was 8 per cent and that the increase over the two years ends up at 18 per cent; and is it not true, therefore, that the problem of meeting the wage bill in 1967 is a much bigger problem than it is in 1966; and therefore it becomes much more urgent in 1967 that anything this parliament can do should be done to put the railways in a better position to pay that wage bill themselves, and that it is desirable to do so?

Mr. Dinsdale: Certainly I agree with that statement. This is a subject that will be touched upon more effectively and appropriately when we come to the next matter before the house, which I presume will be in the hands of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), when we endeavour to enlighten ourselves and reach some consensus as to what might be done about the process of galloping inflation, which is at the root of a great many of the difficulties of not only the railways and railroad employees but most of the economic groups in Canada. The point I should like to deal with has been discussed by other members of the house. I am only the second member from Manitoba to take part in this debate, and I am sure—

Mr. Pickersgill: There have been three this evening.

Mr. Dinsdale: —that my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) would have dealt with this problem had he not run out of time.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the hon. member would like to make that statement a little more accurate. The hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer) is also a member from Manitoba, and he spoke this evening.

Mr. Dinsdale: I was not in the house when the hon. member for Springfield made his remarks. I am sure he represented well the viewpoint of Manitoba and I am very pleased to hear that he has taken part in the debate. The problem that concerns me is the emphasis on national policy that predominates throughout the 68 pages of the legislation before us. It seems to me that there is a failure to pay sufficient attention to the regional problems, which are actually the basic difficulties in the field of transportation. It is all well and good to emphasize national policy but I think the minister himself is on record as having quoted that old expression that Canada is a difficult nation to govern, largely because of the problems of regionalism, and any economic approach must take into consideration the specialized difficulties of the various regions of Canada. This has been the cause of some of our greatest economic and political upheavals in the past, and it is not necessary to retrace Canadian history in this regard. The minister himself is a native Manitoban—

Mr. Pickersgill: No; I was born in Ontario.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well, he is an adopted son of Manitoba, shall we say, and was a lecturer in that province at one of our universities during a period when the west was involved in rather distressing economic circumstances, largely because of the failure of the national government to take into consideration the particular difficulties of the western part of the country.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman will recall that during most of that time there was a government of his party in office in this country.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am thinking particularly of the 1920's.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was in the 1930's that I was a teacher.

Mr. Dinsdale: Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister was a student during the 1920's. During the early part of the 1930's, of course, Canada was rocked by a depression that was not only felt in this nation but throughout the western world. My emphasis since coming to this house some 15 years ago has been on the need to recognize the primary necessity for diversification and decentralization of industry across the nation. I would suggest to the minister and the government that great strides have been made in this direction during the past decade.

I want to bring to the minister's attention, because this is the only manner in which we will have the opportunity to bring it to the attention of the ministry, that in my humble opinion the emphasis in this bill militates against the progress of decentralization and diversification that has moved forward in a rather encouraging way in the past decade.

During the briefing session the other day I was concerned with discovering whether there had been preliminary consultation with the provincial governments before bringing down this legislation. On that point I was assured that there had been extensive consultation. I had not seen any press reports to this effect nor had any special meetings been called, and I would presume therefore that these consultations were by letter, telephone calls or some other process that did not come to the attention of the press and the mass news media of the nation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member, is it not true that agencies of the provincial governments as well as of interested bodies made representations to the parliamentary committee on Bill No. C-120, the bill preceding this one?

Mr. Dinsdale: Quite definitely. Back in 1964 when Bill No. C-120 was before the house there was consultation, and as a result of the criticisms that came forward, from the provincial governments largely, and also economic groups such as the pool associations of western Canada, the bill was not proceeded with. I am pointing out the emphasis that is placed on national policy and I shall come to the other point I wish to mention in a moment, namely that there is a new feature of the bill. This new feature of the super board is an entirely new concept. It was not contained in Bill No. C-120 nor was it one of the recommendations of the MacPherson report. In addition, I am led to believe that there has been no preliminary consultation with provincial governments or any other major economic groups in the country on this point. My reason for saying this, as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) has pointed out, is that the approach of the government in bringing the bill before the house has been that of enacting instant legislation.

We had a transportation crisis on our hands, we had to grapple with the emergency bill, and this present bill before the house has been presented as an integral part of the total solution. Because of the unseemly haste in the matter there has not even been the opportunity to get a response from the press and certainly from the general public, but I have received some telegrams and have seen a few editorial comments from the west which indicate that they are somewhat distressed by the fact that we are proceeding to establish an act without preliminary consultation. To the western way of thinking this bill overemphasizes the national policy aspect, and in particular moves forward in the direction of a bureaucratic body which will tend to aggravate and accentuate the national approach, rather than to give adequate consideration to the necessary regional approach which must be made if we are to deal satisfactorily with any of the major economic problems of Canada.

Manitoba has always taken a keen interest in the formulation of a transportation policy. The Manitoba government has been a leader in encouraging the concept of regional development both within the provinces and across Canada as a whole. It is because of the encouragement that was given to the province of Manitoba under the leadership of her present government that certain significant developments which I think I should bring to the attention of the minister have occurred within the past few months. I admit quite freely that these developments also have been encouraged and assisted by the area development program put forward by the present Liberal administration.

For example, it was only in August that the southwestern part of the province of Manitoba established what is known—and I think it is a unique economic organization—as the Westman Development Corporation. It is largely based on a group of local municipalities, both rural and urban which, encouraged by the efforts of the government of Manitoba and the government of Canada, have seized the initiative in establishing the co-operative co-ordinated approach of dealing with the problems of economic underdevelopment in western Manitoba.

It is this group which has expressed to me some concern about the national emphasis in the legislation and has pointed out that the spirit of the legislation seems to be at odds with the encouraging trend which has prevailed in Canada in recent years toward decentralization and diversification.

In my own city of Brandon, if I may speak on a strictly local basis, we have recently been featured in magazines, such as the Weekend Magazine, as a community which has demonstarted amazing progress, notwithstanding the limitations and handicaps of an isolated geographic position. I have not the date before me, but most hon. members will have read Peter Gzowski's feature article under the title of "Brandon in Mink" which is merely a euphemistic way of expressing the fact that a new wave of prosperity has hit this community as a result of the encouraging trend toward decentralization and diversification. This has been done, notwithstanding the fact that there is a considerable disability at all levels of transportation. Rail transportation has been going through a transition in that part of the country, as it has in many other parts of the country.

We have lost all our branch lines; we are down to one passenger train a day, as hon. members will recall from the discussions that took place earlier on in this session. We even have difficulty with truck transportation because we are under the overwhelming influence of that large metropolitan urban community in Manitoba, the city of Winnipeg, where truck activities tend to be concentrated and where rates tend to be established.

We are also facing another difficulty at the moment which I hope will be overcome shortly, and that is uncertainty which has existed now for the past several months regarding the regional air policy. As the minister assured me yesterday, a hearing is to take place in October to determine the future of a regional air policy for this particular part of western Canada.

The point which I am making and which I wish to bring to the minister's attention is simply that it is fine to emphasize national policy but I hope he will ensure that the undue emphasis on national policy will not overshadow the new and encouraging trend which has been manifested in the Department of Industry to overcome a natural handicap which has affected particularly the extreme eastern and extreme western parts of Canada ever since confederation. It is because of this fact that hon. members become so exercised whenever any major change is made in the transportation policy. By all means let us rationalize transportation policy, but in the process of rationalization let us remember that Canada cannot be regarded as one, integrated economic entity.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I could ask the hon. gentleman a question? Is he not in favour of one Canada?

Mr. Dinsdale: I am in favour of one Canada in the political sense, but I am also aware of the fact that we have four or five Canadas in the economic and geographic sense.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman had better be careful or he will be excommunicated by his leader in the morning.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am just repeating the belief of the leader of this party that there is one Canada in terms of political unity. This has been the remarkable achievement of successive governments, particularly the government of John A. Macdonald, whose achievement will be commemorated next year when we celebrate our hundredth anniversary. However, we still have the facts of geography, typography and economics to deal with.

Let us now deal with the super board which has not been recommended in the MacPherson report and so far as I can determine has not been discussed with the provincial governments most concerned. It is a part of the current trend toward bigness in almost every major aspect of life.

In so far as the military are concerned, the government's emphasis is on unification and integration. We talk about big government, about solidarity forever and big labour; big bureaucracy. Even in the church we are engaged in discussions about the possibility of church unity. I remember a discussion I had with a member of the United Church when I was overseas, as a matter of fact a United Church padre. The good folk in England were not familiar with the concept of the United Church, and being a member of a non-conformist group I had to explain that we were of the opinion it was not so much a case of being united as it was a case of being frozen together.

This is always a problem with bigness in any sphere of life. The chairman is going to be all powerful; the deputy minister is going to be all powerful and certainly the minister is going to be all powerful under the legislation that is contemplated. He knows, of course, that the essence of democracy is the separation and division of powers. I know that integration is put forward in the interests of efficiency. The argument is always presented that if you have unification and integration of this kind you have greater efficiency. One of the nations that has been most forthright in this whole policy of integration and unification has been the Soviet state. It of course, has become almost one great monolithic unit in terms of bigness. However, it is faced with the inevitable situation that always confronts a big bureaucracy or a monolithic government, namely that when a mistake is made it is always a great, big blooper. It is not a small mistake, it is a big one.

At the transport seminar the other day I raised this particular point, and it was suggested to me this would be avoided because of the cross fertilization that would occur from the various committees or entities making up the super board, that is from the air transport committee, the maritime commission and so forth. This term "cross fertilization" is borrowed from the jargon of social science. It originally of course comes from the world of genetics. I would remind the minister that when it is applied in the field of genetics it very often produces a monster. This is the possibility that can occur if we carry this notion of a super board to the ultimate degree.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman prefer inbreeding?

Mr. Dinsdale: The minister has a great knack for anticipating speeches. I was just going to refer to another term that comes from the field of genetics, and that is the possibility of too much inbreeding which could result in bureaucratic rigidity.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think you had better go back and take another course in biology.

Mr. Dinsdale: I come to the point I want to bring to the minister's attention and that is there is a better way of achieving co-ordination than the establishment of a super board of this kind. We have cabinet committees which are supposed to co-ordinate regional policies. Our whole cabinet structure is predicated on the notion that the various regions of Canada must be adequately represented on the treasury benches. While it is true that at the present time there is no representation from the province of Saskatchewan, for obvious reasons, I am sure the minister has had brought to his attention in rather forceful terms the position of that province by the Premier of Saskatchewan, who has been a rather outspoken critic or commentator on federal policies within recent days. I point to the fact that the province of Saskatchewan is not thinking in terms of railway line abandonment as much as it is thinking in terms of railway line construction. Recently the premier has been talking about a railway line into the north. I say that the minister should heed his words.

I hope the minister will not repeat the mistake that was made back in 1959 and 1960 when he opposed the construction of the railway into the Pine Point mine area. I believe his thinking on these matters is far too negative. I know the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) pointed this out the other day, that the Canadian economy is moving forward. He was speaking as a western representative in this house. We have all sorts of new industries in western Canada and in northern Canada and this is going to require the accentuation of the positive in railway transportation matters rather than the accentuation of the negative.

In my own community, we are opening a fertilizer plant this fall which is related to the other great development that has taken place in the province of Saskatchewan during the past two or three years, the development of the potash industry.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Dinsdale: So, Mr. Speaker, without trespassing further on the time of the house, and at the same time expressing appreciation to the minister for his generosity in providing an opportunity for extended debate, I point out once again that there is strong feeling growing in western Canada that the bill ignores the necessity of taking into consideration the specialized interests and needs of the various regions of Canada. Second, this problem is aggravated by the fact that under this legislation we are going to move toward a super board.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I fear the point is not well taken. What the Chair has at the moment is an order adopted by the house that the house shall sit after six o'clock. I understand there has been an agreement amongst hon. members or a suggested agreement that we should adjourn. In so far as I am concerned, I cannot leave the Chair until there is a motion put that the house adjourn.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks—

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I made an undertaking—

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I shall only take ten minutes—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Transport on a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I hope, sir you will allow the hon. member for Lapointe to call it ten o'clock so that I can make the motion to carry out the undertaking I gave.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, according to the standing orders, in view of the fact that you have recognized me, I think that I am entitled to speak before some one else can move a motion. Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell my hon. friends—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member can only speak if the house agrees to carry on beyond ten o'clock. I understand the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) now wishes to make the motion agreed on previously today. In the circumstances, the hon. member for Lapointe may agree to call it ten o'clock which would enable the minister to move his motion.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. You now have before you a motion that the house will continue to sit beyond six o'clock. Now, under standing orders, you recognized me and gave me the floor even before you recognized the point of order of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill). That is why, before giving the floor to the Minister of Transport to move a motion, which he cannot do under a question of privilege or on a point of order, I believe that he will not be able to do so until he is properly recognized, that is when I have finished speaking. Mr. Speaker, I believe that such is the standing order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The point made by the hon. member is obviously well taken and I am sure that not a single member will dispute his point at this moment. I simply wanted to remind the hon. member that there seemed to be a gentlemen's agreement arrived at earlier today.

Mr. Grégoire: Well, Mr. Speaker, if there has been a gentlemen's agreement—

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If there was an agreement among gentleman that this house would adjourn at ten o'clock tonight, that agreement should be kept. Otherwise we cannot operate this institution effectively.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I feel perfectly confident that the hon. member for Lapointe intends to do just that.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, it is precisely what I did not intend to do. I was not aware that such an arrangement had been made in this house. Now that I have been told, I am ready to co-operate with all the others, and that is why I would tell the member who called it ten o'clock—I believe it is the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) or the member for Danforth (Mr. Scott)—that I am willing to call it ten o'clock. Now, I would ask him as a favour to grant me ten minutes, since he is the only one to have called it ten o'clock earlier. I would be grateful to him if he would grant me ten minutes to express my views. If he accepts, I think I can complete my remarks within ten minutes.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Disgraceful. A shocking exhibition on the part of the government.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I think that the understanding clearly entered into around six o'clock should be carried out. I think that the Minister of Transport, who was acting house leader at the time, should himself carry out that undertaking by moving that we adjourn.

Mr. Pickersgill: In so far as it is possible under the rules for me to do so, that is exactly what I desire to do. I think that the Deputy Speaker was in the chair at the time, but if I remember the words which were used I said that it would be understood that this would be an order of the house.

Mr. Knowles: That is what we thought.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is my recollection, and it seemed to me that was so understood at that time. I feel quite certain that the hon. member for Lapointe, who did not happen to be in the house at that particular moment, would not wish to interfere with that understanding, which was perhaps a little loosely entered into but was, according to my understanding, intended to be an order of the house. I feel sure that the hon. gentleman, having got the floor, will be recognized first tomorrow and his remarks will be equally welcome at that time.

Mr. Howard: Another case of mismanagement.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Minister of Transport made an undertaking this afternoon and would like to keep it. However, I wish to remind the house that the standing orders allow me to speak, as I was recognized before the motion was introduced. If the Minister of Transport wishes to introduce his motion after I have completed my remarks, he has a right to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I feel quite at ease to continue my speech after ten o'clock, all the more so because I believe it is my duty to work as much as I can in the house in order to earn the indemnity of $18,000 that the taxpayers in Canada agree to pay us.

That is why, Mr. Speaker,—

[English]

Mr. Nasserden: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, while on the subject of the motion for second reading—

[English]

Mr. Churchill: This is a disgraceful breaking of a word by the government.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Surely it is clear from the testimony of all of us who were in the house at the time in question that there was a definite understanding that the house was to rise at ten o'clock. How can we carry on in this place if we break agreements that have been clearly and solemnly made?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would maintain that there was more than an understanding. There seemed to be double acquiescence when I indicated, as the acting house leader, that this was an order of the house. I think it was so recorded in the records. If, perchance, there was a slip, I would ask Your Honour whether the record could not be examined, and whether this matter could not be determined, because I completely agree with other hon. gentlemen that if an hon. member who was not present when these arrangements were made, and were made orders of the house, can upset such arrangements, it is going to be virtually impossible to carry on our business in this house.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, while on the subject of the motion for second reading of the bill before us—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret very much, after studying the record, of what was said this afternoon, that though there was a suggestion that there might be an order of the house, there was no such order made. There is no record of an order of the house having been passed. The only thing we have was an exchange between hon. members on both sides of the house saying that there would be an agreement that we would adjourn at ten o'clock. The hon. member for Lapointe is not reported as having commented at the time.

Mr. Knowles: He was not here.

Mr. Speaker: Certainly hon. members will recognize that the Chair has to submit to the rules. The only thing before the Chair now is the motion to sit beyond six o'clock. If the hon. member for Lapointe wants to speak now I do not think he can be prevented, on the basis of the motion which was adopted earlier today.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, you have informed us that an agreement was reached by the hon. members then in the house that this house, or these proceedings, would terminate at ten o'clock. Surely that is a binding as a formal order recorded in the Journals, and would correspond to the customs and usages of the House of Commons of which the Speaker is the custodian. If there has been a gentlemen's agreement, I think it should be honoured and should be enforced by Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is no entry on the scroll, I am informed by the clerk. If there were such an entry it would be in the form of an order. The scroll of the house does not show and will not show that there was an agreement to the effect previously mentioned.

Mr. Nasserden: On a point of order, I take it that the hon. member for Lapointe wants to speak now because he has reservations to go home. He talked about duty a few minutes ago. Perhaps his duty would be to cancel his reservation and make his speech tomorrow.

An hon. Member: He will not be here.

An hon. Member: That's O.K. So much the better.

• (10:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If it was the intention of the Minister of Transport that the house should adjourn tonight at ten o'clock, he only had to provide in his motion that the house should sit from six to ten.

You read the motion a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, and it does not contain anything of the sort. It simply provides that the house continue to sit after six o'clock. It is the motion passed by the house this afternoon and it must be adhered to.

If an agreement has been entered into, we, independents, are not aware of it. Let us be kept informed of what goes on in the house and we shall abide by the agreements which may be concluded.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on the bill now under consideration.

I do not know if the other members of the house noticed it but when we discussed the first railway bill asking that the strike be suspended, I abstained from saying anything, because I recognized the urgency of the bill and of its being passed as soon as possible for the greatest good of the Canadian economy. On the other hand, I would not like to remain silent on this bill and I will therefore make a few remarks.

We have today in Canada a situation where the railways are, under an act, prohibited from increasing their tariffs, which are frozen at a certain level, and, on the other hand, the railway employees are asking for a salary increase and cannot get it as long as the tariffs are frozen, because if the C.N.R. decided on its own to increase the salary of one C.N.R. employee, right away the C.N.R. deficit increases and if it does, it is the budget of Canada itself which will have to make up that deficit and that automatically opens the door to the president and the authorities of the C.N.R. to decide on their own how the money of the Canadian budget will be spent, without previous consultation with the Canadian parliament.

Any salary increase of one cent to the C.N.R. employees would automatically mean that that money had been taken out of the budget of the Canadian government and that would indicate that the C.N.R. had the right to take over the estimates of the Minister of Finance without previous consultation with the Canadian government.

And that is the reason why, during the negotiations, there were really no actual and effective negotiations because, on the one hand, under an act, the railways could not increase their tariffs and, on the other, under an act or the constitution, the C.N.R. does not have the right to spend money if such money has not been voted by the Canadian government, the Canadian parliament, when such money comes out of the current budget of the parliament.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is more to it than that. It is just that through the granting of subsidies for several years already, subsidies granted by parliament to the railway companies, the latter have used them to compete unfairly, uncomprehendingly, to operate illogically a transportation system. Unfair competition because the railway companies did not use those subsidies simply to freeze their rates but to reduce them, which was not provided for in the legislation granting them subsidies.

And here are several examples. Here is what a transportation company of the lower St. Lawrence region wrote to me on March 10, 1966:

> To give you a striking example of the bad faith of the C.N.R., allow me to tell you the following story: "When the government decided that truckers were entitled to subsidies for feed grains, for a locality in our territory, the railway rate stood at 49 cents for a carfull; after the government decided that the subsidies would be granted to the consignees, the C.N.R. published a rate of 57 cents. However, when the customer made up his mind to give his business to a trucker, the C.N.R. representative contacted him and offered him a rate of 29 cents, a rate which has in fact been published since.

That means that with the subsidies which the railways received, not only did they not maintain their rates, but they reduced them, which was not at all provided for in the supply bill. I have just given an example of the lowering of rates from 57 to 29 cents, which means that the transport companies could no longer compete with the railways.

Mr. Speaker, I have here another example from the Lac-Saint-Jean area and I would like to read this letter from a transport company in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean:

> I haul grain in bulk from Quebec to Lake St. John at the rate of 24 cents per hundredweight, which is the same rate as the railways.
> Today, this takes the cake; up until now, this could be arranged, with great difficulty, but now the railways have suddenly decided to cut their rates down from 24 to 20 cents per hundredweight, that is 4 cents lower than government subsidies. That is inadmissible and contrary to common sense. Who is going to make up for the difference? Well, as you already say, it is the one who pays taxes on his profits so that, in addition, the C.N.R's deficit of $60 million may be accounted for.

Mr. Speaker, I could quote more of these instances where not only did the C.N.R. not make use of its subsidies to maintain its rates, but rather used them to bring them down even to a lower level than those ordinarily charged by other transport firms or other transport media. That, Mr. Speaker, is how the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. have operated.

I have here another letter from a company of St. Germain de Grantham in which complaints are voiced over the same procedures. I also have another letter coming from a transport firm in Thetford Mines, in the county of Mégantic, in which similar complaints are made, a Levis firm in Levis County, in which railway companies are being criticized along the same line; a Richmond firm, in Richmond County, in which criticism is voiced over the same procedures; another transport firm in Rouyn, Abitibi, says:

I do not approve of the government letting the railways indulge in disloyal competition with the trucking industry.

Another company on the north shore; and there are representatives of all those companies who will also have to protest.

From Seven Islands, we hear among other things:

—huge problems which the trucking industry must face in view of disloyal competition on the part of national railways.

And I have a dozen of these which I could quote, Mr. Speaker, and in each case mention is made of the national railways using federal government subsidies not to maintain their rates at the specified level but to bring them down, and I have examples here, where the rates were brought down to a level lower than prices in force with the trucking associations and truckers in the province of Quebec.

The examples that I give you come from Quebec. And how do you want the trucking industry in Quebec, employing thousands of Quebec citizens, to develop if a company directed by Ottawa uses taxpayers' money for unfair competition, to set prices inferior to cost prices, prices inferior to competing companies and plunge those transport companies into disquiet and lead them to ruin.

Mr. Speaker, I say this: A crown company has no right to use the taxpayers' money to lead to ruin companies formed by citizens in Quebec and elsewhere, prevent them from living and operating. Because when those transport companies are prevented from living, Mr. Speaker, that means that thousands of Quebec citizens lose their jobs, because the Canadian National uses its taxes to lower its rates illogically and unfairly.

Mr. Speaker, this is a striking example of dissatisfaction which exists now in Quebec toward Ottawa. Here is a whole class of society going into the transport trade, working hard to organize a transport company, which is now driven to ruin and bankruptcy because a crown corporation, an Ottawa company reduces its rates in an effort to deprive it of its commercial operations.

And you think, Mr. Speaker, that the transport companies in Quebec, which are numerous and which employ thousands, I repeat it, of employees, are satisfied with the conditions inflicted upon them by Ottawa?

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport, (Mr. Pickersgill) should take those remarks into consideration and realize that if the investigation is made seriously, the Canadian National during recent years, and the Canadian Pacific also used subsidies they received, not to maintain rates but to lower them, which is very serious, as I mentioned a while ago, from 57 cents to 29 cents. That is less than half the rates of the trucking industry. And after that, they complain that there is dissatisfaction. Well, that is one reason for dissatisfaction when private enterprise is taxed, so as to ruin its business.

Mr. Speaker, let the Minister of Transport investigate that and he will realize that this is a crown company which uses a power given by the federal government to dissatisfy a whole class of the population.

How can Quebec economy develop if Ottawa uses taxpayers' money to ruin industry in Quebec? How can Quebec have industries, develop its natural resources, if Quebec taxes are used to lead industries of Quebec to bankruptcy or ruin like the Canadian National is now doing?

Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a source of dissatisfaction. I know there is discontent in the province of Quebec over the doings of this crown corporation in this field. It is time to put an end to this. It is time to put an end to such unfair competition and all citizens should be allowed to face competition fairly; otherwise, the people will no longer admit, they are even no longer prepared to accept, such competition.

The doings of the C.N.R. affect a whole segment of our population. Well, if a stop is not put to this, if the new legislation does not put an end to this and if the C.N.R. is not brought to its senses, I will be the first, Mr. Speaker, to tell the people of the province of Quebec that they are in fact ill-treated by crown corporations.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege which affects all members of this house. We have witnessed tonight a shocking example of a misuse of the rules, customs and practices of this house. On the basis of information I have received from my colleagues, I should like to record the fact that there was an agreement made in this house between members of the government and the opposition side that the house would continue after six o'clock but would terminate its sitting at ten o'clock.

On many occasions in this house there have been similar agreements made without a written order being recorded in Hansard. I recall many occasions during five and a half years as party house leader on both the government and opposition sides when we have made arrangements like this,—on countless number of occasions. The flouting of this kind of an agreement tonight is the first time in my experience such a thing has happened. I should like to record this fact in Hansard so that parliamentarians today and in the future will realize that these agreements are agreements between gentlemen and are recognized in this house, despite our differences politically.

Let me also record the fact that a minister of the crown acknowledged there was an agreement to continue past six o'clock although, perhaps by negligence, the formal motion did not contain a reference to a ten o'clock termination. That arrangement should have been carried out by the House of Commons. I think our experience tonight has been a bad experience in the House of Commons and I hope it will never again be repeated.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I want to apologize to hon. members if, through any negligence on my part, what I understood and believed to have been an order of the house was not so recorded in the scroll. If that is what happened I do not blame anyone else but myself. There may have been some technical negligence on my part and, if so, I apologize.

I completely agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill), that whether or not an agreement is formally entered, and I say this as a result of my long experience, a member does not have the right to consider that he is not bound by the agreement simply because he was not in the chamber at the time it was made.

I would hope, sir, that if there is any danger of this kind of experience being repeated, some steps could be taken right away to amend the rules so that this kind of thing could not happen again. I feel very humiliated, sir, that this should have happened in the circumstances in which it did, and any injury I did to hon. members I regret very much indeed.

I would now move the adjournment of the house.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on the question of privilege before the motion to adjourn is put. I think we should have one thing crystal clear here. Contrary to what both the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) said earlier—contrary to the opinions they expressed—it was undeniably the right of the member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) to stand up and speak, having obtained the floor, and no gentlemen's agreement could wipe out that right of the hon. member.

If the Minister of Transport had wanted to make it an order of the house that we conclude at ten o'clock, he would have included it in his motion. In fact I submit to you, sir, that he was asked specifically if he would amend the motion. I believe the hon. member from Oshawa asked him for a cut-off hour at ten o'clock, and the minister refused point blank to do that. There was no order of the house and there was not any intention that there be an order of the house. There was just a conversation between two or three members, and that does not in my opinion constitute an agreement to ride roughshod over any individual member of the house.

The hon. member for Lapointe, regardless of what we may think about his speech and the fact that he may have inconvenienced some of us who thought we would go home at ten o'clock tonight, undeniably had the right to speak, and I will stand up and defend that right. No gentlemen's agreement should be allowed to overrule the few remaining rights members have in the house.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, I was not one of those who met with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) but I am sure the minister acted with every good intention and it was just a case that he did not put it on the record. I fully accept his explanation.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On that same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that reference has been made to a misuse of the rules and to a breach of a gentleman's agreement, I would like to say this: In the past, I have been house leader of my party, of the party to which I belonged, and I always respected any agreement made between house leaders—and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) was there then and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) was also a party to them—and I am ready to continue respecting any such agreements so long as they are made known. And in the past, Mr. Speaker, when I held that position, if an agreement was reached and we were not in the house, we were advised. And when certain members of the group were not present in the house, I notified them. But today, I was not informed, we were not informed, we were not even aware of it and, had we been informed, we would have respected the agreement. But, not only did I use my right to speak but, I do not believe I have broken any agreement, because I was not a party to such agreement and I was not even made aware of it. Let us be made aware of such agreements and I shall respect them. But I do not accept at all the statement of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to that effect.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the Chair may have the last word, I would simply like to read into the record the motion which was submitted to the house this afternoon:

Mr. Pickersgill, seconded by Mr. Turner, moved, pursuant to standing order 6(2), that the house continue to sit after 6 p.m.

Standing order 6(2) says:

6(2) An extended sitting under the provisions of this section, unless a closing time has been specified, shall not be terminated except by the adoption of a motion to adjourn and Mr. Speaker shall not deem that a motion to adjourn the house has been made by virtue of the operation of any other standing order.

I am in agreement with the minister and with others that there has been a very unfortunate misunderstanding. I certainly concur with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) that we should not see a repetition of the very unfortunate circumstances of which we have been witnesses.

I understand a motion has been made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) seconded by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Turner) that this house do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, September 8, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAOS—TABLING OF REPORT ON ATTACK BY NORTH VIET NAM

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Department of External Affairs has recently received a report of an investigation by the international commission for supervision and control in Laos of an attack on Dong Hene by North Vietnamese troops. For the convenience and interest of hon. members I would like to table two copies of this report.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs leave of the house to table this report?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF MEDICARE AND OLD AGE PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether last night's broadcast interview of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) was an indication on the part of the government that it does not intend to proceed with medicare.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear last night's speech of my colleague. I am sure it was a notable performance, as one would expect from him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: "Notorious" would be a better word.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government does intend to proceed with the medicare bill this session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the Acting Prime Minister now tell the house, with his usual lucidity and careful choice of words, whether the government of Canada, in view of the fact that only a few provinces have signified their intention of going into the plan dictated by the federal government, now intends not to proceed with the medicare plan? If this is not the case, can the Acting Prime Minister tell us what was the significance of the words of the Minister of Finance last night?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I just indicated, Mr. Speaker, that we were going to continue with the plan.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he is now in a position to answer the question I put to him yesterday as to when we will be given the statement indicating the date on which we will proceed with the old age pension legislation and with medicare.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As my hon. friend knows, the government house leader will discuss this matter with the other house leaders, all distinguished men including my hon. friend. I am not saying that facetiously; I mean it, because my hon. friend is a distinguished member of this house. After these gentlemen have had their conference we will be in a better position to give a more specific response to this worthy question.

Mr. Knowles: If I cannot get a better answer than that from the Acting Prime Minister I will have to put my question tonight at ten o'clock.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I simply say, in answer to my hon. friend's question, that since yesterday when the hon. member asked me for a statement on priorities I have had the chance to read what the Prime Minister said on September 1. In answer to a question by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre he said that as soon as we completed consideration of the railway legislation it was his intention to make a statement in the house about the priority attached to other pieces of legislation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then we will get that today.

Mr. Knowles: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Acting Prime Minister. Does the government intend to proceed with the increase in old age security pensions?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend knows, of course, if he wishes to recollect, that no government in our history has done more for the old age pensioners than Liberal governments, including the present government.

Mr. Winkler: In the light of that reply I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he is aware that he had better act soon before it is too late, or he will be classified as the government was in 1955.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am aware of the fact that the people of Canada know that practically all—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

REPORTED INTENTION TO REDUCE FEDERAL SPENDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): My supplementary question is based on the telecast of last evening. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he is now in a position to indicate the extent of the reduction in federal government spending for the remainder of the present fiscal year as a result of the economic indicators mentioned.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am waiting most anxiously for the debate on the transportation bill to terminate so I can make a statement.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO PURPOSE OF MEETING OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I wanted to ask this question of the Secretary of State but in her absence may I direct it to her parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that the board of directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is now meeting, can we have information as to whether the board intends to implement the Keate report or the parliamentary committee report at its present meeting?

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I shall take the question as notice.

[Later:]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I now ask the Secretary of State the question I asked earlier before she came into the chamber. In view of the fact that the board of directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is now in session, could the hon. lady inform the house whether the board has any intention of implementing at this meeting either the recommendation of the Keates report or the recommendation of the report of the parliamentary committee; or will the present vice presidents remain in their positions instead of some meaningful changes being made?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to meet in a social way with the members of the board last night, and I was informed that this question was on the agenda of the directors' meeting. I should remind my hon. friend that a couple of months ago a C.B.C. release stated that it was intended to appoint two new vice presidents, one from French radio and one from English radio. I assume, indeed I heard, that the C.B.C. was interviewing various persons during the past month or so with respect to these positions, though I have no later information as to whether anyone has been accepted.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question. Perhaps it was merely a slip of the tongue, but the hon. lady referred to the appointment of one vice president from French radio and one from English radio. Is there any significance in those words?

Miss LaMarsh: I think I was using "radio" in the sense that one talks of communications, and it includes, of course, television.

GERALD CAPLAN—INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUATION OF EMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, but in her absence I direct it to the parliamentary secretary. I see the Secretary of State has now joined us, so I shall direct the question to her in her capacity as spokesman in this house for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation planning to engage Mr. Gerald Caplan for any further interviews on the subject of Rhodesia? If so, is it correct that Mr. Caplan's current engagements are sponsored by an African organization known as ZAPU?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): It did sound to me like that but I am not sure, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WAGE INCREASE GIVEN TO STRIKING RAILWAYMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

I heard him last night on television, and I think he made objective remarks. I even thought at one point that he was becoming a Créditiste.

Here is my question, Mr. Speaker. The minister said last night that the 18 per cent increase granted to the railway workers within two years is a minimum, but does he feel that after the negotiations they will obtain more than the 18 per cent he mentioned last night?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is the mediator or the arbitrator who will eventually settle this matter.

[English]

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister can inform the house when he expects the report of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism will be completed and published.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I do not know, but I will find out.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SPENCE ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): May I ask the Acting Prime Minister if he can report to the house, as a result of his inquiry undertaken yesterday at the request of the hon. member for Ontario, whether the report of the Spence royal commission has been received? Has this savory document been flown to London for the edification of the Prime Minister?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): No, sir.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): May I ask a supplementary question. Is the Acting Prime Minister in possession of it?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, sir.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The Acting Prime Minister failed to answer the first question, although he did answer the second. Is he going to answer?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have.

[Later:]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Could the Acting Prime Minister inform the house whether any member of the cabinet is in possession of the Spence commission report?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, sir.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

STEPS TO OVERCOME SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the statement made in the last few days by the president of the Canadian Medical Association regarding the shortage of medical personnel—and I am asking my question independent of any considerations of medicare—is the government now seriously considering an emergency crash program to recruit medical personnel, including doctors, for Canada?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, this matter is receiving the consideration of the government, but there is no consideration of any crash program.

Mr. Grafftey: Could I also ask the minister this question. Since the academic year at our universities is just beginning, is the government seriously considering grants for medical research at the universities so we can keep our medical teachers in Canada?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which is under consideration and review by the government.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EXTENT OF USE OF TRANSITIONAL ALLOWANCE BENEFIT INSURANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the minister of manpower. In view of the great number of people who have been laid off or transferred in the motor car industry due to the Canada-United States car treaty, is the transitional allowance benefit insurance fulfilling its original purpose, and approximately how many workers are using it?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, those who are laid off on account of a drop in production which is related to the trade pact are allowed to receive the TAB benefits. I think the question as to how many receive them should be directed to the Minister of Labour, who is responsible for TAB.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

SUGGESTED PRODUCTION OF PROOF SETS OF COINS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In the light of the recent lay-offs of employees, notably pressmen, at the mint, with a view to increasing employment and increasing the numismatic interest in Canadian coins would the minister consider instituting the minting of proof sets, as distinct from proof-like sets, for this and for subsequent years?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is not a question of urgent national importance. Perhaps it could be placed on the order paper.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DONATION OF CANADIAN BOOKS TO FRENCH LIBRARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) and Acting Prime Minister.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

In view of the recent press reports that, a few days ago, in the course of a speech at a dinner in honour of the French Minister of Education, the minister is reported as having announced that the government is prepared to make available to six French libraries in various parts of France, a collection of some 800 works in English and in French. May I ask the minister when the government intends to proceed with this well-inspired gesture and what may be the approximate proportion of English and French works?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be put on the order paper.

TRANSPORT

PROVINCIAL REACTION TO LEGISLATION NOW BEING CONSIDERED WITH REGARD TO BILL NO. C-231

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill).

Can the minister inform the house if Bill No. C 231 now under consideration caused any reaction in the various Canadian provinces, particularly in the province of Quebec? Has the minister received from the provincial authorities objections with regard to Bill No. C-231?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): In the case of the provincial authorities of Quebec, up to now no representations have been brought to my attention.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

CONFERENCE OF PRIME MINISTERS—CANADIAN STAND ON RHODESIA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Secretary of State for Exernal Affairs, in connection with the prime ministers' conference in the city of London, whether the stand of the Canadian government now is that the situation in Rhodesia is a dangerous and difficult one, and that it should be dealt with by the prime ministers' conference rather than being submitted to the United Nations.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the debate on Rhodesia at the prime ministers' conference began, as we all know, the day before yesterday. It is possible that the Prime Minister will be making an intervention later today or tomorrow. In view of the fact that at this stage these discussions are held in camera, and as there is no finality in the matter at the moment, I feel that it would not be in the interests of a solution if I were now to anticipate the stand that Canada may take with regard to this question.

In the light of proposals which are now before the conference, proposals that have been made by the Prime Minister of Singapore, the foreign minister of Zambia and several other representatives, I would prefer—and I think my right hon. friend would agree—that the matter should be left this way at this stage.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Apparently the minister has not been informed of what the Prime Minister said on arrival in the United Kingdom, as reported in the London Times of Tuesday, which says:

Refusing to commit either himself or his country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. gentleman knows that according to the rules he cannot quote directly from the report on which he wishes to base his question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I had to refer to what was reported in the London Times so I could bring it to the attention of the minister. May I ask the minister, did not the Prime Minister himself on arrival in the United Kingdom advise that this matter should be dealt with by the prime ministers' conference and not by the United Nations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): At the opening of this conference the position of a good number of the countries in the Commonwealth was that it would be desirable if possible to try to bring about a solution of the Rhodesia problem within the Commonwealth. I believe this is something for which we all would aim. This does not, of course, preclude the possibility of examining a resort to procedures which might be available under the charter of the United Nations. I am not saying that resort will be made to such procedures, but in the discussion which is now underway there will undoubtedly be proposals calling for an examination of alternatives.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister mentioned the proposal of the prime minister of Singapore. Would he not agree that the acceptance of the proposition put forward by the prime minister of Singapore for the sending of troops, from whatever part of the Commonwealth they might come other than the United Kingdom, is not in keeping with Commonwealth responsibility or tradition?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We all have our views as to what would be the wisest course, but I think instead of declaring these views while the conference is in progress it would be better to suspend judgment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister has made his statement.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

PROPOSED VISIT TO CANADA BY THE QUEEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Earlier this week, in reply to a question I asked, the Acting Prime Minister said he hoped within several days to make an announcement in connection with the plans for the visit to Canada of Her Majesty the Queen. In view of comments in the press and reports coming from London, I wonder whether he has a statement for the house at this time.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): The Prime Minister has been in communication with the premiers of the provinces. He has not heard from three of them, and I am afraid that the anticipation I expressed the day before yesterday may not be realizable this week.

Mr. Thompson: Does an invitation to Her Majesty the Queen to Canada involve permission from the provinces before it can be extended or announced?

IMMIGRATION

PROVISION OF ADEQUATE HOUSING FOR IMMIGRANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. In view of the 200,000 immigrants expected in Canada and the serious shortage of housing to accommodate them, can he tell the house what action he intends to take to ensure that adequate housing will be available for these immigrants?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The figure mentioned by the hon. member relates, as he said, to the number of immigrants anticipated. I do not know whether those who have not yet arrived will find appropriate accommodation in Canada. As far as the others are concerned, we have not received too many complaints yet, and I see no major problem at this stage.

Mr. Saltsman: Regardless of the number of immigrants expected, has it not been drawn to the minister's attention that immigrants to this country trying to find housing are encountering serious difficulties?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is not allowable on the orders of the day.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): A supplementary question. Is the government taking any special steps to encourage immigration from Great Britain in view of the austerity program in that country at the present time?

Mr. Marchand: We receive immigrants from all parts of the world, many of them from Great Britain, and we shall continue to receive them in about the same numbers as last year.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): But is the government making any special effort or taking any special steps in view of conditions in Britain today?

Mr. Marchand: We do not take any special steps. I know that some of the provinces do, as the hon. member read in the newspaper. I think the province of Manitoba is sending a group of men overseas who will look for immigrants, but we are not making any special effort this year with respect to immigration from Great Britain.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

In view of the way Mr. Fouchet, the French Minister of Education reacted to French immigration to Canada, does the minister intend to take special action to get around the difficulties brought to light by Mr. Fouchet and to stimulate French immigration in accordance with a policy he announced previously?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, the French Minister of Education stated that his country favoured immigration, not emigration. He indicated that he was not anxious, nor was the French government anxious to see French workers leave the country. We knew that. Besides, all we want, notwithstanding the French government policy, is that where there are Frenchmen who wish to immigrate, we would like them to come to Canada, and we will concentrate our efforts in that direction.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): One further question, Mr. Speaker.

The minister stated on television the other night that immigration was as much a provincial responsibility as a preoccupation of federal authorities, and I agree entirely, because section 95 of the British North America Act—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Caouette: Is the minister making the necessary arrangements or consulting with the province of Quebec so that the latter may assume its responsibilities with regard to immigration?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I was inaccurately quoted in the preamble to the question—it is not my wish to engage in debate over this, but I at least want to point out that the quotation was inaccurate, since there is no jurisdictional equality—however, I have already met with Quebec representatives and I invited them to do like Ontario and the other provinces are doing, namely deal with immigration within the limits of their jurisdiction.

NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE

APPLICATION OF CANADIAN LAWS TO HOCKEY PLAYERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General of which I have given him notice. Will he be notifying that slave-holding state known as the National Hockey League that the free laws of Canada apply to hockey players as well as to all other men in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: I have the impression that the hon. member is aching for an opportunity to discuss this at ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cowan: Ten o'clock.

PILOTAGE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest previously shown during the question period about royal commissions may I ask the Minister of Transport about a royal commission that really is important, namely the royal commission on pilotage.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the last time I made inquiries I was told it would be some considerable time before the report of this royal commission could be available. If the hon. gentleman felt that any influence he could exert would speed it up, I would be grateful.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSION ON PRICE SPREADS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there is a question I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister which also arises out of that memorable broadcast of last evening. Has the government determined on the appointment of a price spreads commission similar in purpose and aim to that set up under the government of Right Hon. R. B. Bennett? If such a determination has been made, have any invitations been extended to potential members of that commission?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GOVERNMENT CONSIDERATION OF BILL TO ABOLISH CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Solicitor General, supplementary to one that was put to him yesterday by the hon. member for Red Deer. When the Solicitor General makes his statement in the house giving the reasons for commuting death sentences would he also consider telling the house what consideration the government may have given to bringing in its own bill for the abolition of capital punishment?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I believe the question raised by the hon. member covers a matter of government policy, and I am not in a position to answer at this time.

FORESTRY

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF FEDERAL POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry. Can the minister inform the house when he will be in a position to make a statement on the comprehensive forestry policy which was recommended by the resources for tomorrow conference, and upon which his officials have been working for some time?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I discussed this subject during the last debate on the estimates of my department.

EXPO '67

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON INAUGURATION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put my question to the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin).

Would the minister tell the house whether the government has received from the authorities of the World Exhibition the program for the inaugural day and would the minister repeat in this house the names of foreign personalities who are going to participate in this inauguration?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this question is not urgent and I ask the hon. member to place it on the order paper.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION RESPECTING HONG KONG VETERANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs dealing with the report of the veterans affairs committee concerning the prisoners of the Japanese during world war II. Is the minister in a position to advise what action is being taken on the recommendations of the committee?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice that he would ask this question. The fourth report of the standing committee on veterans affairs supported the recommendations made by Dr. Richardson in his report of January, 1966, on the problems and disabilities of Hong Kong veterans. His recommendations were already being implemented, and this required a detailed review of the record of every Hong Kong veteran.

The review is well advanced but has not been completed, because it has been found necessary to examine veterans who have previously been unwilling to report for examination, and others who have not been seen in recent years. The commission is now studying the committee's further recommendations, which are supplementary to and conditional upon completion of the above review, with a view to determining how they may be implemented.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTED ABUSE OF FRANKING PRIVILEGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General (Mr. Côté).

In view of the fact that the separatist member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) said during a press conference that he would use his franking privilege to promote separatist publicity in Canada or in the province of Quebec; in view also of the fact that a number of Conservative members of the house misused their franking privileges for election propaganda purposes when parliament was dissolved in 1965, will the minister restrict the franking privileges of the members?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question put by the hon. member contains several allegations and may certainly not be asked at this time.

NATURAL GAS

POSSIBLE APPEAL RESPECTING PIPE LINE DECISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys whether the government has received any appeals against its decision to prohibit Trans-Canada Pipe Lines from building its new gas transmission line in part through the United States.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is a possibility for a legal appeal against the decision of the government, but a meeting has been arranged for tomorrow morning between some members of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines and some members of the government to hear the company's point of view.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN—PROTEST AGAINST DISCONTINUANCE OF FREE STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Forestry.

Has the government received a telegram from the officers of the Quebec Miners Association, who are holding an emergency meeting in Quebec city, protesting against the decision of the federal government to abandon the policy of free feed grain storage?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and we do not intend to reconsider our decision.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

RETURN FROM U.S. OF ESCAPED PRISONERS FROM CANADIAN PENITENTIARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs has an answer to the question I asked him yesterday and which he undertook to answer some time today, relating to the return to Canada of four escapees from a Canadian penitentiary.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. My hon. friend's question has to do with a statement which is supposed to have been made by the Attorney General of the United States concerning escapees from a Canadian penitentiary who are now in custody in the state of Indiana.

We have made inquiries of the United States state department about this matter and I have been advised that the authorities in Washington deny that the Attorney General made any such statement. The United States authorities immediately concerned have confirmed that one of the escapees was indeed of North American Indian origin, but they have also expressed the opinion that this fact would not in itself involve the waiving of the extradition arrangements in effect between our two countries. There are consultations now in progress between Canada and the United States on the matter.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY

The house resumed from Wednesday, September 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pickersgill for the second reading of Bill No. C-231, to define and implement a national transportation policy for Canada, to amend the Railway Act and other acts in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential provisions.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a comparatively limited number of observations on this important bill. It covers a subject that has been before parliament on a number of occasions and the subject of a series of royal commissions. The problems surrounding the bill's application have been fully discussed by members of all parties and in particular by members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. The detailed examination given by members indicates the attitude of the opposition about a problem of deep significance. It is one requiring the fullest consideration and discussion by the committee when it is set up.

The bill is of a complexity that makes necessary complete and thorough examination. In committee hearings I hope that counsel will be provided to ensure that representative groups will be assured that their evidence will receive fullest consideration and in the presentation of it they will have the benefit of counsel learned in this abstruse field of the public service.

In 1931, under the prime ministership of Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, a commission was set up to inquire into transportation in Canada, particularly in relation to railways, shipping and communication facilities, having regard to present conditions and probable future development, and to report their conclusions and make such recommendations as they thought proper. The order in council gave an indication of the comprehensive nature of the transportation problem:

> —the vital importance of transportation to the trade and commerce of Canada, the serious and continuing deficits of the C.N.R. system, and the diminished revenues of the C.P.R. system, conditions which have been brought about, in part, by duplication of tracks, facilities and services of every kind, and in part by competition by other modes of transportation, particularly motor vehicles operating on highways—

Reference to that order in council is indicative of the fact that the problem has changed little in 35 years. The Duff commission on September 13, 1932, recommended:

> —affording early relief to the federal treasury by reducing the alarming and increasing deficits and the demands for further capital expenditure in connection with the C.N.R. system.

Through the years the problem has remained unsolved and indeed insoluble. In conclusion the 1932 report stated:

> We feel compelled, as a matter of public duty, to strike a serious note of warning to the people of Canada. Unless this country is prepared to adopt the plan we have proposed, or some other equally effective measures, to secure the economical and efficient working of both railway systems and thereby not only reduce the burden on the federal treasury but improve the financial position of the privately owned railway, then the only courses left would be either to effect savings in national expenditure in other directions, or to add still further to the burdens under which the industries of the country are suffering by the imposition of yet further taxation—

I refer to this because there are those who would have us believe this problem has developed only recently. When we on this side were charged with the administration of affairs, we decided, as a matter of major importance, in order to bring about development on a fair and equal basis in all parts of Canada, there must be an examination in detail of the transportation problem. In particular, we decided, without other matters taking a secondary position, the discrimination in freight rates which has played havoc in western Canada and the maritimes should be studied in search of a fair and reasonable formula.

The order in council which set up that royal commission made it clear the removal of discrimination was of major importance. Time passed. The commission made its report. There have been some suggestions there was delay on the part of the government of that day. The first report of that commission was received in March and released on April 10 of 1961.

At that time the commission set forth the general principle that burdens which are the result of obligations imposed upon railroads by tradition, law and so on should be lifted. Its major recommendations were that there should be self-liquidation of subsidies starting at $97.3 million in 1961 and reducing gradually to $30 million in 1965 to meet the removal of distortions which have resulted from national obligations and so on, that unnecessary passenger services should be discontinued, and that branch lines which are unnecessary should be closed. A $13 million loan fund was recommended to be established to offset the cost of maintaining certain uneconomical branch lines during the 15 years of the transitional period. It also stated that the statutory rates on grain were considered to be too low and that in their place a subsidy of $23.3 million should be substituted.

A second report was tabled on January 23, 1962. The recommendations included first, the removal of the $7 million bridge subsidy on rail shipments across northern Ontario, second, the withdrawal of federal subsidies on goods moved by rail within the maritime provinces and, third, the appointment of a national transportation advisory council to report to the Minister of Transport and be responsible for assessing the impact of decisions made by all regulatory transportation agencies. Finally, it was recommended that there be the creation of a transportation statistics committee and the inauguration of an industrial freight traffic survey.

We had the legislation ready. It took some months to get that legislation ready, and in the fall of 1962 the undertaking was given that early in 1963 we would proceed with the legislation. We were defeated in the house, went to the country and a new government came into office. There was no delay or failure to take action for which we can be criticized, because we had to wait for reports.

That being so—and I have simply outlined some of the general considerations—what are the matters in issue?

The first, as I see it, is that if the legislation in its present form is not amended there will be continuing discrimination against the maritime provinces, the western provinces especially and northern Ontario in part. The railways will be all-powerful. They will be able to exact, almost without limitation, anything the traffic will bear. That is a serious matter.

After the war there were increases of 157 per cent in freight rates across the board excepting within the limitations of the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Crowsnest pass arrangements. The result was that the discrimination of 1945 which in western Canada, according to my recollection, had begun at 17 per cent was accelerated by across-the-board additions to freight rates, thereby penalizing even more the western provinces. This again was subject to the terms and limitations provided under the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

Unless this present legislation is changed by parliament we will have in Canada for all time to come the injustice and distortion that result from certain areas of Canada having to pay freight rates far greater than other areas which have access to water or other transportation. This legislation cannot be accepted in its present form because it will result in continued unequal development of Canada.

This cannot be brushed aside. We cannot as Canadians, wherever we live, accept the principle that some parts of Canada are a no-man's land for future development because of the acceptance of discrimination perpetuated in legislation. That is the first serious objection and one upon which I hope representatives from all parts of Canada will give evidence before the committee. This serious short coming must be rectified.

On the question of rationalization, I am seriously concerned about the results that will follow in the setting up of a board in name only, without power. The first thing the government should do, and I hope the minister will announce this today, is to have the railway companies withdraw applications made to date for the closing down of some 8,000 miles of railway lines across this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think it is fundamental—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman would permit me—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Perhaps the minister would allow me to continue. I know what he said the other day and I am asking him when he speaks today—on this occasion he is going to follow me, apparently; I have often felt that I could give him some good leadership if he would do that in many other things—to deal with this question. The minister is going to follow me and then he will be able to answer. I know the undertaking that he gave the other day, but I should like to see the railways show their bona fides now by having the minister announce that these applications are withdrawn, not in the future, not when the committee is set up or is giving consideration to the matter, but now, because there will be grave injustice perpetrated unless action along this line is taken. An announcement by the minister today will show that we are not to accept the nebulous promises of the future as to action on the part of the railways in this regard. It could be explained clearly, that in consequence of representations made during this debate there will be action now to remove the overhanging fear facing various areas affected by the applications.

The third important matter is that there must be a body to control unjustifiable increases in freight rates. Are we going to hand over to the tender mercies of Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway the right to say: This is what we are going to charge, we can get away with it because there is no right of appeal or no effective appeal? They can charge whatever the traffic will bear.

That is a proposition I cannot accept.

What would be the consequence of such a proposition in connection with the tremendous developments that have taken place in potash mining in Saskatchewan, although I am not arguing this case from the point of view of western Canada alone but of the nation as a whole? When I was a boy these areas were regarded as completely unfit for cultivation. They were salt areas, alkali flats and the like. I know that the Minister of Transport is fully aware of this because the same situation prevailed in his area in Manitoba. We did not know that we had not a gold mine but a golden mine underneath our province and spreading to a lesser degree into the adjoining provinces.

There can be no competition to keep down the price of freight on potash within Canada if this legislation is passed. It might be argued that there could be competition from the trucking companies. Trucks cannot meet the problem of transporting hundreds of millions of tons of potash, and in saying that I deliberately understate the potential of potash. We must not allow the removal of national direction in connection with freight rates. Is the government going to give to the railway companies—I mentioned potash as an example—the complete privilege of exacting whatever they wish without any limitation by competition? To do so will provide a field day for those who operate railway companies. Surely we have not come to that position yet.

I believe that we have imposed on rail transportation too much legislation and too many rules. Some of those rules must be revised but that does not mean that we should give to those kindly, gentle and philanthropic boards of directors of the great railway companies the power to make Canadians pay through the nose where there is no competition to keep freight rates down.

I emphasize the need of a complete review not in the interest of one part of Canada but in the interest of the whole country. There is no reason why we who live in western Canada and those who live in the maritime provinces should be placed in a secondary position because of freight rates which will impose upon these areas to a far greater extent than on any other parts of the nation.

In this connection I think the editorial which appeared in the Telegraph Journal on August 31 is of importance. It was headed: "National Transport Policy: This Area Must Be Alert." That was the view expressed by various maritime members during the progress of this debate. The editorial went on to say:

> A national transportation policy based solely on "compensatory" freight rates—(i.e. keeping only profitable lines operating) could do immense harm to the maritimes.

> So far, Ottawa seems to be keeping this in mind. It will be up to the Atlantic provinces to be sure their interests are protected as parliament legislates in this crucial field.

The next point I wish to raise is that we must not place the trucking industry of Canada in an unfair competitive position with the railways. The trucking industry is an industry of great importance in this nation. This legislation will continue to subsidize the railways within the limited areas which are referred to in the statutes but there is nothing that will protect the trucking companies from unfair or unjust competition.

I will give an example that has been brought to my attention of a case which cannot be justified. The case to which I am referring indicates the kind of injustice that this industry can suffer under the present laws. I am prepared to give the name of the company but I think the house will agree that in fairness it should not be mentioned. I will show the minister the letter in question so that the company's name will be available to him. This is a cartage company licensed for highway hauling. The letter reads in part:

> I could give you many, many instances of rate cutting and agreed charges which have forced independent truckers out of business since 1959, but I will give you one complete example which happened to us.

The author of the letter then goes on to point out that a certain shipper was receiving poor and indifferent service from the railway and this company agreed to haul the freight at the rate of 82 cents per hundredweight. Three months later, after the company had begun hauling the commodity, it was advised that the C.N.R. had lowered its rate to 68 cents per hundredweight. The company agreed to continue at this rate. Two months later the company was advised that the C.N.R. had cut the rate to 55 cents per hundredweight and again it agreed to this rate. Two months later it was advised by the shipper that an agreed charge had been made with the C.N.R. which meant a further reduction.

That is not fair competition. We subsidize the Canadian National but the truckers, as I see it, have no protection whatever. They are subject to competition such as this that is neither economic, just nor equitable. There must be within this legislation protection against that type of unjust competition which destroys private enterprise. Are we going to give the railways an open season on the Canadian consumer?

These are some of the problems that face the committee and which will require the most careful consideration. We had hoped that the amendment which we endeavoured to move yesterday would have been accepted. However, Your Honour ruled it out of order. I am impelled to say, although possibly I ought not to, that the way in which Your Honour has discharged the responsibilities placed upon him has added a new stature to the position of Speaker of this House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should bring to the attention of the right hon. gentleman the fact that I cannot claim credit for ruling the amendment out of order yesterday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not confine my remarks to that. I think it was a decision in keeping with the traditions of the house. We were trying to have a principle determined. The hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. Thomas) showed clearly that our purpose was not to defeat the bill but to improve the ultimate law that will be passed. I shall refer later today to the functions of an opposition because last evening in a broadcast the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) gave his considered opinion that an opposition is apparently to be seen and not heard, that the only trouble with the opposition is that it is too strong. If only the government had 175 members they would be able to tell the opposition to take that course which my respect for parliamentary rules forbids me to mention. A parliamentarian with the grace and distinction of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) or one with the wide knowledge of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) would never have made such a statement, I am sure, because that kind of statement is not a tribute to the parliamentary system. I do not believe in that doctrine.

I have mentioned this statement so I must quote it now in order that no one will say I have misstated the purport of the views of the Minister of Finance, who apparently was speaking for the government. He said:

> I don't think that the opposition has been helpful to the government in restraining these pressures. Their attitude in the House of Commons has always been to put pressure on the government to make decisions quickly, to disregard what may be proper cautions—

I am living right up to that principle. I am saying, do not rush in with this legislation in its present form. Then Mr. Gordon, who was interviewing the minister, said:

> More than legitimate pressures?

The minister replied:

> I think so. And this wouldn't matter so much in a house in which we had the dominant majority, but we have slightly fewer than half the members, and therefore what happens in parliament today and the attitude of the opposition is far more important than it has ever been. If we were sitting there with 175 members we could ignore the opposition and say—

I know that neither of the two ministers sitting on the front bench, to whom I have referred, would ever advance such a proposition. Then he went on to say—

Mr. Pickersgill: Even with 208 you could not do it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I hope the hon. gentleman is not approving the statement made by the minister. The Minister of Finance then said:

—well, you know, that's just what you expect.

That is what the Minister of Finance would say to the opposition if he had 175 members—now, you can go to the other place with my compliments. This is clearly not the attitude to be expected from a minister of the crown, although it is indicative of a state of mind to which allusion has been made by members of the opposition on a number of occasions. I will amplify that later.

I hope that the Minister of Transport will not adopt those words in reference to the suggestions I am making for the purpose of rendering this legislation effective in the national interest. In its present form it cannot contribute to the unity of this country. It will simply accelerate the distortions of geographical growth and development, and the absence of competition will bring about concentration of industrial development in the central provinces to an even greater extent than is the case today. I hope the Minister of Transport will not adopt the curious, archaic and dictatorial attitude of the Minister of Finance as indicated in these words:

If we were sitting there with 175 members we could ignore the opposition and say: Well, you know, that's just what you expect.

I hope that the suggestions I have made will bring together the views expressed by many hon. members and I hope the views expressed by hon. members from this side of the house will receive the serious consideration of the government. There must be fairness, and there will be no fairness if discrimination, even if it came into being through the oversight of the Board of Transport Commissioners, is not to be entirely removed, and if an open season is to be declared on the consumers of Canada.

Now, sir, there is one other matter and that is the question of research. We hear a great deal today about the brain drain from Canada to the United States, about the thousands who leave for better opportunities in that country. It is also true that a number of people from the United States come to Canada, particularly in connection with the petroleum industry. However, there is a drain from this nation. What takes a highly trained man with unusual talents and abilities to a country other than his own? Some say it is better pay or material considerations. This can be explained in a general way as greater opportunity.

That is the challenge that faces our country. You cannot strengthen political and national unity by accelerating freight and transportation rates in a way to perpetuate inequity.

We in Canada have fallen behind in the field of efficient, high-speed ground transportation. I see the minister agrees with that generalization; he has indicated his agreement. There are three areas in this country where the need for a positive policy is vital. There are the maritimes, to which I referred on an earlier occasion, the west coast of Canada and, believe it or not, Canada's industrial heartland, that narrow band of economic activity extending from Quebec City to Windsor.

So far as the maritimes are concerned, I have suggested, and I am not going to repeat it, that the railway line today is an anachronism, that what is needed is a faster and more direct connection between the maritimes and the industrial heartland. The present line runs from Montreal through Richmond, Levis, Mont Joli down to Moncton and is 840 miles in length. I suggested that a direct route from Richmond, Quebec, through the top corner of Maine to Woodstock, New Brunswick, and from there utilizing the present main line into Saint John and down to Moncton, would cut one-third off the distance. I am not going to give further details because I dealt with this matter on an earlier occasion, but the press in the maritimes has stated that this is a suggestion that deserves attention.

The west coast presents a different type of problem. I think the house is aware of the bottleneck impeding the convenient and efficient flow of goods to the port facilities of British Columbia. The Rocky Mountains have their scenic beauty but they contribute little to the transportation of goods. The mountains seriously hamper economic expansion of the prairies.

Rail facilities between British Columbia and the rest of Canada are no further advanced than they were 50 years ago. Despite the growth of Canada economically and in population, and despite the many technological achievements on virtually all fronts, we still have two companies with but one single railway track each linking the economic wealth and facilities of British Columbia with other parts of Canada.

I believe we will have to catch the vision of further development, that we will have to build another rail line adjacent to those that exist today or, even though the cost be high, elsewhere, so that there will be additional tracks to carry the increased traffic that is bound to follow. On some future occasion I am going to deal with this matter in detail, but at the moment I am just trying to picture the kind of Canada we may have not many years hence if we catch something of the opportunities that are ours.

The third area that merits searching examination is Canada's industrial centre. It is my opinion, though hon. members may disagree with it, that within the next ten years the area in Canada between Quebec City and Windsor will be a 50-mile wide megalopolis. There will be a tremendous concentration within that area which will embrace 65 per cent of the population of Canada and 84 per cent of its industrial activity.

The railways have fallen far behind. They have simply carried on from year to year making technological changes and improvements to rolling stock but failing to envisage the greatness of Canada's future and the need for action now. I believe we must provide, within the area between Quebec City and Windsor which I have mentioned, the best ground transportation facilities possible. To fail will mean that we cannot take full advantage of the economic potential available. If our ground transportation is expensive, inefficient and disorganized, it will be a burden rather than a blessing to this highly sensitive industrial complex.

What should we do in order to meet the greatness of the transportation challenge? They laughed at Macdonald when he pictured the opening up of the west. Those who opposed said it would mean railroads from wigwam to wigwam. There was a revised version, Mr. Speaker, in 1958. When we placed before the people of Canada the opening of northern Canada, making available to the provinces the exploitation of great resources via our roads to resources program, it was said to be a concept of roads from igloo to igloo.

It is the duty of government to provide certain basic services to facilitate the successful operations of free enterprise. A special research division of the federal Department of Transport is something that I have advocated for some time and I should now like to see it developed. There should be a most exhaustive research program into all forms of ground transportation. We have never done that in Canada except in a haphazard way by one corporation or another. The research should be carried out in co-operation with private industry, the provincial governments and universities. We have badly neglected research in the field of ground transportation. When this legislation has gone through committee, it would be a massive step forward if the minister would set up a research program to give consideration to new vistas of opportunity for all parts of Canada, giving young Canadians something of that pioneering spirit of our forebears when they first devised our transportation system.

In the national interest action along these lines must be taken. If it is not taken, this legislation, when it is finally completed, will be merely an evanescent thing, lacking the impetus and inspiration that come from adoption of new ways and new opportunities.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I do not want hon. members to have any heart attacks. I hope, therefore, they will be prepared for a shock when I say that I agree with a great deal of what has been said this afternoon by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. Churchill: You are mellowing with the years.

Mr. Pickersgill: But if there are any differences on any of the points they are not on one point that the Leader of the Opposition made when he referred to the gentleman who presides over the house. The Leader of the Opposition having brought an apple for the teacher, I bring one too. I do feel, sir, that all of us in the house will echo the words of the Leader of the Opposition when he says that you have brought to the office you grace a new dignity and a new serenity.

I agree very heartily, and I hope no one will question my sincerity when I say this, with what the Leader of the Opposition said about improving this bill. Also, I think I cannot be expected to plead guilty to the charge made in a jocular vein by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) last night, and not repeated, I am happy to say, by the Leader of the Opposition in his very fair presentation today, that this is instant legislation. I cannot think that any bill has ever been introduced in this parliament—I know this parliament has not had a very long life since it was only elected last November—which has had more careful preparation than this one. In saying that I pay tribute to the previous government.

In my opening speech I paid tribute to the right hon. gentleman for appointing that royal commission which I think did a great deal to expand our horizons and increase our knowledge of the problems of transportation and which also has pointed to the solution of some, though by no means all, of those problems. I am grateful as well to the previous government. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre made a slight error in his remarks. The government's child never actually got born, though last night he said it had been. That was just a slip. But it was ready to be born in 1962.

An hon. Member: It was conceived.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, it was conceived. About seven months had passed and then, as the right hon. gentleman has pointed out, there was a miscarriage. We had the benefit, sir, of that bill. We had the benefit of that draft bill which followed, as did the earlier bill I introduced, rather more closely the recommendations of the MacPherson Commission than this one does. I may say that nearly every feature of this bill to which exception has been taken in the debate, with the sole exception of the Canadian Transport Commission which did not appear in that bill or in my previous bill, was contained in the bill which hon. gentlemen opposite were just about ready to bring to the house.

We have built on the foundation that the hon. gentlemen opposite laid, and I hope that once this debate is over there will be no attempt to sap that foundation. It was, sir, in the light of developments, in the light of experience, and in the light of criticisms inside the house, in the parliamentary committee and outside the house, that the bill now before us was produced.

Although we have not accepted all suggestions, because some were not acceptable, to the best of my knowledge we have taken account of and given the most careful consideration to every representation that has come to me, to the officers of my department or to my colleagues from every source in this country, not the least important of which are the hon. members on both sides of this house, as well as from provincial premiers, interested bodies such as chambers of commerce, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the wheat pools, the grain trade and shippers of all kinds. In every way we could we have tried to produce a better bill than the one which was offered in the last parliament in 1964. And I believe this is a better bill. As I said when opening the debate on second reading, we do not believe that all wisdom is contained in this bill—

Mr. Hamilton: Would the minister allow me the privilege of asking him a question in the middle of his speech?

Mr. Pickersgill: By all means.

Mr. Hamilton: The hon. gentleman will remember that an unofficial committee composed of representatives of all the parties met with the officials. This is my question: Did the minister receive the representation I made on behalf of the Conservative party that in this bill we should give either to the board or to the government the power to direct the railways to operate rationally? Did he receive the representation I made at that time that if the companies did not run the railways rationally they should not receive a subsidy?

Mr. Pickersgill: That representation was received and I will be glad to have a further discussion of it when we reach the committee stage. I am giving an offhand opinion, but as long as there was no direct financial implication I believe it would be competent for an amendment to be introduced in committee on this very point. I think so, but I hope that in giving an off-the-cuff opinion of this sort I shall not be held to it should the lawyers show that I am wrong.

We did give very careful consideration to that point and we went what I consider to be about three-quarters of the distance in the direction the hon. gentleman is now suggesting. In the terms of the bill before us now, the Canadian Transport Commission will have the authority to recommend things of that sort. But we felt that the time-honoured principle which has been followed up to now with respect to railways, that management of the railway, even of the publicly owned one, should not be undertaken by politicians or by bureaucrats but should be left to management, would be interfered with if some other body was given power to direct the positive actions of the railways rather than merely inhibit improper, unlawful or undesirable practices which the railways might follow and which parliament might have forbidden.

This may not be a conclusive argument. I think there is plenty of room for debate on this question. I am not dogmatic about it. But I am trying as honestly as I can to tell the hon. gentleman why we did not go all the way along the road he has in mind. We have gone a considerable distance.

Mr. Hamilton: Would the minister allow one more question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Hamilton: The hon. gentleman has said he proposes to follow the traditional policy of making recommendations only. Surely he is aware that in 1934 parliament passed a statute similar to this one recommending to the railways that they should co-operate and giving many examples. The railways refused to do so. A Senate committee met in 1938 and 1939 and discussed the failure of the railways to act, and strong recommendations were being prepared so as to force the railways to act. Then the war intervened and nothing was done along those lines. Now it appears we are going to repeat that mistake. Is the minister aware of all this?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not be so immodest as to say I am aware of all this. I am aware in the main of the circumstances to which the hon. member refers and, as I say, I believe this subject could very easily be pursued when we are discussing the relevant clauses in committee. I can assure the hon. gentleman that my mind is not closed to suggestions of the kind he has made or, indeed, to any other suggestions.

I wish to repeat that in hesitating to accept the procedural suggestions of hon. gentlemen opposite we were not seeking to ram anything down anyone's throat. I say this because I do not want a wrong impression to be left. As I said in my original speech, my view is that the principle of this bill is that there should be established a single unified, or integrated, or even coagulated Canadian Transport Commission—call it what you wish—

Mr. Churchill: Hellyerised?

Mr. Pickersgill: —which would take over the functions of the Board of Transport Commissioners, the Air Transport Board and the Canadian Maritime Commission as well as assuming certain other functions not now performed by any federal agency in cases where it is necessary. This is one of the things the government is recommending and it is part of the principle of the bill. This commission is to be the agency through which regulation and control would be exercised over the various forms of transport which are under the jurisdiction of parliament in so far as parliament deems it fitting to impose regulation and control.

I also consider that the rationalization of the railways along the broad lines recommended by the MacPherson Commission is a principle of the bill and that second reading would constitute acceptance of it. But I do not consider that any of the details are being accepted by the house if hon. members give the bill second reading. I entirely agree with the right hon. gentleman that this is a highly complex measure and that in the task before us we should give full weight to the views of every interested party in this country. Such is the importance of this legislation to our national life. I am sure no one will ever accuse me of backtracking or retreating if I accept suggestions made in good faith by hon. gentlemen opposite. I believe this is the proper way to deal with legislation of the kind before us.

After the most mature consideration that it was possible to give if we were ever to have any action, the government has come to the conclusion that there should be one transport commission and that there should be a rationalization of the railways along certain lines. As to the detail, however, I will say only that if there can be improvements, no matter by whom they are put forward, I hope they will be accepted by the committee. I hope too, that when this bill comes back from the committee to this chamber, some time in October, I trust, for third reading in October or November, it will be a better bill than it is now.

Having said that, I think I should go on to deal particularly with the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition because, in a way which is not always his way—and I know he will not think I am being unfair in saying this—he spoke rather succinctly today. He made his points with clarity and definiteness, and his speech is therefore not only an easy one to reply to but also a pleasant one to reply to.

One of the points he made was raised earlier by a number of hon. members. I notice he did not suggest that this bill was introducing any new kind of discrimination. But he did refer, if I caught his words correctly—if I did not I am sure he will correct me—to "continuing discrimination" against the maritimes, the west, and the northern parts of Quebec. He will understand me if I say "the Atlantic provinces" instead of "the maritimes", because I am sure this is what he meant.

I can assure hon. members that to the best of my information there is no discrimination of any kind in this bill against those areas. But there is, of course, a continuance and even some expansion of—I suppose this is the right word—discrimination in the interest of fairness in favour of those areas as part of the historic policy which not one but successive governments have followed.

Mr. Winkler: May I interrupt the minister to tell him that the fear which exists for us in Ontario, in the light of the rate structure to the west of the province as well as in northern Quebec, is that discrimination will be directed against us? If the railways are to be given the right to open their rate structure the people who are already paying more than their fair share are likely to be saddled with a heavy burden of new increases simply because they find themselves in the only areas which will be open to such discrimination.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would prefer to come to the hon. gentleman's point a little later. I have it very much in mind. It is a point I intend to deal with but first I am very anxious to make this point over again, one which I have made several times. I have even been accused of smuggling it into the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, although I think I have always politely asked for permission before making any interjections.

I wish to make it clear that this bill in no way touches the Maritime Freight Rates Act which remains the law of Canada, remains in full force and effect and will remain in full force and effect unless and until the parliament of Canada changes it. It is not affected in any shape or form. That is the first point.

The second point is that the rates which were frozen in 1959 under the Freight Rates Reduction Act, an act which has not been continued but which the railways have followed voluntarily for a number of years, are also to be continued for a two-year period because during that two-year period the government expects to receive the report of the study now being undertaken on transportation generally in the Atlantic provinces and expects to be in a position to deal with that problem within that time. I would also point out that the Atlantic and Eastern Rates structure on export grain, which was never protected before, will be protected under this legislation in the same way as the Crowsnest pass rates are protected in order that there will not be any discrimination against the Atlantic ports in the export of grain. That is something new in this bill.

In so far as the historic rates in western Canada are concerned, the Crowsnest rates are not only not touched in any way but they are guaranteed indefinitely by this legislation.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the minister permit a question on that point? If the Crowsnest pass rates are guaranteed forever and a day, why is there a particular clause in the bill saying that a three-year study will take place?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a very simple question to answer. Mr. MacPherson said that the Crowsnest rates were costing the railways a considerable sum of money and he was asking the government to pay something over $20 million to the railways because of these losses. We are not willing to agree that there are any losses. We are going to have a three-year study to find out if there are any losses, and if it is found after that study that there are losses then the commission may recommend to the government that something be done about those losses to the railways, but the commission cannot recommend that anything be done about the Crowsnest rates themselves.

This is following precisely the general provisions of Mr. MacPherson's recommendation that if for national reasons we ask the railways to perform a service that does not pay, then the treasury should pay for it. That is one of the basic concepts of the rationalization that is provided for in this bill, but we were not willing to accept the view that the MacPherson recommendation was a fair measure of the loss in this instance. We are not willing to accept the view that there is necessarily any loss. It is the intention to have a scientific study made, and if there is no loss the railways will get nothing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister allow another question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Just before I do I wonder whether hon. members would undertake not to restrict my time?

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is just one question on the subject of the Crowsnest pass rates which, as the minister knows, are the charter of the westerners. Would the minister be prepared to have a clause placed in the bill saying that the Crowsnest pass rates shall not be altered?

Mr. Pickersgill: If it not sufficiently clear already and if that would add any additional guarantee I would not hesitate for one minute. Mr. Speaker, before I allow any further questions may I point out that I believe I am allowed to speak for only 40 minutes. If there could be a gentlemen's agreement—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No limitation.

Mr. Knowles: Another one of those things?

Mr. Pickersgill: —or even an order of the house that I could speak until I run down, then I would be delighted.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, all of us are tremendously interested in the minister, his works and words, and I am sure this does not need an order of the house. We want to hear him to the last word.

Mr. Knowles: We would like to see the time when he does run down.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In view of the generous attitude of the house would the minister permit another question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In connection with the Crowsnest pass rates and the proposed new section 329 which states that the commission shall report to the Governor in Council and the Governor in Council shall take such action as he deems necessary in view of that report, would the minister be willing to change that to provide that the commission shall report to parliament and that parliament may take such action as it deems necessary?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think I was rude enough to interrupt the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) to make the point that if there was any doubt about the meaning of that clause, any suggestion that the Governor in Council could take any action without parliamentary approval, I would be glad to have the clause changed. I do not believe there is anything the Governor in Council could do about the matter without parliament anyway.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We see it happening in other departments.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not mind the hon. gentleman asking me questions but I wish he would let me make my own answers.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I had the same trouble when I was speaking and you were asking me questions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think this is important enough that I should make it clear that if there is any doubt at all about the real meaning of that clause I certainly want to remove it. I want to say categorically that there is no intention and no desire to leave any doubt in anyone's mind that the Crowsnest pass rates remain a part of the continuing policy of the government and of parliament, consecrated in legislation, and the only way in which the commission can deal with this matter is to find out scientifically, notwithstanding the hon. member for Crowsnest, by cost analysis, done not by the railways but done for the government what, if any, losses there are, and all that can be done then is for the government to decide, if it wishes to decide, to ask parliament to do something about those losses. That is all.

Mr. Kindt: Would the minister give a very simple answer? I say that the bill is not clear as it now stands. Is he willing to make it clear before we pass second reading?

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I think if I could just say yes to that about four times—before second reading it is impossible, but before third reading, yes, yes, yes, yes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: That could become a habit.

Mr. Coates: May I ask another question about the Crowsnest pass rates?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think in fairness to the Leader of the Opposition I should be allowed to reply first to the points he made, and if I do not make my answers clear then I would be very glad to answer any other questions that are relevant.

Mr. Sherman: By four words, all yes.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I am a yes-man; everybody knows that. The next point made by the Leader of the Opposition is a crucial one, a very crucial one indeed. He said that if there was no amendment to this bill the railways would be all-powerful in the setting of rates. This is the first time I have to take issue seriously with the Leader of the Opposition, but I have to take very serious issue because nothing is clearer than that the railways do not have the power to set rates except below a maximum in every case where someone can show he is a captive shipper. Any person, such as the shippers of potash who obviously cannot ship by truck or by any other means, obviously is a captive shipper. Every captive shipper is protected under this bill by a maximum rate. The railways will have no freedom to set a rate above this maximum. They will have freedom to give a lower rate than the maximum. Indeed, most large captive shippers today, by having agreed charges with the railways, do have rates which in fact I believe are somewhat lower and in some cases quite substantially lower than the maximum rate.

I do expect that in the committee we will have very serious debate about the maximum rate formula. It is a very large question and perhaps is a little more important to the prairies than to other parts of Canada, but not much. It is very important to many shippers in northern Ontario and in northern Quebec. As I say, when we come to examine this thing carefully I think we will find that most of those shippers will have protected themselves already by agreed charges, because they are very big shippers who have a considerable bargaining power of their own.

The only area in which the railways will be free under this legislation to set their rates is where there is effective competition. In our opinion, and in the opinion of Mr. MacPherson and also in the opinion of the previous government as reflected in the legislation they were about to introduce, effective competition will itself provide protection because nobody is going to be such a fool as to pay a higher rate to the railways than he can get from trucks, ships or any other effective competitor. Surely that is just ordinary common sense.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit another question on this particular part of his remarks? Would the maximum rate apply just as effectively on goods shipped under class rates?

Mr. Pickersgill: The maximum rate will apply to anyone who has no effective alternate way of shipping.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): If he is shipping goods under class rates I understand that the railways can raise the rates as high as they like.

Mr. Pickersgill: They cannot raise any rates higher than the maximum formula in the bill, if the shippers are captive. If they are not, they can ship in some other way.

I really think, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to get into a debate on the detail of the bill—the kind of debate which should properly take place in committee—the tolerance of the house will be exausted before I am. I should not like that unfortunate situation to arise.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask one final question. How would the maximum rate apply on less than carload lots? It will be a lot higher on less than carload lots even if the maximum formula is used.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not being an expert on these matters I would not attempt to give an answer to that. I am sure, however, that the hon. gentleman will be able to obtain an answer from someone far more competent than I ever will be in this field when we get into the consideration of this matter by the committee. What I am seeking to do here is to allay fears based on what I believe to have been genuine misunderstandings about the bill. The fact is that there will be, after this bill is passed, three or four different kinds of freight rates. There will be rates which are protected by the maximum rate formula, because the shipper can make no bargain of his own with the railways and therefore has the protection of the law. There will be agreed charges which are not in any way changed from the law as it now stands. There will be statutory rates such as the Crowsnest pass rates, the maritime freight rates and certain others. There will be competitive rates which will be based on the railways' judgment in respect of how they can get the business.

There is one very important thing I should like to say about these competitive rates, and this also deals with another point made by the right hon. gentleman. I refer to the question of the competition with trucks. In this bill it is provided that the railways must not carry goods at unremunerative rates. In other words, they must charge what it costs the railway to carry the goods. This is put in precisely because we do recognize that the railways are large and powerful and that many of their competitors will not have the same economic bargaining power. Therefore they are not allowed to use loss leaders to put people out of business.

Under the present law a competitor has no effective appeal. In this bill a trucker, believing the railway is seeking to put him out of business by quoting unremunerative rates, may appeal to the commission and have the matter adjudicated. So there will be a protection which does not exist at the present time. I think this is very important, because it would be a very bad thing indeed to permit a railway or any other powerful body to crush competition by this kind of practice and then find themselves in a position to raise rates again. This is a valuable protection.

The railways do not have any similar protection against the truckers. At the present time we do not think that is necessary because I do not think there are any trucking firms in Canada large and powerful enough to put the railways out of business. If they started charging unremunerative rates for any length of time, I imagine the people who would be put out of business would be the truckers themselves. What we are endeavouring to do is to make the bargaining powers relatively even in this connection.

A question which does arise and seems to bother a good many people has to do with the suggestion by me, by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and by others that this legislation will permit the railways to earn more money than they are earning at the present time. Everybody seems to assume that the only way they can do that is by raising rates. I do not have any doubt that they will raise some rates if they can raise their competitive rates and still obtain the business, and I do not see why they should not because everybody else is allowed to do it. I do not see why they should not be allowed to go out, compete for business, take the burden off the taxpayers and let the users pay so long as there is an alternative for the shipper. I do not think this will happen especially in western Canada; I do not think it will happen especially in central Canada. I think it will happen all over the country.

I think the main virtue of this legislation is that the railways will be able to make bargains right away instead of having to file tariffs, wait 30 days, and be shackled by many things which make it impossible for them to run their railways in a business-like way. I would guess that much of the additional revenue they will get may come from cutting rates, not from raising them at all but cutting them enough to get some of the business back.

We all know that the share of the freight that is being carried by the railways today compared with what it was before 1950 is lower. It is in fact very much smaller. This measure will give the railways a chance to compete. I think all those in the house who believe that competition and what we usually call freedom of enterprise are a good thing for the progress of the country should welcome this legislation. We are doing our best to see that there is complete protection for those who are not protected by competition. Where there is a monopoly situation the bill gives protection. Where there is a competitive situation we think the competition should give the protection. That is the attitude adopted to all other kinds of businesses and it does not seem an unreasonable one to take with respect to freight rates.

With respect to branch line abandonment the right hon. gentleman made an appeal to me to do something that I cannot do. He made an appeal to me to say here and now that the railways would withdraw their applications for abandonment right away, today. I assured the hon. member for Qu'Appelle the other day that the presidents of the railways had authorized me to tell the house that they would withdraw all these applications on the day on which this bill was passed by parliament. I think that was a reasonable position for them to take, because if the bill did not pass they would be just prejudging their position under the present law. Surely in fairness to them, until they know what parliament is going to do they should not be expected to withdraw these applications. But I do intend, as I told hon. members, early next week, I hope, or at any rate by the middle of the week to be able to send to every member of parliament the map showing the branch lines on the prairies, in fact, the whole network of lines, that the government intends, if this legislation passes, to guarantee will continue in operation until January 1, 1975. This map will show the network on which no applications will be considered for abandonment once this law is passed.

I should like to have given this map to hon. members today but I think I explained at the beginning of the debate, and this still applies, that there are one or two details I have to iron out with the officials and my colleagues before it is in final form. But it will be, I confidently hope, published next week and I am very anxious that it be published. I believe that when it is published nearly all the fears about the abandonment of branch lines will disappear. There will be certain lines that will still be candidates for abandonment, but even the candidates for abandonment will not automatically be abandoned. There will still have to be applications which will still have to be considered by the commission, and the protection of the law will still be there in respect of those lines.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle was very helpful and constructive in this matter, as he has been in general with respect to this legislation. While the hon. gentleman did not agree with all the details of the branch line proposal, he felt that in general it will result in a very marked improvement in this connection. Now I come to potash. I am sorry the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must advise the minister that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the minister to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I come now to potash. In the main I have dealt with this matter before, but I thought of a feeble joke and I am terribly sorry that the Leader of the Opposition is not here. I was going to say, if he had been here, that there is a lot more alkali in Saskatchewan than there is in Manitoba and that is probably why we from Manitoba have sunnier dispositions than they have in Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: However, since the Leader of the Opposition is not here I will not say it.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Fairweather: We have just given the minister unanimous consent to carry on. Must we put up with his jokes?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: It will be singular, Mr. Speaker, in more senses of the word "singular" than one. Potash is protected because up to the present time the companies mining potash are all captive shippers. Therefore they will either have agreed rates or the protection of the maximum rate. I feel reasonably confident that practically all of them secured agreed rates from the railways before they ever started mining operations.

Now I come to the question of research. I want to thank the right hon. gentleman for what he said about this subject. He was very helpful about it when my estimates were before the committee of supply earlier this year. He has reiterated what he had to say about the subject, and it is something with which I thoroughly agree. I think it is frightfully important that we carry out adequate research in a field which from a material standpoint is as important as any to the development of our whole country. I agree with the right hon. gentleman about the importance of research in the Atlantic region. We are doing some right now of a very fundamental character. This was recommended by the MacPherson Commission and I hope it will be very fruitful in its results.

I am sure the premier of British Columbia will not like what the right hon. gentleman said about there having been no improvement in the railway structure in British Columbia for 50 years, because the great pride of the premier is his own railway, the Pacific Great Eastern. I also agree that the port of Vancouver is the main funnel through which about one-third of the exports and imports of this whole country now come or go. It is our second largest port. The facilities there are not adequate. We are trying to improve them as fast as we can, and we cannot do it too fast. I think all of us worry, after some of the recent experiences we have had, about the problem to which the right hon. gentleman referred, and I believe that the research now being carried out will have to be augmented by still further research.

I am also most interested in what the right hon. gentleman said about the megalopolis extending from Quebec to Windsor and the importance of the new problems of transportation in that area. I also want to put in a word, since the right hon. gentleman did not do it, for the prairies. It is of the utmost importance that we modernize—and here I am echoing the hon. member for Qu'Appelle—the grain handling facilities on the prairies because, as he so rightly pointed out, we have every reason to expect that the much higher volumes of grain produced in the last few years will, although there may be variations from one year to another, continue indefinitely into the future and that there will be a market in the world for what is produced.

I think that covers all the points that were made by the right hon. gentleman. I have trespassed longer than my 40 minutes on the good nature of the house. If there are no additional questions that any hon. member wishes to put to me for the elucidation of this matter before second reading, I should like to conclude in one or two sentences.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the bill is on the point of being given second reading and the minister has concluded his remarks, I wonder whether I might ask him a question, recognizing that he is an experienced parliamentarian. We have now spent the equivalent of three and a half days discussing one of the largest bills to come before us. Is the minister in agreement with me that this is the amount of time the house should spend on a matter of this importance and that there was not a filibuster of the legislation? I wondered what the minister's comment would be on that in view of his experience in this chamber.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think my silence on this subject up till now has surely been my best comment. I have endeavoured in every way possible during the course of this debate, by taking advantage of the new rules, to make sure that every hon. member who had something which he considered would be a worth-while contribution to this debate would be given the chance to do so. I recognize fully the importance of the subject and certainly I have no complaints whatsoever.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I have a short question to ask the minister with regard to the freeze on freight rates in the Atlantic area for the next two years. Could the minister give us some indication and some assurance that before any final action is taken on the recommendations flowing from the study they will be placed before the house so that members may be able to express their views on them? I think the minister appreciates the fact that at the present time the Atlantic provinces are attracting a great deal of industry and I am sure he is anxious, as I am, to see this continue. However, I am afraid that a two-year freeze is not sufficient. This will not help to convince industrialists that they should establish their companies in these provinces, because freight rates are a very important aspect in their decision to do so. It is from this point of view that I ask the minister my question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can assure the hon. gentleman, without even knowing what will be reported by the consultants who are now doing the study, that it is my intention to make the study public as soon as it is received. These studies are similar to the report of a royal commission, although the consultants do not carry out public hearings in the same kind of way. However, I do not regard these consultants as advisers merely to the government. I indicated that very clearly in the letters that I wrote to the premiers of the Atlantic provinces before the study was undertaken. I intend to make this study public and I anticipate that legislation is likely to be based upon it. In any case, if I am in a position to do it—and none of us knows what his fate may be from day to day in this house—and if any group of hon. members would seriously like to see the study itself referred to some parliamentary committee for further examination, I will be very glad to facilitate that.

There is nothing I want more than to make sure that we do the right thing in respect of this problem which was not dealt with by the MacPherson Commission because they did not have the time but which they said was an urgent problem to be dealt with and which I believe to be one of our biggest national problems. I would like to think that I will contribute something to its solution.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make one further comment in this regard. The minister, in his very capable way, appears to be giving us an assurance but at the same time he did not come directly to the point I raised and in which I am most interested, namely, an assurance from him that the house will have the final say on these recommendations. I think that if we had this assurance we would feel much better about the legislation that is now before us than is the case at the present time.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I understand the parliamentary process correctly, there is very little the Governor in Council can do about a matter of this kind except to bring in some kind of legislation or estimates before the house. Happily, in this country the government cannot appropriate money, and if it tries to do so without the approval of parliament there is another institution in the country where the ministers who do that kind of thing are apt to end up.

I am not trying to equivocate in any way. I am merely trying not to arrogate to myself, as one minister, authority which I do not have and to show proper respect (a) for my colleagues in cabinet and (b) for parliament itself. However, I can assure the hon. gentleman that, apart from purely administrative matters on which the law is now quite clear and where improvements might be made quickly when the study is received, anything of any substance or importance which would require any kind of parliamentary action will be brought before parliament as soon as the government is able to make up its mind on what is the proper thing to recommend.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make it clear to the minister that I do not want to be put in the position of adopting legislation which will place the super board after the two years are up in a position of being able to implement the recommendations without prior acceptance by parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: The commission will not be another parliament. It will have no power that parliament has not given to it by this bill. If, on examination of the bill in committee or by questioning the expert, the hon. gentleman can find anything which the commission could do that would go behind the back of parliament, I will undertake to do my best to get the lawyers to draft a clause so as to make sure it cannot be done.

Mr. Winkler: I wish to put a question to the minister following the one I put to him earlier. Has the government considered at any time the possibility of implementing some plan, particularly in the province of Ontario, in view of the fears which I have expressed earlier in regard to rate structures, whereby areas outside the "golden horseshoe" or southern industrial area would have a greater inducement to expand and to attract industry through a rate structure based on a mileage formula? Has the government considered such a plan rather than continuing the discriminatory method they have used in applying the designated area program? I believe the minister would be doing a great service to that province by considering such a plan, if he has not already done so, in the terms of this particular bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not sure I grasped completely what the hon. gentleman is trying to say, but I can assure him that I shall be only too happy to contribute to the well-being of my native province of Ontario.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, there is a feeling, and I have received telephone calls substantiating it, that if we are not careful we may be buying a pig in the poke on second reading of this bill. I am willing to take at face value the assurances which the minister has given us. I am glad he gave them because some of us were not very happy with the national news broadcast last night when Mr. Cameron said we were filibustering this bill. The minister himself has stated that this is one of the most far reaching bills that has ever come before parliament and that it requires a long study. I am of the opinion that we have not even scratched the surface in the time that has been given us to consider it. The three days we have spent in debate on this bill are little or nothing compared with the time which will be needed before this bill is finally adopted.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's intervention seemed to be a question as to whether more time will be needed on this bill. Last night I asked the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) if he would quote the concluding sentence of a paragraph of which he flattered me by quoting the first sentence. In the concluding sentence I said something like this, that the bill would require long and laborious examination at the committee stage. This remains my opinion, fortified by the very penetrating analysis of the hon. gentleman who has an expertise in this matter most of us in the house have not got and that all of us appreciate.

Mr. Danforth: May I ask the minister a question? I know the minister is anxious to get this bill before a committee as soon as possible. In view of the great complexity of the bill, have I the assurance of the minister that there will be ample copies available right away to cope with the tremendous demand that I foresee for this bill from interested parties?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will take every step that it is possible for a minister to take in respect of the responsibility of one of his colleagues to see that that happens and that it is available in both languages.

Mr. Nowlan: I have a supplementary question. Can the minister give the same four yeses on the maritime freight rates as he is prepared to give on the Crowsnest pass rates?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not believe I would give it in exactly the same way, and I do not believe the hon. gentleman would want me to if he would refresh his memory by taking another look at the report of the MacPherson Commission. I think the way I would like to give the undertaking is that I will never be a willing party to any alteration in the Maritime Freight Rates Act that the people of the Atlantic region generally do not consider will give them greater benefits than that act gives. In view of the changes in transportation, in view of the development of highways and trucking and all the other forms of transportation, it might be concluded by everyone there, after a study has been done and after the commission has examined the whole problem, that the amount of money that parliament appropriates annually under the Maritime Freight Rates Act at the present time, to help overcome the transportation disability of the region, would be better used in a slightly different form but without reducing the quantity or value of the aid. I would never under any circumstances be a member of any government that ever did that.

I had hoped it might have been possible to include in this bill one provision or section that I have not found it possible to put into the bill. Hon. members from western Canada, hon. members who live anywhere along the national transcontinental railway or the Intercolonial Railway or the Prince Edward Island railway or the Newfoundland railway, know that the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway under the original agreement made in 1880 and covered by the statute of 1881 is exempt from local taxation, and that it is not competent for the municipalities to tax the property of the federal crown, and that railways owned by the crown cannot be taxed. It has been the custom in the case of government owned railways, as distinguished from other parts of the Canadian National system, for the Canadian National to make some grants in lieu of taxes. It will be the intention of the government when this legislation has been passed, as a contribution toward the process of rationalization and equal treatment for all parts of Canada, to instruct the Canadian National Railways to make payments to these municipalities as though they were taxable. We have the power to do that without express legislation.

In so far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, I should like to read a document which I think all hon. members, and especially those who live in the southern part of the prairies, will regard as an historic document. It is headed, "Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Montreal, August 29, 1966." I quote:

Dear Mr. Pickersgill:

You will recall conversations we have held over some months relative to whether as a contribution to the rationalization of Canadian transportation legislation, Canadian Pacific would be prepared voluntarily to forgo perpetual exemption from municipal taxation provided in clause 16 of its contract of 21st October, 1880, which is the Schedule to the Canadian Pacific Railway Act, S.C. (1881) Chap. 1.

This exemption from municipal taxation applies to the main line of Canadian Pacific outside of the boundaries of the original "Postage Stamp" province of Manitoba, across Saskatchewan and Alberta. This exemption has contractual, statutory and constitutional validity.

One of the points that you raised in our discussions was that the exemption imposed a burden upon the affected municipalities which is not borne by other municipalities on the Canadian Pacific system. You also raised the point that a perpetual provision such as that referred to did not take into account changes and varying circumstances which had occurred in the many years since the contract was executed by Canadian Pacific and the government of Canada.

I have discussed the matter with the directors of the company and they have authorized me to say that, under the arrangement hereinafter mentioned, the company is prepared to forgo voluntarily perpetual exemption from taxation by the local authorities on our main line in the prairie provinces in three equal stages: one-third for the year commencing January 1 after legislation is enacted modernizing and rationalization existing legislation and taking into account, among other things, the effective changed conditions on freight rates otherwise fixed; a further one-third in the succeeding year; the balance in the third year from the commencement of the period as stated.

The Canadian Pacific proposes that the government of Canada ascertain from the municipalities involved the municipal taxes that would have been payable, subject to statutory procedures as to assessment appeals, had the exemption not been in effect. When this amount has been determined, Canadian Pacific would make a grant of an equal amount to Her Majesty the Queen in the right of Canada for distribution to the municipalities involved in such manner as the government of Canada might from time to time deem appropriate.

At any time after the expiry of the period indicated above, the Canadian Pacific would have no objection to action being taken to amend the constitution and the legislation to terminate the perpetual exemption from local taxation referred to.

You are free to make the position of Canadian Pacific public whenever it seems to you desirable to do so in the public interest.

Yours very truly,

Ian D. Sinclair.

I should like, if I have the permission of the house, to table this communication in English and in French and ask that it be appended to today's Hansard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Does the minister have consent to have this document made an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I could just say a word in explanation of the way in which this has to be done, I may say it appears from the best legal advice the government is able to attain that this perpetual exemption from taxation enjoyed by Canadian Pacific on its main line is part of the constitution of Canada and also part of the constitutions of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. It is not competent for this parliament by a simple act of parliament, under the constitution as it now stands, to make this change. An amendment would be required also to the constitutions of those provinces. For that reason it is not possible for this parliament to make the Canadian Pacific main line subject to taxation, nor is it possible for the provincial legislatures to do so.

This is just one more good reason why we should tidy up our constitution so we can do these things ourselves in the proper way. In effect what Canadian Pacific is doing is to say that over the three years after this legislation comes into force they will give up the perpetual immunity they were given under very different circumstances in the 1880's. I am sure that all members, whatever their views may be about some of the other things which the Canadian Pacific has done, will agree with me that this particular act is an act of good corporate citizenship.

Now, sir, I just want to conclude in a few words by thanking hon. members for listening to me for so long and to express the hope that in committee we will give this legislation the most searching examination that is required in the national interest but that we will seek to do that without undue delay having regard also to the importance, through this legislation, of putting the railways in a position to conduct their operations in a more businesslike way to make them more competitive with other forms of transport and therefore better able to rely upon their own resources in dealing with the public, their employees and everyone else. In doing so, it would be my hope, Mr. Speaker, that among other things this legislation would make collective bargaining between the railways and their employees more meaningful than it has been in recent years.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, before he introduced this bill, last Tuesday, the minister stated in the house that the government or himself had written to the ten provincial governments and that replies had been received.

Now, here is my question. In those replies, has any provincial government expressed concern or reservations over the establishment of a Canadian transport commission, and what was Quebec's reaction?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to table tomorrow all the correspondence. I would do it today only I have not got it with me.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on transport and communications.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

1. Departmental Administration including administration of the Guaranteed Loans Acts and the Inspector General of Banks' Office, and payments to provinces and grants as detailed in the Estimates, $4,332,900.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, before the minister begins and in order that his speech will not be interrupted, in fact, in order that this debate will not necessarily be interrupted, I wonder whether we could have one or two understandings?

In the first place, I think the committee would not want to go to private members' hour in the midst of this important discussion. In the second place, I wonder whether we could have an understanding that we would take an hour off for supper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let us fix the time now.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I just say a word on this. My statement is of some length. I think I shall probably complete it by six o'clock and it would seem to me that it might be appropriate then to adjourn for dinner.

Mr. Knowles: Can it be understood that at whatever point the minister concludes his speech we will take an hour off by agreement?

The Chairman: Does the committee now agree that when the Minister of Finance has completed his speech the committee will adjourn for one hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the fact that the committee and the government regard the threat of inflation as an important and urgent matter is evidence that Canada will not drift into a period of continually rising prices and costs. As Minister of Finance with a special responsibility for the economic position of this country I welcome the opportunity afforded by this debate to place the facts of the situation before hon. members of all parties and before the public.

I might add, Mr. Chairman, that it is a remarkable but perhaps not surprising coincidence that today President Johnson has announced new steps that the United States is taking to curb inflationary pressures, some of these, I might add, of a character that we took some six months ago. I believe this indicates that throughout North America and throughout the world this is a matter that does demand the attention of legislators.

Here in Canada we have had a long and strong economic expansion in the past five and a half years. It has carried us from a condition of serious and persistent unemployment to one of widespread prosperity and virtually full employment. There is still too much unemployment in certain areas and among those who are poorly educated and unskilled, but this arises from reasons other than a shortage of opportunities in Canada taken as a whole. The total expenditures of money by consumers, by business, by government and by those who want our exports are now more than adequate to support a healthy level of economic growth.

Our main economic problems are now twofold: First, the longer term problems of educating and adapting our growing labour force and improving our capital resources to meet the opportunities presented in our modern world and, second, the shorter term problem of preventing excessive total expenditures and excessive increases in prices and in costs of production. It is this second range of current problems which concerns the committee today and about which I will speak.

Canada's general record in regard to prices and costs during the past 30 years has been good. Our war finance and wartime price and wage control were effective and reasonably fair. During the period of decontrol and readjustment to peacetime conditions we suffered some inflation, as everyone else did. Much of it was inevitable as we readjusted to price levels in the United States and elsewhere.

During the Korean war in 1950 and 1951 prices rose too rapidly in Canada as well as elsewhere. I think now that we all should have done more to check them. Since that time, from 1952 until about a year ago, our prices were reasonably steady, rising over the period by an average of 1.4 per cent per year in the case of consumer prices, which was less than that of almost all other countries although slightly more than the United States.

This period covered the boom of the mid-fifties, the period of relatively high unemployment of the late fifties and early sixties and most of the recent long period of expansion. Over this period average hourly earnings of Canadian workers increased by an average of about 4 per cent per year, as shown by our statistics, and average personal incomes per capita for all Canadians by 4 per cent.

By the middle of last year it was evident that costs and prices in the field of construction were rising too rapidly, and in the summer of 1965 the government began to cut back its own construction programs to counteract this and urged others to do the same. We have kept this policy of restraint since that time, though it has not achieved as much success as I would like to have seen.

Speaking generally, Canadians have been very impatient to get on with very many things both directly and through their governments and now we are paying the price of trying to do too much all at once.

During the past 12 months the increases in costs and prices have been spreading in Canada as elsewhere. The chief cause is the continued rapid growth of total expenditures and a very high level of demand, which make it possible for labour and business to demand more and get it. There are Canadians in almost all walks of life who seem to have reached the conclusion that now is the time to get more while the getting is good. As a result we have had accelerating increases in prices and costs, accompanied by urgent and pressing demands by special groups for more income, using whatever means are open to them.

We have now reached a position that is unstable. The present trends just cannot continue for long into the future. We cannot all get what we want and do what we want, and if everyone tries there is going to be an excessive rise in prices and in costs because right now the country just could not, no matter how hard it tries, produce enough to meet all the demands. If this kind of boom goes on, many will suffer as a result of higher prices and from the inevitable upset that will follow. All Canadians will suffer if a continued boom should lead to a bust. We must moderate our pace so that we can continue to grow in a steady way, with a continually increasing standard of living and with the economic and social improvements that we can afford year by year. Such moderation does not require that we cease to make progress toward social justice nor that those who have lacked opportunities must be left without help.

I should like to make this point because sometimes I think it is misunderstood. We in this country are the most fortunate people in the world. We have the means to make progress but we have got to pace our progress so that we do not exceed our means.

Let us bear in mind some simple facts. We are now producing about all we can in Canada this year. We have excellent market opportunities at home and in other countries. We have again been lucky in getting huge grain crops at a time when grains are in great demand. Our labour force is growing at a rate of a bit over 3 per cent a year and is becoming better educated and trained. Our productivity—the volume of goods and services per worker that we can produce—is growing somewhere between 2 and 3 per cent a year over all. Canadians can expect an increasing standard of living, on the average, which increases at a rate that bears some relationship to their average increase in productivity, say about 3 per cent a year over a long period.

By international standards this is a reasonable rate of increase. There are many countries that envy us very greatly. Those are countries where standards of living are not rising at all because population is rising even more rapidly than the means of production. In Canada this rate of increase in productivity involves the doubling of the standard of living of the average Canadian within a generation. We have no reason to be anything but thankful to live in a country such as Canada.

If, however, some succeed by the strength of their position in getting substantially more than this increase in real income from year to year, others must get less than this increase. This applies to the owners of companies that sell goods to earn profits as well as those who sell their labour to earn salaries and wages.

We must also recognize that the average Canadian, although he is a fortunate citizen of the world and can look forward to a steadily rising standard of living, cannot have the same standard of living as the average United States citizen—at least not for some years. We just do not produce as much—we have not the same productivity in our industry—and we are not as rich in capital and technical capacity.

Our prices and wages are the result of bargaining and of market forces and of the efforts of individuals, businesses and groups to better their position. Prices are not held under control by governments either federal or provincial, apart from minor exceptions such as public utilities which enjoy monopoly positions. There are laws to prevent businesses from combining to increase or maintain their prices and profits. Such laws do not apply to workers, however, who are not only permitted but encouraged to organize and bargain collectively. This is one of the cornerstones of modern industrial democracy. On the whole this system has worked and has enabled great progress to be made in improving the incomes and status of workers. Parliament is engaged this session in setting up a framework for the extension to its own civil servants of this power to organize and bargain collectively, so it is clear we think well of it in principle.

Our experience this year, however, shows that these processes, whether they are the processes of making profits or the processes of bargaining for wages or salaries, by which Canadians increase their incomes have dangers as well as virtues. They can bring about excessive demands and excessive increases. They can promote inflation at the high levels of employment and low levels of unemployment which we have now achieved. It is clear that if we are to succeed in maintaining high employment with price stability we must improve the working of our economy. We do not want to be forced to aim at a lower level of employment in order to avoid inflation. To me, this is the kind of cure for inflation that could be almost as bad as the disease and is to be avoided if at all possible. But to maintain high levels of employment without inflation is not a task for the government alone. It is only possible if business and workers will accept it as a serious objective and help to make it possible.

I think we would all agree that we should not let our economy persist in this rising and excessive rate of increase in prices and costs, including wages. But it is easier to reach that judgment than to implement it. What practical means can we use to check this rise and to get back on to a stable path of economic growth?

First we recognize that most of us do not want, and in any event we cannot impose, federal government control over prices and wages generally. This is only within parliament's powers during a national emergency such as war. In practice, price and wage controls would be unworkable in a diverse economy such as ours which is so actively engaged in foreign trade and based essentially on a free market system for business and collective bargaining for labour. I say this as one of those actively involved in the successful wartime price and wage controls. Moreover, we as politicians really do not want the responsibility for deciding on everyone's prices and wages. We would be in endless trouble. Our recent experience in trying to deal with railway wages is evidence enough on that point.

Second, we must consider the possibilities of an "incomes policy" such as some overseas countries have had, or "guideposts" for wage and price increases such as the United States has had. An incomes policy implies not a government control but the expression of government views to focus public opinion on changes in particular prices and particular wage disputes. It involves persuasion and if necessary criticism, with voluntary and systematic adherence to certain policies and standards. It would require, in Canada, cooperation between federal and provincial authorities and a willingness in the business world, as well as in unions and the ranks of labour, to follow voluntarily a central lead that enjoys a wide consensus of agreement and respect. While all these conditions do not now prevail, I hope that in time we can meet these requirements, achieve this consensus and develop this kind of voluntary policy. But we cannot get an incomes policy now by merely voting for it here or advocating it. We have to work it out not only here in parliament, where we must develop attitudes and laws that will earn respect, but in the labour movement and the business world where private interests and processes of bargaining must be reconciled with a regard for the public interest.

[Mr. Sharp.]

As the house is aware, the government asked the Economic Council, which is representative of all the principal economic groups, to study the interrelationship between prices, costs, productivity and incomes, and to review policies and experiences of other countries in the world. I have just heard from the Economic Council that this report is expected late next month.When it is received the government plans to refer it to a parliamentary committee along with other matters to be raised in accordance with the notice on the order paper today. I should add that it has taken the Economic Council quite some time to study and discuss this problem, which is perhaps the best evidence of its inherent complexity and the need for reaching a consensus before we can proceed.

As for guideposts, certain elementary considerations are self-evident. To achieve full stability of our consumer price level would require that our average increases in incomes per capita in Canada would have to be limited to about our over-all increase in productivity. To maintain the degree of price stability we have experienced on the average over the past ten years, it is evident from our productivity performance that we could not have increases in average incomes of more than four or five per cent a year. These facts of economic life, and they are facts, are some guide in themselves. Yet the typical increases taking place in money incomes in recent months have been in excess of this. Many current demands are much more. Many employers will have to grant large increases in the next few months simply to keep their men. We shall have to do so in certain categories of the public service. But somehow we must get back as soon as we can to more reasonable increases—average figures that do not exceed what I have mentioned. Some can, of course, be larger, as long as the average remains within reason.

What is needed, I feel, is a widespread understanding of the situation by the public, by business and by individual workers. Management, on its part, must make a special endeavour to keep prices down in order to dampen down and help bring to an end this spiral of price and wage increases. It would be helpful if some industries were to give the public the advantage of increasing productivity by reducing prices. In my view the advantages of increased productivity should not accrue solely to the owners and the employees but to the consumers as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: Success in this endeavour will no doubt require hard bargaining, a squeeze on profits, and some risks of strikes, strikes which may cause some harm both to private interest and the public interest. Employees who are being asked to restrain their wage demands in the general interest as well as their own long-term interest, have a right to expect that those whose remuneration and gains are derived from sources other than wages are making their due contribution to economic stability.

Labour has its responsibilities as well. Present wage demands reflect, as we know, the views and desires of the workers, not just those of trade union leaders. The workers themselves must recognize what is possible in total, otherwise they will hurt one another. In the national interest, demands should return to more realistic levels—levels which do not force up the prices which other workers must pay.

Only by more than normal resistance to excessive price increases and wage demands can we get back to rates of increase in prices, wages and profits which will permit continued economic growth at a high level of employment with reasonable stability. Here an alert and informed public opinion can play an important role, as well as those directly involved.

Some restraint upon increases in prices and costs in Canada will arise from competition between Canadian producers and producers in the United States and other countries. But prices and costs are increasing in overseas countries and, to a lesser degree, in the United States, and their governments are concerned to restrain the increases and avoid inflation. At the end of my remarks I will give an indication of some of the things President Johnson has announced today. We cannot rely upon their efforts to protect us against price increases; the effects of international competition work too slowly. Moreover, Canadian prices and wages have been rising more rapidly recently than those in the United States and our price problem does not arise primarily from what has happened there, although the quickening of the United States economy this year has had a noticeable effect on our trade and the level of the total demand on the Canadian economy. We have to do our share to restrain the widespread inflationary forces now at work in most of the western industrial nations.

It is evident from what I have said that we cannot solve the problem of inflationary pressures now by government control nor by establishing now some specific guideposts to be observed in making price changes and wage settlements. Over the longer term we may be able to develop a persuasive type of incomes policy which takes properly into account the particulars of individual cases, but that requires a lot more work and a much greater consensus of view than we have yet developed in parliament, in business or in labour circles. In the meantime the government can and will try to do what it can to moderate the general rate of increase in costs and prices by persuasion and by example in dealing with its own operations. I might add that the seaway increase of 30 per cent over two years and the railway increase of 18 per cent are not to be regarded as examples for this purpose.

Apart from what can be done by example and persuasion, the chief instruments now available to us are those which influence total demands on the economy—monetary and fiscal policy. We have used these in the past year to restrain total demand. The expansion of the money supply and bank credit has been held in check and interest rates have risen in response to insistent demands for credit. Budget measures have been brought in, as hon. members know, to increase tax revenues and induce the deferring of private expenditures. In the budget we increased our federal personal income taxes by about 9½ per cent on the average—largely reversing the reduction of the previous year, except in the lower incomes. We reduced capital cost allowances temporarily, increasing our revenues from business and providing an incentive to defer capital expenditures. We imposed a temporary and refundable tax to force some postponement of business expenditure without adding significantly to cost. We gave advance notice of the reduction and removal of the sales tax on production machinery and equipment as a further inducement to defer capital spending.

We made clear it was the purpose of these measures to slow down the rate of increase of business and consumer expenditure, stretch out our prosperity and sustain our economic growth. These measures were clearly of the right kind. They have worked. They have been approved in Canada and elsewhere, recently, for example by the authoritative Federal Reserve Bank of New York which commented:

> Canada has clearly made a major effort to adapt general monetary and fiscal policy to the requirements of a strongly stimulated economy and has, in the process, broken new ground in the development of flexibility in fiscal policy.

I should like to say that had our example been followed elsewhere I think the world would not be suffering inflationary pressure quite as strong as it is.

It is now evident, however, that the total effect of our monetary and fiscal measures has not been enough to keep the total increase in the demands on the economy down to the objectives set in the budget. I think the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada has been well conceived and skillfully applied, despite the very difficult circumstances with which it has had to cope. But I think that we in Canada, and other countries as well, have left too much to be done by monetary policy. This has resulted in conditions in the capital and money markets which are now so difficult and abnormal that they may impede the smooth and efficient flow of savings into productive investment. A larger flow of savings would help to meet the situation.

Savings are a most important aspect of the fight against inflation. Canadians, either as individuals or through corporations, lay aside a good proportion of their earnings for future use. We are one of the countries of the world which save a high proportion of their income. Our over-all rate of savings compares well from year to year with many other countries. In this present situation an increase in corporate and individual rates of savings would serve both to moderate the level of demand and to reduce the pressure in capital markets, and as one means of encouraging individuals to save we shall shortly be offering a special centennial issue of Canada savings bonds. I expect the announcement to be made in a few days.

[Mr. Sharp.]

It is clear, Mr. Chairman, that we should strengthen our fiscal policy so that it can carry a greater share of the load of restraining the excessive growth in demand now taking place. Ordinary budget considerations lead to this conclusion as well as the present economic circumstances.

In the budget in March, after taking into account the tax changes then proposed, I anticipated budgetary revenues this year of $8,300 million, excluding the yield of the refundable tax. Our budgetary expenditures I forecast at $8,450 million. This left a budgetary deficit of $150 million. In terms of the national economic accounts I forecast a surplus of some $650 million including the refundable tax yield.

That was a budget designed to restrain inflation. That is why I have no hesitation in saying it was the right kind of budget, and I am sorry it did not work as well as we all hoped it would for reasons which have emerged since the budget. In fact, I recall in the debate which took place on that occasion some members wondered in the spring of this year whether we were going to be faced with inflation or recession. The government certainly had no doubt. I certainly had no doubt, and I am happy to say we did bring in that kind of budget.

Our latest estimate for our revenues this fiscal year shows them at approximately the same level as forecast in the budget. The yields of some items such as corporation income tax are down slightly below the forecast, while others are up enough to offset these.

On the expenditure side it is harder to make a revised forecast at this stage until we know the timing of some of the changes that are under way. Parliament has not yet decided, for example, on what date the income guarantee program, announced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in July, will come into effect. This is one of the unknowns.

Mr. Knowles: Has the government decided?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, and parliament has yet to decide, but the government has its plans. These will be announced in due course, and there is no intention of changing anything about that.

As is now widely known, we will have to face some increases in pay for the armed services, and I should add in veterans' disability pensions and veterans' allowances. It is too early to forecast just what these will mean in this current year. I would think, however, it would be prudent to anticipate a total of $8,600 million in budgetary expenditures quite apart from the income guarantee program. Consequently we now anticipate a budget deficit of about $300 million and a corresponding reduction in the surplus on the national economic accounts basis.

The development in the economic situation since the time of the budget indicates the need for a stronger fiscal policy, taking into account what I have said about excessive reliance on monetary policy. May I say in this connection that this is a complaint that is equally applicable in many other countries of the world, particularly in North America. In the United States monetary conditions are even tighter than they are in Canada, and the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury have, like myself, admitted that there has been too great reliance on monetary policy.

It was indicated in July that revenue measures would have to be considered to meet the burden of the income guarantee program. I have reached the conclusion that when this program is enacted it will be necessary to increase taxes or to introduce new taxes to meet our total requirements and to prevent the government's own increasing expenditures from having inflationary effects.

When we have before us, perhaps in late October, the measures to authorize the increased revenues made necessary by the income guarantee plan we will be able to review our general fiscal position and consider what changes are desirable in the light of the economic and financial situation. Until that time I will not endeavour to be more precise as to magnitudes nor announce any decision as to the nature of the measures that would be most appropriate. Needless to say, one can never anticipate tax changes.

In order to keep future tax increases to a minimum and still contain the inflationary pressures, the government has decided that it must moderate the rate of increase in expenditures, deferring some programs already planned, terminating others, and putting restrictions on still others. We are having a long and painful review of these expenditure programs with this in mind.

One of the decisions taken was to discontinue the winter housebuilding incentive program, which now does not appear to us as necessary since the same effects in regard to the volume of construction in the winter can be obtained through suitable control of the direct lending by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

While the government is strongly in favour of increasing grants for research as a basic long-term policy, we will have to exercise more restraint in the rate of increase this year than we had hoped would be necessary.

The scholarship program which it had been our original intention to introduce this year will be deferred. I think the essential needs at present can be met from our student loan program on the one hand and the extensive provincial student aid programs on the other hand.

The agreements with the provinces for support of certain forestry programs expire next March and we have decided they should not be renewed as we feel the provinces are quite able to carry on themselves.

We are seeking to hold down the size of the defence budget despite the inescapable increases in pay and in the prices of what we have to buy. We shall continue to restrict our capital expenditures although this will mean some slowing down in a number of desirable programs and a postponement of good projects. I noticed the recognition of some hon. members opposite that many good projects may have to be deferred, and that is why I said this has been a painful review, very painful, and even after we have made all the changes that will be made there is still bound to be a substantial increase in government expenditures.

We have decided that we must defer the commencement of one major program that is already before the house. Many of the provincial governments have indicated that they feel we are attributing too much urgency to the introduction of full medicare programs right away, and they do not feel prepared to proceed to put such programs into effect next summer as provided for in the bill before the house. We therefore propose to defer the effective date of the plan for a year until July 1, 1968. The legislation will be proceeded with in the house as a high priority item when we reassemble at the beginning of October. The government has no intention of changing the substance of the bill other than its effective date.

Obviously this decision on medicare was a difficult one for this government to make because we have been, and remain, so strongly in favour of this major social reform. We feel, however, that the delay will help to meet the immediate financial problems of both the federal and provincial governments and contribute to the ultimate success of the program.

The provinces and the municipalities have been increasing their expenditures as well as the federal government, including of course their very large expenditures on education. They face just as great demands as we do for increased services and facilities, and they have been sharing with us the unpleasant necessity of increasing taxes. It is certainly desirable that we and the provincial governments should harmonize our policies in expenditures, as in fiscal policies generally, taking due account of priorities and economic circumstances.

I shall of course be discussing these matters and others with provincial representatives in the tax structure committee next week. The provinces have made clear that they need and want more revenue and would like us to reduce our taxes so that they can increase theirs, as we have done for a number of years past. Our present economic situation and our foreseeable federal financial position do not permit such action on our part now. Discussions of our problems and policies as well as the general fiscal and economic outlook are necessary before we all make our plans for next year, to be submitted to parliament and the legislatures, including the main fiscal arrangements between us for the five years commencing in 1967.

It is to our fiscal policy therefore that we must look for some further assistance in restraining during this boom period the excessive total demands upon the economy that are currently making possible and in part bringing about the increases in costs and prices that are causing concern to hon. members and to very many Canadians. This is not an easy answer nor a very welcome one to those of us who must take action to cut back expenditures or increase taxes. Higher taxes are cold comfort to those troubled by higher prices, but they can help prevent prices going up more and more. I can assure the house that if higher taxes are necessary they will be proposed with a careful concern for ability to pay.

Measures such as these are, nevertheless, a relatively small cost to pay for the continuation of an expanding Canada—to avoid the grim alternative of boom and bust. We who have the responsibility of government intend to face up to the task confident that we shall have the support of parliament and of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: Just before sitting down, Mr. Chairman, may I indicate the measures President Johnson has announced today which have a familiar ring. He has proposed in a five point program a temporary suspension of the tax credit which permits firms to deduct from their tax bills up to 7 per cent of the funds spent on plant expansion and modernization and a six month suspension of laws permitting corporations to benefit from an accelerated depreciation program. These are very similar to the measures we took earlier this year in the budget. He also proposes that he would carefully review appropriation bills clearing Congress and establish priorities to see what could be impounded, postponed and stretched out. I could not give a better description of what I have been saying today. This is a necessary condition and one which is to be found in the United Kingdom. I hope we never will have to emulate the British course here. It was necessary there because they were unable to contain their inflationary pressures soon enough. If we keep ourselves expanding in accord with our physical possibilities, I think we can avoid stop and go. All it requires is a little sense and some restraint.

The President also proposed that Treasury Secretary Fowler would conduct a survey to determine what federal securities should be withheld from the already tight money market. Finally, he would ask the Federal Reserve Board in the light of the other actions to move to help bring down soaring interest rates. I should like to add that if the kind of measures I am proposing today are implemented I think this will help bring down interest rates.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Inquiry as to consideration of medicare and old age pensions; the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain), External Affairs—offer to six libraries in France of a Canadian book collection in French and in English; the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan), National Hockey League—application of Canadian laws to hockey players.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, when we were in committee of supply I think there was an agreement that we would take a supper hour from six to seven o'clock. If we do that, I think that would take care of the private members' hour.

Mr. Trudeau: Does Mr. Grégoire agree?

Mr. Knowles: I think he has gone to Quebec.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if it could be made an order of the house that at this moment Your Honour would go back to the chair in committee and that the committee would then rise and resume its sitting at seven o'clock, I think that would meet everyone's wishes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the private members' hour be suspended and that the house resume the business which was interrupted a few moments ago?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. This sitting is suspended for a period of one hour. The committee will resume at seven o'clock.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 6 p.m. the sitting of the committee was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of supply, estimates of the Department of Finance, vote No. 1, to be found on page 118 of the blue book.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, when it came to my attention that I was to lead off for the opposition on this item I began to put down the observations that I wished to make in the time allotted to me. The first thought that flashed through my mind was: Never had a speaker, on the opening estimates of the Department of Finance, so many targets. It reminds me of a time during the depression when the rabbit population got very thick on the prairies and many of us went out to reduce that population somewhat, partially for sport and partially for food. As the owls chased the rabbits in from the fields toward the bluffs and the trees on the farm you could fire your rifle as fast as you were able, and they still kept coming in waves.

That is the way this government has been functioning for three and a half years: No matter how many mistakes they have made, they keep coming in waves with more—and the mistake that I think is inherent in the minister's statement this afternoon will probably be one more and one of the most serious. It has been said that to be minister of finance is the graveyard of politicians who have ambition.

Mr. Churchill: Also national defence.

An hon. Member: Well, you survived.

Mr. Hamilton: The remarks made by the minister this afternoon put him very deep in the six-foot hole that is customary in graveyards. In my judgment the speech this afternoon was a complete victory for the establishment. The same establishment that we met up with when we were the government has now won a complete victory.

Let me remind the committee that one of the great stories that has to be told is that in 1945, following the war, Canada was faced with inflationary pressures and the civil servants of that day had to meet them. In the Korean war there was another inflationary period, and the civil servants of that day had to help meet it. Then we had a period of the great influx of capital into our country from 1953 to 1955. This was an altogether different type of inflationary pressure—and the civil service had to help the government meet it.

These three great crises in the financial aspects of running a government so thoroughly penetrated the thinking of those who advise the government on financial matters both fiscal and monetary that they lived in everlasting fear of inflationary pressures. When we were the government we faced two recessions, in 1957-58 and again in 1961. Even when we were facing recessions we had advice poured on us to take anti-inflationary measures. The worst feature of this situation was that the person who was the spokesman and had control over the monetary policy was going one way, with a tight money policy, and the government formed of the elected representatives of the people of this country was going the other way. We finally resolved that difficulty by the dismissal of the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Deachman: He resigned.

Mr. Hamilton: Let us not go into the details of that manoeuvre.

An hon. Member: No, let's not.

Mr. Hamilton: All I want to point out to the committee is that any person who reads the report of the royal commission on banking and finance, the Porter royal commission, will realize that never in the history of this country has there been an indictment of a public servant such as there is in this volume.

Mr. Sharp: And of the government.

Mr. Hamilton: And of governments, including our government and the preceding one.

Mr. Sharp: Yours.

Mr. Hamilton: Our government was included, and so was yours, because we were both part of the end product being produced in this country by the financial establishment. This group is so able, so sincere and so dedicated that they find it very easy to persuade themselves that they know how to run the country better than the elected representatives of the people.

• (7:10 p.m.)

This is what the statement of the minister means tonight, that he has completely accepted their point of view. He has accepted a series of techniques of dealing with financial measures which are as old and as orthodox as financial measures both fiscal and monetary could be. This is simply a retreat into techniques that have not worked in the past, that have destroyed governments and that will destroy this government.

Mr. Sharp: And that have brought about the most prosperous conditions this country has ever seen.

Mr. Hamilton: The government today is living in the most prosperous conditions this country has ever known and which were brought about in 1961. Every action of the government since it came to power in 1963 has led to the conditions in which we find ourselves today. Let no one think this happened since the last budget. Let your mind go back to the last three and a half years. In the fall of 1962, with a minority government just elected continuing the expansion program of the previous two years, the leader of the opposition, who is now the Prime Minister of Canada, announced on several occasions in the month of September that he considered it his duty to stop anything going through this house and to force the government of that time to its knees.

That is the start of the policy for which the minister is paying a price tonight. We were able to pass no estimates and no legislation. The wealthy and the "wise" of this country got together to destroy us; but now the minister has put himself in the hands of those who destroyed us. The result of that will be that he and his government will face the same fate. That is the significance of his remarks tonight. This is the victory of the old fashioned techniques of bringing in measures too late and increasing the possibilities of a recession in 1967. Everyone knows that for the last two years our Canadian economy, because of the drive we started in 1961 toward expansion at home and abroad, has been walking on a tightrope, a tightrope between recession on one hand and inflation on the other.

This is not a new subject, Mr. Chairman, and I intend to deal with what has been said by those of us on this side of the house concerning this matter. However, before I get into the actual facts respecting a situation which is very serious, and will have negative results for the future of Canada, let us look at the members of the cabinet. Anyone with half an eye can see that there is something drastic disturbing them. I saw the Minister of National Health and Welfare—

Mr. Churchill: Where is he?

Mr. Hamilton: Running around with a tight face. I knew immediately that there was something wrong. I know when a man walks through Gethsemane; I know he appealed to one man and another of his colleagues because the government was in crisis again. And where is the minister tonight? He has been destroyed by the cabal which is temporarily in control in the cabinet. I have watched the ministers being destroyed one after another in the last three and a half years, as different groups in the party fought each other. I saw the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the new minister of manpower, one of the most promising men to have come up from French speaking Canada in recent years, led to the slaughter on the railway strike bill, sacrificed on the altar. I have seen these men betrayed and the rug pulled from under them.

This is a divided government, one that has always been divided. They do not worry any more about crises cropping up once a year or once a month; now they worry about them every minute. This is a divided cabinet, which has to go.

Let us look at all the other measures which will be cut down, ones that the traditional type of finance minister thinks of cutting first, such as the $500 to try and even out the flow of employment in the construction of domestic homes in winter. Research is another victim, although it is certainly one of the things that would cause a reduction of inflationary pressures. Education, a longterm solution to inflation in any country, is also to get the axe. Forestry, at a time when forestry products in the northern hemisphere, are in the greatest demand, is to be curtailed. I will not say a thing about defence. It has already been indicated that instead of maintaining an army to defend this country and to bear our share in the defence of North America, we are now establishing a police force armed with police billies instead of rifles. Capital expenses will be cut down.

That brings me to the question of the old fashioned technique of cutting down what is vulnerable, such as, for instance, medicare. A year ago I said in this house that any person who tries to pretend to the people of Canada that medicare will be put into effect in Canada by July 1, 1967 is only fooling the people. And yet we have witnessed a great campaign through the press, radio, through pamphlets and managed news in the magazines that medicare will bring an end to all our problems, that every ache and pain will be over on July 1, 1967. This was backed by a pledge of the minister who was allowed to make that pledge. The truth has now come home, and another minister is biting the dust. The provinces have been led to believe that with the Liberal party in power all will be well. Next week the axe will fall on them also.

Today we heard the minister telling us, in smug terms of the statement made by President Johnson in the United States. We would be better off if the government would stop thinking about the United States and trying to keep in step with that country. We must realize that the same bunch of people in the United States are cosy with a similar bunch of people in Canada. You cannot tell the difference between their policies on defence and fiscal matters, and our policies. They are good, sincere and able men, but their minds are fixed on the past. They will not listen and let the fresh air of new ideas come into their thoughts. They destroyed us and they will destroy this government.

Last night I listened with interest to the minister's speech on television. He tried to blame everyone but the government for inflation.

Who is to blame for this inflation, the opposition? He says the bad boys of the N.D.P. are pushing us too fast. He says these bad boys in the Conservative party push us too fast. He says the opposition is to blame. Who took the attitude that all democratic government would stop in the fall of 1962? The present Prime Minister took that attitude. He had a group of devoted people behind him who stopped everything we tried to do from this side of the house in the fall of 1962. Who brought in the budget in 1963, the opposition? Then, we had 60 days of decision. That budget was a restrictive budget. That budget inferred all the things the royal commission had intimated in 1957, and Mr. Gordon undertook to put into it the ideas set out in "Troubled Canada" as well as the restrictive ideas developed at the Kingston conference.

All these higher taxes were part of the 60 days of decision. Who started the 11 per cent tax on production machinery that added to the costs at the very root of all costs? If I remember accurately all the parties in the opposition condemned the government for adding on that 11 per cent tax. However the government believed in restrictions. This was their name for planning. The establishment was in control. Well, we got a few of the restrictions removed, but it was not the opposition that put on the taxes or put on the restrictions.

Then, let us jump ahead to the budget of 1965. I spoke during that debate and I have a copy of my speech here. This was a year and a half ago, Mr. Chairman, and I warned the government then about what was happening. The present member for Davenport was then the minister of finance. He said that we were going to have an inflationary budget to get this country going, but he was going to an election. So, we have this silly situation, with inflation beginning to show signs of gathering momentum in 1965 and a finance minister thinking in terms of one thing only, namely getting the Liberals back into power with a majority. I have the record here and I intend to quote from it. However, I should like to remind the committee that this is not only my view. I just happened to be reading an article in Time magazine a few months ago. This article is dated June 3, 1966, and the subject is "The Realm of Canada". The part I should like to quote is under the heading, "Everything but Business", and states:

> Gallup's conclusion that the "Munsinger affair did considerable harm to the image" of the P.M. was something of a surprise, considering that the Liberals intended it to cut the other way. Obviously, the answers were weighted by the universal assumption that Pearson will not contest another election. But the Gallup poll also failed to note that the mood was as much inspired by a series of earlier irritations. First there was the budget blight of 1963, then the flag argument of 1964, followed by last year's Rivard affair, and penultimately the sticky business of postal clerk spy George Victor Spencer earlier this year. The fact that Pearson personally telephoned Spencer to ask if the spy wanted a judicial inquiry was not the first instance of the P.M.'s diplomatic instinct leading him politically astray, but possibly it was the worst example of his unnecessary dabbling in dirt. Munsinger was too much. "More than anything else," suggested a Toronto Liberal last week of Pearson's diminished public support, "it's just an accumulation of everything but doing the nation's business."

This is the charge I level at the government tonight. They have time for "Bi and Bi" commissions; they have time for debates on capital punishment; they have time for flag debates. All these things have merit, but the government has no time for the nation's business. This government has been so busy carrying on elections that they have no time for anything else. The 1963 election was unnecessary, and the one in 1965 was doubly unnecessary. Now, as a result of the sheer weakness of their position, we are stumbling into another one in 1966. This government has been so busy trying to get a majority so they will have complete control of the country, as they believe, that they have no time to govern. We are paying for their sins now.

In the time that is left to me, I want to deal, and I can only do so in very elementary form, with the fact that there are long-term solutions to inflation, and short-term solutions to inflation, as the minister stated. No one quarrels with the desire to find out more about an income policy. No one quarrels with any of these long-range objectives which we all have. The problem as I pointed out in 1965 and again in 1966 in my budget speeches, is one of finding short-range solutions. This country today is even more precariously balanced on the tightrope than it was five months ago. Five months ago I proposed, in essence, that the answer was not a whole series of anti-inflationary measures, just as the answer was not a whole series of inflationary measures. The obsolete proposals for coping with these problems are all on file in the offices of this government, available for every minister; but is it not about time we began to use the knowledge we have and to realize that today there are some forces in Canada that are deflationary, just as there were a year and a half ago? These deflationary forces are there. Likewise there are pressure points for inflation.

Budget making now in 1966 is not the same as it was in the days of the horse and buggy or in 1867. I suggested that we should have a series of short-range proposals, some of which were anti-inflationary and some of which were expansionist. These things work against each other, and would keep us balanced on the tightrope until we got through this pressure period. Without going into great detail, I will start with the budget of 1965, and some of my statements. I quote:

> Now, Mr. Speaker, this budget adds another inflationary force by trying to increase consumer spending. Second, there is a shortage of skilled labour in almost every line of activity, and this produces a cost-push inflation . . .
> Third, there is a tremendous need for new capital for plant expansion . . . Why is the government not aware of them?

I put forward three propositions and asked why the government was not aware of them. I did not know they were planning an election; I was simply trying to be constructive. I dealt with this 11 per cent tax and said that this was at the root of a lot of our trouble. Then I quoted from a document published by the Economic Council and proceeded to outline 17 or 18 proposals, mostly short-range, which would help the government ease away from this inflationary pressure. They are all there—one, two, three, four, five, six, and right down to 14. I was trying to be constructive.

This year, I was even more precise because I saw the situation more clearly. Let me quote just a few paragraphs from what I said on April 1, 1966, as recorded at page 3751 of Hansard:

> • (7:30 p.m.)
> If the previous minister of finance was following nationalistic policies that are 60 years out of date,

I think it can be said of the present Minister of Finance that he is only 25 years out of date.

I change that now and I say that they are both 60 years out of date. I went on:

Last year the minister supported his predecessor's proposals. Last year the minister and his predecessor ignored the clear and present warnings which we on this side of the house gave about inflation. Last year the Minister of Finance indicated that he would stand or fall with his colleague. This year I think one can say he has done nothing in particular, and has done it very well.

Then I went on and talked about the fundamental problems that we had been talking about, and I said:

The tragedy of this budget, Mr. Speaker, is that the minister has not faced up to the fundamental decision which confronts Canada, and that is how to utilize the human and material resources of Canada so that the economy can operate closer to its essential capacity.

Then I proceeded in a series of positive suggestions to pick out those areas, and I can summarize them in this way. First of all there was the principle of selectivity. In some areas you should force expansion by offering incentives. These areas embrace the steel industry, the petrochemical industry, and so on. Then there are areas where you should check expansion—for example the construction industry—by selection of your fiscal program to meet the needs in each of the industrial segments. This is one positive approach which has never been utilized in this country.

Second, I made a big pitch for a temporary manpower policy. Instead of waiting for all of these long-range solutions of the minister of manpower, we should get right down to the facts. We have thousands of able people who are willing to help but are not being given the chance. I would point out that only 34 per cent of our women between the ages of 21 and 45 are in the work force. This is the lowest percentage in the world of women in this age group who are working.

Our women are just as able to meet a national emergency as any other group in the country, but there is no leadership. We have great numbers of people who are retired at 55, 60 and 65 and who are at the peak of their mental capacity, and they are willing to be called on a temporary basis back to the working force. We do not have to wait a year or two for them; they will go back to work in two weeks. If the government would say what their policy is, the manufacturers, the hospitals and all the other people who need help will get them back to work. It can be done very simply on a fiscal incentive basis which is not inflationary, but will get at one of the basic causes, namely labour shortages in certain segments of the economy.

The third point that I made last April was that no one has looked seriously at the various ways of meeting inflation on the monetary side The minister was quite right today when he said that we put too much faith in the monetary capacity of the Bank of Canada to settle this question. The bank has only a marginal impact. What it is, no one knows—20 per cent, 30 per cent; I do not know. But when you put the millions of little people in this country on your side, they know all about the high cost of meat and the high cost of everything which they buy, and they are willing now to co-operate with you. You can kill two birds with one stone by using the little people of this country, who have only a few dollars a month, to help the situation out. If they knew they would get their money back, they would be much more willing to put it aside.

What does the minister imply today? The old-fashioned technique of taxing the people and taking their money away by that method. And I have not mentioned the worst aspect. If the government want to clear the pressure on capital spending, there is one move they can make. Under the Canada Pension Plan the government will take $400 million a year out of the people of this country, which represents 3.6 per cent of the labour payroll. The government turns this $400 million over to the provinces.

Mr. Sharp: That is what we have done.

Mr. Hamilton: That is what you have done. But what do the provinces do? They have no responsibility for fiscal policy. They put this money into circulation.

Let the government go back to their original plan if they like. Mr. Lesage has gone; he cannot stop you now. The government does not have to make a backroom deal with Mr. Johnson. Let them do it openly. Let us get back to the system of pay-as-you-go and get this rate down to less than 2 per cent, and the funds back under control of the federal government.

The workingman has only been assessed this amount of deduction during the last few months. Half of 3.6 is 1.8. Can you blame the labour union leaders for asking for more when the pay of the workers keeps going down? Who started this inflation? The government who started it had high hopes, but they fell flat on their faces as they made deals with Lesage which hurt this country,

Let us turn the people loose, because they want to help. They want to cut their costs and they are quite willing to go out and work. They are not going to stay in the labour force once the emergency is over in the next two or three years; they will be glad to go back home. But give them the incentive to work. This is what I call a peaking policy. Give the little people of the country the chance to save, and in such a way that they know that by saving they are going to reduce the cost of the things that they buy, and that they are going to get their money back with increased increments when the time comes.

I could go on and list suggestion after suggestion, but I will not. All I will do is to plead with the minister that, as he prepares his baby budget this fall, that he break clear from these reactionary right-wing, obsolete methods of the last century. I ask him to give some of the new thoughts an opportunity to be tried out. This country is not going to collapse. We are strong; we are just beginning to get up speed. Our railways need to expand and our steel industry needs to expand. The government should back that expansion, and at the same time put the anti-inflationary forces to work to balance that expansion. I ask the government to give us some leadership. If they do, I am sure they will be surprised at how the people will respond and follow the leadership of 20th century thinking. But they cannot help but be disillusioned by leadership under the hand of a reactionary group of the old guard on fiscal and monetary matters who draw their inspiration from the 19th century.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, it would not be quite true to say that I was surprised at the statement of the minister this afternoon. I did not expect very much, though I must say that I was somewhat surprised at the lengths to which he went in promoting extremely orthodox views, not to say reactionary views. I do not intend to deal with his statement yet because I have some quite positive suggestions to make to which I hope the minister will listen with some attention.

The only comment that I want to make on his speech at the moment is to remark on the airy assumption that he made, without the slightest supporting evidence, that we are inclined to do too many things in Canada at the same time; that we have reached the limit of our productivity. There is no evidence at all to support that statement and, on the other hand, there has been no examination of how our resources are being used at the present time.

The minister makes this statement in light of a report from the Economic Council of Canada that per capita productivity in Canada is 23 per cent less than it is in the United States. I would suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that unless we are prepared to accept the idea that Canadian workmen are less competent, less efficient and lazier than those of the United States, this would indicate to me that there is something radically wrong with the structuring of our industrial society.

This question of inflation, of the rise in the cost of living, cannot be fruitfully considered in isolation or dealt with in the way the minister proposes—by monetary and fiscal measures divorced from the general economic picture.

Primarily it must be considered in terms of our actual and potential productivity, to determine whether or not we really have actual and runaway inflation which can be cured only by drastic monetary and fiscal measures, and whether in fact the situation conforms to the classical definition of too much money chasing too few goods.

We must examine our whole industrial and financial machinery to determine how well it is succeeding in using our human and material resources to produce the maximum in goods and services for the Canadian people. On the face of it, one must view with considerable suspicion the contention that Canada has reached its limit in this regard. I, for one, find it an insult to my intelligence to be told that 20 million people with an exceptionally high level of technical skill, in possession of the world's largest per capita store of unexploited natural resources, are not capable of producing goods and services to satisfy their demands. Yet, this is what the minister says. This is what we are told when terms such as "an overheated economy" are used to describe a society which, owning enormous real and potential wealth, yet suffers slums, housing shortages, inadequate educational and health services and, I might say, a barbarically low cultural level to exist within its boundaries.

I think it is time perhaps that we kicked this bogeyman of runaway inflation, this scarecrow that is held up to frighten us, out of the way, and took a hard look at the institutions and arrangements which link our economy with the rest of the world—the institutions and arrangements by which we produce wealth from our enormous natural resources. For one thing I think we should take a look at our tariff structure. It has something to do with our link with the rest of the world. First of all we must examine our own internal legal and institutional arrangements to see how well or ill they contribute to the goal of maximum production. We are again being offered all the old moss-grown explanations for the rise in the cost of living. Faced with steadily rising prices, the consumer is being persuaded to place the blame on labour, and in some instances, on the farmer. Labour is accused of exorbitant demands which increase costs, with the added suggestion that the Canadian worker does not work hard enough to justify his demands. The farmer is accused of inefficiency and of failure to keep up with the times.

With regard to the charge against labour, there has been a continuing battle of the statisticians and economists. One can prove anything by carefully selected statistics and I do not propose to enter into the battle, which in many cases tends to be one between special pleaders. I have no hesitation in saying that anyone who has worked as it is possible that some of us have, in Canadian industrial plants, or who cares to enter and observe the operations in a Canadian factory will be unable to leave that factory convinced that the Canadian worker does not work hard and efficiently with the means placed at his disposal by his employer. Furthermore, no fair-minded person, on examining the wage scale of the Canadian working force will be able, in good conscience, to contend that the Canadian working force draws an undue share of the wealth which it produces. The charge against labour is in essence a demand of other and more fortunate sections of the community to continue to enjoy a privileged position in our midst.

The charge against the farmer is, if anything, even more ill founded than the charge against labour. In no section of our economy has the impact of modern technology been so great as it has been in the agricultural sector, with the consequent result that efficiency and productivity have been increased. The proof of this is to be found in the enormously increased agricultural production, coupled with the dramatic decline in farm population. If the farmer is to be blamed for anything, it is for his failure to combine with his fellow farmers, to ensure the distribution of agricultural products to the consumer at prices that will be fair to himself and to the consumer.

It is too easy, too simplistic to find the cause of the continual rise in the cost of living in the greed and indolence of labour, and in the stupidity of the farmer. These are myths without foundation in fact, and we must dig deeper to find the real causes.

From time to time, Mr. Chairman, faced with the rapacity of the free enterprise system, legislators and parliaments have enacted legislation in an attempt to cope with the more rapacious aspects of the acquisitive society. In the course of time such legislation, without regard to its effectiveness in the public interest, has come to assume the position of a sacred cow, taking its place in the pantheon of the good, along with motherhood, marriage, thrift, and piety. One such sacred cow has been the Combines Investigation Act, and I am well aware that when I propose, as I am about to do, that we scrap this legislation, I shall run the risk of being charged with hardly less than sacrilege. If we look this sacred cow firmly in her soft brown eye, we shall find she is what dairy farmers call a "boarder"—a cow that looks nice but provides no butterfat.

In the first place this act is ineffectual. It would be difficult, and perhaps impossible, to cite a single instance in which an action under the Combines Investigation Act has proven successful in preventing collusion to act in concert by businesses which are supposed to be, ostensibly, in competition.

Even more difficult to be proved would be the contention that a success in preventing such collusion would have been in the public interest. The truth is that the developments which the act was designed to frustrate are developments inevitable and necessary in an industrial society—the growth of units of production of a magnitude great enough to be capable of the most economical and efficient use of human and material resources—a magnitude which will vary from industry to industry, and from period to period.

This is not to say, Mr. Chairman, that the large enterprises necessary to modern production do not place in hands of their owners and managers enormous power to levy an unconscionable tribute on the public. Other means than the prevention of this development must be found to curb the misuse of that power. We must work with the forces that are moving society and not try to play King Canute in a vain attempt to stem the tide.

Human society is never static, and the weakness of legislation such as the Combines Investigation Act is that it is designed to keep society static. This is impossible. Societies such as ours are dynamic, and there are irresistible forces within them. Any attempts to frustrate these forces can only lead to disaster.

We must work with these forces, not against them, and encourage the developments which will restructure our industry on more efficient lines. In doing so, we must make sure that that restructured industry will serve the public interest.

If our industry is to be encouraged or forced to rationalize itself, either by merger, or by co-operation such as I have suggested, then it cannot be protected from the winds of competition from outside. Rather than pursue the, so far, fruitless attempts which have been made to reach some worth while reform agreement on tariffs with the United States, let us face our neighbours with a fait accompli in the form of tariff elimination, and an invitation for our neighbours to do likewise. In order to give Canadian industry time to effect the necessary rationalization, tariff elimination should be spread over a period of years—perhaps five years. If at the end of that period the United States exhibits no sign of reciprocating, then the imposition, or perhaps, the warning of the intention to impose quotas might have a salutary effect.

In addition to the repeal of the Combines Investigation Act and the removal of tariffs as methods of forcing rationalization and improved efficiency upon Canadian industry, we believe it is time, in spite of what the Minister of Finance said this afternoon, to impose selective price controls as a means of containing inflationary pressures. It is obviously extremely difficult, much as we might like to do so, to control prices directly at the retail level. The mind boggles at the thought of a horde of inspectors padding up and down the aisles in every supermarket. Even the example of the circumstances that necessitated the setting up of the Wartime Prices and Trade Board is not analogous to the present situation. In the first place, we are not at war, and measures which it was possible to implement then are not possible now. Second, and more important, our retail industry today is vastly more complex and sophisticated than it was 25 years ago.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

So when we seek to control prices we must move back along the chain of production and distribution until we reach those basic commodities whose cost enters directly and indirectly into every other cost. We reach such things as steel, copper, aluminum, and pulp and paper goods for domestic consumption. This list is not exhaustive. After research, decisions must be made as to whether their prices should be rolled back or frozen at present levels. But they can no longer be allowed to roam free, and any upward revision after price controls are in effect can only be allowed on the basis of a convincing case before a prices review board. In those fields in which direct price control is not applied, provision must be made for such a board to receive application from consumers organizations to examine this or that commodity price. Except in the case of those basic commodities on which controls had been placed, the board's function would be to give the utmost publicity to its findings.

In spite of the lack of foundation for the general charge that wage increases cause inflation, it would be useless to deny that there have been occasions when wage increases in basic industries have helped to set off a spiral of inflation. But these are cases in which there has been virtual collusion between management and labour, either with or without a ritual battle of negotiation, to levy an extra tribute on the general public. One of the purposes of price control in such basic industries is to force improved efficiency and productivity by closing the door to such courses of action. In effect by means of price controls we say to management and labour in these industries "This is it. This is all that the rest of us are prepared to pay for your product; fight it out between yourselves how you divide it." Any increase in the size of the pie would have to come from increased productivity, necessitating a working partnership between management and labour. One might even anticipate some other effects. One possible effect might well be to provide a stimulant to the development of secondary industry which would no doubt be anxious to take advantage of the stable prices created by the imposition of price controls on the basic commodities of our economy.

I wish to deal for a moment with another feature of our economy which has a great deal to do with this question of inflation and the rising cost of living. The minister has suggested that he now agrees with us —though he did not agree with us some months ago—that he has been relying too much on monetary control and not enough on fiscal policy. But even his attempt to use monetary policy has been based, I suggest, on at least one big fallacy. I suggest to the minister that contrary to the conventional wisdom that high interest rates have a deflationary effect and act to cool down an overheated economy, any real examination of their effect in the present stage of our economy must lead to the opposite conclusion.

In the first place, directly or indirectly, interest enters into every cost and as it is inevitably passed along to the end of the line where the consumer stands, it must have the effect of increasing prices. The argument that high interest rates tend to cut down consumption is simply not borne out by the facts. The businessman will not be deterred by high interest rates, so long as a booming full employment economy exists. He will be confident of being able to pass it along the line.

Evidence before the banking and commerce committee in 1955 or 1956 proved that the client of the small loan companies is not only not deterred by high interest rates but does not even bother to find out what he is paying. The terms of repayment are his only concern. If the monthly payment seems within his means he has little care about the rate. As for slowing down the investment rate it is obvious that interest rates are of marginal importance in an economy in which over 70 per cent of all investment comes from internally generated savings. High rates encourage the inflow of foreign capital and in the final analysis merely increase costs and raise prices. For these reasons we suggest that to prevent a general rise in interest rates, with its inflationary results, the government should take action to prevent such a rise by using the powers conferred on it by the British North America Act. This would not only control the inflationary effect of high interest rates but would enable the government to take steps to allocate credit to areas which might otherwise be starved, such as housing, and enable us to set some social goals.

Earlier this afternoon the minister told us that the government was seeking to curb inflationary measures by cutting down public expenditure. He went on to say that he was using persuasion with those in the private sector of our economy. I can tell him that in my part of the country his persuasion does not seem to have had very much effect. On the outskirts of the small town in which I live on Vancouver island, two enormous shopping centre complexes are being built at the present moment, one of them costing over $11 million. We already have five shopping centres in the area. Evidently, the minister was not able to persuade these people to defer their expenditures. He preferred, rather, to cut down on the expenditures of government—to take the position that those who own and control supermarkets can spend anything they like, but that Canadians acting in concert to develop amenities for their own purposes must not be allowed to do so. I think the minister had better take a correspondence course in persuasion, since his efforts have obviously had no effect whatsoever on those who control the private sector of the economy.

I would hate to be a Liberal tonight. It will be very difficult for them. But I have a suggestion I should like to pass on to the minister—it came from one of my colleagues. He suggested that since we are not to have medicare now, why not postpone it until 1969 and make it a nice, round, half-century since the minister's party first promised it to the people of Canada.

I have tried to place the question of inflation and the rising cost of living within the total framework of our economic possibilities in Canada. I wish now to place it within an even wider context. There has been a long continuing debate—perhaps "muttering" might be a better word—among certain hon. gentlemen opposite and I take it that the present Minister of Finance is on one side of this debate, or muttering, and that the former Minister of Finance is on the other. It is a debate between nationalism and continentalism. There are those on one side who tell us that as next door neighbours to the United States, as those who share this rich North American continent with the United States, we must adjust ourselves and our economy to the necessities of continentalism even at the expense of our national identity.

Then we have those on the other side who suggest to us that while it is true there are a great many benefits to receive from being part of the North American industrial and economic complex, we must preserve our national identity even at the cost of relinquishing many of the advantages that might come to us through continentalism.

It seems to me that this is too simplistic, too black and white, too much the concept of either or. I suggest to the minister through you, Mr. Chairman, that if he will just proceed with policies that will assist our industrial productivity potential, and at the same time not allow the private sector to waste resources, if he will take positive steps to curb that tendency, then we can hope to lay the foundations of a policy which will enable us to gain the benefits, and they are undoubtedly tremendous benefits, that accrue from being part of the North American continent, next door neighbours to the richest and wealthiest nation in the history of the world.

But we are not going to do this as long as our Minister of Finance sits back and, without a shred of evidence, tells us that we have reached the limit of our productive capacities, that we must not expect to go on as we have been doing, and yet at the same time we have only to look around the private sector and see the gross extravagance and misuse of resources. In this situation the minister relies on persuasion to get them to stop doing these nasty things, and they pay no attention to the minister, just as I would not if I were in their shoes. I would only pay attention to a minister who is decisive enough to say, "This is a control that is going in and it is going to have the force of law; and that is that."

An hon. Member: Didn't the government do that with the railway workers?

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That is different. The people who on shopping centres and high-rise apartments, and all the other more spectacular aspects of the affluent society, are in a different category than your friends the railway workers. I am surprised that you mention such lowly creatures here in this context. They must not be treated in the same way. But seriously, Mr. Chairman, I am appalled that the minister is prepared to advance today in this house, in 1966, the old shopworn ideas that did not work in the past and which he hopes will work in the future.

I would remind the minister, since the hon. member for Qu'Appelle failed to do so—I know why he failed to do it—of what happened to the Conservatives when they brought in their austerity program, and cut back on all public expenditures in the hope that they were going to contain inflationary pressures.

Mr. Sharp: That is not what they did. They were so irresponsible that they had a financial collapse.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Knowles: A political one, too.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): It was not exactly a financial collapse; but what I am afraid of is that we are going to have a social collapse in this country.

I would like the minister to examine the propositions I have put before him tonight, to ask himself very seriously whether he has made any examination of the structuring of our industrial economy, and whether he has any evidence that we have reached the ultimate in our progress because, if he has not, then he has no right to come before the representatives of the Canadian people and tell them the Canadian people are too lazy, too stupid and too dishonest to take advantage of their unexampled opportunities as inhabitants of one of the richest countries in the world.

I hope the minister will consider this. I hope that the violent reactions he is going to get from his reactionary speech tonight will make him realize that the government in dealing with inflation must not rely on sudden, ad hoc, violent fiscal and monetary policies because they won't work, but must seriously examine the whole structure of our society and decide what steps the government can take to rationalize it, to increase its productivity and to lay the basis for a wealthy society that no longer will need to tolerate slums, poverty, deficient education, deficient health services, and all the things of which every decent Canadian is ashamed of today. I hope the minister is not so sunk in his 19th century orthodoxy that he will refuse to look at these things.

I shall conclude by telling the minister this incident. When he was speaking in the house in the debate on the Bank Act I had a friend here from a foreign country who, to my mind, was not particularly progressive or leftist. He listened to the Minister of Finance and when I went to collect him from the gallery and we were walking along the corridor he said to me, "But, but, but I don't understand. Your minister comes right out of the 19th century. How can you have any planification"? I said, "My dear man, we have no planification because our minister and government do come straight out of the 19th century". Mr. Chairman, I suggest they try to move into the 20th century before the last part of it disappears.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we listened closely to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) this afternoon when he informed us of the government's plans to meet the financial conditions now prevailing in Canada.

In order to check inflation and try to prevent economic chaos, the minister proposed this afternoon certain measures which will require further sacrifices from the Canadian people, and mean, in a word, that they will have to tighten their belts once again in order to avoid the worst. It is always the same old story year after year; the Canadian people are asked to make sacrifices, to do without such and such a thing in order to establish an economic balance according to the requirements of the monetary and fiscal system existing in our country.

The minister said this afternoon:

> We have had a long and strong economic expansion in the past five and a half years. It has carried us from a condition of serious and persistent unemployment to one of widespread prosperity and virtually full employment. There is still too much unemployment in certain areas of Canada, and among those who are poorly educated and unskilled but this arises from reasons other than a shortage of opportunities in Canada taken as a whole.

It is no doubt because there is no shortage of opportunities that workers are transferred from one place to another, 1000, 1500 or 2000 miles apart.

And he added:

> Total expenditures of money by consumers, by business, by government—and by those who want our exports—are now more than adequate to support a healthy level of economic growth.

The minister admits that the demand is more than adequate to support a healthy level of economic growth.

But he contradicts himself. The government has been in contradiction since it came to power. Last week, we were considering two bills: Bill C-230 to provide for the resumption of operations by the railway workers by granting them an increase of 18 per cent in wages. At the same time, we were being presented with bill C-231, to authorize in proud terms, the railways to increase their freight rates, which will obviously bring about a further increase in the cost of living. The government asked us to pass the two bills last week and, this week, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) keeps on repeating his gospel:

> Speaking generally, Canadians have been very impatient to get on with very many things both directly and through their governments—and now, we are paying the price of trying to do too much all at once.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know who are the economists advising the minister of Finance or the government, but it seems to me these are direct contradictions, from A to Z, from the first to the last page of the epistle which the Minister of Finance presented to this house this afternoon.

> As a result, we have had accelerating increases in prices and costs, accompanied by urgent and pressing demands by special groups for more income, using whatever means are open to them.

At this point, the minister was alluding to the recent rail workers strike and to other strikes in every sphere of the Canadian economy.

The minister also said:

> We have now reached a position that is unstable.

Last week we were in a stable position; this week we are in a position that is unstable. This reminds me of what the Liberals said in the province of Quebec during the last election campaign: For a stable government, for a stable economy, for a stable country, vote Liberal.

I see the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) is applauding; it is because this is way over his head.

Mr. Chairman, what does stability mean? According to the dictionary, the word "stable" means something that does not move, that does not go forward, nor backwards, nor sideways. This is about what we have with the present government A government which contradicts itself from week to week, ever since it took over the administration of the affairs of Canada.

And the minister adds:

> The present trends just cannot continue for long into the future. We cannot all get what we want.

