Dargie. (c) No.

3. Four.

4. W. C. L. Dargie, V. Paul Bailey, Wm. Raeside, Miss E. Fraser Tupper.

5. Applicant Wm. Raeside states he saw military service. This candidate was eliminated, on examination, as lacking in education.

6. Yes. This was unavoidable when Dargie was appointed.

7. Since July 1930, when a change of 50 feet was made.

8. $703.11.

9. $498.83.

BALLANTYNE PIER—VANCOUVER

Mr. GREEN:

1. Has any shortage in the accounts of the Ballantyne pier in Vancouver been discovered within the last eighteen months?

2. If so, what was the amount of such shortage?

3. Has the official responsible been discharged?

4. Was such official bonded?

5. If so, with what company?

6. Who are the agents in Vancouver for such company or companies?

7. Has such shortage been made good, and, if so, by whom?

8. What attempts have been made to collect the amount of such shortages from the company or companies bonding such official?

Mr. HOWE:

1. Yes.

2. $5,587.40.

3. Yes.

4. Yes.

5. Canadian General Insurance Company and Hudson's Bay Insurance Company.

6. Canadian General Insurance Company; Parsons, Brown & Winckler Limited for Hudson's Bay Insurance Company.

7. No.

8. Demand made on bonding companies.

ICE-BREAKER, "MIKULA," ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Mr. BOULANGER:

1. Does the government own an ice-breaker called the Mikula on the St. Lawrence river?

2. Is such boat now used in ice-breaking? If so, where?

3. How long has this boat been in the service of the government, and of what department?

4. If the said boat is not now in operation, since when has it been out of commission, and for what reason?

Mr. HOWE:

1. Yes.

2. Not since 1935.

3. Thirteen years, from 1922 to 1935, under the Department of Marine.

[Mr. J. C. Elliott.]

4. Has not been in operation since 1935 owing to her efficiency not being commensurate with the high operating costs, and as the services can be adequately performed by the other ice-breakers of the department.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE—PURCHASES OF HORSES AND OATS

Mr. TUSTIN:

1. How many horses have been purchased for the Royal Military College since January 1, 1936, to date?

MANITOBA FEDERAL RELIEF AREA

Mr. WINKLER:

1. Have any requests been received from the province of Manitoba since February 8, 1937, for the inclusion of any rural municipalities in the federal relief area?

2. If so, what are the names of these municipalities?

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Yes.

2. Argyle, Wallace, Cameron (north half), Lorne, Strathcona, Rhineland, Stanley.

MAJOR GENERAL A. G. L. MCNAUGHTON

Mr. POULIOT:

Before July 4, 1936, did Major General A. G. L. McNaughton pay anything for his military pension, and if so, how much?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes. $5,835.86.

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Did Major General A. G. L. McNaughton, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., M.Sc., LL.D., president of the National Research Council, make any scientific discovery, from the date of his appointment, June 1, 1935, until now?

2. If so, what was it?

3. If not, what has he been doing as president of such council?

Mr. ROGERS: Mr. Speaker, this appears to be a rhetorical question and does not admit of an answer in its present terms. I would ask that it be dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

Mr. POULIOT: I have no complaint to make as to meeting the objections of the minister. I am ready to go to the limit, and this is the next step within the limit.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

LIEUT. COL. W. ARTHUR STEEL

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Referring to sessional paper No. 213 of March 11, 1937, did Lieutenant-Colonel W. Arthur Steel pay anything for his superannuation between October 1, 1931, and January 17, 1933?

2. If so, how much?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1, 2 and 3. $267.59, under the provisions of the Militia Pension Act.

4. $2,151.34.

CORONATION DAY: COMMEMORATIVE PLANTINGS

Mr. PURDY:

1. Is it a fact that a quantity of acorns from the Royal oaks will be sent to Canada for distribution to various points in order that they may be planted on coronation day in the hope of producing trees to commemorate the day?

2. If so, in what manner and through what agency will the distribution be made?

Mr. RINFRET:

1. A press dispatch concerning the distribution of acorns was called to the attention of the government. Inquiries were made through the high commissioner for Canada in Great Britain, who advised that he had been informed that an organization known as "Men of the Trees" had shipped 10,000 acorns, collected in New Forest, consigned to "Men of the Trees, President, F. E. Robson, Yonge street, Toronto." A subsequent press despatch stated that acorns also were presented to the Ontario motor league by the Automobile Association of Canada with which the Ontario motor league is affiliated, but the government has no official information concerning this shipment.

2. Answered by No. 1.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

MINERAL PRICES AND MINERS' WAGES

Mr. ELLIOTT (Kindersley):

1. What has been the increase in the price of the various minerals mined in Canada in 1933, compared with the present price?

2. What has been the increase in wages of the miners during the same period?

Mr. CRERAR: Return tabled herewith.

RECRUITMENT FOR ROYAL AIR FORCE

Mr. ELLIOTT (Kindersley):

1. What number of recruits presented themselves for examination before the Department of National Defence for the Royal Air Force, since January 1, 1935?

2. How many have been accepted?

3. How many were rejected?

4. How many applications in any allotted time can be handled?

5. What qualifications are necessary for this service?

6. What is the duration of the service and remuneration?

NIAGARA CAMP AND NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. LOCKHART:

1. How many men were employed during 1936 on work in connection with Niagara Camp grounds and the rifle ranges at Niagara-on-the-Lake?

2. How many were returned men?

3. What was the rate of pay?

4. Were any of the men employed American citizens?

5. What are the names of those employed?

6. What were their earnings during the year 1936?

VANCOUVER HARBOUR COMMISSION EMPLOYEES

Mr. GREEN:

1. What persons were in the employ of the Vancouver harbour commission, or the National harbours board at Vancouver at any time during the period from the 1st day of April, 1932, to the 31st day of December, 1936?

2. What were the total earnings of each of such persons for such period, or the part thereof during which he, or she, was so employed?

3. What were the total deductions, if any, made from the salary or wage of each of such persons under the Salary Deduction Act, 1932, and amending acts, for such period, or the part thereof during which he, or she, was so employed?

4. Did any of such persons receive a refund of such deductions, and, if so, what persons, and in what amounts respectively?

5. Which of the persons in such employ, if any, did not have any deductions made under the said Salary Deduction Act, 1932, and amending acts, and what was the reason in each of such cases that no deduction was made?

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD, EDMONTON, EMPLOYEES

Mr. HAYHURST:

1. What are the names of the present staff of the Canadian farm loan board at the Edmonton office and what is the salary of each?

2. What are the names of the permanent appraisers employed by the Edmonton branch of the Canadian farm loan board and the salary of each?

3. What are the names of the temporary appraisers employed during the season 1936 by the Canadian farm loan board at Edmonton and the salary of each?

4. Are there any temporary appraisers employed at the present time?

5. Are there any representatives of the Canadian farm loan board in the Vegreville area?

6. If so, what are their names, positions and salaries?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

H. B. WALKER, WAINWRIGHT, ALBERTA

Mr. FAIR:

For a copy of the complaint or charge laid against Mr. H. B. Walker of Wainwright by Mr. Francis H. Morcom. Also a copy of the evidence given at the investigation held by Mr. Gariepy at Wainwright in September, 1936.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR SASKATCHEWAN HIGHWAYS, 1936

Mr. MacNEIL (for Mr. Coldwell):

For a copy of all correspondence and memoranda regarding appropriations for the hard surfacing and gravelling of highways in Saskatchewan during the year 1936.

C. W. STIRLING, SAANICH, B.C.

Mr. MacNEIL (for Mr. Taylor, Nanaimo):

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, reports and other documents relating to Cyril Warren Stirling, of Saanich Peninsula, Vancouver island, British Columbia, in connection with efforts to obtain support for him from the dominion government, by an annual grant for his researches in pea breeding.

ST. HYACINTHE-BAGOT, QUE., PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. GLEN (for Mr. Fontaine):

For a copy of all reports, correspondence, resolutions and other documents exchanged, since October 15, 1935, between the federal government and the government of the province of Quebec, concerning the municipalities of the county of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, in connection with the carrying on of public works for unemployment relief purposes.

[Mr. Green.]

ST. ANN'S, ONT., MAIL SERVICE, R.R. NO. 1

Mr. CLARK (York-Sunbury) (for Mr. Lockhart):

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and other documents from and after January 1, 1935, with respect to rural route No. 1, St. Ann's, Ontario.

ST. PIERRE LES BECQUETS, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. CLARK (York-Sunbury) (for Mr. Wermenlinger):

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, evidence, judgment, reports, and other documents, concerning the dismissal of Mr. Olivier Archambault, postmaster at St. Pierre les Becquets, Lotbiniere county, province of Quebec.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN BOARD, REGINA, DISMISSALS

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle):

For a copy of all letters, telegrams and other documents, passing between the Regina branch of the Canadian farm loan board and the head office of the board, and between any ministers and departments of the government, relative to the dismissal of Messrs. Fitzgerald, Roper, Woodman, Scott, Dodds and Wenaus from the Canadian farm loan board at Regina.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

RESOLUTIONS RESPECTING SOCKEYE SALMON FISHERIES AND CANADA-UNITED STATES INCOME TAX CONVENTION—PROCEDURE

On the order, "Government Notices of Motion":

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise not for the purpose of moving that the house go into committee of the whole to consider the resolution respecting the sockeye salmon fisheries convention, but rather to point out that it is customary to discuss resolutions of the kind with the Speaker in the chair. I am informed that when the notice was handed in to the clerk it did not contain the words "in committee of the whole," but that those words were added. It would I think be better to hold to the practice that is customary in these matters, unless the house has a desire to go into committee on the resolution. It may do so if so desired. If, however, the house is agreeable to proceeding in the regular manner I suggest we do not go on with the resolution to-day, and that it appear to-morrow on the order paper without the words "in committee of the whole." The same would apply to the resolution with respect to the Canada-United States income tax convention.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): With respect to the first resolution, it seems to me obvious that it should be discussed in committee of the whole, for there are many questions to be asked and answered and under our rules that could not be done with the Speaker in the chair. In my opinion a resolution of this kind should be discussed in committee of the whole. It is the only opportunity that will be afforded hon. members of asking certain questions in connection with it, as, for example, what will be the effect upon the treaty as a whole of what are referred to as "understandings," but which, I think are more properly described as "reservations."

The same may be said with respect to the resolution regarding income tax. Under our procedure there would be no possible method, unless the resolution were sent to a committee of the house, to ask for and receive detailed information which may be important to a clear understanding of the provisions of the agreements.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As I have stated, the government has no objection to having the resolution discussed in committee if hon. gentlemen opposite so desire. I have thought it advisable to point out what the practice has been, in order not to have the course proposed considered as a precedent with regard to subsequent resolutions of the kind. In the circumstances the resolution might stand until to-morrow.

Motion stands.

OLD AGE PENSIONS ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of and concurrence in the amendment made by the senate to Bill No. 42, to amend the Old Age Pensions Act.

He said: I think an explanation is necessary before the motion is carried. The amendment was introduced in the senate at the instance of the government after reconsideration of the feature of the bill, as it passed this house, which developed clearly, I think, in the committee stage in answer to questions from my hon. friend from Vancouver North (Mr. MacNeil) relating to the total permissible income of two blind persons married before the passing of this act, before any deduction could be made from the maximum of pension. Further discussion of the matter not only by the government but with those who speak for the blind in these matters resulted in the suggested amendment in the senate, which adds as paragraph (c), subsection 3 of section 8a, the following:

> In the case of a person married to a blind person receiving a pension under this section, by the amount of the income of the pensioner in excess of two hundred dollars a year.

That will have the effect of avoiding the doubling up of the incomes for a second time. The result then will be, if this amendment carries, that in the case of two blind persons married to each other before the coming into force of this act, each could receive a pension of $240 and each would be allowed a maximum permissible income of $200, so that the maximum total income of the couple before any deduction from the amount of the old age pension would be $880. In the case of two blind persons married to each other after the coming into force of this act, each could receive a maximum pension of $120 and each would be allowed a maximum permissible income of $200, so that the maximum total income of the couple before deduction from pensions would be $640. This scale maintains that advantage over the ordinary old age pension features which I emphasized on the second reading of the bill and in committee, as being necessary to take care of the extra expense to which blind persons are put by reason of their infirmity.

Before moving concurrence I should also remark on the questions that have been addressed to me by many members and also by correspondents from all parts of Canada as to the date at which pensions to the blind can be actually effected. It is important that we should be clear on the matter. The old age pension law is a joint dominion and provincial undertaking and anything we do here with respect to the federal act must have provincial legislative sanction before it can become operative. In some of the provinces legislation already existing would permit the province by regulation to adopt the provisions of this amendment respecting the blind. In some other provinces, I am advised, legislation will be necessary. The reason I urge the adoption of this amendment to-day, although it was not one of the bills mentioned on Friday night, is that some of the legislatures are in session and those interested desire to move in the matter as quickly as possible. It is difficult to say accurately when the pensions will be actually in force; they may be in force in some provinces before they are in others. Provincial legislation must be enacted if it does not already exist and the necessary regulations agreed to between the dominion and the provinces with respect to administration. I am sure hon. members will appreciate this information because many of them are receiving inquiries.

Motion agreed to; amendment read the second time and concurred in.

GOVERNMENT HARBOURS AND PIERS ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to Bill No. 9, to amend the Government Harbours and Piers Act.

He said: These are minor amendments. One is to insert, before the words "such works" in line 3 on page 2, the words "each of." The purpose is, as was the original intent of the bill, to make it clearer that the funds collected at one dock may not be applied to another. The second amendment is similar. In line 5, after the word "collected," it is proposed to insert the word "thereon." I have no hesitation in moving concurrence.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): The senate has added the word "thereon." The dues are not necessarily collected "thereon"; there may be side wharfage as well. It is therefrom as well as thereon. The minister made it clear in his explanation in committee of the whole.

Mr. HOWE: I think the word should be more properly "therefrom," but I doubt whether thereon is misleading.

Mr. BENNETT: As it reads now it says, "be retained from the tolls and dues collected." The senate have added the word "thereon." Surely it must be "therefrom," which includes both side and top wharfage.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REVISION OF ACCOUNTING SET-UP

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee on Bill No. 12, to provide for revision of the accounting set-up of the Canadian National railway system.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. STEVENS: Has this bill been before the special committee?

Mr. HOWE: It has been before the committee and has been reported back unanimously, as I understand it.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

[Mr. Dunning.]

On section 4—Minister to surrender to Canadian Northern certain of its capital shares.

Mr. BENNETT: What is meant by "cancellation" and "surrender" to Canadian National Railway? The shares are outstanding. There will be difficulty about surrendering and cancelling.

Mr. HOWE: The shares of the Canadian Northern Railway Company are held by the Minister of Finance. They were purchased at a cost which would amount for the whole issue to $18,000,000, and it is proposed to cancel the rest of the shares and to exchange the $18,000,000, the balance of the common stock issue of the Canadian Northern Railway for Canadian National Company stock.

Mr. BENNETT: It struck me, looking at it after the last sitting, that what we are doing is reducing the capital.

Mr. HOWE: That is true.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, should we not state that this is a reduction of capital? As it appears here it is an arbitrary cancellation, but in fact it is not that; it is a reduction of capital from $100,000,000 to $18,000,000. The board having decided that the value of the 600,000 shares of the stock was $1,000,000, this gave a value of $18,000,000 to the total issued stock, and what we are doing is reducing the value of the capital stock from $100,000,000 to $18,000,000. "Cancellation" is an inept term for that purpose. The section provides:

> The minister is hereby authorized to surrender to the Canadian Northern Railway Company, for cancellation, eight hundred and twenty thousand and six shares of the outstanding capital stock of that company, having the par value of eighty-two million six hundred dollars.

I suggest that what we should provide is that the capital stock of the company is hereby reduced from $100,000,000 to $18,000,000, and the remainder is hereby cancelled. To surrender the shares to the company for cancellation is, I think the minister will admit, contrary to all the rules of corporate practice. In reality all we are doing is merely reducing the capital, which in the ordinary course, assuming that the appropriate procedure is followed, could take place by any corporation.

Mr. HOWE: In this case "the minister" refers to the Minister of Finance, who now holds $100,000,000 of stock. I think this is more a direction to the Minister of Finance to effect the reduction in capital by surrendering that amount of stock.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the intention.

Mr. BENNETT: It certainly is very poorly done.

Mr. CAHAN: That would not complete the transaction.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the capital still stands at $100,000,000. It really requires a combination of this provision and another reducing the capital stock to $18,000,000; otherwise you will have the anomaly of the minister surrendering stock for cancellation and the capital stock still remaining on the statute books at $100,000,000. In corporate practice, the power to cancel is never exercised in that way; it is done by reducing the capital by appropriate proceedings.

Mr. HOWE: If I am not mistaken the Canadian Northern company disappears from the consolidated balance sheet as a corporate entity in this bill, and I think this is only preserving the value—that is the true value of the stock—it is the device adopted for preserving the value of the stock according to the report of the arbitration.

Mr. CAHAN: But does the minister intend after the enactment of this clause that the appropriate proceedings shall be taken under the railway act to reduce the capital stock of the company?

Mr. HOWE: Quite.

Mr. CAHAN: Is this merely an ancillary or preliminary provision, or is it intended by this provision to deal with the matter of surrender as well as the matter of the reduction of capital? That is the point raised by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BOTHWELL: If we understood this matter in the committee, this is simply a direction to the Minister of Finance to surrender stock held by him. What happens to that stock afterwards will depend upon subsequent sections of the bill.

Mr. BENNETT: Look at the next section. Section 5 covers it.

Mr. BOTHWELL: It is simply a direction to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. BENNETT: It does not stop at that. If it did, there might be some point to the observation of the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell). This places in the hands of the minister this $80,000,000 odd of stock and says, "for cancellation," and the next section provides that the $18,000,000 shall be exchanged for stock of no par value. So that the corporate structure of the enterprise is entirely changed. The Canadian Northern system came into being by statute of this parliament, and that statute is now being altered. It is upon the statute that we depend for the consolidation of the Canadian Northern system, and the capital was fixed at $100,000,000. That $100,000,000 is in the hands of the Minister of Finance. It is now provided that $82,000,000 odd shall be handed over to the Minister of Finance for cancellation —

Mr. BOTHWELL: If I may interrupt, not handed to the Minister of Finance, but surrendered by him.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, surrendered by him for cancellation. How can the company cancel stock when the whole corporate life depends on that statute? We are dealing with the Canadian Northern system, a system of consolidated roads, I think some one hundred odd railway systems, small and large. With that system dependent for its corporate existence on a statute of the parliament of Canada, we now say to the minister: You will surrender to that railway company its own capital stock for cancellation. Surely that is not an adequate expression of what is intended. It would be regarded in most places, I think, as a very singular thing if we did that. Of course it is not for me to do more than point it out; the government has a majority.

Mr. HOWE: It seems to me that there will be, as the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) suggested, an ancillary action by the railway company itself to deal with the Canadian Northern Railway Company under the railway act. That is, that company may disappear later; it does not disappear through this bill but it does disappear from the consolidated balance sheet of the Canadian National Railways.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall clause 4 carry?

Mr. BENNETT: No. I protest against it; that is all I can do. I cannot bring myself to support that.

Section agreed to on division.

On section 5—C.N.R. and Canadian Northern exchange of stock.

Mr. BENNETT: Clause 5 is open to more serious objection still. The minister is authorized to transfer to the Canadian National Railway Company the 180,000 shares he has. That is understandable. But what we are going to do is to amend the statute that created this enterprise, the Canadian Northern system, and make these shares of no par value. We are not purporting to amend the statute as we should be doing, but are providing by this bill that there shall be transferred to the Canadian National 180,000 shares—

> . . . in exchange for one million no par value shares of capital stock of the Canadian National Railway Company with the initial stated value of eighteen million dollars, the issue of which shares is hereby authorized to be made. . . .

That is, the $18,000,000 of Canadian Northern shares are to be exchanged for 1,000,000 Canadian National Railway shares of no par value. The statute on which this depends does not purport to be amended, and it is the lifeblood of the whole Canadian Northern enterprise. It is the statute against which I voted when I was a private member of parliament. I voted against the capitalization of $100,000,000, but here we are really amending that statute, and in doing so we ought to be careful to remember what it is. That statute represents the consolidation of all the Mackenzie and Mann enterprises in one corporate structure. Now we are substituting for parliament the governor in council in such a way as was never heard of before.

Section agreed to on division.

Section 6 agreed to.

On section 7—Minister to abandon certain claims against C.N.R.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose there is no question about our having power to do this. This is an ante-confederation claim. I assume there are no questions affecting the older provinces in regard to a matter that arose prior to confederation in connection with the old Grand Trunk. I have never been able to get to the bottom of why it has been carried in the books continually. The only explanation that was ever suggested to me was that it was essential to do so because of the possible rights of the provinces in connection with the matter. I only point that out for what it is worth, because I have never been able to understand why the claim was continued in our books.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the only reason that was ever advanced to me.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—Adjustment of differences between public accounts and National Railway System accounts.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, this raises the whole question again. The minister continually talks about duplication. There has been no duplication; none whatever, and when he talks of duplication he does violence to language, as I think he will have to admit. The accounts of the country and the accounts of the railway company are not the same. The railway company merely shows what its indebtedness is. The accounts of the country show what are its issued securities. One shows securities on which cash is obtained, and that cash was paid over to the railway company. The railway system therefore carries on its books a statement showing that it received cash from the government of Canada, while on its books the government shows that it issued securities from the sale of which the money was obtained.

Shortly that is the story. I might speak for a day and I could not say anything further than that. Nevertheless this section says:

> . . . the minister may adjust the certain current differences between the public accounts of Canada and the accounts of the National Railway System relative to the government railways and the Hudson Bay railway, in accordance with the terms of schedule B of this act.

I certainly protest against changes being made in the public accounts that fail to show the true state of the accounts of the country. It is just as bad to do it by statute as it is to do it in some other way. When you have to say you are doing something that the audit act does not permit, you say something which on its very face carries its own condemnation. When you have to bar the operation of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, 1931, for the purpose of doing something with the accounts of this railway company, what you do carries its own condemnation. Why should the audit act be disregarded? Why should it be set at naught? Why should you endeavour to get around it? Why should it not be observed with respect to this as with respect to other matters? On the one hand there were the loans from the public; on the other hand there are the receipts by the company. The company shows those receipts; the country shows an issue of securities. On the one hand cash was obtained; on the other hand cash was received, so there can be no such thing as duplication.

Since this bill was introduced I have looked at the accounts of other enterprises. Take, for instance, the accounts of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, published today. They show how the company got its money. They show that on the leased properties the company has expended some $97,000,000. On the one hand the leased properties received the cash, $97,000,000; on the other hand the company issued its securities to obtain the money. There is the cash from the sale of securities and there is the receipt of this cash so obtained. The lessee advanced the money to spend on the leased property; the same lessee obtained the money from the public by the sale of its securities.

