THE INTERNATIONAL TEAM.

At the last moment the Secretary of the Association has been handed the refusals of four more of the original eleven, which, with the previous two, leaves but a small percentage of the favourites to represent us in the coming match. We presume that the reasons assigned are justifiable excuses, yet it seems rather hard that so many disappointments should have come about. It should be a very extraordinary occurrence that would deter a man from representing his country in an international struggle. WRIGHT would have a long way to go and GILLEAN cannot get away. STRATFORD will be near the scene of action at the time, though he cannot play because the Winnipeg captain was not asked, and BROWNING is the last delinquent.

In substituting the Committee have overlooked good men. BEHAN of course could not be induced to go at so late a date, and as no one perhaps should have been asked sooner this is least to be wondered at in his case. ROPER of Bracebridge should have occurred to them. The choice has fallen on LOCKWOOD, BOYD, HAMILTON, OGDEN, and HELMCKEN. The first of these has been doing well this year, and the next ought to do well. He was asked by the Doctor to play for Gloucester this season, and refused on account of his coming to this country. He has fallen a little out of trim by living where there was no practice, but a week should put him in good form. HAMILTON'S will be as hard a wicket to get as any. OGDEN will be a source of great strength to the team, if he can be induced to play at this late date.

HELMCKEN'S choice may be attributed to two things: first, the narrowness of the field of information at the disposal of the Committee, and second, the disinclination engendered in the minds of some by the freezing out policy of this body. The choice of the last four men has been virtually in the hands of the Toronto members, who as a matter of fact, with one exception, know little of what has been going on in the country this season. The only other places represented on the Committee are playing two members each. True, STRATFORD and GILLEAN left the team weak in bowling, but it seems odd that HELMCKEN should have been selected when it is so notorious a fact that Toronto is very weak in trundlers. There are many good men in the country, such as ATKINSON of Chatham, who is also a good bat, DUDLEY of Napanee, SIMPSON of Galt, FRASER of Montreal, and many others.

If the Committee were more representative better men would be got, and the root of reformation will have been attacked when such an object is attempted. Four men from Toronto, and two from Guelph and Brampton, looks like monopolizing things, and shows rather a contempt for the abilities of outsiders. Montreal has been tabooed, and Ottawa never thought of, more because they are too far away to know about than for any other reason. Port Hope can furnish a man to replace one of Toronto's celebrities, and so could either of the teams in the final association tie, yet they have never been asked to suggest any one, though one of the two ostensible objects of the Association is to find the best men and the best eleven in the country, with a view to selecting a representative International eleven. The present choice is the selection by too limited a number, with too limited an amount of positive information in their possession.

The American team does not appear quite so strong as that of last year. The absence of LOWRY, the slow left-handed bowler, who did so much towards winning the 1881 match, weakens the team considerably from a Canadian's point of view. C. A. NEWHALL and LAW make the team very strong in fast bowling, but it is doubtful whether their combined efforts will be so effective as will LOWRY'S "peculiar." The Philadelphians have played very little cricket this year, and the scores made by those composing the team have not been very long, if we except J. B. THAYER and W. C. MORGAN, who have both obtained centuries, besides other large scores. Doubtless, however, they are all practising hard now, and will be in good shape when the time comes. We hope the same can be said of our men. In conclusion, we have a few words to say to the latter: Go to bed early and don't funk the bowling, which is little if any better than you have been accustomed to. If this is done a victory may be recorded for Canada.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Hamilton showed Toronto again that they have a claim to superiority as a club. Toronto has a strong batting team when it is played, but is weak in bowling, and has depended all this season on outbatting the weakness of its bowling. Saturday's defeat may be attributed to the fact that a good many men were not there, who, from the fact that they have played all season and practiced well, should have entitled them to a place on the team before those who went and had not.