I would like to ask the minister's secretary to be careful about the French translation next time. Words are missing, sometimes, and it should be a perfect translation of what the minister said this afternoon. In any case, I am using the French text and here is what it says further:

> We cannot get all that we want.

We cannot.

If everyone tries there is going to be an excessive rise in prices and in costs because right now the country just could not—no matter how hard it tries—produce enough to meet all the demands.

Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance knows that this statement is inaccurate; right now in Canada there is not a single industry which is not capable of increasing its production.

The farmers in the province of Quebec are literally starving because their production is not selling. And yet they can increase, multiply, triple, quadruple and quintuple their production as early as next year if the government will give them the assurance that their production will sell.

The minister has just told us that we cannot produce more. In the clothing industry in the province of Quebec, as well as in other provinces, plants had to close their doors because they could not sell their production. And the minister tells us that we produce everything we can.

The automobile industry, and I know what I am talking about, can increase its production as early as next year, if it is assured that its cars will sell.

In the field of farm machinery, in any field of national production in fact, our production can increase and double within a short time.

The Minister of Finance and Receiver General tells us that we cannot produce enough to meet all the demands. It is not the demand that cannot be met. Finance is to blame for the failure to distribute goods and services in Canada to those who need them. The minister does not have the courage to cut into the monetary system, he prefers to cut into private industry, among individual Canadians who are building Canada, rather than among the financiers who are destroying and swallowing Canada.

The minister goes on to say:

Let us bear in mind some simple facts. We are now producing about all we can in Canada this year.

One more mistake and, tomorrow, all across Canada, newspapers will spread the minister's comments. But these same newspapers will shy away from reporting the comments of those who are pinpointing the real source for the "inflationary" situation in which we find ourselves at present.

Mention of this will be avoided; people will be told to tighten their belts. Why? Because important newspaper owners are financed in exactly the same way as the government, namely by the controllers of the economic life blood of the country, without whose permission nobody can breathe anymore. The Minister of Finance thinks he is supposed to tell the Canadian people to tighten their belts and keep from breathing for a while, for the sake of Canada's economic stability.

[Mr. Caouette.]

The Minister of Finance goes on to say that our productivity is growing by 2 or 3 per cent per year and he adds:

Our labour force is growing at a rate of a bit over three per cent a year—and is becoming better educated and trained. Our productivity—the volume of goods and services per worker that we can produce—is growing somewhere between two and three per cent a year over-all. Canadians can expect an increasing standard of living—on the average—which increases at a rate that bears some relationship to their average increase in productivity—say about three per cent a year over a long period.

Would the minister wish to make a comparison at this stage? It results in an invitation to the workers not to demand a wage increase beyond three per cent, that is to say no greater wage increase than the increase in productivity.

Is the minister very conscientious when comes the time, for instance, to portion out the federal budget? When we see that, for the year 1966-1967, 14.9 per cent of each federal budget dollar is paid to financiers solely to cover the interest on Canada's debt.

Has the minister ever considered discontinuing payment of this interest over a period of "x" months, namely until Canada's economic stability has been regained? Let us discontinue payment of interests on the debt. If we ask the workers to tighten their belts, the mothers to refrain from buying what their families need, the aged not to ask for an increase of the old age pension, because that would contribute to inflation, is it not true then that the interest paid on a flictitious national debt is, in fact, contributing to inflation? A billion and a quarter, this year, in interest on the national debt alone. Why did the minister not make the statement, on an additional page which could have been page No. 10, that from now on no interest will be paid if it stems from our financial system which is strangling Canada?

If workers, families, businessmen and manufacturers are asked to make sacrifices, big financial interests should not be spared, and then the Minister of Finance will have shown courage.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, on page 3, the Minister of Finance goes on to say:

There are laws to prevent business from combining to increase or maintain their prices and profits.

There are laws to prevent this. There is no law, for example, concerning the workers; they may go on strike, and the minister says that there is no law preventing them from striking or asking salary raises if they wish to do so.

Yet there are laws "to prevent business from combining to increase or maintain their prices and profits." But when did the minister use those laws to control businesses combining or agreements to maintain or increase prices and profits? Prices are fixed; if someone is found out, he is sued in court and fined $25,000. When those people have made perhaps thousands of dollars in profits, as the minister mentioned here, they are fined $25,000 and then they are told to go on. So they continue operations. If there were a law whereby these people who are ruining the consumers could be imprisoned, do you think the government would not be more successful than it has been since coming into power? This does not date back to 1963.

In 1946, 47, 48, 49, we faced the same situation following the war. In 1956, there was a recession. The Conservatives came into power in 1957. In 1961, there were one million unemployed in Canada; 208 Conservative members in the house could not deal with unemployment nor restore economic stability in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, this does not go back to yesterday. It is always the same, everything must always be done over again. Like the Prime Minister and like the finance minister of the former government, our economists have advised us to stop giving a $500 bonus to whoever builds a house in winter; they have told us to stop spending; our economists in the Bank of Canada have told us to do this or that. All their recommendations have tended to belittle the individual, the worker helping to build the country.

I think the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada has been well conceived and skilfully applied, despite the very difficult circumstances with which it has had to cope.

Before the house adjourned in July, were we not presented with a bill to allow banks to raise their interest rate? Was not a resolution also presented to allow chartered banks to multiply, not by 12 but by 14, their reserves in the Bank of Canada? Is the government scrupulous as to this? No. The Bank of Canada is proceeding skillfully, "despite the very difficult circumstances with which it has had to cope", and this, when the Bank of Canada does not even assume its responsibilities. Mr. Chairman, I have proof here. A short time ago, on July 21, the newspaper l'Action published the following statement made in Washington by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin):

Canada made known yesterday its intention—

Mind you, "its intention"— —of reducing the cost of money loaned to developing countries.

Let us increase the cost of money here in Canada, but let us reduce it for developing countries.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Paul Martin, speaking before the members of the O.E.C.D., said that Canada will reduce by three fourths of one per cent the administration costs applicable to low interest loans.

Low interest means that we have actually loaned money without interest to some countries, including the West Indies, to build sewers, roads and houses. Canada has loaned money. But the paradox is this: Where do we find the money to lend it to Jamaica, the West Indies and all the other countries? We borrow it at high interest rates, whereas we lend it wothout interest to developing countries. I have never seen such a stupid thing. Canada is not yet completely developed, it is still being developed, and the minister informs us that we must postpone certain government projects, in short, that we must back out of certain material projects for lack of financial means. Let us wait until later when the economic situation has improved.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs also stated:

This means that Canada's contribution to development will be interest free loans repayable over a period of 50 years, with 10 years of grace.

That means 60 years, Mr. Chairman. When Jamaica starts paying us back, the Prime Minister will have reached 130 years of age. But at the age of 130 years, he will not be here, but others will be here who may have to do then what we have done not long ago for Britain which could not pay back the $2 billion; that is let them pay it back in the year 2003.

Jamaica will act in just about the same way.

Mr. Chairman, it is not that I oppose the aid we are in a position to give such countries, it is only that I object to having the Minister of Finance imposing upon us in Canada, upon people who have not enough even now, restrictions which no one thinks of imposing upon the financial system. That is revolting.

Reverting to the quotation from the article:

He spoke before the delegates of industrial nations supplying 90 per cent of foreign aid last year, which, including the communist countries last year totalled $11 billion.

That is $11 billion last year, in 1965.

As for the chairman of the World Bank, Mr. George Woods, he was highly critical yesterday of the aid given by industrial countries to developing countries. Mr. Woods stated that the amount of financial assistance to developing countries was inadequate by any reasonable standard. Since 1961, the level of net expenditures in capital funds of the O.E.C.D. member countries for underdeveloped countries has remained steady at approximately $6 billion per year, he said, and compared to the increasing revenues of O.E.C.D. countries, such expenditures have fallen from 0.8 per cent to 0.6 per cent. Exportation of private capital has increased but the major part has gone to few countries, and very little to the poorest countries.

The Chairman of the World Bank, whose statement was in strange contrast with the relative optimism shown before by the chairman of the committee, Mr. Willard Thorp, and the United States Secretary of State Mr. Dean Rusk, stated that the conditions for granting assistance tend to become more and more difficult—

That is why the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that while we were charging three quarter of one per cent for administrative costs on loans spread over periods of 50 years, with periods of grace of 10 years, there will be no more interest or administrative costs. We will pay ourselves, here in Canada, the administrative costs.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Canadian people are being laughed at; a monetary policy is in use for foreign countries, a foreign policy definitely out of date for Canada, and the members of Parliament act as weathercocks according to statements which are an insult to the Canadian people.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr. Winters, said not long ago, in March 1966, as can be seen in La Presse:

Canadians should restrict their demands on the federal treasury.

Everything indicates that we can expect another year of economic progress for Canada, keeping in mind, however, that inflation remains a constant problem, said the Minister of Commerce, Mr. Robert Winters, speaking before the Canadian Club in Toronto.

The deficit in the balance of payments, which amounted to 1 billion dollars last year, will be higher this year.

That means that our deficit will exceed $1 billion this year.

I continue:

Mr. Winters said he was concerned about the fall in the sale of Canadian surpluses on foreign markets.

The Minister of Finance said this afternoon that we cannot produce more than we are now producing, that we cannot produce enough to meet the demand. That means that our production is not high enough.

And now the Minister of Commerce goes to Toronto and says that we are worried about our surpluses in Canada.

• (8:30 p.m.)

One tells us that Canada is not producing enough, that there are not enough products, and the other states that he fears we might not sell our surplus products. Who is making sense in this matter? Of the two ministers, who is lying? The Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Finance?

An hon. Member: Both are liars.

Mr. Caouette: I think so.

Mr. Chairman, again I quote the article:

Mr. Winters said he was concerned about the decline in the sales of Canadian surplus products abroad. It is important to maintain costs and remain competitive on foreign markets.

Because taxes are an important part of costs—

That is right; remove taxes and costs will go down.

And the minister goes on to say:

Canadians should not ask so much of the federal treasury.

Canadians want nothing from the federal treasury, except what they are entitled to by the work they do to build their country, nothing more. They are not so demanding; the government is expecting more from the Canadians than the Canadians are expecting from the federal treasury.

The minister continues as follows:

If we want to avoid creating too big a gap between our taxes and those of the countries with which we are competing, the government should carefully select its spending programs and remain indifferent to pressures to spend more than it can afford.

How much can we afford? Is this, in fact, not determined by our capacity to produce?

To the extent that we produce, should we not create the capital which would enable us to sell our products? Our Canadian monetary system is only as strong as the Canadian production made by Canadians. There is no doubt about that. The more we produce, the more credit there should be available and, not restrictions on credit. And as I said a while ago, there is no economic sphere in our country unwilling to increase its production.

This is what the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) added:

> It was hard for the Liberal members of the House of Commons to vote against the motion recently put forward by the opposition, to increase old age pensions to $100 per month from $75, as at present.

Hard as it was, the minister will tell us why he voted against a pension of $100 per month. He is very frank about it. He did not ask himself: Can Canada produce clothing and food to dress and feed adequately our older citizens, or build houses to accommodate them properly? That is not what the minister asked himself before the Canadian Club in Toronto. No, he explained why:

> We wish we could have done it—

We would have been pleased to give $100 instead of $75.

> —however, since it would have cost $800 million per annum and also since, even in the present circumstances, it is difficult to find enough revenues to cover our expenses at their present rate, this additional amount would have strained our economy to a point difficult to cope with.

This is the answer or the statement given by a minister regarding our senior citizens. But did the same minister oppose the interest-free loans that have been granted to foreign countries in the world?

Mr. Chairman, possibly the members of the government, the Minister of Finance, in brief, some people still find facetious the solution advocated by Social Credit—

[English]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Cameron (High Park)): I regret having to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Caouette: Two minutes?

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Cameron (High Park)): Has the hon. member leave of the house to continue speaking?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I will not take advantage of my hon. colleagues' kindness and I thank them for this favour; I will not abuse their generosity.

Mr. Chairman, I have this to say: people may laugh at the suggestions made by the Créditistes, suggestions coming from the Social Credit party, Mr. Chairman, but if there are other workable and logical answers, it is time for members of the government to bring them forth. It is time for members of the government to stop running around in circles, always getting the same results. It is time members of the government went after the real troublemakers, namely the financiers; they are the ones responsible for inflation, and responsible for misery in times of plenty, responsible for poverty in many areas of Canada. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) brought up the question at noon, and he was right; I congratulate him for the question he put on the order paper.

Mr. Chairman, we speak of war on poverty. How is it that the government who has promised us to wage war on poverty is today asking us to tighten our belts, rich and poor alike, or simply calls for more poor people, as my colleague from Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) says, instead of making war against poverty? These statements which the minister made this afternoon mean a war against the poor; war against the poor people, that is the path along which we are presently treading.

Mr. Chairman, when a financial system is elaborated which at all times will place in the hands of the Canadian people a purchasing power corresponding to Canadian productivity no more but no less, and when we resort to the distribution of a national dividend based on this productivity, made available to each and everyone of the Canadian citizens, we will have accomplished something. In one year it will be the same old story, in two, ten years we will still be faced with the same gaps, the same situation, just as we have had to put up with this situation ever since Confederation. We will not give relief to the Canadian people with debts and interest on imaginary debts; we will help them by turning over to them what is theirs by right and in justice, and this is what members of the Ralliement are trying to do.

The only thing I wish is that members on both sides of the house consider other proposals than those brought forward by the minister. Let hon. members propose something else; let us stop imposing sacrifices and let it be clear, once and for all, that Canada is capable of providing an honest affluence to each and everyone of her citizens, that Canada is capable of providing security with personal freedom.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Thompson: After listening to the statement of the Minister of Finance this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, and the speeches of the representatives of the different parties on the opposition side, I can only say that this is a discouraging debate upon which we have now entered. It is discouraging because as we look back at the last election campaign and the one previous to that, we find that we were told over and over again that the Liberal party had the answer to the economic problems of this country. They were going to completely reverse the trends of recent years and we would be on our way to perpetual prosperity. After listening to the Minister of Finance, I find that he has actually become an apologist for the very policies he used to criticize. It is obvious he has been unable to come up with anything different. He says that we must tighten our belts; that we are now headed into a dangerous economic period.

It is stated that Canada now faces the worst inflationary spiral since the end of the last boom in 1957. Today the Minister of Finance lined himself up with those who see a great economic crisis just ahead. He has joined with those who see disaster, and well he should because if we continue as we have been without coming up with a different type of financial policy, whether it be fiscal or monetary, we are headed for economic disaster. In order to ward off this danger, the government has reversed its policies of less than a year ago. It has become painfully obvious now that in the internal struggles in the Liberal party so far as financial policies are concerned, the orthodoxy of the Minister of Finance has come out on top. It is not a very happy picture, Mr. Chairman. If this so-called inflationary situation should continue, the Canadian people will be robbed of millions of dollars. Those who live on fixed incomes, those who are not able to do anything about increasing their earnings, such as old age pensioners and farmers, will find themselves in a more difficult situation.

The end result will be that we will be completely priced out of the world markets. We are going to find ourselves suffering from a lack of markets and from unemployment. I am convinced that unless something different is tried, unless some different financial policy is implemented, then it will be only a matter of months until we will be in the same position as Great Britain is in today. I agree with the minister when he says our basic economic problems are twofold. The first is the longer term problem of educating and adapting our great labour force, as well as improving our capital resources to meet the opportunities present in our modern world. Second, there is the shorter term problem of preventing excessive total expenditures, excessive increases in prices and costs of production. True, within the framework of the policies the minister outlined in his first budget, and as he outlined again tonight, these are our basic problems.

However, they need not be our basic problems if we had different financial policies. We, in Social Credit, disagree completely with the proposed cure. As we interpret what the minister has said, it seems to us that he is intent on only diagnosing the symptoms of the disease and not considering its source. the basic cause of the economic sickness that is presently upon us is completely ignored. In no way is he coming to grips with the basic problems. If this course is continued, then in my opinion the affluent Canadian society faces a financial crisis that will make the thirties look like a picnic. Because of the uncertainty that is evident within the economy today, and the prospect of a bust following the present boom, we could tip over into a depression. Then, our financial institutions, as they exist today, would collapse and 75 per cent of everything we own, along with the mortgage companies, would be lost. This country faces a pretty grim prospect.

The minister says that the Canadian people will suffer if a continued boom should lead to a bust. Why should there be a continuous boom and bust cycle in the economy with the tremendous resources that we have, with our ability and our know-how, with our ability to consume and with the markets of the world reaching out to us? Why should there not be a continuous development and growth in our economy? So long as we continue to use the policies that are advocated by the present government, and they are basically no different from the policies of the administration before them, we face the prospect of a continuing boom and bust cycle.

What we have been trying to say for many years in Social Credit, and we say it again now, is that with a different fiscal policy and with a logical monetary policy—you cannot separate the two—there is absolutely no need for the boom and bust cycle of the present orthodox economic policies that we have had since long before world war I. Until we wake up and realize that there is a new approach; until we understand that the old system that has been geared to production, while it has performed a useful purpose in the past, is inadequate to meet the problems of a society that has solved the problem of production; until we face the basic problem of distribution, then we will continue to bungle along toward the economic chaos and confusion that threatens us today.

In his statement tonight, the minister said that we are now producing about all we can in Canada this year. This is a false statement, Mr. Chairman. We can increase the productive capacity of this country by 50 per cent within two years. We would not have to worry about where we were going to get the resources or where we were going to get the manpower to do it. Just the other day, I was reading a report from one of our automobile manufacturing companies. This report stated that company could increase the productive capacity of its factories by 50 per cent and not add more than 10 per cent to the labour force, and without adding any new equipment. It is untrue to say we have reached our productive capacity in this country. The things that people need to live form just a fraction of our potential productive capacity. In a world that is starving, in a world that cannot find enough to meet the needs of its people, the greatest challenge that faces Canada is to move out and become not only the breadbasket of the world but the source of know-how to help other countries increase their own food production. This is our challenge; this is our world mission.

We are faced with the prospect of one of the largest grain crops we have ever had in Canada. We could produce to capacity in every area of agriculture within a couple of years if we could be assured of the markets that are waiting beyond our shores. There are millions and millions of starving people today in the southern hemisphere and on the Indian subcontinent and many other parts of the world who need what we have.

The minister talks about price controls. During the war price controls worked pretty well and perhaps they were necessary in a wartime economy. But do we have to resort once more to controls which not only limit our production but also our distributive capacity, simply because we refuse to face up to the basic economic reforms that are necessary to make a system which has been developed over the years just a little bit better, and which put it in tune with and on the same wavelength with automation and cybernation, which come to us as a blessing?

When I hear hon. members talk about full employment it seems to me they are closing their eyes to the facts. What we should be looking for today is not for the myth of full employment but for full unemployment. That is the blessing that can come if only we can use the productive capacities which we have developed and which are at our fingertips. The fact is that the day of full employment in the sense of working a 40 hour week 12 months in the year will have gone, if we can put our productive capacity to work.

With our ability to produce ought to come that leisure which will improve our culture, which will permit us once again to enter into the era of art and refinement and cultural development for which we do not have time today as we try to survive and keep enough food in our stomachs and sufficient clothes on our backs.

The minister talks of restricting expansion. He has cancelled the medicare program of the government. Why did he not cut down government expenditure last March? He outlined in his statement today that government expenditure this year is going to be $8,600 million. True the government has cut back on certain phases of development. I believe what if we really wanted to get down to help the present situation we are facing under the orthodox framework put forward by the minister, the first step would be to control and to hold steady on government expenditure.

In his statement today the minister said that the anticipated deficit is $300 million. What happened as a result of the first budget brought down by the minister? Income tax was increased for six persons out of ten; business has been forced to put 5 per cent of its cash into compulsory savings; it restrained new projects. Yet the minister brought in a budget which showed an increase over the previous year's budget of approximately 10 per cent.

These are questions which are difficult to answer. I believe that we have to come back to basics. There is a lot of talk about inflation. The word "inflation" is used by the minister and by every newspaper today. Every speech relating to the economy of the country includes the word "inflation".

Inflation in its true sense means that we have too much money. Too many dollars are chasing too few goods. We do not have inflation in this country today in the orthodox sense of the word. To use that word is to raise a banner which gives a false impression. What we have today is tight money—deflation.

As far as our monetary situation is concerned—and inflation usually means money problems—what we have is deflation, not enough money to finance the development of our resources and to carry on the expansion of our industries, to finance our trade policies, particularly as they relate to some of the newer nations of the world. But we do not have inflation.

In this regard I agree with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands when he says that the government is going to have to decide whether to face up to an economic problem which really is inflation, or whether it will have to face up to something else which is sending the cost of everything which we buy higher and higher. If it is inflation that we have, it is an inflation of prices, an inflation of our cost of living. It has nothing to do with the inflation of money; it has to do with deflationary monetary policies.

It was also said that we must deal with fiscal policies, placing the emphasis there rather than on monetary policies. It is the government which decides both financial policies and fiscal policies, and the two cannot be separated. Until we bring in financial reform and combine the two with some logical fiscal reform, the problem will never be solved.

I believe that if we are to face up to the realities as they present themselves today, we will have to quit hiding behind phrases which deceive the public and which coerce them to go along with policies which perhaps are necessary within the framework of orthodoxy that the minister presented to us tonight but which are absolutely unnecessary on the basis of logic and reason.

What we are facing in Canada today is a price explosion. Our cost of living goes up and up. I want to say right now that at the root of this problem is the debt system. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle made an eloquent speech but he did not get down to any different approach. He merely talked in political terms so as to defend what happened under the last administration in light of what is happening now.

[Mr. Thompson.]

During the less than five years of that administration there was a governmental deficit in the country on the federal level as it relates to direct debt, foreign debt and balance of trade of more than $5 billion. That was accounted for in less than five years, and it now is going on and on. With it goes the cost of servicing the debt. If we did not have to pay the $1,180 million that we paid last year by way of interest, where would our deficit be today? Gone.

Why is it necessary to have deficit financing? If perchance the argument that the minister put forward tonight is correct, it seems to me that the first step which he should take as far as governmental expenditures for which he is responsible are concerned is to balance his budget this year.

In addition to this there is the matter of private debt, corporate debt and mortgage debt. The handmaiden of debt is higher taxation—you cannot get away from that. Taxes will inevitably go up. Behind the inflationary crisis we are facing is this cause. It is neither the profits which the corporations make nor the wages that the working people must demand through their labour organizations, or strikes. These are merely the symptoms of something which is much deeper. If the cost of living continues to go up, then the income in the pockets of the people must go up in proportion, or their standard of living will go down.

Along with this is the simple fact that we operate in this country on a debt policy which requires deficit financing on one hand and gross indebtedness on the private sector on the other hand, supported by a continually spiralling increase in the tax load that we carry.

Our budget this year at the federal level is over $8.5 billion. When we get the supplementary estimates that we can expect, the figure will be well over $9 billion and on the way to $10 billion. If we combine this with the cost of municipal and provincial government in this country we reach a figure that is not very far short of $20 billion for governmental expenditure alone.

We in this country are grossly over-governed. Compare that figure with the net national earnings in this country—not the gross national product but net national earnings, money coming into the pockets of the Canadian people, whether by way of commissions, the sale of produce, salaries, or what have you. Last year this figure was about $41 billion. Let us suppose that this figure increases by a reasonable amount this year; to be liberal in our estimate, let us say $43 billion is the figure for this year. What percentage of that figure is taken up with expenditure on government at the different levels? It is more than 45 per cent. In other words, more than 45 cents of every dollar which we earn goes to pay for the cost of government.

History will tell us, if we read history correctly, that no free country, no free society has ever survived when the cost of government has exceeded 50 per cent of the earnings of the people of that society. At more than 45 per cent, this is the problem we face today. This is something that must change. If the minister had really wanted to deal with this inflationary situation as it relates to the cost of living, this situation which has brought about tight money that at the present time we have in Canada, then, I think, the first thing he might have done would have been to hold firm on government expenditures, at least.

Let us look at the picture from a very elementary point of view. It is good to be elementary once in a while. Our problem in Canada is not production. We can produce far more than we are producing. We, perhaps more than any other nation—and I say this even considering the economic wealth of the United States—have solved the problem of production. Neither is our problem consumption. Sure, our standard of living has gone up, but there is nothing wrong with that. If we have the natural resources, the ability and the will to develop those natural resources, why should not our standard of living go up? Why should not every family have a home? There is nothing wrong with having a two-car garage, if that is the standard of living we want.

Our problem is not consumption. Even if we had solved that, and were consuming to our capacity, what about the millions of others in the world who go hungry? No, the problem is not consumption at all. Our problem today is one of distribution. We have not solved the economics of distribution. We are trying to apply those economics to a debt system that was geared to production in the days when there was a scarcity, and when we could not produce enough to meet our needs. We had to adapt ourselves to the conditions of the economy at that time. But conditions have changed.

Bring in a monetary policy which will cure the problems of distribution, and all these problems will disappear, as will the booms and busts of our economic system. Instead, there will be a logical and steady growth, even as every living organism must grow.

Beyond this debt picture that we have been talking about is the monetary policy that brings money into our economy. But the essential function that that money performs is that of a debt. They ridicule us, in this party, for talking about debt free money. But money was never intended to be a commodity. It is because we try to make it a commodity that we find ourselves in our present difficulties. Money is a service, a service through which we distribute our wealth, by which we are able to produce the wealth that others may consume.

It is necessary to bring our financial and monetary policies up to date, in an era where the production potential has reached tremendous heights, where there is automation and cybernation, in order for those to be geared to the distribution problems which we have. Yes, we demoralize our people. We demoralize our people today so that we, who as a people have more insurance per capita than any other people in the world, are not willing to invest our own savings in the development of our own resources. We go out and invest in our debts, instead. We hear criticism about so much United States ownership of Canadian industry. The truth of the matter is that for every per capita dollar the United States invests in Canada, three per capita Canadian dollars are invested in the United States. That is done because we do not have confidence in our own country.

Apply this regionally, and look at the west where productive capacity has expanded at an unprecedented rate, both in relation to the population and the economy at large. We do not even have financial policy here in the east, where our fiscal policies are made, where our financial centres are, to encourage investment in the west of our country.

The other day the government cancelled plans for a pipe line that was to pass through part of the United States, a pipe line that opens unlimited markets for Canadian gas across the border, and would benefit the Ontario user of gas by lowering the price which he would have to pay. In other words, we cut it off. It does not suit our national interest to let it go across the border—never mind the economy. I sometimes wonder if the government is not afraid of another pipe line debate, and rather than let the matter come before the house it disposed of the matter before it got here.

We discourage the investment of our own savings in our own resources. What we need in this country is a stable financial policy that will give us a stable dollar. We have a stable yard; we have a stable pound; we have a stable gallon. Why cannot we have a stable dollar? Why do we have to rob the generations of the future of the savings which have been put away for them today? Why do we have to rob our older citizens, our senior citizens, of their hard-earned savings that they have put away for their latter years? Why should we destroy our own savings? Why are we using a system in which a dollar is a debt dollar, which depreciates in value every year, so that over every ten or 15 year period we know it will be worth 25 per cent less? That is what the cost of living is doing to our dollar today. Why cannot we have a financial policy that will give us a stable dollar; a dollar that is worth a dollar today, tomorrow, next year and ten years from now. It can be done.

One would think with all the ability displayed on the front benches of the government, that something helpful could be defined. I do not care if it is called Social Credit, or anything else. That is not the point. We need a fiscal policy that will work, that will encourage our own people to invest, not in debts of yesterday—no—but in the prospects of an unprecedented productive tomorrow.

Today in Canada our most valuable resource is our own credit. That is something which ought to be used, and used, with the resourcefulness of our own people. Why cannot we use our own credit and our own resources, for the benefit of our own people? That we do not is a paradox.

I would say in closing—my time is nearly up—that the number of ridiculous paradoxes in our economy shows that it is redirection we need, rather than reduced speed. Why dampen the boom? The construction industry is forced to slow down because of manpower shortages. Nevertheless the cost of governmental administration grows by leaps and bounds, to meet the needs of the new welfare state measures. We are urged to buy Canadian assets back from the United States, but the provisions of our present financial policies make it necessary for our industry to turn to the United States for the kind of risk capital it needs. That is why the west is moving forward; it is not because it is disloyal to Canada, but because the financial centres of the east do not have the vision necessary for the nation.

[Mr. Thompson.]

Why cannot we use our own credit, and our own capital. Canadians invest in the national debt because the return is more secure than from an investment in resource development. Though it is necessary to improve our balance of payments problem, tight money policies and taxation tend to put our producers in a non-competitive position. As I say, the problem is not that of production, but rather the facilitating of measures to enable the distribution of what we are able to produce.

An economist recently commented that we are learning to live with prosperity but we do not know as much about managing it as we do about getting there. Our need in Canada is not to hold back, but to move ahead. In the distribution of goods and services we are in a field where we are just beginning to tap our potential. We pat ourselves on the back for being good businessmen, but we rationalize our dollars—those dollars which have been expended, which have been invested—as being good dollars. At the same time our trade deficits grow and our production slows down.

We slow down the building industry. Today, in Canada, apartment occupancy is at 99 per cent. It is easy to cut a building program off; it takes much longer to get it going again. The disposing of surpluses is a narrow and old fashioned way of assessing our tremendous production potential.

What about those many countries which do not have enough to eat? What about world markets for our primary and secondary products? The time has come to institute policies which go beyond the mere sale of surplus commodities or the cutting back of productive capacity.

Finally, we need to make advances in the field of distribution, moving goods from wherever they are produced to wherever they are needed. World trade on a new basis for international settlement presents another challenge. We cannot continue in this regard as we have done in the past in the face of one of the greatest challenges of our generation.

Only when all Canadians have an adequate standard of living, only when all Canadians are adequately housed and properly fed, can we adopt the attitudes which have been expounded tonight and pat ourselves on the back. Only when trading policies are developed which are capable of channeling our surplus goods to the needy populations of the developing countries will we be able to congratulate ourselves on what we have achieved. In the meantime, there are too many things to be done, for us to express approval of the financial policy which we have heard enunciated tonight.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, our primary concern when debating this problem of inflation tonight is its effect upon the Canadian people. While I do not belong to the generation which remembers the kind of inflation which occurred in Germany between the two wars, even those of my years are reminded of those days when the people of Germany had, literally, to take their money to market in wheelbarrows. It is because we recognize that inflation affects each and every citizen of this country that every member of this house is taking the present debate very seriously.

I should like to point out that those who suffer most from the effects of inflation are, almost invariably, the poor—those families which are locked in poverty, deprivation or destitution. Time and time again hon. members belonging to the New Democratic Party have recognized that when inflation strikes it strikes with greatest force at such things as food, clothing and housing, all of them non-luxury items, essential items which vitally concern those who are perhaps less fortunate than ourselves.

What I found most disturbing about the minister's speech this afternoon was the fact—and many hon. members have already mentioned this—that he had decided to adopt negative, old fashioned methods of coping with modern problems. Invariably the solutions he proposed in his statement this afternoon, the horse-and-buggy methods which he has in mind, are bound to adversely affect the poor, the destitute and the deprived more than any others in this country. Those who are living on fixed or on shrinking incomes, those who are already suffering from the serious inroads of inflation, will be even more seriously affected by the measures which the minister has proposed today.

As my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle so ably said a few moments ago, instead of relying on this negative, horse-and-buggy approach the minister should be enunciating a system of positive politics and policies to deal with modern problems.

We are told that the parents of school children will have to pay up to 15 per cent more for school clothing compared with a year ago. That is the amount of increase in the price of shoes and all the other things needed before children can be sent back to school. What about food prices. Last year, processed cheese cost 39 cents a pound. This year the price is 41 cents. The price of cheddar cheese last year was 65 cents. This year, it is 69 cents. A pound of bacon cost 89 cents last year. Now it costs $1.39. Corn cost 35 cents a dozen, peeled. This year the price is 49 cents.

Every housewife who went to the supermarket last week knows these things. A ten-dollar basket of groceries a year ago cost $13.08 today. Is there a single measure announced by the minister today which is likely to alleviate this situation? I say that the negative, bureaucratic methods of approach adopted by the minister will not even begin to solve the problem of inflation which is besetting the Canadian people.

The minister told us: We are doing pretty well, compared with other countries. We hear such things said time and time again. Sir, when I bring this statement to the attention of my constituents and of other Canadians in all walks of life, they tell me they do not care what is going on in other countries. They say it is our job here in Canada to solve Canadian problems. The fact that other countries are not doing well is no excuse for us to say we can do badly. It is rather like finding satisfaction in the fact that a deskmate has flunked his examinations when you yourself have failed. And the minister is going to fail his examination in tackling inflation if he thinks for one moment that these negative policies of his will work out satisfactorily. They will not.

In outlining the principles of inflation the minister told us that basically speaking we are faced with long-term problems and short-term problems. The long-term problems includes automation, technical training, and preparing our work force for new roles in a scientific age. But though he said these things this afternoon, what were the first two priorities to be cut in the short-term program?

We were told we could expect cuts in assistance to research. We were told that the provision of scholarships to universities would be delayed. In other words, it is as if the minister were telling a runner to put on heavy working boots rather than running shoes before trying to win a mile race.

Everyone in this house realizes that while Britain spends $5 per scientist and the United States between $10 and $15, Canada spends only $1 per scientist. Everyone recognizes that government, which has a vital and genuine role to play in positive policies as a means of combating inflation, will have to increase, and increase again, the amount of its assistance to research.

We have a terrible situation in Canada, where we are losing doctors and medical personnel because we have not supported research in our universities. Yet, of all things, the minister places at the top of his list of cutbacks today assistance to research and education, two primary measures which we must bolster if in a long-term manner we are going to combat the problems of inflation. This is a paradox which I do not believe the government can explain away.

This country is going to be in serious trouble in terms of inflation, in terms of our economic approach to Canadian problems unless we drastically step up our assistance to research; but the government has told us today that, along with postponing assistance to higher education, research is going to get the axe.

I can quite understand the minister saying we must deal with short-term measures; but his negative short-term measures, plus the fact that they interfere with the long-term measures we need to combat inflation, are not the answer. Everybody in this House of Commons who talks with constituents in the lower income brackets, people who have a motivation upwards to better their role in Canada, recognizes that housing, clothing, education and foodstuffs are the main things in their economic picture. But what are we told? Not only does inflation affect the poor, but it is mainly the poor, the deprived and the destitute who are told to buckle their belts in the program the minister has announced.

What the minister told us today in effect is that the reactionary right-wing group in the Liberal party is finally triumphant; and that, Mr. Chairman, is one of the reasons I quit that party 12 years ago. I realized that this was going to happen. I recognized that when loyal and excellent civil servants like the Minister of Finance and half the range of the front bench finally took over control of the Liberal party, along with the rest of the establishment, that would be the victory of the right-wing, and it has happened today. Where are all the young, forward-looking members in the Liberal party? They are not in the chamber tonight supporting the minister, because not for one minute do they believe in the policies he has enunciated.

Where is the Minister of National Health and Welfare ever since he was told summarily this afternoon that medicare was now in limbo?

An hon. Member: Where are those who support you?

Mr. Fulton: Right here.

Mr. Grafftey: They are not behind the curtain, they are in the chamber.

An hon. Member: Where is your leader?

Mr. Grafftey: I believe he is preparing a speech for tomorrow. This is a serious proposition and I shall repeat it in this debate three, four and five times. It is a tragedy that in 1966 the poor, the destitute and the deprived, the people most seriously affected by inflation, are faced with policies that are going to affect them much more than the rest of the country. I say, let no more members get up in this debate, as did the minister and some others, and praise the prosperity of this country. What does prosperity mean to 35 per cent of the people in this so-called rich nation who are living in destitution, deprivation and poverty? We should not be patting ourselves on our backs about prosperity, and we should not be patting ourselves on our backs about the minister's announcement, which will not in one iota assist these people.

I do not want to be a demagogue. I do not want to say it is an easy problem; but I do say, as has been said in this debate already, that the minister's reactionary, out-dated, horse-and-buggy, negative approach to this whole problem—what I call an establishment approach—will not satisfy very many Canadians when they read about it tomorrow morning.

Rather than emphasize a negative approach, let us talk about the positive things we can do in the short-term and in the long-term to combat inflation. I for one do not believe, for example, that housing should be considered in the cyclical approach to combat inflation. Canada is almost the sole country in the modern western world that has not a public or quasi public approach to housing.

Housing is not always considered as a social welfare measure, but at least in western Eurcpe and in most countries in the modern western world it has never been taken into governmental plans in terms of combatting inflation. Today thousands upon thousands of young and middle-aged Canadians are looking for proper housing, but last year 85 per cent of the housing loans made by C.M.H.C. were to Canadians with incomes of $6,000 and upwards.

What are we doing for the poorer people in this country who want decent housing? Our negative, dinosaur Minister of Labour—God Almighty, when will he resign; it won't be too soon for me—not only has ruined labour-management relations but has no housing policy. He and the rest of the ex-bureaucrats sitting on the treasury benches are telling the poorer people of Canada that because of inflation and their own old establishment method of dealing with it, they are not going to have any more houses.

What is happening today? There are hundreds of thousands of Canadians, young and middle-aged, who are looking for houses, but the government tells them the situation is going to be much, much worse before it gets better because we have to combat inflation.

We are told that medicare is postponed for a year. We are told that the Canadian people will have to postpone the fulfilment of their desires for new housing. In Toronto at present the housing situation is more critical than during the second world war. People in my riding, young married people with families who were born at the beginning of the last war, living on incomes of $65 to $85 a week, are paying $75 to $80 a month in rent for terribly rundown houses; yet for the same money they could be paying regular capital and interest payments for C.M.H.C. financed housing. What is the Minister of Labour doing about it? Absolutely nothing. He is just going to let the thing find its own level, and this afternoon the Minister of Finance said that the situation is going to get worse because housing is a factor we must cut back on in terms of battling inflation.

Who is it that gets it in the neck every time, Mr. Chairman, as a result of such negative, horse-and-buggy methods? It is the poor again, again and again, who are already so seriously affected by inflation and who will be even more seriously affected by the old, establishment, classical method used to combat it.

I cannot find all the statistics I have gathered on this matter at the moment but I do have a note here which says, for example, that in 1961 when Britain spent $3.15 per capita on public housing, and the United States .08 cents per capita, Canada spent only .10 cents per capita. How about that for a record in the housing field, in a nation that pats itself on the back whenever we get on our feet to say we have the second highest standard of living in the world?

The fact is that we have no housing policy for people in the lower income groups. I suggest that the government should devise a public housing policy in the very near future to deal with this problem, because that coupled with what is happening in rising prices for foodstuffs and clothing, all essential, non-luxury items, affect those people who should be least affected in the whole, total picture of inflation.

Sir, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle so ably said, rather than have this negative approach, this restrictive approach, to the problems of our country in so far as inflation is concerned, we should challenge the imagination of the Canadian people, As a Conservative, I say that we should not talk down to the Canadian people with restrictive and negative policies and only tell them to tighten their belts and this sort of thing. We will have to tighten our belts, but this should not be the be-all and end-all of our policy. We should recognize that the government should emphasize the fact that excellence, quality and specialization should characterize our approach to social, political and economic problems both at home and abroad.

I believe that rather than have negative policies we must emphasize a program of positive politics which simply recognizes the spiritual character as well as the dignity of the individual. Building on that which is best from the past, we should usher in in Canada an age of excellence and an age in which we enunciate a program of positive politics. We should expect nothing but the best from our nation and from each and every individual citizen.

In tackling the problem of inflation, I believe the government has a dynamic part to play in encouraging individual and national excellence. Let me put before the minister and the house a few basic ideas. I believe, as the minister stated today, that men in public office must be willing to emphasize the duties as well as the rights of the individual citizen. The minister did that and did it well today. But what about research, which received the axe from the minister in his speech. I believe that rather than cut back government assistance to research—one of the long term measures which materially will combat inflation—if we believe that Canada has a role to play so far as national excellence is concerned, the government must immediately increase its assistance to basic research, especially medical research. For every dollar we spend on research the British spend three and the Americans spend 10 or 15.

I plead with the minister not to approach this aspect of the subject with a closed mind. I cannot for one minute believe, when the government has a sober second thought on this, that assistance to research can or will be cut back sharply in this program.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask where I made any reference to cutting back on research. The statement was that the rate of spending on research in Canada must not be as rapid as it might be.

Mr. Grafftey: I do stand corrected when I used the words cut back, but even if it is not going to be as high as expected, I still am very concerned.

I believe this perhaps is delving into the realm of theory, but rather than looking over our shoulder at what is going on in the United States and asking whether their cost of living or standard of living is higher or lower than ours, we in Canada should realize that excellence invariably means specialization and selectivity. We live next door to the United States which has the highest standard of living in the world and too often we are influenced by considerations of bigness. Invariably we enter into areas of activity in which we have no business. If we are to encourage national excellence in a positive way, in dealing with problems such as inflation, we should do so by concentrating on those things which we are by nature best at doing. We should moreover place more emphasis on the quality of our undertakings than on the bigness of our ventures.

As has been said in the house during the railway debate we must seriously consider, and soon, how best we can bring down progressive management-labour legislation in order to help in this situation. I realize the minister has mentioned the possibility that we will have a national income policy. Let us at the next session get down to business and bring these measures before the house in a positive manner as quickly as possible. I recognize the problems the minister has talked about in respect of Canada, especially when enunciating a guide lines policy for wages and prices. Even in the United Kingdom, where they have a unitary state and where the population in this homogeneous island invariably rallies behind government leadership, they are finding difficulty in making the policy work. Here we would have the problem of sharing jurisdiction with the provinces and, as the minister so well said, we do rely on imports and exports, and this makes it more difficult to have a meaningful set of wage and price guide lines. Yet I feel the federal government can and possibly should take the leadership at the next federal-provincial meeting and indicate wage and price guide lines which can be meaningful. This is one more reason that we should convene as quickly as possible a conference to modernize our constitution so that Canada will have a modern constitution to deal with modern problems in modern times. It was only five or six years ago that no minister of finance would have admitted in this house that the federal authority really could not control inflation of prices and wages. The Wartime Prices and Trade Board did have constitutional difficulty in this regard. I think it is right to say that no minister of finance in the last five or six years would ever have said that it is pretty hard for the federal authority to give meaningful leadership in combating inflation in the decade of the 60's.

I recognize the minister's difficulties, but I agree, with Premier Johnson of the province of Quebec that we cannot divorce fiscal matters from constitutional problems. I believe that at the next federal-provincial conference a beginning should be made to tackle th problems in a sensible approach so that we can have a made-in-Canada constitution suitable to modern times, if we ever are to expect the federal authority to give proper leadership in tackling problems such as inflation.

What else must we do in a positive way if we are to combat inflation, especially in regard to those now living in destitution, poverty and deprivation in Canada? What are some appropriate measures that must be taken? I do not want to be partisan but I will tell the minister that most people who believe in modern methods to tackle the modern problems brought before us by modern inflation have been rather disappointed at the steps proposed. I include in this category many of the backbenchers in the minister's party, who will probably tell him in the next caucus how disappointed they are with the old-fashioned techniques and methods the minister enunciated this afternoon in the House of Commons.

What are some of the remedies we will have to think about in a positive way? First, excessive interest rates must be controlled. Today—and I am now speaking for myself—the farmer can obtain a farm improvement loan at a reasonable rate of interest. These loans are backed by the government and administered by our banks. Household and consumer loans must be established in a similar manner so that the householder may obtain appliances without paying an interest rate which at times is as high as 35 per cent. I believe that this house should seriously consider providing household and consumer loans under a household and consumer loan act if we are to deal adequately with high interest rates and their effect upon inflation. Such a measure would help people especially in the lower income groups. We must recognize that area development, rehousing, retraining, health measures, urban renewal, the building of technical schools, the training and retraining of our workers are all long-term measures that can never be deferred by short-term approaches, if in the end result we are to lick the problem of inflation.

My great fear is that the minister, in today enunciating negative, short-term remedies to combat inflation will diminish for the next year federal support, initiative and interest in all those problems involving federal government expenditure such as retraining, rehousing, rezoning, ARDA legislation and the problems that will face us in our large metropolitan areas and such as decentralization of industry into rural and suburban areas. The hon. member for Red Deer a few minutes ago was decrying the fact that government—

The Chairman: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent to the hon. member to conclude his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Grafftey: I would just like to say that the hon. member for Red Deer, the leader of the Social Credit party, was decrying the fact that government expenditure had become so large, and he said that no nation in the past has been able to survive these kinds of expenditures. I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that no nation in history has been confronted with the modern problems that confront modern governments. Whether we like it or not, big government—whether we are left wing, right wing or in the middle of the road—is here to stay and we will have to accept this fact. More public money will be spent and the money will have to come out of the taxpayers' pocket. Therefore long term measures must be taken to combat inflation and help those who need help in a country, especially where the silent, voiceless poor often do not fall under the aegis of private or public help.

It is my hope—and I am being partisan when I say this—that we shall not compound the felony of the minister's announcement of this afternoon. Not only will his short term, negative measures not work in my view, but I am concerned that they will have a negative result on the long term, basic measures which ultimately will combat inflation.

I hope the government will have sober second thoughts. The Canadian people in business, labour, farm groups, taxpayers and everybody else are ready to tighten their belts in the national interest. But the Canadian people realize that, basically, only positive policies will solve this problem. But this is not the message they got from the minister today. I hope that the triumph of the right wing side of the ministerial benches will be short lived and that the grass roots members in the party opposite will soon rear their heads and the real national interest will be served.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I listened very attentively to the speech made this afternoon by the minister and the remarks of the spokesmen of the various opposition parties.

I try, considering everything that has been said, to form an unbiased opinion, to understand the problem facing the House of Commons, which is to find a solution to inflation which is rampant.

The minister made a statement this afternoon which I find courageous and realistic. The minister admits that he has not succeeded in finding a panacea or a cure-all to that current world-wide disease known as inflation. He made that diagnosis and, after consultation with his colleagues, with experts of his department and probably with experts of foreign countries whose economy is closely related to ours, he proposes to the House of Commons measures which I find acceptable.

On the other hand, I hear remarks of all hues and shades from the opposition, and I think that this is democratic government at its best since it is the role of the opposition to stir up the government, to keep them on their toes, to force them to be most efficient and to reconsider their political philosophy, and to make some suggestions. But I still conclude, Mr. Chairman, that the responsibility in this inflation period rests upon a duly elected government and if the government should adopt all the opposition's theories, it would find itself in a false and awkward situation, for those theories do not seem consistent to me, and are even contradictory in many cases. So very candidly, I decided to repose my confidence in the government who has the responsibility, I might say a special grace, and I will even add, who can count on the advice of an army of experts not only in Canada but in other countries.

I would say that the opposition suffers from two complexes: a complex of partisanship which is understandable because when one is a member of a body whatever it may be, one must show its colours; that is understandable. I see some members in the opposition who look intelligent and are somewhat embarrassed to be forced to stand up for their party when in their innermost heart, they admit that the minister's solutions are very realistic. I also noticed in the opposition another complex, a complex of superiority. We lack the minister's wide experience, since he spent many years in that department before entering politics. We do not have the same experience he has, with all those experts and technicians, and through the consultations he can have with financial experts of all countries. But some members rise here and tell the minister that this or that should be done, because they know the answer to inflation. I call that a superiority complex. And I can see in it only one advantage, and it is to provoke the government and compel it to do its best in this financial crisis, limited, if you want, but which threatens to get worse.

I felt that the member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) had greatly weakened his argument when he criticized the government for wasting time with the Spencer case and the Munsinger affair, instead of settling the financial problems of the country.

Having followed federal politics for a number of years, I find some kind of cynicism in this statement because for the last two years I have been observing the official opposition looking for a nigger in the government woodpile, trying to bare real or imaginary scandals. In fact, I have heard with my own ears the insistance shown in the defence of a spy who none the less seemed quite happy with his fate, all of which became the Spencer affair. I have witnessed the witch hunt culminating in the discovery of a witch called Munsinger. I now say that if the opposition had been more constructive, it would have allowed the government to move effective legislation, and it now seems hardly justified to charge them with a waste of time.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is an artist who dazzles me. He has a wealth of expressions which is almost unbelievable and for me who enjoys good speakers, I admit I am dazzled by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. But it may be because of such facility, because of such brilliant and extraordinary gifts he enjoys, that the argument, in the end, appears all the more inconsistent, because he should draw more consistent conclusions than those at which he arrives. I think he must be afflicted with an occupational, or I should rather say a political quirk because he is always nursing an extreme socialistic trend, and I hardly believe the country is ready for that yet. For instance, what he says somewhere struck me strongly: "Tonight I would hate to be a Liberal." because I told myself that tonight he would not be happier if he were a Conservative or a member of the New Democratic Party, if he had to assume the responsibilities of the government and solve that problem created by inflation which today is an international problem to which the best experts cannot find an adequate solution. I feel that he would not be happier if he had that responsibility. Fortunately, he does not have it and then he can allow himself to dazzle us with a display of brilliant remarks and well-balanced sentences.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mongrain: When I heard the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) tell us that the government stated, without any evidence, that we had reached our maximum production, I asked myself some questions. I told myself that explanations should have been given, of course. I think the minister meant our maximum production with the means at our disposal right now. But like everyone else, I read in the newspapers that our industry and our economy are paralysed up to a certain point, because we do not have the leaders we need. We have to import each year over 1,000 engineers or technicians who are the leaders, who put the producers to work in our industry, because there is a shortage of technicians in Canada. It is a brutal fact for which the Liberal party or the Conservative party or the N.D.P. are not responsible, but it is still a brutal fact which we must admit and live with.

I think this shows the hon. minister to be right when he tells us: I think we have reached our production limit with the means at hand. Let us find other ways to increase our production we do not lack resources.

The hon. member for Villeneuve really amuses me. He also enlightens me, for he is tenacious and most inspired. His colourful language is, I think, also interesting for the House of Commons. I am always the better for having listened to him. Before the last election he came one time to speak in Trois-Rivières, and the Créditistes took 4,500 votes. He came twice during the last election; they took 2,000 votes. I shall invite him to come and speak three times at the next elections; they will probably win 200 votes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear.

Mr. Mongrain: I must say, Mr. Chairman, that nevertheless I listen to him with interest, just like the crowds back home who gather to hear him, and then tell me: We are happy with Réal, because he gives us a good time and does not collect any amusement tax.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, our Créditiste friends give me the impression of being dreamers, of doing what is called wishful thinking. It's nice; I too would like to see our economy re-drawn along different lines, but I do not think one has to take a course in advanced economics to realize the close interrelationship between our financial system and that of other countries of the world to realize that we cannot revolutionize the others, unless there is a response, or a similar movement within the countries which we do business with.

Therefore, blaming the government for not doing that revolution right now is truly indulging in wishful thinking, dreaming a little, Mr. Chairman. For instance, when I hear the leader of the Social Credit tell us: Remove taxes and thus reduce the cost of living, it is simple. Of course, it is a truism: reducing taxes will reduce the cost of living, and at the same time he tells us: Increase family allowances, increase unemployment insurance, pay a dividend to every Canadian citizen.

Of course, if we could, with the help of all the countries whose economy is closely related to ours, make such a revolution, it is possible that that theory might be acceptable, but at the present time I think that it is a dream. I think that we have to cure a serious disease called inflation. That reminds me of a fable by La Fontaine which said: All the animals ill with the plague did not die but all were stricken. Inflation affects all of us, and not only in Canada. The Liberal party is not to blame.

I would also like to take a few minutes to prove that this disease of inflation bears some resemblance to the Spanish flu which we knew in 1918, which struck but did not kill everyone and gave rise to a host of quacks who said: Do this, do that, I will cure you. Quite often, unfortunately, people died instead of getting better. That disease is an international one; it is not raging in Canada only but throughout the world.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39 (A) deemed to have been moved.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE—INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF MEDICARE AND OLD AGE PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, August 29, I asked the Prime Minister whether we could anticipate something being done about old age pensions in this part of the present session. The Prime Minister's reply was to the effect that the government's legislative program for this part of the session would be made known to the house as quickly as possible.

Then, on Thursday, September 1, I asked the Prime Minister whether he was in a position to reaffirm the government's intention to have medicare in effect on July 1, 1967. The following was his reply:

> Mr. Speaker, as soon as we complete consideration of the railway legislation it is my intention to make a statement in the house about the priority attached to the other pieces of legislation to be dealt with during this part of the session. The medicare legislation will be included in that list.

There were two commitments by the Prime Minister to make a statement to the house on the legislative plans for this part of the present session. On the second occasion in particular, the Prime Minister stated that he would be making a statement to the house and that the list of legislation to be dealt with during this part of the session would include medicare.

Yesterday, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I asked the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin) if he could tell us on what day that statement by the Prime Minister would be made. He asked me to wait until today. I asked the question again today. We had an interesting and amiable exchange, but got no information. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, I will be told that I have had my answer in the statement made today by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). I suggest that today's statement is not an answer to the questions I put to the Prime Minister asking him for a statement to the house as to the government's legislative intentions.

We have been told, of course, by the Minister of Finance that the government intends to go ahead with medicare legislation.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

Oh yes, we are told it is going to be put through at this session. But the effective date is to be changed from July 1, 1967, to July 1, 1968. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this way of stringing the house and the country along has gone on far too long in Canada. With respect to old age pensions, again we have been strung along. Today, the Minister of Finance talked about the income guarantee program, and we know that is the name the government applies to its old age pension proposal. However, today we were not told what would be the effective date of whatever program the government proposes to introduce.

Now, despite the answer given today by the Minister of Finance I still put my question. We, in this house, are conscious of the number of times that this government has had to change its position, the number of times it has had to retreat. I suggest that the public outcry will call for a change on these two points. The government cannot get away with no action, not even a statement to us, on the old age pension question. The government cannot get away with another year's delay in medicare. To say that these things are inflationary is utter nonsense. They are the least inflationary expenditures the government could make, namely money for old people to buy the necessities of life and a medicare program which simply redistributes the way in which we spend our money on medical care.

I suggest, therefore, that my question still stands. May I put it to the Acting Prime Minister, or whichever minister is going to answer it, in this way: Are you going to raise old age pensions in this session? Are you going to stick to July 1, 1967, as the effective date for medicare? Or are you going to let the brunt of the high cost of living fall most heavily on the people with medical bills and on our senior citizens? It is not good enough for the government to pull the rug out from under its ministers, to pull the rug out from under the people of this country. If we are going to have respect for parliament, let us stand by our commitments. I ask the government tonight what it is really going to do on these two issues: an immediate increase in the old age pension and standing by the effective date of July 1, 1967, for medicare?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the unusual type of question put by the hon. member tonight in this adjournment debate. He has addressed himself to a question that is usually dealt with by the house leaders in their meetings and discussions—that is, the priority to be given to legislation before the house. Particularly am I surprised at his attitude when the government has already given its firm commitment that it intends to proceed this session to enact both the measures to which he referred. The government will proceed with the legislation on medicare and the supplementary old age pension legislation just as quickly as it can.

Mr. Howard: Let us meet next week then instead of taking a recess.

Mr. McIlraith: Our present and firm intention, which I think was indicated to the other house leaders, was that when we resumed the session we would deal first with the second reading of the Bank Act legislation so as to get it to committee and then take the medicare bill.

Nothing has been said in the house that would in any way interfere with that program. Nothing has been said today or at any other time that in any way calls into question that program. The program remains unchanged.

Mr. Knowles: Did you not hear the Minister of Finance?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He never said anything contrary to that at all.

Mr. McIlraith: In view of the interjection, I should add that the Minister of Finance said nothing that is in any way in conflict with what I have said now.

Mr. Knowles: Just a full year's delay.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—DONATION OF CANADIAN BOOKS TO FRENCH LIBRARIES

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr Speaker, with your kind permission I will try to make my remarks in English in response to my colleagues in the house who occasionally display a lot of effort in extending this same courtesy to the French speaking members when they try to speak French. Therefore I beg the indulgence of the house, because I am not a master of the English vocabulary and cannot speak it as well as French.

This afternoon I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question as a result of seeing something in the papers today. He had announced during a dinner for a French minister that the government is considering offering to six French libraries in different regions of France a collection of Canadian books, both in English and French, 800 in all. I am not trying to be destructively critical; I am just trying to give an opportunity to the government to clarify the situation and perhaps give more information to the public.

I should like to know from the minister or his parliamentary assistant when the government plans to make this gift of books. Second, what will be the proportion of French books and English books? Third, who will be in charge of choosing the French books, and what kind of French books are to be considered? Will they be novels, detective stories, best sellers, or will they be about all kinds of subjects so as to give an idea of our Canadian culture, if there is any? I suppose these books will be bought through Canadian booksellers. I should like the government to assure us of this fact. The last question is this: Is the government considering doing this same thing year after year—that is, doing it next year, and in the years that will follow?

I conclude my remarks by saying that this is a very constructive move. This is very good public relations and I am sure all members of the house will want to congratulate the government for doing what it has done.

[Translation]

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would like to thank my colleague for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) who was kind enough to ask his question in English and I would like to return the compliment in the best Canadian tradition by answering in French.

Mr. Speaker, that project has been devised to put at the disposal of the French public in general, such as specialists, scholars and researchers, the bulk of our publications in the main fields of culture in Canada. It is part of the cultural agreement signed by France and Canada on November 17, 1965.

The books were chosen by experts in our National Library in consultation with the services of the Department of External Affairs, taking into account the standards used in libraries. The proportion of French books is approximately 65 per cent.

Virtually all areas of Canadian culture are represented: French and English Canadian literature, history, geography, sociology, economics, politics, philosophy, science etc.

The National Library has already acquired most of the selected titles and is now busy with the listing and labelling. As soon as the department and the French authorities, working in co-operation, have made their choice of the recipient libraries, we will proceed with the distribution of collections. In this connection, the departmental officers took advantage of the presence in Ottawa of the French Minister of Education, Mr. Christian Fouchet, to establish the facts of the question with him today. He promised he would soon communicate to us the list of libraries suggested by the French authorities.

We are of the opinion that this presentation of books should contribute to make Canadian culture better known in France and to bring our two countries closer.

The possibility is not excluded, subject to the means at our disposal, that we may consider, if such were the desire of French authorities, bringing up to date later the collections that we are about to offer the French government.

NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE—APPLICATION OF CANADIAN LAWS TO HOCKEY PLAYERS

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, might I thank the hon. member for Trois-Rivières for his courtesy toward English speaking members. I regret that the hon. member for Rosedale did not extend the same courtesy.

This afternoon I thought it advisable to ask the Solicitor General this following question with regard to the hockey player, Carl Brewer. I asked whether the Solicitor General will——be notifying that slave-holding state known as the National Hockey League that the free laws of Canada apply to hockey players as well as to all other men in Canada.

This question was prompted by two very pompous statements which have been made, one in Toronto and one in Montreal, by two officials connected with professional hockey in this country.

Carl Brewer is a man of 27 years of age who during the past season attended the University of Toronto. He has been asked to accept a position on the Canadian national hockey team which will be competing for the world championship in Europe and he has been very anxious to accept such an opportunity. But when he spoke to the officials of the Toronto Maple Leaf hockey team who, in the parlance of the game, "own" him, he was advised by the coach and general manager that it would be impossible to release him because if he were to be placed on the waiver list New York would pick him up.

The Canadian Press, a nation-wide news gathering organization which has a reputation extending over 60 years, reports Punch Imlach as having stated with regard to Brewer:

There's no possible way I can put him on the list, knowing that the New York Rangers would pick him up. It's not me that's going to stop him, it's the whole league.

It is interesting to note that the "whole league" consists of four American teams and two Canadian teams. It is also interesting to note that four American teams would have the right to stop a Canadian boy from playing on Canada's national hockey team after he had expressed a desire to do so.

Even more mouth-filling and pompous are the remarks attributed to Mr. Clarence Campbell, president of the National Hockey League out of Montreal in which he pointed out that not only would the National Hockey League have to grant waivers, but every team in the three minor professional leagues, American, western and central would have to refuse to draft him for a price of $3,000.

I have referred before, particularly on December 21, 1963 in this house, to the slaves who are performing for professional sports in this country, particularly hockey, and when you find them talking about a draft price of $3,000, and hear them talking about the "owners" of a player, and when you see there is no freedom of movement, no further evidence is needed that there is a slave situation in the National Hockey League.

I say that any adult citizen of a free country—and I consider Canada to be a free country—should be able to live his life exactly as he thinks best without being told by some would-be employer: You must work for me and for nobody else. How would you like it if you belonged to one of the professions, let us say the law, and you were told you were obliged to work for a particular employer, the XYZ Corporation, and that if you did not agree to do so you would never be allowed to practice law?

This is the arrangement which the National Hockey League puts into its nefarious agreement with the Canadian amateur hockey association and the international ice hockey federation. I call on the Solicitor General of Canada to advise this National Hockey League or at least those teams which perform under Canadian names that the laws of this country take precedence over any house regulations which have been drawn up either by the National Hockey League or by the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association with regard to the movement of players from one team to another, or out of the league, should they wish to go.

On December 21, 1963, I drew attention to the fact that on July 4, 1963, Mr. Justice Wilberforce in the chancery division of the High Court of Great Britain had ruled in the celebrated case of Eastham v. Newcastle United Football Club, in which that club had not been using the services of Mr. Eastham, that the action of Newcastle United with regard to this player was restraint of trade, and that the player was entitled to make whatever deal he could with owners of other clubs, wherever he might wish to go.

I would ask the Solicitor General of Canada, if he is not willing to introduce an emancipation bill to release the slaves, at least to draw the attention of the National Hockey League to the decision of Mr. Justice Wilberforce who has ruled that a player has the right to deal with the owners of other clubs, wherever he might wish to go. This is a legal precedent which can be quoted and used in this country, taken from Britain where it was handed down on July 4, 1963.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for raising a matter of considerable interest. Earlier this year the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Favreau) informed the house that the director under the Combines Investigation Act takes the position that the field of professional sport is outside the purview of the act. On the same day the minister further informed the house that the question as to whether and to what extent services may be included under the ambit of the act is presently under consideration.

I wish to confirm that a study into service industries at present not within the scope of the Combines Investigation Act, including professional sports, is being undertaken in the combines branch. As previously announced, however, it is not the intention to make piecemeal amendments to the act at the present time pending the findings and recommendations of the Economic Council of Canada concerning combines, mergers, monopolies and other matters recently referred to it by the government.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

APPENDIX

UNDERTAKING BY C.P.R. TO PAY MUNICIPAL TAXES IN PRAIRIE PROVINCES

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY

Montreal, August 29, 1966

Ian D. Sinclair,
President

Dear Mr. Pickersgill:

You will recall conversations we have held over some months relative to whether as a contribution to the rationalization of Canadian transportation legislation, Canadian Pacific would be prepared voluntarily to forgo the perpetual exemption from municipal taxation provided in Clause 16 of its contract of 21st October, 1880, which is the Schedule to the Canadian Pacific Railway Act, S.C. (1881) Chap. 1.

This exemption from municipal taxation applies to the main line of Canadian Pacific outside of the boundaries of the original "Postage Stamp" Province of Manitoba, across Saskatchewan and Alberta. This exemption has contractual, statutory and constitional validity.

One of the points that you raised in our discussions was that the exemption imposed a burden upon the affected municipalities which is not borne by other municipalities on the Canadian Pacific system. You also raised the point that a perpetual provision such as that referred to did not take into account changes and varying circumstances which had occurred in the many years since the contract was executed by Canadian Pacific and the Government of Canada.

I have discussed the matter with the Directors of the Company and they have authorized me to say that, under the arrangement hereinafter mentioned, the Company is prepared to forgo voluntarily perpetual exemption from taxation by the local authorities on our main line in the Prairie Provinces in three equal stages: one-third for the year commencing January 1 after legislation is enacted modernizing and rationalizing existing legislation and taking into account, among other things, the effective changed conditions on freight rates otherwise fixed; a further one-third in the succeeding year; the balance in the third year from the commencement of the period as stated.

The Canadian Pacific proposes that the Government of Canada ascertain from the municipalities involved the municipal taxes that would have been payable, subject to statutory procedures as to assessment appeals, had the exemption not been in effect. When this amount has been determined, Canadian Pacific would make a grant of an equal amount to Her Majesty the Queen in the right of Canada for distribution to the municipalities involved in such manner as the Government of Canada might from time to time deem appropriate.

At any time after the expiry of the period indicated above, the Canadian Pacific would have no objection to action being taken to amend the constitution and the legislation to terminate the perpetual exemption from local taxation referred to.

You are free to make the position of Canadian Pacific public whenever it seems to you desirable to do so in the public interest.

Yours very truly,
Ian D. Sinclair

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORDER OF BUSINESS TO BE CONSIDERED THIS DAY

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thought it would be helpful to hon. members if I were to take a moment to outline the government's intentions regarding the program for today's sitting. In an effort to do this I should indicate to hon. members that they will notice on today's order paper under government notices of motions a motion to amend the terms of reference of the joint committee dealing with consumer credit so that committee will be instructed "also to inquire into and report upon the trends in the cost of living in Canada and factors which may have contributed to changes in the cost of living in Canada in recent months." Some reference was made to this motion last night in the speech of the Minister of Finance. I believe that motion in the normal course of business will be transferred under standing order 21(2) to orders of the day for consideration later this day or at the next sitting. I believe that is the form.

This motion could be called when we come to orders of the day, and it could be debated and carried on the understanding that immediately that is done we would call the estimates of the Department of Finance and continue our discussion of the estimates, as was done yesterday. Or we could call the estimates first and then consider the motion later in the day.

We also have to put the formal motion for adjournment, which is in the precise terms of the motion carried on July 14. Perhaps I can refresh the minds of hon. members by indicating that that motion read, in part, in this way: "that when this house adjourns at the end of the ... this ... sitting it shall stand adjourned until Wednesday, October 5, at 2.30 o'clock p.m.". Then there was the proviso about an earlier calling back should that be necessary. That motion will require to be put at some time, and if it is agreeable I propose to move it when we reach motions in our proceedings today.

I am open to suggestions from other house leaders or other hon. members as to what disposition we should make of the other notice of motion to which I referred, the notice of motion enlarging the terms of reference of the committee to investigate the rising cost of living. If hon. members prefer to discuss the estimates first, that would be of no concern to the government. I think any matter that can be discussed under the one item can be discussed under the other, but I am open to suggestions as to which one hon. members would wish to have called first.

That is the way, Mr. Speaker, that we propose to proceed today, and I thought it useful to put this statement on the record at this time so that hon. members would be clear as to the program we have in mind for today's sitting of the house.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the minister that the motion with regard to the committee on consumer credit be held till later this day so the debate will follow immediately along the subject matter that we were on yesterday. I say this just in case we might be diverted on some technical argument which does not occur to me at the moment but which is always a possibility in this house, and I think we should keep the order of business as it now stands.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we too think it would be better not to interrupt the debate that was taking place last evening but that it would be preferable to continue with the debate on the finance department's estimates, leaving the motion regarding the committee until later this day. I might also indicate that if the motion for a recess is put sometime today, bearing in mind some of the other problems that are with us we may have something to say about it.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our group I would prefer to delay this motion for the moment and continue with the business we were dealing with yesterday, the estimates of the Department of Finance. We could probably put the motion later on this day.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion that has been made is perfectly satisfactory so far as we in this group are concerned. Also the adjournment motion will be acceptable to us whenever it is introduced.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I propose when we come to orders of the day to call first the estimates of the Department of Finance, and then later in the day to call the motion enlarging the terms of reference of the committee.

I am not clear on the other point as to whether it is desired to call the motion to adjourn now, on motions, or at a later stage in the day.

Mr. Knowles: Later.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, before motions are called I should like the government notice of motions called in the ordinary way and transferred to orders of the day under section 2 of standing order 21.

CONSUMER CREDIT

ENLARGEMENT OF TERMS OF REFERENCE TO JOINT COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notice of motion:

That the joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed by this house on March 15, 1966, to inquire into and report upon the problems of consumer credit, be instructed to also inquire into and report upon the trends in the cost of living in Canada and factors which may have contributed to changes in the cost of living in Canada in recent months;

And that a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof and to request the concurrence of that house thereto.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this notice of motion is transferred for consideration under government orders later this day or at the next sitting of the house.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN ATTITUDE TOWARD ADMISSION OF MAINLAND CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the United Nations will have been convened before we meet again, provided the motion for adjournment is accepted later this day, will the minister now say on behalf of the government of Canada what the attitude of the government is going to be on the question of the seating of communist China in the United Nations? In that connection, what is the government's stand in respect of Formosa and the necessity of assuring that that government and people will not be sacrificed in consequence of any action taken?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the general assembly will open on September 20. The question of mainland China's admission to the United Nations will not be disposed of or dealt with until some time later during the assembly, very likely some time around the end of November. The position of Canada with regard to universality of membership has been stated and reaffirmed by me in the general assembly. We strongly support the position taken by the secretary general that the principle of universality should be observed. To this end we expressed the view last year that we would hope it would be possible for all sovereign bodies to take their places in the United Nations.

The question of Formosa does not present a problem in this regard. It is not the intention of the government of Canada to deny the right of 12 million people in Formosa to participate in the world body. We continue to express the hope that the conditions laid down by mainland China for admission, as stated by her foreign minister Chen Yi on September 29 last, will not be raised again this year. There will be an opportunity later during the session, in the light of events, to say more about this matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has there been any change in the attitude of the minister that communist China should be admitted, as he was reported to have stated on August 15 at Banff? Has there been any change in that attitude since then? In particular, has there been any change in relation to the fact that, as the minister then stated, no acceptable means of bringing communist China into the United Nations has been offered or, indeed, has seemed possible?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, there has been no change in that statement. It was made after the most careful consideration. I would hope that if there is any solution to this it might be put forward by interested countries with which we are having consultations. There can be no doubt as to the view of the Canadian government, having regard to the serious situation in the world of the desirability of participation in the United Nations by all sovereign states.

If a way can be found to meet the principle of universality in this situation we would wish to do so. In stating this we are taking into consideration the position of countries with which we have close association, and I do not refer only to the United States; I refer also to Australia, to New Zealand, to Japan, to countries in Asia and to other countries which feel that in the interests of world peace this problem of the admission of China to the United Nations should be resolved.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—INQUIRY AS TO EFFECTIVE DATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that Bill No. C-227 on the order paper in the hon. gentleman's name provides for medicare to come into effect by July 1, 1967, will the minister be standing by that provision in his own bill?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The answer to that question was made obvious yesterday.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. We were told yesterday of the decision made by the Minister of Finance. I was asking the Minister of National Health and Welfare where he stands.

Mr. Speaker: Order please.

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC LONGSHOREMEN—OBJECTION TO QUALIFICATIONS OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of Labour? I should like to ask him if he has been informed of the accusation of partiality made against the arbitrator who has been asked to settle the problem of labour conditions in the harbours of the St. Lawrence. If there is no basis to the accusation, will the minister take the necessary steps to ensure the prestige and authority of commissioner Picard?

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): The qualifications and background of the industrial commissioner were gone into very carefully prior to his appointment. The government has every confidence in the industrial commissioner. His experience is not, as the paper has alleged, solely on the side of management. He has acted for workers as well. As I say, we have every confidence in him and we hope he will continue on the job to which he has been appointed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RETENTION OF IDENTITY OF ARMED FORCES COMPONENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence based on a statement he made in the House of Commons on May 12, 1964, appearing in Hansard at page 3188: "There will, of course, always be soldiers, sailors and airmen." I ask the minister if those words, "soldiers, sailors and airmen" as designating the different fighting components of the armed forces will be officially retained in the new model force which he is creating.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): As I made very clear at that time, any force with the responsibilities which our forces now have and will continue to have in the years ahead will require soldiers, sailors and airmen trained in their particular professional capacities.

Mr. Churchill: My question has not been answered, Mr. Speaker, and that is typical of the minister. I ask him a supplementary question. Will the soldiers, sailors and airmen in the new model force continue to wear uniforms of the style and colour so long familiar as distinguishing each branch of the service?

Mr. Hellyer: This is not the kind of urgent question which, under the rules, is ordinarily answered on the orders of the day.

Mr. Churchill: Here is your successor, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): As a related question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence can he assure the house that during the time parliament is adjourned, if the motion which will be proposed later this day carries, no action will be taken by him or anyone on his behalf in the Department of National Defence which does not already have the authority of parliament?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hellyer: Yes; most certainly, Mr. Speaker, I will give that assurance. No action has been taken which was not authorized by this parliament, and you can be very sure none will be.

Mr. Churchill: That isn't accurate.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): As a supplementary question to the minister in his concern about soldiers and sailors, would the minister classify himself as a tinker or a tailor?

[Later:]

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that General Allard has assured the Royal 22nd Regiment that its identity will be retained in the future, with which I agree, will the minister give a similar assurance with regard to the Lord Strathcona Horse, the Princess Pats, the Fort Garry Horse and other famous regiments now in the regular army?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, it has been made perfectly clear on several occasions that identity would be retained at the unit level. Therefore there is no difficulty in giving my hon. friend the assurance that he requests.

While I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, may I just say in respect of the question raised by the hon. member for Skeena that what I presume he meant is, am I a tailor or a builder. In reply to that question may I say that along with the associate minister I am attempting to tailor the armed forces of Canada in such a way that they will be able to meet the real needs of this country and support its foreign policy, and to build the kind of power and effectiveness necessary to help deter war and preserve the peace.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you were able to discern any answer to the question in the speech which has just been made by the Minister of National Defence?

[Mr. MacLean (Queens).]

WATER RESOURCES

UNITED STATES CONFERENCE ON WATER FOR PEACE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether an invitation has yet been received by the government, or any department thereof, to the international conference on water to be held in Washington later this year.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I ask my hon. friend to repeat his question. I was just thinking of the implications of the question put by the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Fulton: I can well appreciate that that question and its implications could cause the gravest concern to all those on the government benches. I asked whether the government or any department thereof has yet received an official invitation to the international conference on water to be held in Washington later this year.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, the official invitation has not come but we expect it at any time.

Mr. Fulton: Then may I ask on this same subject whether, when the invitation is received, since we have been informed that it is expected, the government will give consideration to the position that Canada has commitments with respect to its own conferences on water; and as Canada's position with respect to these matters has hardly been definitively established, Canada's participation in this conference, if we are to participate, should be minimal so as to avoid the danger which, because we have not properly considered—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the question may have been lost in the speech.

Mr. Fulton: I did not quite catch what you said, Mr. Speaker. I was asking the minister for an assurance. I think the purport of my question was clear, that Canada will not make any commitment to any position that has not been considered and discussed in parliament.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I will say we have not yet decided whether we will participate in the conference. Likewise no firm position has been taken with regard to the proposed subject matters. Beyond that I am sure my hon. friend will understand I cannot go.

[Later:]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs related to the one asked by the hon. member for Kamloops. I should like the minister to inform the house whether the United States consulted Canada, or in his knowledge any other country, before setting the date, and apparently the agenda, for the water conference to which the hon. member referred.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I really cannot answer that question, Mr. Speaker. I would have to inform myself and that I shall do.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I chop my question and instead of referring to other countries ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the Canadian government was consulted about the date or the agenda before the conference was set down by the administration in the United States.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman may chop his question but I hope he will not chop my head. I will simply have to inform myself on that question.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the reported consideration being given to strike action by Saskatchewan farm organizations and because of the long delay by the government in bringing forward agricultural legislation, could the Acting Prime Minister give us an indication of when we can expect the legislation promised by the Prime Minister during the last few weeks?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should have thought my hon. friend who comes from western Canada would be among the first to note with satisfaction the achievements of the present government and the present Minister of Agriculture in the area which interests him so much.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I shall take note of his question.

Mr. Nasserden: Surely, Mr. Speaker, the Acting Prime Minister cannot slough off a question as important as that with the type of assertion he has just made. This government and this Minister of Agriculture have not done anything.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I must take umbrage. In view of my well known interest in agriculture I am rather hurt by the observation of the hon. member.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CONSIDERATION OF ESTABLISHMENT OF LABOUR COURT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the government given any consideration or is it presently giving any consideration to the establishment of a labour court as a means of settling industrial disputes?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think the only answer I can give to that question at this time is that the government has given consideration to the advisability or otherwise of some changes that might deal more effectively with problems of the nature raised by my hon. friend. It was for that reason that the Prime Minister announced just before his departure to the Commonwealth prime ministers' conference that a task force was being set up to study this important problem, under the leadership of Dean Woods of McGill University. I might say that Dean Woods is in Ottawa today conferring with officials of the office of the Privy Council, my deputy minister and others on this important matter. I doubt whether it would be wise for me to say anything further until we have had the recommendations or suggestions from the task force.

NATURAL GAS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MEETING WITH PIPE LINE OFFICIALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister of Mines and Technical Surveys a question but in his absence I will ask his parliamentary secretary whether he is able to report on the substance of this morning's meeting between some members of the government and members of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines on the subject of gas transmission lines.

[Later:]

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Speaker, I did not receive an answer to the rhetorical question which I put a few moments ago to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys under the erroneous impression that he was present in the house.

May I now direct my question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Is the minister in a position at this time to report on the substance of this morning's meeting between some members of the government and some members of the Trans-Canada Pipe Lines?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): No, Mr. Speaker. We received representations, and we will study them now.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Canada faces a financial crisis as indicated by the Minister of Finance in his statement last evening, and the possible break-up of the cabinet, does the Acting Prime Minister not consider that the Prime Minister should be back in Canada facing up to these internal difficulties rather than worrying about the future of Zambia?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is strange that my hon. friend should mention these internal difficulties, because I had a dream last night.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I dreamt that the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp), for whom we all have great respect, because of differences with his leader had resigned as whip of the Conservative party. I am glad to learn this morning that this dream is greatly exaggerated, and so is the rumour to which the hon. member has referred.

Mr. Rapp: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, this must have been a pipe dream.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Sherman.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF MOTION RESPECTING EASTERN FEED GRAIN AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and possibly to the Acting Prime Minister since the question is not only whether Motion No. 48 on the order paper concerning livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia but also at what date after October 5 next, when the house resumes, this motion can be brought down for debate?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is a question that can only be decided after a conference of the house leaders. I hope an arrangement can be reached to the satisfaction of the hon. member.

EDUCATION

INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS FOR POSTGRADUATE STUDY AND RESEARCH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether the minister's attention has been drawn to a statement made yesterday by Dr. John Deutsch, chairman of the Economic Council of Canada, related in this morning's Globe and Mail, to the effect that Dr. Deutsch said, "priority must be given in the immediate future to the growth of post-secondary education, including a substantial increase in funds for postgraduate study and research." Has the minister's attention been drawn to this statement, and does he remain adamant in the cut-backs he announced yesterday for research and the scholarship fund of the government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the statement of Dr. Deutsch, which I have not read, illustrates why it is necessary to give first place to the most important matters, within our ability to pay. I can assure the hon. gentleman who has asked this question that it did not require Dr. Deutsch to draw this matter to our attention. Moreover, it is our intention during the discussions with the provinces to support, even more than we have in the past, the provisions for post-secondary education. May I say, in order to prevent this sort of canard being repeated, that I have not cut back any existing programs; I am simply pacing our progress in the future.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Finance, who has just referred to the discussions with the provinces, whether in the light of his statement last night, his statement on television the previous evening and his reference now, there will be at this conference a discussion of priorities and objectives for Canada, for which the premier of Manitoba has been pressing.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, this government in all its actions has always recognized the importance of priorities. It continues to recognize them. I am very happy to see that the premier of Manitoba is supporting us.

Mr. Fulton: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the government recognizes the importance of priorities, why is it that the Prime Minister on behalf of the government refused to discuss the subject in that context at earlier conferences?

Mr. Sharp: Probably because it was raised in a political rather than any other sense.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry who reports to the House of Commons on research matters. Will the minister make the strongest possible representations to the Minister of Finance so that medical research will be increased, if we in Canada are to retain in the next year doctors and medical teachers?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I fully share the desire, I think of all members of this house, to make the best possible use of all our resources and to accord a high priority for research. I think one can accept the assurance of the Minister of Finance that there has been no cut-back in this area or any other.

Mr. Grafftey: Will there not even be a freeze in relation to medical research, in view of the serious problem facing the country?

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RIVERS, MAN.—REPORTED INTENTION TO CLOSE TRAINING CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister indicate when the scheduled meeting between the government of Manitoba and himself or his representatives will take place with respect to the continuing role of the Rivers tri-service air base?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): To the best of my knowledge no date has yet been set. I think it was suggested that a meeting might be arranged some time during the month of October.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would presume that under an integration program the role of this station would be increased rather than decreased.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is argumentative.

FINANCE

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF B.C. BANK BILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. member for Essex West in his capacity as chairman of the committee on finance, trade and economic affairs. Before I pose my question, may I compliment the Minister of National Defence on having taken such a long time to come up with so much boloney.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I was about to reply to the question when the hon. member for Kamloops was given the floor.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Howard: I did not catch that delightful comment of the minister, but obviously I can get along without it.

Mr. Hellyer: I will send it to you.

Mr. Howard: May I ask the hon. member for Essex West when it is intended that a meeting of the committee will be called to deal with the bill relating to the Bank of British Columbia, which I understand is the only subject matter before that committee of which the hon. member is chairman.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to answer this question, and I hope the hon. member will not consider my answer to be boloney. The bill to which the hon. member referred is not the only business before the committee. That committee also has before it at this time a bill in respect of the Bank of Western Canada, which we hope to deal with when the amendments to the Bank Act are referred to the committee.

In so far as the bill in respect to the Bank of British Columbia is concerned, I hope to find an early opportunity to consult with the steering committee in order to ascertain a suitable date for hearings in this regard which will be satisfactory to the sponsors and those in the province of British Columbia who are interested in this matter.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—REPLIES FROM PREMIER RESPECTING FEDERAL LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin).

Could he tell the house whether the government has received any reply from the government of the province of Quebec concerning a certain federal legislation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asked that question the day before yesterday and I should have been able to answer him.

I shall immediately ask the Prime Minister's secretariat to supply me with the information so that I can give an answer as soon as possible.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF GEOGRAPHICAL CO-ORDINATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. He has already given us an indication of his vast experience in agricultural matters and by this time he should also be an expert on fisheries affairs. Can the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether any progress has been made in establishing geographical co-ordinates from which the base lines will be drawn to provide Canadian fishermen with a 12 mile limit?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman is aware, during the discussions I had with Secretary Rusk about six weeks ago I informed him that we proposed to take certain steps in connection with this matter, and in that regard I made a proposal. I have reason to believe that I may receive the United States reaction to this proposal some time next week. When a reply is made available to me I will be able to tell the house the precise nature of the proposal Canada has made.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PENSION COMMISSION MEMBERSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the large backlog of cases before the pension commission and the subsequent long delay in adjudicating applications, will the minister consider enlarging the membership of the commission and the appropriate medical staffs so these applications may be dealt with within a reasonable length of time?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I expect that this matter among other things will be considered by the Wood commission. I believe I should wait for the report of that commission before I make any further studies of the kind suggested. There may well be a point in the hon. member's question which should be looked into.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

SALE BY LOCAL OFFICES OF FEDERAL HUNTING PERMITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. Is he aware that post offices across the country are in the business of selling $2 federal waterfowl hunting permits, and does he not agree that these permits should be made available to the regular provincial hunting licence vendors so that tourists and other hunters will not be inconvenienced by having to make two stops in order to obtain these hunting privileges?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of that fact but my department has adopted that policy and I agree with it.

FINANCE

GATT—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce perhaps I may be permitted to address a question to the Minister of Finance in respect of a matter with which he is quite familiar. Can the minister inform the house whether any progress has been made during the long tariff negotiations which have taken place at Geneva, and will he indicate when these negotiations may be concluded?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there has been considerable progress made. I expect that we shall live up to the schedule if only because the authority of the United States will be expiring shortly. I do not know whether the outcome will be as favourable as the late President of the United States, Mr. Kennedy, originally hoped for, but I am sure there will be a substantial outcome.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—INDICATIONS TO PROVINCES OF POSSIBLE CHANGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the government decision to defer the effective date of medicare to July 1, 1968, has the government any plan or intention of participating with those provinces which already have a medicare plan in such a way that will be of benefit to them?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the decision of the government as announced yesterday speaks for itself in regard to this matter.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary question I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether letters have been written to the provinces indicating the revisionary nature of the medicare proposal, and whether when he gave his answer in the house yesterday regarding this question he was aware of the fact that changes had already been anticipated and made by the cabinet.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance sent copies of his speech to provincial representatives yesterday. Just for purpose of emphasis I may say that the government proposes, as was stated by the house leader last night, to see that the medicare bill is passed this session. This will be another contribution by this government, and the party to which we belong, to the program of social security in this country, which I think compares with that of any country in the world.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of that gratuitous addition from dreamland I should like to ask the minister whether it is the intention of the government to make changes in the general ukase that was issued to the provinces in order that the plan may be reformed and altered to become completely comprehensive.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance made it clear in his statement yesterday that with the exception of the effective date there will be no change in the bill, which I am sure will commend itself even to my right hon. friend.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Five provinces have not agreed to it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Five provinces may not be in agreement, but this government has been opposed by provinces in respect of other such measures. However, the fact is that as the result of the initiative taken by the governments of Mackenzie King, St. Laurent and Pearson, we do have programs of benefit to the people of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It only took 36 years for health insurance.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether that is another of those canards that the Minister of Finance was talking about a minute ago.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As my hon. friend knows, I have not had an opportunity to express this kind of canard for over three years.

Mr. Knowles: That was a real one today.

Supply—Finance

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—INQUIRY AS TO POSTPONEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance and to relate it to one of the "painful reviews" he mentioned yesterday. Can he assure the house and the Atlantic region that the construction of the Northumberland causeway is not one of those good projects which is planned for postponement or deferment?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the position of the government on the construction of the Northumberland causeway was never changed. We intend to proceed with it and complete it.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I started last night to give my impression from the standpoint of an independent member in this house and you will agree that it can be different from the opinion expressed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and from certain comments made by the spokesmen of the opposition parties.

I said that, in my opinion, the minister's speech appeared to me as a courageous diagnosis which, for instance, a surgeon would make after examining a patient and finding out that his condition is getting worse. And the diagnosis is all the more courageous because the minister admitted that the condition of the patient—Canada or the Canadian economy in the circumstances—became worse these last five months, when he had anticipated that it would improve.

I added, Mr. Chairman, that the problem of inflation is a rather complex matter, that it seemed to me that the minister is quite qualified to suggest cures, since he has at his disposal a whole team of experts and he has had himself a wide experience in government matters, in short, that he is always in consultation with financial experts from all over the world with whom we have financial connections.

And I think I could say as much if we had a Conservative government, because I presume that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) would have tried to choose as head of that department a competent man who could benefit also from the same advice of experienced people.

Mr. Chairman, I added that I had a lot more confidence in the minister's directives, precisely because of his qualifications, than in some remedies—which remind me of quacks' or old wives' remedies—proposed by some hon. members who cannot offer the same qualifications.

Mr. Chairman, it was said during this debate that the government was probably to blame for inflation. The public was thus given the impression that Canada is the only country faced with inflation, and yet it is raging throughout the world. One has only to read a financial publication to find evidence thereof. For instance, in the September 2 issue of Time there is an article which reads as follows:

[English]

In West Germany, credit is so tight that Frankfurt last week cancelled plans to build a new subway system, while Dusseldorf was forced to call off construction of a new city hall, auditorium and athletic stadium.

[Translation]

You will note, Mr. Chairman, that those are countries which are reputed for their solid financial structure and which do not indulge in fantasy.

[English]

In Switzerland, commercial banks last month raised the prime interest rate from 5 per cent to 6 per cent, the first such increase since 1937 in the frugal little country.

In Sweden, the shortage of loan funds is such that high-priority apartment construction in Stockholm has been cut back 40 per cent, and the average wait for an apartment is now ten years.

In Norway, big and small businesses this summer are getting bleak answers when they make loan applications as longtime bank customers: "Sorry, but we don't have money."

In Britain, banks are now within 1 per cent, or $47,500,000 of the ceiling on the amount of money that they can lend;

[Translation]

And it continues along the same lines, and we note, Mr. Chairman, that the same situation prevails in all the countries of the world. Even the U.S. which is supposed to be a leader in the financial field is faced with problems. This was evidenced this morning in the statement of President Johnson, who must take austerity measures concerning industry and high finance—fortunately—rather than against the small people.

Again in the September 9 issue of Time we read that even Wall Street financiers urge the government to take emergency action, and I quote on page 79 from the section entitled—

[English]

Ordinarily, talk about higher taxes is not very cheery. But U.S. stock and bond investors last week seemed to brighten up just when word got out that the Johnson administration was seriously considering tax increases as an adjunct to tight money in the fight against inflation.

This disease is common not only to Canada, but to the whole world. In every country, you have all kinds of governments: conservatives, liberals, democrats, republicans, and I believe the most affected country is England whose government is closely related to our New Democratic Party. We will not put the blame on any individual, any party, because it is a general disease, and so we must have the courage to take the necessary measures to prevent this disease from spreading and bringing on disaster.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, I come to certain conclusions. I believe all Canadians should be reassured for two reasons: the first is that today's governments are prepared to deal with the situation, to prevent it from turning into a catastrophe, because we have experts today who are able to make financial forecasts and counsel governments, so that these governments may take the necessary steps when it is time. I repeat that, in this matter, I have full confidence in the hon. Minister of Finance.

There is also a second reason. We now have in Canada social legislation providing our economy with hundreds of millions of dollars, if not over a thousand million each year, which helps to stabilize the Canadian economy. But in spite of all this, strong measures will have to be taken. I will say only this to the hon. Minister of Finance: In the measures you are going to take, do your utmost to spare the small wage-earner, the one who lives with austerity the year round.

Let us not take away the butter on his bread, for pity's sake, and let us endeavour to impose austerity onto those who have the means to pay, the financiers, manufacturers, and businessmen who can always make out, and let us go as easy as possible on the wage-earners, particularly the low wage-earners.

And I will now point out to the hon. minister it is time to remember that this government has been accused of indecision, procrastination and weakness in dealing with certain problems; so it is now time for the government to prove that it has the necessary determination to apply to the Canadian economy the measures necessary to put it back on its feet. The time has come to face this crisis bravely, to make all Canadians understand that an operation, never a pleasant thing, is absolutely necessary. No one is happy when his surgeon tells him that he will have to remove a vital part of his body, but when he learns that he will get worse and die unless he is operated on, he reconciles himself to that fact, and asks the surgeon to be quick.

I think the government will show courage and determination. It has all it needs to understand the situation. It must not let itself be impressed by the criticism of some irresponsible or inexperienced journalists, by some members of this house who are more interested in promoting the interests of their party than in working for the good of the Canadian economy. The minister would be wise to listen to some of the suggestions, because the members of the opposition have made some that are worthwhile, but I think he should concern himself only with constructive criticism. He should not let himself be dissuaded from the course of action he has taken. In the present situation, he should himself forget the political considerations of his own party, forget future elections, and believe that Canadians today are better informed than they have ever been, that they will not swallow anything and that they will not be bluffed. Canadians realize more than ever that a financial crisis does exist and they expect their government to come forward with remedies or cures, or even painful operations, to prevent the problem from becoming more serious.

Mr. Chairman, I have one last point to make and then I will resume my seat. Last evening, during the debate, an hon. member bluntly stated that I would probably go back to the Liberal party before too long. He might have meant it as an insult; I will simply remind this kind hon. member that I left the Liberal party of my own accord, that I am happy as an independent, that I can now say out loud what everybody thinks and says in a whisper, that I do not have to keep silent for political reasons, that I can stand up and criticize the government when I conscientiously believe I should do so, but, on the other hand, I would be ill-advised and remiss in my responsibilities toward my constituents if I failed to recognize the good things accomplished by the government, to recognize especially that the government has certain responsibilities to discharge, and, also, if I did not give the government the support to which it is entitled, because, as an independent member, I do not work for the Liberal party but for Canada, for my province, for my constituency.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to commend the last speaker, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) for the speech, full of wisdom and objectivity, he has just delivered, and also for his contribution to this most important problem.

[English]

I listened last night with great interest, Mr. Chairman, to the contributions that were made by two Conservative members, one N.D.P. member, the leader of the Ralliement party and the leader of the Social Credit party. I struggled to discover what was the conclusion of these hon. members to this inflationary problem that faces Canada and, as the hon. member for Trois-Rivières has indicated, the entire western world. I was confused about this. It almost appears to me, sir, that we have forgotten somewhat the experience of the thirties. Certainly, during the time I have been a member in the last four parliaments we have shown considerable preoccupation with long and middle-run economic problems, problems relating to exchange and growth and distribution. But in so far as shorter term problems relating to cyclical fluctuation are concerned, it would appear that we have tended to forget them even though they were so much the concern of the pre-war generation in Canada.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi made a carefully prepared speech last evening. He spoke in terms of excessive interest rates. He spoke about the need to control inflation. Then he stated his fear that the minister had enunciated negative, short-term remedies to combat inflation and, in effect, urged the federal government to increase substantially its expenditures on such matters as retraining, housing, zoning, the ARDA program and so on. He spoke about the need for long-term measures to be taken to combat inflation. This was the burden of his remarks.

Actually it is difficult to find very much that was truly unique and different in the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. He was derisive of the Minister of Finance for the financial measures adopted, which he argued were as old and as orthodox as fiscal and monetary policy could be. For my part I am very grateful for the fact that following the study of the commission on Canada's economic prospects, the royal commission of 1957 which addressed itself in the main to manpower, productivity and output, and the need for trained manpower and research, we have had two important studies by the Economic Council of Canada.

The first study related to economic goals for Canada by 1970. In December, 1965, there was the more searching and shorter term study which addressed itself to a sustained and balanced economic growth. I am grateful for the fact that we have as Minister of Finance a man uniquely qualified in graduate studies, first at Manitoba and later at London School of Economics; a man with practical experience having discharged important duties in the finance department and the Wartime Prices and Trade Board, a scholar who in 1947 became director of the economic policy division of the Department of Finance, who in 1955 and 1956 led important teams to negotiate trade agreements with Russia and Japan, basically in the field of food, who led many important deliberations for the western world in GATT, who in 1963 succeeded to the important portfolio of Trade and Commerce and then took over the watchdog duties of the Department of Finance. We must regard our Minister of Finance as the guardian of the nation. It is his duty to represent all of the people, and I would think in particular the consumer. We have in the minister a man who understands the machinery for fiscal controls at the government's command and knows how and when to use them.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): You are straining, John.

Mr. Matheson: Am I straining? One of the important comparisons I would make between the minister and the members who spoke last night is the note of optimism which appeared in the minister's comments as opposed to what appeared to me to be the despair of the Conservative members and the spokesmen for the other parties.

• (12:10 p.m.)

What are the pressures with which we are faced? On March 21, 1966, the Minister of Finance spoke honestly and frankly, just as he did last night. He said in part that our problem was not to put a brake on the economy but to see that we do not press too hard on the accelerator and throw the car off the road. If one gathers together the several speeches which have been made by the hon. gentleman in the field of balance of payments, in the field of exports and imports, in the field of growth, and now more particularly in the short-run area of cyclical theory, I think we have as fine a set of addresses on economic problems in Canada as we can find from any Minister of Finance who has ever held this portfolio. We have had good ministers of finance during periods of war and some during post-war periods, but not many have had the chance to assume different portfolios and responsibilities which cover the entire range of our economic problems.

In another address relating to the problem of poverty the Minister of Finance said that Canada's major problem in 1966 seems to be to restrain the economy from trying to expand more rapidly than physically possible. That was his conclusion of many months ago. In another address he indicated that prosperity tends to widen the gulf between the rich and the poor, just as depression tends to be a leveller. His advice to the nation was that we should proceed with discipline. In naval terms, we must advance line abreast, not line astern.

Some of the N.D.P. members seem to be uproarious in their laughter, but my contention is that regardless of where a man fits into society, whether he be an old age pensioner, a worker in a trade union, a school teacher, a clerk or doctor, even a person clipping coupons, there is essentially only one way in which the nation can advance and that is line abreast. It is ridiculous to suggest that simply by taxing away profits we can right this distortion of inflation, at the same time encouraging price increases in other directions.

The problems that are facing Canada are clearly understood by bankers, businessmen and economists, if not by some of the members of parliament.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And by labour.

Mr. Matheson: And by labour, as the Acting Prime Minister indicates.

Mr. Knowles: That was not in the text.

Mr. Matheson: No, but it is a useful intervention because we are getting some very able and responsible assistance from labour today on matters not entirely along the lines indicated by members of the opposition. I do not think that Canadians are so naïve as to overlook the dangers with which we are currently faced.

This is the longest period of economic expansion in Canadian peacetime history. It has produced an extended series of annual increases in before-tax profits of corporations. In some instances the profits of certain corporations, perhaps those in a monopolistic or quasi-monopolistic position, have been so high that there has been, as in the case of the United States and as in the United Kingdom, the danger of high-profit industries being able to pay labour so well that they are more or less able to entice them away from other industries which are operating marginally, therefore increasing the danger of bottlenecks.

This year, though business activity continued to expand strongly, rising costs which are associated with an economy operating at levels closer to capacity than at any time for a decade were beginning to take their toll of profits. In the early months of this year in Canada and the United States business forged ahead at a rate that was clearly unsustainable. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi and the hon. member for Qu'Appelle are apparently not interested in these facts.

It appears to me that cyclical theory now requires us to look through a microscope at the special problems of the top quarter of the upswing. If I can make an analogy, it seems to me that what we have to do is to exercise the art of riding a surfboard. If that can be done with skill, courage and aplomb, growth will quite conceivably continue onwards. Indeed, there may be many higher waves behind this wave and we do not need to be the helpless victims of circumstances. But for us to suggest or to think for one moment that this situation is something within the easy control of the Canadian government alone is specious and untrue.

The economies of both the United States and Canada have been operating at very close to capacity for several quarters and the signs of strain that had begun to appear in 1965 have become unmistakable. Therefore when we use the expression "overheating", that is a simple statement of fact.

Many records have been achieved in Canada this year as this high level of activity has increased. There is no doubt that the increase in real output, in spite of the many labour differences which have occurred, will be in the neighbourhood of 6 per cent. But the upward trend in prices and costs is causing concern. The consumer price index has risen by over 2 per cent in 1966 and the wage settlements negotiated so far this year have resulted in considerably larger wage increases than in previous years. So that we are facing a new plateau of higher prices and higher costs which is going to take some time to work its way through the economy. But these price increases may accelerate unless a determined effort is made to counteract the increasing inflationary pressures. The threat of inflation has increased, and this will weaken Canada's competitive position both at home and abroad.

I have been looking at the publication of the Ontario Department of Economics and Development which is called "Ontario Economic Review". In its volume for April of this year there were 12 graphs. On these 12 graphs we find depicted an increase in business, industrial and engineering contracts in Ontario, in new orders for manufacturing in Canada and in wages and salaries in Ontario. Relatively, the consumer price index is flat; it shows a much more modest increase. Yet the gross national product is still increasing steadily, and this increase appears to be relatively higher than that shown by the consumer price index.

When we consider the combination of increasing prices, increasing wages and also the increase in investment capital, which is another factor in the rigidities and illiquidity which has developed, we are facing a major problem which must be met by these fiscal and monetary techniques.

In the May-June issue of the same publication of the Ontario Department of Economics and Development appears a report produced by Mr. H. Ian Macdonald, chief economist. He talks about construction contracts which are currently being awarded in Ontario and indicates that many large construction awards were recently placed in that province, all of which were for very valid purposes. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands thinks that there is no limit to this expansion. When I look at the construction which is being carried out, such as the Beaverton home for the aged, a building at Ottawa university, provincial highway projects, and so on, I commend them. I find myself much more enthused about hospital extensions than I am about shopping centres and mail order buildings.

What is the effect of all this? The effect must be that if we do not accomplish greater co-operation with the provinces, particularly the industrialized provinces in central Canada, in pacing production, we shall fail by trying to do too much too quickly. That is the advice and guidance we have had from the minister and it is important that this advice should be followed. This I think, emphasizes the importance of the forthcoming dominion-provincial discussions with respect to the solving of such constitutional difficulties as may exist inhibiting action.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Mr. Graham Towers points particularly to the matter of credit and says:

—I doubt that the pace of the recent credit expansion can be maintained without causing trouble.

He indicates to us that the gross national product in North America last year grew in excess of 9 per cent and, while price increases accounted for a portion of that, the real increase on a per capita basis was in the neighbourhood of 4½ per cent. In other words, we are growing and we shall continue to grow, but we should not allow greed to push us over the brink.

It is easy, of course, to be a Liberal administration if you have opposition that comes from both the Conservative side of the house and from the New Democratic Party or socialist group—

Mr. Diefenbaker: And also within your own party.

Mr. Matheson: Perhaps I should say, from the Progressive Conservative party, in answer to the right hon. gentleman who interjected. It is easier to be a Liberal if you are going to move forward guided by advice from a side which supports some restraint. There are some who desire to conserve and there are others who have an enthusiastic interest to progress rapidly and to be as progressive as possible without any concern for restraint. We have not had in the twenty six and twenty seventh parliaments, certainly not in the twenty seventh parliament, any serious words of restraint.

Mr. Sharp: Not from the opposition.

Mr. Matheson: Not from the opposition. I think this is manifestly so. Certainly we have not had them from the first two Conservative speakers in this debate. Their emphasis is that it is only by further pump priming that we can remove ourselves from our present difficulties.

Mr. Grafftey: Nor have you had any from the right wing of your cabinet.

Mr. Matheson: From the right wing?

Mr. Grafftey: From the chancery wing. From the old guard.

Mr. Matheson: I have high regard for what people such as John Deutsch, Louis Rasminsky and Robert Bryce have to say. I have high regard for what the Minister of Finance, who is responsible and trying to be as fair and just as he can be under these circumstances, has to say, namely, that it is only by adopting certain disciplinary measures that remedies to inflation can be found.

An hon. Member: What does the Minister of National Health and Welfare say?

Mr. Matheson: John Meyer has warned us. I know the official opposition are not interested in his warning, but here we have a case where the mid-year survey of capital investment commitments by government shows that, despite a reduction of 4.9 per cent, they are still running at 8.9 per cent ahead of last year's expenditures. It is clear from the various articles that John Meyer has written that the progress in the first quarter of this year cannot possibly be expected to continue. There is such a thing as overheating, and one must take care of the economy. Certainly one sees the wisdom of looking after an engine. We have to consider the wisdom of looking after our our own industrial and financial situation in much the same way.

Mr. Nasserden: May I ask a question?

Mr. Matheson: I should prefer to carry on at this time. When I have finished I shall try to answer questions.

I might suggest to the Minister of Finance one excellent way in which $12 to $15 million could currently be saved. I think it might be worth while to examine the proposal with respect to the electrification of the Rideau canal and river system. This has been considered for some years and certainly engineering studies and advice exist. The proposed electrification is, I think, unnecessary and undesirable.

If I may refer to the wise remarks of the hon. member for Trois-Rivières, he indicated the universal character of the inflationary problem. At first blush many of us would be happy to consider bold and dramatic steps to cope with the cost of living. The question we find continually raised in the United States and in Canada is whether wage and price controls should be implemented. A lot of thought has been given to this matter.

I note in the current issue of U.S. News and World Report that there is reference to pressures in late August and September and to government action to clamp down on the overheated boom in that country. They estimate in the United States that the boom has reached a critical stage, requiring the most careful handling. A sober analysis is given in U.S. News and World Report, which says that in the United States there is ahead a period of growing strain and mounting pressure, and that labour shortages, skilled and even unskilled, will grow more severe. Unemployment in the United States, now at 3.9 per cent of the work force, will slip to 3.5 per cent. I believe in Canada we are in the region of 3.5 per cent to 4 per cent. The report indicates that by the end of the year the United States figure will perhaps fall to 3.1 per cent. People generally and businessmen and politicians do not like controls, and short of an emergency such as a world war they do not work.

I was impressed by the column by Henry Wallich which appeared in the September 5 issue of Newsweek. It is headed: "Can We Stop Inflation Without A Recession?" He studies the question of direct price controls. He comes to the conclusion as a result of careful analysis of this problem that fiscal and monetary restraints are the only tools that can be relied on to do anything in the immediate future.

With reference to what the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi said last night, in Canada we are in a somewhat different position from the United States. We have a very limited constitutional power. The government may assume certain powers during a national emergency, but we do not at this time have the powers to step in to exercise the kinds of controls which have been referred to and which are clearly beyond federal jurisdiction. I do feel that continuing discussion with the provinces is of the greatest importance, and I am sure that the wise men of Canada, representing both federal and provincial governments, will not allow constitutional limitations to impede them in formulating the policies that they in their wisdom feel may be necessary.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Chairman, the characteristics we find both in the United States and to a lesser extent in Canada. This is so because through the wisdom of the Minister of Finance those problems have been anticipated. One sees that the conditions we are faced with in Canada almost meet the classical situation as described by James S. Duesenberry, the cyclical economist, and the great cyclical authority, Dr. Von Haberler. This aspect of economics was studied intensively throughout the 1930's until the outbreak of world war II. In a 1964 publication Dr. Von Haberler gives a description of what we may find in the fourth quarter of the business cycle, and says:

As more and more unemployed factors of production are drawn into employment, the supply of factors of production and of goods in general becomes more and more inelastic, and a constant expansion in terms of money will lead to a smaller and smaller increase in output and to a larger and larger rise in factor and commodity prices. In other words, at the beginning of the expansion, a large part of the increase in monetary circulation will have been absorbed by a rise in the output and turnover of goods, and a smaller part by increasing prices. When full employment is being gradually approached, this necessarily changes.

Then he went on to say:

When one category of factors after the other is becoming scarce—the transition to full employment is of course gradual and not sudden—it becomes more and more difficult to expand at various points at the same time.

This is the overheating problem, the problem of trying to do too many things at the same time.

If one industry increases its demand for means of production and succeeds in attracting labourers by offering higher wages, it lures them away from other industries. The same holds true of raw materials and semi-finished products. The expansion of the industry is possible only at the expense of a contraction somewhere else.

Mr. Chairman, a Minister of Finance who is not prepared to recognize these things and deal with these matters with the courage and the guts displayed last night has no right, in my way of thinking, to hold this important key office.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Suppose he recognizes these things too late?

Mr. Matheson: After that investigation I should like to remind hon. members that there was not one pay increase which the official opposition had not pressured.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We take no responsibility for the two you gave.

Mr. Matheson: You take no responsibility at all.

[Mr. Matheson.]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We will take responsibility when it is ours but we are responsible for nothing like the 30 per cent increase your government approved earlier this year.

An hon. Member: You are mad.

Mr. Matheson: Well, 48 members from the prairies were quite prepared to settle the shipping strike on any terms.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Matheson: That was their message to Canada—get the grain moving. This minority government had to survive tests of strength and pressures in this country nearly all of which were challenges to put more money into circulation, even in directions which could not possibly produce more growth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Matheson: Everyone in this country is concerned about the situation of the old age pensioners. Members of this house are terribly concerned about those who live on veterans' allowances, about the transport workers—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Everybody but the pensioners.

Mr. Matheson: —but when there is a condition of virtually full employment, pumping more money into circulation will simply blow the top off.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Exactly what you have done.

Mr. Matheson: There are some members of the official opposition who do not give a damn about this. Their actions have been neither responsible nor helpful. They do not really care about the overheating process.

Bruce Hutchison asks us whether we have the courage and the wisdom to avoid disaster. The real question before us is not political in the ordinary sense—

Mr. Nasserden: I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member has charged that it was the opposition which pumped money into the economy of Canada.

Some hon. Members: He did not.

Mr. Nasserden: It is the action taken by the Minister of Finance which has increased the money supply in Canada over the last 18 months.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The last month.

Mr. Matheson: The real question is whether we have the courage to do the things which we recognize must be done. As Bruce Hutchison so ably said, the nation itself has been brought to trial.

There are many examples of a more fruitful partnership between labour and management which we could examine. I spent some time in Europe this year and I was much impressed by the co-operation I saw in certain European countries where I found evidence of an increasing understanding in this field which was helpful to all those concerned, to those they loved and to society generally. I commend to the people of Canada the excellent discipline which has been shown by the people of Switzerland where the problems of labour-management relations have been solved for several years, where automation is not opposed and where industry has been so productive and successful that it has been necessary to import workers from abroad to an extent never before equalled.

During the early thirties labour strife had presented such problems that labour and management, which had always considered each other as institutional adversaries—what was good for labour was supposed to be bad for industry, and vice-versa—became fed up with this state of affairs and began to seek a way out of the impasse. Two men, one of them Conrad Ilg, president of the Metalworkers and Watchmakers Union, and the other, Ernest Ducbi, president of the Swiss Association of Industrialists, both of them friends of Albert Schweitzer, were largely responsible for the events which followed. Together they signed a peace agreement for ten years concluding in 1939. This agreement was accepted by all leading unions and it was subsequently extended for three further decades.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member for Leeds but I must remind him that the time allotted for his speech has expired.

Mr. Matheson: Could I be given a few moments more?

The Chairman: Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the matter before us is one of grave national importance—accelerating inflation in respect of which the opposition has asked for action for months and in respect of which the government has failed to act.

Apparently, to judge by the general tenor of speeches made by government members, a new responsibility will rest on members of the opposition—the responsibility for failure to meet the serious situation. Of course, those hon. gentlemen realize that only the government can take action in respect of these matters. Only governments can deal with these things, and members in other parts of the house have neither power nor right to introduce legislation of a financial nature.

We have pressed for action and have been met by derisive contempt. The Minister of Finance has made frightful mistakes. Yesterday he had to admit that he was $150 million out in the estimate he made of expenditure at the time of the introduction of the budget.

We have the cabinet made up of those with orthodox views and also a revisionist group. The Prime Minister belongs to the latter. They make changes from time to time. I can recall no important measure of legislation introduced in this house by the government which has not sooner or later been completely altered. This is a government which does not know where it is going. Over and over again this has been shown. What a galaxy of calisthenic performances we have witnessed with ministers having rugs pulled from under them. It was a performance which the house had never previously seen. Both the Minister of Labour and the Minister of National Health and Welfare made their speeches on the labour question last week, and as they concluded the Prime Minister pulled the rug from under them.

Again we have an example of another minister in that category, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Yesterday he found himself in that very uncomfortable position of being flat on the floor because of the action of another minister. What a strange performance between the revisionist and the orthodox groups, the competitors for leadership, a struggle extending far beyond the ordinary purview of the front bench, with each following his own course. I tell the Minister of Finance that recently he was one of the leading horses but he slipped back.

Mr. Sharp: I still have my smile.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not know what position the Minister of National Health and Welfare now occupies in the race, but from his understandable appearance this morning it is obvious that he is not pleased. Indeed, last evening when the Minister of Finance spoke on the radio he said in effect, "I can understand he feels badly."

Where is the consistency? The medicare legislation was bruited around as a wonderful piece of work. We said it would not work in the form in which it was presented—

Mr. Sharp: Were you opposed to it?

Mr. Diefenbaker: —that it could never become effective with some of the provinces not participating. No matter what the government may say, its postponement is simply not on the basis that it would be a contribution to inflation. That is an excuse. It is simply the result of the power struggle going on within the cabinet.

Mr. Sharp: Pure fabrication.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have heard the minister talk about fabrication previously, and may I say there is no one more authoritative on that subject than the hon. gentleman. He does not even know that there is inflation. The copy of his speech that he gave to the press yesterday was headed, "The Need to Prevent Inflation." Doesn't he realize that we are now in the midst of inflation and that it has been accelerating?

I recall when we sat on the government benches and looked at these paragons of political and economic perfection as they told us what to do. I remember what they said: "Place us in office and there will be no more deficits."

Mr. Sharp: We have reduced them very substantially. We have reduced them down to virtually nothing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They said, "No more deficits—we have got the solution."

Mr. Sharp: Yes, we use responsibility.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I realize that the minister is disturbed.

Mr. Sharp: I am not disturbed. I still have my smile.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If he is not disturbed then let him just maintain that smiling silence that becomes him so well. They said the day of deficits would be over, and instead of high taxes they were going to cut taxes. In the 1962 and 1963 elections 10,000 scholarships for university students were dangled before the young men and women of the nation. "We will bring them in," said the Prime Minister, "and at once."

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Those scholarships were dangled as sugar plums before the eyes of the students of the nation. Now, after three years, the government is going to make a saving by not providing the $10 million for those scholarships. Yet within the last few weeks we have embarked on an extensive expenditure program for other nations, accelerating the expenditures already made by Canada which is contributing greatly to international funds. At the same time the government says to the student body of Canada, "What we promised you we now find, after three and a half years in office, we cannot carry out."

It has been strange to watch this government. It has had recommendations from the Economic Council as to what should be done. It has had the advice of the governor of the Bank of Canada as to what should be done. The minister's speech was headed, "The Need To Prevent Inflation," and there is promise of additional taxes not to meet inflation but to meet other expenditures.

The increases in wages and salaries for the armed forces were announced by Mr. Lee—

Mr. Winkler: Carrots.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —weeks ago, and he said the amount was going to be large. That is how the government believes it will soften the blow of its ill-digested policies on unification.

Inflation is running wild. They condemned us; but we took measures to get the economy under way. In those days they did not say that the situation in the United States affected Canada, a time when there were 4½ million people unemployed in the United States, greater proportionate unemployment than we had, but today they say our difficulties are largely as a result of the situation in the United States. Isn't it strange? But the truth will out.

In the 1962 and 1963 elections they said, "The country is bankrupt." What about the attempted sales of government bonds recently? The reaction of the investing public showed the loss of national confidence in this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now the minister says that the longest period of expansion in the history of the country has taken place, that we have had a long and strong economic expansion in the past five and a half years. That is interesting. They now admit that the expansion began when we were in office, that by our action we started it rolling.

Repentance is not always followed by forgiveness. They repent now for the false picture they placed before the people of Canada. They knew better.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The public won't forgive them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about the stock markets? They have gone down and down to the lowest point in two and a half years. What about the interest rates they used to complain about? They are now the highest in 40 years. These things have happened under this government of financial wizards who had all the answers. It is quite a picture. The picture has not been improved by the minister's belated speech yesterday. The night before he spoke on television and gave his considered opinion of the duties of an opposition. He said we were responsible and he could not understand what we were doing.

• (12:50 p.m.)

I recommend for the minister's reading over the week end the views of the Prime Minister as to the duties of an opposition—I may return to that in detail later—or the views of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that longtime and able parliamentarian who this morning was promoted to the No. 1 position in the leadership stakes of the Liberal party by the Globe and Mail, a position which he will fulfil with dignity. I am referring to his position in the race.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They say they are a minority government and if they were only a majority government, how they would be able to act. What about their allies? Whenever they need help they are always assured of Social Credit support, no matter what takes place, and this gives them a majority on every occasion. Indeed, the hon. member for Medicine Hat is the waterboy for the Liberal party on almost all occasions. But it is because they are a minority government that they have difficulty and are unable to act, so they say. This represents the attitude of the government but I never expected it to be so clearly revealed as by the minister the night before last when he said:

—this wouldn't matter so much in a house in which we had the dominant majority, but we have slightly fewer than half the members, and therefore what happens in parliament today and the attitude of the opposition is far more important than it has ever been.

Mr. Sharp: That is right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When we were in the minority they did not think that. I never heard them arguing that way when we were in the minority. Then there are these immortal words:

If we were sitting there with 175 members we could ignore the opposition—

Mr. Sharp: Read the words.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is the verbatim report of the minister's statement.

Mr. Sharp: Read the words exactly as they are. Read the following sentence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister said:

If we were sitting there with 175 members we could ignore the opposition and say: "Well, you know that's just what you expect".

Mr. Sharp: Read the next sentence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did I not read enough?

Mr. Sharp: No. Read the next sentence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The next sentence is:

But they are sitting in a position of much greater influence upon the outcome and therefore they should have a greater sense of responsibility than they are now exercising.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister has done this before, he is always willing to applaud his own words. This is further evidence of that humility of which we read which is so characteristic of him and is one of his abiding attributes. Is there a national crisis?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the situation is very, very serious. We have been pointing that out for months. It has been described by the Prime Minister as a disaster. There is fear creeping into the thinking of the people, fear of a potential recession. Have the government acted? They have pushed it aside. The minister does not admit it yet because the heading of his speech is, "The Need To Prevent Inflation".

How is the minister going to prevent inflation? He is going to prevent it by imposing extra taxes so the government will be able to provide for the old age allowance of $105 a month for those in need and extra salary and allowances for the armed forces. Why is there delay in this regard? Inflation has picked the pockets of all Canadians. The depreciating dollar is becoming the vanishing dollar, but the government's attitude, as the heading of the minister's speech says, is still; "The Need To Prevent Inflation".

They said they were going to cut expenditures if they came into office. The minister says: Let us tighten our belts. This government is spending this year $1.6 billion more than we did in the last year we were in office. All across this nation promises were spread around by the Prime Minister—here a building, there a building, here a rink, there a rink. The situation is serious and the responsibility in large measure is the government's.

Somebody suggested today that we were the ones who asked for increased salaries. This government has been piling on high salaries for the top civil servants. Did we ask for those things? What about the expenditures that were expected but now are held up? The dreams of the Minister of National Defence as he marches in martial array into greatness as a competitor in the race? There was to be an expenditure of $100 million for a defence establishment of I do not know how many storeys. They say it will be less than that, but I am referring to the original estimate. Another minister thought we should spend $6 million on a picture. That is the philosophy of the government. Yet the minister tells the people to tighten their belts. Why doesn't he tell that to his colleagues, because they are not doing it?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have the floor. If the minister wants to answer afterwards, he may. Why doesn't he say that to his colleagues? On every hand they are spending. It has become a colossal race between ministers to find out what new plans they can evolve that will mean the expenditure of money. The government does not yet know that there is inflation, because the subject of the minister's speech was "The Need To Prevent Inflation." Small business across Canada is being driven out on every hand, unable to get money. Interest rates are mounting to a degree never before equalled. What does the government do? It just plays around with this problem. What is the reaction of the small businessman across Canada? Thirty thousand of them in one organization have already asked for guideposts. The Canadian Importers Association has said it has asked for guidelines, as has the Retail Merchants Association. If there be need to establish the fact that there is inflation, you just have to meet the average Canadian today and find out. Last night the minister announced what is described by the Gazette this morning as the autumn budget. It is a withered leaf. It is a promise that something is going to be done five, six or seven weeks from now. This government has been very self-satisfied.

We have been asking for action but we have received only contemptuous and smiling evasions of our requests. Indeed, on July 14 the hon. member for Northumberland asked the government what it was going to do about the situation and the minister said, as recorded at page 7663 of Hansard for that date:

> A great deal of our legislation is already having that effect—

He meant that it was containing and counteracting inflation. This government has refused to take any action.

Let me read from a special issue of the Gazette dated September 3, 1966. The heading is "From T-bone Steaks to Cat Food, Prices Are Up, Up...And Up". The article then states:

> Across the board, prices on the food market shelves are moving up and up . . . and up.
> Sometimes it's only a penny a can, sometimes about 100 per cent increase . . .
> The causes are many and varied . . .
> Housewives feel the pinch when they pick up a package of bacon priced at $1.35 which sold for 89 cents a year ago and 69 cents the year before that—an impressive and costly increase of almost 100 per cent in two years.

Let me ask this question, and I think the answer is obvious. Who is getting this thick layer of fat?

Let me continue with this article which states:

> Tomatoes, which in some stores sold for roughly 15 cents a pound last year, now cost 35 cents a pound in the same stores.

The article then covers the whole picture and states that $10 bought a pile of groceries a year ago but that the same pile of groceries today costs $13.08.

The index does not tell the true story even though it does indicate a tremendous increase. We had the benefit of a speech over the air by the minister in which he suggested that the opposition was to blame, and now we have had the benefit of the speech he made yesterday. We have been asking for action but what is now being produced? What is going to be done to meet the pickpocket of inflation? The President of the United States described inflation in striking phraseology. He said that inflation is an enemy which eventually makes victims of its allies.

Mr. Sharp: And there is one of the allies speaking now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman holding the powerful position of Minister of Finance says that we are the allies of inflation. Is it any wonder that one begins to question his thinking regarding the function of an opposition? What he says is that if we were not here in large opposition the government could tell us to take a jump in the lake. That is his attitude and it is a denial of the basic principles of democracy and parliamentary government. The minister knows that, but he still has that senior civil service mentality that affects so many of the frontbenchers of the Liberal party.

Mr. Sharp: The hon. gentleman has never learned anything.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Prices are increasing at a gallop but we find that farmers are not reaping the benefits of these tremendous increases. I do not have the latest figures available but as of 1965 the farmers' share of the dollar paid by consumers was 40 cents generally across the board.

The government is going to increase taxes. It increased taxes last April by 10 per cent to be paid by all except about 40 per cent of the people. What effect did that have? It now takes about 14 hours of a 40-hour week for the average Canadian taxpayer to pay for federal, provincial and municipal taxes. Prices are increasing as never before and the minister says that some action should be taken to meet potential inflation. His words, undertakings and actions are almost effective as a rubber mallet. He tells the people not to spend too much and to start saving something. Perhaps the government should think of doing the same. The government suggests that action must be taken, but the action they recommend is nothing more than a palliative caricature of action.

What will be the result of the announcement made by the minister that within a month or six weeks there is going to be a baby budget? He has announced in advance what it is going to contain. This is the first time I have ever known such an unconstitutional thing to happen, at least since Mr. Gordon had three boys fix up his budget. The minister announced that there would be action five, six or seven weeks from now. I can now only think that the hon. member for Davenport, the former minister of finance, will become even more attractive to his supporters than he has been, at least by comparison, because what he did appears to be brilliant compared to what this minister has done in announcing what action will be taken six weeks from now.

What will be the effect of this announcement? What will the individual do as a result of the knowledge that something is going to be done? Business will be unable to make plans, not knowing exactly what is going to happen. Everyone will want to know when, how and where tax increases will hit. I suggest that the minister's announcement will bring about the greatest uncertainty in the economic field that this country has ever known. Everyone will have to look ahead weeks before knowing what they should do.

I do not think the government has any plans. They have not been able to bring together the orthodox and the revisionists with the result that they have no plans. They now suggest that if we get out of here they will go to work and come up with something. We want action to be taken and we want it to be taken now, not next month. We are here now and we should deal with the situation. The question of inflation is the most important matter facing Canada today. What will happen in the next six weeks? Prices will climb and climb and individuals will hoard and accumulate. The result will be economic uncertainty in the nation. Why not bring in legislation now? That is a very simple question.

Our attitude is this. Canada faces a difficult situation and unpopular courses must be followed. If the government will go ahead and act now instead of playing with this problem, we will co-operate to the fullest degree in taking effective action in the national interest.

The minister has not as yet put forward one suggestion of any effective action to be taken. By how much is he going to cut expenditures of various departments today accelerating? Why is it that in his estimate of expenditures he is already out by $150 million since the budget was brought in? Can something not be done to control these grasping ministers, each building an empire for himself?

We want action now. If the minister will propose effective action we will be prepared to stay and support it to the fullest degree. As a result of his failure to act, we are faced with a national crisis. We will co-operate by supporting effective legislation. We ask the minister to take action rather than tell us to go home now and deal with the Bank Act when we come back. How they kicked the matter around to find an interest rate, and what fighting went on in the cabinet between the orthodox and the revisionists. The fight is still on.

While they disagree the economy suffers. They proclaim in loud voices what they will do five or six weeks from now and they swallow silently when action should be taken now. Why not bring in legislation? What intermediate measures has the minister in mind? Let him bring them in. Postponing action for weeks will result in employees stiffening their demands. What about the small group which profiteers at the expense of the nation? What will they do during that five or six-weeks period? They will be encouraged. About two months will elapse before legislation can be brought in. They will be two months of grace extended to the hoarders and to those who will make a run on durable goods. An upward pressure of prices will result. There can be consumer panic in the face of threatened legislation if action is not taken immediately. We ask for that action.

In the field of labour the government, by the 30 per cent settlement which was brought about in Montreal and on the Great Lakes, made it impossible for the responsible union leaders of this country to stand. The Pearson formula is now accepted as having received governmental approval. We were not to blame for that, were we? We asked you to get it settled.

Mr. Sharp: That is right, at any price.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That there was a suggestion that the matter be settled at any price is an unadulterated departure from the truth.

Mr. Sharp: Just as is what the hon. gentleman has now said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not think that what I just said was unparliamentary. If it was, I will substitute for it by saying that this is another of the minister's terminological inexactitudes.

Why did you not bring the matter of the 30 per cent settlement before the house? You wanted to play around with the problem and bring about a solution by offering more than was actually asked for in one case, I believe, so that you would be known for settling labour difficulties. You set greater fires of inflation than have ever existed before. What is happening? Profits of food companies are going up and up. A committee will be set up by the house to ascertain what is happening. What has the government been doing? While pockets were being picked by inflation the guardian and his government were asleep. I say this in spite of the highly commendatory eulogy of the minister given by the hon. gentleman who preceded me. He deserves a promotion.

What about prices of commodities in the future? I quote a man who is politically removed and therefore cannot be suspected of being activated by other than the facts of life. He is Maurice Amyot, president of the Grocers' Association of the province of Quebec. The day before yesterday, September 7 Le Soleil quoted him as saying: "Prices for groceries are going up 15 per cent to 18 per cent in 1967." These are the facts and the government will not act. Surely the minister should decide that the time has come to act now. Last March he gave a clarion call for restraint, but it fell on deaf ears. The deafest ears were those of his cabinet colleagues.

This government does not follow its own rules. The newspapers reported the Minister of Industry as saying that Canada had bought seven jets from France which would be used by cabinet ministers.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to repeat that misrepresentation. The statement has been denied categorically a dozen times.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It has been denied but the purchase has not. It was a completely unnecessary and unjustifiable expenditure.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman says that the transport services of the department are unnecessary.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The government does not wish to bear the expenditure which they ask other people to bear but they willingly impose taxes.

What action can the minister take at this time? I would think that, having regard for the constitutional position and in co-operation with the provinces, he should endeavour to bring about agreement for legislation to be passed by both the federal parliament and the provinces. Indeed, when I suggested it the Prime Minister admitted that this was going to be done. On August 29 I asked that the government call together the provinces with a view to reaching an agreement on some form of co-operative legislation. The reply of the Prime Minister, as it appears in Hansard of that day at page 7761, was:

Mr. Speaker, on September 14 there is to be a meeting between the federal and provincial ministers of finance. This very important matter is on the agenda and will be discussed with the provincial ministers of finance at that time.

When the provincial treasurers across this nation heard about it they said: "There is nothing to it, we have never heard about it." The Minister of Finance answered for the Prime Minister two days later and said that there should be action along that line. The provinces are just as anxious as we in the federal arena that galloping inflation shall be met. The Premier of Quebec announced yesterday he is going to set up a committee of the legislature to consider this matter.

There should be a strengthening of the combines investigation staff so that a thorough examination may be made into unjust price fixing, price fixing resulting from demand. There should be set up immediately a price spreads commission. The information is largely available now through the Economic Council. In addition, there should be the fullest investigation into the whole problem of unjust and unfair profiteering. It is occurring. All you have to do is go to the stores and markets to know that today's price is different tomorrow. Yet we are asked at this time and under these circumstances to wait another five, six or seven weeks so the government can think of some plan.

So serious is the matter in connection with food that if one examines the periodicals one finds that in many cases food items are 25 per cent higher than in the United States. Why is this so? We want action. We are prepared to stay here. Produce your legislation. Do not postpone consideration for six weeks. At the rate prices are going up the dollar will be a vanishing dollar. The problem is a tremendous one. The implications to our nation demand action. The suggestion was made by the hon. gentleman who preceded me that, whatever the constitutional difficulties, we do not have to pay attention to them; at least, that is how I interpreted his words. I do not accept that view. I believe that the provinces would be only too willing to co-operate to meet a problem that is eating at the vitals of this nation.

No longer can the minister say that the opposition is to blame. Bring in your legislation. You have always tried to tie somebody to the stake for your responsibility. As I listened to the minister the other night I must say that his description of me, by inference, could only be applied to His Satanic Majesty. I am to blame for almost everything. No matter what this government does not do, it is the Leader of the Opposition who is to blame. When I think of the three or four years of calumny that has been heaped on me, when I think of the colouring books, the truth squads, the pigeons, and all those other instruments, mental offspring of some of the members now sitting on the front bench, I realize that they have tried everything. Those in the press who support them have joined in. They pictured me as suffering from an incurable disease. I have an incurable disease and it is this, the desire to do something for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They spread these falsehoods. They put them in their literature. However, I never expected that a man with the wide experience and benevolent appearance of the Minister of Finance would go on television and place the responsibility on the opposition. We say to you now that many of the things you have done we pressed for. You did not want to do them but you had to do them for the benefit of the people. We say to you now, keep parliament going. Do not send us home. Act now, because what you have done in the production or revelation of a budget to be introduced only in six or seven weeks is a constitutional contravention. It is a detriment to Canada. We ask you to bring in your baby budget now. Certainly, it did not take long for the gestation. One day the government said it was not going to have it and the next day the government said, we are going to produce a baby budget. Bring it in and we will join with you in a spirit of co-operation in the national interest provided you do something effective, because this is a dangerous situation.

I am not very hopeful that the challenge will be accepted because you have not an idea in the world about what should be done under the circumstances except to criticize the opposition.

Mr. Sharp: Would the right hon. gentleman permit just one question, Mr. Chairman, a very mild one? Is it not so that you give notice of budgets quite a long way in advance? This has been our constitutional practice for years and years and was the practice of the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Always, but you have already said what you are going to do. You have said, we are going to have a budget but this time you have said what you are going to have in the budget, including taxation in order to cover certain matters. This is where you made your mistake.

Mr. Sharp: I deny this categorically and I defy the right hon. gentleman to show anywere in the statement I made anything of that nature except with respect to one matter already announced to this house, namely, that when the guaranteed income program was brought forward there would be an increase in taxes. This is well known. Otherwise I was very careful to make it clear I was not committed to do anything else.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Not committed to do anything.

Mr. Sharp: Exactly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I agree with that.

Mr. Sharp: Have it whichever way you want.

Mr. Churchill: The last word of the minister was, "exactly", and Hansard has it.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Chairman, yesterday morning a social worker called me from Vancouver. She was deeply concerned about the impending debate on inflation and the cost of living, and she communicated with me to find out whether anything was known or could be gathered about what was going to be done. She was concerned not only about the low income groups but because of the general state of affairs in the city of Vancouver where the cost of living is now beginning to cut deeply into the moderate income groups above the poverty level with which social workers are concerned. I was not, of course, able to tell her anything about what would be in the minister's statement. However, I know quite well how that social worker is feeling today. I believe that even in her deepest moments of concern she could not have foreseen the completely devastating statement made by the Minister of Finance last evening.

• (1:30 p.m.)

I do not want to misquote the Minister of Finance so I will use his exact words as they appear in Hansard. First of all, in regard to the winter housebuilding program he said that the decision had been taken to discontinue the winter housebuilding incentive program. In regard to research grants he said that the government will have to exercise more restraint in the rate of increase this year. The minister may explain that in any way he sees fit, but to the ordinary person that means in plain English a cut-back in research grants.

Mr. Chrétien: No.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Yes, that is what it means in plain English.

Then the Minister of Finance went on to say that the scholarship program, which it had been the original intention of the government to introduce this year, will be deferred, but he made no attempt to say for how long.

Fourth, he said that the agreements with the provinces in support of certain forestry programs expire next March and the government has decided that they should not be renewed because, he added, the government felt that the provinces could carry on without such programs. That is again a highly debatable point, especially if the views of the provinces are taken into consideration.

In regard to medicare I would not even try to paraphrase what he said but will read his words from Hansard as they are recorded on page 8217:

> We have decided that we must defer the commencement of one major program that is already before the house. Many of the provincial governments have indicated that they feel we are attributing too much urgency to the introduction of full medicare programs right away, and they do not feel prepared to proceed to put such programs into effect next summer as provided for in the bill before the house. We therefore propose to defer the effective date of the plan for a year until July 1, 1968. The legislation will be proceeded with in the house as a high priority item when we reassemble at the beginning of October. The government has no intention of changing the substance of the bill other than its effective date.

I wanted to say "dishonest" but I do not know whether that expression is parliamentary. In any event, it is not honest to say that this matter has high priority and should be rushed through the house this fall when it is pigeonholed until one year from now. No one in this country will be fooled by such tactics. People know that this is merely a device to try to trap the public into thinking that the matter is being advanced a stage further.

Let me suggest, Mr. Chairman, that what the minister did last night in this regard was to put the whole medicare scheme back a long, long way. We were on the verge of having that scheme in June had we given first reading to the bill that afternoon. Now neither the government nor anybody else knows when medicare will become effective, its date of application. What some of us said in June is equally true now, namely, that the interval of time between today and July 1, 1968 is going to be used by all of the forces opposed to medicare in order to delay and, if possible, prevent entirely the bringing in of a medicare scheme.

In regard to old age pensions, let me again repeat the words of the minister relating to that other big program, as reported at page 8217 of Hansard:

> When we have before us, perhaps in late October, the measures to authorize the increased revenues made necessary by the income guarantee plan we will be able to review our general fiscal position and consider what changes are desirable in the light of the economic and financial situation.

Translated into plain English, this means that the whole question of an increase for the old age pensioners is once again left in doubt. Perhaps the Minister of Finance knows when the matter will again be brought forward, but outside of the Minister of Finance nobody has any idea when in the world anything will be done for the old age pensioners of this country. This is true also of members of the government. I suggest that what this debate and the announcement of the Minister of Finance yesterday have done is to reveal beyond the shadow of a doubt who is the strong man in the Liberal government. There may have been doubts about it before but I do not think there remains even a shadow of a doubt now.

The Minister of Labour got his some time ago, as did the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Manpower. Each one of them was slapped down, and we now finally see who is the real boss in the cabinet, the Minister of Finance. He has shown that the reason he is boss is that he speaks for the people for whom this government is really legislating, the big financial and corporate interests of Canada. This has been revealed by this debate. That is how we feel about it.

Yet, Mr. Chairman, this is the government that less than a year ago went on platforms throughout the country and on the radio and television stations of Canada and said to the people of the country: "Elect us and we will give you a winter works program and other necessary things which should be done. We will give you a vastly increased research program. We will give you programs to aid the students in our universities and other institutions of higher learning. We will give you a medicare program absolutely, definitely and unshakably, by July 1, 1967. We will give you a better deal for the old age pensioners". The Prime Minister was reported to have said that the better deal would be in the neighbourhood of $125 a month.

These are the things which were said by this government when they were purporting to represent all of the people of this country. They made a particular appeal to the people who really wanted help from government, people with low incomes, people who were less secure and had less of the affluent society which we are told exists around us. All this has happened this year.

I contend that the people of Canada are not going to be deceived now by these lame excuses. The government has shown whom it is really representing. It is the big, vested financial and corporate interests of this country. I do not care what the members of the government say. Let them wag their heads in denial. When the chips are down and the programs come in, these are the people who benefit from the fiscal and economic policies which are being put forward by the government. This was demonstrated only too well and too thoroughly by the Minister of Finance yesterday.

The former minister of agriculture referred to the statement of the Minister of Finance yesterday as being a complete victory for the establishment. I call it a devastating defeat for the ordinary people of this country. Still further, I call it a "punish the poor" policy. We have always known that the worst crime to commit in this country is to be poor. We now find that the punishment is fitting the crime and becoming the most severe punishment imaginable, a cutting off of the very means which are needed in order to have a moderate and decent sort of living standard in this country.

I want to indicate, as I have already said, that those who get hurt the most by these policies are those who are the least able to protect themselves. A number of us have been brought up to admire the tradition of the sea, which is something we in this western democracy should be proud of. In cases of shipwreck or disasters at sea the tradition is for women and children, the weak and helpless, to go to the lifeboats first while the others, the strong men, stay on deck and go down with the ship if there are insufficient safety devices available for all.

What do we find in the statement of the minister, Mr. Chairman? At the first sign of economic heavy weather the women and children, the sick and the poor, the helpless and the young people who need education, are herded not into the lifeboats but are dumped into the sea so that there will be easier going for those whom this government is really seeking to protect. Let us not fool ourselves about that. That sort of thing is not going to stop with low income groups.

I well remember a story that hon. members will have read in their school days. I refer to the Masque of the Red Death by Edgar Allan Poe. In the story the powerful, the affluent and the comfortable seated themselves in a castle while the red death was raging outside, under the impression that they were secure because they were comfortable and because their incomes were sufficient, so to speak. They thought they were protected from the read death outside. As the story goes on, a horrible certitude creeps in that the red death in time will penetrate even to these people in the very centre of comfort and security. This is what will happen if we continue with this sort of policy, because what is wrong with the Canadian economy is that it suffers from a complete maldistribution of income, power and wealth. This is what must be dealt with.

I will read the testimony of a couple of witnesses. Here is what Claude Jodoin, President of the Canadian Labour Congress, said recently:

> Worry about inflation never seems to arise until workers ask for their share of an even more prosperous economy. Wage increases obtained by some groups this year have followed huge rises in corporation profits and an increase in the cost of living. Looking at the Canadian economic scene as a whole, we find that between 1961 and 1965 corporation profits, after taxes, rose by 67 per cent while, in the same period, average weekly wages and salaries went up only 16 per cent. It is obvious that Canadian corporations have not only failed to share this prosperity with their employees but they have also deprived Canadian consumers of benefits which could have been provided by these prosperous conditions.

If we had a government that was concerned about protecting the people of this country and the consumers of this country, surely it would be proposing that corporations, the profits of which have risen by 67 per cent, should be heavily taxed rather than blaming the poor or groups such as railway workers who have demanded increased wages so that they can have enough to live on. This is the sort of thing I am talking about.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

I shall now quote another witness. He is a former vice president of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Before that he was the president of the Farmers Union in Alberta. This is what he had to say the other day:

> In the past 15 to 20 years, the dollar return to the farmer for farm produce has been, on the average, less than the take-home pay of labourers working for $1.00 per hour or less. Within the total group of farmers are some 10 per cent who, because of certain circumstances or conditions, are able to maximize these returns into large incomes.
> Another 20 per cent manage fairly well and depend on inflated land values to give them a decent retirement fund. The other 70 per cent continue on a day to day basis with day to day commitments that are dependent on their ability to sell something even if that sale gives them no profit. Their whole situation is created because of their effort to get into the 30 per cent category by operating on term credit.

And so on. This farmer is not taken in by the language that has been used about labour to the effect that it is the organized trade unions that are robbing him of the value of his produce. He puts the matter better than I could and I will use his words. He says:

> The real issue is the continuation of archaic attitude toward the distribution of wealth and purchasing power. It is the attitude that some people have more right to wealth than others. It is the attitude that some people make greater contributions to the production of wealth than do others. It is the attitude that insists the only way that wealth should be distributed is by the individual's capacity to compete for it, without recognizing the fact that there is no longer any free competition between individuals for the wealth they, as a whole or a group, make available to a nation.
> It is imperative therefore that at this particular time it is necessary to rise above the side issues presently being argued in the press, radio and street corners. The rail strike, packinghouse strike and various other protest actions are only symptoms of the real crisis, maldistribution of purchasing power.

These are the things that we agree with. We say at this time, when we speak of inflation and other economic difficulties, that to use the present policies against the poor, against those of modest income, against the farmers, the organized workers and the sick, is merely compounding the difficulties and setting aside terrible troubles for a day of reckoning that is bound to come.

We must stop talking in terms of averages. The trouble is that we think of people in great big lumps. We have come to the conclusion that because the average person is getting along all right and the average wage or average income is adequate, we need not worry. That was exactly what was said by the smiling face of the Minister of Finance as he assured us that everything was just fine. God is in his heaven, everything is all right in his world. But the Liberal party is not managing to deceive the rest of us about what is going on in the country.

It is not true that people are averages. Averages do not eat, wear clothes, pay rent. But people do need food and do pay rent and wear clothing. We must provide ways and means for people to be able to do these things.

We must stop using the old clichés. We must stop kidding ourselves with clichés and get down to the business of finding out how to provide a decent, reasonable standard of living for the people of this country. There are people in this house who have been impressed with the elaborate economic jargon we have heard. I say to them that there are many people in Canada who believe that the business of government is to run the affairs of the country so that every man, woman and child in the country will have a chance to have a modern, decent standard of living. It is the business of government to provide a contribution to the welfare of the country to make that standard of living possible. That is what we are here to do.

We have to do two things. First, we must establish a guaranteed annual income for the people of Canada. We have got to do that today, without waiting for this year, next year, some time or never. As I say, we must do that now. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has been talking to people about the need of having a guaranteed annual income. The Liberals of western Canada, when they met recently, passed a resolution urging that the question of a guaranteed annual income be gone into. The Minister of Agriculture has provided some sort of guaranteed income for farmers who give up their farms under the ARDA program. That has been embodied in the agreement between the federal government and the province of Ontario.

In a recent editorial the Vancouver Sun, which is as staunch a Liberal party organ as can be found in this country, had this to say on August 1 of this year:

> The idea of a national guaranteed income is worth considering. Credit must go to Health Minister Allan MacEachen for raising the possibility during his recent visit to Vancouver.

And so on. Then, going on to examine certain things that have been raised in the Liberal party, it says:

> There are, however, a lot of questions to be posed. Can you guarantee an income and a cost of living to match it? Is it right to propose a costly welfare program in times of inflation? Most important, would GI destroy incentive?
> There is raised the curious possibility that in a Utopian society circa 2,000 we might work for fun because we'd all be paid a fixed wage for doing nothing.
> But it could well be that a guaranteed income is the most effective method of fighting poverty, ensuring employment, promoting stability in labour-management relations and administering welfare.
> It can be done without the kind of means test which is so abhorrent to critics of the present welfare system, either by straight subsidy or by a negative income tax.
> It is worth a look; but a very sober and far-seeing look.

That is not a sudden convert to socialism speaking, or anything like that. That is the very sober and sometimes very reactionary Vancouver Sun editorially speaking words of sense and of good, sound wisdom in this instance.

• (1:50 p.m.)

I suggest that if the Minister of Finance would try to find ways and means of putting buying power into the hands of the poor, those who need it, many difficulties would be solved and there would be no need to pace the boom and so on. He should do some solid thinking about getting a guaranteed income into the hands of the public because it has been seen that a guaranteed income works very well for some of us. The minister should pay some heed to the case for getting a guaranteed income into the hands of the people who need it today. Guaranteed income works beautifully for members of parliament. It works beautifully for senators. It works beautifully for civil servants. Why would it not work well for people who have no means of getting a good steady income or enough income to make a decent standard of living possible? This is one of the things that should be done right now to deal with the situation.

A second is to explore ways and means of stabilizing the cost of living at a level which those on guaranteed incomes can afford to pay. The two are tied inextricably together and cannot be dealt with separately.

I know the Minister of Finance will be attending a conference with the premiers of the provinces in the coming week. I also know, because he has told us so, that he is not going there with any plan having to do with prices and wages. I wish that for once this federal government would go to such a conference with a program to lay before the premiers.

I agree entirely with the views of the Leader of the Opposition on this point. I believe the provinces would welcome a well-conceived plan from the federal government designed to stabilize the cost of living for the consumers of this country at least as far as food, clothing, rent, household articles and medical care are concerned. These are things about which the provinces are worried and there is no reason in the world why the Minister of Finance should not go to this conference to seek a delegation of provincial powers to the federal government in order to help stabilize the cost of living and fight inflation. Certainly it would be a brave provincial government which would say no if the federal government had a good plan for stabilizing the cost of living and if it sought a delegation of provincial powers to enable it to carry out at least the beginnings of such a plan. I believe this should be done.

There are, of course, many difficulties in the way. The minister has spoken about difficulties. He should know what they are because he had a hand in this sort of thing as a civil servant during the second world war. I suggest that the real difficulties are neither constitutional nor administrative. What really prevents the Prime Minister going to the provinces with a program to stabilize the cost of living is the absence of the will to do it. That is the greatest difficulty. The Minister of Finance and the cabinet behind him have today proven that they are the servants not of the people of Canada who need them but of the people who do not need them, the big financial concerns and corporations of this country who can help themselves and who have already done so.

I wish to turn to some of the things which we believe should be done and deal with them briefly. We believe a start should be made by reversing the decision to cut back certain programs. Provision for medicare and the old age security program should be continued as formerly planned. To cut these things is a disaster. The old age pensioners have scarcely been able to wait until the fall in order to get some relief. How will they greet the news that the government intends when the fall comes only to look at the fiscal situation and see whether anything should be done?

We believe the Prime Minister should go to the provincial conference with a plan to stabilize the cost of living. Parliament has already shown that it can and will place curbs on wages. It has done so. I suggest there are thousands and thousands of people in this country who will not be afraid of measures to control the prices of the things they need in order to enjoy a decent living standard. The only people who are afraid are the people who stand to lose by such a program of stabilization and control.

I think it is a good idea to get an investigation of this whole subject under way but I am under no illusion that this is likely to be a fast-acting procedure. I would point out that in the United States they have gone ahead a great deal faster than we have in Canada along these lines. On August 3 the Senate agriculture committee asked Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman to investigate recent increases in prices for milk, bread and other foodstuffs throughout the country. He got busy right away and asked the federal trade commission to investigate. In the course of its inquiries, which have been under way for most of the month of August, the commission brought to light some interesting facts which I should like to draw to the attention of the government.

Mr. Freeman himself testified before the city council committee in Manhattan. There and elsewhere he absolved the farmer from blame for escalating prices. He declared that while farm prices rose 6 per cent in the past year they are still nearly 2 per cent below the base period of 1947-1949, though retail food prices are 34 per cent higher.

Further, he declared that in 1965 consumers paid a total of $77.6 billion for farm-produced food, up $34 billion from the base period. Of this gain he said that only $6.6 billion, or 19.3 per cent, "trickled down to the farmer". At the same hearing representative Lester Wolff, Democrat, New York, a former marketing consultant, laid the blame for some of the spiraling prices of bread and milk on wasteful delivery methods and collusive and corrupt practices.

At the same hearing officials of the Farmers Union and other farm groups argued that the farmer cannot be blamed for the price hikes in bread or other products. One of them, Harry L. Graham, cited a pattern of monopolistic price fixing and organization in the bakery field. In the meantime, representative Leonard Farbstein introduced a bill to impose a 90-day freeze on food prices. This was needed, he argued, in order to halt inflation.

These are some of the things that are going on in the United States. They are getting along much faster there than we are in Canada. Reference was made yesterday by my hon. friend from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands to sacred cows. In Canada profits have always been regarded as sacred cows not to be touched. But these things are changing. I read the other day that in India they are beginning to look around for ways and means of controlling the population of sacred cows in that country. They have even been suggesting that birth control might well be tried out on sacred cows as a means of popularizing it in other quarters.

I know these things will not be easy. But I also know they can be done by a government which really wants to do them. They have been done in time of war. The period in which we are now living may be a period of prosperity for a few people but it is a period of depression and misery for a great many. The alternative to action is strikes and more strikes as the stronger and better organized workers try to protect themselves, leaving those who are less well organized in still greater misery while those on the land are forced to abandon their job of food production.

Increasing numbers of people will be forced on to the relief rolls because they are not getting enough money to live on and the stage will be set for chaos and disorder. I suggest that now, before we are confronted with run-away inflation, is the time to deal with these things. I suggest that now, before inflation gets carried away by its own momentum, we should deal with it.

[Translation]

Mr. Pilon: Mr. Chairman, it can be seen from the speech made by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), notwithstanding the opinion of the hon. members sitting opposite, that logical measures will be applied to remove the spectre of inflation.

Any objective measure in the interest of the Canadian people makes sense. We must admit that certain signs show that the danger of inflation exists. Canadians are going through a period of prosperity at the present time, a period of sound and productive investments. The economic growth we are experiencing is rational and supported by a tendency to consume more than we can produce. It is therefore useless to repeat here the percentages concerning manpower and productivity already mentioned.

Although in some areas of our production, consumption and productivity are balanced, in other areas a little more time will be needed before this equilibrium is reached by filling the gaps in manpower. One may gather upon hearing the speech made by the hon. Minister of Finance that the harsh measures mentioned in his speech, are timely throughout Canada. The cost of labour and social welfare programs, in relation to demand, is excessive; every citizen is partly responsible for the increase in prices. Under such circumstances, how can a responsible government act? As the minister has so rightly stated, and as several editorial writers have been repeating in the morning papers, it is by taking restrictive measures. For instance, by controlling capital expenditures, while giving priority to certain programs which are particularly stimulating for our national economy and maintaining full employment. Some social welfare measures will be deferred. Obviously, this is unacceptable to a party, from a political point of view, but you will agree that, in order to face up to such a situation, the government has no other alternative.

I see nothing drastic about the discipline which all Canadians should impose upon themselves. The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) repeated this during the last election campaign. We have seen several countries, which may not have experienced a situation similar to ours, accept to tighten their belt. New taxes may be levied, and provincial programs may also be viewed with a critical eye.

The situation in which we find ourselves today is being reflected tenfold. As for the social measures mentioned in the statement of the Minister of Finance, the poorer people of the country would be affected. Every measure included in this consolidation program will be applied, possibly at a later date, and they may also turn against the Minister of Finance and possibly the government.

Everything has been put aside to prove once again that leadership is a characteristic of the Liberal party.

Our country has progressive economists and other objectives; all that is needed is to weigh the welfare of all Canadians in all areas of our economy. Our financial and banking system is the best organized in the world, in spite of what some opposition party may claim; our institutions play an all-important role and, in years gone by, they have been a stepping-stone for our economy. These institutions have supplied statistics and surveys and have helped the government to complement controls without the least restrictive effects, which could have slowed down the implementation of theories concerning productivity, manpower and consumption.

Industry alone controls our future as long as its development remains under Canadian control.

Enough pomposity; let us see action. I believe the program announced by the Minister of Finance must provide the assurance that we will go through this crisis and come out stronger than before.

We must understand that we are part of an economic entity very closely related to our neighbour to the south.

Mr. Chairman, let us ignore the gibes of the opposition, their empty speeches, their destructive criticisms, and let us show that we are the government, and let us govern in the best interest of all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, when he gave his presentation yesterday the Minister of Finance simply described the situation which everyone in Canada knows very well exists in this country today. He told us nothing new, and he merely announced several additional negative steps which the government intends to take to try to shore up its obvious failure to curb inflation. During his presentation the minister very nearly broke his wrist trying to pat himself and the government on the back for what he termed the excellent job which the government had done in controlling inflation. I suggest it might be profitable for us to look at just what the government has done in this matter since the minister presented his budget last spring.

In his budget the minister forecast that during the next 12 months there would be an increase in the price level of between 3½ and 4 per cent. According to Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures released yesterday, the price index during the past 12 months has risen 5.5 per cent, and at this very moment is increasing at the rate of 7.2 per cent for a whole year.

This increase will go up even faster in the months ahead because of the 30 per cent wage increase guide lines which the government established a few months ago. The reason is, and it is obvious, that no union leader will dare to propose to his members that they accept anything less than a 30 per cent increase in wages because he knows that if he does he will be looking for a new job in the very near future. His union members will simply say to him, "The union leader of the Montreal dock workers got his people 30 per cent. The union leader of the seaway workers got his people 30 per cent, and these were authorized by the government of Canada. If you cannot get us 30 per cent then we will get somebody who can." That is the reason no union leader can agree on behalf of his members to accept anything less than a 30 per cent wage increase in the future.

Let there be no doubt that when the negotiations between the railway workers and railway management are concluded some time this autumn, the wage increase will amount to at least 30 per cent. These 30 per cent settlements, the pattern of which was set by the government last spring, will of course be passed on to the consumer, and will by that amount accelerate the rise in the cost of living.

If the program for controlling inflation which the government have been following is considered by them to be a success—and according to the minister's statement yesterday he obviously considers it is a success—I should like the minister to explain to the house what his idea of a failure would be. As I have said, the increase in the cost of living has been accelerating almost day by day. Several months ago the minister forecast an increase of 3½ per cent to 4 per cent. Yesterday it was announced by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics that the increase between August of last year and August of this year was, 5.5 per cent. During July the increase was 7.2 per cent, calculated on a yearly basis.

The causes of these increases are happening almost hourly. I learned during the lunch interval that the Minister of Agriculture, in a conference which he held this morning and at a press conference which he gave afterwards to announce the results, said that the cost of butter to the consumer was to be increased by 2 cents a pound and he promised consideration of an increase in the price of other products to the consumer. So we see that daily, almost hourly, this government, by increasing prices to the consumer, by entering into wage negotiations and forcing their views upon those negotiations, is increasing the cost of living by its direct action.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, there is no question that the problem of inflation lies squarely on the shoulders of this government, and it is absolutely ridiculous for members of the government to claim that the opposition is irresponsible in this regard. I have already since the first of the year made several speeches in this house pointing out to the government what would happen if they continued to maintain their present policies. I pointed out the inflation that would take place, and the results that would accrue from that inflation. My colleagues, to mention only two, from Prince Edward-Lennox and Simcoe East last spring also made very effective speeches, and almost every member of this party has been making presentations to the house outlining to the government what was going on from their personal experience regarding the increase in the cost of living.

We have been making positive suggestions as to what could and should be done to control the increase in the cost of living but we have always been ignored. We have been told that the government was pursuing the best of all possible plans, that the country had nothing to worry about, and all we had to do was sit tight, say nothing and put our faith in the government. The figures I have mentioned today outline clearly that we have come to a very serious state of affairs in this country and that from now on the voice of the opposition must be heeded by this government, because obviously they are unable to discern themselves what is the problem, what should be done about it, and present to the house concrete plans for dealing with it.

It is obvious to all of us that we are in a crisis situation regarding this runaway inflation, and that is not too strong a word to apply to it. It must be controlled. But unfortunately the government's plans, as they were announced by the Minister of Finance in his budget last spring and in his presentation to the house yesterday, are both negative and sterile. They are out of date. They are the old plans that were used many, many years ago and it is about time this country was treated to something more imaginative, something more modern and something more effective.

A good example of this sterile and negative attitude was illustrated in the minister's speech yesterday when he announced that the government intended to slow down the assistance which is being given to research and defer their scholarship program. As we know, one of the chief causes of inflation is low productivity which sends costs and prices up. Two of the best ways to increase productivity are, first, to increase research and, second, to increase scientific education. Through both these methods we will find out what are the best products for us to produce and better methods to produce those products. By adopting these methods we can increase productivity, lower costs, thereby lower selling prices and thus control inflation.

But what do we find this government doing? They are cutting out or greatly diminishing their assistance to two of the programs that can assist this country in fighting inflation. The kind of sterile, negative program which this government is following will achieve the same results as did an exactly similar program in late 1956 and early 1957, when their tight money policy and negative approach brought on a recession which was well launched when the Conservative party took office on June 21 of that year.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I think we should examine this question and see what can be done to deal with the problem of inflation in a positive rather than negative manner. We know that inflationary pressures are caused by too much money chasing too few goods. We know that these pressures can be reduced either by the negative method of decreasing the volume of money available to chase the goods or by the positive method of increasing the volume of goods available for purchase.

As one would expect, knowing this government, they chose the negative method and have been reducing the volume of money steadily over the past year by doing two things, first, increasing taxes and, second, imposing a tight money policy on the economy of this country. A young and growing country with Canada's potential for growth should be increasing, not decreasing, production, and it is shameful that we should be adopting the negative policy of decreasing production at this time. Increasing production was the policy of the Conservative party when we formed the government from 1957 to 1963, and that will be our policy when we form a government again in the very near future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: We have a right to ask ourselves why this government is not following such a positive program. The answer is that this situation resulted from a critical shortage of skilled labour in this country which this government permitted to occur. During the past year this shortage has become more and more evident. For some time it has been clear that the technical training schools which were established when we were in government and which have been doing a good job are unable to produce a sufficient number of skilled workers each year to allow production to expand fast enough to meet the demand for products both here in Canada and in export markets.