In this case it happens to be a railway company, and these operations come under a statute, the audit act. Now the minister is asking this parliament to set aside the operations of the audit act in order that he may do something to the accounts that otherwise he could not do. Why should he ask that. He has given no answer; no one has given any answer. If the audit act should be observed, let it be observed. If it should be set aside, at least better reasons should be given than so far have been advanced. Why should we say that the audit act, which has been in force in various forms, though the principle has remained the same, since confederation, should be set aside for this transaction, and why should we endeavour to say that the full expenditure of money that we have put into an enterprise should not be shown?

I have no interest in the matter; I am not concerned about it personally, but every time a man suggests to me that we should say something which is different from the fact, I ask why. Well, no reason is given. We are told that it looks better, and that is all. One man says it is for clarity. We know perfectly well that is not so, because we are asked to set aside the audit act to enable it to be done. If a private individual were to come to this parliament and say, "I want to set aside the provisions of the Companies Act in order that I may do so and so with my accounts," we would say that was juggling the accounts, but when the minister says, "I want to set aside the audit act; I do not want that act to apply at all; I want a separate dealing with this," I think it gets down to the elementary discussion of a single question: Is it right to show on the one hand the receipts and on the other hand, in the public accounts, the sale of the securities that produced the sums thus received? As I said the other day, if these sums had been received from Morgan Grenfell and Company, they would have to be so shown, but now we are asked to set aside the provisions of the audit act in order to say they were not received from the country. I do not understand it.

I make these observations in advance of another section which deals at greater length with the principles mentioned here, in regard to the government railways and the Hudson Bay railway. In connection with the government railways all you have to do is say that we spent so much money on them. Dear knows, any man who was born in the maritime provinces has heard enough of that story. From my youth up I have never ceased to hear of the amount of money that was spent on the government railways; in fact Sir Richard Cartwright once described the maritimes as the shreds and patches of confederation, speaking in reference to the sums of money that were spent. When Mr. Blair brought the Intercolonial into Montreal there were still further discussions of the matter. Then when the National Transcontinental was built to Moncton it will be remembered that Mr. Fielding and Sir Wilfrid Laurier said it was going to cost the country some $13,000,000. I think the figure stands at the moment at something over $200,000,000.

That is not the point at issue, however; it is the question of accounting. When we ask parliament to set aside the audit act in order that we may set up new accounts I must say we are doing something very serious; I think most governments would hesitate a long time before taking any such action. The audit act, after all, has stood the test of a good many years and has been regarded as a reasonably sound safeguard of the interests of the people. Notwithstanding that, we are going to do something by statute that serves no useful purpose that I can see.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Chairman, I believe no one has claimed that there is duplication between the railway debt and the public accounts. The statement has been that there is duplication between the railway debt and the net debt of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: The public accounts.

Mr. HOWE: The accounts dealt with here are set up as deferred assets in the net debt. Through the act we propose to set them down in one lower category, that is the consolidated accounts. I see no violence here. So far as the principle of the thing goes, I believe that was very definitely admitted in 1932 when the Canadian Pacific-Canadian National bill was passed in the house. That bill provided that operating deficits should not be funded.

Mr. BENNETT: By a railway.

Mr. HOWE: Should not be funded as a debt against a railway by a government. In other words, that we should not put into our treasury a piece of paper which said that on a certain date a railway must repay to the government of Canada certain deficits.

Mr. BENNETT: It does not say that; look at it.

Mr. HOWE: I think it does say that.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what the statute says at all.

Mr. HOWE: In any case, that is the way it works.

Mr. BENNETT: No, no.

Mr. HOWE: If we accept that principle, ninety per cent of what this bill does can be achieved by making that same law retroactive. It is simply a matter of going back over the years and taking the amounts paid to the railways to cover deficits, and removing them as capital obligations. I see nothing new in the principle. It seems to me that principle was definitely accepted in 1932, and should logically be applied.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister is in error when he states that the 1932 statute makes any such provision as he suggested. The report did suggest, and the statute in terms provides, that the railway company shall not issue its securities for its deficits. That is, it shall not fund its deficits. The railway company can no longer fund its deficits. But the country has to fund the deficits and provide the money. I still say that the accounts of the company should show that the deficit was paid by the dominion government. The 1933, 1934 and 1935 reports do not show that, and I think they should have shown it. I was then of the opinion, and I still am. If the law prevented a public utility company from funding its deficits, and the public utility company could secure from the municipality the money to fund its deficits, it is quite obvious that on the books of the municipality it would show as a debt, unless in fact they had the cash in the consolidated fund of the city with which to pay. The Dominion of Canada borrowed the money with which to liquidate the deficits. The obligations are those of the country, not to the railway but of the country generally, and of those who bought securities. Out of the moneys thus obtained by the sale of the securities of the Dominion of Canada a sufficient sum was paid to the railway company to meet its deficits. It therefore follows that the railway company, which is a public utility enterprise, would owe the Dominion of Canada the amount of these deficits. No magic words can be used which will enable the company to pay its debts merely by providing that it cannot fund them. The debt is still there; it is still owed by the company to the people of Canada. The position taken that this is not a debt but new capital, and that it is really a payment by the country on account of capital obligations, would involve a complete change of the Canadian National statute, under which we operated.

Thus far the Dominion of Canada has been in exactly the position a municipality would hold with respect to a street railway owned by private enterprise. We have advanced the money to enable deficits of operation to be paid. As I pointed out, there are three deficits. There is the income deficit of $49,000,000; there is the deficit of $83,000,000 in the consolidated account, and the deficit of $115,000,000 shown by the bureau of statistics. The bureau shows the Canadian Pacific deficit of $6,000,000, in the same way, because it involved the setting aside of properties having no value. It so happens that the deferred maintenance equipment became so great, in the case of the Canadian National, that the sum of $20,000,000 was set aside in 1935 for maintenance purposes. So that the total deficit offered by the bureau of statistics is $115,000,000. For the same year the Canadian Pacific Railway shows one of $6,000,000. But there the similarity ends. The $115,000,000, the third deficit shown, represents the amount of money paid by the taxpayers of Canada to enable their enterprise, if we may call it such, to meet its obligations. The $49,000,000 and $115,000,000 are deficits on income. The balance represents the amount of money paid as interest by the Canadian people on the securities on which they borrowed money that they might lend it to the Canadian National Railways.

There can be no such thing as the duplication of railway and government accounts in connection with anything of that sort, any more than there is in private enterprise. If on one side you show the authority for my borrowing and on the other side you show from whom I received the money, you do not in any sense affect the facts. When the minister suggests it has nothing to do with the net debt of Canada, or any other debt of Canada, it is on the assumption that the people do not read the report. I do not think the people who lend the money to Canada are in any confusion in the matter. I have never seen any application of it, and I have had a great deal to do with it from time to time. The Canadian National accounts as audited by Touche and Company and by Clarkson in 1935 more clearly indicate the position; they show the authorization by statute for the borrowing of the money received from time to time. In every case that is set out at length; in every case the authority is given.

In the accounts of the railway there are moneys which came into their hands, from the Dominion of Canada, or from passenger or other traffic. There is the money which came from the Dominion of Canada, which borrowed the money and lent it to them. Surely no person could confuse the debts of the railways and of the country. My only difficulty is as to why we should have to set at naught statutory safeguards to do something that serves no purpose, except to cover up something that should be apparent to anybody who desires to know the financial history of the enterprise. Surely no purpose is being served by it, because the people ultimately must get to know it.

Mr. DUNNING: Is the right hon. gentleman quite sure that those remarks apply with respect to schedule B? Schedule B is the important factor, and from the point of view of the Department of Finance—

Mr. BENNETT: It has been amended, has it not?

Mr. DUNNING: I have it as it appears in the bill; I have no knowledge of its amendment. I think if the right hon. gentleman will look over the adjustments, possibly he may think differently. There is the first item:

Capital expenditures by Canadian National Railways from funds provided through loans by the dominion on wharves now transferred to public works.

That is to say, the government now owns the assets.

Mr. BENNETT: We have said there is no difficulty about that.

Mr. DUNNING: Those are the only items to which references are made in section 8.

Mr. BENNETT: But I was anticipating the other section, as I said a minute ago.

Mr. DUNNING: So far as section 8 is concerned, I am quite sure my right hon. friend will agree that every item there indicated is a perfectly proper adjustment of accounts in the ordinary business way. It would have to be done by estimate if it were not done by this bill.

Mr. HOWE: I think the Minister of Finance has not the amended bill, because in it there is a slight difference.

Mr. BENNETT: No one has ever objected to schedule B, in part. It is when we get down farther in schedule B that the trouble arises.

The CHAIRMAN: Schedule B has been amended.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I was going to mention that to the minister. If he has the amended bill before him he will observe that so far as schedule B is concerned there is, as I said on the second reading, no difficulty. The items which have disappeared from the assets are properly withdrawn. However, when we get down to the other items I find a recapitulation—has the minister the revised bill?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, I now have the revised bill which includes the recapitulation.

Mr. BENNETT: Certain changes have been made.

Mr. HOWE: There is no change down to the figure "$15,748,921.60" to be found on the lower part of the page.

Mr. DUNNING: Does the recapitulation on page 10 still remain?

Mr. HOWE: It is revised to some extent. There is a further recapitulation.

Mr. CAHAN: Has the revised bill been printed?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, and it was supposed to have been distributed.

Mr. BENNETT: If the Minister of Finance will direct his attention to schedule B he will see that the difference arises only after you reach the point where you begin to deal with what are spoken of as non-active assets. As the Minister of Transport says, there is no difficulty about this until you get into the realm of what are more or less non-active assets.

Mr. DUNNING: The view I take of it is this: At the present time the public accounts show these assets as amounts due by the various railways making up this system, and in future they will show the indebtedness by the securities corporation.

Mr. BENNETT: I have kept away from that phase of it. It will be seen that the amount of $15,748,921.60 is made up of three items, Canadian government railways, open accounts; Canadian government railways, stores accounts, and another stores accounts item.

Mr. HOWE: That is correct.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not think there is much difference between those two. I do not think the difference there causes a great deal of worry at the moment. If I have stores on hand—

Mr. DUNNING: It is working capital.

Mr. BENNETT: —they are working capital. We know that stores on hand are visible and tangible assets. When checks and inventories are taken, the term "working capital" might possibly be used.

Mr. DUNNING: From the standpoint of internal accounting, "stores accounts" would be perfectly correct; from the standpoint of government accounting, "working capital" is a better general description.

Mr. BENNETT: So far as I am concerned the matter is unimportant. Up to that point it is purely a matter of a choice between experts. Some men may use the words "stores," and that is the way presumably it is carried on the books of the enterprise; then when the annual statement is made, it is shown that the working capital is so much, which working capital is tied up in stores or otherwise, as the case may be. I am not concerned about your calling it working capital, but when you get down to the item, equity value of loans to Canadian National Railways, amount $643,860,558.26, transferred to securities trust in exchange for 5,000,000 shares of no par value capital stock, $270,037,437.88; and equity value of 1,000,000 shares of Canadian National Railway Company no par value stock received in exchange for Canadian Northern Railway Company stock, $18,000,000, you are getting into a realm where it becomes necessary for you to repeal pro tanto the provisions of the consolidated audit act.

Mr. HOWE: It is simply a matter of revaluing securities.

Mr. BENNETT: The point I am making is that you cannot revalue them so as to leave a true impression upon the public mind. If you say that the amount paid to the Canadian National Railways by the government of this country was only fifty cents when it was a dollar, no juggling or magic can change it from the dollar it was before. Why should we set at naught the provisions of the audit act and attempt to show that that dollar is not now equal to a dollar, that we will call it fifty cents or forty cents as the case may be? Who is hurt by calling it a dollar, if that is what it is? It really was a dollar because the people of Canada have had to pay a dollar for it. I can understand the question of interest, and I shall deal with that on another basis. I am now talking about the money the Canadian people have paid to the railway. Should we show this as it is, or should we show it as pieces of paper in securities corporation which is created by this statute? I think that is wholly wrong. Why is it being done? Why create a securities corporation? Why set at naught the provisions of a law which has stood the test of time? Why say that notwithstanding this we are going to do something else? Does it help the Minister of Finance or the credit of this country? It only makes it more serious and more difficult. People will say that up in Canada they are fixing up their accounts to make them appear to be different from what they are. No wizardry on the part of the men who are instructing the minister can change the fact that we owe that money. That is number one. Number two, where did the money go? No wizardry on the part of the minister can change the fact that that money went to the railway. Does it confuse anyone to show that we borrowed and they received? Why should we say that what we borrowed is 600, what we paid is 600, but what we are going to show is only 270? I cannot make it any stronger or any weaker than by just stating the facts. For the sake of argument, let us say that over here the Canadian people borrowed 600; we are going to wipe it out and say that all these people owe is 270, and that is to be represented by pieces of paper in a securities corporation which is being created for that purpose. Is that fair to the Canadian taxpayer?

Mr. CAHAN: These figures represent millions.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I was using them just as an illustration. Is that quite fair to Canada? Is it not going to induce people to say: They thought they were passing a statute to cover up something, but they have not covered up anything? All we need to do is just go back and find out what Canada borrowed. There is the whole story. Then we find out what she did with it. She gave it to the railway. Where is it now?

An hon. MEMBER: Lost.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh no, not lost—it is just gone before.

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid it has gone to "the undiscover'd country from whose bourn no traveller returns."

Mr. BENNETT: I do not take that view of it. Part of it represents deficits which went for wages, interest and various other things.

Mr. HOWE: Would the money paid out for deficits be properly capitalizable?

Mr. BENNETT: That is something which has to be considered in every reorganization plan. The minute you go into the hands of a receiver you stop paying interest on your bonded debt—it is a rule of law—and thereby save the money for the operation of the railway. The only reason that was given to me in opposition to the advocacy of a receivership of the properties was: "Oh, Mr. Bennett, you could not do that, because to do so would involve the credit of Canada, which has guaranteed the securities, and you have to pay them anyway." There is no doubt what would have happened if we had not come into the picture: these roads would be in the hands of a receiver.

Mr. HOWE: Quite.

Mr. BENNETT: I made as earnest a plea for that course as I ever made in my life, and it fell on deaf ears. Now we cannot do it because of our guarantees, but should we change our accounting system because of that? The minister asks whether they are capitalizable. I do not say they are capitalizable; I never did, nor do the auditors. All they do is to show where the money came from, and I think the consolidated balance sheet is the most effective way of putting the matter that has ever been attempted. What is the trouble with the present balance sheet?

Mr. HOWE: The trouble with the present balance sheet is that it puts a wholly fictitious value on the assets of the railway, whereas, suppose we come out with a loss of some forty million dollars, that money is gone if we take it out of capital.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. HOWE: Surely if the government for its own purposes wishes to put forty million dollars back into the system to keep it going, that is not capitalizable against the earning power of the railway. It represents no new value. This is the matter my right hon. friend settled in principle in 1932. He said, "This thing is wrong," and I admire him for it.

Mr. BENNETT: No, we simply said we will not capitalize the deficit as part of the funded debt of the enterprise.

Mr. HOWE: What we are proposing here is not a new thought. It has been recommended by everyone who has had anything to do with the enterprise.

Mr. BENNETT: No; they have recommended the reconstruction of the capitalization, but they have not recommended this.

Mr. HOWE: The elimination of government loans in the form of capitalized deficits, including interest, aggregating $904,000,000, is on the basis of (a) the report of the Drayton-Acworth commission of 1917 under the chairmanship of Sir Henry Drayton, which regarded the argument for capitalizing interest deficits on government owned railways as "somewhat fantastic"; (b) the 1925 report of two firms of chartered accountants—one, Edwards, Morgan and Company, and the other, Peat, Marwick, Mitchell and Company—as made to the board of audit under the Board of Audit Act of 1925, which recommended "that the practice of capitalizing operating deficits be discontinued" and that government advances for such deficits "be not added to the investment account, but be absorbed in the consolidated revenue fund of Canada"; (c) the report of the Duff royal commission of 1931-32, under the chairmanship of the Right Hon. Sir Lyman P. Duff, P.C., which made two significant statements on the writing-down of the capital liabilities of the national railways. In considering the earning power of the railway the commission said:

> It is obvious that on this basis of earnings the capital liabilities would require a very drastic writing down.

In recommending the early attention of the board of trustees to the whole matter of the capital structure, the commission further emphasized the need of liability adjustment, as follows:

> . . . this commission is of the opinion that it must be frankly recognized that a very substantial part of the money invested in the railways comprised within the Canadian National system must be regarded as lost and that its capital liabilities should be heavily written down.

Then the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act of 1933, to which I have referred, said "income deficits shall not be funded."

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so. I do not quarrel with that at all.

Mr. HOWE: Then we have—which I can refer to, though I do not know that it is necessary—the practice in other countries. Australia has done exactly the same thing with every one of her railways.

Mr. BENNETT: No. I am glad to have the chance to correct that.

Mr. HOWE: I shall be glad to give the right hon. gentleman chapter and verse.

Mr. BENNETT: I know all about that. I took the trouble to investigate the subject while on the ground. I intended to correct the statement when it was made by the minister the other day, so I went and looked at my papers. They did not write down depreciation of the properties. On the urgent demand of the commission they estimated a proper depreciation, and that depreciation represents the write-off; that is what is written off.

Mr. HOWE: We write off no depreciation on the Canadian National Canadian lines. We might call it that, perhaps.

Mr. DUNNING: We should reach the same place.

Mr. BENNETT: An entirely different thing.

Mr. DUNNING: A different route.

Mr. BENNETT: No. It is done in an entirely different way. In the United States the Interstate Commerce Commission calls for depreciation of the physical structure; and the minister pointed out the other day that the Grand Trunk Western has depreciated physically—that is, the road bed and structures.

Mr. DUNNING: Under that law.

Mr. BENNETT: Under the interstate commerce law. In this country we have had no such thing as depreciation, because in the early days of the Canadian Pacific they used to replace every car that went out of existence with a new car and charge it to revenue. That is the way they kept up equipment. On the question of the physical structure there never was such a thing as deferred maintenance. For instance, when they put in any new capital structure—when, for example, they substituted stone for earth ballast—it was not charged to any additional capital but was taken care of out of earnings. That has passed, because the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have no longer surplus funds enabling them to do that.

Mr. DUNNING: The fat is exhausted.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly. The Australian commission reported that their proper allowance for depreciation was so many pounds, and in Victoria and Queensland—I cannot speak from memory as to New South Wales—the appropriations were made by the government of the day, as they owned the railroads, assuming, as they wrote down the capital structure, the direct responsibility for the money.

Mr. HOWE: This is clause 4 of an act to make provision with respect to the adjustment of the finances of the state of Victoria in relation to railways and for other purposes:

4. (1) On the first day of July one thousand nine hundred and thirty-seven the railway loan liability shall be reduced by the sum of thirty million pounds.

(2) On from and after the said day there shall be established and kept in the treasury an account to be called the "reduction of railway loan liability account" to the debit of which account there shall on the said day be placed the said sum of thirty million pounds, being the sum by which the railway loan liability is reduced as aforesaid.

5. (1) In the financial year beginning on the first day of July one thousand nine hundred and thirty-seven and in every subsequent financial year, in any accounts or dissection of accounts prepared issued or published by the treasurer of Victoria there shall be charged against the Victorian railways commissioners all amounts paid by the treasurer of Victoria in any such year in respect of interest sinking fund payments and exchange (including expenditure incurred in connection with the payment thereof) in respect of the adjusted railway loan liability.

(2) In this section "adjusted railway loan liability" means the railway loan liability together with—

(a) the amount of all stock and debentures issued by the governor in council and in force in respect of loans raised for railway purposes by the government of the state of Victoria on or after the first day of July one thousand nine hundred and thirty-six; and

(b) all sums issued and applied on or after the said day under any Railway Loan Application Act out of any moneys in the state loans repayment fund—but less the sum of thirty million pounds aforesaid.

In other words they simply took £30,000,000 out of the capital of that railway and carried it in the public accounts. It has gone completely.

Mr. BENNETT: Carried it as a direct liability of the state.

Mr. DUNNING: Part of the consolidated fund.

Mr. BENNETT: The words used are "the treasury."

Mr. HOWE: The situation in Victoria is a little different from ours in that there is no public debt against the railways. The write-off of £30,000,000 in connection with that railway is not out of proportion to the write-off we are proposing here.

Mr. BENNETT: It is carefully pointed out that a record of it is to be kept in the treasury, separate from the state.

Mr. HOWE: That is what we propose to do.

Mr. BENNETT: They do not eliminate the record of it in the railway accounts, but they say "You shall show the railway companies less the thirty millions." The last words the minister read indicated that it was "less the £30,000,000 aforesaid," namely, the amount allowed for depreciation of the property. Shortly put, the Victoria situation is not unlike our own. The railways have not earned their way; they are owned entirely by the state, and the accounts, I am sure, merely show the sources from which the money has come, each one separate—1866, 1879, 1890, so and so, so many pounds. Now, owing to there being no allowance for depreciation they wrote off £30,000,000. The accounts hereafter will show a reduction by £30,000,000 for depreciation. The Minister of Finance says that they reached the same end, only in a different way.

The situation is hardly the same. There is complete ownership there. Here we have complete ownership of the property, and guaranteed securities on the one hand and direct advances on the other. I do suggest that it is highly important—I am only speaking my own mind—that there should be shown on the accounts of the railways a record of the amount of money actually invested in them. The government estimates the value as nil; but I do think that we should not set aside the operations of a statute in order to make a statement that may not be accurate. It is desirable to show in the statement the amount of money we have put into the enterprise. The difficulty is one that we cannot escape, because we have our guarantee outstanding. It is our guarantee, and that complicates the situation. If it were not for the guarantee—

Mr. DUNNING: It would be a simple matter.

Mr. BENNETT: As simple as A B C. But consider the situation. Take the Canadian Northern—there we start with a guarantee which the late Mr. Blair in the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier put through, for the line to Edmonton, providing in the terms of it that there should be no amalgamation with the Canadian Pacific. I believe the rate was three per cent, though I speak subject to correction with respect to such a matter because my memory may be inaccurate. Go to Manitoba next; I wonder if anyone realizes how complicated the situation is there. You have the old Northern Pacific, Mackenzie and Mann lines, and some private lines, on which we pay interest.

Now the important reason why, I suggest to the minister, we should not alter the terms of the accounts lies in the fact, which the provinces wholly overlook, that we bear their burdens under their guarantees. The minister has not time to look into everything, but I suppose he realizes that Saskatchewan and Alberta both paid interest on their guarantees and that we refunded them the money when we consolidated the roads. We absolutely refunded it to them.