In our salutatory last May^{} we promised that the last two issues of this paper in September should play the part of an annual. To be candid we promised too much, for it would be impossible to collect the information necessary for such a work before the end of October, and the volume of the matter would overrun our columns. However, the annual will be published, but not till the twentieth of December, and then in book form. An advertisement on another page explains the nature of the production.

Says the American Cricketer^{}: "The question of domicile need not interfere very much this year, because if Ogden was chosen for the United States team it would have to be from the Chicago cricket club; but this club is not now a member of the Cricketers' Association of the United States; hence, our friends across the border need not let that consideration interfere with his being played for Canada. His addition to the team would, we think, make it stronger in an important department—bowling—and he is as good a left-hander at the bat as we know." The association committee may now set their minds at rest regarding this important point.

Mr. C. J. Logan and Mr. Peter Perry have made themselves more popular, if possible, among the boys of Trinity School, and in fact of Ontario, by devoting their time to the production of part of the fifth book of the Aeneid, designed particularly to make the study of Virgil easier and more quickly acquired. The work is most complete, and combines in itself as well as the text, all the adjuncts usually necessary to master an author. We are pleased to hear of such industry among cricketers as will bring them into greater repute than before, and trust heartily that this publication will meet with so much encouragement that the authors will not stop where they have just left off. Indirectly they have benefited cricket, in so much as, from the conciseness of the work, students will master their subject in less time than with any other treatise on the same subject, and so will have more spare time to devote to pastimes of their own selection. It is not likely, however, that such an idea was in their minds when they undertook the work.

THE CANADIAN FLEVEN.

The following are chosen to fill the places vacated by the refusals of Messrs. Browning, Stratford, Wright and Gillean:

H. HAMILTON (Montreal).—Except Badgley, perhaps the best all-round man in Montreal; a successful bat, very cautious and not over-graceful in his play. His defense is good. Is without a rival in Canada at keeping wickets without a long-stop.

Lockwood (Brampton).—Is understood to be an excellent all-round man, but as his first appearance only occurred a few weeks ago, a good opportunity of judging could not be obtained.

H. D. HELMCKEN (Toronto).—Bowls rather fast with a peculiar curve and lots of break. He sometimes sends down an unplayable ball, but his great fault is that he bowls more bad than good ones. He is as good a long-stop as could be got, and a sure although not over brilliant field. He hits well when well set, but has no defense against good bowling.

M. BOYD (Brantford), late of Cheltenham College. A pretty bat; fair field, and slow bowler, with no break, and only average length.

E. R. OGDEN (Chicago).—The youngest man on the team. A tip-top bowler with variable pace; a good field anywhere; can keep wickets, and, as the American Cricketer says, "as good a left-hander at the bat as we know."

CRICKET, AND HOW TO EXCEL IN IT.

BY DR. W. G. GRACE.

(Published by special permission.)

CHAPTER VI.—LAWS.—Continued.

The fifth law is sometimes misunderstood. For instance, in a single-wicket match it once happened that the ball was hit in front of and round the boundary stump, and the fieldsman threw in the ball direct to the wicket. The batsman, seeing this, kept on running, and one of the fieldsmen put down the wicket, but the man was not out. The law requires the ball to be returned in front of the bound stump, and so the batsman went on running and running until the ball was thrown back and properly returned.

The sixth law again requires careful reading. If in double-wicket a man is run out, the run he is making is not scored; but if in single-wicket he is trying a run and has got down to the bowling stump and turned to go back before the ball crosses the play, and the wicket is put down, the run is scored.

The reason of the smaller number of runs allowed by the seventh rule for a lost ball in single-wicket matches, is that, if there are only one or two fieldsmen, the chances of a ball being lost in the long grass about the outskirts of the field are much greater than where there are more pairs of eyes to follow and look after.

The eighth law was frequently taken advantage of in olden times when single-wicket matches were so common. Two good men we often find challenging five or more moderate players, and at first sight this seems great odds; but we should remember that the two men had almost the best of it, for whereas the five or more, when batting, were only allowed to run for hits in front of the wicket, and could not count byes or overthrows, the side with the few men could run for everything, and were not bothered by any boundaries.