Earlier this year I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce why our exports were not increasing at a faster rate and he replied that we in Canada could not produce enough goods to satisfy the Canadian demand and a growing world market demand. That is a shocking admission for the government to make. Once world markets are lost and customers find alternative sources of supply they are very often reluctant to return to the original sources. We are losing sales abroad which we will probably never recapture and we are losing the sales because we cannot produce enough in this country to meet the demand.

As a result of the shortage of skilled workers we do not produce enough goods to satisfy the expanding potential world markets or the Canadian demand which has grown tremendously because Canada has become an affluent society. This situation has caused inflation which is the problem with which we are faced today. Because Canada is an affluent society there is a great deal of money available for the purchase of consumer goods. People wish to satisfy their demands and desires and are bidding more and more for what has turned out to be a limited and insufficient supply of goods.

I suggest that this government should have embarked at least two years ago on a program which embraced the following four policies: first of all, a greatly accelerated program for training the skilled workers needed to carry out an expansion program to meet the increased demand for goods both at home and in the export markets; second, an immigration policy which would attract the number of skilled workers required to supplement the insufficient number being trained by our technical training schools.

Mr. Nicholson: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Hees: I will answer your question at the conclusion of my remarks.

The third step would be to create incentives encouraging industry to increase productivity and thereby lower the cost of manufacturing goods and the selling price. The result of this step would make our manufactured goods more competitive and in turn increase sales in the export market. The final step would involve a policy of providing industrial loans at reasonable interest rates so that Canadian industries could expand and keep pace with the world demand for products. This would of course reduce inflationary pressures at home.

These policies must be introduced even now so that this country can meet the problems associated with inflation and growth in a positive rather than negative manner. If the government refuses to take these steps it will soon realize it has blundered and pushed this country into another recession similar to the one which occurred in late 1956 and early 1957. When we took office we found that inflation was already well on its way and it took us some three to four years to pull the country out of it. I urge the government to throw away its sterile and negative policies, which is all they seem to be able to think of today, and adopt positive policies such as those I have outlined.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Northumberland was good enough to indicate that he would answer a question. Does the hon. member not agree that the constructive policies and actions of this government over the last 18 months have resulted in almost tripling the number of immigrants to this country over 1962, with more than half of the breadwinners among them qualifying as skilled workers?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the government has made a small move in the right direction but as yet the results have not been sufficient. As the minister knows, anyone in business who sees a shortage of labour developing accelerates his attempt to hire more skilled men. The shortage to which I referred was obvious and it should have been obvious to the government. The government should have made things so attractive in this country to skilled labourers abroad that they could not afford to do anything else but come to Canada. The minister must realize, having been a prominent businessman before coming to this house, that a successful businessman will lure skilled workers from his competitors in order to meet demand. That is exactly the policy that should have been followed by this government.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, I asked a very simple question. I did not quote the exact figures involved, but the program followed by this government resulted in an increase in the immigration of skilled workers amounting to three times what it was in 1962. Is it not a fact that the policies followed by the former government were such that the immigration of skilled and other workers shrivelled between 1958 and 1962 from 200,000 per year to less than 70,000 per year?

Mr. Hees: That is a very easy question to answer and I am pleased that the minister has posed it. The former Liberal government which went out of office in 1957 had been warned of the impending situation by the so-called hidden report early in 1957. In spite of that fact and as a result of the negative and sterile policies of that government we experienced a recession that was well launched by the time this party formed a government, and it was not until 1961 that we were able to pull the country out of this difficulty. In spite of the former government's mismanagement and negative policies we were able to bring the country out of this recession and create a momentum that has not yet ended.

The problems faced by Canada during that recession were not related to the lack of skilled workers but rather to the lack of jobs. In contrast, within the last two years it has become apparent that there is a lack of skilled workers. We have unfortunately not been able to do anything about this shortage in the past two years because we have not been in office. I assure the minister that we will be back in office soon and something will be done to alleviate the problem.

Mr. Nicholson: Is the hon. member not in agreement with the fact that the policies and actions of the government in the last 18 months have resulted in almost tripling immigration as compared with three and a half years ago, and that the great majority of these breadwinners among the immigrants are skilled workers?

Mr. Hees: I should like to give the minister this answer. If he were the president of a company and was reporting on the company's activities at a directors' meeting—

Mr. Chrétien: Reply to the question.

Mr. Hees: I am replying to the question. If he were reporting to his directors that he had tripled a certain program but was still far short of achieving the objective the company set out to achieve, would he receive commendations from his directors? No, he would be asked why he had not gone a lot faster than he had. Obviously the minister thinks that any improvement is satisfactory. I will tell him on behalf of the Canadian people that it is not nearly satisfactory enough and that he had better get off his seat and get out and earn his salary, which obviously from his own words he is not earning at the present time.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to reply to the hon. member by blaming Tweedledee or Tweedledum back and forth. The fact is that while the opposition was in government the same mistakes were blamed on them, and I will not blame the opposition any more than I will criticize the minister. I think the minister did the best he could with the concepts he was given by his department. What I will take up with the minister, if I can debate with him, is that his staff, those keen young fellows who 30 years ago were great followers of J. Maynard Keynes who propounded a new concept of economics, have forgotten that times have changed.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): The problems are still the same.

Mr. Otto: I heard the hon. member for Northumberland say that inflation means we have too much money chasing too few goods and therefore if there is inflation there is too much money and too few goods. This is nonsense. It is quite possible to have inflation at a time of unemployment and with a surplus of goods. I have gone over the speech of the minister and I believe that many of the concepts on which he has based his policy are the same as those used by the Conservatives and the N.D.P.

First, there is the concept of supply and demand. Ever since the time of Adam Smith people have supplied goods and others, the consumers, have had to make a rational choice as to how they will spend their earnings and what goods they will buy. This is a presumption. The fact is that today the consumer does not exercise his own demand. Since the time of Adam Smith, and in fact since the time of John Maynard Keynes, we have had advertisements and psychological promotion. We now have the television medium and we have the use of every conceivable emotional method to try to get people to buy goods. The people who exercise control over promotion are the same people who manufacture the goods. In other words, the economists and, I dare say, to this day even the minister's staff, presume that if a manufacturer decides there is too much soap on the market he will stop manufacturing it and transfer his money to the manufacture of shoes or another commodity. This is nonsense; he does not do that. What he does is to put another $50,000 or $100,000 into promotion and he says: Do not buy that other soap, it has too much suds; buy mine, it has no suds. Eventually he may even say: Eat soap, it is good for you.

The manufacturer and the supplier are one and the same person. They control both supply and demand, which alters the situation. There is supply and competition among the suppliers as to who will create the greatest demand. The supplier controls the demand through the powerful media of advertising. Does the supplier discriminate with regard to demand? Does he say, you should not buy a Cadillac, to someone who has an income of $2,000 a year? He does not. He does not care what the buyer's earnings are. He says: You must have a colour television set. He makes sure that the child goes home and says: "Daddy, are we so poor that we cannot have a colour television set? Everyone has a colour television set." Very powerful but insidious methods are used, and therefore to presume that there is such a thing as demand is incorrect.

Another phrase was used in the speech to the effect that a restriction of the money supply will dampen expansion. Normally this would be the case. In days gone by, when a manufacturer decided money was too tight he would not increase his sales or his production facilities. However, this does not happen these days. The supplier does not care as long as he can sell. If he thinks he can promote a profit he will sell at any price. He knows everyone else is in the same position and he does not care if he pays 10, 12 or 15 per cent for it. He will do it if he thinks he has the sales.

I read the following this morning in one of London's daily newspapers:

> Imperial Chemical Industries Ltd., Britain's biggest industrial combine, yesterday announced lower profit and plans to raise a $180 million loan at a rate of interest that will yield more than 8 per cent.

A restriction was put on credit by the U.K. government, but whether a company has to pay 8 or 10 per cent does not matter. An entrepreneur will borrow money to expand his plant. He does not care about the cost he pays because he knows he will be able to pass it on.

Another statement made in the speech was that we are producing all we can. This is a comment that is sometimes made and I will not question it. I think it is the minister's department which should question that concept. But are we really producing all we can? We are not. I have no hesitation in saying that most of our industries can produce another 40 per cent.

Many comments have been made about the high demands of labour. I do not think that is the case. A labourer will work as hard as a man can work because he wants to produce. However, he also wants to see the result of his production. It is all very well to say that labour is not producing. The fact is that labour looks at junior and senior executives and finds that they come to work at 10 a.m., have long lunch hours from noon to 3 p.m., have club memberships and live high off the hog with diner's club memberships and everything else. That is not true. Management works during hours when labour does not see them. The trouble is, however, that there is no leadership. We lack the quality of leadership in our country. Management has to pull up its socks. It has to indicate to the workers that there is some purpose in the work of the company and that it is not all going to waste.

We are hampered, of course, by the method of distribution of shares in today's corporations. The management class is not really concerned about dividends. The whole share structure has been so diversified that management can sustain itself almost indefinitely until there is a strong movement among the shareholders to throw management out. We have to think about reforming these methods. We can produce a lot more.

There is also a presumption that both labour and management will deny themselves greater profits and will do what is good for the country. I have been in business myself and I can tell you that a businessman will admit he has only one interest and that is to make money. This is his immediate concern and he is shortsighted in that way. He knows that if he wants a greater profit he must demand and get a higher price. Labour takes the other point of view and asks for higher wages. Therefore, to presume that management and labour are angels is wrong. They are not angels; they are human beings and they will act in this way.

If we are to put forth policies calling for voluntary restriction we are not going to be very successful. There is also a presumption that savings flow back. The phrase used in the speech was that savings will flow into industrial development. Savings do not flow into industrial development. Savings are those moneys that one scrimps for and does without in order to gather. You do not gamble this kind of money. This is security money. If you happen to make some easy money—dividends or profits—that is the type of money that goes back into investment but not savings.

How much do we have in savings? It was estimated we had about $16 billion in savings. After the Rothschild and a couple of other robberies, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics upped its estimates and it is said we now have savings amounting to $27 billion. This is not being used for investment. We do not gamble it because the Canadian is not the type to gamble. If you presume that if you enforce more savings you are going to have more money into ventures is to eliminate the risk. To assume that we are going to expand our savings when we introduce insurance measures and social measures, and that they will mean less use for savings in the future, is wrong.

I believe that what we should do to induce money into ventures is to eliminate the risk. This is the Canadian Development Corporation idea, and I feel we have to get along with that. I am rather worried about the reduction in education grants. I am worried because I do not believe it is proper, reasonable or feasible to presume that when a student interrupts his education he is going to pick it up again. There are human factors that enter into a consideration of this problem. A student may get a job or get married when he interrupts his education and the chances of that person picking up his education again are rather remote. I feel that the danger of injury to the nation as a result of this course is greater than the savings that might emerge.

I believe the minister is correct in saying that we are going to improve and increase our grants to the provinces. I hope that these conferences will not hinder the education program or the scholarship program. I feel that the actions of the minister are going to be successful, according to what I have heard this morning about the market. It appears to me that we may level off.

I am not going to say these policies are not going to be successful. I think we will probably put a brake on the inflation. All I am saying is that we are going to go through this situation every four or five years unless we conduct an examination of our whole economy. No matter whether it is this government or any other government, we are going to face this situation over and over again, with a constant need for immediate solutions without the time to delve into these problems in depth. We will be faced, as we have been faced this time, with a declining stockmarket. People borrow money on the stocks they own. The banks will advance an amount equal to 75 per cent or 80 per cent of the value of the stock. When the market drops the people have to come up with more money. When there are lay-offs and there is no place to dispose of assets the people may be forced to sell their stock. At any time there could be a panic. I do not believe it will happen this time; in fact, I know it will not. We have survived. However, this situation will occur again.

The question is, why should we keep putting ourselves into this position all the time? The restrictions the government is going to impose upon itself in connection with capital spending will, I feel, have an influence. I hope that everyone does not start pulling in their horns. I believe that expansion is something we should be promoting. I do not like restriction. I think it is a negative approach.

Let us consider the housing market. I believe the minister did mention it and referred to the high cost of housing. I have been in this business 18 years and I can show the minister figures to prove that in 1951 we were paying $10.30 per square foot for house construction. I can show figures to prove that today, 15 years later, we can build houses for around $9.73 per square foot. You see, we have very little use for carpenters today. A lot of the components are pre-cut. Window frames and door frames are pre-cut; kitchen cabinets are assembled ready to instal as are stairways. The technique has improved. However, the cost of land has gone up from $1,300 to $3,000 per lot.

The demand is there for houses and it is going to increase as long as people have to have a place to live. They want to pay a reasonable price, and if we do not provide accommodation somebody else will. You cannot remove the demand by saying there is no supply. The demand is there. They want a house or an apartment and they want it at a reasonable price. The price of land has gone sky-high, first, because it is a wonderful ploy for speculators. Second, and possibly more important, land is used as a hedge against inflation. If you put money into land you are going to get good money for good money. If you put money into mortgages or bonds you will get cheaper money for your good money.

More and more people are hedging, and I include investment funds, union funds and others. They are investing in land without any intention of building but are holding it as a hedge against inflation. Land has taken the place of gold and diamonds for this purpose; it is better than anything else.

You have the normal pressure of more people moving into the urban centres and you cannot increase the supply of people without increasing the supply of places for them to live. The type of action I should like to see in connection with the problem the minister mentioned would be reform measures in the taxation field to remove the speculative aspect on land. This can be done by reform in municipal, provincial and federal taxation. I should like to see the hedge against inflation removed as a pressure against land. I believe it would be much more reasonable to urge these people to buy government bonds, and this could be done if the government would attach an escalator clause to them so that the return would increase as the cost of living increased. In other words, if a person bought a bond for $100 he would be sure of getting $100 for it in ten years' time. This would remove the pressure from land.

The minister in charge of housing has just left the chamber, but he could do a lot to expand the supply of land by encouraging the supply of services, by using new ideas for sewers and other services. I have told the minister before that by one little change in the National Housing Act he could reduce the cost of land. I believe this could be done by paying the first draw on the mortgage when the builder has picked up the title to the land rather than when he has the roof on the house. This would enable builders to develop small parcels of land by themselves. This would leave the high cost land to speculative developers, the developer who in order to make money has to put up big money. They are the things we should look to, the solution being not to restrict but to expand.

One remark in his speech which struck me was that we would never have as good a standard of living as that in the United States. This exemplifies our attitude, and it is too bad. I ask, why not? We have more resources, more gas, more electrical power. We have a monopoly of uranium in the world. We have the seaway now extending to the centre of our nation. We have hard-working people. We have everything except the necessary spark. What we as a party should be doing is promoting the greatness of Canada rather than admitting or saying that we are always going to be second. Why not try for first place.

In conclusion, I hope that the parliamentary secretary will convey to the minister the content of my remarks in this vein: that I think he has done as good a job as he could do with the advice he has been given and the emergency of the situation. Granted, he could not investigate all of the points I have mentioned and delve into them fully and then come up with a solution, because it might be too late. But I think he did the right thing in this immediate measure, and I should like the parliamentary secretary to tell the minister that now is the time when we should be looking carefully into our fiscal policies so that the next time this situation occurs we will be prepared.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, I have just seen the hon. member for Lotbinière and he is perhaps glad that I am going to speak in this debate. I am going to prove to this committee that the remarks just made by the hon. member for York East in respect to publicity and advertising in Canada are somewhat along the line of thinking of the hon. member for Lotbinière when he said that the poverty in this country is due in large measure to the over-advertising that we have. For example, people spend money on things they should not buy but are influenced to do so by television advertising, and the situation has reached the point where people are buying more than they can afford. The hon. member supposed that this accounted for the poverty which exists in this country, and this government has now declared war on poverty.

I would ask them how they explain the situation in India, which is a poorer country than Canada and does not have any advertising. There are numerous countries in the world which have no publicity or advertising and are poorer than we are.

Mr. Otto: May I say that I did not say that was a good thing. I said that it was a reality of life that control over demand does not lie with the individual. I did not say that was good or bad.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I was continuing the line of thinking in light of what the hon. member for Lotbinière had said. I think the television station in Quebec city, CFCM-TV, took care of that in an editorial after the broadcast when they hoped that the free publicity received by the hon. member for Lotbinière would not result in his constituents being any poorer.

We are now facing a series of declarations from all sides of the house, but what concerns me most is what the minister said yesterday about the need for preventing inflation. What he said amounted to nothing less than the birth of a monster of his own creation.

I should like to bring to the minds of government members the date of May 18 last year when the former minister of finance brought in a measure on which I commented and as a result he called me at that time a "so-called prophet". The only thing I am sorry about is that the former minister of finance is not now sitting across the way, but there are very few Liberals here today.

Let me recall to the government my words at the time. When the amendment to the Bank Act was brought in reducing the reserves of the chartered banks from 8 per cent to 7 per cent, I told the government at the time that it was an election measure and that immediately after the election credit restrictions would follow. In the middle of the summer of 1965 the government did take measures to slow down construction enterprises and plans. The minister admitted in his own statement that in the middle of the summer last year the government slowed down construction programs. He said further that these measures were not sufficient.

At that time the then minister of finance, the present hon. member for Davenport, told me that I was trying to prophesy something and he called me a "so-called prophet". Two of my prophecies have been borne out. We did have an election in the fall and immediately following the election credit restrictions were imposed. These led up to the present situation and the drastic measures now proposed.

The measures announced yesterday by the Minister of Finance are a living paradox. One day the government announces a war on poverty, but from the minister's speech we are wondering how the government will go about waging that war. It is not a war on poverty in view of the issues we have now; it is a war on the poor that we are waging. We are still operating under this D.D.T. system —debt, deficits, taxes.

This party has been blamed in the past. Some Liberals went around during the last election and in 1963 saying "Beware of Social Credit; beware of inflation". Who in the Sam Hill is bringing about inflation now, the members of the Social Credit party or the Liberal government across the way?

Mr. Howard: And Premier Bennett.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I have nothing to do with Premier Bennett, but I very distinctly remember there being a socialist government in Saskatchewan and even the rats would not live under it but moved to Alberta.

Mr. Lewis: Only the rats?

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Some provinces have expanded and I have nothing to say against their administrations. But one thing I do know is that provincial governments as well as municipal governments and individuals depend on the monetary policies of the federal government. When these policies are not quite correct and need amendment and shining up, they do not get it. These policies need modernizing. We have today the same situation we faced in 1928 prior to the great world economic crisis.

In 1956-57, when the Conservative government took over, the Liberal government left us on the doorstep of an economic crisis. The Conservatives left us a similar situation in 1962 and in 1966 we meet once more a situation similar to that of 1957. The Tories might say that they coped with the situation. They made a big fuss about the Coyne affair; yet immediately after the election of 1962 credit restrictions were imposed. Coyne was right after all. That was an open admission that Coyne was right.

A fuss was made about this in 1961. People said: Do not apply tight money policies; let us conclude the election first and then you can put them on. Coyne went out and Rasminsky came in. Then we had the 1962 election with credit restrictions in the fall.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, when we look at the measure presented yesterday by the Minister of Finance, we see the following:

> Speaking generally, Canadians have been very impatient to get on with very many things both directly and through their governments and now we are paying the price for trying to do too much all at once.

I say that we are not doing enough. It is not that we are doing too much. How can we conceive of such contradictions? How can we compromise, by cutting down credit restrictions? On the one hand it is said that we do not produce enough, and when one turns the page we are told we are producing too much. The small industrialist is blamed, as is the businessman, because both want to sell goods. That is their job. The job of the manufacturer is to manufacture. The job of the government is to administer, to see to it that the goods, production and services reach the consumers, so that they fill the needs of the consumers.

It is not production that is missing in the economy of this country. The hon. member for York East said that we have lots of wheat in Canada. We have lots of oil, and practically the whole world's deposit of uranium. We have 85 per cent of the world's supply of asbestos. We have natural resources in abundance, even to the extent of pure drinking water, which possibly is one of our greatest natural resources.

We have a smaller population than the United States, yet we have a lower standard of living than that country. The Minister of Finance says that we cannot have the same standard of living, and adds: "The people must tighten their belts".

What kind of reasoning is that, Mr. Chairman? The natural resources are not missing, nor is the will to produce on the part of the Canadian people. It is purchasing power that is lacking. Yet the government imposes credit restrictions and taxes. How does the minister expect to lower the costs of production by imposing additional taxes? When he said that by the middle of last year it was evident that costs and prices were rising rapidly he should have included, in brackets, the 11 per cent tax on building materials as a contributing factor.

In the summer of 1965 the government cut back on its construction program, urging others to do the same. But the minister said that that was not sufficient. He also said as reported at page 8213 of Hansard:

> We cannot all get what we want and do what we want, and if everyone tries there is going to be an excessive rise in prices and in costs because right now the country just could not, no matter how hard it tries, produce enough to meet all the demands.

This, Mr. Chairman, is absolutely false.

Some time ago I heard arguments about bringing skilled immigrants into this country. Yet the government cut off 10,000 student loans which would have produced skilled workers in one, two or three years. The government is going against the logic of its own argument, if one can call it logic. If the government wishes to invest in human capital, to develop skilled workers, let it provide the means for the necessary schooling to produce skilled workers. That will not be done by imposing credit restrictions.

This government will probably be known as the dancing government. It will be called the tango government—one step forward, one sideways and two backwards. Ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare what he thinks of that. I have never seen a government which has sidestepped, somersaulted and jumped over issues as this one has. This government has blackmailed the Canadian people into accepting its measures. Does it think that the people are going to swallow this measure that easily? Oh no, no, surely not. The Canadian people are broadminded enough and awake enough to notice that the means of production are here, and that they can buy what is produced.

Will imposing new taxes help matters? We shall probably lose another part of our external trade, because our competitive position in world markets will suffer because of the imposition of new taxes. One may ask the members of the former Conservative government about pulpwood, and about what happened when taxes were imposed. There was trouble. The Liberal government will be faced with the same trouble.

I heard the hon. member for York East, but I do not know where he got his figures when he was speaking of savings. The government thought that $16 billion of savings was hidden in stockings and cellars. The hon. member said that after doing a little research it was suggested that that figure should be increased to $27 billion. How is it possible, then, to reduce this purchasing power? I believe the figures were obtained from the governor of the Bank of Canada to show that the total cash in Canada is approximately $2½ billion, with an additional $18 billion being represented as purchasing power in the form of credit. I hope that these figures are correct, and I hope the hon. member knew what he was talking about.

Mr. Cowan: Do you?

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): The hon. member always makes interjections from his seat.

If those figures were obtained from a newspaper, they may not be right, because the newspaper may not be correct. If the minister was trying to cover up mistakes, he was certainly not helping the cabinet, because he is tearing it apart. Probably he was not trying even to speak for himself, but instead, was speaking for some back-seat string pullers, whose puppet the Minister of Finance is.

The minister may be pale; he may lose his smile; he may lose his skin—but he will still go along with these people I have referred to. They organize the world as if it were a game of chess.

I know that this inflationary situation is one that faces the whole world. But because it is a world situation, I think we ought to set an example of trying to combat it logically, instead of following others as if we were a herd of sheep following one shepherd. In 1928, before the crash came, the situation was also world wide. It must be remembered, as the minister said, that we are in danger of having a boom-bust affair. Normally when you have a boom in progress, you do not stop it. Usually you kick somebody in the rear end for not moving fast enough. Right now the government is hitting the country on the forehead, trying to stop the boom.

I can take the minister around the country and show him where there is unused production capacity, not because goods cannot be manufactured but because people cannot purchase them. Inflation occurs when the balance between production and over-all purchasing power is uneven. Over-all purchasing power should be sufficient to buy the total production of a country and as productivity increases more purchasing power should be made available to every individual.

This is the job of the minister. He should not kick industry because it is trying to sell its products. That is the job of industry—to sell products. The job of the hon. gentleman is to finance and administer. I know that he has not, so far at least, proposed the devaluation of the dollar. That came about in 1962 under the Conservative government. I am a teacher of physics, or at least I was, and I think I should go back to teaching physics.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): We do not propose the devaluation of our units of measure or length. Countries which have to import timber from Canada do not cut down a 12-foot plank to 11 feet and pay for 11 feet. A cord of wood is always the same size. A mile, whether in England or in Canada, is always 5,280 feet. A yard is always three feet. No one alters that. A pound is always 16 ounces, as anyone who goes into a store knows, and if a shopkeeper fools around with his scales he is sent to jail.

How is it possible to change another unit of measure, the purchasing power of the dollar, which is after all a measure of value? If we attempt to change the ordinary measures of length and weight, we get into trouble. But because we do not control our financial system we are forced to permit a variation in the value of this other Canadian unit of measure, the dollar. Someone is controlling it; somebody is influencing it, and it is not the Minister of Finance.

This means that the Minister of Finance is little more than a puppet. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has been obliged to defer his medicare plan to another year. I sympathize with the hon. gentleman; he did not seem very happy today. But he will get used to it—one step forward, two steps sideways and two steps backward. We should all take care lest this system lead the Canadian people another kind of dance—a war dance.

I have been reading some of the statements made yesterday by the hon. member for Three Rivers. Knowing his background, I would agree that he has a perfect right to say what he said.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I have not said anything about the hon. member yet. I merely said I had read his speech.

Mr. Mongrain: On a point of order. My city is called Trois-Rivières, not Three Rivers.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Let me give the hon. member for Trois-Rivières a little grammatical lesson on that. There is no mistake in a proper noun. Look up your grammar on that. But I am quite ready to agree with the hon. member for Trois-Rivières, if it will help him—though whether you like your water in English or French, it is still the same place. What is more important to me is the guy who represents that place. This is what he said:

[Translation]

When I heard the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) tell us that the government stated, without any evidence, that we had reached our maximum production, I asked myself some questions. I told myself that explanations should have been given, of course.

Right. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) gave an explanation. What was it?

I think the minister meant our maximum production with the means at our disposal right now.

He thinks, he believes, he is not sure. The minister is not sure, nor is the hon. member for Trois-Rivières. Who is, in that case?

What is the meaning of "we have reached our maximum production"? I indicated a while ago that this was false, Mr. Chairman, and that if we afforded opportunities for our industries to produce according to their capacity and as they thought fit in this country, our gross national product would have doubled in two years.

[English]

I can well understand the hon. member for Trois-Rivières speaking that way. He is a very logical man. Right now, his political colour is white—independent. But if he swerves too far into the Liberal left he comes out a silly, pink colour and I would advise him to stay on his own feet, not try to cover up mistakes of the government. He is a good hearted man, a kind man; I know that. But that will not help the government at all.

Mr. Mongrain: On a question of privilege, might I direct a question to my hon. friend? It may be that I am becoming a heretic but does he not think this is because I have a mad sight in front of me?

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I am glad to find that somebody in this house has been influenced, though for my part I think the influence is coming more from the left of the hon. member. He is turning it from white to pink, but at least I can congratulate him because he is the only one who has ever been influenced in this house. I, for my part, do not need anyone to influence me because I am convinced of the soundness of my opinions.

The minister is forced to confront the need for taking measures against inflation because of his stupidity in maintaining an obsession with outmoded financial and fiscal policies. I do not see why he should try to maintain the system which has led us from chaos to crisis, and from crisis back to chaos.

Mr. Sharp: May I ask the hon. member a question? Does he believe it is because of the outmoded socialist system in Britain that they are having their troubles over there?

Mr. Howard: They have a leader with guts over there, anyway.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I am not saying they are likely to find a better solution, but unless Canada or any other country chooses to arrange its fiscal and economic machinery along different lines we shall always be facing the kind of situation which confronts us now.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Will the means and methods that have brought us bankruptcy, chaos and crises, lead us to success and prosperity? I say you have to change your methods of operation, and change your ways and means, but the minister will have to tell some of his back-seat string pullers to leave the scene, cut the strings and let him act as he should—not as a politician, not as a puppet for some high financiers, but as a statesman, looking not to the future of the next election but to the future of the next generation.

Mr. Choquette: You are quoting Duplessis.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Maybe the hon. member for Lotbinière will have something to say himself.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: That is not one of your finds. Maurice Duplessis said that: Next election, next generation.

[English]

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): That is quite true. Maurice Duplessis may have said it, but he was still premier of the province of Quebec for 16 years and he must have had some good in him.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: You don't have to be very bright to think along the same line as Duplessis.

[English]

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): To continue, Mr. Chairman, I wish to give the Minister of Finance notice that when we return after October 5 to deal with the Bank Act revisions in committee, we will have a lot to say and many questions to ask concerning this situation. Before any members of the government go out on public platforms again and say, "If you let the other guy in you are going to have inflation," I would remind them of a fellow named Dupuis who hollered and yelled and paid thousands of dollars for television time, and who said, "If you are going to vote Social Credit you are going to have inflation." He has been defeated since and now is back home.

Now we have a Liberal government and there is inflation. But Dupuis had been told to say that, the same as the Minister of Finance was told to write the speech he made yesterday. Maybe somebody else wrote it for him, but he delivered it and he will have to take the comebacks on it. In conclusion, I hope the minister will not retain this tight money, belt-squeezing attitude toward the Canadian people but will introduce measures in the near future to open up better prospects for them.

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Chairman, rather suddenly everyone in Canada is concerned about inflation and the rising cost of living. It is an important problem but it is not a new one. I recall speaking in this house in 1963 on the evils of inflation, and particularly the injustice to those on fixed incomes, and in 1964 putting a question on the order paper with regard to methods of controlling inflation while maintaining full employment. Undoubtedly, however, the present widespread interest in the problem is due to the fact that during the last year the pace of inflation has increased.

Since 1949 the cost of living in Canada has increased on the average by about 2.7 per cent a year. During the last year it has gone up about 4 per cent. Therefore we should welcome the restraints announced by the Minister of Finance last evening.

It is interesting that among large trading countries Canada has maintained the value of its currency and the purchasing power of its money better than any other country, with the exception of the United States. The July, 1966, monthly economic letter of the First National City Bank contains a table summarizing clearly the depreciation which has taken place in major world currencies in the last 10 years, and I would like to refer to this table to show what our record has been.

In this period of 10 years United States currency has depreciated by 1.7 per cent on the average per year, Canadian currency by 1.8 per cent, United Kingdom currency 3 per cent, French currency 4.6 per cent, the currency of the Federal Republic of West Germany 2.2 per cent, that of the Netherlands 3 per cent, of Norway 3.3 per cent, of Denmark 3.8 per cent and of Sweden 3.6 per cent.

In comparison with other countries our record in Canada is excellent, so it is nonsense to say, as the Leader of the Opposition said earlier today, that inflation is running wild in Canada. It is not only nonsense, it is irresponsible. And to say, as did the hon. member for Northumberland earlier today, that there is to be a final increase of at least 30 per cent in railway wages is also, in my opinion, irresponsible. If such a speculative statement has any effect at all it will fan the fires of inflation. The hon. member knows very well that the final railway settlement will depend upon negotiation, and if that fails, arbitration. To forecast the outcome at this time is not only irresponsible but improper.

It has also been proven time after time that the seaway settlements earlier this year were based on the fact that many of the men were part-time workers and there were special factors involved which form no precedents for the railway, or any other labour dispute.

All of us know how often N.D.P. members urge us to follow the socialist policies of certain of the Scandinavian countries. It should therefore be of great interest to them to read the figures I have given which show that in Scandinavian countries the cost of living has increased much more rapidly than it has in Canada and the United States. We cannot say that our trading position is undermined by inflation, or that the prosperity of the average Canadian is in danger. The cost of living has gone up in Canada. However, wages and salaries and social security benefits have gone up even faster. In point of fact, despite high costs the prosperity of Mr. and Mrs. Canadian is at a record level.

There is in fact no sudden crisis, but restraints are necessary and all hon. members should welcome and support the action announced by the Minister of Finance last evening. For while there is no sudden crisis, the federal government must accept responsibility for maintaining the value and the purchasing power of our money. Subsections 14 and 15 of section 19 of the British North America Act give to the federal government exclusive legislative authority over banking, currency, coinage and the issuance of paper money. Is there anyone in this house who would suggest that while the federal government has exclusive authority to issue money it is without legislative authority to take appropriate action to maintain the value and the purchasing power of the money it issues?

Under our constitution parliament, by properly drafted legislation, clearly has the exclusive legislative jurisdiction to maintain the purchasing power of the Canadian dollar. It is true that such legislation may possibly affect property and civil rights within the provinces. However, such conflicts are not unusual, and it is well established that in the event of any such conflict the federal legislation must prevail.

Can we maintain the value of our currency without throwing our economy into a recession? That is a good question and one that economists have debated at length. It is the reason why the Minister of Finance and the government must avoid radical measures such as those advocated by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, and must proceed slowly and with care.

The favourable reactions today on the stock markets of the world reflect confidence in the action announced by the minister last night.

Professor Clark some years ago in his authoritative report on old age security said this:

● (3:30 p.m.)

> The maintenance of a stable price level in the coming decades is, in my opinion, as in that of many other economists, compatible with practically full employment . . . I believe the achievement of these two goals, though difficult, is highly desirable and feasible most of the time, but, such is the nature of economics, I cannot prove it in any conclusive way. The attainment of these goals will require co-ordinated government and central bank policies more vigorously directed to these ends and a greater degree of restraint on the part of some strategically placed trade unions and business executives than has been exhibited in Canada and the United States in the past decade. The initial and prime responsibility for achieving these goals must rest primarily with the federal government, but it is not likely to succeed fully without full support from labour and business leaders.

The views of the Economic Council of Canada are to the same effect. The desirable goals are high employment, a good rate of growth and stable currency—and they are all important. In a recent article Dr. John J. Deutsch said this:

> At the end of the war, the governments of many countries, including those in Great Britain, the United States and Canada, accepted responsibility for the maintenance of high levels of employment. In the light of subsequent events, it is noteworthy that this far reaching change in the role of governments was not matched with an equal concern for the maintenance of the value of money. For some years at any rate the pursuit of expansionist policies designed to promote full employment was an overriding and almost single aim. This one-sided emphasis in both monetary and fiscal policy was, of course, the heritage of the great depression and of the long history of business cycles in the 19th and 20th centuries.

Hon. members will recall that not too many years ago we had high rates of unemployment in this country. The former government, headed by the present Leader of the Opposition, time and time again refused to accept responsibility for that unemployment. Members of that government referred repeatedly to high unemployment in the United States and western Europe and said that Canada was helpless in the face of a world-wide recession.

The present government, on the contrary, has taken the position that even with its open-ended economy Canada can achieve full employment and control its economic destiny, and it is our obligation to do just that. The present government has accepted that responsibility and is achieving that great goal. It is the same with inflation. If we are to eliminate inflation and maintain the value of the Canadian dollar we must believe that this is possible even at full employment levels, and we must accept responsibility for doing that. In his book "The Affluent Society" Professor Galbraith said:

> Next only to the virtues of competition, there is nothing on which the conventional wisdom is more completely agreed than on the importance of stable prices. Yet this conviction leads to remarkably little effort and, indeed, to remarkably few suggestions for specific action. Where inflation is concerned, nearly everyone finds it convenient to confine himself to conversation. All branches of the conventional wisdom are equally agreed on the undesirability of any remedies that are effective.

This describes pretty well the speeches of most members of the opposition since last evening—a great deal of talk but so few, if any, helpful suggestions. The problem is an urgent one because in terms of purchasing power the Canadian dollar today is worth about 70 cents as compared with 1949, and 35 or 40 cents as compared with 1939. I emphasize that this is not the result of any sudden inflationary crisis but of a long continued creeping inflation which has been permitted by all governments whatever their political stripe, and particularly the previous government with its large and continued budget deficits.

The consumer price index shows that compared with 1949 we are today paying 43.8 per cent more for our food, 44.3 per cent more for housing, 25 per cent more for clothing, 51.1 per cent more for transportation, 80.7 per cent more for health and personal care, 59.2 per cent more for recreation and reading and, surprisingly enough, only 25.1 per cent more for alcoholic beverages. Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, the exceptionally high percentage increase in the cost of health services emphasizes that the cost of medical care is likely to increase rapidly, whatever method of financing it is adopted. Not so long ago anyone who urged and supported sound money was considered a diehard reactionary. This apparently is no longer true. The clever people, the wealthy people who can hire trained investment advisers to look after their interests can protect themselves very well against the rising cost of living. The people who are hurt by the rising cost of living are the old, the weak and all those who are least able to look after themselves. Professor Clark in his report on old age security said:

> Inflation is inherently unfair to those economically or politically incapable of defending their interests. This includes some categories of salaried employees and those on pension—both private and government. Recipients of government old age pensions are in a position to exert some political pressure on their own behalf;—

Many of us know from personal experience that this is true.

> —those on private pensions usually have little opportunity and no contractual claim to have their pensions raised to offset inflation since their retirement. Those widows, orphaned children and retired persons who are largely dependent financially on the proceeds of life insurance policies, annuities, interest on government or corporate bonds or other investments of fixed, or nearly fixed, rates of interest, suffer from inflation with no prospect of relief.

Professor Kenneth Boulding has said:

> Inflation is a refined method of taking bread out of the mouths of the aged, the infirm, the widows and the orphans.

It is sometimes asked whether any government will take effective action to end inflation, because governments themselves profit immensely from inflation. Inflation sends up governmental tax revenues and makes the burden of their outstanding debt much lighter. Governments have borrowed millions of dollars, and with inflation can pay back not only the interest but the principal of that borrowed money with cheap or deflated dollars.

If you paid $100 for a government bond in 1949 you have now lost $30 in purchasing power and the government has gained $30. In effect it has imposed a $30 capital levy upon you because you were patriotic enough to buy government bonds. Inflation is in fact a tax upon the general public which bears most heavily on those who are least able to protect themselves. Moreover it is a tax which is authorized by no statute of parliament, without the consent of the people or any of their representatives in parliament, and without even an order in council passed by the government. It is a tax imposed by administrative action or lack of proper action. In fact it is taxation without representation, which is something about which all members of this house should be particularly concerned. For this is the reason we should welcome the action announced by the Minister of Finance last evening. Because inflation is such a convenient tax, it will be given up completely only if the people of Canada, through their representatives in parliament and through all the organs of public opinion, insist that the government accept responsibility not only for containing the 4 per cent inflation of the past year but also for eliminating the creeping inflation that has gone on for so long and under all governments.

This is particularly important for a young, underdeveloped country such as Canada. In Canada we are few in number, inhabiting a great area with vast undeveloped natural resources. Our need for developmental capital is almost unlimited; yet there is a world-wide shortage of capital. Nevertheless, with our stable political system and highly developed and efficient banking system we could attract capital from every country in the world if only we could assure investors that the purchasing power of our money will be maintained, and that our currency will not be depreciated.

Many members of the house are concerned about the very large amount of foreign equity capital in Canada. They would like to see more foreign loan capital instead of equity capital. How can we expect this if we propose to pay back loans in devalued dollars? If we can guarantee lenders that our dollars will not be depreciated we will get the loan capital we need, and in time this will reduce foreign control in our business and industry.

Sound money will also encourage increased savings and investments by Canadians in Canada. The traditional copybook virtues of hard work, thrift and honesty are not obsolete. We need them, and we need them far more than do the older, more fully developed countries. But these virtues have been made to seem old-fashioned and have been discouraged by a continuing and creeping inflation.

I welcomed the statement of the Minister of Finance because I took it as a declaration by the present government that here in Canada we propose to have both full employment and sound money, and that the federal government accepts full responsibility for achieving these objectives. I hope that as policy develops, new methods will be applied in addition to those referred to by the minister. For my part I think we should adopt the technique we have adopted in recent years in launching our successful attack on unemployment. We emphasized that an industry by industry approach with a view to increasing employment in the secondary manufacturing and service industries was selective. However, it has been successful.

Similarly with inflation, some commodities have gone up in price more than others. Some price increases have a basic effect on the economy and have triggered other price increases. We must concentrate our forces to prevent price increases of strategic materials in scarce supply.

In attacking inflation in Canada we must use the rifle, not the machinegun. We should know our target and have good reasons for firing. We have an adequate arsenal in our monetary, fiscal, credit and rationing powers. I think most of us would agree with the minister when he says that we must not rely entirely on monetary measures, and that we also would agree when he says this is not the time for any general wage or price controls. However, we should be prepared when necessary to use all the weapons in our arsenal against selected targets.

In leafing through the Criminal Code the other day I came across a section that makes coin clipping an indictable offence and provides that any one who impairs, diminishes or lightens a gold or silver coin is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for 14 years. Over the years governments in all countries of the world, including our own, have consistently permitted their currency to be depreciated. I think it is time this was stopped. I am glad this government has set an example, and I urge it to continue so that soon we will be in a position to guarantee the people of Canada that our currency can be accepted in full confidence, and that its value and purchasing power will be maintained.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate having a minute or two to take part in this debate. I cannot help but recollect the series of metaphors used by the hon. member for Megantic when he described the Minister of Finance. Perhaps the minister is now thick-skinned enough that he is able to accept such descriptions. As I understand them, the Minister of Finance is a chess-playing, fancy-skating shepherd who indulges in tangos, and is a puppet. In view of that combination I am sure the minister has a career ahead of him that will be flexible, to say the least.

The hon. member for St. Paul's, who just resumed his seat, discussed the rise in the cost of living and quite rightly laid great stress on the strength of Canadian currency.

He had a poignant word or two to say about the real sufferers from inflation—the sufferers that we who represent them in the parliament of Canada should keep in mind. He was referring to the people who are on fixed incomes.

The hon. member for St. Paul's mentioned that the increase in the cost of living last year was 4 per cent. I am not going to get into a debate on percentages because I think they can be made to fit almost any argument. However, the figures I have seen show an increase in the cost of living for the last 12 months of 5.5 per cent. Perhaps some expert will point out why I am wrong.

Mr. Wahn: I think I can clear that question up. The 5.5 per cent figure represents the number of points the cost of living index has risen, which in turn works out to a 4 per cent increase.

Mr. Fairweather: As usual, a lawyer from Royal needs a lesson in economics from a lawyer from Toronto. I accept that explanation. I agree that the Minister of Finance is right in some aspects of his speech, but I do not want anyone to believe for one minute that I feel his proposal to cut back on scholarships and on government spending for research is one which meets with the approval of the opposition. Neither do I personally approve of the postponement for a year of the medicare plan.

I think the minister is right in wishing to mobilize the total population of Canada to the danger that faces us. It interests me as a member of this house, and one who takes an interest in the system of parliament and its relevancy to contemporary affairs, to note that on many occasions we debate issues after the events. I acknowledge immediately that the hon. member for St. Paul's discussed the problem of inflation in 1963 and asked a question about the matter in 1964. Surely that has been the exception that proves the rule. I am delighted that the hon. member mentioned the subject, but I think it can be said generally that members have ignored the problem of inflation in their participation in debates in parliament.

It is my submission that Canadian people are starving for candour and frankness. I also happen to believe that they are starving for leadership; but that is a subject about which we would obviously disagree. I also believe that we as political people underestimate the ability of Canadians to take their medicine.

The other day I was reading an English publication about problems in the United Kingdom and how the ordinary citizens of that country tried in rather bizarre ways to lend their support to the efforts of the Wilson government to stem the economic crisis. I admit that I was reading an editorial which appeared in Punch, which is not noted as a thoughtful journal on political affairs. I was struck by the fact however that a good many people in Britain were doing their best to think up ways and means whereby they could aid the government in its plans. One old lady wanted to knit scarves and balaclava helmets. I think she has forgotten it was 20 years ago that they were necessary.

Another gentleman who had investments in the midland mills in Britain said he was not going to sell his shares in the textiles mills because if he withdrew his money the mills might suffer thereby. This is perhaps trifling but it is an example of a mood which I think we must encourage in this country. We must alert the public to the dangers that confront us.

I had hoped that when the minister made his announcement last night some of the more spectacular plans for government spending might have been phased out—I think that was the minister's phrase. I hope that this great triple tower, this defence structure that is about to go up, will be phased out. I cannot see any feature of Ottawa or any landscape that would be improved by this building. There are other aspects of government expenditure that might also undergo a phasing out process.

I wish to speak for a moment about medicare and to offer a suggestion. I was going to presume to become a bridge between differing opinions in the cabinet, but this role is not really one that I can assume. However, I do have this suggestion: We are told that we are to debate medicare in the next month or two and that parliament is to pass a statute on it. There are a great many people in Canada who live on fixed incomes, people in receipt of old age security and old age assistance who will become the pilots or the first phase of the government's medicare program.

As we all know, recent amendments to the social security act in the United States have brought into the medicare plan people in receipt of social security who are over the age of 65. I think this could also be applied in Canada and might be a very good way of augmenting the scheme of medicare for the whole nation. If we could bring into the plan the older people of 68, 69 and 70 years of age, as well as those living on old age assistance who are over 65, we would be keeping our promises to them. I also think we should not postpone the date of July 1, 1967 on which the medicare plan is to start. I think there are very few centennial projects that would attract me more than that the older population of Canada on the hundredth anniversary of our country would be given the benefits of medicare. As I say, this would be a pilot for the massive plan which the government has announced will take place on July 1, 1968. If this modest plan could alleviate the problems faced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, then I would offer it to him without any copyright.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway discussed sacred cows and birth control. I also was interested in the announcement from India that birth control devices were about to be used which would result in fewer sacred cows. I wish this device could be instituted in parliament, because ever since the beginning of this emergency session we have had a good many of them trotting up and down the corridors of this chamber. One of the sacred cows, of course, is that everyone seems to be busy trying to find out whether someone is to the left, to the right, or in the middle. I was rather interested in the railway debate because some of the hon. members on the right voted with the so-called "left" although for different reasons. Nevertheless the sacred cows in that debate were very much in view, and they have been trotting around. One of them is that all the blame should be put on industry. We heard from the hon. member for Mégantic that they all live on diners' credit cards and take three hours off for the luncheon period. Some people from industry have used the well worn phrase that if it were not for the incessant demands of labour there would be no inflation and costs could be kept down.

I will trot out my sacred metaphor and say: A plague on both your houses. At this point I will try to be my best left wing self—I am large enough to be both—and say that anybody who has watched the immense profits reaped by industry in this country in the last three years cannot be very surprised at labour,—although they cannot have had the service of economists who are available to a good many other sectors of our national life,—making incessant and I think quite proper demands for increased wages. On the other hand the sacred cow of compulsory arbitration, or the concept that we must use the free instruments of collective bargaining to solve all our problems, does not appeal to me in the least. I think—and here I will become my right wing self—there is a large area of public or quasi-public employment where some definitive system of adjudication of perfectly natural demands for increased wages must be augmented, without the necessity of a strike which cripples the whole nation.

I have now covered the whole gamut from left to right and perhaps my comments have not been very fruitful. Nevertheless I wanted to make them. May I be allowed to end my remarks with one other appeal to the minister. My first one was a suggestion to grant medicare to our older people. The second one is a plea to the minister to remember that in some parts of this country the problems brought on by inflation and unemployment are not the same as in others.

I recently read a review by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council on Agriculture regarding that area. I think that all hon. members, be they from the maritime provinces or any other part of Canada, should read this document and digest the startling facts that are contained in it regarding the drastic reduction in the incomes of the farming population of that area. This is statistical evidence of the pressures under which this part of the community lives.

I hope the minister will be flexible enough in his phasing out program to take into account the fact that there are many places in this country where unemployment is still far too high. I admit that this problem is improving and I give credit where credit is due, but unemployment is still much above the national average, dangerously so, and a fixed program of phasing out is not applicable in the maritime provinces. The minister's own Economic Council can bear this out.

I do want to say one other word about the education program. In response to a question of mine this morning the minister stated that the priorities that have been suggested by the premier of Manitoba were not discussed by the Prime Minister because there were political motives behind them. I did not want to tie up the house during the question period with a battle on semantics. If the premier of Manitoba is not indulging in politics, and I use the word in the best sense, and the minister himself is not indulging in politics, then what on earth are we about in this land? It happens that the first public announcement I saw about the need for priorities came from the premier of Manitoba. If this simple fact is politics, and if the government is so sensitive that an idea which comes from the premier of some other province must be political, then I despair for the nation and for the oncoming needs of that nation.

Now that priorities are fashionable the minister is clasping them to his breast. He is issuing them out over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in a most persuasive interview, I may say. Priorities, therefore, are the "in" thing and because they are "in" the minister is adopting them. Well, the first comment on priorities that gained public recognition so far as I was concerned came from the premier of Manitoba. I am glad the Minister of Finance for Canada is now on the Roblin bandwagon and recognizes, although there is no evidence of it in his speech, that the major priority in this country must be massive help for technological and post-secondary education.

Mr. Sharp: I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if he is on the Roblin bandwagon?

Mr. Fairweather: On the matter of whether the premier of Manitoba speaks for the nation and the need for priorities, I am on the Roblin bandwagon completely—and I hope the country is, too.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, I want to pattern my remarks after the attitude taken by the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Pilon), who made a concise and very realistic speech which will have a great influence on the next financial measures the minister will bring before the house.

Also, Mr. Chairman, since we are in a mood for congratulations and admiration, I wish to thank and congratulate the minister for his lucid and masterly statement, which is very interesting to read, and I am sure that the parliamentary secretary to the minister (Mr. Chrétien), with his good judgment, had something to do with the position he took.

Mr. Chairman, I have only a few remarks to make as I have just said, perhaps to rectify a wrong impression that may have been given the house a while ago by an hon. member opposite, when he said that I was opposed to commercial advertising as such.

I must say that I have had an opportunity in the past to speak on the matter and I have been misquoted, for I am of the opinion that commercial advertising is absolutely necessary. However, this afternoon I understood that the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto), in a flight of oratory, expressed opinions similar to those I have aired in the past, and I would like to take advantage of this opportunity today to rectify that impression.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, commercial advertising is a necessity. However, today's concept of commercial advertising exercises a detrimental influence through the media of the radio, television and the press. One wonders how the demand can be so excessive and how prices can increase so exorbitantly.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether we should not inquire, without making violent accusations, into the part played by commercial advertising in this field, for to those in contact with the people, the masses, it is obvious that they are constantly urged by commercial advertising to buy goods which they cannot afford. Among the main techniques used by commercial advertising, three are obvious and easily detected.

First, they use magic enticements. When they want to sell a product, they say: Do you want to have a great life? You will live in dream-like surroundings. They tempt you with a product supposed to be so wonderful that you escape from reality into an unreal, wonderful and dream-like world.

Another technique of commercial advertising is their trading upon people's vanity. To sell a product, for example a hair preparation, we are shown a young man who is unpopular at parties and whom nobody cares to know. As soon as he uses the hair preparation, all the women chase and love him. These are the kinds of techniques used by commercial advertising, Mr. Chairman.

It is easy to say that people are free, but there will always be naive and credulous people and ways will be found to exploit them and I am convinced that commercial advertising, as strong as it is today, gets the better of the small consumer's freedom of choice.

Mr. Chairman, another method used by commercial advertising is to stress the low cost of the product. One hears all the time: You can get this or that at an unbelievably low price. Here are the current formulas: "Ridicously low prices"; "No down payment"; "36 months to pay". The individual enjoys his purchase for one, two or three months and after that come the lawyer's letter, proceedings, impounding, even the Lacombe Act which forces people who no longer can afford to fulfil their obligations to deposit their salaries at the office of the clerk of the Magistrate Court. That applies to cases in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to point out those three methods which exercise a harmful influence, as I said earlier.

And the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) knows how much the psychological factor is important in political economy; it is precisely those things which should be stressed sometimes to explain the economic events which cannot be explained except by great theories which ordinary people are not able to assimilate.

That is the reason why, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to call the attention of the house to those questions and see if it would not be advisable to study the problem and even to impose restrictions, because commercial advertising is supposed to be a way to promote sales, but today it has become an industry, an end in itself.

In England, a board conducted an investigation on trusts and has just tabled its report. That investigation lasted three years. That board recommended among other things that Unilever Limited and Procter and Gamble Limited reduce by an average of 20 per cent the wholesale price of domestic soap and by 40 per cent the sales costs of those products. The investigation discovered, in fact, that in 1964 those two companies had spent almost 20 per cent of the retail price of domestic soap on sales promotion, particularly in advertising.

People say: prices are going up. Prices are going up because sales promotion is exaggerated. And who pays for the promotion of sales, publicity that is? Here again it is the consumer.

Mr. Chairman, the minister pointed out yesterday in his speech that there is a law against monopolies. I wonder if this law should not be extended so as to include a provision against sales promotion monopolies. Advertising has now come to a point, as I was saying a while ago, where the consumer's freedom to choose is overpowered and I believe that, considered in this light, sales promotion can become a cause of poverty.

I repeat that I am not against commercial advertising in itself, because it is necessary. But in the present context, with its intensity and frequency being increased by radio and television, it inevitably exercises a prejudicial influence on the consumer and, at that point, the state must investigate and find the necessary remedy to correct the situation.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder whether the hon. member would permit me to ask a question for convenience of members. I wonder whether it would be agreeable that some indication be given as to the point in this afternoon's proceedings at which we should rise and report progress from this committee in order to bring forward the motion to enlarge the terms of reference of the committee dealing with consumer credit. If during the course of the hon. member's remarks I could have some indication from hon. members as to the point at which this would be agreeable, it would be helpful. May I thank the hon. member for permitting me to make this request.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, in rising to take part in this debate I would first of all remind hon. members that this is the first item of the estimates of the Minister of Finance. We were dealing primarily yesterday, and are again today, with remarks made by the Minister of Finance in opening discussion of his estimates for our consideration. It is only a matter of a few months ago when the minister presented to parliament a budget which he said at the time would control the inflationary forces which were at work in this country, a budget which he said would bring about a further appreciation of the progress that was being made economically in our country.

Looking at the statement which he has made on this occasion, and thinking back to the utterances that have come from former finance ministers over the years--and I have read most of them going back to the earliest years of Canadian history—I have never seen a more dismal denial of Canada's future than that which we see contained in this document that has been presented by the minister on this occasion.

The first sentence of the remarks of the minister, as reported at page 8212 of Hansard, read in this way:

> Mr. Chairman, the fact that the committee and the government regard the threat of inflation as an important and urgent matter is evidence that Canada will not drift into a period of continually rising prices and costs.

The minister and the government opposite were warned months ago of what was taking place in this country, of those things that were contributing more than anything else to the inflationary trends that were robbing the Canadian consumers and the Canadian taxpayers of the dollar value of their wage packets.

The minister ridiculed those on the opposition benches, and when we rose in our places in the house, as is our right and duty, to warn of the dangers that lie ahead the minister and the government opposite threw at us time after time the charge that we were trying to obstruct the orderly business of parliament.

The minister went before the television camera the other night and told the people of Canada that we were trying to do too much in too big a hurry. Does that sound as though there has been obstruction in the House of Commons, Mr. Chairman? Certainly not. This gives the lie to the propaganda that has been issuing forth from the National Liberal Federation headquarters, from government benches, ministerial offices and the offices of individual members who sit opposite. The opposition members of parliament have warned about the dangers of inflation for months now. The government has continually said that it had things under control, that the policies that they were employing would meet and overcome the problems that might face this nation in this regard.

The minister went on in his third paragraph to say that we have had a long and strong economic expansion in the past five and a half years. What an admission to come from hon. members opposite, Mr. Chairman, in view of the charges that they made not so many years ago about the government of that day, about the Minister of Finance of that day and about the actions that were being taken at the time to overcome the depression and recession that resulted from the 22 years of Liberal administration prior to 1957.

As I view the document that was presented to the house and to the nation by the Minister of Finance on this occasion, I cannot help but think this afternoon of a former minister of finance, the Hon. Donald Fleming, who during the years tackled the problems which had been created by many of those who sit opposite and laid the foundation for the prosperity and expansion which has taken place today; and I would say that to the Acting Prime Minister who is in his seat today.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Why single him out?

Mr. Nasserden: The Minister of Finance also said that by the middle of last year it was evident that costs and prices in the field of construction were rising too rapidly. Was that not what the opposition parties told the government when they instituted the 11 per cent sales tax? Each one of the ministers opposite knows the effect that that sales tax has had on construction costs. Buildings which would have cost $800,000 are today costing $1,100,000.

Mr. Nicholson: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Nasserden: After I have finished I would be very glad to. When we told hon. gentlemen opposite of the effect that this tax would have, they laughed. They denied that the implications that we at that time said were involved would have any effect on the cost of our economy, and as a result they have built the highest cost economy in the entire history of our nation.

During the budget speech of the Minister of Finance a few months ago he admitted this fact when he started the progressive reduction of that tax. But this delayed reduction has left disastrous effects on the construction industry of the country and on the productive capacity of the nation. The minister said that the government had kept this policy of restraint since that time, though it had not achieved as much success as he would have liked to see. The Minister of Finance cannot say that he was not warned. When we issued those warnings in the House of Commons we were told we were obstructing.

Canada faces today a crisis in regard to a cost of living which is the highest in the entire history of the country. We have the highest interest rates in the entire history of the country. This is undeniable evidence of the failure of the government to discharge their duty. These are the same gentlemen who, in the years when the right hon. gentleman who is today Leader of the Opposition was prime minister, said of his administraton that it was not a businessman's government. These boys sitting across the way had all the answers. They had the business experience and were going to get this country rolling again. They were going to fight the pitfalls of inflation, the way it eats into the consumer's dollar and into the daily lives of all our people.

A good deal has been said today about high demand, and the fact that it raises prices. It has not been the great demand for goods in Canada that has raised prices, it has been the taxation policy of the government and the financial policies of the government that have raised prices in this country. The fact that when it presented its budget a few months ago the government opposite saw fit to raise income taxes, has had the effect of lowering the take home pay of the individual consumer in this country. The Secretary of State for External Affairs knows that, as well as I do.

The Minister of Finance reached a state of hysteria that we have seldom seen in the House of Commons when he went on to say: "We have reached a position that is unstable". Have you ever heard of a minister of finance in the entire history of Canada saying that we have now reached a position that is unstable? He went on to say that the present trends just cannot continue for long into the future. There are no plans to alleviate the situation; there are just pious hopes. I say that this nation cannot much longer withstand the rigours of the kind of administration that we have had during the last three years.

Listen to these words in the minister's statement:

> We are now producing about all we can in Canada this year. We have excellent market opportunities at home and in other countries. We have again been lucky in getting huge grain crops at a time when grains are in great demand. Our labour force is growing at a rate of a bit over 3 per cent a year and is becoming better educated and trained.

Yet this government, in the face of these optimistic factors is, in the words of the minister, facing a prospect that cannot be described as anything but dismal denial of the future of our nation. That is not all, because the minister went on to say this:

> We must also recognize that the average Canadian, although he is a fortunate citizen of the world and can look forward to a steadily rising standard of living, cannot have the same standard of living as the average United States citizen—

An hon. member,—I believe the hon. member for York East,—wondered why. I say to the House of Commons, to the government and to the Minister of Finance that this statement made by the Minister of Finance was an indication to the trained young Canadian citizens in our land to seek opportunities in other lands, because by this statement more harm to the future of this nation was done than has been done by any other single statement within the recent history of our country. That statement is an absolute denial of faith in young Canadians and is an absolute denial in the future of our country. That is what we are to get from the language of the minister, who is in many respects the first minister, when he talks about the economic prospects of the nation.

We on this side of the house cannot help wondering at the words of the hon. member for Leeds, who drew on all the wonderful qualities of the minister, and who talked of the preparation that the minister has had to come to his present position. An hon. member in this debate mentioned mistakes. May I say that people learn from their mistakes. Do you know, sir, if one were to apply that to the present government, it would qualify as the best educated government in the history of our country?

I recall vividly when it came to office that everyone talked of the 60 days of decision. This government said that in those 60 days it would do more than the former government had done during its entire period in office. That 60 days of decision has changed to 60 days of dismissal, sending the members of the House of Commons back to their own constituencies while the government trims its lamps, hoping that the problem of inflation will somehow disappear, and that all will be well.

The businessmen of this country must wonder at the antics of the government, when they listen to the statement which was made by the Minister of Finance with respect to things that should be done, only to hear him say that those things are not to be done because of the problems that face this nation—that these things will not be done for another six to eight weeks. Certainly, that is hard to understand.

You know, sir, the minister made this very interesting observation:

> An alert and informed public opinion can play an important role, as well as those directly involved.

The people of this nation know all about inflation. Every time a housewife goes to the store to buy groceries, clothes or any of the commodities necessary for life, she draws a direct comparison between costs today, and the costs of yesterday. Often, within a week, one can see prices increase a few cents here and a few cents there. The people of the nation do not have to be informed. Those who have to be informed of this are hon. gentlemen opposite.

[Mr. Nasserden.]

Not only must they be informed about the problem, but they must make up their minds about what we are to do. As seen from this side of the house, this faceless administration cannot make up its mind on the important problems facing the nation. That is one of the undesirable attributes of the present government.

Referring again to the minister's remarks, he had this to day:

> The expansion of the money supply and bank credit has been held in check and interest rates have risen in response to insistent demands for credit.

In recent months the minister has tried to hold in check the money supply. That was not the case a few months ago when the government was pumping every cent it could into the financial system of this country, until the banks held up their hands in terror at what was happening, and the minister had to reverse the process. The government opposite cannot shelve the responsibility that it faces with regard to interest rates. I say this, because of the bank legislation which should have been before parliament before this time and which is still being held up for consideration. By its attitude the government has shown that it favours a high interest rate policy for this nation, and by virtue of that it has encouraged a higher trend of interest rates. In addition, the government has not done anything to alleviate the situation which prevents money being provided at lower costs.

I could go on dealing with other factors in the minister's statement. There was one statement which was of interest to the province of Saskatchewan, and that has to do with the deferring of the medicare program for another year.

This program will cost the province of Saskatchewan in excess of $14 million. All I have to ask the minister is: What has he got against the province of Saskatchewan?

I want to say something of what the government should have done long ago. This subject has been raised from this side of the house on more than one occasion. It should have brought in a consumer loan legislation program whereby the consumers of this country could purchase the things they need at reasonable rates of interest, as certain consumers can today under the farm improvement loans legislation.

They could have eliminated the 11 per cent sales tax which they imposed. They could have set up a department of urban affairs to take care of the problem of urban development in this country. I well recall the way in which members opposite went to people living in urban areas during the election campaigns of 1962, 1963 and 1965 saying: the Tories are the farmers' party; we will do something for those of you who live in the cities and towns. But they have utterly failed to meet this problem of urban development in an effective way.

There is another thing they could do. They could get a prime minister who would put a face on the government opposite, one who would give the government a purpose which we, and all Canadians, could see. If that were done, Canadians would have something to work for and the Minister of Finance would not have to say in the House of Commons that we as Canadians will never achieve the standard of living which our friends in the United States enjoy.

We have the resources. We have a keen, resourceful people. Moreover, as a result of the action taken when the Leader of the Opposition was Prime Minister, we set in motion the greatest technical training program in the entire history of this nation, giving people the opportunity to train themselves for jobs which could build a greater Canada. Yet here we find a government which says it intends to cut back on research spending, to cut back on education. Already in the course of this debate we have seen hon. gentlemen opposite change their minds in this regard. The statement by the Minister of Finance was an ill-considered statement put forward without proper thought.

The other night on television the Minister of Finance made another admission which is even more interesting. He said, in effect, that it was the opposition who were responsible for the troubles we have here in Canada. Analyse that statement and you will find that in a democratic society like our own it means that the opposition could have done a better job than the government has done in the last several years in conducting the affairs of this country.

Consider the situation. The consumer price index has never been higher. A committee of the House of Commons and of the Senate is being set up to study the situation so that the government may have an excuse for not taking action. No move has been made to make money available on reasonable terms to those who are paying excessive interest rates. Then there is the statement by the Minister of Finance that we have now reached a position which is unstable.

How true this is in Canada today. Look at the labour situation. Look at the situation with regard to agricultural income. Look at what is happening in our armed forces. Look at the state of dominion-provincial relations. Look at the prospect of rising interest rates, and look at this latest attempt of the government to deal with inflation, this erosion of the value of the savings and earnings of Canadians—a thief stealing from the pockets of Canadians and doing so with the co-operation and, apparently, with the consent of the government opposite.

As I look at the proposals which hon. gentlemen opposite have offered I cannot convince myself that they are likely to have the effect for which the minister is hoping. After all, medicare is not yet in being, so nothing will be saved by delay in that field. The scholarship program is not yet in effect, so nothing will be saved by delay in this regard, either.

It amounts to this. All the government proposes to do as a means of combating inflation is to increase income tax and direct the people to exercise the restraint which the government has refused to exercise. This is the only answer the Liberal party has ever had. Yet they were able to convince the people of Canada that they had other programs, and were able to put out of office a government which took over the administration at a time of unemployment when the economy was stagnant—

Mr. Sharp: And produced a financial crisis.

Mr. Nasserden: —and which was able to create such a favourable climate that in 1961 there began the greatest period of expansion in the entire history of our nation. Every hon. gentleman opposite is proud of the expansion which took place as a result of those policies.

Mr. Sharp: Why are you not still in office?

Mr. Nasserden: Because of the fraudulent claims made by hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly by the hon. gentleman who now holds the portfolio of finance. I remember the statement which the hon. gentleman made on devaluation. He thought the Canadian dollar was not going to be worth anything at all.

I will end simply by asking: What is Canada's dollar worth today, under a Liberal government?

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. gentleman was good enough to say he would answer a question at the end of his remarks. I should like to ask him now whether he seriously suggests that the 11 per cent tax on building materials which is now in effect does not have a salutary effect in tending to reduce unnecessary construction in the country.

Mr. Nasserden: Here is another minister who has a poor memory. The tax is imposed not only on building supplies but on production machinery—it has these two aspects. Is it not this tax, its two parts taken together, which began the spiral of inflation we are experiencing now in Canada? The Minister of Finance admitted as much when he decided to repeal it at the time of the last budget—

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. gentleman is making a speech. I asked him a question, I hope he will answer it.

Mr. Nasserden: I know I cannot give the minister the answer for which he is looking. He knows in his heart that this measure had a more damaging effect on the Canadian economy and on the value of our dollar than any other single factor which has entered the financial picture in recent years.

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. gentleman still has not answered my question.

Mr. Nasserden: If the minister would repeat his question I would be glad to answer it.

Mr. Nicholson: Does he seriously suggest that the 11 per cent tax on building materials does not have a salutary effect in tending to minimize unnecessary construction at this time?

Mr. Nasserden: I had a purpose in asking the minister to repeat his question. We need to go back to the time of the imposition of this sales tax and the uproar which followed in parliament. The former minister of finance imposed the tax by stages—a certain percentage now and a certain percentage later—in order to encourage building in this country. Did that have a salutary effect on inflation?

Mr. Nicholson: Questions are not answered by asking others. I have asked my question three times and if the hon. member cannot answer it I am satisfied.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, the minister cannot get around it that way since there is no doubt in the world that the tax on building supplies has raised the cost of construction in this country by more than 11 per cent because there are added costs over that 11 per cent.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, it is with some reluctance that I interrupt this private debate, but there are a number of comments I wish to make on the baby budget brought forward by the Minister of Finance. During the last two days the minister has taken quite a beating, and on occasion he has had to exit from the chamber to restore himself in order to continue to face the blast.

I hope I can make my remarks with as much equanimity as I can muster despite the anger that must be aroused when one sees the way in which the government proposes to solve the problems of inflation. This budget is a good example of the old adage about generals who are fighting the present war with the weapons and techniques of the last.

I understand that the Minister of Finance is a student of Keynesian economics. Certainly Keynesian economics teach us the use of monetary and fiscal policies and the way we can maintain full employment, and thus are a tremendous improvement over the attitudes and economics that prevailed previously. However, the minister can become too enamoured of this attitude toward our society, and this type of economics does not have the answer to all the problems in our society. Although many changes are taking place, apparently those changes are not within the purview of the minister, nor is he prepared to adopt new attitudes to the new problems that must face Canada.

The problem of the future is that this or any other government that hopes to rule and command the respect of the people of Canada must be dedicated to full employment policies. When such full employment policies are in effect there is a constant pressure on the economy and a great danger of inflation. That danger has to be faced, and I think to some extent we have to accept that part of the inflationary pressure may be a very good thing in moving a society forward along the dynamic path. However, the usual policies of monetary control and fiscal attitudes are not going to be sufficient to contain inflation.

When speaking about his previous budget the minister was full of self-congratulations. He said it had worked. He also felt that his policies would be successful in bringing down the interest rate. Despite the minister's confidence in his policies, the facts of the situation do not warrant such a euphoric attitude.

I would like to quote from the Ottawa Journal of June 22 in which Professor Welshans is reported as saying:

> High interest rates are likely to prevail in the Canadian economy for the next ten years—

There does not seem to be any possibility that there will be a let-up in the pressure on interest rates, and certainly the minister's reliance on monetary policy and a free market to bring down those rates is due to fail. He will have to do something in a far more positive way if he is to be successful in this endeavour.

When the minister introduced his 5 per cent withholding tax on industry as a means of curbing inflation it was hailed as a most imaginative approach, but it was quite obvious to most people on the opposition benches that it could not possibly work. If he was serious about containing inflation, if he really wanted to curb some of the growth, some of the steam in the economy, then that 5 per cent withholding loan should have been a tax because it shows up in a company's books as an asset and a company simply borrows against it.

The Monetary Times of June 1966, commenting on the minister's policies said:

> Despite Ottawa's pleas for restraint many industries simply cannot afford to slow down.
> Budget restraints and Ottawa pleas notwithstanding, Chemcell (1963) Ltd. is going ahead with the $35 million of capital expansion it earlier scheduled for this year.

A report in the Globe and Mail of August 3 said this:

> Businessmen have ignored Mr. Sharp's warning of the danger of inflation and disregarded his special tax measures designed to slow down capital spending.

The policies that the minister instituted, the ones he was so hopeful about, simply have not worked. He should recognize this and should recognize the limitations of monetary policy in the kind of economy that we have now. He should also recognize that the fiscal policy he is introducing, although it may be effective in the over-all approach towards containing some of the inflationary pressures, will cause enormous inequities and great injustices to many people.

The minister has called for restraint on the part of government. As a matter of fact he has done more than that. He has just about abandoned every government project that all of us had been hopeful of seeing implemented. He is calling for restraint, but it is for restraint on the part of the little man, on the part of the man who has always had to pull his belt in whenever sacrifices had to be made.

We hear that we cannot afford low cost housing in Canada, and that there is not enough money for mortgages. Yet commercial construction spending is soaring. It is not that we have a shortage of goods and services. It is that we have a misuse of goods and services, and that we have an abominable allocation of these goods and services, a distorted sense of values as to what is important and what is not important. Apparently the work that the government does on behalf of the people of Canada is not important. We need increased educational opportunities for our people in order to sustain a long-term growth, in order to see that our people get the advantages of a rich and healthy society, yet we are told we have to cut back on educational grants.

The scholarships that were offered are no longer available. We also have to cut back on research despite the statements made time and time again by the government that they recognize the inadequacy of the research program in Canada, that they recognize that Canada simply must do more in this field in order to progress, that Canada must spend more money on research if only to keep her skilled scientific people in this country and offer them incentives. This program has been set aside; we can no longer afford it.

We cannot afford medicare. Of all programs, there is no justification for the government taking this attitude with regard to medicare. Medicare by and large would be a transfer payment. It would not be a new sum of money taken out of the economy; it is a better way of utilizing the money we are already spending on behalf of the people of Canada. This program has to be abandoned; it can no longer be proceeded with.

Mortgage assistance to our people is a luxury we can no longer afford. We have a mobility program that is trying to increase productivity in this country as a whole by moving people from depressed areas, from areas where employment opportunities do not exist into areas where workers are needed. What do we do? We make sure that we sabotage this program by not seeing that houses are available to the migrants as they move from one part of Canada to another. This is a fine way of conducting a mobility program; you don't let it get off the ground. Then we complain that there is a disparity between what we are capable of producing and what we are actually producing.

Housing is practically out the window now. In connection with the situation in my own riding I should like to read from the Evening Reporter of July 2. The article is headed "Construction of Houses Takes 50 Per Cent Drop" and it say:

> Only half the number of houses have been built in Galt during the first five months of this year compared to a year ago at the same period.

Then from an adjacent municipality the situation is described by the Kitchener-Waterloo Record of May 30 in this way:

> 50% of Families Can't Buy Home.
> At least 50 per cent of the family heads in Kitchener are earning less than $5,000 a year and cannot afford the cheapest new single-family home on the market—
> There is a definite need for housing for all families earning less than $5,000 a year.
> There is an apparent housing need for those families in the $5,000 to $6,000 category.
> The need in the lower income groups is not only for small families but large families as well.

We are not even talking about the poverty-stricken in Canada but the industrial worker who would be considered to be earning a reasonable wage. Yet even the industrial worker finds it almost impossible to buy a home for himself and family. The minister in his statement pointed out that we cannot have everything, and that is quite right. No country, no matter how rich it is, and no people can have everything they want at the same time. But the statement of the minister would ring much truer, would evoke a great deal more understanding and sympathy if we did not read in the newspapers articles pointing out that, while we are talking about what we cannot afford, commercial construction spending is soaring.

It is not that we cannot afford certain things but that the government has decided we are not going to afford them. I would submit to the minister that these things are far more important in terms of priority than the spending going on in other areas. Apparently there is no shortage of funds in other fields. There is no halting of the building of banks and bank offices, despite the fact that Canada probably has more banks in relation to its population than any country in the world. I do not see any curtailment of the building of service stations. Again, we have more service stations than we need. The report of a royal commission in British Columbia pointed out recently that there should be a moratorium on the building of service stations because they are already overbuilt; but there does not seem to be any shortage of funds for these projects. There does not seem to be any shortage of funds to build tall, air-conditioned office blocks as head offices for companies. I know that air conditioning is very nice, but there is no shortage of office space that would justify this new construction. This is a luxury.

If you are to ask for belt-tightening, should not belts other than those the minister indicated be tightened? If we are to have an increase in the old age pension and a medicare program, obviously these things will cost money because you cannot get things for nothing. Such programs will cost money and taxes will have to be raised in order to provide adequate funds for them. The hard-headed man may very well ask: Where does this money come from? The answer of course is that it comes from the people of Canada; it has to come from them. But it is a question of whose pocket it comes from and for whose benefit the money is raised. I would suggest to the minister that all kinds of taxation possibilities are open to him at this time, especially when he talks about belt-tightening. I understand that exploration in the oil industry is going on apace, despite the fact that our known reserves are adequate for at least 21 years even if we do not take into consideration the oil sands.

I would suggest that the minister look at his policies regarding the depletion allowances to see whether it is fair to give these allowances to companies that really do not need help, when at the same time we are asking the older people of this country to tighten their belts and are telling them that we cannot afford an increase in the old age pension because of inflationary pressures. If we want to afford these things, we can. It does not make any difference in the total distribution picture who gets the money, from an inflationary point of view. The important thing for the government to decide is the allocation of the rewards and resources of this society. The government has made that decision, but I would suggest it has been a very bad decision and is unfair to the older people, the poorer people and those who need housing in this country.

The great challenge facing Canada is how we can take advantage of the dynamic situation that exists, and keep it dynamic instead of slowing it down. The great challenge that faces this country is how we can improve our productivity, how we can manufacture and provide more goods and services and see that they are distributed in a fair and equitable manner. We are not going to do this by relying on the market mechanism and saying that the market will make the decision.

The minister is saying that if people are willing to pay more they will do so, and if they are willing to bid up prices they are entitled to the commodities at an increased price. We are not going to contain this trend by having the government cut back public expenditures. Surely this cannot be accomplished by a postponement of school and hospital construction, or by the postponement of the institution of a medicare program. The government should not take a first step in this way, or by saying to the older people of this country that we cannot afford to give them an increase in old age pensions.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. gentleman to quote his authority for all these extraordinary statements, none of which appear in my statement. All I proposed of this nature was the postponement of medicare for one year. I said that we should pace our progress; I did not say that we should cut things back.

Mr. Saltsman: I appreciate the minister's interjection. Perhaps I may be allowed to ask him a question. Supposing next year he finds himself in the same position—

The Chairman: Order, please. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, but it being five o'clock shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit later this day or at the next sitting of the house?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, before you rise and report progress I wonder whether we could have some indication of the wish of this committee. Does the committee wish merely not to see the clock at this stage in order to permit the hon. member to continue his remarks, or does it feel that we should rise and report progress pursuant to the rules?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, even though I was not the one speaking at five o'clock I should like to make a comment in respect of a change in our rules as to the sitting. I think it would be preferable if we discussed such a change after we have reported progress. If we find at that time it is desirable to make a change, and I for one believe it is, an order of the house can be made to dispense with or defer private members hour.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask hon. members whether they would be agreeable to postponing private members hour, with the understanding that the bills retain their position on the order paper.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the wish of the house to postpone private members hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, so there will be no confusion at six o'clock perhaps I should ask for concurrence in the suggestion that we continue to sit after six o'clock in order to complete the business before us and the motion to which I referred earlier today, when I spoke about the business of the house for today's sitting. If that is agreeable I would ask that an order of the house be made that we continue to sit after six o'clock.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, has the minister any time limit in mind?

Mr. McIlraith: The agreement was that we would discuss inflation for one day on the estimates of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). We have now gone considerably beyond that time. The government has no desire to cut off members who wish to speak. At the conclusion of this debate it is our desire that a motion to amend the reference to the committee on consumer credit be broadened to permit that committee to inquire into the increase in the cost of living. Having completed that, it is proposed that the motion to adjourn the house be put exactly in accordance with the terms I indicated when speaking on motions at the beginning of today's proceedings.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, would the minister consider tabling the motion to sit beyond six o'clock until we reach six o'clock, and reassess the situation at that time? If we require another half hour at six o'clock to complete the debate, that is one thing, but if it is obvious that more time is required that is another thing.

We must also realize that if the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Finance leads to any kind of debate we might be required to put in a good deal more time; so perhaps we should consider the situation again at six o'clock. I am not suggesting how we in this group or anyone else may look at the situation, but it seems to me we ought not try to make a decision at this time without knowing what we are headed for in an open-ended situation.

Mr. McIlraith: My reason for wishing to raise the matter now is simply this. During this resumed session, which was called to deal with the railway situation and two specific bills a request was made by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) that we spend a day debating the subject of inflation. That request has been acceded to by the government. A subsequent decision was made to carry on that discussion on the estimates of the Minister of Finance because it was felt that would provide the most suitable opportunity for that kind of a discussion.

In the minister's opening remarks there was a reference made to one matter that might have some bearing on the subject of inflation. I refer to the suggestion about the committee of the two houses being empowered to inquire into one aspect of this matter. It seems to me that we have kept our commitment quite conscientiously in this regard. It does not seem to me that there could be anything for debate in a motion to extend the terms of reference of a committee, which could not be debated during our consideration of the estimates. It is my hope that an order can be made now so that at six o'clock we will not be caught up in some kind of a procedural difficulty. I am not suggesting that an hon. member speaking at six o'clock should be cut off or curtailed. We wish to give every member an opportunity to comment at this time.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I support the suggestion of the hon. member for York South, that the motion to continue sitting after six o'clock be considered at a later time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree that a motion to continue beyond six o'clock be considered later this day?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I did not know that the motion had been put. I thought the whole procedure was to be deferred and reconsidered at six o'clock.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, so there will be no controversy about this at six o'clock I should like to put the motion now and ask that it be stood over for reconsideration later. I think that would meet the hon. member's request.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree that the motion be put now by the Chair and stood over for consideration later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is now proposed that the motion of the hon. Minister of Public Works that the house sit after six o'clock if necessary, and that an order of the house be made in relation thereto, be now put.

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that the motion be stood, and discussed later today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the motion stand for discussion later?

Mr. Howard: No, Mr. Speaker. Surely it is not being stood for discussion, and that is why I asked that the motion be not put forward by the minister. Let us make a determination at six o'clock as to whether or not it is then the desire of the house to sit beyond that time. If it is now set down for discussion the implication is that we are waiving the right of hon. members to object to the motion.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to have the motion stand so that hon. members who wish to object to it would have the right to do so at six o'clock, and not be requested to assert that right now. That is what I was seeking to do.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): In that case, Mr. Speaker, you cannot put the question and ask us to accept the motion now. What is the use of discussing the motion at six o'clock if we accept it now? I do not see how the Minister of Public Works can co-ordinate these two requests. He can give us his notice of intention now. At the opening of the session today he told us he intended to put this motion before the house, but I do not think, Mr. Speaker, you can place the motion before us now. I am not ready to accept the motion as it is put until we get closer to 6 o'clock for the simple reason that other members of my party may wish to speak on the matter before us. My party has no representative on the special committee which was established to study these estimates, and therefore we are trying to keep a close watch to ensure that those of us who wish to speak on this subject are given the opportunity to do so now. That is why we do not want to adopt something now which might not be acceptable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the motion stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Batten in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Administration—

1. Departmental administration including administration of the Guaranteed Loans Acts and the Inspector General of Banks' Office, and payments to provinces and grants as detailed in the estimates, $4,332,900.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question? In which way has he done the things that I have suggested? Surely the Minister of Finance is not so naïve as to think that he can call for the curtailment of public expenditures and can indicate that he will approach the provincial governments urging them to use restraint, while at the same time he does not seem to realize what restraint means to provincial governments. After all what sort of facilities do the provincial governments construct? They are the very same facilities about which we are talking.

I would suggest that if the minister is stating that the federal provincial and municipal governments must apply this kind of restraint he is in effect saying to them that according to him the schools, hospitals and libraries which they are building have a very low priority.

When the minister said that he is only deferring medicare and not abandoning it, I wonder whether next year the situation will have changed. I do not believe that it will change in view of the policies which the minister is now introducing. Will the minster not come back to the house next year and say: "I had sincerely hoped that we could have introduced medicare at this time, but just as last year, the year before, and in the last 47 years it is not possible and therefore I hope we will be able to do it the following year." May I suggest to the minister that he could introduce medicare this year if he were willing to call on that small section of our population who are really causing the inflation and say to them: Tighten your belts, and stop this needless and useless construction. However, I do not think the minister is prepared to say this. He is telling us that the sacrifices should be made in the public sector.

I was very interested in the remarks made by the hon. member for Lotbinière who spoke about advertising. I hope the minister listened to this backbencher. Perhaps I should not call him a backbencher because he acts like a frontbencher most of the time. I hope the minister was listening to him because he made some good points. He spoke of the fantastic sums of money which were being spent in this country on advertising, and which are being completely ignored. The minister speaks of restraint. What about restraint being exercised in terms of permissible deductions for advertising? Would this not bring in a nice revenue to the government? If advertising is as potent as people claim it to be, then advertising increases the demand for goods and services. Restraint in this field might be an excellent way of slowing down an overactive economy and at the same time creating additional tax revenues. This has not been suggested by anyone on the government side.

I think this budget will make every Canadian sad. The people of our country will say to themselves: The government has decided that all those things that it promised us and that it said were good will not be possible now because of inflation. They will also say: My government has also decided that the service stations, the new banks and the new shopping centres are far more important; they are more important, when I need medicare or an increase in my old age pension.

I really do not see how the minister has arrived at this set of values. The government may justify it by saying that we cannot have everything all at once and therefore we have to defer these plans until a future date.

May I suggest in closing that the government would be on far sounder grounds if it said to some of the people who are causing inflation in the private sector: You cannot have everything you want exactly when you want it, simply because you can go into the market and pay whatever the market demands for these services regardless of the needs and of the welfare of the Canadian people.

This, Mr. Chairman, is what I suggest is the effect of the budget. It is too much to hope that the minister will listen to the opposition. But I hope he will listen to some of the members of his own party who I am sure feel very much the same way and who are very disturbed by the budget. They will have to go back to their constituencies and explain why the promises made to them during the compaign cannot be fulfilled at a time when their party is in power.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I would not like to take too much time and my remarks will be very brief.

I want to talk about the policy of the happy medium, the inflationary system and the means to remedy it without upsetting everything, breaking everything, taxing everyone, in short without increasing taxes of all kinds, so as to enable the government to administer and the people to stop working.

The people must continue to work, to get ahead and to progress. The economy must not be slowed down in any way. There are means to take in that respect and I think that the government does not always see them, does not know the main ones to take. I wish to explain a method to the government, and particularly to the minister, if he would like to try it. Changes will have to be made within his department and that would be for the greater good of the country.

In Canada therefore, in 1966, on this 9th day of September, when the fear of the fight against inflation makes us forget the fight against poverty—we know that a war against poverty has already been declared and we have forgotten it already, because it is said that everyone has too much money, that the citizens are asking for too much, that there is too much inflation, that the citizens are asking for too much in salary increases, that there is a deficit throughout the country and in everyone's budget. I want to remind everyone that there is no need to get panicky, that God is always with us in all His power and wisdom and that He is at our disposal all the time.

Mr. Chairman, not one of us is afraid that the earth will stop producing tomorrow morning, that we will run short of goods, not even the minister. But we all are terribly afraid of running short of money. The minister is taking steps to restrict credit under the pretext of waging war against inflation. He does it by increasing poverty, by making the poor poorer and the rich richer.

It is the responsibility of the present government to act and restore the national economic balance between production which will reach $56 billion in 1966, consumption which will reach $38 billion and capitalization which will reach $18 billion.

Before capitalizing over $18 billion, we should guarantee the right to live to 12,600,000 Canadian citizens who have no personal income through their work and their capital and who are dependent on 7,400,000 working citizens and capitalists who divide among themselves production and profits.

Mr. Chairman, in the field of production, there are two kinds of citizens: the employers and the employees totalling 7,400,000.

In the field of consumption, there are the same employers, the same employees and, in addition, 12 million dependent citizens who are consumers and who do not have the personal income to buy the goods and services they need to live.

Thus, we have two types of citizens: the producers and the dependents. If the 7,400,000 producer citizens have a purchasing power by their work and their income, the other 12,000,000 dependents, having no personal income, also have the right to live.

This is a natural and divine right, legally acknowledged in Canadian legislation, namely under Chapter 44 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, and more particularly in the Bill of Rights. However, this essential right has never been acknowledged in terms of dollars; therefore, this right is completely ignored, scrupulously measured, violated even.

For instance, $6 per month, that is 20 cents a day, for a child up to ten years old in his home, that is abnormal, antifamily, antisocial and antihuman, in this plentiful twentieth century.

These same governments pay $65 for a young child in a foster home, and up to $120 in an orphanage.

Due to these conditions, the family budget is completely out of balance, far from the financial and physical realities of the country; taxes imposed by our old-fashioned governments take away the livelihood of a great many of our families and no logical means can be found to stabilize the family budget. Instead of restoring the situation, it is made more confusing and alarming.

Mr. Chairman, what was already in a bad shape, is now in worse shape. There is only one workable national economic policy for Canada, if the political and financial leaders wish to see harmony between production, distribution and consumption, while maintaining the necessary reserves for constant and balanced capitalization.

The numerous strikes at present are proof of the population's dissatisfaction over the lack of national agreement between employers, employees and dependents. All these wage increases for labour, increases in the rates of interest for credit and capital, are responsible for upsetting political and economic balance to a further degree.

However, the greatest cause of national instability and population dissatisfaction remains unheeded.

Management always demands more than labour. Workers receive personal remuneration regardless of the dependents in the various families, the number and age of dependents of different workers: wives and children. It is useless to try to prove that the difference in tax takes care of the situation and balances the two, or that the ridiculously small family allowances re-establish the balance. The most precise calculations of these two adjustments do not even show $10 a month per dependent, but barely 30 cents per day.

All those who are politically influential are favoured by a salary which makes the government family allowances of no consequence to them. Thus the great mass of the people, the five or six million wage-earners, farmers or poor people, cannot fight for their rights unless they form unions. But there again, they are not considered as heads of families. The problem of the father of a family is not discussed in comparison with that of the bachelor.

Mr. Chairman, intentionally or not, production is meant for the consumer first, and then for capitalization.

In speaking of inflation, few know exactly what it is. Inflation throughout the country would be a bad sign. Normal prosperity throughout the country would be proof of good government.

Now, some people say, even members, that inflation was getting to be the normal thing, that there is inflation in the United States and in all European countries and that it is normal for a country to live with such things and to accept an inflationary system. I think it is abnormal, antisocial and antihuman. We must not, and it is nonsensical, accept such a state of affairs in Canada. If other countries deal with this in a certain way, we do not have to follow suit. If someone goes and jumps in the lake we do not have to do likewise. We have other means at our disposal to start the Canadian economy rolling again.

After the war, in 1945, everybody seemed prosperous and nobody talked about inflation. Canadian production was estimated at $12 billion; $10.8 billion were either spent or consumed and about 10 per cent of our production, or $1.2 billion, was capitalized.

In 1966, Canada will produce for $56 billion; $38 million will be consumed and $15 billion capitalized, $15 billion by large companies and $3 billion by private citizens. For directors and shareholders of companies especially, this means a capitalization of 32 per cent of our production, whereas consumption takes up only $38 billion or 68 per cent.

This goes to prove that there is inflation, as far as capital is concerned, and deflation with regard to consumption, purchasing power and dependent citizens especially, since the 7,400,000 citizens who participate in production have their salaries debated or fixed by the unions.

That part of the population which is experiencing deflation counterbalances for the part which has known inflation continuously since 1945 and, throughout the country, the ills of inflation have passed rather undetected, even though the increasing destitution of most Canadians, especially of the 12 million citizens without an adequate income and their dependents, is not realized.

Mr. Chairman, the inflation of capital is an imbalance. Deflation with regard to inadequate consumption paralyses consumption and discourages any initiative. This is the essential point about the situation of our national economy which is being threatened not so much by partial, occasional and localized strikes, but by this national economic imbalance between incomes, expenses and profits, between individuals, families and companies, between taxes and reserves, between production, consumption and capitalization, on the national level.

In every segment of our economy, strikes are only occasional symptoms of a chronic disease that has been developing over the last 20 years. This is how matters stand. This is the analysis of the situation, the synthesis of our research. Now is the time to make the precise diagnosis which will enable us to find a national, economic and normal balance within the regular framework of monetary, economic and political procedures, adjusted according to Canadian, capitalistic and orthodox facts and realities.

Mr. Chairman, every time the workers' wages are increased, every time interest rates and dividends are increased, each time the cost of living is increased for 12 million dependents and those who support them or are responsible for them, a total of 16 million people who have to pay more for all goods and services, without corresponding incomes.

The economic system is always off balance; it should be balanced through a forward-looking economic policy, taking as an essential basis not labour and capital, but human beings and their essential requirements.

Mr. Chairman, we know the increase in the cost of living and in transportation results from wage increases. There are two methods to ensure that the price figures and the money figures balance: either reduce the prices or increase the contents of the pocketbook.

Social Credit would do both, without hurting anyone while helping everybody.

Under the present system, it is impossible to reduce prices without hurting the producers and to line the pocketbooks without increasing prices.

We have often heard workers asking for wage increases. Why? Because their wages, a money figure, are out of proportion with the price figure on the products. They have grounds for complaints because they have needs which are not met while products are piling up. But if the workers obtain wage increases, such increases are included in the prices. The price figures rise and the spread remains between the price figure and the money figure needed to purchase the products.

The solution would be, Mr. Chairman, to increase the purchasing money without increasing the prices. For that, the extra money should come from a source other than industry. The financial system advocated in our doctrine would do just that. That is what the Créditistes call a national dividend.

On the other hand, the doctrine we advocate also has a monetary mechanism to reduce prices, but without affecting producers, because it would return to sellers the discount which the purchasers would not have to pay.

The two combined together, price reduction and dividend, would be calculated so as to balance the money figure with the price figure.

Those who persist in saying that one must be employed to be entitled to products on the market are forced to try to employ everyone, while progress reduces employment. As they cannot stop progress, they try to create new needs, so that there might be new jobs. Thus they lead to materialism, or else they apply themselves to war work, to war itself, which is the most efficient means of destroying production and making people work.

The Créditistes want to place progress at man's service, to free man more and more from material concern, enabling him to engage in other human activities, in addition tc the simple productive function.

A dividend for everyone, in addition to being a participation by each and every one to the income of a productive community capital, is also the most direct formula to achieve the right of every human person to share in material wealth, a basic right that man has by his very nature, as was so well emphasized by Pope Pius XII.

Mr. Chairman, I would have many things to add, but I do not want to prolong this debate. But when the Minister of Finance says in the face of the population that the productive function in Canada has nearly reached its limit, I say to him that he did not study his economy, that he is not aware of a productive economy in Canada, in short that he is not aware of the manufacturing function in Canada.

Within two years we can double our national production. By putting everyone to work, all those who do not work now—and we have nearly 50 per cent of the population not working; we still have unemployment pockets, we have citizens of 40, 45, 50 and 60 years of age who could work, but cannot find any work, because there are no jobs for them—in short, if there was a desire to increase production in Canada, a simple solution would be to create jobs, to finance industry, to finance production and also consumption. By so doing, everything would go smoothly. Under the present system, only the production is financed, but we fail to finance consumption. In these times it is consumption that has to be financed first, if production is to reach its objective.

A tight money policy is not the ideal thing in Canada. The ideal procedure for Canadians would be to have credit at their disposal so that they can forge ahead. But, at the present time, our credit is a debt credit. Every dollar in Canada is a debt dollar. And as more money is borrowed, more debts are piled up.

That is why a tight money policy is envisaged as well as restrictions in every field, even in all spheres of the national economy. It is unfair and nonsensical to talk about inflation in an affluent country where so many needs are to be satisfied. It is nonsensical to accept such a system in the midst of plenty.

An hon. Member: Some people are still starving.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, production is good in Canada and it could be better still; yet, in spite of this production, numerous needs are to be satisfied. As I said a moment ago, 12 million citizens have no other income except their low wages; some men, women or children are unemployed and cannot earn any money. There is inflation in Canada at the present time, but there is also deflation, and this is much worse.

A bomb exploded recently in parliament and if this economic problem is not dealt with there will be other bombs exploding, God forbid; I would not want that to happen, but the way this country is run and the way the future of this country is planned will lead to such incidents. We are on the brink of a revolution. The country is prosperous thanks to science and technical know how. The Canadian people know it and want to share in this scientific progress, and we have no right to stop them.

• (5:40 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder, since I have had an intimation that hon. members want to make a few remarks on the motion to enlarge the terms of reference of the committee, if we could now put the motion mentioned earlier this afternoon, and ask that the house continue to sit after six o'clock this day.

Mr. Churchill: What about a time limit?

Mr. McIlraith: I hope we would rise immediately we have both the motion enlarging the terms of reference and the motion to adjourn the house carried. I hope that that would be very shortly after six o'clock.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you would permit me a bit of leeway to talk upon the suggestion of the Minister of Public Works, that we sit beyond six o'clock.

If it were simply a question of enlarging the terms of reference to the particular committee in question, to deal with the cost of living, I do not think there would be any objection toward that, because perhaps it is a course that should be followed. But I cannot see the point of sitting beyond six o'clock. The minister wants us to adjourn to October 5, thereby indicating that the government is refusing to convene parliament next week to deal with vitally important questions which we have just been discussing, plus the Bank Act, medicare, and various other items on the government order paper. I cannot see any reason in sitting beyond six o'clock, when we are ready to come back next week. If the government is afraid to come back, that is the government's responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the intention of the minister to put the motion, that the house continue to sit after six o'clock.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I move that the house do continue sitting after six o'clock.

Mr. Howard: I for one disagree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There being only one member objecting, the motion is deemed to be carried.

Motion agreed to.

CONSUMER CREDIT

ENLARGEMENT OF TERMS OF REFERENCE TO JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed by this House on March 15, 1966, to enquire into and report upon the problems of consumer credit, be instructed also to inquire into and report upon the trends in the cost of living in Canada and factors which may have contributed to changes in the cost of living in Canada in recent months;

And that a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours thereof and to request the concurrence of that House thereto.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to amend the motion. Perhaps one of my colleagues might move the amendment. I would move that the words on the second line "by this house on March 15, 1966," be deleted, or struck out, and that the following be added to the motion, as the second paragraph: "That the committee have leave to sit notwithstanding any adjournment of this house;".

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous agreement for the minister to amend the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIlraith: I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Davis Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this motion should be adopted without something being said about it. First, it is obvious that we cannot oppose the motion, since it cannot do any harm, and may be of some value in giving the members of the committee an opportunity to expose the true facts about the causes for increasing the cost of living.

But I suggest that the minister's motion is a mere ruse to shelve the problem which faces him, instead of solving it. It seems to me that it cannot be anything else than a political move to seem to be doing something, when in fact referring the subject matter to a parliamentary committee is doing nothing to deal with the problem of the cost of living.

An hon. Member: It is shelving it.

Mr. Lewis: I remind the house, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance made a great to do about the inflationary pressures in our economy in his budget speech last spring. And if there was any value in referring the matter to a parliamentary committee, he should have done it then, so that by now we would have a report from the committee and some facts.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, is not the Minister of Finance playing with this house and with this country. He came in yesterday and spoke as if he knew all the facts, as if he knew precisely what the problems were, as if he had the obvious solutions to those problems. He sets out policies which will have the effect of cutting important social services and cutting back social capital and doing things which in the opinion of this group, as has been stated eloquently and well by my colleagues, amount to a disservice to the country.

The minister then says to parliament: I want this matter sent to a committee so that I can find out the facts and learn what the trends in the cost of living are, and what factors may have contributed to changes in it in recent months. What was he talking about yesterday if he did not know what those trends are and if he did not know what the factors were? What was the basis of his policies? Perhaps they were based on ignorance of both the trends and the factors involved. Perhaps they were merely traditional policies thrown out without reason and without ground.

I suggest—and I use strong language because I feel strongly about this—that it was a shabby way of dealing with the cost of living of the Canadian people. To bring down a policy, to insist that it is a right policy, to say that all the various circumstances are understood and then to say, in order to be able to make some political speeches across the country, that the question is being sent to a committees for study, is not good enough.

If any investigation of this question should have been made by a parliamentary committee it ought to have been done before the minister produced those policies. In that case those policies might have served the interests of the people of this country rather than doing the opposite, as I feel they do.

Mr. Sharp: Would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him whether he read or listened closely to the remarks I made yesterday as reported at page 8215 of Hansard, when I said that "an alert and informed public opinion could play an important role, as well as those directly involved?" Certainly, one of the purposes of this committee would be to help inform the public and, I hope, the hon. gentleman, too, of some of the facts about this situation and the kind of response which would be most suitable.

Mr. Nasserden: On the point of order the minister raised, I always thought a committee was set up not to inform the public but to get information from the public.

Some hon. Members: Both.

Mr. Lewis: Let me say to the minister that I listened to him carefully and I have no doubt that an informed public opinion may be of help in this case as in many other cases. This may be the small element of value which will come out of the committee's sitting.

What I rose to say, as emphatically as I could, is that the minister either did not know what he was doing yesterday or this reference to a committee is a sham.

Mr. Sharp: It is neither.

Mr. Lewis: It ought to be clearly understood by the people of Canada that the minister can only have it one way or the other. He cannot have it both ways.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, if I recall the time when the hon. minister brought down his budget, last spring, it was noticeable that it was an American hat, not made to suit the head of Canadians, but for a Canadian head shaped to wear an American hat.

After his last trip to the United States, at the last conference, the minister came back with the price of the hat.

[English]

After having the hat adjusted to fit the American head, the minister would fasten the price tag on that hat as furnished by the Americans, and we cannot go to a committee to find out what is wrong. Sometimes I think that with this program we have been given a pretty close shave.

I do not have anything against parliamentary committees, especially when the Secretary of State is the chief witness. We always get amiable answers from her, if not the correct ones. I do not accept that the setting up of this committee will change the situation very much. The minister has set out the government's policy and by the time the committee is in a position to report he may well have put his policies and restrictions into operation as far as possible, so that if the committee does make any recommendations they will come too late, as the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has stated.

The minister told us yesterday that as long ago as midsummer of last year he began to take precautions. Well, he might have taken even greater precautions and got this committee set up then. We are now in the middle of this inflationary situation. We have the hon. gentleman's own policy to deal with, though at the same time he is asking a committee to find out what is wrong. If he does not know what is wrong, how can he be sure his policies are correct?

In the circumstances we have little choice, however, and we must let this subject go to a committee for examination.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I agree with most of what has been said by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). Unfortunately, this committee is being set up much too late and the information which it is likely to bring out not necessarily basic to the issue. The underlying reasons for our present difficulties go much deeper and our troubles will never be corrected until financial policies are followed which are very different from those enunciated by the minister last night.

Having said this, I would add that the urgency of a committee study is more acute than it was earlier, simply because as we enter upon centennial year there are problems which are bound to show up within the economy as far as the cost of essential items is concerned; I am thinking of the cost of food. I believe that even at this late stage the work of the committee will be extremely important.

Thus, while in my opinion it would have been far better for this committee to have begun its work much earlier, and though many of the factors which affect the cost of living are beyond the control or range of the committee as they relate to government policy, it is none the less imperative that the committee be assembled at this time, because real urgency attaches to the matter.

Mr. Nasserden: Has the Minister of Finance considered the possibility of placing a date—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are not now in committee and I suggest that a further exchange of questions and answers at this stage would not be appropriate.

Mr. Nasserden: I would suggest, then, Mr. Speaker, that it would be a good thing if a date were placed in this resolution by which the committee could try to conclude its hearings. The committee studying consumer credit has been sitting, now, for two years. We do not want this other committee to be sitting for two or three years before making a report.

An hon. Member: It is the same committee.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few additional words with regard to this proposal to refer this matter to a special committee. I support the position which has been taken by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). It strikes me that even while this special committee is inquiring into changes in the cost of living in Canada, further changes will take place.

One of the reasons there will be further increases in the cost of living is because of the speech the Minister of Finance made yesterday. While he was careful not to forecast the exact type of tax increases that would be made, nevertheless he made it clear that there would be tax increases, and newspapers across Canada today are putting those increases into figures and letting Canadians know that tax increases are coming. It is inevitable that some of the very practices the minister referred to yesterday will continue. People in all sectors of the economy, in all walks of life, will be doing their best to protect themselves against the increased taxes that are coming in the fall, and this is bound to push prices up.

If the Minister of Finance and his government have any measures to cope with the present situation they should be bringing them before parliament now. We should be sitting here next week and we should have those measures before us.

Since I have said a word about what the minister has done in announcing his tax increases I also want to protest against the context in which he announced them. I quote a few words from the minister's speech, as reported at page 8217 of yesterday's Hansard:

> When we have before us, perhaps in late October, the measures to authorize the increased revenues made necessary by the income guarantee plan we will be able to review our general fiscal position and consider what changes are desirable in the light of the economic and financial situation.

As a result of that statement it is already being asserted in the press that the reason we are going to have increased taxes is because of what the government calls its income guarantee plan. We all know that that is the phrase which is being applied to the government's proposal to increase old age pensions under the conditions announced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on July 14.

I remind the Minister of Finance that according to a table on page 2824 of the Canada Gazette, Part I, dated Saturday, August 27, 1966, the taxes that he is taking from the Canadian people for the purpose of old age security are running on an average of $24 million a month more than is being paid out in old age security. The figures have varied from month to month, but in the month of July the surplus of tax receipts for pensions over the amount paid out was $29.9 million, and for a period of four months the average has been $24 million a month. In other words, there is something in the order of $300 million of a surplus building up in old age security tax receipts in this fiscal year.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask a question. Has the hon. gentleman looked beyond the immediate future to see that surplus disappear very rapidly?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we have been through this in various ways a number of times. When the government raised the old age pensions from $65 to $75 a month it said there had to be an increase in taxes, but after being pressed on the point, and having seen fit to lower the eligible age from 70 to 65 on a year-by-year basis, the government then said revenues were more buoyant and it would not be necessary to increase taxes for that purpose.

I submit that the revenues are turning out to be more buoyant than the government itself had anticipated, and that for the immediate future there is no need to increase taxes to pay the kind of pensions the government has in mind.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare on July 14 said that the cost in the initial year of the program he announced that day would be of the order of $225 million. The Minister of Finance is collecting an extra $300 million or more in this fiscal year. Therefore he has no right to say to the Canadian people, as he did yesterday, that one of the reasons, or indeed as some newspapers interpret it, the reason for having to increase taxes is because of the plan to increase pensions.

If the minister wants to raise taxes for some other reason, I think he should be straightforward with us and tell us what that other reason is. It is not for the purpose of pensions, because as I have pointed out, and I have quoted from official government statistics, the amount being collected in sales tax, corporation tax and individual old age security income tax in the current fiscal year—and these taxes are collected on an earmarked basis for old age security—is running at an average of $24 million a month more than is being paid out.

I do not think it is fair to suggest to the people of Canada that any pittance that is going to be given to the old people on a needs or means test basis is of an amount that requires additional taxation. Therefore I say that instead of this matter being referred to a committee, which will have to study not only price increases which have taken place in recent months but will be confronted with the price increases taking place while it is sitting, we should be staying here dealing with the problems of inflation, our fiscal problems, and above all meeting the emergency needs of our senior citizens.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to go over the ground that I covered earlier but I want to repeat that adjourning at this time is a perversion of the responsibilities of parliament to meet a major problem, namely that of inflation. There are also other problems that should be dealt with. Instead of facing the issue the government produces an amendment to a motion giving a committee the power to inquire into and report upon trends in the cost of living in Canada and factors which may have contributed to changes in the cost of living. It is not investigations such as this that are needed at this time; it is action by the government, a government which has no apparent realization of what should be done, how to do it, when to do it, or even whether to do it.

I say no more than that the setting up of this committee is simply political eyewash on the part of the government, and an adjournment at this time—I must join both together—is a gross perversion of the responsibility of parliament to meet a problem that will intensify in the weeks of the adjournment and with regard to which legislation cannot possibly be brought before parliament before the expiry of six weeks.

What is the committee to look into? I thought the Economic Council of Canada had looked into this matter. I thought the minister was the embodiment of all the information that anyone could possibly secure on this subject, with the outstanding staff that he has available. I thought the Bank of Canada had looked into this matter. The minister comes along and says to parliament now: I want to empower a committee to look into the question.

This is nothing but a political dodge designed to give the government extra time to consider a matter with regard to which they have apparently been dormant while it has multiplied and intensified. Of course, we cannot vote against this committee because, after all, committees will meet; but too often the setting up of a committee is nothing but a subterfuge on the part of the government to get away from making any decision or taking any action that has to be taken.

I conclude by saying that the people of Canada will not be fooled into believing that it is the opposition that makes it impossible for this government to act, and that is one of the major trends and political devices of the government at this time. We are sitting here now; let us act if you have any policies. Up to the present time in this regard you have shown a poverty that is both unseemly and a matter for deep condemnation. As the government postpones further action by another committee, the thief of inflation continues to pick the pockets of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion as amended agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY—REJECTION OF SUGGESTION TO HAVE COMMITTEE SIT DURING ADJOURNMENT

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I may have leave of the house to do something I quite frankly confess I forgot to do yesterday after the motion to send my bill to the committee was adopted. I should have asked leave to allow that committee, if it was felt expedient and there was general agreement, to sit during the period of adjournment in order to consider Bill No. C-231. If that is agreeable could an order be made?

Mr. Churchill: No.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Pickersgill moves, seconded by Mr. McIlraith, that the transport and communications committee have leave to sit, notwithstanding any adjournment of this house.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, an objection was made to the introduction of this motion.

Mr. Speaker: I regret that I did not notice an objection. Of course the minister needs unanimous agreement to move such a motion. Apparently there is no such agreement so the motion cannot be put.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO ADJOURN TO OCTOBER 5, 1966

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): I move:

That, when this house adjourns at the end of this sitting, it shall stand adjourned until Wednesday, October 5, 1966, at 2.30 o'clock p.m. provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with Her Majesty's government, that the public interest requires that the house should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the house shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time.

In the event of Mr. Speaker being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker shall act in his stead for the purpose of this order.

Perhaps I should say, Mr. Speaker, that this motion is in the same terms as the motion of July 14.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not hear the minister preface his motion by a request for unanimous consent. This is the type of motion which requires unanimous consent. On the face of the situation I for one am not prepared to give that consent unless the government admits it is pushing this motion before the house because it is unable to meet parliament next week as it does not have its legislative program ready and is not prepared to go ahead with items such as inflation, the medicare bill, which is on the order paper, the Bank Act and, even though this is regional, the proceedings relating to a bill regarding the Bank of British Columbia. Like the right hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and many others here, I am of the opinion that parliament should meet next week to deal with the public's business rather than run off across the country on holidays, regardless of how inept the government is in handling its business.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, in respect of the question about consent, I understood there was consent to put the motion given earlier today, when I raised this matter during motions.

In any event I should clarify some of the misconceptions that seem to have arisen in the hon. member's mind on the subject of the adjournment. The house stood adjourned from July 14 until October 5. It was called back to deal with what I think all hon. members will agree was an emergency situation requiring the immediate and urgent attention of parliament, namely, the stoppage of railway services. To have them resumed the government submitted the railway legislation, popularly called the strike bill, and the transportation bill having to do with the substantial railway legislation arising out of the MacPherson report.

Mr. Churchill: That was smuggled in.

Mr. McIlraith: As was made evident in the speeches made by hon. members, this latter bill was regarded as an important and urgent matter and it was debated by this house.

At the opening of this emergency session as well as during the proceedings it was made clear that the government's intention was to deal only with the legislation for which the house was assembled. There was also a request made by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that there should be a day's debate on inflation.

In accordance with that request it was agreed that we sit for one day to discuss inflation, but in point of fact we have discussed it for more than a day and a half. It was a very proper request. Our commitment was kept.

What is being put forward now is a motion on which the house had passed its judgment on July 14. It is only a technicality that requires us to put this motion again. I would point out to the hon. member that in the fight against inflation, as should be clear from the speech made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) last evening, a good many steps must be taken, one of which was the creation of this committee, but many of which require the attention of the government.

I wish to draw the attention of the house to the fact that the International Labour Organization is meeting here next week. It is an important meeting in this period of the development in labour relations, moreover, Canada is the host country. This is a very great honour. The proceedings of this organization are to be opened in this chamber next Monday morning. It is hoped and expected that all the plenary sessions of that meeting will be held in this chamber.

I believe this meeting will continue for about two weeks. Immediately afterward the meeting of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association is to take place. That will be of great interest, I think, to most or all hon. members, and we hope to have hon. members available to take part in those meetings. That cannot be done while the house is sitting.

At present the Prime Minister is attending the Commonwealth Prime Ministers Conference. I think all hon. members will agree that the business before that meeting is of the utmost concern to Canada as a member of the Commonwealth. We have indicated our firm intention, and indeed, our program for the balance of this session. When we adjourned in July the house set October 5 as the date for reconvening. I think it should be very clear to the hon. member that the decision to recess now until October 5 is not only consistent with the earlier action of the house in fixing that particular date, but is the appropriate one having in mind all the circumstances as they exist at the moment. I think hon. members will agree that is a fact.

Now, I am glad to welcome the hon. member back to the house. I hope he will be equally tolerant if I myself want to be absent from this place for a few days. I hope he will view my proposals in the kindly light in which I have viewed his return. I hope he will welcome me on October 5 with all the warmth with which I will welcome him on that occasion, when we meet to deal with the second reading of the bank legislation, the medicare bill, and the other important legislation that lies before us.

Mr. Churchill: And the defence act.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if I could say that at least we have a kindly gentleman in the government house leader. I should like to deal, point by point, with the reasons he has given. I believe that there is not one of them that is valid. He spoke of parliament being called back for the purpose of dealing with some particular items. There is no doubt that was the motivation, in the first instance, for parliament having returned. However, in Votes and Proceedings for Monday, August 29, there is set out the following:

> After consultation with the government, I am satisfied that the public interest requires that the House of Commons, which was adjourned on Thursday, July 14—

Then, the dates are set out, and I continue:

> —should meet at an earlier time. In pursuance to the order of the House of Commons passed Thursday, July 14, 1966, I hereby give notice that the House of Commons shall meet on Monday, August 29, 1966, at 2.30 o'clock p.m., and transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time.

The business of the House of Commons is really the business of the people of Canada. There is no indication in there that parliament was returned specifically to deal with two particular items of legislation. The information given by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) to the effect that parliament came back solely to deal with two items is incorrect. The information he gave, that the debate on inflation was an extraordinary arrangement made to suit the convenience or at the request of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), is also incorrect, because these were the normal sitting times of the House of Commons.

Monday will be a normal sitting day as well, and at that time we could carry on with whatever business the government deemed it advisable to call for that time, if it deemed anything to be worthy of the consideration of this house. Reference was made to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) having dealt with the matter of inflation succinctly. This assertion has been pretty well demolished by everyone on the opposition side who took part in the debate, both on the estimates of the Department of Finance and the motion to enlarge the terms of reference of a particular committee, indicating that whatever the Minister of Finance advocated was, in the word of the Leader of the Opposition, "eyewash" and in the words of the representative of this party, "A coverup for complete ineptitude in this field".

The matter of the I.L.O. meeting, of course, is something which undoubtedly was planned some time ago. I am quite sure the delegates from the International Labour Organization will not be inconvenienced if they are asked to sit in the Senate chamber rather than here. Whether or not the senators are there, it is really a vacant place and it should be put to some worth-while use. However, the reference to the I.L.O. conference and the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association conference as reasons why parliament should not meet next week is merely an admission on the part of the government that affairs in other countries are far more important than the affairs of the people of Canada. Even the reference to the Prime Minister being away in London buttresses that sort of reasoning. So far as we are concerned, the affairs of the people of Canada are the important ones with which we should be concerning ourselves. So far as the Prime Minister being absent in London is concerned,—good heavens, we have been carrying on the business of this country for the last two and a half years without a Prime Minister. I do not see why we should worry about his presence in London.

All that I can glean from the reasons, spurious and false, which are given by the Minister of Public Works is simply that the government is not prepared to meet parliament and to deal with the affairs of the nation; that it would rather push things to one side for another three or four weeks in hopes that some of these problems will disappear and that in the intervening period they will find something to deal with and present to parliament on October 5. In the light of this sad admission of an absolutely complete bankruptcy by way of program, ideas and legislation on the part of the government, we have no other choice but to adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is to the effect that when this house adjourns such and such will happen. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps enough was said before the motion was put to make clear how we feel about this motion. We think there is an emergency in this country with which we should be dealing—it has been highlighted in recent days—namely the rising cost of living and its effect in particular upon our old age pensioners. We were sent home on July 14 with only a statement and we were asked to wait till fall. We are now asked to wait again. We think it would be far better to stay here and deal with the nation's business, particularly this important issue of raising the old age pension. I am against the passing of this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Motion agreed to on division.

TRANSPORTATION

PROVISION FOR DEFINITION AND IMPLEMENTATION OF NATIONAL POLICY—REJECTION OF SUGGESTION TO HAVE COMMITTEE SIT DURING ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might be permitted to make an appeal to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), one of whose followers took exception to my motion a little while ago, to say that it was not intended to have the committee meet immediately, but it was thought that if it could meet around September 27, a week before the house resumes, it would be possible to hold some of the hearings and hear some of the members of the public who might wish to appear. When this session resumed we would be in a better position to get down to the detailed consideration of the bill. I wonder if the house would consider an appeal, if there were general agreement in the steering committee, for the committee to be permitted to sit before the house resumes?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the request of the hon. minister, if he were not quite so late I should like to draw to his attention certain episodes in the past when any slight error on the part of the government of that day and on the part of the house leader were trumpeted across the country. We are more charitable than the minister. I will not give him a lecture on his incompetency and inefficiency on this occasion. I have consulted with some members of our party who are intensely interested in the committee work and are members of that committee. They tell me it is not possible for them to meet with this request. Consequently, we must on this occasion—

Mr. Howard: Reluctantly?

Mr. Churchill: Yes, reluctantly decline the suggestion of the Minister of Transport to pull him, and with him the incompetent government, out of the mess they are in.

I think the business of the transportation committee will be satisfactorily dealt with when it meets in October. The people who are preparing briefs should have time to get those briefs ready. They have to study a very extensive bill, and here again a little extra time for people like that will be advantageous. The minister will end up eventually with a very much improved bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am much too charitable to say that what the hon. gentleman said makes a mockery of what we have been listening to for the last 15 minutes.

Mr. Churchill: Nonsense. I wish I had extended my remarks and really exposed how incompetent the government is.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if I might ask the government house leader, or somebody on the government side, a related question. If it is deemed necessary to have this kind of motion to enable a committee to sit when the house is in recess, I wonder if an appropriate step will be taken with respect to another committee? I personally doubt whether a motion is necessary, in view of the fact that the Canada Pension Plan committee sat at the time it did without such a motion. But what about the committee that has had referred to it the three bills dealing with the public service, and notably the one dealing with collective bargaining in the public service? Perhaps an answer might be given to that question. An emergency is building up—

Mr. Churchill: Let the house come back next week and get on with it, then.

Mr. Pickersgill: If hon. members cannot be here for the committee, how can they be here for the house?

Mr. McIlraith: I want to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre about the committee on the public service. That committee, I had hoped, would find it possible to meet a week before the session resumed on October 5. There seems to have been considerable opposition within that committee to that plan.

Mr. Lewis: Not from us.

Mr. Knowles: We are ready to meet.

Mr. McIlraith: That is why I did not propose to amend their terms of reference, to give them that authority.

I do hope that our rules could be changed to deal with the subject. I do not want to get into the question of legal opinion but there seems to have been some doubt as to the need for this power to be granted by the house. The better opinion seems to be that it is legal and certainly, in the interest of caution, if the committee is going to sit, leave should be granted. As I say, the better opinion seems to be that it is needed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What does the minister mean by saying there is some doubt?

Mr. McIlraith: Doubt about the requirement that a committee needs to be granted power to sit while the house is adjourned. There is no doubt that a committee requires authorization by the house to sit while the house is sitting and that a committee has no power to sit after the session is prorogued. But as to what might happen when the house merely recesses, there are two opinions, and I regret to have to say that the better opinion seems to be that the house has to authorize a committee to sit during the period when the house is adjourned.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the reason I asked the question. I thought that was obvious.

Mr. Knowles: May I put one other question to the leader of the house?

Mr. Churchill: What order of business are we discussing, now?

Mr. Knowles: That is a good question.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, the questions which have been asked, and the statements which have been made, were all by leave. I am sure there is nothing before the house at the moment. The only thing the Chair would entertain would be a motion to adjourn. But I suppose, by unanimous agreement, there would be no objection to hon. members asking what the business of the house is to be, or seeking information of that nature.

Mr. Churchill: Will it be in order if I subsequently direct some questions to the Minister of National Defence, because there are two or three questions I should like to put to him?

Mr. Speaker: I thought the hon. gentleman had asked all the questions he had in mind.

Mr. Churchill: Oh, no.

Mr. Knowles: I have just one brief question. In view of the fact that committee work does seem to be piling up, will the government consider during this recess the possibility of calling parliament back and giving authority to the committees so that they can get down to their work, including the work of the defence committee in which the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is interested? There might be sufficient urgency to justify calling the house back earlier than October 5 in order to get these committees functioning.

Mr. McIlraith: I can give that assurance because the government has already started to look at the possibility of having a rule to deal with this subject.

Mr. Churchill: May I now ask a question? What are all these mysterious sentences used by the leader of the house? He tells us the government is looking at something to see whether there is a rule for something. Let us have parliament in session and have things out in the open.

Mr. McIlraith: I would be very glad to bring them out in the open. The leader of the house finds it very necessary that an examination be made of possible changes in the rules with a view to deciding whether they are suitable to be recommended for the consideration of this house at some future time. One of these rules is, I believe, No. 117. At any rate it is the final standing order used in the United Kingdom and it has to do with adjournment. Instead of the motion we put a few minutes ago we would rely on the standing order. Another is the rule permitting committees to sit while the house is adjourned. I find on examination that our committees have on many occasions sat on Saturdays when the house was adjourned and no leave had been granted.

Mr. Churchill: Oh, yes, but that is not what was in the mind of the committee on the rules which sat a couple of years ago. That committee wanted the house to be adjourned and a committee system introduced so that the government could be free from the question period every day, and the business of the house shelved.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIlraith: I was merely trying to answer questions which had been asked. I have no idea what that committee had in mind at different times.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a question of the Minister of National Defence now, sir?

Mr. Speaker: I suppose we have concluded the item "chit chat."

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I move that the house do now adjourn.

Mr. Hellyer: May I second that motion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister of National Defence certainly gets off the hook now.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 6.43 p.m. until Wednesday, October 5, at 2.30 p.m.

CANADA COUNCIL CULTURAL GRANTS

Question No. 710—Mr. Fairweather:

What grants, expenditures or contributions have been made by the Canada Council for bursaries, scholarships, fellowships and for encouragement of the arts and other cultural activities for 1962, 1963, 1964 and 1965 in each province of Canada and in the Yukon and Northwest Territories?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): The Canada Council has provided the following answer: As these statistics had not been developed in the past, the council had a special review made of its existing records and files. The survey has established that the various expenditures of the council cannot be summarized in the form requested, for the following main reasons:

(1) Although the exact fraction cannot be determined, as much as one third of the council's grants to organizations (such as for interprovincial touring, national conferences, projects or services, etc.) cannot be said to have been spent in any one province in particular;

(2) In the case of some two thirds of the awards made to individuals, the province of application and award (not to speak of the province of domicile) differs from the place where the applicant wishes to spend the award;

(3) While records have been kept of all awards made, it is not possible to retrace all the requests which have been made and have determined the council's response, so that essential information on the ratio of approvals to applications is not available.

Following the survey just completed, the council is taking steps to develop various forms of statistical information and analysis which would provide meaningful additions to future annual reports.

Questions

AWARD OF CANADA COUNCIL FELLOWSHIPS

Question No. 1,206—Mr. Schreyer:

1. What are the names of all personnel involved in the various committees constituted to receive applications for Canada Council fellowships and the awarding of same at the pre-doctoral and post-doctoral levels?

2. What are the criteria by which these awards committees are guided in the determining of eligibility of candidates for Canada Council fellowships at the pre-doctoral and post-doctoral levels?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): The Canada Council has provided the following answer: 1. The Canada Council has appointed an academic panel, consisting of 15 members, who represent the major disciplines of the humanities and the social sciences. It acts as a final review committee for the adjudication of competitions. The members are as follows: Prof. John F. Graham, Head, Department of Economics, Dalhousie University (Chairman); M. Albert Faucher, Faculté des Sciences sociales, Université Laval; Prof. T. A. Goudge, Chairman, Department of Philosophy, University of Toronto; Prof H. B. Hawthorn, Head, Department of Anthropology and Sociology, University of British Columbia; Prof. J. E. Hodgetts, Department of Political Science, University of Toronto; Dr. W. C. Hood, Adviser, Bank of Canada; M. Maurice L'Abbé, Directeur, Département de Mathématiques, Université de Montréal; Rév. Frère Clément Lockquell, Faculté des Lettres, Université Laval; Rév. Père Bernard Mailhiot, Centre de Recherches en Relations humaines, Université de Montréal; Prof. J. R. Mallory, Chairman, Department of Economics and Political Science, McGill University; Prof. W. L. Morton, Department of History, University of Manitoba; Prof. John A. Porter, Faculty of Arts, Carleton University; Prof. Malcolm M. Ross, Department of English, Trinity College, University of Toronto; Prof. Clarence Tracy, Department of English, University of Saskatchewan; M. Marcel Trudel, Department of History, Carleton University.

The membership of the various screening committees changes from year to year but is always drawn from the more senior ranks of the academic community. The names of members (approximately 50) have been kept confidential in order to ensure that any applications and representations are directed in an orderly fashion to the council's secretariat.

2. There are two types of criteria which guide the screening committees in determining the eligibility of candidates. These are

(a) Prerequisites established by the Canada Council concerning: (i) specific disciplines for which the council must assume responsibility; (ii) citizenship, domicile, and residence; (iii) level of scholarship (graduate, post-doctoral, etc.); (iv) value of awards to be made; (v) number of awards available; (vi) terms of renewal and extension.

(b) The professional norms applied by the expert assessors: The council asks the screening committees to apply the same canons of scholarly assessment which inform their judgment in the regular exercise of their academic duties.

SAWMILL CONSTRUCTION, CHAPLEAU COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 1,362—Mr. Laprise:

Did the government have a sawmill built at Lake Mistassini, Chapleau county and, if so (a) to what contractor was the work given (b) what was the cost of construction (c) on what date did the work begin (d) when was the work completed (e) how many people are employed in that sawmill?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes; (a) as the sawmill was built by Indian labour under the direction of a non-Indian foreman, a construction contract was not awarded; (b) cost of construction and installation was $16,991.62; (c) April, 1962; (d) September, 1962; (e) employment varies with seasonal factors and demand for product. At capacity, 13 persons work in the mill, and 25 others in directly associated forestry operations.

C.N.R. CLEANING AND MAINTENANCE CONTRACT, QUEBEC CITY

Question No. 1,385—Mr. Ricard:

Has the Canadian National Railways entered into a contract in Quebec city for the cleaning and maintenance of its freight cars and, if so (a) was this contract entered into between the C.N.R. and one of its own employees and, if so, what is this employee's name (b) was the contract given out after tenders were called for (c) does the new contracting party supply his own equipment (truck, ice crushing machine, conveyor, etc.) (d) who is the owner of the said equipment (e) is the policy followed by the C.N.R. in this case its regular one (f) has the C.N.R. been required to pay anything in addition to the price of the contract (g) for what price was the contract given out?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: Yes. (a) A contract was entered into with Juco Cleaning Reg'd. of Quebec. The registered owner of that firm is listed as Gaston Judd. Mr. Judd is regularly employed by the railway as a carman. (b) Yes. (c) The truck and ice crushing machine are owned by the railway and used by the contractor in accordance with the conditions advertised in the call for tender. This arrangement was made in order to encourage competition in bidding for the work since few contractors possess the equipment necessary for the icing of railway cars. Equipment other than the truck and ice crusher is supplied by the contractor. (d) The railway company does not know the ownership of the equipment supplied by the contractor. (e) The procedure was consistent with company policy in that the contract was awarded, after public tender, to the lowest competent bidder. The responsible officers were satisfied in this instance that the contractual arrangement was to the best advantage of the company and that the company's interests were in no way prejudiced by the fact that the contracting party was regularly employed in another capacity. (f) No. (g) It is not the practice of the company to disclose contract prices. The price was based on the lowest bid out of 17 tenders received.

NATIONAL CLEAN-UP CAMPAIGN

Question No. 1,495—Mr. Mongrain:

Has the government received representations regarding a campaign of beautification and clean-up across Canada on the occasion of Expo '67, and especially regarding the elimination of slums along railway lines, the elimination of heaps of refuse, and the encouragement of repair and painting of railway stations and beautification of their approaches?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Yes. The centennial commission has had inquiries from the provinces, from municipalities and from professional and service organizations about a nationally supported program for community improvement and beautification. The inquiries have shown widespread concern for community improvement together with requests for guidance and assistance in the implementation of community improvement projects.

The centennial commission is developing a national community improvement program which represents the call to action for Canadians to improve the appearance of their urban and rural environment. This program was actively initiated by the centennial commission in mid-1965 with the first national seminar ever held in Canada on the subject of community improvement and beautification, when guide lines were established for the community improvement program. The second seminar held in Ottawa on April 22, 1966 had as its theme the "Call to Action" for Canadians to embark on a campaign of clean up, paint up, landscaping, beautification and over-all improvement of our surroundings.

The role of the centennial commission is to co-ordinate and direct a community improvement program through the provinces to every municipality or rural area in Canada. The centennial commission is preparing information and guidance material on community improvement for widespread distribution and will give professional assistance wherever possible as a means toward encouraging the implementation of local projects for 1967 and beyond.

This national program has been initiated by the centennial commission on the occasion of the centennial of the confederation and not specially on the occasion of Expo '67.

CANADIAN JAVELIN LTD.—PRESS STATEMENT RESPECTING ROAD CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 1,613—Mr. Brand:

1. Did any departments of government have delivered to them the press statement of Canadian Javelin Limited last August advertising that the federal government was providing $35 million for the construction of a highway connecting Goose Bay, Lake Melville and the gulf of St. Lawrence which will permit winter shipments from the proposed mills for the operation of the Doyle interests?

2. Did the Prime Minister or any member of the government agree with Premier Smallwood or John Doyle that federal assistance would be given for such projected road?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by all departments as follows: 1 and 2. No.

FUNDY TRAIL DEVELOPMENT

Question No. 1,662—Mr. Kennedy:

RELOCATION OF RAILWAY STATION, OTTAWA—LOSS OF JOBS

Question No. 1,701—Mr. Isabelle:

As a result of the relocation of the Ottawa Union Station to Alta Vista, will any C.N.R. employees lose their jobs and, if so (a) how many (b) how many will become pensioners and what are their names?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: As a result of the opening of the new passenger terminal at Ottawa and the consequent transfer of facilities from the former Union Station, there was a reduction of 23 positions. However, all employees have been absorbed in other positions and there has been no lay-off except in one instance where the employee requested lay-off status rather than accept alternative employment. During the latter months of 1966 and in early 1967, a further 18 positions may be affected.

The company is using every means at its disposal to find some type of work within or outside the railway for the employees concerned. Collective and personal interviews have been held, counselling service provided and assistance from federal agencies sought.

DIRECT SHIPMENTS UNDER CANADA-WEST INDIES AGREEMENT

Question No. 1,840—Mr. McCleave:

Were any exemptions from article VII of the Canada-West Indies agreement of 1925 with regard to direct shipments, requested within the last 10 years and, if so, by whom and with what result?

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Article VII of the agreement provided for a direct shipment requirement for West Indian goods coming to Canada and permitted the West Indies to impose a similar requirement on Canadian goods going to the West Indies. None of the West Indian authorities have imposed this requirement on Canadian goods during the last 10 years.

The following exceptions have been made by Canada to the direct shipment requirement imposed under article VII of the Canada-West Indies trade agreement in the last 10 years:

(a) Order in council P.C. 1960-1044, July 30, 1960, permitted the transshipment at Cristobal in the Panama Canal zone of coffee, pimento, ground and unground ginger, lime juice, rum and tia maria, produced in Jamaica, without being subject to the higher most favoured nation rates of customs duty, provided such goods were shipped on a through bill of lading from Jamaica to a port in British Columbia and entered British Columbia by sea. (Requested by Jamaica).

(b) Order in council P.C. 1961-1675 of November 23, 1961, permitted transshipment of the goods listed in P.C. 1960-1044 at Cristobal or Curacao in the Dutch West Indies. (Requested by Jamaica).

(c) Order in council P.C. 1964-1759 of November 13, 1964, extended the privilege of transshipment at Cristobal or Curacao to all Jamaican goods. As provided for in the earlier orders, these goods had to be shipped on a through bill of lading from Jamaica to a port in British Columbia and enter British Columbia by sea. (Requested by Jamaica).

(d) Order in council P.C. 1963-62 of January 10, 1963, permitted the transshipment at Cristobal or Curacao of rum produced in British Guiana if this product was shipped on a through bill of lading from British Guiana to a port in British Columbia and entered British Columbia by sea. (Requested by British Guiana).

(e) The protocol to the 1925 trade agreement signed at the Commonwealth Caribbean-Canada conference in July 1966 provided for the waiving of the direct shipment requirements of article VII. This undertaking was implemented by Canada under order in council P.C. 1966-1419 of July 27, 1966, which permits goods grown, produced or manufactured in Antigua, the Bahamas, Barbados, Bermuda, British Honduras, Dominica, Grenada, Guyana, Jamaica, Montserrat, St. Kitts-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Trinidad and Tobago, Turks and Caicos Islands and Virgin islands, which are shipped on a through bill of lading to a consignee in a specified port in Canada to be transshipped without becoming subject to the higher most favoured nation rates of customs duty. (Requested by the Commonwealth Caribbean countries as a group).

WAGE RATES, CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 1,849—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. With reference to the 40-hour week, have the employees of the Cape Breton Highlands national park been brought under the legislation of the Canada Labour Standards Code and, if so, when did this action take place?

2. On what date did the employees of the Cape Breton Highlands national park last receive an increase in wages, and what was the amount of increase granted at that time?

3. Is it the intention of the government to give consideration to a further increase in wage rates at the aforementioned national park and, if so, how soon will such an increase take place?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Not yet; these employees will be brought under a 40-hour work week when this can be adopted without loss in their total gross weekly earnings.

2. April 1, 1965, 5-15 cents per hour.

3. Revised rate approved by TB 65F583, July 7, 1966, effective April 1, 1966. Now being promulgated.

PERMANENT HOMES IN NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 1,851—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What declarations of policy have been made since the first of May, 1966, by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources in connection with the ownership of permanent homes and habitations within national park areas?

2. Is it the intention of the government to allow any further permanent homes to be built in national parks?

3. What are the plans regarding homes not located in any or all of the national parks?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The policy on national parks was announced in the house on September 18, 1964 (Hansard pp. 8192-95) and was dealt with on several occasions in the house since that time, particularly on January 31, 1966 (Hansard pp. 481-2). Since May 1, 1966, as requested in the question, there has been no departure from the policy on residential leases in national parks, namely that future residential leases will restrict occupancy to those who need to live within a park to provide visitor services; leases will be for fixed terms but will provide for compensation for improvements at fair market value at expiry; in addition, the occupant will not be disturbed on termination of the lease unless the property is required for a definite park purpose; the leaseholder will not be able to assign or pass on his interest to third parties after he has received compensation for improvements; new leases, however, will not be granted for permanent summer cottages within national parks; the long-term objective is to gradually acquire all existing summer cottage sites.

2. Construction of homes for occupancy only by those who require to live in a national park to provide visitor services is being permitted.

3. It is not proposed to make any changes in the cases of existing residential leaseholders unless the leasehold property is required for park purposes or unless the lease comes up for assignment or renewal. New leases for previously unalienated lands or leases issued where assignments or renewals are involved will provide for compensation for improvements at fair market value on termination of the leases. The leases will also contain a clause restricting residence to those who have a need to reside in a park to provide visitor services or those who, on retirement, have been in continuous residence for at least five years immediately preceding retirement.

New leases for previously unalienated land will be for 42 years. The length of leases issued where assignments or renewals are involved, will depend upon the terms of the leases which they are replacing but in any case will not exceed 42 years.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. The Department of Transport five year forecast on capital expenditure includes proposals for restoration and improvement of certain locks on the Rideau canal to cover required repairs and increased and better facilities for the boating public. Longer term priorities for restoration of locks have been tentatively established.

2. Of that amount, what was the weight of fish eaten by human beings and what was the weight of fish consumed by poultry, pets, etc?
3. What were the comparative figures for 1960?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): There are no statistics available on the total consumption of fish in Canada. The latest estimate of fish consumption (edible weight) by human beings is for the year 1963 and amounted to 137,127 tons. The comparable figures for 1960 were 112,711 tons. Fish and fish products used in the manufacture of foods for domestic animals, including pets, amounted to 49,823 tons in 1963 and 38,144 tons in 1960. Many of these foods contain not only fish but also animal and grain products and as substantial quantities are exported, it is not possible to determine what portion of the fish and fish products used is retained for domestic consumption.

STRATEGIC MATERIALS SUPPLIED FOR U.S. USE IN VIET NAM

Question No. 1,866—Mr. Mather:

Are any strategic materials (explosives, bullets, aircraft parts, etc.) being supplied from Canada to the United States for use in Viet Nam and, if so, what are they?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Under the Canada-U.S. defence production sharing arrangements, Canada procures a substantial amount of U.S. military equipment for use by the Canadian armed forces, and Canadian industry is given the opportunity to bid on a wide variety of defence equipment for the U.S. armed forces.

The value of such U.S. defence contracts for Canadian research, development and production including, for example, aircraft, electronics, spare parts and weapon components has amounted to over $1.3 billion since the beginning of the program in 1959. On delivery to the U.S. forces, these items become U.S. government property and their subsequent use is controlled by the U.S. government. No military equipment is delivered by Canadian suppliers to any destination in Viet Nam. It is government policy not to grant export permits for shipment of military equipment to Viet Nam.

2. Yes. Due to drought conditions in the Ottawa valley, it was necessary for the operator to use large amounts of purchased hay. In this type of enterprise it takes about 2½ tons of hay to carry a cow through the winter.

3. No. Mr. Brown's contract with the department calls for payment of $18,000 for the first year and $14,000 for each of the second and third years. The contract provides that the contractor assumes responsibility for all costs associated with the feeding, maintenance, accommodation and management of the herd.

INDUSTRY

CANADA-U.S. AUTOMOBILE AGREEMENT—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move, seconded by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North, the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance, namely the action of the Canadian automobile companies in violating both the spirit and the terms of the Canada-U.S. automobile trade agreement, and their action in failing to honour solemn commitments made to parliament on their behalf, resulting in lay-offs and dislocation affecting employees, and excessive car prices to the consumer public.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member kindly address the Chair and the house on the question of urgency of debate?

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that the general question of urgency here cannot be denied in any way. Our latest information indicates that over 5,000 Canadians have been laid off as a result of the dislocations taking place under this pact.

Further with regard to the urgency of debate I would point out that this is the first opportunity that anyone has had to raise this important matter before Your Honour. With respect to further debate upon it, we are told we are now going into debate on the Bank Act and medicare, which debates will be prolonged and will not provide an opportunity for important matters such as this to be raised.

The real urgency of debate lies in what appears to me to be a complete flouting by the Canadian automobile companies of the expressed wishes of this parliament. All of us who followed the debate on the automobile pact legislation recall the solemn assurances made by various ministers to the members of the house that very substantial steps would be taken and machinery would be set up to take care of the dislocations and hardships which we all knew were going to come about as a result of the legislation. In actual fact this has not been done. The motor companies have never participated in the particular form of adjustment assistance outlined. In short they have declined to do so and have thumbed their noses at parliament.

The urgency further lies in the fact that if outside individuals and companies are going to go their own way, are going to flout their undertakings to parliament, and are going to disregard the expressed wishes of parliament asserted in legislation, then it is important that we discuss important matters of this kind. I further suggest that the failure of the government to make changes mandatory has permitted the motor companies to thumb their noses at us and has caused resultant great hardship to people in the industry. I know there is the other consideration of differences in price as between the United States and Canada. Your Honour may say that matter will be investigated by a particular committee, and I hope the members of that committee will call representatives of the motor companies before them to justify their actions, but in the light of all these circumstances I submit there is urgency of debate on the matter I have raised.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak very briefly in regard to the urgency of debate. Debate should be allowed in order that certain facts may be brought before the people of this country. I would point out that some manufacturers of automobiles under this new agreement are now manufacturing models in the United States which heretofore were built in Canada, and these models are being brought into this country and sold at Canadian prices even though in the United States they are sold at American prices. This, coupled with the fact that the dislocation in the industry is causing a tremendous number of layoffs in the Canadian labour force, merits consideration of the matter by the house.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to offer some suggestions for your consideration when you are deciding whether or not there is urgency of debate respecting the matter raised by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott).

First of all, Mr. Speaker, citation 100 in Beauchesne's fourth edition states that adjournment of the house under standing order 26 "must involve the administrative responsibility of the government." I do not suppose it could be argued that a change in the price to purchasers of automobiles, whether it be this year or any other year, directly involves the administrative responsibility of the government, except for the fact that during the past 12 months, and even prior to that the government, or I should say parliament, has allowed something like $50 million per year to be retained in the hands of the automobile manufacturers by relieving them of some import duty, on the firm understanding that there was to be a closing of the gap between the prices of automobiles in Canada and prices in the United States.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the press reports we have had recently are correct regarding the price changes in the United States and the price changes in Canada, there appears to be only a very small amount, something like $17 to $20, in closing the gap between the price in the United States and the price in Canada for a comparable automobile. In line with what has been advanced to the members of this house so far as the agreement is concerned, to the effect that these price differentials would be brought into line by the end of 1968, and the fact that these are the prices for the 1967 models, it seems to me that what the automobile manufacturers are doing in Canada is not in keeping with the spirit and the intent of what was presented to this house. To that extent, Mr. Speaker, in my view it seems that this does involve the administrative responsibility of the government, because we were told this price differential would be eliminated and in exchange $50 million was granted to the automobile manufacturers.

In so far as paragraph 2 of citation 100 of Beauchesne's fourth edition is concerned, it says that a matter must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention. Well, Mr. Speaker, the increases in price which have been announced may not be a severe hardship when they amount to somewhere between $40 and $55, but the fact is that the public immediately will begin to pay this amount. Therefore it seems to me it is going to affect the public immediately, whether or not it can be said that the public will suffer. Certainly, however, we have the right to expect an explanation and, as the hon. member for Danforth said, this is the first opportunity we have had to discuss it.

In respect of paragraph 3 of citation 100 dealing with the matter of urgency, where it says there must be urgency of debate, so far as I can see there is no way of bringing parliament's opinion to the attention of the automobile manufacturers in Canada other than through some government sponsored amendment or through a debate in this house. To date we have not had any indication that the government intends to take any action to give effect to what we thought was the intent and the end result of the agreement that was entered into.

So, Mr. Speaker, I should like to offer these suggestions for your consideration respecting this whole matter. In summary, it seems to me there has not been the kind of action taken that was promised to close the differential between prices here and in the United States. It seems to me the increase in prices in the model year 1967 is in complete contradiction to what the Minister of Industry said some time ago when explaining certain parts of the agreement. He said that while he could not guarantee there would be an immediate reduction in the prices of Canadian automobiles, it would keep the prices from going up between now and 1968, and that by 1968 the cars in both countries would be at the same price. Now, Mr. Speaker, we have a positive indication that the manufacturers have in fact increased the prices between the time of the agreement and 1968, and therefore there does seem to be a justification for some debate on the matter.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): As I appreciate the situation, Mr. Speaker, there cannot be any denial of the fact that there is an urgency to discuss this matter. It seems that in view of the agenda announced by the government there will be no discussion of this agreement which was entered into, but it is of interest to note that its results are exactly those predicted by this party before the agreement took effect.

As a result of this agreement between the two countries the Canadian consumers will have to bear an expense of $50 million without receiving any advantage. The Canadian consumer will have to pay more for his car this year than he paid last year, and the only explanation given is that certain safety features will be standard equipment on this year's cars. Surely this additional cost cannot be justified in those terms. This government, by entering into this agreement, has sold out the rights of Canadians.

As a result of this agreement, cars manufactured in Canada are selling in the United States, in competition with cars manufactured there, at lower prices than Canadian consumers are paying. The Canadian consumer is paying through the nose, and we predicted this before this agreement was finalized. We predicted that this agreement was of such a basic nature it would result in Canadian unemployment.

[Mr. Olson.]

Because of this agreement entered into by this government there are 4,800 Canadians now unemployed who normally would be working for the auto and associated industries. The transfer to the United States of production of cars normally produced in Canada has been another result of this agreement and a cause for the loss to Canadian consumers of $50 million. Canadians are now also paying higher prices without obtaining any benefits as the result of another matter to which reference could be made, the origin of which is clear.

Surely it cannot be said that the government's action in setting up a committee to consider consumer prices will provide a guarantee, and that because of that fact this parliament should not now discuss this matter. We do not know at this stage that this committee will consider this specific situation. It might consider it if the government gave its acceptance to such a suggestion, and I suppose that could happen if members on the other side acted accordingly.

In view of this fact there is no means by which this house can express its condemnation of this burden placed on the Canadian consumer. This discussion must take place now. If we wait for a week, ten days or two weeks the result will be simply a suppliant acceptance in this house of the action of the automobile manufacturers. This action on the part of the government and its failure to act to protect Canadian interests is deserving of our greatest condemnation at this time.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to repeat what has been said by previous speakers regarding the motion proposed by the hon. member for Danforth, but one point struck me that I should like to outline. Standing order 26, as interpreted by citation 100 of Beauchesne, states that any adjournment of the house to discuss a matter of urgency must involve an administrative responsibility on the part of the government. I do not think that is necessarily the case here, though I must add that an agreement such as the one arrived at between automobile companies and the Canadian government results in an affront to parliament and Canadians as a whole. I am not suggesting that this subject is urgent or should not be discussed at this time because it should be considered as soon as possible, perhaps at this time if there is no alternative opportunity for debate.

This parliament set up a committee to study consumer credit, and its terms of reference have been broadened to consider the increase in consumer prices. This government has not indicated that it will send the subject matter now before the house to that committee for consideration, but it seems to me that it might be the most effective way of dealing with this matter in light of the fact that we are trying to study this whole question of consumer price increase across this country. I should like the government to consider this suggestion, because it seems to me that it would be appropriate to refer this specific matter to that committee for thorough study and investigation. If we do not follow that course, then I think we should discuss the matter immediately in this house.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the matter that has been brought to the attention of this house by the hon. member for Danforth is extremely important. The United States-Canada automotive trade agreement must be considered as a direct responsibility of this government, because this government rather than the manufacturers, entered into that agreement with the United States. It was only later that the automobile companies came into the picture.

The stated objective of this agreement was the provision of greater employment in the automotive industry. The exact opposite is actually what has happened, and that was pointed out by various members of this party at an earlier stage.

In attempting to show why this matter should be discussed at this time, let me state—

An hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member wants to direct his remarks to the question of urgency of debate. I have allowed some leniency, but at this time I suggest that hon. members should confine their contributions to the urgency of debate by this house at this time.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago General Motors announced the prospective lay-off of some 2,600 employees. I am told that 1,000 employees have received notice to this effect. Shortly after that announcement I understood the figure would be 2,800, and since then I have been informed by authoritative sources that the figure will be more likely in the neighbourhood of 3,500 employees of General Motors in the Oshawa area alone.

Surely in view of these facts this is a vital matter which should be considered by this house at this time. The government should give us a clear and concise statement as to the effect of this agreement on the economy of this country.

We cannot allow a discussion of this matter to be delayed in view of the increasing unemployment. We cannot remain disinterested knowing that the axe is going to fall. Many of these automotive industry employees are concerned because of this agreement entered into by this government. Now is the time for the government to come forward and give a clear and concise statement as to what this program is and what it will likely do to the Canadian economy and its people.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to continue this debate on the automotive trade agreement, which was dealt with by the house some months ago. I propose, if I may, to deal with what I believe to be the question before the house at the moment, namely, whether this is a definite matter of urgent public importance for which the business indicated for the house today should be set aside by reason of the urgent necessity for this debate to take place today.

In that connection I should like to refer again to citation 100 of Beauchesne and especially that part of it indicating that the matter of important business must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention. I would also refer to subparagraph 8, where it is indicated that it must be an occurrence of some sudden emergency either in home or in foreign affairs. The citation goes on to indicate that it was not intended to cover an important matter that may be of great national interest, the subject matter of which may be urgent in the ordinary sense, but rather urgency of debate.

The right hon. Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Ontario have indicated that they do not think the legislation and the signing of the agreement was in the interests of the country, and they have developed an argument which is a continuation of the argument made in that earlier debate. It is clear that they are seeking to continue that debate now under the guise of the proceedings provided for under standing order 26.

Some hon. Members: Nonsense.

Mr. McIlraith: That is what is contemplated. The hon. member for Ontario has gone further and indicated that what he wants is a concise statement from the government dealing with the matter he raised in connection with this question, the lay-offs and so on. If that is what he wants I respectfully suggest that the method to obtain this is not by way of a motion under standing order 26, but by a request to the minister for such a statement to be made on motions before the orders of the day.

Mr. Starr: We have tried, but have had no statement from him.

Mr. McIlraith: The other point I wish to make is that in reading the proposed motion it will be noted that it makes several assumptions of fact. I do not want my omission to deal with those assumptions of fact to be taken as concurrence to any extent in them.

One assumption of fact at the very end of the motion is contained in the reference to higher and unjustified car prices to the consumer public.

I should point out that this house set up a committee to deal with price increases. That committee is now at work; and one of the matters coming before it, if I am informed correctly, is this very question of car price increases in order to find out whether or not they are justified. That committee having been set up by the house for that purpose and being in the midst of its work on that very subject, surely the subject matter should not be withdrawn from the committee and dealt with in an emergency debate under standing order 26.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the motion be not accepted.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether hon. members wish to pursue this point. I have already heard a number of submissions in support of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Danforth and I am prepared at this time to render a decision, if this is the will of the house. I see the hon. member for Lapointe and a number of other hon. members rising. I would prefer, if I were allowed to do so at this point, to make a decision so we may get on with the business of the house, if this is the wish of hon. members.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I think we should be permitted at least to reply to the statement which has been made by the Minister of Public Works, who has argued that the public interest will not suffer. The whole purpose of the motion is predicated on the thesis that the public interest will suffer in two important respects because the commitments which were made by the government with respect to the Canada-United States auto agreement have not been kept.

The first commitment which was made was that as a result of this agreement, which gives to the automobile companies some $50 million a year in tax relief, the employees in the automotive manufacturing industry would not suffer and there would be transitional assistance benefits payable to any of those who were thrown out of work. One of the automobile companies, General Motors, has taken the position that it is not required to pay the transitional assistance benefits unless the worker can show that the lay-off is attributable to the Canada-United States auto agreement. Consequently these men are being denied something which was promised them in this house.

I submit that the matter is pressing and ought to be settled now. Many of these men have been laid off and others have been notified that they will be laid off. Unless this parliament acts, and acts promptly, these men will not have any recourse to the assistance which we were told in this house by the government spokesman they would be entitled to receive.

The other commitment which was made by the government on behalf of the automobile companies was that the spread between the prices of cars to the consumers in the United States and Canada would be progressively reduced. The prices were not reduced for the 1966 cars, and the figures announced for the 1967 cars show that prices will be increased and not decreased.

The minister argues that there is a committee of the house looking into the matter of automobile prices. First of all, Mr. Speaker, the committee has not yet agreed to look into the price of cars in Canada; and second, the Canada-United States agreement is not before that committee. It is this house which must deal with the problem. It was this house which passed a resolution authorizing the government to proceed with an agreement which they had entered into some 15 months previously, and it is this house which must accept the responsibility of bringing the government to account if the commitments made under that agreement are not being lived up to by the companies concerned.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that if the 1967 cars go on the market at the prices which have been announced, it will be too late six months from now for the government to take some action with respect to the prices of cars. The responsibility for seeing that the automobile companies live up to the commitments which they made and commitments which were made on their behalf in this house by the Minister of Industry lies with the house, and it does not seem to me that leaving it to a committee will absolve us of the responsibility which is ours.

I therefore claim that this is a matter of urgency which must be dealt with now. If it is not dealt with immediately, certainly both the workers concerned and the consumers of cars will be ill treated and will suffer loss as a result of the failure of this parliament to deal with the present situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit another argument which, I believe, will prove the urgency of a debate.

It deals, as a matter of fact, with the strike now going on in an automobile plant in Ste-Thérèse, near Montreal, where the employees are fighting for the recognition of a principle, namely: equal salary for the employees in Quebec and Ontario. That is what people are asking for in the automotive industry.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that a strike was called for a principle which appears most important to the employees of an industry located near Montreal who do exactly the same work as other employees in a similar industry in Ontario and that this principle aims at establishing similarity in salaries, equal salaries for both, that illustrates the urgency of the debate on the dealings of the automotive industry in Canada.

Thanks to a special treatment granted by the government, those industries enjoy lower taxes, lower tariffs.

Such companies should not take unfair advantage of it; rather they should treat all Canadian citizens equally, whether in Quebec or in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I think that you would be totally justified to grant that debate since there is a strike going on now about that and the principle is most important and serious.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I call for the co-operation of hon. members in order to make a ruling at this point. Since I requested this co-operation from hon. members two additional contributions have been made, but I regret to say they have not changed the opinion I had already reached. The hon. member for Cariboo may want to add something?

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): I should like to add one sentence because I think it does have a bearing on what we are doing here today. Since reference has been made to a committee, I think it is most important and most urgent that we have a debate here, so that in case the committee decided to deal with this question, then it would have the benefit of this debate in carrying out its work.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members know that it is only on rare occasions and under very extreme circumstances that a motion of this type is allowed by the Chair. There are urgent and important matters coming up all the time, and if a motion under standing order 26 were allowed in all instances, or in most instances, the house business as presented by the government would never be proceeded with.

I have to suggest to hon. members that they again consider the provisions of citation 100, paragraphs 2 and 3, of Beauchesne's fourth edition, to the effect that a definite matter of urgent public importance for the discussion of which the adjournment of the house may be moved under standing order 26 must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention. There must be a prima facie case of urgency. "Urgency" within this rule does not apply to the matter itself, but it means urgency of debate.

I am completely satisfied that the matter raised is one of national importance and one of great urgency, but I am doubtful as to whether it is sufficiently urgent that the ordinary business of the house should be set aside in order that hon. members may proceed with consideration of the matter raised by the hon. member for Danforth. I must exercise my judgment in a situation such as this one. I have weighed the arguments brought forth in favour of allowing the motion and the argument brought forward by the Minister of Public Works in opposition thereto. Having taken into account the arguments advanced, having looked into the matter as closely as I can and as generously as I can, I feel I cannot allow this motion at this time.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 154 is acceptable to the government.

Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call notice of motion No. 151.

Mr. Speaker: Dropped.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, so that his promise of medicare by July 1, 1967, can be carried out I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether consideration will be given by the government to the convening of a federal-provincial conference, so as to secure basic agreement amongst the provinces, rather than putting this off indefinitely.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there will be an opportunity in a day or two to discuss this whole question, when the medicare legislation is introduced.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: The question was not related to a discussion of the whole matter. The question was, has the government given consideration to enabling the Prime Minister to carry out his word given to the Canadian people over and over again, that medicare would begin on July 1, 1967, by the convening of a federal-provincial conference with a view to securing agreement?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we propose to proceed with the legislation and I hope it will be in effect in a few weeks.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO DEAL WITH RISING PRICES AND INCREASING COSTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the widespread concern of the housewives of Canada about the rise in the cost of living, particularly the increase in the cost of food, is the minister prepared to reconsider his position with regard to asking the house for authority to set up a prices review board that would review these price increases periodically, with a view to determining whether or not price increases are warranted?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to bring any such proposal before the House. I am very happy that, on the initiative of this side of the house, a committee of the House and the Senate has been established in which these matters can be reviewed. I think this committee is doing excellent work. As to the future, I would not want to rule out new departures in policy. I think the particular proposal that has been made by the Leader of the Opposition would be a superficial way of dealing with a fundamental problem.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. Does the minister intend to delineate any guide lines for policy on wages, consumer prices and profits which would give the economy some guidance in this matter as related to a proper balance among the three factors?

Mr. Sharp: I am expecting the Economic Council of Canada will be presenting its report this month. This will give an opportunity for a thorough study of this proposal, which is one I might want to support.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister whether we can take the statement made by the Minister of Industry in Edmonton before the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, as reported in the Globe and Mail today, as representing government policy, namely that a guide line of 3 per cent on pay and profits should be followed by labour and management?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Perhaps the hon. gentleman would appreciate receiving a copy of the full text of the minister's speech, which I have had the opportunity of reading. If he did, perhaps he would revise his opinion of that report.

Mr. Fulton: This is not an answer to the question I put. Perhaps the Prime Minister will answer the question, which was whether we should take a guide line of 3 per cent on pay and profits as being government policy.

Mr. Pearson: There were no guide lines laid down by the minister in his speech.

[Later:]

Mr. Fulton: May I ask the Minister of Finance whether he agrees with the Minister of Industry, his colleague, that the general guide line for non-inflationary wage increases, profit increases, and government services expenditure is the national productivity trend, or about 3 per cent per annum, and if so—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It appears the hon. gentleman is asking a question which was asked a moment ago. The first time, it was asked in the proper way when he inquired of the Prime Minister whether this represented government policy. An answer was given by the Prime Minister and the question cannot be asked a second time.

Mr. Fulton: With respect, the Prime Minister said it was not government policy, or that no such statement had been made. I am asking the Minister of Finance if he agrees with the statement made by his colleague and, if so, whether he will take steps to incorporate it in legislation or in recommendations brought before the house.