Mr. DUNNING: Not for that reason, if my right hon. friend will permit me.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister was premier of Saskatchewan at the time. He got the money back.

Mr. DUNNING: I got the money back because the alternative was that the province had the right to take the railway at that time.

Mr. BENNETT: And it is a pity they did not.

Mr. DUNNING: My right hon. friend's predecessor in his present position took the view that the railway was worth more.

Mr. BENNETT: The pressure from all quarters for the dominion to assume that obligation is known to me. I was not in the house; I was not a candidate in 1917, and it happened between 1917 and 1921. If my memory serves me, it was in 1919 that there was a deficit in Alberta and Saskatchewan, though again I am only speaking from memory.

Mr. DUNNING: Your memory is very good.

Mr. BENNETT: I am not at all sure about these things, there are so many details involved. But may I direct the attention of the minister to this situation. In Nova Scotia we are absorbing interest on the Halifax and Southwestern. We come to New Brunswick and we find an arrangement there by which we are carrying that load in the valley, to say nothing of the national transcontinental, built by the state. Then we come to Quebec and there is a small bit there. And what about the Canadian Northern in Ontario? Then we get into the western provinces and they are all in that position.

We cannot long delay the constitutional conference, and the great problem that will confront that conference, at whatever time it may be called, will be the financial problem; and when the provinces are once more faced with the possibility of having to pay interest on these guarantees we shall be dealing with an entirely different situation. It is true they can foreclose their railways, but I have not met anyone who regards them as a great dominion asset in these days. Whatever they may have been in days gone by they are certainly not so regarded now. But the question would be put to the provinces whether they would operate these railways or not, and our board of railway commissioners would be relieved of a burden which they could never bear, because there has never been any unity of sentiment in that regard. We know it has been said that about 4,000 miles of track should be taken up. All you have to do is to propose that and at least 400,000 people will assert themselves in vigorous terms; they will not stand for it.

An hon. MEMBER: They are right.

Mr. BENNETT: But suppose you transfer to the provinces, where it belongs, the burden with respect to all branch lines—what then? Would it not be desirable in the interests of the country to have it dealt with in that way? Is it not desirable in the interests of the country that the province of British Columbia should face the question with regard to the Canadian Northern Pacific in British Columbia, with its guarantees? The stringent provisions in connection with trusteeship would force that issue in a different way and they could not make the same demands on us, for they have never conceded that we have done anything in the way of relieving them from obligation.

As regards Alberta, as I have pointed out to the house the actual money to build the Canadian Northern from Calgary to Macleod was borrowed and put in the bank, and part of it is still there; all that was done was to build a great part of the way and then abandon it, and the rest of the money is there. The railway will never be built—I hope not—but the money was obtained and interest on that debt is being paid in Alberta. Part of the money is still in the bank as a trust fund.

I cannot speak in detail with respect to Saskatchewan, because their obligations were largely in connection with the Grand Trunk branch lines enterprise more than with respect to the Mackenzie and Mann enterprise. In Manitoba, however, we have a combination of circumstances that will enable us as a federal power to say to the provinces at the conference, "This is what you have to face; this is your liability, not ours." Part of the money, in defiance of the audit act and other acts of the country, we are now going to set aside as money we borrowed to pay interest on these provincial obligations. If anything could be more ill-considered than for us to take that step at this time and put ourselves in that position, I do not know what it is.

I apologize for trespassing so long upon the time of the committee. The government have the majority and are going to put this measure through, but in my judgment they are creating a situation which has never been faced in this country before, defying the audit act, which they say shall not have any application to us; and the consolidated balance sheet, which heretofore has shown a complete record of all the money borrowed by the Canadian people for this enterprise, is to be changed. The amount of money that we have put into this enterprise will not be shown in the annual report of the company, and lastly, and more important still, we shall have interfered by legislative action of the dominion with the guarantees of the provinces, because we have borrowed money, mark you, to pay those guarantees.

Mr. HOWE: This bill does not change the relations with the provinces.

Mr. BENNETT: I have not had time to look into the question of the dominion arbitrarily determining that obligations of other persons than ourselves, represented by money which we borrowed and paid into the enterprise, shall have a value much less than one hundred cents on the dollar, when you come to deal with those provinces and their relation to us. Suppose we are dealing with the provinces at a conference. The Minister of Finance represents Saskatchewan and I am for the federal power. I say to him: See what we have paid for you during all these years, and he says: You have not paid much; you say it is not worth—

Mr. DUNNING: I am afraid you would not let me get away with that.

Mr. HOWE: All the money represented by funds that went into the property, which are the funds guaranteed by the provinces, is there, all kept at its face value.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the point.

Mr. CAHAN: No, that is not the issue.

Mr. BENNETT: When the minister from Saskatchewan and I are dealing with this problem of the financial relations between us, he says: My subsidy is entirely too small; this is all I have received. But, I say: Look at what I have been paying for you; look at what I have paid for Nova Scotia, for British Columbia. Yes, he says, but you do not mean to attach any value to that; you took over this road as part of your national venture, and I see you are writing it down on the books to forty cents on the dollar, and some of it worth nothing. I do not think you had better talk that way much longer; you do not attach much importance to that.

Mr. DUNNING: You would have a very vigorous reply to that argument.

Mr. BENNETT: But unfortunately the political mind of the minister from Saskatchewan would be such that he would at once say: I do not think we will discuss it further, because you attach little value to it, you have said so. Notwithstanding the safeguards of the audit act, which have been there since confederation, you are going to disregard this altogether. You will find that it will add to the difficulty of the situation in the ultimate determination of the relations between the dominion and the provinces. For the life of me I cannot see why it is being done. The idea of setting up a securities corporation—did anyone ever hear of the like?

Mr. CAHAN: No, it is unprecedented.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not only unprecedented; if it were not that intelligent men do it I would use a much stronger word.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Has anyone in this country believed since 1919 that the provinces would ever be called upon to make good their guarantees?

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot speak for many people, but I can speak for one. He has never failed to point out at home and abroad the liability of the provinces.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Have the provinces ever been asked to make good their guarantees?

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot say, but I have always endeavoured to remind them of their liability. Certainly I did when I was in the Department of Finance.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Most of these bonds have been refinanced in some form. Have the provinces taken any part in that refinancing, or been consulted?

Mr. BENNETT: As far as I know not a single guaranteed bond has been converted. The rates on those guarantees were very low. The Minister of Finance can speak for his time, but I know of no single case in which there has been a conversion.

Mr. DUNNING: Some have been converted.

Mr. BENNETT: Not the provincially guaranteed bonds.

Mr. HOWE: Practically all of Manitoba's have been refunded.

Mr. BENNETT: The ones I refer to as having been converted were bonds that had to do with the Grand Trunk Pacific. The late Sir Henry Thornton made an adjustment which was satisfactory to all parties, including the provinces, by which for the securities they had new securities were substituted at a lower rate of interest. But as to the maturities I have in mind, I am not sure whether one of them has matured.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, there have been refundings.

Mr. BENNETT: Not the provincial guarantees.

Mr. HOWE: Yes, the provinical guarantees.

Mr. DUNNING: Within the last five years.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I know that when the late Sir Henry Thornton was dealing with those questions certainly the provinces were consulted. I am sure of that because it was done by joint arrangement with them all. I dare say the hon. member for Swift Current remembers that statute of receivership in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific. Then there were the income bonds of the old Canadian Northern; that did not touch any provincial interest.

But I come back to the question. Has the minister before him the 1935 report of the Canadian National Railways? Why should there be a departure from that in principle? I am not talking about the language; you can use different words if you desire. But if the minister will turn up the consolidated balance sheet of 1935, certified by the auditors, he will find that they gave a statement—

Mr. HOWE: If my right hon. friend will look at pages 12 and 12a of the old bill he will find the balance sheet of 1935.

Mr. BENNETT: But I put this to the minister, and it is something to which I have not been able to find an answer. On page 13a of the new bill, showing the consolidated balance sheet of the system at December 31, 1936, total liabilities eliminated amount to $1,843,000,000 odd, and the revised figure becomes $1,361,270,295. Why you should throw out $1,843,000,000 from your balance sheet, notwithstanding the provisions of the statute which in principle has been in force for fifty or sixty years, and advance no reason that I have heard, I confess I find it difficult to understand, although I have tried. It may be that the difficulty is with my intelligence; nevertheless I cannot understand it. To write off $1,843,000,000 from the balance sheet which was prepared and certified by the auditors, notwithstanding the provisions of the audit act, seems to me to be going pretty far, and unless some purpose is to be served that I cannot see, I do not understand why it is being done.

Mr. KINLEY: Reference has been made to the Halifax and Southwestern railway. Was not that railway in the days of Hon. George H. Murray declared to be a work for the benefit of the whole of Canada, and the province relieved of any responsibility?

Mr. BENNETT: For the purpose of making it part of the Canadian National system, like other works it was declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, just as a public elevator would be, but that had nothing to do with the legal liability.

Mr. KINLEY: The province was relieved of any further responsibility. Furthermore, with regard to the statement that in our dealings with the provinces we would be in a bad bargaining position by reason of the fact that these railways are not a good asset, I think we are in an infinitely better position than we would have been if we had taken over an asset which they now regard as valuable.

Mr. WALSH: When this bill left this house and went to the committee this section was headed "Adjustment of certain accounts affecting government railways." It comes back to this house headed, "Adjustment of public accounts." I contended in committee, and I contend now, that the principle underlying this bill was vitally changed at that time, and that in place of the railway accounts being adjusted we are actually adjusting the public accounts of Canada. As far as I can see we are taking out of the public accounts non-active assets amounting to over $350,000,000 and putting them into the consolidated fund of Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: No, out of non-active assets.

Mr. WALSH: That is what I said, but bear in mind that this huge amount is being transferred to the consolidated fund of Canada. When this bill left the house the principle involved was that we were going to adjust the balance sheet of the Canadian National, not the balance sheet of the dominion. I think the minister himself made a statement that was very clear and significant when, on February 5, he said:

> I believe a schedule can be set up that will preserve the historical record, and this schedule can be made part of the annual report of the Canadian National railways. That perhaps will satisfy the purpose as to a record.

Instead of doing that, however, the minister now proposes to alter the balance sheet of the dominion as well as the balance sheet of the railways, altering the latter so that in future anyone looking at that balance sheet will not be able to tell the actual condition of the system from a financial point of view. I contended in committee, and I contend here, that the very principle of this bill has been very decidedly altered. I cannot see any reason for such a vital change being made by a member of the government after a bill had been given second reading in this house and sent to a committee. No satisfactory explanation has been given me as to why that should have been done; as to why the balance sheet of the country is the one to be altered rather than the balance sheet of the railways; as to why in future the balance sheet of the railway company is not to show the true situation of that company, and as to why this government should not give the people of Canada a clear picture in the balance sheet from year to year so that they may know exactly the amount of money they have invested in this government-owned enterprise.

I should like the minister to explain exactly what brought about this change, what gave rise to this vital alteration in the principle of this bill after it left the house.

Mr. HOWE: There is no change whatever in the nature of the bill. The original bill contemplated an adjustment of the public accounts. Schedule B is exactly the same, down to the elimination of the present schedule, as it was in the original bill. There is no new principle involved. While the bill was before the committee, however, we were asked by the Department of Finance to provide at the same time for such change of position of certain items of the public accounts as would permit them to release certain securities to the securities trust. No item of public accounts has been changed, but there has been a transfer from one section to a lower section. For instance, the accounts affected here were included in the non-active assets, and some $360,000,000 of them are being moved from non-active assets to the consolidated fund. That is the main change, and it is simply done here as a matter of convenience, at the request of the Department of Finance. As far as I can see there is no new principle involved whatever.

Mr. WALSH: But when you actually change the heading of the section from "Adjustment of certain accounts affecting government railways" to "Adjustment of public accounts," to my mind it does change the principle. You started out to adjust one account and you wind up by adjusting the other. I do not think that is a reasonable procedure.

At this stage I should like to take exception also to the development of the securities trust. I followed the argument of my leader, and I agree with the statements he made in connection with the securities trust. This is an intrusion which, to my mind, is going to make our railway situation worse confounded than it ever was, without doing any good. I feel that this section represents a development in connection with our railway problem that the people are going to find it very difficult to understand. I do not see why the minister should persist in legislation of this kind when, as he suggests, he was forced by certain influences emanating from the Department of Finance, and, I suggest, by certain influence brought to bear in the committee, to alter his position and take an altogether different stand. The mere statement that the underlying principle has not been changed does not alter my point of view one iota. I think the principle has been vitally changed, and I do not see even yet why the minister has seen fit to make this important alteration in this bill, which I believe is not in the best interests of the Canadian National system.

We expected something better from this government. A week or two ago I quoted a suggestion made by a former member of this government, who said his party would deal with this problem courageously. Is this a courageous way to deal with the railway problem of Canada, by complicating the financial set-up to an even greater extent than was the case before this bill was introduced?

Mr. DUNNING: It would be impossible to do that.

Mr. WALSH: Oh, no. The minister has often referred to the duplication that existed. That duplication could be noticed only when you compared the Canadian National balance sheet with the balance sheet of the country. There really was no duplication as such, but in comparing the two, if any person wanted to find the total debt of the country and was foolish enough to add the one to the other without doing a certain amount of subtracting, the result would be just too bad. Probably that had some influence on the financing of government loans, but does it require all that is contained in this bill to adjust matters of that kind? To my mind adjustments could have been made easily by certain statements, notes, appendices or whatever other method could have been adopted, at the end of the balance sheet of the Canadian National Railways, and at the end of the balance sheet of the Dominion of Canada, so that the items would be clearly and definitely placed before the public. That would have been better than a bill such as this, which will confuse the people more than they are now confused. There will be great difficulty when we try to place interpretations upon the balance sheets, or make comparisons between them, in order to arrive at the total debt.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the section carry?

Mr. BENNETT: No. I want the committee to look at pages 14 and 14a of the bill, where hon. members will find what is to be the balance sheet of the railway after the bill passes, then look at the balance sheet which we had in our hands. The assets are stated at $2,037,597,996.72. As a matter of fact, on that balance sheet they were $2,300,000,000. From that sum $262,000,000 has been taken off. The sums which have been deducted or eliminated are sums which we have discussed, and which need not be gone into in detail. But just look at it, if we are talking about the application of the Victoria system. We find investments in road and equipment standing at $1,832,343,031.85. No one suggests that that represents anything like the present value.

Mr. HOWE: It is every dollar that ever went in there.

Mr. BENNETT: Then, improvements on leased railway property, $4,248,964.14. I referred to the fact that the Canadian Pacific balance sheet in the paper to-day stood at $97,000,000. The value of that item is certainly problematical. That represents money, that is all it does—not the present day value of it. Then, look at the next item: Miscellaneous physical property, $59,814,644.23. Then we come down to the sinking funds, deposits in lieu of mortgaged property sold—that is in connection with the business on property covered by trust deeds from time to time, and the moneys held for the purpose of retiring the mortgages. Then we have investments in affiliated companies—and no one suggests that they are worth $31,642,437.30. If we had their value determined by arbitration, on the principle of the Canadian National Railways, they would not be worth half of that.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): What principle was that?

Mr. BENNETT: On their earning power.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Is that the way it was taken over in the first place?

Mr. BENNETT: The Grand Trunk arbitration said that the cost of physical reproduction was not a factor, and the evidence was not given. On earning power they decided the property was worth nothing—that is, there was no equity, beyond the securities. In connection with the Canadian Northern, three arbitrators decided that $10,000,000 represented the value of fifty-five per cent of it. A speech made in this chamber indicated that that was a very small sum compared with the earning power, because the $35,000,000 of income bonds had sold at a premium. To me it was ridiculous, but then I was said to be prejudiced.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Is that not fundamental to the whole trouble?

Mr. BENNETT: I am coming to that. We have spoken of the assets. The words always used have been "active and non-active assets."

Sir Henry Drayton still carried them as assets; they were non-active. He did not undertake to appraise the value of them. We have written them off, because if you will turn to the liabilities side of the ledger, appearing at page 14A of the bill, we have a most depressing situation disclosed. I do not wish to use language which is too strong, but we find that under the heading "liabilities" we have capital stock of subsidiary companies owned by the public to the value of $4,584,100. We have governmental grants of $3,013,748.90; long-term debt, public, $1,184,612,248.59. Then, "Dominion of Canada, current account, loans, active, $77,223,466.97" and "working capital for Canadian government railways, $16,771,980.54." Those are the stores to which we referred a while ago. The remainder of the table shows the following figures:

Current liabilities.	$35,351,859 26
Deferred liabilities..	3,331,771 52
Unadjusted credits and reserves..	36,381,119 54

Whatever else we may say, is not the effect of that to eliminate debts due this country, for which we hold securities, as liabilities? Is that a true statement?

Mr. HOWE: It is what?

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad the minister makes it clear that this is not a true statement.

Mr. HOWE: It is a true statement, but it is not true that we are eliminating the debts.

Mr. BENNETT: This liability statement is not true; it is a liability statement.

Mr. CAHAN: You are eliminating the possibility of changing values.

Mr. BENNETT: The other feature is that you add a note in these words: "These amounts are included in the net debt of Canada." There is the answer to all the minister's talk about the debt of Canada, possible duplication, and everything else.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): But why charge it to the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. BENNETT: Because it says here the money did go to the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Of course it did, but they went broke.

Mr. KINLEY: What about paying it back?

Mr. BENNETT: The question whether or not you can pay back your debt is not a determining factor as to whether or not it is a debt. The note says, "These amounts are included in the net debt of Canada." That is, $676,327,701.40 is included in the net debt of Canada, but that is only a third of it. Why strike out the other part? It is included in the net debt of Canada, too. If you put anything in, why put in only part and leave out the rest?

Mr. HOWE: The part we have here represents the money invested in the property, and the other represents money paid to cover operating losses.

Mr. BENNETT: But look at what is said here.

Mr. HOWE: And it never would have been capitalized under any sane law.

Mr. BENNETT: It is not a question of capitalization at all; It is a question of these words "Dominion government—proprietor's equity" represented by securities. If a private individual did that, he would go to gaol.

Mr. HOWE: No, if a private individual did what the government has been doing for years he would go to gaol—if he were to issue bonds against operating deficits.

Mr. BENNETT: Whose bonds?

Mr. HOWE: Anybody's bonds.

Mr. BENNETT: But surely the minister does not know what he is talking about, or he is saying something he does not intend to say. How else could the government deal with it, except to issue bonds and pay the debt? —because if it guaranteed the bonds of the company and there was a foreclosure, it would lose the whole enterprise. We had to issue bonds to pay the deficits. Either we had to become repudiators of our own responsibility and lose the property, or else borrow money and pay it.

Mr. HOWE: Could a private individual do that?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, certainly; private individuals have borrowed money for that purpose and are doing it every day. Only the other day I borrowed money from the bank to pay a guarantee I had given.

Mr. CAHAN: A public company cannot transfer all its liabilities to a new company and retain all its assets. I have known of directors in this dominion being sent to the penitentiary for their attempt to do that.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall section 8 carry?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: On division.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Surplus earnings to go into consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. WALSH: The section contains these words:

The directors of the Canadian National Railway Company may cause to be paid over to the minister for the consolidated revenue fund all or any part of any such surplus earnings.

Why the word "may"?

Mr. HOWE: We are giving the board of directors the privilege enjoyed by directors in most companies, namely that of paying or not paying dividends as they believe the state of the property permits. In other words they have the option of paying or not paying a dividend as they think wise.

Mr. WALSH: And if they decide not to pay a dividend, what do you propose that they do with the money?

Mr. HOWE: The money goes to build up the working capital of the property.

Mr. WALSH: It is reinvested in the property?

Mr. HOWE: No, it is not reinvested. It is simply carried as cash. When there is enough to reinvest would probably be the time to pay a dividend.

Mr. BENNETT: Pay the debts first.

Mr. WALSH: It would be better if any surplus which might accrue from year to year was paid over to the government which had furnished the money to pay the deficits.

Should not the word "may" be changed to "shall"? If I, as a private individual, loan a person a sum of money and then find him in affluent circumstances, I expect him to start paying back the loan. The government has met the deficits of this railway from year to year, and if there should be a surplus I think it should be paid back immediately to the people who have paid the deficits.

Mr. HOWE: That might be so if we look upon this railway as one that will usually be a loser, showing credit balances only occasionally, but I like to visualize this railway as some day more than paying its way. Lines which would have been abandoned if the general abandonment policy had been adopted in 1932 have since developed into very profitable branches; I refer to lines serving some of the new mining areas. I think the railway should be able to build up a working surplus which would allow it to withstand any bad years which might come along.

Mr. WALSH: I am glad the minister is in such an optimistic mood. He reminds me of a statement made in one of the first reports upon our railway system by the Drayton commission, which said:

For a system of 20,000 miles in a rapidly developing country should be able, before many years are out, to carry unaided bonded indebtedness, which would not, we estimate, need much to exceed $2,000 per mile.

That optimistic expression was given in 1921, and to-day, in 1937, we find the Minister of Transport in an equally optimistic frame of mind. I hope his optimism will be realized within my lifetime.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I was wondering if some day the Minister of Transport could not give us a short statement setting out exactly what was paid for the Canadian National Railways; how many lines were taken over which no other railway company would take over; the actual facts in connection with the arbitration and whether or not it was a case of no one else in the world wanting to take over the railways which were taken over at that time; and any other information which might be of value to hon. members. I should like to know how many of the new lines taken in were foisted on the Canadian National because the other competing railroad would not take them in.

Mr. BENNETT: You can easily find the reason, but that is not it.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I should like to know the exact position of the railway business in Canada. Someone who happens to be interested in railways has been going from one end of this country to the other making certain statements. I represent a considerable number of the employees of this system, and this gentleman has been telling the people of Canada and of the world that the business he is supposed to be running is not good and is going into the hole. This is what he is doing instead of endeavouring to find some way to make his company pay a dividend or gain business or cut down expenses. He seems to be wanting to run both his own railroad and the Canadian National Railways into the ground.

A moment ago the leader of the opposition stated that we had assumed certain debts in connection with the railways because the provinces could not carry them. Why should those debts be charged to the Canadian National Railways? They certainly were not the debts of the Canadian National Railways. We should have a clear picture of this matter so that ordinary laymen like myself could understand the situation.

I do not think the minister is too optimistic. I think anyone in Canada, either in the east or the west, who talks of tearing up our railroad lines had better reconsider the matter very carefully. It may not be very long before we will be needing new railway lines. I think we should be given a clear picture of the railway situation, either by the Minister of Transport or by one of the former ministers of railways.