The ninth law says that the bowler is bound by the same laws as in double-wicket, and this applies in every case—the distance between the stumps is the same, the bowling crease is the same length, and so on.

The code ends with a law directed against the waste of time which is unfortunately so characteristic of certain members of the cricketing community. How stupid it is to let a match drag on in the hope of some slight disadvantage to the other side, or, as frequently is the case, for the mere love of loafing about!

Betting on cricket matches is, I am happy to say, quite the exception in England, and scarcely exists. In Australia, however, it flourishes prodigiously, and is quite a business. Large sums of money are constantly changing hands about such matters, and the result is that an immense amount of acrimony and unpleasantness is most unnecessarily introduced, to the detriment of the best interests of the game. Betting on a cricket match is a most risky undertaking under any circumstances. Good judges will constantly tell you that the odds can never be as much as two to one on a team, and no man who knows what he is about will ever touch the long odds we sometimes hear of. Betting on cricket matches is left alone altogether by the wise, and almost, but not quite, by the foolish.

To conclude with a word on the County Laws.

Before 1873 the laws of county cricket, if there ever were any, had become so vague that good players were frequently found playing for two or even three counties in the same year. In former days, if a man lived in one county and was born in another, the county of his birth had the first claim on him; and I think that at the present day this old rule would prove a very good one to reintroduce, as it would help to do away with the system, which has crept in under the laws as they now stand, of buying cricketers, if I may so term it. Nowadays, if a county is weak in its cricket and strong in its purse, it can get one or two good players to take up their residence within its boundaries, and after two years play against the county of their birth. This is hardly as fair a proceeding as might be, and I should be very sorry if it is allowed to increase. The law should be read in the spirit in which it was drawn up, and county secretaries should be very strict in never playing a man that does not bona fide belong to their county. The birth qualification is the great one; the residential qualification was only introduced to meet special cases, and those cases were not such as I have alluded to.

And here I end these rough notes on cricket. They have run to a somewhat greater length than I anticipated, and yet there are many things in connection with the game which I find I have scarcely touched upon with the fulness they deserve. I had no intention, however, of writing an exhaustive treatise, and the object of these papers will have been fully attained if I have put any of my young friends on the right track in their cricket studies, have solved any of their difficulties, improved in even the slightest degree their play, and shown that the game is not the mere triviality it is sometimes taken to be, but is worth thinking about, worth doing well, and that in it, as in everything else, intelligent practice and perseverance are the secret of success.

THE END.

THE SONG OF I ZINGARI.

We hear England's armies assembled,
When liberty's cause was in view,
We hear too that tyranny trembled
'Neath the folds of the red, white and blue;
Yes, the red, white and blue o'er the ocean
Has floated in triumph of old,
But to-night we will pay our devotion
To the folds of the black, red and gold.

The ball the stout cricketer urges,
Cleaves a pathway of peace o'er the plain,
The weapon he wields never scourges,
Leaves no record of carnage nor pain;
No, 'tis his to cement man's affection,
Revising the pastime of old;
From our camp, then, we fear no defection,
'Neath the folds of the black, red and gold.

As the eagle soars valley and mountain,
As the wild bird the waves of the deep,
As the waters flow free from the fountain,
And rushes unbound down the steep;
So our wandering band scorns all warning,
In every soil plants its hold,
Each field with its banners adorning,
With the folds of the black, red and gold.

Then the wine cup, the wine cup bring hither,
Fill high, we'll sip naught but the brim;
May the bonds we have fashioned ne'er wither,
Nor the star of our birthright grow dim;
May the friendships we've formed never sever,
But each link lengthen long and grow old;
Fill a bumper: here's Cricket for ever,
'Neath the folds of the black, red and gold.