Mr. Speaker: I assume the minister will have taken note of the suggestion.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COST OF SALARY INCREASES FOR EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): In view of increasing costs, is the Prime Minister prepared now to bring before parliament the question of the 24 per cent increase that was granted Canadian Broadcasting Corporation employees, and to tell the Canadian people what it is going to cost the taxpayers?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The chairman of the board that looked into this matter recommended increases of 7½ per cent, 7½ per cent and 7½ per cent over three years. This was a cumulative recommendation. The government felt, since it was responsible for the C.B.C., that it would be unwise from the government point of view to go beyond these figures, and the C.B.C. did not do so. A settlement was reached on a different basis within the figures I have mentioned, namely 9 per cent, 9 per cent and 4½ per cent.

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR POLICY STATEMENT ON FEED GRAIN SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

Could he tell the house what progress has been made in the negotiations and discussions held between himself, his department, the railway companies, the truckers and the millers, concerning the transfer of a franchise for the transportation of feed grain from the trucking companies to the railways?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, there have never been any such discussions.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister say if, further to a meeting held a few days ago in Drummondville and attended by the Quebec millers and himself, there has been a change in government policy regarding subsidies paid to truckers for feed grain transportation?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Sauvé: There has been no change, Mr. Speaker, and I believe there is some confusion. The C.N.R. and the C.P.R. have proposed certain arrangements to the millers from the province of Quebec for the transportation of feed grain, from Fort William and Port Arthur to eastern Canada and Quebec, and this in no way affects the situation of Quebec truckers.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the government has indicated several times during recent months that it is its intention to increase old age pensions during this session, would the Prime Minister inform the house when the introduction of the enabling legislation can be expected?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government hopes and intends to bring in legislation for this purpose during the current part of this session—that is, before Christmas.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the concern being expressed in the country, may I ask the Prime Minister whether consideration is being given to providing for an old age pension increase without imposing any test or limitation?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should wait until the resolution is introduced; his understandable curiosity will be satisfied at that time.

Mr. Knowles: I think I shall have to satisfy my curiosity at ten o'clock.

FINANCE

CASH VALUE OF 3 PER CENT PERPETUAL BONDS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, might I explain in advance the objective of my question, which is to ascertain whether the government would give reconsideration to a decision which was made and announced on September 14, whereby the holders of perpetual bonds bearing 3 per cent per annum are being denied the cash value at this time.

[Mr. Langlois (Mégantic).]

The result of the direction which was made by the government that those bonds will be continued, which is contractually within the powers of the government, has meant that a $1,000 bond has fallen to about $500, and that people who invested their earnings 30 years ago, now old in years and needing their money, are being denied a return on their money and are forced to continue to lend money to the government at 3 per cent.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, these bonds were issued in 1936 by a government led at the time, I believe, by Right Hon. R. B. Bennett—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, they were issued by the government of Mackenzie King.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I admit that my memory failed me there; Mr. Bennett was defeated the year before.

Mr. Pearson: Badly defeated.

Mr. Sharp: However, that has nothing to do with the argument I am going to make.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why bring it up, then?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, these bonds were issued in the amount of $55 million, and their purchase was really a means of providing a continuing income. They were at that time and still are paying on the original issued price about 3.11 per cent; they have a coupon rate of 3 per cent.

There were times during that period, Mr. Speaker, when these bonds sold at a premium. They have not always sold at a discount. They have only sold at a discount since the increase in interest rates. During most of the period, of course, interest rates have been higher than 3 per cent, certainly in recent years.

In order to redeem those bonds the government would be required to raise a similar amount of cash. If we were to pay current rates of interest, it would add another $1.5 million to national debt charges. The house will understand that there are many securities now being traded on the market, issued by the government of Canada, which are trading at a discount; and to admit the principle that the government has an obligation to redeem all government securities at par at any time would, I am sure, not be an admission that would be supported by the right hon. gentleman.

The government considered very carefully whether it should redeem these bonds, but it seemed to us that many of these holders had bought the bonds at discount as well as at par, and even at above par. The bonds were bought at all sorts of prices, and to redeem them now would be to give to some holders a capital gain at the expense of the taxpayers generally.

While I very much regret that there are some holders who are now suffering some loss, there are others who would make an unmerited gain, one that I as Minister of Finance would not feel justified in recommending to this house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask the minister, does he feel that those people, who are all up in years now, are to suffer by reason of his direction on September 14—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker:—a depreciation in the value—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —of 50 per cent?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The second question put by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is to my mind clearly argumentative. I should like to remind both the Leader of the Opposition and the Minister of Finance of the practice of this house referred to in our rules, which requires that questions should not be asked that are of a nature demanding a lengthy and detailed answer, and also that answers should be as brief as possible. Both question and answer were defective in this regard.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask an important supplementary question. Would the minister now consider inserting a maturity date in these bonds?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would have to give consideration to that, as I have given consideration to this question since I have been minister. I have received a great deal of correspondence about it. However, I have to bear in mind that not all of the holders are old and not all of them have held these bonds from the beginning. Some of the bonds have been purchased at very substantial discounts, as much as 50 per cent, and I really do not feel that there is any special obligation on the part of the taxpayers to give these people an unmerited capital gain. So that this question is not as simple as it appears from the way it is put by members of the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would suggest to the minister that that question should not have been answered; this is now developing into a debate.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN ATTITUDE TOWARD ADMISSION OF MAINLAND CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the government going to support and vote for the seating of the delegation of the People's Republic of China at the present meeting of the general assembly of the United Nations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend has not read the statement that I made at the United Nations general assembly, perhaps he would be good enough to do so, because he would see that we share a common concern about this important problem. The government's policy on this question will be decided during the course of this assembly, and in so deciding we will bear in mind a number of circumstances, including the recent developments in China.

There can be no doubt that it would be desirable to seat mainland China in the United Nations; this I said at the United Nations. This depends upon the competition for jurisdiction between the two Chinas as to the same territory. It also involves the seating of two distinct governments at the United Nations. Can this problem be resolved?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We will do our utmost to try to bring about its resolution.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair might at this time be allowed to remind—

Mr. Starr: I have a different point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member in a moment, after I have taken the liberty of reminding the minister of the requirement that answers should be as short as possible. The minister's reply amounted to a debate.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I think I will address my question to the Prime Minister. I wonder if he would take the answer that was given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and send it to the United Nations for clarification?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. If members of the opposition, when asking questions of such far reaching significance and importance, would have the courtesy of letting the Secretary of State for External Affairs know about their questions in advance, the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be able to spend some time thinking about the matter, and he would of course produce a clear and succinctly short answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Skeena.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—INQUIRY INTO SINKING OF DREDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder if I might address my question to the Minister of Transport. I am sure he does not need notice, and does not need to think about it. May I ask the minister what action, if any, the government has taken with respect to causing an inquiry to be held into the sinking or capsizing of the Manseau No. 101, a dredge, in the St. Lawrence river above Quebec, which recently resulted in the loss of ten lives.

Mr. Pickersgill: Whether an actual—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member put the question on the order paper.

Mr. Howard: May I speak with your permission please, Mr. Speaker. Always in the past, since Your Honour has been in the Chair, questions relating to accidents on the St. Lawrence river or in the St. Lawrence Seaway, and especially those which have resulted in the loss of lives, have been permitted at this stage, and have not been relegated to the position of being placed on the order paper. There is an urgency about this that I think requires an answer now, because another ship may have been involved.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I gather, from the Minister of Transport that he has a ready and quick answer. Perhaps he might be allowed to make it.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): As soon as news was received of this most unhappy and regrettable accident an investigation was started immediately. It is under way and is being pushed as fast as possible.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROHIBITION OF OVERTIME WORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister care to comment on Premier Bennett's recent freeze on overtime work as his contribution toward combating inflation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not in order.

HISTORIC SITES

QUEBEC—DEMOLITION OF HOME OF SIR ALEXANDER GALT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I have already given the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development notice of the question I will now put to him.

I have here a copy of a resolution which the Eastern Township Historical Society forwarded to the minister last September 30.

Now, further to that resolution, could the minister tell the house why he ordered Sir Alexander Galt's house in Sherbrooke to be demolished, without giving notice to the said society? Does he propose to honour the memory of Sir Galt, one of the Fathers of Confederation, by restoring the remaining outbuildings?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member should either discuss the matter with the minister or put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I intend to discuss the matter at ten o'clock tonight.

INDUSTRY

MOTOR CARS—STEPS TO CANCEL PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the many concessions given to the Canadian car manufacturers under the Canada-United States car treaty, what steps does the minister propose to take so that Canadian car manufacturers will roll back their recent increases on prices of cars?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the recent price announcements made by the motorcar companies, I think hon. members will have noted that there has been this year a further narrowing of the differential in manufacturers' sale prices, between Canada and the United States, in respect of the different models.

There are I think, as hon. members know, a great many models provided by each manufacturer, and the changing in prices annually takes place, not only over-all, but with one model in relation to another. This is quite a complex matter. I have taken the opportunity of having these figures studied by my officials. I am satisfied that, as anticipated and indeed as hoped for, there has been this year a greater narrowing of the differential in manufacturers' prices, between Canada and the United States, in addition to that of last year.

I also note that, while there had been price increases announced in the United States in relation to last year's models, claimed by motorcar manufacturers to result from making standard this year items which previously were optional, and from introducing some new items of safety interest which last year were not available at all, the price increases in the United States reflecting these additions made standard this year have been introduced in Canada at varying lower figures by each of the three main motorcar manufacturers in Canada, as compared with the United States.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister failed to convince me that Canadian car prices are lower. May I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Is the Minister of Finance giving any consideration to lowering the tariff of 25 per cent on cars and 17½ per cent on car parts, imported by individuals to Canada, in order to force the car manufacturers to lower their prices?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I had any such intention I would bring it before the house at the appropriate time.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry. The press on September 23 quoted the minister as having made a very stiff protest to the automobile manufacturers, warning them not to raise their prices for 1967 cars. I want to ask the minister if he feels that the automobile companies have complied with this request?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I think I did explain that prices, model for model this year, are higher than last year. The motorcar companies have pointed out that the increases in prices reflect additional items this year, made standard equipment, which were either not available or which were optional last year.

The fact that the price of a similar package in the United States has been priced higher by the United States manufacturers than by the Canadian manufacturers is an indication, I suggest, that the Canadian motorcar manufacturers are proceeding in the direction the automotive agreement contemplated, which agreement they are endeavouring to carry out.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister satisfied that the manufacturers have complied with his request.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry and Defence Production if he intends to bring pressure to bear on General Motors so that the salaries paid to their workers at Ste. Thérèse be identical to those paid for similar work in their Ontario plants?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member will understand that it is not incumbent upon the Department of Industry to deal with such matters.

WATER RESOURCES

GRAND RIVER—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL AID IN CONTROL MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the minister received representations from the Grand River conservation authority asking for federal aid in the program of flood and pollution control involving the construction of major dams?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR HIGHER INITIAL PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance, who answers in parliament for the Canadian Wheat Board. On August 30 I asked the minister whether or not the government intended to authorize an increase in the initial price of wheat for the present crop year. At that time he replied that the matter was under consideration by the government. Is the minister now prepared to give a definite answer? How much consideration has been given to this matter? Can he tell us the amount by which the initial price may be increased or the date upon which an announcement may be expected?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No decision has yet been made to increase the initial price.

PENSIONS

REQUEST FOR INCREASES FOR RETIRED RAILWAY WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance concerning the pensions of retired railroad men, who are asking for a review of their case so that these pensions might be brought into conformity with the present cost of living. Has the minister received representations from these railroad men, and if so what was the answer to their submission?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I am not aware that I have received any representations of this kind, but I will have a search made.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF BASE LINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): My question was intended for the Secretary of State for External Affairs but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Fisheries. In 1964 parliament passed Bill No. S-17, an act respecting the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones of Canada. Would the Minister of Fisheries tell the house whether any progress has been made toward the protection of Canada's fisheries and Canadian fishermen through the establishment of proper base lines for territorial and fishing zones.

Mr. Speaker: I am wondering whether this question is not excessively broad in its implications—whether the hon. member is not asking now for a statement on policy. Perhaps the question might be placed on the order paper. It seems to me that this is a type of question which should be answered by ministers through statements on motions rather than at this time.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order with regard to that last observation, no statement of policy was requested. This is a question about legislation which was passed by this house but never enacted.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED TAX REDUCTION TO COMBAT INFLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Following several statements made by the minister and by several other members of the government concerning the fight against inflation, could the minister tell the house whether he has considered reducing the taxes paid by the Canadian taxpayers?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that this is again a very general question which should be put on the order paper.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR LIST OF OFFICES TO BE CLOSED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

I should like to know whether the minister could table in this house a list of unemployment insurance offices intended to be closed down as a result of the new policy of his department.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, unemployment insurance offices do not come under my department.

Mr. Speaker: This question should be placed on the order paper.

TRADE

POTASH—APPROVAL OF ARRANGEMENTS FOR SALES TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but since he has left the chamber I will refer it to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that when our Chinese customers wish to buy potash from a certain plant in Saskatchewan, no arrangements can be made in Canada; they have to be made through the plant headquarters in the United States?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question might be placed on the order paper. Certainly in the form in which it has been asked it is not acceptable now.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF MUSICAL RIDE AND EQUESTRIAN DUTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): My question is directed to the Solicitor General. I wish to ask him whether the government is giving consideration to removing from the R.C.M.P. establishment in Regina the training equipment, forces and personnel needed for the musical ride and other equestrian duties. If so, has a final decision been taken or is the minister giving sympathetic consideration to the many representations that these facilities should remain in Regina for historic and other substantial reasons?

Mr. Speaker: The question should be placed on the order paper. The question period has now expired.

Mr. More: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understand that this matter is receiving consideration and is under decision at this very moment. There is concern about this proposal and representations have been made with regard to it. I understand that the minister has an answer ready.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member feels this is an extremely urgent matter it might be considered at ten o'clock tomorrow.

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-222, respecting Banks and Banking.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when the resolution preceding this bill was introduced in July, the proposed changes as compared with the present Bank Act were, in my opinion, of such importance that I gave a somewhat fuller and more detailed explanation of the major features than is usually given at the resolution stage. Because of this I do not propose to speak at great length on this bill at the present time. I will of course be pleased to offer any further explanations hon. members may ask for.

As I mentioned in my speech to the house in July, the main proposals contained in this bill to revise the Bank Act are intended to increase the degree of competition and flexibility in our banking system so that it will best serve the changing requirements of the Canadian economy and the interests of all Canadians. This objective was the central theme of the report of the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, and I believe that the present bill is a very substantial step along the general lines of that commission's recommendations.

These main proposals can be briefly summarized as follows:

(1) A new formula, effective January 1, 1967, to fix the maximum rate of interest that banks may charge on loans in Canada and eventually to remove the ceiling altogether. The maximum rate for each six months period beginning January 1 and July 1 would be $1\frac{3}{4}$ per cent plus the average yield on short term government bonds (i.e. those maturing within three years) during the three months period ending one month before the effective dates. When the average yield on these bonds for any three month period after January 1, 1967, falls below 4½ per cent there will no longer be any statutory maximum rate of interest on bank loans in Canada.

(2) Agreements between banks on interest rates both on loans and deposits will be prohibited.

(3) Each bank will be required to disclose in its financial statements, details of revenues and expenses and the amount of its so-called inner reserves.

(4) The present cash reserve requirement of 8 per cent of total Canadian deposits will be gradually replaced by a cash requirement of 12 per cent against demand deposits and 4 per cent against term and notice deposits (including personal savings deposits). On present figures this formula would result in an over-all cash requirement of 6.6 per cent. The Bank of Canada will have stand-by power to impose a secondary reserve, initially of not more than 6 per cent, which may be increased monthly in steps to a maximum of 12 per cent and which the bank may reduce or remove at any time.

(5) Banks will be permitted to make mortgage loans (N.H.A. and conventional), and the maximum rate of interest provisions will not apply to such loans.

The amount of a conventional mortgage loan will be limited to 75 per cent of the value of the property. The total amount of conventional mortgage loans on residential property that a bank may have will be limited to 3 per cent of its deposit liabilities and debentures in the first year, and 1 additional per cent per annum thereafter, with a maximum of 10 per cent in total.

(6) The banks are to be given authority to issue debentures ranking in priority after their deposit liabilities. The amount of debentures that a bank may have outstanding will be limited by restricting the increase per annum to 10 per cent of paid-up capital and rest fund, and by an upper limit of one half of a bank's paid-up capital and rest fund.

(7) The shareholding that a bank may have in any other Canadian corporation is limited to 10 per cent of the voting shares of the other corporation, and no more than one fifth of the directors of any company may become directors of a bank.

(8) Two years after the statutory interest rate ceiling on bank loans has been removed, a director of a trust or loan company that accepts deposits from the public may not be appointed or elected a director of a bank.

(9) Except for any existing situations, and in the case of resident shareholders of a new bank if the government gives specific approval, ownership by any one shareholder and associates will be limited to 10 per cent of a bank's shares, and total ownership by non-residents will be limited to 25 per cent. Pension and similar funds of a province will be permitted to own up to 10 per cent of a bank's shares for all such funds of any province, on a non-voting basis. The size of a bank in which one shareholder has more than a 25 per cent interest will be limited by reference to the amount of its authorized capital and this, as the house knows, applies to the Mercantile Bank, and to another bank which I shall mention shortly.

In that connection I should mention that the special act of parliament incorporating the Bank of Western Canada included limitations similar to those proposed in the bill to revise the Bank Act. The Bank of Western Canada has asked the government for permission to have a group of associated Canadian shareholders hold more than 10 per cent of the bank's initial capital, and that permission has been given by the government. This action, of course, was provided for in the bank's act of incorporation. So long as one shareholder has more than a 25 per cent interest, the Bank of Western Canada will of course be limited as to the size of its operations by reference to the amount of its authorized capital, just as the Mercantile Bank is today.

As I announced in July, legislation to establish a system of deposit insurance for banks, and federally incorporated trust and loan companies, which would be made available to provincially incorporated institutions which accept deposits from the public and carry on business within the meaning of the Trust Companies Act or the Loan Companies Act, is being prepared.

The government will discuss the position of provincially incorporated institutions in relation to deposit insurance with the provincial governments. The intention of the government is to introduce this legislation into parliament as soon as possible in the present session. It would be premature to forecast details at this stage, but I can say that it is the intention that the government will provide the initial capital resources of the insurance corporation, with further resources to be provided by premiums payable by the member institutions. It is the intention to keep these premiums as low as is consistent with establishing an adequate reserve fund against possible losses.

When the resolution for the bill to revise the Bank Act was introduced in July there were some who expressed the view that the government should have defined the business of banking and forced so-called "near banks" either to accept such federal control or give up their banking activities.

My predecessor, the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), made clear last year that the determination of what constituted the field of banking within our jurisdiction was a matter for the courts, and it did not appear that the royal commission proposal for treating all institutions accepting deposits payable within a hundred days as banks fitted into the pattern of judicial decisions in this field. We do not think it necessary or desirable at this time to endeavour to force provincial institutions under this somewhat doubtful boundary of our jurisdiction. We think it more sensible to make it possible for the deposit institutions under federal law to be competitive and flexible in meeting the banking requirements of the Canadian people. We believe this will bring about a situation where those who wish to engage in the business of banking will find it to their advantage to come under federal legislation.

I make these comments because this point was urged quite strongly, particularly by members of the official opposition, and I have no doubt urged in good faith, and I am giving the reply in as precise terms as I can as to why we did not at this time proceed to follow the recommendation of the royal commission in this respect. But I would add one word—

Mr. Fulton: May I ask a question at this point? Could the minister give us an idea of the extent of the consideration given to the question of a definition of banking that would be acceptable in accordance with the B.N.A. Act? I know it is a difficult problem, but was it considered and rejected as being impractical, or what considerations were involved?

Mr. Sharp: Advice was sought from the government advisers, from the Department of Justice, and there was a good deal of doubt expressed as to what was or would be an acceptable definition of banking. I believe that it would be desirable, if possible, to establish more clearly the jurisdiction of parliament in this field. On the other hand I share with my predecessor in office the conviction that it would be rather imprudent on the part of the government to rest its legislation, namely this Bank Act, upon a definition that had to be tested in the courts.

We therefore felt it would make for greater progress in improving the rules for banking business generally, whether one includes the charter banks or "near banks," by establishing a deposit insurance institution.

Until the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) interrupted me I was going to go on to make one other point that was made by the royal commission, because I examined its report after listening to my hon. friends' comments when the resolution stage was under consideration. The royal commission said that there was no particular relationship between removing the interest rate, which they advocated, and the extension of the jurisdiction of parliament over the "near banks." Indeed, as I recall the words of the royal commission, they were to the effect that whatever else is done the interest rate ceiling should be removed.

There has been some criticism made to me by Canadians of the omission from the bill of any provision to permit the establishment of agencies in Canada for foreign banks, as recommended by the royal commission. We have omitted it on the ground that it would weaken in some degree the control exercised over credit conditions in Canada by the monetary authorities. Canada already has a very free and open capital and money market, and Canadians are quite prepared to conduct a large part of their business in other currencies.

On the other hand it has been represented to me that by permitting agencies we would be furthering still more our objective of more competition in lending in Canada, while it would not be necessary to permit the agencies to accept deposits from Canadians, just as the agencies of Canadian banks in, for example, New York, are not permitted to accept deposits from residents of that state. I hope that the committee will go into this subject thoroughly, and I can assure the house that the government will give most serious consideration to its recommendations.

In the weeks since this bill to revise the Bank Act was made public there has been an opportunity for comment and technical criticism, and for consultation. as a result there will be a number of technical points on which the government will propose amendments in committee. When the bill receives second reading I shall propose that it be referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs for detailed study.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I did not participate in the debate on resolution stage, because of the time element. The time element is now very critical since the bill must receive consideration by the house on second reading and then must go to a committee where representations will be heard, and time must be allowed to various witnesses, who undoubtedly will wish to appear, to prepare and file their briefs. Then, after consideration by the committee, the bill must come back into this house for clause by clause study in committee of the whole. It must then go to the other place for equal consideration. There is a deadline of November 30 for proclamation. Unless the government brings in a further bill extending the life not only of the Bank Act but also of the Quebec Savings Bank Act, then our banking operations in this country will cease. I am not very sanguine about any rapid progress. Therefore, I should like to see this bill go through the committee as soon as possible. This is the wish of the official opposition. We made our points at the time of the resolution and, after having seen the bill, I can assure the minister and the government that the views of the opposition have not changed one iota in respect of this bill.

This bill is probably one of the most momentous we have had to study. In so far as Canada and its economic life is concerned, it is even more important than any of the wide ranging proposals for social welfare that the government has considered in the past. It is much more important, in my mind, than the very complex and very important transportation legislation which is before this house at the present time. This bill, and the banking system which must follow upon the implementation of the bill, if passed by parliament, will affect the whole lifeblood of our country. It goes to the absolute root of our economic strength and one can cry or proclaim from the rooftops, or boast about our welfare measures and all sorts of legislation which we may have on our books, but if we have sapped the economic strength of our country, those social welfare measures of our country are not worth the paper they are written on. Therefore, of primary importance to this country is a strong effective banking system, and this is what we must aim for—a strong and effective banking system that not only sees to the protection of the depositors and the creditors of the banks, but which also is very flexible.

Some may say there is a paradox, there is a conflict of interest at some point; but surely as a result of the studies by the Porter royal commission and the experience of the banking system as a whole, we know at about what point we can reconcile the degrees of flexibility with the appropriate safeguards for the depositors and creditors of our banking institutions. The minister has repeated at the resolution stage, and my colleagues in July indicated a general agreement, that the central theme of the Porter commission report is to allow our financial institutions, especially the chartered banks, to have much broader investment powers and opportunities, coupled with correspondingly broader borrowing powers than existed in 1964. In a nutshell, Canada's banking system must be made more flexible, albeit at the same time maintaining the sound characteristics which have been the hallmark of Canadian banking in the past.

At the resolution stage the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) as well as my colleagues from Perth (Mr. Monteith), Northumberland (Mr. Hees), and Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) emphasized that the recommendations of the Porter commission dealing with this theme were not divisible; they were part of a package which was meant to be all-embracing to cover the bank and "near banks". It is a very poor thing to tinker with the status and powers of banks and leave untended, uncontrolled or unsupervised the activities of the "near banks" which have introduced, if I may use the term, many loose ends in the banking and monetary system of Canada today.

It is singular that we have not heard from the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Gordon), who was the godfather and sponsor of the government bill last year, to see what his views would be in respect of the Bank Act, in the light of the debacle of the Atlantic Acceptance Corporation and those companies which went down with it. At that time he held certain airy views, and I thought they were rather casual, with regard to some of the responsibilities under our banking system.

The present Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) uses the words "the events of the past year have caused us to revise our thinking". I should hope so; but unfortunately he has gone but an inch when he should have gone a mile. I and my colleagues have stated that we think this is a poor job of tinkering, because the "near banks" who have taken such a large share in the monetary operations in this country are frankly under little or no supervision. I had the opportunity recently to discuss this with a number of the supervisory officers of provincial authorities. Frankly, outside of filing annual returns of a very nominal nature and outside of certain superintendents of insurance adopting an absolute and firm attitude of no expansion into other provinces by provincially incorporated trust companies, there is no control.

It is my thought that there should have been some very positive effort. The deposit insurance scheme advanced by the minister under this act is a form of negative action. I do not see how it will achieve the result we want, which is the protection of the depositors and creditors of these trust companies. Those are the people who have to be protected. Any well-operated trust company would have nothing to fear in operating under the umbrella of the Bank Act. As a matter of fact the officers of a number of these companies have told me they would welcome such control, because it would establish their companies as being well operated and sound companies. I think the banks themselves would not object to it; they would all be on the same footing. I would think that the officers of any chartered bank would tell you they are prepared to compete with anybody, on equal terms.

This is what we must have, but we do not get it in this Bank Act. We know there are some operations which would have difficulty standing up to the light of day. In the last week I have seen in the windows of a trust company a new advertisement announcing 7¼ per cent deposit certificates.

There is an interest spread between 7¼ per cent and 6¼ per cent, because the standard interest rate on this type of investment on the part of provincial and trust companies is about 6½ per cent or 6¾ per cent, although some limit the rate to 6¼ per cent. I should like the Minister of Finance to tell this house what he thinks the rate on the return of investment in these trust companies must be in order to enable them to pay this 7¼ per cent. I quite frankly believe that, by comparison, Shylock must be deemed to have been a kindly old gentleman.

The minister suggests that we cannot place these companies under the general definition of banks, but I suggest that is a point that is arguable. In spite of that fact, we are asked to adopt the negative measure called deposit insurance under the name of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. I should like to know why legislation regarding this Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is not before us at this time, because the rules and regulations of that deposit insurance corporation are part and parcel of the supervision to which the minister referred in his statement at the resolution stage.

Let me use the minister's words. He said that this whole situation must be subject to effective inspection and adequate regulation in order to safeguard depositors, primarily. Let me add these words, there must also be some safeguard for shareholders and creditors. What are those safeguards? Will the superintendent of banking under the federal government have authority to go into the operations and investment portfolios of these trust companies? What is to be the effective inspection? Does this so-called deposit insurance feature of the Bank Act merely involve the payment of a fee? If that is the case, it is meaningless and will only result in an additional cost to banks under federal charter, as well trust companies, which are already subject to federal inspection and safeguard.

So far as the general public is concerned, why should we ask the banks and trust companies incorporated under federal charter to announce that they have deposit insurance? The reaction of such announcement on the part of the average depositor will be negligible. The average depositor will ask: So what is new? Under any deposit insurance scheme it is the depositor who is the consumer, not the bank or the corporation or the trust company, and he is the one who will have to pay the fraction of 1 per cent, perhaps, for the insurance. A great number of Canadians are depositors in chartered banks and trust companies, and they will have to foot this bill because they are being asked to assume an additional cost, presumably to protect those individuals who are taking their money out of chartered banks and putting it in provincially incorporated trust companies.

Another feature of this insurance is that these trust companies must apply for an insurance certificate after obtaining the consent of the government of the province in which they are incorporated. This raises the speculation that a provincial government might decide that it is going to institute its own deposit insurance scheme. In that event trust companies may prefer to carry their insurance with the federal deposit insurance scheme for the purposes of the liability, or as a selling point as far as the public is concerned. Surely this cannot add to the efficient function of deposit insurance if there is a provincial government veto.

Much can be said about the suggested interest formula.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member moves to another subject perhaps I could say that it is my intention to have the resolution preceding the Deposit Insurance Corporation bill before this house, so that it will be before us at the committee stage when we are dealing with the detailed recommendations in respect of the Bank Act.

Mr. Lambert: I thank the minister for that interjection and I trust that he has not been deemed to close this debate as a result. Perhaps a detailed discussion of this interest rate should take place in the committee, at which time we can obtain expert testimony from outsiders, and officials of the minister's department.

The government in pursuing this course has created an atmosphere which is, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said, pale, pallid and fearful. A very interesting debate took place in this regard at the resolution stage. The government has now disclosed its hand and has indicated that there will be a so-called omnibus formula by which we will be able to make sure there is no unnecessary limit placed on interest. As I have said, these details should be better discussed by the finance committee.

Earlier I indicated that we should get on with our consideration of the measure now before us in order that it can be considered by the committee. A number of people have indicated to me and to other members of this house a desire for the early implementation of this act, but they suggest that in order to relieve a degree of uncertainty the rules under which the banks will operate should be made clear.

There are many people who want to obtain money. There are provisions in this bill with regard to conventional mortgages on residential properties. There is a great shortage of money in this respect; there is tight money. Certainly the banks and related major trust companies may be able to alleviate this problem. But the point is that they must have the power; and until this bill is considered and implemented no action can be taken, either by prospective builders in planning what they are going to do or by the banks in entering into commitments. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would reiterate what has been indicated by the Leader of the Opposition and my colleagues the hon. member for Perth, the hon. member for Northumberland and the hon. member for Kamloops, that this bill is just tinkering with the central theme of the Porter commission report. It does only a partial job. It fails to do the job that is far more important than raising the interest ceiling: It fails to take control of the monetary system of this country. For these reasons I would oppose the bill.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, unlike the Official Opposition, I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party have changed some of our views and have modified some of the views we expressed at the resolution stage. I have no apologies to offer for stating this position. I would, on the other hand, feel that I had a great many apologies to offer if, after almost three months of very intensive study and wide ranging discussions with economists, we had not found it necessary to perhaps modify at least the emphasis that we place on certain aspects of government policy.

Partly as a result of the debate we had on inflation and partly due to the current consumer price hearings, we have found ourselves driven to consider the Bank Act and its revision in a much wider context than that in which we had formerly considered it. The inadequacy of banking legislation alone as an efficient instrument of monetary policy has become more and more clear, and the need to link it with other government policies and activities has become clearer still.

It is true enough, as the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) says, that this bill must go before the committee, where it will be examined in detail and witnesses will be cross-examined, and it must then come back to the committee of the whole of this house for clause by clause discussion. There are, however, a number of definite principles involved in the bill which I think merit discussion, indeed require discussion, on second reading. I would say they were the following: the control of interest rates, the question of reserves, the matter of the control of "near banks", the question of deposit insurance, and the question of who is to operate the clearinghouse facilities in the financial system of the country. To these I would add something else which I think is very closely related with banking policy on the part of the government, and that is what I would term their credit policies.

The more one studies the use of monetary policy, and in particular the use of interest rates, as a means of allocating resources in this country, the more he becomes convinced of its inadequacy, of its incapability to really make those sorts of allocations that most of us, I think, would wish to see. Of course, there is a very simple reason for this. There are many areas in our economy—and I have only to mention such things as housing, education, area development and those types of things—which are in the main largely unprofitable, or at least of very low and deferred profitability. As a consequence we feel that the Bank Act should be considered in the light of other government measures to be taken to offset the tendency of market forces to distort the allocation of resources, in contradiction of what would be desirable social objectives.

In dealing with the question of interest rates I think we must go far beyond the question of whether we are going to lift the 6 per cent ceiling, whether we are going to do it at once, in stages or by the particular formula that has been suggested by the minister. There are compelling arguments for the removal of the 6 per cent limit. There is no question about it, it has been a clumsy and unselective tool of control and one, moreover, that has been repeatedly evaded by the banks. To be fair to the banks, I think they have been driven to this evasion by recent developments in the financial community of Canada, the rise of the so-called "near banks." Nevertheless, it has meant in essence that the 6 per cent limit has been ineffective; that in essence, anyway, it has been incapable of doing the sort of job that requires to be done.

While, as I say, there are compelling reasons for its removal—and I have not found an economist who would dispute that statement—I have, on the other hand, found many economists who feel that in conjunction with the removal of the statutory limit the government should undertake a much wider responsibility in regard to interest rates than they have done hitherto. During the resolution stage I made somewhat the same suggestion. At that time I suggested there should be a regulatory body established to review interest rates, somewhat on the lines of other government regulatory bodies. But one result of the intensive discussions, thought and study we have had for nearly three months was that we came to the conclusion that the regulatory body idea was too clumsy and too slow of operation, and that the Bank of Canada is the logical and obvious vehicle by which this government policy can be implemented.

You may ask: Just what would be the mechanism by which the Bank of Canada would exercise these new responsibilities? There are various ways in which it could be done. One might perhaps follow the example of the United States which has quite recently, within the last week or so, established controls at the other end of the interest ladder. They have established controls over the amount of interest that lending institutions might pay to attract depositors, with the idea—and I imagine it may very well be a successful idea—of thus limiting the amount they would be capable of charging for the loans they make to customers. However, I have no doubt whatever that there are a number of mechanisms that could be devised whereby the central bank could exercise the function of controlling interest rates throughout the economy.

We take this position because there seems no doubt whatever that if we are simply going to remove the interest rate from the banks we are inviting a sort of jungle warfare of interest rates to the great detriment of the Canadian economy. It seems to me to be far too simple a solution to a very complex and difficult situation, because there has grown up alongside the chartered banks a whole bevy of new banking institutions—I think that is the correct way in which to describe them—which are outside government regulations. The government take the position that to solve this problem, or at least to promote the idea of equity of treatment, it will remove the controls over the chartered banks so they will be, on that score at any rate, on an even footing with the "near banks". This to us seems to be a counsel of irresponsibility and that, rather than do that, the government should remove the present statutory lending limits and make the banks and all other lending institutions in the country subject to central bank control in respect of interest rates.

I want to come back again, Mr. Speaker, to the necessity of the government at the same time taking some other steps to control the marked distortion of credit which has been such a prominent feature in recent months of the Canadian economy. We had a witness before the committee the other day who took the position that any rectification of wealth distribution or allocation of resources in this country should be effected, not by means of controlling selective controls, such as interest rates, but rather by more positive action on the part of the government, such as the use of agencies it now has. I suggest there should be perhaps one or more new agencies established for the funnelling of credit and funds into those areas which the government in its wisdom, and parliament in its wisdom, consider require special treatment. I have suggested some of them such as housing, education and area development.

I would add to that the possibility of establishing an agency to deal with some of the needs of provinces and municipalities, various local government bodies, in the provision of funds to them at interest rates that would be far below anything the market would provide, far below anything that would be reasonable for the Bank of Canada to establish as a general interest rate. These, I think, are equally important to the problem of controlling the interest rates of the chartered banks.

Now, with regard to the control of the "near banks", we feel it is essential that they should be brought under federal control. We feel that in conjunction with the federal control of interest rates, the minister's suggestion of deposit insurance is probably the best way of bringing them under federal control. I think we should not delude ourselves that because these institutions are not called banks, they are not actually banks. I take it that most people would agree that a suitable definition of a bank would be an institution which accepted deposits and which granted to its depositors chequing privileges.

In connection with this, I would suggest another means by which the "near banks" could be brought under federal control. I think the Porter commission recommended it in toto, but if not I would suggest that the operation of the clearinghouse should be removed from the control of the Bankers' Association and again placed in the hands of the central bank or an agency of the central bank. In that way, we can be sure that each financial institution which desires to offer chequing privileges, each financial institution that desires to receive the benefit of deposit insurance, will be obliged to submit itself to government inspection and to government regulation.

The hon. member for Edmonton West doubted the capacity of the inspector general of banks to undertake the sort of inspection the minister has suggested. I, myself, cannot see any particular difficulty involved in this. I do not have the idea that the inspector general of banks goes around inspectnig every bank himself. He has a staff. I presume it is not beyond the capacity of Canada or this government to increase that staff to the necessary size for the sort of inspection of which the minister spoke.

I would go further on this question of insurance, and this has always been a favourite thought of mine with regard to our economy. If the government is going to establish a corporation that would provide insurance on deposits in lending institutions, then I see no reason why its powers should be necessarily severely and for all time limited to that field of insurance. Here, it seems to me perhaps the government might find itself making the first, timid step toward the development of a government insurance system in this country. This might very well solve some of the problems we face with regard to the allocation of resources in our economy.

Now, with regard to reserves, I imagine few people would quarrel with the statement that so far as the original purpose of establishing bank reserves is concerned, which was presumably to protect depositors, that role for reserves is pretty well gone. No one, I think, seriously imagines that a chartered bank in Canada is going to collapse. It is many years now since one did collapse. The reason, of course, that they are safe from collapse is that they automatically come to the rescue of each other when it is necessary to do so. This is quite right, and should be done.

There is a role, however, for reserves, and that is in regard to the regulation of the total money supply. It has not been used, within my knowledge, to any great extent within recent memory, but it is always a weapon in the hands of the central banks if other methods of controlling total money supply should fail or falter. We feel the Bank of Canada should have much wider powers with regard to the control of reserves than is suggested in the minister's bill. It should be entirely at the discretion of the central bank to decide what reserves should be at any one particular point. If it is going to be used as an instrument of monetary policy, and that really is its only function now to help control money supply, then the central bank needs to be able to act much more quickly than is envisaged in the minister's bill.

I would agree with the minister on one thing. If we are retaining the reserves, then there should be complete public disclosure of their volume and nature. No longer should we allow these things to be hidden behind some veil of secrecy, in the so-called public interest. The public has a right to know how much the banks are making and what it is costing the people of Canada to maintain their very efficient banking system. These things should not be left in the midst of speculation.

Now, I want to return, Mr. Speaker, to the suggestions I made in connection with the elimination of the 6 per cent interest rate. I make this quite clear to the house. While the members of the New Democratic Party feel that in all intelligence and logic the removal of the 6 per cent blanket interest ceiling on the chartered banks should be removed, and there is no rational economic argument for retaining it, nevertheless we are not prepared to support that removal unless the government is prepared to take these ancillary actions; unless it is prepared to enter much more widely and much more effectively into the whole region of interest control than it has done in the past, to take responsibility for levels of interest in this country; unless it is at the same time prepared to make these changes in the fiscal and taxation structure that will require a greatly increased incursion of government into the field of funnelling credit into those areas of the economy which are now starved by market conditions.

We feel that such agencies as the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the Industrial Development Bank, the Farm Credit Corporation, to name but a few of them, must be strengthened financially and their scope very greatly enlarged. We realize, of course, that to do this effectively the government must get into its hands sufficient funds in order to carry out such a program. This, in turn will require very careful scrutiny of our taxation structure, such as has been made by the Carter commission. We hope that commission's report will be available to us before too long. Unless the government is prepared to take these other steps for the control of interest rates, this party does not feel it can support the mere blanket removal of the ceiling of 6 per cent on bank loans.

I would hope that at some time or other before the conclusion of this debate, and prior to our voting on the matter, the minister might indicate whether the government was prepared to undertake this control of interest rates throughout the economy. Otherwise, I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that we shall have to take steps to make perfectly clear our opposition to the mere removal of the 6 per cent rate, and then let the jungle warfare start. Because that, of course, is what is going to happen. No one can convince me, and I am sure nobody would be able to convince any of the economists to whom I have spoken, that the removal of the 6 per cent ceiling, without some compensating action on the part of the government, will have any effect whatever except that of letting loose a battle of interest rates that may well be disastrous for our economy.

I would hope that when the bill comes before the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs we might get an answer to many of the questions that I and others have raised; that we might have a rather clearer idea of just how the central bank intends to operate; that we might have witnesses from the chartered banks whom we can question on some of the aspects of their operations.

I have always felt, Mr. Speaker, that the revision of the Bank Act provides an opportunity once every ten years to give a quick educational seminar course to members of the House of Commons, which is much required. In fact, I think there might be some ground for suggesting that for this purpose we should have one every year. Anything that will expand our knowledge of this extremely complex and intricate subject is to be desired.

Mr. Knowles: It is almost 13 years this time.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) says, it is almost 13 years this time. The banks will be getting used to running with worn-out charters, if we do not look out.

I think that is all I have to say at the present time, Mr. Speaker, except to reiterate our conviction in this party that the Bank Act must not be considered in isolation; that if we do so, then we may very well go down some blind alleys. More and more in the modern world we are finding that each of the economic factors in our society is linked to all the others, and that the banking system in particular is linked to each one of them. We cannot move in the banking area without affecting every other area of the economy.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that the government is not suffering from any delusion that by altering the Bank Act it will control the economy in the interest of the Canadian people in any effective way. It must at the same time take these additional steps in order to enable the financial institutions of Canada to serve the purposes of an expanding policy, to serve the purposes of a juster and wiser allocation of resources, and to serve also as a measure of redistribution of the wealth of this country. Because these must be the goals to which all of our economic policies are devoted—the curing of maldistribution of wealth and the curing of the misallocation of resources.

The banking system and the related financial institutions of this country, which we now hope will be brought within one integrated whole, are one of the means by which we can achieve these two objectives of eliminating the maldistribution of wealth—or at least ameliorating it—and eliminating the gross misallocation of resources, which today to my mind has given rise to the false idea that the Canadian people have reached the limit of their capacities in the production of wealth, goods and services for their own satisfaction.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to and read over the statement given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). I have also listened to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), and just before rising to take the floor on this subject I listened to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron), who today I found very interesting. He specifically stipulated at the beginning of his remarks that during the past three or four months he had reconsidered and reappraised the situation and had modified some of the former positions he had taken, something I am very glad to hear. He was the major speaker on this bill when it was brought before the house for first reading.

I am sorry to say that the hon. member for Edmonton West is still on the old bandwagon. It has very faded colours now and has lost some of its tires, and in a few years time it will probably still be working with the same broken spokes. The reason we never arrive at any solutions to some of the problems facing us today is that we have never dared do anything new in this field. Progress has been made and the Canadian people have been developing the country, but in the financial field this progress in science, and these developments have preserved their status quo. This, Mr. Speaker, can only be a handicap and prevent our economic advancement in the over-all picture.

I told the minister, Mr. Speaker, when I took part in the debate on inflation, and also when the bill came before the house for first reading, that I would take the opportunity to speak only briefly on second reading, but that in the committee stage I, and also some of my colleagues and other members, intended to discuss thoroughly each clause of the bill, and all the connotations. I can say today that a great many questions will be asked in cross-examination.

When we were discussing inflation and the rise in the cost of living, about which the house is very worried, I distinctly remember saying to the Minister of Finance that if we were to take measures to halt the rising cost of living we would have to apply them across the board, not only at the production and salary levels but also at the interest level.

May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

AIR TRANSPORT

SUGGESTION TO REFUSE LICENSING OF INSURANCE VENDING MACHINES

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the advisability of amending the government airport concession operations regulations to provide, by virtue of its power to regulate the performance of any service for persons on the airport, that no licence be granted by Her Majesty in Right of Canada for the operation of insurance vending machines.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this resolution, in short, calls on the Government of Canada to give consideration to amending the airport concession operations regulations to prohibit in air terminals, all of which are run by the Government of Canada through the Department of Transport, what we see in every air terminal, namely air flight insurance vending machines.

This resolution is introduced by myself on behalf of the air line pilots, engineers, cabin attendants, and stewardesses who must board their aircraft knowing that the danger of bombing and sabotage exists. This danger, Mr. Speaker, is very real. There have been, in the last 20 years, at least 15 cases of sabotage involving some 230 lives. Most of the cases on this continent have involved flight insurance.

As one Canadian pilot said in a recent article on this subject:

> It galls me that here is one factor that could take my life and the lives of the people sitting behind me . . .
> The link between flight insurance and plane sabotage has been well documented. It's the only kind of insurance where you can buy it and commit suicide an hour later in the hope of securing a payoff. There's no justification for its being sold at airports. If a man thinks his life is worth $100,000, he should insure it for that amount 365 days a year. This Russian roulette kind of insurance is simply an invitation to aircraft bombings.

That pilot has good reason to complain. He knows that when he leaves on one of his flights everything has been done to make the trip safe for himself, his crew and his passengers. But when he walks through the air terminal building he can see a flight insurance counter, and the vending machines where one can buy up to $300,000 in air trip insurance, with no questions asked. He knows anyone ready to blow up a plane could make a tempting profit from those machines.

The Air Line Pilots Association in the United States established a committee on air line sabotage and reported the following:

> Incidents of this nature have ranged from crude attempts on the part of crazed individuals to highly sophisticated programs, well planned and well executed. Motivation has run the gamut from no apparent motivation at all through the range of sexual gratification, desire for notoriety, murder, and financial gain.

Also:

> Financial gain has figured consistently and prominently in aircraft sabotage; insurance has been by far the most prevalent, if not the only common denominator, and the predominent insurance vehicle used has been airport vended insurance.

Following normal or standard practice in accident prevention, it would seem logical, to me, that we should try to eliminate those things which investigations show have caused or contributed to the cause of these accidents. There is no reason why this principle should not be applied to reducing aeroplane sabotage. Since a large number of sabotage cases are connected with airport vending machine insurance, and with airport insurance counters, it would then seem logical that they should be removed, as they are believed to be the principal causative factor in aeroplane sabotage.

There are numerous examples of sabotage for financial gain. I do not want to bore the house with enumerating all the cases, but no doubt hon. members will recall the case on September 9, 1949, of John Albert Guay, a 31-year-old Quebec city jeweller, who put his wife, along with a time bomb, on board a DC-3. Because the aircraft left a few minutes early we know what happened. If the flight had left on time the crash would have occurred over the Gulf of St. Lawrence, no one would have discovered the cause of the disaster, and Guay would have collected the $10,000 flight insurance he had bought for his wife. Instead the aircraft crashed over dry land and Guay and his two accomplices were hanged.

There is the case of John Graham who was hanged for killing his mother, along with 43 others, on board a DC-6B at Longmont, Colorado, on November 1, 1965. He had put a Christmas package made up of 20 sticks of dynamite in her suitcase before he saw her aboard the aircraft. His motive for murder was probably the $75,000 share of his mother's estate, but his motive for aircraft sabotage was the $35,700 flight insurance which he had bought his mother just before she boarded the aircraft—a nice Christmas present.

A unique case, as far as air line sabotage is concerned—because all the passengers on board lived to tell about it—occurred on July 25, 1957. On that date S. F. Bintock, a 62 year old retired Hollywood jeweller boarded a Western Airlines Convair bound for Los Angeles from Las Vegas. He carried with him dynamite and blasting caps, as his plan was to destroy himself along with the other passengers on board. A few hours earlier he had bought two $62,500 flight insurance policies payable to his wife. Fifteen minutes after takeoff Bintock got up and went to the washroom. A passenger was just about to report his prolonged absence when a violent blast shook the aircraft. Crew members rushing to the washroom found a seven-foot hole blasted in its outer wall. Fortunately the pilot was able to land the aircraft without difficulty. Bintock's body minus the left hand was later discovered on the ground.

What kind of man would kill scores of innocent people, just to increase his estate? Dr. Harley Wideman, a Toronto psychologist, feels that he is one who, although driven to kill himself, is still anxious to provide for his family and to spare them the embarrassment of suicide. In achieving this end he does not care if others must die with him. To quote Dr. Wideman:

> It's quite possible for a man to be very indifferent to the fate of those around him and at the same time be concerned with the welfare of his family who are extensions of himself.

Let me give you another illustration. On the night of May 7, 1964, 44 people died when a passenger shot the pilot and the co-pilot of a Pacific Airlines aircraft. The passenger was later found to be a Frank Gonzales who had recently lost heavily on the gambling tables at Reno. Before boarding the aircraft he bought the pistol along with $105,000 in flight insurance payable to his wife.

George Armstrong, Canadian General Manager of Continental Insurance put the problem of air, or of flight insurance, this way:

> Eliminating flight insurance won't eliminate the problem of sabotage. I'm not going to say it won't reduce it, but what reduction would you get when there have only been 15 sabotage cases in 20 years? We live in a dangerous world. Certain risks have to be taken for the benefit of the masses.

It is not, of course, the insurance companies that are really taking the risks. It is the people flying on the aeroplanes. And, while we might live in a dangerous world, I see no reason why we should not do something to decrease any danger, as much as we can.

There is a story about a Mr. Jones who flew everywhere and who developed a certain anxiety neurosis about suicide and insurance plot bombs. He asked a statistician friend what his odds were of being killed in an aircraft bombing. "About 850,000 to one, against", was the reply. "Not good enough," moaned the neurotic. "I fly three or four times a week." "Well," said the statistician, checking his slide rule, "take a bomb along with you and you will be all right". "Are you absolutely mad?", cried Jones. "Certainly not," replied the statistician, "your odds against flying in an aircraft with two bombs aboard are something over a billion to one."

Surely, that is the theory put forward by Mr. Armstrong and by the insurance companies. There is no reason why we should put temptation to commit murder and suicide before the public. It would be simple to remove the counters and vending machines from our airports. The Department of Transport, which operates the airports, need only cease to rent the space to the insurance companies. In 1965 two companies issued premiums to the value of $1,100,000. They pay the Department of Transport 13 per cent of their gross, whereas United States airports take as much as 60 per cent. These rentals amounted in Canada to $158,000 in 1965. That does not even cover the cost of one crash investigation, according to the civil aviation director of the Department of Transport.

I am not against travel insurance itself. I have no objection to a man, anxious about travelling, obtaining travel insurance through his regular insurance agent. The agent either knows him or can have an investigation made concerning him.

The potential saboteur knows that if he buys a policy beyond his means, or if death occurs soon after he has taken one out, questions will be raised. It is true that other insurance policies allow a would-be murderer, or someone bent on self-destruction to fake a car accident or something similar; but only flight insurance is tailored to mass murder.

Airport trip insurance, because of its nature, offers temptation to unstable people. It has been described as an invitation to maniacs, because of the incentive it affords. There are several reasons for its inherent danger. It is easily accessible to anyone, regardless of his mental or emotional condition; its acquisition requires only a handful of loose change, making it an attractive gamble; it can be purchased on the spur of the moment; it can be purchased in virtual anonymity; it lacks the screening safeguards normally associated with the sale of other types of insurance.

The problems associated with the sale of insurance at airports do not arise with regard to other forms of travel insurance. A bomb placed aboard a train or ship is not likely to kill everyone on board, as a bomb which explodes in a plane is likely to do. The fact that policies are uncollectable if it is the purchaser who is responsible for death is not a deterrent. Anyone who plans to destroy a plane does so in the hope that his crime will go undetected, because of the very nature of air travel. That is, the murderer must rely on a complete destruction of the aircraft along with the death of everyone on board to prevent his crime being discovered.

A former United States federal aviation agency administrator has called flight insurance a "gyp". The odds against being killed in an air crash in Canada are 276,000 to one. Flight insurance pays off at 30,000 to one, or only a tenth of the true odds.

Accidental death and double indemnity policies, which are more normal, pay off at about half the true odds. True they are more expensive—$35 a year for $30,000 coverage—but they are payable for any accidental death, the chances of which are one in 1,755 per year, compared to one in 276,000 for a plane trip.

Economics professor Dr. Robert Easnir of Northwestern University claims that the purchaser of air accident insurance has tended on the average to pay four to five dollars in premiums for every one dollar paid out. Flight insurance therefore has a loss ratio, that is, a percentage of premiums paid out in benefits, amounting to only 25 per cent compared with the average in the industry of 70 per cent.

Of the 403 people killed in Canada in the last 20 years, only 40 held flight insurance. Twenty two people were needlessly killed in the Guay case alone. In other words, 22 died so that the estates of 40 others might be fattened by flight insurance.

It has been proven that air travel is the safest way to travel. The danger to passengers is greater on a train, in a bus or in the family car. But insurance is not sold at railway or bus terminals or at wayside gas stations. Why, then, should insurance be sold at airports? There is no reason for it. Flight insurance is unnecessary and merely pampers the fear some people have about flying.

The danger of flight insurance has been examined on many occasions. In 1962 a United States committee of aviation officials, air line representatives and insurance executives noted that in five accident cases which they studied the desire to profit from flight insurance was the predominant motive. Many of the air line staff associations have passed resolutions on the subject, including the International Federation of Air Line Pilots Association meeting in March, 1965 in the United States. Bills have been introduced in the United States Senate having the same purpose as the resolution which I have brought before the house this afternoon.

The whole subject is being studied by the Canadian Bar Association's air law sub-committee; it is being studied by the Canadian Coroners Association, which is equally concerned about the connection between trip insurance and sabotage. I suggest that the parliament of Canada should also be concerned. I hope this resolution will be passed today, so that there can be consideration in Canada of the vital safety issue involved in the machine vending of flight insurance.

Mr. Clancy: May I ask a question? Did the hon. member say that railway companies do not offer trip insurance?

Mr. Basford: I believe they do, but the display of insurance counters and vending machines in railway stations is certainly not as obvious as it is in air terminals.

Mr. Clancy: It is available.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): My main point in rising today is to congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard on having brought this important matter to the attention of the house and therefore, we hope, to that of the country. I think his observations are most timely, and they may become even more timely as these tragic accidents continue to occur.

To me, the present "punch board" method of selling flight insurance at airports is something which calls for a hard second look. Apart altogether from the method of selling this insurance, I think we might well consider the type of insurance which is marketed. It is now possible for a person to purchase a large amount of insurance on the life of a person who is not even related to him. I think it would be a safety factor if there were a provison that persons outside the immediate family of the purchaser could not be insured.

I suggest, also, that instead of the fantastic sums of money for which purchasers can insure other people's lives, a reasonable amount should be made available to the survivors—the family—together with something by way of a monthly income to replace the lost breadwinner's earnings.

This whole subject is one of very real public interest, and rather than see the notice of motion talked out I shall conclude by urging hon. members to refer the matter to a committee, such as the committee on justice and legal affairs, where a study in depth can be made of it.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the mover of this notice of motion for bringing to public attention a matter which certainly should be of concern to parliament, and which is of real concern to pilots and others who work on our air lines. Too often matters such as this are buried by being talked out, but I hope this will not meet that fate but will be referred to a committee where the subject can be fully explored.

Suggested Removal of Flight Insurance

As is often the case, this motion proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford) in itself does not adequately cover the problem. The purpose of notices of motions is to bring matters to public attention and encourage discussion of them. That is what I hope this notice of motion will do.

Much of what the hon. member said applies to air trip insurance. Although I understand that there may be a certain extra attraction offered by slot machine insurance to a deranged mind, I believe consideration of the problem should include air trip insurance generally.

Although the hon. member referred to studies being conducted elsewhere, and to bills which have been introduced in the United States Congress, I believe remarkably little consideration has been given to the problem. The Canadian Bar Association discussed it at some length at its annual meeting in 1965, but reached no conclusions. I understand the consensus was that a full study should be made by the association's air law provincial subcommittees, but so far as I am aware no report has been produced leading to any specific recommendation from the association.

The bills which have been presented in the United States Congress seem to be pretty much in a deep freeze. I understand three identical bills have been introduced in the House of Representatives. I believe they would void all contracts of insurance covering loss of life or personal injury which purport to limit coverage to a specific trip. One bill would reduce the amount of flight insurance which passengers could purchase at airports, and limit the liability of insurance vendors to a maximum of $50,000 for the death of each passenger. However, none of these bills is likely to be discussed in detail in the near future. All have been referred to the house committee on commerce, but no hearings have been scheduled on any of them.

One reason may be that the federal aviation agency of the United States government conducted a detailed study of air line sabotage about a year ago, and reached the conclusion that air line saboteurs are beyond the reach of any reasonable approach and the removal of airport insurance vending machines would not achieve the purpose intended. It also concluded that the profit motive is universally recognized as one of the causative factors in sabotage, as it is in homicide generally. Air trip insurance has been a factor in some of the air line sabotage cases which have occurred in the United States.

Another conclusion was that normal insurance coverage should not be suspended during air line flights. This would be unreasonable because insurance is a definite benefit to survivors of air crash victims, whose interests would not be served by a flat exclusion rule.

A third conclusion was that air trip insurance should not be eliminated, nor should the sale of insurance at airports be limited. The agency noted that sabotage usually required prior planning, and the sale of insurance at airports would not be a major factor in such prior planning. It concluded that there was no evidence that past sabotage would not have occurred but for insurance, or that future sabotage would be eliminated or diminished by the abolition or curtailment of insurance. It reasoned that the insurance benefits outweighed the speculation that sabotage might be curtailed or lessened by restrictions on, or the abolition of, insurance.

It also decided that the amount of trip insurance available to each individual should not be limited, and that the ready availability of other types of insurance made the value of such limitation highly speculative.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the latest advice given to the United States government is that the suspension of air trip insurance is not to be recommended. However, I do not think we should rely on that. I believe the Canadian parliament should receive the advice of responsible authorities in this country, including the advice of the coroners, of the Canadian Bar Association, and of all groups who have indicated a concern with this matter. The most appropriate way of getting this advice would be through the standing committee on justice and legal affairs.

I hope the subject matter of this notice of motion will be referred to that committee. I also hope that committee will go into the matter thoroughly, dealing not only with the question of the sale of insurance through vending machines at airports, but with all air trip insurance and its effect on air line sabotage. I support the intent of the motion to stimulate the most far-reaching discussion and consideration of the problem and I hope it will receive that kind of study in committee.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with other hon. members in congratulating the hon.

member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford) on introducing this notice of motion. Like other hon. members I hope it sparks a certain amount of public discussion of a serious problem, but I for one remain to be convinced that it is as serious a problem as has been suggested by some speakers to day. I think it would be a great injustice to a great many people who travel by air if this type of insurance were removed from easy access.

Members of parliament, for example, do a great deal of travelling, particularly those on the west coast, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford), no doubt is aware, and if we were not able to buy this type of insurance it would then be necessary for us to go to an agent to obtain it. The rates of these agents would be very high, simply because the insurance rates would be based upon the number of miles flown and on the number of trips we take in areas where the incidence of accident is high. I think it would be an imposition if this method of buying insurance were removed from the airports. By this method people who make occasional trips and who feel queasy, who are not familiar with flying, who are not convinced it is the best way, but find themselves in the position of having to fly, are in a position to protect their families in case of accident.

The accident rate for air lines is very low. I am told that flying is the safest way to travel. We are entering into a new era of subsonic and supersonic transportation. We hear that the jumbo jets will be with us in 1971, and we understand that supersonic jet travel will be available shortly thereafter. So, these new methods of flying, combined with the phenomenal increase in air line passenger and freight traffic create a certain difficulty with respect to our airports, overcrowding of the skys and overcrowding of terminal facilities. Even though the air lines so far have maintained an excellent record of safety, I think we also have to be aware that with the projected increases and the overcrowding that is taking place in the skies today, the incidence of legitimate accidents quite possibly will rise and that this ability to buy insurance over the counter at airports is convenient and is something the removal of which I think we should consider very carefully. Whether or not this opportunity for benefit should be removed because of fears, legitimate or otherwise, of the possibility of someone killing his wife with a bomb in an airplane, I am not prepared to say at this time; I have not made up my mind.

But there are arguments on the other side. Certainly the danger of this sort of thing happening in the supersonic pressurized aircraft we have today is of a different order than when we were flying in the DC-4's and 6's which were not pressurized. A small bullethole in a pressurized cabin at 45,000 feet has a strong possibility of being fatal, but the same accident in the old aircraft was not quite as dangerous. The hon. member who introduced this gave us the example of the fellow who blew out the wall in the washroom. He stated that in a DC-8 or 9 there would have been a fatality; the whole plane would have cracked up simply because of the type of aircraft construction being used.

The other point to which I would offer a certain amount of objection is that of motive. I do not think all crimes are committed as a result of a greed for money. There are other motives. You may want to get rid of your wife or she may want to get rid of you, and this would be an opportunity. You might want to get rid of somebody else on the aircraft. Money is not the only motive. I think human nature is much more complex than is suggested by those who put forth the example of the economic man.

The second point is that in the description given by the hon. member these are the people who do these things. I think his argument fails when one recognizes the fact that their motive is not necessarily money. My feeling is that money is only incidental. Like most people who take a flight and feel queasy, who find the sky not as quiet as they would have like it, and who, before they step into the aircraft, invest a half a dollar in insurance, the person who plants a bomb in the aircraft also walks up and puts 50 cents in the machine. But I do not think that is the main motive.

As I said before, the air lines have a very good record of safety and efficiency. In the annual report of Air Canada for 1965 percentage statistics are given. I should like to read some of these into the record, because they indicate in one sector the improvement in service as well as the great number of passengers carried. In the last year, 1965, Air Canada carried 4,753,395 passengers on scheduled and charter services. This is an increase of 13 per cent in 1965 over 1964. As a matter of fact the actual increase in the number of passengers carried exceeded Air Canada's expectations rather substantially. They were caught in many cases and are being caught today at peak periods, as I am sure hon. members who have tried to get out of Ottawa have found.

The Air Canada report goes on to suggest the situation was general throughout the industry and that all major air carriers faced this problem. Total seat miles for Air Canada were 5,458 million, an increase of 18 per cent, while revenue passenger miles flown exceeded 3,542 million, an increase of 21 per cent. The interesting statistic is that the passenger load rose from 63 per cent in 1964 to 65 per cent in 1965. Then, a few pages later appears a rather interesting statement:

> The air line completed 98 per cent of its scheduled mileage, maintaining its world-wide reputation for operating reliability. The credit is shared by the aircraft and the highly qualified employees who maintained, serviced and operated them.

I gather that the 2 per cent difference between perfection and the actual showing was due to cancellations because of bad weather and not because of accidents or sabotage.

The argument in the motion as put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard is that the type of person who indulges in this sabotage has a monetary motive. I think the reaction of the committees which have looked into this situation has been that money is not the prime motive and that the removal of these things would not provide a deterrent to potential saboteurs.

The second point, obviously, is that this is not the only source of insurance. It seems to me that if anybody is going to blow up an aircraft with dynamite or some other explosive, there is a good deal of planning which has to go into it; it is not something which is done on the spur of the moment. This requires a certain amount of initiative, planning and foresight, and perhaps a certain amount of nerve. We probably are not aware of the number of times that such an act of sabotage has been planned, and abandoned at the last moment because of a lack of courage.

By removing these machines from airports I do not think it will logically follow that such attempts will cease; but I feel that if we do that, other types of air transportation insurance should also be banned, whether the aircraft is transporting passengers or goods. Such a step I believe would be unreasonable, because by banning the issuing of insurance for transportation you cannot prevent such acts from taking place.

Mr. Schreyer: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Reid: Certainly.

Mr. Schreyer: Would the hon. gentleman differentiate between airport counter flight insurance sales and insurance dispensed by machine? Does he not agree that there is a great difference? After all, what is really being expressed by this bill is a request that we consider the desirability of banning insurance vending machines for the reasons suggested.

Mr. Reid: I do not think there is an appreciable difference between going to a counter where there is a young lady, often very pretty, selling insurance, and buying insurance from a vending machine. I can obtain the same insurance from a girl at a counter as I can obtain from a machine. It is actually what is being sold and the circumstances of the sale to which I object. There is a warm, human and personal touch when one buys insurance at a counter as opposed to the impersonal efficiency of the machine. My point is that if you ban the sale of air transport insurance by a girl at a counter or by a machine at an airport, then you should go to the logical extreme of banning entirely this type of insurance in order that people will not resort to the type of sabotage under discussion.

It is my opinion that a great deal of planning and ingenuity must take place before anyone plans the destruction of an aircraft in order to obtain insurance, and that denying travellers the right to purchase insurance against accidents will not change the mind of an individual who intends to cause one.

I am in full agreement with the thought which has been expressed, that this subject should be referred to a committee of this house for deeper consideration and study. Most of the arguments that were presented in this regard were one-sidedly in favour of this suggestion, and I am trying to present the other side, so to speak.

It is my hope that it will be possible for the Minister of Justice (Mr. Cardin) or the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell) to consider seriously the subject matter of this bill, particularly with regard to possible amendments, before it is sent to a committee, so that the subject can quite properly be investigated by the experts.

One of our problems in the House of Commons in discussing certain matters, keeping in mind our duties as members, is that we never have time to research these matters to the depth they deserve. A great many Canadians are travelling more and more by air, and for this reason this subject needs a great deal of investigation.

In recent days we observed the adoption by the United States authorities of greater safety features in automobiles. I believe this is long overdue, and that it will result in a substantial improvement in our automobiles in the next few years. The same situation in the matter of safety features does not exist in respect of the manufacture of aircraft. I cannot think of any aircraft accident in recent years due to a mechanical failure, and this is a very happy and satisfactory situation.

My belief is that a committee set up by the government or a government department should make an investigation into this whole matter relating to the growing risks of air travel. The proposed narrowing of air lanes from 120 miles to 90 miles recently received publicity. This has been referred to by experts, and particularly by pilots who fly these aircraft, as something that should be investigated. I am not sure that any government department is looking into this situation with any thoroughness. The supersonic age will be upon us in full force within the next six years and I am wondering whether or not a government department in Canada should look into this matter of urgency.

In conclusion I should like to make a plea to the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General, or the authority under whose jurisdiction this subject should fall, to give serious consideration to sending this whole matter to an appropriate committee in order that we can make a complete investigation.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): First of all I should like to congratulate the sponsor of this resolution for the obvious interest and study that he has given to this problem that faces the travelling public at this time. I refer to the purchase of insurance at airports as opposed to the purchase of insurance on a slot machine basis.

There is great merit in the suggestion contained in this resolution. I am not personally acquainted with all the ramifications of this subject, but I feel it would be a good idea to send it to an appropriate committee for consideration. Surely there are arguments for an against this motion, but it envisages something which should be considered further.

I heard many individuals discuss this whole question before the bill was placed on the order paper, many of whom had purchased transportation insurance on the slot machine basis. The hon. member who spoke before me suggested, in respect of other methods of selling transportation insurance, that there was no investigation made as to the character or reputation of the purchaser. It may be that as a result of a thorough study of this subject some method of investigation could be devised whereby a person seeking insurance could be checked as to character and reputation.

I know an M.P. who quite recently went overseas. All he was required to do to purchase insurance on this basis was sign a form. I am sure the vendors of this type of insurance would consider a member of parliament to be a reasonably responsible person, although on occasion I have doubts about that. But surely there should be some kind of investigation, regardless of who is applying for insurance.

I congratulate the sponsor of this resolution for bringing its subject matter to the attention of the house, and I trust it will be considered by an appropriate committee. The result of such a study might be a recommendation to the house requiring the sale of this type of insurance to be made under circumstances which could prevent the occurrence of those things mentioned in the motion.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is another of those resolutions that could not possibly be adequately discussed, with all its ramifications, in the one hour allotted by the rules of the House of Commons. It is an extremely important resolution and should be given further study by members of the house.

As a traveller who has flown many, many, thousands of miles on our air lines since the end of the last war, I find myself deeply concerned about the problem of sabotage on aircraft. I have never, on entering an airplane, had any real concern about the ability of the man in charge, the pilot, at the front end of the aircraft. As a matter of fact, I think it would be safe to say that I have flown many thousands of miles in the mountains of British Columbia when the pilot has found it safer, if you can conceive of this prospect, to stay down, even with a two-engined or four-engined plane in the mountain regions—that is to say, down in the river gorges—rather than up through a cloud bank and over the peaks of the mountains, because of the difficulty of returning to that height and the scheduled air route.

The pilot is the man in charge, and I have had no concern when this has happened because I have known that quite often he was a younger man than I and perhaps had more to live for than I had. But it now becomes a matter of great concern to the air line pilots themselves. When the Canadian Pacific Airlines plane went down in northern British Columbia—and I would say here, Mr. Speaker, that Canadian Pacific Airlines have an excellent record in flying the mountain regions and have not had any serious accident as a result of pilot error—investigations showed that there was some evidence of explosives having been placed on the plane. Immediately upon the report of that investigation the air line pilots issued a statement suggesting that there should be a law in Canada, and of course elsewhere, to provide that trip insurance should not be sold at airports. I do not recall that they singled out vending machines. I believe the concern of the air line pilot is the fact that trip insurance is available; that is, that anyone may determine to purchase insurance that gives an extreme rate of return for a very small investment. This is their chief concern.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I feel that this resolution really does not go far enough. It may be regrettable that some of the pretty girls referred to by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) would no longer be employed at our airports. But I am sure that with their ability and recognized good looks they would have no difficulty in obtaining employment with the car rental companies, and so on. We should have no real concern in this respect. The air line pilots are really concerned about this problem and I believe the public should become concerned about it. I think that people who are not adequately insured should not attempt to drive on the Queensway in Ottawa this afternoon between four o'clock and six o'clock. I feel that one needs to pay a higher rate of insurance on that pilgrimage than he does when travelling on the air lines of Canada today.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, if I could obtain the unanimous consent of the house I would move, seconded by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport:

That the subject matter of the proposed resolution—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. Has the minister the unanimous consent of the house to move this motion?

Mr. Starr: We have not heard all the motion, Mr. Speaker. I think we should hear the motion and then concur in it or otherwise.

Mr. Pennell: The motion, Mr. Speaker, would be:

That the subject matter of the proposed resolution now being considered by the house be referred to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs for consideration thereof.

Mr. Starr: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pennell: If I have the unanimous consent of the house, Mr. Speaker, I would so move, seconded by the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Knowles: He has already spoken. Should not somebody else second the motion? I will.

Mr. Pennell: Then the motion is seconded by the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Does the minister have the unanimous consent of the house to move the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pennell: I so move, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): The hour provided for the consideration of private members business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting house leader whether there are any changes in the program to be dealt with tomorrow, or are we to go on with the Bank Act? If we are, and that item of business is completed, what will we undertake next?

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat embarrassed and surprised by the hon. member's question. It was my understanding earlier this afternoon that the government house leader would be conferring with the other house leaders with regard to arranging the business for the next two or three days. I have no further information.

Mr. Starr: That was my understanding, but I was wondering whether in the meantime the government had changed its mind.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONSUMER CREDIT

Second report of special joint committee on consumer credit—Mr. Basford.

(Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.)

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT OLD AGE PENSION NOT REDUCE ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Veterans Affairs I would ask the Prime Minister—and this is at the request of old soldiers all across the country—whether the government intends at the present session to introduce an amendment to the War Veterans' Allowance Act so that war veterans achieving the age of 70, or 69, and becoming in receipt of the old age pension, will not have the amount of their allowance reduced.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister concerned, who is laid up with the 'flu, may I tell my right hon. friend that I will be glad to take up this matter with the minister. As the right hon. gentleman probably knows, there are amendments to be introduced in this session to the war veterans legislation. As this is a matter largely for the minister, perhaps this should be dealt with after I have had a chance to talk to him.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): May I ask a question supplementary to that asked by the Leader of the Official Opposition, and direct it to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister also inform the house whether it is the intention to introduce some amendments to the pension act this session?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take this question under advisement, too.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEMBERS OF JAPANESE GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to call the attention of the house to the presence in the gallery of a very distinguished delegation of members of the Japanese government, headed by the foreign minister of Japan, who have done us the honour of visiting us in Ottawa at this time, in the continuation of discussions which are periodically held by the representatives of both governments, and which have been going on for some years. I am sure that all members of the house will share my satisfaction at the visit of the Japanese foreign minister and his colleagues, to this country.

• (2:40 p.m.)

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

TABLING OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON DEVELOPMENT OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Might I have the consent of the house to return to motions? When you called motions, Mr. Speaker, I was engaged in a lively conversation with one of my colleagues.

I should like the privilege of tabling copies in French and English of a summary of the report of the advisory committee on the development of government in the Northwest Territories, and a copy in English only of the complete report.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of tabling these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Laing: It is my intention to speak very briefly on this matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Leave that until tomorrow. The agreement was just for leave to table the documents.

Mr. Laing: That is fine.

Mr. Speaker: The minister can make a statement now, in the ordinary way, on motions. I understand we have reverted to motions. Of course after the minister has made his statement hon. members may comment on it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Agreement was unanimous that there should be reversion for the purpose of tabling a report. Now that the report has been tabled possibly the minister will wait until tomorrow. We would then be able to study the report and follow him intelligently in the argument he advances.

Mr. Laing: In the light of the comment made by the right hon. gentleman I think I am entitled to say a few words.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED REFERENCE OF AUTOMOBILE PRICES TO CONSUMER CREDIT COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Yesterday the government objected to a debate on motor car prices on the ground that this matter was before the committee on consumer credit. Since my information now is that the steering committee of that body does not intend to call representatives of the automobile manufacturing companies, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he would consider introducing a motion into the house to refer to the committee on consumer credit this question of the increased prices of 1967 car models?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to look into that possibility.

WINTER WORKS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the hon. Minister of Labour.

Does the government anticipate any change in its policy regarding the 1966-67 winter works program as compared with the projects implemented last year?

[Mr. Speaker.]

[English]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman may not have been in the house, but I think that the fact that the $500 winter house building incentive bonus will not be payable this year was announced before the adjournment some months ago. With regard to other winter works programs I suggest the hon. member refer his questions to my colleague who has responsibility for them. These are not the responsibility of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Might I then direct my question to the minister answerable for the winter works program, since responsibility for it has been placed elsewhere.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I think it was announced publicly—I do not know whether it was in this house or not—that during the coming year the same program will be implemented that was implemented last year.

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO PERSONNEL OF INQUIRY COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Can the right hon. gentleman tell us when he will be able to announce the proposed special commission to inquire into security in Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I certainly hope to be able to announce the membership of this committee shortly, but I am afraid I cannot go beyond this at the moment.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REVERSAL OF ALLEGED TIGHT MONEY POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the announcement by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics appearing in this morning's paper to the effect that the index of industrial production has fallen for the third month in a row, would the minister and the government give consideration to reversing their tight money policy and allow production to expand rather than forcing it to contract?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have seen no evidence whatever to suggest that the gross national product is declining.

Mr. Hees: As a supplementary question, would the minister be good enough to read the Canadian Press dispatch appearing in this morning's paper, outlining exactly what I have said?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Finance. Now that the minister has been made aware of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures showing that the index of industrial production has fallen for three successive months, does he not believe that he should reverse his tight money policy to allow industry to expand rather than force it to contract?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think this question can be asked at this time. The hon. member may want me to refer to a number of precedents on the point.

Mr. Hees: I will raise this question again at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH FRENCH FOREIGN MINISTER AND SÉNÉGAL PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I should like to know if the hon. minister has met with Mr. Couve de Murville, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, with regard to the establishment or the creation of a French Commonwealth of sorts and, if so, is the hon. minister in a position to inform the house concerning the talks he has had?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is true that I have met with the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, but there was no mention of this question.

Mr. Grafftey: Did Mr. Couve de Murville tell the hon. minister that he has had similar talks with Quebec officials?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, we discussed the suggestion made by the President of Sénégal with regard to the French speaking peoples:

That is not the question the hon. member just asked me.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question concerning precisely the conversations which the Secretary of State for External Affairs may have had with President Senghor of Sénégal.

Would the minister tell us whether Mr. Senghor's suggestion has received favourable consideration by the government and whether Canada intends to act on Mr. President Senghor's proposal?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, we were delighted to have in Canada so distinguished a man as president Senghor. I may say that I assured him we agree in principle with the suggestion he made a few months ago.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): With a view to implementing the proposals concerning a French speaking establishment, did the Secretary of State for External Affairs discuss the matter with the Quebec premier in order to seek his views?

Mr. Martin (Essex-East): I have not yet had this privilege.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION TO FARM LABOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in reference to unemployment insurance for farm labour. Since the minister informed the house before the summer recess that he would bring in legislation to provide such insurance for farm labourers, may I ask when will he be ready to introduce that legislation?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to inform the hon. member and other members of this house that, on the strength of the legal advice which we have received, it will not be necessary to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to bring about the desired end to which the hon. member has just referred; it is the intention of the government to extend unemployment insurance to agricultural and horticultural workers effective on or about April 1 next year. We are now working on the necessary regulations and I hope to make them public at a very early date.

Mr. Knowles: You should have hired those lawyers ten years ago.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Another triumph for the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp).

TRADE

WHEAT—REPORTED DIFFICULTIES IN FINANCING SALES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his capacity as de facto spokesman for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the difficulty of getting credit for those countries which are presently buying wheat from us under long term agreements, what action has the minister taken to ensure that for the next sales under these long term agreements these countries can get credit in Canada?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not the de facto spokesman for the Canadian Wheat Board. The Canadian Wheat Board is under the Minister of Finance, and I presume he is in a position to answer the question.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been in constant touch with the Canadian Wheat Board and with exporters on this very difficult subject. My understanding is that the sales for early delivery have now all been financed, albeit with some difficulty.

I am very much aware that there has been difficulty in this regard. As Minister of Finance I have felt that I should not give any greater preference in the demand for credit in Canada to people in eastern Europe than I should give to Canadians themselves.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

Therefore I felt I could not intervene to give discriminatory treatment in favour of those people as against Canadians many of whom require money for financing their enterprises in Canada. However, I do hope it will be possible in the future to avoid as much difficulty as there has been in these recent transactions.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. First of all I apologize to the Minister of Finance for directing my question in the way I did. I only went on the news reports this last summer, and I thought the Minister of Trade and Commerce would now speak for the Canadian Wheat Board.

My supplementary question is this. Have the facilities of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation, which still has an odd $100 million available to pay for insurance, been examined to see whether it would be possible to amend the regulations in such a way as to make sure that those countries which want to buy supplies of wheat at this moment or in the next few months can have access to this available credit of the Export Credits Insurance Corporation?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, a very thorough examination had been made of all these facilities. As the hon. member knows, in our arrangements with the countries with which we have wheat contracts the undertaking of the federal government is to guarantee the repayment of the loans, not to provide the money. The Export Credits Insurance Corporation has facilities for extending loans for long term capital purposes, not for purposes of financing short term credits such as these wheat sales.

If it had been possible to use those facilities we would have given sympathetic consideration to it. In our judgment it would not have been suitable for this purpose. As I say, I am not at all unconscious of these difficulties, and the last thing I would want to see would be any prevention of sales to these countries pursuant to these contracts because of the non-availability of credit. This has not prevented the sale of wheat, and I do not think it will.

RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION OF SEAFARERS INTERNATIONAL UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. I should like to ask the minister whether he has anything to report to this house about the progress of the discussions between his government and presumably the government of Quebec in respect of the interim considerations which were given to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police investigation into certain activities of the Seafarers International Union.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the findings of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police a report was made to appropriate officials in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. I understand the final decision has been made by the province of Quebec, but I do not think their position has been communicated officially to the government. Regarding the position taken by the appropriate Ontario officials, that is still pending.

I have just now been informed by the Minister of Labour that an official report has been made to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question may I ask the Minister of Labour about that report.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, an interim report or a report on certain aspects of the matter has been submitted to the Minister of Justice and I have had an opportunity to discuss it with some of his officials, but there is one phase of the report which is still to come.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Justice would give some consideration to this question in order that we may then know what he thinks about this matter.

Mr. Pennell: My purpose in taking part was to help the hon. member, but perhaps I should not have attempted to give an answer in view of the fact that I was thinking of another investigation being carried out. The duties relating to the office of the Solicitor General have been completed and, therefore, reports would go to another minister.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORT OF INQUIRY INTO GRIEVANCES OF EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether Mr. Justice Montpetit has completed his report in regard to complaints of the postal workers.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question, I have been told that Mr. Justice Montpetit will present this report on October 13. That is the projected date, but it will be presented no later than October 18.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO BRIEF FROM NAVAL ORGANIZATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Defence. Did he receive a brief this morning from 45,000 Canadians of the Navy League of Canada, the Naval Officers Association and the Royal Canadian Naval Association?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, although it may have been received and as yet not brought to my attention.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member should complete his question. I do not think it is sufficient just to ask a minister whether a brief has been received.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask in a supplementary fashion whether the minister would give consideration to the reference of this brief to the standing committee on national defence upon its receipt.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to say what will be done with a brief that has not yet been received.

An hon. Member: Everybody else has a copy of it.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): It is on your desk and it is on everybody's desk.

Mr. Forrestall: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Upon receipt of this brief will the Minister of National Defence give immediate consideration to the suggestion?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question has now become hypothetical.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Everyone has received a copy of this brief except perhaps the minister, and in view of the disagreement with the policy of unification—I am not speaking about integration—will the Prime Minister make it possible to convene the committee immediately in order that evidence may be heard and parliament made aware of the facts? Such a procedure would be more acceptable than mere ex parte statements by the minister.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the sooner the legislation can be introduced and referred to the committee the sooner the committee will be able to meet and obtain all the facts, including the fact that there is an amount of agreement in the country regarding the policy referred to.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Having regard to saving money, how much has the national defence budget increased since this policy was adopted?

Mr. Pearson: I am sure that is something the committee will want to know.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should say so.

BRIDGES

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

In order to comply with the request made by the Quebec Trucking Association and hundreds of thousands of Canadians, does the minister intend to abolish tolls temporarily on Champlain bridge until the repair work is completed on Jacques Cartier bridge?

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the minister has the power to do what the hon. gentleman has suggested. The proposal that something of this kind be done by the government or the appropriate agency is under consideration.

LOUISBURG, N.S.—LAY-OFF OF WORKERS AT HISTORIC SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on behalf of the workers at the Louisburg project, the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, in whose constituency this project is located. Will the minister take the necessary steps to ensure that the pending or actual lay-offs at this project will not take place or continue, so this project may continue at its present rate?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): At the very start, Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the hon. member that I have had representations from my colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare on this matter. I would think the lay-offs will probably be replaced, and I am hopeful that they will be replaced out of a winter works program as they were last year.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister make the necessary representations to the Minister of Finance, because our colleague from Inverness-Richmond may have difficulty reaching that minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO PUBLICATION OF TAXATION COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In his budget speech on March 29 this year the minister told the house, as reported at page 3375 of Hansard, that the government expected to receive and publish within two months the report of the royal commission on taxation. In view of the fact that over six months has now elapsed since the minister made that statement, will he now inform the house when this report will be made public?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I regret to say that I do not have control over the operations of royal commissions, and certainly not over this one.

We had hoped, and that had been my expectation at the time, that the royal commission would present its report in two months. The latest information I have is quite pessimistic, and I would hesitate to give a date even now.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Finance whether further chapters of this report have been made available to officials of his department in addition to those that were made available some seven or eight months ago?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak of this with certainty because I have entered into a self denying ordinance as far as the minister is concerned. I understand from my deputy minister that officials of my department who are trying to keep closely in touch with this matter have undoubtedly seen further draft chapters. But this, I must say, is only hearsay.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister inquire, or has he ascertained, from officials of his department whether sections of that report have been made available to groups of business people and others in Toronto, who are discussing the report fairly publicly?

Mr. Sharp: I would deny quite emphatically that any parts of this report have been seen by anyone outside of officials of the Department of Finance. I was quite frank in the house in saying why we had made this arrangement. But if there is any speculation of this kind, it is based upon guesses as to what is in the report and not on the content itself.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASE IN SUBSIDY TO PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture whom I would like to congratulate for his splendid contribution to the victory in Nicolet-Yamaska.

The question which I should like to put to the minister is as follows—

An hon. Member: Just by the way—

Mr. Choquette: It deals with a press release of the Department of Agriculture in connection with an agreement entered into by the provincial ministers of agriculture of Quebec and Ontario and himself. Can the minister give some explanation about that agreement? Does it provide for an increase in the cost of manufacturing milk and the assurance of a renewal of existing subsidies?

This is a very important matter, Mr. Speaker, because the press release issued is unfortunately not explicit enough to enlighten people on this.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not very easy to determine whether the question is so urgent that it requires an immediate answer. If the hon. member believes it to be particularly urgent—and he is nodding at me—in that case, I would suggest that he raise it tonight at ten o'clock.

[English]

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): In a similar vein, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he would assure the house that the milk producers in the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec will, as a result of his announcement, be assured of $4 a hundred for manufactured milk, f.o.b. the farm.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce may not have heard what I said a moment ago in another language. I wonder whether he would join the hon. member for Lotbinière at ten o'clock this evening.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: There is no supplementary question. The question has not been accepted.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

COST OF SALARY INCREASES FOR EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked a question of the Prime Minister in reference to the 24 per cent or 22½ per cent increase in wages granted Canadian Broadcasting Corporation employees. The Prime Minister said:

> The government felt, since it was responsible for the C.B.C., that it would be unwise from the government point of view to go beyond these figures—

In view of that answer, what active steps did the government take in reference to the increase in pay, and will this matter be brought before parliament?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it was an increase recommended by the chairman of a conciliation board and the totals did not go beyond the recommendation. My hon. friend will have a chance to discuss this and other matters concerning the C.B.C. before long, I hope, in this house.

EXTENSION OF TELEVISION SERVICE IN NORTHERN MANITOBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. I wonder whether the Secretary of State has anything to report on the progress which may have been made with regard to the provision of C.B.C. network television for northern Manitoba.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, while the house was in recess I had a meeting with the premier of Manitoba and the president of the corporation. I am happy to say that it appears that good progress is being made.

SHIPPING

BALA, ONT.—OBSTRUCTION OF NAVIGATION BY BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It is based on a Privy Council order permitting Canadian National Railways to construct a permanent bridge which will effectively block major navigation. The matter is urgent because the crew arrived yesterday to commence construction. My question is, what decision has the government reached concerning the provision of access to Bala wharf on lake Muskoka as a result of this bridge construction?

Mr. Speaker: I was wondering whether this is actually a matter of national urgency. I suggest that the hon. member might want to take up this question directly with the minister.

Mr. Aiken: I would like to take it up with the minister at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

BAY OF FUNDY—EXTENSION OF HERRING SEASON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the objections raised to the recent extension of the closed season for herring seiners in the bay of Fundy, is the Minister of Fisheries now prepared to state the date on which this discriminatory regulation will be lifted?

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): First, Mr. Speaker, I would not agree that it is a discriminatory regulation, because the regulation was amended earlier this year. The closing date for seiners operating in a certain section of the bay of Fundy was advanced from November 15 to September 30, subject to review by the minister at that time. After an extensive review of this situation it was found possible to extend the season by 10 days in order to allow the seiners and their operators in the area to get their fair share of the herring catch.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In this connection has the minister received a request for a meeting about this matter; has he acquiesced in that request and, if so, when and where will the meeting be held?

Mr. Robichaud: No such request has been received in recent months or even recent weeks.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Is the minister aware that a wire went yesterday to the Prime Minister and himself saying that this group of seiners have been trying for three years to meet with the minister on this problem?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware that such a telegram went to the Prime Minister. A meeting was requested last year, and I offered to have the seiners meet with senior officials of my department. This meeting took place and the regulations were amended accordingly.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Will the minister meet these fishermen personally?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Minister of Fisheries whether he has any statement to make about straight base lines.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat what I said in the house in August. Discussions regarding the establishing of coordinates, or straight base lines, have been very active in recent weeks. We expect to have another meeting with United States officials within the next two weeks, and following that meeting I hope we will be in a position to take positive action.

Mr. Howard: We hope so, too.

HOUSING

REPORTED SUBSTANTIAL DECREASE IN NUMBER OF STARTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in connection with housing and ask him whether, in the light of the very sharp decline of almost 60 per cent in housing starts in Canada in the first seven months of this year as compared to the same period last year, the government is considering implementing any new policies to increase housing starts to meet the need for housing in this country.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): I think that on an earlier occasion in this house I stated that it was expected there would be a substantial decrease in housing starts this year. One reason was that there had been an abnormally large number of starts during the last quarter of last year.

This question is timely, Mr. Speaker, because in answering it I can refer to the fact that in certain cities where housing construction has fallen off there still seems to be an adequate supply of houses. I will give you one example. At the end of August, 1965—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The answer the minister is giving now is very interesting, but it seems to me that this is not the time to give such an answer. Neither is it perhaps the time to ask such a question.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the decline in housing starts can the minister give the house an indication whether any priority will be given to passage of the legislation under his name which appears in Votes and Proceedings of today?

Mr. Nicholson: I am very happy to give that assurance. I hope it will be up for discussion within the next few days.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY SCALE OF NAVAL LIEUTENANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): I have exceeded the record by 12, which is more than the score that Moe Drabowsky, who played baseball in Nova Scotia, inflicted on the Los Angeles Dodgers yesterday.

My question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister look into the anomaly whereby naval lieutenants, who formerly received more in pay and allowances than chief petty officers now receive less under the new pay scale of the armed forces?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. McCleave: I shall bring it up again at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MINISTER'S VISIT TO HALIFAX

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister tell us, in view of the timidity he has displayed in calling the defence committee together, when he will give the house a report on the abject failure of his mission when he met with personnel of the navy at Halifax during the recess of the house?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): It was a very interesting and worth while trip, Mr. Speaker. The people of Halifax were most cordial, and I enjoyed it very much.

Mr. Churchill: I was talking about the naval personnel, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBLE CLOSING OF NAVAL BASE AT CORNWALLIS, N.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence regardless of whether it relates to his Halifax visit. In view of the quite proper concern in this matter has a decision been made to close the naval base at Cornwallis, and if so, on what date and where will a statement be made?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): The answer is that no decision has been made, as was indicated earlier. The base consolidation program will be studied during the next year or so and when decisions are made, plans will be announced.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF MUSICAL RIDE AND EQUESTRIAN DUTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. I wish to ask him whether the government is considering the removal from the R.C.M.P. establishment in Regina of training equipment, forces and personnel needed for the musical ride and other equestrian duties. If so, has the final decision been made, and is the minister giving sympathetic consideration to the numerous representations which have been made requesting that these facilities remain in Regina for historic and other substantial reasons?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will allow me to say that this question has a familiar ring to it. My understanding was that it was to be put on the order of business for the adjournment debate this evening, although if the hon. member suggests that the question is different, it will be allowed. However, it seems to me that this question was refused yesterday and the hon. member agreed to give notice and discuss it later today.

TRADE

TEXTILES—EFFECTS OF IMPORTS FROM JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Finance and Receiver General.

Following a press release issued by the Department of Finance some 15 days ago predicting an increase in the imports of Japanese textiles into Canada next year, would the hon. minister give this house the assurance that the Canadian textile industry, and particularly the 12 Sherbrooke industries, will not be affected?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that the discussions we have been having with the Japanese have been of a character designed to protect the Canadian textile industry against disruption, as they have in the past. I think the success of this policy has been demonstrated by the continued healthy activity of that industry.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

RAPESEED—POSSIBLE SALE TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that a delegation from Japan is presently visiting Ottawa, will the minister bring to their attention the fact that this year we have a huge crop of rapeseed for sale and they can have almost any amount they might like?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): You may be sure the subject has been mentioned, Mr. Speaker.

WOMEN

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF STATUS BY ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether my question should be addressed to the Prime Minister or to the Secretary of State. Has the government received a request from the committee for the equality of women in Canada to appoint a royal commission to inquire into the status of women in Canada today? If so, what action is the government taking? Two answers will not be out of order, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have received that request and also a good deal of persuasive pressure on this matter from the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh). It is under serious consideration.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. D. McLelland (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to Hon. Mr. Greene, Minister of Agriculture. Now that the South Saskatchewan river dam is rapidly approaching completion, will the minister inform this house and the nation whether the government is considering appropriately naming it the "John G. Diefenbaker Dam"?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt in my mind that this would be a most notable name for many memorials in this country, but there are also other names which are equally meritorious and which are also being given consideration. The announcement will be made in due course.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Secretary of State. Did the premier of British Columbia communicate with the Secretary of State, as I understand is customary, before he accepted a foreign order?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I did not know that the premier of British Columbia took orders from anybody.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO EFFECTIVE DATE OF INCREASED PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister with regard to the proposed legislation to increase old age security payments. May I ask him if he would inform the house the date upon which such payments will become effective, regardless of when the legislation is introduced?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that will be made clear in the legislation, and I certainly hope the legislation will be introduced shortly. There are one or two important measures that have priority over it, but after that I look forward to its introduction.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister whether in the preparation of this legislation any consideration is being given to the fact that some of the provinces pay a supplementary bonus to old age pensioners. If this is considered income under the income test, then people in those provinces will get no benefit at all from the legislation.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this is a relevant point. It is certainly being kept in mind in the consideration we are giving to the legislation.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, may I put a further supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Will the sum of money that is currently in the federal old age security fund be used in the payment of any increase as a result of this legislation?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that I would be out of order if I tried to give details of this legislation at this stage.

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

The house resumed, from Wednesday, October 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for the second reading of Bill No. C-222, respecting banks and banking.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock yesterday I was addressing the house and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) with reference to the anti-inflation drive that the government is now undertaking to fight a situation which exists not only in Canada but is world wide, with Canada caught in the midst of it.

I am not going to repeat what I said in the special debate on inflation, but this bill has a very significant meaning today vis-à-vis the present economic situation in Canada. In fact, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) yesterday stated that following the debate on inflation and the turn of events in the sphere of economics and inflation in this country, some of his outlooks with regard to the Bank Act revision had been somewhat modified as a result of his experiences and observations.

I was saying yesterday that according to the statement of the minister yesterday and his previous statements, wherein he had asked Canadian producers, particularly manufacturers and retailers, and the Canadian people as a whole to keep down prices and to tighten their belts for a little while, if we are able to keep wage demands under control we will be able to fight inflation. I should like to add one suggestion here. If the minister is going to tighten the belts of the wage earners as well as the belts of Canadian manufacturers and producers, he might as well get ready to start tightening the belts of some of our Canadian financiers also. You cannot hold both ends down, allow the middle to go up and thereby level out the economy. If production costs, wages and the cost of living are to be held down, you also have to hold down interest rates, the cost of which is necessarily reflected in the selling price of any product in this country as well as in the cost of producing goods.

This is where I do not follow the reasoning of the minister. He applies tight money policies across the country, in particular restricts loans to industries, and then says that we have to cut down on the boom or we will go bust. On the other hand, he asks Canadians for greater production and tells them we do not produce enough. You just cannot make both arguments. No matter which way you look at his reasoning you cannot follow it. The minister thinks, hopes and suggests, but he does not give any clear definition of the situation or seem to know exactly where he is going.

I am reminded of a brochure which I had before me in my office this morning entitled: "A Fantastic Debt Wonderland". In the brochure there is a sentence which was used by Abraham Lincoln in 1858, and it reminds me of the position in which the Minister of Finance is today. The sentence reads:

> If we could first know where we are and whither we are tending, we could better judge what to do, and how to do it.

That is about the best description one could find for the minister today.

I find it difficult to follow the reasoning of the statement he made some time ago in the special debate on inflation when I read his statement of yesterday. If we are to cut down on the cost of living, we will have to cut down on the cost of interest. I say that because when industry borrows money from a bank the selling price of the goods produced will reflect the cost of the interest incurred in borrowing the money to keep the industry rolling. That is a certain fact. This interest cost will also be found in the price finally paid by the consumer. After all, the Canadian consumer pays in the end for everything.

The minister has stated that in some respects the banks will have no ceiling on interest rates. This will leave the door open to speculators, and I think there is enough speculation in the financial field already. When we consider the activities of institutions which we call "near banks" and some of the finance companies, there is ample scope for speculation there without providing further opportunities.

In the statement of the minister yesterday the second proposal which he made, as reported at page 8354 of Hansard, was in these terms:

> Agreements between banks on interest rates both on loans and deposits will be prohibited.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, how does the minister expect to prevent this occurring? I often walk into public transportation vehicles such as buses and trains and see a big sign above the door saying: "Prohibited to spit on the floor". Yet if you look, Mr. Speaker, you will find spit. It may be against the law but no one has been able to stop it. If there is going to be the same kind of prohibition in respect of the banks, we might just as well not put it in the law.

[Mr. Langlois (Mégantic).]

The ceiling on interest rates is now 6 per cent; yet the parliamentary secretary to the minister clearly stated in this house that the banks have found legal ways of getting around this. Why should there be legal ways of contravening the law when the law itself means justice? Perhaps the minister can give some explanation of this, Mr. Speaker.

I told the Chair yesterday that I was not going to speak long on this subject because this matter is going before a committee and I imagine that at that time the minister will have many questions to answer from different members of that committee; at least I hope so. I also hope that he will answer these questions to the satisfaction of all. There are a lot of question marks so far as this bill is concerned, and before it goes through many answers will have to be given.

If the bill keeps its present form, the only people who may be helped in the long run are the big financiers, no one else. The minister realizes that there are a few modifications which can be made.

Modifications might be made not only in the Bank Act but also in the work of the committee. One of the things to be looked into, as we are talking about the chartered banks, is the fact that the banks are operating with worn-out charters. I do not know of any other body that could continue its operation when its charter had expired. Three years passed by before the introduction of this bill, and I imagine it will be another six months before we complete our study of it. I am willing to concede that under the circumstances in the house the matter could not be dealt with more quickly, but the effect of such a delay on the banks or allied financial institutions ought to be a matter for consideration.

We ought not to have to wait ten years between revisions of the act, or between cross-examinations of members of the financial community, to find out what is wrong. The banking community may also have its grievances, but it is part of the financial machinery of the economy. We have the productive and the distributive sides of our economy, which are governed to some extent by the financial machinery. We ought not to wait ten years between reviews of the structure.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands said that this debate might widen the horizons and the outlook of hon. members. If that is the result, then debates such as this should be repeated more often. The members of the banking fraternity, that is, those who come from the chartered banks, the trust companies or from other financial institutions, ought to be available more often for cross-examination. We should not wait from 10 to 13 years before submitting them to such cross-examination and bringing in legislation such as this. This bill has approximately 126 pages and over 140 clauses. We are given this amount of material to discuss, swallow, digest and accept. It has taken 13 years to bring these matters before the house and if we do not do something about it it will take another 13 years before we look into them again.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we should bring representatives of the chartered banks and the trust companies and other members of the financial community of this country before the standing committee having to do with finance more often in order to cross-examine them. In that way we might be able to prevent these recessions and concessions. I also say "concessions" because if we look at what is going on across the border we see that we are giving quite a bit away to that country. The Minister of Finance will know what I am talking about.

That is one principle which should be established now while we are reviewing Bill C-122 so that the House of Commons may keep close control over what is going on in the financial field and so that this matter will not be left entirely to the Minister of Finance or to some of the big string-pullers. That would be an advance and something we could be proud of.

We worry about productivity. The only man who speaks in the house about financial matters is the minister. We have no way of reviewing anything that the financial community says. If the banks at the end of the year issue statements, how can we verify whether or not those statements are correct? We do not see the persons who prepare these reports; in fact, we do not see anybody. Am I to question you, sir? Am I to question the Minister of Finance? As it is, I would probably get more answers in this respect from you than from the Minister of Finance. It is not that the minister does not know but he will not talk.

The minister is not on the boards of directors of the trust companies or banks. He has to accept their statements. The minister says the law is there, but how is he to know if they are obeying the law or if they are speculating too much. I say that it is the committee's job to find out these things. That is why representatives of these institutions should be brought before the committee to be cross-examined. It might help some members of the house because it would maintain their interest in the financial field.

This bill, sir, does not allow very much latitude to the productive or manufacturing part of the economy. In fact, it does not mean too much to the Canadian people. It is said that there will not be an interest ceiling. Is one to question each bank in order to find out the maximum it will charge? Is one to go from bank to bank asking what each bank will charge? There is already too much speculation under the present law, even at the 6 per cent level. If the minister would listen for a minute, also the member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin), it might help.

I wish to talk about the victims of bankruptcies. It is found that such and such a manufacturer in such and such a district has had a line of credit running between $150,000 to $250,000 for the past ten years. That credit is used to its maximum in the months of February or March, which are the low points for sales during the year. The manufacturer will reimburse the bank in June or July when construction gets under way across the country.

Then he is told by the bank to make good his overdraft. He has to repay it in three days. How is one to do that when there was no notice? Possibly there was a gentleman's agreement between the banker and the head of the enterprise concerned. As it was, there was no alternative but to sell some goods. The manufacturer did not sell them in the province of Quebec. They were sold in New Brunswick at between half and a quarter of their proper price so as not to disturb the market immediately adjacent to the industry concerned. But there is one very peculiar fact. A quarter of a mile from the concern in question there was another company in the same line of business, the president of which was a director of one of the chartered banks. That concern did not have its credit cut off.

This is something which I believe the Minister of Finance should look into. There is a conflict of interest and in too many cases it is decided in favour of those who are inside the financial field, not outside it. This is more than a coincidence. The bank director was the president of a company, and that same bank was furnishing credit to the other company. On a day's notice credit to the other company was cut off. The man concerned was forced into bankruptcy but the other man is still operating. No wonder he did not want to sell the merchandise in his own immediate area; it was sold in New Brunswick. If we cannot follow up such things as this in the standing committee on finance we might as well approve any bill which comes before us and leave the field wide open to financial speculation. These people know when the moment is ripe; they can sense it.

One thing is missing from this bill. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands mentioned it yesterday. It is a fact that we still have not recognized that there is a need to distinguish between the production side of our economy and the consuming side.

Consumer credit should not bear interest charges. As to the production side, yes, because the cost should be included in what the consumer pays. If we were to begin financing municipalities, school boards and similar bodies from public sources at very low interest rates we would be helping those bodies and we would at the same time be helping ourselves by cutting down every year the interest payable on the public debt. We are paying this year more than $1 billion as interest on this debt. To whom are we paying this vast sum? I should like the minister to tell us. To whom do we owe this interest? He may say that we owe it to the financiers. Who are the financiers? We do not see them much but we certainly hear a lot about them. They are the people who are far too often driving from behind.

Fifty, 60 or 100 years ago the various levels of government did not have the same responsibility toward the economy as they do today. Today the national economy embraces far more than it did 100 years ago. The time has come to consider dividing the economy into two parts, consumer credit on one hand and productivity, or the production side, on the other.

There is one instrument which would regulate both sides. It is not production. It is the means of distribution. It involves the representation of Canadian production in terms of dollars and cents. Until we change our method of financing we shall continue to face the problems which have so often plagued us in the past and which will not be solved in any significant way by putting patches on the trouble spots.

I think the minister should seriously consider this aspect of our affairs. I do not go as far as to say that ours is a dual economy but the economy can be divided into two sectors, one which produces and one which consumes. Everything that is produced in this country has to be consumed by somebody or there would be no point in producing it, and if the consumer does not have the necessary purchasing power he is unable to pay for goods and goods will not be produced.

I am bound to laugh at the minister when he suggests we cannot produce enough. Let the people have the means of purchasing what they need. Let the producers have the means to produce and give them the markets they require. Let this be done and, believe me, production will double in a year's time or a little longer.

It is not only Canada we must think of. In the last great war 30 million people were killed in six years. Today hunger kills 31 million people a year, more than in the six years of the last world war. What are we doing about it? I suggest we are sitting back and saying to ourselves: this is the normal course of events. Yet we regard war as something to be dreaded, and when we consider the possibility of war in the future everybody shakes. How can the government ignore the fact that 31 million people died of hunger last year alone?

Of the $1,500 billion earned across this globe, 85 per cent is earned in North America and Europe. The share of all the other countries is 15 per cent. Two thirds of the world is going to bed tonight hungry. These are facts which the minister seems to forget. There is a consumer demand which is not being satisfied. World distribution is not being carried out properly.

We can produce the goods. We saw this during the last world crisis. Foodstuffs were being destroyed though the people who needed them were facing starvation. Where is the justice? Everybody is worried about this matter. When are we going to start feeding the hungry? If we were to do this, perhaps we would get peace. Peace is something we have to work for, and until we are prepared to work for it by trying to feed the hungry we might as well forget about peace altogether and begin worrying about the protection of our kinfolk.

Let us begin to apply basic economic, financial and fiscal policies in this country which are adapted to the needs of the Canadian people and, if necessary, expand those principles across national borders so as to bring about the distribution of Canadian products to consumers by making the means to purchase them available. Until the government introduces a measure designed to reach this goal I shall be opposed to bills such as the one now before us.

It is useless to bring down measures which ensure that the house will be confronted with the same problem every 10 or 15 years. It is useless to give certain individuals more liberty in their financial activities while at the same time restricting the freedom of individuals among the Canadian public. The minister must think about giving something to the Canadian people. He must give them hope. By financial and fiscal policies he must devise a means of distribution that will satisfy Canadians and be an example to the rest of the world.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in the debate on second reading of Bill C-222 I wish to say it is my intention to deal with the principle of the bill by delving a little into history and posing some questions, because banks and banking are tied in with our very way of life, with our economy, and all facets of our lives are in some way governed by our banking institutions.

When we examine the causes and effects related to our banking institutions we are also seeing the tools which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) and the Bank of Canada have to regulate the banking business and financial community. One of the most powerful elements in the world of today is banking systems, and here let me say it is my view that the Canadian banking system is one of the best in the world. But I also wish to point out that I believe there are certain shortcomings in our banking system and I hope some of them will be corrected by this legislation. However, it is not going to be easy to persuade the minister, and many other people who have an axe to grind, that changes must be made for the public good. I do not think we will get all the changes we want, but certainly we in this party are going to ask many questions in order to find out how far we can go to correct the situation as we see it today.

The government's monetary and fiscal policies are based on the banking system, and in this regard I am reminded of the situation that existed before the last war when our unemployed were housed in camps. They were allowed 10 cents a day spending money and many people believed nothing could be done for them. But when the emergency of war arose, through government policy our banking system created millions and millions and millions of dollars for the war effort, and these people who were in what almost might be described as concentration camps were taken out of those camps and given jobs or were sent overseas.

We found we were able to look after their health and provide them with clothes. We gave them tanks, we gave them guns, we gave them U-boats, battleships and airplanes, and it did not cost them a cent. As a result we became prosperous. What was it that brought about the change? Surely it must be known to each and every one of us that it was the fiscal policy of the government, related to our banking system, that produced the change.

I give full marks to the government of that day for the manner in which it faced the tremendous inflationary pressures caused by the great expansion of our money supply by the banking system. It launched a strong drive to have people buy savings bonds, but people were not told the truth why savings bonds were being sold. They were being sold to take money out of circulation. They were not being sold to help fight the war because money was already in too great supply in relation to the amount of services and goods available.

The government then launched into the sale of war savings certificates which, as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, cost $5 each. They were another means to take money out of circulation and return it to the central coffers of the government in order that individuals would not spend it on goods and services that were in short supply.

Then the government reached further into individuals' pocketbooks and started selling war savings stamps at 25 cents each, again not to provide money for the war effort but for the sole purpose of taking money out of circulation. But after a while we reached the point where all these measures were effective no longer and compulsory saving was introduced. When this step was taken people started to understand the government's intention in selling bonds, saving certificates and war savings stamps.

But even that was not enough. We had to embark on rationing and price control. As a result of the great expansion in the money supply there was a corresponding rise in the national debt, and the only reason for the corresponding rise in the national debt was our banking system which had the sole right to create credit. But once the national debt rose it stayed at a high level and then became greater.

We ought to ask ourselves why our government and governments all over the world are in debt. Each country in the world is in debt, but to whom are they in debt? They may say, "Well, we are in debt to ourselves," but "ourselves" means mighty few people in the world. We are in debt to the financial institutions of the world. Through our banking system we have created a large number of financial parasites which should be eliminated at the first opportunity. We all know that these financial parasites exist. We know the pressures they can bring to bear on governments. We know those pressures are greater than governments can resist.

With this bank bill before us we in the Canadian House of Commons have a duty to the people of Canada and, in fact, to the people of the world, to give leadership by adjusting our finances and our financial institutions so that we can have complete consumption of the goods and services we produce. We should strive to place ourselves in the position, as suggested by the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois), where we can help the underprivileged people of the world. We should seek to place ourselves in a position where never again will we see stacks of tomatoes higher than box cars piled up in fields and then sprayed with some sort of chemical so that people cannot buy them. This has happened in the Okanagan where fruit has been dumped into gullies and chemically treated to prevent its sale in order to keep prices up. What nonsense, with two-thirds of the people of the world, going to bed hungry. Why does this happen? It happens because we regard our financial system as a sacred cow and are afraid to amend the law and make it function so that the people of this world can partake of the things which they produce. It is time we called a halt to this. I ask all members of this house, when we are dealing with the Bank Act, to consider seriously where we are going and how we can best adjust our financial system to the needs of the country and the world.

[Mr. Leboe.]

The banks of this country apparently have found ways of getting away from the 6 per cent ceiling. I am going to mention two ways in which this is done which have been brought to my attention. First of all, people are being asked to borrow more money than they actually want and to leave a certain amount of it in the bank as a deposit. This means that if they want $75,000 they are asked to borrow $100,000 and they pay interest on $100,000. But the bank then has $25,000 in an account and this extra money in the account allows it, under the reserve system, to create an additional amount of money which it can lend and on which it can collect interest.

There are ways and means by which the banks are getting around the 6 per cent ceiling. Undoubtedly this is what the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) was referring to yesterday when he spoke. The other day I had a report that an individual who was borrowing a large sum of money was asked to pay for the first time in his life a large service charge in connection with his loan. This is another way of getting around the 6 per cent interest ceiling. The banks call it a service charge. They got this terminology from the finance companies, and most banks have two or three finance companies attached to them. These are ways in which the banking system is operating not for the good of the general public.

I am glad to see that at last we are going to put the banking system into a position where the banks can make loans and take mortgages. This is one of the things we in this group have been complaining about over the years for the simple reason that people were forced to go outside the country to get this type of accommodation. What happened in the financial institutions outside of this country? By a very simple process they were able to take security in Canadian assets, create the money through their banking system and, with a stroke of the pen, collect the interest on that amount of money. Therefore they sapped the resources of the Canadian people through a deficiency in the banking system in Canada. I am glad this is going to be taken care of.

I am also glad that the inner reserves are going to be brought out in the open, although I think the actual effect is not going to be too great because the inner reserves have been known to the ministers of finance of this country and surely, if we have any confidence in our ministers of finance, they have taken these things into account. Now that we are going to know what the inner reserves of the banks are I think we will be far better able to assess the potential of any individual bank or banker in increasing the money supply.

Surely one of the things that will result from additional mortgage money being made available by banks will be an increase in the money supply. This increase in the money supply, of course, will have to be closely watched by the Bank of Canada and ways and means will have to be used by the Bank of Canada to make certain it does not create additional inflationary pressures. The only thing I can see as a real hope is that the flow of money will be cut off from other sources when this increase is brought into being by the banking system and therefore within Canada we will have the banking system creating the credit. In that sense too I think we ought to be more conscious of how the shares of the present Canadian banks are distributed so far as Canadians and outsiders are concerned.

We have devised means in this world of causing a distribution of purchasing power, other than by preparing for and actually engaging in war, by what we call moon-shots and launchings into outer space. In this field a tremendous amount of money is being released in purchasing power for individuals. As we know, nobody buys one of these rockets which are sent up and which are costing the American people millions and millions of dollars. Nobody will buy one of them but the amount of money distributed in this way is still very substantial. I am glad we have devised a means other than war to aid in the distribution of goods and services.

In the last couple of weeks I have been travelling with parliamentarians from all over the Commonwealth. The one word that was on the lips of most of these parliamentarians from countries throughout the Commonwealth was "peace". I should like to ask hon. members what would happen if tomorrow the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) rose in his place and said: "We have peace in the world. We are laying off all armed forces personnel. We will cut off all defence costs. We are going to dispense with the whole business." I predict to the Minister of Finance that we would have a revolution in this country within 60 days. We are not prepared for this type of thing. The financial system of this country is not geared in such a way that we could look after such a situation if it arose. Yet we talk about peace when we are not in a position because of our financial structure to take care of the situation if it arose tomorrow. What would we do with all the people in the armed forces, those in the defence agencies and those engaged in the distribution of these goods and services? We would find ourselves in a good deal of trouble. So when we are discussing the Bank Act let us seriously consider how we can change the banking system of our country so that if we were suddenly confronted with peace in the world and in Canada we would be able to cope with it, because we will need the financial technique to do so.

In closing I should like to pose another question. I put it in the form of a question because I am not an expert in finance. What is so secret about the devaluation of our dollar by the same percentage as the increase in our gross national product? Common sense would tell me we are going the wrong way. For every increase in the goods and services that are available in the country we are saying that our dollar should buy less.

I pose this as a question because I think we should have an answer. The only result of this policy at this time is the reduction of the purchasing power of the dollar for the individual on the street. We will, of course, increase the amount of loans that can be made but they will be made at a higher interest rate. Perhaps this will assist the gross national product, but the financier will move in again under the guise of some secret formula that has been invented and take advantage of the increase in lending power.

I agree with the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands who has said that there has to be some control on interest rates. Surely there is no reason for a great fluctuation in interest rates at any time. When we divide the dollar we reduce its purchasing power in spite of the fact we have a greater number of dollars. There is no reason in the world why we should increase interest rates.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I was very heartened yesterday by the minister's statement regarding this bill because I detected what I felt to be an amenable attitude toward suggestion from all parts of this house as to how we can strengthen and improve this measure, making it more acceptable to Canadians. I was pleased to note the minister's recognition of the fact that he had perhaps placed an undue emphasis on the efficacy of monetary policy and that we should give consideration to other measures.

Many problems arise in respect of the measure before us. The major suggestion is that this measure, by increasing interest rates, will improve the flow of money in Canada and remove some inequities that now exist. It has been suggested that we remove these inequities first by increasing the ceiling on interest rates which banks are permitted to charge and that eventually we adopt a formula to remove interest rate ceilings entirely.

While we agree that the rigid ceiling placed on bank interest rates does not mean much in view of what has been happening not only to our economy but to the economies of other countries as well we consider it would be a mistake to remove the ceiling unless assurance is given that thorough consideration will be given by the government to the adoption of some means of keeping interest rates from skyrocketing. The government must adopt some means to prevent this. At a later stage I propose to move an amendment to obtain that assurance and I hope the government will give it consideration.

All kinds of inequities result from the 6 per cent ceiling on the interest rate banks are allowed to charge and we know that this interferes with the proper flow of money between banks and financial institutions. We recognize it is becoming more difficult to control this situation by monetary policy because the unregulated sector of our economy is growing at a faster rate than the regulated sector.

Banks are more responsive to the controls used by the Bank of Canada. We in this house all know of the various methods resorted to by banks to circumvent the ceiling placed on interest rates. I use the word "circumvent" in the sense that they get around the ceiling forced upon them in order to preserve a competitive position. The maximum interest rate charged by banks is really no longer 6 per cent but in fact ranges from 6 per cent to 11½ per cent. We do not think that banks or other financial institutions should be allowed to adopt this position. If an interest rate is set at a certain figure it should be accurate.

Those of us who have been members of the consumer credit committee have been fighting for the adoption of the principle of a true disclosure of interest rates. It is important that banks, as well as other institutions, should disclose true interest rates and other charges placed on loans instead of the various devices now being resorted to by these institutions. If we require that other financial institutions in Canada declare true interest rates in simple terms we must require this also of banks.

The situation in which banks find themselves vis-à-vis other financial institutions is somewhat inequitable and should be corrected. As unfair as this may be to banking institutions, in the sense that they are required to charge lower interest rates than other institutions, we may have to accept this situation in order to maintain some control over interest rates. I suggest it would be more proper to free bank interest rates and adopt some method of controlling interest rates charged by all financial institutions in Canada.

I am sure we have all noted the indications that point to higher interest rates. Let me quote from the Ottawa Journal of June 21 which states under the heading "High Interest Rates To Stay":

> High interest rates are likely to prevail in the Canadian economy for the next ten years, according to a consulting economist from Missouri.

That economist is Mr. M. T. Welshans.

Let me quote from an article which appeared in the Toronto Telegram of August 26, written by Stephen Vitunski. He states:

> If you're waiting for interest rates to go down, you may be in for a long wait.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The Globe and Mail of September 7 carried an article by Ronald Anderson in which these words were used:

> The high interest rates—a response to a seemingly insatiable demand for capital in all countries—is likely to persist for some time.

These extracts from the press are merely a sampling of what I think is a general opinion that interest rates have nowhere to go but up. Certainly this will be the situation as long as the present conditions prevail, conditions of a great demand for capital that exists in the United States, to whose economy we seem to be very tightly tied. There is also evidence to indicate that the use of high interest rates, even where high interest rates are deplored but are used in an effort to dampen down demand and control inflation, is not having the desired effect. Apparently this system is not working.

There seems to be no evidence at this time that high interest rates are actually behaving in the way they are supposed to behave in slowing down demand. One might say that demand might be higher if it were not for the level of interest rates at the present time. But even with the highest interest rates that I think Canada has seen for a long, long time there is no indication that they are slowing down inflation and there may be a possibility that they are actually fuelling inflation in the sense of contributing to the higher costs of many industries.

In this connection I would give an example, but I think this situation is probably prevalent in many industries where capital costs are more pertinent than labour costs. In an industry where capital is very extensively used, a rise in the interest rate would contribute far more to increased costs than would be the case with a rise in the cost of labour. I refer to a report entitled "Costs And Earnings of Selected Fishing Enterprises In The Atlantic Provinces." This report gives a cost breakdown on a number of ships. It indicates that wages in one instance represent 1.6 per cent of the costs and interest payments represent 4.3 per cent of the costs.

This may be very characteristic of capital-intensive industries and as such should warrant our consideration in doing everything we can to maintain interest rates at the lowest possible level. It is very difficult to see how removing the ceiling on the interest rate charged by banks would lower interest rates in Canada. It would certainly create a reallocation of money from one group to another but I cannot see how it would lower interest rates, and it might very well have the opposite effect unless we took positive steps to control interest rates throughout the whole economy. I should like to quote from an editorial which appeared in the Toronto Star of July 6:

> An increase in interest rates on bank deposits will, in turn, force trust and finance companies to increase the rates they pay on deposits. Otherwise, they will go out of business. The net effect will likely be not only high interest rates on bank loans but increased costs of other types of lending such as mortgages and consumer credit.

In short, I think there is a very decided danger of a price war breaking out if some ceilings are not imposed on the general economy. It will not be a price war for the benefit of the lender; it will be a price war for the purpose of attracting deposits and the costs will have to be passed on to the lender. Then we will run the risk of having interest rate levels far beyond what I would consider desirable in a country that has to expand and needs to obtain money at the lowest price it can possibly get it for.

I think there has also been a tendency for our monetary policy to be less effective than it might have been, in the absence of over-all controls in respect of interest rates. In some circumstances where money has to be tightened in Canada I think there would be a fear that such tightening would send interest rates far too high, far higher than perhaps the authorities themselves would want them to go. To some extent this has reduced our willingness for and effectiveness in the use of such a policy.

I believe that if we had more positive and direct control over the level of interest rates the government and the Bank of Canada could more effectively use their monetary policies in finding solutions to the problems at any given time. It is disturbing to find that we do not have, or do not appear to have, at government level the same concern about the bad effects of high interest rates that is represented by the concern of our neighbours to the south in the United States. The Americans are very much concerned when the interest rate starts to rise. I am sure that concern is also felt in this country to some extent, but the sense of urgency about such a rise does not seem to be as apparent here. I think it is necessary for our governments to recognize the importance of maintaining as low an interest level in Canada as is consistent with obtaining sufficient funds for our development.

We have always tended to be an expensive money country. Certainly this applies in our relationship to the United States. Our money has probably been cheaper than European money but more expensive than American money. In a country that has to be concerned about industrial innovation, that has to be concerned about making its labour more productive by the use of more capital, it imposes a very serious limitation on the ability of the economy to accept this move unless definite efforts are made to keep the cost of money low for this purpose.

I would suggest that higher interest rates affect the consumer in a very bad way both as a borrower of money and as a user of goods and services within which are incorporated the higher costs of interest, because interest is certainly as much a component of any product or service as are labour or raw materials. We are concerned about the general rise in all other costs and we have to be equally concerned about the rising cost of interest in Canada. This interest is passed on and is ultimately borne by the consumer. Higher interest rates in Canada raise the cost of public borrowing.

There has been ample evidence for some time of the difficulties that all levels of the government have been having in selling their bonds and obtaining money for their financial needs. We had the unpopular issue of government of Canada bonds amounting to $500 million which was not selling well despite the fact it presented a most attractive deal. There was some concern that it would not be sold and that it would inhibit the floating of further bonds in the years to come or that future bonds might have to be floated at higher rates. I am advancing these arguments in favour of the necessity of maintaining as tight a control as possible over the level of interest rates in the hope of seeing that costs both in the private and in the public sector are held down as much as possible.

I was very interested in the remark concerning interest rates attributed to Harry Truman, a former president of the United States, reported in the September 9 edition of Time magazine of this year. He said:

> We will bring on a precipitous deflation if we persist in high interest practices. The result could be a serious depression.

It is therefore vitally important that a government should not permit interest rates to rise because of a depression psychology which starts to develop when those rates reach a certain point. It is far better to try to keep them level as best one can than to run the risk of allowing them to go up too high and then fall off, bringing about undesirable results.

Furthermore, I think the government should recognize that if the ceiling is taken off the banks and if we permit the kind of competition we hope will take place among financial institutions within our economy, then great inequities will become evident. In spite of the best competition, certain problems will arise which the market cannot be expected to solve. Those of us who for a long time have tried to get the market to respond to social objectives have come to recognize the great difficulty in trying to get this finely tuned mechanism which operates on the basis of profit both to have a heart and to achieve the highest profit possible. It is the government that should have the heart and the concern for those people who are hurt because of what takes place in the market.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

The government must assure the house that it will take measures to correct the social distortions that occur in the market place as the result of the allocation of resources on the sole basis of profitability. There is no doubt that social capital will be required. The market cannot provide this, and it is the government which will have to do so. It will have to build schools, step up its programs and keep an eye on interest rates so that these programs do not become too expensive for the public sector.

Things like research are the responsibility of the government, and I am sure the minister is aware of the great regret that was expressed in this country when in his last budget he reduced the sum of money that would be made available to research. The government will have to make development funds available to help those industries in Canada which need encouragement and cannot find funds within the market system. Funds will also be necessary for regional development. We frequently find that when a tight money policy is adopted and interest rates start to go up, then the already disadvantaged areas, just as the disadvantaged group of people in our society, are the ones who are hurt the most. The government will have to recognize this and see that funds are made available for this kind of assistance.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, and also to make as many as possible of our institutions, apart from the chartered banks, responsive to national policies, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), the following amendment, which is prepared in French and English. It reads as follows:

> That Bill No. C-222 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house that consideration be given to the introduction of legislation to include provision for placing the sole operation of clearing house facilities in the hands of the Bank of Canada and requiring that all financial institutions issuing demand liabilities, transferrable and short term banking claims requiring access to the cheque clearing system be defined as banks and brought under provision of this legislation; and further that the government give consideration to taking such steps as are necessary to give to the Bank of Canada the power to set maximum interest rates on both loans and deposits as it deems necessary in the general interest of the economy in the light of prevailing economic conditions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before Your Honour puts the motion I wonder whether I could say a word on a point of order?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Minister of Finance and I were both listening to the amendment rather carefully. Would it be possible to reserve argument on the point of order and not make a decision on whether the amendment is in order until there is an opportunity to consider it, unless Your Honour is clearly of the view it is out of order

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I would like to have the assistance of hon. members regarding the validity of this amendment. I would also like to put the amendment before the house. It reads as follows:

That Bill No. C-222 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house that consideration be given to the introduction of legislation to include provision for placing the sole operation of clearing house facilities in the hands of the Bank of Canada and requiring that all financial institutions issuing demand liabilities, transferable and short term banking claims requiring access to the cheque clearing system be defined as banks and brought under provision of this legislation; and further that the government give consideration to taking such steps as are necessary to give to the Bank of Canada the power to set maximum interest rates on both loans and deposits as it deems necessary in the general interest of the economy in the light of prevailing economic conditions.

May I ask hon. members to assist the Chair in enabling it to render a decision on the validity of this amendment.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Speaker, am I to understand that you are willing to postpone for a time the hearing of argument on the point of order, as requested by the minister? I believe the minister asked whether you would be willing to hear argument at a later time after the minister and the house have had a chance to consider the wording of the amendment. Is it correct that you will accept argument on this point of order after a certain time, say after dinner? If this is your view I should like to continue the debate on the Bank Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might reiterate my request. I have no objection to the fact that we are taken a little by surprise by this amendment. That is part of the game. But it would be very helpful if my colleague and I had a little time to consider the wording of the amendment. If the house were agreeable to having the question whether or not the amendment is in order postponed until the hon. member for York East, who intends to speak anyway, has completed his speech, I think it would be convenient to do so. I wonder whether the hon. member for Waterloo South would object to that.

Mr. Saltsman: I think that is a reasonable request, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Is there unanimous consent to the request that has just been made by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Steven Otto (York East): Mr. Speaker, I was particularly impressed with the minister's speech yesterday in which he tried to define the purpose of this legislation to amend the Bank Act. He said, and rightly so, that it is intended to increase the degree of competition and flexibility in our banking system so that it will best serve the changing requirements of the Canadian economy and the interests of all Canadians.

That, Mr. Speaker, is a fairly far-reaching shift in emphasis because up until about ten years ago the purpose of the Bank Act was really to provide security or protection to people who had deposited money in banks so as to ensure they would not lose it. That was the emphasis found in the act, as is quite customary in the agrarian type of economy that we have. So the very fact that the government has realized the need for a shift in emphasis toward making money available for industrial and commercial expansion is in itself a very important matter.

Among the many items in the bill, I think one of the most important is the proposal by the minister that agreements between banks on interest rates, both on loans and deposits, will be prohibited. There is a presumption in the minds of a great many Canadians that bank heads or bank presidents actually do get together and agree to set interest rates. This is not so. They do not get together at a committee meeting or as members of an association and say: "We are going to establish such and such an interest rate for such and such a risk". That does not occur.

However, what does happen—this again pertains to a point made by the minister—is that although the banking system and the staff employed by our chartered banks are really quite efficient and forward looking, both are hindered because of the existence of cross-directorships.

It is strange to think that a bank, which is wholly a business, appoints its board of directors not for what the members of the board know about banking but because they happen to be well established and well known people. What the banks are looking for is an aura of respectability.

There is nothing wrong with this provided that the bank itself can function. Unfortunately, what happens is that the directors of banks, not being involved in the banking business at all or not making their living from the banking business, are inclined to protect their good names by being very conservative in their approach toward financing. This is all very fine in an established and very stable economy but it is not suitable for an economy which is changing rapidly from day to day as is the case in Canada. As a result, Mr. Speaker, if the minister is going to be successful in his goal of making more money and credit available to industry and commerce in this nation, he will have to do a lot more than just limit to 20 per cent the number of directors of companies who may become directors of a bank.

I once talked to the president of a chartered bank who told me that he spent almost 90 per cent of his time trying to gain acceptance by the rest of the directors of his bank of policies which his staff had developed. He said that on top of that he was successful only about 10 per cent of the time. In other words, banking itself, which is obligated to provide credit and has a responsibility there, is hindered by its directorships.

Let us consider the state of affairs in the United States. In most of the directorships of industrial corporations in the United States 50 per cent or more of the directors are involved in the business of the company of which they are directors. In other words, you have vice presidents in charge of production, vice presidents in charge of advertising, vice presidents in charge of sales, and the president, and then there is a limited number of directors whose responsibility it is to look after the shareholders who are not involved directly in the company.

We must remember that if the members of a board of directors make their living from the business of the company they are going to be much more concerned about its welfare, whereas under the other system we wonder how the directors of some companies make their living. I know a number of directors of banks and other companies who do not seem to be involved in any business. They are almost professional directors. They do not make much money as directors, but being on the inside, knowing when shares are going to be issued, knowing that they can subscribe to shares without payment of more than 10 per cent of the value, and knowing that the shares will not be issued until they are sold, they are able to make money in this way. They make a living by making the purchase of shares of banks and other institutions a worth-while project through reselling them on the market.

However, this does not necessarily gibe at all times with what the banks want to do and should do, which is to provide more credit, among other things. There are no agreements between bank heads to restrict interest rates. But it is done in other ways. For example, over a drink or lunch at the club it is done indirectly if one director of a bank, who is having lunch with another director of a bank, says: "There is John Smith over there and he will be stepping into your bank for a loan; but he is not a very good fellow and I would not touch him with a 10-foot pole", or words to that effect. This results in an agreement being made insidiously.

I doubt that anyone can point to a definite agreement or even to a potential agreement made between banks to set interest rates. Unless we can take steps to loosen the establishment of directorates and to allow people who know their business, who want to be in banking and who are interested in banking, to come in as directors of banks, we shall not see too much result in respect of what we want to accomplish, namely, more money available for industrial and commercial expansion.

There is some emphasis in the bill on this matter, and I am glad to see that there is at least some restriction with respect to the directorships of banks. It will be difficult for any government to try to make laws in this regard unless one can say that bank directors may not have an interest in any other business than banking. Another requirement could perhaps be, that at least 50 per cent of the directors of any bank must be involved in the banking business. In other words, they must be bankers. I think this may be one place where we will find difficulty.

Another thing that is not quite clear in the bill has to do with the fact that a bank may set any policy. It can be as liberal as it wishes in the granting of credit for business expansion. The bank does this through bank managers. It is both an unfortunate and fortunate thing that there is a curious pension plan in all banks. In most banks, when the manager retires he gets a pension approximately equivalent to 75 per cent of the average of his last three or four years' earnings. That is a very high pension. Consequently, when a bank manager reaches the age of 50 or 52 and only has 10 years to go he does not want to take a chance. He does not want to lend money on even the slightest risk because he knows that he will be the one to be penalized in the event of a loans's failure.

Again, many people have come to the conclusion that whereas at one time usury was the charge made for risk, today it is the charge made for a waiting period which is without risk. Consequently, the banks are accused at times of wanting interest, without any element of risk attaching to a loan, merely for waiting until such time as payment becomes due.

These are things that have to be cleared up. We shall have to foresee problems relating to such things. We shall not see an immediate increase of available money for industrial and commercial expansion unless we can somehow solve the problems which will hinder the fluidity of money.

Before I conclude I wish to take issue with the last speaker and some others when they indicate they are worried about mortgages and about mortgage money coming from outside Canada. I am not the least bit worried about mortgages being taken by foreigners outside Canada. In fact, I think it is a good thing. There is a limited amount of money in Canada and that money can go either into equity or business investment or into mortgages. The only trouble with mortgage money is that it is tied up in bricks and mortar. Mortgages are worth less in real money at the end of 25 years, even when one takes into account the interest which has been earned, than the money originally lent. The money at the end of that time will be worth less than the original amount owing to constant inflationary pressures but this money could have been used to invest in industry, that is, in share or equity capital.

It has been the theme of debates for the last three or four years that Canadians want to own equity in their own industrial destiny. If that is so, why put more money into mortgages, because that money will be tied up? I would much sooner let United States citizens have all our mortgages. If they want to foreclose and take away the buildings, let them do so. Let us, however, induce Canadians to invest in equity growth shares and in the industrial and commercial development of this country. For that reason I am not worried about mortgages.

There is, of course, always the fact that interest has to be paid, but after all it is only interest. As the former minister said, we should not mind foreign investment as long as we need only pay interest for a definite term. In that light the emphasis on mortgages is nothing that we should really be concerned with. What we should be concerned about is making available for Canadians money for industrial and commercial expansion.

I am not too concerned about the power given to the banks to invest in mortgages. I do not think it will have much meaning. Mortgages are long-term investments and banks are usually not long-term lenders. They are short-term lenders. Though they will invest a certain percentage of their money in long-term investments, I do not think this will be a point to be concerned with.

I should like to go back to the original statement made by the minister, namely, that the purpose of this legislation is to make available more money for the industrial growth of Canada. I hope that after the bill has been considered in committee and questions have been directed to the witnesses and recommendations have been made, we will have a clearcut view of whether the banks will succeed in doing what is asked of them, that is, to do a good job in banking. When I speak about a good job being done in banking, I do not mean banking in any limited sense. I am not talking of banking controlled by an established elite which does not know anything about investing, is not interested in investing and is interested only stability. The picture up to now in banking has been one of stability. What we need is daring.

I hope that after the committee studies and examines this bill it will come back to the house and report on whether or not the banks are willing and able to comply with the demands of this nation. May I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Pickersgill: This is Thursday; you should go on.

Mr. Knowles: It is not five o'clock until six o'clock on Thursday.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, I think the hon. member for York East was under the misapprehension that we were to proceed to other business at five o'clock. Therefore he should either continue his speech—

Mr. Otto: I have concluded my remarks, Mr. Speaker. Though it is five o'clock, I have come to the conclusion of my remarks.

Bank Act

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether Your Honour is prepared for me to proceed with my argument on the point of order which was raised? I have looked at Your Honour's opinion, one which was not exactly in accord with the views which I and my friends expressed on August 30, with respect to an amendment moved to another bill by the Leader of the Opposition, an amendment which we thought was out of order but which Your Honour decided was in order. That amendment is the nearest immediate parallel I was able to find to the proposed amendment we are now considering.

I refer to the opinion given by Your Honour as reported at page 7808 on August 30 of this year. I have had only a few minutes in which to look at the recitation which Your Honour made of the kinds of amendment which could be moved as reasoned amendments. The first is an amendment declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy or provisions of a bill. I do not think I need refer to the others. The amendment may express opinions as to circumstances connected with the introduction or prosecution of a bill, or it may seek further information, but the proposed amendment does not seek to do these things.

It seems to me that if this amendment does fall within the categories stated by Your Honour it must come within the first category as being declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy or provisions of the bill. It appears that what this amendment seeks to do is to ask the House to give consideration to other legislation on a closely related but essentially different subject. Indeed, this would appear to be the kind of amendment which might have been moved with relation to the bill to amend the Bank of Canada Act which was given second reading by the House on June 13 and sent to the standing committee. I say this because the amendment seeks to give additional powers to the Bank of Canada and does not deal with the chartered banks which are the subject matter of the bill we are considering. It is true the subject may be closely related to the bill before us but the relationship is that of a first or second cousin; the proposed motion is not adverse to any principle, policy or provision in the bill itself. Indeed, it does not deal with the bill at all. I do not think I need to labour the argument, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me the whole case is right there.

[Mr. Otto.]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, in speaking briefly to this amendment I should like to say that in my opinion it is clearly out of order because, though it tends to be adverse to the motion for second reading which is before the House it introduces an entirely new question. I say this with the greatest of respect to those proposing it. The three points put forward for inclusion in the legislation referred to concern the Bank of Canada.

The references to the Bank of Canada in the bill now under consideration are merely incidental. As the Minister of Transport has correctly pointed out, the bill before us deals with the chartered banks and with the chartered banks only. The reference to the Bank of Canada has to do with certain reserves and is purely incidental. On the other hand, what is proposed in this amendment as an alternative to aspects of the legislation before us deals with the Bank of Canada and is certainly not incidental to the operations of that bank. What is proposed would properly be the subject matter of amendments to the Bank of Canada Act, as the Minister of Transport has said.

On the basis of the observations which have been made I would say there is definite ground for arguing that this amendment is caught by citation 203, paragraph 5, to be found on page 171 of Beauchesne, which reads as follows:

> An amendment was ruled out because it raised a new question which could only be considered on a distinct motion after notice.

I say this is a new question involving amendments to the Bank of Canada Act which could only be considered on a distinct motion after notice and that the proposed amendment falls to the ground for this particular reason in addition to others which may be cited by hon. members.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I first of all make a brief reference to the last argument advanced by the hon. member for Edmonton West. He quoted citation 203, paragraph 5, against this amendment but I would remind you, sir, that citation 203 applies to amendments to questions of substance. There is a separate section in Beauchesne, as in the other authorities, dealing with amendments which can be moved to a motion for second reading, and I suggest that the terms of citation 203 do not apply at this time but rather that we must look at citations 381, 382 and several of those that follow.

I should also like to join with the Minister of Transport in drawing Your Honour's attention to the ruling you made on August 30 with respect to the amendment proposed on that occasion by the Leader of the Official Opposition. What we had before us then was a motion for the second reading of the government's back to work legislation. The Leader of the Opposition moved an amendment which, in effect, opposed proceeding with the second reading of the bill because it failed to deal with such matters as fringe benefits and the recommendations of the Feedman commission report.

I draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that the matters complained of in the amendment of August 30 were matters not dealt with in the bill. Nevertheless, Your Honour took the view that the amendment on August 30 met the requirements of a reasoned amendment. In other words, it was the kind of amendment which gave reasons why the Leader of the Opposition—and we happened to agree with him on that occasion—felt that second reading should not then be proceeded with.

This is what is proposed in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Waterloo South. The amendment is opposed to the second reading of the present bill for the reasons stated by the hon. member for Waterloo South and by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, namely that the bill does not deal with the problem of the interest rate and other banking problems in the way that we in this party feel those problems ought to be dealt with.

My hon. friends who have just spoken have suggested that we are dealing with the Bank of Canada Act rather than with the Bank Act. I suggest we are dealing with the problem of banking, just as on August 30 we were dealing with the problem of railway labour relations, and on that occasion Your Honour permitted a reasoned amendment that gave the reasons why we should not proceed with the second reading of that bill in the form in which it was placed before us. I submit that what is now proposed is a reasoned amendment as to why we should not proceed with the present bill.

I further submit, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment does not offend some of the other rules regarding amendments of this kind. For example, it does not propose changes that could be effected by changes in the bill itself. It proposes entirely different ways of coping with some of the problems in the field of banking. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as I have often tried to, I rely on citation 382 in Beauchesne's fourth edition and I contend that the amendment is in order. If we again read that citation we see that it says:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question—

That is the question for second reading, and that is what this does.

> —a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill—

I think that is all I need to read of citation 382 because that is precisely what the amendment moved by my hon. friend does, but I am sure that in your study of this problem that has now been raised Your Honour will have refreshed your memory as to the things you said on August 30 as recorded at page 7808 of Hansard for that date.

I found it very interesting that on that occasion you compared Beauchesne's various clauses, going right down to citation 393, with May, from which these ideas came, and you expressed the view that the rule as set out in May is the one with which we should stay. Then a little later on you said:

> We have before us a reasoned amendment and the principle of a reasoned amendment is set out very clearly in Abraham and Hawtrey's Parliamentary Dictionary at page 162, which states in very clear terms what a reasoned amendment is. It reads:
> "This form of amendment seeks . . . either to give reasons why the house declines to give a second or third reading to the bill, or to express an opinion with regard to its subject matter or to the policy which the bill is intended to fulfil."

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I do not think my hon. friend from Waterloo South could have met that stipulation any better than he has. The amendment gives reasons why we should decline to give second reading to the present bill, and it expresses an opinion with regard to the subject matter of the bill and with regard to the policy which the bill is intended to fulfil. My hon. friend's contention is that the bill before us does not implement that policy in the way that it should be done.

We are opposed to the bill in its present form. We think the whole problem of banking should be dealt with in the different ways that are suggested in this amendment. Therefore, because it is a reasoned amendment, because it is opposed to the second reading of the present bill in its present form, I suggest that it is even more clearly in order than was the amendment of the Leader of the Opposition to the railway legislation, which Your Honour declared in order on August 30.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, though I find myself in agreement that the government, and perhaps the house, ought to be giving some consideration to the proposals that were laid before us by the hon. member for Waterloo South in advancing this amendment, I think there are a number of reasons why it is out of order.

The operative part of the amendment is that Bill C-222 be not now read a second time. The rest gives some reasons, or what are purported to be reasons, but the amendment does in fact introduce new subject matter that is not in the bill. Therefore I think it can be argued that accepting this amendment that the bill be not now read a second time would have exactly the same effect as a direct negative when the bill comes to a vote on second reading.

Citation 202(12) of Beauchesne reads:

> An amendment proposing a direct negative, though it may be covered up by verbiage, is out of order.

I suggest that this amendment falls into that category because if the hon. member's objective is simply to defeat Bill C-222, that can be accomplished simply by voting against it when the question is put on second reading. Citation 202(14) of Beauchesne reads:

> An amendment which would produce the same result as if the original motion were simply negatived is out of order.

I also want to say that although the words of the amendment do not include that the bill be hoisted for six months, it does have exactly that effect. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) referred to citation 203(5) which reads:

> An amendment was ruled out because it raised a new question which could only be considered on a distinct motion after notice.

I suggest that the hon. member for Waterloo South has the right to raise the three matters that are in his amendment, but for it to be in order he should put it on the order paper in the form of a notice of motion which would come up in the usual way that a private member has open to him in drawing matters of this kind to the attention of the house. If he does this he can then wait his turn to debate these matters.

[Mr. Knowles.]

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to citation 382 in Beauchesne which reads in part:

> It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill—

I cannot see anything in the amendment indicating that the hon. member has any special reasons for not agreeing to Bill C-222. All he is doing is raising a completely new subject matter that is not contained in the bill, and therefore I do not think the amendment complies with the provisions of citation 382. So, Mr. Speaker, as I said at the outset, while I can find a number of reasons for agreeing that the matters raised by the hon. member ought to be discussed, debated and perhaps dealt with by legislation, there are a number of reasons why his amendment is out of order at this time.

Mr. Speaker: If there are no additional contributions to this very interesting debate on procedural matters perhaps I should at this time give my opinion as to whether the amendment moved by the hon. member for Waterloo South ought to be accepted or not.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Hon. members know the practice and precedents governing the introduction and proposal of reasoned amendments better than I do. The Minister of Transport has referred the house to a ruling of August 30 last which gives in some detail the general practice and precedents governing such amendments. I feel myself bound by that ruling and I think it applies in this present case. However, hon. members know that even in the instance of a reasoned amendment the general rule regarding relevancy still applies.

Reference has been made to May's seventeenth edition at page 527 where it says:

> The principle of relevancy in an amendment governs every such motion.

Meaning, of course, an amendment along the same lines as the one proposed by the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Saltsman), that is a reasoned amendment.

> The amendment must "strictly relate to the bill which the House, by its order, has resolved upon considering", and must not include in its scope other bills then standing for consideration by the House.

It seems to me that the proposal advanced by the hon. member in the form of an amendment does not relate strictly to, but goes beyond the terms of the bill now before the house. I fully recognize it is always extremely difficult to determine whether or not an amendment of this type is relevant, but reading it as closely as I can and following upon the suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), supported by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), it seems this is an entirely new, different and novel legislative proposal. Because of this I do feel that this amendment, proposed as a reasoned amendment, cannot be accepted because it is substantially irrelevant.

Referring myself to citations 202(3) and 203(5) quoted by the hon. member for Edmonton West, and sustained by the arguments also advanced by the Minister of Transport and the hon. member for Medicine Hat, I think I have to rule the amendment out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on the bill before the house, that is the revision of the Act respecting Banks and Banking.

On re-reading the speech delivered yesterday by the hon. Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp), we note on page 8354, left-hand column, paragraph (4):

(4) The present cash reserve requirement of 8 per cent of total Canadian deposits will be gradually replaced by a cash requirement of 12 per cent against demand deposits and 4 per cent against term and notice deposits (including personal savings deposits). On present figures this formula would result in an over-all cash requirement of 6.6 per cent.

This means, according to the new Bank Act, that the cash reserve requirement for chartered banks will be established at 6.6 per cent instead of 8 per cent of their deposit liabilities.

Mr. Speaker, let us figure out what this will mean. I would ask the Minister of Finance to pay attention to the following figures which I will quote, and tell me if that is not the concrete and true result his amendment will bring about.

Upon leafing through Canadian Statistics September 1966 issue, I read, on page 76, in Table 106 entitled Chartered Banks of Canada:

Canadian cash reserves—total reserves for chartered banks, $1,492 million.

And according to these same figures, this has made possible Canadian dollar deposits totalling $18,443 million which represents an average cash reserve of 8.1 per cent.

If we now establish an average cash reserve of 6.6 per cent—it must be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the total cash reserves will still remain at $1,492 million, which is the present amount. If an 8 per cent cash reserve of $1,492 million represents deposits totalling $18,443 million, this same $1,492 million cash reserve, which is at present in chartered banks, will make possible deposits totalling $22,600 million once the cash reserve requirement is brought down to an average 6.6 per cent, which represents an increase in deposits totalling $4,157 million. And where do the deposits come from? From the loans granted by the banks. In this connection, I wish to refer to a magazine published by the Royal Bank of Canada. I am not the one who says that, I am only quoting the Royal Bank pamphlet "Economic Trends and Problems", prepared by their Department of Economic Research, in June 1966, as a special issue for general distribution. On page 3, paragraph 2, we read the following:

Bank deposits increase when banks buy bonds or grant loans, because the people who sell bonds to the banks or obtain loans from them deposit the proceeds thereof in banks.

Therefore, deposits come from loans and by decreasing the average percentage of the bank reserves from 8 per cent to 6 per cent, chartered banks are automatically allowed to increase overnight their lending potential by $4,157 million without their having a single penny more, either in stock capital, claims or guarantees. Chartered banks, the very day after this bill is passed, will be able to make additional loans to the extent of $4,157 million, merely because the average percentage of their reserves has been decreased from 8 to 6 per cent. I doubt that the minister can deny what I am now saying.

If the Minister of Finance will listen to me for a minute, I shall ask him a question which he can answer when replying to questions in general. May I ask the Minister of Finance to listen carefully so that he might be able to answer the following question:

Is it not true that because the average percentage of the reserves will be lowered from 8 to 6.6 per cent, the banks, which will always keep the same reserves in Canadian money, that is $1,492 million, as reported in the latest issue of the Canadian statistical revue, will have the right overnight to increase their loans automatically by $4,157 million without even having a penny more in deposit? I would like the Minister of Finance to answer that question.

Simply by reducing the average percentage of the reserves, the chartered banks, still having the same reserves, will have the right to grant loans amounting to $22,600 million compared to $18,443 million they are allowed to lend now. It means that the banks are granted the unheard of privilege of lending money without having it, without having anything, in short, to increase the money supply by lending $4,157 million overnight. What does that mean? They are allowed at the same time to increase the interest rate for the first year to 7 per cent. The chartered banks until now made loans at 6 per cent. They had granted loans totalling $18,443 million which brought them $1,106 million in interest.

As soon as the Bank Act goes into effect, the chartered banks will automatically have the right to lend $22,600 million at 7 per cent, which will bring them $1,582 million in interest, that is an increase of $476 million annually, which amount is given to the chartered banks simply by reducing the average percentage of the reserves and increasing the interest rate by 1 per cent. And the banks will grant those loans because as stated by the economic research department of the Royal Bank, on page 6 of the booklet:

> —it is the amount of cash held by the banks which determines the level of the bank deposits.

It is not their own wealth, it is the amount of cash held by the banks, and again I quote:

> The bank money is made up mostly of the banks' balances with the Bank of Canada (the rest is the cash on hand, that is the bills of the Bank of Canada held by the banks).

With the enactment of this legislation which lowers the average percentage of bank reserves and increases interest rates, banks will be able to make additional profits of $476 million annually.

When banks grant loans—if the Minister of Finance will kindly read the booklet from which I am quoting and of which I sent him a copy—they do not loan something they have: rather, they lend on the basis of their currency reserves, the percentage of which is established annually by the Bank Act at 8 per cent, and which is now being lowered to 6.6 per cent by the new act. In order to grant loans, chartered banks do not have to own anything; they only need to have currency reserves to be able to loan twelve times more and, under the bill, fifteen times more, without having anything to back their loans.

Mr. Speaker, before feeling sorry for the banks. I think the Minister of Finance should consider instead the tremendous privilege he is about to grant them through this new legislation, that is the privilege of growing richer by $476 million every year. It will prove to be—and the Minister of Finance should keep this in mind—one of the most serious inflationary measures the government could take. It will be one of the most important inflationary measures in the next few years, since the Canadian people will have to pay for this additional amount of $476 million, not in return for extra goods or services, but rather for the advantage of certain interests which have always been favoured by the Canadian government, namely the eight or nine chartered banks existing in Canada.

Those $476 million in interest paid by the small, average or large borrower will contribute to increase prices, since the interest paid by the industrialist, the manufacturer or the businessman will be added to his production costs and prices will go up accordingly. At the same time, the entire production of Canada will be increased by a percentage equivalent to the $476 million the Canadian taxpayers will have to pay. That is much more costly than medicare would have been in Canada. It is also more costly than an increase in old age pensions, because this additional amount of $476 million in interest which the Canadian people will have to pay will be included in production costs. It will be an inflationary step much more serious than present salary or price increases.

Canada is on a path of decreasing confidence because the value of our dollar is continually falling, and pieces of legislation like this one will contribute to increase inflation even more and lessen the confidence of the people in the Canadian dollar.

Taking into consideration the figures provided by the September 1966 issue of the "Statistical Review" published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, if we consider what that increase in the interest rate will cost Canada, if we consider the loans granted by the government to chartered banks, either as treasury bills or direct bonds guaranteed by the federal government for terms of two years or less, or two years or more, either as indirect bonds guaranteed by the federal government, that will involve even in the first year the new legislation will come into force, an additional outlay of nearly $180 million by the Canadian government, merely for the payment of interests on the federal government debt.

Next year, when the Minister of Finance will present his budget, there will be an increase of $180 million in item "Interest on the public debt" solely due to the change resulting from the amendments brought this year to the Bank Act. That will be another cause of budgetary deficits and tax increases, because the government will have yielded to the demands of banks.

It is said: Yes, but banks cannot compete with other lending institutions giving 6 per cent interest to their depositors because they lend at 11 or 12 per cent or at 9 or 10 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, I say to the Minister of Finance that to allow chartered banks to increase their rate of interest is not a solution; on the contrary, the interest rate charged by all those who misuse our economy today, those who charge interest rates to finance furniture, automobiles, etc., equal to 18 per cent and 24 per cent yearly, should be lowered. Banks should not be allowed to increase their interest rate; besides, other companies should be forced to lower their interest rates, perhaps not at the same rate as banks but in a way to allow competition.

Banks put forward the reason that, by charging only 6 per cent, they cannot grant more than 2½ or 3 per cent interest to their depositors. That is why they cannot compete with trust companies which can give 5½ or 6 per cent to their depositors.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance should know that that is a false argument since banks do not lend their depositors' money. And that has been recognized by Mr. Graham E. Towers, then governor of the Bank of Canada, when he appeared before the banking committee established in 1940.

Chartered banks do not lend the money of their depositors. They lend something that is entirely ficticious. This privilege is given to them by the very fact that they hold a bank charter. They give new credit when they have reserves of bank currency. They lend having nothing; they do not even need deposits. By the legislation before us today, from one day to the next the banks, without having one cent more on deposit and by the very fact that the percentage of their currency reserves are diminished, will be allowed to lend $4,157 million more.

This proves that banks do not lend the money of their depositors. They do not have the right to do so anyhow, and this was recognized by Mr. Graham E. Towers, as I said earlier, when he appeared before the banking committee in 1939-40.

Banks lend money on trust; proof of this stems from the fact that, with an approximate cash circulation of, I believe, $2,600 million at present, banks have granted loans totalling 18 billion dollars. They have granted loans totalling 12 times the amount of legal currency in circulation throughout Canada. They are thus lending non-existing funds. And, by lowering the percentage of bank reserves, the government is making it possible for them to grant more of these loans.

At present, they have—I quoted this figure a while ago, but I would like to emphasize that point once more—a total cash reserve of $1,492 million to make good their loans. This is what we read in the 1966 issue of Canadian statistics.

With an 8 per cent cash reserve—and this is an exact figure—they have been able to grant loans totalling $18,443 million. If the percentage were lowered to 6.6 per cent, their loans could be increased to $22,600 million, a $4,157 million boost.

Thus, they are not lending depositors' money. They lend new credit. That is why the argument pleaded by the banks is absolutely false whereby they claim they are unable, due to the 6 per cent ceiling on their interest rates, to compete with trust companies and near-banks which pay 5½ or 6 per cent on deposits. The public must be informed of this, so that it might avoid falling into that trap. The public must know that banks have special privileges, just as trust companies and "near banks" do, while credit unions do not.

This is so well illustrated, Mr. Speaker, in the Royal Bank booklet. By reading a few paragraphs one can understand clearly how banks operate. I quote from page 6, paragraph 3:

> Let us assume, for instance, that the Bank of Canada buys from the public, bonds worth $8 million.
> It pays off the purchase of these bonds by issuing Bank of Canada cheques. People deposit these cheques in chartered banks. Bank deposits increase by $8 million and the chartered banks return to the Bank of Canada the cheques which it has issued and this, in turn, increases by $8 million the chartered bank balances with the Bank of Canada.

In other words, chartered banks have just been granted an $8 million cash reserve.

> Banks now have an extra $8 million in cash at their disposal, and an extra $8 million in current deposits. If banks previously had $80 million in cash at their disposal and $1 billion in deposits, they would then have $88 million in cash, (80 plus 8), and deposits totalling $1,008 million. The proportion of deposits offset by cash exceeds 8 per cent.

What is done when it exceeds 8 per cent? This is what the following paragraph shows.

> Banks may now dispose of $92 million more for loans, and their deposits will then increase by $92 million.

It is not said that banks have an extra $92 million; no, it is said that they have an extra $8 million in cash and because of this, they may, and I quote:

> Now dispose of an extra $92 million for loans, and deposits will then increase by $92 million if all their loan and bond money comes back in the form of deposits.

Another paragraph which corroborates very well the present argument.

> Therefore, this example goes to show that the purchase of bonds by the Bank of Canada for an amount totalling $8 million has caused an $8 million increase in bank funds, which has brought about a total increase of $100 million in bank deposits and, consequently, money supply.

Mr. Speaker, this information is given by a chartered bank. The Bank of Canada, in one of its monthly letters, admits that when it issues $8 million, in cash, chartered banks hasten to convert this into $100 million. They can do that. They have the $8 million and, all of a sudden, they are in a position to lend $100 million while having only $8 million. How much profit do they make? They have only $8 million, but by lending $7 million at the present rate of interest, which is 6 per cent, they lend $100 million. This nets them $6 million in interest; but they only have $8 million. Therefore, in the final analysis, they make 75 per cent profit on what they have, since they only have $8 million.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) finds that it is not enough for the banks to make 75 per cent profit on their assets. According to him that is not enough, so he will authorize them to raise the annual rate of interest on loans to 7 per cent; next there will be no ceiling on their rates of interest and, finally, by increasing their rates to 9 or 10 per cent on household commodity loans, banks can make as much as 135 or 140 per cent profit on their assets.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Mr. Speaker, to hold a bank charter is to operate the most lucrative business; yet, the Minister of Finance finds it is not enough. He will extend the banks privileges so that, as I said a moment ago, they can boost their annual profit to $476 million, without hiring one single extra employee, even without building one single extra building; overnight, that is as soon as this bill becomes law, the banks will be able to make an additional profit of $476 million annually—I think that the Minister of Finance is giving them a wonderful gift, and, in any event, at the expense of the people, as my friend, the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac (Mr. Latulippe) has just said. And who will pay for all that? That will go into the production costs and the costs will increase even more. And the minister is complaining about inflation.

Mr. Speaker, the minister should not complain because the man mainly responsible for inflation in Canada is the Minister of Finance himself; as a matter of fact, the inflation which prevails at the present time is due to tax increases. In the last three or four years, we have seen the federal government, the provincial governments, the school boards increase taxes more and more, and prices go up; the workers who want at least to keep up with the cost of living are asking for salary increases and the minister talks of inflation. But the man mainly responsible is the Minister of Finance with his continuous tax increases at the federal, provincial, municipal and schoolboard levels in the last three or four years. And with that new increase in production costs due to increased interest rates, a real period of inflation is in the offing.

The government itself will suffer the consequences because that increase in interest rates will be reflected in the first budget after the act goes into force, by an increase of $180 million in the service of the national debt.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is doing a great disservice to his country. He is betraying his country for the benefit of the banks and the few millionaires who have always made profits from dealing in money. The Minister of Finance should instead create another system; in fact, he should read that little booklet, which has only two pages and a two-page table, and then say to himself that what the chartered banks are doing, the Bank of Canada will do it too. Then the minister or the government would only have to do exactly what the chartered banks are doing, namely keep the cash reserves and multiply them by 12 or 15, as it used to be done or will be done under the new act. Then the government would no longer have to keep borrowing from the banks; it would not have to pay so much interest on the national debt; it could develop the country's economy, not by reducing the value of money but by maintaining its real value and the country would experience true prosperity instead of alternating between periods of recession and inflation.

It seems, Mr. Speaker, that the governments are unable to keep us in a happy medium, between the two; when they do not cause a recession, they bring about inflation. We jump from the frying pan into the fire. Periods of recession are always worse after periods of inflation because the money never reverts to the same level, it continues to depreciate. We alternate between the two as if it were impossible to find a happy medium, a period of prosperity without recession or inflation.

Mr. Speaker, for the reasons that I have just set forth and because I believe that this amendment to the bank act is the biggest banking and monetary hoax ever seen, I do not need to tell you that I am completely against the motion for second reading of this bill and I suggest that it should be referred back to experts for drafting with the Canadian people in mind instead of the bankers.

[English]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, other members of our party have dealt with the amendment that we proposed as being necessary to make this piece of legislation more effective and, as we all know, the amendment was ruled out of order. However, we are still of the same opinion. I will not deal with the arguments advanced by the previous speakers but I do want to mention another aspect of this question. I might mention to the minister that I will follow a more or less philosophical vein in my approach to this matter.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that the program of our party is based on our belief in the need for a mixed economy at this time in history. Of course, one can give different interpretations to those words. We believe that under the present circumstances we can best maintain freedom and work for security and equality so far as possible by the introduction of a program which provides for public ownership in certain fields, for co-operative ownership and for private ownership, all carried out as the result of government planning at all levels in participation with the people or with local groups. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, our group maintains that this measure will not be completely satisfactory or effective unless it is amended along the lines we propose.

I understand that other speakers in our group will bring forward various proposals when the bill reaches the committee stage, and I am sure the minister will listen to them. However, I also maintain that this measure affects only one aspect of banking. This measure will never be satisfactory unless it is coupled with the Bank of Canada Act and designed to serve the credit needs of all the levels of government in Canada. This measure would serve the immediate and short-term requirements of the private sector of the economy.

I should like to draw the minister's attention to the following. I have always been interested in the attitude of the Liberal party toward banking throughout our history. Not long ago I read that when Gladstone was prime minister of Great Britain he made a very interesting speech in which he recognized that the banking fraternity of Great Britain was more powerful at that time than the government. I commend that to the minister's attention. I understand that was the first time in the history of the Liberal party that a prime minister of a country like Great Britain recognized the strength of the banking fraternity compared to the government.

I remember quite well that the late Right Hon. Mackenzie King indicated that those who had control over the banking institutions of the country, those who issue currency and credit, have control over the economy. He recognized that. Quite recently I was looking at Hansard at the time the Bank of Canada was first formed. I should like to refer to the late Hon. Ian Mackenzie. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the minister might be interested to know that at the time I was vice president of the British Columbia Liberal Association Hon. Ian Mackenzie and the late Gerry McGeer were sponsors of a resolution at a provincial party convention in British Columbia in which they urged the nationalization of the banks of Canada. Of course, that was in 1932 in the depression years and they thought it was a good move at that time.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

I quote from page 4362 of Hansard, June 27, 1934, where Right Hon. Mackenzie King is reported as having said:

I should like to read again the words quoted by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. Referring to the control of credit and stating the position of the party with respect to the control of credit, I said:

"The Liberal party believes that credit is a public matter, not of interest to bankers only, but of direct concern to the average citizen. It stands for the immediate establishment of a properly constituted national central bank, to perform the functions of rediscount, and the control of currency issue, considered in terms of public need. A central bank is necessary to determine the supply of currency in relation to the domestic, social and industrial requirements of the Canadian people; and also to deal with the problems of international commerce and exchange."

• (6:00 p.m.)

Then he went on:

I desire to direct special attention to these words: "—a properly constituted national central bank—" Also:

"To perform the functions of rediscount, and the control of currency issue, considered in terms of public need."

Shall I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I am being incited to further action.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

SEAFARERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION—COMMUNICATIONS BETWEEN MARITIME TRUSTEES AND DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any communication exchanged between the Maritime Trustees, or other organizations and other persons, and the Minister of Labour or any official of the Department of Labour, with respect to the Seafarers' International Union.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I thought that with that question the motion was going to pass without any discussion, which of course is the way the government always likes to operate things. I will refrain from reading the motion again because you have just done so, but may I at the outset say that it is not my usual course to expose to the glare of publicity the private or inner affairs of any organization. The internal operation and functioning of a voluntary, private group of people such as those embraced by trade unions should be the affair of that organization alone. To drag out into the glaring light of publicity such affairs, with all the misinterpretations that can flow from such action, is a course to which I do not normally subscribe. However, in this situation the circumstances of history are peculiar and I think necessitate a more formal and public disclosure of some of the activities of the Seafarers' International Union than would otherwise be the case.

The public first became involved through government action in this matter when the government headed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) appointed Mr. Justice Norris as a royal commissioner to inquire into certain matters in which the Seafarers' International Union were involved. The hearings of that commission ranged over a long period of time, and some people make the direct accusation that partly because of the responsibility of the commissioner himself and partly because of his bias and prejudice the hearings resulted in the blackening and defaming not only of the organization itself but of a number of individuals within it whether or not there was justification for this sort of defamation. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, and in addition to the royal commission of inquiry and all of the publicity attached thereto, certain members of parliament, some of whom do not sit too far away from me, seem to have delighted themselves in harassing both the union and the individuals within it, or individuals who used to be within it, which again is a sort of public involvement in the affairs of an organization of individuals.

Parliament also became involved in the operations of the Seafarers' International Union and other unions when it passed a law establishing a trusteeship to take over and conduct the affairs of certain unions, a trusteeship, incidentally, which I understand expires at the end of this year unless the government takes action to keep it in existence.

It might be well to note that our position on this question is shown by a bill which I have on the order paper seeking to repeal the maritime trusteeship act immediately without waiting for its normal death at the end of this year. By repealing this act we will thus remove the possibility that the government, as a result of pressure from sources unknown, may seek to extend the term of office of the trustees.

Because of the publicity attached to the operations of the Seafarers' International Union there have arisen a number of false accusations, smears and innuendos on the part of individuals with particular axes to grind, either because they have become upset at not having won election within the Seafarers' International Union or for some other reason. These people have solicited the aid of members of parliament who have used the floor of this House of Commons to carry out a persistent attack.

This attack, which has been diminishing in recent months, has caused so much concern to the union itself—as I say, most of these accusations are false and are innuendos made for particular and narrow purposes—that it has had a deleterious effect upon the employees of shipping companies as well as a damaging effect upon the well-being, the welfare, the wages, hours and working conditions of sailors. This is because the organization to which they belong has been hampered and harassed by the spate of accusations which have poured forth as a result of public and government involvement in this one private organization. There is no question, Mr. Speaker, that certain ship owners rub their hands with glee at such a situation, and I am told they have been responsible in part for financing the continued tirade against this particular group.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I am not one of those who believe in delving into the private affairs of organizations but things have got to the point where I think it is necessary to bring out into public light, as the motion requests, any communications exchanged between the maritime trustees, the group established by this parliament to be responsible for administering the affairs of certain unions operating on the seaway and in waterfront areas, or any other organizations and persons, and the Minister of Labour or any official of the Department of Labour, with respect to the Seafarers' International Union so they can be exposed now to public scrutiny. In this way we can discover, if it is possible to discover, whether in the opinion of the maritime trustees there was any wrongdoing on the part of individuals. If there was wrongdoing on the part of individuals, then the responsibility devolves on the Minister of Justice to take corrective action, to engage in any necessary litigation in order to punish those who may have been involved in wrongdoing, and also to see that those whose names have been smeared from one end of the country to the other are cleared by the exposing of information which the maritime trustees have had at their disposal. They have been the administrators of the union.

The purpose of the motion is to seek to make public these documents purely for the purpose of clearing those who are innocent and, if there are any who are guilty, to disclose the extent of their guilt so that all can see what has occurred. In that way one can insist that the government take the necessary corrective action to deal with those individuals if they have done anything contrary to the Criminal Code which requires prosecution.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to rise on this occasion to speak on the motion for papers presented by the hon. member for Skeena. I will preface my remarks by going to the meat of the motion at the outset. The hon. member is asking:

> That an order of the house do issue for a copy of any communication exchanged between the Maritime Trustees, or other organizations and other persons, and the Minister of Labour or any official of the Department of Labour, with respect to the Seafarers' International Union.

May I preface my remarks by saying that this is that part of the supper hour used for private members' business. At this time we study private bills and motions. I hope no one will say that we ought to be getting on with the business of the house. I want to make sure that my remarks are understood, because if I did not speak on this subject in private members' hour somebody else would.

An hon. Member: Nobody is interested.

Mr. Woolliams: I support the motion but not the reasons for production given by the hon. member for Skeena. In his argument he mentioned the fact that there were members sitting not far away who knew about these matters. He sought by innuendo to malign certain people who have been interested in the operations of the Seafarers' International Union. He used the opportunity given by the House of Commons to malign those people. I assumed he was talking about the member for Bow River, the member who continually asked questions about Hal Banks.

Mr. Howard: Do not presume too much.

Mr. Woolliams: My hon. friend from Skeena has said I should not presume too much. If I am wrong in my presumption I would ask him to stand up and say that my presumption is wrong and I will go to another argument. Unless he does so, I shall continue with the line of argument I have in mind.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, far be it for me to interrupt the hon. gentleman, even at his own request.

Mr. Woolliams: I never thought there was another minister of external affairs in the house. I now know that there is another hon. member with the same qualifications.

First, I want to deal with the report of Mr. Justice Norris, who was an independent commissioner. Nowhere has it been suggested, even if he had political affiliations, as some judges have, that he had any affiliation with the S.I.U. I am certain that whatever finding he made about Hal Banks, the past president of the S.I.U., and about any other president of the S.I.U., such finding was not made because he was a Liberal, a Conservative or because he belonged to some other party.

After hearing the witnesses, reviewing the evidence before the commission and reading the documents, Mr. Justice Norris came to the conclusion—I do not have the report with me at the moment though I have read it on several occasions—that Hal Banks—and there is some proof of this fact because he had been convicted in the criminal courts of this country—had a criminal record as long as my arm and that he had come to this country under very unusual circumstances. I do not mind putting those on record. I think the Minister of Transport knows something of this.

Hal Banks was brought in because the government of the day wanted to kill the Communist movement in the unions in Canada. So they brought in a man who had a criminal record as long as my arm. In reviewing the activities of the union one finds that Hal Banks while he was president, and in spite of his unusual investment of union funds, accomplished certain things. I will not use the privilege of immunity in the House of Commons in order to slander anybody. I will not go into details. My hon. friend from Skeena and others in the House of Commons Commons know what these unusual things were.

The judge described Banks in certain terms. He described him as a criminal, a barbarian and a hooligan who would stop at nothing for his own ends and who used the union for his own advantage.

I am one of those who believe that the unions of this country certainly deserve better leadership. They have a serious responsibility to the workers and they deserve better leadership than Banks or Hoffa or others like them gave. The documents in question might show that to be so. It was recommended in the report that Hal Banks be prosecuted for certain offences. That report was laid before this house shortly before our defeat as a government.

When the new government came in, because of pressure and probing from this side of the house Hal Banks was finally prosecuted. He was found guilty by a court of this country. He then filed an appeal. He got out on bail under very unusual circumstances and escaped to the United States. It turns out that the offence for which he was convicted is one of those to which extradition does not apply.

In this session of parliament, and I am not talking about the past few days since the adjournment but about the session from the beginning, I have continually asked the Minister of Justice why, when there is evidence that Hal Banks is guilty of a crime, he is not charged with that particular crime. I have asked why he is not charged and brought back to Canada by extradition proceedings.

The present Minister of Justice, the past minister of justice and the minister of justice before that have argued or suggested, especially the present Minister of Justice, that they cannot get the documents from the files of the Supreme Court of Canada. We are talking about documents that should be produced having to do with the trustees and the officers of the S.I.U. The minister says that they are having difficulty.

• (6:20 p.m.)

What I suggest is happening now is that because of the atmosphere surrounding the Hal Banks investigation the Liberal party—there is certainly some atmosphere in this regard because of the manner in which Banks was brought into the country and the questions which were left off his application, giving him the right to come into this country—does not want him back. So the Minister of Justice is hiding under a cloak. He says he cannot get the documents from the Supreme Court of Canada. Why does he not lay charges, bring Banks back into the country and proceed with the appeal, if it has not already lapsed, so that Banks can start serving the five years which I believe he was given for the offence of which he was convicted? He is one of the few Canadians who has been found by a high court judge to be a hooligan, a barbarian, to have committed fraud against a union, and then to have been given bail, allowed to escape and remain in the United States.

Mr. Byrne: The same old record.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, the same old argument. The argument will never change. I can understand why the hon. member says "the same old record". It is because he does not wish to see laid bare before the House of Commons the charges which have been made with regard to certain contributions made by Hal Banks and the S.I.U. to the Liberal party. He does not want it to be brought out before the House of Commons that the application relating to Banks' admission to Canada was typed in a cabinet minister's office and that the question whether Banks had a criminal record was omitted from the application. I can understand why members opposite want to heckle me. The hon. member said this was the same old speech. Well, it is the same old Hal Banks, the same old hooligan and the same old barbarian. That answers the heckling over there.

I suggest that the Minister of Justice might tell the House of Commons in the course of the next few days that he has got these documents from the files of the Supreme Court of Canada and that they show Banks to have committed another criminal offence in Canada which would make him liable to extradition and forcible return to this country.

I shall pursue another line of thought. When the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) talks about individuals being maligned, surely he is not telling us, as a union man, that the kind of leaders he wants in the unions are men like Hal Banks and McLaughlin? The hon. member says Banks was a victim of prejudice and bias. I would like the hon. member to show me any evidence that there was any bias as far as Mr. Justice Norris was concerned in regard to the S.I.U.

Mr. Howard: Evidently the hon. member did not listen to what I said.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry. I listened carefully to what the hon. member said and if I am wrong I hope he will correct me. As I understand it, he said the judge showed some bias.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member needs a little lecture on facts. What I said was there were some people who claimed that Judge Norris was biased and prejudiced and that he expressed that bias and prejudice by the way in which he handled the commission.

Mr. Woolliams: That is an old trick of the trade, to say you have listened to experts and are merely using their words in the House of Commons. I was not born yesterday. It is an old trick to say: I am not going to say that but I heard a dirty little rumour to that effect. I should like the hon. member to tell us whether in his opinion there was bias and prejudice.

Mr. Howard: I will say this to the hon. member: I have not the ability to pore over the report and look for ways and means of carrying out smear by innuendo. Mr. Harold Banks is not the person I am speaking about. There are others. If the hon. member wants to carry on in this way seeking to destroy something which is worth while, that is his business. But I do not intend to be taken in by his legal gobbledegook. If he wants me to become involved in explaining to the House the relationship between his party and some individual contributors and the nefarious way in which contributions are made to his party I will be glad to do so because I have the information available, but I do not want to become involved—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member is using the tactics he used five minutes ago. To answer his interruption I will say this: there is a by-election being fought in Alberta, in Pincher Creek. Social Credit are running, the Liberals are running, the Conservatives are running and the N.D.P. are running. But the N.D.P. is the only party which is using six paid organizers from the union organization every day throughout the election. These are the contributions which people should know about.

Surely the hon. member for Skeena is not sensitive about the subject of Hal Banks. If he is, it is a pity, because I intend to say a few more words about Mr. Banks and Mr. McLaughlin in reference to the leadership of the S.I.U. I want to say these things because they are based on facts.

The hon. member has to use the method of operating a smear campaign against my speech hoping he will get a small headline saying that the member for Bow River is trying to smear poor old honest Hal Banks. Isn't that a comedy? Poor old honest Hal Banks, the man who was sentenced and who escaped across the border. They knew he was going to escape but he got bail. I am sorry I have hurt the sensitivity of the hon. member for Skeena with his affection for men like Hal Banks and McLaughlin whom Mr. Justice Norris described by the adjectives I have already used.

Mr. Howard: Do not use such scurvy tactics.

Mr. Woolliams: I shall not allow myself to be tempted to get down to the hon. member's level because I have never been expelled from this House of Commons, as he has been because of the adjectives he used.

Mr. Howard: More scurvy tricks.

Mr. Woolliams: I realize the Liberals would like me to take on a fight with my good friend from Skeena. I am not surprised. They are all in the same position. I was heckled by a member from British Columbia, one of the parliamentary secretaries who is close to the Department of Labour, so I am not surprised they are in the same boat.

Of course, I have always said that eventually all socialists will be on one side of the House, one or the other. That will be good for the country because we could then bring them out from hiding. I see one of them on the other side who might be in hiding. He is smiling.

[Mr. Howard.]

An hon. Member: We are all smiling.

• (6:30 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad you can smile. The whole story of Hal Banks is a serio-comedy. I shall ask one question before I sit down. I should like to hear the Minister of Justice tell us that they have the document from the Supreme Court of Canada, they have the evidence on which to lay a charge against Banks, and that they will bring him back to Canada to serve the sentence he is facing now together with a concurrent sentence if he is convicted in another court. Without that kind of fairness, equity and law, we shall have played ducks and drakes with the system of administration in this country. I have asked for this. I have continually pressed for it, and these documents may show it.

I shall end with one last thought. When the trustees were brought before the committee we wanted to examine them to discover whether fair methods had been used in the election of McLaughlin to the presidency of the S.I.U. But one of the trustees returned to British Columbia. He was a judge and he was not examined.

Another witness did not give evidence. The chairman of the committee ruled against us securing the documents so that we were never able to get the real story about the S.I.U. and about the election of McLaughlin, who was a pal of Banks and was painted in the same terms by Justice Norris. I would like to have those documents produced and others as well because I believe they would tell a beautiful story.

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, when we started private members' hour at six o'clock I had great hopes that we might stick almost religiously to the issue before us, namely, the notice of motion for the production of correspondence between the trustees, the Department of Labour and other departments, but predictably the contributions so far, particularly that of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams), have revolved around that member's favourite subject, Hal Banks.

I have to admire the tenacity of the hon. member because ever since I came to this house in 1962 he has made it his personal responsibility at every opportunity to pass opinions on the merits of Hal Banks. I do not think anybody in this chamber needs to be convinced that Hal Banks was an undesirable addition to the labour force of Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: Good.

Mr. Mackasey: Nor do I think the hon. member is revealing any secrets when he suggests that Banks was brought into this country in the mid-fifties with the collusion of the government and the labour movement, including Mr. Jodoin and others, for a specific purpose, to clean up a rather unsavoury situation that existed at that time. That has been said before in the house and I am not denying it, but I would prefer to talk about the question of the production of these papers rather than about the subject matter about which the hon. member of Bow River has spoken at great length.

I am sure the hon. member remembers another occasion when he and I discussed the same issue during the debate on the estimates of the Department of Justice earlier this year, when the former minister of justice, the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton), participated in that debate very constructively and objectively.

I asked the question why, since Mr. Banks' crimes were public knowledge, particularly in shipping and union circles, as a result of the courageous declarations of Captain Walsh and other people, the minister of justice between 1959 and 1962 did not bring Banks before a court of law. As a matter of fact, the Norris commission was set up by the minister of labour in the Conservative government two months after the general election in 1962.

I am not questioning the motives of the then minister as to why he waited so long, because I have the highest regard for the present hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr). The former minister of justice, the hon. member for Kamloops, admitted quite frankly, that it is one thing to know of the escapades of Hal Banks and another one to prosecute him with any degree of certainty that the prosecution would be successful.

As recorded at page 11407 of Hansard for February 17, 1965, the former member for Carleton asked a series of questions about reports on the conduct of Hal Banks. His first question was:

Did the department of Justice, in 1958—

The date is significant.

—through the R.C.M.P., conduct an investigation to determine if Hal Banks had been employing intimidation and violence in the furtherance of union activities?

The answer was:

Yes. In November, 1958, the Minister of Justice instructed the R.C.M.P. to conduct an exploratory investigation—

The second question was:

Did the government on February 23, 1959—

Again the Conservative government.

—as a result of the aforementioned investigation, receive a full account of the conspiracy which resulted in the Walsh beatings?

The answer was:

The R.C.M.P. advise that on February 23, 1959, they forwarded a preliminary report to the Minister of Justice, under secret cover, outlining the findings of their investigation into the activities of Hal Banks, which included an account of the conspiracy to beat Captain Walsh.

In 1959 the minister of justice of the previous government was informed by the R.C.M.P. of the evidence available from Captain Walsh as to the alleged beating by Hal Banks.

The third question was:

Was any action taken by the government of that day to bring Banks to trial as a result of that evidence?

The simple answer to that question was no. Another question was:

Was another report, which included a further account of the Walsh conspiracy, sent on June 14, 1961, to the government by the Department of Justice?

The answer to that question was:

The R.C.M.P. advise that on June 14, 1961, they forwarded a further report to the Minister of Justice, under secret cover, which enlarged on their findings with respect to Hal Banks and the general picture of the S.I.U. activities, including further information with respect to the beating of Captain Walsh.

Mr. Prud'homme: Was the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) here then?

Mr. Mackasey: I do not know where the hon. member was in those years, but the important point is that the R.C.M.P. did report on the activities of Hal Banks to the previous government in 1959 and again in 1961, and the minister of justice of that time, after receiving those reports, still felt there was not sufficient evidence to bring Hal Banks to trial.

I for one do not question the motives and integrity of the previous minister of justice. I think he made his decision and his finding in good faith and with the full knowledge that the senior officials of his department placed at his disposal. When we get into this kind of thing—

Mr. Prud'homme: Did he report to the prime minister?

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of privilege with reference to the former minister of justice, and I know the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) would want to be fair in this regard. He read the Norris commission report, and I point out that at a commission hearing you can examine and cross-examine witnesses. On the other hand, the hon. member knows that in a prosecution you cannot cross-examine your own witnesses, and it was only after the Norris commission was established that witnesses were able to come forth and volunteer to give evidence.

It was because witnesses volunteered, as a result of the Norris commission, that the legal officers of the department were able to lay a charge against Banks. This type of thing is total misrepresentation. I have heard it on political platforms and I have heard it previously in this house, and it is no answer to the question of why a charge was not laid by the previous minister of justice at that time. This is not being fair to him.

The fact is that until the commission was set up witnesses were scared. People had had rocks thrown through their windows. They lived in terror. This was the rule of the hooligan, but as soon as the commission was set up witnesses volunteered to come forward because they could have the kind of protection that would allow them to tell the truth, the truth which finally convicted this man and forced him to flee to the United States. I want to raise that point of privilege on behalf of the former minister of justice who is not here.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Mr. Mackasey: After having listened to the second speech of the hon. member I might say that I agree with him but he did not give me the opportunity to continue to read Hansard.

Mr. Woolliams: I heard your speech before.

Mr. Mackasey: And I heard yours before; they are as stereotyped as usual. I was going to go on to say that on that particular date in February I raised the specific argument I am raising now in front of the then minister of justice. I was very satisfied, and that is no reflection on the man. He pointed out to me that he could not prosecute Hal Banks before for the very reason the hon. member stated, and which I had intended to state if he had held on a little longer. Certainly as a result of his most just explanation to me I understand there is more flexibility and freedom given to a royal commission than to a court of law, but it still makes us wonder when we know that it took four years—and we are not passing judgment on the minister—from the first report of the R.C.M.P. in 1958 to institute the royal commission to look into the affairs of the S.I.U. and Banks.

I do not think any party in this house can wash its hands of Hal Banks. We are all guilty, if we are guilty of anything, including the party of the hon. member for Bow River, and I am surprised that he brings it up because I think that on balance his party is equally vulnerable if not more so.

I should like to get off the subject of Hal Banks because that is not the point the hon. member for Skeena brought up. The hon. member for Skeena has shown partiality with regard to the affairs of the S.I.U., and I commend him for it. The S.I.U. plays a big part in the labour movement and it does not have to hang its head in shame. It is doing an excellent job at the moment. In co-operation with the trustees it has restored peace on the waterfront. I hope the day is not too far away when the S.I.U. will be free of the shackles of the trusteeship. That is not my decision to make. It will have to be made in the light of the report of the trustees who may make that recommendation at the end of this year. That is incidental.

I also commend the reasons the hon. member for Skeena presented, namely, that he wanted these papers to clear the names of certain persons. I would suggest humbly to the hon. member for Skeena that there is no agitation any longer. We have peace on the waterfront and Red McLaughlin, regardless of how Judge Norris castigated him, is at this very moment doing an adequate and satisfactory job, under the supervision of the trusteeship, as head of the S.I.U.

There is something more fundamental, and I think this really is what the motion is all about. I refer to the advisability of producing papers which are the property of the trustees. I think that as one of the better known lawyers of this country the hon. member for Bow River could have done a service to members such as myself and others if he had explained the rights of the trustees and how the very word "trust" or "trusteeship" is going to have any effect or validity in operation if we are going to destroy that trust which is implicit in the mandate of the trusteeship by taking confidential documents and correspondence between the Department of Labour and the trustees in respect of the findings by the R.C.M.P. and their criticism of the S.I.U. and make them public periodically whenever anybody, well-intentioned or otherwise, asks for these documents. In that way the whole principle of the trusteeship would be destroyed.

The hon. member for Skeena did mention that it is not his normal practice to demand that the normal dealings of people, unions or business be made public for everybody to peruse, but he feels there are circumstances here which are more important involving the clearing of the names of certain individuals. I disagree with him. I think the whole question of the production of papers is a very contentious point under our parliamentary system. I have said this before. In this house we follow a pattern half way between the British and Swedish systems. I am sure most members are familiar with both systems. In Britain, as you know, the whole philosophy behind the production of papers is that everything is secret and only under exceptional circumstances are private papers or documents brought to public attention. The secrecy is so binding that not only does it apply to members of the House of Commons and members of the House of Lords but even to contractors who are doing jobs for the government in Great Britain. On the other hand, Sweden has a different philosophy and perhaps a more logical one in that everything is public with the exception of certain categories which are secret.

In Sweden they carry this to a logical conclusion, even to the extreme that in the cities of Sweden today, whether you are a newspaperman, a private citizen or a trade union man, you can go into large rooms in certain public buildings and demand or request, just like you do in a city library here, documents which under our system are considered secret. But even under this advanced method of dealing with documents and production of papers there are certain categories—four, if I recall accurately—which are considered to be secret and confidential and which cannot under normal circumstances be made public. The papers of the trusteeship fall into one of these categories. Therefore under the British system you would not get the papers and under the Swedish system, of which I approve because it spells out the conditions and categories in which papers are or are not available, papers such as the hon. member for Skeena has requested in good faith are not available.

The hon. member for Bow River talked about the committee on industrial relations and stated that the chairman refused to submit all papers. By a strange coincidence I was the chairman. I remember the situation very well. The hon. member for Bow River said I blocked off all access to all papers, but that is not the fact. As a matter of fact, in respect of the request by certain members of my own party I took the stand that certain documents should not be made public. I ruled against those hon. members, including I think one who will be speaking this evening. When it came to the specific papers which originated from the trustees I ruled, and I would rule again if I were in the same position, that you cannot have a trusteeship if you are going to take its papers and make them public. I am surprised that the hon. member for Bow River, who is a very experienced and senior member of the bar, should, of all speakers, not want to protect the rights of the trustees. I would think he would want to commend the fact that these papers are private.

The hon. member mentioned the fact that labour people are running around the country working for the New Democratic party. What about it? Labour in this country has the right to support whichever party it likes. Labour has as much right to support a political party as has big business to support the hon. member for Bow River. I see nothing wrong with that, nor do I see anything wrong with labour contributing to political parties just as big business contributes to the party of the hon. member for Bow River or any other party.

Since when has labour been denied the rights which other organizations have in this country? All of a sudden these contributions are bad because they came from one Hal Banks.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the hon. member permit—

Mr. Mackasey: I have listened to your speeches before.

Mr. Woolliams: Would you permit one little question?

• (6:50 p.m.)

Mr. Mackasey: Certainly I will.

Mr. Woolliams: Do you agree with the union system whereby deductions are made from the pay cheques of union members and then sent to political parties?

Mr. Mackasey: No, I do not.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad to hear that. That answers the question.

Mr. Mackasey: It does not answer the question. I do not approve of certain things that happen within the labour movement whereby weekly deductions are made from pay cheques and sent to specific political parties. I do not agree with that and I venture to suggest that most of the members of the party to which I belong do not agree with it. The situation to which I refer was adopted as a result of a majority vote of the members of a specific union. It is to the everlasting credit of the labour movement in this country that its members, when they go to the polls and stand behind the screen, vote freely and according to their own beliefs. They do so because they feel that whoever they vote for will represent their best interests. If they vote for the labour member in Verdun they vote for me because I represent their point of view in this House of Commons, and I represent the labour line. I am becoming very impatient with people who continuously attack the labour movement in this country. Someone seems to be getting up every day attacking the S.I.U. and the railway unions, insinuating that something is wrong with labour unions and that everybody who belongs to the labour movement is a Hal Banks or a Jimmy Hoffa. These attacks are unfair to the labour unions. If these people wish to support the N.D.P. in good spirit they should do so through voluntary contributions. Surely that is a lot better than having big businessmen hiding in their offices and feeling that because they have sent $5,000 or $10,000 to one political party they have done their duty as Canadian citizens.

Let me return to the issue at hand, namely, should we or should we not produce the particular papers which the hon. member for Skeena has requested? Let me state to that hon. member that I hope he will withdraw his request because I do not think it is in the best interests of the S.I.U. and the labour movement generally to produce—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted for his speech has now expired. I recognize the hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Did you take into consideration the time taken by the tirade of the hon. member for Bow River?

[Mr. Mackasey.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Yes. We do have three clocks in this chamber and I also have the assistance of the Clerk in keeping track of the time used by members.

Mr. Mackasey: I was referring to the time taken by the hon. member for Bow River during his interruptions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I have taken all the interruptions into consideration.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be allowed to rise on a question of privilege before the hon. member for Trois-Rivières begins. Somebody on the other side will obviously talk this motion out and I think we might as well allow the hon. member for Verdun to do so as he seems so anxious to carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I do not believe the hon. member for Skeena has a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, as an independent member, I must admit it is not exactly edifying to hear both official parties telling each other that they cannot wash their hands of the responsibilities concerning the Hal Banks' case. I am also under the impression that this discussion will not add to the credit of the two old traditional parties so far as public opinion in Canada is concerned.

As for me, I was extremely pleased to see, for instance, that duel, that fencing bout between the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams); both are brilliant parliamentarians but I think that is about all the usefulness of such a debate, for one must keep in mind the old French saying, which goes like this: Let sleeping dogs lie.

That Hal Banks' affair has been evil-smelling from beginning to end. I think it most desirable for the Canadian people to forget about it and even to forget about Hal Banks.

I do not think there would be advantage in spending money to have him returned here; the farther he will be the better for everyone concerned.

I cannot support the motion and I cannot support either the assertions—clever perhaps—which leave a rather strange taste of blame concerning the Norris inquiry.

I followed personally with deep interest, from beginning to end, the situation at the time of the extreme troubles caused by the S.I.U. I was then mayor of my municipality and I saw in my hometown union organizers knocking people with baseball bats; I saw them terrorize part of our people. I had to threaten the vice president of that union with the sanctions provided by the Riot Act. I had to order that about 40 persons be put in jail, I think, in an attempt to maintain law and order in my municipality.

I then have reason to say that the Norris inquiry has been worthwhile and has been well conducted. I think the production of all that correspondence would add nothing at all to the matter involved because, first of all, it may be used by politicians of various affiliations to continue making insinuations on the hustings, only to complicate the situation. I will object therefore to the production of these documents perhaps not for the reasons already mentioned here tonight, but to end those smear tactics and deal with more constructive matters.

Before resuming my seat, if I am allowed to express a comment as an independent member of this house, I do not think that the supporters of any party in the house, have any advantage in smearing one another, as they do, in recalling contributions to election coffers coming from individuals of questionable and sometimes alarming reputation. That would not enhance the parties at all and it would be better to hide those matters under the cover of discretion and deal instead with constructive legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude my remarks by saying that it is seven o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The hour for private members' business being expired, the house will now revert to the business interrupted at six o'clock.

[English]

BANK ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for the second reading of Bill No. C-222, respecting banks and banking.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, when we called it six o'clock in order to consider private members' business I was quoting from a speech made by Right Hon. Mackenzie King on June 27, 1936. This quotation is to be found at page 4362 of Hansard for that date. I should now like to quote briefly from that page. Mr. King stated:

> Note "in terms of public need" not possible private gain.

Later he said, speaking on the same subject:

> The Bank of Canada, as constituted by this proposed enactment, will undoubtedly be the means of vesting in the Bank of England—

At this time that should be changed to the New York exchange. I continue:

> —the management and control of Canada's foreign exchange and Canada's internal credit administration. As I said the other evening, once a nation parts with the control of its currency and credit, it matters not who makes the nation's laws. Usury, once in control, will wreck any nation. Until the control of the issue of currency and credit is restored to government and recognized as its most conspicuous and sacred responsibility, all talk of the sovereignty of parliament and of democracy is idle and futile. Those are strong words; they constitute a strong argument and they are words of which this house ought to take full account before it is too late.

As I said before, Right Hon. Mackenzie King mentioned the Bank of England but because of the change in circumstances we should substitute the New York exchange.

I found that even the Conservative party took a similar point of view and I wish to quote briefly from a speech made on April 2, 1935 as recorded at page 2323 of Hansard for that date. Mr. Stevens was then the member for Kootenay East and he is recorded as having said:

> Why in the name of heaven do we not go to work? I will tell you why—because the credit of the country is in the control of a very small number of men and is not actually available except at costs that are too high or on conditions that are too onerous.

So here we have a former minister of the Conservative administration making the same criticisms of the banking system in this country. My speech will be dealing briefly with a package deal, as it were, namely, the relationship of this bill to the Bank of Canada Act and the Industrial Development Bank Act.

An amendment was moved by one of the members of this party because after serious consideration we thought it would do something to improve the effectiveness of the bill. However the amendment was ruled out of order. I am sure the minister knows—we know—that there is considerable dissatisfaction in his own ranks with the terms of this bill.

Mr. Boulanger: How do you know? You are guessing.

Mr. Herridge: Well, people express themselves freely in a free parliament—behind the curtains. The government has refused to accept our amendment and I believe it lost an opportunity, by not accepting it, to debate the points raised in the amendment. I believe the amendment, if carried, would have made some sections of the bill more effective. In spite of the remarks made by Right Hon. Mackenzie King and Mr. Stevens, a former minister of a Conservative government, and others, governments at all levels in this country continue to raise loans in the United States, because that is the place to go at the present time and under the present circumstances.

As I see it, under this bill the private banks provide the capital for the day to day requirements of persons and industry in this country, usually on a reasonably short-term basis. That is the purpose of the bill, as I understand it. We all know that the banks do not lend the investors' money. It is very often said that they lend the money persons have deposited in the banks. We all know that they create capital by bookkeeping entries. That is recognized. Mr. Mackenzie King recognized that, as anyone can see who has read that speech in full, and others that he made.

We should combine these three pieces of banking legislation. As I see it, the Bank of Canada should provide the social capital required for all levels of government, based on our natural resources, our industrial equipment and on the capacity of the Canadian people to produce. That is the way credit is issued in the United States. It is issued on no other basis.

We cannot understand why we cannot use the Bank of Canada, as one segment of our banking system, to this effect. This social capital would provide the opportunity for the building of highways, hospitals, schools, parks and the carrying on of socialized industries and other services. That is the way this capital is raised at the present time, and I think it is most unfortunate—

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps the hon. member would pardon my interrupting his speech. It seems to me that when we formed the government we always had at least 20 members in the house, particularly if we wanted to pass some legislation. There are five Liberal members on the other side of the chamber, and there is not a quorum in the house now.

Mr. Byrne: You did not sit during the dinner hour.

Mr. Herridge: I think the hon. gentleman is splitting hairs in the particular circumstances under which we are operating.

Mr. Nugent: I did not think a reference to a lack of quorum was splitting hairs, certainly if the government is interested in this legislation. I never saw a time when we formed the government when we did not make sure that we had enough members in the house to ensure a quorum, no matter whether opposition members were present or not. If this business is worth carrying out and the government believes in what it is trying to do, I would think the government ought to make sure it has enough members in the house to enable it to carry on the business before the house. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the rules require a certain number of members to be present before we can carry on our business.

Mr. Byrne: The hon. member may be interested to know that there are only four Conservative members in the house at the present time; and I would point out that during the years the Conservative party was in power we did not sit during the dinner hour.

Mr. Nugent: I do not think it matters that the government has now changed the rules and finds itself unable to cope with the rules it has passed. A quorum is 20 members, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members know what the situation is so far as the quorum is concerned. I think that by tradition, custom and practice the Chair does not raise the matter of a quorum of its own initiative. Particularly since we have dispensed with the dinner hour the practice has been that no pressure is exercised either by members on the Chair or by the Chair on members to call attention to the lack of a quorum in the house. That is why this was not done in the present instance; although I might mention to the hon.

member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) that we appeared to have a quorum a few moments ago.

Mr. Byrne: Yes; and the Conservatives are behind the curtain.

Mr. Churchill: Don't blame it on the Conservatives. What is the government doing?

Mr. Speaker: I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members standing order 3, which says:

(1) The presence of at least 20 members of the house, including Mr. Speaker, shall be necessary to constitute a meeting of the house for the exercise of its powers.

(2) Whenever Mr. Speaker adjourns the house for want of a quorum, the time of the adjournment, and the names of the members then present, shall be inserted in the Journal.

I am wondering whether this is what members of the house want at this time. I must say that I have some doubt whether any good purpose would be served at this time by counting the members in the house, taking down the names of those who are here and indirectly recording the names of those who are not here. If this is what the house wants to have done, we will do so.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, the rule which established our sitting during the supper hour was not one that I favoured. The government had this rule passed, and I think they have a duty to make sure, because they were in favour of it, that they have sufficient members here to enable the business to be carried on. If the government are unable to carry on their business under the rules which they insisted upon, then I insist upon the rules being carried out.

Mr. Speaker: The only other thing I can do for the benefit of this house is read citation 60 of Beauchesne:

Any member may direct the Speaker's attention to the fact that there is not a quorum present. The Speaker will proceed at once to count the house, and if there are not 20 members present, including himself, the Clerk will take down the names, and the Speaker will then adjourn the house without question first put until the usual hour on the next sitting day.

I hope hon. members realize that what they are proposing now is a rather serious procedure. They are proposing the adjournment of the house until tomorrow. If this is what the hon. members I see around me at the moment want to do, I will ask the Clerk to count the members and make a record of those present in the house.

Mr. Nugent: May I ask you to proceed to do that, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: I think we have a quorum.

On the count being made 21 members were declared to be present.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) has the floor.

Mr. Herridge: Apparently, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman suffers from poor eyesight.

Mr. Churchill: There was no quorum for half an hour, and you know it.

Mr. Byrne: There were 20 members here all through.

Mr. Churchill: That is not true, and you know it.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. I feel rather wounded that the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) should think it necessary to bring to the attention of this house what is an apparent infirmity of mine. I admit that I usually wear glasses, and I forgot them tonight. But I was perfectly capable of counting about 12 members in the house when I brought this matter to the Speaker's attention.

Mr. Herridge: When the interruption occurred I was dealing with the question of the issuing of credit by the private banks, and I dealt with the function of the Bank of Canada as part of our banking system. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, if we were to have a Bank of Canada Act that provided for the issuing of the credit requirements of all levels of government in this country for the social purposes I have mentioned, we would have laid a solid foundation, a sound foundation, in this respect. We would hope that the Bank Act could be amended to serve the needs of persons and private industry in this country, and that it would be agreed that the Industrial Development Bank would meet the needs of small industry in Canada. If these three pieces of legislation were coupled together we would achieve a certain philosophical approach to our financial system and would lay the foundation for a sound financial system and a more equitable economic society. And in doing this, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister would agree with me that we would also be doing something fundamental for the control of inflation in this country in the years ahead.

Bank Act

● (7:10 p.m.)

My comments have been made on a rather philosophical basis, and I tied the three pieces of legislation together, but I do think, Mr. Speaker, that we have to approach our financial problems along these lines if we are to have a sound financial system and an equitable distribution of wealth in this country.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in summing up the debate I would like to thank those hon. members who have contributed to it, and in particular the hon. member who made philosophical comments which I enjoyed very much. It did seems to me that a good many of the quotations that he gave us related to the necessity for institutions that have since been established, such as the Bank of Canada, and that some of the fears that were expressed by those statesmen of long ago have been met by our modern financial machinery.

I do also want to thank the members of the house for their restraint, because one point most hon. members seemed to be agreed on was that it is highly desirable to approve this bill on second reading and to get it before the standing committee where testimony can be taken from bankers, from experts and from the public in general.

As might be expected, even in the brief speeches which have been made on second reading of this bill, there has been a good deal of repetition of what was said when the resolution was under discussion, but some new points were also made.

I would like to congratulate particularly the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) for his contribution. It is not often that members of this house are prepared to modify their views in the light of the discussion and in the light of their reflection upon the legislation as presented to the house. It was very gratifying to me as the minister sponsoring this bill to find the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands saying the following among other things: "There are compelling arguments for the removal of the 6 per cent limit, and again, "While, as I say, there are compelling reasons for its removal I have not found an economist who would dispute that statement".

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not say this in any way to gloat—not at all. I understand perfectly well that the hon. member was saying a good deal more than that he agreed there were compelling arguments for removing the 6 per cent ceiling. I congratulate him because I think he has come to realize, as some of us who have been pondering this problem over some time, including the royal commissioners and other economists in this country, that whatever the 6 per cent ceiling on the bank interest rate did, it did not control the interest rates in this country. Therefore I felt that this was a most useful contribution to an understanding of the situation in which we now find ourselves.

The hon. member of course went on, as did some of his colleagues in the same party, to suggest that the Bank of Canada should be given power to regulate the rate of interest on loans and deposits. I do not agree with this suggestion but I can understand the reasons for it. I think it does mark an advance in the thinking of his party, that no longer are they concentrating on what I have always regarded as an obsolete and ineffective section of our present banking legislation, namely, the ceiling on bank interest rates.

I agree with several hon. members who have said that interest rates throughout the world are higher than is desirable. I said that in this house on September 8, and I said it in Washington. My views were echoed by almost every minister of finance in the civilized world. There has been undue reliance upon monetary policy, and I do hope that those who share my views and the views of other ministers of finance around the world will be equally prepared to support the kind of fiscal policies that are a better alternative.

I do not believe we can keep the rate of interest down by controls. It has been admitted in this house that to keep the rate of interest down by a 6 per cent ceiling on bank interest rates is not effective; neither do I think it would be effective to keep the general rate of interest down by law. What is important is to get a proper balance in the instruments for the stabilization of the economy, and I agree that too much reliance has been placed on monetary policy.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, there have been some criticisms that economic conditions have changed and that the time has come for our general approach to economic policy to be changed. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) today asked a question which he thought he might debate at ten o'clock tonight—I gather he is not going to do so. He did point to the fact that there had been some decline in the index of industrial production in Canada in recent months. From that he drew the inference that there had been a general change in conditions and that we were now facing some sort of a down-turn in economic activity, and that therefore we should change our general monetary policy.

I would like to say a word or two about the present situation because there could be some misunderstanding if the impression created by the hon. member's remarks were to go unanswered. The decline in the industrial production index in July was accounted for by strikes in copper, nickel and iron ore operations. There were also strikes in other industries. All together 812,000 man hours were lost due to strikes in July, the equivalent of 0.65 per cent of estimated working time of the entire labour force. For manufacturing and mining, which are the two principal components of the industrial production index, the percentage of time lost due to strikes was higher. The decline in iron ore and non-ferrous metal mining amounted to 13 per cent. This alone was sufficient to reduce the total production index by one point. Manufacturing as a whole was steady in July, with non-durable goods production increasing by half a point and durable goods production being down by a half point. The decline in those last figures was associated with the earlier shut-down in the automobile industry for new model changes.

The smaller rates of increase in total activity during the second quarter of 1966, which has also been remarked upon, were a natural consequence of the extraordinarily high rates achieved earlier in the year. The value of the gross national product increased by 4.4 per cent between the fourth quarter of 1965 and the first quarter of 1966. So that in the first quarter there was this extraordinary increase. This was far above any possible sustainable rate in the Canadian economy. In the first quarter the advance announcement of the Ontario sales tax increase caused some additional buying, and our exports to the United States in that quarter were very high, due to the very heavy demand at that particular time.

The adjustment from the extraordinary first quarter increase in the second quarter has been followed by a resumption of growth in many indicators in July and August. For example—and this is one of the most important of the economic indicators—there was a substantial increase in employment in August and a decline in the unemployment rate. That cannot be associated in any way with a decline in economic activity. Automobile sales picked up strongly in July and August and total retail sales had recovered in June and July. Our exports continued to increase in July.

In general we are looking forward to a renewal of moderate increases in the gross national product in the third and fourth quarters of this year. With the economy fully employed it is difficult, indeed undesirable, to try to achieve the unsustainable rates of increase in the first quarter. Even, with the more moderate gains in economic activity compared with earlier in the year, pressure on prices and costs remains a serious problem and government policy is being followed to reduce the increases in prices that are troubling all of us.

I made these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, because they are relevant to some of the points made during the debate by speakers on various sides and because I did not want this particular question to go unanswered for more than a few hours.

The motion that was put and which was ruled out of order by you, Mr. Speaker, referred to the establishment of a new type of clearinghouse arrangement. I would draw attention to the comment that I made on July 5, 1966, when I was speaking on the resolution preceding this bill, when I said, as reported at page 7234 of Hansard:

> The then minister—
> I was referring to my predecessor.
> —indicated that the government intended to give further consideration to possible changes in the clearing system, including suggestions made by the royal commission, and would bring forward legislation on this general subject, which seems clearly to come within parliament's jurisdiction over banking. We still have this in mind for a future year.

I thought I should repeat these words, Mr. Speaker, in order to indicate that we are prepared to give consideration to one of the subjects raised by the motion that was ruled out of order.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when I introduced the proposed revision of the Bank Act I stated that one of the main objectives of the government was to improve the position of the small borrower. The government is convinced that an effective way to achieve this objective is to encourage and enforce competition, to implement a system where there are many competing sources of loan funds and many institutions freely competing for the custom of the consumer.

But the revision of the banking system and the introduction of more competition is not the only way the government intends to improve the position of the consumer who needs credit. Members will recall that on May 27 last I wrote to the provinces stating that I was prepared to convene a federal-provincial meeting on the subject of consumer credit and interest disclosure, which is so important to those Canadians who buy on instalment plan or who borrow from finance companies, banks or other sources. Since then officials of the Department of Finance have started to make preparations for such a conference and I hope to be able to announce to the house very shortly its agenda and date.

In the course of the discussions which we have had on this subject, it has occurred to me that there was an immediate opportunity for a breakthrough in one of the most important problems facing the consumers—that of the disclosure of the true and effective rate of interest. One of the basic aims of a consumer policy is to ensure that consumers have recourse to all the information necessary to make decisions that will be of greatest benefit to themselves and to the national economy.

Consumer groups and associations have urged for many years legislation requiring the cost of consumer credit of all kinds to be stated in terms of an effective annual or monthly rate of interest. Both the Nova Scotia and Ontario studies of consumer credit concluded that it was desirable and feasible for banks and other financial institutions to disclose the cost of borrowing both in dollar charges, as done at present, and also as an effective rate of interest. Nova Scotia, Ontario, Massachusetts and the United States federal government have all acted in this field in recent months.

I believe it to be of the highest importance that consumers buying on credit or borrowing for consumption have the fullest opportunity to know at what exact cost they are doing so.

I regard action on the disclosure of the effective cost of consumer credit extended by banks as a practical starting point for co-ordinated federal-provincial co-operation and development in this field. The banks are now the largest dispensers of consumer credit, and they can give us leadership in this field while we will be working on a more general approach at the federal-provincial conference.

In my recapitulation of the main proposals of the bank bill before you yesterday, I outlined the formula whereby the maximum rate of interest that banks may charge on loans in Canada would be made more flexible and eventually removed altogether. One of the technical effects of this amendment would be to remove any of the possible remaining problems of the banks in disclosing the cost of consumer credit transactions as an approximate effective percentage of the amount borrowed.

I think I might state at this time that among the amendments that the government will be putting before the house, which I mentioned at the conclusion of my first speech in the second reading debate, is an amendment, when this bill is in committee, which will require that a bank when making a consumer loan must state the effective rate of the combined cost of interest and service charges. In the committee there will be ample opportunity to consider the technical aspects of this proposal.

When this bill does receive second reading, Mr. Speaker, I would propose that it be referred to the standing committee on trade, finance and economic affairs.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, would the minister answer a question before he takes his seat. I should like to get this clear. I came in just as he was apparently replying to some of the matters that I raised in my speech. I should like to thank him for his complimentary remarks, but I should also like to ask the minister whether we are to understand that the government's position with regard to the control of interest rates is that it should be left entirely to the operation of market forces.

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, the general level of interest rates in this country is determined partly by the demand for credit and partly by the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada and the government. So the government has a responsibility for the general level of interest rates, which we do not deny. Indeed I, as Minister of Finance, accept that responsibility.

There are also special federal laws dealing with ceilings on particular kinds of consumer credit that are available to the public. I do not believe, however, that one could control the general level of interest rates by law, nor should one try. I think this ought to be the outcome of the monetary policy of the government.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Could I ask another question of the minister? If he is convinced of what he has just said, and this is the basis for his decision to remove the 6 per cent ceiling, can he explain to us why it is not being removed immediately this act becomes law, and why he is doing it in two stages?

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, I did explain this at very great length during the resolution stage. I did not do it on second reading because I did not want to repeat all of the arguments I had made; I gave only a summary. I said at that time that I thought it might be too great and too sudden a transition, and that one ought to proceed by stages so that when we came to take the ceiling off there would be less apprehension about the possible effects.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Do I take it from that, that the minister anticipates that if restraints were taken off immediately, there would immediately be a dislocating jump in interest rates?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I said that I felt there would be apprehension on this score.

Mr. Simpson: May I inquire of the minister at this time in respect of the statement he made about the proposed amendment he is prepared to bring in? Can he say whether he feels that the amendment will provide safeguards for the maintenance of any increase over the 6 per cent bank rate? Would it prevent some of the practices now being carried out?

Mr. Sharp: The particular amendment I was referring to was for the purpose of disclosing the true rate of interest, and only for that purpose. There may be other amendments that may be proposed, but the particular one I was announcing in my concluding speech was only for the purpose of the revelation of true interest charges.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say, yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say, nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion—and I have to go by my ear—the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: May I draw to the attention of hon. members the provision of standing order 6, which is as follows, that there will be no vote between the hours of seven and eight, if there is objection taken to such procedure. I now invite hon. members to indicate whether there is such objection or not.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Under standing order 6 (3) I am objecting to a vote at this hour. I believe I have the proper support.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: I see five or more members objecting. There being five or more members objecting to the taking of a vote at this time, such vote is delayed, or deferred until eight o'clock.

Division deferred until eight o'clock.

QUEBEC SAVINGS BANKS ACT

DECENNIAL REVISION AND EXTENSION OF CHARTERS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-223, respecting savings banks in the Province of Quebec.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make a decennial revision of the Quebec Savings Banks Act, an act that applies to the two savings banks which operate only in the province of Quebec, one with its head office in Montreal and the other with its head office in Quebec City.

There are relatively few changes from a similar bill that received second reading last year; about the only one of importance is the provision that would apply in these banks the same formula with respect to maximum interest rates on loans as that proposed in the bill to revise the Bank Act. The principal changes from the act at present in force that were in last year's bill, and continued in this one, are provisions relating to share ownership similar to those in the bill to revise the Bank Act. As proposed in that bill, an additional provision would permit pension and similar funds of provincial governments to own a limited amount of non-voting shares of these banks.

As recommended by the Royal Commission on Banking and Finance, it is proposed to increase the lending and investment powers of these banks but not to include the power to make commercial or business loans. They have not expressed any wish to engage in this type of lending. By amendment to their act in 1957 they were given the power to make mortgage loans without any interest rate restriction. In this market they have performed a valuable service in their respective communities and will continue to do so.

The bill follows, wherever appropriate, like provisions in the bill to revise the Bank Act and many of the administrative changes proposed in that bill, the motion for the second reading of which is to be voted upon at eight o'clock, have been incorporated in this one as well.

When this bill has received second reading, I propose that it should be referred to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs for detailed study along with other banking legislation.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, there is not a great deal to be added to the comments with regard to this particular bill. I think, perhaps, in his closing remarks at this stage the minister might disclose precisely what is the requirement for insured deposits with regard to this particular bank. Is the province of Quebec being treated as a separate area with regard to the "near banks"? Are the "near banks" really concerned with the Quebec Savings Banks Act, or are they concerned with the general Bank Act, under Bill No. C-222?

If there is separate treatment, I think that those remarks which I made in regard to what I call deposit insurance would apply with reference to this act. On the other hand, if there is not separate treatment, my remarks are covered in the previous debate with regard to Bill No. C-222.

Outside that, I have no additional comment. If the amendments to this act are parallel with those of the Bank Act, they would draw the same form of criticism as would apply to those under the Bank Act.

I feel that it is incumbent on the house to see that this act, as well as the other act, goes to the standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs because, again, I fear very much that we shall not be able to meet the November 30 deadline that is imposed by existing legislation.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer the question.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now it will close the debate.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the question has a simple reply. The Quebec Savings Bank Act obviously applies to institutions that are under federal jurisdiction. They therefore will require to be insured by the Deposit Insurance Corporation when it is established.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on finance, trade, and economic affairs.

CANADIAN LIVESTOCK FEED BOARD

ASSISTANCE IN STORAGE AND TRANSPORTATION COSTS

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

He said:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that on June 30 the house passed the resolution without discussion and that first reading was given to the bill intituled: An act to provide assistance to livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

All parties had agreed that on second reading, all stages of the bill would be proceeded with.

That is why, today, my introductory remarks will be slightly longer than usual to fully inform members of this house of the aims of the bill and to give them other information on its contents.

The bill I am speaking on today is another landmark in the efforts undertaken by successive governments to allow the use of western feed grain, to improve its availability and to further stabilize its price in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

The bill providing assistance to livestock feeders calls for the establishment of a Canadian Livestock Feed Board which would ensure the availability of feed grain and adequate feed grain storage facilities in eastern Canada to meet the needs of livestock feeders, the reasonable stability of feed grain prices and a fair equalization of feed grain prices in eastern Canada and in British Columbia.

• (7:40 p.m.)

[English]

A resolution containing a similar proposal had just been introduced by the former government under the initiative of Hon. Alvin Hamilton when the 1963 election was called.

Members of the house will recall that the standing committee on agriculture and colonization of the house which examined the feed grain pricing problem in 1964 recommended in its report on March 22, 1965 the creation of a feed grain agency. Since then, the implications of establishing this board and its relationship to other boards with responsibility in grain matters, have been assessed by the government. This evaluation led to the proposal you are being asked to consider this evening.

[Translation]

Freight assistance to feed grain and other grain products from the west to points of consumption in eastern Canada and in British Columbia was first started during the war, that is, in 1941.

That measure was passed because of the following situation: Breeders of eastern Canada and British Columbia maintained it was unfair that competing foreign breeders operating three or four miles away should obtain Canadian feed grain delivered in their countries at the same price or even at a lower price than that paid by Canadian breeders because of lower freight rates on grain exports. In addition, western grain markets were restricted due to the great risks endangering overseas shipments in wartime and because the allies required more concentrated foodstuffs.

The program served a double purpose: to expand the feed grain markets for the benefit of western grain producers and to enable farmers in eastern Canada and British Columbia to increase their cattle production.

Since the war, controls on wheat, oats and barley imports have deprived eastern cattle breeders of the opportunity to import grain at lower prices. Those factors, added to the concern of protecting investments made necessary by wartime needs, prompted government authorities to maintain this policy after the war. Since it also proved very profitable to western grain producers, it has been maintained and regularly extended through orders in council. The products eligible for assistance have changed little through the years, whereas the rates of freight assistance to various points have changed according to circumstances. The program required yearly appropriations ranging from $14.5 to $22 million.

[English]

In 1963 storage assistance was added to the program to encourage stocking of adequate supplies and as a means of moderating winter price movements. In the same year provisional pricing, formerly applied solely to wheat, was extended to oats and barley by the Canadian Wheat Board.

In 1964, in an effort to bring in truck competition and to allow for more effective bargaining on transportation rates on the part of local supplies, eastern Canada was divided into zones with a specific level of transportation aid applying to each zone. This part of the program has been particularly useful and has led to many and extensive rate readjustments.

Much concern is still expressed by feeders in eastern areas over fluctuations in feed prices. These result from a combination of factors including variations in supply and demand for western feed grains; changes in freight rates; shortage of winter storage space; paralysis of navigation in the winter; the holding supplies of certain pressure points in relatively few hands; price gyrations of other feed ingredients and to mounting retail mark-ups reflecting an increasing variety of services rendered at the retailing end of the feed business—credit, bagging, technical know-how, etc.

[Translation]

It is not easy to settle all those problems, since some of them overlap in the field of grain marketing. Up to now, the organization, purchase and distribution of grain stocks, as far as breeders are concerned, have been left entirely to trade.

The private sector has rendered many worthwhile services, but difficulties concerning stocks and prices have arisen and have been the subject of talks for some time.

In short, present programs concerning federal aid have not sufficiently dampened the unforeseeable and somewhat irregular movements of prices throughout the winter in eastern Canada as a result of the closing of the shipping season.

Eastern breeders have even asked the government to intervene to a greater extent in that field, in order to prevent unsteady prices, since otherwise feeding and production plans will be annihilated in a sector where the difference between costs and prices is almost always excessively reduced.

Cattle and fowl products represent three quarters of the financial income of eastern farms and 65 per cent of agricultural returns in British Columbia.

Agriculture which requires considerable manpower depends extensively on an ample supply of grass and fodder to which feed grain must be added. The vicinity of markets has also made the production of non-ruminant cattle profitable in surrounding areas of large consumption centres in eastern Canada, especially when considering that the areas adjoining Montreal and Toronto can very well lend themselves to an intensive grain production.

Cattle feeding represents an important current expense for farmers in eastern Canada and British Columbia. Outside the Prairies, a sum of $335 million is spent each year for the purchase of feed grain and seeds. The sale of feed grain in western Canada on those markets are just as important to the western farmer, since they represent about $110 million, of the farm income and contribute much toward the economic stability of the Canadian feed grain markets.

The inability of provinces to meet their needs as far as grain is concerned varies from 70 to 80 per cent in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia to 17 to 20 per cent in Ontario and Prince Edward Island. Quebec meets about half its own needs, while British Columbia is short by about a third. Livestock product markets are expanding rapidly. Consumers now tend to get away from starchy food and favour meat proteins. That is why a larger share of the consumer food budget is spent on livestock and poultry products.

By 1980, the estimated population in eastern Canada will likely need 140 per cent of the milk now produced in eastern Canada, 244 per cent of its poultry production, 180 per cent of its egg production, 218 per cent of its pork production and 440 per cent of its beef production.

[English]

How are these quickly evolving needs going to be met? If recent production trends can be of some guidance the situation for the last 14 years can be summarized as follows: From 1951 to 1964 the June 1 survey shows that the number of cattle, other than dairy cows and heifers, has increased by 120 per cent in the prairie provinces, 80 per cent in Prince Edward Island, 58 per cent in Ontario and 22 per cent in Quebec, while remaining almost stationary in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

Over the same period there was a 29 per cent increase in the number of hogs. There was a slightly lower increase in the prairies, Quebec, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. Ontario's hog population does not show any definite trend, while New Brunswick's has dwindled by 37 per cent.

The total poultry population has increased tremendously in Nova Scotia and Quebec and, discounting shifts in types of poultry now kept, the other provinces are not showing any significant trend if we except Prince Edward Island which has witnessed a sizeable decrease of close to 60 per cent. The Quebec dairy herd is the only one holding the line, as the other provinces witness a continuous decline.

Should these trends continue in the near future, both east and west will be confronted by the additional food requirements I described a moment ago.

[Translation]

The increase in the number of livestock in each region will depend on such factors as the evolution of the market for grain and other products from the prairies, the evolution of meat markets in the United States, the extension of corn-growing land and the increase in the production of corn in the eastern and western part of the country, the improved conversion of livestock feed and the consumer demands with regard to freshness in the case of several agricultural products.

I introduce this bill today in this context and considering all these factors. The bill establishes a livestock feed board and an advisory committee. The board will act in the interest of livestock breeders and feeders in British Columbia and in the eastern part of the country by passing the necesary measures authorized by the law so as to ensure the availability of supplies and stockage at all times; it will also, as far as it is practical to do so, ensure a reasonable stability in prices and a fair equalization of freight charges.

In order to achieve these aims, the present aid policy concerning feed grain, and which extends to transportation and stocking, will become an integral part of the legislation. Even if the bill provides that the Canadian Livestock Feed Board shall deal with a considerable number of things, its first duty will be to try to co-ordinate the various interests involved and, if necessary, to improve the means at its disposal. The aid provided for transportation may serve to encourage supply by water during the shipping season or by rail during the critical winter months. The board may negotiate the appropriation of adequate space in the elevators, as well as the establishment of lower rates of transport before rushing into large-scale marketing operations.

Should these means not succeed in achieving the objectives sought in this bill, the board may engage in purchasing, stocking, selling and other marketing operations. The use of such powers, should the need arise, shall be subject to an authorization by the governor in council, which would be valid for a definite time. There is a recommendation for the setting up, for the purposes of such marketing operations, of a $10 million automatically revolving fund. In case of need, when the fund is tied up in grain stocks, the governor in council may authorize the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) to make further advances.

The powers it is proposed to confer to the board do not extend to "prices ex warehouses, Fort William", but relate to marketing of feed grain from that stage of pricing to the eventual consumption of feed in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

This bill embodies a very necessary policy destined better to organize the transport of feed grain and ensure a more stable market for both grain products and livestock products. This is a necessity which we must face and we may rest assured that the government intends to pass other legislation or modify the present policy to meet the changing needs of grain producers and livestock breeders.

Those, Mr. Speaker, were the main points I wished to make on first reading of this bill. I shall make other comments later in answer to those which the hon. members will wish to make concerning this bill.

CANADIAN LIVESTOCK FEED BOARD

ASSISTANCE IN STORAGE AND TRANSPORTATION COSTS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sauvé for the second reading of Bill No. C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, we are now studying Bill C-218, an act to provide assistance to livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia. I listened carefully, although at times somewhat absent-mindedly, to the observations made by the minister of forestry (Mr. Sauvé) when he introduced the bill. At the outset of the few remarks I wish to make this evening, I cannot help but remind the hon. minister that this measure is but the continuation of various legislative measures introduced by the Conservative government which preceded the present government.

In introducing this measure and giving the reasons for it, the present minister was in fact doing nothing else but addressing a word of reproach to his government. Indeed, he reminded us that a similar measure was on the agenda in 1963, that it had been proposed by the then minister of agriculture, the present member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton). We also know, Mr. Speaker, that the farmers have been expecting this bill for a long time.

It must also be recalled, Mr. Speaker, that at the time the hon. member for Qu'Appelle

(Mr. Hamilton) was minister of agriculture, he has travelled through the provinces, particularly Quebec and Ontario, to promote cattle raising. It is well known that in recent years, specially, there is a tendency in eastern Canada, as well as in other provinces, to use more beef. As a matter of fact, people who were using large quantities of pork regularly in the past have now changed their eating habits in favour of beef. There are a good many reasons for the increase of beef consumption in the feeding of humans and I certainly shall not labour over that part of the matter. But we must recognize the fact that beef consumption has greatly increased in recent years in Canada.

The event which will take place in Montreal during 1967 will also help to provide those of our farmers who are in the cattle-raising business with a greatly enlarged market.

Even though, there may be cause for deploring the government's backwardness in adopting the necessary measures to encourage cattle raising in the eastern provinces, one must however rejoice in the fact that it has finally decided to tread the path which was cleared by the preceding government.

Mr. Speaker, one must not forget that the farmer's well-being in the east is in no way an obstacle to the well-being of the farmer out west and conversely, it is also true that the western farmers are not at a disadvantage when their brothers in the east prosper.

It is a well-known fact that farmers, because of the constantly increasing cost of living, find it very hard to meet their obligations. The government should therefore take every opportunity to help this sector of our country's economy.

Anybody who has followed a little closely the change in the farmer's attitude knows for a fact that the latter has finally decided to take a more personal interest in the management of his own business. He has now taken cognizance of his own general responsibilities and has decided to participate more actively in the marketing of his products and in the things which affect his income and his welfare. That is why farmers, whenever they get together at conventions, consider more closely than they used to bills introduced here. And when the minister announced some time ago the abolition of free winter storage of feed grain in reserved space in eastern elevators, there was a general outcry against his decisions and farmers protested most energetically.

Mr. Speaker, it would not be logical for the minister to introduce, on the one hand, a measure intended to encourage the breeding of beef-type cattle if, on the other hand, he moved other legislation to deprive breeders of the grain they need to feed such cattle in winter. I know the minister received, like so many members of the house, a telegram of protest from the Quebec millers, supported by the Catholic Farmers Union.

I am sorry I do not have with me a copy of the telegram. But I can surely give the minister the copy I was sent when I have time to go to my office.

Mr. Speaker, the arrangements made by the minister also amazed me—you may feel that I am out of order here—but as feed grains are concerned the matter was studied specifically at the special meeting held in Drummondville, it seems to me the minister could have extended invitations not only to the members of the cabinet but to the other representatives of the area who are bent also on seeing an objective study made of livestock raising.

He attempted systematically to keep the members of the opposition out; maybe it is fair play as far as he is concerned, but I think that he has therefore done a disservice to the cattle breeders of my riding and the surrounding counties.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, there are still many points that we would like to clarify in this measure; it is not necessary to state all the objections, to undertake a detailed study at this stage of discussion, because we will certainly have the opportunity to look at it more closely. Then we shall make the necessary comments, and also offer suggestions because if we study the past achievements of the Conservative party especially in that field, we feel that we can justly claim a certain knowledge in this matter and I do think that the members of the opposition will offer to the minister suggestions which will certainly help him to carry out a policy which was initiated under his predecessor.

I know that the minister of forestry who is responsible for the administration of this legislation is broad-minded, that he wants to improve the well-being of the farmers and that, for that reason, it will be impossible for him logically to ignore the suggestions which will come from this side of the house.

Until we have the opportunity to say more about it, I wish the minister well in the discharge of his duties.

[English]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I rise to express briefly the support of this party of the principles and purposes of the measure before us.

I listened to the minister's remarks with interest, and having read the bill through carefully I think it is fair to say that at heart the minister is somewhat of a socialist. This measure reminds me of the early efforts of some of the agriculture organizations in the interior of British Columbia to get the government to take action along these lines, to equalize the cost of grain required for livestock and poultry production. There was an effort in the Fraser Valley toward this end and it is safe to say that the agriculture organizations of British Columbia were in the van of the movement to get some measure of financial assistance from the federal government toward the cost of grain transportation. At that time the question of storage was not mentioned.

I have attended many meetings at which this subject has been discussed. In the district I have the honour to represent we are severely affected by the high price of grain in the circumstances in which livestock and poultry are produced. I know that when this measure was first proposed some people suggested that we were advocating socialism. It was considered then an advanced form of legislation. Regardless of that, we are very glad to see it passed because this legislation will do something to bring a measure of equality to production costs as between various agricultural producers from one end of Canada to the other.

I presume it is correct to say that this is in the nature of experimental legislation, and that experience will provide an opportunity for improvements to be made. In this connection I am glad to see that it will be the duty of the board which is to be established to make a continuing study of feed grain requirements in eastern Canada and British Columbia, of the availability of feed grain and of the requirements for additional feed grain storage facilities in those areas. I am always anxious that legislation of this type should be followed up and that reports should be made to the minister and to the House.

I am glad to see it will be the duty of the board to make recommendations to the minister with respect to requirements for additional feed grain storage facilities in eastern Canada; also, that generally it will be the duty of the board to advise the government on all matters pertaining to the stabilization and fair equalization of feed grain prices to livestock feeders. It is also good to note that the board will be required, to the greatest possible extent consistent with its objects, to consult and co-operate with all departments, branches or other agencies of the government of Canada or of any province having duties related to, or having aims or objects related to, those of the board.

It is my belief that if this legislation is to work satisfactorily there must be co-operation with the provincial departments concerned, with the farmers organizations and with all those who are directly affected. This is why the last provision to which I referred is particularly welcome.

I notice, too, that the governor in council may from time to time empower the board to make inquiries and investigations in respect of——(a) transportation, storage or handling of feed grain in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

(b) supplies and prices of feed grain in such areas, and

(c) payments related to the cost of feed grain storage or transportation made under this act.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I mention this particularly because I think it is essential in this type of legislation to have a follow-up and a continuing investigation of its effect on the farmers concerned, of its effect on the economy generally, the surrounding economy, and naturally of its cost to the government of Canada, and so on. I do not think there is any necessity for me to speak at length except to say I am confident that the agricultural producers who will be affected by this legislation will welcome it and do their best to co-operate with the government and all other agencies in making it a success.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, it is with some anxiety mixed with pleasure that we listened to the minister's statement when he introduced Bill No. C-218. It had been eagerly awaited in this house for several years and a great deal has already been said on this matter.

After the board is established by this house, and everything will have been said, at least in principle, in this connection, the task of the minister responsible for it will not necessarily be completed. On the contrary, it will then be his duty to see that the bill is implemented most efficiently. Even though the bill contains some regulations, things are often different in theory from what they are in practice.

And I think that due to past experience, the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, the sponsor of this bill, is well-informed and satisfactorily advised in that field. However, I take the liberty of drawing his attention to a few points which could perhaps serve him as guide lines, not for all practical purposes but in general, if you prefer, to some objections which could be raised on this side of the house and which he could take in consideration and study thoroughly, namely if it would not be a fair and profitable solution for the government as well as for the board and the farmers involved.

Mr. Speaker, there are clauses in that bill which are worthwhile, but there are others which make me feel uneasy. It is perhaps because I have not had time to study the bill as thoroughly as I would have liked to. Evidently, I will have an opportunity to do so during consideration in committee.

Nevertheless, I wish to draw the attention of the minister to certain provisions for obtaining such feed grain as far as eastern Canada and British Columbia are concerned.

I see that by this bill, the minister tries as much as possible to cut prices, that is to make feed grain available at a reasonable price to our farmers of eastern Canada, and heaven knows that they need it. However, an attempt must be made to find out how this result can best be attained.

I already mentioned some time ago in this house the mechanism which now prevails. I believe I asked the minister to keep an eye open to prevent unscrupulous individuals from using an agency responsible to the government. Unscrupulous persons used in the past certain devious means, which were not very orthodox, as it were, or means not altogether in keeping with Christian principles, to take advantage of this scheme to the detriment of western and eastern farmers. At a certain time, producers of western Canada were reported as saying: We do not get enough for our grain because eastern farmers and stock breeders do not want to pay. And eastern farmers and stock breeders were saying: We cannot get feed grain at a reasonable price because western producers make a prohibitive profit.

In the end, who is right? Is it because one does not have the means to pay enough or because the other asks too much? And that is the problem which will always occur. Now it is the object of that agency to have enough feed grain at home to meet the needs first and then to have them at a reasonable price. Therefore, I am interested in finding out from the minister what means, will be used to distribute this grain once it reaches eastern Canada?

Of course, the livestock feed board will have its say. But it does not mean, for instance, that it will be the one responsible for carrying grain from the lakehead to eastern Canada elevators. There is somebody else who will have a finger in the pie, who will mess about in it. Now, I want to know who will mess about in there, who will fiddle about with it. Unless action is taken now, it will be found that the same situation will repeat itself, as was the case with western Canada in 1936, and which brought about the establishment of the present Canadian Wheat Board, which at least set out standards and which guaranteed an income to western farmers and producers.

On the other hand, it does not mean that speculators have been eliminated. Granted, producers were guaranteed a cost price, but what about speculators?

Have they been removed? Have we passed a law with enough teeth in it to protect western producers against being exploited by such people? And now this is what I would like to know. I am not sure whether the Canadian Wheat Board has managed to quench this speculation which was detrimental to western farmers. It has been contained at the head of the Great Lakes, but not removed entirely; on the other hand, the Board took control of production over there, exactly as the feed grain board can take control over here as far as purchases and distribution of feed grain to eastern feeders are concerned. But if speculation is not checked, the situation will go from bad to worse because there will be a go-between which will become a white elephant and which will cost the Canadian taxpayer a lot of money and the problem will not have been solved. If the price of grain increase or remain the same, there is no need in that case, to set up a board to do what we are doing now. But I think that the minister is wise enough to keep a close watch on the openings through which speculators might sneak in. At least I hope so, because if we do not take steps to prevent as much as possible the payment of a commission here and a commission there through lack of organization in the distribution of such feed grain, we might as well not have any at all. And I think that the minister will keep an eye for such loopholes.

Should I notice at any time that there is a leak somewhere, it would be my duty to warn the minister. The same goes for all those here in the house. On the other hand, it is the minister's duty to take all the necessary precautions to avoid leaks. And here I think of some wholesalers, if you wish not only brokers because there are others who are not members of the exchange. As a matter of fact, I did not quite like the solution applied by the Canadian Wheat Board, Mr. Speaker, and if ever I am told that the Canadian Wheat Board will be linked to that body called the livestock feed board for eastern Canada, I will have some things to say about that. For instance I can say that the Canadian Wheat Board guarantees and negotiates prices very well but it does not necessarily see to the delivery. It is still asking the advice of some brokers it has kept away since 1936 from the purchasing field in western Canada. And that is what is called the grain exchange. It probably has its uses for speculations on the world market and all that, but I am against its speculating at the expense of Canadians in the central provinces.

Moreover, the Canadian Wheat Board has to turn to the members of the grain exchange to inquire about futures prices, that is, as anyone who is a wheat or feed grower in western Canada knows, the price quoted in the spring for such and such feed grain to be delivered in the fall in order to make an immediate sale. Grain is sold at a fixed price or a pre-fixed price if you wish. On the other hand, who is asked to set up that price? The brokers. And who buys in the fall, quite often the brokers.

They are not fools, Mr. Speaker, they are speculators. And if they intend to make a penny, a dollar on that, they will see to it that they make it. They just have to say: oats will sell for 67 cents this fall; on the other hand, one finds out that it sold through them for 75 cents afterwards. Therefore who lost on that? Of course, there is always the question of rebate on sales paid immediately or in the fall then. But the future price is fixed. The price is set, the feed is sold at that price, which is then reduced at the expense of the western or eastern farmer. But the broker does not sell it at this price and he is the one who determines whether the harvest is to be good or bad and in a sense informs the Canadian Wheat Board. This does not mean that the wheat board does not work well but it could perhaps extend its scope a little further to give western producers a larger income. The feed grain board which will be established in my region could perhaps buy directly from the farmer without going through some broker or speculator. Of course, there would be a conflict of interest. We would have two commissions under the jurisdiction of the same government. It would have been better perhaps to have put this under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments, because negotiations, what is called "bargaining value", are involved. On the other hand, it is incumbent on the minister to find means to provide such feed grain at the lowest possible price or cheaper for the benefit of the livestock feeders in eastern Canada. And if such aim were not achieved, the board could not justify its existence. Unless we see to it that the goal be reached, we have lost our time in this house, the taxpayer's money has been dilapidated and we have fallen short of the expectations of eastern Canada livestock feeders.

I think we might have to sing the same song in eastern Canada and in western Canada; to put our backs into it once and for all; to indicate exactly the price that the farmers or the producers in western Canada obtain for their wheat, or get for their feed grain, or earn for the grain sold on the home market, in order that the eastern Canada farmer may know exactly how much the other farmer has received at the opposite end of the country.

Mr. Speaker, in this case, we find a differential of $2, $3, $4, and even $5 per hundredweight. You might find this amazing. Wait a moment, and you will hear things even more amazing. Let us consider the case of the western Canada producer who ships to Fort William, in what we call carloads, grain that bears dockage on arrival at Fort William. They remove what is commonly called wild oats, the straw, the chaff, whatever residues there might be. They simply do not look for grain but for anything that might be found besides grain.

The dockage may vary between ½, 2, 3 or 5 per cent. All this is removed and not paid for. This is called "dockage".

On the other hand, the farmer is not paid for that; yet he is asked to pay transportation charges on it from the elevators out west to the lakehead or Fort Churchill. He is not paid for it when it is taken away, but elsewhere, mills pay $2.35 and $2.70 per hundredweight for it.

Wild oats, chaff, straw and hulls come first, that is, what farmers are not paid for; yet, it is good enough for feed? That explains, up to a point, why feed is so expensive. Stock breeders in eastern Canada surely cannot feed their pigs, sheep, cattle, horses and milking cows with chaff and other fodder without food value; consequently, all kinds of ingredients are added to their feed. Each time ingredients are added, the price goes up; prohibitive prices are charged and feed ends up by costing how much? $4.50! But that type of feed is not very good, that is not the one which gets the best publicity either. Publicity is for the $5, $5.50 and $6 bags. Finally, why is it sold at $6 per hundredweight when the farmer out West did not believe it was any good, and did not get much for it? It was classed as "dockage" at the head of the great lakes.

Mr. Speaker, I would like the hon. minister to watch these grain transport operations and transactions. Let us first begin by putting into the feed which is sold in eastern Canada, ingredients which will provide our stock with the necessary vitamins.

They will perhaps have to put less of other things into it in order to obtain a reasonable price to sell our feed to our farmers, to enable our livestock breeder to buy that feed at reasonable prices.

He will have a field of about 70, 80 or 100 acres, he will harvest it, leaving 30 acres to be sold, for this deprives him of the wheat market. What is he going to do with it? It sells for 56 cents, 60 cents, 70 cents, 75 cents a bushel, not a hundredweight but a bushel. You are going to get oats weighing how much? Maybe 52, 53, 54, 55 pounds a bushel. This is not oats that was nipped by frost, not oats to feed poultry that I am referring to, but registered seed oats; and western farmers and members in this house are well aware of that.

How is it that oats of that kind is very often being brought to our area—that is not what is being sold to them as seed oats—at $5, $6 or $7 a hundredweight.

How come? Did the western farmer or producer not pay the freight from Fort William out of the 70 cents or 75 cents he gets a bushel? Is freight that expensive from Fort William to the province of Quebec? Does it really cost that much to supply oats or grain at a reasonable price to eastern farmers? Perhaps, along the way, unscrupulous people take advantage of the situation to make a few dollars. I am therefore asking the minister to see to it that such intervention is stopped, as well as anything which would permit those people to further speculate under the cover of any federal or provincial board; in short, let us put teeth in the law which will break them once and for all.

The western farmer or producer must be treated fairly, but the eastern breeder must also receive fair treatment; one must pay exactly what he ought, the market value, and the other must receive exactly what he should for his grain on the Canadian market. Let us not be so concerned with the establishment of external markets; let us begin by satisfying our domestic market, then we will sell outside. We now have some good domestic contracts; we sell right and left, and this is excellent. By their bountiful harvest this year, the western producers have proved they can produce. Western Canada this year had what may be called its record harvest.

They have proved they can produce, and now it is up to us to prove that we can, and soon, market their production, to the advantage of the eastern producer as well as that of the world at large, where exports are concerned. But this can be achieved only when we have legislation to block, once and for all, any attempt or possibility of speculation, on foreign as well as domestic markets, and to guarantee fairness or a fair price to the producers and buyers of these grains. That is why we will tackle the problem again and study each and every item of the bill when it comes before the committee.

In the meantime, we shall study it, and if need be, suggest what amendments should be made.

• (9:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Sauvé), who will be responsible for administering the provisions of Bill No. C-218, is well aware that what is being done by the provisions now before us is more important than the powers and responsibilities granted to the agency to be set up.

I rise tonight, not to advance categorical or unequivocal opposition to the establishment of this agency, but simply to caution the minister to make sure that in the application of the powers granted to the agency we do not create an unnatural imbalance of opportunities in various regions of Canada. This could be possible—and I talk not only about the imbalance in respect of livestock feeding but also in respect of grain producing. I am not the only one who has that opinion. Earlier this year discussions were held in Winnipeg regarding what was referred to as the feed grain dilemma. Some of the excerpts I wish to read are taken from speeches delivered to the Seventh National Farm and Business Forum.

During the course of meetings of a committee which studied this whole matter I was instrumental in moving a motion to the effect that a study should be made of prices being paid by livestock producers in eastern Canada and British Columbia. I have a great deal of sympathy for the problems that these people face toward the end of their feeding season, notably in February and March. Something in addition to what is being done should be done by the federal government to protect the stability of the feed prices these feeders must pay, not only at the end of the season but right from the beginning. In this way they could be sure when they undertake to feed cattle in October or November they would be able to purchase feed and grain to the end of the feeding season without being held up, or in some way suffer losses because of exorbitant prices.

We have heard some pretty convincing evidence which indicates that as soon as the seaway is closed the price of western grain in eastern Canada is increased by almost exactly the increase in transportation costs, in spite of the fact that this grain has been transported to eastern Canada by the cheapest possible means and stored.

Let me get back to this matter referred to as the feed grain dilemma. I want to quote from a speech made by Mr. Bert Hargrave, who is a leading agriculturist in Alberta and has been associated with many farm and ranching organizations there. In his concluding remarks he said that—> —Canadians would soon have to forget their political differences and to realize that beef would have to be produced and finished in the most economic and efficient location. Artificial barriers or stimulants would eventually only upset other aspects of agriculture at increased public expense.

I suggest this is a valid point of view although it does perhaps place more emphasis on the interests of one region in Canada as against another. It must be remembered that Mr. Hargrave has represented beef producers in southern Alberta for some time.

I was rather surprised by this statement which appears in a speech delivered by Dr. Cecil B. Haver of the department of agricultural economics, Macdonald College, Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Quebec. In summing up he said:

> The benefits of the feed freight program in the east . . . have largely gone to the big feeders and the big commercial users.

I am not surprised that he takes this attitude, but I suggest we must keep in mind, when setting up national policies involving the expenditure of money from the national treasury, the kind and size of farm we wish to help. If we find that our assistance is being provided to big feeders and commercial users we are perhaps misallocating public funds because we are using subsidies to produce beef, pork, or what have you, in regions where it is uneconomic to do so.

For those in this house who are not familiar with this feed freight policy perhaps it would be of benefit to draw their attention to the number of cattle fed in Ontario and in Quebec which are imported from western Canada. These live animals are freighted in. Then if you ship the grain from western Canada down here, where the feeding ratio of pounds of grain is away above that of the number of pounds of beef, in order to fatten the cattle, it is far less economical than feeding the grain to the animal in an area where both are produced and the carcasses are later shipped here in the form of meat. We have to take these things into consideration.

Dr. J. C. Gilson, head of the Department of Agricultural Economics, University of Manitoba, had this to say. This is not an exact quote, but it is very nearly what he said:

> It was necessary to ask, had the policy, in fact contributed to the development of the livestock industry in eastern Canada? What justification was there for a national agricultural policy which helped one group of livestock producers at the expense of another? Were there not more direct and more effective means of dealing with the development of the livestock industry in eastern Canada?

I suggest that this is true so far as the national policy is concerned in that assistance to this group of feeders in eastern Canada has more or less been confined to freight assistance plus some storage. Perhaps the setting up of an agency that will have control throughout the whole feeding season, and also control of the price all through the feeding season, is another matter to which Dr. Gilson was referring. I am happy to say that this is a very important part of the bill before us.

However, in addition to the feed grain dilemma we must give consideration to the situation of the feed grain producers in Ontario and Quebec, because to the extent that additional subsidies are paid on western grain being brought in to this part of the country, their price is depressed. At least the demand for their product is lessened in these areas. I should like to read another quotation from this conference. For example, the following is given as Dr. Gilson's opinion:

He was almost tempted to conclude, that all the feed freight assistance policy had accomplished for the livestock industry in eastern Canada during the past 20 years had been to provide an incentive for a reduction in the quantity of locally grown grains.

That is a pretty severe conclusion, but I have to agree that there is some validity in it, because since freight assistance on feed grain was instituted, I believe in 1944 or somewhere around that time, there has been a marked decline in the volume of feed grains produced in eastern Canada, particularly in eastern Ontario and Quebec. Therefore we have to take this question into consideration. I am sure there are a large number of farmers in Ontario and Quebec who depend for their livelihood on the price of the feed grains that they produce. As far as I am concerned, these people are just as important as those who depend upon the production of beef, pork or broilers in the poultry industry.

I am not going into a great deal of detail as to the provisions of this bill, because as I said at the outset—and I am sure the minister would agree—what is important is not so much what is in the bill but how its provisions are applied. I would give a word of caution in this respect. When a vehicle such as this is set up whereby government subsidies are advanced from time to time, and even increased from time to time to the advantage of one group, it may on occasion be tempting to allow these subsidies for one reason or another. Therefore when the minister administers the operation of this feed grain agency I think he will have to bear in mind constantly the impact on the whole country of any temporary change. He will not only have to bear in mind the impact on the whole country but on the farmers in the eastern region who may have a difference of interest, in that some would be more interested in a high price for feed grain and some would be more interested in a low price.

It may be tempting to solve local or temporary problems in this way because of pressure applied by a particular group. It may be tempting to increase subsidies for this reason, but I would hope caution would be used in this respect.

There is one other point of which I think the minister is probably aware, but I should like to draw it to his attention because I think it is important. I refer to the position of the feed grain producer in western Canada. I believe it is fair to say that if there had never been any feed grain freight assistance policy a large number of feed grains now being shipped from western to eastern Canada would never have started coming here, because there are large quantities of corn and other grains available in the United States that are closer to eastern Canada. In spite of the small duty, the competition from these grains in relation to grains from western Canada would have worked against the shipment of feed grains from western Canada to this part of the country. But we also have what at the present time seems to be a chronic problem, namely that of our international balance of payments. Our whole economy benefits and our problem in respect of international balance of payments is alleviated with every dollar's worth of goods, be it feed grain or anything else, that is produced and used in Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say to the minister that there are many, many contrary interests involved in what is contemplated in this feed grain agency. I hope that when the agency begins operations the minister will keep in mind the whole of Canada, rather than attempting to use the agency to satisfy some temporary local problem that may be raised.

Perhaps it would be more appropriate to discuss some of the powers of the board at another time, but I am concerned about one or two of the powers that will be granted to this agency. For example, on page 3 of the bill, clause 6 (c) says that the board may, in furtherance of its objects, allocate space reserved for its use in any storage facility among persons requiring feed grain storage facilities in eastern Canada. My understanding at the moment is that all the terminal elevators along the St. Lawrence river, in so far as priorities and allocations for specific purposes are concerned, are now in the hands of the Board of Grain Commissioners. It seems to me that the authority given to this feed grain agency to allocate or reserve space will have to be applied in such a way that it does not conflict with the powers now in the hands of the Board of Grain Commissioners. It seems to me, also, that one will have to be very careful about balancing these priorities. The word "balancing" always enters into these discussions, because I think eastern feeders have as much right to some of the storage facilities as the western farmers have to a large part of the storage for overseas shipments of wheat during the winter months.

And so it seems to me that perhaps one of the best ways of resolving this problem is to give some kind of joint power, or at least require that some negotiations take place between these two agencies so that they can take into account the interest of both the groups concerned. As is provided later on in clause 6, I think it is useful for this board to conduct a continuing study of prices, feed grain consumption and handling and shipping facilities, because one of the difficulties has been in getting accurate information on how much grain is in store at the end of the season, how much should have been put in store and what was the price, taking into account all the factors contributing to that price, and then to see what happens to that price later on during the feeding season. There has been contradictory evidence, but if we had an agency set up to conduct a continuing study and to assemble all the facts and figures, it would certainly be useful.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, my main purpose is to caution the minister and the administration because I regard this bill as a means of providing a useful agency which will render a service to Canada and to many Canadians. On the other hand if the minister, the agency or the government should yield to some of the temptations held out to them from a certain group it could turn out to be one of the most discriminatory and harmful agencies that has ever been set up by this parliament. I rely on the minister to use sound judgment in the application of the powers that are involved in this bill.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, like most other hon. members who have spoken during the debate on Bill C-218 so far this evening, I should like to commend the minister on the introduction of this legislation. As the minister is undoubtedly aware, there are certainly mixed feelings in western Canada about the efficacy or desirability of bringing in this particular legislation. I myself, as a representative of a western agricultural constituency, have mixed feelings, but my reservations with respect to this legislation are not of sufficient degree to warrant my voting against it.

I certainly intend to support the establishment of a feed purchasing agency, my major reason being that the farmers of eastern Canada and British Columbia certainly deserve this kind of support from the government. After all it has how been several decades since the producers of western Canada have had the advantage of having their grain products handled by a crown grain handling agency, the action stipulated in this measure would seem merely to be a just action on the part of the government at this time. If one region of the country is to be given the advantages of a certain action by the government, such as the establishment by the crown of a grain handling agency, then other regions of the country should be entitled to the same kind of consideration and treatment if the economics warrant it.

To the best of my knowledge there have been conflicting opinions coming from a number of professional economists, some saying that there was scant justification for this kind of assistance and others quite firm in the opinion that there was an economic basis for it. The pattern seemed to me to be dependant upon what part of the country the particular economist came from. Certain agricultural organization spokesmen from western Canada, and one or two prairie ministers of agriculture, have expressed fairly strong opposition to this proposed legislation. Then again, there have been some—notably one Alfred Gleave, former president of the National Farmers Union—who, on several occasions over the past year has come out in support of the concept of a crown feed purchasing agency and also for the continuation of feed grain freight assistance.

Mr. Speaker, I realize it is very close to ten o'clock, but rather than call it ten o'clock and hold my remarks over until the next day, I would like to try to conclude in the next 60 seconds or so by simply saying to the minister that if there is opposition to this legislation, from certain quarters, there is at the same time a genuine need for the legislation in eastern Canada and in British Columbia. There is also support for it in western Canada, in the prairies, on the basis that what is being provided here is simply an extension of the benefits which have been extended to western producers over the course of many years.

Of course, I could ask a very valid question: Why is it that eastern purchasers of feed grain have not deemed it worth while to attempt to establish co-operative agencies for the purchasing of feed grains? After all, in western Canada several decades ago it was deemed advisable and necessary to do just that, to establish co-operative agencies for the handling of grain, and it has proved to be of great and immediate tangible value to the farmers. It seems to me that in like manner this would have been the case with respect to the purchase of grain in eastern Canada. However, it may well be that the logistics of organizing this kind of co-operative agency is simply beyond the scope and capacity of the co-operative groups existing in eastern Canada at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I heartily concur in and am in complete accord with what was already said by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson), namely that it is not so much the legislation as the way in which the statute and regulations under it are applied that is important. This will determine whether or not the producers, and in particular the smaller farmers of eastern Canada, will get any real benefits or advantages from this policy or this legislation. We, the producers of western Canada will certainly be looking very closely at this agency and at how it works out in the course of the next year or two. If it comes to light that the ones who are really benefiting from the legislation are the virtually integrated livestock producers of the east, or that it is the distributors and speculators in feed that are benefiting to a larger degree, then of course this legislation will be deemed a failure. Therefore of course much remains to be seen. In the meantime our support is extended for Bill C-218.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the acting house leader. In view of the fact that the program for today was changed, may I ask him what the government contemplates bringing forward tomorrow?

• (10:00 p.m.)

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, it is proposed to continue debate on Bill No. C-218 now before the house, to be followed by the estimates of the National Research Council and the Medical Research Council. This is to be followed by the estimates of the Auditor General and the insurance branch of the Department of Finance. Then we will take the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39(A) deemed to have been moved.

HISTORICAL MONUMENTS

HISTORIC SITES—QUEBEC—DEMOLITION OF HOME OF SIR ALEXANDER GALT

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make concerning the question I put yesterday to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Laing). Could the minister tell us why he ordered the demolition of Sir Alexander Galt's house in Sherbrooke, without giving notice to the Eastern Township Historical Society, and whether he intends to honour the memory of this Father of Confederation by restoring the remaining outbuildings?

Several months ago, the minister responsible for the national historic sites division agreed with the Quebec government, in the framework of centennial celebrations, to honour the memory of Sir Alexander Galt by restoring his old house which still stood in Sherbrooke until recently.

I leave it to the minister to indicate why he has ordered the demolition of that house. What I blame him or his officials for, is having ordered the demolition without having previously given notice to the Eastern Township Historical Society and the federal member for Sherbrooke who are greatly interested in the carrying out of the project. I hope the minister will nevertheless authorize the commemoration of Sir Alexander Galt by restoring the outbuildings of the house or by erecting on that site a monument worthy of that great Canadian.

The project must be carried into effect, from both the historical and the confederative point of view, and I wish to draw the attention of the house to the great disenchantment of millions of Canadians, and particularly to that of the English speaking minority in Quebec, in the eastern townships and in Sherbrooke.

If the project is dropped altogether, it is unfair to an English Canadian who made a great contribution to the birth of this country.

People sometimes find that I give dynamic support to the viewpoint of French speaking Canadians from Quebec and elsewhere, but as for the feelings and the rights of English speaking Canadians in Quebec, I am eager to meet their just claims. National unity can be achieved only through equal treatment and mutual understanding.

I trust the minister has a favourable answer for us.

[English]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Sherbrooke for having raised this matter. I also want to assure him that I have received a considerable number of questions, and indeed complaints, from a variety of sources, including the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Asselin) who has brought this situation to my attention a number of times during the past week.

I regret the occurrence very much indeed because apparently, as a result of the attempt to move this building, we have destroyed a house of one of the fathers of confederation, what was unquestionably an historic building of very great significance in the country.

I should like to tell the hon. gentleman what has gone on. This proposal goes back to 1962 when there was a private request for preservation of Galt House. My board—that is, the Historic Sites and Monuments Board —at that time approved the plan and said it was worth while saving, but no one came forward to participate.

In August, 1963, we again concurred, but asked that the matter of Galt House be kept over until we had had a look at the homes of as many of the fathers of confederation as we could possibly find in the various provinces, because there had been a suggestion that they should be preserved.

On February 4, 1965, we had a telephone call from the Dominican Sisters, whose property it was, telling us that they were going to move the house or demolish it in any case because they were expanding their own property and wondered whether we were interested. At the same time we had correspondence from the Eastern Townships Historical Society, who appealed to the Quebec government at that time that the Quebec Commission for Historical Sites be asked to participate. They wrote a letter to Hon. Carrier Fortin on July 24 and received a letter from him saying that they would participate.

On December 10, 1965, the president of the Eastern Townships Historical Society, Mr. Bachand, wrote to the department setting out their efforts to save the house. On March 3, 1966, Hon. Carrier Fortin expressed the first indication that the provincial government was willing to enter into an agreement with the federal government to assume 50 per cent of the restoration cost. This was confirmed by him in a letter on April 5, 1966.

On April 27 the department wrote to Hon. Carrier Fortin pointing out that if the province would not participate to the extent of maintenance, we could not carry the building ourselves. We therefore requested that the city of Sherbrooke participate. Sherbrooke became involved on July 29 and agreed to assume part of the cost, if we removed the building.

Later on, at about the end of July, we were informed by the Dominican Sisters of the fact that on August 8 they intended to begin demolishing the building. Thereafter we made a very great effort—a hurried effort—to put in a contractor. We got a report which said that the old house could be moved. It is a brick dwelling sitting on 50 per cent bedrock. We were told it could be moved, and we proceeded to move it. We did not get very far.

This house has heard the story of the doctor and the operation. Here, neither the operation nor the consequences of it were successful. I think we have learned that it is probably impossible to move a brick house off that type of foundation when the mortar is 100 years old. The building collapsed. We were confronted with the possibility of losing the house, and naturally, an attempt was made to move it. We attempted to move it, and the attempt failed.

SHIPPING—BALA, ONTARIO—OBSTRUCTION OF NAVIGATION BY BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): This afternoon I asked a question concerning wharf access. It is an urgent matter and involves an important principle.

Briefly stated, authority has been granted for the Canadian National to instal a fixed bridge in substitution for a swing bridge over Jeannette's Narrows on Lake Muskoka, which will close off all but small boat navigation to the wharf at the town of Bala, which is a town deriving most of its income from tourist traffic and the boat trade.

Moreover, a Privy Council order No. 1907 of 1965, and a Board of Transport Commissioner's order No. 121124 of June 17, 1966, were made without public or private notice to those affected.

Finally, the Canadian National sent in a crew to convert the bridge, while efforts were being made to delay the conversion.

For 75 years excursion boats have carried passengers on the Muskoka lakes. The town of Bala was a regular calling place. There was, and still is, a large wharf at Bala, and within the past several years it has been rebuilt. The approaches have been improved and extensive funds have been spent.

The excursion boat traffic went into decline, and about eight years ago Bala was discontinued as a port of call. The navigation company closed down. Where the mistake was made, I believe, was that after this wharf had been disused for some time it was assumed that it would never be used again for its previous purpose. It has now come about that use is requested of the wharf. Last year, Muskoka Excursions Limited put a large new excursion ship, the Miss Muskoka, on the lake. This year a second ship the Lady Muskoka was added to the fleet. Excursion ships and excursion boats have now resumed plying the lakes. The town of Bala, and the ship owners have arranged to have the ships call at Bala wharf.

On July 20 of this year the town of Bala applied to the Canadian National for permission to open the swing bridge. It was then that the existence of the orders I have referred to became known.

I have raised this question because the government has acquiesced in what is being done under a privy council order. In closing this means of navigation permanently, there is no alternate way for boats to come in to the Bala wharf.

• (10:10 p.m.)

If this had not been a government department the transaction would have been illegal under the Navigable Waters Protection Act. However, the government has the authority to make such an order, and it did so. My complaint is that the application was not founded on a proper basis and that an opportunity was not given to those interested to be heard and to explain what might happen in the future. I am asking the government now what means of access they intend to provide as an alternative to this bridge which is now closing off traffic to a major port on the lake at Bala Park.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): The Canadian National Railways maintain a railway crossing over Jeannette's Narrows. Originally this was a swing span structure. In 1965 the company requested the approval of the Board of Transport Commissioners for the conversion of this structure to a fixed span structure. The company's aim was to reduce the costs of maintenance and operation. The board requested the Department of Public Works to review the application; and the department advised that it would have no objection to the proposal, provided certain conditions were met.

These conditions were, first, that there should be a vertical clearance of 11 feet 3 inches above high water level and, second, that there should be a horizontal clearance of 55 feet on the north side of the pivot pier and 43½ feet on the south side of that pier. It was thought that this clearance would accommodate most, if not all, the traffic—a traffic which it is believed consists largely of smaller pleasure craft.

I am informed that larger boats are able to make use of an alternative channel to enter the Bala harbour and that this channel, which is about two miles away from the structure we are discussing, provides 32 feet of vertical clearance and 42 feet of horizontal clearance. Obviously there is a difference between the information I have and that which has been provided by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka—a difference which I suspect we shall not be able to resolve tonight.

I want to thank the hon. member for putting forward the information he has adduced, and to thank him personally for making me interested in the prospects of visiting Bala Park.

Mr. Aiken: In a very small boat.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF MUSICAL RIDE AND EQUESTRIAN DUTIES

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): My appearance here tonight arises through a misunderstanding. I had a consultation with Mr. Speaker about a question I had directed yesterday to the Solicitor General. I want to go on record that I have no criticism to make of the Speaker regarding the decision he reached. I apologize to him for having misunderstood him and gone through the motions I did to catch his eye, though perhaps I benefitted from it because I needed the exercise.

It is not my purpose to use my time debating with the Solicitor General about the problem I raised. There has been a change in the training of officers and men of the R.C.M.P. which has resulted in a curtailment in the use of horses. That is not the point at difference here. It is understood that the personnel, horses and necessary training equipment for the musical ride will be maintained for traditional and other purposes but, whether it is just a rumour or not, it is said that the training establishment is going to be moved to Ottawa.

This has caused great concern in my area and province, which for many years have been the centre for such training. We do not think there can be a good reason for moving the operation, and my purpose in asking the question of the Solicitor General was to establish precisely what the situation will be. So, without further debate I again ask him, is the government giving consideration to removing from the R.C.M.P. establishment in Regina the training equipment, forces and personnel needed for the musical ride and other equestrian duties? If so, has a final decision been taken, or is the minister giving sympathetic consideration to the many representations that these facilities should remain in Regina for historic and other substantial reasons?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the important matters raised in the question put by the hon. member have already been given intensive study, and perhaps it in only fair for me to say there was more than rumour in the move referred to by the hon. member. However, in view of the representations from the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. More), and from others, the matter is now being given further consideration before a final decision is reached.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

Tenth report of standing committee on transport and communications—Mr. Macaluso.

[Note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING RETIREMENT OF PRESIDENT

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to table the correspondence exchanged between the president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and myself. In a letter dated October 5 the president, Mr. Ouimet, states that because of certain personal and professional reasons he has come to the conclusion that he should not carry on as head of the corporation after the proposed new legislation comes into effect, which he considers will be early in the new year.

When I received this letter I replied to Mr. Ouimet that in the circumstances outlined in his letter, which is now being tabled, I felt that, on behalf of the government, I would have to accept his decision, which I did with great regret; and I added, in my letter, an expression of gratitude and appreciation for the outstanding contribution Mr. Ouimet has made to the corporation over a long period of years.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the correspondence referred to by the Right Hon. Prime Minister be tabled?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I will say at once, as far as the president of the C.B.C. is concerned, that we appointed him when we were in power and that he has served at length in the position to which he was appointed.

However, behind all this there is great uncertainty regarding the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and I feel the committee on broadcasting should be convened at once. We would like to know what is to happen to Captain Briggs. Has the government communicated with him? Has he been informed whether he is to be continued in office beyond the period for which his appointment runs, which I believe is up to the latter part of January, 1967.

We should also like to know the circumstances in which Mr. John Kerr was appointed as supervisor of programs, one of the most sensitive of the senior positions if the C.B.C. is to remain politically unimpaired.

• (11:10 a.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I feel I must intervene, if the right hon. Leader of the Opposition would allow me to do so. My understanding of the statement made by the Prime Minister is that the correspondence tabled referred exclusively to the president of the C.B.C., and the practice is to limit comments to the subject matter of announcements or statements made by the Prime Minister or other ministers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I mentioned the resignation as part of the major problem, but Your Honour rules I cannot do so. Therefore I simply conclude by saying that what is happening indicates that all is not well in the C.B.C., and that the time has come for a parliamentary investigation.

CONSUMER CREDIT

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST AND SECOND REPORTS OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, if the house gives its consent I move, seconded by Mr. Allmand:

That the first and second reports of the special joint committee on consumer credit, presented to the house on Friday, April 1, and Thursday, October 6, respectively, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we in this party gladly concur in these two reports because we think it is imperative that a committee with such a heavy responsibility be allowed to sit while the house is sitting. My only purpose in rising is to express the hope that the terms of reference of this committee are wide enough to cover a general investigation into consumer prices.

The other day when we endeavoured to raise the matter of car prices it was suggested by members of the cabinet that the committee on consumer credit would deal with it. I can understand that the committee must set up certain orders of priority, and I believe at the present time it is dealing with food prices. I wish to express the hope that it will go on to deal with automobile prices fairly soon, because 1967 cars are now on the market, or will be in the course of the next few weeks, which makes this an appropriate time to have an investigation into car prices.

If the terms of reference are not sufficiently wide, then I hope the committee will bring to the house a request seeking the necessary powers for an investigation into the newly announced prices for 1967 model automobiles.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam in saying that there is an urgent need for this joint committee on consumer credit to carry on with its important investigations. I understand there are a large number of witnesses to be called; therefore we are in agreement that every opportunity should be given to the committee to carry on with its work. We support the motion.

Motion agreed to.

RESEARCH

PROVISION FOR GRANTS TO CORPORATIONS FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to encourage the initiation of programs and the expansion of existing programs of scientific research and development in Canada by the payment out of the consolidated revenue fund, on the authorization of the Minister of Industry, to corporations incorporated in and carrying on business in Canada, of grants in respect of capital expenditures in Canada, and in respect of increases in current expenditures in Canada over a specified base period by such corporations on scientific research and development in fiscal periods commencing with the fiscal periods of such corporations ending in 1966; to provide that such scientific research and development grants shall be exempt from income tax; and to provide for amendments to the Income Tax Act that are incidental to or consequential on the introduction of the said measure.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOAN RATIO ON RENTAL HOUSING, LOANS ON EXISTING HOUSING, ETC.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (for the Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the National Housing Act, 1954, to further encourage the demand for housing by increasing the loan ratio for rental housing from 85 per cent of the lending value to 90 per cent of the lending value; by providing that loans made to persons who intend to purchase, improve and occupy existing housing be insurable on conditions similar to loans made for new housing; by increasing from eight and one-half billion dollars to nine and one-half billion dollars the aggregate amount of all loans that may be insured under the Act; by increasing from three and one-quarter billion dollars to four billion dollars the maximum charge on the consolidated revenue fund for lending by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation; by authorizing the corporation, with the approval of the government of the province concerned, to make loans for student housing projects which will not be restricted only to the accommodation of university students; by increasing from two hundred million dollars to three hundred and fifty million dollars the amounts that may be paid out of the consolidated revenue fund as loans for student housing projects for reimbursement for losses sustained on loans for such projects; and by extending for an additional three years the period within which the construction of a sewage treatment project in respect of which a loan has been or is to be made under part VIB of the act must be compleed if the municipality or municipal sewerage corporation is to be forgiven payment of a part of the principal amount of the loan and of the accrued interest thereon.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN EXECUTION OF GERMAN WAR PRISONERS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the matter I should like to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister is one which I am sure already has received his attention, namely the heinous suggestion in Der Spiegel which casts an unwarranted slur on members of the Canadian armed forces. I refer, of course to the article which suggests that on May 13, 1945 certain unnamed Canadian authorities assisted in the trial and execution for desertion of two German prisoners of war.

Has this matter been reviewed, and will the Prime Minister assure the house and the country that this story is a tissue of falsehoods?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the right hon. gentleman has brought up this matter. I have been discussing it with the Minister of National Defence, and he is in a position to reply.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as soon as Professor McWhinney brought this Der Spiegel article to our attention we referred it to the appropriate officials of the department for a complete investigation. The investigation is under way and a certain amount of preliminary information is available. As soon as all the facts are assembled we will be in a position to make a statement to the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the minister prepared to say, on the basis of the preliminary investigation, that this story now, after 21 years, is without foundation.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be inadvisable for me to go into detail, but I do think in so far as this story is concerned the facts will indicate as the right hon. gentleman has suggested.

NATURAL GAS

CHANGE IN DECISION RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION OF LINE THROUGH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. the Prime Minister. I should like to ask when he or the responsible minister will make a statement to the house giving the reasons the government has reversed its decision with regard to the construction by Trans-Canada Pipe Lines of a pipeline through the United States.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would very glad indeed to have the minister make a statement at the first opportunity. It is not a question of the government reversing its decision; it is a question of Trans-Canada reversing its decision and providing for certain undertakings which, had they been included in the original application, would have enabled the government to arrive at a different decision. I will be glad, however, to go into the matter in detail at the first opportunity.

Mr. R. K. Andras (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister assure us that the related requirements of Trans-Canada Pipe Lines, which includes looping of the existing line through northern Ontario beginning in 1970, will be written as firm legal contractual obligations, with appropriate penalties for non-performance?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my hon. friend and the house that the undertaking referred to will be incorporated in a formal agreement between the company and the minister responsible. As hon. members know, exports and imports of gas cannot be made without licences issued by the National Energy Board and approval by the governor in council. Licences in this instance will be related to the formal agreement between the company and the minister.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister how soon copies of this agreement will be available, and how soon he expects the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will be making a statement on this matter to the house.

Mr. Pearson: That should be possible shortly. I would hope it could be done next week. I will discuss it with the minister at once.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Could the right hon. Prime Minister give the house some idea when it is expected the F.P.C. will be considering the new decision by the Canadian government in relation to the United States part of the Trans-Canada pipe line.

Mr. Pearson: The federal power commission has been considering this matter and will now be considering it in the light of the recent decision taken in Ottawa. I cannot tell my hon. friend when that consideration is likely to result in a conclusion. I would hope it would be without unnecessary delay.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

QUEBEC—EXTENSION OF TELEVISION SERVICE IN CHIBOUGAMAU

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State.

Can the hon. member tell us whether, as a result of the recent announcement made by the Board of Broadcast Governors, it can be expected that free television service will soon be extended, as everywhere else in Canada, to the Chibougamau-Chapais, Parent, Clova region and other centres in northwestern Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. gentleman for not being able to answer the question in the language in which it was posed. I am sure he knows there is included in the white paper a program of priority of services to be extended wherever possible to all individuals in Canada who are not now receiving such services. The C.B.C. is able to read and has read the white paper and is, I am informed, already in the process of making its plans in order to fulfil the purpose of that paper.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REPORTED U.S. DECISION RESPECTING F-5 AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Industry in his capacity regarding defence production. In light of the reports to the effect that Defence Secretary McNamara has decided that the United States defence department will not purchase the F-5 aircraft, has the minister been able to confirm this decision; and if so, how will this affect any defence production sharing agreements we may have with the United States in connection with these aircraft?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): It was not contemplated at the time that the F-5 was ordered for use by Canada there would be production of the aircraft in Canada for use by the United States. As the hon. gentleman knows, it is already in production in the United States. The decision of the secretary of defence of the United States, if indeed such a decision has been made, not to purchase the F-5 would not have any bearing on the production or manufacture of the F-5 in Canada.

Mr. Lambert: I have a supplementary question. Will the minister indicate just how this decision will affect defence production facilities in Canada having regard to our potential requirement for the CF-5? Will he also indicate at the same time whether 125 aircraft are still to be produced, or has this figure been reduced to something in the neighbourhood of 80 or 85?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, the first question is involved and would require a very complex answer. At the present time there has been no change in the number of CF-5's ordered.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF UNIFICATION BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to address a question to the Minister of National Defence in reference again to the matter raised yesterday by members of the official opposition. In light of the representations which the minister said yesterday he had not read, has the minister or the government reconsidered this question of referring the subject matter of the unification of the armed services to the defence committee of this house before the house is asked to approve in principle a bill dealing with this matter?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend is aware, in order to refer a bill after first reading we would require unanimous consent of the house. I think hon. members would want to address themselves to the other question, as to whether that course would in any event be desirable.

Mr. Winkler: Just try us.

Mr. Brewin: I have a supplementary question. Would it not be possible to refer this subject matter to the defence committee before first reading in order that we do not have to approve of it in principle before that committee has thoroughly studied the matter?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have great confidence in the ability of members of this house to consider the issue involved, and I am sure that if we proceed in the normal manner and the opportunity is provided for full discussion of that issue, members will be able to take their responsibility in the normal manner.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell the house whether there is one logical reason why this whole question could not now be referred to the defence committee, so that officers, former officers and other persons could testify before the committee?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that his question is argumentative.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question and it is this. In view of the revelation by Admiral Landymore that his evidence was changed while in the possession of the minister and before presentation to the committee, does the minister not consider this is something that the defence committee should look into to ascertain whether the policy that will be set out in the bill to be introduced is indeed one for the benefit of Canada?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker. I think when the bill is referred to the committee full opportunity will be available—

Mr. Diefenbaker: That will be too late.

Mr. Hellyer: —if the committee so desires to check all allegations of this nature and to look at the original document and what he actually said side by side. When that is done they will find there was no restriction whatsoever in so far as his discussion of unification was concerned; none.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In that gratuitous addition to the minister's answer, Mr. Speaker, does he say that he did not have a change made in the evidence while it was in his possession?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does he say that?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have already—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that we are at this time having the debate the minister says we should have in committee.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Now that the minister has admitted to Mr. Scott Young of the Globe and Mail that his premature retirement of service personnel in 1964 and 1965 was very damaging to morale, will he not agree to an immediate examination by the committee on defence of his unification program to avoid similar error?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member who asked this question will recognize it is not asked in proper form. The question contains allegations that are not normal in such questions.

Mr. Churchill: I had hoped for a vague answer from the minister.

Mr. Hellyer: I would be very pleased to provide one, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is an admission.

Mr. Churchill: Don't change Hansard tomorrow.

RESEARCH

REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF ALLEGED FREEZE ON EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Minister of Finance. I would ask the minister, will the government reconsider its freeze on research spending in view of the very latest reports indicating that our medical teachers and medical research personnel are continuing to move to the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that the hon. member has asked this question, because there is no freeze. There will be a very substantial increase in research expenditure by the government; not as great as we would have felt desirable, but very substantial indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I would address a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, who is responsible for answering to the house on medical research matters. Can the minister assure the house that this substantial increase in expenditure will include medical research, in order to stop a potentially serious doctor shortage in this nation?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I can give that assurance right now, Mr. Speaker, and I will be elaborating, more fully on this matter I hope, later this afternoon.

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether this increase will be sufficient to satisfy the demands of the Gundy report, which has been endorsed by the deans of faculties of medicine across Canada as well as by hundreds of scientists—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the question now being put by the hon. member is argumentative.

TRADE

WHEAT—PROSPECTS FOR FURTHER SALES TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the record wheat crop which Russia expects to harvest this year, will the minister advise the house what effect the wheat board estimates this will have on Russian orders for Canadian wheat during the next 12 months?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that this is a proper question, but I will be governed by your ruling. The wheat board believes there will be a very active demand for Canadian wheat over the next few years.

ALLEGED CONTRADICTION IN MINISTERS' STATEMENTS RESPECTING CREDIT FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I have a problem which refers to a contradiction between statements made by ministers of the crown. If both these statements had been made in the house a question of privilege would of course be involved. However, since one was made outside the house I will have to try to find out by questions to the ministers which is the correct statement.

The question I wish to put is based upon an article which appeared in the Free Press on September 29, 1966, under the byline of Joyce Fairbairn, in which she is quoting the Minister of Trade and Commerce on the subject of assisting those nations which are buying wheat from us on credit under long term agreements to obtain that credit. These words in the article are in quotation marks.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that he cannot make a speech at this time. He can ask a question which should be short, succinct and to the point. He cannot quote from a newspaper report in asking a question.

Mr. Hamilton: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I will ask my question in this way; it is addressed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) apparently made a statement on September 29 that credit would be made available under the Export Credits Insurance Act. I should like an affirmation that this assurance, given by the minister in charge of the Export Credits Insurance Act, is correct and was made on that date.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen this statement.

TRANSPORT

LOTBINIERE, QUE.—REQUEST FOR PROTECTION AT LEVEL CROSSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the hon. Minister of Transport and I trust that he will be able to solve the problem.

In view of the tragedy which occurred at a railway crossing in Lotbinière county where there are no signal lights and which cost the lives of four people, I would like to ask the minister if he intends to take the necessary steps and use all his influence with railway companies so that signal lights or adequate protection may be installed at all railway crossings?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member's question is primarily of local interest. I admit it is important—

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Another tragedy occurred in Drummond county—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will undoubtedly wish to make representations to the minister if he believes the matter is urgent or, if he prefers, put the question on the order paper.

Mr. Choquette: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

LOUISBURG, N.S.—LAY-OFF OF WORKERS AT HISTORIC SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Prime Minister. Yesterday we received assurances from the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration that there was no change in the winter works program other than the $500 winter housing program. Would the Prime Minister take the necessary steps to ensure that no lay-offs will take place in the Louisburg project screened behind the fact that the assistance with which the government maintains the winter works program is not available this winter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We will do our best to see that this does not happen.

COAL

POSSIBLE PUBLIC OWNERSHIP OF CERTAIN MARITIME PROVINCE MINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Industry. I apologize for not giving him notice, but would the minister mind informing the house whether the government is giving serious consideration to the bringing of certain coal mines in the maritimes under public ownership?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the question of coal mining in the maritimes is a subject which has been under serious examination by the government for some time. As soon as this examination has been concluded an announcement will be made.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I wish to address to the Minister of Industry. In view of the fact that one year and two days ago, on October 5 last, the Minister of Labour made a statement regarding assistance for the coal mines in Nova Scotia, does he not think it is now time to make a decision to do something in this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): May I be permitted to answer the question, Mr. Speaker, and say to the house and to the hon. member that the Donald report, which is one of the main documents concerned here, will be tabled on Tuesday.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

MONTREAL—PROPOSED SITE FOR NEW HEADQUARTERS BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Secretary of State.

Can the minister tell the house whether a contract authorizing the construction of a motel on the new C.B.C. site in Montreal has been signed and with whom?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest the hon. member should put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Allard: I should, therefore, Mr. Speaker, like to discuss this matter at ten o'clock.

[English]

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF SHEPPARD REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State, particularly in view of the statement made today by the Prime Minister regarding the president of the C.B.C. Is it the intention of the hon. lady to table the Sheppard report so members of the house can share in the revelations it undoubtedly contains?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the so-called Sheppard report is a confidential report prepared for the office of the Secretary of State. It is a very long document and it is still being considered. I have not as yet even received comments from the various agencies. If it is to be tabled, and that decision has not yet been made, it will not be soon.

Mr. Brand: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? I wonder whether the hon. lady would then consider making the report available for consideration and study by the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts?

Miss LaMarsh: I will consider it, but that would certainly be making it public.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REQUEST FOR RETURN OF PROGRAM "AUJOURD'HUI"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alcide Simard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State has already been informed of the question I wish to direct to her. My question is as follows. Has the hon. lady the intention of taking the necessary measures to order back to our local T.V. screens in the Saguenay and Lac-Saint-Jean region the program entitled "Aujourd'hui"?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have not received notice of this question; however, I will be happy to take this as notice. As my hon. friend knows, I have no responsibility for programming and will have to refer it to the C.B.C.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO PAY INCREASES FOR MILITIA FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a short question for the Minister of National Defence. Were the militia forces included in the recent pay increases?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. The question is being considered separately from that of the regular force .

Mr. Dinsdale: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I take it from that answer that the salaries of this citizens' group, which has always been the backbone of the armed forces, will be brought into line with the present pay structure.

Mr. Hellyer: All I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, and through you my hon. friend, is that all factors will be taken into consideration, such as the present rates of pay, the requirements in respect of those rates of pay, the tremendous contribution they have made to Canada in the past, their present relationship to the armed forces of Canada, and the best value possible for the taxpayers of this country.

POWER

CHURCHILL FALLS—INQUIRY AS TO EXPORT APPLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposiion): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and ask him this. Now that the Johnson government of Quebec has approved of the purchase of power from Churchill Falls, thus making possible one of the largest hydro developments in North America, what is the situation with regard to export of power to the United States? Second, has any conclusion been reached regarding the export of power to Consolidated Edison in New York and to the state of Vermont; and third, has there been any application made to the National Energy Board in this connection?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No applicaion has as yet been made, Mr. Speaker. I am informed that in a few days we will receive the answer to these questions from the premier of Quebec himself.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker; I would like to ask the hon. minister if the Quebec government has communicated with his department—

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lapointe is now speaking on a supplementary question.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: A supplementary question. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if the Quebec government has communicated with the federal authorities concerning the possibility of setting up nuclear plants on Quebec soil and if a report may be tabled on that matter?

Mr. Pepin: I am told that the Quebec government has made an exhaustive study of the whole subject before making a decision.

Mr. Grégoire: A further supplementary question, since this is not quite the answer to the question I have asked.

Has the Quebec government inquired of the central government as to the possibility and necessary details related to the setting up of a nuclear energy plant on Quebec soil?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that his question is out of order. He is merely asking whether the Quebec government looked into certain matters. I do not believe the question can be accepted as presently worded.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, allow me to reword my question so that it might be in order.

Has the federal government made an investigation, at the request of the Quebec government, into the possibility of building a nuclear power plant in the province of Quebec?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): A statement has already been made with regard to the construction of a nuclear plant at Bécancour. I do not know whether that is what the hon. member has in mind, but that plan has already been announced and its construction is now in the process of being launched.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister said an announcement would be made by the premier of Quebec, but my question had to do with the responsibilities of the federal government. Does the minister suggest that the export of power is a matter within the jurisdiction of the provinces, and that the National Energy Board has no authority?

Mr. Pepin: I was not saying that at all. I was saying that the announcement with regard to the content of the agreement between Quebec and Brinco will be made in the coming days. Then we will know if there is any export content in this contract, and we will know if the jurisdiction of the National Energy Board will apply.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister at this moment does not know what the contents are; is that his suggestion?

Mr. Pepin: I have no trouble in admitting that is true.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, another supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: Another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Five or six supplementary questions have already been put on this point and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Mather) has caught my eye.

[English]

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON DEVELOPMENT OF GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I had a question I wanted to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but perhaps in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Having in mind the far reaching recommendations by the commission on government in the north tabled in the house yesterday, will there be an opportunity for the people of the north to express their reaction to these recommendations before this house or the government implements them? I should like the minister's secretary to take notice of this question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO DIPLOMATIC RECOGNITION OF MAINLAND CHINESE GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement last night by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that Canada intends to assist and encourage in every possible way trade between mainland China and this country, is the government considering at this time the possibility of establishing diplomatic relations with mainland China as a positive means of assisting this Canadian-Chinese trade?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The trade to which my hon. friend refers, of course, is trade in non-strategic materials, and as my hon. friend knows that particular trade is within the list set up by our friends. The other question is one of far reaching importance, and I am not in a position to answer it on orders of the day.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): I have a question for the Solicitor General in relation to the arrest of the unfortunate man in Toronto in connection with the murder of an 88 year old woman. Can the Solicitor General advise this house whether he will be defended by an able lawyer on his way to the bench or an avaricious fiction writer on her way to the bank?

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR NEGOTIATIONS ON BASIS OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING PRINCIPLES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the minister's announcement during the recess that the implementation of formal collective bargaining in the civil service is being postponed, will the government consider negotiating with its employees in the meantime on the basis of collective bargaining principles?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, under existing legislation the government has not got the right to do this. My hope is that the legislation will be dealt with by the committee and by the house rather quickly, and that we may be able to determine the ultimate salaries of group D employees, which are presently up for consideration, through the collective bargaining process.

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING SALARIES OF POSTAL WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I wanted to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Has the minister received representations from the International Association of Machinists in Toronto protesting what they term the inadequate pay increases for their skilled personnel, and complaining that if this experience is widespread it will result in skilled labour flowing out of the Post Office Department? Has consideration been given to these representations and what is the nature of the response, if any, to them?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): I did not receive the representations personally, but I will check in my office.

Mr. Scott (Danforth): Let me make those representations now.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PRICE UNDER INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance in his capacity as reporting to this house for the Canadian Wheat Board. In view of the optimistic remarks the minister made a few minutes ago with regard to the possibility of Canada selling a large amount of grain in the next few years, will the minister and his officials take every step to see that a new international wheat agreement is developed with an increase in price for the farmers of western Canada to help eliminate the cost-price squeeze?

[Mr. Cowan.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): This will be the objective of the Canadian delegation.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It may be that I have missed this information, but in the light of reported statements by the minister that he would be tabling a white paper on immigration, could he tell the house now whether a firm date has been fixed for that tabling so we can get on with the legislation which is holding up so many applications?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I cannot give a firm date, but I can tell you it will probably be some time next week.

AGRICULTURE

CREAM—REPORTED DELAY IN SUBSIDY PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if he would undertake to make a statement in this house respecting what now appears to be an undue delay in the issuing of cheques for the cream subsidy. It appears some farmers have not received them as yet, though they were under the impression they were going to get these cheques months ago. There must be a reason, and I am just asking the minister if he would explain to these people why they are not receiving their cheques.

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows there are a great number of recipients of cheques this year who were not previously registered. I must say that we are encountering some administrative difficulties in having them all enrolled as quickly as we would like. Some of the factories are not getting their returns in sufficiently quickly. I will look into it. My estimates may be before the house shortly, in fact I have been told they may be before the house today, and I will be prepared to give a statement at that time.

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTH-WEST AFRICA—CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING MANDATE OF SOUTH AFRICA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us what position Canada will be taking at the United Nations with regard to the mandate of South Africa over South-West Africa?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be making a statement in the United Nations on this matter this afternoon, I expect, and I would hate to scoop the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Knowles: Would the Prime Minister arrange for an explanation of the minister's statement to be produced so we will know what it means?

Mr. Pearson: My hon. friend may not know what it means, but 115 delegates in New York will.

Mr. Starr: There is some question about that, too.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED TAX CONCESSIONS TO COMPANIES DEVELOPING POWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Did he receive a request from the governments of Newfoundland and Quebec for exemption from the corporation profits tax of all companies operating, developing or distributing energy resources in two or more provinces?

Mr. Speaker: This question should be put on the order paper.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN—PRESERVATION OF INDIAN SHRINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. D. McLelland (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Could the minister inform the house what arrangements have been made to move and save the Indian shrine known as Mistaseni, which could be lost under the rising waters of the South Saskatchewan river dam if it is not moved to higher ground soon?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, arrangements were made to have the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act officials negotiate and discuss this question with the local committee, which I think has a particular interest in this matter as it has raised some funds, to try to see if some way could be determined for preserving at least part of the rock on a basis that was economically feasible.

ASSISTANCE IN STORAGE AND TRANSPORTATION COSTS

The house resumed, from Thursday, October 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sauvé for the second reading of Bill No. C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take full advantage of this opportunity to make some remarks on the Canadian livestock feed board contemplated under Bill No. C-218.

Because of the importance of the principle of this bill the members of the opposition have followed its development with a great deal of interest. Certainly, on hearing the remarks of the minister, and having had an opportunity of examining them in detail, we can find no quarrel with the object of the bill, which is to rectify an unfortunate condition that has existed in eastern Canada for some years with respect to what was considered by livestock feeders and the producers of feed grains as abnormal profit taking, especially under conditions of short supply or increased transportation cost.

Having said that we have no objection to the principle of the bill, may I take these few moments allocated to me to point out some clauses of the bill which have given me great misgivings.

In developing this bill to correct a grave problem the government has, by the provisions of the bill, projected itself further into free enterprise. That is so because under the provisions of this bill the committee as set up can have almost unlimited power as far as the flow of feed grains is concerned. Once again this is an attempt to correct the situation in one segment of Canada. As happens in matters of this kind when such corrective measures are taken, something, that can be of benefit to one locality of Canada very often works a hardship to other sections of Canada.

When we look at the principle of this bill and the way in which it is set out, the first thing that comes to mind is the fact that we seem to be working to contrary ends. It is true that we have a grain board in the west that has worked very successfully throughout the years and has been responsible for the continuing high prices received by western producers of feed grains and grains of all kinds. Now, however, under this bill the government proposes to set up a government bureau the principle of which is in effect almost directly contrary to the principle of the wheat board in the west.

The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, as I understand it is to use every means within the power granted by the government to procure feed grains for eastern Canada and British Columbia at the lowest possible price. So we have in one region of Canada a government bureau which has been set up to promote the highest possible prices for feed grain, and in another region of Canada another government bureau which has been set up to promote the very lowest prices for feed grain.

Not only does this seem to involve an impossible situation, but consider, if you will, where it puts provinces such as Ontario, which is becoming a major producer of feed grains. In fact, Mr. Speaker, with respect to such grains as corn, oats and feed wheat, we in Ontario may soon find ourselves in an exporting position. Consider, if you will, where the carrying out of the principle of this bill would place the producers in Ontario.

There is no doubt that the only market the producers of Ontario feed grain will have is in the east. This is our traditional market, and this bill places us in this impossible position: we shall be selling feed grain to our traditional eastern market—which is and will be controlled, if the bill passes in its present form, by a government agency—in direct competition with the producers of feed grain in the west, who are protected by another government agency.

[Mr. Danforth.]

I think this should cause us to reflect on exactly what the government is doing. Also, Mr. Speaker, because of the government's subsidy on all western feed grains going into eastern Canada, we in Ontario have the additional handicap of having to pay freight on our grains going into eastern Canada in some instances six times as high as that paid with respect to feed grains coming from western Canada into eastern Canada.

If this bill is passed and such principles are set in motion—where a government agency controls the price of feed grains in an entire Canadian region and the avowed principle of such agency is to keep feed grains at the lowest possible price—in what position does it put those farmers in that region whose sole livelihood is derived from the production of feed grains? They would not be able to take advantage of any tremendous rise in the market. They would not be able to take advantage of the laws of supply and demand. Those farmers would be under direct government control in the prices they would be asked to accept.

When we look at the composition of the committee that is to administer this bill and look at the power that may or will be given to it, it is logical for us, on examining this bill, to look at the ultimate power that may be wielded by the committee as being the power we should consider. What do we find? First of all we find that this so called committee—consisting of five members, I believe—is appointed at the pleasure of the government. In other words the members are appointed for life, or until such time as they reach the age of retirement.

• (12:00 noon)

Now, the power which is granted to them is the power to buy, sell, transport or store feed grain to be used in eastern Canada and British Columbia. Mr. Speaker, these are the absolute powers which are set out in any provincial marketing scheme. The only difference, as far as I can see, is that the bill fails to provide two safeguards which the provinces always include; first, that any committee set up to regulate a marketing scheme should reach decisions only after advice has been given or recommendations heard from the groups who are affected by the scheme; and second, that individuals or groups of individuals who consider themselves the victims of an injustice have the right of appeal.

I am wondering also whether the absolute power granted to this committee is not an infringement of the authority of provincial marketing boards. I say this because in Ontario there are already marketing boards set up to control the handling of grains used for feed. How are the provisions and regulations of provincial marketing boards to be reconciled with those introduced by the board contemplated under the bill before us? There could well be a direct conflict of interest because of the regional interests of both. I fail to see how such a problem could be resolved.

There is no doubt in my mind that a serious situation has existed and does exist in eastern Canada inasmuch as excessive profit has been taken from time to time with regard to feed grain. This is a situation which should be corrected, and I think it can be corrected. But I am doubtful whether the most direct or the most effective way of doing this is by means of the sweeping powers given to the board set up under the present bill. We are being asked now, in effect, to set up a cumbersome government bureau with full administrative powers over the eastern feed grain area.

During the war, when emergency powers were in being, it was possible to police all commodity prices, all wages, all salaries. This job was done by inspectors. Perhaps instead of setting up a cumbersome government bureau we could use the services of our present inspection staff in the Department of Agriculture. From time to time inspectors could call upon the distributors of feed grain in eastern Canada to ascertain the retail prices at which they were selling to farmers. This staff, on complaints by individuals or groups of individuals, could make inspections in order to determine whether an unjust profit was being derived.

There is no doubt in my mind that public opinion is the greatest police force we have when it comes to adjusting and correcting prices. We have seen evidence of this in the United States, where great corporations have increased their prices and later been forced to reduce them in the light of public opinion. We have seen the same thing happen in Canada. As a matter of fact, due to the activities of a group of irate housewives we have seen in the past few days how the prices of foodstuffs can be affected by direct action. So I imagine that such an agency as I propose would have the desired effect. It would be easier to administer, more direct in its effect and far less costly to the taxpayers of this country.

Again, one of our major problems in eastern Canada is the lack of adequate storage in places where storage is needed most. The present bill envisages the arrangement of suitable storage space in terminal elevators through arbitration and discussion so that feed grain can be moved in at an early date to take care of the normal requirements of feeders in eastern Canada.

In principle this is sound, but as far as Ontario is concerned it is unlikely to work by reason of the very nature of our harvesting program, which is carried out later than in the west. From time to time when we attempt to move our feed grain to the storage allocated in these terminal elevators we find there is no longer any room for it because the policy has always been to allocate space in terminal elevators on the first come first served basis. Thus we in the east find ourselves faced not only with an increased rate for storage but also with unjust demurrage rates on freight cars which are held up at terminals for weeks waiting to be unloaded.

How can the government provide storage? I think the desired results can be achieved in another way; by continuing the 25 per cent annual write-off on private or commercial storage. This would encourage grain companies to increase their storage facilities; it would also encourage private feeders and owners of small elevators to increase their storage capacity. It would be a golden opportunity for farm co-operatives to do the same so as to be in a position to buy feed grain at a reasonable price and have it on hand for distribution at a fair and even price throughout the feeding season.

That is what we need, a price which is fair and constant throughout the season so that feeders may be able to forecast their cost and decide in advance whether to increase or decrease their production. I say that if encouragement were given for the construction of private storage facilities, the problem of storage would be solved.

The 25 per cent write-off would be a minimal expense to the government, and since the government envisages allocating at least $10 million to this new board for administrative purposes, and provision is made for more if it be needed, certainly this $10 million plus cost is far in excess of any diminished returns that could be expected as a result of the 25 per cent write-off. I ask the government to give every consideration to this possibility in solving the problem we are considering today.

My third recommendation, and it is not a new one, is that the government consider reassessing the entire freight rate subsidy program. This is a complicated program. It is an expensive one. It was introduced as a wartime expedient. At this late date it may be impossible to do away with it, and I am not advocating that it be discontinued, but I ask the government to examine the matter once more to see if two objectives can be achieved.

The first objective is that it be administered more equitably between zones so that borderline cases do not suffer undue hardships and tremendous price fluctuations. The second objective is that it should not work such hardship regionally as it presently does in the case of Ontario. We in Ontario are penalized in two ways because of this government policy. The assistance on freight rates on western grain coming into and through Ontario depresses the price of Ontario feed grains to the extent of the freight assistance that is paid by the government. This assistance makes the feeders in Ontario extremely happy because they obtain cheaper grain, but it makes the producers of feed grain unhappy because it cuts severely into their profit margin.

That is the first handicap. The second handicap is that it places Ontario feed grain producers in an almost impossible position when competing with western feed grain growers in the eastern market. In some instances the freight rate on Ontario feed grains shipped from Toronto to Truro, Nova Scotia, is six times greater than on western grains shipped from the lakehead to the same destination.

For these reasons I plead with the minister that if in the reassessment he finds it impossible to alter the present freight rate assistance paid on western feed grains coming into eastern Canada, then every effort should be made to place Ontario feed grain producers in the same category as western producers. We are certainly entitled to be in the same competitive position as our brothers in the west with respect to the production and sale of our feed grains. Certainly the quality of our grains is competitive, and on that same subject the producers of western feed grains need make no apology for the quality of the grains they produce and ship into eastern Canada.

[Mr. Danforth.]

I see no justifiable reason why the freight rate assistance should not be made applicable to Ontario feed grains so that we may take full advantage of our markets in the east. It would provide the eastern feeders with the cheaper grain they are requesting. A reduction of $20 a ton on Ontario feed grain, by the application of the western freight rates, would make a tremendous difference in the price eastern feeders pay for grain. A government assisted freight rate for Ontario grains would solve another problem. It would increase the use of Canadian grains in eastern Canada as opposed to the importation of United States grain into that entire area.

Having dealt with this matter and put forward suggestions which I feel could correct the problem, correct it faster and to the satisfaction of all areas concerned, and correct it at much less expense to the taxpayers, I wish to conclude by dealing with one other principle. On behalf of the producers of feed grain in eastern Canada I am concerned where the future power will lie with respect to the granting of licences for the importation of feed grains. If my information is correct that power now lies with the western wheat board.

Is it contemplated that it will retain control over the importation of foreign grains, or will this power be delegated to the new board, if it is ever constituted? Will the two agencies operate as separate entities? Will they be subjected to double scrutiny? This is something which fills me with many misgivings, because very often the price of feed grain in Canada is set by the Chicago grain market, plus or minus any duties involved. If the price is set by the Chicago market and it becomes impossible to import feed grain, we could face an abnormal price situation due to the fact that grain could not move freely between countries.

These are some of the facts which I wished to place on record. This is not the simple bill that many of us were led to believe it would be. It is a most complicated bill. It grants tremendous powers to a government bureau. If I felt the bill would solve the problem, solve it quickly, solve it completely, and was the best approach, I would give it my unqualified support. But, Mr. Speaker, although I believe the government has sincerely tried to meet this problem I am convinced its approach is a costly one, a cumbersome one, and damage could be done to the feed grain industry in eastern Canada before such a cumbersome board as is contemplated could take the necessary action.

I believe the direct approach of an inspection agency, with the write-off I have mentioned and an equitable adjustment of freight rates, would solve this major problem to the complete satisfaction of the feeders in eastern Canada, and eliminate the regional difficulty with which this bill does not cope. I still maintain that Ontario will find itself in an impossible position selling to a market that is under government control, and in direct competition with another government agency.

Mr. Florian Côté (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak for the first time in the house and on a matter as important as Bill No. C-218 to set up a livestock feed board.

I say a matter as important as this bill deliberately because it is matters such as the ones we are discussing that prompted the electors of the riding of Nicolet-Yamaska to send here the man who is now speaking to you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Côté (Nicolet-Yamaska): For several years, within my professional organization, I worked to see such a policy, such a measure implemented, as well as various policies about which I spoke during my election campaign, with regard to dairy farming and unemployment insurance.

But, in my opinion, the matter under consideration was the most important because as a farmer, and consequently as a buyer of feed grain from the western provinces, I suffered from those injustices in the handling of grain.

I suffered from the competition from feed producers because I was a director of a cooperative and I had, under the principles agreed to when the cooperative was created, to help those who had put their trust in me and buy grain accepted by the inspectors. Besides, at the same time, the feed producers had the chance to buy grain which had been rejected on the one hand, and which through another channel came into the hands of those who could compete with us. In his speech yesterday, the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) dealt with a situation which can be applied to these grains—I followed his speech very closely and he was right to denounce the discrimination going on; I myself have been a victim of such discrimination.

The grain had been rejected because it did not fully comply with the provisions of the act; in other words, instead of an 11 per cent content in proteins, the grain contained non-nutritive elements. Their protein content had been reduced to 8 or 9 per cent. An independent dealer had the opportunity to buy such grain of a somewhat lower quality and to mix it with some other products containing protein and thus increase the protein content of the grain, since the act authorizes the feed producer to add from 14 to 16 per cent of protein. Such tamperings are not too honest for you are still left with a percentage or a volume of non-digestible matter which cannot be digested by the animal, so that the value of this animal, when transformed into meat or milk, is not such that the buyer has his money's worth.

Mr. Speaker, fears expressed since yesterday are perhaps not too well founded. I have read the bill and it contains exactly what my professional association, the UCC, has been asking the government for years, and it is toward that end that we, in eastern Canada, have been working for so long at UCC's general conventions. This is why, after having read the bill, I find it meets requirements of the farmers. Sometimes, they may be justified in voicing apprehensions such as those which the previous speaker has just expressed but if the hon. member reads the text closely, his fears will be dismissed since the board may buy in any province, in the West, in the East or in Ontario, it does not matter.

Every aspect of the problem has been dealt with and I believe no one in this house would be justified in objecting to the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I was very happy to learn that the bill was being introduced just as I was coming into the house. I have only been here for a few days and it is precisely for this reason that I have been sent here. It is for this reason that I was elected on September 19. Contrary to what certain people who worked against me in my constituency may have thought, it is on the strength of my platform that I was elected, and I consider it to be of prime importance. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I will support it 100 per cent and I congratulate the hon. minister for his contribution in formulating this policy which is designed to help farmers in eastern Canada achieve their objectives.

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, the fact that this bill, which finally has come before the house for second reading, has not received a great deal of public comment or debate of late reminds us all, I think, that it has been a matter of public concern for such a long time that perhaps there were even some who were under the impression that either it would never come up or that the bill had in some way already been passed but simply had not gone into effect.

As we were reminded in the house last evening by the minister, the intent of this bill was first brought before the house by the previous administration, when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) was minister of agriculture. It is very gratifying to see the present administration carrying on this good work and implementing the intent through this bill.

Needless to say, speaking as a maritimer, we have been under the greatest duress in obtaining feed grain over the past number of years due to the great fluctuations in price which have occurred. It is somewhat unnerving to be informed that recent events have taken place which lead one to wonder whether even with the implementation of this board we may be placing powers and placing our good faith in the government when we might not have the right to do so. I am referring to two things in particular which have occurred during the last month which have greatly affected maritime producers. One is with regard to the storage subsidy and the other is with regard to the drastic change in rates of freight assistance.

I am informed that about the first of September producers in the maritime region were notified that the storage subsidy which normally would go into effect on September 15 had been cancelled. In effect this could mean a loss of some $100,000 in Nova Scotia. Why such action should be taken when we are in the process of setting up new machinery to administer a very difficult and complicated area in our economic and productive life, I am not really sure.

The fact of the matter is that most of the producers already had committed their grain to storage, had counted on this subsidy, and then at the last moment it was withdrawn, the only explanation being that those economists whose wisdom seemed to be greater than that of the producers thought the subsidy had no effect in recent years; in fact they said it had not in any way decreased the cost of the feed to the producers themselves. I would argue rather, in a day and age of increasing costs, that the subsidy may in fact have enabled some of the feed costs to have held the line.

An even more serious occurrence took place a few days ago, when notification was received on or about September 30 that on October 1 there would be a drastic change in freight assistance rates which could mean a possible loss of from $200,000 to $250,000 in the maritime area. No one is as yet quite sure whether this will mean a great increase in the rates. Meetings of feed representatives are being held today in the maritimes, and there will be meetings next Wednesday of representatives of the federation of agriculture to study this situation.

I mention all this only to indicate that it seems a strange thing that now, when we are contemplating these drastic changes in the distribution and cost of feed grain in eastern Canada and British Columbia, we should be doing such massive tinkering with laws and controls which we hope within the next six months will be greatly changed in themselves. I can only hope, as many in the maritimes do, that no more serious changes will be made until there has been a prolonged and exhaustive study made under and by the new board in order that the right assistance can be provided.

I am strongly convinced that one of the reasons the whole feeding and livestock program in eastern Canada has been at a serious disadvantage is that there has been only one agency at work looking after the feed program. That is the Canadian Wheat Board, which is concerned much more with the exporting and handling of wheat from western producers. When I speak today I speak not just on behalf of my own area or the province of Prince Edward Island, which in fact is producing a great deal of its own feed grain, particularly in the matter of beef raising; I think the minister mentioned 80 per cent but I feel the present figure is a little closer to 75 per cent. I am speaking for every maritime area including New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, most of which can only produce about 25 per cent to 40 per cent of their own feed grain.

These new policies are of great importance to agricultural producers in the Atlantic region, and they have been far too long in coming. There have been many resolutions initiated by a great number of farm organizations, and the word I have heard throughout the maritimes is that this program must be implemented at the earliest practical time.

There are some fundamental questions that must be raised and there are some disquieting thoughts that come to mind in terms of the kind of policy that will eventually be spelled out in great detail and implemented by this new board. For instance, what are the dangers inherent in a program that may be produced by this board in directing or encouraging a program for vertical integration? What in fact is the size of the operation we are encouraging? Will the policy and program be directed toward encouraging the development of large combines, or is there some thought in the minds of those who have drafted this bill that this will be a great boon to those who are still convinced that the family farm has a role to play and a place in our country? These are things that will have to be spelled out. When will that be done? Will we just gather fragments and bits of information from this new board?

I hope that will not be the case, Mr. Speaker, but that the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Forestry, or the Minister of Finance or whoever is in essence the one who devises agricultural policy in terms of people—it is people that concern me—will be able to state at some early date some specific answers to these questions.

I am in agreement with the belief that in terms of many in the maritime region this will make operations that are now just barely viable, successful operations. If this is so, then many of these farming areas can be utilized to the fullest extent and many of the small farmers particularly can extend their herds and make full use of their farms, increasing their grass land.

I also agree with the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) who suggested that we are granting great powers to this board which will be composed of few people, three, four or five. I for one will be greatly interested to see what kind of people are appointed to these extremely important positions. There is perhaps a natural fear, because of past experience, that the kind of persons appointed will be the kind who can only examine cold statistics and who are intrigued by the economist and his slide rule, rather than by the practical experience and knowledge which exists now in various regions that make up this country.

Therefore what may be greatly important to us here in examining this bill will not only be the powers and composition of the board but the powers and the composition of the advisory committee, about which I will have more to say later. In this regard I am reminded very sadly of the many advisory committees that have been set up in similar circumstances which have turned out to be nothing more than rubber stamps, comprised of people who lose their local contacts three or four months after appointment.

That is not that kind of advisory committee I expect to see implemented or will press for when we come to the committee stage of our discussions. May I simply say, speaking as a maritimer and as a Prince Edward Islander, I feel in general terms that this bill offers great promise for the farm producers in our area.

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, when workers have problems, they go to a labour leader; when we have problems with the mail, we automatically go to someone who was practically born in a post office. Similarly, when we have legal problems, we go to a man of law. We therefore wonder why, when it comes to as important a matter as feed, we must go to a minister who does not know the difference between barley and oats, or the difference between wheat flour and buckwheat flour. Why is it, also, that we must go to the rural representative who is the least interested of all interested parties? Why should this matter of feed be entrusted to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Sauvé)?

• (12:40 p.m.)

In all sincerity, what has forestry got to do with grain, and how will grain be derived from forests? In any event, we are faced with a fait accompli, namely that this minister, a Montrealer, member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine, is the one responsible for it. And thus we have before us legislation providing assistance to livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

The least I can say is that it is high time that we should deal with this problem, because, as far as feed grain is concerned, we are faced with a major problem and, in my opinion, I believe that the situation is the same at both ends of the country. But as far as Quebec feeders are concerned, and particularly those in my district, livestock feeding is the No. 2 problem, being exceeded only by the problem of taxes of all types.

The ever-increasing taxes are collected by several public bodies that are known by most citizens. But, as for feed grain, the price of grain is a mystery even for the experts.

Clause 5 of the present bill provides the means proposed by the board to solve the problem:

Objects, powers and duties.

The objects of the Board are to ensure

(a) the availability of feed grain to meet the needs of livestock feeders;

(b) the availability of adequate storage space in Eastern Canada for feed grain to meet the needs of livestock feeders;

(c) reasonable stability in the price of feed grain in Eastern Canada and in British Columbia and

(d) fair equalization of feed grain prices in Eastern Canada and in British Columbia.

In clause 6:

The Board may, in furtherance of its objects, (a) make

(i) payments related to the cost of geed grain storage in Eastern Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member who is now speaking to remind him that when considering this bill on second reading, he cannot refer in his statement to particular sections of the bill. I do not wish to restrict him too much, but in general, I know that he will take this suggestion in consideration.

Mr. Godin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. At any rate, I was going to mention that the board will pay grants. May we hope that a grain trade in receipt of more remunerative grants will give better results? Will this announcement of grants not entail a price increase?

We are wondering about it, because following the generosity of the Quebec government in this connection, prices keep rising ostensibly due to a shortage. But it must be admitted that it was a well managed shortage since the customers were finally looked after.

In the last two years, for instance, the price of seed oats has increased by $1.50 per hundredweight following a provincial grant of 50 cents per hundredweight for that class of grain.

Last winter, we all learned about the assistance given to cattle breeders by the federal government, jointly with the Quebec government. Such assistance was granted in designated areas following crop failures due to excessive rain in some cases and to drought, in others.

However, only cattle feed was subsidized and all hog breeders and poultry farmers had to pay the general price increase of 10 to 15 per cent on grain from the week when the subsidies were granted.

[Mr. Godin.]

What part will the board play in such situations? Section 8 speaks of reasonable prices.

Will the minister tell us what he means by "reasonable" and how high the price of grain will have to go before it is considered unreasonable? Will there be price control in this field? Will there be a new method of rationing or a policy of first come first served, since section 16 is a financial clause?

I should like to quote a passage, Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to do so due to my lack of experience. Clause 16 reads:

(1) All expenditures under this act, including amounts required for

(a) payments related to the cost of feed grain transportation or the cost of feed grain storage made under paragraph (a) of section 6, and

(b) payment of salaries and other expenses including expenses of administration . . . shall be paid out of moneys appropriated by Parliament therefor.

And subsection 4:

No payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund under subsection (2) shall exceed

(a) the amount by which ten million dollars exceeds the balance of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board Account, and

(b) any amount advanced under section 17.

What amount will the board be able to spend on this program? What scale will be used as a basis for deciding that a certain amount is adequate?

Will that amount be subject to credit restrictions, which have become current these days?

We can quote another statement, contained in the resolution introducing this bill, which reads as follows:

—and when authorized by the governor in council to enter into direct marketing operations in feed grain;

At this point, we ask ourselves: will some dealers be eliminated or will the new board serve as yet another middleman in already too long a list of intermediaries?

We note, as well, that the board will be authorized to made arrangements with a view to ensuring that livestock feeders have adequate feed supplies.

Will the board have men out on the road to find out what the requirements are?

Will the board provide for customers an information service like the one now provided by companies or responsible merchants?

Supposing that, for eastern Canada, the grain purchased before the close of the shipping season would represent only 25 per cent of the expected consumption, would the board cover the risk of filling up the elevators of the areas concerned with, as sole guarantees, the consumption statistics of previous years?

Section 7 says that it shall be the duty of the board to make a continuing study of the requirements in eastern Canada and British Columbia. I hope that the word "study" here is only a word, because the time for study has been over long since and I suppose the minister will understand that now is the time for action.

In the same clause we read that the board will have to make recommendations to the minister and generally advise the government. I wonder whether the government will become very sensitive to recommendations made by its own employees it has chosen and whose names will be on the payroll?

If the government says it is ready to accept advice, how is it that the same government has always turned a deaf ear to representations made in that field by associations of grain and feed dealers, co-operatives and farm unions, as the Catholic Farmers Union?

All these questions make us believe that this board will play a very important and very delicate part. Everything will depend also on the powers given the board and the way these powers will be used.

I hope that all the farmers in the areas concerned with this new board will always receive the information to which they are entitled, and that the board will be really sure it is in a position to meet their needs and that we will have a truly improved policy, because the farmer has been the forgotten man for too long. During election period, Conservatives as well as Liberals have always taken pleasure in reminding him that he is the king of the farm. If he ever was king, we have proof that he has been dethroned for a long time, because as far as finance is concerned, his position proves that he is inferior to the majority of the workers in industry and he is far behind the majority of other professionals.

And in spite of his efforts, there is no way out for him as he finds himself caught between the price he is offered and the one he must accept for his products, and prices have gone up in the past 20 years, in some instances by 50 per cent in the case of grain and 100 per cent in the case of concentrates needed for livestock feeding.

For the last 15 years, the prices offered the farmer for eggs, chicken, turkey or other poultry have always been the same. The same thing can be said of meat such as beef, pork and other foodstuffs.

One must say he can hardly do something about it since he is dealing with perishable goods that he must deliver to the market as soon as they have reached the quality required by the consumer.

Such perishable products are none the less essential and farmers have proved that they know where their responsibilities lie.

I am convinced that it is precisely because they have fulfilled their duty too well that governments, regardless of who was in power, have ignored them.

The second reason why I think farmers are forgotten is because they have never honestly considered contributing to the election funds of the old line parties.

But the government realizes, I imagine, that it cannot rely indefinitely on the moral support of the farmers. The march on the Quebec Parliament organized by the farmers has proved that they can listen to electoral promises. But it has also proved that they can get together, between elections, to demand the passing of legislative amendments in their favour.

Therefore, we are anxious to see what this new board will do, and, if need be, we shall make further representations on behalf of this hardworking class which is not asking for charity but only for what is coming to them.

• (12:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the applause from my associates on this side of the house.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): And from the other side of the house as well in at least one case. In rising to take part in this debate I wish to say at the outset that I do not categorically oppose this legislation. I think it has the prospect of considerable merit. In any case, the situation is such that one can afford to be optimistic, because I think there is hardly any field in what one might call agricultural economics where there is more room for improvement than the feed grain program for eastern feeders.

Canadian Livestock Feed Board

I do not want to be repetitious but I think it is well to recall the circumstances under which this policy was first brought into being. I can do no better than quote the minister's own words on this matter when speaking in this debate:

> Freight assistance to feed grain and other grain products from the west to points of consumption in eastern Canada and in British Columbia was first started during the war, that is, in 1941.

Later he said:

> The program served a double purpose; to expand the feed grain markets for the benefit of western grain producers and to enable farmers in eastern Canada and British Columbia to increase their cattle production.

The measure was brought into being during the war under special circumstances. We are now in the peculiar situation where an emergency program which was introduced under abnormal conditions has been continued long after its prime purpose has disappeared. It has been continued because of the side effects which the original program produced and which were possibly of relatively minor importance. This has left us in the intervening years with a very imperfect feed grain policy, and therefore I should like to say a few words of caution to the minister. This is my chief reason for rising at this time.

Ever since the introduction of this policy the two groups whose welfare seems to have been in the forefront of everybody's mind—I might include in this not only this and previous governments but also the Canadian Federation of Agriculture—have been the western feed producer and the eastern feeder.

There is a third group about whom I am greatly concerned but whose welfare seems to be considered as incidental. Nevertheless this program has had a great impact on them. I am referring to the producers of feed grain in eastern Canada, and I am specfically referring to the maritime provinces. This is of prime importance in the area from which I come. I am in complete agreement with those who wish to ensure that the commercial feeders of chickens or beef or the producers of hogs in the maritimes have a steady, reasonably priced and guaranteed supply of feed grain. But I have a further interest, and it is one which affects individual families even more because there are more farm families producing grain in Prince Edward Island than there are farm families using western feed grain.

This policy which was brought into effect 25 years ago has had a number of side effects over the years, many of which I think were bad. This has placed the eastern producer of feed grain in a disadvantageous position. The reasons for this are rather subtle. They are small things, but in the aggregate they make it difficult for the producer to compete.

For example, back in the days when this program was introduced in the maritime provinces mechanization in agriculture had not progressed very far. In those days it was not possible for eastern farmers to produce feed grain in large quantities. Now there is at least that potential with full farm mechanization. If I remember my figures correctly, in 1944 there were something like 28,000 farm horses in Prince Edward Island, and by 1950 that number had dropped to 22,000. In 1960 it dropped further to 9,000 and a good share of these were either saddle horses, race horses or children's ponies. Now there are almost no horses used for the supply of farm power in the production of feed grain. Therefore the change in the type of farming in the maritimes has brought no corresponding change in a program which would make allowances for the increased potential in the production of feed grain in the maritime provinces.

In addition, there has been a lack of capital in the hands of potential maritime feed grain producers a chance to get high prices for risking any of the capital in their possession in the production of grain. The market has not been free in the sense of there being fluctuating prices which would give the local producers a chance to get high prices for their products in some years to make up for lower prices in other years.

In practice the situation has been that the costs to the feeder have fluctuated upward only when there was no local supply of grain. That was the only time the costs went up. The local producer therefore was in the situation of having nothing to sell when the price fluctuated upward. However, if the prices dropped down to the level of the subsidized price of imported feed grain he could not sell above that price, so that the importation of western feed grain to the Atlantic provinces tended to create a ceiling on the price the local producer could hope to obtain.

Another factor to be considered is that most or at least a great deal of the mixed feeds for the production of meat in the maritimes is supplied by local mills. Frequently they find it more convenient to have two or three carloads of western feed grain parked on their siding beside their mill rather than look in the local markets for relatively small lots of grain which would have to be bought from individual producers and trucked to their mill. The result is that the local producer is always at a disadvantage. He is always suspected of wanting to sell grain which may have a higher moisture content and various other disadvantages in comparison with western feed grain, and he is never given the benefit of the doubt when he has superior grain to sell. All these factors taken together militate against the eastern producer being able to satisfactorily compete with the imported western feed grain.

What have been the effects of the feed grain policy on maritime agriculture over the years? I would not be so unfair as to ascribe the situation entirely to the policy which has been in effect. The facts of the matter are that although the world population is growing, and although many countries of the world are increasing their agricultural production, Canada is only doing so to a very limited degree.

In the ten years from 1953 to 1964, the average increase in the physical volume of agricultural production in Canada was at the rate of only 1.2 per cent per year. In the United States this increase was 1.8 per cent. The production of Prince Edward Island did not change. In New Brunswick the increase was only .7 of 1 per cent. The increase in Nova Scotia was 1.2 per cent. We like to think of ourselves as making great progress in agriculture in Canada. We like to think of ourselves as an advanced country agriculturally. Our effort in increasing the production of food over the last ten years compares very unfavourably with that of other countries, some of which we think of as being underdeveloped.

For example, in the same ten year period the average annual increase in agricultural production in Israel was 9.7 per cent. There is a whole, long list of countries ahead of Canada in so far as this increase is concerned. They are Mexico, Tanganyika, Yugoslavia, Venezuela, Brazil, Greece, Iran, the Argentine, Chile, Colombia, Pakistan, Tunisia, and then comes Canada. We are away down the list. In that rather sad picture the maritime provinces have been doing even worse than the rest of Canada.

In the five year period from 1956 to 1961, the latest year for which I have figures, the area of improved land in the maritimes declined from 2.3 million acres to 1.8 million acres. In other words, half a million acres of land went out of production in the maritime provinces during those five years. At the same time, in the three prairie provinces there was an increase of almost five million acres in the amount of improved land. I cite these figures to demonstrate the great potential in the maritime provinces, especially in Prince Edward Island, for an increase in production. The most obvious place in which this increase should occur, I think, is in the production of feed grain rather than importing so much from the west.

I am in full agreement with having a supply of western feed grain assured at reasonable prices. However, the west should not be looked upon as the source of all grain for eastern feeders. I believe that locally produced grain should be looked upon as the first source of supply and western grain as a subsidiary supply. We in the maritime provinces are in the ridiculous position of producing something like only half the meat we consume. There is a tremendous potential not only for bringing into production hundreds of thousands of acres in the maritime provinces which were once in production but also for increasing the production of those areas now in production.

I should like to quote briefly from a statement made by an official of the Acres Company, Mr. George E. Hunt. He said:

> Can the maritime region produce more grain? I have here a chart which shows the effect of limestone on our highly acid sandy soil and just two levels of fertilization on oat yields. These aren't textbook figures but agronomist's data from actual work in the maritimes.

It has been demonstrated that we can have a five-fold increase in the maritimes through the use of fertilizer and lime. If we had even a twofold increase in our grain production on the land that is now producing grain, plus the bringing into production of some of the thousands of acres of land that once formed prosperous farms in the maritime provinces and are now dismal stretches of abandoned land growing up in scrub, there would be a great benefit not only to the feeders and producers of meat in the maritime provinces but to the whole economy of the area.

In closing, there are some recommendations I should like to make to the minister. I recommend that when the advisory board is constituted it have adequate representation of eastern Canadian feed grain growers. I should like to think that a more satisfactory way could be found to give some encouragement to farmers in the Atlantic provinces who would like to produce more feed grain than the mere subsidization of the import of feed grain. However, if even a small percentage of the large amount of money that is used for a rail subsidy could be transferred to the local grower of feed grain, that would have a very beneficial effect on the local economy and the user of feed grain in the Atlantic provinces who would have his problems met.

I should like to see even a little bit, say 10 per cent, of the subsidy that is now being applied to transfer feed grain from western Canada applied to a subsidy for the transportation of limestone and perhaps Saskatchewan potash to the Atlantic provinces. This would cost the taxpayers much less and it would have a greater beneficial effect on the local economy in eastern Canada. It would meet the problem of the eastern meat producer because he would still have his supply of feed grain. This would not militate to any degree worth speaking of against the prosperity of the western feed grain producer.

The world is now entering upon a period of tremendous increase in population and a corresponding increase in the demand for food. The population of the world last year was about 3.5 billion people. In 35 years it is going to be 7 billion people; that is the prediction, twice the population in only 35 years. It is estimated that food production can only keep up with the growth of population for perhaps 10 or 15 years, and then there is going to be a tremendous demand for food all over the world and therefore a demand for agricultural land and a demand for every means that can increase food production. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, it is one of the saddest commentaries that there are thousands of once prosperous one-family farms in the maritime provinces which have gone out of production, are growing up in scrub and are going to be needed for the production of food within the next 20 years. It is going to be much more difficult to bring this land back into production a few years from now than it would be to keep it in production.

I should like to commend to the minister a publication of the geographical branch of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys entitled: "Land Utilization In Prince Edward Island". If he peruses that he will see what I am talking about.

Finally, I would most sincerely ask the minister to give full consideration to the producers of feed grain in the Atlantic provinces and, moreover, consideration to the potential of producing more feed grain and solving some of the problems that the ARDA system is set up to solve in order to bring some of the vast areas of abandoned land, especially in Kings and Prince counties in Prince Edward Island, central New Brunswick and many other places, into production. In those areas we hope there will be farm people again living a good life and contributing to the economy of the area.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Just a few words Mr. Speaker. Being the representative of an essentially rural constituency such as that of Nicolet-Yamaska and others in this house, I believe it is my duty to join with those who rejoice at this new bill which is being passed.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that among the promises we had made—I am referring particularly to the November 1965 election—we who ran in rural constituencies, had made very specific ones: the creation of a Canadian milk board, the adoption of the Crop Insurance Act, and the passing of the legislation presently before the house.

And I am convinced that I am simply confirming what the member for Nicolet-Yamaska (Mr. Côté) was saying a while ago. I am convinced that this constitutes an indisputable asset towards living up to the confidence which our constituents have placed in us, and I am ready to support the statements made by the member for Nicolet-Yamaska with regard to his victory. He is without a doubt entitled to any farming legislation which the Liberal government has brought about.

The Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Sauvé), who was called upon to introduce this bill, whatever the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Godin) may have said, whatever may be his country of origin, whatever may be the constituency he represents, may not be too familiar with agriculture, but the responsible minister is unquestionably an able administrator, and he should be commended for his excellent work, considering the heavy task facing him, for we know that when he starts something he sees it through.

Mr. Speaker, the objects of this bill is to ensure the availability of feed grain to eastern Canada, to ensure adequate storage space and also to guarantee reasonable prices. These objectives fit in the present situation and are exactly what the eastern farmer has been asking for to meet his urgent needs.

Farmers have been requesting such legislations for a long time and today we are happy to say that their request has been granted. All the more so, Mr. Speaker, since recent surveys have shown—I am thinking here more particularly of the province of Quebec—that the production of beef, pork and lamb has declined compared to consumption.

No doubt about it, the passing of this bill will definitely help cattle, pork and lamb feeders and contribute in no small measure to increasing our farmers' productivity and also give the farm product its rightful place in our prosperous economy. Let us therefore welcome this legislation with enthusiasm because we can now go back to our own ridings and proudly say to our constituents that the pledge we had solemnly taken has been redeemed.

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, earlier in the debate the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) (Mr. Danforth) outlined the position which the Conservative party takes on this bill. I agree completely with the points he presented to the house. For this reason it will not be necessary for me to repeat the points which he so ably brought to our notice. But I wish to speak for a few minutes on behalf of the Ontario producer of feed grains who wishes to ship his product to the Atlantic provinces.

We in this party favour strongly the freight rate subsidy which is paid on feed grains produced in western Canada and shipped to eastern Canada, because it helps the western producer of feed grains to sell his product. The subsidy is also of great assistance to the eastern feeder in keeping his costs of production at a reasonable level, thereby making it possible for him to sell his product to the retail consumer at a reasonable price. This is something which is most important at this time of rapidly rising costs and prices in all parts of the country.

In all fairness, I believe that something must be done to assist the Ontario producer of feed grains selling to the Atlantic provinces in exactly the same way as we assist the producer of these same feed grains in western Canada in selling to the Atlantic region. We ask no more, but we demand no less. That, Mr. Speaker, is only fair play.

As the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) ably pointed out a few moments ago, there are instances where the shipper of feed grains, shipping from some point in Ontario to some point in the Atlantic provinces, pays a freight rate six times as great as that paid by the producer of these same grains in western Canada. We in Ontario want no more and no less than similar producers in western Canada receive. We think that the subsidy paid on the grains being shipped to the Atlantic provinces is completely fair. We have always spoken in favour of that subsidy and we always shall. But we want an equalization of freight charges on feed grains produced in Ontario and shipped to the Atlantic provinces. This will in no way hurt the producer of feed grains in western Canada. It will be of considerable assistance to maritime feeders because in this way they will get corn, which is becoming an increasingly important feed in all parts of the country today, at a lower rate than they are at present having to pay.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, there is no appreciable amount of corn grown in western Canada. Certainly, none is grown for export. All feed corn grown in western Canada is used for feeding in that region. If Ontario corn receives the same freight rate assistance that other feed grains from western Canada at the present time receive, feed grains that are being shipped to the Atlantic provinces, the maritime feeders will be provided with cheaper feeds for their cattle, which will be of great benefit to them.

It is interesting to note that today the annual increase in the production of feed grain in Ontario amounts to more than the entire production of this product only eight years ago. I therefore strongly urge the minister to recommend to his colleagues the equalization of freight rates on feed grain moving between western Canada and the Atlantic provinces as well as on feed grain produced in Ontario and shipped to the Atlantic provinces.

This is fair treatment for the Ontario feed grain producers. It in no way hurts western producers and it will be of material assistance to feeders in the Atlantic provinces because they will be able to buy Ontario grain more cheaply than they are doing so at the present time. In my opinion it will be of great benefit to all concerned while inflicting hardship on no one. I believe the recommendation I have made should be seriously considered by the government. I hope they will give it such consideration and bring in an amendment to this bill along those lines.

Canadian Livestock Feed Board

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take part briefly in the discussion on Bill C-218, an act to provide assistance to livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

This is a subject which has exercised the minds of those interested in agriculture for a long time. Thinking back across the years I can remember some of the debates which took place in the House regarding feed grain assistance and freight rate assistance. The problems which were faced then by the various segments of agriculture both in eastern and western Canada have not changed very greatly. The matters which were raised then are still of vital importance today and some of the arguments and representations being made at the present time are similar to those made years ago.

In this connection I have been checking the various manuscripts and briefs we have received in the past with reference to the establishment of a feed grain agency. I have before me a brief presented by the Federation of Agriculture dealing in considerable detail with the proposal to set up a feed grain agency and making a number of recommendations as to how it should be established and what its duties and responsibilities should be. I also have here a brief presented by the National Farmers Union to the government of Canada in which that organization also lays stress upon the necessity and importance of an agency such as is contemplated in the bill before us. In addition, I have a copy of the report of the standing committee on agriculture and colonization relating to the price of feed grain. On page 6 of this document we find this recommendation:

> Your committee recommends the establishment of an agency, board or commission, hereinafter called "the agency", to be known as the Canadian Federal Grain Agency or by such other name as may be determined by parliament.

As I have indicated, there has for many years been a recognition of the need to see that prices both in eastern and western Canada should be fixed at reasonable rates and that feeders should be assured of adequate supplies of feed grain. When speaking on this subject some years ago I referred to the fact that in British Columbia feeders were required to pay almost four times the price at which feed grain was being moved in our sister province of Alberta. In Alberta, of course, grain can be moved from one farm to another without having to go through the Wheat Board and adhere to other regulations.

[Mr. Hees.]

The price in Alberta was about $20 a ton while in British Columbia it was approximately $70 a ton. I do not know what the present prices are.

An ironical aspect of the situation was that our people were forced to try to compete with products raised in Alberta and imported into British Columbia. This illustrates the impossible position in which growers in British Columbia were placed. So the whole question of feed grain prices was urgent then and is still a matter of urgency today.

The bill before us proposes to establish an agency to deal with such matters. I shall not go into the subject in detail today but I suggest that the task to be committed to this agency will not be an easy one to discharge. Sometimes we have taken the position that if and when an agency such as this is set up all our problems will be taken care of and it will be an easy matter to iron out the difficulties and remedy the inequities. But the proposed agency will not have an easy task before it. Too many difficulties are likely to arise in the administration of the program and in satisfying the legitimate interests of various regions. I agree with those who have suggested that in view of the wide powers to be conferred on this agency a tremendous responsibility rests upon its members to discharge their duties in a fair, equitable and satisfactory manner.

The duties are outlined in the bill. One of the most important aspects of this legislation is that a continuing study is to be made. With the passing of time circumstances may change. New problems may arise and some of the old ones may be solved. This subject will require continuing attention on the part of the agency so as to see to it that its responsibilities are discharged in a proper manner.

A great deal depends on the composition of the board, the persons who are to be appointed and their attitudes to the various problems. We also note the fact that an advisory committee is to be set up. In that connection I think I should refer to the suggestion made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture because this is one aspect that must receive careful consideration. At page 13 of the brief presented by the federation on February 23, 1965, it is stated:

> Finally it is of the utmost importance that this agency which will be a state institution shall have advisory to it a committee composed of persons who are formally representative of organized farm groups in eastern Canada and British Columbia. Provision for effective consultation with and advice from producers is essential.

I have already referred to the fact that this is not going to be an easy task. Regional interests are involved. I have listened to the debate this morning with much interest because one of the factors has been the wide divergence of opinion that has arisen because of regional interests and concerns. These interests are legitimate. I am not saying they are not. While we in this group over the years have emphasized the absolute necessity of agricultural policies applicable right across the nation in comparable circumstances, we also recognize the fact that regions will be affected in different ways by the proposed agency and the application of particular policies.

For instance, there are regions within the prairie provinces which have different views on this matter simply because of the large geographical expanse of that whole area. This morning we heard hon. members speak of the difficulties of producers in Ontario, and just a few moments ago reference was made to the position of the maritime feed grain producers. There are even differences of opinion within the province of British Columbia due to the varied activities in that province embracing poultry, hog raising and beef production.

I mention these things just to point out that the setting up of the proposed board does not necessarily mean that everything will be automatically taken care of and that the problem will be easy to resolve. Its solution will require intensive and concentrated study. It will require a goodly measure of wisdom and discretion.

In general, while we give support to the concept of a feed grain agency we also join with those who have warned the government that because it is conferring such wide powers on this board it must see to it that the very best and most conscientious individuals are appointed to it and to the advisory committee. That is all I want to say at this stage, Mr. Speaker. I wish to give support to the principle involved and to warn the government that the problem merits great attention and consideration.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that this bill has been introduced in an attempt to solve one of the most difficult problems in Canada, the equalization of opportunity for those people who make their living from the land. I believe we shall get off on the wrong foot right from the start unless we take a close look at the long-term planning of the Department of Agriculture.

It does not take great discernment to detect that there are a great many people in this country, particularly amongst agricultural experts, who have written off the family farm. According to them everything has to be bigger, everything has to be more efficient, and I mean "efficient" in quotation marks. In my opinion there is no efficiency in driving people from the soil. I think, and I believe I always shall, that the basis not only of a happy agricultural industry but of a happy nation must rest on a large and happy population based on its own land.

I sound this tocsin to the government and to the new board, which no doubt will be set up once we have tailored this bill to meet the ideas of some hon. members, that all of our agricultural policies must be based on the stability of the family farm. If the setting up of the proposed board will mean nothing more than the juggling of regional interests —I do not care how efficient they are in juggling them—if it means regional development and that regional development involves bigger and more "efficient" farms, then it will not solve the problem. It will not help to stabilize the living of a family that gets its living from the soil.

This bill envisages a multitude of regulations, and these may be arbitrary. The board is to regulate freight rates, subsidies and quotas, and the bill even refers to the possibility of importing large amounts of feed grain. The bill also contains a number of definitions and refers to assistance for people who raise livestock. Does this mean livestock raised on the family farm or does it mean the wholesale fattening of cattle in stockyards? There is a vast difference between the two, and I would like to go on record as saying that when it comes to a question of government subsidies and government regulations I do not think this type of operation should be developed to the detriment of the family farm.

The primary need is to protect the small producer who has no lobby and no money for lobbying, instituting lawsuits and exerting pressures. He is the man that this whole institution of parliament is designed to protect. He is the little man who has no other voice than that of his representatives in this chamber. I would suggest that it may and probably will be necessary to set quotas on the amount of subsidy which any group or individual may receive from the government.

I do not think it is right for us to sit here and say that out of the taxpayers' purse or out of the income of the small family farmers we should be subsidizing in any way these large or growing companies which are depriving the farmers of their legitimate birthright. As I think I said, the whole basis of this legislation should be to protect the interests of the small farmer who is very efficient in terms of humanity and in terms of the welfare of our nation in the real sense of the well-being and happiness involved in a healthy agricultural community.

There are, however, regional problems which I think should be looked at very carefully. In western Canada, particularly on the open prairies, the farmers depend very largely on one single product, wheat. The Canadian Wheat Board is faced with the problem of trying to stabilize agriculture in western Canada in the one product, wheat. But we have found in our experience that when we meddle with wheat it has a tremendous effect on all the other cereal products raised in Canada. If we sell the whole of our wheat crop abroad, it has a tremendous effect on the prices of grains in our own country.

When this new agency is set up I hope it will work very closely with the Canadian Wheat Board. I can only hope that great wisdom will be brought to bear by this agency on this problem and that the Canadian Wheat Board will not be anxious to denude Canada of cereal grains when these are very necessary for the production of livestock right here in our own country. I hope they will have the wisdom to see that such regulations as may be made with regard to cereal grains will not unduly antagonize the great republic to the south which has many of the same problems we have in respect of production, transportation, storage, and all the other difficulties with which this board will be faced. All these problems are shared by our great neighbour to the south. It may well be that with the best of intentions we may make regulations in this country regarding the feeding of livestock which will seriously affect the whole agricultural industry of this continent and perhaps of the whole world.

I hope also that this board will not be narrow and merely look at the distribution of feed grains. I hope they will take a statesmanlike world approach and try to tie in our policies with regard to the feeding of livestock in British Columbia, and particularly in Ontario and Quebec, with a world wide look at the whole situation in respect of livestock and good world relations. I hope they will put their whole weight and their whole planning behind such things as the world food bank and take a realistic approach to world prices of food, be they cereal grains or feed grains, so that in the long term we do not destroy our good relations not only with the United States but with the whole world merely because we want a quick profit for our feed grain in Canada.

I know they will have these things in their minds but it is going to take, as the last speaker said, a great deal of wisdom on the part of the government to appoint the proper people to sit on this board, people who will look at the problem not only as a great Canadian problem but who will also have the statesmanship to try honestly to settle it in the best interests of all and, more than that, who will be able to co-operate as world citizens and help to develop policies which will help not only Canada itself but also our world relations.

It is stated that the whole problem will be investigated and I hope that means this agency will have wide enough powers to investigate policies starting with the farm right up to world markets so that there will be an agricultural policy which is not merely regional. I think this is going to take some sacrifice on everybody's part. Western Canada is quite willing to raise the grain, but it must also be realized that there are people in Ontario, Quebec, the maritimes and British Columbia who also raise grain and that it would be wrong to concentrate merely on the selling of excess grain from western Canada at any kind of bargain prices in these other areas unless a very close look is taken at the necessity of equality in the places which are importing this grain.

I also see difficulty in the proposal to set up regulations to protect the storage of grain. How is this going to affect the farmer himself? If the small farmer has to compete with a feed lot and the government in any shape or form is paying for the storage, this is a subsidy. I think we should take a look at the idea that perhaps up to a certain quota the farmer should be given some protection or be paid for storing his own grain on his own farm. I do not know the answer to this problem, but in some way he has to be protected against these large groups, whatever the cost in dollars and cents, because in the long haul it will be in the best interest of Canada.

In my opinion any agricultural policy in Canada must be directed at the family farm. When farms are big enough that they are no longer considered to be family farms, I for one am not worried about them. They are big business, and big business always has been able to look after itself. If you are feeding 10,000 head of cattle you can buy in carload lots and you can distribute your labour force much more efficiently. A policy which I think will keep us out of trouble is one which will make sure that we do not subsidize large interests without taking a look at the effect it will have on the small people who have settled on the land.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words also on behalf of the farmers in my riding and support wholeheartedly this government measure, this legislation which has been expected for a few years by those who are the basis of our economy.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the creation of that livestock feed board will help keep our farmers on the farms, particularly on economic farms.

At the present time, in my riding, most people are becoming industrial workers but we still have dynamic, hard working, conscientious and progressive farmers who, in the last few years, have done everything to improve their production. They have followed in general the advice given to them by competent people in the agricultural field to improve their land. They have invested money in fertilizers, lime, machinery and everything needed to get a better production, but you no doubt understand that during all that time they always had to bear with the markets which in general were not to their advantage.

The setting up of the livestock feed board will undoubtedly be a definite improvement but it will be mostly an encouragement for all farmers; it is truly positive action on the part of the present government to solve their problems.

What does that livestock feed board really mean? It is in fact an equalization formula directly aimed at farmers. Until now we have talked of equalization from one province to another to distribute more fairly the country's income and wealth but now we are approaching equalization with regard to a group of individuals who, as I said before, are the basis of our economy and who have been neglected for many years. Therefore, we must congratulate the government and particularly the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Sauvé) because we know that since he came to the house he never stopped fighting to improve the well-being of our eastern farmers and to increase their income.

That decision will surely have an influence on the prices of feed grain since steps will be taken to subsidize transportation, to buy stocks of feed grain and also to store them. But I feel that the most important thing in that legislation, Mr. Speaker, is the power given to the board to make the necessary studies to forecast the availability of feed grain in the areas designated in the act and also the power to investigate prices constantly. That will be to the benefit of the farming community and we can only congratulate the minister on the drafting of the bill.

We find the demands of agricultural organizations hard on the government, but we must understand that those people have good reason to be impatient; it is precisely through this and other present and future government measures that we will succeed in keeping our farmers relatively rich and in maintaining them as the basis of our economy.

[English]

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, in rising to make a few brief comments let me first of all state that I do not believe there is any one problem which personifies the diversity and competitive but conflicting nature of this industry in Canada than the so-called feed grain dilemma. I congratulate the minister for finally bringing forward this bill which has been awaited anxiously by farmers across Canada, particularly those in the east. In the area from which I come there is a very real and particular interest in this feed grain proposal.

The feed grain assistance program which has grown up since the last war and has continued on a transitional basis because of the lack of government policy, has not assisted in the growth of this industry in eastern Canada but has created uncertainties. Because of the loss of the traditional export markets in Britain many apple farmers in our area have turned to raising livestock and poultry. These industries have developed more rapidly.

I think the feature of the bill relating to the establishment of a co-ordinating and advisory board will meet with approval on all sides of the house. This is commendable because of the two-price system which exists in the export and import of grain, and it is to be hoped that this advisory body will be able to create an atmosphere in which one price for feed grain in Canada will prevail.

We must always remember that on occasion subsidies are harmful to those areas they are intended to assist. So far as feed grain crops in Nova Scotia are concerned, there has been an increasing tendency on the part of farmers to rely on the importation of western feed grain. I think there is a controversial question involved in that suggestions have been made that Nova Scotia farmers are beginning to develop their own feed grain crops to meet their own needs. Feed grain crops there often yield from 60 to 70 bushels per acre compared with 17 to 20 bushels to the acre in the west.

We welcome the establishment of this board but we do not want it to discriminate by its policies against the continuing development of feed grain farming in Nova Scotia. The western wheat growers and livestock raisers have expressed the fear that increased feed growing in the east coupled with subsidies will affect their industries adversely. It is interesting to note that, during the period from 1941 to 1961, in spite of feed grain assistance the number of cattle raised in Nova Scotia decreased from over 200,000 to 160,000. In 1964 the number decreased again. So it can be seen that a tremendously thriving livestock industry has not been developed in this area. The number of cattle raised in Nova Scotia in 1961 was 100,000 less than in 1921. While I appreciate the fears of the western wheat growers and livestock producers, with their wide open spaces, there has not been developed in the east, certainly in the maritimes and particularly in Nova Scotia, a cattle industry which could in any way compete. We are still importing cattle and we can hardly even suggest that we are self-sufficient so far as dairy products are concerned.

Perhaps the implementation of this new government policy will provide some stability in the livestock industry so that there will be an increase in production in the east. Government assistance is helpful, of course, to other types of producers. In our area an increasingly important poultry industry, has been developing, but this too has been in a transitional period, particularly in the Annapolis Valley. Farmers have lost some traditional markets. A pork industry has also been developed and the number of turkeys being raised is on the increase. The assistance provided to these areas has had positive and productive results.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Subsidies at times have an adverse effect because farmers may become inclined to rely on them. Some Nova Scotia farmers have without doubt relied too heavily in the past on this type of help. With the stimulus from the Nova Scotia department of agriculture and the different workshops, the Nova Scotia farmer now appreciates that he can himself produce good feed grain, and the adverse, negative effect of the policy may be reduced. But the over-all effect has undoubtedly been positive. Anyone driving through western Nova Scotia and the valley can see that farms that were somewhat down and out 10 or 15 years ago are, because of the transition to poultry and hog raising, now contributing very substantially to the growth and development of the province and this country in an agricultural sense.

• (2:00 p.m.)

I would hope that in the future the minister, or this board when constituted, would look into the problem of paying subsidies in a sense but perhaps developing a grants system whereby those people in Nova Scotia who want to grow feed grains and have properly drained and fertilized land could be given a grant which over three or four years would help to meet the capital outlay involved in obtaining equipment to dry their own feed. If this were done farmers who have suitable land could be self-sufficient feed grain producers. There are quite a few farmers in the area I come from who have properly drained and fertilized land and could produce feed grains sufficient for their own use and for sale in the Nova Scotian market. I believe the projections show that over 15 million bushels are expected to be required in the future, although at the moment we use only some 9 million bushels. Therefore there is a market and a need for this product.

In this connection the feed grain board could undoubtedly perform a useful function, but in order to encourage growth in this area and not rely completely on western feed grains there should be established a policy for the people who have not the land to continue to obtain feed grain imports, and for those who have the acreage to develop their own feed grains there should be a policy of encouragement which would be beneficial to eastern Canada and all segments of the country.

Apart from the question of having something more than a subsidy, which policy has a tendency to be negative, although overall in Nova Scotia there has been a definite positive effect, there should be an incentive for farmers to develop land that is fallow. There should be a sort of hybrid policy whereby the farmer could obtain a grant and invest in feed-drying kilns and equipment in order to process his own feed grain. This type of policy should be developed because the land is there and at the present time much of it could be developed in this way.

The question of storage facilities in the east is a very real problem. For instance, Saint John has not the proper facilities for loading grain and perhaps has not the positive qualities that are needed for a feed grain port. Neither Saint John nor Halifax has the storage facilities for feed grain which we in Nova Scotia need.

I would hope that the feed grain board would look at this problem in an advisory capacity and not concentrate solely on the buying and selling of feed grain. I would hope it would help in the development of storage facilities in the east, which are woefully inadequate at the moment for the ever-increasing market for feed grain. If the feed grain agency is only to buy and sell I think we have to watch, as previous speakers have mentioned, that it does not develop into just another agency that is concerned with costs and charges which are perhaps discriminatory in respect of local feed grain producers. There is room for improvement in this regard. A farmer can not buy directly from the Canadian Wheat Board, which has created many problems for him. Hopefully, the feed grain board will co-ordinate policy and eliminate some of the problems that exist at the present time. It is our hope that the board will be a watchdog over what happens from the time of the sale to the broker in Winnipeg to the time the feed grain ends up in the farmer's hands, because there is a very substantial difference in price between these two points.

However, Mr. Speaker, as a province which is concerned with feed grain more than any other Atlantic province we welcome the setting up of this board. We hope that the people appointed to the board will be truly representative of our area and will work to remove discrimination, keep costs down and co-ordinate policies rather than becoming involved in direct competition with the Canadian Wheat Board in the west. We do not want the anomaly of two boards in competition with one another.

In view of our past history and development we believe that the policy of paying subsidies should be directed more to providing grants to help the farmer develop his own feed grain resources. If we were also to develop our storage facilities in the east there would be a real improvement in our agricultural potential. I believe this is a matter the feed grain board should look into. In order that the debate may move on and the minister may close the debate on second reading, I do not intend to speak any longer. In general we in the east, and certainly those of us from the province of Nova Scotia, are in favour of the establishment of this feed grain board for which we have waited many, many years.

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the house but briefly. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) has said that the establishment of this board is very encouraging to the farmers of Nova Scotia, and he certainly speaks accurately. There is no doubt that many of our farmers in particular lines of production simply could not have continued without the kind of assistance that has been afforded them over the last 25 or 26 years by the subsidy on the transportation of feed-stuffs. They are pleased to see that this subsidy is to be given a more permanent aspect by being put on a statutory basis.

I believe they are also pleased by the fact that the board will be given adequate powers to protect their interests as against anyone who might wish to intervene and make an unconscionable profit between the point where the grain leaves the producer in the western provinces and the point where it reaches the eastern feeder.

What I have to say, Mr. Speaker, goes beyond that question. The assistance that is provided is definitely of importance to agriculture as it now exists in our eastern provinces. Moreover, I think we would all agree that there is likely to be an increasing need for agricultural products as the population of this continent increases, and that it is a wise move to anticipate that demand for agricultural products.

Various speakers have mentioned some of the problems that the program, as it has been carried out has raised. For example, the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees) mentioned the general exclusion of Ontario grown corn, and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings mentioned that there may have been times when the assistance on western grown feed grains has acted to some extent to discourage the growing of feed grains in the Atlantic provinces. He proposed certain very interesting approaches to the solution of that problem.

I want to suggest to you, sir, that perhaps we should look further. I am wondering whether it would not be worth while to see if this money might not be more efficiently and perhaps more fairly expended by moving the point of assistance from the transportation link to that point at which the eastern producer brings his product, whether it be hogs, chickens or the like, to the market. If this were done he could find his feed wherever it is most economical to him, whether it be western feed grains, Ontario corn of his own produce. He could make that choice by his own lights and yet he would be encouraged and assisted in the production of the agricultural products that we need.

This would be a difficult approach to work out. I do not think there is any point in denying that the details would have to be examined meticulously, but I do want to suggest that it is an approach which, along with those mentioned by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), might well be explored to ensure that the Canadian taxpayer is getting full value for the money that is being put into this kind of assistance and also to ensure that eastern agriculture moves ahead to provide Canada, this continent, and even the world with that increasing supply of agricultural products for which there will be an increasing demand.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. I must remind hon. members that if the minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, before closing the debate on second reading of Bill No. C-128, I am pleased to point out that all those who took part in the debate up to now have understood very well the complexity of the problem and have raised several interesting points.

I do not intend to reply at length to every suggestion made. At the committee stage, it will be possible to go over every question in detail. Suffice it to say that I generally agree with the members about the nature of the problem. Apart from certain partisan remarks made now and then, the debate actually dealt with the essential problem.

[English]

Yesterday a member of parliament—I think it was the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson)—spoke about the feed grain dilemma. It is a dilemma and has been one for many years, and until we have a national agricultural policy arrived at by agreement between the provinces and the federal government we will find ourselves in a difficult situation when we consider only one aspect of the problem, namely, the feed grain transportation subsidy to farmers in eastern Canada and in British Columbia.

Certainly the bill that we are now discussing has been in the minds of people for many years. As I said last night, in 1963, following the defeat of the then Conservative administration, there was a government notice of motion on routine proceedings and orders of the day in the name of the Minister of Agriculture proposing the creation of such an agency. A House of Commons committee then studied the problem and presented a report on March 22, 1965 proposing this legislation. The farm organizations of the country, as will be remembered by many hon. members, approved the principle of the legislation, and after first reading on June 30 the bill was widely distributed all across the country, so that everyone is familiar with its contents.

(Translation)

The fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that the establishment of this Canadian livestock feed board is a step forward in the development of a more rational agricultural policy for the country as a whole.

Nobody will dare claim that the passage or enactment of this bill will solve all problems. I believe we will a have a working instrument which will enable us, in the end, to make a more comprehensive study of several of the proposals advanced yesterday by hon. members.

Will there be any possibility of allowing Ontario corn growers and eastern feed growers to participate more efficiently in the program?

Must we promote a policy allowing eastern growers to grow their own grain? Must we try to change the feed transportation cost payment system, as suggested by two or three hon. members? All this remains a possibility. And I am pleased to note that members ask themselves the same questions as the officers responsible for the administration of this act have asked themselves for the last three or four years. The reports prepared and the studies made raise the same type of problems that hon. members raised here, today and yesterday.

I am pleased to find also that we all have about the same line of thought. The principle of the bill has been endorsed by all hon. members, at least by all those who spoke; of course, there have been some genuine reservations here and there, and I hope I will have the pleasure of overcoming them when in committee.

• (2:20 p.m.)

On the whole, there is no disagreement between the position of the government and that of all parties of the opposition on that bill. However, I feel bound to lay emphasis on two or three interventions, not only on the principle or the subject matter of the bill, but two or three interventions on particular problems which we may not have the opportunity to discuss in committee.

Two or three members have mentioned recent announcements by the feed grain agency or administration about the abolition of assistance to storage program in eastern Canada. We have paid in the past three years, one million two hundred thousand dollars for storage costs during a certain part of the year in warehouses of eastern Canada.

We have realized after perusing statistics that the payment of storage costs did not have the anticipated effect, namely it did not help to reduce cost fluctuations during wintertime and stocks accumulated in warehouses during autumn and winter were not so much different than those of previous years.

In our opinion, the special policy of subsidies involving $1.2 million intended for the payment of storage announced by the government has not had the effect that was expected. And we do not see why we should continue to ask parliament to vote such a large amount without being able to determine clearly who benefited.

On the other hand, since March, the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway are offering the brokers in the Atlantic provinces some arrangements for the transportation, over twelve months per annum, of such quantities of grain required by the farmers in three of the four maritime provinces. If we had maintained the payment of the storage costs in winter, we would have discriminated against railway transportation in favour of water transportation. And as the whole brokers in the maritime provinces have signed agreements with the railways, we are sure that winter storage will decrease, that the quantities of goods stored in Halifax, N.S., and Saint John, N.B., will diminish, and so that there is no more need to pay in winter the sum of $1.2 million.

There has also been a certain reduction in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, and Newfoundland, in the payment of transportation costs. This is due to the fact that allowances granted previously for transportation costs were greater than actual transportation costs. This problem is not new, but it has become more obvious since we allowed truck transportation, and since competition between railway and maritime transportation has increased.

I have here complete information on the new rates and, in all cases, do we not pay practically all of the transportation costs? That is, the new rates absorb what we consider as transportation costs, absorb the whole cost of transportation. Certain areas in the maritimes were granted two dollars, which is one dollar and fifty cents more than the actual transportation costs.

It is obvious that this will contribute to a higher price for feed grain, since we had been granting indirect subsidies to certain areas in the maritime provinces, until now.

Members will understand that we decided to apply the same standards in eastern Canada and British Columbia with great regret—

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Would the minister permit a question at this point, since he has responded to some of my comments and those of some other members on two important points? With regard to what the minister has said about overpayments, does he realize that his figures or those produced by his economists are somewhat in conflict with the figures produced by the farm organizations dealing with feed costs? I have been in communication with them this morning and they assure me there is a real conflict.

While I am on my feet may I ask the minister if he can tell us why such a recommendation for this change was made at this time rather than six months from now when, hopefully, the new board will be in operation and we can adopt a comprehensive policy in relation to these many problems?

Mr. Sauvé: The people who were interested in this problem were informed and, in fact, we met with them in Ottawa.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): When was that?

Mr. Sauvé: It must have been about a month ago. There is a difference of opinion about what constitutes the cost of transportation. According to our definition, ever since 1941 the cost of transportation has only covered transportation by rail, by truck or by water, without any handling charges. Some people in the maritimes argue that we should also cover the handling charges at one end or the other because these are included in their own definition of the cost of transportation. I have no disagreement with this definition, but I say this is not the definition that has been accepted by the feed grain administration since 1941. We have paid only the cost of transportation without handling charges.

The second difference of opinion we have with some people in the maritimes is about the total transportation costs as related to the subsidies to specific provinces. Originally we had planned to reduce the payments on mill feeds but because the flour mill established somewhere around Halifax will not be completed before next summer we have not implemented that part of our proposal. This is specifically for Nova Scotia; it is special treatment for Nova Scotia. According to our own calculations and our own definition, the reduction in subsidy would be about $87,000 for the province of Nova Scotia. We agree that this is a reduction, but it complies with our definition and with the fact that we cannot favour one region as against another. Everybody is now at the same level in all the provinces of Canada which benefit from this subsidy.

Why have we done this now? We had been discussing with the maritime provinces for three years the problem of reducing the transportation subsidy. Every time there was an argument that this was not proper or that we should wait. We felt that before creating an agency we should make sure that the agency started with a clean bill and not have to implement policies based on inequalities in existence before the agency was created. We have based this on the fact that the agency will very probably revise the outlook on the transportation subsidy on western grain. If the agency wants to be free to re-examine the policy, it should be free of all the barriers that we find in terms of transportation costs which are higher than the real transportation costs. Politically it would have been much easier not to have moved in any direction. We felt that since the agency was being created it should have a free hand to do what it wanted, having received from us a situation in which there was no discrimination. These are the reasons for correcting these inequalities, which I think my friend will agree were inequalities.

Evidently, because we are not overpaying transportation costs, some farmers will be affected and their costs will go up because they were receiving an additional subsidy from us, contrary to the thinking behind this subsidy policy.

Mr. Danforth: May I make a request of the minister, Mr. Speaker? For the information of members, could the minister have appended to today's Hansard a list of the rates to which he has referred? I am sure it would be very useful.

Mr. Sauvé: If the house is in agreement, I will do so with pleasure.

• (2:30 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): I take it it is agreed that this is to be added as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of document referred to above see appendix.]

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, may I put a further question to the minister. There is one thing I am not clear about. There has been considerable disagreement about the revising of these rates. It is said that they have been in effect since 1941, under these criteria. I submit that somewhere along the line the criteria must have been altered or else the program has been inadequately administered. I do not think that is what the minister meant to imply. Is the minister suggesting to the house that a new set of criteria has recently been established?

Mr. Sauvé: No, Mr. Speaker. There have always been the same criteria with respect to the transportation cost and with respect to feed grain administration. The transportation cost and the administration cost are not the same. The transportation cost has been defined by some of the maritime unions, co-operatives or farm producers. There is disagreement about the definition, but the policy has always been the same since 1941.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, to answer a definite point raised by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard), I should like to correct a mistake in his interpretation. I do not want to labour the point, but when the Association des meuniers de la province de Québec called a special meeting about ten days ago in Drummondville, it did so on its own and, as far as I know, no members or politicians were invited to the meeting, which was in no way partisan.

This, Mr. Speaker, I think ends more or less the general comments I wished to make before we begin to discuss in committee each clause of this bill.

I will avail myself of the discussion on each clause to answer more specifically any questions the members may have asked during the debate on the motion for second reading.

I should like to thank all the members of the house for the interest they have shown in this bill and for the useful comments they made during the debate.

[English]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, before the minister sits down would he answer a question? I could have made a speech, but perhaps it is easier to obtain the information I want if I pose a question. There is some concern about the adequacy of storage facilities in parts of the maritimes. As an example I mention Halifax. Have the minister and his officials consulted the National Harbours Board in the case of Halifax, or other agencies with respect to those places outside Halifax, to see if there are enough facilities to make the act work in practice?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have regular meetings with the agencies concerned. This year, because of agreements between the railways, brokers and feeders, there will be less need for large storage space because feed will be carried from Fort William by rail. The pressure has been diminishing very substantially for this coming winter.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to pass the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

[English]

On clause 2—Definitions.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, clause 2 of Bill No. C-218 deals with definitions. One definition of primary interest to farmers in the areas affected by this legislation is in paragraph (i) which reads:

"livestock feeder" means a person who raises livestock in eastern Canada or British Columbia;

There are differences of opinion so far as those engaged in agriculture are concerned about the term "livestock feeder". May I inquire of the minister at this time if his interpretation of that definition is that "livestock feeder" includes those commercial establishments or feed lots the sole purpose of which is to buy cattle in large quantities and feed them on a commercial basis, as opposed to those enterprises which primarily are and can be classified as farm enterprises?

Mr. Sauvé: The answer is yes, Mr. Chairman. The definition covers all groups of people.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I have one brief question with regard to this clause. Subclause 2 of clause 2 reads:

Unless otherwise provided, words and expressions used in this Act have the same meaning as in the Canada Grain Act.

I presume that this means, among other things, that the crop year referred to later in the bill will be the same as the crop year in other legislation.

Mr. Sauvé: That is exactly correct.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, paragraph (e) of subclause 1 states:

"designated area" means that area comprised of—

And a number of areas are given. I note that the Peace river district and another district are included. Does this mean that these particular areas are to receive the same treatment because the major part of their agriculture has to do with the production of feed grains as in the prairie provinces?

Mr. Sauvé: Exactly.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3—Board established.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a few questions to the hon. minister.

Mr. Choquette: There will be some French Canadians—

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe the hon. member for Lotbinière has come to the stage where he can read somebody else's thoughts; I think he has enough trouble reading his own written ideas without venturing as far as that.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to ask the minister whether he has already chosen the members of the livestock feed board and whether, in making that choice, he examined the good advice given by organizations representing the working class.

Mr. Sauvé: You mean the agricultural class. No, Mr. Chairman, nobody has been chosen; I have nobody in mind for the time being, but as soon as the act is proclaimed, I will start consulting with farming organizations, milling associations and everyone else concerned with the problem.

The house knows that we lost the services of the director of the feed grain administration, Mr. Lavigne, who went back to Quebec where he accepted an important position in the Quebec department of agriculture. He is a remarkable and extremely able official. But the provincial government's luck is the federal government's misfortune. He is largely responsible for the new spirit in the administration of feed grain. He is a very able farm economist, accepted by everyone and we will have great difficulty in replacing him in the federal administration.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, as the minister showed his intention of taking advantage of good advice which might be given to him, would he assure the opposition that they will have the opportunity to submit names?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, if members have suggestions, I will accept them with pleasure.

[English]

Mr. Herridge: I should like to ask a question on Clause 3 because the board which is to be appointed will be an important one with exceptional responsibilities in the early days of the administration of this act. We do not expect the minister to be choosing people to serve on the board at this time, but could he tell the committee what kind of professional qualifications and experience he will be looking for when considering appointments? Can he give us an outline of the type of person he is looking for?

[Mr. Ricard.]

Mr. Sauvé: We would certainly look for a person who is familiar with farm problems and farm organizations. We would be looking for one who understands the trade problems and for one who understands agriculture economics. A minimum of three qualified persons would, I imagine, be essential for the administration of this law. I do not think that from the beginning there will be three full-time members. The chairman will perhaps be appointed full time and the others might become full-time members after first being appointed part-time.

Mr. McCleave: My question is similar to that asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I should like to find out where this board fits into the bureaucratic and hierarchical scheme of things in Ottawa. Where does it fit into the pecking order of government operations? What is the pay scale projected for the members of the feed board and how does it rank compared with that applied to other organizations such as the Board of Broadcast Governors?

Mr. Sauvé: I do not understand the question. Could the hon. member clarify it? Is he asking whether this is to be a government appointment or whether it would go through the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. McCleave: No. I was interested in the salary scales for the proposed full-time chairman and the other members of the board.

Mr. Sauvé: I have no idea.

Mr. Danforth: I wish to be painfully blunt because this is a question of major importance and because I am concerned about the way in which this administrative board will commence operating. I want to be absolutely sure that the members of this board will be chosen on the basis of their excellent knowledge of agricultural conditions, not because of political affiliation. This is something which concerns me just as it concerns the farmers. We should like to know whether these men will come from the civil service or whether straight government appointments will be made. It is my feeling that upon the selection of these men will depend the success or failure of the entire scheme. If the agricultural industry has no confidence in them, this measure cannot work. I should like some assurance from the minister as to the manner in which they will be selected.

Mr. Sauvé: I think the way in which the members of the Council on Rural Development were selected is a precedent for the attitude I take in appointing people to boards or to advisory committees. The main preoccupation is with competence, ability. I hope the hon. member does not feel there is no ability among people who support the Liberal party. This has nothing to do with partisanship. We try to get the best people we can.

Mr. Starr: From among the Liberals.

Mr. Sauvé: I am interested in seeing this board functioning as a result of the help of all interested organizations—farm groups, growers, millers, co-operative groups and so on. Generally speaking I will seek their advice. I am sure the names which will come forward through them or through members of this house will be those of people who have the ability to do the job and who also have the respect of the farming community.

Mr. Stewart: My question is related to the one raised by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.). I am not especially concerned about the matter of political affiliation because I think the minister has shown that he is able to detect ability regardless of political colouration. My point is this. The minister has mentioned the milling interests and the trade. He has told us that initially at least the board will not consist of three full-time members. I should like some assurance that the chairman, or those members of the board who are full time from the beginning, will not represent primarily the milling interests.

I say this not because I have any extraordinary hostility toward the milling interests or the trade. But the purpose of this legislation is to help feeders in eastern Canada and in British Columbia. I should like an assurance that the man selected initially on the full-time board will be one whose experience and training has made him fully aware of the problems and the interests of British Columbia and eastern feeders.

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Generally speaking I would be inclined to recommend to the government the appointment of people who represent the farm interests, not the interests of brokers and so on. I have not yet made up my mind as to what would be the best combination. I will await advice from the various groups I have mentioned and I hope the recommendations I shall make to the government will be acceptable by all interested parties.

It may surprise members of this committee that I have not been interested in this measure in terms of who should take these jobs but rather in terms of the principle and of the working arrangements. Once these are settled I shall, with the advice of others, try to find the best people for the job.

Hon. members will appreciate that the natural chairman of the board would have been Dr. Lavigne who was the administrator of the feed grain program until he left about two weeks ago to accept the position I mentioned in Quebec. So I was never preoccupied about who would be the members of this board, because he seemed to be the man who would naturally assume the biggest share of the responsibility and the team would have been built around him. Now that he has left we shall have to shop around for the best qualified people.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. MacLean (Queens): If I understood the minister correctly, he said that at the beginning it was not anticipated that there would be three full-time members. That means there will be some who will be part-time. Does the minister have in mind members of the board who would have some interest in private business or in farm organizations, or does he have senior civil servants in mind as members of the board?

Mr. Sauvé: No, they would not be civil servants. They would be persons from the farm organizations.

[Translation]

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, a simple remark. I do not know whether the member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) was too timorous, but I will take the risk to express a remark which I thought he would put forward. I would recommend to the minister the appointment of five instead of three members, for the good reason that, evidently, it is always very delicate to raise the language question, but it would be advisable to have French-speaking members on committees like that one.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, the linguistic question, of course, always causes sincere concern, but has any thought been given to geographical representation on the board? With respect to what was said by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) about part-time members, it seems to me that in dealing with such a complicated subject they are in the initial stages going to run smack into some of the problems which were discussed in this chamber yesterday and today. I think the hon. member for Lotbinière is right in saying that the five should be appointed on a full-time basis. However, I am more interested in geographical representation because this problem cuts across the whole fabric of our country.

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, we will take into account the geographical representation of members of the board. Hon. members should note that there is also an advisory committee, so that either directly on the board or on the advisory committee there will be enough seats for the appointment of a large number of people representing all regions.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): I am still confused about the mechanics of this thing. The minister said that apart from one full-time member the others would be part-time. What did he mean by that?

Mr. Sauvé: Clause 3 provides for the appointment of not less than three nor more than five members of the board. Our intention was that initially we would appoint three members to the board but the chairman would be full-time. If the work then developed in a way that more than one full-time member was needed, we could appoint one or two other full-time members. Members would be part-time in the sense that they would not be working eight hours a day at the board headquarters. Only the chairman would be doing that.

After examination we may find we shall require three full-time members and possibly five full-time members who will give all their time to the work of the board, but we have been advised that for the time being one full-time member should be enough. I have given a straight answer to the question. I do not yet know how it is going to work in terms of personnel.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): I do not want to get into a detailed examination of the mechanics, but the appointment of one full-time member and four part-time members gives me cause for concern, for two reasons. If part-time means a day a week or so many days in a month, in the case of many people who might have something to contribute they would have great distances to travel and this arrangement could militate against regional representation.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Second, if four members are appointed on a part-time basis, completing the complement of five, it must be noticed that the next clause says members shall hold office during good behavior. I have not been long enough around here to know what good behavior means, but these persons' appointments could be for a long time. If the minister wanted to appoint two or three more members on a full-time basis and did not want to elevate part-time members to that position, how would he dispense with them?

I am also concerned about the kind of relationship that will exist between a full-time chairman in day to day contact with a very complex situation and part-time members. In such a situation I can see no difference between being a part-time member and being a member of the advisory committee.

Mr. Sauvé: I personally have no objection to having at least three full-time members appointed, and if this seems to be the wish of the committee I shall take it into account, but our intention was to proceed by experience and see how the thing developed and if there was need for other appointments. However, if this is the wish of the committee I have no hesitation in endorsing it.

Mr. Moore: Can the minister assure us that a representative of the western feed grain growers will be appointed so that their interests will not be overlooked?

Mr. Sauvé: I cannot give any assurance on who will be appointed because I have to consult the farm organizations and the various bodies which I mentioned previously. It also depends on the ability of the people proposed. It is impossible for me to say at this stage that we will take one from one organization, group or interest. Appointments will be decided on the basis of the ability and competence of people and their connection with the feed grain industry.

Mr. Moore: I was not referring to any organization but merely to the farmers who grow feed grain in the west.

Mr. Sauvé: There might be an opening for such an appointment on the advisory committee but I would doubt that this would be possible on the board itself.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I would like the minister to clear up something about the three or five members of the board. Does he intend to have at least five members at all times or to appoint only three?

Mr. Sauvé: I think that at first we will appoint three members and later if the work load warrants it, we will be authorized under the legislation to appoint two more. I have just committed myself before the house to appoint three members at the very beginning. I had thought that one might be enough but it seems that some hon. members feel that three are needed; personally I have no objection to appointing three right from the start. I think that we will begin with three and, if need be, we can always appoint another one.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, in case there should be only one member, namely the chairman, appointed full time and the other members on a part time basis, would the minister tell us, unless he feels that it is not the right time, what salary will be paid to the members of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, I have no idea what salary will be paid to them.

On clause 4—Tenure of office.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I should like to inquire of the minister why the government felt it was necessary that these persons should be appointed during good behaviour. This is almost tantamount to a lifetime appointment. In a major piece of legislation like this, which deals with such a large segment of the agricultural industry, I feel that such an undertaking on the part of the government is perhaps unfortunate. Representatives of the industry are very much concerned about the demonstrated ability of such men and whether or not the regulations are effective in curing the particular problem with which this legislation is concerned.

I should like to ask the minister whether he would consider, as in the case of the committee, that members should be appointed for a definite term of years and that a member may be reappointed instead of being appointed in this way. I think there are many men holding appointments in which they have a tremendous amount of responsibility who are appointed for a definite period of years and not at pleasure. Would the minister explain why he feels this is necessary and tell us whether he would consider a definite term of office?

Mr. Sauvé: I am not sure, but I think the same formula is used in respect of the Canadian Wheat Board. I think there is some parallel between the appointments in respect of members of this board and the Canadian Wheat Board. I know that this formulation corresponds to the usual formulation for the majority of boards of this nature. We had no special reason for using this formulation rather than another. This was established in accordance with the establishment of other boards of the same nature.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have read this clause three or four times to try to get the exact meaning. Is it correct to say that persons who are hired for a number of years actually enter into a contract with the government for that period of years, whereas this clause provides an opportunity for persons to be removed by the Governor in Council for just cause if unable to carry on, and so on? Is this not to the advantage of the government and more flexible?

Mr. Sauvé: It is certainly more flexible. I agree with that.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask for some clarification. This might have been more appropriate on the previous clause but I think it has equal application to this one. In this clause it says that the vice chairman will act as chairman in the absence of the chairman. This brings to my mind the question of a quorum or, if you like, what number of members of the board is required for the board to transact business. I have read the bill through and have found no reference to this. Would it be possible to have a situation where if only a permanent chairman is appointed he could act as the board all by himself? What is the minimum number of members of the board which is required? I notice that in the case of the advisory committee they have the power themselves to determine what their quorum shall be, but I see nothing in this bill to cover this particular point.

Mr. Sauvé: I do not have the answer. I will look at the bill and try to find out.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I am sure I can assume that if the minister finds there is a technical deficiency in the bill he will undertake to correct it before we get out of committee.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, you will find that in clause 13. It states that a majority of the members constitutes a quorum of the board.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: I should like to ask the minister why the age of 70 years is provided for in clause 4. There seems to be some contradiction, because in industry generally, and even in the civil service, there is a tendency to set the retirement age at 65 years. It seems to me, therefore, that for this particular board, it would have been logical to try at least to follow the same policy being tentatively applied in other spheres of society. I feel, therefore, that to mention the fact to the minister is to secure his co-operation so that the retirement age will be lowered from 70 to 65 years, in accordance with the general trend at this time.

Mr. Sauvé: I think it is a compromise between the retirement age established within the public service and the retirement age set for judges appointed by the government. Public servants must retire at 65 and judges at 75 years of age.

I believe there is no other reason for suggesting 70 years as a retirement age.

Mr. Mongrain: I suppose the member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) would not apply that principle to the leadership of political parties.

Mr. Ricard: No, Mr. Chairman, because the member for Trois-Rivières would come to maturity too fast.

[English]

Mr. Moore: Mr. Chairman, I should like a little more assurance from the minister that the passage of this bill will not put western feeders of livestock in a more unfavourable position compared with eastern livestock feeders. I am all in favour of aiding our eastern friends, but I still have not heard this assurance. This is the reason I brought up the subject of representation from the feed growing areas in the west. Would the minister give us that assurance?

Mr. Sauvé: I told the hon. member that on the advisory committee we probably could appoint somebody who would represent the feed areas of the west.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, the minister just gave the assurance more or less that there would be a member from western Canada on the advisory committee. Could he also speak to his colleague and make sure that we will have a member representing eastern Canada on the Canadian Wheat Board?

Mr. Sauvé: I will convey that remark to my colleague.

[English]

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—Objects.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Chairman, clause 5, outlining the powers and duties, makes mention of the abilitity of the board to operate in eastern Canada. Yet in clause 2(f) I notice that eastern Canada is defined as all that part of Canada lying east of the meridian passing through the eastern boundary of the city of Port Arthur, and it is also provided that the board will operate in Manitoba. This has the effect of bypassing my constituency of Kenora-Rainy River.

Mr. Danforth: You are a westerner.

Mr. Reid: Yes, but unfortunately for us the operation of the board stops at the city of Port Arthur. The Canadian Wheat Board stops at the boundary of Manitoba and there is a no man's land there of around 500 miles which is a rather substantial farming area. I should like to see this area included either under the eastern board or the western board. It does not matter to us, but it would be more convenient for us to be under the western board because in an agricultural sense we are attached to Manitoba. I think we should either be included in the eastern section or that the western board should take over.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Sauvé: If the riding of the hon. gentleman is still in Ontario it is covered by clause 2, paragraph (f) which says:

> "Eastern Canada" means all that part of Canada lying east of the meridian passing through the eastern boundary of the city of Port Arthur and such other areas in Ontario as the governor in council may designate;

Mr. Reid: In that event, will the minister guarantee that this part of Ontario will be brought under the board?

Mr. Sauvé: That all depends on whether or not you decide to form another province.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, having regard to clause 5 and the objects of the board as they are listed, it seems to me there is a deficiency in that the board is not required to take any cognizance of the effect of its policies on the growing of feed grain in eastern Canada. At least, I draw that conclusion in reading this clause.

So long as feeders have a guarantee that feed grain will be available, that there is sufficient storage space to meet their needs and that there is a reasonable stability of price in eastern Canada and in British Columbia, with a fair equalization of price in both places, then the responsibilities of the board are satisfied. I can visualize a situation, however, where in that limited sense the board might be functioning efficiently but causing a detrimental effect to agriculture in eastern Canada. Perhaps this clause should be amended or the minister should at least give his assurance that the board will understand that it is to meet these obligations in a way which will not be detrimental to the economic welfare of eastern agriculture in its entirety.

Mr. Sauvé: I think this is clearly implied by the wording of clause 5. The hon. member will notice that we do not qualify the origin of the feed grain. I think the objection he has mentioned, the problem he raised earlier on second reading and the problem raised by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) are generally answered by clause 5 dealing with the objects of the board. Certainly that was the clear understanding and intention we had when this legislation was being drafted.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I thank the minister for that assurance. I mention these facts because to the average Canadian feed grain means western feed grain. The impression has certainly been in the minds of feeders in eastern Canada that western Canada is the only real source of supply. That is not the case.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether we can expect consultations between the livestock feed board and the authorities of the eastern provinces and British Columbia as well as representatives of producers in order to establish the needs of each area concerning feed grain?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, it is the normal responsibility of a feed grain board to cooperate with all concerned to make sure that there will always be enough grain to feed livestock, as defined in the bill.

[English]

Mr. Keays: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the minister agrees that agriculture in the lower St. Lawrence area will become more successful as a result of the studies carried out by the Eastern Quebec Planning Board. In view of that, and in view of the fact that the climate there does present some drastic difficulties to the agricultural industry, can the minister tell us whether there have been any determinations made as to the location of storage facilities? He did say some time ago that agreements were being made at this time to transport feed grain by rail. Does he not think that in respect of some of these areas it would be possible to create a lower price if the grain were shipped by water? Does the government intend to acquire land for storage facilities?

Mr. Sauvé: It is the function of the board to decide what is best under the conditions the hon. member has mentioned. The bill provides for the acquisition of land and for the building of storage facilities, but generally speaking I think we must accept the fact that the building of storage facilities at various locations throughout the countryside would add to the cost of feed grain to the farmer. Negotiations are being conducted now between the millers and the railroad companies which might solve at least in part the storage problems referred to earlier. In any case, the board will have the authority to acquire land and will make decisions in respect of problems such as the hon. member has raised. It will be for the board to examine local and regional situations as they develop.

Mr. Schreyer: In carrying out its obligations and duties under clause 5 of the bill, will the board be able to purchase feed grain directly from western points or from the Wheat Board? Is it conceivable that the board could engage in direct purchase or acquisition of feed grain—I do not think the minister has elaborated on this point—or is it intended that the board will function by dealing with brokers and distributors in the trade? Perhaps it will operate by doing both.

Mr. Sauvé: If and when the board decides to engage in the buying and selling of grain it will act as a broker and will buy grain on the Winnipeg grain exchange. It can do so only by special order in council which would authorize the board to operate in this way during the remaining part of a season.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps clause 5 relates as much to the powers of the board as to its objects. I think the situation regarding large commercial users of feed grain and integrated operators in eastern Canada is a matter of concern not only to the government but to western producers of livestock. If the object of the board is to assist the filial farms, if I may call them that, or the small producers who depend on the production of livestock for their living that is one thing, but if by setting up these regulations, subsidies and so on the majority of the benefits will go to integrated operations to the detriment of the local livestock producer in Canada I believe that the board will have defeated its own purpose and will do a disservice to Canada rather than a service.

Therefore I wonder whether the minister would consider the institution of a system of quotas for the purchase of feed grain that is subsidized. I am not suggesting that such a system be included in the statute we are now setting up but perhaps it could be included in the regulations. There is certainly plenty of precedent for quotas in the operation of a public board of this nature. Everyone in Canada who is familiar with grain buying and selling knows very well that in the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board very severe quota restrictions are set up so that the total market is evenly distributed among all producers. At the beginning of each season, regardless of the size of the farm, whether it is 100 acres or 5,000 acres, a certain number of units are authorized for delivery. At the present time I believe the quota is something like 400 bushels of wheat or 100 units, each unit being worth 4 bushels and 6 bushels of barley or whatever the product happens to be. This system does in fact distribute the benefits of this public corporation.

I have no objection to integrated, commercial users of feed grain or anyone else setting up business in eastern Canada if they think they can produce economically for a market, but I think it would be unfair if they were to make large profits because under laws passed by this parliament they received subsidies which were intended to help the small producers. After all, Mr. Chairman, it is pretty elementary to realize that we are not making the best use of our manpower and other facilities if we are shipping cattle from western Canada to the east and paying freight on the live animals, on the feed and so on. The cost involved in this operation is higher than is the case when the cattle are raised and the feed grain is grown in the same area.

I have no objection to some form of subsidy or assistance being paid to the smaller, bona fide livestock producer. However, I would hope that we will not find ourselves facing a real problem, namely, that of large commercial users deriving the greatest benefit from the payment of this subsidy. If this were to be the case, there would be very serious objection from the beef producers of western Canada by reason of their having to compete with a subsidized operation in another part of Canada, particularly when that subsidized operation is not part of the regular farming community.

I say to the minister also that this is not simply a philosophical or academic problem. It is happening. There are large beef producers in western Canada at the present time who have acquired feed lots far enough east so they may buy subsidized feed. Instead of feeding their cattle in western Canada, where it is most economically done, they are taking the cattle that would ordinarily be fed there and shipping them to the feed lots in eastern Canada because they can buy subsidized grain. Because of the proximity to the large markets of Montreal and Toronto it is more profitable for them to do this. The reason it is more profitable is that the public treasury is subsidizing them.

While I do not think this practice is widespread at the moment, I can see that if we do increase subsidies for the purpose of assisting smaller farmers it will become a widespread practice and will defeat the whole purpose of the bill in that this type of competition will be encouraged. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister whether he is giving consideration to the distribution of a quota book or permit book such as is used under the Canadian Wheat Board, whereby a farmer can buy so many tons of subsidized feed, or will some other method be instituted to ensure that the aim of assisting the smaller livestock producers in eastern Canada will in fact be achieved?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, we are as much concerned about this problem as the hon. member for Medicine Hat. We are concerned about very large feeders using public funds for their benefit. Certainly through the regulations of the board it will be possible to cope with these problems either by establishing quotas or restricting the application of policy in a different way as between the large feeder and the family farmer. I am very preoccupied by the fact that some large operators have been deriving the majority of their profit from the subsidization of transportation costs under the formula that exists at the present time.

I an sure the board will consider this problem and come to the same conclusion as the hon. member, because I have also been concerned with this situation. This problem has been discussed with the administration of the feed grain assistance program, and we feel that when the board is established it will be able to cope with it effectively.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the minister has said that he is cognizant of this problem and is looking for ways and means of solving it. He also said he is confident that the board will find ways and means of coping with the situation and will perhaps institute a system of quotas or some other method of dealing with the problem. Would the minister care to tell the committee what other methods the government has in mind for solving the problem, after the discussions that have taken place to date?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, I cannot elaborate very much more on this point. I have been exploring this problem with the feed grain board administration. I would not want to say any more in this connection because until I have more precise information I can hardly state my views on the method that will be used.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member for Medicine Hat the minister said it would be possible under this bill and the regulations to come to grips with the problem which has been outlined. But that is rather different from saying that it is the intention or inclination of the government to come to grips with it. I should like to support with all the emphasis I can muster the comments made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. This legislation can be of considerable benefit to the bona fide small farm operators of eastern Canada and British Columbia. But unless the government is prepared to implement some kind of quota system under this legislation or, as an alternative, unless it is prepared to give a more precise definition of the term "livestock feeder" so as to exclude in whole or in part the factory-type feed lot operation, the legislation will lose its benefit in so far as the small, bona fide farmer is concerned.

In my opinion it would be unfortunate in the extreme if the legislation were to be adopted and applied in such a way that it allowed the factory-type operation or the vertically integrated type of operation to benefit to the same or a greater degree, because of large volume, as the people this legislation is really intended to benefit most, namely, the small, family-type farming operation. Could the minister be more precise and say that it is not just a case of the government possibly doing something in this respect but that it is their intention to do it?

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Sauvé: It is my intention to examine this situation in the light of the preoccupation of the hon. member for Springfield and the hon. member for Medicine Hat. How we will determine the kind of policy that will be most effective I cannot say at the moment because we have not yet come to any decision on the system that will be used. But I am preoccupied with the problem presented by the large, integrated operator who derives practically all his profit from the subsidy received on the shipment of feed grain. I am, just as you are, trying to find out how we can cope with this for the benefit of the small operator or the farm family operator.

[Translation]

Mr. Clermont: Mr. Chairman, one of the objects of the board is to guarantee the availability of feed grain to meet the needs of livestock breeders and the minister announced recently that the assistance to storage would be discontinued. A few minutes ago, he told us that most millers of the Atlantic provinces had entered into agreements with the railways. I wonder whether the board will be in a poistion to undertake its work in January or February 1967 and whether the Quebec farmers can be assured that feed grain will be available in eastern Canada or in the province of Quebec during the winter of 1967?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have every reason to believe that there will be a sufficient quantity of grain to meet the needs of the province of Quebec during the fall and winter period.

Mr. Ricard: In the event that there should be a lack of feed grain at a particular time, can the minister give us an assurance that those who have to buy feed grain regularly will not be taken unfair advantage of? It is very nice to hear the minister say: "Yes, we will do this", but has the minister any specific measures in mind and action to be taken to force speculators who, at all times, want to take advantage of some scarcity to increase prices to farmers, and consequently to consumers?

Each year, in the past, there have been fluctuations in the grain supply, and invariably, it has always been the farmer who has had to suffer. Therefore, I make a particular recommendation to the minister that he give immediate consideration to the adoption of the necessary measures ensuring that farmers will not find themselves at the losing end once again in this matter.

I would also like to take the opportunity to ask the minister to give particular attention to the recommendations which were made a few moments ago by the members for Springfield and Medicine Hat (Messrs. Schreyer and Olson). It is unfortunate that in the past so little attention was given to the family farm. Without a family farm, particularly in eastern Canada, it would be very doubtful that we would be in a position to keep the farming industry operating on a sound basis. Therefore, it is high time for us to see that the large industrialized farming concerns are not the ones who will benefit the most from our feed grain legislation. Special arrangements must be made to ensure that the small family farm is protected at all times. The need is pressing and the minister must give the matter his whole attention. As I said a while ago, I fully agree with the statements made by the hon. members for Springfield and Medicine Hat (Messrs. Schreyer and Olson).

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, the problem of feed supplies is obviously a major problem. I trust the establishment of a Canadian Livestock Feed Board will enable us to meet the situation should there be, by chance, a considerable decrease in supplies next winter, specially in the province of Quebec.

Nothing at the present time leads me to believe that there will be a shortage of feed grain in the province of Quebec in the coming months.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I have read the clauses of that bill, especially clause 5 which deals with the powers given to the Canadian livestock feed board and there is one thing I would like to call to the attention of the minister and ask him to elucidate because there does not seem to be a clear answer in the bill.

[Mr. Ricard.]

The commissioners who will be appointed, the members of the Board, if they are men of vision, will want to provide for the prosperous and the lean years that can be expected. The story of the fat years and the lean years in the Bible has been repeating itself since the beginning of time. So the members will probably concern themselves for instance with experiments made by research boards, public or private, to improve the land and possibly reclaim land which is not very suitable for that kind of farming.

To illustrate clearly what I have in mind, I will give the minister one example. For instance, a company recently discovered that if it is possible to raise poor quality farm land because it lacks enough humidity and to spread under it a layer of asphalt, 3 or 4 feet deep, to retain the humidity, the production, the yield of the acreage can be changed completely. That is an experiment which could be useful and interesting to prevent lean years, if need be. There are others also.

I would like to ask the minister if that board will be empowered to apply on a large scale the results of positive studies or will the board simply have to consult the Department of Agriculture to do such things? Or will the board be able to obtain from the government the authorization to conduct an experiment on a larger scale after the initial research has given positive results?

Again, to prevent lean years, will it be the responsibility of the board to ensure that feed is available to meet the needs of livestock feeders, and not only for the current year? I imagine that it will want to provide for the coming years also.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, to the extent that the board must make sure that feed grain is available to meet the needs of livestock feeders, so the board can certainly favour any action of the kind mentioned by the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain). He has already told me about it and I find it very interesting.

[English]

Mr. Moore: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Not only do I share the concern of the hon. members for Medicine Hat and Springfield but I do not feel we should be asked to vote on a bill without any real or concrete assurance that the problems they mentioned will be dealt with.

I have a further concern and that is about the relative positions in which this bill will place the eastern and western feed growers.

It must be remembered that the western feed growers are far from markets and this naturally places them in a relatively poor position. Has the minister looked into this problem of what difference this bill might make to the relative positions of the eastern and western livestock feeders?

Mr. Sauvé: Inasmuch as the actual policy is to pay the transportation cost of the feed grain from Port Arthur and Fort William eastward or through British Columbia, the position of the western feeder will not be affected as long as the same policy applies. The problem that you raised is a much larger problem than the one posed by the creation of this feed grain agency. It is a problem of national agricultural policy which I mentioned earlier, but which is not the objective of this special bill on the creation of the feed grain agency.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister two questions. In the first place I should like to ask him whether I am correct in my understanding that the operation of this act is intended to apply only to the movement of feed grain by rail transportation to eastern Canada, or whether the act in its operation will also cover the movement of such grain by water? For example, I am thinking of movements from Fort William and Port Arthur into the ports of Halifax, Saint John, Quebec city and for that matter Montreal.

Mr. Sauvé: It is not restricted to one means of transportation. All means of transportation are open and they all come under the authority of the board.

Mr. McCleave: I thank the minister for that assurance.

My other question, Mr. Chairman, relates to distribution centres. Have the distribution centres for the different areas been already chosen or is this to be decided upon by the board upon its establishment?

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Sauvé: No decision has been taken on this, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): I should like to support the contentions and arguments put forward this morning by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.), to the effect that the producer of grain in southwestern Ontario should have his interests adequately protected. Ever since the feed grain freight subsidy was established back in the war years, the producers of grain in southwestern Ontario, which is an area of very substantial feed grain production, have been operating under a serious handicap.

The feed grain subsidy on grain imported into that area, which competes with the locally grown product, amounts to about $5 per ton and this, in turn, amounts to about a quarter of a cent per pound. Now, a bushel of wheat weighs about 60 pounds, so the decrease in price which the farmers in the area can expect on their feed wheat is about 15 cents per bushel. A bushel of corn weighs 56 pounds, so there will be a reduction in price of 14 cents there. A bushel of oats would be reduced in price by 8.5 cents and a bushel of barley by 14 cents. There is no surplus of oats or barley produced in that area, but there is a substantial surplus of corn and of wheat produced in that area.

Now, I should like to point out to our western colleagues that at least some of the cost of operating the wheat board is carried by the government. The wheat produced in Ontario is a special commodity in that it is soft wheat and not much used for bread purposes but is used in the production of pastry flour. However, only about one third of the wheat produced in Ontario can be used for this purpose and approximately two thirds of the production of Ontario wheat has to go into the feed market. Over the years, this surplus wheat produced in Ontario has had to compete with feed wheat shipped down from the west under approximately free freight. The wheat producers in southwestern Ontario have this 15 cents a bushel handicap.

There is a great deal of corn produced in the area and corn is in direct competition in the feed markets with barley. Therefore every bushel of corn produced in that area also suffers under a handicap of 14 cents per bushel. There has been no great complaint about this handicap on corn and wheat over the years because much of it is fed in the area. However there is a substantial surplus of corn and wheat which must be marketed.

The Wheat Board of Ontario which markets this soft wheat deducts 15 cents per bushel on every bushel of wheat grown in the area which the board markets. The cost of marketing this surplus wheat is paid by the wheat producers themselves. There have been requests made through our standing committee on agriculture for some provision for carrying this surplus corn and wheat further east in Ontario and further east in Canada where it is marketed for feed purposes. I should like to ask the minister, and to have his assurance, if it is intended under this new feed grain board to protect the interests of the producers of feed grain in southwestern Ontario? Have any provisions been made whereby the interests of these producers can be protected?

Mr. Sauvé: The answer is affirmative, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): The minister has replied in the affirmative. May I ask him now how it is proposed to put these producers of feed grain in southwestern Ontario in a more equitable position with the producers of feed grain on the prairies?

Mr. Sauvé: It will be the responsibility of the board to devise methods which will comply with your request.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, paragraph (c) of section 5 concerns reasonable stability of prices. On what will this stability be based? Will it vary according to seasons, crops or the cost of living?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, stability will of course be dependent upon purchase prices quoted on the Winnipeg stockmarket or upon the cost of feed grain produced in eastern Canada. Market fluctuations will have some bearing on stability. It is not so much a question of the board establishing what prices will be, but of trying to prevent too much fluctuation in prices from one month to the other.

It is a known fact that, in the past, as soon as the navigation season closed, feed grain prices have fluctuated enormously, and it will be the responsibility of the board to try and prevent such fluctuations by taking suitable steps. But I do not think it will be its responsibility to determine either purchase or selling prices.

[English]

Clause agreed to.

On clause 6—Powers.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, clauses 6, 7 and 8 deal with the tremendous powers that are going to be vested in this board. I am wondering if the government has had adequate consultation with the provincial governments with regard to some of these powers, which seem to overlap powers given to provincial marketing boards? These powers deal with responsibilities in both jurisdictions. They deal with the administration of products that could conceivably be under both jurisdictions. I should like to go through this clause rather slowly, because I should like to ask the minister to make explanations, owing to the very important principles involved. I would request at this time an adequate explanation of the feeling that the government has, and the interpretation that the government makes, with respect to the various parts of this clause under discussion.

• (3:50 p.m.)

For example, as the hon. member for Middlesex West pointed out, we are most concerned about the equality of rail transportation with respect to Ontario feed grains. Under clause 6 (a) (ii) we have:

> —payments related to the cost of feed grain transportation, to or for the benefit of livestock feeders—

But then there is this inclusion:

> —in accordance with the regulations.

I am interested in this, in view of the minister's answer that it would be within the purview of the board to look into and study the feasibility of the equalization that we, in Ontario, are determined to have.

May I ask the minister if, in his considered opinion, the board will have the power to make such equalization, or is it considered that the board will only study this problem, and make such recommendations as it may see fit to the government, with the government then, after giving the matter consideration, making its decision in this regard? If this is the course of action to be followed, a matter like this could take months, or years. We are very much concerned that something be done in the immediate future, because such action would immediately lower the price of feed grain to eastern farmers, particularly where Ontario feed grains are concerned. This is one of the principles I should like to draw attention to. Similar thinking applies to the rest of the bill.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, I have said repeatedly that the board will have the same authority to deal with the problems of corn and grain producers in Ontario as it has with those in other provinces. The interpretation we have given to this act deals with these problems. As hon. members are aware, for almost two years there have been meetings between the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and the feed board administration with respect to ways and means of subsidizing the transportation cost of corn—and particularly of Ontario corn. Because of technical difficulties any solution has not yet been implemented.

The administrative body concerned, before this bill was introduced, had intended to solve the problem of the inequalities with respect to grain transported from Port Arthur to local feeders in eastern provinces. Transportation costs have been paid on grain from the west to the maritimes, but not on grain produced in Ontario.

I am hopeful that we will be able to cope with this problem, and come up with a solution that will satisfy the hon. gentleman who has spoken, and the hon. member who was just mentioned. I am aware of the difficulties. The problem is a serious one not only for Ontario corn growers, but also for many of the maritime growers.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, may I go further. Am I to understand from the minister's statement that the government in effect is turning over to the board in question the power of forming government policy, to the extent that under clause 6(a) subparagraphs (i) and (ii) this board shall determine (A) whether or not payment of cost to storage in eastern Canada shall be made, and to what extent, and (B) whether or not payment of the subsidy on grains moving out of Ontario may be made, and to what extent such payments may be made? Will this board have the authority to initiate such authority, and will it be able to demand a fee and make payments?

Mr. Sauvé: This is possible, according to this measure. The hon. member must have noticed that it is mentioned in the bill that there has to be concert in order to implement the recommendations of the board.

Mr. Danforth: I realize this.

Mr. Sauvé: It is possible. What the hon. member mentioned is possible.

Mr. Olson: Following the discussion that has taken place under clause 6 (a), with respect to where the board will be authorized, in furtherance of its objectives, to make payments relating to the cost of feed grain storage in eastern Canada, and also payments relating to the cost of feed grain transportation, may I ask the minister if there is any intention on the part of the government, and particularly on the part of the minister, to increase these payments. I think something like $1 million a year was paid for storage during the past two seasons. Is it the intention to increase these payments, and will the increase depend on the port the grain is shipped to? In other words, are there any increases with respect to one or other of the two areas contemplated at the moment?

Mr. Sauvé: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Schreyer: At the risk of imposing on the minister's patience may I ask him to clarify further clause 6 (a)? When the board is given authority to make payments related to the cost of storage, and the cost of transportation, is it intended that these payments will be completely recoverable, or only in part recoverable? Will there be a subsidy, or what will be the situation? Because if it is intended to give the board power to make such payments that will be recoverable only in part, from the selling price, it would amount to the granting of the power to subsidize. I do not think that that is intended.

Mr. Sauvé: We are talking about two different kinds of operation. The policy now is that we are paying for storage and transportation costs. If the agency has to buy and sell, it will have to recover all its expenses. It cannot, under the bill, sell at a lower price than it pays. There is no danger of the situation the hon. member mentioned arising.

Mr. Schreyer: Am I to understand from that, Mr. Chairman, that the powers of the board are such that any subsidy, or any difference in such costs, would be authorized by the government? Otherwise it seems to me that the board is under the strict requirement to recover the full price of the grain, when it sells it.

Mr. Sauvé: This is so.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister a question with respect to paragraph (d), which reads:

> The Board may, in furtherance of its objects, . . .
> (d) conduct negotiations for the obtaining of licences for the importation of feed grain into Canada for use outside the designated area and, within the provisions of any such licence obtained in its name, contract with feed grain dealers in Canada for the importation of feed grain by them into Canada under the terms of such licence.

Mr. Chairman, anyone reading that will realize that it is an involved clause. I should like the minister, if he will, to explain the mechanics relating to the operation of this clause, because I have read it several times and I find it quite difficult to understand what is intended. I would appreciate some explanation from the minister.

Mr. Sauvé: Up until this moment, the Canadian Wheat Board has granted licences for the importation of wheat into Canada. It is not inconceivable that the Canadian Wheat Board may want to deprive itself of such powers, relegating them to some other agency of the government. The clause is worded this way because we do not know what the Wheat Board will do. Until now the Canadian Wheat Board has had authority to import grain into Canada.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Herridge: That means negotiations would, in this case, be carried out with the Wheat Board?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): I should like to ask the minister whether it is the intention of the government to seek amendments to the Canada Grain Act or to the Canadian Wheat Board Act so that this power can be transferred to the proposed federal grain agency.

Mr. Sauvé: The only thing I can say is this: The information I have is that the Canadian Wheat Board would have no objection to depriving themselves of this authority to control imports to eastern Canada.

Mr. Danforth: This brings up an interesting point. Is it not conceivable that in order to obtain the cheapest possible price for feed grain in eastern Ontario the agency might request a licence to import grain offered for sale by a foreign country such as the United States. At the same time a supply might be available through the Canadian Wheat Board at a higher price.

This is why I pointed out this morning that it is of great importance to know where power will be vested in granting importation permits, and what the government's thinking is in this regard. It has a direct bearing on market prices in Chicago and on the availability of feed grain in eastern Canada. How does the government propose to handle this extremely delicate matter?

Mr. Sauvé: It is the Canadian Wheat Board which has the authority to grant these import licences. What will happen I do not know, but we have had an indication that there will be no objection to delegating it in this instance for this particular purpose. Evidently it should not be possible for one government body to have power to deprive another government body of the opportunity of achieving its aims. We cannot think of any policy which would be followed by one organization contrary to the interest of another under the same government.

Mr. Danforth: I do not wish to labour this point, but has the minister not now drawn attention to the very situation I had in mind? The exercise by the Wheat Board of its power to control imports might be detrimental to the objects of this new agency, which could find itself unable to import grain at a much cheaper price than the price it would have to pay for grain grown in Canada.

Mr. Sauvé: The hon. member should bear in mind that the agency will not normally engage in buying and selling operations. If it were to do so it would do so as a broker and would have to buy through the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, which comes under the Canadian Wheat Board which, in turn, controls all grain imports into Canada. The same circumstances arise with respect to corn. Corn enters Canada uncontrolled, because there is a tariff. It is the same situation.

Mr. Danforth: I can appreciate the minister's approach to this question. He has told us the agency would be dealing with the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. Is it not also a fact that under the terms of this bill a purchasing agency could be designated to buy local supplies of home grown feed grain or to import foreign feed grain without using the services of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange in any way?

Mr. Sauvé: I do not think this has any bearing on the broader problem. In so far as the Canadian Wheat Board decides it no longer wishes to control the import of grain into Canada, it has nothing to do with the larger problem at all.

The brokers who normally deal in this field will act as they normally do. We have nothing to do with that. The problem does not arise with the agency, but with the Wheat Board. It is the Wheat Board which will decide whether or not it wishes to give up this power over the import of grain. We have nothing to do wtih that, so the situation will not be affected at all by the existence of the feed grain agency. This is clearly stated in later clauses.

There is really no problem in terms of conflict between the two bodies. The federal grain agency does not buy from the Wheat

Board. When it does, it goes on the marketplace as a broker. There is no source of difficulty with respect to the matter the hon. member raised because it is the Wheat Board which will decide whether they wish to give up their power, or not, or whether they will allow imports to come in or not. The agency will not be buying and selling.

Mr. Schreyer: I rise to support paragraph (d). We have heard suggestions that the Wheat Board should divest itself of its power to control the international movement of grain. If this were to happen I believe it would be most unfortunate. In my opinion anything which would fragmentize the control exercised by the board over this kind of grain movement would be unfortunate. I do not know who is asking for it—whether there is any pressure on the government, or on the Wheat Board to divest itself of this power; but I for one certainly hope it will not happen.

Mr. Olson: I wish to raise one question concerning subclause (c) which reads—

> Allocate space reserved for its use in any storage facility among persons requiring feed grain storage facilities in Eastern Canada.

At present, of course, it is the Board of Grain Commissioners who have full authority to allocate space in all the terminal elevators, at least those along the seaway, and perhaps in other elevators or storage places in eastern Canada. I am wondering if this allocation of space will be an authority directly invested in this board over some of that same storage, or whether there will be an allocation of space in so far as the kind of grain and where it came from are concerned, after the Board of Grain Commissioners have designated the space for the export of wheat and for other grains. Will they have the authority directly to order designation of space in some of these terminal elevators?

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Sauvé: Once the Board of Grain Commissioners have determined in a certain year that so much space should be reserved for feed grain for local consumption, then inside this our board could allocate space for various needs, taking into account pressures, prices and so on.

Mr. Nowlan: My question follows the one asked by the hon. member for Queens earlier, who inquired about an incentive or stimulant for local production so that there may be no discrimination under this bill against people who produce their own feed grain. Clause 6 says that payments by the board will only be made for storage and transportation. Is there any clause in the bill to help stimulate the growth of feed grains in eastern Canada and British Columbia? If more feed grains could be produced by the provision of drainage and fertilizer, then the problem which this bill is supposed to meet would be solved.

This business of continuing subsidies can be a drain, can have a negative effect. Over a period of three years, depending on the size of the unit, a producer could pay for his own draining and drying equipment. I cite the case of a grain drying unit costing $16,000 which could handle 1,600 tons of grain. That grain is subsidized at approximately $12 a ton, and the subsidy on 500 tons would cost the government $6,000 a year. Thus over a period of three years, out of the subsidy the farmer could pay outright for his draining and drying facilities and thus need not be a charge to the Canadian taxpayers forever and a day.

Mr. Sauvé: In answer to similar questions, I have already explained that the problem of the production of corn and grain in Ontario and the maritime provinces was under consideration. There is provision in clause 6(a) (i) and (ii) to assist with this.

Mr. Nowlan: The only reason I ask is that it specifically sets out payments for storage and transportation, and adds "in accordance with the regulations." Why could we not set this out specifically in a subclause?

Mr. Sauvé: It is because of the origin of the subsidy. It was originally a transportation subsidy, so that the amount of money parliament grants for it has to be related to transportation now. There are methods that can be used to relate transportation costs to locally produced grain and corn, but the principle has to be the transportation costs.

Mr. Nowlan: Transportation could be from your feed grain plot to your drying and cleaning mill, right on your own farm.

Mr. Sauvé: I have answered some previous questions about this. Studies are now being conducted into the matter. I am as occupied as is the hon. member with the problem of the local producers of corn and grain, and we are about to come to grips with it.

Mr. Danforth: The minister has been patient with me, but I hope he will bear further with me because I have some major questions to ask about clause 6(g) dealing with the authority of the board to require any persons engaged in any segment of the grain business to furnish information on request dealing with the workings of their business, the costs they pay, their selling price and profit, and the charges for the various services they render.

My uneasiness arises because this bill in effect incorporates most or all of the powers that are normally found in provincial marketing schemes. It deals with the power to buy, sell, store and transport grain, and it requires individual segments of the industry on request, "by order served personally or by registered mail" to open all phases of their business transactions for inspection. This is found in provincial schemes as well, and is not strange; but this bill gives power to the board whereby it can designate individuals or companies to act on its behalf as its agent or agents.

In other words, under this provision the board could designate an agent in Ontario who in effect would purchase all the feed grain necessary to meet the lack of supply in eastern Canada, and on the other hand can designate a single agent or agency to sell all that is needed to the trade in eastern Canada. I view these powers with a great deal of uneasiness because we have seen the havoc wrought by such powers given to marketing schemes in Ontario, where they worked to the disadvantage rather than advantage of certain segments of agriculture. But there is a tremendous difference between this and a provincial marketing scheme. In a provincial marketing scheme the particular segment or commodity group involved has the prerogative to request or reject participation in such a scheme.

Here, Mr. Chairman, the significant difference is that if this bill passes, all commodity groups dealing with grain, and all segments of the trade, will have the regulations foisted upon them by the will of parliament without having the opportunity to show by a vote whether or not they feel this is desirable at this time. I am well aware that such agencies as the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and the Canadian Farm Union, and other segments of the industry across Canada, are very desirous to see legislation passed which will accomplish the ends pointed out in the principle of this bill. I fear however that the trade, when reading the different regulations and realizing the extreme power vested in this board, will be very unhappy over the absolute dictatorship which is possible; it perhaps is not premeditated and perhaps is not contemplated, but I say that under the wording in this bill and under the powers vested in the board such actions are possible and feasible.

I should like the minister to give to me and to the house his interpretation of just exactly the way in which he feels this board will administer. Will it be possible for them to designate an agency to sell; can they confine it to an individual company, a group of companies, or a co-operative; are they in a position to designate to this degree? If not, can the minister point out to me a clause or provision which hinders the board taking such action?—because this could drastically disrupt the entire grain trade. This is one part I am very much concerned about. I would hope the minister would deal with this at length.

Mr. Sauvé: This is just to enable us to act as a broker if need be, and after having been authorized so to do by order in council. But when we act as broker we act as the normal trade acts. We do not sell directly to anybody. We are just one of the brokers among a number of large brokers, and the grain acquired is distributed through the normal channels of the trade. We do not go further than that. There is no provision, other than the authorization we have to act as a broker. If I understand your fear correctly it is that we might, in place of the people who are in the trade, act directly as salesmen to the individual farmer. This is not provided in this bill.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, if I may pursue this further, the minister's interpretation is as he set it out in his initial speech. My point, however, is that although this is the intent of the minister, under the provisions of the bill as it is constituted this board does have the absolute power to designate an agency to act on its behalf and to designate an agency to buy or sell. The minister speaks of a broker on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. I can understand that particular segment of the transaction; but I would hope the minister contemplates that if there should be a scarcity of supplies in the east this board will consider purchasing grain from Ontario or from Quebec as the case may be. Certainly this grain is not offered for sale on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. There may be in the maritimes pockets of excess grain that the board may wish to acquire and move. This cannot be done by a broker on the Winnipeg exchange; but it can be done under the bill, if the board designates an agency to act on its behalf under the power which is given in clause 6(i), where it says the board may——authorize any officer or employee of the board or any other person to act on behalf of the board in the conduct of its operations under this act.

So, I maintain—although this is not the interpretation given to it at this time by the minister—that the board under the terms in this bill is given absolute power to designate individuals, companies, or segments of the trade, to act on its behalf. I suggest that this could be to the detriment of the rest of the industry. Can the minister assure me that this is an incorrect interpretation and can he show me where those powers are not contained.

Mr. Sauvé: This deals with the powers of the employees of the board. The board will have authority to hire employees who will have power to act under authority of the board. I think the hon. member is giving to this clause a much broader interpretation than is there. This relates to the duties of the board, and the board undoubtedly will have some employees who will act under the authority of the board. There is no other intention. What the hon. member fears was not the spirit in the drafting of this particular clause.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Minister, the reason I am labouring this point is that some marketing schemes are set up in almost identical terms, including such a power; and I fail to see that if, in the wisdom of the board, they felt that such a situation existed, they could be curtailed in any way, with the absolute power given them in these terms, in doing just what I pointed out. So far as the trade or the producers of feed grain in eastern Canada are concerned, I cannot see where their interests are protected. In subsequent clauses we will see some things which amplify the powers given in clause 6(i).

Mr. Sauvé: I do not see the difficulty. I am giving the hon. member assurance that I think this pertains only to the employees of the board in the normal discharge of their responsibilities. The hon. member is giving a much wider interpretation than I do to this particular paragraph.

Mr. Danforth: Although I give a much broader interpretation—and I admitted at the first that I would be speaking of extreme powers which the board could take to itself under this measure—can the minister assure me that anywhere in this bill there is anything which would prevent such action on behalf of the board, which is in effect a marketing scheme set up under the federal parliament.

Mr. Sauvé: If the hon. member would read clause 8(2) he might have an answer there to his problem.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Nowlan: Let me return to the constitutional point raised by the hon. member and say first of all that I appreciate the minister's concern. I do not intend to indulge in a long discussion of this subject, as I realize the minister has put in a long afternoon, but quite frankly I am not satisfied with his answer to my earlier question.

Having had some experience before the bar I have some understanding of statutes and I am afraid that what the minister said regarding a mechanical process to provide some stimulus and incentive to eastern farmers to grow feed grain will not in fact be the case as far as this bill is concerned. Perhaps the minister would consider and accept an amendment to clause 3 along the lines suggested in order that payments could be provided in support of the growing of feed grain in eastern Canada. I believe this to be the way efficiently to stimulate the growth of feed grain. I feel strongly enough in this regard that I am prepared to move an amendment, but I would ask the minister to consider this situation seriously.

Similar anxieties arise in respect of the provisions of clause 6; but in view of the minister's assurance that consideration is being given I do not intend to say a great deal about them. I do hope that, instead of leaving this clause with its present obtuse language, there will be some attempt made to spell out the intended meaning in relation to transportation and storage payments so far as feed grain in eastern Canada and British Columbia is concerned. Surely that would alleviate some of the fears expressed by individuals in the east and other parts of the country.

We should adopt some measure to provide a clear incentive to the administrators of this measure to follow the suggestion of the hon. member for Medicine Hat, in order that the production of feed grain will be in closer relation with the raising of beef cattle.

I appreciate the history behind the introduction of this measure—to get away from the paying of subsidies by stimulating local growth. Over a period of years I am sure this will be the most effective way of providing an answer to our problems.

Mr. Sauvé: I must suggest that the problem the hon. member is raising is only a problem because we are and have been paying subsidies on transportation costs for the movement of western feed grain to the maritimes. If no transportation subsidy was being paid there would be no problem, so far as moving feed grain from Port Arthur and Fort William to eastern Canada is concerned. On the basis of the hon. member's argument, we must assume that local producers of feed grain and corn could compete in all Canadian markets.

I suggest the hon. member's problem is related to the transportation subsidy being paid on feed grain, and that inasmuch as his problem is related to transportation subsidies, we have the authority to solve it without having to amend the act.

Mr. Nowlan: Without prolonging this discussion, let me suggest that we should have some clear and obvious indication that some effort is being made to remove this whole problem from the sphere of subsidies, about which many of our members have reservations. Let us put this whole thing on a constructive basis. I appreciate the minister's interpretation and understanding, but unfortunately some of our courts, and others, will take a different reaction to this bill. I am afraid that, so far as the solution to some of these individual problems is concerned, decisions will be made, by unauthorized officials, the result of which will be a lack of stimulus or incentive to the growth of eastern feed grain.

Mr. Sauvé: My suggestion is that this whole problem exists because the federal government has paid this transportation subsidy since 1941 and that, had there been no such subsidy, there would be no such problem. I do not see how we could amend the act in the way the hon. member suggests to meet his purpose. It is my belief that, as a result of the provisions of the clause he has mentioned, we will find other methods of providing the assistance necessary to satisfy his proposition and that posed by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.).

The problems the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings referred to relate directly to the transportation subsidy that has been paid since 1941, and would not exist, I suggest, had we not paid the subsidy. By accepting an amendment such as he has suggested we would be acting contrary to the intention of the act in terms of its relationship to transportation costs. We are studying this problem and hope to find some solution to the difficulties he has outlined. This problem has been referred to by various corn growers in Ontario.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I should like again to refer the minister to the powers of this board and the implications of clause 8 (2), which deals with the disposal of feed grain. I am concerned because these powers as outlined will allow this government appointed board to do almost anything it wishes regarding the feed grain trade, right from production to disposal.

Let me refer to an extreme situation. By virtue of the powers of this board, as envisaged in the bill, the board could designate a sole purchasing agent, selling agent, storing agent and transportation agent in every eastern province and in British Columbia. This board by virtue of the proposed powers could designate one trucking company as the sole transporter of feed grain. In this regard one need only read clause 9 in conjunction with clause 6 paragraph (k) which states:

> The board may, in furtherance of its objects, . . . generally, do and authorize such acts and things as are necessary or incidental to the attainment of the objects and purposes of the board and the exercise of its powers and the performance of its duties.

Unless the minister can convince me otherwise, this gives the board in its wisdom the power to control by directive every segment of the industry.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Sauvé: I do not understand that point, Mr. Chairman. Obviously laws should be as perfect as possible when they are drafted; but I cannot see this extreme case developing, under our system. I do not understand how we could amend the clause in a way that would satisfy the hon. member.

Mr. Danforth: I admit that I am quoting extreme cases. I am quoting them for the purpose of illustrating that there is, without doubt, extreme power vested in this particular board. Although these are the most extreme cases that I can think of, will the minister agree with me that under the provisions set out in this clause it is conceivable and possible that the board does in effect have the very power to which I have referred?

Mr. Sauvé: All I can do, Mr. Chairman, is give the assurance that the board will not exercise this kind of power—if this assurance satisfies the hon. member.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, before we leave clause 6 I should like to obtain clarification in respect of paragraph (d), where it says that the board may—> —conduct negotiations for the obtaining of licences for the importation of feed grain into Canada for the importation of feed grain by them within the provisions of any such licence obtained in its name, contract with feed grain dealers in Canada for the importation of feed grain by them into Canada under the terms of such licence.

I am wondering whether the minister has considered the possibility that this clause could mean that there could be the importation of surplus feed grains from the United States, corn and so on, to the detriment of the feed grain growers of all of Canada, in that, being surplus, this grain could be sold more cheaply to the board than the price at which they could purchase, say, Ontario corn or western barley. Can the minister assure us that this provision will not be used to cut feed grain prices to a point where it is not profitable to produce this grain in Canada?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I can give this assurance.

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Chairman, before clause 6 passes I wonder whether there is not a conflict in paragraph (j) as compared with clause 9. Clause 6 (j) empowers the board to act as agent for or on behalf of any minister of the crown or as agent of Her Majesty, and clause 9 (1) provides that the board is, for the purposes of this act, an agent of Her Majesty, and its powers under this act may be exercised only as an agent of Her Majesty. Clause 6 (j) purports to give the board power to act as an agent of the minister, but clause 9 (1) limits the board to acting as an agent of Her Majesty. I suggest that this point is particularly important when one considers clause 9 (4), which provides as follows:

> Actions, suits or other legal proceedings in respect of any right or obligation acquired or incurred by the board on behalf of Her Majesty, whether in its name or in the name of Her Majesty, may be brought or taken by or against the board in the name of the board in any court that would have jurisdiction if the board were not an agent of Her Majesty.

So if the board did something on behalf of a minister of the crown, presumably no action could be taken against the board.

Mr. Sauvé: I think any action taken against the board in respect of this provision would be the same as action taken under any other legislation. This clause is no different from a similar clause in other legislation. This provision is to be found in other legislation pertaining to boards established by parliament. This is the normal type of clause, and we have not made any innovation in this bill.

Mr. McQuaid: It may be the same type of clause, but that does not mean it is necessarily correct. I suggest that there is a very definite conflict here. Clause 6 (j) empowers the board to act as an agent on behalf of any minister, and clause 9 provides that the board may only exercise its powers as an agent of Her Majesty. How does the minister resolve these two provisions? I do not think any bill should be passed if it contains obvious inconsistencies.

Mr. Sauvé: The hon. member is arguing that there is a contradiction between clause 6 (j) and clause 9. Clause 6 (j) states that the board may—> —act as agent for or on behalf of any minister of the crown or as agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada in respect of any operations that it may be directed to carry out by the Governor in Council;

Clause 9 (1) says:

> The board is, for all purposes of this act, an agent of Her Majesty, and its powers under this act may be exercised only as an agent of Her Majesty.

Mr. McQuaid: Yes; and the clause provides that its powers may be exercised only as an agent of Her Majesty, not as an agent of a minister of the crown.

Mr. Sauvé: I am not quite sure of this, but is not a minister of the crown an agent of Her Majesty? I do not see the contradiction here. If the hon. member sees any contradiction I am quite ready to look into this provision more carefully, but I would repeat that I do not see any contradiction. When I am minister and somebody representing me is acting on my behalf, is this different from acting as an agent of Her Majesty? I think this is a very refined point which is not very fundamental to the purposes of the bill.

Mr. McQuaid: I agree that it is a rather refined point, and the only reason I raise it is to avoid any trouble arising later. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this clause be allowed to stand until the minister has had an opportunity of referring this question to the legal officers of his department.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, could I propose something else, namely that we do not stand this clause if we can approve the bill as it stands at the moment. If it is thought necessary to introduce an amendment, we could ask the other place to look into this matter, because they will be considering the bill in the same way as we are and could bring in the necessary amendment.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the minister, I believe that when we are faced with a controversy such as this we should let the clause stand until the legal department of the government has had adequate opportunity to make the necessary correction. I am very much concerned with another problem in this bill, namely the conflict of interest provincially and federally because of the implications of the bill. In the province of Ontario it was contemplated some two years ago to put commercial corn under a marketing scheme. This question was put to the primary producers in the form of a vote. This proposal was defeated; the farmers in no uncertain terms stated that they did not wish this commodity placed under a marketing scheme with all its implications.

In Ontario there are many marketing schemes covering different commodities, and I believe I can say with all modesty, as a leader in this particular field, that in recent months several of the marketing schemes have been held up to very rigid inspection as to whether indeed they were of benefit to the group producing the commodity.

By reason of this problem and the implications of the provisions of this bill, the grain growers of Ontario, including those who grow corn, cannot help but be placed under what is in effect a marketing scheme with all its implications. Would the minister tell us whether he has conferred with the provincial authorities of Quebec and Ontario with regard to the double responsibility contained in a bill of this type? Has the minister conferred with the officials of these two provinces to ascertain whether there is indeed an intrusion into provincial jurisdiction?

Indeed, the granting of such a measure may be an intrusion into provincial authority. I am perfectly aware that the federal authorities deal with the transport of commodities interprovincially, but this bill acts in effect within the boundaries of a particular province. I am therefore wondering whether the minister has obtained the approval of provincial groups and whether they are satisfied that there is no infringement of their jurisdiction under this bill. Are they content to allow the federal government to move into their field to this degree? This is a problem that has troubled me.

Before the minister replies may I speak of one more matter which has been of some concern to me. If there is a duplication of responsibility, then where does the final authority lie? Suppose a regulation in regard to a feed grain is proposed by the members of a provincial marketing scheme, the implications of which are perhaps not acceptable to this board, does this board overrule any provincial regulations? This is something that I find it hard to concede.

Mr. Sauvé: I think the answer to that question can be found in clause 8 (1) (a). This kind of problem would only arise if the board were to buy and sell grain everywhere in Canada. Clause 8 (a) says that "such purchase by the board shall be made from the Canadian Wheat Board or an agent thereof". It is therefore clear that if the board becomes a buyer and seller it can only buy its grain from an agent of the Canadian Wheat Board, which in this case would buy it through the wheat exchange in Winnipeg. It is clear that this legislation does not authorize us to buy grain which is locally produced. As for the transportation and storage, we can pay transportation costs or find ways and means of helping the local producer to do so, as I mentioned earlier. These are two different operations. When it comes to buying, we must proceed through an agent of the Wheat Board. The problem the hon. member raised regarding the conflicting authorities of the marketing boards does not arise.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, although the minister has partially clarified my problem, he has further complicated another matter. He keeps referring to the purchase of feed grains through a broker on the grain board. It is certainly contemplated under this bill that purchases of surplus feed grains will be made in other provinces and that other grains will be offered for sale.

Mr. Sauvé: That is what I just said. We have to have the authority of an order in council. Otherwise we can only buy grain from the Canadian Wheat Board or its agent. However the board's responsibilities are much broader than this. Buying and selling is just an additional responsibility given to it. The board administers the funds provided by parliament for the transportation and storage costs of the grain.

As I told the hon. member before, the problems which he raised about the Ontario locally produced grain can be dealt with satisfactorily by the regulations contained in clause 6 (a) (ii), as long as the payments are related to the transportation costs. We have to make a distinction there. If the board becomes an agent, it can only buy from the Wheat Board or an agent thereof. We cannot buy grain or corn from any agency of the provinces. This conflict which the hon. member foresees is not possible, inasmuch as the board deals as a buyer, in which case it must in fact buy in Winnipeg.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, if this is the case, as pointed out by the minister, then this indeed does work an extreme hardship on feed grains offered for sale in eastern Canada, because if the board can only purchase western feed grains in its role as a broker on the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, and if its sole purpose is to purchase as cheaply as possible to provide the lowest possible price for the users of feed grain in the east, then that places the producers of grain in Ontario and Quebec in an untenable position because, under this new legislation, they will now be offering grain to the eastern market controlled by a government agency in direct competition with another government agency whose sole purpose is to obtain the highest possible price for its feed growers. Under this bill the minister has established a situation where one government agency sets out to get the highest possible price for feed grains and another government agency is established to procure feed grains at the lowest possible price. The rest of Canada finds itself in between the two competing agencies. This is an almost impossible situation.

Mr. Sauvé: I must refer the hon. member to clause 6 (a) (i) (ii). The board has two functions. Its first function is to make payments related to the cost of feed grain storage and feed grain transportation. It is only in extreme cases that the board will become a buyer and seller; otherwise the board does not go into the marketing field. In the normal course of events the brokers will be able to buy their grain where they want, as there will be no discrimination against the local producers, as exists under the present policy, which only applies to the transportation cost of grains from Port Arthur to eastern Canada. This afternoon I have said repeatedly that we were considering methods of equalization of opportunities for all producers. The situation which the hon. member feared would only occur if the board were to be permanently engaged in the purchase and sale of grain, which it does not. This would be an exceptional occurrence. Otherwise the board will, under the authority granted to it in clause 6 (a) (i) (ii), find ways and means of putting local producers at par with other producers of grain.

Mr. Herridge: I just wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I think we should express our appreciation of the patience which the minister has shown. I understand he has been here since eleven o'clock and has not as yet had anything to eat today. I would suggest to the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) that if he carries on in this vein he is likely to be prosecuted by the society for the prevention of cruelty to ministers.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I should like to have a clarification of section 8(a), because the minister said that all purchases would be made through the Canadian Wheat Board. I took him to mean that they were buying through the Canadian Wheat Board in a designated area. However, the first part of section 8(a) says that the board may—

—buy or enter into contracts or agreements for the purchase of feed grain in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

This means that purchases of feed grain can be made in eastern Canada and that they will not be forced through the Wheat Board, although eastern Canada is not a designated area.

Mr. Sauvé: I think the hon. member has to read the entire clause. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but we are dealing with clause 6 and that question should be held until we reach clause 8. While I am on my feet, and since it is now five o'clock, may I ask for the consent of the committee to proceed with this bill rather than go to private members hour?

Mr. Danforth: In so far as the minister's request is concerned, Mr. Chairman, we have no quarrel with continuing but I wish to inform him that because of the importance of this bill I doubt very much that we can conclude it this evening.

Business of the House

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): It being five o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, may I ask for unanimous consent of the house to forgo private members hour, so that we can revert to the committee stage of this bill? I have some indication it may be possible to conclude it before six o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It is agreed that private members hour be suspended?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): The house will now revert to government business.

CANADIAN LIVESTOCK FEED BOARD

ASSISTANCE IN STORAGE AND TRANSPORTATION COSTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia—Mr. Sauvé—Mr. Richard in the Chair.

On clause 6—Powers.

Mr. McQuaid: I do not like to be stubborn about this question of paragraph (j) of section 6, but it is of considerable importance. I suggest the minister either consent to allowing clause 6 to stand until he has secured advice from his legal counsel, or perhaps the situation could be corrected if the minister would agree, when we come to consider clause 9 (1), to inserting the words, "or as an agent or on behalf of any minister of the crown". Clause 9 would then read:

> The board is, for all purposes of this act, an agent of Her Majesty, and its powers under this act may be exercised only as an agent of Her Majesty or as an agent for or on behalf of any minister of the crown.

Mr. Sauvé: I would be ready to accept such an amendment when we come to clause 9.

Clause agreed to.

[Mr. Danforth.]

On clause 7—Duties.

Mr. Herridge: This is a very interesting clause, Mr. Chairman, particularly paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d). These paragraphs read in part as follows:

> (a) to make a continuing study of feed grain requirements in eastern Canada and British Columbia—
> (b) to make recommendations to the minister with respect to requirements for additional feed grain storage—
> (c) generally, to advise the government on all matters pertaining to the stabilization—
> (d) to the greatest possible extent consistent with its objectives, to consult and co-operate with all departments, branches—

And so on. Would the minister mind telling the house the procedures which he contemplates would be used under these four paragraphs (a) to (d)? Could he give us some idea of the mechanics contemplated in the operation of this clause?

Mr. Sauvé: Under the existing regulations we are already doing much of this work. There is always research being conducted to examine the need for feed grain. In so far as storage is concerned, we have continuous discussions with the Wheat Board, the Board of Grain Commissioners, the Department of Transport and the National Harbours Board concerning storage facilities. With regard to paragraph (c), we have done so many studies we are about in a position to announce some interesting proposals. The administrator of feed grains has always had excellent relations with all provincial departments, so there is nothing new here. We are putting it in the law because there was no law governing the feed grain administration. This only clarifies what we were doing under the existing system.

Mr. Pugh: There is a reference to the equalization of feed grain prices to livestock feeders. Could the minister explain how far that goes? Does it apply, for instance, to feed lots within British Columbia only, or is there to be equalization of feed lot purchases in Alberta with those in British Columbia?

Mr. Sauvé: No, the bill applies to a certain part of British Columbia, Ontario and other provinces. The reference is to equalization in terms of the situation in the province or in each of the provinces. So far, the policy has been to try to pay the transportation costs of grain from Port Arthur to eastern Canada, leaving no balance of cost for the producer. This is what we have called equalization. It is an equalization or elimination of transportation costs so that the normal cost of feed would be the same as if the feed had been purchased at Port Arthur. The location of the buyer had no relation to the cost because transportation costs were eliminated.

Mr. Pugh: If you eliminated transportation costs, and I take it that means handling costs and storage costs, the grain sold to feeders in British Columbia could be purchased at exactly the same price as if it had been purchased on the prairies at Calgary, Winnipeg, Regina or any other city. Is that the intention? I want to know whether that is the intention of the government when they speak of equalization.

Mr. Sauvé: No, because there was an amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act that allows provincial trading in grain; so that the cost of feed in the western provinces is much lower than the cost of feed outside the three prairie provinces. I cannot hope to equalize the cost of feed in eastern Canada or British Columbia with the cost of feed inside the three prairie provinces. There is no possibility of that at all.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Pugh: The minister says that there is no possibility of arriving at such a solution? I am only thinking of the spirit of competition, and the plight of the poultry producers in British Columbia who are at a decided disadvantage, when one considers those on the prairies.

As I read the act, the board may, in furtherance of its objects, (a) make—

—(i) payments related to the cost of feed grain storage in Eastern Canada, and

(ii) payments related to the cost of feed grain transportation.

Thus, the payments made would not be the full cost of transportation or the full cost of storage. This would be so within the province of British Columbia, and would apply to the moving of grain to British Columbia, I take it.

Mr. Sauvé: Under this act we should not do anything different from what we are now doing, because we are paying the cost of transportation, as defined by the administrative regulations concerned. There is some definition of what transportation costs mean, and we are limited to that. We cannot do more than that, and we cannot give an additional subsidy to equalize the cost of feed in all provinces of Canada. For example, a British Columbia feeder has the advantage of being nearer the large centres in British Columbia than would be a feeder in Alberta or Saskatchewan. That accounts for the better competitive position in which the British Columbia feeder finds himself.

Mr. Olson: I am apprehensive about clause 7 (2) (c). I refer to the words, at the top of page 5, reading:

—and for the purposes of any such inquiry or investigation, empower the board or any of the members thereof to exercise the powers of a person appointed as a commissioner under Part I of the Inquiries Act.

If this is to be a permanent authority, granted to each of the board members, it seems to me that we are giving them authority to conduct an investigation. I believe that almost always in the past—and I am not sure that I am entirely correct in this—whenever an investigation has been ordered under the Inquiries Act, the matter has been of a specific nature, and has been of such magnitude that it has gained the attention of parliament, which has ordered such an inquiry.

I am apprehensive about this much authority being permitted, on a permanent basis, to every member of the board. I wonder if the minister would explain why this wording is included in the clause?

Mr. Sauvé: I think the hon. member will find similar wording in the Canadian Wheat Board Act. The wording is related to part 1 of the Inquiries Act, and it is very limited in scope. I do not have part 1 of the Inquiries Act with me, but there are some limitations in it. This power was included in the bill, because it is given to some other boards. As I say, I do not have the Inquiries Act with me, and I do not know whether this will create any major difficulties. At the moment I am unable to stress the differences between this bill, and acts relating to similar boards.

Mr. Danforth: I, too, am concerned about clause 7 (2) (c). Does not this wording, in effect, under part 1 of the Inquiries Act, empower anyone designated by this board, or any one of its members, to regulate any company or individual engaged in this particular segment of the grain trade, or to order such individual or company to make available all records and books pertaining to the business that such individual or company is engaged in?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, this can be done, with the authorization of the governor in council. This is not a power that can be exercised by any member of the board. If one reads clause 7(2) he sees that——the Governor in Council may, from time to time, empower the Board to make inquiries—

And so on.

The board has to ask for authority from the governor in council to proceed in the way described. Therefore, there is the safeguard that this can only be done through action of the cabinet.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Referring to clause 7(1)(d), does the minister anticipate that the government will be building additional storage facilities in eastern Canada, under recommendations of the board?

Mr. Sauvé: I mentioned earlier that I do not think the board will do so, because there has been this agreement between the railways and millers with respect to buying grain on a year round basis. There will be less need for storage facilities in eastern Canada. The board will judge according to needs. But it will have the authority to build such storage facilities as there is need for.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I understood the minister to say that there was some disagreement, because the railways wished to work on a year round operation. The grain comes down from Fort William to the eastern ports at lower rates by ship. That can be done during the shipping season.

Mr. Sauvé: That was true until the new rates were proposed by the railways. A contract agreement was signed between the mill operators in the maritimes and the railways, as a result of which the cost of transportation by rail is about equal to the cost of transportation by water. There would be less necessity to establish storage facilities for grain transported by water because of the new agreement with the railways.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister for further clarification on the question of the equalization, the fair equalization, of feed grain prices to livestock feeders as it applies to British Columbia? Is any part of the transportation cost for livestock feeders in British Columbia paid under the feed grain administration?

[Mr. Danforth.]

Mr. Sauvé: Yes. I am afraid I gave my copy of the order in council to the reporters, but in British Columbia there is a balance of cost of about $4.60 a ton. We pay all the difference in the transportation cost.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask, on what basis is that? For the eastern livestock feeder the price is based on Port Arthur. What is the base for British Columbia?

Mr. Sauvé: I do not know what the base is. I do know that all transportation has to be by rail. I do not know what the point is in the prairies from where we calculate the transportation cost. I do know, too, that the remaining amount is about $4.60. I can provide the hon. member with the detailed information later.

Mr. Douglas: I do not need the details. I take it that there is a point fixed on the prairies, beyond which the Livestock Feed Board will pay the actual transportation cost, by the common definition which the minister has given?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 8—Purchase, etc. of feed grain.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): On clause 8, may I again pose a question to the minister? I understood him to say that the board can only purchase through the Canadian Wheat Board. I take it that this is true so far as the western prairies are concerned, or for those places called the designated area. But, clause 8(1)(a) says:

The Board may, in furtherance of its objects, at any time when it is so authorized by regulation

(a) buy or enter into contracts or agreements for the purchase of feed grain in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Sauvé: I am not sure that the Canadian Wheat Board has no jurisdiction over eastern Canada. I remember we had an argument about this in the House of Commons. I do not have the act here but I think the board has authority.

An hon. Member: On import licensing only.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): The minister will recall that an eastern grain board was set up to purchase Ontario wheat. The Wheat Board has nothing to do with the purchase of this wheat at all.

Mr. Sauvé: The board cannot purchase Ontario wheat. That is what I said earlier: It cannot be done under this bill.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): If the minister will read the first two lines of clause 8(a) he will find that it says that the board may—

—buy or enter into contracts or agreements for the purchase of feed grain in eastern Canada and British Columbia and in the designated area—

So there is authority to buy feed grain.

Mr. Sauvé: But only from the Canadian Wheat Board. I am looking at the French text now—

Mr. Schreyer: While the minister is looking at his material I would offer the suggestion that grain produced in the east does not come under the aegis of the Canadian Wheat Board. However, it could be meant that it is western grain located at eastern terminals which could be bought from the Canadian Wheat Board by the federal purchasing agency.

Mr. Sauvé: I am sorry, I did not understand the question. Certainly eastern produced grain does not come under the authority of the Canadian Wheat Board. But we can buy only through an agent of the Canadian Wheat Board. That is what I implied.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Then this means that the only feed grain which could be bought in eastern Canada is grain held in an eastern position by the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Sauvé: That is the meaning.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): It is not spelled out that way.

Mr. Olson: Another question with respect to clause 8, which has a relationship to what appears in clause 16. Forgive me for quoting from clause 16, Mr. Chairman, but this involves the financial authority of the board and is, as I say, related to clause 8. Clause 16(2) states:

Subject to subsection (4) all amounts required by the board to defray any costs incurred by it pursuant to subsection (1) of section 8 shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

I presume clause 17 speaks of an advance which has to be paid back. What is meant by the words in clause 16 (4) which indicate that no payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund under subsection (2) shall exceed "the amount by which $10 million exceeds the balance of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board account"? Where will this account originate? Does it mean that this bill authorizes the government to transfer an amount up to $10 million, in addition to whatever this account will be? I am not clear.

Mr. Sauvé: That is the amount which will be provided by the treasury and placed at the disposal of the board. If the board needs a larger sum, it can borrow from the treasury. But it is expected that this $10 million will be enough for the operation in the circumstances envisaged, which will be limited. The board can only buy and sell in certain situations as laid down in the bill.

Mr. Danforth: I should like to direct the attention of the minister to clause 8(a). As I interpret it this provision allays at least one of the major fears I expressed earlier this afternoon. If he would peruse this paragraph he would see that some of the things he said earlier, were, inadvertently, not in accord with what we find in these provisions. I think the minister will agree with me that eastern feed grain does not come under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. Clause 8(1) says the board may "buy or enter into contracts or agreements for the purchase of feed grain in eastern Canada and British Columbia and in the designated area."

In an earlier reply the minister led me to believe that this was to the exclusion of all purchases of locally grown feed grain. But under 9(a), as I read it, the board does have power to purchase local grain in this area. Clause 8(1) continues, however with these words:

—but where any purchase is made by the board within the designated area of grain then being purchased in that area by the Canadian Wheat Board, such purchase by the board shall be made from the Canadian Wheat Board or an agent thereof.

This seems clear to me. First, the board does have power to enter into agreements for the purchase of feed grain in eastern Canada and British Columbia, but where such purchases are made from within the designated area they must be made through the Wheat Board. I think this clarifies itself. It alleviates one of the fears I had that this agency would not be able to purchase local grain. Perhaps I am wrong, but that is the substance of the paragraph as I understand it.

Mr. Sauvé: I now have the benefit of assistance from people knowledgeable in the drafting of this bill. I refer hon. members to clause 2 (g) where it says that—

"feed grain" means wheat other than grades of wheat grown in the designated area.

Then we turn to the definition of "designated area" and we find it means the area comprised of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and certain parts of British Columbia. That is the basis of the interpretation I gave.

Mr. Danforth: But surely paragraph (g) does not confine it to the designated area. It says "and such other grains and grain products as may be designated by regulation". The definition given in clause 2 of "feed grain" includes "such other grains and grain products as may be designated." Surely they are going to designate feed grains in other parts of Canada other than in the designated area?

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Sauvé: I know pretty well what the intention of the bill is. There might be some confusion and we might have to redraft this, but when we discussed the bill it was clear to me that we could only buy grain through an agent of the Canadian Wheat Board. The hon. member now claims that under clause 8(a) grain can be bought from Ontario or any other province.

Mr. Danforth: Or from outside the country.

Mr. Sauvé: Then I have no objection, if this is possible; but that was not my interpretation. If it is possible then it is better for everybody.

Mr. Danforth: This is my whole contention. I am in agreement with clause 8(1)(a) if the interpretation is such that the board may buy grain other than from the designated area, and other than from a broker on a grain exchange. If this were not a fact, then any surplus grain produced in the east could not be purchased by the board, and that would not be equitable or fair.

Mr. Sauvé: I shall repeat that the board has two responsibilities. The first is to administer the transportation subsidy which normally amounts to about $20 million. The second responsibility of the board is that, where there is not enough feed grain in eastern Canada or B.C., it may become a broker and buy grain from an agent of the Canadian Wheat Board. Does this preclude any surplus corn or grain produced in Ontario and other provinces? I have repeatedly said this afternoon that clause 6(a)(i) and (ii)—

[Mr. Sauvé.]

Mr. Danforth: —deals with storage and transportation.

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, and under this assistance can be provided respecting surplus grain produced locally. But when the board transforms itself into a buyer it would have to buy through an agent of the wheat board. The hon. member has given a wider interpretation to the bill than I have given. If his interpretation is correct, then I have no objection; but that would be not my interpretation and I would have to consult the law officers to see which interpretation is the right one. It is unfortunate that we have lost our director, who had been dealing with all these details in great depth. I shall now have to find out which interpretation is right.

Mr. Danforth: I can understand the minister's dilemma in this particular case. The principle of the bill is to obtain the cheapest possible grain for the feeders in eastern Canada, and I would think that those who drafted the bill would have considered that when a shortage existed in feed grains, which might cause upward price fluctuations, it would be the duty of the board to procure as swiftly and economically as possible an additional supply of feed grains to alleviate the situation.

My interpretation of the clause is that they should purchase the grain, in plain vernacular, wherever they can get the best buy and the fastest buy. I cannot see why the minister would interpret this as meaning that the board would have to leap over agencies in Ontario and Saskatchewan and go to buy in a designated area. The clause says that——the board may . . . . enter into contracts or agreements for the purchase of feed grain in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

That is clearly stated and I cannot understand the minister's interpretation.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Shall clause 8 carry?

Mr. Danforth: No, this is too important to the grain producers in central Canada. This must be clarified, because if the minister's interpretation is correct it precludes growers and dealers in central Canada from offering their produce for sale, unless through private enterprise. If my interpretation is correct the board can buy wherever supplies are available. It can buy from the United States if it can get an import permit. It can buy from B.C. and from the maritimes, in effect from anywhere where there is surplus grain. I cannot see why the minister should insist on curtailing this to a very narrow concept, which will work hardship on the area I have the honour to represent.

Mr. Sauvé: I do not want to restrict the broad interpretation of clause 8(a). The intention under clause 6(a) was to assist in the transportation of feed grain and corn, but if the board were to become a broker my interpretation was that it would deal through an agent of the Wheat Board. The way clause 8 is drafted can well give rise to the hon. member's interpretation. It gives more scope to the board, but I shall have to review the matter carefully. I have no other explanation other than the one which I have given, honestly. Maybe the text justifies what the hon. member is saying. If that is so I have no objection to his interpretation, but I do not think that was the original intention.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Danforth: May I offer a solution to the minister. I appreciate he is in some difficulty on this point and I too am much concerned about it. May I suggest that he might have an opportunity to discuss this with his legal officers and give consideration to my representations in respect of the interpretation. I am not leading up to a request that this clause stand, as some hon. members may think. I am hopeful that before third reading of the bill the minister and I may have an opportunity to confer on this. In this way perhaps the difficulty may be resolved. In respect of an equalized subsidy on Ontario corn, I may say that if we cannot sell it, it does not mean a thing.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the minister that perhaps this item might stand and that we go on to clauses 9, 10 and following. There is only 15 minutes left.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I would not like to agree to that suggestion, primarily because of what the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) has just said. We have a unique situation here of an opposition member being in complete accord with what is in the bill, and having talked the ministre into believing that his interpretation of is correct.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 9 agreed to.

On clause 10—Bylaws.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, am I to understand the interpretation of clause 10 to be that the board, once it is duly constituted, will establish a set of bylaws for the legal and constitutional conduct of its business, but that before such bylaws are put into effect they must be submitted to the cabinet through the governor in council, and be accepted before they are acted upon.

Mr. Sauvé: That is correct.

Mr. McQuaid: Mr. Chairman, I assume that we have passed clause 9 subject to the amendment we had discussed in respect of clause 6(j).

Mr. Sauvé: The hon. member should stipulate the amendment. I have no objection to the amendment suggested.

Mr. McQuaid: Then, Mr. Chairman, may we revert to clause 9.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Is it agreed that we revert to clause 9?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 10 stands.

On clause 9—Board agent of Her Majesty.

Mr. McQuaid: My amendment is in respect of subclause (2) of clause 9. After the words "The Board may, on behalf of Her Majesty," insert the words "or on behalf of any minister of the crown" and, after the words "enter into contracts" delete the words "in the name of Her Majesty" and insert the words "in their names".

Mr. Sauvé: The amendment as drafted originally was better.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Will the hon. member please submit his amendment in writing.

Mr. Olson: In the meantime, Mr. Chairman, could we stand clause 9 until we have dealt with the other clauses.

Mr. Sauvé: Yes. Would the hon. member prepare his amendment. I agree with the substance of it; it is just a matter of the drafting.

Clause 9 stands.

Clauses 10 and 11 agreed to.

Canadian Livestock Feed Board

On clause 12—Salaries and expenses.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, through this legislation parliament is giving the government authority to designate whatever salaries they may deem to be necessary. I should like to know whether or not the men who will be appointed to this board will be considered as senior members of the civil service. also, will the minister give us some indication of the minimum-maximum area in which the salary of such members would fall. The board members are to be given a salary, travelling expenses and living expenses. This is normal in respect of such appointments. I am wondering however whether the minister can give us some indication of the salary range.

Mr. Sauvé: The members of the board will not be members of the civil service. I suppose the salary range would be similar to that of members of similar boards which exist. I really am at a loss to give the hon. member any amount, because I do not have any guide lines on this, except the normal guide lines of Treasury Board, and what is happening in other similar boards.

Mr. Danforth: The reason I bring this to the attention of the minister is that there is no doubt in anyone's mind that normally the qualifications of such persons would be in direct ratio to the amount of money the government is going to pay for such purposes. This is not strictly an economy matter that I am bringing up. I am more concerned that the men who will make up this board will be the best qualified we can find in Canada for this particular function.

Contrary to the argument put forward earlier this afternoon that there be five members on the board, in order that bilingualism may become a factor, I do not think those engaged in agriculture are in the least concerned about the bilingual aspect. As one who represents farmers who are mostly Anglo-Saxon I have no interest in whether or not all the members of the board are French speaking. I am concerned solely with the ability of these men to administer this measure. It is for this reason I ask what salary range is contemplated. My fear is that if we have economy in mind we will not attract the right men for this difficult and important task. This is what I am concerned about.

Mr. Sauvé: I would think that the salary range would be the same as that which is applicable to the Ontario Dairy Commission.

Clause agreed to.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

Clauses 13 and 14 agreed to.

On clause 15—Canadian Livestock Feed Board Advisory Committee.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, this is a very important committee related to the functions of the board. Could the minister inform the house how he intends to appoint members to the advisory committee; will they be representatives of farmers organizations or of the grain trade, or will they be other persons? Could he give us an idea of how he intends to appoint the members of this committee?

Mr. Sauvé: They will be appointed on a regional basis and will represent farm organizations. We have not made up our minds whether or not they should represent only farmers, but the majority will represent farmers.

Mr. Herridge: I am glad to hear that.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Chairman, I want to return again to this clause, and I mention just in passing that I referred to this situation when we were at the second reading stage. I think hon. members could be very helpful to the operation of this program by simply preventing a waste of time and, to a certain degree, a waste of money. I am somewhat disturbed about some elements of the way the proposed advisory committee is to be devised because it has inherited, at least for the moment, some seeds which will result in an ineffective growth. Let me refer to these briefly.

I am not entirely happy with the fact that the appointment of these members is to be made by the governor in council, because this tends to leave the responsibilities of the individual members outside the areas and organizations they represent, and more or less with themselves. From previous experience this has shown to be a disadvantaged function of advisory committees. I am also concerned that the advisory committee is to be almost entirely dependent upon the board. There seems to be nothing in clause 15 which provides for a staff or for the obtaining of independent advice. There seems to be no authorization given to the committee to carry out independent examinations or investigations on its own, and there seems to be no indication that there can be publication or communication of information to producers.

We are creating a committee that is something other than strong, and I must admit that I am disappointed in this regard, particularly because this bill was introduced by a minister responsible for rural development as well as forestry. He has not in this case provided for the same kind of powers and responsibilities.

If we are not willing to entrust this advisory committee with the same responsibilities invested in the rural development council, if we are not going to allow them to exercise the same independent judgment, then I fail to see why there should be an advisory committee at all, because it will not be able to contribute much to this segment of our industry.

Mr. Sauvé: Would the hon. member be satisfied if this advisory committee was given the same powers as the Canadian Council on Rural Development?

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Yes.

Mr. Sauvé: That can be done, and I will undertake to see that the same kind of powers are vested in this committee.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): In light of that commitment, let me suggest that we should spell out that this committee will be given an opportunity to take advantage of independent information supplied by research facilities, even at a minimal level. Clause 15(6)(a) states that this committee shall have the power—> —to study and review all matters relating to feed grain transportation, storage, prices and consumption that are referred to it either by the minister or by the board.

In view of the limitations on this sphere of the board's actions it would seem to me to be valuable to add words to the effect that it can do so in respect of anything it believes to come within the responsibilities of the board.

Mr. Sauvé: I think the hon. member has answered his first problem as indicated by clause 15(5), which states:

> The advisory committee may make such rules as it deems necessary for the regulation of its proceedings, for the fixing of a quorum for any of its meetings and generally for the conduct of its activities.

I believe we have the same wording in the ARDA measure. Perhaps that measure is even less precise than this. Under that measure we have been able to establish the Canadian Council on Rural Development. Let me also state that the advisory committee will be able to make a report to the minister on any recommendation it thinks desirable. This provision comes within clause 7(b). It is not restricted in this regard.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): We are aware of the fact that the committee can make reports, but we have not been told clearly what matters it can study and report on. Even clause 15(5), which makes reference to rules and regulations, does not seem to spell out clearly the committee's ability to set its own agenda and make use of independent information in a manner that might be helpful.

Mr. Sauvé: I have indicated that I am willing and ready to establish the same kind of committee with the same rules and regulations as apply to the Canadian Council on Northern Development in order that, mutatis mutandis, it could operate in the same way.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer to one other matter, but I am not sure that I should do so during our consideration of clause 15. Perhaps the minister will bear with me in this regard. The suggestion is that there shall be not less than five nor more than seven members on this advisory committee. Perhaps in this way we will provide some liaison between the segments of the trade and the administrators of government policy. This is normal in such cases; what concerns me however is that while this is to be a marketing scheme, nowhere do I see any appeal or recourse provision. For this reason no segment of the trade would have recourse to some regulation felt to be unjust. There seems to be no avenue of appeal against regulations instituted by this board. Perhaps the minister could give us some information in this regard.

In the normal course of the administration of a matter as complex as this there will be opinions that extreme hardships are being imposed which, if left unchanged for any length of time, could amount to great financial losses. Perhaps the minister will indicate that some avenue of direct appeal will be provided the trade.

Mr. Sauvé: This is not to be a marketing board, and I have repeatedly stated that. Whenever anything is done by the administation which does not please the farmers or the traders there will be the same recourse. At this time we receive telegrams and complaints, particularly on the part of members of parliament who are very quick to take up the interests of these people, and I do not see how—

Mr. Knowles: That is our function.

Mr. Sauvé: I am not complaining about that, but I do not see how we could provide a regulation allowing an appeal from a decision of an administrative board. I think the general situation will apply to this board and I do not see why we should include a specific recourse in this case.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I was merely seeking information in this regard. Nothing has been spelled out and I wanted some clarification. If any course of action adopted by the board did work a hardship on any segment of the industry, there should be some recourse. I do not wish to quarrel with the minister this afternoon in this regard, but I wish to know whether or not there will be any course of redress or appeal to the board, the committee or the minister. I was merely seeking information, not asking for a specific indication in the bill.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Chairman, I do not like to belabour this point but I feel we are at the crucial point in this legislation, because unless the advisory committee has the kind of power I would expect it to have, the kind of thing we were talking about earlier in the day really will not become a fact of life with respect to the functioning of the board.

We have to be realistic with regard to the people who will make up the membership of the board. Whether the membership be one, three or five they will be closely related to, shall I call it, the civil service aspect of the administration, or they will at least be people who will be looking at this problem almost exclusively from the standpoint of economists or experts. On the advisory committee we expect people who will have a specific understanding of the problems that relate to different parts of the country, if we intend to administer this kind of program effectively. That is why I am extremely anxious to see that the advisory committee has the power necessary to do its job effectively.

For this reason I am sure that two or three things need to be added to this clause in order to make it specific enough that the advisory committee, the board and the minister will be fully cognizant of the role of each. I should like to think, again, that we could add something to this clause which would suggest that the committee could examine those responsibilities which come within the purview of the board. In clause 15 (6) (a) we could perhaps delete the word "and" and include a provision to cover the committee dealing with matters of this sort. Then in respect of subparagraph (b) we could add, after the word "it", something to the effect that the board should publish from time to time such information as may seem useful to the general work of the board.

These two things would perhaps add something specific with regard to the functions of the board, because I think its staff and research facilities are crucial to the effectiveness of this program. The program will not be an easy one to carry out, as has been emphasized time and time again, without an advisory committee that really means something. I think we will be very much shortchanged on the effectiveness of this board if we do not make this kind of provision.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, if it will take another hour or two to finish consideration of this bill, why not call it six o'clock and we will continue our discussion of the bill next Tuesday.

Mr. Knowles: Six o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting house leader what the business will be for next Tuesday.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, if there is an assumption of some reluctance to rise on my part, that assumption is correct. To the best of my knowledge, it is proposed to deal with the bill now before the house, namely Bill No. C-218. If this bill is disposed of, it might be a fair assumption that Bill No. C-227 would be called.

It being five minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

TRANSPORT

DORION, QUE.—INVESTIGATION INTO LEVEL CROSSING ACCIDENT

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is because of a very sad occasion that I am obliged to rise in the house today. The Thanksgiving week end for all of us all over Canada was marred by the terrible accident at Dorion which took the lives of 19 young people and caused injury to 24 others, some of whom are in very grave condition.

This is but one of unfortunately too many of these accidents on the roads and at level crossings. I should like to tell the house that both the Canadian National Railways and the Board of Transport Commissioners have been conducting the most intensive investigations from the moment of the news of the accident. Every effort that it is possible to take will be taken to find out what was the real cause, and if it is found to be a situation that can be corrected the necessary corrective action will be taken, and taken without delay.

I feel sure, sir, that I express your sentiments and the sentiments of every member of the house when I express to the families of all those who lost their lives or who may have been crippled the deep sympathy of the house, which I believe is shared throughout the country.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with the words of the Minister of Transport there will be entire agreement on the part of hon. members of the house and the people of the country as a whole. The terrible tragedy which struck Dorion evokes a maximum of sympathy in the hearts and souls of all Canadians.

What will be done, what action should be taken to guard against another repetition of a tragedy now twice repeated within a period of some two or three years? The Kiwanis club of Lake of Two Mountains communicated with me in these words:

> Dorion bus train tragedy due to highly unsatisfactory level crossing conditions generally in this area. Corrective action required now. Commission investigation later.

We have the assurance of the minister that everything is being done by the railway company and the Board of Transport Commissioners fully to investigate this matter. This is part of the larger tragedy of week end slaughter of Canadians on our highways and is something that challenges—yes, demands—that in the spirit of unity between federal and provincial governments we recognize the need to prevent the terrible wastage of life which is taking place. Indeed, as compared to the casualties suffered by the United States forces in Viet Nam our week end highway casualties are often larger.

The sympathy of all Canadians is extended to the parents and families of those young people who died after an hour of happiness which turned into tragedy.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Democratic Party wish to associate themselves with the expressions of regret and sympathy already put forward by the Minister of Transport and the right hon. Leader of the Official Opposition. We too wish to extend our condolences to the families of those who suffered such a tragic loss at the level crossing at Dorion.

Dorion Level Crossing Accident

We are pleased to note that an immediate investigation is being carried on by the Board of Transport Commissioners and the railway company, and hope this terrible happening will cause the authorities to make a more careful examination of railway crossings generally. There have been far too many accidents of this nature in Canada in recent years, and it may be that inspections of these level crossings are becoming too much of a routine procedure and are not being carried out carefully or frequently enough. I hope this tragic event will stimulate some action in order that, if it is humanly possible, we will not have a repetition of this kind of thing.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we were astounded to learn last Friday evening that 19 young people had been killed in a terrible accident in Dorion. We have been informed since then that six others are in critical condition in Montreal hospitals.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) tells us that a full investigation will be conducted without delay in order to ascertain the cause of this accident. It is unfortunate that such an investigation had not been ordered earlier, because so many deaths and such a dreadful accident could have been prevented.

As a matter of fact, everybody knows that the traffic is always very heavy in Dorion and that a few miles in either direction from that town there are level crossings. I believe the investigators will have no trouble finding the cause of the accident. In the first place, that level crossing should have been removed many years ago.

It may not be appropriate, on such an occasion, to point out this fact, but the fact remains and those level crossings must necessarily be eliminated where traffic is so heavy.

Mr. Speaker, the group which I represent, the Ralliement Créditiste, share the grief of those sorely tried families. We extend to each of those families our heartfelt sympathy and we hope that the competent authorities will see to it that such accidents never occur again in our country.

• (2:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Social Credit party

[Mr. Douglas.]

I wish to associate myself with the expressions of sympathy and concern at this tragedy which took place over the Thanksgiving week end. We extend our sympathy to the families of those who were killed. It is also a tragedy that it takes an accident of this type to bring to our attention the importance and urgent need of taking every precautionary step that will eliminate such accidents. We are reminded of the school bus accident that took place in Lamont, Alberta, several years ago and the number of young people, not to mention others, whose lives had been taken in railroad crossing accidents in the interval.

I would urge the minister at this time to reconsider a safety measure which has been discussed with him a number of times, namely the installation of electronic warning devices particularly on public vehicles such as school buses. Certainly precautionary measures should be given greater consideration in order to prevent such accidents, and these matters should not only be considered when an accident occurs and the situation is emphasized.

Again, Mr. Speaker, we associate ourselves with the expressions of sympathy put forward by other hon. members and urge the minister to take every possible action, not only to investigate this accident but to bring about safety measures such as have been suggested in order to prevent these accidents occurring.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TABLING OF REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON ELECTION EXPENSES

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table in English and in French two copies of the report of the special committee on election expenses.

COAL

TABLING OF REPORT ON ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General (Mr. Sharp) who has received this document, I table two English and two French copies of the report on the problem of Cape Breton coal mines, better known under the name of the Donald report.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN TENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Grant Deachman (for Mr. Macaluso) moved that the tenth report of the standing committee on transport and communications, presented to the house on Friday, October 7, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO ELIMINATE PREMIUM STAMPS IN FOOD ESTABLISHMENTS

Mr. Milton L. Klein (Cartier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-234, to amend the Criminal Code (elimination of premium stamps in food establishments).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Klein: Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to eliminate the practice whereby supermarkets issue stamps redeemable in merchandise other than foodstuffs, which effects the elimination of competition in food prices as between supermarkets, makes for captive customers and adds to the cost of food items, to the detriment of the public.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall said bill be read a second time?

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have taken the opportunity of speaking with the representatives of each of the parties, and I have good reason to believe that the request I now make will receive unanimous approval. My request is that the bill just introduced by the hon. member for Cartier be given priority and placed as the first item of business under the heading of private members' public bills, and that it retain that position until disposed of. May I make that request, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Mr. Howard: Is there no consent to making it an order of the house?

Mr. Speaker: It may be a little difficult to ascertain whether there is general consent among all members of the house that this bill be given the priority which the hon. member suggests it be given.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I regret very much having to advise the hon. member that there are negative voices heard by the Chair.

Mr. Howard: They were Liberal negative voices.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the bill be read a second time at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AMENDMENT TO ELIMINATE TRADING STAMPS, COUPONS, ETC.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-235, to amend the Criminal Code (trading stamps).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Howard: It seems rather futile to introduce this bill after what the government members just did with respect to a bill of one of their own members. None the less, the purpose of this bill is similar to that enunciated by the hon. member for Cartier except that it goes beyond the concept of so-called trading stamps and includes coupons and receipts used for similar purposes, their purported design being to reduce food prices.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

• (3:00 p.m.)

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES

GRANTING OF FURTHER POWERS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved:

That, in addition to the powers granted July 13, 1966, to the standing committee on northern affairs and national resources, the said committee be also empowered to obtain further information relating to matters and projects dealing with national parks and historic parks and sites;

That for this purpose, the said committee be authorized to sit while the house is sitting or during adjournment of the house, to adjourn from place to place within Canada; and

That the clerk of the said committee and the necessary supporting staff do accompany the said committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21, this motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BATTLE OF BRITAIN—REPORTED CANCELLATION OF COMMEMORATIVE SERVICE AND PARADE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence and ask him whether the Nova Scotia command of the Royal Canadian Legion is correct in its belief that the higher authority of the armed forces has seen fit to discontinue the parade commemorating the battle of Britain and the church service, as well as the placing of wreaths by the Royal Canadian Air Force as part of the annual commemorative service. If it is so, what is the purpose of this? Why should this event, the battle of Britain, that brought salvation to freedom all over the world, be denied celebration within Canada?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am certain that no such decision has been taken by the higher authority nor promulgated to the commands. This would be a matter for the commands themselves to decide.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister say that he has not received a resolution passed by the executive council of the Nova Scotia command to this effect, asking the government to reverse a decision denying Canadian veterans, and the people as a whole, the right to join in the commemoration of an event that takes its place amongst the greatest in the history of freedom?

Mr. Hellyer: If it has come in over the week end I have not yet had a chance to see it.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PAYMENT OF TRANSITIONAL BENEFITS FOR DISPLACED AUTOMOBILE WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): My question is for the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the former minister of labour promised that transitional assistance benefits would be available to auto workers who were thrown out of work because of the Canada-U.S. auto agreement, may I ask the minister why such payments are not being made in the great majority of cases, and what steps the government are taking to comply with the commitment made by the former minister?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): In answer to the question, Mr. Speaker, may I say that some transitional assistance benefits have been paid in accordance with the assurances given by my predecessor. I might say also that subsequently there have been some new developments and changes in circumstances, and representations have been made within the last few days to me and to some of my colleagues in the government. These representations are under study, and if changes in the regulations are to be made they will be announced in due course.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Minister of Labour if it is correct that out of some 3,000 men displaced less than 200 have received transitional assistance benefits? If this information is correct, what is the reason for the small percentage receiving benefits?

Mr. Nicholson: The conditions that developed over the last few days and weeks have created a new situation from the one that existed a year ago. This is one reason why the matter is under active study at the present time.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the complete breakdown of the voluntary aspect of the TAB plan and the intransigence of the motor companies in refusing to participate, would the government now give consideration to making the participation of these companies in the TAB plan compulsory?

Mr. Nicholson: I cannot accept the premises on which the question is based.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask the minister if it is correct that before the TAB benefits can be paid the auto companies must certify that the lay-offs are the result of the auto pact, and this is the reason for the hold-up?

Mr. Nicholson: That may be one factor.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Labour. In view of the representations made by the automobile workers that TAB be paid in addition to SUB, has the minister arrived at any decision that will enable some action to be taken on this suggestion?

Mr. Nicholson: I might remind the hon. member of the visitation that I had from a very impressive delegation from Oshawa within the last few days. I assured them in his presence that they might expect a decision within 10 or 12 days.

LABOUR RELATIONS

AIR CANADA—PAYMENT OF RETROACTIVE WAGE BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Transport. It could be directed also to the Minister of Labour.

As soon as Air Canada was threatened with a strike, an agreement was reached. The wage settlement included retroactivity, but to date the employees have not received anything.

Can the minister tell us today when he expects this back-pay will be paid to the employees of Air Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. There may be some urgency beyond my grasp about the question put by the hon. member, but I would suggest that he put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, or a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

I believe the question is sufficiently important to justify an immediate answer. Besides, the minister seemed prepared to reply. We may find ourselves facing another strike if this question is not answered soon. I feel the urgency is obvious enough.

Mr. Speaker: The eloquence of the hon. member for Villeneuve has won me over, and the hon. minister seems quite willing to answer his question.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I am afraid, sir, I do not know the reply to the question, but I will ask Air Canada and do my best to give the hon. gentleman a reply.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RED CHINA—LIBERAL PARTY COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION AS TO RECOGNITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the recommendation that red China be recognized and admitted immediately to the United Nations, as made yesterday by the Liberal party external affairs committee, reflect government opinion and policy?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all I may inform my hon. friend and other hon. members of this house that we are having a very successful meeting. As the Prime Minister said in his opening remarks yesterday when he welcomed the delegates to the convention, the recommendations of the convention will serve very materially in enabling the government to reach conclusions in the national and international interests.

Mr. Starr: Somebody should guide them.

Mr. Thompson: I ask the minister if he will answer my question. Does this decision reflect government policy?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think if my hon. friend will reflect he will see that I have answered the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): A supplementary question. I appreciate the comments made by the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the success of the convention presently under way in Ottawa; however, I would like to know if he is now considering the possibility for Canadian delegations going to London to receive a welcome similar to that which we had in Iran two weeks ago, because there was no one from the High Commissioner's office to greet the Canadian delegation at the London airport.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is not of a supplementary nature.

TRADE

SUGGESTED ELIMINATION OF TARIFFS IN NORTH AMERICA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the decision taken at an important meeting held in this city yesterday to press for the elimination of tariffs in North America, is the government planning to initiate discussions with the government of the United States in the near future to further the realization of this objective?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether my hon. friend would identify this meeting to which he refers.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hees: Yes, Mr. Speaker; the Liberal convention in Ottawa.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, any resolutions from such an important and successful meeting will certainly be taken very seriously by the government.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Was the Minister of Labour voicing government opinion and policy when he advocated North American free trade at the meeting last evening?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend should wait until I receive the exact text of what the minister said, and then he will realize that it is not quite as straightforward and as simple as the hon. member has indicated.

Mr. Hees: I would be glad to send a copy of what the minister said over to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, and then I would appreciate it if he would give me an answer to my question.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, and to save the hon. member for Northumberland from getting to his feet, because he has been trying to rise to ask me if I have yet read the clipping he was good enough to send me, may I say I have and, as I suspected, his question is based on a press report which does not quote the Minister of Labour but merely states that at the convention last night the Minister of Labour spoke strongly in favour of free trade. Mr. Speaker, Liberal ministers have been speaking strongly in favour of free trade for 99 years and Liberal governments have been doing something about it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTH-WEST AFRICA—CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING MANDATE OF SOUTH AFRICA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. A radio report from New York last week indicated that the minister was performing on a tightrope at the United Nations. Would the minister give the House of Commons a demonstration in answering the following question? What is the government's policy with regard to the mandated territory of South-West Africa?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thought I gave my hon. friend a demonstration every time he asked a question in this house. On behalf of the government of Canada I said on Friday the Canadian government felt that because of the practice by the government of South Africa of its apartheid policy in South-West Africa, and because of its failure to report pursuant to resolutions of the United Nations general assembly, South Africa had forfeited its right to administer the mandate. We recommended the establishment of a committee of members of the UN to consider what steps could be taken to give effect to a resolution which I suspect will be passed some day this week in the general assembly.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the last answer of the minister, with which I entirely agree, would the minister inform the house why Canada abstained at the United Nations from voting on a motion to impose sanctions against South Africa for the very policy for which he has just shown his contempt?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is referring to a former resolution. He does not identify the resolution in question. There can be no question about the position of Canada and our feeling that South Africa has forfeited the right to administer the mandate because of its practice of apartheid and its failure to live up to the UN principles of accountability.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which follows upon that asked by the hon. member for York South. This vote was on the question of racial discrimination, with regard to which a resolution was brought into the United Nations last week. If Canada felt so strongly toward this country, why did we abstain from voting on this resolution?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oxford.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, the minister asked about which resolution we were talking, and I have told him in order that we may have an answer.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question which I would direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Perhaps at the same time the minister could avail himself of the opportunity of answering the question put by the hon. member for Mégantic.

Can the minister tell the house which resolutions are presently being either sponsored or co-sponsored by Canada at the current general assembly of the United Nations?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is not acceptable; it is not in order.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN PAYMENTS TO FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not quite know to whom to direct this question, but I will direct it to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in view of the absence of the Minister of Finance, who is spokesman for the wheat board.

Is the government now giving consideration to increasing the amount to be paid to the farmers for wheat in view of the fact that there was a cut a year ago of 18 cents a bushel, and in view of the continually rising cost of production? I put this question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce because he is the one who has lately been dealing with wheat.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this matter does not properly fall within my sphere of activity, but I will be glad to take the question as notice and refer it to the Minister of Finance.

[Later:]

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. When he and his cabinet colleagues are giving consideration to increasing the price of wheat, would he also have them give consideration to raising the initial payment so that farmers in the western prairies can meet their early fall commitments?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, here again is a matter that comes appropriately under the Minister of Finance, but we have been urging an increase in the price of wheat with every consuming country in the world and I hope in due course we shall succeed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HIGHWAY SAFETY

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL ACCIDENT RESEARCH CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, mention has already been made in the house today of the fact that once more we have set a record in Canada over this Thanksgiving week end for highway deaths and injuries. In view of this and in view of the unanimous—and I underline the word "unanimous"—recommendation of the committee on highway deaths and injuries which finished its studies of codes last week in Ottawa, is the government now considering the establishment of a national accident prevention research centre in Ottawa, and can we expect an announcement very soon in this regard?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, as I think I mentioned earlier in reply to a somewhat similar question, consideration is now being given by the National Research Council to the parameters involved in setting up an establishment such as suggested by the hon. gentleman. When this study is complete—I hope this will not be too long—we will be able to see what will be possible and what will be practicable.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the house whether or not some time ago the proper authorities made representations to the transport commission for underpass or overpass facilities at the Dorion tragedy site? Can the minister also assure the house the transport commission study will include a rigid and exhaustive inspection of the vehicle involved in the accident?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I can assure the hon. gentleman that every aspect of whatever evidence can be secured in connection with the state of the vehicle, the signals and any possibility of human error will be secured. It is the desire both of the railway and of the board of transport commissioners not merely to establish the facts of the situation but to see whether they will provide us with any light on the best way to prevent a repetition of such an occurrence, not just at Dorion but anywhere else.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEWSPAPER ARTICLES BY FORMER CHAIRMAN OF CHIEFS OF STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister of defence. Has he seen any of the articles appearing in the Ottawa Journal written by General Charles Foulkes, retired chairman of the chiefs of staff and who at one time, I think in 1962, endeavoured to become a Liberal candidate? Has this matter been brought to the minister's attention? The article in question makes extremely grave charges. Indeed, it states that the situation is such that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition cannot quote the article to which he is referring.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to identify the article so the minister will be able to answer. In view of the charges made by General Foulkes, a supporter of the government, that the situation is serious—indeed, the minister has been asked "What are you doing with the armed forces?"—will he now give consideration to recalling the defence committee so that we will be able to ascertain why it is that the advice of these men who did so much for our nation is being disregarded in a way, as General Foulkes puts it, never equalled since Hitler?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, among the advice I have been taking is that of General Foulkes who, in an article in the Toronto Star some time ago, said that we should unify the armed forces of Canada and put them in one uniform. I have not seen the articles mentioned but I will read them with interest.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN EXECUTION OF GERMAN WAR PRISONERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Last Friday the Leader of the Opposition asked a question with respect to an article which had appeared in the West German newspaper Der Spiegel, where two allegations of particular concern to Canada were made.

The first of these was that the allies had completely abolished all courts martial in the German forces so that those officers who purported to act as a German court martial did so completely without jurisdiction. The German personnel concerned were not prisoners of war but disarmed troops who, on surrender, were to be disbanded.

The surrender orders signed and dated on May 5, 1945 held the German commander responsible for the discipline of his troops. At this juncture it does not appear there were any restrictions placed upon the Germans as to carrying out their normal legal processes. Restrictions on German disciplinary procedures were contained in military law No. 153 which was said to be effective on the date of its first promulgation. These were not received by the headquarters, 1st Canadian Army until the afternoon of May 14. The executions were carried out before this military law was promulgated to the headquarters of the First Canadian Army.

The second and perhaps more serious allegation was that one of Der Spiegel's sources of information stated that the trial and execution of the two men was Canadian inspired. This allegation is completely without foundation. Canadians were informed that a court martial was to be held and indicated that this would be in order, but upon finding out that the two men, if found guilty, were to be shot, informed the German officer that he was only to proceed with the court martial. Immediately following the court martial, when the sentence of death was pronounced, a message was passed to the headquarters of the 1st Canadian infantry division advising of the situation and asking for instructions. This message was passed by the Canadian division to German 30 corps and in less than three hours a reply was received from the 30 German army group that the chief of staff had approved the sentences and they informed their Amsterdam command accordingly. The 2nd Canadian infantry brigade was informed of the effect of this message.

From our investigations, Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that both these allegations contained in Der Spiegel are completely without foundation.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Canadians will be happy to hear that. I asked my question in anticipation of an assurance that there had been no wrong doing. The minister mentioned that the chief of staff had approved the executions. What chief of staff?

Mr. Hellyer: The German chief of staff of the 30 German army group.

TRANSPORT

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN JURISDICTION OVER GRADE CROSSINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Rock (Jacques-Cartier-Lasalle): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport with regard to the tragic accident at Dorion and another the following day at Pointe Claire. Since the initiative in separating grade crossings is left with the municipalities and provincial road departments, and since the federal grade crossing fund provides 80 per cent of the cost, up to $500,000 toward each new grade separation, would the Minister of Transport look into the possibility of having the Board of Transport Commissioners initiate, plan and execute these works in the future rather than leaving it up to the municipalities and the provincial departments?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): There is before the committee on transport at the present time, as my hon. friend is aware, a transportation bill which deals with the grade crossing fund. I hope the hon. gentleman will raise his question in that committee where there will be a better opportunity of considering its implications than is available to us on the orders of the day.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Transport aware of the fact that the Board of Transport Commissioners is now granting an extension of the time limit provided for in certain orders making it compulsory for some railways to instal automatic protection signals at some railway crossings? If so, who will be responsible for the eventual deaths resulting from these time extensions?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be glad to look into that question though, of course, it does not arise in connection with this regrettable case, because the signals were there on the site on this occasion. What we want to find out is whether they worked effectively.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

Excuse me if there are several questions, but this is because the emergency debate has been waived.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I would ask the Minister of Transport whether it is his intention, in the course of this investigation, to make sure that this commission will operate in such a way as to allow witnesses to put before the commission their grievances against all railway crossings in Canada and that it will hear the suggestions that may be put forward?

[English]

Mr. Pickersgill: It is the intention of the Board of Transport Commissioners to hold a public inquiry with respect to this particular accident as soon as the investigatory work has been completed. At such an inquiry any witness who had anything to contribute either in the way of evidence or, I would imagine, any suggestion to offer in that context would of course be heard.

As for the particular question raised by the hon. gentleman, we all know he is very much concerned about an accident in his own constituency in which four lives were lost. I believe the broadest possible inquiry should be held into all these cases, because it is just as regrettable to have four lives lost as it is to have a larger number lost.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Will the Minister of Transport also inquire into an accident which happened a mile or so down the track, this time involving a C.P.R. train; in this case the passengers had time to get out of the car which was hit. The train was caught between red light signals and the gates a little farther down. Would the minister inquire into this?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

POSSIBLE IMPORTATION OF FISHING TRAWLERS FROM POLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of the fact that while he was on his travels in Poland officials there discussed with him the possible sale of Polish fishing trawlers to Canada. Will the minister assure the Canadian shipbuilding industry that no action will be taken by the government which would be detrimental to its interests?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I do not think the hon. member need fear that such transactions are imminent.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacEwan: May I ask the minister responsible for shipbuilding subsidies whether he will give an undertaking to the shipbuilding industry of Canada that no change will be made in the present subsidized building program which means so much, especially in the Atlantic area?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I think the hon. member is aware that legislation outlining the new subsidy policy has already been proposed in the house by way of resolution. This will be the law.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN DAM CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): In order to satisfy the curiosity of a number of people in British Columbia, including many supporters of the Prime Minister's party, I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman this question. Did Premier Bennett recently ask the federal government for financial assistance in building the dams on the Columbia under the terms of the Columbia river treaty and, if so, what was the government's response to this request?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am aware of no such request and I would be surprised if one were made, because there is no place for such a request in the Canada-British Columbia agreement on this matter.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING RELIEF FOR RED CIRCLED EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): May I ask the Secretary of State in her capacity as rapporteur for the Civil Service Commission to tell the house what consideration the commission has been giving to the demand made last Friday by the staff conference for immediate relief of red circled civil servants?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I will ask my colleague the president of the Treasury Board, who is responsible for this aspect of the civil service, to answer that question.

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of Treasury Board): The matter of red circling is a long and involved one. My understanding is that the staff-side conference in dealing with the Civil Service Commission has agreed that the position with regard to red circling should be looked at as of December 31 of this year, by which time it is hoped that a great many people who are presently red circled will be out of that category, having been moved into other categories by their departments.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): As a supplementary question, is the minister saying there will be no relief for red circled civil servants before December 31 of this year?

Mr. Benson: On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, relief is taking place every day as departments are trying to take people out of red circled positions and move them into positions that are not circled.

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF REPORT ON POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the submissions that have been made to him by the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada and the Canadian Union of Postal Workers that the joint parliamentary committee on Bill C-170 should not complete its sittings until it has received the Montpetit commission report, and that these unions be given an opportunity to make further representations, can the Prime Minister assure the house that he will accede to this request?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that this report should be available later this week or early next week, so I think there is no danger of the contingency to which my hon. friend refers.