Mr. WALSH: If the hon. member reads the records of this house under the heading of railways he will get a full and complete answer to his questions.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): It would take me about five years to get it.

Mr. WALSH: I should like to suggest to the hon. member that no one is lacking in optimism, but we must face the cold facts. He is suggesting the expansion of our railroads, but he must not forget that in this country we have lines with only 250 people to the mile, whereas in the United States they have 500 people to the mile, and in England 2,000 people to the mile. Our trouble is that we have too many railroads and not enough people to support them. That is one point we should emphasize. The hon. member referred to a certain gentleman who has been going from one end of the country to the other trying to enlighten the people as to the real condition of our railways. I think that gentleman has been doing an honest day's work. If there were more like him the people of this country as well as hon. members of this committee would be more enlightened as to the actual railway situation in Canada. The railways of this country are in a serious position. There are few people who fully realize the seriousness of the situation. If we in this parliament, and the Minister of Transport in particular, do not do something to right present conditions, if we do not face this problem courageously, as Colonel Ralston said we should do, the railway problem will drag the country down. The sooner we get that fact in our minds, the sooner we will get down to a real effort to find a solution of our railway problem. It is no use talking about it: we must act. The action taken by the bill now before us is not the courageous action spoken of by Colonel Ralston in 1935. I was hoping that during his sojourn in office, the Minister of Transport would bring down to the house something really constructive in an effort to solve the railway problem which we must face sooner or later.

[Mr. J. G. Ross.]

Mr. HOWE: May I say just a word on that? I have had some experience along the lines referred to by my hon. friend, and if I brought down anything in this house which was a little bit courageous, I would have every expectation of the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Walsh) voting against it. Further, he would not base his objection upon the optimism of any group, but would use as the basis of his objections the grain growers of western Canada, who have made no representations whatever in connection with this matter. That is what would actually happen if anything courageous was brought down.

Mr. CAHAN: The hon. gentleman has no right to make that assertion because in so doing he discloses that he has less knowledge of conditions in Canada than most hon. members of this committee. The minister should not expose his own ignorance by making an assertion of that kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. CAHAN: It is perfectly in order to say that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

The CHAIRMAN: The word "ignorance" applied to an hon. member is out of order. The hon. member said "exposing his own ignorance."

Mr. BENNETT: Under certain conditions.

Mr. CAHAN: I suggested that he was disclosing his own ignorance of the matter he was discussing. If that is out of order I take it back; but still, in my own private opinion, it is ignorance.

The CHAIRMAN: I am afraid the hon. member is not taking it back.

Mr. HOWE: I accept it.

Mr. CAHAN: I have the right to say it conditionally, and I did say it conditionally.

Mr. KINLEY: This section deals with surplus earnings of the Canadian National Railways, and why we should quarrel now over the distribution of future earnings of the Canadian National Railways seems to me to be at least—

An hon. MEMBER: A little premature.

Mr. KINLEY: I think so; a little premature. But whether they pay it to the government of Canada, that is the people of Canada, or use it in improving the system is only a splitting of hairs, because after all it is our baby; it has cost us a lot of money, and we have looked after it and shall have to look after it in the future.

Mr. BENNETT: I say the word should be "shall." All you have to do is to look at the balance sheet, and I think the minister will agree that for at least a period of many years to come the word "shall" would be of some value—that if we have any earnings at all, we shall get them.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) desires to know something about the railway situation. If he will turn to page 14A of the revised bill he will find something that to me is a nightmare every day of the year—it may be I am unduly pessimistic, unduly fearful:

Loan term debt—public, $1,184,612,248.59.

So much for that. Then go a little further and add to it part of the debt of Canada, $676,327,701.40. That makes a total of nearly two billions of dollars of debt held by the public either directly from the railway or from this country. If that does not make the hon. member think, I do not know of anything that will. I confess that I never look at these figures without wondering what is going to happen to this country.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I realize that there is a great amount of money owed by the dominion in connection with the railways and that it has been owed for many years. All I am asking the minister is that he show us the exact position of the railways, and for goodness' sake let us put the railways into the position where, on their actual value when they were taken over and what we have spent on them since, they will be able to carry on as a company showing either a deficit or profits. But let us not charge them up with some bonds which were guaranteed for Mackenzie and Mann or somebody else years ago. That belongs to the debt of Canada—that is right; but if past governments, either provincial or dominion, made a mistake in guaranteeing those bonds, surely those mistakes should not be charged up to a company that we formed as the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not want to take up the time of the committee, but surely the hon. member realizes that these are obligations which must be paid.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Of course.

Mr. BENNETT: And all you have to do is to add these two items together. Leave out the road, leave out its physical assets, leave out everything in the world: in the debt of the Dominion of Canada and in the debt held all over the world is a total of $1,860,000,000, upon which interest must be paid. All I suggested to the minister was that it should be made clear, as it has been heretofore, ho progress has been made towards that end by showing how much money each year we have had to put into the enterprise. I still think that it is desirable to adopt that suggestion. The government takes another view. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) is a younger man than I, but how this country is to stagger along under a national debt of $3,000,000,000, plus $1,860,000,000, for any length of time and, with a population of only eleven millions, maintain its service and its integrity, is something that staggers the imagination and gives concern to every man who has any interest in Canada or holds a dollar's worth of its securities. The plain fact is that we have $1,860,000,000 upon which somebody must pay interest; if the railway does not earn it the taxpayers must put it up. This legislation obscures the situation from the gaze of those who desire to know the sums of money upon which we have to pay interest, the accumulations in days past. I cannot find the totals, except with great difficulty, and now nobody is going to be able to find it. Apparently it is going to be covered up.

Mr. DUNNING: It is concentrated for the first time in one item. My hon. friend will admit that.

Mr. BENNETT: What, the $1,860,000,000? It is the consolidated balance sheet last year, 1935. I read the figures here in the committee.

Mr. DUNNING: We are speaking of different things—if my right hon. friend will permit me—the amount that is being written off railway accounts is set out clearly on page 14a, $388,290,263 charged to the consolidated fund account, and therefore it does not appear any more as a non-active asset.

Mr. BENNETT: You have got the wrong item.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the whole point of the bill.

Mr. BENNETT: If that were the point of the bill, it would just be agreed to and that would be the end of it.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the only amount which disappears completely from the railway accounts, unless provision is made to insert it by way of note. The amount that is written off the non-active assets is the last item on page 14a.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry the hon. gentleman has the wrong figures. If he will look at page 13a of the revised bill he will find the sum total of $1,843,000,000 under the column of "eliminations."

Mr. DUNNING: No more is eliminated than is charged to the consolidated fund.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: There cannot be.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly. That is the whole point. If we had merely eliminated these items about the old Grand Trunk and the Canadian Northern there would never have been any trouble about it, but this elimination is $1,843,000,000—total liabilities eliminated.

Mr. DUNNING: But not so far as the liability to the government is concerned. The liability to the government is reduced only by that sum of $388,000,000 appearing on page 14a. I am sorry to differ with the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry too, but the facts show quite the opposite. That is the whole difficulty. However, the other sections deal with the securities trust. I have been unable to find any precedent for action such as that which has been taken. I think the bill should provide that any surpluses shall be paid without question, and not leave it to anybody's option. If the eliminations were a small sum such as was mentioned by the Minister of Finance I would not be concerned, but the eliminations reach the tremendous sum of $1,843,000,000; the details of them are given.

Mr. DUNNING: But not eliminated as respects moneys owing by the companies to the dominion.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, they are eliminated from the accounts as shown, as due to the country by the company. That is the whole trouble. They are eliminated from the National Railway accounts. I know the Minister of Finance is astonished that they are eliminated, but there we have the details. I did not prepare this. This bill came to the house from the committee. That is what I started out this afternoon to point out.

Mr. DUNNING: The various credits and charges are set out as between the railway, on the one hand, its own future accounts on the other, and finally the consolidated fund of Canada, and the only sum chargeable to the consolidated fund of Canada aggregates $388,000,000, representing the difference between the previous item and the total outstanding of the stocks and debentures represented by it.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry, the minister is wrong. That represents the sum of money spent on government railways. Surely the minister—

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. DUNNING: I have the wrong page. The correct figure is $361,000,000 odd.

Mr. WALSH: On page 2 of the public accounts of Canada, 1936, there is an item of $655,527,455.83, and out of that the minister proposes to put into the consolidated revenue fund the sum of $372,539,149.07.

Mr. DUNNING: Schedule B includes all the charges and credits contemplated by this bill. That is what I had reference to, and the charge there to the consolidated revenue fund is $365,823,120.38. There is no further adjustment except the item on the following page:

Credit — railway accounts (old)	$25,607,393 53
Charge consolidated fund of Canada	25,607,393 53

In the recapitulation which follows, credits and charges are set out, and the final item in that recapitulation represents a charge to the consolidated revenue fund of Canada of $392,206,534.16, which represents the amount the Department of Finance will have to take out of non-active assets as part of the debt.

Mr. CAHAN: We were dealing with the balance sheet of the Canadian National Railways. That was the point at issue. It appears on page 13 of the appendix to the revised bill, which shows that from the investment as now published there is being eliminated altogether the sum of $262,770,972.03. But on the other side there is being eliminated from the liabilities of the company the sum of $1,843,754,391.48, from which I suppose there is to be subtracted the $262,770,972.03. We were dealing with the company's own consolidated balance sheet presenting a real picture of its condition. We were not discussing the consolidated revenue account presenting a picture of the dominion treasury's position, because in the ordinary financial statement, whether you add to it the liabilities in connection with guaranteed bonds which have not accrued, or indicate that as a collateral—

Mr. DUNNING: As a contingent liability.

Mr. CAHAN: Or as a contingent liability, the public accounts of Canada will state the net effect.

Mr. DUNNING: We are talking about different things. I am naturally interested in the treasury point of view, and from that point of view the write-down is precisely the figure I gave. It represents the transfer of that amount from non-active assets to a direct charge against the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. BENNETT: I should like to ask the minister this question. On page 27 of the annual report of the Canadian National National Railway system for the year ended December 31, 1935, the following words appear:

Funded Debt—Principal and Interest—
Name of security.....
Issuing company.....
Date of issue.....
Date of maturity.....
Principal outstanding at Dec. 31, 1935.....
Interest accrued 1935.....
Total issues guaranteed by dominion government.

Then there appear various guarantees:

Guaranteed by province of New Brunswick.
Guaranteed by province of Ontario.
Guaranteed by province of Manitoba.
Guaranteed by province of Saskatchewan.
Guaranteed by province of Alberta.
Guaranteed by province of British Columbia.
Total issues guaranteed by provincial governments.
Carried forward.

Then appears the same heading—"Funded debt—principal and interest (continued)." Then under the name of the security there appear, under "Equipment trust issue," series U.S.R.A., E, F, H, J, and so on; and the total of "Equipment trust issues" is set out. Then "Other issues" are given—four per cent Canada Atlantic; Wellington, Grey and Bruce; Northern railway third preference bonds, and so on. Then the total of these other issues is given. Then there appear these words:

Total debt held by public (including therein $11,792,798.65 par value held in special funds and accounts) as per balance sheet, $1,154,779,000.78.

The interest payable for the year under review is given, $53,468,792.22.

The question I wish to ask the minister is this: Will that appear in the balance sheet hereafter?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: That answers my question. Now I turn to page 29, "Loans from Dominion of Canada"—and this will give my hon. friend from Moose Jaw his answer if he will read it. The loans with respect to the Canadian Northern railway, Grand Trunk railway, Grand Trunk Pacific railway, Purchase of railway equipment, Canadian National railway, are set out in detail, the total being $679,873,935.08. Then there is a heading:

Temporary loans from Dominion of Canada for redemption of funded debt, pending refunding—interest paid by railway.

The total is $74,726,975. Will that appear also?

Mr. HOWE: Part will and part will not.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the point.

Mr. HOWE: The part that was invested in the property to create earning power will appear, not as a loan but as proprietor's equity, which is the proper position as between the dominion and the railways. The part that was advanced for deficits will disappear.

Mr. BENNETT: As a matter of fact, it will be recalled that the deficits did not show after 1933. While I disagree with what is being done, my difficulty disappears to some extent. I direct attention to these words at the top of page 29:

Loans from Dominion of Canada.

That is the caption. Then under Canadian Northern railway we have all the loans set out, eleven. Some have been converted since. Then the same for the Grand Trunk railway; then the Grand Trunk Pacific—loan, bonds, loan, loan, loan, receiver account, interest guaranteed by Dominion of Canada, interest guaranteed by provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Then we come to purchase of railway equipment, the amount being $59,926,000.82. Then we have the Canadian National Railways, and all the loans are given. The total is $679,873,935.08.

That, I submit, should appear and should have added to it, merely for purposes of information—that is all I am pointing out—the additional sums that have been paid by the country since that time.

Mr. DUNNING: Since 1932?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I wish to assure the minister that as an individual I am not concerned about this—not a bit. I should like to feel, however, that any friend of mine who might happen to pick up that report and read it would know exactly what the financial position of the system was; that is all. There is no confusion in respect to the dominion because the minister in his report proposes to say: "Note. This is part of the national debt of the country." The debt of the state is to be given.

I can summarize my position by asking the minister merely to do this: to provide—and I think it should be done in the statute itself—that the annual accounts of the railway company shall show; (a) what I have read; (b) loans from the dominion government, giving the date of such loans, and the amounts and when payable; (c) loans guaranteed by the dominion government, with date, amounts and when payable; (d) amounts advanced for deficits, 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935,

1936, all on that page. Then such notes as the minister or the company may desire to have inserted, to make it clear, as at page 14A:

These amounts are included in the net debt of Canada.

If that were done my objections would largely disappear. My objections are not important; they are the objections of one person who is anxious only that everyone should know; that he who runs may read, that the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. Far be it from me to suggest that there is any purpose in doing it otherwise. All I am anxious about is that the public accounts should make it clear that this money was borrowed for the purpose of putting it in the railway. I am concerned about just what the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) mentioned; he said, I want to know about this. I say that if he will take the trouble to read that annual report he will find all he wants to know about it. He knows that following an arbitration we took over the Mackenzie and Mann property subject to existing liabilities, guaranteed by the dominion in some instances, and in some by the provinces. The Grand Trunk was in the same position. It is not generally known that we pay an annuity to the holders of the senior securities of the Grand Trunk. The others were worthless. Then we come to the Grand Trunk Pacific. Some think it was bound for bankruptcy. Nevertheless the obligations of Canada were there.

Mr. DUNNING: The receivership cleaned that up.

Mr. BENNETT: And so with the income bonds of the Canadian Northern. The point I make—there is nothing personal about it; I am neither directly nor indirectly interested in these securities, not one—well, I think I have £2,500 of Canada Atlantic, I forgot about that.

Mr. DUNNING: My right hon. friend ought to have some dominion guaranteed bonds to help out the situation.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I have not. I have no interest there. But I plead with the minister with the earnestness at my command that those particulars should be continued in the balance sheet for the purpose of enabling anyone with that report in his hand to know just what Canada has put into the enterprise.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Also how much belongs to the actual enterprise, and how much to something that is of no value.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. BENNETT: That will be shown in the report itself. On page 14A, as the minister says, you do the same thing, state that the national debt covers part of this. I am anxious that that should be shown. I would agree with the minister if he made it more ample than that, and said: Of the above items the following represent part of the national debt of the country, and the interest payable thereon amounting to so much money is paid out of the consolidated fund. But what I am concerned about is that the story itself should be apparent from the reading of the report.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It can be found in the public accounts.

Mr. BENNETT: But the public accounts are not the report of the railway.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: There will be an appendix that will be clear to anybody.

Mr. BENNETT: If it is not clearer than it is to me—it may be my unfortunate inability to understand—unless the appendix makes it more clear than it now is, it would not cover the point I am endeavouring to make.

As to the shareholders' equity, I think that is not only a misnomer but it introduces into the accounts this securities trust company. I put this to the Minister of Finance as well as the Minister of Transport: Has he ever heard of a security company being created under the conditions under which this is created?

Mr. DUNNING: We had never before dealt with any such conditions.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh yes, we had.

Mr. DUNNING: Except by the normal process of receivership.

Mr. BENNETT: I wonder if hon. members have forgotten the trouble with the old Grand Trunk before confederation. Perhaps the minister will say that I shall now begin to give the names of all the ministers of that government, but I have no intention of doing so. I plead with the minister, before he commits this country to that form of balance sheet of the railway, that he realize in full what its implications are. Who is hurt? That is the first question, and I think we have answered that. Who is bettered? I think we have answered that. Now it has become more and more apparent that the idea is getting abroad that the Canadian National Railway is the government of the country, and that if one ventures to offer an observation he is not only criticizing the government—the minister indicated that in his answer to the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Walsh)—but the other night I picked up a newspaper in Hamilton, and one of the reasons offered why support should be given to the Liberal candidate was that the dominion government is spending some $10,000,000 on equipment there. Now the dominion government is not spending any money on equipment there: the Canadian National Railway is.

Mr. KINLEY: But in the last analysis it is the government.

Mr. BENNETT: No, not in the last analysis. They provide the money with which the railway does it. If we are to treat the railway as being the government, then of course we have an entirely different set of conditions. It imposes upon the minister a terrible responsibility when he says: I set at naught this audit act which has been in force since 1868 being brought down to date in 1931; I set at naught all the provisions of the old railway act and acts affecting the Grand Trunk; and I simply say, I now create willy-nilly a securities company and put a value on these shares, if some day there is any money for them, well and good; but that is the way I take to get around the statutes of Canada. That is not my conception of ministerial or governmental responsibility. I would think that most of the Canadian people, if they ever took the trouble to study or realize it, would like to have a continuance of what has been given from the beginning, namely, a complete report. Even the private railroads in the United States have to do that under the Interstate Commerce Commission; they have provision for depreciation, which we have not. The privately owned railway in this country has to show its outstanding securities. Get the Canadian Pacific Railway Company report published this morning, and in that you will find set out a full statement of the debenture stock, preferred stock, common stock, and where the money came from; Then there will be set out the rentals of leased lines, how much they have to pay each year. This asks nothing more than that.

I have taken a tremendous amount of time dealing with a matter which to me is of no personal importance, but which I conceive to be of the utmost importance to the people of this country, and I would be failing in my duty if I did not express my view, so strongly held. I can only protest against this usurpation of power by the government with its majority, to create a new situation entirely different from that heretofore prevailing in Canada, and the setting up of conditions which I believe cannot but be inimical to the public weal for the reason that hereafter in this document, the report of the Canadian National Railways, there will be nothing which indicates its entire liability. I plead that the whole of it should be shown. If it is shown as it is here to-day, while I differ as to some of the methods used, I still think it would accomplish the purpose.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I think the leader of the opposition has sized up the whole situation in two questions: Who is to be hurt by the proposed set-up? Who is to be benefited? I believe the answer to the first question is, no one. Answering the second I would say that any investors in the bonds of Canada henceforth will be benefited by having before them a simplified set of accounts from which they learn what the situation is.

Mr. BENNETT: Where?

Mr. BOTHWELL: In the public accounts of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: But it is there now.

Mr. WALSH: May I ask a question?

Mr. BOTHWELL: Just a moment. It is a duplication between the accounts of the railway and the public accounts. In addition, I believe that the general public of Canada will be benefited, practically all of them. Instead of having the mistakes of preceding governments and organizations over a great many years waved before them day by day, they will have an opportunity to forget those mistakes and start out on a new basis, with the hope of some day seeing this railway in the position of at least being able to pay its debt to the public. My hon. friend from Mount Royal wished to ask a question.

Mr. WALSH: I wanted to ask the hon. member this question: If he was interested in the Canadian National railway and wanted to get a clear picture of the financial position of that company, as a layman where exactly would he first think of looking for that clear picture?

Mr. BOTHWELL: Most certainly I would look at the annual statement of the railway company, and from there I would be directed to the public accounts of Canada, in which I would find what is really the historical record of the Canadian National railways.

Mr. WALSH: One further question. Why is it necessary to issue a statement for the Canadian National railways which contains a reference to another statement, when the whole thing might just as well be given in the annual statement of the railway company?

Mr. BENNETT: Where it properly belongs.

Mr. WALSH: That does not properly belong to the balance sheet of Canada. Why not have it in the financial statement of the Canadian National railways? That is what we are contending for.

Mr. BOTHWELL: In reply to the last question, I believe the hon. member for Mount Royal was a member of the committee. I am not going to repeat what was said, but that question was answered very clearly by the deputy minister of finance. who stated why he believed it was necessary—in order to have these accounts clarified and not have the same amounts of money appearing in both the Canadian National accounts and the net debt of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: I have only one word to say to my hon. friend, and I thank him for his statement. I think probably he has given the real reason for this action, anxiety to forget something.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): And the anxiety of others that it should not be forgotten.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the anxiety for truth as against deception; the anxiety to have facts placed upon the record as against covering them up. The hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) says it is better to forget it. Forget what?

Mr. DUNNING: No.

Mr. BENNETT: That was what he said was the purpose of the bill. That means that we are to forget that the Dominion of Canada invested so many millions of dollars in a publicly owned enterprise. I say that heretofore we have recited the facts; and having done that in the past, is there any reason why we should cease to do it? Have we been given any good reason why the balance sheet should be set up in any different form? I certainly agreed to the elimination of those values for common stocks, but for years the auditors have shown in their statement from whom the money was borrowed and when, when it was repayable, and so on; but that is to be done no more.

Mr. HOWE: They stopped doing it in 1932.

Mr. BENNETT: No. They stopped putting in the deficit in 1932, but they continued the rest of it.

Mr. HOWE: This statement which my right hon. friend values so highly is not an accurate statement of anything to-day.

[Mr. Walsh.]

Mr. DUNNING: It does not include anything since 1932.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it does; it includes all moneys that have been paid to the road that are covered by securities guaranteed by the country, or the securities issued when the country borrowed the money direct.

Mr. DUNNING: No, it does not include the money borrowed for the deficits.

Mr. BENNETT: It does not include the deficits as such, but here we have an item: "Nine year guaranteed bonds, Canadian National, dated May 1, 1935, date of maturity, May 1, 1944. Outstanding principal, $35,000,000; interest accrued, $698,000." What about that?

Mr. DUNNING: That is not a deficit account at all.

Mr. BENNETT: But it is a loan made to this company. Then the next one: "Three year guaranteed bonds, Canadian National, May 1, 1935, $13,400,000."

Mr. DUNNING: They will all continue to appear.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister says not, and that is just what I am asking. These are the ones that are to disappear.

Mr. DUNNING: My right hon. friend is wrong there; they must appear.

Mr. BENNETT: I just took this list and went over it page by page, asking whether or not each item was to be continued, and the minister said yes, in some cases, and no in others, giving his reasons. Presumably the minister knows his own bill as well as the Minister of Finance knows it.

Mr. WALSH: In the report of the committee, No. 5, Tuesday, March 9, we have the condensed balance sheet of the Canadian National, the public accounts and so on. Could the minister point out where those items for which I asked as a member of the committee, and which are printed in the balance sheets to which I have just referred, appear under the bill now before the committee? Where are the items that were read in this balance sheet as set out in this bill?

Mr. HOWE: Where are they in the present balance sheet? They are a schedule to it.

Mr. DUNNING: And will continue to be, of course.

Mr. WALSH: I asked for that in particular in committee, in order to judge as between the balance sheet of 1936 and the balance sheet as it will be made up in 1937, but according to this statement I will not be in a position to judge, because I cannot compare the two clearly.

There is another point I should like to make. I have already made reference to the statement made by the minister on February 5. In committee I contended, and I still make the contention, that what the minister proposes to do with the balance sheet of the Dominion of Canada is what we wanted done with the balance sheet of the Canadian National railways. The minister promised to let us have that, when he stated in the house, as appears at page 597 of Hansard for February 5:

> I believe a schedule can be set up that will preserve the historical record, and this schedule can be made part of the annual report of the Canadian National railways. That perhaps will satisfy the purpose as to a record.

I should like to ask if the minister proposes to do that.

Mr. HOWE: In my statement I said it could be done. I still say so, but I think my hon. friend was present when the committee voted by a very large majority to do it in the way proposed under this bill. That amendment is the work of the committee; it is not the work of the minister.

Mr. WALSH: The amendment in committee was made after considerable insistence on the part of certain members of the committee in connection with this very item. We were insisting that the balance sheet of the Canadian National railways should present a true picture of the situation of that railway each and every year. After considerable contention on our part the minister agreed to bring in an amendment to section 8 of the bill, and at the next meeting he brought in an amendment. But instead of covering the point for which we were contending the minister brought in an amendment which did not affect the balance sheet of the Canadian National railways but did affect the balance sheet of the Dominion of Canada. We were contending for a clear picture in the balance sheet of the Canadian National railways. The minister turned around and further complicated the situation by amending, if we may use that term, the balance sheet of the dominion. I do not think that is what we were asking for; I do not think that is what was in the minister's mind. I believe he is playing on words when he suggests that this record "can" be set up. I believe at that time he had in mind the thought that he could do it and would do it. Now the bill is back in the house, however, we see that has not been done, and we find ourselves in the position of having to present our views to a house which we know will adopt this bill, which we do not think is in the best interests of the railways or the people of Canada.

There is another point I should like to make. The Minister of Transport proposes to take out of the non-active assets of the Dominion of Canada the sum which I have already indicated, roughly $370,000,000, and put it into the consolidated revenue fund. Each year since 1932 we have been doing that, as I understand it. There have been deficits, and this year the deficit is $35,000,000.

Mr. DUNNING: Because there is no asset against it, either active or non-active. That is the accounting principle upon which it is based.

Mr. WALSH: The $35,000,000 deficit this year is being taken by the government and put directly into the consolidated revenue fund; is that correct?

Mr. DUNNING: It is directly out of the fund. There is nothing going in, I am sorry to say.

Mr. WALSH: Here is an amount which has been voted annually, in different sums, since 1932, amounting altogether to about $370,000,000, and which is being lifted bodily out of the non-active assets and put into the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend is wrong there.

Mr. WALSH: Made up of amounts, exactly as $35,000,000 is made up this year, representing deficits which have accrued from year to year and which the government has paid out, but booked as non-active assets. Yet we are being asked to do that this year, without the item appearing in the estimates or being referred to in the budget. It is being done indirectly through a bill which, in the first place, has no relationship to the consolidated debt of Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: If the hon. member would permit me on that point, the $300,000,000 to which he now refers represents deficits which did accumulate and were treated as assets prior to 1932. What we are doing is to treat the deficits prior to 1932 in the manner in which deficits since 1932 have been treated, both by our predecessors and ourselves. That is the thing in a nutshell. There is no asset back of either of them, and they are being treated in the same way.

Mr. WALSH: But why not treat this $300,000,000 exactly as you have treated each deficit in the years since 1932?

Mr. DUNNING: That is precisely what is being done.

Mr. WALSH: No; instead of coming to the house and asking that that be done, you are doing it indirectly through a bill which pertains to the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. DUNNING: I do not know how it could be more direct than by this legislation.

Mr. WALSH: It could be done exactly as you handled the $35,000,000 this year. How did you handle the $35,000,000 deficit this year.

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member answers his own question beautifully. The $300,000,000 to-day is in the non-active assets of Canada. How did it get there? It was taken out of active assets about 1920—I believe it was about that time, although I am not certain as to the year. Why was that done? Because there was no return on it; it was considered to be a yearly inflation of the accounts of Canada to keep it on the active assets. In the adjustment of 1920, when removing it from active to non-active, it was necessary actually to include that sum in the budget for that year. That is already authorized by parliament. It is already out, so far as being a charge as an active asset is concerned.

We are now going a step farther, and may I point out to the hon. member that the step we are now taking is not nearly as big as the one taken in 1920. We are going a step farther now, and treating it as it should have been treated always; in the same way, that is, as hon. members opposite provided it should be treated after 1932. We are applying the principle which has operated since 1932 to deficits accumulated prior to that year. In doing so there is very little difficulty, because the big step was in 1920 when that amount was taken out of the active column, and transferred by authority of parliament to the non-active assets.

Mr. WALSH: But the minister forgets that in 1920 it was not removed from the assets; it was removed only from active to non-active assets.

Mr. DUNNING: Correct.

Mr. WALSH: It still remained an asset. To-day you propose to take it out of non-active assets and put it down one grade lower into the consolidated debt. The point I make is this: In the estimates for this year the amount of $35,000,000 is provided to meet the deficit. That amount is there. From 1932 on there has been a similar vote each year, varying only with the deficit.

Mr. DUNNING: Since 1932.

[Mr. Walsh.]

Mr. WALSH: Yes. Between 1920 and 1932 it was treated in a different way. It accumulated, until now we are taking $300,000,000 out of the non-active assets and putting it into the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. That amount of $300,000,000 has never appeared, as the $35,000,000 appears this year. It has never appeared in that way.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Mr. WALSH: I might not be able to see it; perhaps I am not very good at figures. Fortunately, however, I am not financially interested in the matter.

Mr. DUNNING: I might simplfy matters by telling the hon. member that prior to 1932 the amount was in the railway budget, and passed by the house.

Mr. WALSH: Where is the $35,000,000 this year? Why is the Minister of Finance dealing with it differently? This $300,000,000 was never in the estimates in the same way.

Mr. DUNNING: Not in the same way, no.

Mr. WALSH: I cannot see why this year we are working indirectly, through a bill, when each year since 1932 it has been done directly through the estimates.

Mr. DUNNING: And will be each year, in the future.

Section agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

On section 11—Accounts of National Railways system; how to be shown.

Mr. CAHAN: Just a word of personal explanation. I wish to say clearly that there was no intention on my part to give any sinister or covert meaning to the words I used in the short altercation I had with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe). I certainly had no intention of reflecting upon his intelligence or his wide experience; I wished merely to suggest that he was not fully informed as to certain aspects of prevalent public opinion. If my words seemed to you, sir, or to any hon. member to have a sinister implication, I desire now unreservedly to withdraw them.

Section agreed to.

On section 12—Corporation—Securities trust, constitution.

Mr. CAHAN: This section seems to imply that a new corporation to be known as the Canadian National Railways Securities Trust is to be incorporated and organized. Is that corporation to be incorporated by the express terms of section 12? If so, I think it should be stated distinctly. The mere declaration that there shall be a corporation to be known as the Canadian National Railways Securities Trust does not give legal incorporation to such a trust, nor does it provide for the organization of the trust. Therefore, I think the wording of this section should be considered carefully if we are now constituting a separate distinct corporation. May I discuss other sections of the bill in order to make my meaning clear, or am I confined to this section?

Mr. HOWE: Certainly.

Mr. CAHAN: When this corporation is once organized it is to take over certain claims and certain collateral securities. In other words, I infer that after the corporation is incorporated and organized, certain claims for principal of loans, as set forth in appendix 6, certain claims for interest on loans as set forth in the same appendix, and certain collateral securities are to be assigned to the corporation. Is it intended that this statute shall vest these claims and these securities in the corporation which is contemplated? In compensation, the five million shares of no-par value stock are to be issued and become the liability of this proposed corporation?

Then it is suggested that these shares, or the securities which underlie these shares and which are vested in the corporation, shall be valued by the statute. I suggest that that is not the proper procedure. Appendix 6, to be found on page 15A, states that the 5,000,000 shares of no-par value stock are to be outstanding. The initial value is stated as the total amount of loans to the railways by the government and transferred from the government to the securities trust—by this statute or by separate transfer, I do not know—$643,860,558.26. There is deducted the amount lost by the railways in operation, $373,823,120.38, leaving a net value of $270,037,437.88. Then there is an acquisition surplus, amounting to $904,655,718.05. That is, by this statute, or by a separate transfer and conveyance, certain assets which are now not regarded as being valuable, certain claims in respect of Canadian Northern, Grand Trunk, Grand Trunk Pacific and Canadian National, amounting to $643,860,558.26, are to be transferred. Then certain claims for interest on loans in Canadian National Railways accounts, et cetera, are to be transferred to the extent of $530,832,597.67. Then there are certain claims for interest on loans which are not in the Canadian National Railways account. Will these assets have any distinct value or are these values being placed upon them merely for the purpose of fictitious accounting? Are the liabilities being reduced?

Of course the capital stock is a liability when it is outstanding, but it has no par value. It might as well be a thousand shares or a hundred shares. The initial value is stated, less the amount lost by the railways in operation, to be $270,037,437.88. I contend that if a public or private company which was in fianancial difficulties were to transfer to another company, organized and controlled by it, all these claims and to offset them with capital stock, declaring a value for such stock which has really no value, it would be regarded as purely fictitious accounting. In other words, I am suggesting that the same object could be attained without organizing a fictitious or factitious company. It could be attained by placing in a branch account or a subsidiary account of the Canadian National Railways these claims which are not valued, and these assets which are valued but which really represent a loss or which represent no present value. Why should a new corporation be constituted for the purpose of carrying through a mere matter of nominal bookkeeping? Would it not be far better to reduce the value of your assets and of your liabilities, recite that the Minister of Finance of Canada has certain claims of no value and certain assets of no value, and state that in some subsidiary account of the Canadian National Railway, without going through all this form of organizing a fictitious company? The explanation is that:

> The securities trust is established for the sole purpose of preserving the priority rights of the dominion and for its protection against any contingencies of the future having to do with potential interest and other savings in respect of
> (a) unguaranteed securities held by the public and ranking junior to or pari passu with present dominion loan claims;
> (b) capital stock held by the public in subsidiary companies;
> (c) collateral securities now in possession of the dominion ranking senior to or pari passu with securities held by the public.

The same end would be fully attained if these securities, instead of being vested in this corporation and controlled by these trustees, were to be vested in the finance minister of Canada. He may not be aware of the fact, but certain other claims arising out of the war which were administered by the Department of the Secretary of State, were transferred under an order in council to the finance minister, and the finance minister by virtue of his office owns and controls those securities for whatever value they may have now, but it is assumed that they will in the future have a more definite value because now they cannot be realized upon. If this transfer were made to the Minister of Finance the same object would be attained without this complicated method of organizing a company whose assets are nominal, and whose liabilities are really actual, for the purpose of reducing the accounts of the Canadian National Railway pro tanto. I suggest that this complicated method of dealing with these matters is not necessary, that it is confusing, and that, as it is deemed necessary that these securities shall be held for the government against possible exigencies, the end would be fully attained if the Minister of Finance were made trustee, and if in that capacity he held and accounted for them.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Chairman, I think the comment of my hon. friend divides itself into two parts. First, is the stated value of the securities in the securities trust a real or a fictitious value? It is real to this extent, that we stated at the beginning of this discussion that we were writing down the value of the property to the actual amount of the funds invested in the property.

Mr. CAHAN: Quite so.

Mr. HOWE: That balance in the securities trust, the stated value, that is, of the securities trust, does represent the portion of the funds which went into the building of the railroad. That is the reason why that is stated: as such, that balance has a definite value, and not a fictitious value. It is the value as we are determining it for the purpose of this write-down.

It is obvious to anyone that there are several ways in which we can determine value. We could have had a physical valuation made of the property, or we could have had a report made on its capacity to earn; but we are not doing that. We are simply leaving in the property all the funds that went into its construction; that portion of the funds which is the stated value of the securities trust is funds that went into the building of the property. Whether some simpler way of holding these funds could have been devised, I am not sure, but I cannot think of anything much simpler than this. It is a trust wholly owned by the dominion government, and operated by three deputy ministers and two officers of the railway, none of whom draws any salary or creates any expense. It seems to me a very simple and logical way of dealing with these securities, which have no immediate value other than that they do preserve certain priorities, which may be useful in the case of litigation or something of that sort. I am not suggesting for a moment that there is no other way of achieving this purpose, but I think this is a fairly simple way, and it is the best that the officers of my department have been able to devise.

Mr. CAHAN: I still think, Mr. Chairman, that a simpler way of dealing with these assets would be to transfer them to the Minister of Finance as minister. They have no real value at present; it is quite possible that they may have no real value in the future. Would it not be quite sufficient to state that these securities are of uncertain value but, for the purpose of preserving any equities that may hereafter accrue in respect of them, they are transferred to and administered by the Minister of Finance? At least that would relieve the Minister of Transport from dealing with them or being anxious about them for the future.

Mr. HOWE: If the hon. member will pardon me, the Minister of Transport has nothing to do with this in any way. The shares are owned by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. CAHAN: That may be so. Why then, should he not hold them? You get rid of all complications by vesting them in the Minister of Finance, who is a corporation sole and would be the sole trustee. If, in the future, adjustments should be necessary with the provinces, or some assets should subsequently appear which are realizable, he would then be in a position to realize upon them in exactly the same way that the previous government transferred to the Minister of Finance, as I mentioned—I do not wish to go into details now—a very considerable amount of securities, some of which now might be realized upon but which I think should be held for future increment in their value, when, in the discretion of the Minister of Finance, acting of course in accord with his colleagues, they will be finally dealt with.

But this clause certainly does not incorporate the Canadian National Railways securities trust. There is no incorporation here. It is simply a declaration that there shall be such a corporation. Are you going to organize that corporation under the Canadian Companies Act? Are you going to organize it by a special act of incorporation? As it stands, it might be necessary for that corporation, once organized, to have the right to sue in order to realize some of these values. But this corporation has no right to sue, no right to recover upon realizable assets, no right to deal with them, in fact. The corporation simply takes over certain securities and assumes a certain indebtedness, and that could be done far more simply by the Minister of Finance acting in that capacity.

Then, so far as management is concerned, he could act very simply with the approval of the governor in council in dealing with such questions. No by-laws would be necessary; no quorum of trustees would be necessary; no powers would necessarily be given to the deputy minister of finance. In fact, the deputy minister of finance is not the proper person to deal with these matters, nor is the deputy minister of transport a proper person to deal with these financial questions; nor is the deputy minister of justice. If the assets were vested in the Minister of Finance and the liabilities assumed by him as minister, then, upon consultation with his colleagues, he might do anything that may be necessary to preserve any equities that might hereafter arise in connection therewith. But certainly if it is presumed by this bill to incorporate the trustees, that purpose is not effected by such language as is used in this bill.

Mr. HOWE: I am sure that if the only difficulty is in regard to the incorporation, that could be attended to separately.

Mr. CAHAN: But, first, you must organize it.

Mr. HOWE: Yes. This bill says that it shall be done, and if it is not done here it will have to be done separately.

Mr. CAHAN: But why not deal with it now? How will you do it separately? Does the minister intend to introduce a separate bill of incorporation at this session? And if he should introduce a separate bill, then I submit that it would be difficult to provide by statute for such incorporation, consistently with some other provisions of this bill.

Mr. HOWE: All I can say is that we have had a corps of high-priced legal talent working on this legislation for at least two months, including the chief counsel of the Canadian National Railways and several officers of the Department of Justice. I should be sorry to think that they had let us down.

Mr. CAHAN: That may be so, and I am not assuming any special knowledge in the matter; I have to confess my ignorance of many things in connection with the administration of corporations, though I may be allowed to say that I have had considerable experience. But I am not bound to accept, nor is this committee bound to accept, the opinions of counsel who have never heard the other side of the case, opinions that may have been given without a full appreciation of all the underlying facts with which we as a parliament have to deal.

Mr. BENNETT: If the minister, who is not a lawyer, will look at the section he will see how unanswerable is the criticism of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). "There shall be a corporation to be known as 'The Canadian National Railways Securities Trust'." The explanatory note clearly indicates that whoever drafted this clause assumed that he had thereby created a corporation. As a matter of fact, it cannot be said to create a corporation. It would be competent, if the government so desired, to say, "There shall be, and is hereby created a corporation," and so on. Personally, I should not like that way of doing it, but at any rate that would be sound in the sense of creating the corporation. As it stands here, however, it does not create a corporation, and I am sure the minister sees the point. A corporation can come into existence only if it is created by one of several methods, and for our purposes this corporation is being created by legislative action. There must be something declaring that these five persons together shall constitute the corporation; there must be that declaration before you can have the corporation.

Mr. HOWE: Will my right hon. friend do me the favour of writing an amendment to that effect?

Mr. BENNETT: I hardly think that would be proper in view of what the minister has said as to the number of highly talented legal gentlemen who have advised him. I am a mere volunteer.

Mr. HOWE: I should have added that I took no responsibility from a legal point of view, because I am not a lawyer.

Mr. BENNETT: If I did rewrite the section I would word it differently. At any rate, that is my view. There is a great deal to be said for the proposal to vest it in the Minister of Finance, for it gets away from the necessity of calling meetings, and avoids the question of trusteeship and all these other difficulties if the Minister of Finance is the persona designata. In that event you have continuance in office; it is not the Hon. Charles Dunning; it is the Minister of Finance; and although he might think it impossible that there should be another to fill that office in his lifetime, still, whoever that person might be, he would be Minister of Finance. The promotion might not take place nearly so early as anticipated, and in that event it would still be the same gentleman. I make the proposal, however, as something that is desirable, providing as it does for continuity, and continuity without the holding of meetings. The Minister of Finance has been the person who has been selected for the purpose during the days that are past, and it does seem to me that he is the person in whom the continuity should be preserved.

Mr. HOWE: I would point out to my right hon. friend that this is a balance sheet that is incorporated in the balance sheet of the Canadian National Railways, and I suggest that an individual cannot very well be designated a corporation within a corporation; I do not see how it would be workable if these things were vested in an individual. How would it appear in the balance sheet?

Mr. BENNETT: I thought of that, and I would refer the minister to page 14A of the bill:

> Dominion government—proprietor's equity (represented by)—
> 1,000,000 shares of no par value stock of the Canadian National Railway Company . . . . . advances, claims for unpaid interest and collateral security now held by dominion government.
> Dominion government capital expenditures for Canadian government railways.

According to the statement made this afternoon, it is largely a matter of having some name in which to hold these securities. They have no practical value at the moment when there is no immediate interest, but they will be added to as the days go on. Deficits will also be added. Suppose the deficit is $35,000,000; proprietor's equity securities will show in the balance sheet next year $35,000,000 more than it is now. There might have seemed to be a difficulty on that score, but frankly I see none at all. In days gone by we have had no difficulty in that respect when all our securities were held by the Minister of Finance. If we alienate a piece of land to the government of Alberta the money value of the right of way covered by mortgage goes into the trust fund, but the Minister of Finance executes it because he is the proprietor of the shares and the equity of redemption is in him. I cannot think that there is any difficulty about it, though there may be because I will admit that I have not given the matter that intensive study which the officials of the department have. But surely proprietor's equity could be held by the Minister of Finance. If the intention is to set up a corporation, it must hold meetings and there must be a statute incorporating it. Undoubtedly the draftsman intended by this to incorporate it, but he has not done so. All he says is that there shall be a corporation, but he does not say when the "shall" is to take effect, whether by a subsequent statute, by letters patent, or by some other method. What he intended was undoubtedly to create the corporation by this act itself, and I merely point out that he has not carried out that intention; and it strikes me that, as he has not done so, it would be a simple matter to vest it in the Minister of Finance.

Mr. STEWART: Might I ask the minister to clear up a point, because of something stated in the special committee on railways and shipping? Take the annual deficits paid, say, in the last three years out of consolidated revenue fund, under the statute; would the amount of those deficits appear in the equity?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. STEWART: It was stated in the committee, as I recall, that these would not appear in the statement of the securities.

Mr. HOWE: That is true. The act says they shall not be funded; therefore they could not appear as securities held by the securities trust. But they appear in the statement of the position of the railway.

Mr. STEWART: They are, as it were, lost and forgotten, gone with the wind.

Mr. HOWE: No, we are keeping a permanent record.

Mr. STEWART: You have them in the public accounts, but not in the railway accounts.

Mr. HOWE: That is according to the statute.

Mr. BENNETT: That statute does not touch anything but funding by the company.

Mr. HOWE: They are charged against consolidated revenue. They are not to be funded by the company, so what happens?

Mr. BENNETT: The consolidated revenue fund gets the money by borrowing it. The minister had to borrow the money; he put through the legislation to do it. The money goes into the consolidated fund, and the minister pays it out to the railway. The railway cannot fund it; the prohibition is against funding by the railway; but there is legislation standing in the minister's name to provide for $35,000,000 now.

Mr. DUNNING: That is the cash deficit?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. POULIOT: As a résumé of all this, I wonder what is the raison d'être of corporation lawyers.

Mr. WALSH: I was not here in time to take exception to the term used applying to the equity. I was going to suggest to the minister the use of a term such as "dominion government capital investment," rather than "proprietors' equity." However, it is too late, as the clause has passed.

Coming to the next clause, the securities trust, it was urged upon the minister in committee, that the creation of such a corporation under similar circumstances would not be tolerated in general business. The minister replied that he could name four or five out of fifty companies with a set-up of securities trusts similar to that proposed in the bill. I was not quick-witted enough at the time to ask for names. I still feel, however, that the securities trust is not a good precedent to be established by the government of Canada, and I would ask the minister if he can name any corporations or companies that have a similar set-up in general business.

Mr. HOWE: Does the hon. member mean securities trusts?

Mr. WALSH: A similar set-up to this, with the dominion government as parent company, the Canadian National Railways as a subsidiary, and a securities trust as a second subsidiary. Can he name where there is a situation equal to that in private enterprise?

Mr. HOWE: I think the Hollinger mine has one. I am sorry the hon. member did not ask for the names in committee, because I could have looked it up, but there are several companies which carry their surplus in the form of an investment trust.

Mr. CAHAN: That is an entirely different thing; they have investments of value. But here the minister is attempting to relieve a corporation of its liabilities by gathering together all its worthless securities and vesting them in a new corporation. It is a purely factitious arrangement for the purpose of reducing the capital account of the Canadian National system. I suggest that deputy ministers are not the persons to form such a trust or act as trustees. This is not a valid corporation. It is an arrangement whereby, realizing that these assets while of no immediate value may possibly have some contingent value in the future, or because certain interrelated liabilities with respect to these securities should be preserved, the minister is attempting to set up a special trust. Now the Minister of Finance, as such, can do competently all things which this trust is supposed to do. He can act in his official capacity. He is authorized to act in regard to all such securities which are held by the government through his department or departmental officers, whosoever they may be. Why depart from that established precedent.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose the minister notices that this corporation has no shareholders.

Mr. HOWE: The Minister of Finance is the sole shareholder.

Mr. BENNETT: There are no shareholders.

Mr. DUNNING: Five million shares, which capital stock, by section 14, shall be issued to the minister.

Mr. BENNETT: But look at the language of section 12:

> There shall be a corporation to be known as "The Canadian National Railways Securities Trust," hereinafter referred to as the "securities trust," consisting of five trustees. . . .

Mr. CAHAN: Can he turn out the trustees by virtue of holding the stock?

Mr. HOWE: I do not see why not. You can change them at any time.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no company, no shareholders. I do not want to criticize these high-power lawyers to whom reference has been made, but it is quite obvious that there are no shareholders except one. The trustees have no shares; there is no provision for them holding shares. There is one shareholder, and he apparently cannot organize himself in such a way as to deal with any one of the five people.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Is not the situation simply that we are here setting up a body of five men—I do not know whether the term "corporation" is a misnomer—and naming them trustees, and authorizing them to issue five million shares of stock? It does not come under the companies acts, either federal or provincial; it is simply parliament itself creating a corporation, which it has power to do, for the specific purpose of handling the stock which is to be issued in connection with the securities to be taken over. Is not that all it amounts to?

Mr. BENNETT: No. If it were, there would not be much difficulty. That is the reason the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) has said it would have been so simple to name the Minister of Finance as trustee. But the section merely names five persons as trustees of a corporation, using the word "corporation," which under section 14 has a capital of five million shares all held by one person, there being no provision in the statute for any other shareholder. One shareholder cannot be a corporation, unless it be a corporation sole.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Are we not getting things confused in talking about shareholders? Is it necessary for the parliament of Canada to create shareholders in what we are pleased to call a corporation? It is true that the term "corporation" has received a certain interpretation through common use, but personally I do not see why it should not be possible for us to use that term to describe a certain body that we are setting up under this bill.

Mr. BENNETT: Surely my hon. friend from Swift Current, who is a lawyer, hardly puts that forward seriously. Look at the sections. Section 13 defines the objects of the corporation. There is one shareholder and five trustees. The shareholder is the Minister of Finance. Necessarily he must have all the powers of a corporation; presumably he is a corporation sole. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St.George suggests that the simple method is to follow the procedure that we have followed all these years, namely, to insert the name of the Minister of Finance as the holder of these securities. That is all. Suppose something happens as a result of which the title disappears of vice president of the National railways in charge of finance; who is to take his place? You have all those questions which must be considered.

Mr. BOTHWELL: That title would disappear only as a result of legislation.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite so, but you must have some provision for continuance. Continuity is what the minister tells us he is aiming at; first of all, a corporation to hold the securities, and secondly continuity. The minister very properly says that he is not a lawyer nor the draftsman of this bill. This is not his job; he is only here to tell us what the government desire to accomplish, and he says this is the method they have adopted. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George points out that parliament has said there should be a corporation; it does not say when, and the word "corporation" has a definite meaning. There must be three people to constitute a corporation according to the general law of this country. A corporation sole consists of one person. To all intents and purposes the Minister of Finance has been a corporation sole all these years. This statute says the five trustees are to have no relationship to the corporation, strange as it may seem; under section 13 the shares are all to be held by the Minister of Finance. He holds these shares for the equity of the proporietors in the property, namely, the people of Canada.

Surely we must do a little better than that. The minister says "This is what I must do; there shall be a corporation, and a corporation is hereby created, to be known as so and so. Then you have to say something to give it a local habitation and a name. They have given it a local habitation, the city of Ottawa; they have given it a name, called it the securities trust. Then they name the trustees. The Companies Act provides for the appointment of trustees, and here five trustees are appointed, designated not by their names but by their positions. They hold office until when, and under what conditions? Obviously they hold office under such conditions as may be determined by the shareholders, and there is only one shareholder, namely the Minister of Finance.

Mr. DUPUIS: But parliament is not bound to follow the Companies Act; parliament is supreme.

Mr. BENNETT: Far be it from me to suggest the contrary. I did not for a moment suggest that parliament was bound to follow the Companies Act, but I am pointing out that in the absence of any provision to the contrary the Companies Act governs with respect to a corporation, and there is no provision here to the contrary. I thank my hon. friend for directing attention to the matter if I did not make my point clear. If he will look at the statute he will see the difficulty. There is no provision for shareholders, just one shareholder. There is no provision for the creation of the corporation; there is merely the statement that it shall come into being. When or how that is to be done we do not know. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George asked two questions. He said: Do you propose to do it by letters patent under the Companies Act or do you propose to pass a special act of parliament? Obviously the draftsman thought this was good enough, for he defined the objects of the corporation in section 13. In section 14 he defined the capital, and in the next section he said the capital stock should be shown in a certain way on the books. Section 16 defines the powers of the trustees. They have power to make the by-laws, although they are not shareholders, and provision is made for quorums and so on. Then it is provided that the local habitation shall be Ottawa, and provision is made for the first meeting and so on.

I should like to know this: How can you create trustees of a corporation when you have only one shareholder who really has had nothing to do with the matter? Parliament in its supreme power may create trustees, but certainly it is at variance with any known theory of corporate law or practice, as it stands now. Under these provisions the minister himself has no power; the Minister of Finance has no power, although he is to be the holder of all the shares.

Mr. DUNNING: With the approval of the governor general in council.

Mr. BENNETT: That comes under the regulations, but the regulations are passed by the trustees.

Mr. DUNNING: And approved by the governor in council.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite.

Section agreed to, on division.

Section 13 agreed to, on division.

On section 14—Securities trust capital stock, to be held by minister.

Mr. BENNETT: I think I should place on record just one word, and it is this: These three sections do make us seem ridiculous. I am not going to say any more than that.

Mr. HOWE: Do you mean both of us?

Mr. BENNETT: I mean all of us. That is why we want to dissociate ourselves from it.

Mr. HOWE: I like to let the lawyers fight these things out.

Mr. BENNETT: I should like to hear any lawyer vindicate that position.

Section agreed to, on division.

Section 15 agreed to, on division.

On section 16—Trustees' powers—by-laws.

Mr. BENNETT: Same objection.

Section agreed to, on division.

Sections 17 and 18 agreed to, on division.

On section 19—Secretary.

Mr. BENNETT: This appears to make provision for the creation of another office. Whoever is secretary of the corporation known as the Canadian National Railways should be secretary of this commission, obviously.

Mr. DUNNING: There is no salary attached to the office.

Mr. CAHAN: But the secretary keeps the record of proceedings; there is no treasurer, and therefore the whole financial set-up is handled by the secretary. Certainly this is all unprecedented. First you take in the deputy minister of finance. Why take him rather than the Minister of Finance? Then there is the deputy minister of transport, and in addition there are two officers from the National railways. Once this statute is passed the National railways are absolutely devoid of all interest in any further proceedings; in their capacity as officials of the National railways these men have no further interest in this company. Then you appoint a secretary to look after the whole financial set-up and keep the accounts in order, and he is not under the control of the Minister of Finance, who is the real owner of all the equities. One cannot say very much more without using language that would sound extreme.

Section agreed to, on division.

On section 20—Exchange of indebtedness for stock.

Mr. BENNETT: This raises the question again. You see what is to be done. I do suggest to the minister that provision should be made in these sections that the amounts paid for deficits be also included, for they represent an indebtedness of the railway to the country. As the Securities Trust is carried by trustees, provision should be made that on the payment of deficits out of the consolidated fund an adequate acknowledgement should be issued by the railway and held by the Securities Trust among its assets. I believe that would meet some of the difficulty, because then the provision would be apparent.

Mr. DUNNING: It would completely change the procedure which has been in vogue since 1932.

Mr. BENNETT: No, it would not completely change the procedure. There has been since 1932 a prohibition against the railway's funding the indebtedness. There has not been anything which prohibited or in any sense restricted the right of the railway company to indicate its indebtedness.

Mr. DUNNING: But it has not, in fact, done so.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it has done so.

Mr. DUNNING: There is provision for it in section 24.

Mr. BENNETT: But before we come to that, meeting the point made by the hon. members for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Dupuis) and Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell), "The Securities Trust is hereby declared for the purposes of this act to be a company comprised in the national railways."

Mr. HOWE: That is to consolidate the balance sheet.

Mr. BENNETT: But we have to have a company somewhere. In my judgment it is essential, with this changed set-up, that the section provide also that the deficits be included because they must be a part of the owner's equity. If the country owns the railway it follows that the owner's equity, that is, the equity of the people of Canada, is represented by what they put into the railway for any purpose in the world—for capital, for interest, for deficits, or for any purpose which we may possibly conceive of. That is the owner's equity. The owner's equity is going to vary from time to time in accordance with the amount of money which has been put up by the country for any purpose. With the changed set-up it does seem to me essential that that be stated here, so that there may be no question about it. I cannot see how the minister would have any difficulty about it.

I do point out again that section 22 does make us both a bit ridiculous; we have not any company. The language of the hon. member with respect to the word "corporation" was that it might be used in its generic sense. The words "company" and "corporation" under our interpretation act have the same meaning. Certainly that meaning has not been the one urged to-night.

Section agreed to, on division.

On section 21—Securities Trust not to dispose of indebtedness except with approval of governor in council.

Mr. BENNETT: Except that there is no company to sell. This section deals with the prohibition against the company selling its securities. The company is one person, namely the Minister of Finance. He owns all the shares. How can this be possible? The section states:

> The Securities Trust shall not sell, pledge, release or otherwise dispose of any of the indebtedness to His Majesty transferred to the Securities Trust or the collateral securities held in respect thereof, except with the approval of the governor in council.

How can he sell them? Suppose he is authorized to sell them; how can he do so?

Mr. ELLIOTT (Middlesex): With the approval of the governor in council.

Mr. BENNETT: How is he going to make his initial sale? There is only one shareholder, and one shareholder cannot do it.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. MARTIN: The measure gives him the power.

Mr. BENNETT: No, it does not. It provides for only one shareholder in the company; obviously there cannot be a meeting of one shareholder.

Mr. DUNNING: In section 12 the Securities Trust is defined as being five persons.

Mr. BENNETT: Those are trustees; they do not sell.

Mr. DUNNING: It is described as The Securities Trust, consisting of these individuals. The same words are used.

Mr. BENNETT: It says "Hereinafter referred to as The Securities Trust, consisting of five trustees being" so and so. Then later there is reference to a company; but there is only one shareholder. Surely, to say the least, you have then conditions which are contradictory.

Section agreed to, on division.

On section 22—Securities Trust declared a company in national railways.

Mr. CAHAN: Why should the Securities Trust be declared to be a company comprised in the national railways? What have the national railways to do with it? What possible interest have the national railways in the new set-up? What possible interest have they in any equity?

Mr. HOWE: The company is a liability of the Canadian National Railways, and should be consolidated in this way.

Mr. CAHAN: There is no liability in connection with it. By this set-up the Canadian National Railways are exempted from liability to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars—exempted from it entirely. All that is left is some possible equity which may arise out of future exigencies, and such value as may accrue at any time is the property of the government of Canada by virtue of the liabilities which the Dominion of Canada has assumed. Why should the Securities Trust first be declared to be a company when, in fact, it is not; and secondly, if it is a company why should it be incorporated with the National Railways Company? The national railways have no interest. They are exempt from liability and have transferred all these assets, worthless or otherwise. As in many other cases, why should not the Minister of Finance be the corporation sole. If you wish that there be a corporation, why should it not be entirely under his management and his administration, so as to realize if possible from this bankruptcy—because we are dealing with a bankruptcy—such values as at some time in the future may possibly arise? This bill is so complicated that one can scarcely follow it.

Mr. DUNNING: I questioned myself concerning this section, and naturally I had to consult lawyers. The information given me was that it was desirable to have the company declared to be one comprised within the Canadian National Railways because of the character of some of the securities which would pass to it from various constituent parts of the Canadian National Railways, and in connection with possible claims with respect to certain classes of securities. I am not a lawyer and I can merely convey to the hon. member the answer the lawyers gave me with respect to the necessity for section 22.

Mr. CAHAN: I know that if the minister will look through his records, as undoubtedly he has, he will find that as Minister of Finance he is in exactly the same position with regard to other claims. No claim can be made against him except by petition of right, and no claim can be settled under petition of right except with his consent, which is subject to the approbation of the governor in council. Why should we depart from that practice, which is so simple, so easily followed, not at all complicated, and quite satisfactory?

Section agreed to, on division.

On section 23—Securities Trust to report annually to parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: I should like to refer to page 6, schedule A, "summary of indebtedness transferred to Securities Trust, as at December 31, 1936." It deals with loans for capital purposes amounting to over $270,000,000, and loans for deficits over $373,000,000, making a total of more than $643,000,000. The accrued interest is set out at $574,000,000. In connection with that item there are the words "See note." Then you turn over. The Chateau Laurier will now become a property of the Securities Trust because it belonged to the Grand Trunk Pacific Development Corporation. On looking down the list we find the indebtedness to be transferred to the Securities Trust. In other words, we have made a selection; we have picked out of all the securities that have been issued in connection with the enterprise certain ones that we hand over to the Securities Trust; and certain ones we keep in the treasury. That is what it gets down to. I ask the minister to look at pages 7 and 7A.

Mr. DUNNING: I would like the right hon. gentleman to tell me what will be left in the hands of the Minister of Finance other than the stock of the securities trust.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I have pointed out. You have picked out certain things. Look at the set-up of the railway itself that is to go to the Minister of Finance. This will be found at pages 14 and 14A.

Under assets we find investments in road and equipment, improvements on leased railway property and miscellaneous physical property. That is the whole story, plus sinking funds, deposits in lieu of mortgaged property sold, investment in affiliated companies and other investments. There are ten items there covering the new set-up.

On the other side we have the liabilities made up of capital stock, governmental grants, long-term public debt and so on.

You have picked them out. Why? If the minister will look at page 14A he will find governmental grants, $3,013,748.90, and long term debt, public, $1,184,612,248.59. Then in schedule A, to be found on page 7, we find the three railway systems, Grand Trunk, Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific. In connection with the Canadian Northern we find 3½ per cent loan, chapter 6, 1911. This is the charge on premises mortgaged October 4, 1911. Then we have a 4 per cent loan, a 5 per cent loan, a 6 per cent loan, a temporary loan, repaid, and so on to the item "mortgage covering loans above." These have been picked out to be put in the hands of the securities trust instead of being included in the liabilities of the railway. Why? I have asked that so often that I am weary. Surely there must be some reason.

Further down on the page we find the Grand Trunk Railway, 6 per cent loan, 6 per cent loan, 4 per cent loan, and so on. The total in this case is $118,582,182.33 Then we, come to the Grand Trunk Pacific, with a total of $116,006,589.08. This last item includes the capital stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific Development Company, $2,999,000 held by the Minister of the Interior. Running down the last column on page 7 we find $668,000 in the hands of the Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Company, Chicago; $24,573,539.90 in the hands of the railway treasury, Montreal. That is an entirely different matter and concerns another phase of this financial structure. Then we find $20,721,191.12 in the vaults of the Royal Trust Company, Montreal. Why pick out some and leave the others? You see, they are all long-term debts.

Mr. DUNNING: You will find the Canadian National over the page.

Mr. BENNETT: I should have mentioned those.

Mr. DUNNING: They go down to 1932.

Mr. BENNETT: Total loans, $645,527,455.-83; less adjustments authorized, $1,666,897.57, leaving a total of $643,860,558.26. In the last column we see the list of those held in the railway treasury at Montreal. The other ones are the ones in which we are interested, namely, the Canadian Northern, the Grand Trunk and the Grand Trunk Pacific, including the development company. The Canadian National Railways have in their treasury certain of these securities, which were exchanged for collateral securities and upon which money was raised to retire obligations. That is not important. I hope the minister does not think I am too insistent, but I really am curious to know why this is done. I have asked myself why, and I have no doubt the minister has in mind the answer given in the House of Lords when a member said he had asked himself a question.

Mr. DUNNING: We will not be so unkind as that.

Mr. BENNETT: Under liabilities, which are to be found at page 14a, we find long-term debt to the public, $1,184,612,248.59. That is picked out and put in there. Why is the process carried on in this way?

Mr. HOWE: As I suggested before, we are attempting to eliminate duplication between the debt of Canada and the debt of the railway. We do not want to have the same securities appearing in the net debt of Canada and in the net debt of the railways. Through one process or another these securities have been moved into the net debt of Canada, while still remaining in the net debt of the railway. They are now being taken out of the net debt of the railway and put into the securities trust. If they are still active assets of the dominion, they are left as they are in the railway balance sheet. I think that explanation is complete.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry to say that does not answer my question.

Mr. STEWART: Schedule A shows the loans for capital purposes totalling $270,037,-437.88. The amount for deficits is shown as $373,823,120.38. Does that amount include what has been paid out of consolidated revenue fund for deficits in the last three or four years?

Mr. HOWE: Not at all.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. DUNNING: Those amounts are shown on succeeding pages.

Section agreed to.

On section 24—Appendix to public accounts showing total assistance to all railways.

Mr. WALSH: This section reads:

> The minister shall include annually as an appendix to the public accounts of Canada a statement showing the total assistance, whether by way of cash outlay, land grant, loan, advance, guarantee or otherwise, given by the dominion to all railways.

This section was included in the bill after a rather heated debate in committee. It has a decided political tinge. The section is unfair to the Canadian National Railways and unfair to the Canadian Pacific Railway company. It was not included in the original bill and has been included in the amended bill only because of the insistence of certain members of the committee. The minister will remember the turn the discussion took in the committee when the suggestion was made that an appendix should be added to the public accounts of Canada to show everything that had been granted to the two railway systems from their inception. There could be no motive other than political in a suggestion of this nature.

Mr. HOWE: What is the political motive in that?

Mr. WALSH: If the minister will refer to the minutes of the meeting at which this section was discussed he will find the term "political motives" more or less defined.

Mr. HOWE: I wish you could define it for me now.

Mr. WALSH: I do not think it needs any defining, particularly by those who are sitting at the present time on the treasury benches. Here we have intruded into a railway measure of vast importance, dealing with approximately $1,800,000,000 worth of assets, a statement of this nature, asking that an appendix be added to show everything that was granted to the Canadian National Railways and to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not?

Some hon. MEMBERS: What is wrong with that?

Mr. WALSH: Hon. members realize as well as I do that many kinds of grants have been made to the railway systems of Canada, three in particular: first, grants in aid of construction; second, those made to meet deficits; and third, those which have been made recently in aid of unemployment. How are we going to show in that appendix the reason or purpose for which loans were made to the two railway systems? It is presenting a radically unfair picture of them both. Only one side of the picture is being given for in most cases there was a quid pro quo, a return given by the railway companies for what they received. If one side is to be presented, surely in fairness to both companies the other side should also be shown.

Mr. DUPUIS: Well, show the other side.

Mr. WALSH: If the hon. member who has just spoken would go into the records a little more carefully he would not be so ready with his suggestions. For instance, here is one. A grant was made to the Canadian Pacific Railway in connection with the construction of the Crowsnest pass, in which both railways were interested. That grant is to be shown against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The other side of the picture was a reduction in the railway's freight rates. Is that fact also going to be stated in this appendix? Is it fair to record one and not the other? I consider this procedure is most unfair to both the railroads.

An hon. MEMBER: I hope they show it.

Mr. WALSH: If I loan a sum of money and receive a favour of some nature in return, surely if I am going to record the one I should also report the other.

Mr. HOWE: Is the hon. member saying that he objects to this clause going in, that he does not want any record?

Mr. WALSH: I object to this clause going into the bill.

Mr. CAHAN: It has nothing to do with the bill.

Mr. WALSH: It is not accomplishing anything. It is not a part of the bill. It sticks out like a sore thumb. It does not belong here or anywhere else.

Mr. HOWE: Will my hon. friend move to strike it out?

Mr. WALSH: I would ask that it be struck out.

Mr. HOWE: Let the hon. member move it.

Mr. WALSH: I will move accordingly, and I thank the Minister of Transport that to this extent he has confidence in me. I move:

That clause 24 be struck out of this bill.

Is it the wish of the committee that I should state my reasons?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall clause 24 carry?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Mr. Chairman, before the clause is carried—

Mr. WALSH: I have not taken my seat yet. I was asked by the minister if I would move to strike out the clause. I am willing to do it if the minister is satisfied that I should move it.

Mr. HOWE: I am willing to vote against it, but it might be a quick way of testing the opinion of the committee.

Mr. WALSH: May I point out that I wish this clause struck from the bill because it is quite unfair to the two railway systems.

Mr. RYAN: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he suggesting that any member of the committee played politics in connection with this clause?

Mr. WALSH: Certainly I do.

Mr. RYAN: From what standpoint? Where was politics raised in this committee?

Mr. WALSH: The hon. member was a member of that committee.

Mr. RYAN: I was.

Mr. WALSH: Can the hon. member state his reasons for voting in favour of this clause?

Mr. RYAN: My reasons are the section itself. It speaks for itself.

Mr. WALSH: State them.

Mr. RYAN: In order to show the people of this country what has been done for all railways, not merely the Canadian National Railway. The clause speaks for itself.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Walsh) has accused members of the railway committee of playing politics. Probably if I were as unkind as he, I would accuse him of the same sin. Ever since this bill has been introduced in the house by the Minister of Transport, the leader of the opposition and the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George have impressed on the members of this committee the necessity of giving the Canadian people a clear idea of what they have put into the railways of this country. If the people are to be properly informed either through this bill or in the public accounts, there must be a true picture showing all the grants that have been given to all the railroads in Canada. I have no brief either for the Canadian National railways or the Canadian Pacific railway. The clause is inserted with the sole object of satisfying my hon. friends and of giving the Canadian people a true picture of the situation. That cannot be done if contributions to the Canadian National Railway system are shown and grants to the other railroads of Canada omitted.