ENGLAND

Wars and rumours of wars. What a pity it is that the Australians cannot reconcile themselves to the decisions of the umpires. Hardly a match but one or other of the team has a complaint to make. And some of them in reality are so ridiculous, as was that of Horan's when he was caught by Peate at the Oval in the recent players' match. Achilles sulking in his tent is not a pleasing picture, and this constant protest against the umpire's decision is really a little monotonous.—Cricket.

ENGLAND v. AUSTRALIA.

The English eleven was chosen with the greatest care and deliberation by four competent judges—Lord Harris, Messrs. V. E. Walker, I. D. Walker, and F. Burbidge. The only possible flaw was the absence of a regular fast bowler. Morley's foot had given away again and he was not available, and in the absence of any other sufficiently reliable, it was deemed advisable to depend on one fast bowler, Ulyett, who had been fairly successful in recent matches. Altogether the English eleven was a thoroughly representative one, and it must be placed on record as beyond dispute that the selection was thoroughly ratified by the public. It was expected that the Australians would be able to have Palmer, who had injured himself in the match with the players at the Oval, again in their eleven. The intention was to play him, but the little practice he had before the commencement of the match showed that he was still too lame to be of use, and at the last moment, when the Australian innings was nearly over, Jones took his place. The absence of one of their very best bowlers is a point that should be recorded to the credit of the team in analysing the match. It was regarded as an immense advantage for the Australians when they had won the toss, but as far as the ordinary course of the game was concerned, they lost their chance. On the first day at least the English team had all the best of some sensational play. With the ground in the very worst condition, no one could have expected that two such elevens would have been dismissed for an aggregate of 169 runs. As it was on a wicket not really very bad, it was almost unaccountable. So far the play on both sides had been ominously disappointing in one respect, the batting. The ball certainly "bit" enough to help the bowler, but the ground did not play badly—not sufficiently so to account for the small scores made on both sides. The bowling and fielding all round were much above the average. Better out cricket has not been seen in a day's play, but the batting was decidedly below the standard. Both sides were apparently impressed with the importance of the occasion, and neither showed its correct form. There was no confidence, as a rule the hitters were afraid to hit, and the play was altogether unnatural. The result of five hours' cricket was 169 runs, and with the exception of Maurice Read, not one player in the two teams gave a spectator the idea of being at home. On the second day the morning's heavy rain upset all previous calculations. The Australians had the advantage of batting on the wet wicket, and certainly at the commencement of their second innings, the ground did not help the bowlers. Massie, who had not done much before in London, showed how he could hit, and his batting was far and away the best of the match. He hit all round with confidence, and his dashing play, just at the time when the Australians wanted heart, was of the greatest possible help to his side, indeed, it had much to do with the result. He should have been caught by Mr. Lucas in the long-field when he had got 38, but otherwise his 55 was a really good display of well-timed hitting. Massie had made 55 out of 66 while he was in, but except Murdoch, who played carefully as well as pluckily for his 29, there was no other double figure. Three batsmen had indeed contributed 97 out of 116 from the bat. The completion of the Australian's second innings for 122 left England with 85 to win. It was not a difficult task, and at one time an English victory seemed secured. Mr. Grace showed that when nerve is required he has still no equal among the younger order of batsmen. He played Spofforth with confidence—the exception certainly—and while he was in there was hope. His 32 was an invaluable innings, but when he went things turned in favor of the Australians. After Mr. Grace's departure came the same collapse that settled the Gentlemen in June. Five wickets were down for 66, and yet all were out for 77. Spofforth's bowling was extraordinary, no doubt. He never lost nerve, and besides making the ball do a great deal, kept a wonderful length. Too much cannot be written in praise of his bowling at the critical time, but even this will not explain the utter failure of England's best batsmen. The play was irresolute to a degree. Ball after ball of Boyle, some of which might certainly have been hit, passed by unpunished by players who have hitting powers. In fact, our batting utterly failed when an effort was wanted, and the Australians won a victory they thoroughly deserved by only seven runs. Massie's batting turned the scale in the first instance, but it was emphatically Spofforth's bowling that secured their success. To bowl without a long-stop at the pace he did, and at such a time, when every run was of vital importance, was a great performance, a proof of what nerve he possesses, as well as a tribute to Blackham's efficiency at the wicket. The incident by which Jones was got out in Australia's second innings should not pass without mention. After making one run for a hit to leg he walked out of his crease to pat the ground down. The ball was unmistakably still in play, and Mr. Grace put the wicket down. He was quite justified by the rules, but the action caused some irritation among the Australians. Spofforth in all took 14 wickets for 90 runs, and on this form the players were certainly very lucky that they had not to oppose his bowling in the recent match. On the first day 19,601 persons paid at the gate, on the second 19,593, so that there was only a difference of eight in the two days. Score:

AUSTRALIANS v. GLOUCESTERSHIRE.

Incessant rain on the first day effectually prevented a completion of this return match, begun on the Clifton College Ground on Aug. 24th. Giffen, who had not played since the Players' match at the Oval, was again in the team. Palmer who injured himself on the same occasion, was still absent, and Murdoch for the first time had to stand down indisposed. The team was, therefore, without its best bat, as well as one of its very best bowlers, but still it rendered a good account of itself. Massie's hitting was one of the most noteworthy features of the match. As usual, he got his runs very fast. In the second innings he had luck, but he scored at a great rate, making 55 out of 62 runs while in with Bannerman. Six wickets were down for 36 runs when these two batsmen became partners, and it was their stand that made the game look so well for their side. Mr. W. G. Grace bowled with much of his old success for Gloucestershire. In the two innings of the Australians he took twelve wickets for 152 runs. Score:

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY—PAST AND PRESENT—v. AUSTRALIANS.

For the third time a Cambridge team has beaten an Australian eleven. Most students of cricket will remember the victories of Cambridge University at Lord's in 1878, and Cambridge in 1882, and the victory at Portsmouth on Saturday last thus forms the third successive win of the Cantabs against Australian cricketers.

The University team was decidedly strong, but the Australians had to play without the help of Palmer and Giffen, and the former's bowling was much wanted. Murdoch won the toss for the Australians, but he decided to give Cambridge the innings, a very questionable policy at any time, unless the advantages are thoroughly clear. The wicket was slow throughout, and the scoring in none of the four innings reached 200. Some good cricket though was shown on both sides, and the interest in the game was maintained until the very close. The feature of the Colonial batting undoubtedly was Bonnor's hitting on the third day. He made 66 out of 79 while at the wickets, and he was at the wickets in all about 40 minutes. He was twice missed at short-slip, but his hitting was quite sensational. His figures included four sixes. When he was out the Australians wanted 113 to win with 8 batsmen still to go in. As these included Murdoch, Horan, Blackham, and McDonnell their chances were highly estimated; but Mr. Steel bowled so effectively and the Cantabs one and all fielded up so well, that at the finish the Australians were 20 runs to the bad. The victory of the English amateurs was received with enthusiastic delight by the spectators, and it was some time before the excitement subsided. Much of their success was due to the fine bowling of Mr. A. G. Steel. He took five wickets for 24 runs—a fine performance. Score:

AUSTRALIANS v. SOMERSETSHIRE.

With stronger opponents the Australians might have fared badly at Taunton on Monday and Tuesday, with three of their best bowlers, Garrett, Palmer and Giffen, all away. As it was, though, Somersetshire began fairly well in their first innings, the bowling of Spofforth and Boyle was altogether too much for them, and the Australians had another easy victory by an innings and 19 runs. The two bowlers mentioned were never changed during the match, and Spofforth has rarely bowled better. In the first innings he took nine of the ten wickets, and in all thirteen wickets for 113 runs. M'Donnell's 48 included eight fours. The last five wickets in Somersetshire's first innings fell for ten runs.