TRADE

WHEAT—POSSIBLE FURTHER SALES TO MAINLAND CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the assistant commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board has arrived in Peking, has the minister anything to report on behalf of the government regarding the possibility of further wheat deals with China? I know the minister does not speak for the wheat board, although I believe he should, but perhaps he could advise me what weight to give to this report.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have no comment at the moment.

LABOUR RELATIONS

STATUS OF DISPUTE BETWEEN UPI AND WIRE SERVICE GUILD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. What is the present status of the federal board of conciliation in the dispute between the United Press International and the Canadian Wire Service Guild?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this dispute between United Press International of Canada and the Canadian Wire Service, a Canadian local of the international union is now before a board of conciliation. The two sides agreed upon the chairman. The information given me is that the board was to have held its hearings on Thursday and Friday last. I have received no word to the contrary, and I expect to receive its report when it has completed its consideration of the matter.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO BRIEF FROM NAVAL ORGANIZATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has he yet considered the brief submitted by the Navy League of Canada, the Canadian Naval Association and the Naval Officers' Association and, if so, would he give immediate consideration to referring that very responsible brief to the standing committee on national defence?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that I have not yet had time to read it in full, but I do suspect that if the committee, when it meets to consider the proposed legislation, wishes to consider the brief and summon any of the persons responsible for preparing it, that will be something completely within its jurisdiction.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why not now?

Mr. Lambert: You are afraid of it.

RIVERS, MAN.—REPORTED INTENTION TO CLOSE TRAINING CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is he now in a position to inform the house when and where the meeting will take place with respect to the continuing role of the air training centre at Rivers, Manitoba?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I am not, Mr. Speaker. An undertaking has been given to meet with officials from the province of Manitoba. I cannot tell the time or place, but I know we are available to meet with them almost any time they wish to come.

Mr. Dinsdale: As a supplementary question, when a date has been set would the minister inform me.

Mr. Hellyer: I shall be pleased to let the hon. member know.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—INQUIRY AS TO OPENING OF NEW MINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources based on the Donald report which was tabled today. In view of the fact that the initial policy announced a year ago on October 3, 1965, by the then minister of labour was in favour of the opening of a new mine at Lingan, which he said would constitute an essential part of the new program, and in view of the fact that this was reiterated by the now Minister of National Health and Welfare on October 3, 1966, in Cape Breton, and in view of the fact that the Donald report says that the opening of a new mine—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): —should not be undertaken—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member kindly pose his question? He cannot preface a question with a speech.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I was just laying a foundation for the question and also trying to make it easier for the minister. Finally, in view of the fact that Dr. Donald has said—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): —that the opening of a new coal mine at Lingan should not be undertaken—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may make it easier for the minister but he is making it more difficult for the Chair, and I would ask him to pose his question.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Thank you, sir. Can the minister now advise if a new mine is going to be opened at Lingan, Cape Breton, and how soon?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the procedure following the tabling of the Donald report is to allow further discussions to take place and representations to be made to the government in the coming weeks. The government will bring down its policy in due course.

Mr. Lambert: What about the announcement by the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): As a supplementary, may I ask the minister this question. Are we now going to be faced with a commitment made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare which is not going to be kept?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I repeat the question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would bring to the attention of the hon. member that we are almost running out of time and a number of other hon. members still want to ask questions. I would ask his co-operation to allow the Chair to recognize other members. Has the hon. member a quick supplementary?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): On a point of order, since approximately 2.30 I have been trying to get the floor. This is a very important subject to our area, just as important as the question of dairy producers and butter production. I am not so small that I cannot be seen—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Now I am asking—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Other members have been allowed to advertise the Liberal convention—

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): This is an important question.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize it is a very important question, and I am sure the hon. member will recognize that a number of important questions have been asked and that there are still a number of hon. members who have not had an opportunity to be recognized. This is what the Chair is trying to do before 3.42, which is just two minutes away.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If there is to be a supplementary it should be by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria. I recognize that hon. member.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Thank you so much, Mr. Speaker. The minister has said that representations are going to be made to the government. Since the first announcement about this matter was made a year and some days ago, how much longer are we to wait for action to be taken? A sum of $25 million was guaranteed by the former minister of labour, and also the opening of a new coal mine at Lingan.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, may I say this problem has been with us for quite a number of years, I think since 1937.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): But you had all the answers.

Mr. Pepin: I believe we are now moving toward a solution.

INDUSTRY

ONTARIO—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON BOYCOTT OF SUPERMARKETS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Registrar General I would like to ask the Prime Minister if he can give us a report on the housewives' boycott of the supermarkets in Ontario.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to do that now, but I am following this boycott very carefully.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY AS TO ENFORCEMENT OF 12 MILE LIMIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a brief question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is he in a position to say when all foreign fishing vessels will be excluded from the waters within 12 miles of our coasts?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations we are having will take on a new turn when we meet with the United States negotiators here this Monday.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

ACTION OF CABINET IN COMMUTING SENTENCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wish to address to the right hon. Prime Minister. Speaking in the house on August 31 in respect of the maintenance of railway operation bill, as reported at page 7909 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said that when the will of parliament is expressed by legislation the law abiding citizens of Canada will observe the will of parliament. I should like to ask him, does the cabinet not observe the Criminal Code and the law with regard to capital punishment, as it appears in the Criminal Code and as sustained by a vote in this house last April?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker; and when a jury makes a recommendation for mercy it has invariably been accepted in the form of commutation by the government.

Mr. Cowan: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In respect of the second last commutation there was no recommendation for mercy.

Mr. Pearson: That is not true, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cowan: You will not get away with that.

CANADIAN LIVESTOCK FEED BOARD

ASSISTANCE IN STORAGE AND TRANSPORTATION COSTS

The house resumed from Friday, October 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia—Mr. Sauvé—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 15—Canadian Livestock Feed Board Advisory Committee.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak again on this matter and I beg the indulgence of the committee in doing so, realizing I have indicated already on one or two occasions my thoughts with regard to this particular clause. I feel that in many ways this is one of the most important, if not the all-important clause in this bill in terms of its effectiveness in implementation, because I think if we fail to grasp the proper purpose of this bill, which is related to the power and quality of the advisory committee, then we endanger the very purpose of, and the very hope for, an effective bill. That is the reason I am somewhat disturbed that the advisory committee is painted for us, through the various subclauses of clause 15, as being a very ineffectual instrument, at least in my view.

It will be noted that in this bill we are seeking to establish a board which will consist of three to five members. As I indicated before we must expect, since these will be full-time members and since the problems with which they will deal will be very complex, that the persons who will be on the board will of necessity, I think, be people who would be described as experts. They will reside in Ottawa and they will, if you like, view things from a bureaucratic point of view. It is very important for the implementation of this bill that they do this. That is why I think that in the wisdom of those who have drawn up the bill they have decided it was fundamental to the implementation of this program that there be an advisory committee, but I would hope it would be an advisory committee that would mean something.

When I think of an advisory committee that would mean something, I think of an advisory committee which has an independence of judgment and has information available to it which is not just information given to it by either the board or the responsible minister. I think of it as a committee with close ties with the various interested groups such as the Federation of Agriculture, the various poultry, dairy and beef producers and others, even those who are trying to increase their own grain business either in eastern Canada or British Columbia.

I think of this advisory committee not as just a group of people who may or may not come from different regions; I think of it as being comprised of people who have a very close tie with organizations which are close to the grass roots situation. I think too of the advisory committee having members who are able to speak freely to and on behalf of the area they represent. These are things I would expect to see in an advisory committee. I would not like to see an advisory committee appointed comprising a number of people, 7 or 11, who will be paid a very nice daily allowance plus travel fees, who will meet perhaps two or three times a year in Ottawa, who will accept without question what the board or the minister tells them and who will issue very functional and pleasant statements once a year which will give some description of what their activities have been.

I for one feel that if we are to have an advisory committee at all which will mean anything we have to build it into the various subclauses in clause 15. I think we will have to say something very specific about the availability of some kind of staff for the advisory committee and in particular the availability of some kind of research and independent information facilities. I think we also have to indicate that the various people who are proper to be members of this committee should in some way represent the important agencies which are caught up in this great problem. It may not be possible to designate that, say, the Federation of Agriculture have an appointee, but this would be one of the happiest solutions. There must, however, be some recognition of the close ties that will exist between this committee and the organizations which have a real stake in the question of increasing the availability of grain and supplying it to the producers.

I think we have to state very clearly that the committee is free to examine questions of its own choice. In my view this is not stated clearly enough. In subclause 6 it says that only matters referred to it by the minister or by the board are acceptable for consideration. I think the committee should be able to decide on its own what particular avenue or aspect it wants to investigate. Finally, I think we should add at the end of subclause 6(b) something to the effect that this committee shall publish information and conclusions on a regular basis so that producers in the eastern and western parts of the country can know what are the real facts. We have an example right now of an impasse in the great misunderstanding which exists between some of the officials and private industry in respect of the new rates. Some of the local producers have been meeting last week and this week to sort out what they mean.

I think we need a real advisory committee which will mean something and not be like a shadow of what the minister may decide. I think we should build these things into clause 15. It may be that over the week end since Friday the minister has been able to consider my statement in this regard, consult with his advisors, and is now able to make available to us this afternoon some means by which these things may be brought about. If not, I will be ready to make various amendments which I feel are important to this clause of the bill.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, on Friday I did not have an opportunity to answer the suggestions of the hon. member. His proposal is to establish a second board. We have one board and we have an advisory committee. I feel that the powers of the advisory committee are sufficient. I informed the house last Friday that this committee would work, mutatis mutandis, on the same basis as the Canadian council on rural development which works I think to the satisfaction of all concerned. I do not see how we can improve on clause 15, particularly when we compare it with the ARDA legislation containing only two paragraphs in respect of the council on rural development. I am quite satisfied that the intent and the wording of the bill are sufficient for the establishment of an advisory committee for the purposes explained. Surely we cannot have two boards doing the same work. I do not think we can improve on the intent of this bill by implementing what the hon. member has suggested.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat amazed by the minister who seems to think I have suggested the establishment of two boards. Because of the complexity of the situation we need an advisory committee that means something. If he is thinking of an advisory committee with the ability to look at the situation objectively but which is not going to have any power, then he does not want an advisory committee at all. Perhaps he is thinking of a group of people who will somehow placate the many who disagree with the decisions of the board.

The need for an advisory committee should be obvious under present circumstances. We are dealing with a very complex problem and certainly no one on Friday tried to minimize the complexity of the factors that will have to be taken into account. The very fact that economists and other experts of one kind or another have declared the need for new criteria under which eastern freight rates on grain must be administered is an indication of this need. It takes many weeks for those who are using these rates to understand and interpret them in order to realize whether or not they are being exercised fairly.

If we are to make the best use of the terms that this plan will provide, if we are to make the most adequate use of the resources of the people who are involved on a day to day basis, not from the standpoint of administering a program here in Ottawa but from the standpoint of the people who are trying to make the best use of the program, whether they live in the rural areas of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland or British Columbia, it is important that some objective body be established which can advise the minister, the board and the people who may be concerned.

If what I suggest is not the case, then what kind of an objective look could be taken at this program, apart from an examination and criticism by those who may not be able to obtain the necessary information in order to come to an efficient and honest judgment? I think an advisory committee is necessary in light of the fact we are dealing here with a program regarding an effective method by which adjustments should be made in various areas. It is certain that we cannot lay down in very simple terms a program that is going to apply with equal fairness to southern Ontario, for example, and to some part of Newfoundland. Who is going to provide the necessary interpretation to the board in order that it can make the right kind of adjustment allowing the program to be administered fairly and with equity of opportunity?

The kind of thing mentioned by the hon. member for Medicine Hat last week is vitally important in this area and I do not think we are going to obtain the desired result unless we are prepared to establish a group of individuals who will have an independence of judgment and the information necessary to make independent judgments. I am not suggesting that we establish a group with decision-making powers or the administrative powers which will be left with the board.

Certainly I am not suggesting that we establish a second board, but I do suggest that the advisory committee must be such that it will have some meaning and will encourage the farmers and producers to realize that they are obtaining the services of a board in terms of storage or transportation rate adjustments on the soundest basis possible.

While I mentioned on Friday that I hoped something similar to the rural development council would be instituted, on again reading the provisions establishing that council I must admit I have had some second thoughts. Therefore I certainly would not regard that council as some kind of standard to be followed in inaugurating this advisory committee at this point.

Mr. Sauvé: I really do not see what I can add to what I have said. Clause 15 of the bill is clear in that it gives the advisory committee a number of powers. This will be a body similar to the Canadian council on rural development. If the hon. member insists that he is not satisfied with that kind of a council, I can only repeat that what he wants is another board. I cannot accept any modification of this clause which would implement what the hon. gentleman wants.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): The minister seems to be somewhat satisfied with clause 15 as it now stands. It does provide for the establishment of an advisory committee. There is no agreement as to the need for such a committee. Our fears are not related so much to the question of who will be appointed to the board as to the question of who should not be appointed to it. An advisory committee such as the one envisaged will present opinions to the board which from time to time will be accepted. There should not be in a bill such as this any kind of opening which would permit the appointment of unscrupulous speculators.

Clause 15, subclause 6, paragraph (a) states that the committee will study and review all matters relating to feed grain transportation, storage, prices and consumption which are referred to it by the minister or by the board. Surely that covers the whole program. I am strongly opposed to any possibility of the appointment to this committee of individuals who are now brokers or members of the Montreal, Winnipeg or Toronto grain exchanges. Let us specify that the members of this committee shall not be individuals who are already selling grain or in the business of transporting it. In order to avoid the possibility of any conflict of interest on the part of the members who will constitute this committee, let us spell out that it shall be composed of individuals representing organizations like the U.C.C. or farm co-operative organizations of any kind so long as they are not now in the business of buying, selling or transporting grain.

We have all observed such a conflict of interest in the Wheat Board which has on occasion asked the brokers to indicate what prices will be. The Wheat Board has given brokers the opportunity of selling grain which it bought from western farmers. This is the type of thing we do not want to take place. Speculators might give false reports which the board would rely on and it would be a long time before the resulting mistakes could be corrected.

Let me repeat that we are not as concerned with who is appointed to the board, as with who is not appointed to it. There should be some amendment in respect of this clause dealing with the advisory committee to prevent the possibility of what I have suggested happening. There should be no opening which would allow a speculator in this field to become a member of this committee. Such an occurrence could ruin the effectiveness of the program we have in mind.

Who is going to be on the receiving end again? It will be the eastern farmer or the British Columbia farmer who will still be wondering what is wrong with his prices and why things are not as they should be.

The board might have its own opinion but most of the time it will follow the advice of the advisory committee. This committee should be at least independent of what we might call the commerce of feed grains. The U.C.C. should have its representatives on the committee. The advisory committee should also consult people who do at the moment or will in the future handle grain, who are in the transportation business, the storage business, the selling business or are millers of any kind. It should be the task of the advisory committee to go out and see these people, obtain their views, grievances and opinions, as well as those of the farmers, and draft a report for the board. I want the minister to assure the house that there will be no conflict of interest in the advisory committee in this regard.

[Mr. Langlois (Mégantic).]

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, could the minister indicate to the committee just what procedure will be followed in the appointment of the members of this advisory committee. Is it to be on the recommendation of the various farm organizations of the areas concerned, or just what procedure will be followed?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, we will follow the procedure adopted with regard to the Canadian council on rural development, namely, consult the various organizations and ask them to submit one, two or three names. Then we will decide on the appointments to be made from the people recommended by the various organizations.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, the members of this group are very concerned about the composition of the advisory committee. That is why when we were last considering this clause I asked the minister who would comprise the advisory committee. If I remember correctly, the minister said that it would be composed of representatives of the farmers organizations in Canada. With that assurance we thought that the farmers' organizations were quite capable of bringing to the attention of the minister any suggestions or recommendations they might have with respect to the administration of the board. In order to assure members on this side of the house what the composition of the committee is likely to be, would the minister mind repeating what he said with regard to those he intends to appoint to the advisory committee?

Mr. Sauvé: As I said in answer to the hon. member's question of last Friday, as reported at page 8496 of Hansard:

> They will be appointed on a regional basis and will represent farm organizations.

I said we would seek the advise of the farmers' organizations, ask them to submit one, two or three names and then select people from the names submitted to us.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I quite agree with that so long as it is the farmers' organizations who submit the names. If the farmers' organizations were to submit lists of names it would prevent any come-back in the future and somebody saying that the people appointed to the committee were just a bunch of political hacks.

Mr. Sauvé: I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that it is not the board that will appoint members to the advisory committee; it is the minister. If we can judge by the past, members of this house have been satisfied with the appointments to the Canadian council on rural development. I hope that because somebody is connected with a political party he will not be barred from appointment to any advisory committee or board. All we are concerned about is that he has the qualifications for which we are looking.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, the more one looks at the function of the advisory committee as set forth in the bill, the more one is led to the conclusion that this committee is not needed at all. Of what use will it be? It will have no powers. It can only operate under powers given to it by the board. As the minister or anyone else who has worked on boards knows very well, the information of the board itself will be far greater and more penetrating than any information this advisory committee might obtain.

The minister says he is going to pick outstanding men to serve on the committee. Why? Is it to rectify the inadequacy and inefficiency of the members of the board? It is they who will make the decisions, and they should not hide behind an advisory committee. I believe that the advisory committee will degenerate into something upon which the board will lean, and the advisory committee will take the blame rather than the board with respect to decisions of a controversial nature affecting people on the producers' or consumers' side of the grain business.

I see no other reason for this advisory committee being established and no other useful purpose it could carry out. I think the minister has in the back of his mind appointing some kind of committee that will give advice and so on to the board, which is the body that will be charged with administering the act. I fail to see why the board could not of its own volition get on the telephone and contact somebody in Winnipeg in the grain marketing agencies, or anyone else, when it wished to obtain information. We do not need the setting up of an advisory committee to do this.

The committee as set forth in the bill is nothing more than a cover-up for what the minister anticipates will be the shortcomings of the board. The purpose is to make it appear to the people of Canada and the primary producers that the minister and the board are doing a good job and have had the benefit of the advice of an advisory committee. I say this is a cover-up and this type of provision should never have been included in clause 15 of the bill. There is no need for this provision in the bill. It is a waste of public money and should be eliminated.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, I am at a loss to understand how two members of the same party can reconcile their views. The hon. member for Prince said that this advisory committee is not competent enough or large enough to have the authority he wants it to have, and the last speaker said that the advisory committee is a waste of time and money. Therefore I am really at a loss to see how I can accommodate both members of the same party who have completely contrary views.

With regard to the remarks of the last speaker, there are many advisory committees to boards and other agencies of the government appointed. I do not recall any agency of the government using the advice of its advisory committee to hide behind. In my experience, and it is a very limited one, the Canadian council on rural development and a number of other councils have worked very well. We have a good ARDA administration. These bodies co-operate in an ideal way, and we have found it to be very helpful to have a good advisory committee which is critical of the work being done.

I would hope that this advisory committee would assist the board, which will consist of three to five members, to do its work. I do not see any contradiction between this advisory committee and the board, and I would like my two hon. friends to reconcile their views if they have anything to add to clause 15.

Mr. Kindt: Perhaps I can help to clarify the statement made by the minister following his suggestion that such an advisory committee would be useful in helping the board to do its work. How would it be useful and in what work? What would be the work of the advisory committee? There is to be an advisory group which is to be made up of farmers and producers, similar to the board, but there is no point in establishing a committee which would do the work assigned to the board. They cannot undertake any other work nor can they recommend that any other work be done by the board except that which is referred to it. What sort of an advisory committee will it be when it cannot recommend anything to the board other than what is referred to it? They will be nothing else than yes men, and that is probably what the minister has in mind as being the proper function of this advisory committee. The minister can call this body useful but its usefulness would be for something else that the minister has in mind.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry the hon. member for Macleod left the debate Friday afternoon because we discussed this advisory committee at length at that time. May I ask him a question? Is he satisfied with the advisory committee which was set up to assist the Canadian Wheat Board?

Mr. Kindt: The committee which was established, to which the minister refers consists of representatives who take an active part in performing their duties which are not limited to matters referred to them. They can give advice on any matters, not only those that are referred to them. I wish the minister would look at the Canadian Wheat Board Act and read the functions of the advisory committee which is working in conjunction with the Wheat Board.

Mr. Stewart: I think perhaps the hon. member for Macleod may not understand the problem that confronts the farmers in the eastern part of Canada.

Mr. Kindt: I know of the problems in the western part of Canada.

Mr. Stewart: I am speaking of the areas to which this board's work will apply most directly. Our farmers and farmers' organizations have been very concerned about the administration of the prevailing regulations. They have asked many questions about it. As I understand the purpose of the provisions in this bill regarding the advisory committee, it is to assure that there will be a formalized two-way means of communcation between these agricultural groups and the board. I think it is important in relation to this very complicated matter that any uncertainty and any suspicion that our farmers may have should be eliminated as soon as possible, that as much information as possible should be disseminated among the people for whose advantage this bill is being enacted. I do not think the farmers of eastern Canada, from whose organizations the advisory committee will be drawn, really deserve the appellation, yes-men. I suspect that would not be true of farmers in western Canada either. I think this advisory committee is a necessary link between those who will be served by the board and the board itself. If the hon. member for Macleod had been doing what I have done, which was to seek information on a very complicated matter on which I have little or no professional competence, I think he would now understand why this advisory committee is so attractive and, indeed, so necessary.

Mr. Kindt: May I ask the hon. member what he would do if problems came up that needed the immediate attention of the advisory committee but were not referred to it by the board? The committee would then have no power whatsoever even to bring those matters to the attention of the board. The advisory committee is supposed to grapple with problems on which decisions will be made by the board which they will only have to rubberstamp for the benefit of the consumers and producers. If they can only handle those matters that are referred to them, I do not see how this body can function in seeking solutions to the problems of which the hon. member spoke. The hon. member said that there are lots of problems in his area which he would like to see solved by this body and yet anyone connected with farming or feeding would have no power whatsoever to say to this committee: "Will you recommend this? Will you bring this matter to the attention of the board? Will the committee consider bringing in a recommendation to the board?" He would not be permitted to do it. Therefore, how will this body function to meet the problems the hon. member mentioned and to meet the problems of the farmers of western Canada?

Mr. Baldwin: May I ask the hon. member for Macleod a question? I wonder whether the hon. member could not be brought to see the use of this board, having in mind the erratic and peripatetic perambulations of this government and that the more advice they can get the better off they are, consequently, the more advisory boards there are to assist this government, the more hope we have that it will get on to the main stream of the business of the house.

Mr. Kindt: I shall be glad to concur in what the hon. member has said. I think there would be some merit in this proposal if it were only on that basis that we were giving it consideration.

Mr. Stewart: May I deal with the penultimate hon. member's question by asking a question addressed to the minister? The clause before us contains a subclause which states:

> 3. The advisory committee shall meet at least once a year at the headquarters of the board, and at such other times and places as it deems necessary in order to carry out its duties under this act.

Further on, subclause 6 reads as follows:

> 6. It shall be the duty of the advisory committee (a) to study and review all matters relating to feed grain transportation, storage, prices and consumption that are referred to it either by the minister or by the board;

My question to the minister is whether it should be our understanding that the only matters that properly can be taken up by the advisory committee at its regular annual meeting or at the other meetings which undoubtedly will take place between the annual meetings will be those referred to in clause 15 (6) of the bill?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, that is the minimum they will have to do. They have an obligation to do at least that and, as I said on Friday, this committee will be established on the same basis as the Canadian council on rural development. It will have about the same power to examine and make reports and recommendations and to give advice not only on problems which are referred to the committee by the board but on all other matters because subclause 6 of clause 15 establishes the minimum duties of the board. There is a compulsion for the committee to do that much at least, so I do not see what the hon. member for Prince is driving at in his argument. This committee has all the necessary powers the hon. member is proposing today or was proposing on Friday. I think we could adopt this clause as it stands now.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Kindt: This is an advisory committee. There is a duplication inherent in what the minister has said. The advisory committee is to undertake studies and the board also is to undertake studies. There is going to be a duplication of staff making these two types of studies. Why saddle the taxpayers with this additional cost of bureaucracy? If the advisory committee desires certain information, why could it not draw upon the staff of the board and the information compiled by it rather than have a duplication? The advisory committee, if it is going to make all these studies, will have to have a staff of 10, 15 or 20 people digging into particular items. The board itself will have to have a similar number of people digging into these items.

It seems stupid, and it is stupid, to pass legislation requiring this type of duplication and waste of the taxpayers' money. We are setting up something for the board itself and the minister to hide behind rather than assuming their responsibility. This parliament wants the board and the minister to take the responsibility, and not have the minister rise in his place at some later date and say it was the advisory committee that was responsible for something. The committee can be used as a red herring to draw across mistakes, actions and decisions that are rightfully those of the minister and the board.

Mr. Sauvé: May I ask if the hon. member for Macleod has come to an agreement with the hon. member for Prince about the advisory committee? I am lost because they have two different positions.

Mr. Douglas: There is no doubt in my mind about the value of having an advisory committee. The board becomes an administrative body and there must be some channel through which the producers and others who are affected by the program envisaged in this legislation can have access to the board to present their views so that the committee can make the various studies required and forward its recommendations to the board or to the minister. I think that an advisory committee to this board will fill much the same functions as the advisory committee to the wheat board, which is a very useful avenue of consultation. It provides a two-way street for the exchange of views and it provides the persons who are concerned, in the case of the wheat board, the producers, and in the case of this legislation, the feeders, with machinery whereby they can from time to time place their views before the board.

However, if this board is to be effective it seems to me there are two things that are giving hon. members some concern. I mention them only briefly. The first is the composition of the committee. I do not know whether the minister wants to write it into the legislation—it would be satisfactory to me if we had the minister's assurance on the record—that the persons selected for the advisory committee will be taken from a list of individuals nominated by farm organizations. I have had some experience with watching people being appointed to boards and advisory committees. It is often said that the person in question is selected from a farm organization. It is a very different thing to have someone selected from an organization and to have someone selected who is a nominee of that organization.

I submit that farm organizations, such as the Farmers Union, the Federation of Agriculture, the Livestock Feeders Association and other groups, will feel much better if the person they have in mind as their spokesman is selected rather than have the minister simply reach into that organization, select an individual and put him on the committee. From the minister's own viewpoint it is better because the minister knows then he has a person who is going to assume some responsibility not only for expressing the views of that organization but for going back to that organization and explaining the program which the board is carrying out. From the minister's viewpoint, therefore, the personnel of this advisory committee become a two-way street, explaining to the minister and the board what the organizations want and explaining to the organizations what it is the minister and the board are trying to do. I hope the minister will give the committee some assurance that these people will be selected from a panel prepared by the farm organizations directly concerned.

Mr. Sauvé: I agreed to this earlier and said we would ask a number of farm organizations to give us three names each. Then one of those would be appointed to the advisory committee. I think I said that in answer to one or two members.

Mr. Douglas: I was aware of that. If I may I should like to point out, however, that there are five or seven members to be appointed. I am not suggesting it is enough to allow a farm organization to submit three names and then select one who is going to be on a committee of five or seven. I should like to see the whole committee nominated by the various farm organizations.

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, I agreed to this procedure.

Mr. Douglas: The second point which I think is giving the committee some concern relates to subclause 6 which sets out the duties of the advisory committee. They are restricted. The subclause reads in part as follows:

> (a) to study and review all matters relating to feed grain transportation, storage, prices and consumption that are referred to it either by the minister or by the board; and
> (b) to report to the minister and the board, with any recommendations that the committee considers desirable, the results of each study and review conducted by it.

[Mr. Douglas.]

I am not suggesting the minister is trying to restrict the advisory committee. I am sure what the minister has in mind is that this committee will be able from time to time to make recommendations to him or to the board. However, when you are dealing with legislation someone is going to come along and say, this is beyond the purview of this committee; it has no terms of reference that allow it to make such a recommendation. I know what the minister is up against when lawyers start to draft something. They are very careful how they draft legislation. I am not trying to draft the legislation, but perhaps the minister would be prepared to have paragraph (b) of subclause 6 read this way:

> (b) to report to the minister and the board, with any recommendations that the committee considers desirable, the results of each study and review conducted by it and such other matters as it may deem expedient.

I think somewhere in its terms of reference the committee should have authority to make recommendations to the minister and the board outside of anything that has been referred to it. They do not have that power now. Some legalistic individual may raise this matter later and say to the committee: this is beyond your jurisdiction. The committee would be restricted to dealing only with such matters as were referred to it. I am sure that is not what the minister wishes if he wants a committee that is really going to keep him and the board properly informed as to the effectiveness of this legislation.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Sauvé: In response to a question from the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough I said my interpretation of the clause was that this was the minimum they had to do. A distinction had to be made with regard to the powers and duties of the advisory committee, and it is the duty of the advisory committee to do this much at least. Perhaps the clause could have been drafted differently but my interpretation—and I give this undertaking to the house—is that the advisory committee will have much more responsibility than that required of it as a duty. That is the strict minimum required of the committee. It can inquire into other matters and conduct other studies for the board or the minister as it wishes.

Mr. Douglas: The minister said that subclause 6 is the minimum required, but where is the maximum? I am asking the minister where in clause 15 or anywhere else in the bill it says that the advisory committee has the power to make recommendations to the minister or to the board other than on matters referred to it by the minister or the board?

Mr. Sauvé: There is no limitation as long as the matter deals with the responsibility of the feed grain board. Why should there be a limitation? Either you have a clause which says that an advisory committee is to be set up to do anything it wants or the clause states that it has to fulfil a minimum duty. This advisory committee has a minimum duty to fulfil but nothing would prevent it from doing more as long as what it does relates to Bill No. C-218.

Mr. Douglas: I am not going to labour this, Mr. Chairman, any further except to say to the minister that the committee has a certain limited duty. So far as the bill is concerned the committee has no power to do other than what the legislation entitles it to do, and all it is entitled to do at the present time is to study and review matters referred to it and to report on those matters to the minister or to the board. It has no other powers or terms of reference.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, on the same matter that has been brought to the attention of the minister, I understand the undertaking given by the minister that this is the minimum duty of the committee, and that is our understanding. However, that is not set out in the legislation before us. I wonder whether it would meet the wishes of the committee if the minister would accept an amendment to clause 15 (6) (a) in the following terms:

(a) to study and review all matters relating to feed grain transportation, storage, prices and consumption—

Then I insert the words:

—that it may deem necessary, together with those that are referred to it either by the Minister or by the Board;

This would remove the limitation in the proposed legislation and I believe it would grant this committee the powers under which the minister wishes it to administer its particular duties.

Mr. Sauvé: Which subparagraph is this?

Mr. Danforth: It commences at line 26 on page 7. May I read how the clause will appear in the bill with the amendment:

(a) to study and review all matters relating to feed grain transportation, storage, prices and consumption that it may deem necessary, together with those that are referred to it either by the Minister or by the Board;

Mr. Sauvé: This clarifies the intent and I have no objection to such amendment.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, we have been discussing the advisory committee for a little while and the minister has clearly indicated whom he would like to see on the advisory committee. I as well as some other members would like to state our intentions with regard to those we would not want to see on the committee; then we would know who should be on and who should not. It is not that people may not be qualified to do the job but that they may sometimes be in a peculiar situation.

A while ago some members made reference to the Wheat Board and the minister asked one of the members about the advisory committee to the Wheat Board. I should like to see a wheat board advisory committee, but it all depends on which committee he is talking about. Is he talking about the one to which the Wheat Board has to refer to find out about future prices or the one limited to studying the production side of grain in western Canada or in the producing areas? The latter one is doing a pretty good job. The other one is doing a very good job too, though not necessarily as it affects the Wheat Board.

The Wheat Board guarantees the price and purchase of wheat from the western farmers, but there is also a lot of responsibility on the grain exchanges. To belong to the grain exchange you must be a broker. All of the grain sold by the Wheat Board is bought by brokers, so we are going around in a vicious circle. I am not happy about this part of the picture and I am trying to prevent it in this case.

The members of the advisory committee might be those who were buying the grain or involved in the transportation or marketing of grain. The minister has clearly indicated that these people will not be members and I take his word in that regard. But who is going to be responsible for this following the minister? If I knew he would be minister forever I would sit down because I would trust the minister. But he will not be there forever. This is why I want the good will of the minister to be put on paper.

I wonder whether the minister would accept an amendment to clause 15 (6)(a) which would insert after the word "and" the words:

—no members of this committee shall be permitted to have direct financial or business interests in the matters which this committee will have to deal with.

They are the matters which are referred to in the clause, namely:

—to study and review all matters relating to feed grain transportation, storage, prices and consumption that are referred to it either by the minister or by the board;

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, before this amendment is entertained I should like to raise a point of order. The hon. member for Mégantic made a statement which is not in accordance with the facts. He said that the Canadian Wheat Board guarantees the price to the producer.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Right.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): That is not right. The Wheat Board pays an initial payment to the producer but the final payment is the result of the price received. I thought he might have left the impression that the western farmer was being subsidized to the extent that his price was guaranteed, and this is not so.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): If I might clarify that, I meant that the board guaranteed the initial price. What I am beefing about is: Who is the guy who gets the difference between the two prices? The price is the result of the state of the wheat market, and that depends on the grain exchanges and the brokers. This is what the president of the Wheat Board told me in committee two years ago. They are his words, not mine. I thank the hon. member for clarifying the matter.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committeee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Danforth) agreed to.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, with regard to the amendment moved by the member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois), I think first of all that he is not moving it at the proper time. He should wait until we reach paragraph 1 of clause 15. Second, I fail to understand who could sit on the committee, if members of the advisory committee must not have any financial interest. Since the farmers who represent farming organizations and who will sit on that committee very often go in for farming themselves, they indirectly have some financial interests.

To the extent that representatives of farming organizations will sit on that committee, it seems impossible to me that it could also include business representatives, for the very reason that conflicts of interest might arise. Therefore, I fail to see the necessity of an amendment such as the one you intend to move.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I see the point which the minister is trying to make, namely whether that would imply farmers. I did not intend to imply feeders of eastern Canada. The consumer, properly speaking, is excluded. I mentioned "financial interest" in the field of grain transport, storage and sale. Now, it could be anyone in the agricultural field, but on no consideration would I like to see a farmer interested in the specific fields of grain transport, storage, sale, or milling appointed to that committee. It belongs to the committee to inquire of those people—in order to avoid a clash of interests. And I am not talking from the consumer viewpoint now.

Mr. Sauvé: I should like to give an example to the hon. member for Mégantic. Suppose a farmer has his own truck and picks up his grain at the elevator, in Montreal, Quebec or Trois-Rivières. Then, he is entitled to have a truck for his own purposes. Now, according to your definition or the limitations you set, he could not sit on the committee by reason of his being engaged in transportation, be it for himself or even for his neighbours. I think that you—

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, if he carries grain for his neighbours, he is in business and needs a special licence for that. If he carries grain for himself, then anybody can do that. One simply has to have a driver's licence and a truck licence and anybody knows that the farmer can carry goods if he has a truck licence, provided it is for himself. If he is engaged in a gainful operation, he needs a licence from the transportation board, which is quite another thing. In that case he is a farmer, but he is governed by the transportation board. But I mean all those directly involved, and that is why I referred to those directly engaged in transportation and storage under a special licence. I know such licence is necessary in business, even for farmers.

Some people hold two positions. Well, in that case, it cannot be helped; if they are moonlighters or if they have a profitable business going, they should not be allowed to sit on that committee.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, I believe this would only result in administrative red tape, and greatly narrow the scope of this clause. I assured the house that we mean to have representatives of agricultural organizations, and I cannot see why we should further limit the qualifications required of committee members.

Mr. Chairman, I know the hon. member for Mégantic means well, but I fear very much that he is asking for administrative limitations which would make it very difficult for us to form the advisory committee.

[English]

Mr. Fairweather: I share the minister's view. Not only would we be creating administrative complications but we would obviously be restricting the usefulness of the committee. The minister has given an undertaking that the committee will include representatives of farm groups. Of course they will have a financial interest. That is obvious. I hope the committee will not support the amendment of the hon. member for Mégantic. I should like to think there will be room on the advisory committee for knowledgeable people, practical people, as well as for those who have an academic interest in this subject.

Mr. Kindt: There is no doubt that the mover of this amendment has good intentions in mind but on reflection I think he would agree that this proposal would do far more harm than good. From the way in which it is worded, those with a financial interest whether directly or indirectly—

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): No. Direct.

Mr. Kindt: I am one who is proud to be a farmer and as such I have a financial interest myself. I do not hope to be a member of this committee but there are thousands of others, 6,000 in my own riding, whose experience might well be valuable. Yet this would not be possible if the proposed amendment were adopted in its present form.

There is another point. The minister has told us that an effort will be made to represent the views of a cross-section of the various interests concerned. This seems to be only common sense. If we ask for advice on these important matters we want to hear someone talking straight from the shoulder and from experience. This would not be possible if we observed the qualifications laid down in the amendment. Provided it is an interest at some distance, I think we shall be obliged to seek the services of people who have a financial interest. I am sure the information provided by such a committee would prove far more helpful than would otherwise be the case.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I quite understand the hon. member's point of view, as I drafted the amendment rather rapidly. However, its purport seems to have been missed. I do not want to restrict the farmer in any way. What I wanted to eliminate was anyone who would have a conflict of interest. I wish to restrict people who are strictly in the brokerage or transportation business. They are not really interested in farmers; they are only interested in the extra dollars they can earn.

However, the minister has given the assurance that he will keep a close eye on this and that farmers' associations will supply names of nominees for the advisory committee. On his undertaking to do that, I wish to withdraw my amendment and reserve the right to bring the matter up once again if things do not work out in accordance with the minister's intention.

[Translation]

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Rinfret): The hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Langlois) is asking for the withdrawal of the amendment now before the committee. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent for the withdrawal thereof?

[English]

Has the hon. member for Megantic unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Langlois, Mégantic) withdrawn.

The Chairman: Shall clause 15 as amended carry?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to have heard the discussion that has taken place because some time ago we who served on the agricultural committee were impressed with the manipulation and manoeuvring of some people in the province from which the hon. member for Mégantic comes. There is some merit in considering things that have happened in the past and devising ways and means of eliminating them in the future.

One thing which has not been mentioned much is the relationship between the Canadian Wheat Board, which is the sales agency of the western farmer, and the livestock feed grain board which has a purchasing function. Another important matter which was raised in the agricultural committee, during the time the Liberal party was opposed to this type of proposed agency, was the necessity of maintaining equilibrium between the cost factor for the production of western beef and other meat products and that same factor in eastern Canada.

That is a factor which most members of the committee were desirous of maintaining. We do not want this new board to sell grain in eastern Canada at a price much more advantageous than that being paid for grain in western Canada, thus creating a disparity between the two types of production, which in turn could only lead to an elimination of one of the boards, either the wheat board sales agency or the purchasing agency of the livestock feed grain board.

This is something which the advisory committee will have to examine more than once a year. When it knows production levels in western Canada it can relate them to needs in eastern Canada. The number of cattle in each area will be a large determining factor in the amount of purchases which the board will make. For these reasons the minister would be well advised to amend clause 15(3) by deleting the words "shall meet at least once a year" and substituting therefor the words "at least four times a year".

This board will have to make decisions at the beginning of each crop season and again in the fall of the year when the availability of grain is determined. It will also have to determine the amounts of grain to be stored, and in order to maintain the differential between east and west it should review the situation at fairly frequent intervals. If it does not, then one part of Canada will be unhappy and very likely that part will be western Canada.

The minister has said that there will be representatives on the committee from all areas. I hope this is true and that included among them are the areas of beef production in western Canada which have a great stake in the effects of this legislation and should play a primary role in an advisory capacity in maintaining what we believe is a reasonable status quo. Therefore I move as an amendment to clause 15(3), line 11, that the words "at least once a year" be deleted and the following words substituted therefor, "at least four times a year."

[Mr. Peters.]

Mr. Sauvé: I fail to understand the purport of the amendment because subclause 3 reads, "shall meet at least once a year at the headquarters of the board, and at such other times and places as it deems necessary in order to carry out its duties under this Act." One would think that members of the advisory committee would be responsible enough to have meetings as frequently as possible, and therefore there should be no necessity for the legislation to lay down four mandatory meetings. Members of the committee will have the responsibility of deciding how often meetings should be held. There must be one meeting each year and they can hold as many as they want in addition.

Mr. Peters: I agree that they can meet as often as they want, but in my opinion the minister fails to see what the function of this advisory committee is really going to be. I think he has not heard some of the representations of western farmers with regard to what this advisory committee is going to do. Maybe he does not know what this advisory committee is going to do. I am of the opinion that the committee, if it is going to discharge its function, will have to make recommendations in respect of how much grain will be bought and what the relationship of the selling price of that grain may be to eastern Canada so that the agency which we are now establishing and the board which buys and sells will not upset the status quo in western Canada.

I am only making this suggestion to the minister for his own protection, because in the initial stages the advisory committee will have to meet to decide on the amount of grain that is going to be planted, again when they know how much the crop is going to be, again when the grain is going to be moved into storage space, and again in the spring of the year when a decision will have to be made when we run into difficulty because of increasing costs because of insufficient grain. At this time I think the minister would be well advised to have advice in respect of how he is going to get grain into the various districts under this measure and with the advantages of the freight assistance which he also is going to be administering.

In the initial stages I think the minister will find there is going to be more interest in how much grain is available, where it will be available, and where it is going to be stored. Incidentally, the board may end up in the spring selling grain if there is too much in storage, and it may be that they would wish to do so through the western agency. So I suggest that initially four meetings is not unreasonable. I agree with the minister that the committee may have to meet more than four times in the initial stage. After the pattern is established it is quite possible that a meeting of this board once a year or only for emergency purposes would be quite sufficient.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. May I read the amendment submitted by the hon. member for Timiskaming. It is moved by Mr. Peters that in clause 15, subclause 3, after the word "meet" the words "at least once a year" be deleted and that the words "at least four times a year" be substituted.

Amendment (Mr. Peters) negatived: yeas, 3; nays, 43.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, there is one observation I should like to make. It is a very minor point but one which has come up in respect of a number of boards and committees. It is stated that the members will be entitled to be paid, first of all, a per diem allowance while attending meetings. That is fine. Second, it is stated that they shall be paid travelling and living expenses when meeting at some place away from their normal place of residence. If the Board moves around and happens to go to the home city of a member, that member cannot even get a nickel for car fare if he wishes to go by bus. Let us take the city of Montreal. What are you going to decide is the city of Montreal? If the member should live in Ste. Anne he has a trip of 13 or 14 miles into Montreal and he would have to eat at hotels and so on. This is a minor irritant. I do not know how to get around it, but I hope that some method will be found to make this more felicitous for these boards. It is not that their members are looking for anything, but I know, for instance, that when the Board of Broadcast Governors meets outside Ottawa and is involved in a hearing extending over a period of a week or more, the member who happens to be at his place of residence has to buy all his meals and everything else and gets nothing. I would suggest to the minister that he pass on a word to the draftsmen that they make some change in this regard.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, in respect of the efficient functioning of this board which the minister seems so intent upon having established I should like to ask at this stage whether it is he or the board that is going to make the recommendations concerning who will serve on the advisory committee. I say this for two very obvious reasons. Whoever makes the recommendations and appointments to the advisory committee may be placing the appointees in a position of being subservient to him. This is very important. The minister may laugh, but this is one of the fundamental considerations in human relationships. If this board is to function properly it must be in a position where it can act without owing any debt of gratitude to anyone who may make appointments.

If the minister asks the grain growers or wheat pools to name persons, that would be one type of committee, but if on the other hand he asks the board to be set up under the bill to make recommendations for appointments and he in turn rubberstamps them, then this board will be as useless as any it is possible to create.

Mr. Sauvé: As I said earlier, the members of the committee would be appointed by the Governor in Council and names would be suggested by the farm organizations. They would be picked from the lists proposed by the farm organizations.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, the only concern I have, although I shall not make an issue of it at this time, is my fear that the number of persons on the advisory committee may not be sufficient when we take into consideration the long distances involved and the fact that there are six provinces in which this board will have jurisdiction over livestock feed. Perhaps the seven members of this committee who will carry out the provisions of the bill will not be able to do so efficiently because of the vast areas involved. The province of British Columbia, the maritime provinces and Quebec and Ontario are very much interested in the provisions of this bill. If we allocate one member to each of these provinces, other provinces which have large rural areas will not be efficiently represented. I should like to direct this matter to the minister's attention. Was due consideration given to this aspect of the situation and does the minister feel that five or seven members will be enough to carry out these duties?

Mr. Sauvé: Past experience has indicated that for the purpose of appointing representatives of this kind there are regions in Canada and it has been customary to appoint one or two representatives for the Atlantic provinces. For this reason we felt that five or seven members could look after all our regions.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 16—Appropriations.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make one or two points in regard to clause 16, which suggests that all expenditures under this act, including amounts required for payments related to the cost of feed grain transportation, payment of salaries and other expenses shall be appropriated by parliament. During the course of this debate and on numerous prior occasions members of this house have likened the proposed eastern feed grain agency to the Canadian Wheat Board in that it will function on behalf of the eastern farmers in a way similar to the manner in which the Canadian Wheat Board functions on behalf of the western farmers.

Let me point out one or two significant differences. I think the minister already knows what I have in mind. So far as the Canadian Wheat Board is concerned, expenses incurred by the board, including salaries, are paid from moneys accruing from the sale of grain. In other words, the farmers of western Canada are paying for the cost of operating that board. They are also paying the freight on that grain which moves into the terminals at Fort William and Port Arthur.

In those respects there is a considerable difference between the operations of these two boards. I do not intend to move an amendment to change this situation or even criticize it, but I do point out that there is a considerable difference between the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board and the proposed operations of this board which will be acting on behalf of eastern farmers.

Mr. Kindt: Having regard to costs, does the minister visualize that the proposed board will pay the price set by the Wheat Board for feed grain or does he visualize the use of government funds to set up a monopoly to fight the Canadian Wheat Board which by statute is now operating in the interests of western farmers?

Mr. Sauvé: On Thursday and Friday last I gave several long explanations as to how the board will act and when it will act as a buyer or seller. When it does so it will purchase its grain on the Winnipeg grain exchange. It will act as a broker but will never deal directly with the Canadian Wheat Board. I envisage no difficulty in this regard.

Mr. Kindt: Is it contemplated that the board will buy on the open market?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes.

Mr. Danforth: Clause 16 indicates how moneys are to be allocated. Having studied clause 6(a), I fail to understand why some of these funds cannot be used to equalize freight costs from the province of Ontario to the maritime provinces. Can the minister explain whether the board will have the power to authorize the expenditure of money for this specific purpose?

Mr. Sauvé: I have already suggested that the board will have two main functions, to pay for transportation costs and storage and, when necessary, to act as a broker in the buying and selling of feed grain. I explained to my hon. friend on Friday that clause 6 (a)(i) and (ii) gives the board the authority to pay for the transportation costs of corn and locally produced grain. I have not changed my mind since that time.

Mr. Danforth: I am sure the minister appreciates that this situation is very important to me. He states that he explained to me on Friday that the board would be authorized to make payments relating to the cost of feed grain transportation. Under present government policy there is no subsidy paid on Ontario feed grains moving east. Has the minister indicated to me now that under the provisions of this legislation the board or the committee will have the authority to institute this government policy of equalizing transportation costs? Is that what the minister has said to me?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Subclause 4 of clause 16 states that no payment out of the consolidated revenue fund under subsection 2 shall exceed $10 million. Does that mean that the total cost in one year could be $10 million in regard to the provision of rented or constructed storage?

Mr. Sauvé: That refers only to the cost of its operations as a broker in the buying and selling of feed grain and has nothing to do with transportation or storage.

Mr. Kindt: A large number of cattle are being fed in the foothills area of Alberta on barley and other grains grown in the area. That grain is always purchased from the local farmers and does not pass through the hands of the Wheat Board or anyone else. Is there anything in this bill which will interrupt that relationship between the feeder and the grain grower?

Mr. Sauvé: No.

Mr. Kindt: There are a number of people in British Columbia, for example, in the Okanagan valley, who are and will be feeding cattle. I should like to ask if they will be able to haul their cattle into Alberta and sell them. Some farmers haul their cattle into Alberta and sell them. Some buy feed from other farmers and feed the cattle in British Columbia. Are they going to be denied that privilege? Is it the purpose of this bill to put them all out of business, or what is the intention of the minister?

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Sauvé: No, Mr. Chairman, it is not the purpose of this bill to put them out of business.

Mr. Kindt: Will this system be interfered with? Will they be able to operate as they have and buy their feed in Alberta?

Mr. Sauvé: That is what they do now.

Mr. Kindt: In other words, there will be a continuation of the practice followed at the present time?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes.

Mr. Danforth: Once again, Mr. Chairman, I should like to bring to the attention of the minister that clause 16 refers to section 8 and the fact that expenses incurred under section 8 will be alleviated by this particular clause. I would ask the minister whether over the week end he had an opportunity to pursue the difference in interpretation between himself and myself in this regard. Does the minister agree in particular with my interpretation in respect of clause 8?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, I found that we were both right. I will read a note which I have received in this regard. The intent of this bill as drafted is for the board to achieve its objectives by co-ordination of the various interests presently involved and perfecting the existing devices at its disposal before embarking on the involved marketing operations provided for in clause 8. If these methods fail to achieve the objectives of the bill clause 8 can be resorted to, but it is intended that its objectives could then be attained by the marketing of feed grains originating in the prairies. This bill does not limit the board to the purchase of grain originating in the designated area but it is not intended it would have to resort to the purchase and sale of local feed grains, because its objectives in this area could be accomplished by the use of the powers granted in 6 (a), and I would see no objection to leaving the board with the ability to resort to this broader interpretation if it means the accomplishment of its objectives. So we were both right, and I am quite satisfied with this interpretation.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, would the minister now clarify from whom the board will be receiving its import licences?

Mr. Sauvé: The Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question on this clause. Clause 16 (1) (a) refers to payments related to the cost of feed grain transportation or the cost of feed grain storage made under paragraph (a) of section 6. We are to assume then that the costs of the feed grain subsidy program will be borne under this program?

Mr. Sauvé: That is right.

Mr. Jorgenson: In other legislation that is receiving the attention of members of the house at the present time the suggestion is made—I do not want to presume what the final legislation will be—that the intention of the legislation is to do away with all freight subsidies, that the railways in effect will be deriving their revenue solely from the competitive forces existing within the transportation industry. Are we to conclude that by virtue of this legislation this will be the one exception to the proposed legislation dealing with transportation?

Mr. Sauvé: This is not a subsidy to the railways; it is a subsidy to the feeders. In the other bill it is a subsidy to the railways, if I interpret that bill correctly.

Mr. Jorgenson: I did not quite hear the minister. I wonder whether he would mind repeating what he said.

Mr. Sauvé: Under this legislation it is a subsidy to the feeders, to the farmers; it is not a subsidy to the railways. Under the legislation on transportation it is a subsidy to the railways and not to the users.

Mr. Jorgenson: In that case, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me—and I do not wish to enter into a debate on the transportation legislation—that in view of the minister's answer it will be possible to effect all sorts of subsidies by simply calling them subsidies to somebody else rather than to the railways. If that is the case, the effect of the transportation legislation will be completely nullified.

Mr. Sauvé: No, Mr. Chairman. This has never been a subsidy to the railways. This is included in the bill that the feeder receives. He receives a bill for the total amount of his order and there is always an indication of "less subsidy for transportation". It is deducted directly from the bill. The railways are not affected at all by this provision. The railways do not know directly anything about the $19 million or $20 million that we are spending here because it is the brokers and the dealers who receive the subsidy, not the railways.

Mr. Jorgenson: I understand the minister's point perfectly, but the point I am attempting to make is that in future subsidies to the railways, and I still say they are subsidies to the railways in a sense, can be camouflaged in many ways by suggesting that they are subsidies to somebody else. Therefore the effects of the transportation legislation will be nullified.

Mr. Sauvé: More of this commodity has been moving east by ship than by rail, so there could be an argument on whether it is a subsidy on rail or ship.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a related question on clause 16 (1) (a). On Friday last we were discussing transportation and I suggested to the minister that it would be cheaper to move this commodity by boat. The minister said that an arrangement was being made whereby the railways would transport it at the same cost. Would the minister give us some details of this plan?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The two national railways have proposed agreed charges to the maritime feed manufacturers on certain quantities on a year-round basis. They have offered the same thing to the Quebec feed manufacturers. These rates are competitive with water transportation and other transportation costs.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): This is from Fort William only?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, from Fort William.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, paragraph (a) of clause 16 provides that these funds are to be used for the cost of feed grain transportation and any other costs that are involved. Then there is a reversion to the equalization of prices between east and west. In other words, the minister has devised a system to pool and use the taxpayers' dollar to overcome the geographic and economic advantages of location in relation to feed supplies. He may be able to justify it, but I certainly cannot understand this provision. The people in western Canada and British Columbia are close to the supply, and if they take advantage of this fact and purchase feed from the Wheat Board or from whatever source it is available and then have to pay the shot for the equalized cost for eastern feeders, I can see that the feeders in British Columbia will be coming before the advisory committee to register their complaints.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Sauvé: I explained in detail the problems of Canadian agriculture and the problems of the feed grain board on Thursday and Friday when I introduced the bill. I never said that Bill C-218 would solve all the problems of eastern agriculture. This bill is only a part of the national agricultural policy which has to be arrived at by agreement between the provinces and the federal government. I do not want to repeat all that has been said but we are implementing through this board policies which have been voted for by parliament since 1941. We are therefore not changing anything except to try to improve the situation of feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia. This will not alter the pattern of agricultural production in this country.

Mr. Kindt: Has the minister any figures in front of him which would portray to us the method which he intends to use in the equalization of prices between eastern and western Canada?

Mr. Sauvé: What we have done so far and what we intend to do is to try to pay all transportation costs—we have a special definition for transportation costs—from Port Arthur and Fort William to eastern destinations. This would in effect bring the grain to its destination at the same cost to the farmer as if he had bought it at Fort William.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 17—Advances.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister could help me with a problem I have concerning the integration of clause 17 with clause 16 and perhaps with other clauses. Clause 17 seems to be a blanket authorization for the Governor in Council to make advances to the board on such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon. Is this authorization for the Governor in Council as wide as it appears to be or is it confined by clause 16? For example, are those to be only advances appropriated by parliament under clause 16 (1) or is this money to come out of moneys under clause 16 (2) paid out of the consolidated revenue fund? In other words, can the minister tell me whether this is a blanket clause enabling a raid to be made for advance purposes upon the consolidated revenue fund and by-passing parliament?

Mr. Sauvé: As the hon. member knows, the board will have two functions. The first function will be to administer the funds voted by parliament for transportation and storage costs. In that sense clause 17 deals with that. Clause 16 deals with the operation of the board as a broker with certain limitations. Therefore we need clause 17 if we want to enable the board to administer the $20 million annually voted by parliament.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I should like the minister to clarify this point, that no advance may be made under clause 17 which is not already authorized under clause 16.

Mr. Sauvé: Under clause 16 the government can lend money to the board. Clause 17 also gives this authorization. Clause 17 authorizes the payment of the $19 million or $20 million transportation subsidy plus the $10 million for the fund, plus any amount that might be borrowed by the board to pursue its aims and obligations under the other provisions in clause 16.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I am not sure the minister has understood my point. I should like the minister's assurance that there is no independent authority under clause 17. What I want to ascertain is that clause 17 carries with it only the authority which is contained in preceding or subsequent clauses, that it does not stand on its own and does not give a blank cheque to the board and to the Governor in Council to make advances of any amounts on such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon, thereby by-passing parliament. The minister will understand that if this authority and power are confined to the financial provisions under clause 16 then I have no objection. But if this does constitute some power which goes away beyond that and gives an independent and separate authority, then I think members of this house have reason to take exception.

Mr. Sauvé: Clause 16 (1) (a) provides for subsidies out of the annual appropriation, that is, $20 million. Clause 16 (4) provides for a fund of $10 million, and clause 17 provides for loans on terms and conditions established by the Governor in Council.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Then are we to understand that these loans are in addition to and separate and distinct from the moneys appropriated by parliament and the $10 million covered under clause 16? Is this in fact a blank cheque to the government to make loans of any amount on such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon?

Mr. Sauvé: No, as long as the board acts as a broker if need be. It is only so if the board has to act as a broker, in which case there is a limited amount of $10 million. If for one reason or another this is not sufficient, then the board can borrow from the Minister of Finance additional amounts of money. However, the intention was to try to limit the funds at the disposal of the board to $10 million. We do not feel we will need more than $10 million because, as you know, these operations are done within a very short period of time. Buying and selling are done practically in the same week. As soon as you collect for what you have sold you can pay for what you bought, and there is a very limited amount of time between those operations. It is therefore not expected that the board will need more than $10 million for its operations. Nevertheless there is a provision there which authorizes the Minister of Finance to lend money on conditions set down by the Governor in Council.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): As usual the minister has been very clever and shrewd. He skated all around the issue. I want to put it to him immediately and directly. This clause does convey a power and authority in the governor in council to make advances of an unlimited amount which are not provided for in the previous clause 16. That is capable of a simple and direct answer.

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, that is what I said.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): So the answer to that is yes. I think there may be other hon. members who want to express some views in relation to this. So far as I am concerned I am prepared to vote against any clause which gives such unlimited arbitrary power to the Governor in Council. The very essence of parliament is that it maintains and controls the right to vote the money that is necessary for the operation of the government and all the instruments of government. If the minister says that $10 million is not enough, that $20 million is necessary, then I will go along with him in voting $20 million, but I am not prepared to vote with him and say that he can have a blank cheque and can by-pass parliament whenever he and his colleagues sitting in the secrecy of the Privy Council chamber think it expedient to do so.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: It is precisely on this point that I should like to add some comments. I certainly underline all that has been said by my colleague from Carleton. The interpretation of clause 16(2) takes us back to clause 8(1) which frankly authorizes this board to go into the grain market and gamble on market conditions. It is authorized to go into the market and buy and sell. Not only is it authorized to buy and sell feed grain in eastern Canada and British Columbia but, in competition with the Canadian Wheat Board, to buy feed grain in the prairie provinces. This power is clearly spelled out in the legislation.

I should like to refer the minister, if I may, to clause 8(1) which deals with buying or entering into contracts or agreements for the purchase of feed grain in eastern Canada and British Columbia and in the designated area of the Wheat Board. But it is still in competition with the Wheat Board because when we come to clause 19 concerning the regulations we see that the Governor in Council has authority to deem a grade of wheat grown in the designated area not to be a feed grain. When we come to clause 19 I shall discuss this bill that is not before us.

In any event, as my colleague from Carleton has said, this clause authorizes the board to gamble on feed grain. It is precisely the underwriting of this gamble to which members of this house may have some objection. If the minister gives us a finite amount, then that is all right and the house may be prepared to give its agreement. However, as has been clearly pointed out, clause 17 authorizes the Governor in Council to write a blank cheque. We all hope that the board will operate successfully. We all hope there will not be such stupendous losses that the moneys provided for under clause 16 will not be sufficient. There is no guarantee of that, none at all, particularly for the purposes under clause 8(1). Therefore there has to be more than just the safeguard of an annual report to parliament.

I want to say something too about clause 19 and the laying on the table of the regulations that may be made. In so many places in these acts we have acts which are not before parliament, but we will come to that in greater detail during consideration of clause 19. I share the opinion of my colleague from Carleton and I would oppose this clause.

Mr. Olson: I wonder if the minister really meant what he said or what the hon. member for Carleton interpreted his remarks to mean? Surely the minister does not suggest there will be a statutory provision for an unlimited amount to be advanced to this feed grain agency?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is precisely what he did say.

Mr. Olson: If it is the intent of the government to provide for an unlimited statutory amount, I would object to it.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is what he said.

Mr. Olson: If, on the other hand, a provision were written into Bill No. C-218 whereby the Governor in Council could make advances and an item were put in the estimates to cover those advances, that item would come before this house for authorization. This would be a different thing. This is the reason I asked if the minister meant to say that clause 17 would be statutory authority for any amount. Surely any additional amount over what is provided under clause 16 would have to be in the estimates and would require the approval of the house.

Hon. members know that statutory amounts do not require approval of the committee of supply because there is a previous authority. Surely the minister is not suggesting that we should now give an over-all authority for all time to come until the statute is repealed. This would constitute a blank cheque. Surely any additional amount beyond what is provided under clause 16 must be included in the estimates of the department or the Department of Finance. Would the minister reconsider his answer and distinguish between how these advances will be made and what the law will be in so far as the procedure in this house is concerned?

Mr. Fairweather: I am anxious to see this bill passed, but I wonder if we could not stand this section? With great respect, I am quite sure the minister is not correct in what he said. I do not see how a statute which restricts monetary expenditure in other parts can come along a little later and give a blanket authority to the Governor in Council. This section must be copied out of other statutes and we should interpret on the basis of the earlier sections. I suggest that we stand the clause and that the minister get advice on this because an amendment may be needed to make it subject to the earlier clauses if my interpretation is not correct.

Mr. Lambert: If there is to be advice taken from the law officers of the crown with regard to clause 17 and its relationship to clause 16, I should like to point out the possible need for a further revision to that suggested by my colleague from Royal. In line 13 there is an indication that no payment can be made out of the consolidated revenue fund exceeding $10 million and, inter alia, that any amount can be advanced under clause 17. Payments out under clause 16 could readily exceed, $460 million if $450 million were advanced under clause 17 because under subclause (4) (a) we have a $10 million excess. If the advances under clause 17 are, $450 million, then the payments could exceed $460 million. There is no authority for the $450 million or any limit on the amount, and this is what we are trying to get at. I strongly urge upon the minister, as suggested by my colleague from Royal, that we stand this clause for advice from the law officers and that we go on with the others.

Mr. Sauvé: I agree.

Mr. Kindt: Is the minister prepared to make a statement?

Mr. Sauvé: I said I was agreeable to have the clause stand.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 17 stands?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

Clause 18 agreed to.

• (5:50 p.m.)

On clause 19—Regulations.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago I used the phrase, "act which is not before us." This is precisely what happenes under most of these acts which are of some length and where there is a nice, beautiful sounding clause concerning regulations. However, those who have some concern about the rights of individuals examine all the fine print in this particular clause. I am not going to say anything about clause 19(a) but I am going to talk about 19(b) and also 19(c), as well as some subsequent sub clauses.

First of all, let us look at what section 8 authorizes the board to do. The Governor in Council may make regulations which authorize the board to exercise the powers conferred on it by section 8 for any period or periods prescribed by the regulations, but in no case shall any period so prescribed be of a duration that is less than the remainder of the crop year in which such regulation is made. Section 8 tells us that the board may go into the buying and selling of feed grain in eastern Canada and British Columbia and in the designated areas, which are the prairie provinces. Beyond the prairie provinces, through the agency of the Canadian Wheat Board it has many other powers.

I am wondering why it is that so many of these regulations are considered to be necessary and yet parliament never gets the chance to look at them. There is the strongest case here for the introduction into our system in the House of Commons of a committee to review delegated powers. There is such a body in the United Kingdom, and I am sure that is one example we might copy. After all, under the powers conferred by clause 19 the Governor in Council may make a whole spate of regulations. True enough, he must publish them, but the chances of accountability are extremely rare. Action may be taken within the four corners of this act and this may be quite at cross-purposes with the intention of parliament. It may also infringe upon the rights of individuals. All sorts of things may happen under these regulations and no one is called to account.

This is not the first time I have spoken about this, Mr. Chairman. It is not because I am expert in agricultural matters that I now rise to make this protest; it is because of the feeling of many of my confreres in the legal profession that under these omnibus-type clauses and as a result of the peculiar language that is used by draftsmen we are in effect giving carte blanche almost to a new act, if such were desired.

Perhaps I am looking at the gloomy side but there have been far too many unfortunate examples in the past under various types of legislation where sweeping powers have been given to the Governor in Council. And, let us face it, this legislation gives to the board the power to make regulations. It recommends them to the minister, who is nominated by the Governor in Council to be responsible for the act. They are then taken to the committee of the cabinet on orders in council, the stamp of approval is put on them and, lo and behold, that is the law. Subsequently somebody may really get hurt, and if he is long with patience, long with purse and a most determined man he may be prepared to take the board to court. We have seen cases in the past where individuals have taken the wheat board to court. The wheat board has done many good things, but it has also been guilty in the past of many transgressions. Nevertheless, there are still some regulations which I think cry out for correction.

This is why I must raise objection at this time to the sweeping powers which are being given to boards to make their own regulations, the boards not being accountable for them. I would like the minister to go so far as to agree to bring in an amendment that any regulations that are made shall be tabled in the house. Within the last two years we have had examples of this. Some of the minister's colleagues have recognized the necessity for bringing these regulations before parliament so that parliament can examine them. I think that an amendment could be drafted by way of a proviso to the clause that these regulations shall be brought in and tabled within 15 days of their coming into effect if parliament is sitting and, if not, within 10 days after parliament next sits.

I would also suggest, Mr. Chairman, that under these regulations there is authority to bring this board into conflict with the Canadian Wheat Board in the designated areas. Under subclause (c) there is power to designate any grade of wheat grown in the designated area not to be a feed grain. It would be an eminently satisfying situation, to be sure, to have the Wheat Board declare that a certain quality of wheat shall be deemed to be feed wheat and then have this particular board turn round and say no, it is not to be so deemed. The power to do just that is there.

What I should like to know is why it is deemed that the board should have this power which has been specifically spelt out. Beyond this, the board can determine whether any grain or grain product is to be a feed grain. To go from the sublime to the ridiculous, it could, for example, pick No. 1 northern wheat.

In addition, according to the definitions clause "livestock" means cattle, sheep, swine and poultry and such other classes of livestock as may be designed by regulation as livestock. I am wondering what other livestock the minister may be thinking of.

I see it is six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock, and in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business, I do now leave the chair.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) Old Age Security —inquiry as to legislation this session; the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise), Finance—inquiry as to whether the minister has considered fighting inflation through tax reductions; the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) Agriculture—inquiry as to price of manufacturing milk.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the indulgence of the house to consent to a suspension of the sitting until eight o'clock this evening.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree to suspend this sitting from now until eight o'clock this evening?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The committee will resume its work at eight o'clock.

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 6.05 p.m. the sitting of the house was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 8 p. m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): Order. The house will resume the business that was interrupted at six o'clock.

CANADIAN LIVESTOCK FEED BOARD

ASSISTANCE IN STORAGE AND TRANSPORTATION COSTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-218, to provide assistance to livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia—Mr. Sauvé—Mr. Rinfret in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee adjourned at six o'clock we were considering clause 19.

On clause 19—Regulations.

Mr. Lambert: My remaining remarks will deal with paragraph (e), and again I would like to put on record the gist of remarks I have made in the past concerning omnibus clauses and their general wording with regard to regulations. In legislation this is usually the basket provision, if I may use that term. If anything has not been dealt with prior to it, either in the definitions clause or the regulations already spelled out in the bill, then in actual fact the proposed board is given power, under the authority of the governor in council, to make regulations with respect to any other matter concerning which the minister deems regulations necessary or desirable to carry out the provisions of the bill.

I hope that some day we shall reach the point when we do not have to include this type of basket provision in legislation. It is a provision to which resort is made to cover up many difficulties, and is a great extension of the powers granted to a board. It was with this type of provision I was particularly concerned in my original remarks when I suggested we should establish a committee of the house which would annually review all such delegated power, and all such regulations, because in actual fact the power includes authority to make regulations retroactive, and it is a power over which parliament has no control.

During the dinner interval I hope the minister had an opportunity to consult with his officials, and perhaps the law officers of the crown with regard to an amendment which would stipulate that as regulations are made they should be tabled in the house. I also hope he has had consultation with regard to clause 17 which was discussed earlier in the afternoon.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, supplementary or complementary to the remarks just made by the hon. member for Edmonton West, I would hope that the minister and the law officers of the crown would give serious consideration to provision for the tabling of regulations made under this legislation at regular intervals, say every year, every six months, or something like that.

During the lifetime of this and other parliaments we have had unfortunate examples of authority being given to make regulations, such regulations, when made, covering a wider scope than was ever intended. One example in particular which comes to my mind is the Export and Import Permits Act, which was passed a number of years ago. As all debates on it clearly show, it was originally intended to prevent the sale of war materials and strategic equipment to potential enemy countries and to parts of the world where there was danger that conflicts might arise.

Just about this time last fall, or slightly later in the year, we saw where the government chose to digress from the intention of that act, to use it for the purpose of carrying out economic warfare for political considerations against a de facto government in another part of the world, one which our government did not favour. I refer to the government of Southern Rhodesia, its method of attaining independence and its internal policies.

Our government's objective may well have been commendable, but that is not the point at argument. The fact is that regulations were made under the Export and Import Permits Act for purposes other than were orginally intended by the legislation.

As has been pointed out by the hon. member for Edmonton West, under the provisions of this bill the minister has power to make all sorts of regulations, without the necessity to table them or have them reviewed from time to time by parliament. But this bill is not unique in that regard. It is a legislative tendency which governments seem to acquire from time to time. More and more we see a growing tendency to infringe on the functions and cut away the power of parliament to review such matters. Like the hon. member for Edmonton West, I hope the minister will consider accepting an amendment providing for the regulations to be tabled and reviewed from time to time by parliament.

As I say, I hope such amendments could be made to apply to all other acts which provide for regulations to be made under a sort of catch-all, blanket provision. This is a bad precedent which has crept into our legislation over a number of years, and should not be continued any further.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to deal with clause 19(a) which says that the governor in council may make regulations prescribing for payments related to the cost of feed grain storage and transportation, and I shall return again to the matter of feed grain transportation.

On several occasions during the past few years I have attempted to ascertain, from the departmental officials responsible for the administration of the feed grain assistance legislation, exactly to what areas this assistance was being applied. There are varied groups of producers in eastern Canada. Some can be classified as legitimate producers, and others as not so legitimate. Canada Packers, Swift and Burns all have feed lots in this part of the country, as they also have in other parts of Canada; and there are other commercial interests involved. For example, I am sure E. P. Taylor gets the benefit of this legislation.

I suggest that the board which has the responsibility for administering this program should devise a system whereby it could be determined where these payments go, and how much is being received by different farmers in the form of subsidies, so that we can have an idea of who is getting the most assistance from the program.

I wonder whether the minister would undertake to give us his assurance that he will endeavour to discuss this matter with the board to see whether such a program can be devised, and whether it will be possible to isolate the various producers. Also I wonder whether he would be able to give us some information regarding how much they are receiving in the way of assistance.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, on Thursday night and Friday afternoon I spoke of this problem and assured the house that our intention was to find ways and means to help the family farm, and try to avoid large benefits being received by the integrators. We have figures which show they derive their benefits mostly in the form of subsidies paid for transportation costs.

So far as clause 19 and the orders in council are concerned, I think hon. members know all these orders in council are published in the Canada Gazette. As I have said, we want to protect the interests of everybody. There is no sinister intent on the part of the board to deprive citizens of their rights. I do not think there is any way in which this board can do more harm than others operating under a similar provision, but if hon. members feel there is some danger and are ready to suggest an amendment—although I do not see what it will add—I have no objections to anything that is precise.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I was not inferring that the government had any sinister plan. I think my colleague the hon. member for Edmonton West and myself had in mind that there has been a growing tendency, not just now but over a number of years, to have these regulations as catch-all regulations. We suggest or hope that perhaps the minister might entertain an amendment to these regulations, so that we would have a starting point which would be subject to review. I am delighted to hear that the minister would give consideration to an amendment which might be made in that regard. I understand my colleague the hon. member for Edmonton West is preparing such an amendment.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, while the hon. member for Edmonton West is exercising his very considerable intellectual talents on that proposition, may I direct my remarks entirely to paragraph (d) which gives power to the governor in council to make regulations designating any city in eastern Canada to be the city in which the headquarters of the board be situated. Now, sir, I have a very great respect for all the cities in eastern Canada, as I have for those in western Canada, but there is only one national capital.

I venture to suggest that the headquarters of the board should be in the national capital. The national capital, Ottawa, has a dual distinction; first it is the shire town or county town of the county of Carleton and, second, it is the capital of Canada. Quite seriously I do believe that this dissipation of the various functions of government is not a wise or sound operation, and I think there should be a concentration of government within the national capital region.

Although I do not propose to move an amendment, I would venture to suggest also that the regulation should be one which would make it clear that the city in eastern Canada shall be that city which for a long period has been designated as the national capital of Canada.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, under clause 19 I too am going to press that there be some parliamentary consideration of any regulations under which this new legislation shall be administered. I would hope the minister would be well aware of the tremendous power being vested in this board. I would hope also the minister would be aware that, under the regulations, this particular board is intruding into almost every segment of the feed grain business, right from the primary producer up to the ultimate sale to the one who uses it to finish livestock.

Not only does it intrude into every segment of the business but, if the terms of clause 17 are as they appear, this board can intrude into the normal business of grain handling, with unlimited funds. Because of this it could cause serious havoc in the normal grain channels. Surely the object of this legislation is merely to stabilize grain prices in eastern Canada and British Columbia, to make sure that there is not an undue rise and fall and to make sure there is not an artificial scarcity promoted for the prime purpose of upping the prices.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, at the very root of this bill is a desire to accomplish this with a minimum amount of uprooting of the normal function of the grain trade. I think it would be a sad thing indeed if because of the regulations there was a disruption to any great degree. I am sure the minister is well aware, that, under the terms of this bill we see before us, not only is this board allowed to take whatever steps it deems necessary in the buying, selling, transporting or storing of all feed grains used in eastern Canada, but under the regulations as set out in this bill it also has the power to require any segment of the grain trade, any merchant, any co-operative, or any company engaged in any part of the four specific undertakings where grain is concerned, to make available to it at any time the complete transactions they have undertaken in this particular trade.

At any time the board can demand to see the books; in other words, it can intrude into the innermost business of any segment of the grain trade. Surely an intrusion to this degree into any industry in Canada must be regarded with a great deal of caution. It is because of these absolute powers which are granted under the terms and provisions of this particular bill that I am very insistent that parliament have some control over and some opportunity to peruse most carefully the regulations under which the industry will be required to act, when this bill we have before us comes into effect.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I have had an opportunity to re-read the remarks I was making before the dinner adjournment. I had asked the minister a question with regard to the possible extension of the classes of livestock defined in the bill. Perhaps he could supply me with information concerning what types, besides those enumerated in the definition clause on page 2, might be deemed to be livestock.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, I think the definition which appears in clause 2(h) indicates clearly that livestock means cattle, sheep, swine and so on, and other classes of livestock as may be designated by regulation. This would include I suppose horses and rabbits.

Mr. Lambert: And goats?

Mr. Sauvé: Yes, I suppose goats, too.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the minister said a few moments ago he would be willing to accept an amendment to clause 19 which would give effect to the suggestions of hon. members regarding the right of parliament to review the regulations that might be adopted. The argument was advanced that what might be called a second piece of legislation comes into effect as a result of the regulations adopted following the passage of this bill.

If the minister is willing to accept my suggestion I should like to suggest that section 19 be amended by adding the following words after the word "regulations" in the first line:

—subject to annual review by the House of Commons or a committee of the House of Commons,—

Clause 19 following the adoption of this amendment would read:

The governor in council may make regulations, subject to annual review by the House of Commons or a committee of the House of Commons,—

This would be followed by that which now appears in the paragraphs and subparagraphs of clause 19. Perhaps the minister would be prepared to move that amendment, if it is acceptable.

Mr. Sauvé: I understand another hon. member is drafting an amendment to this clause. I should like to have that before commenting, and perhaps it could be submitted in writing.

Mr. Lambert: I shall be glad to send the minister a copy of the amendment I intend to propose. I would move:

That the period after the word "act" in line 17 of clause 19 be deleted and there be added the following proviso:

"Provided that any such regulation or regulations shall be tabled in parliament within ten days of the approval thereof by the governor in council, providing that parliament shall then be in session, otherwise within the first five days after the commencement of the next ensuing session of parliament".

Mr. Sauvé: In principle that is exactly what the Regulations Act, 1950, chapter 235 says. It states:

Every regulation shall be laid before parliament within 15 days after it is published in the Canada Gazette or, if parliament is not then in session, within 15 days after the commencement of the next ensuing session.

That requirement is already included in the Regulations Act and I do not see that we would be improving the situation by including this requirement in the bill.

Mr. Lambert: The difficulty I find in this regard is in keeping up with the items that are tabled. There is no indication in Votes and Proceedings as to when these things were tabled. Since we are dealing with an agricultural subject at this time, let me suggest that in order to find these regulations one must search for a tiny needle in a haystack. I have always felt that a central record of these regulations should be kept at the Library of Parliament, in chronological order. Otherwise one has to ge through Votes and Proceedings for a whole year to find when ministers of the crown tabled regulations, reports or returns as required by law.

Earlier this year one of the minister's colleagues was prepared to accept an amendment in order to improve an important piece of legislation, requiring these regulations to be formally tabled and drawn to our attention. I am aware that there exist these anterior regulations of a general nature. If the minister feels my amendment is redundant I do not intend to press it or maintain a standing fight. This is something I wanted to bring to the attention of the house.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may say a word about the historical background of the Regulations Act to which the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development has referred. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will recall very well that this is really a monument to the present Leader of the Official Opposition. I am surprised that the hon. member for Edmonton West is not aware of that fact.

Years ago the Leader of the Opposition lectured this house frequently about what he called government by order in council, and he persuaded Mr. St. Laurent, who was then the prime minister, that these orders in council having the force of law should be made public regularly. I think that right hon. gentleman is entitled to some credit for the Regulations Act. I also think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who was a vigilant member of the house in those days, is entitled to some credit.

Mr. Knowles: Please remember that I am still here.

Mr. Pickersgill: You are here again, but there was an interval.

Mr. Knowles: All I can say is such an interval would be good for every member.

Mr. Pickersgill: In any event, let me proceed with my historical reminiscence. The Regulations Act required the publication of every regulation that had the force of law. It also required that these regulations be consolidated regularly and published in consecutive fashion. To find one you do not have to look for a needle in a haystack. Indeed, this is not a haystack at all; there is a very well organized compilation of statutory orders and regulations which are available for anyone to read. We know not merely what the law is, directly, as legislated, but what the law is by virtue of the power of regulation given by parliament.

It does not seem to me that by the adoption of the hon. member's amendment we would be changing the law at all. This statute is already in effect, and therefore the proposed amendment is redundant and unnecessary because of the Regulations Act.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I suggest that my amendment takes the law one step further in that it requires regulations to be tabled within ten days of approval. The present statute requires that the regulations passed during the year be tabled at the beginning of the next session of parliament. I am subject to correction, but it seems to me that this is the correct interpretation. If I am wrong, I hope the minister can correct me.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, I think I should read section 7 of the Regulations Act, chapter 235 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952:

> Every regulation shall be laid before parliament within 15 days after it is published in the Canada Gazette or, if parliament is not then in session, within 15 days after the commencement of the next ensuing session.

Is the hon. member satisfied with this?

Mr. Lambert: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Under the circumstances I would be prepared to withdraw my amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: Do I understand that the hon. member for Edmonton West wishes to withdraw the amendment?

Mr. Lambert: Yes, Mr. Chairman, under the circumstances.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the hon. member the leave of the committee to withdraw this amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Lambert) withdrawn.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I am sure it has been a matter of delight to all of us that the Minister of Transport has paid just tribute to the Leader of the Opposition for the authorship of the Regulations Act. If the hon. gentleman would only pay equal tribute to the Leader of the Opposition for all his other great accomplishments in the government of Canada, then we on this side would have less to quarrel about with the hon. gentleman's party. It is a very important achievement of the Leader of the Opposition that has been spoken of tonight. It is one of the crusades of his life. But there have been quite a number of others, and those others, I am sure, will live equally in the memory of the hon. gentleman from Bonavista-Twillingate as has the one he mentioned tonight.

Unfortunately I do not have before me the Regulations Act, although I see that the Minister of Transport has it. If I recollect correctly, when Mr. St. Laurent adopted the suggestions of the then hon. member for Prince Albert it was thought there might be some weaknesses in the act. When the section was read by the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development he said that the regulations should be tabled within 15 days after publication in the Canada Gazette. If I recollect correctly, there was some concern at the time the Regulations Act was passed whether all regulations of every character should be published in the Canada Gazette. If the Minister of Transport will assure me that those regulations which come under clause 19 are of the kind which must be published in the Canada Gazette, then of course the clause which the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development has read is totally applicable. If they are not of such a character, then of course the clause is meaningless. This is the total issue, Mr. Chairman. My question can be simply answered yes or no.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it is quite as simple as that, Mr. Chairman. The hon. gentleman is a lawyer and I am merely a poor layman—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —unlearned in the law. But it would appear to me that the hon. gentleman is as well able to construe a statute as I am. I would think the answer to this question is a simple yes; but he knows the rules about ministers, and especially unlearned ministers, giving legal opinions. I am sure we would be delighted to hear his legal opinion, now that he has recollected the situation in respect of the passage of this act. I thank the hon. member and the hon. member for Edmonton West for giving me the opportunity to remind them of one of the few achievements of the leader which all of them seem to have forgotten.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to move that clause 19 be amended by adding the following words after the word "regulations" in line 1:

> —subject to annual review by the House of Commons or a committee of the House of Commons.

In support of the amendment I have just suggested to the minister and the committee I should like to say that while there are provisions in the statutes now which provide that all the regulations made to administer any statute must be placed before this house at some time, there is no provision which requires that these regulations be considered by the house or in fact by a committee.

Bill No. C-218 setting up an eastern feed grain agency is a completely new departure in legislation. All through the progress of this legislation in the house and committee, apprehensions have been raised about what may be done with this act when passed. For example, I can remember more than one member rising in his place last Thursday and Friday and saying words to the effect that what is important is not so much what is in the act but how it is administered.

Apprehensions have been raised that the act when passed may defeat its purpose, if it is intended to be of assistance to the family-sized farm, the bona fide farmer, or whatever name you wish to call them, because it would be of even greater assistance to the large commercial enterprises and the integrated livestock feeding operations in eastern Canada, in that this provision could of course intensify competition in the livestock markets for the family-type farm. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, it would displace to some extent—and this has been drawn to the attention of the house previously—the geographical position of the livestock feeding operations in Canada, to the detriment of the efficiency of all our grain and livestock producing establishments.

Therefore, because it is a new departure in legislation and because we do not have a set of regulations before us now that would give us an indication of the details of how this act will be administered, I think it would be useful to have this additional provision in the act to ensure that the House of Commons, or perhaps the committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development, could consider the regulations. It would be mandatory that they consider the regulations, at least for the first few years after we have seen how this act operates.

The amendment I have suggested simply requires that the minister bring in the regulations annually for study, I would presume near the beginning of each session, and that he move that they be referred to the committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development for study. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think my amendment has some merit, particularly for the first two or three years of the operation of his act. After the board has been set up and the regulations have been in operation and amended from time to time, after we have seen how the act is working and have made sure that it is in fact functioning to achieve the end result that was intended, this amendment could of course be withdrawn in so far as its mandatory effect is concerned. Meanwhile I believe this is a useful kind of amendment that would in fact satisfy many members of the house who are wondering what is going to happen in respect of the operation of the act.

The minister himself, for example, said that he did not know what kind of regulations or administration were going to be set up to deal with the possibility of the larger feeders obtaining the major share of any subsidies for freight and storage that would be paid out of the operating fund of this board. Therefore I say to the minister in all seriousness that I think the house should have the right to review these regulations at least annually in the initial stages.

Mr. Sauvé: I would not like the house to think there is a sinister plot behind these regulations, that everything is being done behind closed doors. If hon. members would like to refer to Hansard of last Friday, they will see on page 8499 reference to an appendix containing regulations governing the actual system of payments. This has been published in an order in council, in the Canada Gazette and in the appendix. Clause 22 provides for an annual report to parliament. In reviewing the annual report the house may decide to send it to a committee for examination. I really do not see what benefit could be derived from this amendment as presently worded.

There is another point which I should like to make. After the regulations are passed, they will be reviewed by parliament a year later. I really do not see the necessity for this amendment as long as we proceed normally. I have gained the impression, after hearing some hon. members, that they believe some plot is being hatched against someone. I would like to know against whom, because the purpose of this bill is to improve the conditions of the farmers in eastern Canada and in British Columbia. It is not directed against anyone. This has been the platform of all the political parties for a good many years.

I have the impression that some hon. members think we want to act behind closed doors. We must help the boards to administer their acts and not hamper them in a way which will make it more difficult for them to function under an act of parliament. Parliament is the supreme authority, and every year it will review the report. There are a lot of tricky points here, and it is rather hard for the administrators to go beyond the powers established by an act of parliament.

Mr. Olson: I want to make it abundantly clear to the minister that I do not see anything sinister in this bill. I cannot think of anyone who would be plotting to do anything wrong under the authority granted in the bill. The minister has admitted quite properly, and I am sure I heard him say this on Thursday and Friday, that a very delicate balance has to be maintained between the subsidies that are paid through this board. If it were not for the subsidies on freight and storage, and the other function of distributing feed in eastern Canada, then there would be no purpose in the bill at all. The minister said, and I agree with him—in fact I suggested it to him before—that there is a very delicate balance between helping one region and avoiding to do damage to another one.

The minister asked whether the amendment would require that the House of Commons review and approve these regulations before they can become effective. The amendment does not say that, Mr. Chairman. All it says is that those regulations shall be subject to annual review. It is certain that such regulations as are passed by the governor in council would become effective on the same date following the passage of the order in council, as would be the case with any other order in council. All the amendment would do would be to make it mandatory that the government, at least while this board is being set up and going through its trial period, be required to refer this to the members of the House of Commons or a committee thereof to ensure that the regulations are in keeping with the spirit and intent of the act, and also to see that the board is functioning in the way in which we think it should. The minister is quite right when he suggests that almost every political party—he said in fact all political parties—has been in favour of setting up this kind of feed grain agency. That is right; but we are also anxious, as is the minister, to see that this balance is maintained between how far you should go without doing one region damage, and trying to help the other.

The minister also raised an objection to the amendment because of the statement in clause 22 that an annual report is to be made to parliament. That is true, but the clause does not require the regulations under which the feed grain agency is to operate to be reviewed by the House of Commons or by a committee of the house. This is the intent and purpose of the amendment I moved, Mr. Chairman. I therefore think the minister is being a little unfair when he suggests that the only reason for moving this kind of amendment is our suspicion of some sinister plot. As far as I am concerned this is simply not so. We have a great deal at stake in passing this kind of legislation to see whether it does what we want it to do, because under the legislation we are setting up an authority, and giving authority to a feed grain agency to make regulations. Serious damage could be done to livestock feeders and even to feed grain producers in certain parts of the country if a mistake were made.

I hope the minister will revert to the statement he made earlier today that he would be in favour of an amendment which would in fact subject these regulations to an annual review by members of this house, to ensure that what was being done was in line with what was intended. That is the purpose of my amendment. It does not interfere with the effective date of the order in council respecting these regulations any more than do other orders in council.

Clause 22, unless amended, does not require that an annual report be sent to a committee for a review of the regulations. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing superfluous about the amendment in so far as other clauses of the bill are concerned. As I said, I hope the minister will revert to what he said earlier this evening, that he would accept an amendment requiring an annual review of the regulations, at least until the feed grain agency is a well established body.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Amendment (Mr. Olson) negatived: Yeas, 59; nays, 80.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 19 carry?

Mr. Winkler: No, Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say that a number of members of the party across the floor came in late and voted.

Mr. Churchill: A few minutes ago the hon. member for Carleton drew the attention of the committee to paragraph (d) of clause 19 which reads:

—designating any city in eastern Canada to be the city in which the headquarters of the board shall be situated.

He mentioned that in his opinion it is more advisable to keep in the capital city of Canada the major boards that are established by the government. I wonder if the minister has any explanation for this unusual clause which appears in the bill, or if the Minister of Transport would give us an historical summary of how a clause like this originated? I would draw the minister's attention to the fact that in clause 6(h) the board has power to establish branches in Canada, or employ agents in Canada or elsewhere.

Will it not naturally follow that the headquarters of the board should be here in Ottawa and branches should be established elsewhere? The minister has in this bill left out British Columbia. That province does not qualify for the headquarters of the board, and I presume a branch might be established out in that province. If branches are to be established in the provinces, the minister may find himself in a position where the headquarters of the board would be established in one province in eastern Canada and a branch of the board in the city of Ottawa, the capital city of this country. This seems to me to be a rather strange method of dealing with this particular matter. I should like the minister to tell us if he has in mind the city of Charlottetown, for example, for the headquarters of the board?

The Chairman: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, but it is a little difficult for the Chair to hear the remarks being made by the hon. member.

Mr. Churchill: The situation was just about normal on the other side of the house, but I am glad the Chairman has drawn public attention to the fact the Liberal party does not pay much attention to what goes on in this chamber.

An hon. Member: A Liberal convention.

Mr. Churchill: Yes; it may be the last time I speak to a Liberal convention.

I wonder if the minister would explain now if Charlottetown would qualify for the headquarters of the board, and if not why not? One could go down the list and ask about Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland. Has "Joey" Smallwood heard about this? Perhaps the Minister of Transport could tell us?

I feel more free to speak on this particular matter than the hon. member for Carleton because, living as he does in Ottawa and representing a part of this great city, he might be a little shy about urging that the headquarters should be established here. I do draw attention to the fact that this is something that should be explained. When you look at the beginning of clause 19 you find that the governor in council may make regulations to designate any city; so the matter comes back to the cabinet. Why has the cabinet not made up its mind upon this matter? The minister is asking us to pass this legislation; then subsequently the cabinet will decide in which city the headquarters of the board will be established. Then, the pressures come from the various provinces as to what should be done, except that British Columbia and the three prairie provinces are excluded. I see no reason at all for this clause as it stands, and I will await the minister's explanation.

Mr. Sauvé: We have not mentioned any city, Mr. Chairman, because we want to consult the interested parties as to the possible location. The Canadian Wheat Board has its headquarters at Winnipeg, the centre of the trade, and the centre of the trade in feed grain is normally Montreal. It is quite possible that after consultation with interested parties Montreal could be the location of the headquarters of the agency. We are applying no different rule from the one that was applied to the Canadian Wheat Board when the headquarters were established in Winnipeg, not in Ottawa.

Mr. Churchill: I am not sure the analogy of the Canadian Wheat Board follows in this particular case. I am prepared to move an amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, as follows:

That in line 11, page 9, paragraph (d) of clause 19, the words "any city in eastern Canada" be struck out and that there be substituted therefor the word "Ottawa".

• (9:00 p.m.)

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, I have already explained that no decision has yet been taken as to the headquarters of the agency, because we feel we have to consult the interested parties. I should like to know from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre whether he would be ready to propose an amendment to move the headquarters of the Wheat Board from Winnipeg to Ottawa on the basis of the principle he is establishing. My point simply was that we should normally establish this headquarters, after consultation with the interested parties, in the centre of the trade involved. It is no fault of Ottawa that the centre of the feed grain trade is not Ottawa.

Mr. Churchill: The minister has demonstrated a lack of interest and knowledge on the part of the Liberal party with regard to western Canada. He is now suggesting that the Canadian Wheat Board should be transferred from the city of Winnipeg. It is the type of suggestion which comes from the members of the Liberal party, and explains in part their lack of support out on the prairies.

I have already said that the analogy with the Wheat Board is not at all similar to this situation. The Wheat Board deals with the great producing area in western Canada, the prairie provinces, that provides so much for our external trade and our balance of payments, something which this country needs. Winnipeg is very close to the producers, and there is a long history of activity in that city. There were other organizations which dealt with the grain trade before the government moved in to assist.

We are not being told by the minister, Mr. Chairman, that some city or other in eastern Canada will be more closely associated than another with feed grain. If this is the case, why did the minister not set this out in the original bill? He has left it wide open, and that is why I raised objection. He has in the bill "any city in eastern Canada". Why did he not name the city? Surely the cabinet can make up its mind, without changing it and then making it up again—or have someone write out a resignation? That is what I was after. Why leave the bill in this unfinished condition, when it would be a simple matter to insert whatever city the cabinet has decided upon? Leaving it wide open and uncertain is just another demonstration of the incompetence of the present government.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, I really regret that the hon. member was not here this afternoon or Friday when we received much good advice from opposition members to the effect that we should not set up this board without consulting the interested parties. It is precisely because we do want to consult the interested parties that we have drafted the clause in this way. Either we are doing the right thing in consulting people, or we are not. I do not think the hon. member would like us not to seek the advice of the people who would benefit from this legislation. We could not do so before, because the bill had not been passed. When it is passed we have the authority vested in the governor in council to establish regulations as outlined in clause 19. This is the democratic process, and I am surprised that my hon. friend does not recognize this in the intentions of the government in proposing this kind of legislation.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to deal with the minister's argument, but I would ask him to withdraw his remark that I was not here on Friday or this afternoon. I have been here and I would challenge the minister to equal my attendance in this chamber. I was not absent in some secret room when a vote was going on the other night, as were 15 members of the Liberal party.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I listened very carefully to the minister's explanation, which I thought was quite logical and reasonable. I think that what he intends to do is thoroughly sound from a democratic point of view.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, having listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) ask the minister to inform the house immediately as to where in eastern Canada the board is to set up its head office, I believe the member for Winnipeg South Centre only wants to play politics, as is customary with him.

This does not mean that I support entirely the minister's statement concerning clause 19 of Bill No. C-218, which reads as follows:

> The Governor in Council may make regulations
> (a) prescribing, with respect to payments related to the cost of feed grain storage and with respect to payments related to the cost of feed grain transportation, the classes of persons to whom and the terms and conditions on which such payments may be made and the rate of such payments within each of such areas within eastern Canada and British Columbia as may be prescribed by the regulations;
> (c) designating
> (i) any area in Ontario lying west of the meridian passing through the eastern boundary of the city of Port Arthur to be part of eastern Canada;

• (9:10 p.m.)

Can you imagine, Mr. Chairman, how many of the farmers in the Champlain electoral district will understand that designation of eastern Canada as any region lying west of the meridian passing through the eastern boundary of the city of Port Arthur? The Champlain district lies there, as does my own county. But where are the farmers, or even the lawyers or professionals, who will understand what constitutes eastern Canada? And we can include the Lotbinière district, across from Champlain—

Mr. Choquette: Will the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Caouette: Yes.

Mr. Choquette: Why would the hon. member have us believe that farmers are ignorant? Farmers are intelligent. Why would he have us believe otherwise?

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I will point out to the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) that farmers are intelligent, that settlers are intelligent. But I tell the hon. member for Lotbinière that lawyers are nitwits when they produce such bills as this one.

Mr. Choquette: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Caouette: A question of privilege on top of that.

Mr. Choquette: I appreciate the hon. member's eloquence; he is a quite talented fellow and I like him very much. Moreover, lawyers are not that innocent; they do their best to confuse the law in order to have clients.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I like nothing better than such a sincere admission by the hon. member for Lotbinière. Lawyers like to complicate laws so as to confuse everybody, and thus have clients, because people understand nothing about that mess of acts, amendments, clauses, sub-amendments. The hon. member for Lotbinière knows all about that, since he just confirmed what I said a moment ago.

Mr. Choquette: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. Frankly because I listened to the hon. member's speech and I do not take him too seriously, I think it proper to make a witty remark. I was not speaking seriously when I said that lawyers wanted to confuse the law; I just wanted to be witty, considering that the hon. member's speech was not serious, I thought it proper to be witty.

[Mr. Caouette.]

[English]

The Chairman: Order. It might be as well for the committee to get back to discussing Clause 19.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I will gladly come back to clause 19. However, I would like to be allowed, through you, to tell the hon. member for Lotbinière that if my remarks do not seem serious, I think that what he said a little earlier lacked seriousness also.

To continue consideration of clause 19 of Bill No. C-218, Mr. Chairman, I wish to point out that a little earlier the minister referred to Hansard of three days ago to say that the opponents of the bill had amplified their objections to the said bill.

The minister told us that parliament is the supreme authority with regard to the passing of those regulations or that bill entitled: An act to provide assistance to livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia.

The minister told us that there is nothing behind the scenes; no one is trying to influence the government, no one is trying to influence the minister, no one is trying to oppose the bill or object to it.

Mr. Chairman, subparagraph (c) of clause 19 reads as follows:

(c) designating

(i) any area in Ontario lying west of the meridian passing through the eastern boundary of the city of Port Arthur to be part of eastern Canada;

(ii) any grade of wheat grown in the designated area not to be a feed grain,

(iii) any grain or grain product to be a feed grain, or

(iv) any class of livestock to be livestock for the purposes of this Act;

And we now come to sub-clause (d), and I quote:

(d) designating any city in Eastern Canada to be the city in which the headquarters of the Board shall be situated;

Mr. Chairman, according to that clause, the meridian passing through the eastern boundary of the city of Port Arthur really means that the eastern part of Canada starts in one section of Port Arthur, going east, and that British Columbia is the westernmost part of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, in asking that Winnipeg be appointed the organization centre for the distribution and sale of these feed grains in Canada, in eastern Canada as in British Columbia, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre departs from the rules, for the Board of Grain Commissioners has its headquarters in Winnipeg, and Winnipeg is not considered as an eastern Canadian city. In fact, Winnipeg is considered as a central Canadian city, where the wheat and grain needed in eastern and western Canada is produced.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member permit a question?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Certainly.

[English]

Mr. Churchill: Just so that there may be no more confusion than the hon. member has already raised, may I point out that I never suggested Winnipeg should be the headquarters of this board, as the hon. member has just said.

Mr. Caouette: No. I said that Winnipeg is already the centre of the corn exchange in Canada. We do not want Winnipeg as a grain distributor in Canada; we want it to be somewhere else. We are against centralization and the hon. member is in favour of centralization.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, we do not want Winnipeg to keep everything, namely the production and distribution of feed grains; other places should be suggested, but the member for Winnipeg South Centre mentions no other town but Winnipeg to ensure the distribution or control of the grains which come to us from the Canadian mid-west.

Mr. Chairman, this bill must increasingly make it possible for the people in eastern Canada to take advantage of and to benefit from the production of grain in our country.

Now, we of the Ralliement Créditiste, have asked, on many occasions, that feed grains be stored in eastern Canada, in our province of Quebec, in Ontario, in order to assist the eastern farmers. This clause 19 will help as long as there are no middlemen to take away from the farmers in Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia, the profits they need. We do not object to this Bill No. C-218, as long as it meets and follows up efficiently the objects set forth, the admitted purposes contained in this legislation.

The farmers from the Quebec district, from the constituencies of Champlain and of Trois-Rivières, from my district, from the lower St. Lawrence region, from Bellechasse, including those from Ontario, will profit from this legislation. But if middlemen, for instance, should seek to prevent farmers from deriving such benefits, then, Mr. Chairman, we shall take a strong stand and we will take to task the minister who is responsible for this legislation. But until then, we are ready to support Bill No. C-218, provided our farmers profit thereby.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to delay the deliberations of the committee and I hasten to apologize to my friends in the Liberal party for keeping them from other activities. However, in seconding the amendment—

An hon. Member: When is your leadership convention?

Mr. Winkler: We don't forget the past. A few of you who have not been here too long do not bother me. I wish to reply to the hon. member who has just taken his seat in relation to his remarks about the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, and the question of playing politics. I wonder who is playing politics, when the terms of this bill are as vague as they are.

I think we should consider the national capital as the headquarters of the proposed body. I notice that the Minister of Agriculture has lately realized the importance of this argument in relation to the milk industry, and will do something about it next year. We do not consider Ottawa as part of any province, but as the national capital.

The hon. member for Villeneuve said the bill will benefit Ontario, Quebec and other parts of eastern Canada. That is quite true. My own constituency may benefit from it and therefore I might request that the headquarters of the body be located there. However I think the most central spot would be the national capital. I have seconded the amendment and I hope the minister will accept it.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Since the minister has drawn a comparison between the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board and of the proposed feed board, I would like to draw to his attention that the operations of the Wheat Board are entirely financed by the producers of grain in western Canada, and the operations of the feed board are going to be financed by the taxpayers of Canada at large.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the comments of the hon. member for Villeneuve with respect to centralization, and his saying that in view of the fact that the marketing centre for grain is located in Winnipeg the distribution centre should not be located there. I would like to know how far he is willing to pursue this thesis on centralization with respect to other industries—for example with respect to our publicly owned air line and its headquarters location in Winnipeg or Montreal. Where does he think centralization starts and ends? Winnipeg is the logical centre for the proposed board. I would be much interested in pursuing this question with the hon. member for Villeneuve, either inside or outside the chamber.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has asked what I mean by centralization and decentralization, and has mentioned Air Canada. I am strongly in favour of decentralization, whether it be to Montreal or Winnipeg, so that Canada can present a truly national figure, so that organizations are attached not to one section or sector of our economy but to the whole of Canada. I am not asking Winnipeg to come to Montreal or Noranda, just as I would not ask Montreal and Noranda to transfer to Winnipeg. I would like Winnipeg, Montreal and Noranda to live together as Canadians.

Mr. Patterson: I have listened with a great deal of interest to the exchanges that have taken place regarding the location of the headquarters of the feed grain agency. The Minister of Forestry and Rural Development has said we should permit consultation with the organization respecting the proper place for its headquarters, but he went on to say it should be located in eastern Canada. I would remind him that this bill is entitled, "An act to provide assistance to livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia," and I think the British Columbia aspect has been forgotten.

If the matter is to be settled by consultation, then the minister should delete his reference to eastern Canada. I am not going to suggest that the headquarters should be located in Vancouver, which would be a beautiful spot, or at Chilliwack in my constituency, a beautiful little city in a splendid location. I am not suggesting that; but I do point out the unfairness of the minister's saying there will be consultation, but the location must be in eastern Canada. I believe the capital city would be the proper place for the headquarters.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I would have thought the merit of this amendment was so obvious that it would have the unanimous support of the committee. Hon. members will realize how unprejudiced I am when I say that I have escaped living in Ottawa by 40 rods.

I suggest that the dissipation of the operations of government into various other communities is an unsound proposition. If there is to be any dissipation, the government should have courage and put it forward in legislation. When the Canadian Wheat Board Act was passed the government of the day came to parliament and said that "the headquarters shall be in the city of Winnipeg in the province of Manitoba." That was all right, and the House of Commons made the decision in that case.

• (9:30 p.m.)

What is the minister proposing? He is proposing the secrecy of the privy council chamber; he wants to get behind closed doors so that he can have all the logrolling. The Minister of Agriculture will say he can get some votes in Renfrew if it is taken to Renfrew. Then the Secretary of State for External Affairs will say, "Oh, yes; Windsor is the centre of the universe". The Minister of Transport will say "Well, if we can get it far enough east we can get it down to Bonavista". Behind closed doors we will have all this logrolling going on from time to time.

Mr. Greene: Will the hon. member tell me whether he is against locating the headquarters in Renfrew.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, if I had my choice, legitimately, I would put it in the community in which the hon. gentleman is interested, and that is the community of Carp.

Mr. Pickersgill: What have you against Bell's Corners?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): We are going to have this behind closed doors and have a lot of logrolling, with one minister vying with another to get an operation of government. We have seen the dissipation. We saw the National Film Board taken out of this community. We saw homes being destroyed in the city of Ottawa. Hon. gentlemen opposite know all about what has happened. Had it not been for the protests from this side of the house there would have been almost total dissipation of the national capital.

We know it is perfectly obvious that the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development intends to put this in the city of Montreal. Why does he not have the courage to put it in this legislation? Come on; move an amendment to have it in the city of Montreal instead of Ottawa, and then put it forward to the house in a legitimate and proper way. Then we can have this house debate it, instead of all this logrolling. I know what goes on behind closed doors when these gentlemen get themselves in the circumstances they do so often, sitting day by day, worrying about their little chores. If hon. gentlemen opposite are not prepared to support this, then let them move an amendment so that the house can decide, as was done in the case of the Canadian Wheat Board, and not have it as something behind closed doors.

Mr. Jorgenson: Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the amendment.

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Jorgenson: The amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. But, I should like to accept the argument proposed by the minister. He suggested—and I do not disagree with him—that the headquarters of this board should be located in the centre of the grain trade in eastern Canada. I quite agree with that argument. There is a stock exchange in Montreal and there is a stock exchange in Toronto. I think the logical place then would be somewhere in between these two centres, and that would be right here in the city of Ottawa. Using the minister's own argument I would suggest that we adopt this amendment and have the headquarters of this agency located in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Chairman, I missed the first part of this travelling back and forth across the country, while I was having my supper. Apparently I missed part of the trip. So far as I am concerned the minister can place the headquarters wherever he wants; it does not make any difference to me or to the farmers so long as it is in a place where it will give the results these people expect. You can place it in Halifax or Vancouver. If it is going to work better in Vancouver, then place it there. If we keep this up, each member will want it in his own constituency, and for a good reason. All I am concerned with is that we have it some place where we can get hold of these birds whenever we need them, and can talk to them. I am willing to give them air conditioned apartments, but let them do the job; that is all I am concerned about and this is all the farmers are concerned about. Let us stop beating about the bush, and trust the minister to put it somewhere. I am willing to trust the minister to the extent that I believe he will leave it within the jurisdiction of Canada. If he goes out of the country, then we can have a special debate.

Mr. Chairman, there is another matter here which concerns the cost of feed grain storage and the payment related to the cost of feed grain transportation, as set out in paragraph (a). Not too long ago I asked a question of the minister in the house concerning discussions which have been going on at least in eastern Canada, among the millers, the storage agencies, the railroads and the trucking industry. Following a meeting which had taken place at Drummondville, and another on Tuesday or Wednesday of last week in Montreal in the Chamber of Commerce building with railroad representatives concerning the transportation of grain, I asked the minister whether any of his colleagues had any idea of transferring everything to the railroads. From the discussions which came out of these meetings, apparently one man foresaw for the coming year a need for 40,000 bushels. He ordered 30,000 bushels, and then used only 26,000. Yet he had to pay the transportation on the whole 30,000 bushels. One thing the millers are not going to handle is a deficit on the selling price for the following year. Who is going to get it in the neck?—the farmers. The miller is not going to assume deficits year after year. If they order more than they need, they are going to pay for it.

The railroads cannot go everywhere. The trucking industry cannot do what the railroads can. We have to have a combination of both. In the Montreal area the railroads refused the franchise because they said they could not do the job for the next several months. They said they cannot keep up with the work they have now. The trucking industry was angry; the millers were angry. Some of the farmers were happy, but they did not know the whole story. Had they known the whole story they might have sent some men here to teach us some common sense. In the payment of these subsidies or charges I hope the minister will keep a close tab on what he is paying, for the simple reason that you cannot let these things run themselves. Some people will be making an awful lot of profit, but if you mention it to them they will say they are having a hard time.

This is something that should be supervised by the minister. Why do things become so expensive to transport from Port Arthur to eastern Canada? The western farmers pay for the transportation of this grain to Port Arthur, so why is it so expensive to transport it from there to eastern Canada? I have often heard it suggested that, because of transportation costs, feed grain that sells at $2 per hundred pounds in Port Arthur sells for $6 in eastern Canada.

Perhaps the minister should initiate a study of the profits that are being made. I suggest that he keep alert in respect of these increasing costs and make an effort to determine whether some speculation is taking place. Perhaps he should see that some sanctions are taken against people who are making undue profits in this regard. Something should be done in a positive way by the Department of Transport, perhaps by reducing or stopping subsidies, to see that these excessively high transportation costs are eliminated.

The minister as well as the board should report to this house in respect of transportation costs. This is something that would be of interest to the agriculture committee, if that is the committee that will consider this subject. I did not inquire of the minister as to what committee would consider this whole situation, and there is some doubt because the minister responsible is the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. I hope he will keep in close touch with this situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, in my province people have a habit of saying that certain colours cause violent reactions in some species of creatures which God has put on this earth. The red badges worn by some members of this house tonight have a similar effect on certain members of the opposition, since we are now witnessing the sort of event which should take place on more worthy occasions.

We are in fact trying to decide on the location of the headquarters of this feed board. Those who, like myself, have listened to the debate with an open mind, which is necessary under the circumstances, will notice that the House of Commons will never find an acceptable solution with the spirit pervading this house at the present time, since one member suggests Vancouver, another Chilliwack, and others Rouyn, Montreal, Quebec, and Mégantic. I think this proves that the bill we are now studying—

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. I never suggested Mégantic, I said anywhere, any place which would suit the Canadian farmers.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to see that my colleague does not show this narrow-mindedness. I will say this about him, he is not narrow-minded. He was misunderstood. But I want to say this, Mr. Chairman, that if the decision is left to this house, we will never get anywhere, because each is thinking of his home town and his own political interests, and as the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) said earlier: this is unavoidable.

I am not suggesting that the headquarters of this board should be located in Trois-Rivières, although I can think of many reasons why it would be the ideal place. But I think the minister was right in spelling out in the bill that the decision regarding the best place for the establishment of the headquarters of this board should be left to its members who will not be influenced as much as we might be by electoral and partisan considerations and who will surely look after the interests of all farmers affected by this legislation. As far as I am concerned, I have no objection to Ottawa being chosen. However, many members will agree with me that, for all sorts of reasons, there is no doubt congestion within the civil service in Ottawa as evidenced by a great many incidents. But I would have no objection to establishing the board in Ottawa; it would be acceptable to me. Someone mentioned Vancouver a moment ago, but I do not think he was serious.

Mr. Chairman, I will make my closing remarks as brief as I can, appealing to the hon. members to remain calm even if our friends, the Liberals, are overwhelmed with partisan joy because their convention has never been as successful in past years; even though this unexpected fervour on the part of the Liberals seems to spur on and challenge our friends of the Conservative party who want to show the world that they can do just as well; even though our friends of the Social Credit party who have also just returned from a sort of retreat are convinced they should prove to the rest of the country that they are perhaps in a better position to assure the common weal.

Let us forget those things for the time being, since we are not in the mood to select the headquarters this evening. Let us endorse the minister's proposal as men of good will should prove to the rest of the country that and say: We shall let the members of this board, who will not be influenced by such considerations but who will concern themselves instead with the common good, select their headquarters themselves.

[English]

Mr. Peters: I do not intend to make a bid for the establishment of the headquarters of this board in northern Ontario, but I should like to make reference to clause 19(c)(ii) which refers to the fact that any grade of wheat grown in a designated area is not to be designated as feed grain. I assume the designated area is eastern Canada and British Columbia, and I am wondering why certain types of wheat will not be designated as feed grain. In Ontario particularly a lot of wheat is grown for feed. I am sure the Minister of Agriculture will agree with me when I suggest that a lot of the wheat grown in the Renfrew district and in northern Ontario is not grown for the purpose of making flour. Many farmers decide which crop they will plant on the basis of the greatest yield per acre, and as a result grow oats, barley, wheat and other feed grains.

Many grades of wheat grown in the designated areas I am sure will be of a grade not suitable for commercial purposes. I see no reason why this particular subparagraph should be included in the bill.

Mr. Sauvé: This particular principle complies with a principle included in a Wheat Board regulation.

Mr. Peters: That fact does not impress me. In Ontario we have a wheat marketing board and it would be unrealistic to suggest that all the wheat marketed by that board is destined for flour mills. That is not the case. A certain percentage of the wheat grown in the area from which I come does not go to the mills, but is used for feed, and we produce both hard and soft wheat. Surely the minister would not consider this grain as grain falling within the category set out in this subparagraph.

Mr. Sauvé: I suggest the hon. member consult the definition of "designated area" in clause 2 appearing on page 1 of the bill, which states that it is the prairie provinces which are designated, rather than eastern Canada. Clause 2(1)(e) states:

"designated area" means that area comprised of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and those parts of the province of British Columbia known as the Peace River—

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, clause 19(c)(i) states:

—any area in Ontario lying west of the meridian passing through the eastern boundary of the city of Port Arthur to be part of eastern Canada,—

• (9:50 p.m.)

I presume that to be the designation of a consumption area. There may be some clarification in this regard in that there is a distinction between areas designated as consumption and production areas. Obviously if production takes place in an area falling in the eastern designated area the board should be able to handle this product. If this is not done we will immediately receive many complaints. Perhaps there just needs to be some clarification in the clause with regard to designation, because as the clause now stands it indicates to me at least that the farmer in eastern Canada will not be able to designate any wheat production as a feed grain.

Mr. Sauvé: Mr. Chairman, the provisions of the bill, the terms of payment, and so on, apply to eastern Canada. In the definition of this bill eastern Canada starts at Port Arthur and covers those areas in any parts of Ontario that could be designated by order in council, and some parts of British Columbia. These are the areas to which the benefits of the bill are extended.

It is the Wheat Board that designates the grade of wheat grown in a specific area as not being a feed grain. Regulation 595 applies in this regard. You have to refer to clause 2 and the definition of such area. Clause 2 (1) (e) says:

"designated area" means that area comprised of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—

And so on. It is the Wheat Board which decides what grains are feed grains, and those which are not. A similar regulation is found in other legislation of this type.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Canadian Livestock Feed Board

During the taking of the vote:

The Chairman: Order, please. May I request that those hon. members who were not in the chamber when the vote was called step outside, please.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Amendment Mr. Churchill negatived: Yeas, 43; nays, 85.

The Chairman: Order. I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 19 carry?

Mr. Danforth: No, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Filibuster.

Mr. Danforth: This clause outlines regulations, but as yet there is no regulation anywhere in this bill that deals with grievances and the method of handling them. When the board is set up and these provisions are brought into being, the board will have absolute control to buy, sell, transport, store, set rates, set subsidies and designate movements of grain. It will also have the power to designate the storage and agents to buy, sell and handle all the business that is to be found in the movement of eastern feed grain.

Such intrusion into this great industry, in which millions of dollars are involved, cannot take place without working hardships on some segments of the industry. As a matter of fact, if we are to accomplish the very purpose we set out to accomplish in this bill it is very probable that grave financial losses could be incurred by the trade. I hold no particular brief for the trade, but I am justly concerned that anyone who is suffering financial hardship, whose business is impaired in any way, should have a place to which to bring his grievances, in order that he might receive the just and careful consideration to which he is entitled.

It had been my hope that when the amendment was brought in the regulations could be brought under annual review by this house or a standing committee, that this could be the forum to which people could make representation, before which witnesses could be called and the matter could be investigated in depth, and if a hardship was found to exist the necessary steps could be taken to correct the grievance.

This is one of the regulations I am most concerned about, namely that there be some forum which could consider a redress of grievances, and justice could be done promptly without a delay of many months. I would hope that the minister would not give me the stock answer that representations could be made in the regular way. There are three avenues of approach in this regard. There is the direct approach to the minister, the direct approach to the board that is to be constituted, or perhaps the approach is to the advisory committee that will be set up to advise the board. The various segments of this industry will be very interested in knowing what is the proper approach to take and the one that will take the least possible time. I would hope that the minister could in some detail spell out what he considers to be the proper avenue of approach, in order that such grievances may be redressed correctly, justly and quickly.

Mr. Sauvé: This is an administrative board, Mr. Chairman. Since it is an administrative board, it has the same powers and acts in the same way as other boards. In fact its conditions are similar to those under which the Wheat Board operates. A farmer can appeal against a decision of the Wheat Board, and he will be able to appeal against a decision of this board. If the board surpasses its authority people can, by prerogative writ, take their grievances to the courts.

Mr. Danforth: Am I to understand from the minister's answer that the only redress, the only appeal in respect of hardships that are being brought about if this legislation is passed is recourse by private individuals or corporations to the courts? There must be some approach to parliament or through parliamentary representatives in order to bring about a redress, if such is found to be necessary.

Mr. Sauvé: If the board surpasses the autority given it by this bill, this step could be taken; otherwise—and I discussed this matter last Friday—members of parliament can be made aware of the problems of their constituents. I do not see how this method differs from the normal methods contained in legislation with respect to similar boards.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Clause 19 agreed to.

Mr. Danforth: It is ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the house will be asked to consider Item No. 82 on today's order paper, second reading of the medicare bill.

Mr. Speaker, before you announce the adjournment proceedings, I understand a wish has been expressed by some hon. members that we dispense with the usual adjournment proceedings tonight, and I understand there is agreement on that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to dispense with the adjournment debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, October 12, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NUGENT—ALLEGED TAMPERING WITH WITNESS BY DEFENCE MINISTER

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting all hon. members of this house. I am glad to see that the Minister of National Defence has taken his place, because the charge affects that minister.

My charge, Mr. Speaker, is simply this; that the Minister of National Defence has breached the privileges of this house by tampering with a witness in respect of the evidence to be given before a committee of this house, the witness being Rear Admiral W. M. Landymore, the committee being the standing committee on national defence, and the evidence in question being the admiral's brief presented to the committee on June 23, 1966.

Mr. Speaker, a brief résumé of the facts I believe is necessary to establish a prima facie case of breach of privilege. For the purpose of the prima facie case I will deal very briefly with the events as I understand they occurred. The committee requested the presence of Admiral Landymore before it to give evidence in respect of his command; the admiral prepared a brief of the evidence which he thought was requested and which in his opinion was necessary to comply with the wishes of that committee.

The admiral was requested or ordered by the Minister of National Defence to appear in the minister's office prior to meeting with the committee for the purpose of having the minister hear that brief. The brief was presented orally to the minister in his office, and at the conclusion of that presentation the admiral was requested to leave a copy with the minister. Quite late that evening the brief was returned to the admiral, and when he checked it over he found that part of it had been taken out—four pages to be exact—and two pages substituted therefor. My instructions are that he saw the minister the next morning, at which time the minister indicated and defended the reason the brief was changed.

The admiral says he did not consent to the change in the brief and that the changes made were very substantial in that they related to the personnel question in the command. He indicated that not only were four pages taken out of the brief, but an accompanying chart and a graph were missing.

In my opinion the result of this was that an important part of the admiral's testimony to the committee was removed with some innocuous words substituted therefor. This deprived the committee of information which was absolutely essential if that committee was to give consideration to the points in respect of which it was meeting.

It is my contention, sir, that neither the minister nor anyone else has the right to interfere with a witness or the testimony he intends to give, and that this is sufficient to establish a prima facie case. I have some references as to the legal situation, but let me say briefly at this time that the charge is based on citation 308 of Beauchesne. Let me read the first sentence of that citation. It states:

> To tamper with a witness in regard to the evidence to be given before either house or any committee of either house or to endeavour directly or indirectly, to deter or hinder any person from appearing or giving evidence is a breach of privilege.

That is the breach of privilege alleged, Mr. Speaker. If the Chair wishes further support of my argument I shall be pleased to provide it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. That hon. member referred to one citation of Beauchesne, and I should like to refer him to another, namely citation 104(5) which reads in part as follows:

> As a motion taken at the time for matters of privilege is thereby given precedence over the prearranged program of public business, the Speaker requires to be satisfied, both that there is a prima facie case that a breach of privilege has been committed, and also that the matter is being raised at the earliest opportunity.

I should also like to refer the hon. member to page 378 of May's seventeenth edition, where the following is stated:

The matter must be raised at the earliest opportunity. A matter of privilege which claims precedence over other public business should be a subject which has recently arisen.

The older rulings applied a further condition, that a matter to secure precedence must be one of urgency. But this condition seems to have been waived, and later Speakers have satisfied themselves with insisting that a matter should be raised at the earliest opportunity.

A matter which occurred during the recess was refused precedence as a matter of privilege because it was not raised at the commencement of the session.

Similarly a matter concerning an article in a newspaper published on 6 May was refused precedence because it was not raised till the 14th and a speech reported on a Saturday because it was not raised until the following Tuesday. On the other hand, when special circumstances justified it, the Speaker has permitted a member to raise a matter on the day following the date of issue of the newspaper containing the article complained of.

These citations show how strict are our rules and precedents in connection with the necessity of raising a matter at the earliest possible opportunity.

The hon. member knows, as all hon. members know, that we have any number of precedents on this very important point. I have one before me, reported in Hansard of May 10, 1966, at pages 4923-24. On that day the hon. member for Québec-Montmorency raised a matter referring to a broadcast of the C.B.C. on May 5. The Chair ruled as follows:

Since this involves a matter which, according to the hon. member himself, goes back to Thursday last, I do not feel the question of privilege has been raised at the earliest opportunity. For this reason, I cannot find that a question of privilege exists in the circumstances.

The hon. member knows this question has been raised on a number of occasions in the current session. In particular the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Forrestall) raised this very matter in connection with a proposal for adjournment under standing order 26 on September 7 last, and on August 30, 1966 a number of questions were asked by the hon. member for Vancouver East and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

It is obvious that this matter has not been raised in the form of a question of privilege at the earliest possible opportunity. For this reason I must rule, not on the question of whether there is a prima facie case but on the point of order as to whether this matter has been raised at the earliest opportunity, and I suggest to the hon. member that he has not satisfied this requirement.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, may I be heard on that point of order? I regret that it had not occurred to me to give the Chair—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is a very simple point. I see no purpose in reopening the question. I do not want to be unfair to the hon. member. He has a matter which he considers of great urgency and I recognize, with him, that it is a matter of considerable importance. But to the Chair this is such an obvious point, namely that a matter has to be raised at the earliest opportunity, and it is one on which we have had any number of precedents. It has been raised by the hon. member for Halifax and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. I do not think the matter can be reopened at this time as a question of privilege.

Mr. Nugent: I am sure I can satisfy the Chair that this is the earliest opportunity, and I should like to be heard on that point. I submit to Your Honour that the only point that has occurred to you so far is the lapse of time, and I should like to very briefly present to you argument in support of my contention that this is my earliest opportunity, by relating the facts.

First, I was not a member of the committee. Second, this is a very, very serious matter and a very important matter. It is a charge against a minister of the crown, that cannot be raised lightly. It is true there have been several references in this house to the Landymore testimony, but the minister has always given explanations which might or might not cover the situation.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the only time I had an opportunity to check into this matter was when I became aware of the facts and convinced of the facts so that I had proof of statements made. Only at that time was it possible for me to raise the matter, bearing in mind the responsibility of a member not to raise such matters lightly and without investigation. I came into possession of evidence in this case only last week end when I went to Halifax and heard Admiral Landymore swear positively to the facts so that there was, then, evidence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nugent: It was at that point, and only at that point, that I had satisfied myself with regard to the possibility of raising this matter in the house.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the hon. member's anxiety to express his point of view on the point of order as to whether he raised the question at the earliest opportunity. My suggestion to him and my submission to the house is that it is not the sense of the rules and the purport of the practices of this chamber that when after a month, two months or six months a member has satisfied himself that he has a good case he can come forward and raise the matter as a question of privilege.

I suggest to the hon. member that there is no precedent whatever that I have been able to ascertain or that I could quote in support of the hon. member's point of view. With regret I must maintain the ruling I made a moment ago, that this matter having been raised—and it is substantially the same matter that the hon. member now raises—and put before the house by way of questions, and particularly as a motion by the hon. member for Halifax under standing order 26, it cannot be considered now.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I believe I am entitled to present my case to prove to the Chair that this is the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, may I have a moment to speak on a point of order?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the minister of defence is allowed to make a statement now, we will obviously have a debate.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The rule of the house is very clear and simple. I suggest to the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona that he is bound by it. This ruling is common practice, and I am sure that hon. members will want to respect it and abide by it. I am convinced it is the correct ruling under the present circumstances.

Mr. Nugent: I am bound by your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I still think I am within the rule, and I think I can so persuade Your Honour. I believe it is one of the oldest rules in this house that a member cannot be deprived of his right to speak and to see whether he is within the rules, and I ask Your Honour for that right.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Of course every member has the right to speak, but he can only do so within the rules. There are rules governing debate, rules which specify when a member can intervene, and these rules govern all members including the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I realize how important this matter is to him and how important it is to the Minister of National Defence, but if the hon. member thinks this is a matter which should be considered by the house there are other ways of doing it. He can give notice of a motion which will be placed on the order paper. I realize this is not much consolation to the hon. member, but this is what the rules provide for. The Chair did not make the rules, but I am required to ask hon. members to co-operate with me to have them respected.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I am not asking to be relieved from the rules. There are very strict and stringent rules on how a member may rise in his place and take the responsibility for charges which are made in the house. These require extreme care and caution if the house is to consider them; they cannot be made recklessly. It is therefore the duty of the member to be very sure of what he is doing and not to make this kind of charge without proof. I have followed that rule, and I obtained the proof during the week end. I therefore thought it my duty to raise it in the house in this manner.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is reiterating his position. If parliament is to function at all, if this House of Commons is to operate in the way in which every hon. member wants it to operate—and I am sure the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona wants it to operate with order and within the rules which hon. members have established—I would ask the hon. member to assist the Chair and to recognize that I have no alternative but to ask that we proceed with the orders of the day.

Mr. Nugent: May I then ask if Your Honour is ruling that having only obtained the evidence during the week end, and having to consider the proper form in which it should be presented and to make sure I had sufficient evidence to present to the house today, this is not the earliest opportunity and that I have no right after a delay of one day to make this charge bearing in mind my responsibility to the house?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a question of privilege. With that respect to Your Honour which I have shown at all times, may I suggest to you, sir, that to rule out the motion to be made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona without a question of order having been raised by any member of this house was not giving the hon. member the right which he has to argue before you make a decision. In this case, as soon as the general outline was given you rose immediately and ruled it out of order without permitting argument. On reflection I think you will agree this is something which does not make for the amenities which we expect in the House of Commons. I repeat that the right to be heard or at least to have one side of the argument placed before the Speaker should not be denied to any member of this house.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There can be only one question of privilege at a time. We had a rather difficult experience just a few months ago and I hope we do not have to go through the same experience again. At that time I tried to establish the fact, on the basis of rulings made in days gone by, that there should be only one question of privilege. I suggest to the minister who seeks to speak now that he should not raise a second question of privilege.

There was a motion made by an hon. member, and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition very properly suggests that the Chair should have allowed more members to contribute to the point of order that the question of privilege was raised at the earliest possible opportunity. I did allow the hon. member who raised this point—after all, it is his motion—to express his views after I had made a preliminary ruling as to whether this matter had been raised at the earliest opportunity. What he has said has not changed my view.

Now, looking at this matter very objectively, I cannot see what further arguments could be brought in addition to those submitted by the hon. member. His argument is that he came upon facts in recent days, reached a decision and then raised his question of privilege. His suggestion is that this same point might be raised two weeks from now or two months from now by another hon. member who comes upon additional facts upon which he reaches his own personal conclusion.

This places the Chair in an extremely difficult position. I have made a ruling which I think is a fair one under the circumstances.

Mr. Nugent: I asked Your Honour before I sat down if there was anything further needed to establish my argument, and if so I asked to be heard further. I had expected if I had not established the case—and the factor of time had been mentioned—Your Honour would have allowed me to speak on that since I had forgotten that point might be raised. Then I want to make this point that, in view of the seriousness of the charge and the responsibility of members, it was not until I had the sworn affidavit—not hearsay, not rumour, but sworn evidence from a responsible person in a responsible position that I felt this was the sort of thing which a member could bring before the house.

Even then, in my view, this was such a serious charge that one had to be extremely careful as to the manner and form in which it was presented. All the evidence had to be considered, including the statements before the committee, the statement of the minister, the various precedents and rulings, so that if I were going to present it I had to present it correctly.

I suggest to Your Honour that my argument is very simple. I did not come into possession of the evidence which was necessary until the week end. I spent yesterday in preparation and making sure that the manner of presenting it was proper. This is therefore the first opportunity I have had to raise this matter in a responsible manner before the house. One day is not undue delay, even on the precedents Your Honour read to me. Certainly in view of the seriousness of this question, and the responsibility placed upon a member who raises it, a day's delay is not undue delay.

With all due respect to Your Honour, therefore, now that I have placed the facts before you and brought myself within the scope of the precedents you quote, I believe I should have satisfied the Chair and the house that I brought this matter forward at the first reasonable opportunity.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has repeated very forcefully the arguments he made to me a few minutes ago, and to which I listened for the second time with interest and attention. This is a question of judgment. Really, there is no hard and fast rule by which the Speaker can decide. The Chair has precedents to guide him. The Speaker must go by these precedents and follow the rules, and then he must form a judgment. I do not pretend that my judgments are right all the time. I admit that I have made my share of rulings which perhaps were not what they should have been; but I must go by the judgment I form, and based on that judgment I have reached the conclusion, rightly or wrongly, that this question was not raised at the earliest opportunity.

I must suggest to the hon. member that the decision of the Chair should not be changed at this time. The arguments submitted to me by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona have been taken into due consideration in arriving at my decision, which I should now like to confirm.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, your ruling cannot be challenged, of course, but I am wondering whether Your Honour has reflected on the fact that since rules are made for the purpose of expediting the work of the house, it should be possible to consider this question in a proper and orderly manner. I am sure you will agree with me that if I have not quite complied with the rules, I have been very close to doing so.

Since I have already put on the record my accusation against the minister I think it would be only fair to him to give him the chance to answer, because the matter is of such a serious nature. I do not think anyone in the house would be satisfied to leave the matter in this position, the minister having been charged with something, for which charge I am willing to take responsibility. Are we going to let the injustice of this situation prevail? Is this house to remain quiet without looking into it further, without giving the minister a chance to defend himself and let the house know whether the charges are responsible? I suggest that you do have the right to reverse your own decision if you feel like doing so.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to advise the hon. member that I do not feel like reversing my decision. I realize full well the point raised by the hon. member, that we now have on the record certain charges, but they were there before.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The ruling has been made. If hon. members feel that the judgment of the Chair is at fault the rules are in their hands, and they can change the rules to make it possible to appeal decisions of the Chair. However, at the moment this is the situation with which we are faced. The very purpose of changing the rules in the way we did was to express confidence—again rightly or wrongly—in the Speaker's judgment. I have made my ruling and I shall have to confirm it.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to raise a point of order which is based on a statement you made earlier to the house. Your referred us—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A point of order in relation to the Speaker? Never with respect to the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre knows that I cannot accept a point of order which relates to the ruling which has already been made. That is contrary to the rules of the house.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, my point of order, which I have not yet expressed, is not with respect to your ruling. My point of order deals with this matter. I should like your advice. I should like to lay a charge against the Minister of National Defence on the ground of having misled the house, as it appears to me. The only information received by me to confirm this misleading of the house reached me yesterday at noon, and there was no chance to make adequate preparation for presentation yesterday afternoon.

Now, sir, the impression that has been left with the house is that on August 30, when questions were raised as to whether there had been deletions from the evidence given to the committee, the minister gave an adequate reply. This is exactly the point on which I should like to have some advice. As reported at page 7797 of Hansard for August 30 the hon. member for Vancouver East asked the minister:

> —was anything cut out prior to the presentation?

The minister replied:

> The admiral deleted from his original text two or three references to friendly nations which it was felt would have had rather serious consequences to Canadian external affairs had they been made to the committee.

I submit, sir, that he deleted, as we now know, four pages of text relating to the defence of Canada. That is the subject I should like to have the privilege of raising at my earliest opportunity, which is now.

Mr. Crouse: Lied to the house.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Another Profumo.

Mr. Speaker: Order. What is now being raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre is exactly the same point which was raised before.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The ruling I have made on the motion presented by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona must apply to the matter now raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. My suggestion was not that the minister had given an adequate reply; I made no reference to this. My ruling was simply that this subject was raised and questions about it posed on a number of occasions by the hon. member for Vancouver East, by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Forrestall). So the matter itself is not a new matter.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I raise this point of order with you. At what stage in the proceedings of this house may I lay a charge against the minister for misleading the house when he said that the admiral deleted from his original text "two or three references", etc? I found out yesterday at noon that it was not the admiral who made the deletions but the minister, and the deletions were four pages of text. When can I raise that issue, Mr. Speaker? Can I raise it now? When is the earliest opportunity? I submit that it is today.

Mr. Hellyer: That is false.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair cannot enter into argument with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. I think he should not ask questions of the Chair, because that is not proper procedure in the house. I cannot answer these questions theoretically, in an abstract manner, the way they are being asked at the present time.

Mr. Churchill: Then I give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I will raise this question at the earliest opportunity, which will be tomorrow.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the hon. member would co-operate with me. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has now raised a different matter. We may go through all this again tomorrow, though I hope not.

Mr. Forrestall: We will.

Mr. Speaker: Quite possibly. But once again a ruling has been rendered, and I would now like to proceed with the ordinary business of the house.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I wish to co-operate with Your Honour but my point is similar to the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. I think the ruling that you made was correct when you ruled that anything the admiral said was admissible. But as I understand the explanation of this, a charge has been made in connection with something the admiral did not say and why he did not say it, which I think is an altogether different question. One question is what he did say and the other is what he did not say. I think your ruling could stand but that you could also accept the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid that this is a little too complex for my limited understanding.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

EXPROPRIATION OF QUEBEC LAND FOR HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 1,518—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

1. Has any request been received from the government of Quebec for assistance in expropriation of lands for the construction and improvement of Quebec highway number 8?

2. If so, what is the nature of such request and what action has been taken thereon?

3. If not, has the government taken note of published reports of statements by the premier of Quebec that the National Capital Commission should handle these expropriations?

4. If it has, what action has been taken to verify these reports and with what result?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes.

2. The request was that the federal government participate with the Quebec government in the relocation of that section of highway number 8 from the Gatineau river to 1½ miles east of the town limits of Aylmer and the construction of the highway to freeway standards as proposed in the Ottawa-Hull area transportation study of 1965. The work will involve expropriation of land by the federal government. Negotiations as to the extent of sharing are proceeding. An agreement has not as yet been signed.

PER CAPITA HOUSING INVESTMENT

Question No. 1,618—Mr. Orlikow:

1. For the last year for which figures are available, what was the total per capita investment in housing for the people of Canada?

2. In the same year, what was the total per capita investment for Indian housing from Indian affairs branch appropriations, band revenues, and individual contributions?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of Trade and Commerce and Indian Affairs and Northern Development as follows: 1. Information is not available on the total amount of money invested in existing dwellings. However, according to the 1961 census of Canada, the median value of 2,154,692 owner occupied, single detached, non-farm homes was $11,021.

If the question refers to the total amount of money invested in new housing construction, conversion of existing structures into new dwellings, major improvements and alterations, but not repairs, during 1965, it is estimated at $2,133,513,000. On this basis and using the population estimate of June 1, 1965 of 19,519,000, the per capita investment in housing during 1965 would be $109.31.

2. The total investment in Indian housing in Indian communities during the fiscal year 1964-65, from Indian affairs branch appropriations, band revenues and individual contributions was $25 per capita.

GIBSON INDIAN BAND FUND

Question No. 1,757—Mr. Rapp:

1. What was the original amount credited to the band of Indians on the Gibson Indian reserve at the time of sale of a portion of the reserve?
2. What is the present amount remaining to their credit?
3. What payments from said fund have been made each year since 1955 and to whom?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Since the establishment of the Gibson Indian reserve there have been the following land transactions from which revenues were derived and deposited to the credit of the band: (a) Transfer of 38.75 acres to Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario in 1932, $1,062.50; (b) Transfer of 98.40 acres to Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario in 1941, $1,968. (c) Transfer of 8.93 acres to Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario in 1942, $178.60; (d) Transfer of 50.803 acres to the province of Ontario in 1958, $508.03.

2. These amounts were not credited to a separate fund but deposited to the capital account of the band. As at July 29, 1966, the amount standing to the credit of the band in the capital account was $63,088.83. In addition, there was a balance of $10,695.33 at the same date in the revenue account of the band.

3. As indicated above, the amounts derived from the foregoing land transactions were not credited to a separate fund but deposited to the capital account of the band, and it is therefore not possible to relate specific disbursements to specific credits.

RETIREMENT REQUESTS BY SERVING OFFICERS

Question No. 1,907—Mr. Forrestall:

Have any serving officers of the Canadian armed forces written to defence headquarters since June, 1965 asking that they be retired without loss of pension aid, if so (a) how many (b) how many such requests have been granted?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Yes, however personnel statistics do not record the information asked in (a) and the necessary expert staff is not available to undertake the large amount of work which would be required to gather the necessary information; (b) between June 1, 1965, and August 31, 1966, 259 officers were released without loss of pension/annuity. However, in some instances there would be a reduction in the pension/annuity based on the number of full years by which an officer's age at the time of his retirement is less than the retirement age applicable to his rank. The Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, article 10 (6) (a) (ii) refers.

RETIREMENT OF ADMIRAL BROCK

Question No. 1,908—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Was Admiral Brock forced to retire?
2. Has the Minister of National Defence visited Maritime Command Headquarters in Halifax since Admiral Brock's retirement and, if so, when and for what purpose?

Question No. 1,909—Mr. Forrestall:

What title, if any, is recommended in the Hennessy and Anderson reports as the name of the proposed unified national defence force?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the reports referred to were the result of studies conducted at the instigation of the minister. The contents of such reports are considered to be privileged, and it is not departmental policy to make public such reports.

RETIREMENT OF NAVAL WHITE ENSIGN

Question No. 1,910—Mr. Forrestall:

Has the white ensign in the Royal Canadian Navy been retired and, if so (a) on what date and under what regulation (b) why was this step taken?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Associate Minister of National Defence): Yes (a) On the 15 February, 1965, by order in council 1965-250, dated 11 February, 1965. (b) To conform with government policy that former service ensigns would be retired when the new national flag of Canada was proclaimed on the 15 February, 1965.

FREEDOM OF CHOICE FOR ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,911—Mr. Forrestall:

In the proposed unified armed force, will officers and men now in the force be given an opportunity to decide freely (a) to enter into a new engagement or (b) retire voluntarily without pension or other penalty?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): As stated at page 8127, official report House of Commons Debates, September 7, 1966, unification cannot be accomplished until there is a further amendment to the National Defence Act. Terms and conditions of engagement in the unified force will be set out in the legislation to be introduced in parliament to establish a single force.

EMPLOYMENT ON GREAT SLAVE LAKE RAILWAY

Question No. 1,913—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. How many (a) Eskimos, and (b) Indians were employed during the construction of the Great Slave Lake railway to Pine Point?

3. What is the total number of employees on the Great Slave Lake railway?
4. What is the policy of the railway with respect to the employment of (a) Eskimos, and (b) Indians?
5. Does the education branch of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources have a training program specifically designed to provide Eskimo and Indian students with the skills necessary for employment on the Great Slave Lake railway and, if so, what is the nature of the program?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Insofar as the Minister of Transport is concerned: The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. A maximum of 30 Eskimos and approximately 75 Indians worked on the Great Slave Lake railway at any given time.

2. There are approximately 24 Eskimos and 15 Indians employed on the Great Slave Lake railway.

3. The total number of employees on the Great Slave Lake railway is between 350 and 360.

4. It is company policy to hire qualified people without discrimination as to race, national origin, colour, religion or age. Employment applications from Eskimos and Indians therefore are treated in the same manner as are applications from any other prospective employee.

In so far as the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is concerned:

5. The Great Slave Lake railway informs that it has provided a training on the job program for Indians and Eskimos who require further training to meet the needs of their specific positions; the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has provided specific assistance by selecting workers through its placement service and by advising on the problems of relocated employees. Training within industry is part of this department's policy because it meets the specific needs of the employer and the employee. In general, these workers have received training in heavy equipment maintenance and operation or general construction prior to this employment, but this may be considered specific training only in terms of broad general coverage in an occupational area. Trainees were placed on wages as soon as they started employment and full costs of specific training were paid by the railway.

*ROGER FULTON—COMMUTATION OF DEATH SENTENCE

Question No. 1,921—Mr. Cowan:

Was a press release issued from the office of the Solicitor General on August 3, 1966, regarding the commutation to life imprisonment of the sentence of death imposed upon Roger Allan Fulton which stated in part that the Solicitor General disclosed "that there was before cabinet important medical evidence of a neurological nature obtained by the Department of Justice" and, if so, what are the names of the doctors who submitted the said medical evidence of a neurological nature regarding Roger Allan Fulton?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows. Yes, such a press release was issued. By well established constitutional practice the advice tendered to the Governor General in regard to commutation is regarded as confidential and not to be disclosed except in very exceptional circumstances. By the same token the medical and much of the other information obtained by the cabinet and which forms the basis of its advice to the Governor General is also received in confidence and, with rare exception, it is not the practice either to discuss such information or to disclose the sources of information in particular cases.

*ROGER FULTON—COMMUTATION OF DEATH SENTENCE

Question No. 1,922—Mr. Cowan:

Was a press release issued from the office of the Solicitor General on August 3, 1966, regarding the commutation to life imprisonment of the sentence of death, imposed upon Roger Allan Fulton which stated in part that and, if "in accordance with constitutional practice the Solicitor General did not disclose the considerations upon which the Governor in Council acted in commuting the sentence" and, if so, to what constitution does this press release refer and to what specific section of that constitution?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is as follows. Yes, such a press release was issued. The expression "constitutional practice" used therein does not refer to an express section of any constitution, but the practice that has been established by the Governor in Council in dealing with capital cases and which has been recognized as good practice by successive governments. The expression "constitutional practice" has been used in the same sense by other ministers frequently in the past.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): This question falls into two parts. The answer to the first part of the question is no. The answer to the second part is no. BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING APPOINTMENT OF JUDGES

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-236, to amend the British North America Act, 1867 (appointment of judges).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Speaker, I think all hon. members will agree that in Canada we have been most fortunate in the high quality of our judiciary and in the public confidence which it has earned. However, the Canadian Bar Association at its last annual meeting asked its executive to establish a committee on the judiciary to assist the government in carrying out its responsibilities in this regard, without interfering with its prerogative to appoint judges.

This bill proposes that the government, before making appointments, obtain the opinion of the legal profession as to the suitability and qualifications of persons being considered for appointment. In my submission this is desirable if we are to preserve the high quality of our judiciary and the public confidence in it which is so vital to our democratic system.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED TAMPERING WITH WITNESS BY MINISTER—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move the adjournment of the house under standing order no. 26(2) for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the charge that the Minister of National Defence has breached the privileges of this house by tampering with a witness. That charge has been made public and has not been dealt with by this house, therefore resulting in continued injustice until the matter is cleared.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member enlighten the chair on the question of urgency of debate?

Mr. Nugent: With pleasure, Mr. Speaker. The urgency of debate is that the charge which has been made and the facts, if proved, go to the very heart of responsible government. They threaten the very existence, indeed, of much more than the usefulness of parliamentary committees. What is at fault here is the attitude of the minister who says that the government can do what it likes and that parliament is a rubberstamp, whereas the essence of our democratic system of responsible government means that the cabinet is responsible to parliament.

There is a duty on every member of parliament to make sure that neither the government of this country nor any minister of that government preempts the rights, prerogatives and privileges of this house. A minister must make information available to the house, and not hide it. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that making the series of charges public in this house at this time would have such a serious effect on the possibility of the continued existence of the democratic system as certainly to raise grave doubts whether under this government we are now enjoying anything that resembles responsible government.

If the people of this country are to have any confidence in our system of government and in the House of Commons, charges of this nature should not and cannot be allowed to stand for a moment without being substantiated or cleared or at the very least investigated. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that it is intolerable to allow these charges to stand even for a few minutes. Since these charges go to the very essence of our parliamentary system and our system of responsible government, there can be no more urgent business for the house to consider. I submit that it should be taken up now.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address you on the question of urgency of debate. In our opinion this is a most urgent matter. A charge has been made—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: —which affects the integrity of the house. A charge has been made, and no doubt will be spread abroad, that a minister has misled the house, that a minister has tampered with evidence given before a committee of the house. I cannot imagine anything that ought to be cleared up quicker, if it can be cleared up. I am not suggesting for a minute that it cannot be. That will be a matter to find out.

I should have thought that the Minister of National Defence himself would be the first to say that this matter should be debated at once.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, many of the members of the house are earnestly anxious that the committees set up by the house should function effectively and should add to the strength of the parliamentary system.

If it should happen—and I do not suggest it has happened although the charge has been made by a member on his own responsibility who claims he has evidence—that a witness before a committee of the house has been tampered with, has been told to modify or change the evidence that he was presenting to the representatives of the house, then I cannot imagine a matter more urgent for our immediate consideration and I think we should immediately clear it up. For these reasons I support the motion and I urge upon you that it should be debated forthwith and dealt with just as soon as possible.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I think that after a motion has been presented to the house, with the hon. member moving it taking full responsibility for what he alleges against a minister of the crown, the accusations, insinuations or charges involved should be looked into by the house at the first opportunity.

We have no alternative but to rely on the words of ministers who give anwers to the house, and it is up to the house to take any corrective steps necessary in any situation that may have evolved which is not in accordance with the normal course. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona has taken it upon himself to bring a charge or charges. He has made certain allegations. In such circumstances it is not the matter itself that must be considered urgent but rather, as Beauchesne states in citation 100(3), the question of urgency of debate.

One of the functions of a committee of the house is to enlighten hon. members. Witnesses appearing before a committee have a duty to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. If the minister has in any way at all meddled with the procedures of a committee, if anybody has fooled around or prior to a committee meeting has pressured a witness to change his opinion, by force or any other means, it is the duty of the house to have an immediate investigation, an immediate debate on the matter and clear the air once and for all. I think a debate on this matter is urgently needed at the moment.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, it is a little difficult to separate the question of privilege raised a few minutes ago from the motion now made under standing order 26 because they deal with the same matter, and I submit that to some extent the argument as to the urgency or otherwise of debate gets very much involved.

Citation 100 in Beauchesne, which deals with the matter of whether or not a motion falls within the precedents for making a motion under standing order 26, says in paragraph 2 that the matter "must be so pressing that public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention." Of course, as Your Honour well knows, urgency within this rule does not apply to the matter itself but applies to the urgency of debate. I think Your Honour will have to consider not whether there is urgency in the matter, not whether parliament should deal with it now or at some time in the future, but whether the urgency of debate is so important that all other matters shall be set aside and the debate sought shall be given precedence over any and all other public business that is before the house.

[Mr. Langlois (Mégantic).]

I suggest to Your Honour that the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona defeats his own argument in that respect since he has claimed it took him many days to gather the evidence that he is now prepared to present to the house. I suggest that the argument advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to the effect that some five or six weeks have gone by since the question was first raised is also defeated by the citation which says that the matter must be so pressing that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention.

Mr. Churchill: I believed the minister for five weeks.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of whether this matter should be discussed in parliament. Hon. members, including the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, know very well that there are other avenues open to them in order to bring this matter to parliament.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): What are they?

Mr. Olson: There are other ways in which this can be done, with the proper notice given, etc., but what they are now asking is that all other public business, all other matters that within the rules have been brought before parliament, be now set aside so that this particular matter can be discussed. In the arguments advanced by those two hon. members they stated that a number of weeks have gone by during which this matter has had some public attention and therefore it does not all of a sudden become so urgent that the public interest will suffer if it is not given immediate attention. I suggest that this, and this alone, is the question Your Honour has to consider at this time.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I add just a few words to the arguments that have been made concerning the urgency of debate with respect to this matter. If my memory serves me correctly this is the first time I have said anything publicly on the present defence issue—

Mr. Grafftey: It is one of the few things the hon. member has missed.

Mr. Knowles: —but I speak now as a member of parliament who is concerned over what has happened here today. Rightly or wrongly, a member of the house on his own responsibility has made charges, has said he has affidavits, and has created a situation which it seems to me in itself argues that there is urgency of debate.

I also ask Your Honour to look very practically at the point just raised by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. He asked, what is so pressing that we should set aside all the other business planned for today?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Including medicare.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: 1968—maybe.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I thought the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was interested in medicare.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Promised in 1919.

Mr. Knowles: Now I have heard everything. It was promised 47 years ago on August 6. The Liberal party wanted to do something about medicare then. Now, in a short afternoon, the Secretary of State for External Affairs says, "Do it today."

• (3:30 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Let us look at this seriously. It is now 3.31 p.m. We have not yet had the calling of the orders of the day and the question period, according to our rules, is to last for half an hour today. Then there is private members' hour at five o'clock. If you do a little arithmetic you will see that not more than 45 or 50 minutes remain today for the debate on medicare, and what has not taken place in 47 years is not going to be dealt with today in 45 minutes. I think the suggestion that this debate is putting aside all of the business of this house is a play on words. The suggestion simply is that we use the rest of the day to deal with a matter which has been raised today. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs is so concerned about medicare, I suggest that he put his weight behind that bill in its original form so that it will come into effect on July 1, 1967, instead of trying to prevent the house from hearing about this matter today as I think is its right.

There is not much time left today, and I think we should at least hear in full from the member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I do not know whether he is right or wrong, but he says he has affidavits and I think he should be permitted to state his case in full. I think also that the Minister of National Defence has the right and the responsibility to be heard in this house today. When you consider what has happened here today, I submit there is urgency of debate.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I can hardly believe my ears that you would not let the medicare debate go on right now.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair is trying to listen to the arguments which are being presented in support of the motion.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add my viewpoint to that of others who have suggested there is in fact urgency of debate here. In respect of the original matter which is in issue I have no interest in the sense that I did not participate, but I was very impressed by one statement made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I call to my support in this the statement made in another building in this city earlier this week when a former member of this house, Miss Pauline Jewett, in addressing a certain convention, emphasized the tremendous importance in a parliamentary system of the committee structure, something with which I am in complete agreement.

Mr. Speaker, the house has constituted a number of committees and has delivered into the custody of these committees a number of tremendously important matters. There is the committee on consumer credit dealing with the cost of living, the committee on transport and communications which shortly will be dealing with the question of the new railway legislation, the committee on the Bank Act, and so on. I am not commenting on the truthfulness or otherwise, but the suggestion has been made that witnesses, whose evidence is material, relevant and very important, have had their statements tampered with. I suggest to this house and to Your Honour that this matter should be settled, that is, to what extent in the future are we entitled to accept statements made by those who are under the control or influence of ministers of the crown? To what extent are we entitled to accept the statements which they give in evidence and to what extent, when reports are made based on evidence given by such people, are we entitled to accept at face value those statements? I submit that this is a tremendously important matter and that if our committee structure is going to survive we must have some examination of this major issue so that the members of this house may know that evidence given in committee is untrammeled and free from prejudice and pressure.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, may I say just a few words in support of the motion. A most important and serious charge has been made in this house that a minister of the crown has tampered with evidence given before a committee of this house. The question is not whether the charge is correct or can be proven. The charge has been made and this is the situation which faces the house now. It seems to me that the first person who should support this motion is the Minister of National Defence. Surely the minister would want the opportunity in this house today and not tomorrow to reply to this serious charge.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support the motion of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I would ask Mr. Speaker to take into consideration fully the complete relationship to committee discussions in the future of any witness who may appear before any committee so long as the present situation is left unanswered. The urgency of the matter has been dealt with by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in his suggestion that there is very little time left in the house this afternoon.

In the light of these things, particularly the grievous nature of the charge against the minister, which is one in respect of which I join with the hon. member, I would urge that Your Honour give every consideration to allowing this motion to be put to the house.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, obviously no one is more interested than I in having these slanderous insinuations dealt with in a proper fashion and in a proper forum.

Mr. Nugent: Then ask for unanimous consent to do it.

Mr. Hellyer: This suggestion that we—

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege I ask the Minister of National Defence to withdraw that statement.

Mr. Hellyer: No, I will not, Mr. Speaker. They are slanderous insinuations; that is all they are.

Mr. Forrestall: They are the truth.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Hellyer: They are not. They should be dealt with in a proper way at the proper time, and no one is more in favour of this than I am. A debate this afternoon in this house is not the proper time. It is clear that the object of this exercise is merely to frustrate the business planned for this afternoon. It is an old Tory game and some of us are getting a little tired of it.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona on a question of privilege. Before I recognize the hon. member I should like to remind hon. members taking part in this discussion that what they are to consider, for the guidance of the Chair, is the question of urgency of debate.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, the minister has just suggested I have brought up a matter simply to impede the business of the house. That is imputing a motive and a very low one to a member who has been very careful in this regard to make sure that he had the proof and had personally investigated the evidence leading to this charge. I suggest that the minister is imputing motives and is also insulting the house by suggesting that a charge that he has interfered with a witness is not important. It is more important business than the other. It may be unimportant to the minister whether a witness tells the truth—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I was speaking on the question of urgency at the time I was interrupted by my hon. friend. I was going to suggest, in view of the fact that some months have passed since this alleged situation occurred, that the proper place to debate this matter is before the standing committee on national defence following the introduction of the legislation, and that suggestion has been made before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hellyer: I make that suggestion because I do not think the alleged facts as presented here today can be separated from other facts and questions that will no doubt be considered at the time that committee meets. I think this matter should be considered in a forum where—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton South is rising on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, the minister is now deliberately ignoring the rule about which you have just reminded him and others, that he must speak only as to the urgency of debate.

While he is on his feet perhaps he would like to make a charge of slander and innuendo against the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. Will he make that charge? Will he stand up as the hon. member has done in this house? If he does not intend to do so, then let him speak about the urgency of debate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Let me remind the hon. member that he should address the Chair.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has made suggestions which involve my personal honour, and for that reason I am perhaps more interested in this question than anyone else in this house. For that reason I feel that this question should be dealt with by that committee in the proper form and manner rather than by a debate in this house which could make no determination or decision.

An hon. Member: If you are so innocent, let us debate it now.

Mr. Hellyer: This is not the time or the manner in which we should debate a serious allegation of this kind. I think it should be considered by the committee, and I hope that at that time, if the alleged facts presented to this house today are proved to be false, the hon. member will resign his seat in the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nugent: I take full responsibility for my charge and I hope the minister will realize the importance of my proving it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Hellyer: As far as I am personally concerned, this matter can be dealt with by either committee. My only reason for suggesting that it be dealt with by the defence committee is that there are related matters which should be dealt with at the same time. I believe that those people who have made charges, including the hon. gentleman opposite, should appear before that committee to give testimony and to subject themselves to cross-examination in order that we may make clear to the people of this country the exact nature of these charges.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In order that you may tamper with the testimony.

Mr. Hellyer: Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, and because this matter is some months old, I think a debate this afternoon would be inadequate.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Macleod is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Kindt: I suggest that the minister is trying to mislead the house by suggesting that this matter is some months old. We have heard what the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona said, namely that he did not have this information until yesterday or the day before. Apparently the only one who knew about it, prior to then other than the admiral, was the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is my opinion that there is no question of personal privilege at this time.

Mr. Kindt: There certainly is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is charged with the difficult responsibility of ruling on this matter, and it is my opinion that there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that what he is now attempting is to present an argument. I assume that in due course he will have the opportunity of doing so. At the moment the Minister of National Defence has the floor.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion on which the allegation is based was made in July and has been public knowledge since that time. In view of the fact that this matter has been discussed in the press and in this house on a number of occasions since July and in view of its serious nature, it is my belief it should be dealt with by a committee of this house. The committee which I believe should be seized with this matter is the committee on national defence. That is the course I would recommend.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Right away?

Mr. Hellyer: If it is felt that the committee on privileges and elections should deal with this matter, I have no objection because I want to clear my name, which is more precious to me than anything else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, in the five years I have been sitting in the house I have often heard requests for inquiries information, but it is the first time, as far as I know that a formal charge has been made against a member of the cabinet—the first time in five years. It is not an inquiry which is asked for at the present time. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) has laid a formal charge against the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer).

In view of the fact that such a thing happens very seldom, namely that a formal charge is laid against a minister of the crown, then it becomes an urgent matter which should be debated forthwith.

When the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona raised the question of privilege a little earlier and laid his formal charge, and even after you had rendered your decision, Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege, the Minister of National Defence had at that time the right, under the standing orders of the house, because it was for him the first possible opportunity before a formal charge, to rise in his turn on the question of privilege and to deny the whole thing. He did not do it, he allowed the charge to be made. And again during those last few minutes, he has been asking that the matter be referred to a committee saying that the matter dates back a few months.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this matter does not date back a few months. Must a problem exist in fact when rumours start making the rounds or only when the rumours are substantiated?

The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona stated today only that he has evidence to substantiate those rumours which have been circulating. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the first possible opportunity is not when the rumours start but when a man has the evidence. If charges were to be laid each time a rumour starts, it would be unthinkable for the man who wants to make a charge but lacks the time to get the necessary evidence and it would become unbearable for those against whom a charge would be laid.

I think that the first possible opportunity exists not when rumours start circulating but when evidence is produced to show that they are accurate and justified. And it is only today, it is only since the beginning of the sitting that such evidence has been laid before the house. Until now, there were only rumours. And I always refused to believe them as long as a formal charge had not been laid and evidence produced.

Therefore, the first possible opportunity is today, not before. Therefore, it is not a problem which dates back a few months, it is a problem which arose at the time when the evidence was laid before us.

Now, about the urgency of debate, Mr. Speaker. It is that there will be other committees sitting this afternoon and tomorrow morning and tomorrow afternoon.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Will members attend those meetings while thinking: This committee may not be serious; how can we be sure that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has not altered the evidence of witnesses at the committee on consumer credit? How can we be sure that in the committee on the public service of Canada, which is sitting at present, the Minister of National Revenue and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Benson), has not altered the evidence given by witnesses? Is it possible from now on for committees to sit unless a clear and specific explanation is given about the problem raised?

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the committees cannot sit as long as this matter has not been threshed out and the sittings of committees are still more urgent than the debate on medicare this afternoon.

The urgency of the debate Mr. Speaker. The word urgent is an epithet. Now, if it is an epithet, it is relative. Einstein in his theory on relativity states that everything is relative even the Absolute.

Can the debate taken in its present context he deemed to be really urgent? Let us consider the item on the agenda this afternoon: medicare. Now, we have been told that medicare would not come into effect before the 1st of July, 1968. Is it therefore so urgent to discuss medicare? Which matter is more urgent?

One which may be passed this afternoon and shelved for a year and a half or another which questions the integrity of a minister of the crown and the efficiency of committees. If we look at the terms "urgency of debate" in connection with the problem before us this afternoon as concerns other debates which may also take place this afternoon, well then I believe the urgency of debate applies not to medicare but to the attempts to determine the truth concerning the formal charge made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent). Therefore, if we consider the expression "urgency of debate" in connection with other discussions which are to follow, then the urgency of the debate must be applied to the motion put by the member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Speaker, for all these reasons, and also to rectify somewhat the fact that I should not want to see a precedent being created, since this is not the first opportunity we have to discuss the matter, I believe that the debate on the question facing the government should be allowed.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that affects the privileges of the house and I would hope that the Prime Minister, as the minister responsible for the preservation of the rights of parliament, would speak up and assure us that regardless of the attitude and stand taken by the Minister of National Defence this matter is one that cannot be postponed until legislation is introduced in connection with armed forces unification or integration but should be dealt with now. Every opportunity has been given to the minister to have the committee on defence meet immediately. That would cover the situation very well. Why wait until months hence? Why wait until legislation has been introduced in respect of this program? Why not meet this situation now? There can be no possible reason for any extension of time.

This is one of the matters that above all transcends every consideration of party relationship or party antagonisms within the house. The question arises whether the evidence given in a committee was free, uncontrolled, undirected and unsuggested. If we cannot accept the evidence given in committees, that is the end of the committee system.

I feel that the Prime Minister should now take this matter in his hands and without regard to the attitude of the minister should determine it once and for all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What can be more urgent than the preservation of the integrity of committees of parliament with regard to the evidence that is presented to them? Mention was made that this matter goes back a long way. I always accept a minister's word. This is something that, regardless of our differences, must be accepted. However, today we have had an hon. member rising and stating that he has an affidavit in his possession which indicates that the evidence given by the admiral of the eastern command was altered by direction or action.

I suggest the first thing that should be done is for the government to table the evidence which the admiral was going to give and, second, the revised and expurgated edition. I dislike repetition, Mr. Speaker, but I say that unless members can depend on the answers given in the house or the evidence given by witnesses in committees, then our parliamentary system is gone. I asked the minister on August 30—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With great deference I take the liberty of interrupting the right hon. Leader of the Opposition to remind him that what I am attempting to do at the moment is to obtain advice as to the urgency of debate in view of the motion made under standing order 26 by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is exactly what I am doing, building the argument as to why this matter is urgent. There cannot be anything more urgent in parliament than the preservation of the prerogatives and rights of parliament and the assurance that the evidence given by witnesses will not be altered in substance or in fact to meet the needs of a government or a minister of the government. I asked the following question on August 30, and this indicates the urgency, sir. It is recorded at page 7797 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister of defence a very simple question. Did he read the copyright story by Admiral Landymore which appeared in the Toronto Star on July 23 and which reads as follows:
> "The section on personnel—wherein I described the actual state of affairs in my command—was thoroughly censored and rewritten—
>
> The excuse given me for the censorship was that the minister wanted to take a positive approach to the hearings and that mine was too negative."

Mr. Starr: That is a shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I asked:

> Is this true or is it not?

The minister replied:

So far as my giving instructions is concerned, Mr. Speaker, it is not.

That statement on the part of the minister represents the facts, so why not have a discussion on the matter? We now have before the house the allegation that there was tinkering with the evidence, that pages were deleted and others substituted while in the possession of the minister. Can there be anything more serious to the future of democracy under our parliamentary system than the suggestion—even the suggestion—that this has taken place?

Surely the Prime Minister, being the custodian of the prerogatives of parliament, should rise and say: This matter will receive attention; we are not going to wait until months hence to meet the desires of anybody in this house for postponement. This matter is of first importance. It cannot be brushed aside by the simple statement, "Well, this is not the fact." It must be met; otherwise parliament will be a caricature. When a minister makes a statement, that statement must be the truth when it represents not an argument but a statement of fact.

Mr. Hellyer: Hear, hear.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Today we heard the allegation made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona that Admiral Landymore has produced an affidavit in addition to his copyright article. Why did he do that? Not to prevent the House of Commons from discussing a matter of transcendent importance to the security and integrity of members of parliament.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, if members of the opposition would be willing to formulate a charge that I tampered with the evidence of the committee and that I misled parliament, I would be pleased to ask for unanimous consent of the house that that charge be referred at once to the committee on privileges and elections. This would be done on the clear understanding that the person making the charge would place his seat in jeopardy if the charge is proved to be false.

Mr. Starr: Will the minister resign if found guilty?

Mr. Ricard: Stand up and say it.

Mr. Nugent: It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the minister did not hear the charge I have already levelled on my responsibility and standing in my place as required by the rules. I will read the charge to him again and I intend to follow it with a motion that it be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. I do not think any charge could be clearer than this one. It is that the Minister of Defence has breached the privileges of this house by tampering with a witness in regard to the evidence to be given before a committee of this house, the witness being Rear Admiral W. M. Landymore, the committee being the standing committee on national defence, and the evidence in question being the admiral's brief presented to the committee on June 23, 1966.

With regard to the seriousness of the offence, I have looked at the rules, Mr. Speaker, and I find that whenever a charge is made and proved false it is up to the house to decide what the punishment should be. I have little doubt that the house regards this charge as very serious. That is why, before making this very serious charge, I was very careful to make sure that I had evidence. In fact, having obtained this evidence I would have been negligent and derelict in my duty if I had not brought it before the house.

We are now in the position, Mr. Speaker, that if Your Honour's ruling on my question of privilege had prevailed it would have been most unfair if I had not been allowed to present part of my argument or all of it, just as it would be unfair to the minister if he were not given time to reply to the charge. I was going to suggest what the minister has already suggested, that in justice to the minister it is not a just solution to leave the matter as it is with only half the argument on the record, and I do not think any member in the house would stand in the way of a just and equitable solution to this matter which can only be achieved by allowing a complete hearing of the charges for which I am responsible and a hearing on the minister's action for which he is responsible.

I would therefore ask, Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed, that you request unanimous consent of the house to the raising of the question of privilege and that you allow a full discussion of it together with the motion that it be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. I would be content to allow this matter to go directly to the committee on privileges and elections without further debate.

Either way, Mr. Speaker, I do think that a request for unanimous consent to discuss this very important question of privilege would meet with the approval of the house because

I do not think any member would wish to be in the position of only hearing one side of the case or only hearing the accusations made against the minister without giving him a chance to defend himself. Would Your Honour ask for unanimous consent?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question on a point of clarification? Would the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona explain to the house what he means by "tampering with a witness"?

Mr. Starr: Let the minister wait until the matter gets to the committee.

Mr. Nugent: I think the minister is perfectly correct in asking that, Mr. Speaker. The word "tampering" may be a trifle technical.

Mr. Hellyer: And also a trifle evasive.

Mr. Nugent: It includes several things, among others the background of what I have alleged. If the minister wishes me to change the motion to make sure I am not being evasive I would be prepared to do so.

The minister is entitled to know exactly what I allege. I allege that Admiral Landymore had prepared a brief which it was his intention to present to the committee, having been ordered to prepare one and to present it to the committee on his responsibility that the minister caused him to come to the minister's office and present it orally, I believe, to the minister, that the minister is responsible for the fact that the brief was left in his office to be reviewed by him and that it remained there for several hours, that it was returned to Admiral Landymore and a change had been made in it without Admiral Landymore's consent, which change came to his notice only upon examining the brief. I allege that four pages of that brief had been taken out and that two pages were substituted. It is only within the minister's knowledge whether he did that personally. I say it is his responsibility because this brief was in his office and he is responsible for the actions of his officials. Therefore the word "tampering" which the minister wishes defined means in this case the taking of a brief and changing it.

An hon. Member: Read it.

Mr. Nugent: The pages are long but the house may want to have it read. The minister is right that nebulous terms should not be used in this allegation and I want no misunderstanding of what I mean by the phrase "tampering with a witness".

Mr. Hellyer: The hon. member would have to be more precise than that. He would have to charge that I censored testimony or that I was directly responsible for having information changed improperly. Under the law of this country my officials report to me and I report to parliament. I want a specific charge made.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Forrestall: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether Your Honour could refer citation 308 to the Minister of National Defence so he can see that "tamper" is a word which has been used in the British House of Commons since February of 1700 every single year without exception, and has also been used in this house.

Mr. Knowles: That is as long ago as medicare.

Mr. Nugent: I can only meet the objections of the minister and then wait for the house to give unanimous consent to this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Of course the house is the master of its own rules and procedures. All members can agree to whatever they wish to agree concerning the running of the business of the day. It is up to hon. members to give unanimous consent. The Chair, of course, is in the hands of the house. What the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona is now suggesting is, I assume, that we abandon the motion which he made under standing order 26 and that we revert to the question of privilege which he raised earlier this afternoon and obtain the unanimous consent of the house to proceed with that question. Is my understanding correct?

Mr. Nugent: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that unanimous consent to revert to the question of privilege would afford full opportunity to debate the matter and to hear the minister's answer. I suggested that I would amend the motion if that is the only way left, but if you allow us to proceed with the motion then only half the case will be presented and I do not think it would be fair to anyone. That is why I asked you Honour whether we could first try to get the unanimous consent of the house to revert to the question of privilege which I raised at the beginning of this session.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a question, Mr. Speaker? If the suggestion to revert to the question of privilege is not accepted because unanimous consent is not given, would we not revert then to the motion to adjourn the house?

Mr. Speaker: Of course there is no difficulty about this. I have a suspicion that unanimous consent will not be obtained. I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona is a fair one and I will ask the house whether they wish to give effect to the suggestion of the hon. member that there should be unanimous agreement of the house to revert to the consideration of the question of privilege raised earlier to day by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. speaker, I think it has been agreed by all members of the house that this charge is a very serious one which impugns the honour and honesty of a minister of the Crown and that it should be formulated in an appropriate resolution and submitted to the appropriate committee of the House of Commons, which is the committee on privileges and elections. If that can be done, there will be no delay in having the committee deal with it. This is a serious matter. In fact, I cannot imagine any matter more serious. Surely, therefore, the wording of the charge against the minister should be made known to this house in writing so that it can be looked at. Perhaps the hon. member, who has been very fair in his references to the desirability of having the charge specific, could put it on the order paper tonight and then we will look at it and will give unanimous consent to proceeding with it at once.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Pearson: But, Mr. Speaker, to put a charge before us orally now when we have already begun to argue about the meaning of certain words in that charge is hardly proper. The hon. member who is making this charge has been much more fair in this matter than some of his colleagues. The hon. member has already admitted that the words "tampering with a witness" could be interpreted in various ways. They could be interpreted as improperly interfering with a witness. Surely, therefore, it is important to have this charge formulated in writing before the house, and I give my assurance to the hon. member that if that is done there will be no delay. We will ask unanimous consent to have it submitted to the appropriate committee to deal with it.

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. Nugent: The situation is such that there seems to be a little misunderstanding of what is meant by a charge.

Mr. Hellyer: You are right.

Mr. Nugent: The charge is tampering with a witness; perhaps interfering with a witness is another way of putting it. I have carefully explained what it consists of and what the evidence is upon which I am relying. Surely in a charge I am not supposed to put forward all the evidence and have this be the charge which I have to prove.

Mr. Starr: Read it out.

Mr. Hellyer: Charge me with censorship and stand the consequences.

Mr. Nugent: I have said I have evidence to substantiate a charge of breach of the privileges of the house. I would be quite content to have it deferred until tomorrow if the minister wants an explanation of it. However, the charge is complete as it stands and I think it is clear as it stands. I have further clarified it by giving some of the evidence on which it is based.

I am sure the minister does not expect me to say that the minister did certain things within the confines of his office. All I can go on is what I have been told in the affidavit which Admiral Landymore was prepared to swear. I cannot say what went on in the minister's office or who did it. I know it was his responsibility but I do not know who did it. I have gone as far as I can go. I say there has been a breach of the privileges of this house and those are the facts upon which I rely and which I think prove that charge. I think we can bring evidence to prove the result, and it is the result that shows there was tampering with the evidence while it was under the minister's control. Further than that I cannot go, Mr. Speaker. I do believe it would be unfair to suggest that I can go any further without having personal knowledge. I wonder whether we cannot proceed on the basis of reverting to the question of privilege so that these things can be gone into in detail? I am certainly going to take my full responsibility.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): There has been a great deal of discussion this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, part of which has been heated, starting off with a charge of impropriety against the minister in relation to certain evidence given before a committee. I will not go through the different procedural points that have been raised during the course of the afternoon, for we are now talking about referring the matter to a committee.

Mr. Kindt: No.

Mr. McIlraith: I understood that to be the point of the remarks made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. If I am correct in that assumption, it seems to me that the house requires to know the precise language of the charge so that the house can pass upon it. It seems to me also that the charge is of such a serious nature that its form and the reference to the committee should not be something haphazard. The house should not be asked to give unanimous consent to some vague, nebulous proposals which are not clear.

Mr. Nugent: Would the minister permit a question at this point?

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if I could make my point and then I will be glad to take the question? The essence of a charge of this nature, whether or not there was improper conduct on the part of a minister, is the language used. The difficulties of the language, must be apparent to all hon. members who have heard the exchanges between the hon. member who raised the matter and those members on this side who asked him questions. In all the circumstances the only proper procedure as I see it is to have a charge precisely drafted and laid before the house. A precise motion could be made and consideration could be given as to the committee to which it should be referred. We have the Prime Minister's assurance that when that is done there will be no delay of any kind in having the matter proceeded with immediately. Surely any lesser method is going to be a careless abuse of the rights of parliament, the very thing about which hon. members are complaining.

There is one other small point. The hon. member has made repeated references to and has quoted from an affidavit. He is, of course, obligated to table that affidavit. I assume that will be done in the ordinary way, since he has quoted from it.

Mr. Nugent: May I—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in reply to what has been said by the Minister of Public Works, surely the responsibility for the wording of the charge and the responsibility for drafting the motion referring this matter to the committee on privileges and elections lies exclusively with the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona who is making the charge.

Mr. McIlraith: Exactly.

Mr. Douglas: I see no reason why we should be arguing about the terminology of the motion or why the government should try to get its finger into the pie.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps the hon. member will permit a question?

Mr. Douglas: I did not interrupt the minister. May I make this point, Mr. Speaker. If Your Honour had decided earlier—I am not quarrelling with your decision—to allow the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona to proceed with the question of privilege, then he would have moved a motion setting forth the charge and placing whatever documents he has at the disposal of the house. The house could then have chosen whether or not to refer that motion to the committee on privileges and elections.

It seems to me there is no need to wait until tomorrow or to have a conference about the wording. If the house is unanimous in agreeing to revert to the question of privilege, and if His Honour is willing to recognize the opinion of the house in this matter and withdraw any objection to allowing the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona to move his motion and make his statement, the house could then decide whether or not it wants to pass the motion to refer the whole question to the committee on privileges and elections. I see no reason at all why this matter has to wait until tomorrow or why we have to have an extended debate on it. The hon. member can make his speech when he lays the charge and move his motion and the minister can make a reply at that time if he chooses. The house will then decide whether or not it is of sufficient importance to refer the matter to the committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question in order to clarify his remarks? Would he not agree it would be preferable, before the house reverts to the question of privilege, if we were told the precise charge the hon. member wants to make? What he appears to be saying now is something less than that kind of charge with which the house should concern itself; yet the discussion this afternoon was about something of the utmost seriousness, the very type of thing with which the house should concern itself.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question, from listening to the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona I understood him to charge that a minister of the crown had tampered with the evidence of a witness who appeared before a committee of this house. I do not think that we should have any part in helping the hon. member to draft his motion. If the member has a charge to make, let him move his motion. If the house thinks that the speech he makes in support of that motion contains sufficient information to warrant an investigation by the committee on privileges and elections, then it can pass the motion. If after listening to the hon. member the house does not feel that he has sufficient evidence to warrant referring the matter to that committee, it can refuse to pass the motion. But I do not think it is our responsibility to start drafting such a motion or to find out from the hon. member what is in his motion before he is allowed to move it.

According to the rules of the house, the moment the Speaker says that there is a prima facie case for moving a motion of privilege the hon. member has the right to move it without anybody knowing what is in the motion. All I am suggesting is that the hon. member be given that right and be given it with unanimous consent.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. In recalling the events of the afternoon I think that had we started with the understanding we have now reached the very course which is about to take place would have been followed. I have no idea what the hon. member's statement is going to be, but I believe he is prepared to move his motion and to present the evidence which will be before the house and before the committee.

May I recall to the house the words of the minister in recounting that this matter has been public knowledge for a long time. If it had not been for the members of the press gallery, we would not have known in July what had taken place. Only now has the member been able to produce the evidence. I would appreciate very much his being given the opportunity to move his motion, and then the committee can deal with the matter as they desire.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, there is a significant difference between what the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is suggesting the house should do and what has been suggested by the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence. What they suggested was that if they could see the motion they would undertake to proceed with it at once and refer the matter either to the defence committee or to the committee on privileges and elections for consideration. That, Mr. Speaker, requires unanimous consent.

The procedure suggested by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam when he says that the hon. member has the exclusive right to draw up the charge and to lay the charge he wants to make is predicated upon whether or not he can do it in such a way as to establish a prima facie case. If he can then it is, of course, his exclusive right to move his motion. But that does not mean he has the assurance that he will receive unanimous consent to send the matter to a committee.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that there is a distinct difference between accepting a motion from the hon. member for which he alone takes full responsibility, with unanimous consent being given to send it to a committee, and the other course of action wherein he would first of all have to establish a prima facie case in order to put the motion before the house. In addition, having listened to his argument members of this house would not necessarily give him unanimous consent but would be given the opportunity of voting on whether or not the motion should be referred to the committee. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, because the consequences of this matter are of such serious nature we have to be careful that we do not confuse what can be done by unanimous consent and what can be done in the normal course under the rules of this house.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I think I can clear up a couple of misunderstandings, particularly the misunderstanding of the hon. member for Medicine Hat and the matter raised by the Minister of Public Works.

First, as to the charge the word "tamper" is used because it is the word in citation 308 of Beauchesne, the rule which I am accusing the minister of transgressing. I am using the exact word used in the rule because I thought there was no surer way of having precision in the charge.

If it would help, Mr. Speaker, may I say I have looked up the word "tamper" in the dictionary and I have here a couple of definitions. It means "meddle with; make unauthorized changes in; exert secret or corrupt influence upon". The word "bribe" is in the definition too. There is certainly no suggestion of any bribe here, but the definitions "meddle with" and "make unauthorized changes in" encompass the acts to which I have referred.

Second, I have drawn up a motion but I am not asking for unanimous consent to move it at all. As I understood it, the only reason the Speaker ruled me out of order today was not that I had not made a prima facie case which would normally allow me to raise a question of privilege but that I had not come within the time limit rule.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have suggested to the house that the best way to achieve justice in this matter, so that everyone may be fully heard as they should, is that the house bend and disregard the time limit rule for the purpose of this debate. This would place me back in the same position I would be in having just completed establishing a prima facie case, the Speaker having ruled that I did have a question of privilege. I could then proceed with my question of privilege, present the evidence which I have to the house and my motion to refer the matter to the committee on privileges and elections for consideration. I think that would take care of the situation and I would still be in the same position. A simple request for unanimous consent to allow me to present my motion of privilege at this stage would take care of everything.

(Translation)

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the charges laid by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) are quite definite, that the wording is sufficiently clear for all the ministers to understand their nature, and the hon. member has been pleading all afternoon to prove his charges against the minister. But the minister, in an attempt to defend himself, has twice asked the member for Edmonton-Strathcona:

"If the charges are not proven, are you willing to resign, or stake your seat on the issue?" Those are the suggestions made by the hon. minister.

Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to the whole matter being referred to the committee on privileges and elections; or to it being discussed this afternoon. But I urge the hon. Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) to do exactly what he wants the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona to do, that is, if the charges are proven, the minister shall resign not only as minister but also as member of the House of Commons.

Let there be justice for all.

Let those extremely serious charges be looked into by the house or by the proper committee as soon as possible.

The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) assures us that the committee on privileges and elections will deal without delay, today or tomorrow, with the matter if it is referred to it. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona asks that his question of privilege be discussed this afternoon. In either case, we will agree for the sake of unanimity so that the house may discuss the matter this afternoon or that the issue may be referred to the committee.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona would add to his motion: "and such tampering constituted improper conduct on the part of the minister in the performance of his duties as a minister of the Crown," I would agree that the motion should be accepted unanimously on our part. I would agree with the hon. member for Villeneuve, and I would put my seat on the line.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand the unnecessary addendum. For the minister to suggest that tampering with a witness, which is a breach of the privileges of this house, is not right and then to say that it is improper for the minister to do so, is meaningless. I do not know what he means. The words are redundant. The charge says that—

Mr. Hellyer: They are not redundant because "tampering" is so broad that it could include scratching your back. I suggest that if the hon. member would add the word "improperly" to that motion, that would be most acceptable. If the hon. gentleman would be prepared to add that, it would be satisfactory.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we are out of order and getting nowhere. We are still supposedly discussing the matter of urgency of debate on the motion to adjourn the house to debate a matter of public importance. It seems to me that if the minister wants to amend any motion referring certain matters to the committee on privileges and elections, the time for him to do that is when the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona has moved his motion stating the question of privilege and his charge and asking that the whole matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. At that time the minister could move any amendment he wishes and the house could decide whether or not it wanted to accept the amendment. If we are to resolve this matter, the sooner we agree unanimously to revert to the question of privilege to allow the hon. member to make his motion, the sooner we shall have something definite before the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, if he thinks that there is in the motion, as it has been represented to us, a real charge of impropriety? All we are asking on this side of the house is that there be a definite charge of impropriety. If the hon. member will add the words that the Minister of National Defence has suggested or if he will add the word "improperly" or "improperly tampered", either one of those, then we shall grant unanimous consent at once not merely to debate the question but to send it without delay to the committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that the Minister of Transport is now asking a question of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona wants to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. This is getting confusing.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Douglas: I think I asked the first question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has the floor.

Mr. Douglas: I thought that the charges, as made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, constituted impropriety. All I know is that Citation 308 says that tampering with a witness is a breach of privilege. If the hon. member can substantiate the fact that there has been tampering with the evidence of a witness, I am prepared to support the motion. But there is no point in discussing this when we have no motion before us. When the hon. member moves the motion, if the house gives him unanimous consent to do so, I shall be prepared to listen to what evidence he has.

I have no foreknowledge of what the hon. member is going to say. I should like to listen to him and listen to the minister make his explanation. If after listening to both of them I feel that this matter warrants further investigation, the calling of witnesses and the examination of any documents the hon. member may have, then I shall be prepared to vote for the motion. On the other hand, if after listening to both sides I think there is no impropriety I shall be prepared to vote against the motion. Surely we ought to proceed in an orderly way and have something before the house.

Mr. Nugent: May I ask the minister whether a specific charge of breach of privilege, consisting of tampering with a witness, is not a direct allegation of improper conduct?

Mr. Hellyer: Not the way you defined it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether all hon. members want the Chair at this point to express a view?

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, in the argument that has been made there is something that is not quite correct. The minister first of all suggested that this matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections or to the committee on national defence. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona seemed to agree to that. Now the minister asks that an amendment to the motion be brought in to indicate to what degree he may have tampered with the evidence in question. With all respect, I say that it is not for the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona to say to what degree the minister did that. That is why we in this party want this matter finished. This is the first time that the Liberals have suggested an amendment which would put them in the soup. I think we are out of order and we ought to get a ruling.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously there can be no unanimous consent to suggestions made by hon. members. Is there unanimous agreement to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I want to be very fair and give hon. members on both sides an opportunity to express their views as to whether there is unanimous agreement to reverting at this stage to the question originally raised this afternoon by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give consent to reverting unless the hon. member is willing to indicate that he will put forward a serious motion rather than a spurious one. If he will undertake that, I shall be pleased to give consent. That will not be as imprecise as this veiled situation is this afternoon.

Mr. Nugent: Is the minister serious about the amendment? He said, referring to the charge, that it was in performance of his duties as a minister of the Crown. I take it he does not want to be tried on his conduct as a member of this house.

Mr. Hellyer: Change it to "as a member of this house".

Mr. Pickersgill: You are not willing to make the charge.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair is required to rule on the question before the house, which is whether we should adjourn the business of the house to discuss the matter we have been discussing for the last hour.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, before we do that may I say a word? I have not said anything so far. Regardless of how the Chair rules, I should like to direct my remarks to the right hon. Prime Minister as leader of the house and Prime Minister of this country and ask him, in view of the serious charges laid, whether he will not take it upon himself to give direction and leadership to the house by saying that this matter will be referred to the standing committee on national defence on Monday in order to clear away the charges which have been made this afternoon and so that his minister will not be left with a dark cloud hanging over his head?

Mr. Pearson: If the hon. member in question will put his charge in a form which is considered by the Speaker as indicating a breach of privilege which should be investigated, and if the hon. member will stand by his charge, we will see that that charge is dealt with at once.

An hon. Member: How do you want it spelled out?

Mr. Pearson: If there is no unanimous consent today the hon. member can follow the rules of the house, put his charge in writing, put it on the order paper, and the Speaker will decide whether or not there is a prima facie case.

Mr. Nugent: The Chair has raised a nice question—

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The ruling which I have to make now is whether there should be an adjournment of the proceedings of the house to consider a matter of definite and urgent importance, according to the terms of standing order 26. The effect of this adjournment would be to allow a debate until five o'clock because, according to standing orders, an adjournment debate at this time does not dispense with private members' hour, and I think hon. members will agree with me it would be just a bit out of place and improper to grant an adjournment for a 15-minute debate.

In any event, if I require an authority to support my view that there should not be an adjournment, there was a ruling made in the house earlier this session—I will not say on the same question but on a similar question—at which time it was ruled that there should not be an adjournment.

Hon. members know, and I have said this before, that it is only in extreme circumstances that an adjournment is granted. It has not happened more than a very few times in many years that the business of the house has been adjourned. It may well be that this is a type of question which justifies an adjournment, but I have before me a motion in particular circumstances and I do not think that I can grant it in view of these circumstances.

One point I would like to bring to the attention of hon. members is citation 100 (9) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, as recorded at page 91 of that work, which states:

> —matters of privilege or order, or matters debatable only upon a substantive motion, cannot be submitted to the house under this standing order.

If the hon. member is right then he has a question of privilege, and according to this citation the Chair cannot grant an adjournment of the house to consider a matter which the hon. member says is a question of privilege and, as he has said himself, there has been no ruling from the Chair to the effect that there was no question of privilege.

The ruling was based on the point that the question had not been raised on the earliest possible occasion. In view of this I cannot accept the motion but I would like to suggest, if this would be helpful to the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, that in view of the fact that he has a motion—it may be a motion of privilege; I am not saying that it is and I am not saying that it is not—I believe he should consider the possibility of submitting this motion to the Chair. It would then be placed on the order paper. I would be pleased to discuss the matter with the hon. member and I think he should give some thought to this possibility. The hon. member may not feel that it should be done in this way and I respect his views, but certainly it would have the result of bringing the matter before the house for eventual resolution by hon. members.

If hon. members feel we should go on with orders of the day, for the 15 minutes remaining, then I shall call orders of the day.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, notice of motion No. 153 is acceptable to the government subject to the usual reservations concerning the consent of other governments.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary is it the pleasure of the house that notice of motion No. 153 shall be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, will you please call notice of motion no. 163? I ask that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

CANADA-WEST INDIES TRADE AGREEMENT, 1925

Motion No. 153—Mr. McCleave:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of all notes, documents, minutes or other documents or correspondence exchanged between the government of Canada and governments of members of the Commonwealth Caribbean conference regarding article VII of the Canada-West Indies trade agreement of 1925.

Motion agreed to.

DEMOLITION AND REBUILDING OF DOCK, DAWSON POINT, ONT.

Motion No. 163—Mr. Peters:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all reports, records, documents, tenders and contracts involved in the demolition and rebuilding of the dock at Dawson Point on lake Timiskaming in the riding of Timiskaming between the district office of public works, individuals and other persons and the Department of Public Works at Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Knowles: May this one stand as well, Mr. Speaker?

Motion stands.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF OPTOMETRISTS AND CHIROPRACTORS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we might have been dealing with medicare today and I therefore ask the Prime Minister whether representations have been received from the Canadian Association of Optometrists for inclusion in medicare, and whether the government will give favourable consideration to the inclusion of optometrists who are legally and academically qualified in all provinces and whose services today represent 65 per cent or more of all the eye examinations in this nation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, representations have been received. Those representations would involve an important change of policy in respect of the proposed legislation and the matter is under consideration.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does the minister not consider this profession an important enough segment of our national health program to be included in the scheme?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I certainly regard this profession as being very important but it is another matter, within the terms of the policy already established, whether it can be included. It is not really a question of the profession itself. It is the question of services by this particular profession which is under further consideration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a further supplementary question, what is the difference between the inclusion of optometrists and having oculists included? What is the difficulty there?

Mr. MacEachen: I think, Mr. Speaker, there is a great difference.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What is it?

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): As a further supplementary, is the minister aware that in many regions of the country only optometrists and not eye doctors are available for patients, and is the government giving consideration to this fact when dealing with the matter?

Mr. MacEachen: I appreciate the point make by the hon. gentleman. Members of this particular profession have put forward their views with respect to the coverage of services rendered by their profession. The matter is under consideration and I hope when we get into committee on the bill it will be possible to make a clear statement on the matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Favourable?

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Will not consideration also be given to the inclusion of chiropractors and their services within the terms of the bill?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have tried to be a bit lenient with this series of questions but I suggest that we appear to be dealing with a matter which some day will come before the house and perhaps these questions should be reserved for that time.

COAL

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on September 2 the Minister of Finance said that the government was studying the Donald report on the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia and that when the report was brought down it would probably be accompanied by a statement from the government regarding what it was going to do. I want to ask the Minister of Finance how soon we may expect a statement from the government as to what financial assistance it is going to give to the coal industry and whether it is going to carry out the commitment make a year ago for the provision of some $25 million to rehabilitate the coal industry, particularly in Cape Breton?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when I made my earlier statement the government had been considering whether it would be issuing a statement at the same time as the release of the Donald report. Subsequent discussions led us to the conclusion that it would probably be better for all concerned if the public had an opportunity of reading the report before a statement on policy was made.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question may I ask the minister how long the Donald report has been in the possession of the government and how soon the government expects to make its statement regarding financial assistance to the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Sharp: The report has been in the hands of the government for some time and was not tabled until it was printed, but there has been no delay in the tabling of it. I expect the government will be in a position to make a statement on its policy soon but I cannot predict the exact date.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Before asking a supplementary question may I make the observation, Mr. Speaker, that I believe the leader of the N.D.P. has been reading my mail. However, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is it the intention of his government to stand by the word of the former minister of labour, of the Minister of Transport and of himself by making available to the Nova Scotia coal mining industry the $25 million which was promised, including the $10 million contained within that $25 million for the opening of a new mine at Lingan? The Prime Minister's word is on record in this respect.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope that when the policy is announced before long it will be seen that we will warrant the congratulations and good wishes of my hon. friend.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. It is a follow-up again to the question asked by the leader of the New Democratic Party of the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance indicated that the Donald report has been in their hands for quite some time. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance to explain why, when I asked on May 30 whether the government had received the Donald report, his answer at that time was that it was expected later in the week. Under what process could a report to be delivered later in the week come into the hands of the Queen's printer and be in the hands of the public in May, 1966?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we received the report in the manner described. It has taken considerable time to have it translated and made available.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and is based on the reply given by the Minister of Finance to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. Who is to finalize the policy pertaining to the coal mining industry in Nova Scotia? Is it going to be the public or the government?

Mr. Pearson: The government announces the policy, but surely my hon. friend will agree that the public should have the opportunity to make its views known on a matter of this importance when consideration is being given to it by the government. Surely that is the purpose of a democracy.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): That is a very good point, Mr. Speaker. Since it is a fact that it is now away over a year since the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond said there was going to be $25 million made available to the coal mining industry, with $10 million allotted to a new mine, when are we going to get some action?

Mr. Pearson: In respect of a policy of such importance involving such expenditures of money, and a policy which we hope will be in effect for many many years, surely the hon. member will agree that it is wise to take the necessary time to make sure that it is a right policy.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why announce the policy if it is not a right policy?

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware that the public, which has a real interest in the Nova Scotia coal industry, is very much aware of what the situation is? Is the Prime Minister not aware that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, within the last two weeks in the constituency of Inverness-Richmond, restated the promise to give $25 million to the coal industry, including $10 million to open the new mine at Lingan?

Mr. Pearson: I am sure my hon. friend will be very happy about the policy when it is announced.

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South).]

OLD AGE SECURITY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

In view of the fact that our senior citizens have been writing us to ask when the government will raise the pension for the needy by $30 to bring it to $105 a month, can the minister tell us when the government will proceed with this increase?

[English]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): At this session, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Will this old age pension be retroactive? Will there be a prior date or will those pensions be paid to the aged from the date of enactment?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member is now anticipating the consideration of the legislation he has just referred to.

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am not the one who anticipates, but rather it is the old people of Canada who are anxious to get their pensions as soon as possible.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENTS TO ELECTION LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Now that the report of the committee on election expenses has been tabled in the house, when will this report along with the Canada Elections Act be referred to the committee on privileges and elections so that the desirable amendments to the Canada Elections Act can be made before the next time we need the provisions of this statute?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it is desirable that this be done without delay. We will be discussing the matter tomorrow morning in cabinet and will endeavour to get it before the committee without delay because it is very important that it be considered and action taken on it before the next election.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale.

FARM MACHINERY

SUGGESTED LEGISLATION TO PROHIBIT PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Since the inquiry concerning the cost of farm machinery will take some time to complete, according to the minister's statement in the house, would it not be possible in the meantime for the minister to bring in legislation whereby machinery companies cannot increase the price of farm machinery during the inquiry period?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of the inquiry I understand that these machinery companies have been co-operating very effectively with the commissioner in his investigations, and I hope that in the same spirit the companies, in view of the inflationary problems with which the country is faced as well as the inquiry, will refrain from increasing prices prior to the determination of the inquiry. In respect of the question of current prices and whether there are current increases which are affecting the price of farm machinery, it certainly would be my view that a company should refrain, if at all possible, from increasing prices until we have the commission's report.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Has the minister made any representations to the farm implement companies along the line he has just suggested?

Mr. Greene: Mr. Speaker, at the moment I have had no representation or suggestion that price increases are mooted, but if I find they are I certainly would be prepared to make such a representation to the companies.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—REASONS FOR POSTPONEMENT OF INTRODUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister of National Health and Welfare formally has approved of the postponement of medicare, I should like to ask him whether the postponement was partly due to a lack of medical personnel to carry it out satisfactorily and, as the leader of the New Democratic Party said a day or two ago, was it partly because of representations from provincial governments and provincial premiers?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker. The reasons for the deferment have been stated in the house by the Minister of Finance. These are the reasons which account for the deferment.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

ACTION OF CABINET IN COMMUTING SENTENCES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for York-Humber asked me a question about commutation and I misunderstood him. I thought he was referring to the last commutation where there was a unanimous recommendation of the jury for mercy. In reading Hansard this morning I realized that he was referring to the second last commutation where there was no such recommendation. I apologize to him for having misunderstood his question.

HISTORIC SITES

QUEBEC—DEMOLITION OF HOME OF SIR ALEXANDER GALT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

In view of the fact that the minister, last Thursday night, notwithstanding his wishes, did not have time to finish his remarks on the memorial to Sir Alexander Galt, would he inform the house today of the nature of his project?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member should put his question on the order paper.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: With regret I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that it is five o'clock and the house will now have to proceed to consideration of private members' business which is listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I crave the indulgence of the house while I give an answer to an urgent question that was asked yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN DAM CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kootenay West yesterday asked a question as follows:

Did Premier Bennett of the province of British Columbia ask the federal government for financial assistance toward the cost of the construction of the dams being built under the terms of the Columbia River Treaty? If so, what was the federal government's response to his request?

The Prime Minister was asked this question without notice and said he was unaware of any such request. Mr. Speaker, I should correct this immediately with the following reply. On September 16 Mr. Bennett wrote to me to confirm certain fiscal requests he had submitted at the tax structure committee meeting on September 14. These include two items relating to the construction of hydro-electric developments: first, $30 million requested on behalf of the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority resulting from increased costs of the Columbia river dams due to the imposition of the 11 per cent federal sales tax after the signing of the agreement and, second, government of Canada credit to be made available to the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority for its large capital construction programs. In such instances the government of the province of British Columbia would be willing to guarantee any borrowings involved.

• (5:00 p.m.)

In acknowledging this letter on September 23 I said that these requests would be taken into consideration.

[Mr. Allard.]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was any figure named with reference to the amount of credit asked?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT BUSINESS BE PROCEEDED WITH

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as second assistant house leader perhaps I should ascertain whether or not hon. members would like to use the rest of our allotted time to proceed with government business so that we may accomplish something today.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in view of the government's rigidity in opposition to the will of parliament and in view of the fact that this suggestion is the brainchild of the Minister of Transport, I think we should proceed with our normal business.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper.

FARM MACHINERY

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the order:

Private members' notices of motions—Mr. Rapp—

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of appointing a royal commission to investigate the increased costs of farm machinery across Canada, in relation to the price of farm products.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I withdraw this motion because the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) has already seen fit to appoint a royal commission to investigate farm machinery prices.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT REGULATIONS RESPECTING BARBERS RENTING CHAIRS

On the order:

Private members' notices of motions—Mr. Smith—

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the advisability of having the unemployment insurance regulations amended to provide that barbers renting chairs from owners be classified as self-employed people as this is the case under the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Smith) has instructed me to ask that this motion be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have the authority of the house to withdraw this motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CRIMINAL CODE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT TO DEAL WITH OFFENSIVE WEAPONS

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Laurier) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of setting up a special committee to study matters relating to the import, export, production, sale and purchase of firearms, and that this committee should study the advisability of amending the Criminal Code, section 82 and the following sections with regard to offensive weapons.

He said: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I should like to point out that the notice of motion includes the word "export" and that as Canada is obviously not a firearms' exporting country, I think it would be reasonable to delete the word "export" from the motion.

Newspapers reported recently, Mr. Speaker, that the right hon. Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, deemed it would be necessary for the federal government to exercise a more rigid control over the ticklish problem related to firearms. Moreover, the announcement came at the same time that President Johnson was also considering requiring from Congress tighter regulations in regard to the same problem.

Canada, Mr. Speaker, must not wait until a slaughter like the one in Austin, Texas, happens to solve such an urgent and complex problem.

I have studied this problem since the assassination of President Kennedy, and on January 20, 1966, I had the honour of presenting in the House of Commons the notice of motion which you have just read.

Since then I had the privilege of discussing it with many French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians; a private television station, Télé-métropole, on channel 10, even invited me to explain to the people my views on the control of firearms in Canada.

I can assure you that the comments received are favourable and that most people would be glad to see the Criminal Code amended so as to allow government control of firearms.

Indeed, it is the duty of the federal government to protect society with the means under its jurisdiction, of which the Criminal Code is one. It is also the duty of the federal government to co-operate with police forces in Canada and with financial institutions and particularly banks which spend millions of dollars each year on their own security. It is up to the federal government to take all the necessary steps to stop the crime wave which not only causes tremendous financial losses but also costs many human lives.

According to the daily bulletin of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, volume 24, number 231, dated Thursday, December 2, 1965, the number of people against whom charges are laid has increased from 389,326 in 1962 to 453,136 in 1964.

These figures speak for themselves and show clearly that the federal and provincial justice departments must join forces to fight this incredible increase in crime. Obviously, an increasingly closer co-operation between the services responsible for law and order is necessary and the fight against crime should be given priority by governments at all levels.

However, I should like to draw the attention of the house to offences reported by police involving the use of offensive weapons. This DBS report shows that such offences are increasing. In 1962, 2,608 offences were reported, 2,900 in 1963 and 2,938 in 1964.

Offences do not tell of course the whole story as far as offensive weapons are concerned, because in many cases the offence will be classified under a different heading, for instance, robbery with violence.

• (5:10 p.m.)

And at present, statistics do not show separately the crimes committed with offensive weapons. While the minister responsible for statistics is here, I would like to call his attention to the fact that the statistics, at the present time do not show separately the crimes committed with offensive weapons.

A statement prepared by the Montreal police shows that between 1950 and 1957, the average yearly number of hold-ups in Montreal was 225, whereas in 1964 and 1965 it was 793 and 603 respectively.

The 1961-1964 edition, published in February 1966, of the book containing statistics on homicides shows that the number of homicides committed with firearms has increased from 84 in 1961 to 105 in 1965.

Moreover, Mr. Justice Lazure said, a few years ago, that 75 per cent of crimes are committed with firearms, and this single remark could justify the remarks which are about to follow.

From those statistics, one could draw a lesson which can be summarized thus: prevention is better than cure.

Prevention in the field which concerns me would be a complete revision of the Criminal Code as far as importation, production, sale, purchase and possession of firearms are concerned.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, does not pretend to settle all the problems in that field. Before translating it into definite legislation, all persons concerned and all experts should be called upon to express their opinions: police chiefs, attorneys general, rifle clubs fish and game associations, collectors, manufacturers and dealers. However, this is a start since I am asking the government to control firearms from importation or manufacture to final sale.

The act which should normally follow this motion should restrict the use of firearms, which is much too free now, by setting up a systematic control, not only over the sale and purchase of firearms, as I said a while ago, but also over their manufacture and repair.

The act could and should provide that whoever has firearms in his possession should have a licence and that whoever manufactures, repairs, purchases or sells firearms, wholesale or retail, in Canada or on foreign markets, must keep proper and complete records of all operations concerning those firearms.

This motion will, I trust, draw the attention of the public on the problem. I hope that to help me in the task, intermediary bodies, newspapers, radio and television stations, in one word, all information media will also draw the public attention on this urgent and complex problem. It requires the full co-operation of all levels of government, the population, the police forces and the financial institutions.

Already in 1960, the federal government proceeded here with the consideration of the problem of firearms. A non official committee was entrusted with considering the provision of the Criminal Code concerning firearms; that committee was composed of representatives of the legal branch of the Department of Justice, the Department of National Revenue, the R.C.M.P. and the Canadian Association of Police Chiefs. It considered the matter with great care but the department did not proceed with certain recommendations because opinions were divided and, in some cases, contradictory. It has now been inactive since fall 1963.

But as this committee could not agree and reach majority conclusions and since this is a complex, huge, important and urgent problem, I think it would be better to set up a special committee of the house to deal with it, as was done in the case of the committees on pensions and the flag.

As I mentioned earlier, this committee could call as witnesses experts and representatives of public bodies interested in this ticklish subject, such as members of the Wildlife Federation, representatives of hunting, fishing and shooting clubs, collectors of ancient weapons, representatives of the law at all levels of government, law enforcement officers, weapon manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers, customs officers and prison wardens. The report of this committee could serve as the basis of a bill concerning sections of the Criminal Code dealing with firearms.

I think the federal government should seriously consider the restriction of the right of any citizen to possess or use firearms and the amendment of sections of the Criminal Code dealing with the control of firearms. The press and justices of assize courts as well as magistrates of police courts are complaining against the fact that practically anybody, even very young persons, can today purchase firearms. Public opinion has been aroused and people request that concrete steps should be taken to limit the right to own firearms and that it should be made more difficult to obtain permits.

The rate of crimes involving armed aggression which I mentioned earlier shows that criminals can too readily secure firearms without abiding by regulations, that is the Criminal Code or the Customs Act. This can be explained by four factors.

First of all, there are thefts in stores selling firearms and there have been thefts in barracks. There is also the illegal importation of firearms from the United States where the firearms business has even a freer hand than in Canada. Incidentally, I was pleased to learn through the press that senator Thomas Dodd's committee has been doing a tremendous job in urging the American government to exercise a strict control over firearms.

There is also a lack of control in the sale of firearms from the wholesaler to the retailer and, finally, it is easy to modify firearms which are not affected by the restrictions described in sections of the Criminal Code dealing with registration of certain types of weapons.

In December 1965, Mr. Léo Lavoie, general manager of the Provincial Bank and vice president of the Canadian Bankers Association voiced vigorous protest against mercy granted by the authorities for armed offences in the following terms:

> Chartered banks are fully conscious of their own responsibilities with regard to security within their respective branches. It seems, however, that the continuous increase in the number of robberies in certain parts of the country and the more frequent use of firearms could be attributed to sentences obviously not proportionate to the seriousness of crimes committed with the help or the use of lethal weapons.

And a little further on—> —the presence of a revolver should surely be admitted as proof of intent to make use thereof.

Exactly, what is the definition of a firearm? Section 98(b) of the Criminal Code gives the following definition:

> "Firearm" means a pistol, revolver, or a fire arm that is capable of firing bullets in rapid succession during one pressure of the trigger;

As we can see, this definition does not apply to a large number of firearms which are automatically left out of this definition found in section 98(b).

The police in particular have made several suggestions aimed at solving the problem, among which I have selected a certain number which could be the object of detailed study on the part of special committee, which I suggest should be set up. This committee could consider the advisability, in order to provide more efficient control, of deleting from the Criminal Code sections 82 to 98 inclusive, dealing with offensive weapons, and of drawing up special legislation with regard to all types of weapons. This law could contain regulations concerning standards for owning, storing, importing, manufacturing, selling, purchasing, which could be amended according to circumstances by the Minister of Justice without having to go through the house, just as we have a special act, the Explosives Act.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Among these regulations, there should be one grouping fire arms into two well-defined categories. First, weapons of restricted use and requiring the issuance of a permit and compulsory registration; second, prohibited weapons.

Provision should also be made for more severe and even drastic penalties for people convicted of an offence against the new act.

The law should provide for imprisonment without the alternative of a fine. Today, our courts impose a minimum fine in the case of every person caught in possession of firearms without a permit. The penalty provided should be more severe than it is now and the judge should also have power to order the firearms confiscated for good. Sentences should be served separately instead of simultaneously.

The whole section of the Criminal Code dealing with the issuing of permits should likewise be reviewed. In the case of criminals already possessing a police record, firearms permits should undoubtedly be refused.

The permit itself should constitute a proof of authenticity and it should be impossible to print such a permit without having the necessary paper, as is required for the printing of paper money or voting ballots. The form used at present can be printed by anyone in the trade. It goes without saying that the form should be bilingual, instead of unilingual as at present. The applicant for a permit or the purchaser of a firearm should be required to identify himself fully and completely, so as to ensure that the permit holder or the owner of a firearm is actually the same person entered in the records. A full investigation should be conducted regarding every applicant, even though it may involve some delay in the issue of the permit.

Nowadays, armed convicts with a heavy past and extensive criminal records can stroll about the streets. The applicant for a permit should sit for an examination proving his knowledge and his ability to handle firearms, just as a person who wishes to drive a car must do so, before obtaining a permit.

Section 94 of the Code authorizes the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. and the attorney general of a province to deliver such permits. Since section 94 authorizes the attorney general of a province to deliver permits in a province, the authorization granted to the commissioner of the R.C.M.P. is restricted to the issuance of interprovincial permits as in the case of employees of shipping companies. The local registrar of firearms has now a discretionary power for the issuance of permits.

Fortunately, in Quebec, the issuing and renewal of permits are subject to very strict regulations and I believe that a permit should be required for any firearm, even for sports.

It should also be prohibited not only to saw off the barrel of a firearm to less than 20 inches, but also to alter firearms to specifications other than those of the manufacturer. For instance, the "FN" rifle, which can now be purchased without a permit, can be altered by inserting a small piece of cardboard of the necessary thickness to produce a submachine gun. Recently another type of gun was put on the market, the "Enforcer". This firearm is described as a pistol in catalogues, but its operation requires both hands, and a slight alteration is all that is required to make it into a submachine gun.

Why are some companies allowed to make rifles with barrels shorter than 20 inches since such firearms are prohibited by the Criminal Code. The legislation dealing with the import of firearms should also be revised in order to avoid a conflict of authority between customs officials and provincial police forces.

The new legislation should control firearms at the source, either at the import level or the production level. The makers of firearms should be forced to get a special permit. They should also be compelled to keep a detailed record of their sales and to make a monthly report to the authorities concerned.

Retailers should be forbidden to have in stock firearms other than those covered by a permit in Montreal, in Quebec city and in Eastview, where firearms were stolen in retail stores, criminals got their hands on automatic rifles, submachine guns and automatic revolvers.

If such firearms are completely prohibited, Mr. Speaker, how is it that dealers are authorized to sell them? Stores doing business in firearms should be forced—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I apologize for interrupting the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Leblanc: Two more minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, stores dealing in firearms should be required to take greater safety measures to protect their premises. They should be required to send the police a monthly report indicating clearly the names and addresses of those who bought firearms. At present, they must keep a register to which the police has access whenever it deems it advisable.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the persons who supplied me with the information on which I based my observations, namely Hon. Claude Wagner, former minister of justice in Quebec, Mr. J.-A. Robert, director of the provincial police, Mr. Roland Perron, deputy chief of the Montreal police, Mr. George Shea, secretary treasurer of the Canadian Association of Police Chiefs, Mr. J.-G.-R. Sénécal, of the customs division, Mr. W. A. McGill, head of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, judiciary.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words on this motion. I wonder where the former speaker was raised to have put forward such a proposal in the hope that this house would support him. He has not defined what he means by the control of firearms except to say that special permits should be issued and monthly reports made. Let me tell him that I have used firearms ever since I was old enough to pack them, and it is the privilege and the requirement of sensible people in the west to have firearms in their homes for the shooting of hawks, gophers, coyotes and predatory animals. The hon. member thinks that amendments should be made to the Criminal Code which would deny us freedom in the use of firearms. When our children are old enough we buy them a .22 and take them out to shoot gophers. We teach them how to handle firearms and we teach them safety methods. We teach them that whenever they have a gun in their possession they must never point it at a person but always toward the ground. These things are drilled into our young people and their friends. We have been brought up with firearms. I say this about the common run of people.

The second point I wish to make is that what the hon. member proposes to do by amending the Criminal Code will not stop anyone from being shot or murdered. He is mistaken and is jumping to conclusions when he thinks that this is the way to stop people from being shot. Before this debate is over he will be made to realize that his is a fallacious argument and that other means should be sought. I think the hon. member was not too far off the track when he spoke about the education of younger people in the use of firearms.

Another point is that in our area the shooting of partridge, pheasants, ducks and geese brings in thousands and thousands of dollars. The same is true of big game. Many people engage in this sport and they buy firearms for this purpose. We all have firearms and we use them to have a little fun and pleasure. It is part of many citizens' desire to go out and get a moose or a deer. Is the hon. member going to deny them that pleasure? Will he make them sign something every month that they have a firearm? Will he end sportsmanship in this country under the guise of trying to stop murders committed by people in the possession of firearms? You just cannot do it. You are on the wrong track in what you are seeking to do. You are following a will-o'-the-wisp. You are looking at a simple way of doing it and the way you are suggesting will not take care of the situation.

A sportsman has the right to exist. The government has a right to the revenues that are obtained from the sale of firearms for sporting purposes. I should not like to see this parliament be so stupid as to pass a law that would forbid the sportsmen of this country the right to be sportsmen. I happen to enjoy the privilege of hunting when I have the time. Hundreds and hundreds of people all over the west do the same thing. If my friend is from one of those eastern cities in which somebody gets a gun and shoots somebody, I suggest that changing the Criminal Code will in no way curtail that. You can put all the laws on the statute books that you want, but these people who want to shoot other people will get guns to do it. The thing to do is to use education to train people to use weapons correctly. A certain amount of training for sportsmen and other people is absolutely necessary.

I can give my hon. friend an illustration. In the Arctic, at Aklavik, the people carry guns all the time but nobody ever gets shot. In the Mackenzie River delta the people shoot millions of muskrats during the wintertime. In order to save the fur of the muskrat you have to be able to shoot the muskrat right through the eye or through the head. In the public school at Aklavik the principal who is called "Moose"—he is a real man and does a good job of teaching the children—conducts target practice in the basement of the school in order that these people will be able to shoot muskrats through the head and thus have these most valuable pelts. I just mention this one illustration. Go anywhere in the Northwest Territories and you will find people using guns. They must carry guns. This gentleman here in the back row would have them report once a month and if they did not report once a month he would say they were violating the Criminal Code.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Would the hon. member give me a chance to explain? I think there is one part of my statement that was not understood. I mentioned that every month the manufacturer or dealer in firearms should report, not that the people possessing firearms should report. This is quite different.

Mr. Kindt: Well, one regulation leads to another. What you are aiming at is an inventory of all weapons. I see the hon. member who represents the constituency west of me laughing.

Mr. Byrne: I said it was a good pun; he is aiming at something.

Mr. Kindt: I doubt it. The hon. member for Kootenay East, who represents the riding just west of me, knows very well what the people of his riding would think about this piece of legislation. They would not care a damn about it. They do not want it. They would not be long in telling him so either, because they are used to firearms. The hon. member for Kootenay East has used firearms to shoot bear, moose and other animals in his part of the country. He goes shooting ducks once in a while. Yes, perhaps he even shoots the bull. However, he would be the last one to want this type of legislation.

People have written to me about it and that is why I have taken the trouble to speak on this measure. One person at Okotoks, who has been a sportsman all his life and has been engaged in the sale of firearms, has written to me on many occasions about bills such as this. I hope this is the last one that will be brought before the house. I have referred these letters to the Department of Justice in order that they may know what the people of the country think. We do not want to penalize everybody because someone thinks that what he is proposing is going to correct a problem. Nobody wants to see the shooting of other people. Nobody wants to see the use of firearms abused, but at the same time what the hon. member is proposing will not solve the problem.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say only a few words on this bill but I should like to begin by saying that I have some measure of sympathy for the argument advanced by the sponsor of the bill, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc). At the same time, I find that I am in some agreement with the remarks, though perhaps not the manner in which they were advanced, of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt). I say that because certainly anything that this house can do within reason to eliminate the misuse of firearms should be done. If amendments to the Criminal Code are a way of doing it effectively, then I would have no objection to that.

However, I have to say that I do not believe the kind of amendment advanced by the hon. member for Laurier will in fact do anything at all to eliminate the misuse of firearms. There is no disagreement about the fact there is a problem that should be dealt with, but the imposition of severe restrictions on the sale and ownership of firearms is not going to do it. I challenge the hon. member for Laurier to produce any statistics to indicate that a firearm purchased from an authorized and licensed dealer has been used by some person to commit a murder or otherwise used in a criminal act.

I think it is a fact that in most cases firearms which have been used for criminal acts have been stolen weapons. Putting this restriction on a large part of the Canadian population is certainly not going to get at the root of the problem, which is to stop the theft of firearms and the misuse of them thereafter. If we are going to accept severe restrictions upon dealers and purchasers of firearms, such as those that have been outlined, I hope we can be given an argument that carries more weight. An argument in the same vein could be advanced, for example, with regard to the sale of automobiles. They kill far more people than firearms and do so consistently every week of every month of every year. There are pieces of equipment or devices commonly used by large numbers of the Canadian population that are extremely dangerous if misused.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, while the hon. member has had the opportunity of bringing before the house some of the problems involved in connection with the misuse of firearms, I hope he will be unable to convince members of the house that even a small measure of correction of this misuse can be found in bringing in this severe restriction and imposing it upon hundreds of thousands of Canadians who buy firearms and use them properly.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt) I too was a gopher shooter in my boyhood days. I recall very clearly the days I spent in the fields around Crown Hill just outside my home town of Barrie. However, let me say at the outset that the motion moved by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) is, in my humble opinion, a very timely one, and I congratulate him on bringing it forward at his first opportunity even though he may have preferred to be with his delegates and constituents listening to the big and little guns of the Liberal party which are still firing over at the Chateau Laurier.

With increasing population and development in our cities and towns there is added opportunity and temptation to commit crimes of violence. I submit that a review of the law with respect to the carriage, possession, custody and other aspects of firearms and other offensive weapons should be made during the life of this parliament. However, I do not think that all members would agree that a special committee should be formed.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I think that the subject matter of this motion should be referred to the existing standing committee on justice and legal affairs. I feel that it is exceptionally well equipped under its chairman, the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cameron), to deal with a subject matter of this kind. While I think there is need for the suggested review, I do not believe there should be any radical disarming of our solid citizens and police officers across the nation.

Police officers in England are not armed but in that country a different situation obtains. They have there a few lonely stretches but they are few and far between. In Canada we have vast areas of uninhabited country consisting of bush and swamp, areas that a man would be foolish to traverse or to inhabit without firearms to defend his person, his family and his possessions.

Furthermore, there are many species of deer, rabbits, varmints and pests that need to be harvested annually or at least occasionally to keep them under control. Perhaps the constituency of Macleod does have a gopher problem, but we all know that Australia certainly has a rabbit problem and that in New Zealand professional hunters are employed all year round to keep the ever-abundant deer population from destroying farmers' crops. They are a real menace there. We do not have to go to the cost of controlling our wildlife when animals become pests in this country.

Again, there are many sportsmen in Canada who have proven that they are experts in the use and control of firearms, for example, in trap and skeet shooting on ranges, and in all forms of hunting, whether it be bird, big game or varmints. I submit that these men are foremost in good citizenship and conservation projects and, when need be, in the defence of their country.

I would hate to see any law passed, Mr. Speaker, which would deprive the farmer or the sportsman of his right to possess and to use legally a legal length rifle or a shotgun. I also think there are others who are entitled to use firearms, such as a banker in a small village who might need a pistol or revolver in his branch for protection. I am sure there are many cases where it would make common sense and would be advisable to issue permits for firearms, both short and long.

The present law relating to offensive weapons can cause serious problems to innocent individuals as the law now stands. I recall a case I handled some years ago where a Hudson Bay factor travelling by train to Toronto happened to open his suitcase in the train to show something inside it to a person with whom he had become acquainted. In doing so a pistol came into the view of some of the passengers on the train. A lady on the train became quite excited and called in the railway police who arrested this factor.

The fact is that this person had been in the north for so long that apparently he could not quite make himself understood in his nervous condition. He was arrested and charges were laid under section 82 of the Code and I believe also another section. He was pretty well hounded by a combination of railway and other police, taken to court and put to a very expensive defence. His only mistake was that he failed to realize when coming from the far north to the south of the country that there would be a different application of the law and probably in a moment of forgetfulness he had put the pistol which he needed for his own protection in the north into his suitcase, though not having a permit to carry it. That is the kind of trouble that he got into. So I would submit there are one or two aspects of the law as it now stands which could be criticized, altered and improved.

I recall that during the last war a problem arose over thefts of firearms from manufacturers such as John Inglis and other small arms plants. A few of the people who worked in these plants would steal parts of firearms which would be assembled outside the plant. I recall that the police had quite a problem with this sort of thing for some time after the war. I know of one man who was slain by such a weapon.

There is no question in my mind that the indiscriminate distribution of firearms, including defensive weapons, is a bad thing for this country. I recall that after the last war my brother brought back from Germany a Schmeiser, which I believe is sort of a German submachine gun. It is a rapid-fire weapon. Shortly after the government passed a regulation requiring people holding such weapons to divulge that fact. The R.C.M.P. attended, and with considerable regret we saw this war trophy leave our home. But we recognized that that weapon could be stolen and that it was in the best interests that the government's regulation be carried out.

The regulation of firearms in Canada is not in the hands of the federal government. Gun licences and permits are issued by provincial authorities and certain other aspects are controlled by them. In looking into this situation, therefore, it would be necessary to consider the rights and interests of the ten provinces.

Witnesses as to the modern state of affairs in government circles and in police, military and sporting circles, with respect to the question of firearms and defensive weapons, should welcome the call to arms discussion which I hope the hon. member for Laurier has initiated.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks on this motion. A consensus has arisen about this matter to the effect that in essence some consideration should be given to revising the rules concerning firearms but that the hon. member who sponsored the motion has gone much too far.

This question has been discussed on a large scale in the United States because of the unfortunate assassinations there. There has been resistance to changing the rules governing firearms for the very reasons which have been given by hon. members, namely, that the use of firearms in itself is not illegal and that we should not assume that licensing weapons will eliminate their illegal use. Those, I think, are proper assumptions to make. We know very well that anyone bent on assassination, illegal activity or violence can obtain and conceal a weapon. In fact, in some cases this is done so that identification will not be too easy.

I do not think that the immediate objective of preventing crime or reducing the number of violent crimes would be met by what the hon. member has suggested. Since the hon. member put this motion on the order paper we have had an incident in this house. I am sure that had he put the motion down after that incident be would have included a reference to explosives. Following the incident here we found that explosives were extremely easy to obtain without licence, and apparently without difficulty. I think this shocked many people.

The second point arising out of that incident was that the man in question was encouraged to do what he did by having spoken to someone who suggested that it would be very easy to throw dynamite or a bomb into this house. There is something to be said, therefore, for a form of licensing which will will not make violent weapons so easy to use. The hon. member has brought before the house a suggestion meriting consideration, but I do not think anyone feels that we should go as far as he suggests.

To bring my remarks to a conclusion, may I summarize. First, I think there should be a better system of licensing offensive weapons, not for the purpose of eliminating them or reducing their numbers or use but merely so that it will be known where they are. Second, the use or ownership of such weapons should not be limited. Finally, in connection with and in addition to licensing, instruction on safety measures ought to be given.

I think that the bringing of these questions before some interested body would be well worth while. I am not sure that a special committee is the proper place. I think that this sort of thing should originate with the Department of Justice and the Attorneys General. The government on its own responsibility should bring in legislation. Following that, I suppose the matter would be referred to a committee.

I feel that we are doing too much by way of committee work on some matters that are strictly for the administration of justice to deal with. In this case I believe the better thing would be for the government to ask the Minister of Justice to consult with all the persons interested, the Attorneys General, sportmen's clubs and so forth, so that some consensus will be reached about what is actually required in order to bring in legislation.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker as I do not believe in the principle that a bill or a motion should be talked out, I shall forego my right to speak.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I concur with the hon. member that too many bills in this house are talked out. However, we have before us today a motion which, as has been pointed out, is somewhat imperfect. The hon. member who has introduced it also has a bill on the order paper. I presume there will be an opportunity of discussing the specific suggestions at the time it is debated.

With respect to the motion I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) is excellent. I am glad he has not taken the attitude of airily dismissing this problem in the way the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt) did. I think the matter should be carefully examined to make sure that better safety measures are found. This is our first concern. I believe it ought to be examined in the Department of Justice. When the hon. member for Laurier brings forward his bill I hope at that time it will appear in the interests of this house and of all citizens of Canada that it be referred to a committee, perhaps to the committee on justice and legal affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Winkler: I should like to ask the acting house leader what the business will be for tomorrow.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, we shall again attempt to call item 82, commonly known as the medicare bill.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, October 13, 1966

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. NUGENT—OBJECTIONS TO STATEMENTS BY DEFENCE MINISTER

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege arising out of a statement made by the Minister of National Defence which is to be found on page 8583 of Hansard of October 12. The sentence I object to is as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I cannot give consent to reverting unless the hon. member is willing to indicate that he will put forward a serious motion rather than a spurious one.

The word "spurious" impugns my honour and integrity in connection with the charge I made against him yesterday. I did not raise this question last night; although I was here in my place and heard the minister speak I did not hear that word, or I am sure it would have impressed itself on my mind. Perhaps I thought he said "furious", which would not have been objectionable.

At first I thought perhaps that one word in itself would not give rise to the serious question of privilege I now raise, but on looking over Hansard and the entire list of statements which the minister made in this house yesterday there is obviously a course of conduct followed by the minister which would lead me to believe he was trying to give this house the impression that I was not making a sincere attempt to bring before this house something which I think is of the greatest importance.

In order to fully understand the intended connotation of the word "spurious" one need only look at Hansard and read similar words. Taken together these words can only mean one thing. I have looked up the word "spurious" in the dictionary and there are three definitions worthy of quoting. The word is stated to mean "not genuine". Another definition of that word is "not being what it pretends to be", and yet another is "not proceeding from the pretended source".

In order to establish that this is a serious question I will later on give the house the text of the motion I moved yesterday, which shows the intent and scope of the question. First I should like to refer to two or three references in Hansard where similar types of words were used. At page 8572 there are two references. The first is this:

> Mr. Speaker, obviously no one is more interested than I in having these slanderous insinuations dealt with in a proper fashion and in a proper forum.

The word "slanderous" in that context certainly imputes that this was not a serious question and that I did not proceed in an honourable way. At the top of the same page the minister said:

> • (2:40 p.m.)
> It is clear that the object of this exercise is merely to frustrate the business planned for this afternoon.

I did rise on a question of privilege at that point objecting to the minister imputing an improper motive. I will not read it again but would remind the house of its context, namely that I considered the suggestion to be part of a planned campaign to discredit as dishonourable what I claim to be an honourable motive in making the charge in this house.

As reported at page 8577 the minister, when referring to the charge, said:

> And also a trifle evasive.

This was said as though I had not leaned over backward to make the charge specific and to make sure there could be no misunderstanding of its meaning, and as though in fact I had not gone out of my way to explain it in every way possible because I felt the minister had the right to know what the facts were upon which I was relying to prove my charge. On page 8583 of Hansard there is the word I have objected to, namely that this was a "spurious" charge. Then on page 8581 the minister made this statement:

> —"tampering" is so broad that it could include scratching your back.

When we consider all these remarks and the word "spurious" we can understand why one of the difficulties we ran into yesterday was the fact that I did not have an opportunity to bring before the house the actual facts alleged, the importance of the changes made in the testimony, so the house could see for itself that I could not honestly be charged with bringing in a spurious charge and no one could seriously say that this course was not taken in a very serious manner and that the facts alleged do not constitute, if proven, a very serious breach of the privileges of this house. The motion I had intended to make yesterday reads as follows:

> That the allegation made this day by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona against the Minister of National Defence, Hon. Paul Hellyer, be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections to deal with and inquire into the evidence and the witnesses before the standing committee on national defence during this session of parliament, and the practices and procedures involving witnesses, and evidence in appearances before the said committee, and in particular with regard to Admiral Landymore's appearance.

It will be obvious from reading that motion that the motion itself indicates, had the minister read it, that instead of making a spurious charge I had indicated to the house that I intended to refer this matter to the committee on privileges and elections. As will be seen from the motion, it was not just Admiral Landymore's testimony that should be investigated, but the facts I have in my possession indicate that the testimony of every witness heard by that committee must be viewed with very serious doubt. From the remarks made by the minister and also from the course of conduct in this matter it is obvious that the house should consider rules to guide witnesses, ministers and senior officials, so that when people are called before a committee of the House of Commons they may plainly understand what are the limitations of authority of a minister in giving advice to people who want to prepare and present a case.

I hope I have made a prima facie case, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps you will now allow me to proceed to the evidence that I think it is necessary to give the house so the gravity of the situation may be understood. I think the minister would concur in this.

He said on page 8572 of Hansard:

> I make that suggestion because I do not think the alleged facts as presented here today can be separated from other facts and questions that will no doubt be considered at the time that committee meets. I think this matter should be considered in a forum where—

He was then interrupted. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that considering the statement I made yesterday and the charges I laid, which were unanswered; and the fact that the minister has impugned my honour and integrity, I have the right to ask that the matter be referred to the committee on privileges and elections. I will therefore make a motion to that effect as soon as the Speaker has decided that I have made a prima facie case.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry my hon. friend took offence at the word "spurious". To the best of my knowledge and belief it is not an unparliamentary word. If I am wrong in that contention I will be pleased to have you so inform me. Similarly I was not imputing any motives. At the time I made the reference to the word "spurious", I was unaware of the full range of meaning of that word, but after looking it up in Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary I was surprised to find I had hit the nail right on the head.

Mr. Nugent: I cannot accept that as a satisfactory explanation, because I am afraid the minister's statement that his use of the word was unintentional does not get around the statement which he made very clearly and forcefully and which appears on page 8572 of Hansard. He said:

> It is clear that the object of this exercise is merely to frustrate the business planned for this afternoon.

He certainly knew the meaning of those words and did not have to look them up in a dictionary. I suggest that in view of this, because of the suggestion made and the way it was reported in the press, my name can now only be cleared by the sort of hearing that is necessary to clear the minister's name. I would therefore like to proceed with my question of privilege if the Chair will permit me to do so.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked the Chair to rule on whether he has a prima facie case of privilege. I have not been given an opportunity to do so until now. I do not want to interrupt the hon. member; since he suggested yesterday that I interfered a little hastily I will try not to get into difficulty with him in the same way today.

If hon. members agree and if no further contributions are forthcoming from either side of the house on whether the use of the word "spurious" is unparliamentary to the extent that it impugns the integrity and honour of the hon. member, this is the only point I have to consider. The hon. member also referred to two other statements made by the minister. But what the hon. member is saying is that the word "spurious" is unparliamentary and that it impugns the honour and integrity of the hon. member. I can assure him that I appreciate his kindness and thoughtfulness in giving me notice of the question of privilege which he has raised. I can certainly tell him today that in my view he has given sufficient notice to place the matter before the house. This is one of the requirements which he has met satisfactorily.

There is another requirement about which I am not so sure. I have consulted certain dictionaries for a definition of the word "spurious" and have found the same interpretation as that given by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona; that is "not genuine, not real". I looked at the translation of the word, and perhaps because of my training was impressed by the significance given in the French Hansard version of the word used in English by the hon. member. The French Hansard reads: "simulacre de motion", an unreal motion or a motion that is not genuine. Obviously this is the interpretation we have to place on that word.

My limited experience in the house indicates that it is not, per se, unparliamentary to say of another member that the statement he makes is false, untrue, wrong, incorrect or even spurious, unless there is an improper motive imputed or unless the member making the charge claims the untruth was stated to the knowledge of the person stating any such alleged untruth.

The minister has taken the opportunity to do what I would have asked him to do in any event, to say that he did not impute motives. The Chair has to be guided by what the minister has stated and by a prima facie interpretation of the word itself. I do not believe that saying a statement made is spurious is unparliamentary, or that a statement is incorrect, wrong or untrue, if no motives are imputed by the person making such a statement. I have to rule with regret—I hope the hon. member is not going to suggest the question should be reopened; I will certainly hear him, but I was going to say that in my opinion there is no prima facie case of privilege.

I might say, in a more general way, that at times there seems to be a misconception about what is a question of privilege and what is a point of order. In many instances the words complained of really should not be complained of on a question of privilege but rather on a point of order, on the basis that the words used are unparliamentary and against the rules and therefore there is a point of order. I realize that in some instances words may be used which are so strong as to impugn the very honour and integrity of the individual member against whom the words are directed. In this case I do not believe the word is so strong as to impugn the honour of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, and for this reason I judge there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Nugent: Your Honour has ruled on the word "spurious", but I had a second matter upon which I would ask for your ruling. Perhaps I did not phrase it quite correctly; nevertheless the total effect of the words referred to must be considered. The difficulty here, sir, is that even sitting in the house, although I objected to some words as they were used, in the heat of debate with the points you are trying to make or to clarify for the minister to be considered, it is not possible to get the general effect of all these remarks or their cumulative effect. I submit therefore it is a proper question of privilege to bring up as soon as possible, as I have done, the entire series of remarks.

I used the word "spurious" as the basis for the first question of privilege because that is the word which caught my attention when I looked at Hansard and caused me to check the rest of it. The second point of privilege is based on the entire series of remarks which give the impression—and I believe it is not improper to recognize that the press has so considered these remarks—that the object of this exercise was merely to frustrate the business of the house. Although I objected at the time, these words taken together with the reaction in the press across the country seem to indicate that this was less than a serious charge, that the matter was not serious.

I should like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, and the attention of the house, so we may consider exactly how serious the charge is, the evidence which shows that the change was neither minor nor inconsequential because in effect it deprived the committee of complete information on the question of manpower. I think, sir, it must be borne in mind that I rose in my place to take my full responsibility and to make objection.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that since the minister is still sitting in the house with this question hanging over his head, and having turned down the chance last night to have the house give unanimous consent to revert to the question so he could clear his name, Your Honour should take a broad look at the rules in order that members of this house should not be asked to sit with a member who has had such serious charges made against him, and who had the opportunity last night of having them investigated but did not take that opportunity. These charges are still hanging over him, and this would be another opportunity to have these charges dealt with. My motion is substantially the same as my motion yesterday except that I have added that the committee should also decide whether my charges were spurious.

I would ask Your Honour to take a very broad look at the rules in this regard. This is another question of privilege that Your Honour has to consider, and it arises as soon as the member involved comes into the house. Here is a member against whom very serious charges have been made in connection with a breach of privilege, which charges have not been dealt with. He himself did not give consent to have them dealt with and under those circumstances the members of this house should not have to sit with a member who refuses to have his name cleared.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if he is guilty as I allege we should not have to sit with him. If he does not want his name cleared he should not sit in this chamber. Therefore I would ask Your Honour to rule on my point of privilege that the sequence of the statements made in this house yesterday is of such a nature that the imputations against me contained therein can only be cleared by a full and complete investigation before the privileges and elections committee. I would further ask you to consider the fact that the minister can only clear his name by a full and complete investigation before that committee.

Finally I would ask the Chair to consider the position of the members of this house and whether a man can breach the privileges of the house, refuse to have an investigation to clear his name and still ask us to sit with him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member says he has a new question of privilege; I gather this is the purport of his assertion now. If he has not, obviously there has already been a ruling on the other question of privilege, so I assume that he is asking for another ruling from the Chair on the basis of a new question of privilege.

Mr. Nugent: For a second interpretation, sir.

[Mr. Nugent.]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member says he wants a second interpretation of the same question of privilege, but I do not think the rules contemplate this alternative possibility.

I have read the standing orders, the rules and the precedents but I have certainly never seen, and I very much doubt whether the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona could bring for the assistance of the Speaker in ruling in this particular instance, a precedent which would justify his suggestion that a new interpretation of the same question should get a second ruling.

The hon. member brought up a question of which he gave me notice, according to the rules, and this is the only matter I have before me. This question of privilege referred specifically to the use of a particular word. I have made a ruling on this question.

The hon. member says that other words were used, and that I should rule on those. The hon. member knows that the time to raise this question was yesterday, not today. The reason a discussion is allowed at this time on the use of this particular word is that the hon. member said that he himself had misunderstood the word when it was used. He thought the word was "curious", but on reading Hansard he saw that it was "spurious". There is no suggestion that he did not understand the meaning or purport of the other words of which he now complains. I suggest to him that when the words were spoken would have been the time to object.

With all due respect to the hon. member, he did raise the point yesterday that he thought the minister should not impute motives; and I fully agree that one of the basic principles of debate is that there should be no imputation of motives. In any event, the minister said a moment ago that he did not intend to impute motives.

For all these reasons I cannot judge that the hon. member has a new question of privilege on which a new ruling should be required from the Chair. We had a question yesterday on which I made a ruling, and a second question brought up today of which the hon. member gave me notice in writing, according to the rules, and on which I have given my opinion and made my ruling. I am sorry to say to the hon. member that I do not judge that there is a third question of privilege at this time.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, you have not given a ruling on the question of whether the Minister of National Defence is entitled to sit in this house under the present circumstances.

Mr. Speaker: Please. This is not the question of privilege; the hon. member is making a point of debate. He is making a specific suggestion now which he knows can only be presented by certain methods which are in accordance with the rules. The hon. member cannot ask the Chair whether he, an hon. member for any other riding in Canada or any member of the cabinet has the right to sit in the house. Only members of parliament can decide that. Certainly the Chair cannot.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, that is a question of privilege which I think is valid. I could not give you notice of it because this question does not arise until the minister takes his seat in the house. Therefore no written notice was required. This is a question of privilege, I submit, involving every member in this house. It is our business to suggest to individuals in this chamber under what conditions they shall sit in it, and what behaviour they must observe in order to have the right to sit here. I suggest it is contempt of parliament for the minister, in view of these serious charges, to be permitted—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is repeating now for the second or third time a statement he has made before, but he knows what the rules are. The only way he can bring up this type of question, if it is a question of privilege, is under the proper circumstances. There has been a ruling that it has not been done under the proper circumstances.

If the hon. member feels that some type of action should be taken by the house, he knows that this has to be done by motion. Certainly no hon. member can rise in this house and say "I do not think the hon. member for such and such a constituency has any right to sit here", thinking he can initiate a debate in this way. There are rules to be followed, and the hon. member cannot do this unless he does it in the proper way. The motion the hon. member may have in mind is a substantive motion which has to be moved with notice given in the proper way.

Mr. Nugent: May I give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I shall be moving a motion?

Mr. Speaker: Of course it has to be written notice, according to the rules.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR INCREASES IN INITIAL PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the appropriate minister I direct this question to the Prime Minister. Will the government of Canada not give consideration to raising the initial payment for the 1966-67 crop year by 25 cents per bushel on wheat, 14 cents per bushel on barley and 10 cents a bushel on oats?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister responsible, the Minister of Finance, dealt with this matter a day or two ago when he said the matter was under consideration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the request of the opposition has received the approbation of recent events, does the government not feel that the time is here for it to announce these increases so the farmers will not suffer by reason of the accelerating cost of living, cost of machinery and the like? Is there no answer?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I said the matter was under consideration. We will do our best to see that the farmers do not suffer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: For 47 years health insurance was under consideration, too.

AGRICULTURE

CHURCHILL, MAN.—REQUEST FOR GREATER USE OF ELEVATOR STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture and ask if he has received any representations from the secretary of the Hudson Bay Route Association to the effect that the Churchill terminal elevator is to remain almost empty this winter as it did last winter. Has the minister heard the contention of the secretary that there is adequate grain within a radius of 700 miles, as well as adequate numbers of box cars, to fill this elevator for the coming winter? Also may I ask the minister whether any action is being taken to see that full and complete use is made of the storage and handling facilities of the Churchill terminal elevator during this coming winter and spring.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have received no communication in this regard, to my knowledge. It may be that the Minister of Transport, under whose jurisdiction the elevators come, has received some communication.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Transport if it is correct that the Churchill terminal elevator is likely to remain empty this winter. If so, are any steps being taken to see to it that full use is made of the terminal facilities at Churchill?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I hope, sir, that the terminal elevator at Churchill will not be empty during this winter. I am taking the most active steps I am capable of to persuade the wheat board to fill it.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the elevator was empty for most of last winter, can the minister assure the house that his steps will be more effective this year than last year?

Mr. Pickersgill: I cannot assure the house of that. All I can assure the house is that I will do my best. I should add that last year the elevator was kept empty at the request both of the railways and the wheat board, because it was felt last year that more wheat could be exported more expeditiously if that was done. The harbours board agreed with the greatest reluctance to what was done last year. They have not agreed this year.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What representations has the minister made? The explanation he has given is a novel one. What representations has he made, and what are the altered conditions this year that will assure that this elevator shall be used, rather than being ostracized as it was last winter by this government?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I can answer that question very easily because I happened to be talking to the executive vice president of the Canadian National about this matter less than two hours ago, when he was at the transport committee. Last year if box cars had been used to fill the elevator at Churchill they could not have been used to take the wheat to Vancouver where it was urgently needed. This year there are box cars available to fill the elevator in Churchill. The Canadian National is very anxious to use box cars for that purpose. I hope the wheat board will be equally anxious to have the elevator filled.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would ask the minister whether any thought has been given by the government to fully automating our ports for the unloading of grain from box cars to ships, as it is done in the United States, so that we can speed up the use of these box cars.

Mr. Pickersgill: A study is being made of this matter at the present time, and I hope we shall do an even better job than the United States authorities have done. I am fully conscious of the importance of modernizing our facilities for the handling of wheat. They are not adequate for the kind of crops we are now getting. This is one of the most pressing problems in this country, and the government is giving the most urgent consideration to it.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you very much.

BROADCASTING

RESIGNATION OF OFFICIAL OF BOARD OF GOVERNORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

He seems in fine fettle following the week-end conference where the matter of bilingualism and bi-ethnic groups in Canada was discussed.

Has the Prime Minister been informed of what Le Devoir calls a "resounding resignation from the B.B.G.", that is the Board of Broadcast Governors? It is the resignation of Mr. Frédéric Côté who is accusing the federal body of being intellectually dishonest and taking an anti-French Canadian attitude.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member knows that he cannot read the news report while asking his question.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, here is my question. Has the Prime Minister been informed of that resignation and would he undertake to check the accuracy of the charges made by a former employee of the Board of Broadcast Governors?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was made aware by the Secretary of State, who is looking into the matter.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO PRODUCTION OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the remarks he made earlier this week in this city regarding the removal of the discriminatory aspects of our current immigration laws, and the indication that sponsorship rights were to be available to all immigrants entering Canada, may I ask the minister when this house can expect to receive the white paper on immigration?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I had intended to ask a similar question in connection with immigration. In view of the minister's remarks made last Saturday at a meeting in Toronto, remarks which brought forth strong protests, may I ask whether what is contained in this white paper will coincide with the statements the hon. gentleman has made?

Mr. Marchand: Neither in Toronto nor here in Ottawa did I reveal what is contained in the white paper. As a matter of fact I did not say more outside than I have said here in the house. For the rest, I think the hon. member can wait until tomorrow and check for himself.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I should like to ask the minister whether as reported in the press this morning he discussed in detail the contents of this white paper which he intends to table in the house tomorrow.

Mr. Marchand: I never discussed the white paper in detail.

Mr. Hees: Then I take it that newspaper reports to the effect that this was discussed at the annual meeting of the Liberal party yesterday are completely wrong?

Mr. Marchand: My answer to that would be that I have discussed these matters in general terms; I merely repeated at the convention what I had already said here in the house concerning discrimination and sponsorship.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Huron): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the government has changed its plan to have medicare instituted by January, 1967, and postponed the date to January, 1968, will the government give consideration to referring this matter to a committee of the house in order that all those who are vitally interested may have an opportunity to be heard?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): It is not the intention of the government to send the medical care bill to a committee for study. It is a very short bill and it speaks for itself. In my view it can properly be studied in committee of the whole.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Inasmuch as the effective date for this legislation is to be 1968, I wonder whether the minister could tell us by what date we might expect legislation to provide increased payments for old age pensioners?

Mr. MacEachen: As I stated yesterday, we hope to bring in this legislation during the present session. The details of the legislation will be disclosed at that time.

Mr. Winkler: Does the minister not think this pension issue is more important than the medicare bill because of the revised date of application of the latter?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is argumentative.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put the following supplementary question.

Since the bill on medicare will not, in any case, be enforced before July 1968, would the minister not consider the advisability of studying in the first place an increase of old age pensions in Canada?

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: It is my hope to have the medical care bill disposed of by the house before introducing any other legislation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR BAIT SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the fact that inshore fishermen of Nova Scotia generally are required to pay twice as much for their fish bait as are their counterparts in Newfoundland, would the hon. gentleman give consideration to the application of a bait subsidy in favour of Nova Scotia fishermen identical to the one paid in Newfoundland?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): I am sure the hon. member is well aware that the bait assistance which is being provided in Newfoundland cannot be considered as a direct subsidy. It is a service provided to the fishermen of Newfoundland in accordance with the terms of union, or the terms which were put forward when Newfoundland joined confederation.

As far as Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or any other maritime province is concerned, we at present have a bait subsidy policy with respect to the construction of bait storage facilities.

Mr. Crouse: In view of the fact that this bait subsidy which the minister has mentioned discriminates against fishermen in Nova Scotia, would the hon. gentleman not consider extending a similar subsidy to fishermen in our province?

Mr. Robichaud: There is no such discrimination. The subsidy applicable today has been applicable for a number of years, and conditions have not changed.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MALTON, ONT.—LAY-OFFS AT DOUGLAS AIRCRAFT PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and ask whether he has yet seen a telegram from the president of local 112 of the United Automobile Workers protesting against the lay-off of some 89 employees by Douglas Aircraft at Malton. In view of the suggestion that many of those laid off were engaged in an on the job training program, can the minister inform the house what steps he is taking to persuade the company to reinstate them immediately?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I have received a telegram, and I hope to be in a position to make a complete report on this situation some time tomorrow.

COAL

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I have a question for the Prime Minister. In order to relieve anxiety among those of the public who are interested in and aware of the situation, would the right hon. gentleman now announce government policy with respect the Nova Scotia coal industry?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not today, Mr. Speaker, but as soon as possible.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Again, I appeal to the Prime Minister. In order to relieve the anxiety which now exists, why does he not immediately release this policy? He has indicated that it is ready now for release. Why keep the miners and the people of Nova Scotia waiting?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question has been answered by the Prime Minister. The hon. member for Cape Breton South may think the answer is not satisfactory but, as he knows, he cannot require a minister to answer. The second part of his question would appear to be argumentative.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A further supplementary, then. I ask the Prime Minister this. Has government policy been prepared now, ready for release later?

Mr. Pearson: The matter is under consideration, and as soon as that consideration is completed I will be as anxious as is the hon. gentleman to make public the views of the government in the house.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I ask the Prime Minister how he can equate that last statement with the information he gave me in the house yesterday as reported at page 8586 of Hansard, when he said:

> I am sure my hon. friend will be very happy about the policy when it is announced.

The only impression one can take from this answer is that the policy is ready but that the government will not release it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION RESPECTING ABOLITION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In view of the uncertainty surrounding the infliction of the capital sentence, and bearing in mind the case brought to the attention of the house by the hon. member for York-Humber and the uncertainty which today exists in the minds of those who are awaiting execution, may I ask whether the government now intends to give consideration to the introduction of legislation for the abolition of capital punishment?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the right hon. gentleman for giving me notice of his intention to raise this question. I also thank him for raising a very important subject. This matter has been under consideration by the government, and if it is proposed to amend or change the existing law an announcement will be made at the appropriate time and as soon as possible.

Mr. Fulton: In the meantime will the existing law be carried out?

Mr. Pennell: With respect, the law is being carried out.

Mr. Lambert: I beg to differ.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How many now, to the minister's knowledge, are there in jail awaiting execution?

Mr. Pennell: The right hon. gentleman will appreciate that I am speaking from memory, but I believe the figure is nine or ten.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION RESPECTING SAFETY FEATURES ON AUTOMOBILES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Industry. I should like to ask him, since final studies were completed last week in Ottawa regarding a code for safety features in automobiles, is the government considering passing legislation in the form of a code for the public who purchase motor vehicles?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, consideration is being given to the introduction of legislation where appropriate and in fields in which the federal government has jurisdiction.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION—INCREASE IN DISABILITY PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct to the Minister of Veterans Affairs a question of current concern to many veterans and their dependants in Canada at this time. Can the minister inform the house when he expects the report of Mr. Justice Wood on the organization of the Canadian Pension Commission will be tabled in the house, and when legislation will be introduced to provide for increases in war disability pensions and war veterans allowances?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to thank the hon. member for advising me that he would raise this matter today. With regard to the first part of the question, I think all of us are grateful for the fact that the evidence before and interest in the Wood inquiry has been such that it has taken many more months than many of us anticipated. I am not complaining about that. I think this shows that the matter is important. When the report is received we hope it will be of real value to us.

As to when this report may be received, I must say that it is still a question, although I hope to receive it within a month or so. I think the hon. member will appreciate that I will not press the chairman of this inquiry to rush his report. I am sure, as all hon. members who know him will be aware, that he will do so as quickly as possible.

Concerning the second part of the question, I hope at the first opportunity to present to the house a measure, which I anticipate will be by way of an estimate because we will deal with amendments to this act at a later date, dealing with war disability pensions and war veterans allowances. This I will do. The government has taken its decision on this and I would want to introduce it at the earliest possible moment.

While I am on my feet may I also deal with a question asked last Thursday by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition with regard to war veterans allowances. I should like to say to him that it is not my intention to recommend a change of principle in respect of the War Veterans' Allowance Act. There will, however, be some measures affecting the ceilings on income when I can bring to the house the amendments I have suggested.

I think the hon. member for Kootenay West also asked a question last Thursday, but I believe I already have given the answer. As soon as I have an opportunity I hope to introduce the adjustments to the war disability pensions, the war veterans allowances and ceilings on income. As the Prime Minister made clear, these are interim measures so far as disability pensions are concerned, and other measures will be coming in at a later date.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the minister suggests these will be temporary measures to raise the disability pensions and war veterans allowances through estimates and not through legislation, there will be no obstacle in the way of his making an announcement to the house before the estimates are brought in. I should like to ask the minister whether he can give us any idea what increase will be granted and when it is likely to be effective, because this is a matter about which members are receiving a great deal of correspondence. It would help the veterans if they knew when this is likely to take place and what the percentage is likely to be.

Mr. Teillet: I can answer one part of that question, Mr. Speaker, as to an effective date. The hope is that it will be September 1, 1966. I have had some preliminary discussions with other people in the house on this and it is the hope that we can bring this measure in as quickly as possible, with perhaps the opportunity for a more complete debate on the matter at some later date.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. First I should like to say, if I may make this observation, that I am glad the minister is taking action, but I am disappointed with the suggestion made by him, if I understood him correctly, that the veterans 69 years of age and over who become qualified for the old age pension will have their war veterans allowance reduced. I ask the minister, will he not give real consideration to this matter? A grave injustice is being done. I am not blaming this on the government, but I am saying a grave injustice is being done to the veterans who today are in the latter part of their lives and find themselves unable to carry on with the reduced amount of their war veterans allowance.

[Mr. Teillet.]

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I can interpret that as a question, but I have indicated we have no intention, or I have no intention, of recommending to the government that the principle of the War Veterans' Allowance Act be changed. I did indicate, however, that I would be bringing in a recommendation respecting an adjustment of the ceiling on income for war veterans allowance recipients which in some measure will meet the request; but I am not at all inclined to recommend a change to the principle of the act.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is pretty hard on the old soldiers.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell us when he expects to introduce amendments to the Pension Act other than in respect of pension rates, which were promised in 1964.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated a moment age, I think it would be foolhardy for me to indicate a date, because I think I should wait for the report of the Wood committee which may well recommend far reaching amendments to the Canadian pension commission act. I think it would be wise for me to wait until I have that report before I indicate what the legislation will be and when I can bring it in.

TRANSPORT

REPORTED SHORTAGE OF RAILWAY CARS FOR LIVESTOCK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is he aware of a severe livestock railway car shortage which is building up in the prairies, and will he take action to see that conditions are not repeated such as existed last fall, when livestock began to move and there were no railway cars to move them?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was courteous enough to indicate that he was going to ask this question. This gave me an opportunity to consult with the management of the Canadian National Railways. They are aware that in the last few days a shortage has been developing, and they are taking the most urgent action to meet the problem.

BRIDGES

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR REMOVAL OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that Jacques Cartier bridge is under repair at present, as well as the approaches to Victoria bridge, and that heavy traffic is prohibited in the Lafontaine tunnel and considering that a telegram has been sent to the minister and a few members of this house by the Quebec or Eastern Canada Trucking Association, would it be possible for the government, as requested by that association, to abolish tolls on Champlain bridge, at least temporarily or until the situation is corrected next spring?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt very much that this type of question should be accepted in the circumstances. If the minister wishes to reply, I shall allow him to do so through courtesy for the member for Mégantic.

[English]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I very much regret, and I am sure everyone who has used the bridge regrets it even more, that there is serious congestion on the Jacques Cartier bridge because of the paving that is being done at the present time. Every effort is being made to see that the paving is done only on one lane at a time. The work is progressing from both ends, and I am very hopeful that this situation will be of a temporary nature. In the meantime the suggestion will be taken into consideration.

Mr. Langlois (Mégantic): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister look into the situation and make some attempt to speed up the work being done and avoid construction on all bridges at the same time? This would alleviate some of this congestion.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN DAM CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I intended to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Perhaps in his absence his parliamentary secretary could deal with it or, under the circumstances, perhaps the right hon. Prime Minister will answer it.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance, in correcting an answer given previously by the Prime Minister as to whether there had been a request from the premier of British Columbia for assistance in the financing of Columbia river dams told us that there was a letter from Premier Bennett to him and that he had replied. Will the government consider tabling copies of that correspondence immediately?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I stated, no such request has been received by me. As the Minister of Finance said, the matter was raised at a recent conference and is being considered by the Department of Finance preparatory to its submission to the cabinet for consideration. Until that time I do not wish to add to what already has been said.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps the Prime Minister misunderstood me, Mr. Speaker. I was not asking him to further disclose the government's intentions, but merely, in view of the importance of this matter, to table the correspondence so the house might be better informed.

Mr. Pearson: I have no objection to doing so, but I should like to consult with the minister to see in exactly what form the request was made by the premier. Having done so I will make a report to the house.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance referred to a letter from the premier of British Columbia which he said had been acknowledged on September 23, so there appears to have been correspondence.

Mr. Pearson: I should like to ascertain whether the correspondence was labelled personal, private or confidential and whether there were items referred to other than the particular matter in question.

NATIONAL PARKS

CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS—WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I intended to pose a question to the minister in charge of Canada's national parks, but in view of the fact that he is away on business perhaps I should direct it to the acting minister. Would the acting minister be so kind as to advise us whether there will be a winter works program at the Cape Breton Highlands national park? If so, how soon will it commence? My question is prompted by an urgent communication from a parish priest in that area who says that 50 families are now on welfare.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances I will take this question as notice and either reply later or ask the minister to reply.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ACTION FOLLOWING REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON ELECTION EXPENSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can he now tell us, after the cabinet discussions which he anticipated yesterday, what action the government proposes in regard to the report of the committee on election expenses?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that matter is under consideration by the government. We were discussing it this morning and I hope that by the beginning of next week a statement can be made as to what action might be taken.

Mr. Brewin: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the government consider embodying the recommendations in draft legislation and then submit it to the committee on privileges and elections in order that we can expedite this action before the next election?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to look into that particular suggestion.

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Has the Prime Minister received from the Quebec government an invitation to take part in the proceedings of a royal commission established by the Quebec government to consider the question of Quebec boundaries, and more especially the James Bay and Hudson Bay islands bordering on the province of Quebec, and also the national parks in Quebec?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not recall receiving any such communication, Mr. Speaker, but I will check into the matter at once.

INDUSTRY

EXCESS OF IMPORTS OVER EXPORTS UNDER AUTOMOBILE AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the fact that at the close of the first year of operation of the Canada-U.S. car treaty the imports of cars, trucks and parts into Canada from the United States had exceeded our exports by the alarming figure of $726 million, will the minister advise the house what steps he proposes to take to stop this dangerous trend which is so adversely affecting our imbalance of trade?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I did not catch the figure mentioned by the hon. gentleman, but I think perhaps he is referring to the excess of imports in the calendar year 1965, which was something in the order of $770 million.

I have some figures here which indicate that in the first six or seven months of this year this imbalance was substantially reduced. Not only was the rate of imbalance reduced, but in the month of July the net import balance was only $15 million. I do not suggest that we can anticipate a deficit of only $90 million for the remainder of the year, but this does show a trend in the right direction which had particularly spectacular results in the month of July.

Mr. Hales: The minister said he did not hear the figure I mentioned. That figure was $726 million.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question. Bearing in mind the circumstances, the dislocation of employment and the changes in the prices of automobiles, can the minister say whether the government is satisfied with the operation of this Canada-U.S. automotive treaty?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that his question is not in order.

POSTAL SERVICE

EASTERN ARCTIC—REPORTED NEED FOR IMPROVEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. In view of the suggestion disclosed in the report of the advisory committee on the development of government in the Northwest Territory concerning the inadequacy of mail services in the eastern Arctic, has the minister directed that an inquiry be made in respect of this matter of urgency?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Even though we have the best postal service in the world, my department is always trying to improve it in every area of the country. I must say that the eastern Arctic is a very special and difficult area, but I can assure the hon. member that it is under intensive study.

BROADCASTING

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION BASED ON WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Can that hon. lady inform the house whether during this fall session of parliament the government is going to bring in legislation based upon the white paper on broadcasting?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think it is more likely that the government will be prepared to refer the white paper to the broadcasting committee as soon as unanimous consent is given.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF EXERCISE OF CLEMENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to address to the right hon. Prime Minister, and it relates to the fact that the government is now exercising the tender quality of mercy in cases where no recommendation has been made to that effect. Is the tender virtue of mercy being restricted to blood criminals or will the cabinet exercise mercy in the case of those gentlemen who were associated with the strikes at Lenkurt, a firm in Vancouver, and Tilco Plastics Limited of Peterborough, Ontario, who have been sentenced because of convictions for contempt of court? Is the tender quality of mercy being restricted to certain classes of criminals?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will do our best to discharge our responsibilities under the law.

Mr. Starr: What is the law?

IMMIGRATION

TEMPORARY HARVEST WORKERS REMAINING IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of numerous requests I have received with regard to workers entering Canada this summer from Jamaica to aid in harvesting operations and remaining in Canada, can the minister state whether in the original agreement it is requisite that they return to Jamaica after the designated work period or will the Department of Immigration receive individual representations to remain in Canada or to return to Canada in the near future and remain in this country as workers?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not too sure that this question is very urgent. I would not think it is. If the hon. gentleman thinks I am wrong, he may want to discuss the matter in the adjournment debate.

Mr. Danforth: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

DORION, QUE.—INVESTIGATION INTO LEVEL CROSSING ACCIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I want to address a question to a very clever minister, the Minister of Transport.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Choquette: Can the minister inform the house what steps the commission inquiring into the Dorion accident plans to take to notify all persons who may wish to appear and express grievances or suggest appropriate solutions?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not clever enough to answer that question without advice, but I am going to get advice from the Board of Transport Commissioners and will endeavour to answer the question tomorrow.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Can the minister now inform the house whether in the past the appropriate authorities have made representations to the Board of Transport Commissioners for overpass or underpass facilities at this crossing?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Speaker, but I will be glad to make inquiries on that point.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

MONTREAL—REPORTED THEFT OF MAIL FROM AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. Can the minister advise the house whether he has any details in connection with the reported theft of 15 bags of mail today from the mailroom of the Montreal international airport involving an estimated $1 million?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether this is the type of incident about which a question should be asked at this time. I suggest to the hon. member that, the deed having been done, perhaps the question should not be asked at this time. If the hon. member thinks there is an aspect of urgency in his question I would suggest that it be discussed in the adjournment debate.

Mr. Langlois (Chicoutimi): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, that question would have been very urgent yesterday.

Mr. Grafftey: Explain.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR INCREASED SHIPMENTS THROUGH CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that we now have on record some measure of support from the Vancouver area for increased shipments through the port of Churchill, would the minister take the appropriate steps to encourage his colleagues from the lakehead and Montreal areas to give the same support to increased shipments from Churchill?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I have the support of my colleagues from every part of Canada to do everything it is possible to do to facilitate the export of the maximum quantity of wheat from this country, and as much from Churchill as it is possible to put through that port.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that several statements have been made recently by the shipping authorities in Montreal to the effect that everything possible will be done to see that Churchill shipments are not increased?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will consider the hon. gentleman's representation, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—AUTHORIZATION OF CONTRIBUTIONS TOWARD COST OF INSURED MEDICAL CARE

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-227, to authorize the payment of contributions by Canada toward the cost of insured medical care services incurred by provinces pursuant to provincial medical care insurance plans.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to move second reading of this bill. In the interim since this bill was presented for second reading members will have had an opportunity to study its provisions carefully and, I am sure, constructively. The medical care bill is a short but significant piece of legislation. It has only nine clauses and in this respect is identical with the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act passed by this parliament in 1956. I mention this parallel simply to show that good things may come in small packages, for surely we have all lived very happily with our hospital insurance legislation and I doubt that any member of the house would want to see it dismantled.

There are a number of other parallels between the bill we are considering today and the hospital insurance legislation—in the definition of "resident" and "population", for example. Similarly, both statutes require that insured services be provided under uniform terms and conditions to all residents of the province. Again, a similarity will be found in the provision relating to waiting periods for benefits. Although the approach in the statutes differs, the effect is to limit these to three months.

It will be recalled that in my statement introducing the resolution I outlined briefly the manner in which changing times and conditions were reflected in the varying methods by which federal assistance has been made over the years to provincial programs in the health field. I showed the changing patterns reflected in such programs as the health grants, hospital insurance and that set out in the present bill.

Members will also recall that I discussed the four principles which had been put to the provinces last year by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) when he described the federal proposal in relation to medical care programs. These four principles, it will be noted, have been incorporated in the present bill. I would particularly draw the attention of members to the added flexibility which has been incorporated in the principles concerning universal coverage and public administration. This has been done without eroding the purpose for which these principles were set out.

The question of universal coverage is one which may raise some problem only in provinces choosing to finance the provincial share of costs through a premium system, as I pointed out in my introductory remarks during the debate on the resolution. During discussions with my colleagues, the provincial ministers of health, certain questions were raised about possible difficulties which provinces using premiums might have achieving optimum coverage in the initial period. For this reason, a more flexible approach has been built into the legislation. It provides that in the initial stages of the program a plan will be considered to be universal if the number of residents covered by a provincial plan are not less than 90 per cent of all insurable residents of the province. This percentage would apply for the first two years, after which the percentage would be expected to reach 95 per cent.

Other questions raised by provincial governments related to the principle of public administration of the program. Here, too, it will be noted that flexibility has been built into the bill. The bill requires that a provincial plan must be: —administered and operated on a non-profit basis by a public authority appointed or designated by the government of the province . . . that is responsible in respect of the administration and operation of the plan to the government of a province for such purpose, and that is subject, in respect of its accounts and financial transactions, to audit by such person as is charged by law with the audit of the accounts of the province.

• (3:50 p.m.)

The bill also makes provision for circumstances in which the province may authorize an agency, such as an insurance carrier, to carry out certain responsibilities on behalf of the provincial government, provided, of course, that the principles relating to public administration, including the non-profit principle, are adhered to. Where such carriers are appointed as agents by the provincial authority, then the carrier may be empowered to receive premiums from subscribers, but such premiums must be remitted by the carrier to the provincial authority.

Similarly, the carrier may be empowered to receive accounts with respect to insured services from doctors or from patients, but in these circumstances these accounts must also be passed on to the provincial authority. The assessment and the approval for payments of such accounts remain the responsibility of the provincial authority.

As in the case of hospital insurance, it is probable that different provinces will administer their public medical care programs in different ways, depending upon their own philosophy and particular circumstances. The federal law has been drawn up in such a way as to make such differences possible while at the same time ensuring the ready availability to all residents of all provinces of medical care services administered without charge by a body directly answerable to the provincial legislature. Thus, the responsibilities of the provincial authority in relation to administration are set out in the bill.

Members will have noted that the bill describes insured services as meaning "all services rendered by medical practitioners that are medically required". This provision carries out another basic principle enunciated by the Prime Minister when he originally annouced the government's medical care proposals. I would like to restate the position taken at that time by the Prime Minister with regard to the scope of benefits.

He said that the federal government's contribution initially would be based on the costs of physicians' services. He said that there would be nothing to prevent provinces providing additional benefits, either at first or later, and he agreed, and I quote his words as follows:

—if there is a consensus on the timing of further stages, the federal government will consider enlarging appropriately, and in due course, the scope of the services to which it contributes.

It was with the cost of physicians' services in mind that the section in the bill dealing with the calculation of the federal contribution was drawn up. This federal contribution will be equal to 50 per cent of the national per capita cost of insured services incurred by the province for the year, multiplied by the average for the year of the number of insured persons; this number is calculated along the same lines as that for which provision is made in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act. In the present bill the methods for the calculation of the per capita cost, of the number of insured persons, and of the cost incurred by the province, are described.

As members are aware, preliminary estimates of cost based on figures relating to the cost of physicians' services in all the provinces, and projected to the original commencement date of the program, were discussed with the provinces. The federal contribution amounting to one-half of the cost, which I placed before you during my statement introducing the debate on the resolution, was $340 million with respect to a full year based on projected figures obtained in September, 1965. A postponement in the date of commencement will, of course, affect that amount somewhat. But it should be emphasized that the federal contribution will remain one-half of the actual per capita cost, regardless of commencement date.

The bill also incorporates the fourth principle relating to portability from province to province of insured status. The method set out in the bill is substantially the same as that which is now in effect across the country in the hospital insurance programs. It ensures that persons who are temporarily absent from their home province will continue to benefit from the medical care plan provided through the home province, and it also requires that residents moving from one province to another shall continue to be so covered during any waiting periods.

As I pointed out in my opening remarks during the resolution debate, these basic provisions are of national concern and the principle involved has never been questioned at any time by any of the provincial health ministers.

Mr. Speaker, since this legislation was last before the house a decision has been taken to defer the starting date of medicare. I do not propose to go into the reasons for this change, the necessity for which I greatly regret, as do my colleagues in the government. The fact that this alteration in the starting date has no bearing on our commitment to the principle of medicare is demonstrated by the fact that we are introducing this bill for second reading today. The substance of the medical care program remains intact in the bill and the house will have an opportunity to confirm these principles in the adoption of the second reading of the bill. The decision to defer the starting date of medicare was based and continues to be based on the government's assessment of the situation as related to economic conditions in the country. If the government had to make the decision to day it would be the same decision, but we are determined to proceed not later than July 1, 1968.

As the government we have the responsibility to ensure that in 1968 the introduction of medicare will have top priority and to adapt all our plans and programs to that end. In the meantime the government will keep financial and economic conditions under close scrutiny, as it must in any event. Nothing will please the government more than to be able to proceed earlier than July 1, 1968. We do not feel now that we could and should advance the date, but there will be sufficient flexibility in the legislation to advance the date if future conditions make that possible. I will be moving in committee appropriate amendments to imbed this principle of flexibility in the legislation.

There is only one further comment I have to make and that is to express to members of the house my appreciation for the interest which has been shown in connection with this very significant program and to express the hope that we may see this law placed on the statute books as a further milestone on the road of progress in social security in our country.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may ask the minister a question? In reply to a question earlier today he stated that the government did not intend to send this bill to a standing committee of the house but wishes it to be dealt with in committee of the whole house where, as we all know, witnesses are not heard. Can the minister give the house any reason why the government has decided to take away the ability to call in witnesses and discuss the bill informally in a standing or special committee of the house?

Mr. Douglas: Is that not what the Hall Commission did?

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will appreciate that prior to the declaration of the Prime Minister with respect to this medical care program there had been a very exhaustive study made by the Hall commission into all aspects of health services in Canada, and all the relevant information is set out in that particular report. Since that declaration of principle by the Prime Minister last year, there has been a full opportunity for the provinces, for all the professions and for the public to express their views with regard to a medical care program. In the light of that the government concluded it would not be desirable or necessary to send this bill to a committee after second reading.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Would the minister not agree that this house is not bound by a royal commission nor is the house interested in discussing and examining evidence of a royal commission? A specific bill is before us. Would the minister not agree that this is a case where the house should examine witnesses and, independent of the evidence given before any royal commission, hear evidence in the same manner as on the Canada Pension Plan? Granted this did not do very much good, but it was worth an argument.

Mr. MacEachen: The bill is a very short one. It sets out very clear principles and the house will be asked to accept those principles. The actual operation of the medical care programs will be undertaken by the provincial governments, and the actual techniques and relationships with the medical profession will be dealt with at the provincial level. In those circumstances I think it would be quite unnecessary to have a committee set up here.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I am very appreciative of the position in which the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen) finds himself today. He has been quartered and hung on the altar of political expediency by commuted sentence. I congratulate him on the clear and distinct way he has presented this bill. However, he gave no fundamental reason why it should not be passed now and put into effect on July 1, 1967. Why is this not being done? The answer has been that the reason is to curb inflation, but to me this appears to be a completely ridiculous reason.

The implementation of this program would involve an expenditure of only $80 million at the most, and only $40 million of that would come from the federal treasury. The reason for the delay has nothing to do with inflation. The bill would not come into effect until July 1, 1967 and the total expenditure would not be felt until the year 1968, so how could it affect inflation at the present time? Perhaps some of the taxes withheld from corporations and the increase in income tax revenues totalling over $300 million could have been used to finance this program.

According to a report in the Globe and Mail, the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Benson) had this to say:

> Mr. Benson, who doubles as president of the government treasury board, pulled no punches in his short, direct speech.
> He told the workshop that he was not much interested in economic arguments as to the inflationary effect of medicare.

How about this, Mr. Sharp.

According to the same newspaper report, the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp) told the convention that "we could not afford all these huge expenditures". But he assured them his July 1, 1968 date for medicare to go into operation was firm and that on this "there could be no compromise." Well, you have already compromised, not once but many times. He went on to say "Canada is going to have medicare, and it will be the Liberal party that will introduce it." But after two years perhaps we will be faced with the same problem again. Mr. Templeton, who contested the Ontario leadership, is quoted in this press report as follows:

> "said the conference must accept the government's decision or register non-confidence in the cabinet. He criticized the government for poor planning in making a commitment it could not keep and for not satisfactorily explaining the reason for the deferral.

There is a further question of whether or not this government did any homework on the bill. Was this plan deliberately held up? Was there sincerity in the government's approach to the premiers of the provinces or did the government deliberately lay down rules that they knew would be unacceptable because the government held the aces in the form of dollars? An editorial in the Gazette covers this question rather well, and I quote:

> Again this week at the Liberal party convention in Ottawa, the debate was resumed and was taken to the floor of the convention. More acrimonius words were thrown back and forth among the delegates on the question of the postponement of medicare.

But out of all this discussion, there are many Canadians who wonder what all the argument is about. The debate within the cabinet and without, has had a strange and hollow ring about it; a lack of realism.

The debate has had a hollow ring because it has concentrated almost entirely on the question of timing. And it has shown a lack of realism because there has been little talk of how such a medicare scheme will operate, or what type of service will result. The debate has been on the question of when, not on the more important issues of what, how and by whom.

What type of medicare scheme should we have in Canada? The subject has been brought up before in royal commission studies (the Hall commission), as well as several provincial investigations. In fact, most of the provinces either have some sort of medical care scheme in operation, or are planning to put one in operation. There is no shortage of suggestions, or lack of material to debate.

The question of how such a scheme should operate has far reaching consequences. Medicare is the first social welfare measure which raises problems in human relations between the citizen and his doctor, and between the government and the medical profession.

Finally, who is going to operate the plan? . . .

Canada is also in a vulnerable position to lose its highly trained medical personnel, particularly to the United States. And this country is already short of doctors. At the same time, there are insufficient hospitals to cope with the present load of medical service.

I should like to know what the government is doing about that. I continue the quotation:

In yet another area, medical research, the amount of money which the government puts into this vital sector of medical service is seriously inadequate. And these are only some of the gnawing issues surrounding the implementation of medicare.

The editorial concludes in this way:

It may be hoped that between now and July 1, 1968, there will be more discussion about the real issues which medicare raises, and less about the secondary ones; more about substance, and less about style.

I should like to ask the minister, what is going to become of roughly one-third of the people across Canada, those in the low income, low pension groups when they have to have medical care? It is true that in the province of Ontario they are covered by OMSIP. I feel that the Ontario minister of health should be congratulated on the very fine plan he has in operation. It covers the disabled, those on old age assistance, mothers' allowance and the blind. For example, a person with a taxable income of $500 or less has to pay $30 and the government pays $30. The complete cost for a family of two with a taxable income of $1,000 or less is $120, of which the government pays half, $60. The cost for a family of three or more is $150, of which the government pays $90 and the insured pays $60.

[Mr. Rynard.]

This is a step in the right direction. Ontario has its own plan but, I ask the minister, how about the people in the maritime provinces? How about the people in Newfoundland and the people in the provinces which have no plan to cover the needs of those with low incomes? Are they to be completely forgotten or sacrificed on the altar of expediency of this government?

There are always certain problems which arise when any plan comes into effect, so this would be an ideal opportunity to work out the kinks in this plan, by covering roughly one-third of the population. We should consult with the ministers of health and the provincial premiers so that when 1968 arrives we are ready to implement this plan and not have another stall.

I also think we have to keep in mind a few fundamentals. For example, we must keep in mind the meagre research that has been carried on in Canada as well as the scarcity of doctors and paramedical personnel. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that it takes ten other paramedical services to supply the needs of each doctor in practice. This bill requires very careful thought, even though almost two years will elapse before it becomes law. It must be given the most complete scrutiny at this time in order to ensure a medicare bill which will work in the best interests of all the people before it is passed. It must also, of course, be acceptable to the provinces. There must be a common denominator and there must be agreement.

To do this successfully, I submit to the minister that certain conditions must be met. The most important are these: First of all, sufficient beds must be provided for our sick, those needing hospitalization, so that they can be looked after. There must be sufficient doctors and paramedical services provided. There must be sufficient medical schools to train our medical students. There must be sufficient highly skilled teachers and medical scientists in order to teach our students. Lastly, there must be adequate research, and salaries must be provided which will attract outside teachers from the United States and Great Britain, and hold the teacher-scientists that we need today.

Let us look at the hospital bed situation, Mr. Speaker. Again I want to remind the government that in 1957 the federal government contributed $1,000 a bed. In 1958 the Conservative government brought in a bill which doubled this amount to $2,000. But may I remind the government that in 1966 it is still paying only $2,000 a bed.

In 1958 the cost of a hospital bed in the province of Ontario, and I believe pretty well across Canada, was around $8,000 to $10,000. At that time the government at the $2,000 level was paying about a quarter to a fifth of the cost of hospital beds across the country. Eight years later when the cost of a hospital bed is somewhere around $25,000 to $30,000 the federal government is still paying $2,000. In other words, it is paying about one tenth or one fifteenth of the cost.

In all conscience, Mr. Speaker, how in the world can the government sitting opposite bring in a bill like this when they will not even provide the things which are required to make the bill work satisfactorily? I tell them to pull their socks up before 1968 and pay their share. Let them pay one third of the cost. It should be a 3-way partnership with the provincial and municipal governments.

In case the minister requires any references, I direct his attention to a plea which was made at the Ontario Hospital Association meeting in Toronto for an equal three-way division of hospital construction costs. According to a brief submitted to Premier Robarts, between 1960 and 1965 the cost of building and renovating public hospitals in Ontario was $293 million. Of this figure local communities paid 59 per cent. So the poor taxpayer at the municipal level was shouldering more than half of the cost. The provincial government was paying 25.35 per cent, or roughly one quarter, and the federal grant was 14.85 per cent, which is pretty disappointing.

The brief of the association stated that it was not calling for total government financing. It went on to say:

> We believe very strongly, as do the majority of hospital boards, that a share of the building of a hospital should remain an obligation of the people of a community.

The brief went on to state that the federal government had not increased its basic $2,000 per bed grant since 1958 and made no contribution toward many essential supporting areas. Finally, the brief stated:

> Unless the federal government can be prevailed upon to step up its construction grants to a more realistic level, we have no alternative but to look to the provincial government for the additional support that is so urgently needed.

Beds are scarce and I wonder, Mr. Speaker, how many people in Canada are having more prolonged illness or even losing their lives today because we have insufficient hospital beds in Canada.

I should now like to dwell on another matter concerning the provision of doctors. It should be our duty to help the provinces provide doctors so that people will not lose their lives because of lack of medical care or insufficient doctors to treat emergency cases. Doctors in Canada today are grossly overworked, though they are doing the best they can. They are on the whole a dedicated profession, but everyone has a breaking point, no matter what his profession or business may be.

Our general practitioners are now serving upwards of 2,000 people each. I wonder how many people are aware of that. More doctors must be provided to teach in our medical schools, and if necessary classes should be held all summer in order to train students.

I should now like to deal with the Hall commission report. Canada has a population of roughly 20 million people and there are just over 19,000 doctors. It is interesting to note that some 9,000 of them are specialists or are engaged in administrative or other work. This leaves just over 10,000 doctors in general practice, acting as the workhorses of the communities, carrying on and healing and referring where necessary to other doctors.

I was interested to look up the statistics in the United States in this regard. There the number of doctors and this is all doctors per capita is one doctor to every 752 persons. In New Zealand there is one doctor for every 700 persons. In Russia there is one doctor for every 550 persons, and their target is one doctor for every 500 persons. This indicates just how badly off we are in our need for doctors. Not only must we have more doctors but we must train more. I will put on the record what the Hall commission report has to say about this situation.

• (4:20 p.m.)

However, Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to deal with Great Britain. Great Britain has good medical schools. Unfortunately, many of the doctors there are leaving the country. In one year—I am speaking of 1964 which was the worst year of all—1,200 doctors out of a graduating class of 1,600 left the shores of Great Britain. On the average Great Britain is losing about 600 doctors a year. I am citing these facts to emphasize what is happening in this country. We are today short of interns in Canada, with hospital after hospital having no interns. In Great Britain the drain has become so bad that 45 per cent of all interns are from outside the country, and mostly from Asia or Africa.

The United States is far better off than we are, in medical manpower. Yet they have set up an examining board in London where doctors can take their examinations. Those doctors who wish to leave Great Britain after having passed the board's examination can go to the United States, and enter into practice there.

What are we doing about this situation? What is the government attempting to do? The Canadian Medical Association requires a doctor to fly here at his own expense, sit for his examination in Canada, and then go back. If the doctor qualifies he can come back again and enter practice. What in the world is wrong? I might ask in the light of this, why when we are so short of medical personnel. Surely we too can see that doctors who have been trained in Great Britain and who are thinking of leaving Great Britain should be allowed to try their examinations in London. I suggest to the minister that one of the things that must be done, to get doctors if this bill is to work, is to provide funds to the Canadian Medical Council so it can set up a board in London similar to that of the United States.

This brings up the next point. I refer to the building of medical schools, paramedical services, science research centres and so on. We are off target here. The Hall Commission report said in 1964 that we have to add a minimum of 476 students a year to our medical schools, but I wonder if the minister is aware of the number of new medical students who entered medical schools this year in Ontario? Is the minister aware of what is required? Is the minister aware that only 75 additional students are registered in the medical schools in Ontario? There are just 75 more students this year despite the fact that the Hall Commission report says that there must be an additional minimum each year of 476 students for Canada. This report, as I say, was public knowledge in 1964. Yet in the waning days of 1966 we find that in Ontario we have only 75 additional students, which, applied to the rest in Canada, would give us only half the required number. In addition, only one new medical school will be opened, at Sherbrooke, which will admit 25 students.

The Hall Commission report stated that by 1970 we must have 7,100 additional doctors. They must be added to the profession. We are not adding these numbers, nor have we any hope of so doing in the way we are conducting our affairs. Doctors, sir, are overworked almost to the breaking point. On a flight to Toronto I met a doctor. He is younger than I am, having graduated about 1935. As he is a friend of mine I said to him: "John, who is looking after your practice?" He had a big practice. He said to me: "I am quitting practice. I cannot take it anymore. People call me and I cannot refuse them, and physically I am unable to go, and if I stayed in practice I would probably break down." He said to me that he had come down to Ottawa to see about a government job.

This sort of thing is going on in many towns of Canada. Doctors are pulling out and quitting. I cite such things because doctors often say: "We cannot refuse people. We do not want the responsibility on our shoulders of somebody who ought to get immediate care dying, but we have to have some rest some time".

The people today are not receiving the best of medical care. Let us face that fact. That is not because there is not sufficient money but because we do not have the doctors to do the work. It is as simple as that. Canada faces a serious situation with respect to medical manpower.

You can build all the medical schools you like but unless you have scientifically trained teachers to teach the students you will not produce doctors. It will be of little avail to have students without teachers. How many teachers do we need? It is admitted that in the next five years we shall need 1,500 teacher scientists. We do not have that number in Canada. What is to happen? The Canadian Medical Association Journal, as quoted on page 7553 of Hansard, has this to say:

> If the teachers for the expansion of existing schools and the staffing of new medical schools are recruited from within Canada, a sort of academic musical chairs will occur in which the staffs of existing schools will be rapidly diluted, and, if the bidding is brisk, an unfortunate concentration of the best talent in a few centres may develop.

This sort of thing has been going on for quite a time. It has reached the point where four medical schools in Canada may lose their accreditation. This matter was dealt with by the Canadian Medical Association Journal in these terms, also as quoted on page 7553 of Hansard:

> It has been whispered about for a long time. Now it is in the open: one-third of Canada's medical schools, during the last ten years, have been warned that if they don't improve they may lose their North American accreditation. This is a recognized method for judging the quality of medical schools, and loss of accreditation is a sad, bad blow . . .

The primary fault in the four schools was not with respect to their basic orientation or the quality of existing staff, but rather that they had insufficient staff and resources to meet the needs of modern medicine.

For a country such as Canada, which is one of the richest resource countries in the world, to have an article like that printed in the Medical Association Journal is something not far short of being a national disgrace.

The next question I wish to ask is: Where are we to get these teachers? I do not think we will get them from the United States, because while we spend $12 million in research the expenditure in the United States per capita is ten times as great. In other words, they do more research. We lose 200 doctors every year probably because of this. And it costs $50,000 to train a doctor, one does not have to be a mathematician to see that these doctors represent a gift of $10 million every year. Instead of giving that gift, why can we not spend more money in research to try to keep the doctors we have trained? The doctors who leave have an earning power of $100 million in their lifetime. In those circumstances, why should we spend only a niggardly $12 million on research? This is one of the frightening aspects of the problem, and it seems that the government has not woke up to the fact that we must spend money on research and must have research to attract teacher scientists.

It takes 8 years from the time he starts to train a doctor. It takes 11 years to train a specialist and 15 years to train a teacher. Where are we to get the teachers?

The teachers in Great Britain are of a high calibre. An effort to attract them from Great Britain might be made, although I do not believe in stealing their best teachers. Nevertheless, if they show a willingness to go to the United States I say we ought to put in a bid for them. We ought to have a Canadian Medical Council board sitting in London as the United States has. The United States has more scientists than we have; yet they do this.

• (4:30 p.m.)

I think one of the greatest fallacies in Canadian thinking is that we can steal the benefits of research and therefore we can let United States provide it for us. Nothing is farther from the truth. The benefits of research are not always transferrable. It must be understood, also that these benefits do not consist solely of new discoveries; there is the attraction which research has for scientifically-minded teachers and doctors. Our greatest difficulty now lies in obtaining the services of our own citizens, Canadians who have gone to the United States because of the meagreness of our own research facilities. I do not wish to state this as a fact, but I believe that last year the government provided funds for only 60 per cent of the research projects which were authorized.

I should like to put on record what a few of the provincial premiers feel about this situation. Mr. Stanfield said: "Ottawa must take a more flexible position on requirements for federal help." He feels his province is not able to carry the load which the federal government would imposed on it. It is for the less wealthy provinces I plead today, since the wealthier provinces are obviously in a better position to play their part.

Are the maritime provinces to be forgotten? Are they to be written off on grounds of expediency? I remind the Minister of National Health and Welfare that the help they need works out to between $10 million and $12 million, which would cover only a third of those in Canada who need help, and is therefore just about one-third of the amount which would otherwise be spent.

There are faults in this bill and I hope they will be corrected. Doctors are grossly overworked. We need more doctors as a matter of the greatest urgency. We are talking about a bill this afternoon which will not come into effect for two years. The measure is weak in other respects. What does the government intend to do about optometrists? Will they be paid? There are 1,500 of them across Canada and they are responsible for 70 per cent of visual care. There are only 300 certified ophthalmologists in Canada and these are mostly in the big centres. What will be done to serve those who live in the rural areas, people who do not have the opportunity to go to the big cities? Is the government thinking of them?

Most of this work will be done by optometrists. Many of these are men who have taken a specific four-year course of training laid down for them. These are individuals competent not only to undertake eye corrections but to know when cases should be referred to an ophthalmologist. I say these people should be covered. I could go on to deal with other points but I will not do so until the bill is discussed clause by clause.

Finally, I point out that in Canada today we have the services of just over 10,000 general practitioners to look after 20 million people. This cannot go on. More and more of them are wanting to get out because they cannot give the service they expected to be able to give. In Russia there is one doctor for every 550 people. In Israel there is one doctor for every 400 people.

Besides the field of treatment there is the field of preventive medicine. We need doctors badly in Canada. I think the situation should be examined. We are in a crisis. Where are we to get these doctors? I would say that the medical course should be shortened. This could be done in two ways. Either students could go to school and be taught the year round, as was done when the war was on in the forties, or some of the frills could be cut out of the course as laid down by the universities. If it is true, as most of the eminent authorities in the medical field say, that half of what we learn today has to be discarded in ten years time, would it not be better to send doctors back to medical school for six months every five or ten years than to follow the policy we are following today?

This is an urgent business and I do not think the government has sufficiently considered the urgency. In these circumstances I propose to move an amendment as follows:

That all the words after "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

This house, while of the opinion that provision should be made for medical services to be available to all Canadians at an adequate level on a prepaid basis, is nevertheless of the further opinion that no legislation for the provision of insured medical care services in Canada will be satisfactory unless it:

(a) secures co-operation of the governments of the provinces of Canada;

(b) recognizes the principle of voluntary choice by the individual;

(c) makes adequate prior provision for sufficient medical research, the training of adequate numbers of doctors and other medical personnel, and:

(d) immediately provides for those persons who are unable, for financial reasons, to provide medical services for themselves.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rinfret): This is a complex amendment and I should like to refer it to the Speaker for consideration. Meanwhile I will put it before the house on a provisional basis.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the resolution preceding Bill C-227 came before the house on July 12, followed by the introduction and first reading of this bill, we expressed our great pleasure that this important piece of legislation was before parliament. I think it is fair to say that on that day the house itself was aware of the historic step we were taking and there was a very high hope that it would be followed by early action along the lines set out in the bill presented that day by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen).

In contrast to the spirit of that day, I suggest that this is a very sad day in Canada's history. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, in a few minutes I shall give point by point my reasons for saying that this is a sad day in the history of this country. But I think no one demonstrated it more effectively than the Minister of National Health and Welfare by the manner in which he spoke today compared with the things he said and the way in which he spoke on July 12. Let me remind him of the second or third last paragraph of the speech he made when he introduced the resolution and asked us to give first reading to this bill. These are his words as found at page 7549 of Hansard for July 12, 1966:

The introduction of this resolution, Mr. Chairman, I believe marks an historic day for this parliament and for Canada. The program it spells out goes a long way toward closing the gap in our over-all social security system. It is our hope it will result in the commencement of provincial medical care plans covering all Canadians on the 100th birthday of Confederation, July 1, 1967. This would be a most appropriate way to mark our birthday, since it would ensure ready access to medical care to all of our people, regardless of means, of pre-existing conditions, of age, or other circumstances which may have barred such access in the past.

That was the high hope expressed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare on July 12, namely, that on our 100th birthday, July 1, 1967, we would have accomplished the taking of this historic step. Today, in a speech that was so timid and so half-hearted we could hardly hear it, he gave us a new word for what we normally call retreat. Today he told us that flexibility has been built into this legislation. Earlier today on another subject there was talk about words and their meanings and certain members had recourse to the dictionary. I suggest, however, that it is a strange effort on the part of the minister to try to turn the word "retreat" into the word "flexibility".

The minister told us, for example, that in July of 1965 the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), supported by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, laid down four cardinal principles upon which the government based its stand, but now he tells us that with regard to two of those principles flexibility has been built into the legislation. He also tells us that the commitment made in 1965 and repeatedly in 1966 that medicare would come into effect on July 1, 1967, has been changed and that we are not going to get it until a year later.

The first example of flexibility relates, of course, to the principle of universality. I am going to say to the minister that I do not regard the change that is being made there as quite as serious as the other changes being made. Nevertheless, the Prime Minister on July 19 and 20, 1965, said that one of the cardinal principles was universal coverage. He did not say 90 per cent or 95 per cent; he said universal coverage. The minister says that the government has accepted the principle of universality but has built it into the legislation with some flexibility. Universality is to mean 90 per cent for the first two years and 95 per cent after that. I freely admit that in the light of our experience with hospitalization this is not as serious a change as some of the others, but it still is a retreat rather that what the minister likes to call it—the imparting of flexibility into the legislation.

A more serious way in which the minister has retreated has to do with what was the third of the Prime Minister's criteria of July, 1965, namely, that medicare would have to be carried in the provinces by the provinces themselves or by provincial agencies, but not by private insurance companies. Now we are given a bill which has in it a loophole a mile wide under which it is possible for private insurance companies to be designated by provincial governments to carry this medical care insurance program.

When I say that, Mr. Speaker, I am not just giving my own interpretation of the clause in the bill that makes this provision. The fact is that when the minister appeared before the health and welfare committee on July 14, a couple of days after the bill had been given first reading, I asked him in that committee whether it was possible under one of the clauses in the bill for private companies to come into the program and he made it clear that if a provincial government chose to give the carrying of the plan to insurance companies on a non-profit basis that would be in order under the provisions of this bill. The minister himself used the phrase "life insurance companies". He insisted, of course, that it would have to be on a non-profit basis. We had some interesting exchanges on that point. I suggest that this leads to all kinds of speculation as to what is profitable and non-profitable and to the possibility of insurance companies getting into this business on a loss-leader basis. I suggest the minister has no right to call this flexibility. It is downright retreat from the position the government took in July, 1965, when it announced that one of the four cardinal principles was that medicare must be carried by provincial governments or their agencies and not by private carriers.

In addition to the flexibility the minister talked about—the downright retreat—regarding universality and private carriers, we now have this business of the change of the effective date from July 1, 1967 to July 1, 1968. No matter how much the minister may try to make light of this and no matter how much the Liberal party may try to give the impression that it achieved some kind of unanimity on this at its recent convention, there has been a retreat from a very definite promise make by the government time and time again, and I am going to go into that in some detail in a moment or two.

Before I do go into that, however, I should like to remind the Minister of National Health and Welfare that he saw the possibility of this happening. In fact, he should have stood his ground last July and should have insisted that this bill be put through at that time. I suggest that if my friends to the right in the Progressive Conservative party complain very much—they have not done so yet—about the postponing of the legislation, part of the responsibility is theirs, because if they had been willing to take the bill through second reading to committee stage last July, as the minister wanted to do and as we wanted to do, it would have been on the statute books before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) got his hands on it as he did in September.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: Do you not think it affects the cost of living

Mr. Knowles: I did not know the Minister of Finance was a ventriloquist. Those are the words of the Minister of Finance, yet they seem to be coming from the mouth of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams).

As a result of our difficulties last July when we were not able to proceed with this bill I put some questions to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. This was during a meeting of the committee on health and welfare on July 14. We were discussing private carriers, universal coverage and so on. At that time I posed certain questions which appear at page 549 of the report of that committee. I asked the minister if he was going to stand by certain clauses in the bill the cost of living?

Mr. MacEachen: Well, of course. Here is the bill and you do not expect me to say today that I am going to change the bill that was produced yesterday.

Let me read further from this page:

Mr. Knowles: Now it has three or four months to be kicked around.
Mr. MacEachen: I know.

That was a very short, plaintive and prophetic reply. The minister knew on July 14 that he had been jockeyed out of his determination to proceed with the legislation at that time by the Conservatives and by the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) and that something was bound to happen to it. It is no wonder that he has had a sad summer and fall and his sad experience of the last few days. He knew this kind of thing was going to happen, and it has happened in perhaps an even worse way than he anticipated, particularly in the hands of his colleague the Minister of Finance.

I suggest that the Minister of National Health and Welfare should go back over this whole story and realize that the mistakes which have been made can still be corrected by keeping the bill as it is. I do not know what will happen to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard), but I imagine it will be ruled out of order. If it is not, we will vote against it, for we do not want the bill postponed any further during the second reading stage. We want this bill to go through and we are prepared to vote for it, but when we vote for it we will be voting for it in its present form. I hope that if the Minister of National Health and Welfare and his colleagues vote for the bill they will be voting for it in its present form.

The minister said today that this is a simple bill with only nine clauses. I do not know whether there is anything in this business about numbers, but if he is going to change the date he will have to amend five clauses. One clause gives the title to the bill so there are really only eight clauses of substance and he will have to amend five of those eight. I suggest there is almost an element of hyprocrisy if the minister votes for this bill on second reading and then has the gall to stand up in the committee of the whole and change five of its eight effective clauses.

Mr. Baldwin: It is a spurious bill.

Mr. Knowles: We now have the full meaning of the word "spurious". We have been given various dictionary definitions but we have now an example of the real thing.

I said I wanted to spell out point by point my contention that this is a sad day in the history of Canada. I am going to identify the three main reasons and then refer to them in greater detail. This is a sad day, first, because we have before us today an open betrayal of the pledged word of the government of this country. Second, this is a sad day because the action of the government in proposing the postponement of medicare for a year is a discrimination against the needs of the people in this country, particularly their medical needs, and I refer particularly to those people who cannot afford the medical care they require. I submit that to treat the people of this country in this way is a shocking denial for which this parliament should not stand.

In the third place, this is a sad day for Canada because this kind of action on the part of the government of the day is a reflection on politics, on parliament and on democracy itself. We over here can stand and say that we are opposed to what is being done, but even those on the opposition side of the house are subject to the criticism of the people in respect of what the minister has done. People are asking if this is what politics is all about and if this is what parliament is doing. We have been promised for years and decades that something would be done. These were solemn promises but apparently they can be thrown out the window when one or two strong men in a cabinet decide there must be a change.

Those are my three main reasons, and I will come back to them, but I suppose there is a fourth point to note. Perhaps it is not so sad but it should be noted. What this whole chapter is doing, along with a few other things, is exploding finally and for all time the myth that the Liberal party is a party of progress. The people of Canada have been fed that line for the last half century or more.

Someone said the other night on television that following the Liberal party convention the party was now stronger and more democratic, but so far as its decisions on policy are concerned it is now at dead centre. I think that was said by Peter Newman. I believe those words are twisted and that they should be "it is now at centre, dead". Peter Newman continued by saying that the party is now at dead centre with no motivating philosophy to carry it forward. If as a result of this action the people of Canada realize it is a myth that the Liberal party is a party of progress, perhaps the country can find ways to make gains in the months and years that lie ahead.

Let me go back to the first of my contentions in support of the suggestion that this is a sad day. I said that this action represents an open betrayal on the part of the government of its pledged word. I have already read the statement of the minister made on July 12, 1966, when he gave July 1, 1967, as the date on which this legislation was to become operative. May I just read one or two other quotations in support of this proposition, and let me add that before the 21 members of this party get through speaking on this matter all of these quotations will be read back to the Liberal party. I have here a clipping from the Ottawa Citizen of September 21, 1965, shortly after the opening of the election campaign of last fall. The clipping contains this sentence:

> Prime Minister Pearson today announced a pledge to have a full medicare scheme operating in Canada by July 1, 1967.

The article goes on to state that this pledge was made during a speech to Liberal candidates. No wonder Liberals at the grass roots, Liberal candidates and Liberal M.P.s across the country are concerned. They were given this word directly from on high that July 1, 1967, was the date. They campaigned on the basis of this statement and said that people did not have to vote for the New Democratic Party in order to get medicare because they would get it with the Liberals. The fact of the matter is that that promise was as clear and forthright as it could be, but it meant nothing.

Let me read the headline of an article which appeared in the Toronto Star of September 23, 1965. It states "Medicare Plan by July 1, 1967, Hellyer Promises Scarboro". The story indicates that this statement was made in a speech by the Minister of National Defence at a convention which nominated Robert Stanbury to contest York-Scarborough, Canada's biggest riding. Maybe it was Canada's biggest riding in which the promise was made, but it is also one of the biggest hoaxes we have had for a long time.

Medicare

When this session of parliament got under way, hon. members will probably recall that it was not long before I was on my feet in the question period trying to get a commitment out of the government as to the bringing in of this legislation and its effective date. Two or three times in the month of February I urged that we have a clearcut statement on this matter, and the first few times the answers were a bit evasive or the Minister of National Health and Welfare would say, "The previous position still stands." But finally, after two or three answers to questions that were fairly definite, we got the statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, made on his own on May 17, 1966, as recorded in Hansard at page 5213, that the government had decided that medicare was going to come into effect on July 1, 1967, whether or not all or a majority of the provinces were ready. The statement was clearcut, namely, that the legislation would be in effect on that date for those provinces that were ready to take advantage of it. So from the Minister of National Health and Welfare and from the Prime Minister we had the repeated assurance that the effective date of this legislation would be July 1, 1967.

I suggest that the government, which made that promise as firmly as it did, cannot expect this house or the country to put any credence in the promise it now makes that it will be July 1, 1968. A government that can break a promise in the field of medicare as often as the Liberals have broken it cannot be trusted to carry out the promise that it now makes, and these firm assurances that we will have medicare by July 1, 1968, are just not worth the time it takes to make them.

Maybe my hon. friends to my right want this bill to go to a committee and be studied. They want more work done on it. There is right now an amendment they are trying to have accepted. They are helping the government, of course, to delay this legislation, and I expect it will be further delayed if the Liberals stay in power.

I make the suggestion that the government might do this on a really historic basis. They do not like my trotting out this 1919 book. They say, "Oh, there is the old 1919 line again." I am almost wearing out the book by bringing it into this house so often. I remember that when I first came here in 1942 I was astounded that the promises which had been made 23 years before had not been put into effect. Now we are up to 47 years. It was going to be 48 years, and they have now put it off to 49 years. Why don't they wait until August 6, 1969, at 11 p.m. precisely? If they do so, it will be exactly 50 years from the time the Liberal convention in 1919 passed the resolution that had been moved by one W. L. Mackenzie King and seconded by one Arthur Roebuck.

Mr. Baldwin: Why not make it a centennial project?

Mr. Knowles: I believe it would be nice to do it while at least one of the sponsors of the original motion is still around, but perhaps Arthur Roebuck will be around for another 50 years. Why was this change made? We know the first reason given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), which was that it was part of his program to battle inflation. That argument has been characterized as nonsense by just about everybody but the Minister of Finance—and he too probably knows that it is nonsense. After all, medicare does not involve that large an expenditure of new money that it plays any part whatsoever in inflation. But even the Minister of Finance has shifted his ground. He has been pressed by Liberals in caucus or at conventions, pressed by newspaper people and so on, and has given other reasons. He told us on one occasion that it was a matter of priorities. On one occasion he held up the blue book of estimates and asked, "What items do you want us to cut out so we can put the money into medicare?"

The minister then trotted out old age pensions and asked what it was to be, an increase in old age pensions or medicare. The old age pension increase about which the minister was talking could be paid in full out of the old age security fund. On the question of priorities I would suggest that colour television might have waited if we had wanted to save money, the national defence building that will blot out the parliament buildings could have waited, or the construction of the second trans-Canada pipe line in northern Ontario could have been insisted on, rather than letting it go the the United States. But the government has to pick out medicare, something which our people seriously need, and put it at the bottom of the list of priorities. It is too bad that the Minister of Finance is not here. I hope he will be here before the debate is over, and this gives him lots of time because it is going for quite a while yet. I hope the minister will take part in this debate and tell us his part in connection with medicare legislation. I hope the Prime Minister will speak on this matter which should be a major concern to the government. I suggest that the Minister of Finance perhaps came closer to the truth when, as reported in one newspaper, he said that not only was it because of inflation and these other reasons but the government had to demonstrate to the business community that it is responsible. I submit that he was getting close to the reason there, namely, that the Minister of Finance is more concerned about his relations with the business community than he is about the needs of the people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: As a matter of fact, all of us remember that during the election campaign the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury), the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro), the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) were saying we would have medicare by July 1, 1967. What did the then minister of trade and commerce, now the Minister of Finance, say during the last week of the campaign? He said he was just expressing his own personal view, but he said this might not be possible because there might not be enough doctors and money and medicare might have to be put off for another year or two. The truth is coming out. The big power in this government so far as anything that costs money is concerned is the Minister of Finance. Even when all the other big-shot Liberals were telling the country in the election campaign that we were going to have medicare by July 1, 1967, he was casting doubt on this promise. No wonder the Minister of National Health and Welfare on July 14, in the committee to which I referred a few moments ago, when I said medicare had three or four months to be kicked around replied to me with those plaintive two words, "I know".

I say, Mr. Speaker, that this is a sad day for Canada because of the utter disregard of the needs of our people involved in this callous action on the part of the government. Our people are suffering in many ways. The rising cost of living is having a very serious effect on the health and well-being of our people. The government has to do something about this. One of the things governments can do to improve the lot of the people is increase social security measures. The more basic things that people need which are paid for on an insurance basis or by the government, the more you cope with these problems that face our people.

I submit that at this time when the high cost of living and the problems of living on low incomes are pressing on our people, the one thing that should be at the top of the list is the institution of medicare. Instead of putting the date off until July 1, 1968, the minister should have the foresight and determination to stand up and say that he wants this date advanced at least to January 1, 1967.

The people of this country find that increased medical bills make things more difficult for them. People have to mortgage their future to get the medical attention they need, and many people have to go without medical attention. Those who suffer in this way will know that the aggregation to blame is the Liberal party, because it is the Liberal party which is imposing this callous treatment on Canada at the present time.

The third reason that I cited for declaring this to be a sad day in the history of Canada and of parliament is that this kind of performance is a reflection not only on the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand), as well as the hon. members for Hamilton East and York-Scarborough and those who believe in the present need for medicare but are not prepared to go with it, not just a reflection on the Liberal government and the Liberal party, but in the eyes of the country it is a reflection on parliament, on politics and on democracy itself. All of us suffer as a result of it. Never mind the fact that maybe the rest of us in this house suffer these criticisms unfairly; the real concern is that this does damage to the confidence and to the faith of our people in the democratic process. On thing people have a right to expect out of the political process is integrity and dependability.

For 47 years we have had promises from the Liberal party. Nothing could have been more firm than what was promised by them in last year's campaign, but it has now been thrown out the window. I submit that those on the side of the government who like to make speeches about the importance of parliament and about keeping up the image of parliament have a chance to do something if they will keep their word on this very important matter. These are the three main reasons that I give for suggesting this is a sad day in Canadian history.

May I spell out for a moment or two the other point on which I said I would dwell, namely, that in the eyes of the Canadian people the myth about the Liberal party is at long last being exploded. We have been told for decades that the Liberals are the party of labour, that they are the party of social welfare and progress. The record is clear on the kind of pressures that were necessary to get any action out of the Liberal party, but the fact of the matter is that it was 47 years ago, as recorded in the book reporting the 1919 convention, that the Liberal party hoisted to the top of the flagpole its pledge for old age pensions, unemployment insurance and medicare.

It was in 1927, eight years later, that the first old age pension legislation was put into effect in this country. It was in 1940, 21 years later, that unemployment insurance came into effect, and it looks now as though it will be a full 50 years before medicare is put into effect in this country. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) says it may be 100 years. Surely, Mr. Speaker, that tells the Canadian people that it is a myth, a hoax, a delusion to presume that the Liberal party is a party of progress or of liberal ideas. I do not wonder that the Liberals have had trouble during their convention in the last few days. The fact that they have papered over the cracks and given emotional ovations to their leader does not hide the uneasiness on the part of some of them over there who do have liberal ideas; they realize they cannot count on their party to go ahead with the policies their leaders say they believe in.

Mr. Speaker, we are not only faced with delay in medicare but also with the time it has taken this government to bring in the labour legislation. Now we have the old age pension issue all over again. It took years to get rid of the means test, but this government is talking about increasing the old age pension and attaching a means test to it. It is turning back the clock, and therefore the Liberal party is not a party of progress but a party of retrogression. Somehow it maintains itself in the country on the strength of the argument that it holds the country together. It does all it can do to hold itself together, but perhaps out of this the country may realize, as Peter Newman said on television the other night, that the Liberal party may be stronger, that its organization may be more democratic, but it is now at dead centre or, as I suggest, it is now at centre, dead.

And so, Mr. Speaker, we want to make it clear that we are in support of the bill that is before us. We disapprove of the loophole that is contained in it which will permit the private carriers to handle medicare in the provinces if the provincial governments so desire. We do not like the way in which universality has been watered down, and there are some other changes that need to be made in the bill.

But we support the main point of the bill, namely, that there shall be a medicare program on the basis of four cardinal principles and that this legislation shall come into effect on July 1, 1967. That is what is in the bill now, and five of the eight operative clauses contain that date. If the minister is going to change the effective date he will have to change five of the clauses in the bill, but it will be over our protest. We will do our best to prevent any such amendments from passing and we hope the Liberals on the other side who say they want medicare on July 1, 1967, will join with us in voting against any of these amendments.

I come back to what the minister said at the start, to what he said today in the timid speech which we could hardly hear. He said this was a bill which carries forward the principles enunciated by the Prime Minister in July, 1965, but that it introduces flexibility without eroding the principles. We submit that two or three of the basic principles of this legislation have been eroded. We submit that there has been a retreat, and we submit that the change by one year, from July 1, 1967, to July 1, 1968, is not something the government can make light of. It is a betrayal of the pledged word; it is a turning down of the hopes of the people of Canada, and I submit it does damage not only to the party in power but to the whole political process.

There is time even yet for the government to review its decision because a good many people want to speak in this debate, and there is time to think it over. I plead with the government, not only in the name of the need of our people for medicare but in the name of our people's desire to have faith in parliament, in democracy and in the pledged word, that this bill be allowed to go through all its stages with the date that is now in it. Let us make it effective on July 1, 1967, so that we can carry out the spirit expressed by the Minister of National Health and Welfare when he introduced this legislation on July 12, and I quote it again from page 7549 of Hansard:

> The introduction of this resolution, Mr. Chairman, I believe marks an historic day for this parliament and for Canada. The program it spells out goes a long way toward closing the gap in our overall social security system. It is our hope it will result in the commencement of provincial medical care plans covering all Canadians on the 100th birthday of Confederation, July 1, 1967. This would be a most appropriate way to mark our birthday,—

I agree with what the minister said when he first brought in this legislation. I ask him to go back to it on second reading so that we really can celebrate our 100th birthday by having medicare in effect on July 1, 1967.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) is the next speaker.

[Translation]

If the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) would now allow me to refer to an amendment moved earlier this afternoon—

[English]

However, I should first like to refer to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard), seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). It was understood that the Chair would have an opportunity to look at this amendment and that hon. members would express their views thereon. I would be grateful to hon. members if they could let me have their views on the point of order, that is, whether or not this amendment is acceptable and in order.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. MacEachen: I have a few comments to make about the regularity of the amendment. I begin by a reference to May's sixteenth edition, page 530, where the author specifies the features of a reasoned amendment in these words:

> A reasoned amendment is placed on the paper in the form of a motion and may fall into one of several categories. It may be declaratory of some principle adverse to or differing from the principles, policy or provisions of the bill.

I believe this would be the only point that could be utilized to support the regularity of the amendment. I remind Your Honour that the amendment states that no legislation for the provision of insured medical care services in Canada will be satisfactory unless it, and I quote:

> (a) secures co-operation of the governments of the provinces of Canada.

This is not a policy or a provision contrary to the bill. The bill is designed to secure the co-operation of the provinces and we expect that co-operation will be forthcoming. This statement is merely an argument or a prophecy and it is not a provision or principle contrary to this bill because the bill does provide for co-operative arrangements with the provinces in the financing of this program.

Paragraph (b) of the amendment reads:

(b) recognizes the principle of voluntary choice by the individual;

The suggestion here is that in some way the provisions of the bill do not recognize the principle of voluntary choice. I argue that obviously the provisions and principles of the bill are fully compatible not only with the principle of voluntary choice by the individual but the principle of voluntary choice by the medical profession itself. I merely make the point with respect to paragraphs (a) and (b) that there is no policy or provision proposed in either of these two items contrary to the provisions of the bill. Both are quite compatible with the provisions of the bill.

With respect to paragraphs (c) and (d), I merely wish to refer to a further point raised by May to the effect that the principle of relevancy in an amendment governs every such motion. The amendment must strictly relate to the bill which the house, by its order, has resolved upon considering. I argue that paragraph (c) is irrelevant merely by pointing out that the matter of medical research is provided for in the estimates of the Minister of Industry. We have already passed a bill this session, the health resources fund bill, dealing with this other matter of providing capital facilities for the training of an adequate number of doctors and other medical personnel.

Paragraph (d) reads:

(d) immediately provides for those persons who are unable, for financial reasons, to provide medical services for themselves.

I might say that this house has already taken action this session through the Canada Assistance Plan to provide for this very item. All I am saying in respect of paragraphs (c) and (d) is that they are irrelevant to this bill because each of the items dealt with in (c) and (d) is irrelevant to the scope of the bill.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I submit to you, sir, that there is a very recent precedent which establishes that the amendment now before the house is clearly in order. The most recent precedent is, of course, the amendment moved on August 30, 1966, in this session, an amendment to the second reading of the bill to provide for the resumption of operation of railways, when all the points which were made by the minister today were made at that time and disposed of. I do not propose, therefore, to detain the house at any length. Perhaps I might deal briefly with what the minister has said. He rested his argument, first, once more upon only one section of the citation in May—I am referring to the seventeenth edition of May, page 527—where we find not only what was read by the minister but also words to the effect that a reasoned amendment may express opinions as to any circumstances connected with the introduction or prosecution of the bill or otherwise opposed to its progress. In my submission, sir, the criticisms contained in the amendment are supportable equally upon that second ground set forth in May as upon the first, notwithstanding what the minister has said.

The only other portion of the minister's argument with which I might deal is that portion in which he sought to suggest that subparagraphs (c) and (d) of the amendment are not in order because they are not relevant. It was quite obvious from the minister's argument that was not the point he was seeking to make. It was that in his view subparagraphs (c) and (d) are not sound; that is what he was saying. In other words, he was saying that part of the amendment should not be allowed because he does not agree with it. This is a matter of argument and does not make the amendment out of order. It is a matter for debate and vote, not a ground upon which the amendment can be ruled out of order. I submit to you that subparagraphs (a) and (b) as well as subparagraphs (c) and (d) express opinions on circumstances connected with the introduction or prosecution of the bill and are therefore, along with the whole amendment, clearly in order on the basis of the citations that have already been put before you.

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member for Kamloops has been most persuasive in his argument and has dealt adequately with the points raised by the minister. I have some comments to add in a complementary way with regard to paragraphs (c) and (d). The minister has suggested that (c) and (d) are not relevant because in his opinion they have been dealt with adequately in other legislation introduced in this house earlier. I think we can take issue with that. It is probably because in the opinion of the mover, the hon. member for Simcoe East, these particular sections have not been dealt with that he felt it essential at this time to introduce the amendment. The minister is drawing an assumption. He is entitled to draw an assumption, but like so many assumptions which come from the other side of the house it is an erroneous one. Because of that fact the hon. member for Simcoe East, and we are supporting him, felt it was most essential at this time to introduce this amendment and to include paragraphs (c) and (d). It may be that time will tell which of us is right. I suggest that for the minister to ask you to make your ruling on the assumption that certain legislation which has been passed will produce certain results is drawing a pretty long bow.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their sound and sage advice relative to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Simcoe East and seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. The amendment as has been mentioned by hon. members who took part in the discussion, is claimed to be a reasoned amendment and as such must be judged by the principles which have been mentioned in the house previously on numerous occasions, particularly on August 30. At that time, when a reasoned amendment was proposed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, I expressed my views on the principles which must govern the acceptance of reasoned amendments. These principles are set out chiefly in May's seventeenth edition, page 527. This citation gives three different and alternative categories within which an amendment should fall.

As I have explained, if a reasoned amendment is not acceptable by virtue of the fact that it does not fall within the first of these categories, it can still be acceptable if it falls within the second and third categories enumerated by May's seventeenth edition. This is the point which was made by the hon. member for Kamloops and I am in full agreement with him. Even though the amendment is not declaratory of a principle adverse to or differing from the principles, policy or provisions of the bill, it can still be accepted if it falls within the other two categories.

I find on this ground that I cannot accept the objection raised by the Minister of National Health and Welfare who raised the very important question of relevancy. This, of course, is a very serious objection inasmuch as the rule provides that all amendments, even reasoned amendments, are subject to the rule of relevancy. The requirement is that an amendment should be strictly relevant.

I have looked at paragraphs (a), (b), (c) and (d) of the proposed motion, and looking at them objectively they certainly appear to me to be relevant to the bill. The claim made by the minister was that paragraphs (c) and (d) are not strictly relevant inasmuch as at least one of these two is dealt with by the estimates of the Minister of Industry. I would suggest to him that that is not sufficient reason to decide that the matter is not strictly relevant to the principle of the bill before us.

He also stated that paragraphs (c) and (d) are dealt with by other legislative amendments or proposals. On the other hand, I take it that if the hon. member for Simcoe East promotes the acceptance of these principles, it must be because he feels that they are not included in other legislative proposals. I think that the word "adequate" which is used in paragraph (c) is particularly important. The hon. member for Simcoe East may feel that some provision has been made for medical research and training an adequate numbers of doctors and other medical personnel, but according to this amendment he is suggesting that these provisions are not adequate.

I would think it is a matter for argument whether the proposals made by the hon. member for Simcoe East are or are not included in these other legislative proposals or enactments. I would have to study these enactments to express an opinion. At that point I would take part in the debate myself if I were to study the enactments to which the minister has referred in order to decide between his contention and the contention put forward by the hon. member for Simcoe East. I do not think the Chair should be placed in that position. I will rule strictly on the point of order, not on the substance of the amendment. For this reason I believe I should accept the amendment.

I would stress again a point which I made before, namely, that if there is any type of amendment on which it is extremely difficult to make a ruling it is these reasoned amendments which are becoming more and more popular in the house and which create constant difficulties for the Chair.

I would suggest to the minister and to hon. members that when there is at least a reasonable doubt in my mind—I am not suggesting that the argument of the minister is totally wrong; I believe he made a very logical and intelligent argument—in such circumstances I should give the hon. member who proposes the amendment the benefit of that doubt. Therefore, with respect to hon. members, and particularly to the minister who made such a strong argument in support of his point of view, I will accept the amendment and say that it is receivable at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said a while ago that we had plenty of time for consideration of the bill now before us, namely Bill No. C-227. Indeed, considering that this legislation cannot come into force before July 1, 1968, we have plenty of time to debate it. We practically have two and a half years, or at least two years, to discuss the contents of a bill which does not mean much in itself.