Mr. WALSH: This gives the Canadian people a picture, but not necessarily a true picture.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I was the one who suggested to the minister that a statement of all the land grants should be included. I assure the hon. member that I have no political motive, and I hope he will be kind enough to retract the suggestion of political motive, because if anyone tried to play politics in the committee he did. I think he was playing to the board of trade in Montreal and probably some other institutions.

Mr. WALSH: I would rather play to that body than play to the gallery.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: If the hon. member wants a true picture of what the Canadian people have contributed to the railway systems of Canada, let us put into the public accounts in this appendix everything that has been given to the Canadian Pacific, the Canadian National, and every other railway, including land grants which were very valuable to the railroads—not excepting the Canadian Pacific Railway. The railroads have made a barrel of money in selling lands that were granted to them by the Canadian people.

Mr. YOUNG: As a member of the committee, I am surprised that the hon. member for Mount Royal should say that any heat was displayed in its debates. I attended all the meetings and from beginning to end I thought the discussion of this bill was very amicable. If any heat at all was shown, perhaps the hon. member himself might lay claim to having had not too frigid a temperature on one or two occasions. I do not think he can charge any member of the committee with having displayed anything but a desire to thresh out the bill carefully and thoroughly. The hon. member said that this particular clause was inserted from some political motive. Again, may I say that as a member of that committee I listened very carefully all through the discussions for political motives, and only once during our debates was such a motive ascribed to anyone. That was done by the hon. member for Mount Royal: it had nothing to do with this resolution, but with another, and the crime he thought had been committed was that some hon. member who happened to be a Liberal moved a resolution, which was seconded by another Liberal. To this the hon. member for Mount Royal took objection, saying that it was highly political.

There was not the remotest suggestion of a political motive in connection with this clause. Why was it inserted? That is easily explained. My hon. friend insisted not only with regard to this but on every other section of the bill from beginning to end that the picture be not altered as presented in the annual statement of the Canadian National Railways. Throughout the discussion it was quite apparent that he wished to have brought into the Canadian National picture every bit of dead wood that we have been trying to eliminate in order to do away with duplication of accounts. He was never satisfied; he wanted to have the worst possible picture painted in the annual statement of the railways.

Then, at my right hon. friend's suggestion, hon. members took this view. They said, "If you really wish to have a true picture of the Canadian railway situation, if you want to have all the facts included in the public accounts, then by all means let us have the true picture; but instead of dealing only with one railway in Canada let us show what the dominion has done for all the railways in the country." That seemed quite reasonable to all the members of the committee and the suggestion was heartily accepted. I do not recall that even my right hon. friend offered more than a passing objection at the time. As a member who attended every meeting and witnessed the whole performance—if you want to call it a performance—I can tell the committee that it was as a result of the right hon. gentleman's insistence upon having a complete picture of the Canadian National railway situation presented to the people that this clause was inserted in the bill.

Mr. GRAYDON: I was surprised to hear the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) speaking as he has done with regard to playing politics in this matter. I do not think there is very much wrong with the statements that have been made with regard to the political aspect of the discussion, and I have no less an authority than the Minister of Agriculture who on Friday night made this statement, as reported at page 1977 of Hansard of March 19:

> The statement has been made that we should not introduce politics into the discussion. . . . I often wonder why men want to come to this parliament who do not want to discuss politics. I have always understood politics to be a business of the people of the country.

Perhaps that will clarify the matter for some of my hon. friends.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: As far as that is concerned, the hon. member for Mount Royal accused us of playing politics in the committee, and he is entirely wrong there. I think he will admit that.

Mr. WALSH: The objection I have made is, I submit, substantial enough to merit the consideration of the committee, apart from the outburst there has been at the suggestion of a political motive. If hon. members will consider for a moment, section 24 sets up in a way a credit and debit account of the railways of Canada, and we are filling in all the debit items against the railways but leaving blank the credit side, so that there is nothing on that side to offset the other.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Is not that the situation in connection with the Canadian National Railways and in the accounts that have been set up for them in years past?

Mr. WALSH: I do not think so. As my hon. friend will remember, what I urged before the committee at every meeting was a genuinely true statement of the Canadian National system so that when anyone picked up the balance sheet from year to year he would know exactly the state of the system's finances, either from the balance sheet itself or from the appendix. The minister will remember that I said I did not care which method was adopted in that connection, though personally I prefer the appendix; I think that is better than cluttering up the balance sheet itself with a mass of figures that mean little or nothing. In season and out of season I urged the presentation of a clear and true statement of the affairs of the Canadian National Railways, so that if I picked up a balance sheet of the system I should not find a footnote to the effect that if I wanted a true picture I should have to go to the balance sheet of the Dominion of Canada, where I might get it if I were clever enough to dig it out.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: If the hon. gentleman will read the speech which his leader made when the bill was introduced he will see that the right hon. gentleman insisted that the true statement of the Canadian National Railways should be presented to the public. I do not believe the right hon. gentleman meant just one railway; I think he meant all the railways.

Mr. WALSH: I am referring to both railways, and I agree with my leader's words on that occasion.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Then the hon. gentleman cannot disagree with the clause.

Mr. WALSH: I do not disagree with it if the idea is carried to its logical conclusion. What I am arguing for is the presentation of the other side of the picture, so that the public will know why certain grants have been and are being made from time to time. The people should know that certain grants have been made for certain specific purposes. Take the situation last year. We made a grant of some $10,000,000 to the two railways for the purpose of giving work to a certain number of unemployed young men on their roadways so as to make them a little more presentable—they had been neglected. We are going to show that $10,000,000—

Mr. DUNNING: It is not $10,000,000.

Mr. WALSH: I do not know how much it was; I am merely using that figure by way of illustration. At any rate we are going to show that sum, whatever it was, against the railways. Are we simply going to leave that against the railways and not show why we made the grant? Is it fair to mislead the public, making them believe that we in this parliament are handing money to the railways and getting nothing in return?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Will not the railways get the advantage, through improved road beds, of that two or three million dollars or whatever it was?

Mr. WALSH: Then why not show that? If you are going to show anything, do not stop half way. Half a truth is worse than no truth, and this is a half truth, because the other side is not shown. That is what I am insisting on, and I am sure that if the minister will give this clause proper attention he will be willing to adopt my suggestion. I am sure that my hon. friend who sits back here—I do not know his constituency, but he is from Nova Scotia—has the same idea that I have, and that is that if we are going to present a picture of the railways we ought to give the whole of it and not just a part.

Mr. DUNNING: That is what the section says.

Mr. WALSH: The section does not say that.

Mr. GRAY: Read the last sentence.

Mr. WALSH: The sentence reads:

> Such statement shall also show the manner in which such assistance has been dealt with in the public accounts of Canada.

That does not suggest that the reasons shall be given for the grants that have been made. It does not suggest, for instance, that the reason shall be shown for the grant of money for the Crowsnest pass, which resulted in a decrease in freight rates in western Canada. This clause does not intend that such things shall be shown, and I contend that they should appear in the statement.

Mr. DUNNING: The very words "Crowsnest pass" would bring to the mind of everyone the Crowsnest agreement.

Mr. WALSH: They bring that agreement to my mind now, but two years ago they did not, because at that time I was an average member of the public of Canada. I should like the minister either to amend this section so as to ensure that the whole statement of affairs shall be given, or take it out and put it where it belongs.

Mr. CAHAN: Does this section 24, which includes all grants, include the grants paid to the railways for post office services or for other services in connection with the carrying of mails throughout all these years? There certainly are cash outlays of that kind.

Mr. DUNNING: They are not "assistance" within the meaning of this section.

Mr. CAHAN: Where is the word "assistance"?

Mr. DUNNING: The third line, "total assistance."

Mr. CAHAN: But we have granted mail subsidies, which have been stated frequently to be by way of assistance.

Mr. BENNETT: The Calgary and Edmonton railway got $80,000 a year. It was the basis of its financing.

Mr. CAHAN: Furthermore, I have no objection to the government publishing every year a statement of all the expenditures made upon each and all the railways of Canada, branches and others.

Mr. HOWE: We do that anyway.

Mr. CAHAN: But I say that in a bill relating to the Canadian National Railways such a provision cannot properly be made. The amendment which the minister has brought in is entirely contrary to the proper practice of the house, it seems to me, because the effect is that we are confronted with a new bill as amended by the committee. The committee to which this bill was sent had no authority to amend it, but it has drafted a new bill, and in this bill as now printed it is not disclosed what the original provisions were and what are the amendments which the minister is adopting. If any hon. member of this house had moved section 24 in an amendment to the bill as originally introduced, it would have been declared out of order, because it has no relevance to the main object of this bill; it has no reference whatever to the Canadian National Railways nor to the revision of its accounting system. An amendment respecting all bonuses and payments of every class and description made since railways were first built in Canada should not be incorporated in a bill which essentially has to do with the Canadian National Railways. The amendment should not be in this bill if it applies to any other railway system which is not now incorporated in the Canadian National system.

Mr. BENNETT: If this amendment were being considered in respect to its relevancy to the bill, it would be ruled out of order. It is an amendment to two acts, the Railways and Canals Act, and the statute which deals with the public accounts. I do not know that the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) knows that in the report made by the Minister of Railways and Canals, now the Minister of Transport, all this information is given in great detail. I think he overlooked that. The information is given with respect to the land grants, cash payments, subsidies and every detail from year to year, including in the figures the sum we discussed that had to do with the Grand Trunk.

Secondly, as far as cash is concerned, the public accounts of the country contain full details. The public accounts obviously do not deal with land grants, because they are dealt with in the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals. I took the trouble to look them up on one occasion, and I think the Minister of Transport will recall that there is a complete history of all our land grant transactions, and it shows what land grants have not been completely discharged. In connection with one company in Manitoba there was a small acreage which had not been alienated; it has been now, and it came up during the Saskatchewan discussion in connection with natural resources. All the information which this section calls for is in the report of the Department of Railways and Canals each year. The cash transactions are shown in the public accounts of the country. In the various schedules will be found accounts showing the cash in complete detail. My difficulty is to understand why this section should be thought relevant or cognate in any sense to this measure which has to do with the Canadian National Railways accounting.

I want to correct one error to which the Minister of Finance has continually alluded, as well as the Minister of Transport. I ventured to join issue with them, but I had not time at the moment to send out and get the reports. I find that all the reports since 1932 show the amount of the deficits as paid by the country. I had thought I might be wrong, although I did not think I was. I now hold in my hand the report for 1933, and on page 10 the profit and loss statement shows this at the bottom:

Deduct—C.N. Rlys., 1932 cash deficit paid by the dominion government	$ 53,422,661 67
C.N. Rlys., 1933 cash deficit paid by the dominion government	52,263,819 05
Change during year	$ 15,352,506 54
Balance at January 1 "debit balance"	763,765,143 01
Balance at December 31 "debit balance"	$748,412,636 47

That is for the year 1933. I then turn to 1934, and I once more direct the attention of the Minister of Finance to it, for I felt I could not be mistaken. On page 14, the profit and loss statement shows:

Deduct—C.N.R. cash deficit paid by the dominion government	$ 42,589,824 96
Eastern Lines' cash deficit paid by dominion government.	5,434,133 74
P.E.I. car ferry and terminals' cash deficit paid by dominion government	383,942 00
Eastern Lines' interest on government loans	626,413 21
Balance at December 31 "debit balance"	$789,040,675 42

That is where one would expect to find it.

Mr. BOTHWELL: But the 1933 deficit does not appear there.

Mr. BENNETT: I am showing that it does; I have just read it.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Does it not appear in the annual report, but not the accumulation?

Mr. DUNNING: That is the point. My point was that it is not any longer accumulated from year to year; it is shown in the accounts of the railway each year as a balancing item which is paid by the dominion government, but nowhere is the previous year's cash deficit which was paid by the dominion government brought forward as a liability of the railway.

Mr. BENNETT: On the contrary. I took the year 1933, being the next after 1932. At page 10 you have the debit balance, the accumulation including the deficits carried forward. At December 31, 1933, it amounted to $748,412,636.47, which includes the deficit of $52,263,819.05, and it shows the change during the year. That is set out for that year and the preceding year, the accumulated deficits.

Now I turn to the next year, 1934, the profit and loss account, remembering that the sum total I mentioned included the deficits, and at page 14 are found the figures I have already given: The sum total balance at December 31, "debit balance" $789,040,675.42 as against a figure of $748,412,636 for the year before, which included in both cases the deficit.

Mr. HOWE: If my right hon. friend will excuse me, I think he is entirely wrong as to what that figure is. The contribution of the government is deducted from the amounts charged on the railway books, and the rest carried forward.

Mr. BENNETT: No, it shows the cash deficit to which the hon. gentleman referred. I asked him to explain three things; the cash deficit of $48,000,000, the bureau of statistics deficit of $115,000,000, and the deficit shown by the accounts, which includes the payment made by the government on its bonded debt plus the cash, making the $83,000,000 altogether. At page 14 of the accounts of 1934 the net loss is shown and compared with the figure for the previous year, and in both cases the cash deficit is included. Let there be no misunderstanding about that; in both cases the cash deficit is included.

Mr. HOWE: But it is not carried forward.

Mr. BENNETT: I come now to the next year, 1935. On page 18 of the accounts for that year we find these words: "System net loss, $115,281,689.79." Less the contributions made by the government for deficits, as follows:

	1935	1934
C.N. Railways	$41,795,757 24	$42,589,824 96
Eastern Lines	5,265,373 20	5,434,133 74
P.E.I. Car Ferry and Terminals.	360,334 36	383,942 00
	$47,421,464 80	$48,407,900 70

Then there is shown a change during the year, in profit and loss account, of $67,233,811.78, as against $40,628,038.95 the year before. The balance at December 31st is shown at $85,274,487.20, as against $789,040,675.42. That includes accumulated deficits.

Mr. DUNNING: My right hon. friend spoke of deducting.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly, so as to arrive at the cash deficit.

Mr. HOWE: Perhaps I might explain those figures.

Mr. BENNETT: Just a moment; I am not finished. I come now to the annual report for 1936, and at page 10 I find these figures:

System net loss.. .. .. .. $92,311,037 88

The figures for the previous year are also given, $115,281,689.79. Then:

Deduct—Contributions for deficits from the government—

	1936	1935
C.N. Railways ..	$37,449,321 57	$41,795,757 24
Eastern Lines ..	5,550,632 36	5,265,373 20
P.E.I. Car Ferry and Terminals.	303,439 89	360,334 36
	$43,303,393 82	$47,421,464 80

That is in order to get the change in the position, which is the figure I gave and the figure I am sticking to. According to this report the change during the year in the profit and loss account was $48,381,230.85, against $67,233,811.78 the year before, showing a betterment. But the balance at January 1 is given, carried forward as I said.

Mr. DUNNING: That balance is modified in each case by the amount paid by the dominion.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no. The deficits are set out and then the balance is struck as of the 31st December, and here are the figures of the balance. He who runs may read. The figures are: $856,274,487.20. That is for the year ending 31st December, 1935, carried forward in the account of 1935 as the debit balance on the 1st January of last year. At the end of December that amount had risen to $904,655,718.05. There is the record of the deficits, cumulative, without interest, and the deficit standing against the Canadian National railways on the 31st December, 1936, was $904,655,718.05, which includes the deficits of 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935 and 1936.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Mr. BENNETT: It does; there can be no argument about it.

Mr. HOWE: It does not.

Mr. BENNETT: It says here distinctly that it does.

Mr. DUNNING: It is deducted each year.

Mr. BENNETT: Pardon me; it is not deducted each year. It is deducted in order to ascertain the cash position, but that is stated, and the change in net position is indicated by these figures. Here are the figures: December 31, 1934, $789,000,000 odd; December 31, 1936, $904,000,000 odd.

Mr. HOWE: Would my right hon. friend allow me to explain where those figures come from?

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. They are there, anyway.

Mr. HOWE: I have here the report for the year ending December 31, 1936. If my hon. friend will look at that report he will see that the system's net loss figure for the year 1935 was $115,281,689.79. The system's net loss for that year was that amount.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, for 1935.

Mr. HOWE: Yes. For 1936 it was $92,311,037.88. In each case there was deducted from that figure the cash contributions by the dominion government in respect of cash deficits, and a non-cash item representing some $67,000,000 in the one case, and $48,000,000 in the other, was carried forward into the cumulative deficit, but the amount that was paid in cash by the government to cover the cash deficit was not carried forward. It was deducted, and the remainder was carried forward.

Mr. BENNETT: But the point I made was that these annual reports distinctly show the amount of money the dominion has paid for deficits. Is that so, or is it not?

Mr. HOWE: Only for the current year and the previous year.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly; the annual report shows the cash deficit paid by the government of Canada every year. It appears in the profit and loss statement, where you would expect to find it.

Mr. DUNNING: But they are not cumulative.

Mr. BENNETT: But the point I am making is this: The Minister of Transport said this afternoon that we had not shown the deficits in the annual reports since 1932, and the Minister of Finance has repeated that statement. I said I did not think that was so, but I sent out and secured the reports. Surely I can read. Hon. gentlemen opposite probably will deny that I can do a great many things, but at least I can read and write, and here the deficit is set out, as compared with the preceding year. I sent out and got the reports for the last five years, and I have read them into the record. I was very anxious that these deficits should appear, and when I was confronted with the statement that they had not appeared I sent out to make sure.

Mr. DUNNING: In the sense in which my right hon. friend is now using the figures I never doubted that they were there. We are merely talking about different things.

Mr. BENNETT: I would think not. I would not think we were talking about different things at all. We are talking about the same thing; we are talking about whether or not in future the record of the Canadian National Railways is going to show these deficits. I am getting back to my original point. All I have ever asked of the Minister of Transport, from the day he started this discussion until to-day, is that as this is a publicly owned utility of the Dominion of Canada, I should be able, by reference to its accounts, to ascertain what money we have put into our utility. That is all I have ever asked, nothing more or less, and I have suggested that the form used heretofore was sound because it did indicate these deficits. I was confronted with the argument that it did not show the deficits of these years. My memory is not infallible; I thought I might be mistaken about that; so this evening I sent for the reports. There they are, showing the deficit paid by the government of Canada every year.

Mr. DUNNING: They must continue to appear in that form.

Mr. BENNETT: But this afternoon I asked what was to appear. The minister would agree up to a certain point, and from that time on he said, "No, there is a new set-up, and this is now going to this new securities trust, and the public will not get it in this report." When this new set-up is made, all you have to do is to look at the appendix to the bill now before the house and you will see that this item disappears. The new set-up wipes it out. It is no use to shake one's head about it; there it is. The minister has been very frank about it; he says it is going to disappear, and the schedule to the bill says so. I am weary of repeating this, and if I did not feel that I had a duty to perform I would not do so. My duty is to say that as this is a publicly owned utility there should appear in the records of that utility a statement of every dollar the Canadian people have put into it. That is all I ask. I have been very careful to say with respect to the Grand Trunk capitalization and other matters they should be wiped out, but when I come to the c-a-s-h that is put into the enterprise, I do not care how it is kept, but I want to be able to read it when I look at the report.

Now I find in the new set-up of the Securities Trust about 1,000,000 no par value shares. Then there is the other item of 5,000,000 shares owned by the Minister of Finance. The two together will be added up and make a sum of money, and I will know no more about how much money the taxpayers of Canada put into the enterprise than I will know about the railways in Manchuria.

That is the real position; do not let us get away from it. Let us have it straight. I ask the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Finance to remedy that difficulty before this bill leaves parliament. There is the new set-up, and the Minister of Transport was perfectly frank with me this afternoon when he said: Yes, that will appear. But the new set-up will disclose only this—and it is shown by the appendix to the bill—1,000,000 shares of no par value stock of the Canadian National Railways Company issued in exchange for Canadian Northern Railway Company stock, to the value of $18,000,000. Then we have 5,000,000 shares of no par value capital stock issued by the Securities Trust Company to the government—the law says to the Minister of Finance—in consideration for the securities, advances, claims for unpaid interest and collateral security now held by the government, to the amount of $270,037,-437.88; then dominion government capital expenditures for Canadian government railways, $388,290,263.52, making a total of $676,-327,701.40.

Mr. DUNNING: But this is not a profit and loss account; it is a balance sheet.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly; I took the consolidated balance sheet, and read over the item, in order that there might be no misunderstanding. The Minister of Transport was frank enough to say that under the new set-up these would disappear. All I want in the balance sheet and profit and loss account of the railways—it is indifferent to me how it is done, whether it is a profit and loss or a consolidated balance sheet, so long as it is there—

Mr. DUNNING: I will say it will appear—

Mr. HOWE: It must appear.

Mr. DUNNING: Yes, it must appear, just in the same manner as my right hon. friend read it.

Mr. BENNETT: That is inconsistent with the statement heretofore, and it relieves me of great anxiety. Because if it appears in the profit and loss it must appear on the consolidated balance sheet. That statement renders nugatory this legislation. The minister (Mr. Dunning) has not been following this as carefully as the Minister of Transport. He knows exactly what the difficulty was.

Mr. HOWE: I understood the difficulty. Most of the deficits appeared in the profit and loss as deductions, and the non-cash item is carried forward into the balance sheet. That will be the case always. It has been the case since 1932.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the point, at all.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BENNETT: I can only say "on division." Does the government desire to pass section 24 of the bill? I just ask a reasonable government if it desires to protect its own reputation, or if it wishes to add to this bill an amendment which will render necessary printing for the third time what is now printed in (a) the public accounts and in (b) the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals? If any hon. member is curious enough he can get the information. You might as well say that on an agricultural bill you add an amendment providing that the Minister of Finance shall publish a statement showing all the moneys spent in connection with all agricultural societies of the country in the last twenty years.

Section agreed to, on division.

Section 25 agreed to.

Schedule A agreed to, on division.

Schedule A1 agreed to, on division.

Mr. CAHAN: These are all carried, on division.

Schedule A2 agreed to, on division.

On Schedule B—Adjustment of public accounts of Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: Look at schedule B. I assume that there is still left a little sense of fairness in the committee. Look at the language at page 9A, where it says:

> Elimination of the present schedule "railway accounts, non-active," and the substitution of the following accounts.

Bear in mind that the minister has used the words "non-active assets." The Drayton report treated them as assets. They may have been non-active, but they were still treated as assets. No one in the committee on behalf of the government has suggested the reason why we should not carry them as they now stand, as non-active assets, valued at so and so, rather than to speak of the equity value of these loans as $270,037,437.88 and $18,000,000, for the purpose of creating a company that has not been created, and conferring upon it, when it does not exist, powers to hold shares, it having no power to hold anything. There is no explanation given of that. There is no company. The statute does not make one. It says there is going to be established a company, and that is all it says. Then we find:

Adjustment in public accounts:
Credit—Railway accounts non-active	$653,860,558 26
Charge — Canadian National Securities Trust stock account	270,037,437 88
Canadian National stock account	18,000,000 00
Consolidated fund of Canada	365,823,120 38

Mr. DUNNING: And there is another $25,000,000 over the page.

Mr. BENNETT: There is the Grand Trunk Railway debenture account, the interest account, and the special interest account making a total of $25,607,393.53.

Mr. DUNNING: The summary follows.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. The next heading is "Recapitulation of changes in public accounts," and under it we find this item:

Railway accounts	$697,473,479 34

And then the following:

Charge — Canadian National Securities Trust Stock account	$270,037,437 88

I ask any reasonable member this question: Why should we endeavour to create a trust company to hold something which we say is worth over $270,000,000 at some time in the future? It is not active at this time. Then we have the Canadian National stock account of $18,000,000, and the investment in the Hudson Bay Railway, amounting to $457,526.76 Just why we differentiate there, I shall not ask any hon. member of the committee to explain, though I suppose there is an explanation of it.

Mr. DUNNING: There was reference to it this afternoon in the adjustment of accounts.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that is correct. We have dealt with the Canadian government railways working capital. Then we have the consolidated fund of Canada standing at $392,206,534.16. making in all a total of $697,473,479.34.

I do not wish to worry any more, Mr. Chairman, about this matter; I have worried myself as much as I propose to. But I should like to know how we justify or seek to justify a substitution of shares in the Securities Trust, called an owner's equity, for $697,000,000, and adjustments, that could easily be put in a single sentence in the following terms: "Owner's equity represented by various forms of securities"—if you wish to shorten it—"held by the Minister of Finance of Canada." That's all there would be to it. But instead of that we deal with it in a manner which I venture to say was never heard of before, and state that this trust company, which is not yet created, shall form part of the Canadian National Railways system, which to me makes it even more difficult to understand. When it comes into existence it has only one shareholder, and five trustees, who hold office persona designata, and not as individuals. That is the story. All afternoon I have sought, and sought in vain, for some explanation, and not having received it, I venture to say that the government must have had some purpose in deciding that they would not do this. But that purpose has not been disclosed.

Schedule agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: Appendix number 1.

Mr. HOWE: The appendices are not part of the bill.

Mr. CAHAN: If these appendices are not included, how can you set up the new accounts?

Mr. BENNETT: Number five was the all-important one.

Mr. CAHAN: If they do not form part of the bill, were they put in simply for amusement?

Mr. HOWE: They are put in for explanatory purposes; they are not part of the bill.

Mr. CAHAN: There is no statutory authority with regard to them?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. CAHAN: They simply constitute a prospective set-up?

Mr. HOWE: The bill states how these items shall be set up, and the appendices merely show the set-up so that people may see it.

Bill reported.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

ARRANGEMENT WITH CORPORATION RESPECTING LINES AND SERVICES FOR TRANSPORT OF PASSENGERS, GOODS AND MAILS

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to incorporate a corporation to be known as trans-Canada air Lines with authority to establish and operate air lines and services across Canada and matters incidental thereto, also to authorize the government to enter into a contract with the corporation providing for the organization and operation of such lines and services including the transport of passengers, goods and mails, and for the payment of a subsidy to the corporation and for the operation and maintenance by the government of emergency landing fields and other specified services, and also to authorize the government at its discretion to acquire and pay for all of the shares of the capital stock of the corporation, and further to authorize the Board of Railway Commissioners to fix the rates to be paid to the corporation for its services.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps the minister will give us a reasonable explanation. By reasonable I mean reasonably long, so that we can understand the purpose of this resolution.

Mr. HOWE: The purpose of the bill to be founded upon this resolution is to form a company to operate a first-class air service from coast to coast. I think most of us are aware of the necessity for such a service. Canada is perhaps one of the few countries in the world without a national scheduled air service. The air services from our centres of population to areas not otherwise served by transportation take second place to none, but we are woefully behind other countries in air services between centres of population. During the calendar year 1936 over 1,000,000 people travelled in scheduled air flights in the United States. Many Canadian citizens when travelling from one point to another in Canada find they have to use the air lines in the United States, and they have been very insistent in demanding the establishment of a direct Canadian service.

Air mail stamps are sold in Canada and much of our mail is routed across the border, transported by the air services of the United States, and then brought back across the border at the point nearest to destination. The volume of this air mail is sufficient to warrant the establishment of a direct service in Canada. I believe such a service would prove of immense value for national purposes. Canada is a country of vast distances and sparse population, and the time needed to travel between the west and the east is considerable under present circumstances. If that time could be cut in three or four by a new air service, the people living at the extremes of this country would be able to travel more frequently to the centres of government business, and industry, and the inter-relations of the country would thereby be facilitated. The need for a service of this kind has been recognized for some considerable time. As a means of relieving unemployment the construction of airports was commenced from coast to coast.

Mr. BENNETT: Those were the camps.

Mr. HOWE: The work on the airports has been continued since the camps were closed. It is expected that the airports from Winnipeg westward will be entirely completed by July 1 next, and the other fields by the end of the present year. The time has now come to undertake the flying of this route, and the government has been faced with the question how it can best be done. Numerous applications have been received from companies willing and anxious to perform this service. Pressure has been brought to bear on the government on behalf of several of these companies, and also on behalf of companies which are performing similar services in the United States. We had several examples to guide us. We had the example of Britain and its development of air services through Imperial Airways.

Mr. BENNETT: How much of Imperial Airways does the British government own?

Mr. HOWE: Twenty-five per cent of the capital stock; in addition, all the operations undertaken by direction of the British government are subsidized by the government. The method is to estimate in advance the deficit for the year and the money to cover the estimated deficit is paid over in advance to the company.

The United States have developed air services along different lines. There it has been a matter of competition, extending over some ten years. In the early days mail subsidies were granted which would now be considered very large indeed; they amounted to about four times the present mail subsidies. Companies were authorized to fly certain services and the lines were built up in that way, the only form of subsidy being the contracts awarded for the carriage of the mail. This led to a somewhat chaotic experience. Companies have been formed, and have disappeared or been merged with other companies. Three or four years ago there was a general writing-down of mail contracts; they were suspended for a time, and the United States government undertook to perform the service with its own planes, because the contract arrangement was not considered satisfactory. Subsequently new contracts were made with private firms, and to-day, I think, the United States is operating on a very efficient basis—as efficient perhaps as any country in the world. But it seems to me that this mode of arriving at the end desired could be bettered by a country like Canada, able to profit by the experience of others.

The company contemplated by this bill is to be organized as a private corporation. It is not the intention of the government to own directly any stock in the company. The agency for organizing the company is to be the government's existing agency for the conduct of transportation business, namely, the Canadian National Railways. The Canadian National Railways will underwrite, in the first instance, the stock of this company and distribute it among firms at present engaged in aviation in Canada which wish to participate.

It might be argued that the government should do this direct, but I think everyone here will appreciate the impossibility of working out a plan involving a great number of competitors when the government itself does not and cannot know the plan until it has been approved by parliament. The government has therefore decided that the proper course is to determine the form that the company shall take, place the underwriting in the hands of the National railways, ask those who desire to participate to signify the degree to which they are interested after the terms of the arrangement are known, and to state what they can contribute towards the enterprise in the way of experienced personnel and possibly equipment, and then allow the personnel problem of the company to be worked out after the bill has been passed.

This company will fly only the main artery of traffic across the country, and such other arteries of traffic as are designated by the government as being of national importance. It is not the intention to interfere with any existing operations. The company will not undertake other than interurban services. It will be given an exclusive contract to carry mails, passengers and express over the specified routes. In the initial stages of the company, in addition to its having an air mail contract at a rate competitive with similar services on this continent, its deficits will be paid by the government for two years, during which period we anticipate the personnel will be perfected, and at the end of that time it can reasonably be expected that an efficient service will be in operation. Subsequently the company will receive an air mail contract the basis of which will be determined by the operations of the previous year. The set-up is such that the company will be protected against loss, but its profits will be very strictly limited. In other words, it is organized to perform a certain national service, and it is expected that that service will be performed at or near cost.

As hon. members know, this government is obligated to share in the proposed service now being organized between England, Ireland, and Canada to cross the north Atlantic. In that connection we have undertaken to be prepared to fly the mails across Canada connecting with their flight across the Atlantic. For that reason it is urgent to form this company and get the organization under way, and obtain the necessary equipment to undertake the service.

It is estimated that the capital required to purchase the equipment necessary to perform the service in Canada is about $1,750,000. In addition, about $1,250,000 is required as part of Canada's capital for the transatlantic service. The balance of $2,000,000 is provided to be called upon as required for the expansion of the services as national needs may indicate. The cost of operation of the service —the coast to coast service—is estimated at about $1,000,000 a year.

Mr. BENNETT: Is that the deficit or the operating cost?

Mr. HOWE: The total operating cost. It is thought that from the start the mail contract and such passenger and express business as is immediately available should cover the cost of the service. We have made provision, however, for a subsidy to protect the service in that period. After 1940, as I have said, the subsidy provision expires, and the mail contract will be on the basis of cost of the service. I think that outlines fairly well the intention of the bill. The whole matter can be more fully considered when the bill is brought down.

Mr. BENNETT: It must be apparent from the explanation given by the minister that the measure contemplated is one of a very far-reaching character, and can only be thoroughly understood when the measure based upon the resolution has been introduced into the house. That we should have an air service across the northern half of the continent goes without saying, I think; but our ability to finance such an undertaking is something also that should be considered. Keeping up with the Joneses has been one of the curses of Canada. On the other hand, we had a mail service across Canada as far as Edmonton and Lethbridge and across the southern part of Canada to Vancouver. We discontinued it, strictly in accordance with the terms of the contract, because with the crop failure in western Canada, and with 300,000 of a population receiving some form of relief, there was very little gratification in seeing an aeroplane passing by day after day when the unfortunate owner of the soil could hardly see the aeroplane because his crop had gone up in dust. No apology is offered for having discontinued the service under the financial conditions that obtained.

With more buoyant revenues, and with the expansion of an air service across the Atlantic ocean, the country is confronted with the necessity of providing some form of service between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

The problem at once arises how it shall be done. The minister has not made abundantly clear just how he proposes to do it. He says that the government will not itself own any of the capital stock of the enterprise, but that the Canadian National Railways will be charged with responsibility for the underwriting of the stock, and that those who have heretofore been engaged in aerial operations will have an opportunity to subscribe for the shares.

The Canadian National Railways put $250,000 into Canadian Airways, and the Canadian Pacific Railway an equal amount. The $250,000 was recommended by the late Sir Henry Thornton, and the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway agreed with that recommendation and paid a similar sum on behalf of that railway. The Canadian National Railways may be said to have at least some claim, both because of the $250,000 which they put into the capital stock and because of the fact that they had mail contracts which, during the days of the depression, were cancelled strictly within the terms of the contracts. Unfortunately, however, they did not anticipate the events that followed in quick succession necessitating the cancellation of the contracts.

I am clear in my own mind that we should make some efforts towards establishing an air service; I have no doubt about that. But I should like to see in great detail the conditions under which it is proposed to organize it. I confess that I have not been quite able to follow the minister in his statement that while we shall own none of the capital stock, the Canadian National Railways will be charged with responsibility for the underwriting of the stock, because under those circumstances it might well be that the control of the enterprise would pass entirely out of the hands of the government, and a franchise, the value of which cannot easily be overestimated, would pass out of our control. I gather that the minister is desirous of having the control at least rest either in the government itself or in a government agency such as the Canadian National Railways. That, however, will be made quite clear when the bill founded on the resolution is introduced.

In order to expedite matters, and without attempting to traverse the subject at this time, I should be willing to have the resolution reported and the bill introduced, without prejudice to discussion in detail of the terms of the measure about which at the moment we know very little, and which, as the minister has properly remarked, we can fully understand only when it is introduced; for I can conceive of a bill somewhat in the terms indicated by the minister as being very objectionable for many reasons. On the other hand, he has left himself sufficient latitude to bring down a bill that will be acceptable to all, and in that hope and with that reservation I shall be glad to see the resolution reported and the bill introduced.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Howe thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 74, to establish a corporation to be known as Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FEEDING STUFFS

REGULATION OF IMPORTATION, EXPORTATION AND SALE

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 64, to control and regulate the sale of feeding stuffs.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the explanation made by the minister the other day it does not seem necessary for him to make an explanation on the second reading, if we reserve our rights in the matter, and then we may read the bill to see what it contains. It is obvious that any explanation the minister might give now would have to be a lengthy one inasmuch as it would cover details. The essential purpose would be served, I think, if with the understanding I have indicated the second reading were given and the bill printed, so that we might have an opportunity to read it and get a more thorough understanding of its provisions. With that understanding, explanations could be given in committee as we proceed section by section with the bill.

Mr. GARDINER: As I indicated to the house the other day on the resolution, it is my intention to move that this bill go to the committee on agriculture. With the understanding that it can be fully discussed there, I think the suggestion made by the leader of the opposition is a proper one.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Leeds): The minister might perhaps answer on the second reading the question which I asked when the resolution was introduced, as to the appointment of officials under the bill. As I recall it, the bill provides that the minister may make the appointments. On the resolution I asked whether the appointments were made at present by the minister or under the Civil Service Act, and he said he thought that some were made by the commission and others by the minister. Has he any further information on that point?

Mr. GARDINER: I thought that was in connection with Bill No. 65.

Mr. STEWART: Possibly it was the other bill.

Mr. GARDINER: I believe so, but the matter can be fully discussed in committee and I shall have no objection to bringing down the information.

Mr. STEWART: Section 9 of the present bill reads:

> Such inspectors and analysts may be appointed as the minister may consider necessary for the effective carrying out of the provisions of this act.

Mr. GARDINER: That is an entirely new provision.

Mr. STEWART: I was trying to find out from the minister how they are appointed now. There must be officials discharging duties of this kind now. Are they appointed by the civil service commission or by the minister? I think the provision now is that they shall be appointed in the manner provided by law, which would appear to be by the civil service commission.

Mr. GARDINER: I take it this is an entirely new section. I would have to get information as to whether this is a different set of inspectors. I will get the information for the committee. Probably one explanation is that these analysts may be of a particular kind who would have to be chosen because of special qualifications.

Mr. BENNETT: This is an obvious attempt to circumvent the Civil Service Act, and it will not succeed.

Mr. GARDINER: Replying to that remark may I say that if it were so I would have more information about it.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the minister would not disclose it.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

SEEDS

REGULATION OF TESTING, INSPECTING, SALE AND IMPORTATION

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 65, respecting the testing, inspection and sale of seeds.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): In addition to what was said a moment ago with respect to Bill No. 64, I suggest to the minister that it might be very desirable to have the Department of Justice carefully consider the question of our constitutional right to pass legislation dealing with the sale of these commodities. If the language of the privy council is to be relied upon, property and civil rights are affected. I mentioned that when the resolution was before the house.

Mr. GARDINER: I have already had that done. I have before me a very careful review of the act and also an opinion given in regard to it, in which it is claimed by the law officers that the bill as drafted is within the powers of this parliament.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization.

NEW BRUNSWICK NATIONAL PARK

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to set aside lands in the province of New Brunswick as a national park and to withdraw from the national park and revest in the province of Nova Scotia a portion of the lands set aside by the Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island National Parks Act, 1936.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister made quite clear what it is proposed to do when the resolution was up, but might I ask whether or not it is proposed in the bill to define the area of the park in New Brunswick at this time, or merely define it in such general terms as to enable it to be hereafter settled?

Mr. CRERAR: It is impossible at present to define the area, because the area has not yet been selected.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought the minister might have selected my old county!

Mr. CRERAR: That, I can assure my right hon. friend, will have very careful consideration.

Mr. BENNETT: If it is not better than usual, there is not much chance for it.

Mr. CRERAR: I suggest that my right hon. friend may still live in hope. The difficulty in New Brunswick is that there are several sites under consideration. Under the parks act the provincial government has to give to the federal authority with clear title the area set aside for a park. In the older settled provinces it involves the acquisition of the site. I had hoped to be in a position to state to the committee when this measure was brought down that a particular site had been selected and what its boundaries would be, but unfortunately I am not in that position. We desire to get a start made on the park in New Brunswick, and we are asking in the bill for authority to define the area by order in council.

Mr. BENNETT: Orders in council are very handy when in office, are they not?

Mr. CRERAR: I believe my right hon. friend found them so.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I did.

Mr. CRERAR: There have been some changes in Nova Scotia in the boundaries of the park as defined a year ago, the provincial government having discovered that it would be put to considerable expense to acquire some of the area included in the boundaries as defined at that time.

Mr. BENNETT: They would have to pass special legislation to expropriate.

Mr. CRERAR: There are certain problems of mineral rights which they had not considered before, which might lead to an uncertain financial liability. But we are adding an area to the park which, in the opinion of the parks officials who have examined it, will add to the usefulness and attractiveness of the park.

Mr. BARRY: Will the minister state upon whose recommendation the site in New Brunswick will be selected?

Mr. CRERAR: Sites are examined first by parks officials from the parks branch of the federal government. But my hon friend must remember that the area has to be given to the federal government by the provincial government free of charge with a clear title. That means that the provincial government has to be a consenting party to the area set aside. As I stated, the problem arises in New Brunswick of repossessing certain private properties that may exist in the area proposed to be set aside, and that matter is now under consideration by the provincial government. We have given to them the report of our federal parks officials who have examined several different sites.

Mr. BARRY: Will the minister assure me that the selection of this site is within the purview of the powers of the provincial government?

Mr. CRERAR: I do not think there is any doubt of that, if they have the money to get it.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister need not take what they offer; that is all.

Mr. CRERAR: No, not necessarily.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Crerar thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 75 respecting the establishment of a national park and to amend the Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island National Parks Act, 1936.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

APPOINTMENT OF GEORGE A. TOUCHE AND COMPANY AS AUDITORS

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 56, respecting the appointment of auditors for National Railways.

Motion agreed, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

On section 1—Appointment of auditors.

Mr. STEWART: Could the minister tell us for how many years this firm has been acting as auditors for the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. HOWE: Since the formation of the railways in 1919, I think, except for an interlude of one year when it was replaced by another company.

Mr. STEWART: And how are the auditors selected? Are they chosen from a panel of eligible auditors?

Mr. HOWE: This is highly technical work, and familiarity with railway accounting is the prime requisite. Because of the fact that Touche and Company have had such special experience in this particular work it is felt by the government that they are the logical people to carry it on.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

[Mr. Crerar.]

CITY OF OTTAWA AGREEMENT

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Public Works) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Minister of Public Works on behalf of His Majesty to enter into an agreement to pay to the corporation of the city of Ottawa the sum of $100,000 for the year ending July 1, 1937.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Mr. CARDIN: Mr. Chairman, this resolution contemplates the introduction of a bill to permit the government to enter into an agreement with the city of Ottawa, continuing an agreement which was entered into several years ago. At that time, if I remember correctly, the agreement was made for five years, and for the last three or four years it has been continued year by year. This agreement with the city of Ottawa was entered into in settlement of a claim made by the city for compensation in lieu of taxes, and so on. The claim, as I explained last year, was for a very large amount, and after some negotiation the Department of Public Works came to an agreement with the city under which the government agreed to pay $100,000 a year for a period of five years. That agreement lapsed several years ago, but has been continued by legislation each year since.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Cardin thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 76 to authorize an agreement between His Majesty the King and the city of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall said bill be read a second time?

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, with the unanimous consent of the house I do not see any reason why the bill should not be put through all its stages tonight. The minister has explained its purpose, which is simply to continue an existing arrangement which I think is favourable to the dominion. I know that for several years, as the minister will confirm, the city of Ottawa has been claiming a larger amount than that specified in the bill, as compensation for certain services which they render. I am convinced that since there is nothing new in this bill as compared with the arrangement that has existed for many years, no valid objection can be taken to it. I believe it is in the interests of the dominion and at the same time I think it is a fair arrangement for the city.

It will be noticed, however, that we are a year behind time. We are only paying now until July 1, 1937, and unless a new arrangement is made the government will have to come back next year for authority to pay up to the end of 1938. Usually our estimates cover the coming fiscal year to its end, but this agreement extends only to July 1, 1937, so to a certain extent we are in arrears every year.

Mr. CARDIN moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES RESEARCH BOARD

PROVISION FOR REPEAL OF BIOLOGICAL BOARD ACT AND CREATION OF NEW BODY

Hon. J. E. MICHAUD (Minister of Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to repeal the Biological Board Act and to provide in its stead for the creation of a Fisheries Research Board to have charge of the fisheries research work carried on by the dominion; and to provide for travelling and other expenses of the members of the board and any emolument that might be deemed necessary to pay the chairman and secretary of such board.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Mr. STIRLING: Mr. Chairman, several years ago certain excellent reasons existed for setting up a biological board, and it has been carrying out valuable work in connection with fisheries throughout Canada. Would the minister intimate the reasons why it is now necessary to do away with it, and substitute a branch of his department?

Hon. J. E. MICHAUD (Minister of Fisheries): The Biological Board of Canada was first organized by order in council in 1898, and subsequently by statute in 1912. It has been found by the board itself that the present title is misleading, because their work is confined to research in connection with fisheries. The term "biological board" has been misleading to the layman, and the board has felt it advisable that the name be changed.

The other change proposed has to do with the manner of selecting the members of the board. The act of 1912 provided that the members should be selected by the minister, and there were specifications as to the types of people who should be on the board. As the act now stands we find that:

The board shall consist of five members appointed by the minister, and one additional member appointed by such universities, to be named by the minister, as may engage in the work of biological research.

As presently constituted, the board has become cumbersome. It has been found that it is not workable. Some universities gave no attention to research work in connection with fisheries and should not have the privilege of appointing members to the board.

Mr. STIRLING: Would the minister tell the committee how the members of the existing board were appointed?

Mr. MICHAUD: They were appointed as specified under the old act.

Mr. STIRLING: From which the minister has quoted.

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes; they will remain so appointed until January 1, 1938. At that time those who are on the board and are working without pay will remain, and the universities which have research departments performing the work now under consideration will be invited to send representatives. The board is composed of scientific men who give their time voluntarily and without pay to research work.

The board have found it would be better to have more representatives from the fishing industry. All the more important branches of the industry have their own research laboratories and carry on their own research work. It has been thought advisable to have more representatives from industry on the board, so that they may give their attention to the work. In future, when a vacancy occurs, the selection of members to sit on the board will be left to the minister. He will not be bound to have representation from any particular university, but may select representatives from universities specializing in research work in connection with the activities of the board.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Michaud thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 77, to repeal the Biological Board Act and to create the Fisheries Research Board of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.