THE SCORER.

THAMESVILLE v NELSON.

The final association tie between the above-named clubs was played on the 29th at Paris. The day was insufferably warm, and the pitch very dead; the out-field had a hit to leg, or a hard cut, usually coming into contact with the hill side that kept away all the breeze. The Nelson won the toss and took the field, Smith and Snyder bowling for them. Syer and Duncan came first and went away soon, the former well run out. Edsall was the next to put in an appearance, and acted only on the defensive; he stayed a good time for his six snicks. Nicholls showed good form, and Snyder was fortunate in getting him so soon. Atkinson began to score at once, and would have been accredited with more runs but for the hill side; he hit hard and high, and finally skied one back to the bowler. His running between wickets was very good and well judged. Smith was then changed for Lindsey, who with his first three did the hat trick. The tail of eleven showed little form and were easily disposed of. Atkinson fast and Syer slow began the bowling after lunch, and the former had things all his own way, for with his low delivery on a dead wicket everything shot; on the other hand Syer got up a good deal. Harley got a couple of good ones away and then retired. Lindsey played steadily and saw four men depart before he went himself. Keefer unfortunately ran himself out. Smith and Paton were both cleaned bowled by Syer without making any stand. Snyder began well but only lasted a short time. Pitman played long and steadily for 2, and he and Lyon played seven consecutive maidens. Lyon got three hits but played steadily. Wright broke his duck, and the man not out was the only 0 though the total was but 33. The second innings was a repetition of the first, the ball hardly ever getting up. Syer played steadily; Atkinson hit out at a straight and missed it. Mimmack hit up 7, and Duffus skied 8. The bowling was well on the spot. The Nelsons went in to make 42 to win, and did it with the loss of seven wickets. Harley pulled the game out of the fire, and except Pitman no one did anything. Atkinson's wides swelled the total considerably. On the whole the fielding and form of the Nelsons was better than their opponents, but neither were what one would expect to find in the champion team. The wicket was very much against run-getting and several good men fell cheaply. Without Atkinson, Nicholls and Syer, the Thamesville club would be very weak, and it might be added here that the two former are Chatham men. Squire and Hickey hail from Bothwell. Score:

TORONTO v. HAMILTON.

The return match between these two clubs came off finally last Saturday after many delays. The wicket was as hard and bumpy as is usual in Hamilton. It was Woolverton's day, and he captured most of the Toronto wickets at a small cost. In the second innings, however, a stand was made by Boulton and Brock. The former hit very freely and the latter, as usual, played good cricket. Woolverton's innings was as pokey as usual, and those of Rogers and Gillespie were characteristic of the men. Score:

BRANTFORD v. DUNDAS.

A match was played at Brantford on 30th August between the Dundas and Brantford Clubs. On account of the inconvenient running of the trains only one innings could be played by either side. Brantford went first to the bat and made 73 runs. Merritt 19, Mellor 11, and Buchanan 10, being the only scores worthy of notice. The Dundas bowling was fair, and their fielding up to the average. Dundas scored 55 runs, thus losing the match by 18. Kenrick's 15 was made by good and judicious cricket. The other players had a little luck, as the fielding of the Brantford men with one or two exceptions was wretched. Appended is the score:

TORONTO v. SONS OF ENGLAND.

This match was played on Saturday afternoon, the 2nd of Sept. At first it was thought that a very weak team would represent Toronto, but several men failed to put in an appearance, and, good substitutes being provided, a very strong team was put in the field. Yorkshire's innings for Toronto was very good. He preserved his wicket throughout until (what proved to be) the last ball of the innings which he hit and got out. Brown, Baines and Vickers contributed useful scores. The bowling of England's sons was very good, but their fielding was slow. There are several good players on the team—Blomeley and Parnham being the best, but the latter appeared weak. On the whole it is superior to most country teams. Score:
